Mr. Mar: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity did extend me the courtesy of providing me with a copy of this earlier this evening, and I've had the opportunity to read it. I cannot express my support for the amendment because, as I indicated in my opening comments on the bill, we have not used advisory committees for some number of years. But we do agree with what the hon. member said with respect to seeking input from members of the public with respect to these lands. It is our intention to do so, and we have done so successfully over a number of years without using advisory committees but, instead, by bringing about local communities and stakeholders in creating the management, planning, and development of policies in these protected areas.

It is with regret that I cannot extend my support for the amendment, sir.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Any other speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I had indicated earlier that I would be asking some questions of the minister in committee on Bill 18, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006, specifically as they relate to the operation of aircraft and, in this particular instance, of foot-launched, powerless aircraft in respect of my peers and colleagues involved in the sports of hang-gliding and paragliding.

In the amended act as proposed, item 8.2 under section 15 refers to a person not being allowed to take off or land an aircraft "in a wilderness area or an ecological reserve" or "in a natural area or a heritage rangeland without the Minister's permission." Now, when we were discussing Bill 23 earlier this evening, there was a specific exemption provided for hang-gliders and paragliders, being foot-launched, powerless aircraft. I do not see that exemption in Bill 18.

Of particular concern for myself is what would be described as an emergency landing. I think most members might be able to appreciate the fact that when you're in a powerless aircraft, that depends on natural lift to maintain flight, if that lift evaporates for whatever reason, a landing is imminent. With all due respect, at that point, Mr. Chairman, a landing is an emergency landing. There is no opportunity to go around and take another try at it. There's no opportunity to fly some distance to make sure that you're outside of an ecological reserve or a recreation area. In fact, quite often a pilot of such an aircraft would find themselves in a situation where they weren't even aware of the fact that they might be overflying one of these areas. So it causes me concern, and it would certainly cause people involved in those activities concern. I think that what I was about to mention was that as I read the new act, section 8.1 actually repeals subsections (4) and (5), which allow for those emergency landings as authorized by the minister.

I'm hopeful that the minister might be willing to address those concerns that I've raised this evening, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll be brief. The increase in fines and penalties with Bill 23 and Bill 18 is very positive and a much-needed step for Alberta parks and protected areas, yet this is only a small step in the legal strengthening that needs to be done to ensure that our parks and protected areas are safeguarded for future generations.

With regard to Bill 18 specifically it does clarify that off-highway vehicles are prohibited in three out of the four protected areas under this act. This amendment would be an ideal time to clear up inconsistencies such as the need to prohibit off-highway vehicles in all of the areas in this act.

Bill 18 removes the legislation that would allow for a designated buffer zone around a park. Although this legislation has not been used before, the removal of this section would not allow any new ones to be formed. The whole meaning of the buffer zone is a transition between what is going on outside the park boundaries and within the park itself. Without that transition there is the potential of encroachment. Also, the repeal of this section means that there is no tool for Alberta parks to use to mitigate or restrict activities occurring on adjacent lands that are affecting the ecological integrity of these parks.

The minister recognized that the removal of the advisory committee from the act is going to be addressed with increased public consultation in other venues. I would love to see the word "consultation" become "collaboration" so that it's not just a listening process but actually working with citizens and coming up with the best achievements possible.

It would be good to see a commitment to addressing the lack of conservation initiatives on land adjacent to the parks in response to the repeal of the buffer zones as well. In order for the government to successfully preserve our natural landscapes, steps must be taken to ensure that environmental degradation beside our parks is managed and monitored properly. I'm hoping that the minister in his summation can help me to understand why buffer zones aren't receiving the strength and the support that I feel is necessary.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First of all, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly 25 employees of the personnel administration office who are here on a public service orientation tour. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 65 grade 6 students from the Gibbons school. They are accompanied by parents and teachers. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd like them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Eric Oddleifson, his wife, Collette, and son Evan. Collette is Evan's homeroom teacher. He says that he's a 90 per cent student. They also wrote a letter to the Premier, and I'll just read the last sentence. It says, "I urge you [Mr. Premier] to do your job and keep our water clean and keep us safe." Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I am pleased to introduce to you and members of the Assembly three guests seated in the public gallery. They are Reg Basken and his two grandchildren, Reg and Kimberley Barry. Reg, of course, is a long-time labour leader in this country. He was the president of the national Communications, Energy and Paperworkers Union, a former president of the AFL. He's active in many charitable organizations, such as the United Way and the Edmonton Community Foundation. Most importantly, he's president of the Alberta NDP. His grandchildren, Kimberley and Reg Barry, are visiting Edmonton on their school break from Prince George. I see they're standing. I'd ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I'm also delighted today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Grant McLean. Grant has served as a senior manager with the government of Alberta in the Department of the Solicitor

General and Public Security and was also a former aide-de-camp to the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. He is an officer in the Order of Military Merit and is a recent recipient of an Alberta centennial medal for his extensive work in our community. Grant is also the former mayor of Airdrie. He is seated in the public gallery. I'd ask that you give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Endowment Funds

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government has borrowed heavily against Alberta's future by spending virtually all of the natural resource revenue it takes in each year. The Official Opposition has been leading the charge for a greater emphasis on savings. Even the Premier spoke last September of new endowment funds within a matter of months. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Why has an environmental endowment fund, critically needed to address water and other issues, simply evaporated into thin air?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, quite to the contrary. One thing about this government is that any new idea, such as the hon. member has mentioned, the environmental endowment – I want to say to members here: do we support the environment, ladies and gentlemen? It is very obvious to me that an environmental endowment is a new idea, a new idea that needs to be fed, that needs to be nurtured so that we will make it a reality, and that's exactly what this government is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to see the line in the budget that addresses that one.

My next question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Why has this government chosen to completely neglect last year's flagship legislation by not committing one single penny to the access to the future fund?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. This government last year indicated in a stellar way through Bill 1 and through the throne speech that we were going to put $5 billion into endowments for the future: half a billion dollars into the Alberta heritage medical research fund, half a billion dollars into the Alberta ingenuity fund, a billion dollars into the heritage scholarship fund, and $3 billion into the access to the future fund. That access to the future fund has already generated significant interest in Albertans and others, contributing back to postsecondary education and advanced education in this province. Mr. Speaker, $750 million has been put into that fund, which will contribute $45 million this year to match those contributions; $250 million has been put into the heritage scholarship fund; $200 million has been put into the ingenuity fund. So we've made a huge step forward on that. Yes, of course, I'm pressing for more and pressing for more earlier. Our Premier has indicated that within three years that access to the future fund would be fully funded. One year has gone past. We've got two more years to get that done, and I think we're on track to do it.

Dr. Taft: My third question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Finance. What has happened to a social sciences endowment fund, crucial to addressing children's needs?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we've made a commitment of some $5 billion to endowments, and we do intend to fully fund those. It would be perhaps imprudent to discuss another endowment, as important as that endowment is. We have made a commitment to do that, but at this point we're making our commitment to the funds we have. The hon. Minister of Advanced Education mentioned a number of them: the medical research endowment, another $200 million to that plus more coming.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition very conveniently ignores the fact that we have done a debt repayment of $22.7 billion over this time period, saving $1.5 billion in debt servicing. That's where part of the funds have gone. He conveniently forgets all of the initiatives that we've made in health, education, advanced education to move this province forward. Why don't we just tell the whole story?

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Unbudgeted Surplus

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Spending of oil and gas revenues in this province continues to rise dramatically as this government becomes increasingly reliant on nonrenewable resource revenues. Since 2004 we've seen an increase in this spending from $3.5 billion a year to $5.3 billion a year. It's an addiction, and it's a trend that is clearly unsustainable. My question is to the Minister of Finance. In this time of unprecedented boom why is this government increasing nonrenewable resource revenue spending instead of investing the funds so that they become permanent?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, I think the hon. member discounts and ignores completely the fact that we put $1 billion in the heritage fund in the third quarter. We have another $1 billion going in in this budget. That is a permanent increase to that fund. He also conveniently forgets that we just gave a 16 per cent increase to Advanced Education: I'm sure he would rather not have had that. A 7.7 per cent increase to Health: maybe we shouldn't have done that. A 5.1 per cent increase to Education: maybe we shouldn't have done that. And $13.5 billion for capital projects: maybe we didn't need any of those. It's easy to sit on the other side of the House and come up with these types of questions but absolutely no solutions, no answers. Spend more, quit spending: the contradiction is quite amazing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, we do have an answer, and it's our own surplus policy.

My question to the Treasurer: given that this government clearly lacks direction for the future of this province, why doesn't it do the right thing and adopt a sustainable policy, the Alberta Liberal policy for surplus investments?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I suppose that we could have done that this year. We'd have had no increase for health. We'd have had no increase for advanced education. We'd have had no increase for education. We'd have had no increase for children. We'd have had no increase for safer communities, for a better court system. We could have done that. What we've said instead is that we will save.

We will spend wisely. We no longer have a debt, the only province in Canada that can boast that, probably the only place in North America that can boast that. That's all conveniently forgotten in this discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. My final question, to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: given that this government is not endowing capital spending, how does the minister expect to fund repairs of potholes and roads and public buildings when the oil and gas run out?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we have a capital account of $13.5 billion. That's dedicated to new postsecondary education facilities here, new health facilities across the province, new postsecondary, in fact, across the province. It's to better roads, including beginning of the twinning of highway 63. I want to point out to the hon. member that our capital plan is three times the size of any capital plan in any province in Canada today.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Income Support

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AISH and PDD in the Seniors and Community Supports department were increased in yesterday's budget. [interjections] Good thing. Good thing. But in Alberta Works, under the human resources department, funds for people in transition and people not expected to work were cut. These are Albertans who will not benefit from health care premium changes. These are the poorest of the poor and those trying to break free of the welfare cycle. A question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: with earnings supplements for the working poor cut 19 per cent and health benefit funding cut 16 per cent, is the minister telling our working poor to expect less?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, it is unfortunate that anyone in Alberta, with such a hot economy and so many services, would go through some challenging times to meet basic needs, but the hon. member is not right to say that there was no increase. There was an increase in the budget for that specific area. We try our best to ensure that the best services that are available can be provided to our clientele.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when you go back a number of years, most of the dollars that were spent through the support programs were for single people and couples without children that were employable. In fact, the welfare caseload at one time was 97,000, with 5,400 staff working and a $1.7 billion budget. At one time 80 per cent of those people on welfare were people that were employable and trainable and couples without children. Today, Mr. Speaker, the welfare caseload is down to 25,000, and half of those are expected to work, but half are not expected to work for various reasons.

We do not have a welfare office, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta anymore. We have 56 employment centres that assist people to make the transition from welfare to full employment eventually.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: with your business plan saying train them to get off welfare, why is this ministry cutting funds to get welfare recipients off supports?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, that is not true, Mr. Speaker. In fact, at one time the workers in the department, the 5,400 staff spending $1.7 billion, spent 80 per cent of their time providing support for young people, couples without children, single people that should be working. We do not have that in Alberta. At the 56 employments centres now when a person walks in for social assistance, they'll get career counselling, resumé writing, job placement, and the transitional supports that are necessary to get them back on their feet.

Mr. Backs: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: with less supports, fewer welfare recipients, are you bringing back the idea of free one-way bus tickets to send welfare recipients out of Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, only the welfare recipients that don't want to work do that. The others all want jobs and training.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Corporate Taxes

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's provincial budget delivered a massive tax cut, that's going cost taxpayers of Alberta $370 million, for highly profitable corporations in an already overheated economy. This is just dumb economics. The CEOs of the major corporations' investment in the PC party is paying dividends in spades. Meanwhile, the budget figures show that average Alberta families will actually see their personal income taxes go up $102 million next year. My question is to the Minister of Finance. How can the minister justify the completely unjustified and unnecessary 15 per cent cuts in taxes for the corporate sponsors of the PC party while taking more money out of the pockets of ordinary Albertans?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, you know, it's a bit distressing. We're all in this House. We all have access to budget documents. Many of us have been here for some time, and every hon. member in this House should know that the first tax reductions were made on the personal side. I produced a budget book, which was tabled and given to every member of this Assembly yesterday. If the hon. member would go to a section on tax in this, he would quickly understand that we have already saved average Albertans $1.5 billion in taxes. In addition to that we increased the basic exemption and spousal or dependent exemption. Again, in addition we index that increase every year so it's not clawed back by inflation.

Mr. Speaker, no other province in Canada matches a spousal exemption – no other. The federal government doesn't do it. Have a look at the graph, and see what the NDP government in Saskatchewan's exemption is on basic and spousal, and come back and tell me that we've ignored the average Albertan.

Mr. Martin: You notice, Mr. Speaker, that she didn't talk about the question.

The question is this: why would you give the most profitable corporations in an overheated economy a gift of $370 million? Explain that to the taxpayers of Alberta.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's any secret that the opposition member who is speaking now is not interested in business of any kind.

I've had the opportunity today to meet with some of the business leaders in this province, and they do understand what drives this economy. They do understand that the Alberta businesses here today have to compete not only in Canada but in a global economy. They do understand that while we are competitive in Alberta, Canada is not competitive in the world, and we have to work hard to make sure that our federal government follows our lead and make sure that our businesses can continue to operate, continue to work in a global economy, continue to generate jobs so that the average Albertan has a place to work.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, my question is simply this: how can the Minister of Finance justify having a corporate tax rate 20 per cent lower than the next lowest province while saddling an Alberta family of four making $60,000 with an income tax bill 28 per cent higher than in the province of Ontario?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is: hon. member, I would be happy to sit down with you and go over your figures because they are not exactly accurate.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, chronic wasting disease is an issue in my constituency as that's where the first cull of CWD-infected deer was made a year ago. I understand that five more cases were discovered through the chronic wasting disease control program. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister tell us if these further cases mean we are getting ahead of the disease or it's becoming an epidemic?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta considers chronic wasting disease a serious environmental as well as economic threat. We have 400,000 wild deer in this province. We must continue to be very, very aggressive in making sure that our approach is to prevent chronic wasting disease from coming across the Saskatchewan/Alberta border and infecting those 400,000 deer. The program that the hon. member is talking about started in January, and it is part of our long-term effort. Seven thousand deer have been tested since 1996. Actually, contrary to the claims that were made in the House this week about whether we're doing the right things or not, I'd like to point out that by doing nothing, as was suggested, this local deer population would be decimated within 50 years – that's the local deer population – and it would go to the entire province. Our actions help to make sure that Alberta's deer are being protected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the same minister: how did your department select these control measures?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, we use the best science available both in Canada and internationally, and our actions are based on recommendations of an expert international panel. That's a scientific panel, and it's guided by a national strategy of Canada. Reducing deer density is the key, and it is the recommended response for all future recommendations on the spread of chronic wasting disease. We need to do everything we can to keep more animals from becoming infected and to protect both the environmental and economic viability of rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Given that the deer population is so critical and important to the constituents in my area, what is your department doing to ensure that these residents are informed, consulted, and engaged in these actions?

Mr. Coutts: Local consultation is very, very important, consultation not only with the residents, Mr. Speaker, but also with hunters and guides and outfitters. Two public meetings were held in Empress and Chauvin to present our action plans and to answer technical questions about the science of chronic wasting disease. We work closely with other government departments, like Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Health and Wellness, and Community Development as well as our partner in Saskatchewan, where the threat really comes from.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A true or false question for the Minister of Finance: is your ministry seeking a one-year delay in your own self-imposed review of automobile insurance reforms due to take place this fall?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there is a discussion ongoing now as to whether we should have a little more experience before that complete review is taking place. So while I don't think it's definitive yet, certainly that discussion is occurring, and it will occur with the stakeholders. We will determine together whether it's prudent to move ahead if we have enough information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance: how will Alberta drivers benefit by waiting one more year for the AIRB to confirm what they already know, that is that the government's bungled reforms have greatly benefited private insurance companies at their expense?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not what we're finding at all. In fact, there are a number of things we're finding that are very positive. One, the number of uninsured drivers has dropped dramatically – uninsured drivers. There is more fairness in the system today because people are not discriminated against by gender or age. The Automobile Insurance Rate Board – and the member full well knows this – has the authority to review rates throughout the year and make decisions as to whether to recommend a rate decrease. So they will not be waiting for any change. But I think it's prudent to have the right information when you make decisions to change. We've had a little over a year's experience with automobile insurance reform, and it is a very, very positive outcome to this point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the Alberta insurance rate board will not discuss the circumstances surrounding the recent hasty and completely unexpected departure of their executive director, will the minister please inform this House why he left?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't possibly do that because that is certainly in the purview of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board. I would suggest that the hon. member talk to them. I have not asked the question, didn't know the circumstances, and I'm not sure that it is really my affair.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Forest Sustainability

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Global Forest Watch Canada released a report about the amount of intact versus fragmented forest in Canada, with particular attention paid to Alberta. Can the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development explain what it means by "fragmented forest"?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is an important question because the report indicates and shows and acknowledges that Canada has a vast forest, and it is probably the most intact in the world. Alberta has 60 per cent of its land base as part of that forest. The report that the hon. member is talking about defines an intact forest as 10,000 hectares with no sign of human activity whatsoever. So what that means is a tract of land the size of the city of, say, Lethbridge or Red Deer, where there would be no roads, no human activity, no farms, no ranches, absolutely nothing happening and everything being sterile. That's their definition in the report, not ours.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. The purpose of question period is not to ask for definitions of words; it's to deal with government policy. Perhaps you could move on to the second question.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. How is he, as a minister, dealing with this challenge in Alberta?

Mr. Coutts: Actually, that's exactly where I was heading, Mr. Speaker, because in order to understand our policy of sustainability, it was important to show what the report was standing up and talking about. Sustainable Resource Development manages the landscape from a different perspective than the report. Ours is that of balance. We balance the needs of forestry, oil and gas; we balance the needs of recreation; and we balance the needs that the wildlife need to survive in the forest. We do that over a very long period of time. So we recognize that the forest is a living thing and, in doing so, that the renewable resource that we see is a living thing. That's how and why we manage it sustainably for the future.

The Speaker: That was helpful.

The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. How do we address the needs of wildlife?

Mr. Coutts: Sure. We manage the landscape based on balance, as I said, for a variety of users, Mr. Speaker. We have official protected areas in the province, we have wildlife habitat, plus we have management plans that help us take the steps to account for the needs of wildlife. We also have a critical habitat review that takes place before applications go into sensitive areas, and forest management plans are required before companies can go in and do any forestry. We have set-asides. We have regulations in place to protect streams and other sensitive areas that will help our wildlife flourish in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Ambulance Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Emergency room overcrowding has been a constant problem that has been brought to the minister's attention time after time, and the government has offered no solutions. In fact, insufficient funding by this government will prevent the Capital health region from increasing the number of acute-care beds to ease backlogs in the emergency room. On top of that, this government decided not to increase funding for the municipal ambulance program. My questions are to the minister of health. Given that there were no ambulances in Edmonton to respond to emergencies 93 times in February 2006, up from only eight times in all of 2004, can the minister explain the decision not to increase funding for ambulances?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, from a number of points of view the hon. member has cited some issues that I believe have been topical in the media but may not reflect the capacity that we're trying to build in regional health authorities. The regional health authorities have been gifted with an average across the province of about 6 per cent; in the case of the Edmonton capital region a 5.7 per cent increase, over $100 million. In terms of the capacity that they wish to establish in terms of beds, it will not only be between the hospitals in downtown Edmonton but between the subacute region.

There's a lot of work being done, Mr. Speaker, in your own constituency. I believe some of the day surgeries and other procedures are being transferred to Barrhead, are being transferred to other areas. It's quite exciting to see the co-operation that hospitals are building in order to accommodate capacity when beds are short.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that much of the system's ability to take new patients into the ER or for surgeries depends on the ability to discharge people into long-term care, why has the minister only committed $78 million to long-term care when even she admits that it needs $250 million?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the long-term care plan we recognized that both in the third quarter and in the monies that are in this budget there are dollars to move from a staffing ratio in 2004-05 that was at 3.1 to 3.6 hours of care per person per day. I think that under these circumstances you see us accelerating the type of care that's provided to people. You see a much stronger capacity that we've built with lifts, with medication supports, with administrative supports.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we still have work to do, and we continue to do that. We're preparing standards so that long-term care patients and people that are working with the care plans for long-term care patients will be stronger. We're working on more information and better training. If you look at the budget this year of my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education, you will see many more people that are coming into training for positions that will someday help and support this.

Mr. Speaker, on every front we're trying to tackle the problems to make sure that we have adequate staffing and long-term care placements.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the same minister: how can Albertans believe that this government can reform the entire health system when they've proved they can't even manage the ambulance service?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not even making any pretense of managing the ambulance service. It is not our job. We have provided . . .

Ms Blakeman: You're not funding it. You're not managing it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, in over 25 years of local and provincial politics, to my best recollection the province of Alberta has never managed the ambulance system. What we have done in the last two years is provide at least $55 million to all but two authorities that are receiving $10 million for pilot projects to support health care management within the ambulance system. We have had members of municipal ambulance systems working on an advisory committee – and note that I say municipal employees, not provincial government employees – trying to define what, if any, should be the future of managing ambulance in a proper way. I think that over the last few months they've done a lot of consultation. They're looking at patient safety. They're looking at the impact on municipal authorities. I'm sincerely hopeful that at the conclusion of this you'll see a plan for ambulance delivery that will be both safe and that will accommodate the regions in the best way possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. The announcement to raise income support rates for Albertans who cannot work is very good news, but why is there no increase for the 15,000 people who also get assistance through Alberta Works but are expected to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question. At least the member mentioned that those people that are not expected to work did get an increase in the budget. Talking about the 15,000 or so that are expected to work, our top priority – and I said this earlier in question period – through the 56 employment centres is to put these people back into the workforce as quickly as possible because that is where the clientele want to be. Through that, we provide employment exemptions, daycare support, school support, and other expenses, health care support, even relocation to a new community if they choose to do so. So that is our plan. Anyone that's able to work, that's living in Alberta will eventually have to work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To get a little more clarity, why aren't any of the rates tied to standard measures like the market-based measure to ensure that rates are at least in line with the cost of living?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, the market-basket measure and others like it are good research tools, as we all know, basically to explore low-income issues that trace Albertans. Of course, we use them for that purpose only. We don't use them to determine what assistance is required because we provide so many other valuable services like thousands of jobs in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary: is the 5 per cent increase going to be enough for those clients who cannot work or get enough money through other employment?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, we'll continue monitoring that situation very closely as we move forward. I mentioned earlier that there are other supports provided for those people, and we'll continue doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Continuing Care Assistance

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost a year after the Auditor General's scathing report and recommendations by the MLA task force this government has committed less than 30 per cent of the $250 million estimated by the minister of health to improve continuing care. I'll steal a motion from my fellow member, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and say: do we not all in this House support our vulnerable seniors? My question is to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister explain how she failed to budget the resources necessary to fix continuing care when racehorses got a 40 per cent increase?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am really struggling to understand which budget documents my hon. colleagues across the way are using. I thought they were in the House when we presented the budget and the numbers yesterday. Now, I want the hon. member to just think again of the amount of increase to long-term care and the $250 million that she quoted and the 30 per cent. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Actually, the next question is to the minister of health. I'll come back with that math answer. Given that $63 million was granted to horse racing and only $42 million put toward improving seniors' care, can the minister explain how many full-time personal care aides could have been hired with that money?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm not clear about whether it's the money that was relative to the horse racing, so I would have to say that I need more clarification in order to answer the question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. That would have been the difference between 42 and 63.

The Speaker: The question, please.

Ms Pastoor: To the Minister of Gaming: how many task forces were required to determine that horse racing should receive a 40 per cent increase?

Mr. Graydon: Actually, if no one shows up at the racetrack and doesn't put any money in the slot machines, there will be a zero per cent increase.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's budget showed once again that in Alberta friends of the government get richer, and everyone else gets scraps from the master's table. The $370 million gift to corporate friends of this government is beyond comprehension for most Albertans especially because it's not a one-time gift; it's a gift in perpetuity, year after year after year. That these megaprofitable corporations will be laughing even harder to the bank while Albertans are stuck with health premiums and user fees is unconscionable. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why is this government willing to give billionaire corporations six times the amount this government is willing to invest in early learning and child care?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to take the hon. members to page 134 in the fiscal outlook book. I'm sure that you have them in front of you. We'll have an opportunity to debate this because this is part of my department. If you go to the bottom of that page, it clearly says: "Effective April 1, 2006, we will reduce the general corporate income tax rate to 10 per cent, lowering taxes for Alberta businesses" [interjections] – can we listen once more? – "by $265 million." That's not the $400 million that I heard yesterday from the ND, and it's not the $300 million or whatever it was that I heard earlier today. It's on page 134 in my book.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? If Alberta businesses continue to grow and thrive as they have been under our tax policy, creating more jobs and more jobs for Albertans, that number could change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That $370 million comes from the minister's own projection of revenues.

Why does this minister think that corporations like EnCana should be given $8.5 million in giveaways while a low-income family of four deserves a meagre $65 a month more? It doesn't even compensate for the erosion in the real value due to inflation of what they have been receiving since the last increase.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'll remind the hon. member again that all on the personal side, the basic exemption, both basic and spousal or adult dependant, is indexed every year so that there is no loss year to year. That was a decision that was made.

member is talking about a royalty situation. The oil and gas industry undisputably contributes in a huge way to this province both in revenue derived from royalties, from land sales, and maybe most importantly from economic activity. I don't understand at all a philosophy that has absolutely no use for, no respect for, and no understanding of business.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: why does she think that paying back corporate donations to the PC Party through corporate tax cuts is more important than investing the $250 million needed to immediately improve quality of life for seniors in long-term care?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, the first thing I would say, Mr. Speaker, is that I think members of other parties in this House are probably offended because the member infers that only our party receives any donations from the corporate community. Oh, would that be true, it would be wonderful, but in fact it's not.

Mr. Speaker, I like to have questions on this budget. I want to have questions on: did we provide enough dollars in health care? I think that's appropriate. Did we provide enough dollars in continuing care? That's appropriate. Did we provide enough dollars in education? That's appropriate. To make these rather specious comparisons is not productive, not helpful, and it completely clouds all of the discussions we're having here.

Home Building Contracts

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as evidenced by yesterday's budget, Alberta's economy is firing on all cylinders. While this is a good thing, I have some 50 constituents who seem to be the victim of this hot economy. Despite signing a contract with a home builder, in some cases as long as a year ago, to build their dream home at a specific cost, these constituents are now being told that the builder will not honour the contract and is offering to refund their deposit. In the meantime, the costs of building a home have increased substantially. My questions are to the Minister of Government Services. What safeguards are in place to protect consumers in situations like this?

Mr. Lund: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good point because certainly in Calgary right now there is a great demand for homes and, of course, a shortage of labour. As a matter of fact, a couple of weeks ago I met with two large home-building companies, and they're putting a cap on the number of homes that they will even contract because they don't want to run into this problem. I know it must be really traumatic for the 30-plus purchasers that signed contracts and now are not going to get their homes.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member mentioned that these were contracts that they signed, and really I think we can't overemphasize how important it is that people know what's in the contract, that they make sure that they're comfortable with the contract and make sure that it's all legal because there are issues peripheral to maybe what people are thinking about at the time you're signing the contract. So it's really important that people talk with people that have experience in that field.

Mr. Liepert: My first supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. Can he tell the Assembly why the builder would not be required to at least pay interest on those refunded deposits?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, currently we don't have any legislation except for the Residential Tenancies Act that requires interest to be paid on a deposit. Incidentally, that interest rate now is zero, so it's not a big help. It certainly is an area that we need to look at. But once again I've got to come back to the fact that that's just one of the items that should have been covered in the contract. As I say, it's peripheral to what people might be thinking about, but people that have had experience in contracts would identify that kind of a scenario that could happen.

Mr. Liepert: My final supplementary question to the same minister is: would he consider having his department intervene and at least have the developer sell the lots to the purchaser at the same price as what was agreed to in the contract?

Mr. Lund: That's an interesting situation, Mr. Speaker. I haven't seen the contract, but it's my understanding that the contractor never did purchase the land, that in fact the land is still registered under the name of the developer. So I'm not sure that there's any way that we can deal with that issue but, I guess, to emphasize again how important it is to have a good understanding of the contract and to have a good contract.

Just yesterday we had an awards program for the best champions in consumer affairs. One of the awards that we granted was to Alberta New Home Warranty, and it was for a book that they have put together on tips when buying a new condominium or buying a new single-dwelling home. I would urge people to get a copy of that in order to have a look at it.

Also, under the Real Estate Council they have a lot of good tips for people that are getting into contracts to purchase homes. Actually, of course, often in cases the home is the biggest purchase that a family will make.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Municipal Sustainability

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two-thirds of Albertans, those 2 million plus citizens living in and around the boom-town cities of Edmonton and Calgary, were ignored in yesterday's announcement with the exception of partial ring roads that will circumnavigate the line of ambulances parked in front of overcrowded hospitals, the decaying inner- and absent outer-city schools, the seniors crying out in understaffed, underregulated long-term care homes, and the hundreds of thousands of low-income individuals dependent on FCSS support. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. How much more do the citizens of Edmonton and Calgary pay out through a variety of taxes – provincial income, property, gas, and health care – than they receive back from the province for service funding?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, you probably won't like the answer, but I want to remind the hon. member – and I'll stick to Calgary because that's where he's from; we can bring the others into it as well – that the city of Calgary does receive $95 million from its share of the provincial fuel tax. It does receive $177 million a year from the Alberta municipal infrastructure program. But in total, sir, the contribution to the city of Calgary in all of those categories that you named is $4 billion from the province, so I will not put in the amount that they contribute because it's considerably less.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My second question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that about this time last year you speculated about providing municipalities tax relief through the return of the education portion of property tax, when will your speculation turn into government action?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that the member brings that question forward because it gives me an opportunity to discuss what I've been in fact discussing with the mayor of Calgary, the mayor of Edmonton – I introduced them in the House just recently – the president of the AUMA, and the president of the AAMD and C, who are working together on the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability to deal with that very issue.

I have repeatedly said in this House – and I repeat it with the members of my council – that the responsibility of that council is to have a look at the roles and responsibilities of cities, of the province, and to determine what are the reasonable costs associated with those roles. Once we've done that, once we've established what those roles are, then it makes sense to begin to look at the revenue side and determine whether the revenue, in fact, matches the roles and responsibilities. I expect that we should have that complete within the next six to eight months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the definitive timeline. That is appreciated.

My third question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that despite our multibillion dollar annual surpluses Albertans are currently – currently – paying out of pocket billions of dollars in health care premiums and insurance fees to receive delayed basic care, how much more will we have to pay out when your government's third-way private delivery costs are downloaded onto hard-working Albertans?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no intent to download costs on hard-working Albertans in the third way. In fact, the whole premise of the policy framework is to build a strong publicly funded system, a system where you can get public health care at the time you need it, as much as possible, without any identification or contradiction as to your ability to pay because you will always have that capacity to access a strong public health system in Alberta without paying for it.

Mr. Speaker, the question does not relate to the health care policy framework. It does not relate to what Albertans have been looking for in policies. It does not relate to any kind of identification this government has made for any future costs in health care. Yes, the health care premiums are still part of a portion of public funding towards health care, but the larger bulk of health care funding still comes from the general revenue fund of the province of Alberta. The vast majority of $735 million comes from the province of Alberta's revenues, and what we're struggling with is trying to make sure that it's sustainable and that people have access where and when they need it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of six to participate.

Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan 100th Anniversary

The Speaker: Today I would like to advise you that I have conveyed on your behalf and on behalf of the staff of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta sincere congratulations to Speaker P. Myron Kowalsky and the members and staff of the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan on the 100th anniversary of the opening of the First Session of their first Legislature.

Our celebrations began on March 15; Saskatchewan's will begin on March 29. We, of course, share with Saskatchewan more than just a common border. In fact, we share the same humble beginnings. With the establishment of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories in 1888, together we began the quest for responsible government and autonomy within the dominion of Canada. Attaining such provincial status was a struggle, but successfully we built two strong and independent provinces.

So as we look back over the last 100 years, on your behalf we convey best wishes to the people of Saskatchewan and their institution of democracy.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's once again my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of high school students from Ponoka, Alberta. They are from St. Augustine school. They're a group of 29 grade 10 students studying government in their social studies class. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Darren Josephson and Mrs. Elaine Ernst. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Crystal Meth Strategies

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the last couple of weeks I've shared with the Legislature several youth groups that we as a province have consulted with on many different issues. One challenge that these groups of youth have identified and tried to address is the problem of illegal drugs and methamphetamine in particular. As chair of the Youth Secretariat I think it's important that we work together to solve this problem.

In order that we do this, the government has taken a number of steps to protect the children and the youth of this province. For example, Mr. Speaker, Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act, will help to protect children exposed to drug manufacturing and the trafficking of illegal drugs. Recent health regulation changes have helped to ensure that some of the medications used in making meth are now listed as schedule 2 drugs and, therefore, are sold from behind the pharmacist's counter.

In addressing the challenge of meth, the province has also developed an Alberta drug strategy under AADAC together with the Crystal Meth Task Force and other government departments and partners in our communities. AADAC will develop a co-ordinated response to meth within our province. Again, youth are being consulted on this issue and are helping to develop solutions to the problem. Further, as we speak, youth are working with aboriginal youth in four different areas of our province to obtain their perspectives with the growing problem.

AADAC also opened a number of retreat beds for those youth aged 12 to 17. New services provided also include a special treatment procedure to help address methamphetamine use.

Through these initiatives I hope we can curb the use of meth by our children and young people. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

2:30 X-Treme Women's Hockey Challenge

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today in recognition of the 2006 Battle of the Border X-Treme Women's Hockey Challenge. Last night the four-game challenge between the Calgary Oval X-Treme and the U.S. Selects team kicked off in front of a sold-out crowd in the Three Hills Centennial Arena. The game was very hard fought and exciting, and the U.S. Selects, sad to say, scored a goal in the dying seconds of the final minute of play to defeat the Oval X-Tremes 3 to 2.

EnCana, the event sponsor, generously matched the proceeds of the game and donated them to the big winners of the evening, the Three Hills Arena Completion Society and Kneehill minor hockey.

The Battle of the Border was more than just another hockey game to our community. The young women from the two teams in the tournament as well as Olympic gold medalist Hayley Wickenheiser participated in school visits and a local mentorship lunch and signed countless autographs for young women in our community. One lucky young lady, 12-year-old Dominique Lambert, won the local X-Treme Queen contest and had an opportunity to join the Oval X-Treme team in their dressing room prior to the game and sit next to Hayley Wickenheiser during the game.

The teams involved in the Battle of the Border and Hayley's Olympic gold medal winning Canadian women's hockey team have done a wonderful job of raising the profile of women's hockey and women's sports in general. Sports and physical activity are very important to the well-being of young women. They contribute to higher levels of confidence and self-esteem. Sport is where one can learn about teamwork, goal setting, and the pursuit of excellence. Sport prepares you for life.

The ladies of the Oval X-Treme team and the U.S. Selects team as well as Hayley Wickenheiser and her Team Canada teammates are an inspiration to young women and set a wonderful example. These women's hockey heroes truly are worthy role models.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Tribute to Fort McMurray

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray is a good place to live. Too often our media portrays Fort McMurray as a place that is out of control. It's not. From what you read and hear, it is darkened with environmental degradation and is a wild west town, beset by violence and drugs. It's not. I'm not saying that there are not problems that should be addressed in infrastructure funding and in improving the quality of life in Fort McMurray, but it is a good place to live.

Most people in the world would love to have many of the problems Fort McMurray has. The northern lights actually shine on Fort McMurray. The majestic Clearwater and Athabasca rivers meet at Fort McMurray. The city enjoys some of the most historic and scenic river valleys in Alberta.

Where else in Alberta can you land a float plane downtown? I twice lived in the old Syncrude Towers, and float planes flew past my window. It was cool. Where else can you walk out your back door in many subdivisions and into virgin pine and aspen forest?

Snowmobile enthusiasts can leave their yard and go on trails that will stretch for hundreds of miles. Some of the best trophy fishing lakes in the world are a hop, skip, and jump away. Hunting opportunities are some of the best on the continent. And it's pretty neat to drive up the ice road to Fort Chipewyan and to see the museum and church in the oldest community, arguably, in Alberta, to say nothing of driving through the wonders of nearby Wood Buffalo national park and crossing Alberta and Saskatchewan's largest lake, Lake Athabasca.

There is a multicultural and multi-Canadian base to Fort McMurray that is cosmopolitan and gives it also an international flair. If you want to learn about Newfoundland, go to Fort McMurray. There's more: the theatre at Keyano College and the Fort McMurray Oil Barons for great hockey.

There's lots of work and business. There's much to work on in growing Fort McMurray, Mr. Speaker, but a family can do very well financially and grow a great life in our beautiful Alberta city of Fort McMurray.

In the future I would like to see in our media a much more balanced view of what McMurray has to offer. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 21 we recognized the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This is a day to remember and reflect on the fact that racism is still part of our society. On March 21, 1960, police opened fire and killed 60 people at a peaceful demonstration in South Africa. This serves as a reminder of the destructive nature of racism, and we must raise awareness and involve all Canadians in the movement against racism.

Yesterday I was pleased to see grade 6 students from St. Clement Catholic school in my riding doing an excellent exhibition and conference about the elimination of racial discrimination. It was a very inspiring moment for me. We can learn a lesson from our children as individuals and make the same effort to support acceptance and diversity. First of all, speak out against racism. In this case, silence is not golden. Silence too can lead to greater discrimination, so you have the right as well as the duty to speak out. When you have the chance, stand up and protect our society's great diversity and respect for differences.

Mr. Speaker, racism is the belief that one ethnic group, race, or religion is superior to others and that they are not worthy of respect or recognition. As a result, individuals become the target of racist acts based on the colour of their skin and their cultural background. Your support should not stop at home. Even at work you can explore ways to promote positive race relations by vocally objecting to racist jokes and insults. Racism must be stopped. Together we can accomplish this goal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Advanced Education Tuition Fees

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we heard the government's budget for the upcoming year. Great care was taken to continue giving gifts to friends in big oil and tax cuts to those who need them the least. For postsecondary students there was very little real good news. In particular, there was no sign of permanent relief from ever-increasing tuition fees. Despite the minister's talk about increasing the affordability and accessibility for our postsecondary students, yesterday's budget illustrated the difference between how much this government values investing in our students and, therefore, in our future versus squandering public revenues in perpetuity and giveaways for their corporate friends.

For yet another year students face a tuition increase. The government will pay for the increase in the next fiscal year, which amounts to nothing more than a stay of execution. Students need a real solution to ever-growing tuition costs. I think it behooves us to ask: who needs relief more? Last year, for example, EnCana had net earnings of $3.4 billion. Meanwhile, a recent survey of undergraduates found that in their prime, summertime earning months nearly two-thirds of students earned less than $2,500 per month. Yet this government hikes tuition for students and cuts taxes for the already wealthy.

Last week a letter from the university presidents to the minister was made public. They were calling for the status quo in tuition increases. I urge the minister to ignore those demands and to make students a priority. I urge him to listen to the recommendation made by student groups, those most familiar with the burden of escalating tuition, and implement an immediate freeze and deliver a long-term plan which includes a significant rollback to ensure that all of Alberta's bright, young minds can afford to fully participate in postsecondary education. Now, Mr. Speaker, that would be a real investment in our future.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 142 Albertans who are asking the government of Alberta to abandon plans to implement the third way, to defeat legislation allowing expansion of private, for-profit hospitals, not to contravene the Canada Health Act, et cetera.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition from 56 Albertans who are urging the government of Alberta to "consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition that I would like to present to the Legislative Assembly, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to call a public inquiry into Enron's role in the development of electricity deregulation in Alberta and their market conduct in the Power Pool of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday, April 3, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 10, 11, 12, and 13.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday, April 3, I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 20, 21, and 22.

head: Introduction of Bills

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce Bill 24, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2006.

As announced in yesterday's release of Budget 2006, Bill 24 amends the existing act to raise the limit on the use of nonrenewable resource revenue for budget purposes to $5.3 billion from $4.75 billion. As per the legislation any amount over the $5.3 billion will continue to be allocated to the sustainability fund.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Securities Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 25, being the Securities Amendment Act, 2006.

Bill 25 is a bill that will include among other things the protection for secondary market investors in the province of Alberta, including people with RRSPs, pensions, and other personal investments. Under this legislation they would have a legal right to sue public companies that issue false or misleading information. Ontario has enacted similar legislation. The legislation is important because nearly 90 per cent of all equity trading in Alberta takes place in the secondary market. The bill also identifies a number of provisions within the existing act that need to be amended.

I move first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I move that Bill 25 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 27, the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act.

Before we get too many calls from excited children, this act isn't repealing the sales of vegetables in Alberta. They will still be on your dinner plates, I assure you. I'm sure that this bill will bring about some very fiery and passionate debate, and I look forward to that.

This bill will repeal the unnecessary and unused Vegetables Sales (Alberta) Act and the two associated regulations: the vegetable sales regulation and the grades, packages, and fees regulation. Growers and packers are no longer using Alberta grades. They're using the federal grades or more subjective qualities such as appearance, size, and product consistency, allowing them to market produce more easily outside the province. That's why we've introduced this bill: to continue our commitment to eliminating unnecessary and unused acts and regulations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill will result in a more secure and transparent election process, which in turn promotes integrity and public confidence in Alberta's municipal electoral system and gives local jurisdictions the flexibility to tailor election procedures to address their citizens' requirements.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move that Bill 28 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Stony Plain, am I calling on you today?

Traffic Safety (Mandatory Motorcycle Training) Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 211, the Traffic Safety (Mandatory Motorcycle Training) Amendment Act, 2006, for first reading.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to reduce the occurrences of collisions and fatalities involving motorcycles on Alberta's roads. This bill will hopefully cut down the number of collisions involving motorcycles by requiring that anybody wishing to obtain their class 6 licence, the motorcycle endorsement, present proof of having taken part in a certified motorcycle training course.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 211 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings. The first is from Martha Cheney, who questions: if it's a private system, what quality control processes will be in place, and also what recourse is available to deter receiving poor service?

The second tabling is from Marlene Lecky Perron, who makes a point that she doesn't believe Albertans want a system where ability to pay would determine the rate at which you're served.

The next one is from John Stasiuk and family, making the point that it is possible to make good improvements in the current system; from Shawna Welz, who makes the point that she wrote to the Premier and the minister and just received condescending letters saying that she didn't understand; from Bob and Kathy Borreson, making the point that they've had first-hand experience with a family being denied private health insurance in the 1950s prior to medicare; from Don Mayne, making the point about the foolishness of hiring a company which has been convicted of wrongdoing to provide guidance to the Alberta government; from Bill Lundquist, making a point feeling that the Premier really doesn't care about the poor, the hard-working, or the seniors; from David Flower, making a point about a $1.5 million contract on whether private health insurance should be an option in our province going to a subcompany of a private U.S. company; and from Jean Andrews and Rene Thibault, making a point asking to please stop destroying the medical system, which has provided universal and accessible health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the requisite number of copies of six of the letters that the Official Opposition received from concerned citizens regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The ones I am tabling today are from Shannon O'Neill, Kasimo A. Kalyegira,* Meerag Swamy, Larry – and I couldn't read the last name; it's illegible – Anupa Ashav,* and Heather Harsch.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I am tabling today are from Thy Nguyen, Rae-Lynn Wiltshire, Jeff Crawford, Tong Zheng, Tara Paterok, and Shana Dion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare from Douglas McLachlan, Stephanie Wolfe, Laurie Moulton, Mark Hall, Antsar Mustfa, Patricia McEwen.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twelve further letters regarding the provincial government's involvement with the national daycare program, and these letters are from Heather Horn, Idabell Parcasio, Lisa Komaransky, C. Elliott, Heather Eliasson, Kerry Powell, Bernard Fraser,* Jason McCallum,* Angela Bourne,* Chris Evans,* Suzanne Evans,* and Veshaya Shayans.*

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table two documents on behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition. The first is a letter from Alvin Finkel. Mr. Finkel objects to the dismissive and robotic response received from the minister of health when he raised serious concerns about health privatization. He provides evidence of how the public system will suffer if a parallel private system is put into place.

I'm also tabling a synopsis of a legal dispute between Grant McLean and the government of Alberta. Mr. McLean was a senior manager with the government of Alberta, a former mayor of the city of Airdrie, and in 2005 was awarded the Alberta centennial medal. Mr. McLean is taking his former employer, the government of Alberta, to court for alleged negligent misrepresentation in a matter relating to his pension.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite number of copies of the 2004-2005 Alberta Economic Development Authority activity report entitled Sustaining Economic Performance and Prosperity.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, I want to raise a point this afternoon with respect to tablings. There's a difficult situation that has developed and is starting to develop, and I use by example sessional paper 197/2006, which was tabled in the House by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Invariably members stand up and say: "I'm tabling here a letter with respect to the provincial government plan for the future of daycare," or something of the like, and a document is tabled which references the national child care program. In looking at some of these tablings, as the chair does from time to time, there's absolutely nothing in the letter that has to do with respect to the province of Alberta. But more importantly – more importantly – than that there is no signature on the letter, there is no identification who the letter might be from, and the letter that's tabled is absolutely unreadable. You can see it as well as I can.

Now, if this is what we're doing in tablings, then I'm going to ask that the House leaders have a discussion and deal with this subject once and for all because if it's simply a matter of a member going out and xeroxing 150 blank pieces of paper and then standing up and tabling them, our Hansard people are invariably spending a waste of time trying to identify who it is.

When we come back on April 3, I'm going to give you some other examples where, in fact, the names mentioned in the House do not correspond with the documents tabled. This is not the honourable way to do things.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask under Standing Order 7(5) whether the Government House Leader could share with us the projected government business for the week of April 3 to 6, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to provide the projected government business for the week of April 3 to 6, 2006. On Monday, April 3, 2006, most of the day is spent on private members' business with Government Bills and Orders starting at 9 p.m. in Committee of the Whole, Bill 16; second reading, bills 15, 20, 23, 26; and as per the Order Paper.

That evening commencing at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply, day 2 of 24, Energy, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, April 5, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply, day 3 of 24, with Infrastructure and Transportation, and as per the Order Paper. That evening at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply, day 4 of 24, Executive Council, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, April 6, 2006, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders Committee of Supply, day 5 of 24, Human Resources and Employment, and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before moving to the next item in the Routine, might I just draw to every member's attention that on Monday next the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster will reach his half-century point in life.

head: Government Motions
 Provincial Fiscal Policies

16. Mrs. McClellan moved:
 Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 22: Dr. Taft]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of all Albertans and as Leader of the Official Opposition it's my duty and, indeed, my privilege to respond to the budget delivered in this Assembly yesterday. There are a few things to like in the budget. How could there not be, given the wealth of Alberta? Tuition relief for students, more funding for projects to reduce wait times in the public health care system, more support for Albertans using the AISH program, an increase in spending on primary care, the planned twinning of highway 63: those are all steps in the right direction, Mr. Speaker. But, after all, when you take a shotgun approach to budgeting, you're bound to hit the target once in a while. [interjections] I can tell it's going to be a fun afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

Overall, this budget shows that we have a directionless, fractured government drowning in cash yet, despite unprecedented opportunity, completely unable or perhaps unwilling to develop a long-term plan to ensure Alberta's prosperity.

Ordinary Albertans don't depend upon windfalls to balance their household budgets, Mr. Speaker, yet the government's addiction to nonrenewable resource revenue grows stronger every year, rising from 3 and a half billion dollars in 2004, already a very significant amount, to a projected $5.3 billion by 2007. The problem with this is: if the price of oil and gas drops – and history shows that it will – or, perhaps more ominously, if new technologies render petroleum resources less valuable, how are we going to support the kind of spending that we have? Where is the money going to come from?

Mr. Speaker, I often reflect on the fate of the Red Deer River Valley downstream from Drumheller. In 1950 there were well over a hundred coal mines between Drumheller and what is now Dinosaur park. In 1960 there were about a dozen. In 1970 there was one. The coal was still there, but the resource had been rendered without value because of advances in technology. My concern for the future of this province is that that same kind of scenario will play out again.

A truly responsible, forward-thinking government would set aside as much of this nonrenewable revenue as possible to pay for future expenses, but instead we get tax cuts for corporations and subsidies for horse racing. Mr. Speaker, if we can't find the discipline, the discipline that this government once had to start saving for the future now, in the middle of this incredible boom, when is it ever going to happen?

In 10 or 15 years will Albertans once again be forced to tighten their belts not through any fault of their own but because the politicians of today – all of us – failed to insulate our economy from the whims of resource prices? As elected representatives of the people every member of this Assembly on both sides of the House has a responsibility to act as a steward of our province's collective wealth. We've been entrusted by our fellow citizens to manage that wealth in ways that serve the public good. Therefore, we in the Official Opposition are duty-bound to offer our criticisms of this budget.

This budget predicts a $4.1 billion surplus. That's wonderful, no doubt. But the lion's share of that expected surplus will come from the estimated $11 billion in nonrenewable natural resource revenues. Simply put, we are living beyond our means, yet the government's planned changes to the Fiscal Responsibility Act will increase, actually increase the limit on the use of nonrenewable resource revenue for budget purposes from $4.75 billion to $5.3 billion. We in the Alberta Liberal opposition strongly oppose this initiative.

The smartest people in this province, from economic think tanks to business leaders to savvy working Albertans, are all saying that we need to save much more of our natural resource revenues for the future. But, instead, this government is spending the money almost as fast as the resource is sucked out of the ground. Mr. Speaker, the Canada West Foundation published a study recently indicating that this government had spent 91 per cent of all natural resource revenues in the period from 1979 to 2004. Ninety-one per cent. We are spending it as fast as it comes in. That's no way to build a future.

Sure, this year the heritage fund gets another billion dollars, but that's less than the government spent – handed out, I might say – in rebate cheques last year. In any case this government continues to draw money from the heritage fund for general revenues. What's the sense in that? There's no real commitment from this government to growing that fund, a fund that has lost 50 per cent of its real value in the last 17 years.

In other areas the budget didn't address the $6.9 billion in teachers' pension unfunded liability. The government is responsible for two-thirds of this liability, which clearly represents an unpaid debt.

On infrastructure and transportation, Mr. Speaker, once again this government has failed to provide adequate, sustainable, and predictable funding.

When it comes to Alberta's cities and towns, they need a wider array of fiscal tools to meet the needs of their communities, and they're not getting it. This government needs at the very least to live up to its commitment of two years ago to put a hard cap on the education portion of property tax at $1.2 billion. That would mean this year, in fact, a rollback of over $200 million.

When it comes to schools, the infrastructure situation, the condition of our school buildings is too often almost in a crisis mode. Just last week, every member of this Assembly knows, a school in Calgary had to be evacuated because of structural problems with the roof stemming from roof leaks that had not been attended to for years. Calgary has 40 neighbourhoods with no schools and over $400 million in deferred maintenance, and there are up to 76 neighbourhoods needing schools in Edmonton.

One of the symbols to me of the failure of this government, Mr. Speaker, is that you can walk through neighbourhoods of Alberta from 1910 and 1920, through the dirty '30s, the war years of the '40s, through the '50s, through the baby boom of the '60s, and through the '70s and '80s, and every neighbourhood had a school. Our society could afford schools in the 1920s. They could afford them in the '50s. They could afford them in the '70s. Under this government you walk through neighbourhoods that have empty fields, and children even in cities are spending up to an hour each way on a bus, going to school. [interjections] I hear moaning, a phony sort of moaning from backbenchers of this government. I dare them to do that at a parent council meeting in any number of schools in this province.

How is it that at a time of such prosperity, when we have a booming population and so many children, this budget makes no mention of new school construction? The Minister of Education knows how many schools are needed. He has a three-year capital plan for every school board. Why won't this government provide stable, sufficient, and predictable funding for proper schools for our children? The budget line for infrastructure renewal for schools, $81 million, isn't enough to take care of the Calgary board of education's capital needs of almost $400 million never mind Calgary Catholic schools or Edmonton public or Edmonton separate or all the rest of the province.

The increases in operating grants for education will barely cover inflation, and to my great dismay, in a province as wealthy as Alberta and a government swimming in cash, there's not one cent to fund hot lunch programs. This government simply seems unprepared to admit that kids in Alberta are going to school hungry, and that is a great moral failure of this Conservative government.

I also can't help pointing out, Mr. Speaker, that there's no money for junior kindergarten or full-day kindergarten, investments in early education that pay off over the long term, pay off over and over in lower justice costs, lower health costs, higher productivity, and higher tax revenues.

As far as postsecondary education goes, Mr. Speaker, the tuition rebate is continued for 2006-07, as previously announced, which comes after years of rapid increases, the fastest in the country from 1990 to the present. While the respite in tuition increases is welcomed – I support that – we're still awaiting and students across this province are still awaiting the tuition fee policy that was promised in the 2005 Speech from the Throne over a year ago, a policy that Alberta families desperately need to determine whether or not they can send their kids to college or university and a policy that many young adults themselves need to know if they can plan their lives around an education or not.

There is also no additional investment in the access to the future fund, one of the real surprises of this budget, with just $750 million total after two years of a three-year commitment to a fund that is supposed to reach $3 billion. As a result, there will only be $45 million annually generated from that fund to spend on system improvements, not nearly enough. When fully funded, whenever that will actually be, it will provide $135 million, a step in the right direction but not the kind of planning we need. Frankly, this policy pales in comparison to the Alberta Liberal plan, which, assuming a $10 billion surplus, would already have produced a 3 and a half billion dollar postsecondary endowment fund, which would continue to grow and support Alberta's postsecondary institutions until they became truly world class.

While the operating grants to postsecondary education appear substantial, they're not as great as this government is claiming. The grants to postsecondary education are appearing to be higher because the government is temporarily paying $87 million to offset the costs of tuition increases. I welcome the savings to students, of course. But let's not kid ourselves about the actual funding our colleges and universities are receiving, just enough to cover inflation.

The health budget has increased to $10.3 billion, a great amount of money by anyone's measure and a 7.7 per cent increase over last year. But, Mr. Speaker, I put a warning out to this government: if they want to keep any kind of control on this, do not proceed with the provisions in the third way that open up our health system to market forces. If we think we have trouble controlling health costs now, you wait until the marketplace is driving demand and prices.

Giving the Alberta Cancer Board $25 million from the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund to expand cancer screening programs is a welcome move. Cancer screening can help reduce further costs and, of course, can be an important factor in saving lives.

We are disappointed in the increases for long-term care, only $42 million, significantly less than the $250 million that was recommended by the long-term care review committee and by the health minister herself at one point.

Spending on primary health care is up, which is a step in the right direction. We support a team-based approach to providing care in the community because we have seen, as have so many Albertans, that such an approach can create substantial savings in the public system. Let these innovations continue to work.

The one tax cut that we would have enthusiastically supported was not in this budget, and that is eliminating health care premiums. Eliminating health care premiums would be a tax benefit to every single person in Alberta. It would benefit the working poor. It would benefit small businesses, who so often have to now cover that cost in order to hold onto employees. It would benefit big public-sector employers like colleges and universities and, indeed, many provincial agencies because they pay those benefits. It would benefit everybody, and yet it's not here in this budget. It should be, Mr. Speaker.

We were also surprised – and I think it's worth noting – that funding for aboriginal health strategies appears to have been cut from $2.2 million to $1.7 million, in the overall scheme of things not a huge percentage of money, but Alberta's aboriginal population is substantially more reliant upon health services and experiences higher rates of health problems across a whole range of diseases. By cutting the budget for aboriginal health strategies, I'm concerned – we're all concerned – that this government is setting itself up for higher costs and more difficulties and, frankly, more human suffering in the aboriginal community of the future.

Another area, Mr. Speaker, where in the overall scheme of things a relatively small amount of money could have made a revolutionary difference is in the arts. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts did receive a 16 per cent increase in funding, which sounds terrific until you realize that it's only the second increase in funding in more than 15 years. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts receives funding through Community Development and then distributes those funds to Alberta arts groups and individuals. While any increase is nice, funding for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts has been insufficient for years, and it results in a lack of support for all kinds of important groups, groups that add to our quality of life, groups that employ inordinate numbers of Albertans, and groups, in fact, that if they were fully supported would turn this province into a genuine magnet for business, for economic activity, for filmmaking, for tourism, and, indeed, for all kinds of creative industries.

This province has consistently neglected the arts sector and ignored its incredible potential to diversify Alberta's economy. Alberta's cultural and artistic community has once again been let down. The people of Alberta are missing an opportunity to invest in a vibrant, sustainable, revenue-generating sector of the economy that adds so much to our quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, this may be a surplus budget, but it shows a huge deficit of imagination. There's no comprehensive plan for the future here, no sense of direction, no vision of a better tomorrow. It is, indeed, a budget to nowhere. Blessed with unprecedented windfalls, all this government can do is throw a few dollars here, cut a few dollars there, count on unbudgeted surpluses to put out any political fires that happen to break out, and hope that's good enough. Well, it is not good enough. It's not good enough for the Alberta Liberal opposition, and it's not good enough for the people of this province. This is no way to manage Alberta, especially not an Alberta with such incredible potential.

If we had a government with the discipline and imagination to spend where it's needed and save the rest, we could guarantee our prosperity for decades to come. We could build a province of permanent prosperity. Instead, we have a government thrown into disarray by its own good fortune. As one minister has already admitted, it's a lot easier to just say no than it is to manage massive surpluses. The austerity budgets of the 1990s proved that this government is pretty good at saying no, at least was, but faced with the far greater challenge of shepherding Alberta's good fortune to build enduring prosperity, this government has failed utterly. This is a budget that sees numbers but not people, that sees a balance sheet and not the larger meaning behind all the facts and figures.

Albertans deserve better. Albertans need better. Albertans need a government that understands the meaning of windfalls and the importance of long-term planning. We cannot afford government short-sightedness any longer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you. Thank you. I hope you're still doing that at the end.

This is a budget that puts profitable corporations, thoroughbreds, and spin doctors ahead of people. Mr. Speaker, let's start with the taxes first. The numbers don't lie. According to the revenue projections in the fiscal plan, page 44, the government will take an extra $102 million out of the pockets of average Alberta families in the form of personal income taxes next year. Meanwhile, the government's corporate income tax is going down by about $370 million thanks to a 15 per cent reduction in the general corporate tax rate. Reducing the corporate tax rate from 11.5 per cent to 10 per cent, a 15 per cent cut at a time of record high corporate profits, is frankly just a giveaway, a giveaway pure and simple.

Now, let's just look at a few examples of record corporate profits: EnCana Corporation, $7 billion in profits over the past two years; Husky's yearly profit, double that of the year before; Talisman's profit, up 340 per cent in the most recent quarter. The profit parade goes on and on and on.

Meanwhile, this government seems to be allergic to giving a break to hard-working, average Alberta families. The best the Conservative government could come up with was a hundred dollar increase in the basic personal exemption. At the 10 per cent flat tax rate that's a savings of 10 whole bucks next year. Mr. Speaker, these days that's barely enough to buy yourself a good cup of coffee. I think the budget should have come up with a warning label telling Albertans not to spend their 10 buck tax saving all in one place.

About five years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative government brought in a flat income tax of 10 per cent. As the years roll by, the unfairness of the flat tax to middle-income earners grows. The government's own budget figures show that a two-income Alberta family with two children making $60,000 per year will pay 28 per cent more in personal income tax than a family with the same income in Ontario. The Alberta family would also pay three times as much in health care premiums as the same family in Ontario. The government's figures show that a two-income family making a hundred thousand dollars per year will pay 14 per cent more in personal income tax than a family with the same income in Ontario. That's on page 142 of the fiscal plan.

Don't give me the bunk about needing to be competitive with other jurisdictions in terms of corporate taxes. With this completely unjustified and unnecessary corporate tax cut a large profitable corporation in Alberta will pay corporate income tax at a rate 40 per cent lower than the same corporation in Ontario and 20 per cent lower than the same corporation in B.C. The funny thing is, Mr. Speaker, that the B.C. Liberal government just cut its corporate tax rate by 1.5 points in its recent budget to try to compete with Alberta, and now they once again find themselves with a rate 20 per cent higher than Alberta's. Boy, trickle-down economics is really prevalent among these governments.

Meanwhile, the best the government could do on health care premiums was to raise the income threshold for premium subsidies by a few thousand dollars. Premium subsidies only benefit those with very low incomes living below the poverty line. Now, that's assuming, Mr. Speaker, that you can figure out the confusing array of paperwork needed to apply for a premium subsidy. It doesn't come automatically. You have to apply. Meanwhile, middle-income and even lower middle-income families keep getting soaked with $1,056 in regressive health care premiums year after year after year.

While average Albertans do not get a break on health care premiums, Budget 2006 keeps wasting over $100 million a year on the Alberta royalty tax credit. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, giving refundable tax credits to energy companies during a time that oil and gas prices reach ever higher and higher levels? The policy rationale for continuing the royalty tax credit, which is a corporate welfare leftover from the Don Getty era, is such a state secret that for years the government refused to provide the rationale to our current and past Auditors General, who have been asking for it since 1993. In its most recent annual report the government finally cracked under the pressure and told the Auditor General – and I wonder if they had a straight face when they said this – quote, the object of the Alberta royalty tax credit is simply to provide financial assistance to the oil and gas industry, unquote. Well, isn't that nice? A $100 million gift: wouldn't we all like that? Forget about the grain farmers or the welfare moms. Those hard-pressed oil tycoons definitely need much help so that they can keep buying their yachts and fuelling their Hummers.

Mr. Speaker, this year's budget contains no new environmental initiatives of any kind to help us meet climate change targets. This budget contains no new measures to address the huge impacts on land, air, and water of oil sands, coal-bed methane, or other energy development projects. The budget contains no new measures to transition the province to create a greener, cleaner future. The NDP opposition has proposed modest royalty adjustments to generate revenues for green funds that would assist municipalities, small businesses, and homeowners to undertake a range of green initiatives, everything from improving public transit and LRT to doing home retrofits, to fight climate change as well as to reduce utility bills.

Mr. Speaker, on health care, this is a government that claims to be concerned about rising costs, yet other than empty rhetoric the budget itself contains no specific measures for innovation within the public health care system nor any attempt to make it more sustainable. The budget does acknowledge that the most rapidly rising costs are prescription drug costs, which are going up at a rate of about 15 per cent a year, almost double the rate of increase in overall health spending.

While the government claims to be concerned about rising health costs, it rejects practical solutions for slowing down the growth in drug costs, such as the NDP opposition's proposed pharmaceutical savings agency. The NDP opposition's proposal is based on a successful New Zealand model that has slowed down the growth in drug costs to 3 per cent per year for the past 12 years. If the New Zealand model were to be implemented in Alberta, the health system could save $75 million in one year, with a further saving of about $50 million every year after compared to the status quo. But this is a government, frankly, Mr. Speaker, that wants to off-load health care costs, not control them. This is a government that wants to make health care more affordable only for itself and less affordable for citizens by shifting more costs onto patients.

Also, Mr. Speaker, a big loser in this budget is K to 12 education. The Minister of Education is showing that in addition to often dithering, he also seems to lack clout at the cabinet table. How else do you explain a budget containing no provision for expanding kindergarten and junior kindergarten for children at risk, as recommended by the Learning Commission over two and a half years ago? Since then three provincial budgets have been delivered, and there is still no such commitment. The Learning Commission estimated the cost of expanding kindergarten and junior kindergarten programs at $63 million yearly, which sounds like a lot, but I would remind people that it's only one-sixth of the $370 million being given away in the corporate tax cut.

The postsecondary sector fared only marginally better. Postsecondary students should be grateful, I suppose, that due to some crossing of wires between the Premier and his Advanced Education minister last fall the government's picking up the tab for tuition increases for a second year. But nobody, Mr. Speaker, should be fooled by this. This is a stay of execution, not a real tuition freeze. Tuition is still going up 6 to 8 per cent each year, with the government just paying the increase for a couple of academic years. The worst-case scenario is that the students could face a triple whammy tuition increase in the fall of 2007. Postsecondary education is the best investment a government can make in its own future well-being. The NDP opposition therefore urges the government to take a serious look at rolling back tuition, as requested by student groups such as the coalition of Alberta university students. I'm not expecting it, but hope springs eternal.

Nor is there much in this budget for this province's financially strapped municipalities. Instead of fulfilling its promise to relieve municipalities of the burden of providing ambulance service, funding is being frozen again at $55 million for the third straight year, meaning the burden for providing this life-saving service will increase for more and more municipalities in the coming year.

Far from reducing its school property tax by 20 per cent in the coming year, as requested by the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and leaving the tax room to municipalities, school property taxes are going up again next year by almost 2 per cent. That's the reality that's in the budget documents. The province's school property tax will be a full 22 per cent from the freeze promised in the 2001 budget, a promise broken every year since, including this year.

This budget contains only an extra $42 million for improving continuing care standards for vulnerable seniors. That's about 11 per cent of the reduction in corporate taxes next year. The NDP opposition believes that seniors deserve better, Mr. Speaker, but it's pretty clear that this Conservative government does not. The Minister of Health and Wellness herself has said that in order to implement the recommendations of the Auditor General and her own government MLA task force, a $250 million investment is required. Why invest only 8 cents on the dollar in this year's budget when there seems to be lots of money to throw around, especially on corporate tax cuts? I would remind people that these people are in very difficult situations. The horror stories keep coming, as I found out today of one in my own riding.

In short, Mr. Speaker, Budget 2006, I repeat, is a budget for spin doctors, thoroughbreds, and fat cats. Why is almost a 20 per cent increase in funding for the government's official propaganda arm, namely the Public Affairs Bureau, deemed more important than funding for developmentally disabled adults, which is going up only 2 per cent, only one-tenth as much. As the PDD Edmonton community board has pointed out, this budget will mean substantial service reductions for developmentally disabled adults. Again, the irony of it. This budget contains a 38 per cent increase in the horse-racing subsidy, from $45 million this year to $62 million next year. I was surprised that they would even have the gall to do this after all the publicity. The money going to the horse-racing industry could go a long way to avoiding cutbacks for the developmentally disabled or for improving seniors care or for the misery of carrying a 5 per cent decrease in monthly benefit levels for social assistance recipients not expected to work.

Mr. Speaker, the government is also going to step up its efforts to fleece Albertans with more casinos, more slots, and more ponies. Meanwhile, user fees go up and services are cut. I would remind about gambling. The government has become as addicted as anybody: $1.3 billion. I can remember when it was $50 million. Now the government is addicted on gambling the same as some other unfortunate people.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, this is a budget out of sync with the needs and priorities of Albertans. Budget 2006 is notable not only for its lack of compassion but for its lack of vision for the Alberta future. Surely, in this rich province we could have done better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there are questions.

There being none, I will call on the next speaker, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Lougheed years spending was running at higher and higher levels, just like it is now. Year after year the government coffers grew, and year after year the spending went higher and higher. Everyone demanded and received something. We lived through those good times, and we thought they would never end. But the vacant houses, bad economy, and increasing fiscal costs across Alberta in the Getty years proved that the boom times will be followed by bust times. We know of seven years of plenty, followed by seven years of drought. The lesson of those years was that spending led to deficits, and deficits led to drastic cuts. From looking at this budget, I am left to wonder if we have learned anything from the past. Our fiscal house is one that needs to be in order, and we need to wonder how far the spending can continue before we've gone too far and can't return.

It is a good thing that this government is putting funds back into the heritage savings trust fund. It would be even better if we actually planned for the savings and made sure that the fund was matured properly. I question the need in boom times for this government to count on the trust fund's dividends as part of the general revenue.

It is good to see that more Albertans will be saved from having to pay the health care premiums, but, even more, the government should eliminate them. If we will not eliminate them now in a time of plenty, when will we?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

While this budget offers some consideration for the future, it is obviously a stay-the-spending-course budget, which does little to set a course to guide the province. I am very convinced, as we begin our second century, that we have not learned the lessons of the past. We have not come to grips with the needs of future Albertans and the struggles of current ones.

Help for families and individuals should be our highest priority. Albertans have seen a great deal of benefit from our booming economy, but they also pay the price in more expensive housing, fees, and taxes as their earnings go up. The government has failed in this budget to adequately address this. If they were simply to increase the basic tax exemption to $20,000 in Alberta, it would return approximately $500 back to the average Albertan, giving people a few dollars in their pockets, change at the end of the year. It would really make a difference to hard-working Albertans. Those who work to earn their money earn the right to spend it. Let's leave more money in the pockets of those who have earned it.

We have given funding to postsecondary education, yet we did not give any additional funding to secondary and elementary schools. How do we teach our youth and meet our commitments to the generations to come if there is no infrastructure in place? This is what happens when we fail to plan: we've planned to fail.

Market value assessment is inflationary and adds to the problems. This government was in power to see the real estate bubbles of the past burst. We need to have a program where production value and purchase price enter into the formula and have a higher weighting on the assessment to the economy. We've currently given I believe a 7.9 per cent reduction in the mill rate, but because of inflation and the market assessment we have an overall increase of 1.7 per cent in taxes being collected. We could have done better.

A long time ago businesses were promised a cut from 11.5 per cent to get down to 8 per cent. The steps that have been made in this budget are good ones, but now we have to start to fulfill the promise. The government needs to continue to draw investment into this province.

This government boasts about being debt free while many municipal governments are still laden with debt. In Budget 2006 dollars are dedicated to municipalities for new spending but not for alleviating their debt load. Enabling municipalities to become debt free would reduce the pressure on property taxes. It would allow them to give their citizens a tax break.

We've also got the unfunded teachers' liability that we still haven't addressed. Perhaps an even greater concern for Albertans is the Canada pension plan, which is dismally underfunded, and we should be looking at that.

Rural Alberta needs continued support. In a time when urban centres are growing, our rural areas are being left to die on the vine. Why are we giving almost the same amount to horse racing as we are to rural development? When did horse racing become a needed business for this province? I would suggest that the province has no business being involved in business.

Rural Albertans are no different than the people in Calgary and Edmonton in their need for better schools, better facilities, and better access. The increasing pressure on the cities is being exacerbated by rural area people that are going to the cities for their needs because of the diminishing services of many rural centres. There are many students that are also moving to the cities and parents actually busing them there because of the lack of curriculum in rural schools.

Farmers and ranchers know that weather can be their greatest enemy or ally in providing for their livelihood. The 20 per cent decrease in agricultural insurance premiums is a move in the right direction, but it does not do enough to sustain agriculture, which is the backbone of our rural economy. We need to remove the taxes from agriproducts that they use to produce their crops and raise their livestock.

This government has grown at an unprecedented rate. We started at 17 ministries in 1992, and we have since grown to 24. This government should begin the process of downsizing and controlling their cabinet size. I hope that they will continue to amalgamate ministries as we observe the resignation of leaders in their candidate run.

As I have said in the past, efficiency would truly be increased if we were to eliminate the new Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. We've been told that the ministers are efficient and that they can restructure. The bureaucratic bloating continues to rise to an alarming level in this province. There are 27,500 people in provincial employment, not the 22,500 mentioned last week. We have just added 800 more this year. In the feedlot we call this chronic bloating, and we know that they'll eventually die.

Alexander Tyler talks about the death of democracy, and he says that it's from tax-and-spend governments. I hope we can learn the lesson before we're in that dilemma. We need to review and cut the size of government. Otherwise, we'll once again be needing to make drastic cuts later on the backs of the citizens. This government should serve Alberta with a lean, more productive, and efficient government.

We would encourage the government to replace its legislation that required that all surplus must go to pay down the debt to legislation that would require all surplus to be split between the heritage trust fund and a tax refund to Albertans.

The government should now, after the biggest budget ever, seriously examine the cap on spending, preferably taking spending back down $3 billion or $4 billion and leveling off this massive growth. It is important if not critical to have a formula or a plan in place. Sound financial managers advise a savings plan, a disciplined plan where one saves 10 per cent. We have not saved in the last 20 years, and we don't have the discipline, but if we would install it now, we have a great opportunity when we're at the peak of our earning years.

Health care reform is big on the agenda of this government. If this third-way policy is to be successful, then more should be done to assure Albertans that politics will play less of a role in the delivery of their health care. The first reform should be to level the playing field for funding to all regions and allow funding to follow the services, services which their appointed boards want to provide for their regions. The government's third-way initiatives may control rising health care costs, but it will be a minimum savings if it is simply tied to inflation and population. Our rising population needs more long-term thinking. We need to look at being innovative, as they are down in Taber, where they're actually rewarded for reducing the number of patient visits to their doctors' offices and not on a fee per visit only. The doctors want to make Alberta healthy, and there are programs out there that are exciting and innovative if we'll just grab onto them.

If we look at the infrastructure spending, there seems to be no idea of the consequence of increasing the spending so dramatically. The government is setting prices that are escalating for themselves and everyone else who needs homes, schools, hospitals, and roads built. Inflation comes from demand outstripping supply. We are creating a building problem which may just implode. In Calgary today the effect of these rising costs has inflated the average home to $400,000, pricing some out of the market. We need to project what our infrastructure demands are. The government alone can fix this by slowing down the building parade until someone can come up with a plan rather than accelerating production beyond supply.

In conclusion, I guess I would like to compare us to winning the lottery. We've been very blessed, but the winning can be the beginning of our downfall. Too much money has often led to corruption, mismanagement, and flamboyant lifestyles. Can we sustain the huge influx of money without redistributing it and not cause inflation and possibly run into a brick wall in a few years?

The gap between our potential and our achievement grows with our added revenue. We are the envy of other provinces and even the world. It is my hope that we can strive to reach our ever-growing potential and not rest on our past achievements. We have seen both good examples and excellent ones here in the province. We need to take two steps back and remember that tax cuts and refunds are progressive and great for the economy. Working Albertans deserve a refund on their tax from the surplus income.

It is not good enough to say that we are the best in the world. We need to rise to our full potential. We need to recognize hard-working, innovative, and efficient Albertans. We need a formula that will restrain government growth, invest in our future and infrastructure and the endowment funds, and truly put Alberta ahead of the race by reducing taxes and leaving as many dollars as possible in the pockets of the people, to be used at their discretion.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone.

Mr. VanderBurg: The member opposite talked about the horse-racing industry and made an inference that we support this industry more than we support other industries. I wondered if the member opposite knows about the arrangement that the horse-racing industry has so many slots tied to a race track and then gets a percentage of the take of those slots to fund horse racing. If nobody played the machines at the facilities, at the horse-racing tracks, the subsidy would be zero. I wondered if the member knew that.

Mr. Hinman: I understand that the subsidy would be zero, but the fact of the matter is that people do go there, and we're encouraging that betting. I don't believe that it's in our best interest, just as smoking is not in our best interest in the province, and we could focus the money in better areas. If, in fact, we were to put in incentives where farmers would be able to recoup as people came and bought Alberta-made products or other areas, we could do incentives to enhance that industry, but I don't see the need to enhance the business of horse racing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to follow up on my colleague's question as it related to horse racing and, really, the gambling industry. I'm wondering if the hon. member's inference is that under his party they would remove all gambling in the province and add tax to food as opposed to using gambling dollars to do some of the good work that we do in the province.

Mr. Hinman: I thank the minister of agriculture for asking that question. I believe in free enterprise, and it's interesting to me that, going back to the '90s, the government took the idea that because our dollars were leaving the province, we needed to bring this vice in here in order to keep it here. I don't believe it's to the benefit of society to have it here, and it's been very sad to me to see the heritage trust fund get turned into the gaming and revenue ministry. Rural Albertans and most Albertans are left now to make application to lottery funds instead of the heritage trust fund. I don't see the reference in trying to promote gambling and thinking that it's a wonderful opportunity and that the government should be backing it and expanding it in all areas. It just isn't beneficial.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, and it is certainly around the increase, the substantial increase, the 40 per cent increase in the subsidy to the horse-racing industry. In light of the fact that it is now $63 million, if one looks at this subsidy since it was first initiated, it's growing in leaps and bounds every fiscal year, and it's well in excess of $250 million at this point. I notice that there is a significant demand for irrigation infrastructure assistance. Would the hon. member feel that the money would be much more appropriately used if it was used to improve our irrigation systems rather than just as a direct subsidy to some of the elite people in this province through the horse-racing industry?

Mr. Hinman: I thank the hon. member for the excellent question. I'll quote the Premier: "For every upside there's a downside." For every dollar spent, there can be a negative side. What they're wanting to do is focus this money on the horse races. I understand that that's their desire and that they think that's beneficial, but I think there are many areas in the province where we could truly reach our full potential rather than just the achievements we have. Irrigation is an excellent one. We see the increase in production there has been in southern Alberta, which is now our breadbasket, where the government has subsidized and put in dams, realizing and wanting to capitalize on our blue gold. It's an excellent opportunity, and we need to continue doing that. Then we should be spending money on more studies, and it would be of far better use to put that money into increased water storage capacity and perhaps buried lines instead of open lines, where we lose our valuable water to evaporation.

There are many areas where if we were to have a great and extended debate, that would be of much better benefit to Albertans and taxpayers as a whole and make us more independent. If we focus that money, whether it's on education, whether it's on farming and agriculture, whether it's on health care, there are a lot of priorities that I think would take precedence.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure at this time to move Bill 26, Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act, for second reading, and I would ask that we at this time adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 18
Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves,
Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands
Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Stevens: I have more to say on this matter, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand on behalf of the hon. Minister of Community Development to move for third reading Bill 18, Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006.

I wish to provide some summary of what this bill will do, Mr. Speaker. Bill 18 clarifies a number of provisions in the existing act. It updates enforcement, offence, and penalty provisions. It updates definitions, improves wording and clarity. It deletes obsolete provisions. It substantially increases the maximum fines for serious violations. It also repeals the Advisory Committee on Wilderness Areas and Ecological Reserves, whose work now is performed in a process that involves local communities and stakeholders. Bill 18 also repeals the provision for controlled buffer zones. No buffer zones were ever formally proposed or established. As long as an activity does not encroach on the protected area, we maintain the integrity of its protection.

Bill 18 redefines aircraft to include powerless flight. Restrictions that apply to aircraft also apply to hang-gliders and paragliders. No one would be prosecuted for landing in one of these protected areas in a genuine emergency, Mr. Speaker.

While Bill 18 aims for more consistency among all protected areas covered by this legislation, it also recognizes the unique needs of each type of protected area: that grazing is essential to maintaining the ecological integrity of our heritage rangelands, for management purposes off-highway vehicles are used only by the province or disposition holders, for recreational purposes two trails provide access to areas where off-highway vehicles are permitted.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a summary of what this bill is all about, and I would ask for support from the hon. members.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have read some of Bill 18, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, and I'll tell you that there are some positives within the bill itself, but the other part that's disappointing is some of the specifics that they peeled out of it. Unfortunately, the bill makes a number of changes to the administration of specific types of parks, wilderness areas, and the reserves, but it gives less protection. The general trend is to reduce the level of protection in wilderness areas. It really never had any protection to begin with, it seems.

It allows in some of these areas – parks, reserve lands – that oil and gas exploration does take precedence because of mineral rights. So then where is the actual protection for these lands? This is just paying lip service for the general interest groups that are wanting to seek some more protected rangeland areas, some natural areas, and, on the other hand, to allow off-road drilling or exploration. It doesn't work.

The other part of the bill terminates the advisory committee on wilderness areas. Well, now we have less public participation. I'm not sure why we specifically had that as I thought that we would at least encourage a more democratic process, more participation from stakeholder groups and nongovernment agencies. In this group we had six public members and we had six government members who were providing advice to the minister to establish some of the specific areas and some of the boundaries and some of the legislation. But now we've said in this particular amendment that we're going to strike them from the act itself. So we're going to have less people to monitor this, and that's unfortunate.

We removed the buffer zones. The minister just talked about the specifics on that. I mean, I think that buffer zones are needed because you do have those who continue to push the boundaries, and if you don't have the buffer zones there, then you're going to continue to have the encroachment.

We do however support the requirement that it talked about for public consultation, and we do support the fact that in this bill we're talking about higher fines for violations. Those are some good pieces in the bill, but again I'd have a hard time supporting this particular bill based on the other specifics that I mentioned: the reduction of the public participation and the removal of the buffer zones and less protection.

South of the border they've actually had some specific areas designated as roadless areas. I think that that's a unique concept. Perhaps this government could follow suit before it's too late, before every available square inch of this province has in some way, shape, or form had a hole or been desecrated. It's no longer going to be pristine or, at least, protected. The roadless concept designates specific areas of the particular state where they're removing all footprints of man. They are not allowing any, as it says, vehicles. Period. So it's a roadless area, not for exploration, not for seismic. Nothing. They're going to allow nothing. It doesn't say that the public can't access it. It's saying that there will be roadless areas. I think that that would be a novel idea. It would be a great start here if we decided to at least put some land aside. Even Wood Buffalo now is no longer sacred. They're having roads going into that area. I mean, at what point are we going to allow the footprints to not be so dominant here?

This particular piece, like I said about the roadless areas, would allow for some hiking, perhaps some trails for horses, but that would be about it. There would be no actual ability for a vehicle to go in. I'm not saying that the public is not allowed. They could certainly get in by hiking, have access for tenting or for just recreational use.

The other concern is that people are always concerned about off-road vehicles. We have a lot of destroyed land within the province, as far as I'm concerned, that isn't much good for anything after you've had, you know, the oil and gas or coal-bed methane, taking some of the specifics. It's not good for rangeland. You can't use it for agriculture.

Why not designate some specifics and call them natural areas for off-road vehicles, or ATVs, whatever you want to call them, allow them to have, you know, their 30 square miles? That would give them more than enough land to be able to use their ATVs or their snowmobiles, their off-road vehicles, on land that's already basically been destroyed in some way, shape, or form. It would allow them to continue to have their fun, their recreational use. I'm not saying that they shouldn't be able to have it. Designate some areas, but don't go into the mountains, the streams, and some of the protected park areas. Set some roads and some lands aside for them to have specific use. You could have it in the middle of the province, the lower part of the province, the upper range of the province, but set some roads aside. I talked to the Alberta Fish and Game Association during the last conference down in Red Deer, and that would be something that the members would support and could support with regard to these areas.

Those are some specifics, Mr. Speaker, that I have raised on this one with regard to the wilderness, ecological, heritage, and natural areas. But as the bill reads, with pulling out the advisory and with removing the specifics for the protectiveness, I can't support it at this point in time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, when we're talking about Bill 18 here, there are still in my mind unanswered questions in regard to this legislation even at third reading. However, I awaited this bill. When it was introduced in the Legislative Assembly, I delivered some copies to a few constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They had originally contacted our office regarding this legislation. They, too, are the owners of all-terrain vehicles, and they enjoy getting out and operating these vehicles in uninhabited areas. I certainly would endorse the idea suggested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, where there are designated places across the province for individuals who enjoy this sort of activity, designated areas where they can go and cruise around. They can go up and down hills. They can cross creeks and rivers. They can even take their camping gear and go five or 10 kilometres off the beaten path, so to speak, with their ATVs and camp. I see absolutely nothing the matter with that in designated areas.

I certainly hope that whenever this bill, Bill 18, was drafted, individuals who enjoy this activity were not left out. I certainly hope that they were consulted by the government. I see the hon. Member for West Yellowhead over there. We only have to look at the town of Edson, which, I'm told, has the largest ATV store in North America. Now, that's what I've been told; I stand to be corrected. There are a large number of citizens out there who buy such vehicles for many reasons. I just wonder what they think of this legislation and if they have been consulted, either the people that ride these machines or the people that sell them and maintain them.

Now, there are four categories of park and protected lands described in this act, Mr. Speaker. Wilderness areas preserve and protect natural heritage, where visitors are provided with opportunities for outdoor recreation. Two of Alberta's three wilderness areas are White Goat and Ghost River, and no developments of any kind are permitted. Travel is by foot in these areas. Wilderness areas provide limited opportunities for nature-based recreation, such as backcountry hiking, wildlife viewing, and mountain climbing. Hunting, fishing, and the use of horses are not permitted in the wilderness areas.

In the ecological reserves – and I'm looking specifically at the legislation here. This is where section 8 is to be amended. These reserves preserve and protect natural heritage in an undisturbed state for scientific research and education. Ecological reserves contain representative rare and fragile landscapes, plants, animals, and other geological features. The primary intent of this class of reserves is strict preservation of natural ecosystems, habitats and features, and associated biodiversity. Public access to these ecological reserves is, again, by foot only. Public roads and other facilities do not normally exist and, as I understand it, will not be developed. Most ecological reserves are open to the public for low-impact activities such as photography and wildlife viewing.

Now, this legislation is going to prohibit – one is not allowed to take into or use in an ecological reserve

- (i) a motor boat or off-highway vehicle,
- (ii) a motor vehicle designed primarily for travel on highways other than on a road (excluding, however, its right of way or undeveloped road allowance),
- (iii) a cycle except on a road or prescribed route, or
- (iv) without the Minister's permission or except as prescribed, a horse or pack animal.

When this decision was made, were individuals who enjoy getting out on their all-terrain vehicles consulted? Was there any consideration made for improving their access to outdoor Alberta so that they, too, in their way can enjoy their hobby? We have to consider, Mr. Speaker, all Albertans whenever we are debating this legislation and before we debate it, when the legislation is drafted. Now, there's a time and a place for everything, and I don't think that we can forget or exclude the owners of all-terrain vehicles, and we can't in this Legislative Assembly not support their enjoyment of our outdoor areas. Certainly, I hope that they have been consulted and they're in agreement with this bill because it's going to be now or never, as far as I'm concerned, with this.

With those remarks I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague. However, with a great deal of sympathy for this bill, I have to reject it in its present form. My questions have not been answered, in my view and my opinion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the premise of the bill is basically that it's housekeeping. Certainly, some of it is amendments to remove obsolete provisions and to try to improve the clarity of the legislation and update regulation powers. I mean, some of the bill is that.

You know, there's an old saying that the devil is in the details. Often when we deal with bills in this House, the devil is in the lack of details. That's a problem that we face often, Mr. Speaker. I look at section 9, subsection 5(b), which concerns me. It repeats the original section detailing what may be done to or for an ecological reserve and rewrites the section. It's particularly disconcerting as it states that the minister may allow – may allow – programs or measures to be carried out with respect to “environmental research and reclamation,” whereas the original section states “for environmental research that does not involve any physical disturbance of the wilderness area, ecological reserve or heritage rangeland.” I think the sticking word here is “reclamation,” Mr. Speaker. Of course, one comes and asks the question: is this an attempt to sidestep our environmental duty and allow development of oil and gas in ecological reserves? If not, why mention the word “reclamation”?

That is, as we know, an activity usually associated with either mining or oil and gas drilling. If that's not the intent, I wish that they would at least make that clear in the bill. So again I'd come back to the point that the devil is in the lack of details.

The only other section that I have some concerns about, Mr. Speaker, is 10(2)(c). Again, it states that this specifies that a person is not guilty of an offence if they are destroying or damaging plant life or animal life in a wilderness area, ecological reserve, natural area, or heritage rangeland "in the course of carrying out any activity allowed by a disposition or permission in a natural area or heritage rangeland." What does this mean? Maybe it's not the case, but we don't know when we're dealing with these bills: does this give permission to the oil and gas industry to tear apart our wildlife preserves so they can conduct reclamation efforts in them?

I mean, most of the bill makes sense because of the housekeeping, but when they throw in these broad terms and use the word "reclamation," we just don't know what direction the bill is going in. As I said, then it becomes difficult to know whether you should support it or not. On the surface it looks like they're protecting wilderness areas, and then they throw in terms like "reclamation" and make it unclear. Mr. Speaker, I wish that we had clearer intentions. I don't think the minister is here to give us those clear intentions about what this means.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one interested, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 26
Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Stevens]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-North Hill I'd like to put some of the principles of Bill 26 on the Order Paper today. Bill 26 is an updated version of the Blood Samples Act that was introduced as a private member's bill by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. The Blood Samples Act received royal assent in May 2004 but has not been proclaimed. The act provides a means for certain people, such as police and firefighters, to apply for court orders to compel someone to be tested for communicable diseases when the police officer or the firefighter has been exposed to a bodily substance from a person if there has been reasonable and probable grounds for suspecting that the person has a communicable disease. The information from testing may be disclosed to the applicant's physician to help determine what treatment, if any, the police officer or the firefighter should have.

At the time that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was leading the charge on this law, the only similar legislation in Canada was in Ontario. Feedback on Ontario's experience has warned us that a modified approach is required. Its legislation is not proving to be effective and concerns have been raised in relation to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Since the Blood Samples Act was introduced, the Uniform Law Conference of Canada has developed models, mandatory testing, and disclosing legislation that address Charter rights concerns.

Health and Wellness has consulted a wide range of stakeholders in Alberta who have also raised questions about the scope of the act. Stakeholder groups were created that included representatives of police, firefighters, and paramedic professions, the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the regional health authorities, medical officers of health, the Alberta Advisory Committee on AIDS, and the Alberta Community Council on HIV.

The proposed amendments fall into four broad categories. The first category of the amendments will expand the scope of the act. Current provisions identify police, fire, and peace officers as professions that may make an application under the act. Health and Wellness is recommending expansion to include paramedics and individuals who voluntarily provide emergency services and to provide authority for additional professions or groups to be added by the regulations if the need arises. Currently the only type of sample that may be required by an order is a blood sample. The recommendation is to expand this to bodily substances in recognition of advances being made in new types of diagnostic tests. Changing the name of the act from Blood Samples Act to Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act will reflect the expanding scope of the act.

The second category of the amendments will change authority to order testing from medical officers of health to the court. This is an important amendment because it serves the interest of the applicant and provides protection for the individual who is providing the sample, referred to in the legislation as the "source individual." It is generally recognized among stakeholders that the experience of court proceedings was required. Medical officers of health did not view themselves as well positioned to apply the reasonable and probable grounds test that must be met before a testing order can be issued. Under the proposed amendments a court issues the order, and the medical officer of health will have the responsibility for carrying out the testing order. Provisions are made for the medical officer of health to request assistance from a peace officer in carrying out the order as required. Contents and requirements of the test order have also been clarified in the amendments.

The third category of the recommended amendments deals with procurement safeguards. Key procurement safeguards have been introduced to ensure that the source individuals giving the samples have been notified of the application, of the right to respond to the application, and of the right to appeal an order. The current act did not fully address the source individual's rights. These amendments are required to address the issue relating to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Procurement that is required from a minor or a dependent adult are clarified in the amendments.

The fourth and final group of recommended amendments deals with information disclosure and privacy protection. In order to protect privacy and provide the least intrusive way to acquire information on the source individual's health status, provisions are made for the chief medical officer to check the communicable diseases database for test results. The amendment provides clarification regarding information disclosure for the purpose of the act. Certain disclosures will be allowed, still keeping the privacy interest of the source individual in mind. An example would be between health professions in the case of professional consultants and in the case of minors, the parents or guardians.

In conclusion, these recommendations will strengthen and broaden the scope of the legislation, will clarify and define roles and responsibilities, and will also reduce the risk of Charter challenges. The amendments are the result of a strong consultative process that the minister believes has improved the legislation. I ask for the support of the House and move second reading of Bill 26.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 14: Mr. Agnihotri]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to take this opportunity to say a few words about Bill 20. Overall there are some very good parts of Bill 20, and there is some stuff that we are quite concerned about. I'll get to the good parts first.

There's increased protection for information regarding individuals. I think that in this day and age when we're under a lot of pressure to give out information to foreign powers, particularly the United States, it is a real positive step that we will allow judges to make that decision and not civil servants. Now, we're all sympathetic, of course, to the United States and all the problems they've been through in the post 9/11 era, but I think that, first, we really have to safeguard our privacy from foreign eyes, whether it's the United States or any other country. So we're very supportive of the first part of this bill.

There's another part where we'll be increasing fines for violation of the FOIP Act. This, too, is another positive. There's not much point in having a law that doesn't have any teeth. I think that the size of the fines will tell Albertans and anyone who wants to violate the FOIP Act that we mean business when it comes to protecting personal privacy. So, again, the first two parts of this bill we're quite supportive of, and we would be happy to support the bill if it ended right there.

Unfortunately, there are other parts of the bill that increase the level of secrecy surrounding government documents. I wish the rest of this bill was as positive as the first part. A lot of it solidifies this government's reputation as the most secretive government in Canada. It appears that the government wants to defend its 2005 code of silence award from the Canadian Association of Journalists.

Now, we have in this bill a provision to exempt ministerial briefing notes for five years. I expect that in Committee of the Whole we'll hear some rationale behind this, but right now I really don't know what it would be. There's some talk that it would protect internal documents that are sometimes used to prepare for upcoming legislation. I don't know why we need five years to protect this information. So I look forward to hearing more about the rationale for this part of the bill, but right now I think it's very, very weak.

We also have a 15-year protection for the findings and reports of the chief financial auditor. That will be kept under wraps for 15 years. Fifteen years is the kind of gap we expect for state secrets and stuff that we want to keep hidden from public eyes for a very long time. Again, I'm not quite sure why we need a 15-year provision here as well.

I understand that in Committee of the Whole the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung will be introducing some amendments to change this bill. I certainly hope that the government members will give them a good, hard listen.

A large part of this, again, we're supportive of. It's a good bill on that part, but I don't know if we really need any increase in the level of secrecy that surrounds this government at this time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I will go on the same tack as the previous speaker. The first part of it is good. I think it's necessary. In the 21st century, frankly, information is treated like a commodity and a precious one at that. Mr. Speaker, following 9/11, the U.S. government concluded that the best tool it had at its disposal to fight terror was seemingly innocuous bits of information on everyday things. Of course, when collected and analyzed, it is assumed that these data streams of everyday life will establish clear distinctions and patterns related to crime. In its attempts to maximize the data collected and analyzed, the USA PATRIOT Act has given to American courts and law enforcement officials greater access to all sorts of data about individuals, including, potentially, Canadian citizens.

Now, the B.C. Privacy Commissioner concluded after serious study that more stringent measures need to be put in place to ensure that Canadian citizens' personal information remains just that, personal and Canadian. Alberta's own office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner has concurred and just recently released a report about security risks associated with foreign access to Albertans' personal information. The finding stated that "it is important that the Government make a strong and unequivocal assertion of the value it places on the privacy and security of the personal information of Albertans." That, Mr. Speaker, is on page 33 of that report.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments may in part be seen to address these concerns by specifying that only courts or bodies having jurisdiction in Alberta may have access to FOIPable documents, thereby seeming to exclude American courts or companies. While we applaud the apparent commitment to protecting our citizens' personal and private information, there are, however, as mentioned by the previous speaker, several objectionable sections of these amendments that deserve serious consideration. The NDP, I think, and perhaps others have had much experience with delayed and stymied requests for information, where it has taken upwards of five months to get access to requested documents rather than the 30-day requirement.

Considering the already great difficulty with which FOIP requests can be successfully made, Mr. Speaker, we wonder how these amendments propose to address access issues in favour of the public. That's supposed to be what it's for: in favour of the public.

First of all, if we could ask for clarification regarding the proposed inclusion under non-FOIPable material of published works available in public libraries. Frankly, why is this an issue? This material is already available in the public domain, and self-published works if available to libraries are catalogued and may be taken out. If they are readily available in the public domain, why should they be excluded from FOIP access if someone should choose to pay and collect them in that manner?

Mr. Speaker, secondly and importantly, the five-year FOIP exclusion of ministerial briefing materials is proposed based on the argument that public access to such documents may impair the government's ability to prepare for a session. Frankly, it's outrageous. Legislative debates based on such notes are public, and to bar access to them is to invite accusations of secrecy. I mean, maybe it's because we have had one-party rule for so long that we think we have to be more secretive. For a government, whether they recognize it or not, already plagued by a lack of accountability and transparency, we are shocked that such amendments are proposed. Very shocked . . .

Mr. MacDonald: And appalled?

Mr. Martin: . . . and appalled too. Yes. Thank you, hon. member.

The very spirit of democracy rests on the fact that the government is formed by and for its citizens. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, its documents, preparatory notes, and discussions must be made public and available to the public, particularly considering that such ministerial briefings are not and should not be considered as revealing the substance of deliberations of the Executive Council. That exemption is already there under section 22 of the original act.

I mean, this is the same as any ministerial comments and debates in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker. To say that somehow this is part of the Executive Council debate is nonsense. This government is going further than anybody in this. Again, it's just the nature of being more secretive. We don't want anything out to the public. Lord knows, we wouldn't want the public to know what's going on, you know, in a democracy. No, we wouldn't want that to happen.

Then – and a previous speaker talked about it – along these offensive lines, the 15-year exclusion of documents belonging to the chief internal auditor of Alberta is equally offensive, Mr. Speaker. Fifteen years: I almost think that sometimes we could bring the Kremlin back in terms of what we do here in this province.

Furthermore, section 7 of the proposed amendments allows for the unlimited suspension – the unlimited suspension – of a FOIP request while the Information and Privacy Commissioner considers whether it should be filed or not. Now, there may be a reason to stop the clock, so to speak, Mr. Speaker, on a 30-day limit for processing FOIP requests while such consideration takes place, but that the proposed amendment does not limit the time that such consideration can take is unacceptable.

A blanket, in other words unlimited, suspension of FOIP requests is not the way to solve consideration and deliberation issues. A FOIP request: six months? A year? Two years? Three years? It gives this government the right to do that, so it's just a way to get around freedom of information and privacy. They run roadblocks all the time. When we have FOIP requests, there are roadblocks all the way along, Mr. Speaker, and to give a blanket suspension is, frankly, offensive and ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker, the last item to mention today in this second reading is, again, the seeming protection. A citizen's basic right to protection of privacy is admirable on this front. Too often this has been neglected, compromised, or outright denied. I'm thinking here, for example, of the security of our privatized registries being compromised and this being known about for years before it was revealed to the public in the papers. Now, I would remind this government that in Alberta we celebrated 100 years of democracy. We've got to reinvent democracy. To close up these loopholes so that people can't get the information is, frankly, wrong. I would think that all hon. members, that are elected to serve the people of Alberta, would understand this. I would hope that – we don't have a Senate; there was never serious, sober thought there anyhow – before we pass this bill, we deal with the FOIP requests. We can all agree. Before we pass this bill, let's put some thought to this because this is offensive in a democratic society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to consider Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, because it is very important. I believe this bill aims at achieving eight objectives.

Four of the amendments are aimed at further restricting the information that may be available through a FOIP request. Of those four, two may be viewed as positive steps because they will restrict the ability of foreign authorities to access private information through warrants or subpoenas. The other two, though, numbers 4 and 5, may be viewed as an attempt by the government to further increase its secretive nature. Of course, this is something I cannot support.

One of the objectives is to increase the power of the Minister of Government Services by allowing him or her to make regulations regarding the FOIP Act. This is number 9(b). The stated purpose of this objective is so that the minister may designate new public bodies, making them accessible through FOIP requests in the interim while the schedule of public bodies is updated. I see this as a positive one.

One of the objectives is also to put a halt on the 30-day timeline when a public body requests that the commissioner allow that body to disregard a freedom of information and protection of privacy request. This is number 7. This to me is totally unacceptable. This would result in a blanket suspension of FOIP requests and a disregard of people's desire to learn more, perhaps very important information that they require.

One of the objectives is to increase the penalties for unauthorized disclosure of private information by individuals and corporations. This is number 8. I really support this objective because there must be real consequences for these offences.

Another objective is to allow a public body to be deleted from the schedule of public bodies by the minister as well as the Lieutenant Governor in Council. This is number 9(a). I don't really understand this. I don't see a need for it, and without further clarity I have to oppose it.

Although there are some positive changes that are being proposed here, overall the impact of the bill, I think, would be overwhelmingly negative. The positives are the proposed changes regarding library information and foreign court orders to ensure that Albertans' information is not susceptible to foreign authorities. These changes are in response to concerns first raised by the province of British Columbia regarding the impact of the USA PATRIOT Act. The proposed changes regarding more severe penalties for offences related to the act are also positive. Having these changes will ensure that individuals and corporations that hold personal information know that violating Alberta's laws regarding disclosing personal information will have serious consequences, and I strongly support this.

However, on the negative, the proposed changes regarding information held by the chief internal auditor and ministerial briefings, obviously, are going to have a negative impact. This government is well known to be among the most secretive in Canada. I see this as another attempt to restrict public access to information that the government wants to be secret but that Albertans should be able to access. These changes will seriously demonstrate, I think, a detrimental impact on the entire political process, Mr. Speaker, severing an important tool for maintaining government accountability.

As I considered the background of FOIP, I noted that reviews of the FOIP Act took place in 1999 and also in 2002. The 2002 review resulted in a report including the recommendations of an all-party Legislative Assembly committee. In that report there were a total of 62 recommendations. None of the proposed changes in Bill 20 are supported by that 2002 review. Another report was issued by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner in February 2006. This report only deals with the threat of foreign authorities accessing Albertans' private information and, therefore, only relates to the positive changes proposed in this bill. Specifically, this 2006 report relates to the amendments in this bill that deal with library information and foreign court orders.

If the purpose, again, of the changes to section 6 is merely to allow the government to effectively prepare for a sitting of Legislative Assembly, I have to ask: why the five-year timeline? I really do not understand that. The minister has commented that ministerial briefings should be exempt from FOIP access to allow the government to properly prepare for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly. Does the minister not realize that the opposition, too, must prepare? As the opposition our role requires that we be able to hold the government accountable. This bill would seriously limit that ability for us.

The new restrictions relating to the chief internal auditor are also very troubling. Now it seems that these CIA investigations into government activities would be hidden from the public for 15 years. How will this possibly result in accountable government?

I believe that there are some serious negative impacts that this bill could have. Some of these changes would diminish the entire political process by removing government accountability. Parts of this bill really trouble me. We live in an open, democratic society where the government is accountable to the people. Many of the proposed amendments in this bill amount to government censorship. This government serves the people of Alberta and is accountable to Albertans. Sections of this bill attempt to sever any accountability that exists. Therefore, I must oppose this bill because it will further limit access to information under Alberta's already restrictive FOIP.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) does anyone wish to rise?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to just make a few comments on this very important bill after having listened to some of the comments made by the hon. members. Of course, this is second reading, so it's just the principle of the bill. Certainly, we'll be in a position to answer all of their questions when we get into committee.

Just very briefly, some of the comments I heard: taking a public body off the list. Currently, we don't have the ability to do that, Mr. Speaker. All we're doing here is allowing a mechanism so that we can do it. Otherwise, it sits there. You could be amalgamating two. Now you've got three instead of just one. That's a very simple way of explaining that particular one.

Other things, Mr. Speaker, like stopping the clock. What's happening today is that the clock keeps running, the commissioner makes a decision, and if the decision is that the information that is in question needs to be released, then it can be a problem for the departments to get it out. So then we ask for a 30-day extension. Hopefully, when this is passed, we won't have that problem of having to ask for that extension. Quite frankly, there are times when the department simply cannot get all the information, especially if they have to go to a third party. That's the whole idea there, and I don't see any way that that could be construed as a mechanism to delay the release of information. That's not the intent, that's not the way it would work, and I think that that would be wrong.

As far as the briefing books, Mr. Speaker, there is some information in those briefing books that members can get. They just have to know what it is that they want and ask for it, but in just asking for the book as it is, that's what we're saying no to. So that's what that one is all about.

I'm sure that there'll be more detail when we get into committee, so I would adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 21

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are some comments I'd like to make about Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, the AISH Act, in committee. This bill is a continuation of the renewal of the AISH program. I'm proud to say that it will assist the program to better meet the unique needs of Albertans. As was mentioned during the second reading, this new legislation will make the AISH program more flexible and responsible to the needs of the 34,000 clients.

I'd like to remind the members of the Assembly about some of the major improvements this legislation will introduce. The income reporting process will be much more flexible, allowing clients to report according to their individual situations. This will reduce paperwork, administrative errors, and the occurrence of overpayments or underpayments. In addition, the act will help ensure that clients have the opportunity to appeal an overpayment before a debt is assessed and collection action is taken, and if they feel that it is necessary because they haven't received due process, they'll continue to be able to take the matter to court. This legislation will also allow the program to take into account special or exceptional circumstances and, if appropriate, exempt the client from repaying the amount that they were overpaid.

Bill 21 will also improve the co-ordination of programs and services for Albertans with disabilities by consolidating legislative provisions related to the AISH program under one ministry and updating the language in a 27-year-old act that was originally based on welfare legislation.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation also improves the quality of life for people with disabilities who are ineligible for the AISH program. Occasionally there are cases where individuals with severe disabilities are ineligible for AISH because of their income, which is above the cut-off, but they are unable to meet their basic living needs because of the high medical costs associated with their disability. Bill 21 will allow us to provide health benefits on a limited basis to those people with disabilities who because of their income do not receive an AISH living allowance. This change will make the AISH program more responsive to the needs of Albertans with severe disabilities and ensure that they are receiving the health benefits they need, tailored to their individual situations.

Another way that this legislation enables the AISH program to be responsive is that it allows the program to pay a third party directly for goods or services if that is for the benefit of the client and the client also gives consent. At the request of the client this would allow AISH to directly pay for things like rent or for continuing care accommodation charges.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to take a moment to address a few of the concerns that were raised during second reading of the bill. As mentioned earlier, this legislation is focused on ensuring that the renewed AISH program is flexible and responsive to the needs of the clients, and that's exactly what moving provisions of the legislation to regulation is going to help us achieve. These amendments will allow the program to adapt and ensure that the services AISH provides are in tune with client needs now and in the future.

Mr. Chairman, details about the duties of a financial administrator will also be in the regulations while the authority of the administrator resides within the legislation. Speaking of financial administrators, also new in this act is the provision that the financial administrators will now be appointed with consent of the client, ensuring that they have access to this service when they need it.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to address another concern I've heard during second reading, about the training of the AISH program staff. Now, staff training is not legislated or specifically referenced in Bill 21. The AISH program is currently working with disability groups and the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities to develop disability awareness training for staff. A joint stakeholder and AISH program advisory committee is being established to oversee the development of a training plan, a plan that I understand will be implemented later on this calendar year. This, of course, is in response to a recommendation of the MLA AISH Review Committee which suggested that the program partner with organizations knowledgeable in disability issues to provide that ongoing training for AISH staff.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to also take a minute to address concerns raised about the monthly living allowance. Last year the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports announced that the AISH living allowance would increase from $850 to $950 per month, and of course, as we know, next month the allowance will increase to $1,000 per month. [interjections] Yes, it is positive news. This increase is in addition to the personal income support benefits and health benefits that the AISH clients receive.

In closing, I'd like to clarify some information raised during second reading as well. First, there is concern that clients need to cancel other benefit programs to be considered for AISH. Mr. Chairman, AISH tops up other income and ensures that clients will have at least $950 or, in a couple of weeks, $1,000 to live on each month. In addition, the issue raised by the Member for Calgary-Varsity about Canada pension plan benefits was changed several months ago. I think it was last May.

Another point. Secondly, 96 per cent of AISH clients receive their living allowance through direct deposit, and only about 4 per cent receive theirs through the mail. They don't have to go pick up their living allowance from some central location, as somebody had suggested.

With respect to transportation, many cities across the province are moving to assist AISH clients with either free or reduced bus passes. Edmonton and Calgary are moving to half-price monthly passes, and Grande Prairie is leading the way with public transportation at no cost to AISH clients, a good move for Grande Prairie. They are to be commended for that move. This reduced cost of bus passes is not a formal benefit of the AISH program. It's not part of the legislation.

Finally, I'd like to address the concern about the absence of a definition of institution in the act. Now, that term is not referenced in the act. The definition isn't included. If the term does appear, it would be defined in regulation as it might pertain to eligibility criteria.

Mr. Chair, in conclusion, thanks for the opportunity to speak again to Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. I encourage all members to support this act. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to rise and participate in debate on Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, which basically repeals or replaces the old act, takes its place. I would say that concerns around AISH or recipients of AISH are probably the second most frequent issue that is discussed in my constituency office in Edmonton-McClung. A few days ago I mentioned that family maintenance enforcement was my number one issue, based on traffic and based on volume and the amount of work that my constituency staff spends time on, and this is probably a close second.

AISH programs or support for people on AISH is almost to 34,000 people or more in this province. I know that the hon. sponsor of the bill, from Strathcona, mentioned that 34,000-plus people receive AISH supports, and I feel that this may be actually even bigger, that this number may be a little higher. I would be interested in receiving information on, you know, what stats the province keeps and the latest figures and how we update those figures and so on and how periodically we do this.

In April of 2005, which is almost a year ago, we approved in this Legislature the increase from $850 per month to $950 per month. While we agreed that this was useful and beneficial and timely, it was also agreed that this is only a first step and that we needed to do more. I know that on April 1 this year, 2006, it's increasing again, from $950 to $1,000, but it begs the question: is this fair? Is it adequate? Is it enough?

"Approximately 85 per cent of AISH clients" – and I am quoting the hon. sponsor – "either have no other source of income than their monthly living allowance or their income does not change more than about 10 per cent." For that reason, I don't oppose this bill trying to offer flexibility for their reporting. Instead of requiring them to report once a month, reducing the frequency may be useful, especially for people who have limited mobility or who cannot really go to their AISH worker or to the government office to file their income.

I would maybe take it a step further and in the future look at ways to allow people to file online. If there's a way for them to go on a website, a secure website, possibly with a pass code that is issued to them, they can file their monthly or quarterly or semiannual reports, do it online. It's cheaper for them because they don't have to take a cab or hop on a bus and visit a social worker or an AISH worker. If they don't have to, then fine. They can do it from the comfort of their homes, and it would probably be a step forward. I think it's worth considering.

There is a section in this bill that talks about making sure that the AISH clients have the opportunity to appeal if there's an overpayment that's assessed. I have to first say that overpayments for the most part are not caused by the claimant or by the recipient. They're usually a clerical error, or something happens at AISH headquarters and people receive more money than they should have. Then when it's discovered, and there's a decision to reclaim this money, it's usually not due to the fault of the recipient. So I would urge consideration, and I would urge empathy and leniency in the way that we handle these files because these guys are suffering as it is, and to add another layer of burden on their shoulders would not be warranted.

There is talk about the appeal panel, and I'm interested in receiving information on the composition of the appeal panels and who serves on those. I understand that the act is worded in such a way that it allows flexibility for the government and for the minister in charge to decide these things in regulation. I know that we've mentioned time and time again that we don't like this direction because regulations are done behind closed doors and are not debated. We would much rather see it debated here in this House, on this floor, and all members participating. If it has to be done every 18 months or two years, fine. Let it be done every two years.

Regardless, I would like to get some assurances on the composition of these appeal panels and what seems to be restricting the ability of those recipients, if they need to contest a decision by that appeal panel, to resort to legal action and reducing access to the courts, which would otherwise right a wrong.

Another thing that was mentioned by my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East is the issue of indexing those benefits to some sort of a measurable line. You know, every year MLAs, cabinet ministers, civil servants receive increases in their salaries and their compensation based on a variety of things. Sometimes it's tied to inflation, sometimes it's tied to the market-basket measures, or sometimes there is something called the average weekly earnings index. Maybe they, too, should be linked to some sort of a review or an evaluation that is done annually to be able to ascertain that their $1,000 a month or their $1,050 or $1,100 a month or whatever it is is reflecting the increases in the cost of living.

We all know that recipients of AISH are struggling with general expenses, usually rent, food and medicine, utilities, and so on. We have to reflect that things get costly, that prices go up, and that their benefits are not tied into anything that reflects that increase, so as a matter of fact their money is probably shrinking in that definition.

My hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East also talked about sensitivity training for some AISH workers, and I support this because you have two sides. Sometimes you have clients who are difficult to deal with. Again, it's not due to their attitudes, or they don't really intend to be difficult. It's because of the hardship that they're facing and because of their circumstances. Sometimes they feel left out, and they feel that society has abandoned them. Maybe they feel that there's an injustice in the way they're dealing with their circumstances. So sensitivity training might be useful.

On the other side, you get the AISH worker himself or herself who is suffering from a bit of stress. They're overworked. There's a lot of demand on their time. They may have fatigue. You know, they burn out dealing with difficult files. Some of them actually start their day feeling energetic and empathetic for the clients that they're seeing, and by the end of the day they're really dragging their feet. So we have to empower them, too, and offer them the tools for them to be able to cope with the demands on them.

We've heard stories, invariably, in all our constituency offices that there is this AISH worker who doesn't seem to care. He or she might be less empathetic, and they don't sincerely look at the file and evaluate all the circumstances. So it's a question of accountability as well. Maybe there should be peer reviews. Maybe there should be an appeals mechanism or a complaint structure for people to bring issues up to the supervisor level or the director level. Some of those instances are easily addressed when the person changes his or her AISH worker. It's as simple as that. You start fresh, you go to a different worker, and you take it from there. Sometimes it's not as simple as that.

I mentioned the regulations, you know, and how it's done in the minister's office or within a small circle of people and it's not debated. If I'm going to narrow it down to the two issues that I don't want to see in regulations, they would be surrounding the collection or retrieval of overpayments, which is one. You don't want to be extrapunitive or extra heavy-handed in your collection effort. The other angle, which is quite the opposite, is in the underpayments. If a client is underpaid – and we all remember that the class-action lawsuit was basically complaining about the six months. The government was telling the clients: okay; if we underpaid you, you're only allowed to claim it back within six months. I totally and heartily disagree with this.

Are we making it nine months in regulations? Are we making it a year? In my opinion all money that was owed or underpaid to that particular recipient must be paid in full. Whether we do it in a lump sum and give them a huge chunk of money or whether we phase it over a period of time, let's say a year or 18 months, and we pay it back, it has to be paid back. It was money that was owed to them, and they're entitled to it.

I would also add an observation that usually AISH recipients should not be looked at alone, or separate from their general circumstances. You have to evaluate families and the family situation as a whole. You should look at issues around disability. You should look at issues around malnutrition, family violence, addictions to drugs, addictions to gambling, and so on. Look at the whole picture, and in my opinion it might warrant more support to a certain individual or a certain claimant because for him or her it might need more attention. So for them, $1,000 a month may not be the answer. I definitely think we can do more.

Also, in this bill the definition of what is fair for these people. What's the definition of the poverty line? Are we saying that $12,000 a year is adequate for a person who might be looking at, as I mentioned, rent, utilities, food and medicine, transportation like bus passes or cab rides, all that stuff?

One recommendation I was also hoping to make to the hon. sponsor of the bill is the issue around how the AISH recipients cash their cheques. One idea that I debated with some of the AISH recipients who come into the office is that they say: we would like the government to be able to allow us to tell all the banks and all the different places like the Money Marts, for example, and so on to not charge us fees. They would like to present their cheque to a Money Mart or to a bank and say: here it is; it's a government-issue cheque. Then the government would pick up the 50-cent or $1 transaction fee.

Some AISH recipients also like the idea of a debit card – and I know that the government is studying this proposal – with a secret PIN number. They would take it to a teller or an automatic teller machine, an ATM, and cash parts of their cheque at a time. They don't have to cash the entire thing. Some people can't manage their finances as adequately or as efficiently, so for them to be able to maybe take $50 or $100 at a time and leave the rest would be very useful. Cashing the cheques or issuing them a debit card – or maybe a choice of either. They could be presented with a choice and they pick.

I will also urge that we look at AISH as a top-up or as a minimum. We should use it as a top-up or a minimum, not as a ceiling or as a maximum. I'm referencing clawbacks because, really, for people who are able to work and whose circumstances change from one month to the next, clawbacks are a big hurdle. Sometimes it's a disincentive for them to go out and work because they get $400 sitting at home, or $200 of it is clawed back if they go out and work.

These are ideas that I'm hoping will receive some attention from the government. The idea that maybe we should cover a percentage of their utilities regardless of where they live and possibly with consideration for, you know, the place where they live, an apartment versus a bungalow versus a condo: all these things. Especially now that everybody is complaining about deregulation and how utility rates are going through the roof, these guys are having difficulty making ends meet. Possibly covering a portion of the rent from a separate fund because by far rent, to have a roof over their head, is going to be, you know, 45, 50, 60 per cent of their monthly expense.

In committee I know that we should try to address the sort of clause by clause structure of the bill. I noticed that section 1 is talking about definitions again being left to the regulations, and I covered that.

Section 3 is talking about the benefits and which benefits would be available to those AISH recipients and the eligibility requirements for benefits. I don't think it's a lot of change or totally different from what we had before, so I'm not going to dwell much on it.

Section 6 is talking about third parties and financial administrators. My question is: is it acceptable to have a director pay a third party for goods and services provided to a client? Two faces to this coin. The first one is that when we help a client who cannot really manage their finances adequately on their own or has difficulty budgeting, it would be useful if a provider agrees to, you know, divide up or take care of their expenses such as food expenses; for example, if there's an agreement with a local grocery store that might help them budget or agreements with places like ATCO or EPCOR or companies like this who would, you know, split up the payments so that it's more manageable for these guys.

There's also the possibility that the client might enter into this agreement. He or she agrees to being serviced in such a way, but then they want to back out. They want to cancel that agreement. Will there be a provision in the regulations or wherever that would actually allow them to change their mind, basically? It's probably useful in situations where, you know, the person is living on his or her own and doesn't have somebody to look after them, and they might be afflicted with some degree of mental illness. It's probably useful. But we have to allow them the flexibility to change their mind later.

Section 7, as I mentioned, is talking about the requirement to repay. I know that I urged consideration and empathy when, you know, we're asking these guys to pay back, again most of the time through no fault of their own. They didn't ask for more money, and they probably spent it all. So if we're limiting underpayments to six months, why are we not limiting overpayments to a certain level? Why are we not maybe instituting a statute of limitations like we do with criminals, saying that anything older than two years is forgiven? Maybe this is something to be considered.

Section 10, dealing with appeals. I mentioned that, you know, removing the courts from it is something that I might not find palatable. Here it's talking about having to make the appeal within 30 days from when the person was notified of the decision.

Complaints are heard by the citizens' appeal panel. Again, I'm emphasizing that I need to receive assurances on the composition of that. An appeal panel may confirm, reverse, or change a director's decision. This is a right that we're taking away from these guys, and I think it's not fair to them because they're still citizens like everybody else. If other citizens under other circumstances are entitled to seek legal action, so should these guys be.

I keep mentioning in this House that this government not only adds layers of secrecy and customarily hides the truth; it's becoming increasingly uncomfortable with criticism and is now hiding from the courts or legal action by legislating itself above the law and denying access to the courts for AISH recipients.

Section 11, dealing with offences, outlines the consequences for an individual, a financial administrator, and a third party who knowingly provide false information or omit information. I have mixed feelings on this, but I think I'm leaning towards supporting it because privacy is paramount, and it's the privacy of individuals that I care about. If somebody is making a misrepresentation or bending the truth or, you know, hiding something from a file or removing something, it warrants intervention, and we should not be lenient in situations like this.

With that, I appreciate your patience, Mr. Chair, and your indulgence, and I would encourage further discussion. Thank you, sir.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we rise and report progress on Bill 21.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 21.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? It's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn the Assembly pursuant to the spring recess adjournment motion, which passed this last Monday. That was Government Motion 12.

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in this sitting of the Legislature, we ask for the insight we need to do our work to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Hon. members and the people in the gallery, we'll now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite everyone to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly today two special guests that are with us. First, Deb Young, who works in my office, is recovering from a severe accident she had at Christmas. She's barely got out of the hospital, is still recovering, and will be back, we anticipate, in June. We're delighted to see that her health has recovered from the severe injuries that she endured. Accompanying her today is Fred Dancey, her father, who worked for Alberta Treasury for 10 years back in Premier Peter Lougheed's term. We'd like to ask the two if they'd stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some very special children from the School of Hope, which is centred in Vermilion. It truly is a huge school in that they teach students all across Alberta. They are accompanied today by teachers Kelly Collver and Shirley and Eugene Kramps and parent helpers Gerri Davidson, David Thompson, Christine Johnson, and Janice Johnson. I would ask all of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of grandparents who have come here today in support of Motion 505, grandparents' access to grandchildren, which will be debated in the Assembly this evening. Grandparents' access and custodial rights is an issue that is not going to go away. There are some very human faces of people who care passionately for the love of their grandchildren. I ask that these individuals stand when I introduce their names. In the members' gallery we have Annette and Gordon Bruce of Legal, Alberta. Annette is the president of the Orphaned Grandparents Association. For some grandchildren the relationship between themselves and their grandparents is on a full-time basis because there are no parents present. Annette and Gordon and the Orphaned Grandparents Association are there for those children.

Mr. Speaker, we also have Marilyn and Barry Marks, who drove up here this morning from Calgary. Marilyn is the president of the Alberta Grandparents Association, an association not only committed to the rights of grandparents but also committed to the rights of grandchildren having access to their grandparents. Marilyn is also a recent recipient of the 2005 Alberta centennial medal for her outstanding work in the community, presented to her by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have Florence Knight, the national director of the Canadian Grandparents Rights Association. She has been involved with grandparent issues as a volunteer and stakeholder for over 16 years. I don't know if she's here today, due to an illness.

I do ask that these committed grandparents stand proud and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a really engaged, lively, vital, dynamic, interesting group of seniors that live in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. They live in the Churchill Retirement Community. They are here with Ms Brenda Edmonds, who is their leader and gets them into the most trouble, I think. She does a wonderful weekly program of current events. I would ask Brenda and all members of the Churchill Retirement Community to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and members of the Assembly 12 members from the Abbottsfield Stop-In Centre, the seniors centre. The leader of the NDP and myself have spent some very enjoyable time over there with these active seniors, and we look forward to going back. There are 12 of them. I'd ask them to stand as I read their names: Mrs. Dumont, Jean Kisilevich, Tina Stifora, Peggy Baker, Martha Ehnes, John McFadyen, Nick Karpinski, Mrs. Joyce McFadyen, Mrs. Jo Elkow, and Mrs. Elizabeth Elkow. I'd like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Greg McAteer. Greg is an amazing Alberta citizen who has endured a number of illnesses and disabilities. He has been handicapped for eight years. He was diagnosed with peripheral vascular disease. He's very grateful to the many charitable organizations like Easter Seals that provided him with the tools for living, including his scooter, wheelchair, and lifting device. Greg is seated in the public gallery, and I would now like to ask that he receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through you to members of the Assembly it is my pleasure to introduce a constituent of mine, a youth and also a leader in our community from the oil sands capital of the world, Fort McMurray, Blake Robert. I'd ask Blake to rise. With him – he's not aware of this – we have 24 guests from the ministry of the mother ship, the Ministry of Environment. I'd like them to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the members of the Assembly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today and introduce a guest that we have visiting us all the way from Stockholm, Sweden. Jonas Tornblom just arrived in Edmonton last night from Vancouver, where he was attending the Globe Conference and Trade Fair, that hosted more than 2,000 environmental leaders from more than 75 countries. I'd ask Jonas to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Progressive Conservative Leadership

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a time when this province desperately needs strong, steady management to deal with challenges such as infrastructure and housing in Fort McMurray, severe hospital bed shortages in Calgary and Edmonton, and a school building crisis across the province, this government is now more than ever without such leadership. This government is no longer just on autopilot; it is adrift without a captain. Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. Who is in charge of this government?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no question that this government is in charge of running the affairs of the province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the last time this House met, the Premier was so distracted by infighting within his caucus that he was unable to answer my questions, will the Deputy Premier clarify how this government plans to ensure that the Progressive Conservative caucus infighting will not interfere with the business of running this province effectively?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, I don't think that the caucus affairs of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta are really any of his affair in this Legislature. This Legislature is about governing. It is about a mandate that was given by the people of this province to this government, to our leader, and that has not changed.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Deputy Premier: given that as of 1 p.m. today the Alberta government's website indicates that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks is a sitting member for Treasury Board and for the Standing Policy Committee on Agriculture and Municipal Affairs, will the government consider adding other nongovernment members to sit on Treasury Board and SPCs?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that talent, abilities, availabilities are probably part of the determination.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Unbudgeted Spending

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are blessed in Alberta to have tremendous resource revenue and wealth. Unfortunately, we have a government that is incapable of managing it. It is just the second day of session since Budget 2006 was tabled by the Progressive Conservative government, and we have the Minister of Education already talking about spending outside of the budget. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that Albertans had a budget for the week of March 22, 2006, when can Albertans expect a new budget for the week of April 3, 2006? Where is the fiscal plan for this week?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I thought that on the day of the budget speech all members were in the House. Actually, I thought they were mostly attentive. However, I would be quite pleased to go through the speech again if you give me that latitude. It was very clear in the speech and in speeches I've given since in answering questions that there will be opportunities for spending in capital areas. We outlined very carefully that the Minister of Education has met with 62 school boards, that as of April 1 the responsibility for all areas of education funding go to that minister, and that he would be bringing forth a plan.

The last thing, if I might, is that I heard a lot about in-year spending, and then I heard a lot about no spending for schools in the budget. Well, you could have taken the $207 million that we allocated to new school and school spending in-year last year, held it until the budget day, and would have satisfied him more, but children would have been the losers.

Dr. Taft: My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Education. Given that the minister has publicly stated that, quote, I think there is some urgency with respect to certain health and safety concerns at some schools, end quote, why didn't the minister commit to addressing these concerns in his budget and this government's budget instead of relying on unbudgeted surpluses?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the health and safety of students across this province are obviously of great concern not just to the Minister of Education but to all the government caucus members, and that's one reason why we are spending $5.3 billion this year to augment, in many cases, our budget. Now, as of Saturday I've inherited formally the infrastructure components relative to schools. We have about $258 million now that will be coming through Education and going out there for school construction projects, including modernizations, upgrades, and portables. We have about $81 million that will be going out by way of infrastructure maintenance renewal funding. That alone represents a 68 per cent increase. Finally, we have about $395 million going out in plant operations and maintenance. So there are considerable monies going out there already.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's no reassurance to the 40 neighbourhoods in Calgary without schools.

My final question is to the Minister of Finance. Were there cabinet or Treasury Board discussions about off-budget spending before the budget was introduced?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to refer again to the budget speech, and I'll just quote. It's very short.

This year's surplus will be earmarked to three key priorities: saving for Alberta's future, responding to capital and infrastructure needs, and increasing the Sustainability Fund to provide added protection against any sudden declines and so on.

I want to make a couple of things very clear. Under the parliamentary system that we operate and under the fiscal framework that is approved in this government, in-year spending is allowed in certain areas. But I do not want to hear people go out and say that this government is spending money without the authority of the Legislature because, Mr. Speaker, you know and I know that that is not possible. In fact, if we make a recommendation on schools, it will come to this Legislative Assembly floor before any money will flow. All I ask is honesty with people on such an important subject.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Reform

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just last week the Minister of Health showed a blatant disregard for the values and opinions of Albertans by indicating that nothing heard during the brief consultation period would stop legislation from being forced through this spring. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is it the minister's position that none of the 100 groups she met with provided any ideas that could be used to improve Alberta's health system?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we met with many groups, individuals, received a tremendous amount of feedback through e-mail and letters, and at no time did I state that nothing that had been said or written or done would influence or would not influence this government. This government has a track record of listening. I said that I was hopeful that we would be able to introduce legislation this session, but I was very clear in all conversations in every group that I met with that it was our hope that we would bring it back, show caucus what we'd heard, and then from that point onward make a determination about how the government would respond. I clearly stressed that it was imperative that we listen to Albertans first. The very last day I was actually asked by somebody if we had already made a predetermination about what we were going to do. I said that we had not.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that a former cabinet minister who's also a medical doctor admitted that most government members don't understand the third way, will the minister clearly outline for this Assembly exactly how allowing doctors to work in both the public and the private systems will reduce spending and cut waiting times?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we know that the American system is unacceptable. We know that the Canadian system is unsustainable.

In our attempts to find a better way for your health, a new way in Alberta, we looked at having doctors work in that middle ground of both a public and private situation. Our view – and it is shared, fortunately, by a Liberal Senator, Michael Kirby – is that in fact the Alberta way of allowing doctors to work in both under a private, regulated, and controlled system of delivery might well be the very best way of assuring that we don't contradict the Canada Health Act. I should clarify if I misspoke. I mean, in allowing them to work in both the private and the public, we would protect the public health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: given that the Premier, the architect of the third way, may not be around to push these reforms, will the minister continue to go against the wishes of Albertans and force through the third way?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this government has been gathering information. It has not been shared with the public, or even the total cumulation of it with me yet, all of the things that we have heard, that we have . . . [interjections] If the other side would just listen for a moment, I could identify that throughout that consultation we said that we would gather information and then provide feedback to people about what we had heard. I am at a loss to understand how the hon. member opposite would be privy to that information and would know that people were in opposition to the health policy framework. Much of what was said was in direct support of that. This caucus has taken a position that this is an important initiative for sustainability and access, and we will continue to look at it through that lens.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Opposition to the third way keeps growing and growing. This past weekend Tory delegates sent this government a message about its arrogance and failure to listen to Albertans. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the misguided attempt to foist two-tier, private health care on an unsuspecting public. My question is to the minister. Given that the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks, who is a medical doctor and was in the cabinet and in the Tory caucus for nine years, says that he and other members of the Tory caucus don't understand the third way, will the minister now withdraw the so-called third way until someone in that government other than herself understands it?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would invite the hon. member of the third party to ask each member of the government caucus what they understand about the third way and then make his evaluation. But it is interesting that the third party has now listened to a newly independent Conservative.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, only an independent Conservative can be relied on to be able to speak freely in this House.

I want to ask the minister whether or not she is prepared to tell the people of Alberta right now what the third way is and when they're going to go forward with the proposals once we even know what they are.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think the people that we consulted with challenged us to take a look at a number of those policies and come back with a revision that would reflect some of their opinions and points of view. What the third way is, as obviously I've expressed earlier: a better way to be innovative, to look at new ways of doing things, and to find ways to increase access. We have a wonderful opportunity to look at the successes of the hip and knee replacement project and to model things that are part of it.

Mr. Speaker, the other policies that we defined, many of which have been totally acceptable to many of the people that have come forward, are things that I think would be very advantageous to bring forward. So I would invite the hon. member opposite to stay tuned. As we bring this information forward, I'm sure it will become abundantly clear that we've listened to Albertans and that we're proceeding in a way to make our system just that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister ignore the expressed wishes of not only Albertans in general, including the large majority of people who made presentations to her, according to her own staff, but even those of PC Party convention delegates through her stubborn refusal and keep going ahead with the third way, the solution to a problem that doesn't exist, the solution to a problem that the government in fact . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, last week at the AAMD and C I spoke to an audience that appreciated an explanation on the third way and later came forward and made a comment that we had to work to make sure that health was sustainable. Then I spoke in Calgary on Thursday afternoon to the Chamber of Commerce and received a standing ovation for the points that I made about health care sustainability. Finally, on Saturday, in front of hundreds of delegates at our convention – and I would guesstimate that there were at least 200 delegates in the room – I identified some of the critical points of the third way in response to many of the questions.

In short, Mr. Speaker, there was not a word of declamation or refusal to accept that we have to find ways to change, that we have to find ways to make the health care system more sustainable, that we have to work to improve access. Overall, from those particular groups I take heart that Albertans are paying attention to the fact that at the rate of $735 million more this year, or almost 8 per cent more this year, if we keep going in this direction, we will simply not be able to provide health care in the future.

So, Mr. Speaker, the accusations of not doing the right thing are misguided at best.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Forestry Industry Sustainability

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Ninety per cent of Alberta's forests are in the Northern Alberta Development Council region. Alberta's forests are well supported by the valuable work being done by the sustainable resources department. There have been many concerns raised, however, not about the sustainability of Alberta forests but regarding the sustainability of the industry according to Alberta's 20-year strategic business plan. Forestry is an economic cornerstone. My question is to the minister of sustainable resources. What is being done to ensure that the forestry industry will continue to be one of the pillars of Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government, including our department and the minister responsible for northern development and the chair of northern development, certainly is aware of the important role that forestry plays in our economy here in Alberta. We are aware also of the many challenges that that industry sector faces in a world marketplace. I've discussed in this Legislature many times our partnership with the Alberta Forest Products Association and the things that we're doing to address competitiveness in the province and trying to involve them with our industry as well.

In addition to that part of cross-ministry, we're going on a fibre roadmap that will take a look at getting more economic value out of the fibre that is available not only from the forest but also from agriculture and also synthetic fibre that may be out there. We work with Forintek and we work with the Alberta Forestry Research Institute to make sure that we can head off the challenges in the forest industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: what is being done to ensure that value-added facilities have reliable access to the high-quality fibre they need?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, for manufacturers to remain viable, they must form business alliances with primary operators to ensure that they have a wood supply with which to operate. Those alliances are business-to-business opportunities, and we do not enter into those business-to-business arrangements. What we have done is tried to provide some incentives for those alliances as we go through in renewing forest management practices and agreements that are in place. The value-added component is also key for wood in the northwest part of Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that we get the proper wood to the proper mill in the proper time and the proper access to the marketplace as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Increasing amounts of wood are coming from private woodlots. Are there any incentives being looked at to encourage reforestation on private land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question, but we really need to be clear. Alberta Agriculture doesn't have any programs for encouraging reforestation on private land. Our focus is to encourage producers to invest in agroforestry on private land by building that value chain that would focus on growing specific trees for specific wood products. For example, growing spruce or aspen to make custom furniture would be one of the programs that we would focus on. Our involvement is really through a public/private partnership, the Alberta woodlot extension program. That program provides awareness for forested land retention and for the sustainable management of woodlands. Awareness activities in this group are targeted at farmers, ranchers, and other landowners to improve their use and their land practices and to invest in that agro industry that we talked about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Hospital Bed Capacity in Calgary

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary health region has issued 29 code burgundies in the first three months of this year, compared to 33 in all of 2005. These bed shortages have even resulted in a 10-year-old cancer patient being temporarily denied chemotherapy. The health system in Calgary is hurting, people are hurting, and it's time that this government stopped hiding behind vague, misguided reforms and started taking action to improve the situation. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that new hospital beds won't be ready for at least two years and physicians are only expecting the situation to get worse, when will this minister have a plan in place to resolve this crisis?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, clearly, it was a very regrettable situation where a young boy with cancer had to wait. In fact, he was due to be in the hospital on Thursday, and it wasn't until Saturday that there was a treatment bed found. There's an unusual and unprecedented pressure of oncology patients, children that need supports in Calgary. By this fall, in September, when the new Alberta Children's hospital opens up, we will be able to relieve this pressure with an additional 10 beds. So this year we will have more beds in place. In the meantime it is our hope that Calgary will continue to accommodate these pressures by alternative arrangements.

Unfortunately, because of the pediatric capacity the only place this child could be was in that particular facility. So that was why, Mr. Speaker, we couldn't transfer him elsewhere or do anything else as a temporary measure. I know that the staff worked very hard to make sure that we could accommodate him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has blown up and sold off hospitals in Calgary and hasn't yet built a new one to replace them, will the minister apologize for allowing this situation to reach such a critical point that small children suffering from cancer are having essential chemo treatments postponed?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I recall, in my television comment last Friday evening I did just that. I said how very sorry I was that a child and his family had to wait and that we had certainly put every effort into trying to resolve the situation. No minister wants children to have to wait, particularly if there are other options available. On this occasion, regrettably, what was planned was not workable for at least 24 hours, but I'm very pleased that there was an adjustment that was able to be made, that there was a bed available for Saturday. I know that the hon. member opposite joins me in the hope that we don't have that pressure again before the beds open this fall.

Mr. Taylor: You know, Mr. Speaker, how long does the minister expect Calgarians to put up with this unacceptable state of affairs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the $1.4 billion worth of funding last fall will go a long way to making sure that we have increased bed capacity. There will be at least 2,000 beds built in the next three years, 700 of which will go in Calgary. So if we had not made those kinds of moves, I could be more understanding of the questions from the hon. member opposite.

I think we're particularly advantaged right now in our history to be able to move forward to build more capacity, and in the meantime as an alternative approach to some of the pressure of day surgeries the Calgary health region is looking at the subacute region, the other hospitals in the region to absorb some of the brunt of the pressures that are being faced in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Protection of Children Abusing Drugs and Alcohol

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Concerned parents in Red Deer and throughout Alberta have contacted me to ask me about treatment and healing programs for their drug and alcohol addicted children. By July 1, 2006, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act will be in force. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister explain how this new legislation will help children and families who are struggling with drug addiction?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist congratulating the hon. member for the work that she has done on this legislation and the work she continues to do on the Crystal Meth Task Force. Many times youth will not voluntarily admit themselves to a treatment program, and this particular legislation enables the parents to go to the court and obtain an order for a nonvoluntary admission, enabling that child to have at least five days of treatment and of assessment and enabling the AADAC workers and the workers that are in touch with the child to develop a care plan and a proposal for ensuring that they get further treatment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister: how will the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission be assisting children who urgently need treatment for drug abuse?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, last fall we introduced another 24 voluntary youth detoxification and residential treatment beds with a considerable addition of staff and supports in AADAC. Any child who urgently requires help can either contact AADAC through the 24-hour help line or, in fact, voluntarily stop in at any one of the facilities and look to AADAC in any one of its locations for access to treatment.

We believe the new legislation is an important tool in the province because it recognizes that there's an extensive continuum of services required for children who are addicted to either alcohol or drugs. This legislation, which is in support of the child, is not for everyone, but obviously it's a particular avenue of accessing these services, Mr. Speaker, when other relevant treatment options have failed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't resist asking this question. Are there plans to provide residential treatment beds outside the two major urban centres, possibly in Red Deer?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we're examining right now the locations. A decision, a final determination hasn't been made, but there's a very good case for a northern and a southern facility. Obviously, Red Deer has done a considerable amount of planning for this. We will be adding 24 voluntary detoxification beds, and it's certainly very high on the list of priorities that we're addressing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Kindergarten Programs

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The value of teaching during the first eight years of life has been well documented in educational, psychological, and medical research, yet the Education minister announced last week that early childhood learning through full-day and junior kindergarten will not be supported by this government. How can the minister justify ignoring what the chair of Alberta's Commission on Learning describes as the two highest priority recommendations: full-day and junior kindergarten? How can the minister justify his decision?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Learning Commission made 95 recommendations. We acted as quickly as we could and accepted 87 or 88 of them, and we have allocated well over half a billion dollars to see them through. That's going very well. There were three recommendations that weren't yet responded to, and we did respond to them a week or a week and a half ago. The fact is that the majority of people who contacted this minister and, I'm sure, perhaps other colleagues simply said that they did not want junior kindergarten forced onto four-year-olds. But they did say: try and do something, however, to help with earlier identification. They did say: try and do something with respect to earlier developmental screening. That is exactly what we plan to look at doing.

With kindergarten, Mr. Speaker, it's almost the same thing. But let's remember that 95 per cent of eligible kids are already in a kindergarten program of one type or another.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the minister talks about empowering school boards to be responsible for education, how does he expect school boards to pay for the kindergarten programs they are already offering? They're already doing it. Why don't you help them?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the member opposite isn't as well informed as I'd hoped he would be. I'd be happy to sit down and explain this a little more to him because he may not realize that we provide $241 million a year to help school boards make local decisions. Some of them offer full-day kindergarten programs, some offer three days a week kindergarten programming, others offer a half day, and so on. We provide as much money as we possibly can right now to ensure that those decisions at the local level are made. My final sentence, quickly, is just this: almost 50 per cent of the school boards surveyed also supported our position.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, Mr. Minister, given that 95 per cent of the parents send their children to optional kindergarten programs, it is clear that parents want these programs. Why does the minister continue to claim that parents are divided when the real issue here is a lack of funding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, let me just say this again. We do have 95 per cent of the children going into optional kindergarten programs that suit the local area and that suit the local parents. I won't argue that it's important for children to have early start programs, and that's why we're augmenting the funding every year and giving school boards that additional capacity and that additional flexibility to address those needs. The simple difference here is that we are not going to be forcing it on the system. We have locally elected school boards. We're going to support them making locally elected decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Hazardous Material Spill at Wabamun Lake

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that spring is upon us, my constituents and those across the province are making plans for their well-deserved cottage vacations. A large number of Albertans are asking the same question, and that question is to the Minister of Environment. What is the Environment ministry doing to ensure a proper cleanup at Lake Wabamun after last summer's devastating oil spill?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say as a cottage owner that this is very important as Albertans as a whole begin to enjoy the beautiful weather that Alberta Environment delivered today and the many days in the future. I would like to say that I'm very proud of the fact that Alberta Environment in the first 24 to 48 hours issued strong enforcement orders to Canadian National, and further to that our environmental commission formed a SWAT team relative to the approach we are taking and the expectation by Albertans. Finally, I can assure the hon. member and the residents in the Wabamun area that over the entire winter we have been doing sampling of water. We continue to do that, working with Alberta Health. I also might say that, as well, remaining with us are two specialists that we hired in the first 24 hours, Dr. David Schindler from the U of A – some members might have recognized his name – and Dr. Ron Goodman, who, of course, was in charge of the Exxon Valdez spill.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: what is being done to help residents cope with this spill?

Mr. Boutillier: Well, first and foremost, Mr. Speaker, we have come forward with recommendations by the Environmental Protection Commission, chaired by Eric Newell, the chancellor of the University of Alberta. We are being not only out and down the road but around the corner in getting out in front of this issue. We remain committed in terms of how we're approaching this, and I can assure the hon. member that relative to the SWAT team that I spoke of, advertisements are in the newspaper today relative to searching together with this specialized environmental team that can travel to any lake anywhere in this province to protect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What is his ministry doing to support the commission's recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Environment has already pointed out, the environmental commission made a number of recommendations, some of which fall under the responsibility of the Minister of Environment, and he's outlined where his department is going in that direction.

The balance of the recommendations dealt with the Emergency Management Alberta agency. My ministry is at this point leading a cross-ministry initiative to implement and create the independent agency that the commission had recommended based upon what they recognized as an outstanding emergency management organization that already exists in this province. Our ultimate aim is to make that a world-class agency, that will be directly accountable to Executive Council as per the recommendations of the commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1987 on behalf of Alberta taxpayers the Progressive Conservative public works minister, Ernie Isley, paid $10.2 million for several parcels of land totalling 503 acres from Edmonton developer Joseph Shekter. This land inside the Edmonton restricted development area was to be used for a ring road freeway and a utility corridor. In 2001 the same government transferred all ring road land, worth millions upon millions of dollars, to the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Why did this Progressive Conservative government sell two parcels of ring road lands, amounting to about 160 acres, for $2 to the Galfour Development Corporation, which was controlled by the late Joseph Shekter?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as the member has indicated, these are transactions that happened some time ago, the original back in '88 and the most recent in '01. I would have to go back and investigate the whole situation. There's no way that I've got that before me at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again to the same minister: were these two parcels of land, which were sold for $1 each, part of the lands purchased by taxpayers for $10.2 million the previous year?

Mr. Lund: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I don't have that kind of information before me.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did send him in advance the documents related to this matter.

Again to the same minister: given that one of these parcels was valued at $800,000 and the other valued at $1.5 million, why were these lands sold by this Progressive Conservative government for $2?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, in his entire grandstand, of course, it is true that he gave me the document three minutes ago, so I am supposed to somehow have the answers in that length of time. Thanks for sending it over. It'll make it easier for me to find. We will be looking into it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While most Albertans oppose this government's privatized, two-tier health care scheme, opposition is strongest in the Tory rural heartland, and no wonder. The government's decision to return to the old way, to introduce two-tier, for-profit health care, will certainly mean a further drain of health professionals from rural areas to the big cities. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why does the minister continue to champion a privileged, two-tier health care system that officials in the rural health regions and our own staff claim will suck doctors out of the smaller centres into Edmonton and Calgary?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, many times in this House and other places I've enunciated that the only way that we would enable private care to be provided in concert with any geographic region was to first of all ascertain that the public health care system was protected. In fact, building a strong public health care system is what we're endeavouring to do. Rural physicians and providers have spoken to me about this issue. It's part of a larger workforce issue and many of the things that we're doing, including developing primary care networks, the dollars that we provided for educating more international medical graduates, the other position we're looking at for a second intake at the university, all of these things we're doing to ensure that there is a strong workforce and that the worst fears of the opposition are not realized.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given her refusal to cancel the third-way scheme, Albertans are asking why the minister is listening to the health care privatizers while ignoring those, including many within her own caucus, who know that this ill-advised scheme will widen the health care gap between the rural communities and large urban centres.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there's an implication there that this government and this minister are only listening to private providers. Yes, I've listened to many doctors, and many of them are members of private corporations, but the bulk of the people that have come forward as stakeholders have been providers that include community associations, include seniors' groups, include people with nonprofit associations, include disease advocacy groups. We are not listening to any one group in any exclusive fashion; we're listening to people that have brought forward their best ideas. The inference is that we're trying to provide certain Albertans an advantage. It's simply not true.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if the minister's so-called public consultation wasn't just window dressing, why is the minister pushing ahead with a for-profit, two-tier health care system in defiance of public opposition, especially when the strongest opposition is coming from the rural communities?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite presumes to read my mind, and he is in fact in error. I am providing this caucus the opportunity to review all of the consultation documents, everything that we've received. We are posting them on the web as they come forward, and if the hon. members were listening, they're being posted on a regular basis as the notes have been provided. We're asking people to still clarify if they had further questions about it. I am not ready to entertain either with this caucus or this House what the results are because it's too soon to have things that were done as recently as Friday tabulated. In due course, when we're ready, we will be sharing that not only with this House but with all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

University of Calgary Capital Plans

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the government announced a forward-looking plan to add 30,000 postsecondary spaces in the province by 2011. The University of Calgary has a plan to help meet this goal and to deal with the serious shortfall of university spaces in the city of Calgary and has launched four major capital projects to add 7,000 spaces by 2010. My question is for the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister advise whether his ministry will address the critical access problems facing the U of C by fast-tracking these four major capital projects so that it can move forward with the projects and address the critical access problems?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I've been really pleased with the amount of collaboration and co-operation we've had with all aspects of the postsecondary system, bringing forward long-term strategic plans with respect to capital needs right across this province but resulting, of course, in a very significant issue, and that is that there are a number of places where we could expand the capacity of the system and, of course, the number of dollars needed to do that. Now, I've been working very closely with the University of Calgary on its long-term capital plans. It has very ambitious plans but very good plans with respect to how it would like to expand, what areas it sees a need to provide student spaces in, and what type of physical infrastructure they need in order to do that. Last Friday, for example, we announced the new Campus Calgary digital library, a $113 million project which will launch them well on that way. The facility will expand existing library spaces but will also free up other space, so it's a great project.

Dr. Brown: Another question to the same minister: will the minister tell us when the U of C can expect to receive capital funding for the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That project is part of a capital plan which the University of Calgary has, which is about a $700 million program. As I just indicated, we've approved $113 million for the digital library. That's part of about $151 million which is in the capital budget this year for the University of Calgary for things like the Craigie Hall renovations, bachelor of science renovation and expansion, Faculty of Veterinary Medicine, and the digital library. So what I can say is that they have three additional projects – the ISEEE program, the urban campus, and the experiential learning centre – which are very high on their priority list, very high on our priority list, but we have to work through the process of allocating capital. I'm working with them on both the traditional mechanism for doing that and any new mechanisms we might have.

Dr. Brown: A further supplementary question to the same minister:

will the minister consider allowing the U of C to explore innovative ways to fund those badly needed capital projects as its board of governors has proposed?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the whole issue of long-term capital projects for postsecondary institutions needs to be looked at both in terms of financing and planning. Institutions are struggling with cost escalations in completing existing projects, and delaying plans for new projects obviously means that they could become more expensive. Borrowing is one approach that the U of C has suggested, and they make a fairly compelling argument that the cost of borrowing, in particular if they use it through the Municipal Financing Corporation and borrow at the government rates, is perhaps lower than the increasing cost of construction. So we have to look at that very compelling argument. I have to go to my caucus colleagues, my cabinet colleagues, and Treasury Board colleagues and say: are there ways in which we can allow institutions like the University of Calgary, which has a strong financial base and a strong future, to move ahead with some of their programs outside the normal funding process?

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. member for Calgary-Hays.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today concerned citizens in central Alberta are meeting with the chair of the Energy and Utilities Board to express their concerns about the lack of planning for resource development in the province, the lack of cumulative impact assessment before development, and risks to groundwater in relation to CBM drilling in the Horseshoe Canyon play. This is another example of landowners, rural Albertans, who are gravely concerned that we don't know the full impacts of Horseshoe Canyon drilling and fracturing. The Minister of Environment has come out last month requiring baseline water testing, one and a half years after the concerns were raised. To the Minister of Environment: what has been done in the investigations of claims of rural families who have lost water or had their water contaminated in the last two years from the CBM activity in their area?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure all Albertans that you can marry together environment and the economy. You can marry together conservatism and conservation in terms of what we are doing. What we are doing is acting. We are acting in terms of baseline testing. We are acting in terms of our team of biologists and people that are water experts that are out there studying the situation. Within the next seven days we will be giving the more detailed approach to what we are doing on the baseline testing, that I thank the hon. member for mentioning.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister demonstrate leadership for health and safety and call for a pause in drilling until we have the mandatory water testing in place?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what the member is suggesting – and I know that in his heart he is very sincere in what he is suggesting – is taking a broad brush and just sweeping across the province of Alberta. I don't think that is really the ultimate solution to the very good questions that he's asking. As I mentioned earlier, the baseline testing, the biologists we have, the water experts we have – we will do everything in our power to protect so that the environment is protected and our water is protected and the economy can continue to grow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final supplementary to the Minister of Environment: given that the coal-bed methane wells in the Horseshoe Canyon continue to be drilled as we speak, when will we see the protocols for water testing for independent review?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my second supplemental response, within the next five days our hydrologists as well as our experts are meeting to finalize the protocol. That's my commitment to the hon. member and the members of this Assembly: within the next five days. I want to also reassure the member and everyone that I will continue to be a marriage counsellor on those two important points.

Compensation for Crown Prosecutors

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, last week in Ontario it was announced that Crown prosecutors would receive a 40 per cent increase in pay and benefits. My question is to the Attorney General. Are there any negotiations under way in Alberta to increase the pay and benefits for Alberta crown prosecutors? Are there any negotiations under way in Alberta to increase the pay and benefits for Alberta Crown prosecutors?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It is true that last week there was an announcement that in Ontario there is a proposal to increase the amount of pay for prosecutors. However, at this point in time I think that the detail is not available. It's apparently going to be over a three-year period, and my information is that it has not yet been ratified.

The fact is that we, as a matter of practice in the Justice department, review on an annual basis the compensation of our Crown prosecutors and other lawyers. We do a comparative with Ontario, B.C., Manitoba, and the federal government, and we will be doing that again this year.

Mr. Johnston: My first supplemental is to the same minister. Where are we ranked nationally in terms of pay and benefits for Alberta Crown prosecutors?

Mr. Stevens: Well, as I indicated in my previous answer, Mr. Speaker, what we do is a comparative with certain jurisdictions which we think are the appropriate jurisdictions to do comparatives with. I can tell the hon. member and other members that when we last compared this, which of course was within the last year, we are within the range. So we feel that at this particular point we are competitive. I must say that if there is an increase in other jurisdictions, we have to look at that, and, as I have indicated, we will be doing that.

Mr. Johnston: My last supplemental to the same minister: will increasing the pay and compensation for Alberta Crown prosecutors assist in slowing down the flow of prosecutors leaving office to enter the more lucrative private practice?

Mr. Stevens: At this particular point in time, Mr. Speaker, we have something in the order of 225 prosecutors in the province. While historically, going back a few years, there was a problem with respect to retention, that certainly has not been the case in the last three to four years, and at this point in time it's my understanding that we don't have that problem. In fact, the budget that will be debated in the weeks ahead has provision for about an additional 25 prosecutors. We do not anticipate that there will be a problem attracting new prosecutors with the exception of some particular areas like Fort McMurray, for example. It's difficult to attract people because of the unique circumstances there. Admittedly, the city of Calgary also poses some problems, but generally speaking, we do not see this as a major issue.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on to the next point in the Routine, changes in the composition of one caucus within the Assembly has required some changes to the rotation for question period and for Members' Statements.

The rotation for question period and the rationale for that rotation is found in the chair's ruling of March 8, 2005, which can be found at pages 90 and 91 of Hansard for that day. The chair does not plan to repeat that whole ruling and will now indicate how that rotation is going to be altered.

As members know, the independent Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is entitled to the fifth question every fourth day in the Assembly. The chair can see no reason why the Member for Strathmore-Brooks should not be entitled to the same place in the rotation. On our schedule of House activities today, Monday, April 3, 2006, is day 2 in the rotation. The fourth day from today will be Thursday, April 6, at which time the Member for Strathmore-Brooks will be entitled to ask the fifth question of the day. So that no one is confused, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is entitled to a question on Wednesday, April 5.

To be clear, on day 1 of the rotation the Official Opposition will be entitled to the first three questions, and the members of the third party will be entitled to the fourth question. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks will have the fifth question, the Official Opposition the sixth, eighth, 10th, 13th, 15th, and 17th questions. Members from the government caucus will be entitled to the seventh, ninth, 12th, 14th, and 16th questions. The third-party caucus will continue to be entitled to the 11th and 18th questions.

Members should be alerted that day 1 of the rotation will not be the same as day 4. On day 4 the sixth question goes to a member of the government caucus while on day 1, which will be this coming Thursday, the sixth question goes to a member of the Official Opposition.

The chair will be tabling charts to demonstrate the operation through the rotation and will be providing the charts to members along with the new projected sitting days calendar.

With respect to members' statements there was an arrangement that was agreed to by House leaders on March 16, 2005, concerning the operation and rotation of members' statements. In keeping with this rotation, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks will be entitled to two members' statements over the next five weeks. His first member's statement would be Thursday, April 13, 2006.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we recognize the first of six for Members' Statements, I have to tell you that this is a very significant day in the history of the province of Alberta. In the spring of 1930 a bill was placed before this Legislative Assembly to ratify an agreement which John Edward Brownlee, Alberta's fifth Premier, called, and I quote: probably the most important piece of legislation that would ever come within the experience of members now sitting in the House.

On this day, April 3, 1930, the Alberta Natural Resources Act received royal assent, the corresponding federal statute being enacted on May 30 of the same year. One part of the text reads in part:

In order that the Province may be in the same position as the original Provinces of Confederation are . . . the interest of the Crown in all Crown lands, mines, minerals . . . and royalties derived therefrom within the Province . . . and all sums due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, . . . shall . . . belong to the Province.

For many Albertans the settlement also constituted a moral victory insofar as, and I quote again from comments of the day: the inferior constitutional status of Alberta had been an important factor in a continuing feeling of alienation amongst our population. End quote.

In practical terms the agreement provided for the transfer of about 40.5 million hectares of land, 1.21 million hectares of tar sands, 202,300 hectares of petroleum rights, and several million hectares of coal leases. Financially the arrangement stipulated that the dominion government would pay to the province an annual sum of $562,500 until its population reached 800,000, after which it was to pay an annual sum of $750,000 until its population reached 1.2 million. Finally, it was to remit an additional sum of $1,125,000 in perpetuity. In addition, legislation was passed in the Alberta Legislative Assembly that session to provide for the administration of the natural resources that were now under provincial auspices.

Team Scheidegger Junior Curling Champions

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to take this opportunity to congratulate the winners of the 2006 Optimist juvenile girls provincial curling championship, the Casey Scheidegger rink. The team definitely had one up on their competition throughout their round robin play this past month, winning all of their games to finish with a perfect 5 and 0 record.

The foursome, which includes Katie Wilson, Jessie Scheidegger, Jayme Coutts, and of course Casey, is coached by Don Scheidegger. While I'm sure that the team took the time to celebrate this accomplishment, they had very little time to prepare for their next challenge.

With their Optimist juvenile provincial title this talented curling team earned a spot in the 2006 under 18 international championship, which was held in Calgary from March 30 until April 2. I'm sure that the girls were proud to represent our province as Team Alberta in this great tournament, that included rinks from across Canada, the United States, and a single entry from Japan.

The Scheidegger foursome was a formidable force in the event, going unbeaten yet again in round robin play. Their 5 and 0 record there gave them top spot in pool A and sent them into the semifinals against Saskatchewan, the second place team from pool B, where they won, Mr. Speaker, 5-4.

Advancing to the final, the Scheidegger rink faced Ontario, winner of their pool. It truly was a battle of the best. The team from Ontario went on to win the game by a final score of 6-3, leaving the Scheidegger rink with the silver. It was the first loss for Team Alberta, who did themselves proud in the championship. Three of these talented young athletes – Casey, Jessie, and Katie – live in Little Bow, and Jayme lives in Livingstone-Macleod.

I along with Jayme's uncle, our Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, would ask that all members of this Assembly join us in recognizing the outstanding accomplishments of the Casey Scheidegger rink. Congratulations.

2:40 Electoral Reform

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the British parliamentary system has endured for almost 800 years. It has been a guiding beacon of light for freedom and democracy in many jurisdictions, including Canada and Alberta, yet recently there has been some talk of abandoning the single-member plurality system, which is a key feature of our parliamentary democracy. Some favour an alternate electoral system, such as proportional representation, and trumpet the need for change under the alluring phrase "democratic reform." Many of these proponents of change disparage our system by comparing it to a horse race under the rubric of the phrase "first past the post."

The single-member plurality system has many advantages. It allows electors the benefit of being able to directly choose which candidate will represent their party through local nomination meetings. There remains a strong geographical tie between the elected member and the riding that they represent, so representatives are attuned to the needs of their constituents. On the other hand, under proportional representation candidates are generally chosen by the party itself, creating a detachment between the electors and their representatives.

Proponents of proportional representation say that single-member plurality is undemocratic and that the birth of new political movements is inhibited. This is patently untrue, Mr. Speaker. Examples of new parties emerging abound in our province, parties like the CCF, the United Farmers of Alberta, Social Credit, the Western Canada Concept, and even the Alberta Alliance Party, all of which have been represented in this House. Even today four parties are represented here in this Chamber. Elected members are able to represent a diversity of views not only among but also within their parties. We should be cautious about abandoning a tried and true electoral system which has served our province and our country so well and for so long.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Chester Ronning Centre

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to recognize the exciting educational and research developments which are taking place in our rural institutions of higher learning. Last week I had the pleasure of attending the opening of the Chester Ronning Centre for the Study of Religion and Public Life at the University of Alberta's Augustana campus in Camrose. The director of this new centre is David Goa, whose experience includes religious studies in both Augustana and the main campus of the University of Alberta. Additionally, he was previously curator of folk life at the Royal Alberta Museum and curated exhibits such as Anno Domini in 2000.

The late Dr. Chester Ronning was a stalwart of the Camrose community. This man was an academic, a teacher, an MLA, a foreign diplomat, and I was privileged to know him as a friend. Chester Ronning was a remarkable individual whose passion consumed a variety of subjects, and seeking out and sharing knowledge was one of the most important. This was very clear during the time that he was principal of Camrose Lutheran College. He was perhaps best known on the world stage for his diplomatic work and his efforts to foster discussion between diverse groups of people. He served as ambassador or high commissioner to a number of countries. He was a companion of the Order of Canada as well as a member of the Order of Excellence of Alberta.

The centre which will bear his name will focus on studying the intersect between religion and public life in our global society. Perhaps a greater understanding of religion in public life will further the diplomatic relations between nations which Dr. Ronning strived so diligently to foster during his lifetime. I look forward to the work which will be produced from this new, unique centre of study in my constituency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Did the hon. member also mention that Dr. Chester Ronning was a former member of this Assembly?

Mr. Johnson: He was an MLA. Yes, he was a member.

Stephen Ames

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to recognize a constituent of mine who has attained international recognition as a professional golfer. As his closest competitors faltered under pressure, Stephen Ames displayed nerves of steel to shoot a five under par 67 last Sunday to win the Players tournament at TPC Sawgrass in Ponte Verde, Florida. Stephen finished six strokes ahead of his nearest competitor to take home first place money of almost $1.5 million.

Like 12 of my colleagues in this Assembly, Stephen Ames was born in a country outside of Canada. A native of Trinidad, and like those 12 members, he has chosen to become a Canadian citizen and raise his family in Calgary. Rising to the challenge of being the Players champion, Ames has had to overcome a difficult last two years as his Calgarian wife, Jodi, has battled lung cancer. On the tour last year Stephen found himself not only competing with others to make the cut every week but also had to play mum and dad to his two sons, Justin and Ryan, who accompany him on the road on a regular basis.

After winning the championship last Sunday, Stephen was joined by his family, and they spent the week in nearby Disney World. It was the family plan to travel to his homeland, but the winner of the Players championship automatically qualifies to play in the Masters, beginning this Thursday. This opportunity was just too good to pass up, so the visit to Trinidad will have to wait. I would ask all hon. members to join me in wishing Calgarian Stephen Ames nothing but success this week in Augusta, Georgia.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1987 then public works minister, Ernie Isley, paid Edmonton developer Joseph Shekter $10.2 million for 503 acres of land in the city of Edmonton. The Provincial Treasurer of the time, Dick Johnston, noted with some criticism that $10.2 million was about $6 million more than the land was worth, not a great deal for taxpayers.

I now have questions that I would like to ask on behalf of taxpayers. Given that the Provincial Treasurer assessed the value of this land to be $4 million, why was similar land sold one year later by the Progressive Conservative government for a mere $2? Yes, Mr. Speaker, $2. Strangely enough, details of the sale are missing from the public record. Why, I wonder, was this land sold back to Mr. Shekter's company before plans for the Edmonton ring road were finalized? Why was this land deemed surplus to the needs of the ring road given that this land is located in one of the fastest growing areas in Edmonton? How much did the completion of the portion of the Anthony Henday Drive crossing the North Saskatchewan River increase the value of this property? What other lands in the restricted development area did this government sell for $1 or $2? Who ordered this land to be sold? Is this one of the skeletons the former minister of infrastructure was referring to two weeks ago?

The government must provide answers to these questions immediately. Surely there must be a good reason for selling 160 acres of prime residential land in southwest Edmonton for pocket change, and I'm sure there's an equally good reason why details of the sale are missing from the public record. It was only a short time after this sale that the budgets for public health care, public education, and the public service were cut by this Progressive Conservative government. Seniors were told to do with less. Albertans deserve answers. Can this government please provide them immediately.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Celebration of Alberta Theatre

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Monday, March 27, was World Theatre Day, an event celebrated in over 90 countries, so today I'd like to recognize and celebrate Alberta's theatres. From Alberta Theatre Projects to Workshop West Theatre we have a wealth of theatre excellence in our province. From the flagship companies with multimillion dollar budgets to the companies working with under a thousand dollars, they tell our stories and lead us into other worlds. So to ATP, Azimuth, Catalyst, the Citadel, CAT in Red Deer, Concrete, Free Will Players, Fringe Theatre Adventures, Great West Theatre in Fort Macleod, Horizon, Keyano in Fort McMurray, Leave It To Jane, Loose Moose, Lunchbox, L'UniThéâtre, Northern Light, One Yellow Rabbit, Pleiades, Prime Stock, Pumphouse, Quest, Rapid Fire, Rosebud, Shadow, Stage Polaris, Studio Theatre, Teatro la Quindicina, Theatre Calgary, Theatre Network, Trickster, Vertigo, Workshop West, and all the others who create, develop, entertain, and bring us that shared experience, thank you for your inspiration, value, and the vitality you bring to our communities. Please join me in cherishing Alberta's theatre community, and get out and see a play.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table more pages of a petition urging the government to "increase infrastructure development funding for Highway 63." Today I'm tabling 1,330 signatures, for a total of 8,991.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a petition to the Legislative Assembly from residents of Alberta petitioning the Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In regard to my questions earlier in question period I have three documents that I would like to table for reference to all hon. members. The first is an article from the Edmonton Journal dated October 3, 1987, stating that the land price of $6 million is too high. The second document I have is from the Alberta Government Services land titles office, and it indicates here that 123 acres of land in the city was sold for $1 and the estimated value at the time of sale was $1.5 million. The other document I have is another Alberta Government Services land titles office document, and it indicates that a much smaller parcel of land, this one around 36 acres of residential development property, again valued at around $800,000, is sold or transferred for $1.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some health tablings: the first from L.E. Wagner wondering why we don't have a provincial plan on pharmaceuticals.

A letter from Sarah Wall notes that absolutely no objective research evidence supports privately funded health systems.

A letter from Miki Wharton-Meijer insists that "the government have meetings where the majority of stakeholders . . . can ask questions and air their concerns. That would be the democratic way."

A letter from Tena Wiebe notes: "it is more cost effective and efficient to improve and streamline the public system."

From Marlene Williams with a concern that "a parallel private system will draw off resources from the public system."

From Kellogg and Katherine Wilson noting that they are both seniors and expressing extreme displeasure at a third way for medicare.

From Warren Woodcox noting that insurance has to be "bought and paid for before an illness is diagnosed."

From Geraldine Young with a number of suggestions on increasing health care providers, broadening the use of information technology, and using home care.

That's it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a single letter from a resident of my constituency, who is expressing concern and rejection of the third way concept in health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table this afternoon. The first is a letter from Rick Gilson of Grande Prairie. Mr. Gilson is a high school principal and a head coach who would like to see considerable investment in athletic and recreational facilities. He notes that every dollar spent on sport and recreation "saves $7 from being spent in healthcare."

I also have a letter from Dorian Despina of Grande Prairie, who is opposed to allowing doctors to operate in both public and private health systems and argues that the best way to reform health care is to innovate within the public system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling correspondence from several people, all of whom are opposed to the third way plans for health care. Each of the seven correspondents disagrees with plans to provide private insurance and to allow doctors to straddle the private and public systems. The letters are signed by Madeline Nguyen, John Ternan, Madeleine Chartrand, Erin Rose, Gail Wallace, Susan Thi Xuan Thu Huynh, and Nathan Krywiak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First tabling today is a letter from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Ms Lorna Berlinguette, who is urging us to adopt a comprehensive plan that would address the whole problem of violence against women. She wants us to provide sustainable funding for front-line organizations helping females at risk and supports having independent, trained advocates for those females seeking justice after having been victimized.

The second one is also a letter from two Edmonton-McClung constituents, Evan and Marian Addy, who recount the health care story in this province and how things were fine until about the 1990s and how ill-advised policies and decisions back then can more than explain the current difficulties we face today. As for the third way, they think that it "should be decided by a referendum" and say that like most Albertans, they too need more information on this proposal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling 13 sets of correspondence from Calgary constituents expressing concern, anger, and an underlying sense of betrayal over this government's third-way proposals. The correspondents are as follows: Martin Cowman, Bonnie Nahornick, Kathleen O'Donoghue, Diane Field, Dr. Jonathan Lytton, Rob Lerouge, Dr. Bruce and Marilyn Harrison, Peter Esposito, Linda Holzman, Mary Esposito, Louise French, David French, and Kelly and Margaret Price.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of tablings today, the first of which is the appropriate number of copies of the program from the Magic Moments Children's Benefit held on Friday, March 24, at West Edmonton Mall presented by the Birth To Three Society in support of Edmonton early intervention program and Early Head Start. It was noted by a number of speakers that evening that only members of the Official Opposition were in attendance.

I also have a number of health letters. One is from a J. Thompson, a constituent of mine, who says that "there has been no genuine, full-scale attempt to streamline and reorganize the existing public system" in health care.

One from a constituent, Pat Seale, indicates that she's concerned "who and how people will be affected adversely" by the new policy changes in health care, and she goes on in her letter to outline each of the various policy changes and how they will affect Albertans.

I have another one from a constituent, Daniel Langdon, whose parents actually have experience in a mixed public and private system. He outlines those, and asks us to "please follow the will of Albertans and abandon the third way."

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have a total of three letters related to persons with developmental disabilities and the funding or lack thereof that is announced in the recent budget, and these letters are from Linda Whitlock, Lonnie Tanner, and Tobias Jeserich.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I've got one. I think we've now circulated to all members the copies of the new question period rotation along with the new projected sitting days calendar. Graphs are good.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 23, I'm going to move that written questions 10, 11, 12, and 13 be dealt with today. There being no additional written questions, there are, therefore, none to stand and retain their places either.

[Motion carried]

Public Funding for Assisted Living

Q10. Mr. Martin moved that the following question be accepted. What was the average portion of the total cost for a resident in an assisted living facility that was publicly paid for, and what portion was privately paid for in the fiscal years 2003-2004 and 2004-2005?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Written Question 10. It is unclear what "the average portion of the total cost" means. The department does not track the average cost of health care services in long-term care, assisted living, or designated assisted living. No tracking of average care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find that rather unbelievable, especially in view of the circumstances, that we've been having debates about the recent increases back a few years ago on the residents and the fact that there is public money flowing in while these are private facilities. I guess that I'm sort of amazed that we don't have any record of where this money's going or any idea of what's happening out there. Why wouldn't we be tracking it? I think that's the simple question that most Albertans would ask. Obviously, if the minister doesn't have the figures, she can't give it to us, but I would think her department, then, would want to do something about this. This seems to me to be a no-brainer, that we'd want to know where government money is flowing.

[Written Question 10 lost]

3:00 Public Funding for Long-term Care

Q11. Mr. Martin moved that the following question be accepted. What was the average portion of the total cost for a resident in a long-term care facility that was publicly paid for, and what portion was privately paid for in the fiscal years 2003-2004 and 2004-2005?

Mr. Martin: I have to ask the question, but I think I know the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Written

Question 11. It is unclear what the term "average portion of the total cost" means. That is precisely the reason that the department has recommended a response that says that because we do not track the average cost of health care services in long-term care, assisted, or designated assisted living, we are unable to provide this. The hon. member makes a sterling point on the business of tracking costs. While I will endeavour to look into that, at this stage we are not able to give those average numbers on either this question or the predecessor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said, I knew the answer to this question from the previous one. I would take the minister at her word, then, that they would begin to look into this. I think this is a very serious matter. I don't know if the Auditor General has referred to this or not, but probably he should. I would take her word on that, that they would be looking into doing some tracking.

Thank you.

[Written Question 11 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Designated Assisted Living Facility Costs

Q12. Mr. Martin moved that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2003-2004 and 2004-2005 what was the average cost per resident per month at a designated assisted living facility?

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think I know the answer to the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As before, we will be rejecting Written Question 12. The department does not track the average cost of health care services in long-term care, assisted living, or designated assisted living. I'm appreciative that the hon. member opposite has acknowledged that I will be doing some follow-up work on this to see whether or not we can do what is most important; that is, to be accountable to Albertans for the dollars that are spent in these situations and to see whether there is a value in attaching a valuation to those kinds of care facilities for that particular cost.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I would like to weigh in on this question. Actually, it basically covers all four. I am sorry that the word "average" is being used because I think it gives the other side a convenient out. I will take the minister at her word, that she will look into this. If not, I can assure that these questions will be coming back in perhaps a more specified way. Also, I'm trusting that by that time we will have clear, clear definitions of assisted living, designated assisted living, lodge, enhanced lodge, and on and on and on, which will then help to clarify these questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: With all due respect to the hon. member, if they're not tracking it, it doesn't matter how you put it in the question. Again, we'll just make the case fairly straightforward, that we will be watching to see if we can make the government accountable for both public money and the amount that people are spending privately because there were big increases three or four years ago. I think it's important that we understand this, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 12 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Designated Long-term Care Facility Costs

Q13. Mr. Martin moved that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2003-2004 and 2004-2005 what was the average cost per resident per month at a designated long-term care facility?

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, knowing the answer to the question, we'll get it on the record.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Written Question 13. The department does not track the average cost of health care services in long-term care, assisted living, or designated assisted living. I think the point has been well made by the questioner. We will follow up and see what we can illuminate in terms of cost accountability in the future. I will take this under advisement, but presently we will be rejecting this question.

[Written Question 13 lost]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 23, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions 20, 21, and 22.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Payments to Redesignated Long-term Care Facilities

M20. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of payments made by a regional health authority or the Ministry of Health and Wellness to all facilities in Alberta whose designation changed from long-term care facility to assisted living facility between April 1, 2001, and February 22, 2006.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll keep trying.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we will be rejecting Motion for a Return 20. Alberta Health and Wellness does not have this level of data because Health and Wellness provides global funding to regional health authorities and does not receive assisted living funding information from the regions on a facility by facility basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe I've got another motion in between here. It seems to me that there have been a number of cases recently, at least that we're aware of, where a facility changed from long-term care to assisted living. Surely they can't do that on their own. There must be permission from the government, from the minister's department, to do that. As you know, we've raised this in the Legislature. It was the same group of people there, and then all of a sudden they're moved to assisted living, which has even less standards. We're trying to get some handle. We're not asking for the tracking of the money here. We're asking how many institutions have done that. Surely the minister has that information. It's not tracking the money; it's just what facilities have changed. We're trying to get an idea of the numbers here.

[Motion for a Return 20 lost]

3:10 Redesignation of Long-term Care Facilities

M21. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of facilities in Alberta whose designation changed from long-term care facility to assisted living facility between April 1, 2001, and February 22, 2006.

An Hon. Member: Good luck.

Mr. Martin: Thanks. I need good luck here to get information, no doubt, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Motion for a Return 21. Motion for a Return 21 is quite unclear with respect to the specific intent of the phrase "list of facilities . . . whose designation changed." In the context of long-term care services only approved auxiliary hospital services are deemed to be designated by the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I remember that I requested a contract between Allen Gray and Capital health some time ago. They gave me the papers, but they sent me the statements from 1998 to 2000, the latest one, not even '01, '02, '03, '04, '05. I want to know why the government is hiding so much. Albertans have the right to know the full accounts, where their money is going and how much they are paying. I don't know why the government keeps on rejecting all those written questions that are raised.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Debate on Written Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, the debate here is with respect to the acceptance or the rejection of a motion. There is no provision whatsoever in here for questions to be asked of an individual member. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie may make a statement in support of or against the motion but is not in a position to ask a question of the minister. The chair will not permit the minister to respond during this part of the Routine. There are other opportunities for questions and answers.

If I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview now, I'm recognizing him to close the debate.

Debate Continued

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I understood that with the written questions about the tracking, whether I agree or not, if you don't have the figures, you don't have the figures. But when the minister says, "a list of facilities," I think we're playing a bit of a semantics game here because, clearly, there were a number of places where they went to assisted living from formerly a different title and different standards and all the rest of it. Off the top of my head I can think of one in Camrose, where they had a different level of staffing.

This is pretty important information, Mr. Speaker, for us to know. The government seems to have a policy of moving towards assisted living with the same people in the same institution. Again, we weren't asking for the dollars. I accepted what the minister said, that they don't do that, and I take her word that they will be working on that. But this is pretty basic information. For the life of me, I can't understand why we wouldn't have access to this information.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but surely an institution, private or nonprofit or whatever, can't just say, "Oh, today we're long-term care, and tomorrow we're assisted living for the same group of people" without the government's hand in there, saying okay or no. Why would that information not be made available to us in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker? Whatever institution we mean, we'll try to reword this again, but surely it should be the right of the Assembly and, through the Assembly, the right of the people of Alberta to know what's going on. Long-term care has been a very major issue here since we've been back, you know, since the election, as the minister is well aware. This is part of what we're trying to get to. I just don't understand why we couldn't at least have this information.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, I accept that if they don't track, they can't give you the information. I accept that, and I accept the minister's word. But this is not tracking. This is simply telling us the number of facilities where this is happening so that we get a little better handle on what's happening in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Health Impacts of Industrial Activities

M22. Dr. B. Miller moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 1997-98 through 2004-05 and April 1, 2005, to March 9, 2006, all reports, studies, papers, or analyses prepared or received by the ministries of Health and Wellness or Environment related to the health impacts of industrial activities in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be rejecting Motion for a Return 22. When the public body is considering giving access to a record that may contain third-party business information, the public body must provide written notice to the third party prior to disclosure in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This information is not readily available and would require an inordinate amount of department resources to research and compile. Accessing this information under FOIP would allow us to consider an appropriate fee for this request if applicable. For these reasons, the request for this information must be made under the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

The Speaker: Shall I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close the debate?

Dr. B. Miller: No.

Bill 201 Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure today to rise in committee and make a few remarks regarding Bill 201, the Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006. As I said on introduction, the purpose of this bill was to create a dialogue around organ and tissue donation and thereby attempt to increase the number of Albertans who consent.

First, I'd like to provide a little background as to why I felt that introduction of this bill was required. In Alberta the Human Tissue Gift Act governs the donation and transplantation of organs and tissues. There have been no major revisions to the act since its implementation in October 1973, which is more than 30 years ago.

In 1989 the Uniform Law Conference of Canada adopted the uniform Human Tissue Donation Act. This conference prepares model acts on selected subjects in the interests of uniformity throughout Canada, and it contained recommendations intended to make more organs available for transplant. It would also provide better protection for donors, recipients, and their families. Provincial governments are under no obligation to accept the recommendations in the model acts, and the government of Alberta did not accept the act following its release in 1989.

In 1998, in response to public advocacy, private member's Bill 206, the Human Tissue Donation Procedures Statutes Amendment Act, passed through the Alberta Legislature and received royal assent. The Member for Edmonton-Centre referred to this act on several occasions during her remarks in second reading. Although passed in this Legislature, Bill 206 was not proclaimed.

In 1999 the then Minister of Health and Wellness established the Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation and appointed the current Minister of Children's Services as the chair. The purpose of this committee was to find ways to increase organ and tissue donation in Alberta. This committee submitted its final report on April 19, 2000, and as I said in my remarks on second reading, little has been done since then. The advisory committee recommended that new legislation was required to ensure that Alberta had a sound legal framework to guide donation and transplantation.

So that brings us to today. Since introduction of this bill I've received many calls, e-mails, and letters, and it's fair to say that the medical community is concerned with the provisions around imminent death. Physicians are concerned about being placed in an ethical position of deciding when death is imminent, and I understand that professional dilemma. The medical community is proud of our accomplishments in donor consent, and they should be. But I also said on introduction that people continue to die waiting for organ donations, so until that number is reduced to zero, no one should stop looking at ways to make things better. I also believe there are many opportunities for tissue donation that we may not be exploring under our current procedures.

Equally concerned are a number of organ recipients who say that the bill doesn't go far enough and should include presumed consent. Of note is the fact that a private member's bill calling for a presumed consent model is currently before the Ontario Legislature. I also noted recently an article in the media from Ontario which states that since new rules came into effect requiring mandatory reporting in that province, the number of donations has actually tripled.

As members are aware, when this bill came up for committee discussion several weeks ago, I asked that it be put over until today. I wanted to enter into a consultation process with the medical community, and I have done that. I also wanted to provide the Department of Health and Wellness with time to assess what this bill would do. I wanted to have the department examine this bill and see if initiatives being contemplated could be accelerated, and I believe that good progress is being made in this regard.

With those remarks, I'll take my seat, and I'll listen to members who want to participate in committee. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise and give my first comments on Bill 201, Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, intended to make donation easier by establishing a more systematic way of considering potential donors and approaching families of potential donors for consent and also formalizing a procedure that requires an agency to request consent for organ and tissue donation from an individual or a family. It's clear that we've come a long way in this province in relation to human organ procurement.

I want to commend the existing system, but some significant tweaking, which this amendment will entail, is going to assist that, moving us beyond the HOPE program and pushing us to do two fundamental things, I think: one, to enhance the capacity of professionals to be prepared to deal with families and talk frankly about the need to make commitments to making these donations and, secondly, to facilitate that decision beyond the conflict that sometimes occurs between family members after the death and the initial commitment by the individual. So some clarification, surely, is welcome on those two fronts. As the hon. member recently indicated, nearly 1 in 5 people waiting for organ donations are dying before they get the organs, and in many cases this surgery can be cost-saving and actually economically very favourable as well.

I'm hoping that some very practical results from this will be a team that would assist professionals even before the registration in moving forward and getting comfort with and establishing as part of a routine with their patients the discussions that are needed. At the present time it's hit and miss. Many professionals are uncomfortable with the process and simply ignore it until it's too late.

A few questions arise that I haven't seen answered and that I would appreciate some further comment on if it's available. Will this government and this amendment take direction from its own 2003 consultation paper recommending that where the wishes of a deceased individual have been expressed, they take precedence over the wishes of the family? Will this deal specifically with the notification procedures and address consent procedures, and can we expect the government to engage Albertans in further discussion if we are moving towards a presumed consent versus a mandatory direction?

Finally, Mr. Chairman, will there be an evaluation in terms of the economics of implementing this new framework, and will there be some evaluation of the impact on the health care professionals and how this is being embraced or working, as the case may be?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that in general we support this important amendment and would just like to see some clarifications of those questions.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to begin by commending the hon. Member for Calgary-West for his vision, for his tenacity, for his dedication in bringing Bill 201 to the floor, and for his commitment, finally, to the improvement in our organ and tissue donation in Alberta.

As the member stated in his speech this afternoon, my department has been looking at this issue for some time, and the Department of Health and Wellness will bring forward legislation very soon that will address the member's concerns about organ and tissue donation. The government's legislation, called the human tissue and organ donation act, will repeal and replace the current Human Tissue Gift Act. The proposed legislation is stronger thanks to the efforts of the hon. member and to the feedback that we've received on Bill 201. I am very pleased that the member has indicated a willingness to bring the proposed human tissue and organ donation act forward. This is appropriate given that the legislation will address some of Bill 201's objectives. Many, in fact, of its objectives are contained in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, while it would be premature for me to discuss what will be in the government's legislation, I would like to inform the House about what we heard from interested parties with respect to Bill 201 as passed in second reading. One of the objectives of Bill 201 is to create a procedure that will ensure that Alberta's medical professionals consider organ and especially tissue donation whenever a potential donor becomes available. Another is to add a layer of accountability to this process by requiring that a phone call regarding potential donors be made to a donation agency after such a consideration has been made. A third objective of Bill 201 is to provide these donation agencies with the opportunity to jointly establish the requirements for this notification procedure. This objective is based on the fact that these agencies have expertise which should be utilized when creating these requirements.

The final objective of Bill 201 is to initiate interdepartmental discussion, co-operation, and action to increase the public's awareness of organ and tissue donation. The hope is that a greater awareness of this in the public will improve organ and tissue donation rates across the province. Mr. Chairman, with respect to this last objective, I have committed to initiating a discussion and action between the Department of Health and Wellness and the departments of Infrastructure and Transportation and Government Services to look at ways that we can increase awareness of this issue with the public. As an example, the Member for Calgary-West has suggested that information pamphlets be inserted into driver's licence and vehicle registration renewal notices. The member has also suggested that during the driver's licence renewal process Albertans could be asked to indicate whether they would consider becoming an organ and tissue donor.

Mr. Chairman, I've committed to looking at the pros and cons of all these possibilities as well as any other ideas that may help to increase awareness among Albertans. These are the objectives the member is attempting to achieve with Bill 201, and while it has created some apprehension in the medical community, it is merely because the bill requires physicians to take action with respect to organ and tissue donation when the death of a patient is imminent. Like the sponsoring member, I agree that requiring action from physicians when the death of a patient is imminent creates a difficult professional dilemma for physicians. I feel confident that the government's bill will address the concerns of the medical community.

They have also acknowledged that Bill 201 would remove the attending physician from the organ and donation process and would require a third party, someone from a donation agency, to approach the family of the deceased person and request consent. Mr. Chairman, although closer reading of Bill 201 reveals that this is not necessarily the case, I can understand how this could be a concern for the medical community. The Alberta Advisory Committee on Organ and Tissue Donation and Transplantation report suggests that the attending physician be involved in this process, and Health and Wellness agrees. Currently staff members from donation agencies teach physicians and medical professionals how to effectively approach families of potential donors to successfully obtain consent. By providing physicians with this knowledge, we can avoid unnecessary bureaucracy.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal of work has been done by the Member for Calgary-West and between the member, the medical community, and the Department of Health and Wellness. All of this work has gone toward the development of a human tissue and organ donation act, which the hon. Member for Calgary-West has agreed to bring forward on behalf of Albertans, and I commend him for it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Relative to Bill 201, in the interest of simplifying this matter between a private member, his initiative, and a government bill, a decision has been made to drop Bill 201 and to include significant aspects of that bill inside government legislation. I know that the member and the government share the same goals, which are to raise both professional and public awareness and ultimately to increase donation rates in the province, and I applaud the member for this. In addition to the strategies proposed in the health minister's department bill, we will work together with other government departments to determine the best ways to achieve these goals advanced by the member and government. For this reason, pursuant to Standing Order 64(1) I move the motion that the chairman do now leave the chair.

Thank you.

Chair's Ruling

Motion to Leave the Chair

The Chair: Hon. members, before calling the vote on the motion, the chair would like to provide some clarification to all members regarding the rules governing this type of motion and its effect on the bill before the committee if the motion is passed. First, the motion is allowed under Standing Order 64(1), which states that a motion that the Chairman leave the Chair

- (a) is always in order,
- (b) takes precedence over any other motion, and
- (c) is not debatable.

The parliamentary authorities are very clear regarding the implications of this motion. If it is approved by the committee, the chairman will at once leave the chair, resulting in the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole coming to an end with no committee report being made to the House. The bill that is before the committee at the time that the motion is moved becomes a dropped order and disappears from the Order Paper. Members may wish to refer to Beauchesne's at paragraph 905, Erskine May at page 617, and on August 26, 1996, the Deputy Speaker's ruling at page 2369 of Hansard.

The chair wants to ensure that members are aware of the effect of this motion given that this is a rare occurrence. A motion of this type has only been moved in Committee of the Whole on two occasions in the last decade, once on August 21, 1996, in connection with private member's Bill 214, Victims of Domestic Violence Act, and a second time on May 9, 2001, with respect to private member's Bill 203, Residential Care Housing Committee Act.

The Chair: The chair would now call the question on the motion that the chairman do now leave the chair.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 203 Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to open debate in the committee stage on Bill 203, Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. I'd like to begin my remarks by thanking the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for moving debate on second reading my behalf. During that debate, which I read in Hansard, my colleagues eloquently supported the bill and the reasoning behind it. As we enter committee stage, I would like to address the questions which came up during second reading and discuss the wording of the bill.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder raised the question of the applicability of Bill 203 to the efforts of the Edmonton Radial Railway Society. By way of refresher, these individuals are responsible for the maintenance and operation of the streetcars in Fort Edmonton as well as the streetcar which passes over the High Level Bridge between downtown and Whyte Avenue. Mr. Chair, to my knowledge the High Level Bridge streetcar is considered part of the urban transit system and therefore does not operate under the Alberta railroad act that is hereby being amended. The amendment does not change that status.

Further, as we look at the definition of a heritage railroad as outlined in section 2 of the bill, we can see why this legislation will not apply to the streetcar running from Whyte Avenue to downtown Edmonton. Let me quote from the act.

- (d.1) "heritage railway" means a railway that

- (i) is operated wholly or in part within the confines of an historical park or similar park or site,
- (ii) is comprised of rolling stock and structural facilities, any of which was manufactured in 1965 or earlier,
- (iii) operates at a speed not exceeding a maximum of 30 kilometres per hour,
- (iv) travels no further than 240 kilometres in a day, and is operated for the sole purpose of providing rides to individuals and is not operated for the purposes of transporting goods or commodities for a toll or a fee or of being a common carrier.

This last section is pertinent in this situation because people can use the trolley across the High Level Bridge as a means of transportation, another reason for exclusion under this act.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will not be applicable to all organizations who operate vintage equipment. This held true under the old designation of amusement, and it will hold true under the new designation of heritage.

While all attempts have been made to make Bill 203 as widely applicable as possible, considerations of safety and the nature of rail operations need to be taken into consideration to ensure that all rail operators in the province are treated fairly. For example, the Alberta Prairie Steam Tours is currently identified as a public railway under the Railway (Alberta) Act. Now, this operation runs a steam engine locomotive from Stettler to Big Valley and back. The reason why they did not fall under the amusement category is because the nature of their operation is quite different from what is carried out in the Alberta Railway Museum or Heritage Park or Fort Edmonton Park. Alberta Prairie Steam Tours cross onto a public track for a short distance and then run on tracks through public lands, where they cross roads and in general come into more contact with everyday life outside a park. Additionally, there exists the possibility that a person could purchase a ticket in Stettler, then exit the train at Big Valley, effectively using the train as a means of transport.

This is in contrast to the operation of railways within parks. In parks there is a controlled setting with far fewer public variables to consider. Train engineers do not have to be alert for a pickup truck speeding to beat the train or the possibility of encountering another locomotive along a public section of rail. It is not the intent of this bill to exclude an operation which utilizes vintage equipment but, rather, to create a balance among the needs of rail operators in the province. This balance is to be achieved through Bill 203.

First, it is important to recognize the contribution which certain organizations make to preserving and creating Alberta's history. As other members mentioned previously, the railway played a vital role in the development of our province. Towns and settlements sprang up along projected rail lines, and if the anticipated railway did not appear, they quickly disappeared again. The coming of the railroad into a town or city caused an immediate spike in land prices in the area and made many Albertans quite wealthy. There were many developers in multiple rail companies which laid track across our province, tying the north and the south of Alberta into the major transnational lines of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific carriers.

The present designation of amusement does not call attention to or recognize the effort that is expended by these rail operators in preserving our rail history. By adding the definition of a heritage railway into the Railway (Alberta) Act, the contributions of these operators will be recognized. I would like to point out that the heritage category is being added to the existing types of railways instead of replacing the amusement designation. The reason for this is that it was thought prudent to plan for possible developments in the future which might better fall into the category of amusement.

So by adding the new type of railway to the Railway (Alberta) Act, the contributions of the affected organizations will be recognized, and the legislation will be more responsive to developments affecting railways in Alberta.

The second goal behind the introduction of Bill 203, as some of my colleagues alluded to during second reading, is to create a mechanism through which a new set of regulations will be drafted and then applied to heritage railways. The needs of operators of these railways and the requirements necessary for safe operations are not necessarily being met through having these railways meet regulations designed for another purpose. Regulations which are more appropriate to the operations to which they apply will better suit all needs. Safety will remain the number one concern of all involved, and ensuring a high level of safety will be paramount when drafting the new regulations.

Mr. Chairman, we have opportunity to recognize the importance of historic railways in Alberta and the role which they have played in shaping our province by creating the designation of historic in the Railway (Alberta) Act. At the same time, we have the opportunity to reduce overregulation in the province. So I would urge all members of this Chamber to stand with me and voice their support for Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. This bill creates heritage railways under the railway act, which allows heritage railways to operate under their own regulations. Currently heritage railways operate under the same legal specification as major rail lines, causing unnecessary regulations and burdens, high insurance on vintage lines. The new regulations will definitely develop safety inspection policies specifically for heritage railways. There are two reasons for supporting this particular Bill 203: heritage and regulation.

Presently the railway act's definition section does not specifically recognize heritage railways. The act defines amusement railways and industrial railways. Alberta railways played an important role in building Alberta. This bill attempts to preserve this history. Stakeholders at the heritage railways museum argue that the current act is cumbersome for vintage rail museums. They say that they are faced with unnecessary regulations, causing high insurance and other regulatory burdens. At the Alberta Railway Museum in Edmonton the railway operates on their own private property. The line does not cross public streets, yet it is still subject to the same regulatory standards as major rail line operators.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta has three significant historic railway museums. One is the Alberta Railway Museum in Edmonton, which provides school tours, Alberta Central Railway Museum in Wetaskiwin, Rocky Mountain Rail Society in Stettler, headquartered in Calgary, and the other Alberta rail heritage sites include Fort Edmonton Park, Heritage Park in Calgary, and so on.

Did you know that "railway" is British/Canadian, but "railroad" is American? Stakeholders expressed concern with section 2(a)(ii). The bill states: structural facilities, station buildings, et cetera, "any of which was manufactured in 1965 or earlier." Number one, while rolling stock equipment such as locomotives, et cetera, are built prior to 1965, some of the facilities have been built more recently. The implications are unknown.

Stakeholders also expressed concern with section 2(a)(iv). The bill states that the train “is operated for the sole purpose of providing rides to individuals and is not operated for the purposes of transporting goods or commodities for a toll or a fee.” However, the Alberta Central Railway Museum, charges fees for rides. The implications are unknown.

I have a few other questions. According to section 1 of the railway act, what is going to be significantly different between an amusement railway and a heritage railway?

Another question is: will the label heritage railway have any funding implications? For instance, will heritage railways be able to apply for new grant opportunities beyond current sources such as the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation and community initiative programs?

What about rail safety, rail inspections? How will this legal change impact inspections on rail lines? What role does insurance play in this change? Will insurance costs be reduced and why? Could you please provide some examples that demonstrate that the current act is not working for heritage railways?

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill. I wish we had some better bills than this one for discussion because there are some other priorities for Albertans. I wish we had some bills, if it's the railways, LRTs, or CP railways, security for the transportation, prevention of crime: you know, the bills which Albertans want to see. I'm not criticizing this particular one. This is a good bill, and I support this, but bills in regard to resource policies: those are the bills that Albertans want to see, the priority bills. We are receiving royalties, and we should discuss here again and again what we should do with the resource. Bills which give us the opportunity to discuss the resources in Alberta and savings, infrastructure, and safety in the transport department, housing for low-income people: those are the priorities for Albertans.

This bill is good. I mean, it is good to see. But I still meet people that criticize the deregulation of electricity in Alberta, and we don't see any bills in regard to that to discuss whether it's working or not working for Albertans. Most of the people I meet say that deregulation is a total failure. Not only me. People are talking in the streets. They want to see bills in regard to health care, long-term care policies, and the education/arts sector.

I was in Fort McMurray last week, and I met a few stakeholders there. They are frustrated. They say: “Yeah, I heard that these are the bills introduced in the last few weeks. What are you guys doing for Alberta's sector?” Fort McMurray is giving us so much money, and we all know that, but what are they getting in return? That's the question. Those are the priorities for Fort McMurray: infrastructure. I don't see anything like that.

We here talk about railway heritage; railways do this and do that. Yes, that's fine. But we should concentrate on the priorities of Albertans. We should listen to what they want, not what members sitting here in this Chamber want. We should listen to them first.

So far I haven't heard anything about land use policies, no bills. There are so many lands, especially, that the people want – I'm coming back, Mr. Chairman. I know that I'm going a little bit out of the . . .

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on Bill 203.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very glad that the bell rang there. I was just about to stand on a point of order.

I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today and address the Committee of the Whole on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. If ingenuity and determination are the lifeblood of this province, railroads and trains are the veins and arteries. They are an integral part of Alberta, integral to our understanding of the past and vital to the development of our future.

The steel rails that criss-cross our province have been many things to many people. To the brave workers who authored the anvil chorus that laid track westward and made our country whole the railroad represented a new and brighter future. To the immigrants who came westward to carve a life from the wilderness it represented a gateway to unlimited opportunity and a new beginning. To our parents and grandparents it was the primary and often the only feasible means of transportation. I've heard many stories from long ago from my father-in-law, who himself rode the rails looking for work as he travelled from province to province in western Canada. In short, Mr. Chairman, the railroad in its golden age fuelled and facilitated the ambitions of our young province. It was more than mere transportation. It was the hopes and dreams of our ancestors given in the form of steel and steam.

This golden age is behind us now. The steam locomotive and telegraph and the coal-stoking firemen are gone, shunted aside by the inevitable march of progress. Romance has been replaced by function, and the functionaries of the past have been relegated to rust away in silence. In most cases we see this glorious past not as it was but dimly through the fog of history in the form of faded photographs and half-forgotten memories. It is a situation that borders on tragedy, Mr. Chairman. Most of the thousands of steam locomotives and their rolling stock are gone, broken up for scrap or left to crumble into nothingness in forgotten corners of rail yards – most, but not all. A fortunate handful of these warriors escaped the scrapyards and the ravages of time. Their working days are over. They still run in limited capacity, but instead of building the future of Alberta, they now serve to bring life to its past.

One of the most important and most often overlooked social responsibilities is that of remembrance. We all have a duty to act as guardians of the past for without an understanding of the past the future can hold out no hope. We have a responsibility to our children to remind them of the individuals and the tools that made Alberta the best place in the world.

Bill 203 and specifically section 2 of the bill will be a vital and necessary step to ensure that this happens, Mr. Chairman. The present system has not recognized the unique situation posed by the five operating historical railroads in Alberta, and as a consequence these railroads are often faced with difficult or next-to-impossible regulations to meet standards that don't account for the uniqueness of their situation.

The provisions contained within section 2 of the bill specifically illustrate the unique situations faced by heritage railroads. These provisions seek to make day-to-day operations much easier for the dedicated individuals who operate these historical resources. We, as Albertans, invariably recognize the unique role these railroads play in understanding the past. Bill 203 simply recognizes this fact with legislation.

Pigeonholing historical railways into the same class as public and amusement railways doesn't make sense to me, and it makes even less sense to impede in any way these valuable and vibrant examples of living history. Classifying an historical train as a public railway puts it in the same class as a modern train, with all of the attendant restrictions and regulations. While this may apply in some cases where historical trains operate outside of a park setting, I don't believe it to be appropriate in the majority of cases. It simply doesn't seem reasonable to me that a Via train hauling passengers at breakneck speed, a freight train hauling grain and petroleum, and an 80-year-old steamer rolling sedately around a circular track at the speed of a slow jog must all meet the same requirements.

Mr. Chairman, section 2 of Bill 203, as I mentioned previously, amends the Railway (Alberta) Act by adding specific details regarding the conditions under which a heritage railway operates. A good example of this is found under section 2(a)(d.1)(i), which states that a heritage railway “is operated wholly or in part within the confines of an historical park or similar park or site.” Now, this is a vital distinction to make. It illustrates the point that a heritage railroad as defined by Bill 203 does not face the same operating conditions as a public railroad. Another important distinction is made in section 2(a)(d.1)(iii), which discusses the operating speeds of a heritage railway. It states that a heritage railway “operates at a speed not exceeding a maximum of 30 kilometres per hour.” These two examples illustrate the need for the creation of a separate classification for heritage railways by specifying the unique conditions under which they operate.

Obviously, these are not appropriately classed as public railways, and likewise it is not appropriate to classify them as amusement railways. This latter classification under the current situation is similarly unsatisfactory, Mr. Chairman. Amusement is not a term which is particularly appropriate for something that brings the past to life in such a meaningful fashion. While they are certainly entertaining, these railroads provide more than amusement. They provide education, and they provide a means of connecting to the past. This is the real benefit of an historical railroad, not to amuse but to give life to the experiences known by our ancestors.

A child looking at a picture of a locomotive from 90 years ago might express a mild interest, but seeing that locomotive in person and in operation might inspire that child to begin a lifelong journey of knowledge and ignite a passion for history within them. Imagine a child condemned to look at a picture of history when history itself is still alive. Imagine further the tragedy if that history is not sustained, if it's not nurtured and aided through appropriate legislative means.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 presents us with a unique opportunity to promote and assist this heritage. It will give us a chance to add clarity and change to a climate of regulations that are often overly restrictive. It will give us a chance to address with the proper degree of dignity those artifacts which mean so much to our understanding of the past.

The specific sections of the bill I have referenced are fine examples of this clarity. By introducing a specific category for heritage railroads, we will be helping to guarantee that they will continue to operate well into the future. We will be helping to ensure that our great-great-grandchildren will have the opportunity to stand beside and even ride upon the same sort of train that Alberta's pioneers like my father-in-law depended on, the same sort of train that helped to carve Alberta from a rugged and unforgiving wilderness and started us on the path to the level of prosperity we enjoy today.

Bill 203 proposes relatively minor changes to the current legislation but ones that may prove vital to the survival of our heritage. I believe that it is our duty to preserve for our children in any way possible those pieces of our past that still remain. As such, Mr. Chairman, I am proud and honoured to give my full and enthusiastic support to Bill 203, and I wholeheartedly encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Calder, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a great honour for me today to introduce a young man that is currently attending the University of Alberta in the accounting program. I was very fortunate to go to school with his parents. They had great potential, and it's showing through in this young gentleman. Cameron Ferbey is in the members' gallery today. He was here looking for some work with our Department of Finance, and I know that if they're lucky enough to get him, with his enthusiasm and background he'll do a very good job for the people of Alberta. I would like Cameron to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for the opportunity to speak in committee on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for his clarification this afternoon on a number of issues that I had brought up in his absence during previous readings of this bill.

I had communication with the Edmonton Radial Railway Society again today just to run specific elements of this bill past them to see if it meets their needs. I guess that the first clarification I'd like to make is that while the Edmonton Radial Railway Society does in fact run the train across the High Level Bridge, they also run quite an extensive streetcar operation in Fort Edmonton Park. This society is a very ambitious group, let me tell you. It is their intention to run more track out of Fort Edmonton Park, perhaps along Fox Drive, and even as far as where the new LRT line is going to be with the University agriculture grounds. While other municipalities have been slow to build public transit in this form, this group has taken it upon themselves, and I would just like to encourage them to continue to do so and to make sure that we're not putting things in the way that would impede their expansion plans.

The members of the society that I spoke to today asked me to forward a couple of questions, that I would like to put forward here this afternoon, the first being that this proposed amendment to the act is discussing the operation of railways that operate no more than 240 kilometres per day. They wanted clarification on whether that was the total amount of kilometres that were being travelled on the tracks or whether that was per vehicle because they in fact run several streetcars in Fort Edmonton Park, and they average between 40 and 70 kilometres on each machine per day, depending on how busy they are. So is that an accumulated amount of kilometres? Are we looking at the amount of wear and tear on the tracks to the point of 240 kilometres per day, or are we talking about per vehicle? They would like to have that clarified because it would directly impact their operations in Fort Edmonton Park.

The second issue that I wanted to bring forward is that this group, as I said, have ambitions to cross Whitemud Creek with the same streetcars that they have at Fort Edmonton Park and perhaps run their streetcar out to where the ETS bus transit system meets Fort Edmonton Park. It's, I guess, about a half-mile walk from the transit centre back to the park, so to facilitate ease of transport of people from the buses to the park, they would like to run an extension. They're hoping that this bill would not interfere with that. So I just wanted to put that forward. It's a very good idea that they have. They were not concerned about the speed – they don't travel any faster than 30 kilometres an hour, certainly – and they are not concerned about the High Level Bridge issue as it pertains to this specific amendment.

They do have some concerns where they need some assistance to perhaps continue that operation in a cost-effective manner. They recognize that it is under the Railway Act, the maintenance and operation of that High Level Bridge crossing. So it does fall under a different jurisdiction somewhat. I guess their concern about running that in a cost-effective manner is that they have to follow certain procedures that are quite expensive in terms of gauging the track and doing some minor maintenance. So they would perhaps appreciate our assistance as a legislative body here to make that easier for them to do.

So those are my main issues that I wanted to bring forward. Of course, I'm certainly supportive of this bill in all ways. I just wanted to make sure that the interests of perhaps the single largest heritage railway society in the province are met with this particular bill. They certainly are enthusiastic that people are paying attention to the good work that they do. I think it's a reflection of the many different places that have heritage railway, either museums or short circular tracks around the province. It's a great local tourist incentive for smaller centres to build, and people enjoy riding trains. In fact, there are train aficionados that will travel around the world looking for specific types of rolling stock that might be preserved.

So thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I look forward to some clarification, please, from this bill's sponsor.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm grateful for the opportunity to address the Legislature with respect to Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. I think that I can speak for all of our colleagues here when I say that it has been an absolute honour and privilege to represent Albertans during the provincial centennial.

The centennial celebration gave us the opportunity to reflect on the hard work and accomplishments of generations past. The celebration also allowed us to pass those memories on to the generations of the future. As for my own experience, the centennial celebration strengthened my belief that it's up to every Albertan to ensure that difficult lessons from our past are remembered and that pleasant memories are cherished. I also realize, however, that as legislators in this province much of this responsibility should fall on us.

That is why I'm so ardently supportive of Bill 203. Mr. Chairman, if passed, Bill 203 would provide the mechanism to define a qualified railway as heritage. Specifically, according to the bill,

“heritage railway” means a railway that

- (i) is operated wholly or in part within the confines of an historical park or similar park or site,
- (ii) is comprised of rolling stock and structural facilities, any of which was manufactured in 1965 or earlier,
- (iii) operates at a speed not exceeding a maximum of 30 kilometres per hour,
- (iv) travels no further than 240 kilometres in a day.

Now, the final stipulation of this bill is that it would operate for the “purpose of providing rides to individuals.”

Bill 203 is a simple bill with such important implications. It is important because it will reduce the overregulation of railways which meet certain specifications. It makes no sense to me that a railway which is operated wholly or partially within the confines of an amusement or historical park or site and is used for the sole purpose of providing rides to individuals on rolling stock should be subject to the same regulations as railway operators on a commercial level. These trains are not transporting goods or commodities, and they are not crossing our province or our country. They are usually taking people on short, low-speed rides in a park. More importantly, they are bringing to life the history of an industry which impacted the lives of so many pioneers who called Alberta home.

Looking back in history, it is quite remarkable how much impact the railways had. In fact, before Alberta was the province we know, the railway ripped through the countryside. According to historians, first came the Mounties, then the ranchers, and then the Canadian Pacific railway. It was at that time that Calgary's 4,000 citizens figured that they had it made. In 1883, when the Canadian Pacific railway arrived, the picture in Calgary changed substantially. An immediate tent town sprang into existence, providing under canvas both housing and for a time offices for a newspaper and dentist. It took hordes of men to accomplish the seemingly impossible task of completing the railway track. Lieutenant-Governor Joseph Royal in 1889 said: the opening of the railway to the northern districts, which is now in the course of construction, will effect an astonishing revolution; the energetic pioneers of Saskatchewan will, before many months elapse, find themselves as if by magic within a few hours' ride of the markets of the world. Now, many people arrived by train to Calgary, but not all of them intended to stay. The railway spread west and into the foothills.

Edmonton's history is similar to that of Calgary's in that the railway brought the hope of prosperity. Edmonton proclaimed itself the railway centre of the north because it had two railway systems running through it. So today some of the buildings on Whyte Avenue in Edmonton's Strathcona neighbourhood have been preserved as a way of remembering those great days. In fact, the name Strathcona honours Donald A. Smith, Lord Strathcona, one of the founders of the Canadian Pacific railway. The railway system is also to thank for keeping our neighbours to the west a part of this country. The railway had made its way into and spread throughout Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, a century from now people will look back to today and will talk about the Calgary-Edmonton corridor. This corridor may some day be linked by another more highly technologically advanced railway system.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my speech was to outline the importance of the railway system in this province, in this country. The railway meant everything. This is why we now have to step up and do whatever we can to preserve the memory of those times. This is the essence of Bill 203. If passed, Bill 203 will help the railway museums in the province survive and continue educating Albertans about their great historical value. As legislators creating legislation in the centennial year of the Legislature, this is a great gift to give to future generations.

Mr. Chairman, we are living in an interesting time in this province at the moment, a time filled with prosperity and hope, a time of mass migration to the province, and a time when we can really make a significant mark on this world. It sure does resemble what was happening 100 years ago. So as we move forward on this ambitious agenda of wealth creation and growth, let us make certain that we do not forget all the hard work it took to get here. So many people put their sweat and blood into creating the railway system in this province that we should do everything in their honour.

This is why I support Bill 203, and I urge all of my colleagues to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't going to speak on this, but because I have and feel such a personal connection with railroads, I really felt that I had to. I think it's a good bill, and I think it's something that we have to pass for our heritage.

My grandfather was a CN man. That meant a great deal in Winnipeg, so growing up as a little kid I was really quite proud to say, "My grandpa's a CN man." He had three fingers missing, which was almost a sign of pride because it meant that they weren't quick enough, and they lost their fingers in the couplings when they were putting the trains together. Another thing I can recall is putting pennies on the tracks and waiting for the trains to flatten them out. Now, that may sound dangerous, but because I had listened to The Lone Ranger on the radio so much, I actually learned how to listen on the track with my ear, and I could tell how far away the trains were. We would test each other within five and six and seven minutes to the trains coming in.

The other thing I did was ride the caboose from Winnipeg to Winnipeg Beach, and I waved at all the farmers in the fields, and I waved at all the kids on the train crossings. It was such a sense of community. It was so wonderful to be a part of what I knew was our heritage because I knew that we in western Canada wouldn't have been there had we not had railroads come through and bring all of the supplies that we needed to grow western Canada.

In Manitoba they have something called the prairie dog, which is similar to what we have here in Alberta. My kids rode that train and were privileged to be up in the steam engine and all of those sorts of things. They have wonderful memories as well.

Now we're speaking of high-speed rail. We're speaking of bringing back the railroad. I think it's wonderful. I don't know if it's going to happen. Certainly this is a different era. We speak about dollars; I'm speaking about heritage. I'm hoping that that rail will return because I've travelled up down this province in the air, and it's really a horrible way to travel. You're herded through airports, and you sit in little, itchy-bitsy, cramped seats, that you can barely move out of once your plane has arrived at its destination. So, yeah, let's bring on the railroads.

The other thing is that the bill will help reduce the insurance costs and regulatory burdens for the railroads offering these services and this sense of heritage. I would hate to think that my heritage is being determined by an insurance company, that probably isn't even Canadian, so I really support being able to get around those.

I think it's very important, as has been mentioned by everyone previous to me, that we protect our heritage. After all, we're only a hundred years old, and that is so very, very young. Two hundred years from now I'm hoping that my great-great-grandchildren might say, "You know what? My great-great-great-grandfather was a CN man."

I think of Pompeii – I'm not sure: 500 or 600 years – and how wonderfully they have preserved Pompeii. It is a sense of history. So it's with joy that I stand up and actually talk about railroads and would certainly ask for support for this to go through so that we can maintain our railroad heritage.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. It's a pleasure to close debate. I'd just like to respond to a few of the questions. First of all, the question from the Member for Edmonton-Calder. It was certainly the intent of the society that first approached us about this that the 240 kilometres per day would be per train. Now, I suppose if you broke that train up, I would think that it would mean that each train would probably be allowed to go up to 240 kilometres per day. However, this is something that can be addressed in the regulations, and I would certainly recommend that The Edmonton Radial Railway Society be involved and have input when it comes to developing the regulations.

Regarding the streetcars that might actually go outside of the park, point 2(a)(iv) indicates that the bill refers to trains within a park or partially in a park, so I would think that that might be taken into consideration if this particular society is talking about streetcars that might operate in Fort Edmonton Park and actually go out of the park. Again, something that could be addressed or clarified, I think, in the regulations. Very good questions.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked about railway safety and inspection. Again, that's the intent of having the regulations, and all of that can be addressed in the regulations.

He was also concerned about input from the public and that this may have been something that simply came from within this Legislature. I'd like to assure him that the reason this came forward in the first place was that I was approached by the Alberta Railway Museum operators under the Canadian heritage railroad association to actually introduce this bill in the first place. So I assure him that this really did come from the stakeholders and from outside.

I appreciate the enthusiasm with which everyone has spoken. To my knowledge everyone was in favour, and I would think that this should be unanimous. So I'd like to thank all the members for their support, and I would suggest that we get on with the vote.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 203 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, a flood of memories came back with that very beautiful discussion on the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, otherwise known as Bill 203, one that I, too, am pleased to support for many of the reasons mentioned today. With that I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 203.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 203.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 205
Continuing Care Standards Act

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. Backs]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and discuss briefly Bill 205. First, I would like to commend the Member for Lethbridge-East for putting forward this private member's bill. I've worked with the hon. member for about the last 16 months or whatever it is, and I can certainly attest to her dedication to the protection and care of the elderly in Alberta. I think that this bill goes a long way toward ensuring that the lives of Alberta's elderly will be a lot better than they have been in recent years.

The Auditor General's report of May 2005 focused attention on the living conditions of Alberta's elderly, who are often some of our most vulnerable citizens. The MLA task force that was formed after the Auditor General's report came out heard dozens of stories from people who have suffered greatly due to lax standards and a pitiful lack of funding. It became abundantly clear that there is a need for provincial standards for all those in care regardless of where they live or who delivers the care. They must be clear, measurable, resident-focused standards with strict guidelines for enforcement.

The intent of the bill from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is clear. Since the current system is not meeting public expectations for ensuring the safety and well-being of residents, the government must create an office that has the power to inspect facilities for compliance with standards. The continuing care commissioner would be independent of the ministries of health or seniors, which I think is a very important element of this new position. The care of our seniors is too important an issue to be susceptible to political whims of the day. A continuing care commissioner addresses the exact problems that were identified by the Auditor General in May 2005 and by the MLA task force in September. Bill 205 is based on a single, simple, and unassailable premise that each and every continuing care setting is home to its residents and that they deserve the highest quality of care in their homes. Bill 205 grants the continuing care commissioner the unique power to monitor compliance with the standards and issue orders to ensure compliance.

Mr. Speaker, I've read over the comments from various members in second reading on March 20, and I believe that there were a number of valid points raised about how the bill was written and some provisions in the bill. The bottom line, however, is this: the Auditor General said in his report that standards will only be effective if compliance is monitored and enforced. This is the crux of the bill. Both the Auditor General and the MLA task force identified that systems to monitor compliance and standards are inadequate and ineffective.

It's very important for all members to realize that Bill 205 does not involve the creation of a seniors' advocate. This is not designed to create some sort of super office that will make all the problems of the elderly disappear. The intent is to create a commissioner who will have the power to monitor compliance with standards, review and investigate complaints, review and investigate the decisions of other bodies, and impose fines for noncompliance.

What I read from many members who spoke on this bill was that they supported the intent of the legislation, but they had some problems with the wording of the bill. Well, that's fine, Mr. Speaker. That's what Committee of the Whole is all about. The Member for Lethbridge-East would be delighted to consider any amendments that would make this bill better, but the only way we can get to that stage is if we allow Bill 205 to pass into committee. So that is what I'm asking all hon. members to think about today. The bill may have its flaws. You may have legitimate concerns about the wording of the bill, but the intent of Bill 205 to create a commissioner who will ensure that standards are met is too good an idea to throw out at second reading.

I ask all members to allow this bill to pass into committee, where we can debate the fine points at some length. I believe it is simply too valuable an idea to allow it to die in second reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to join in the discussion on Bill 205, the Continuing Care Standards Act. The members who have spoken on this bill in the past are obviously passionate about the subject of Bill 205, and I, too, care about this subject very dearly. I want to share my views on the proposed legislation because it deals with a vital issue for the entire province. That is because in one way or another we are all impacted by the systems that care for our seniors. Whether we have grandparents or parents currently involved in continuing care or not, it is safe to say we all know someone who is. God willing, we too will reach the age where we will experience seniors' programs and facilities first-hand. Once we realize the necessity and inevitability of continuing care, it is natural for us to look to work toward ensuring that the system that governs it is as effective as possible.

The Member for Lethbridge-East should be commended for her efforts in this regard. She is truly a respected individual in the field and has been a true advocate of Alberta seniors for quite some time. In the time that I spent working with her on the MLA Task Force on Continuing Care Health Service and Accommodation Standards, I was able to realize her passion toward these standards. We were lucky to have her participation on that committee. She contributed so much.

Her passion for this issue goes well beyond her time as a member of the Assembly. As many of you know, before she was elected as the representative of Lethbridge-East, she attended Lethbridge Community College and graduated as a registered nurse. She later became a certificated geriatric specialist and worked at the Edith Cavell care centre from 1990 to 2004.

The Auditor General of Alberta investigated the continuing care system in the province because, according to a frequently asked questions document released by his office early in 2004, there was encouragement to do so by the general public, various organizations, and even some MLAs. Fortunately, the audit framework was already being prepared because it was well known that Alberta's population is aging and, as such, creating a large number of vulnerable seniors. Logically, this means that the costs of care are likely going to rise in accordance with this increased demand. Ultimately, everyone is impacted fiscally because the complex service delivery systems are funded by taxpayers.

The Auditor General, having recognized the scope of continuing care, set out to complete a comprehensive investigation. This was done by looking at 12 public, eight private or for-profit, and five voluntary or not-for-profit long-term care sites across the province. It's worth mentioning that these facilities were located in both rural and urban communities. With this well-represented cross-section the Auditor General expects that the findings are more than a mere report on selected facilities. Instead, the audit can be extrapolated to the entire system.

The Auditor General's May 2005 report entitled Report of the Auditor General on Seniors Care and Programs did find room for improvement, but it is important to note that the government did not turn a blind eye to the problems. Instead, they were confronted head on. I am confident in saying that progress has been made, and the thoroughness of the recommendations was matched by the scope of the responses.

Recommendation 1 in the Report of the Auditor General on Seniors Care and Programs urges the Department of Health and Wellness to work in conjunction with the Department of Seniors and Community Supports and the regional health authorities to bring the basic service standards of continuing care facilities in line with the current needs. Part of this recommendation was to create a system by which these standards are reviewed on a regular basis to ensure that they are updated consistently.

The response of the government in regard to recommendation 1 was comprehensive. First of all, it should be clearly stated that Alberta Health and Wellness has – and I repeat: has – come up with new continuing care health standards. Included in these new standards is a review process that will be enacted regularly and will involve regional health authorities and other stakeholders. Similarly, Alberta Seniors and Community Supports is refreshing the accommodation standards they set for long-term care facilities. They have also stated that a system designed to regularly review and update this set of standards will be brought forth later this year.

I could continue for quite some time reiterating the responses this government has made to the recommendations of the Auditor General of Alberta. Instead, I would summarize by saying that the concerns expressed in the Report of the Auditor General on Seniors Care and Programs are certainly being addressed. I believe that it is important for all the members of this Assembly to recognize the steps that have been taken and the efforts that we will continue to make in this regard. This government respects the rights of all Albertans, including, of course, our senior population. I will continue to work to ensure that this happens. It is no secret that the continuing care system of this province needed some adjustments, but it is also apparent that steps have been taken to remedy the situation.

Just as in all the other dealings of the current government, criticism is welcome, suggestions are investigated, and the proper action is taken to ensure that Alberta remains the best province in this country. I am proud to say that the government has improved the continuing care system in many ways through numerous responses to the recommendations found in the Report of the Auditor General on Seniors Care and Programs and also in the MLA task force, 45 recommendations that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and myself put together at the end of our consultation period. This shows that the processes set up to govern Alberta are working and, as a result, Albertans are being well served.

The issue of continuing care is extremely important, but I do not feel as if this piece of legislation is the answer to the problems that remain. For instance, I feel that tackling the issue through the tool of regulations offers far more flexibility. I would also like to add that some aspects of the bill, such as the review of standards, have already been addressed.

I welcome debate on matters concerning seniors, and I feel that efforts such as the proposed legislation from the Member for Lethbridge-East brings much-needed attention to these issues. The time we have spent in this Assembly dealing with Bill 205 has certainly been worthwhile. The time allotted for debate allows us to collectively brainstorm ideas and look at the situation from all angles. Having an open mind and listening to alternative points of view are attributes of good governance. These efforts will allow us to continually find the right solution for Alberta seniors.

At the end of the day I believe that we can all agree on one thing: the treatment of seniors is a priority in Alberta. Because of the importance of seniors to the government I have no doubt that we will always strive to come up with the proper answers to their concerns, and we will do so in a timely matter. Unfortunately, I do not believe that Bill 205 is the correct way to deal with the issues of continuing care, but I believe that it is beneficial to discuss new ideas like this one.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to commend my hon. colleague the Member for Lethbridge-East for all of the work that she put into this particular bill, Bill 205, Continuing Care Standards Act. I really appreciate her conviction and the experience that she brings to this whole issue, as other members have mentioned.

There is a line of a well-known Christian hymn, "Rescue the perishing, care for the dying," and I think that summarizes quite well the two sides of our health care system. "Rescue the perishing" describes the aggressive medical interventions which are necessary to cure diseases and keep people alive and well. So we have a public health care system which is excellent, in which physicians and surgeons and so on work, emphasizing medical interventions. But the other phrase in that line from that hymn is "Care for the dying." "Care for the dying" describes palliative care, which is the act of positive promotion of the health and quality of life of those who are dying.

You know, medical ethics is a burgeoning field that really took off a number of years ago in response to the progress of medical technology, which is raising all kinds of issues, especially around end-of-life issues, such as whether certain methods of intervention should be used to prolong a person's life, what kind of quality of life the person would have, and so on. So medical ethics tended to focus on those kinds of heroic issues of interventions, about extraordinary means to keep a patient alive.

Medical ethics, unfortunately, didn't pay much attention to long-term care. Perhaps it was because long-term care has to do with routine matters, and that's part of the problem. Unfortunately, seeing long-term care as mere routine matters, mere caretaking, providing warehouses for those who are ill and those who are dying has led us as a society to wink at the existence of long-term care institutions, facilities, and to allow them to fall into substandard care.

Medical ethics needs to shift its focus. I'm saying this out of my own experience because I did teach medical ethics for a number of years at St. Joseph's College here in the city, at the University of Alberta, and I don't recall us ever paying any attention to the issues of long-term care. Medical ethics should then focus on long-term care because it is in that context that we deal with the very important human values of quality of life and human dignity. Long-term care should embody everyday ethics, placing a high moral value on the routines which provide comfort, relief from suffering, and an enhanced quality of life. Those are three important phrases. That's the goal, I think, of our long-term care facilities and of nursing homes in Alberta: provide comfort, relief from suffering, and an enhanced quality of life.

Well, the Auditor General's report was a wake-up call, alerting us to the realities that the taken for granted routines in long-term care facilities were in fact not complying with basic standards. One of the goals of care in such facilities is the relief of suffering, yet one of the Auditor General's concerns was about providing medication to residents and maintaining medical records. The report identifies problems such as

- inconsistent documentation of the effectiveness and the adverse effects of medication therapies, particularly relative to pain control and chemical restraint
- inadequate security and storage . . .
- inconsistent control over phone orders signed off by physicians
- insufficient or untimely notification of physicians or pharmacists following medication errors.

Mr. Speaker, we constantly read stories about the poor condition of continuing care facilities and nursing homes in the United States, and I think that most of us assumed that our situation is better, that there is more attention to nursing homes and long-term care facilities in Canada. Maybe not. The Auditor General's report was certainly a wake-up call. Now we have the Auditor General's report and the report of the MLA task group and the report of my colleague from Lethbridge-East, Blueprint for Action, that really provoke us to move in the direction of this bill, to propose an independent commissioner to conduct investigations in long-term care facilities. This is an idea that has finally arrived.

Now, baby boomers have always had their way of making changes in our society, and I think they are all beginning to experience what is involved in caring for aging parents. They will soon be thinking about their own retirement years. I think the oldest baby boomer is about 58, 59. Of course, those of us who were born during the Second World War, 1939 to '45, are a special cohort because we've always been out ahead of the boomers, leading the way, showing them how they can move in the direction of better quality of life. So it's appropriate that the Member for Lethbridge-East brings this bill and that I, for one, support it as a member of that Second World War cohort.

Now, I think that the idea of an independent commissioner has arrived, and if it's not accepted now, it will be soon because baby boomers will insist on it. They will insist that there be attention to monitoring quality and standards in long-term care institutions. The mechanisms that we have in place now are limited in their effectiveness. The Health Facilities Review Committee, established in 1973, may investigate complaints and report to the minister, but the committee does not check for compliance with all basic standards, such as the frequency of physician assessments and maintenance of health records, and the committee has no authority to enforce compliance.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act is legislation that requires health care providers and members of the public to report incidents of abuse against our seniors in long-term care facilities. The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports in her speech in the House last week commented that the duties of the proposed commissioner in Bill 205 duplicates the PPIC, but I don't find that that's the case because the idea of a proposed commissioner adds a level of enforcement that is missing in the PPIC. I think that a problem with most of our acts, acts like the Protection for Persons in Care Act, is that they don't go far enough in enabling there to be an investigation of long-term care facilities to maintain the right kind of standards.

The way this bill puts it is the right way, I think. Right up front in terms of the duties of the commissioner is the first one: "to monitor compliance with continuing care standards." That's the most important aspect of this bill and, then, on that basis, to go on and "to receive, review and investigate complaints regarding the health, safety or well-being of persons . . . in long-term care facilities."

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Auditor General's report was calling for this kind of response that we brought here in this bill. It's not enough just to investigate abuse complaints; it's important also to be able to have a commissioner who can initiate reviews and make investigations himself or herself into what these institutions are about and insist that there be compliance with basic standards.

The proposal of an independent commissioner is not something new. In fact, Alberta was the first province to appoint a public-sector ombudsman. Applying the concept of an ombudsman or a commissioner to long-term care is also not new. There are such ombudsmen for patients in hospitals in many other countries. There are also specialized long-term care ombudsmen and commissioners in the U.S. We should look at some of these examples.

There is a very fine article written in Health Law in Canada by Mary Marshall: Seniors Need Resources to Pursue Complaints. In this article she compares models from New Zealand and England and the U.S., and the consistent features of these models, of these special commissioners to oversee long-term care facilities, are that they're impartial, they're comprehensive, and they're independent. That's precisely the thrust of this bill: to set up a commissioner who is independent, accountable to the Legislature.

Seniors are a vulnerable group in our society, Mr. Speaker, and we need to take responsibility to put in place the kind of system we need to handle complaints effectively and especially to enforce adequate standards. This is a bill and a concept, an idea, that has arrived. I'm asking my colleagues to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 205, Continuing Care Standards Act, my first opportunity to speak to it. I think it represents an important contribution to seniors' care in the province and perhaps, in general principle, to the question of the public trust that we're addressing in this bill. Let me say that with the recent changes in the health care proposals there is a crisis of confidence in the province and a need to be clearly onside with citizens of the province and the concerns expressed by the Auditor General's report. We not only have to do what's right; we have to be seen to be doing what's right and make sure that whatever is happening is open to the public, especially the seniors, who are in a most vulnerable and dependent position when they enter these long-term care facilities or assisted living facilities.

The minister of health has emphasized in some of her new recommendations for the third way that there be choice and that there be somehow a justification for a two-tiered system which, in some unknown way, is supposed to reduce costs, improve efficiency, and improve quality when all evidence, Mr. Speaker, is to the contrary. So it's rightfully a concern for all Albertans, especially with the most vulnerable people, that this creeping privatization be met with a clear indication from government that we have an accountable framework, that we have an independent person who is knowledgeable, experienced, and empowered to address some of the questions about what is actually going on in some of the long-term and assisted living facilities.

A second point I would like to make about this is that changes are being made and have already been made quite dramatically in our seniors' care system. There are dramatic increases in the number of private services and the shifting of the burden of the responsibility for paying for the medical costs – paying for the medications and for some of what many consider to be essential care – onto the private individual and family. I think that many people are obviously concerned about that. How is this transition going to be, and what kind of impact is it going to make on families? Is there somebody that is going to speak on behalf of these individuals and their families?

A result already of some of these dramatic changes is that I've heard increasing complaints from seniors themselves who are having trouble making their payments each month, especially if they're on a fixed income. In some cases individuals are extremely disadvantaged and very dissatisfied with the quality of everything from food to attending to their basic needs, and they feel that they have no recourse, that no one is really listening. Some of the changes may be improving conditions, but we need an accountability, that isn't present. The Auditor General's report added a real urgency to this. Again, Alberta could be a leader by demonstrating increased accountability and transparency around what is actually happening out there with so much dramatic change and privatization going on in our seniors' care, some of which is indeed showing inadequate, inconsistent, and unsafe conditions for people.

We must rebuild the trust of our seniors, and we must rebuild the trust of our families that what we are doing here is in the best interests of the public and especially those most vulnerable in our population. We have to have a clear staffing requirement and increase the number of hours per resident. That was strongly indicated. There have to be standards and then enforcement of the standards by regular or not so regular, indeed some unannounced, visits that will be able to assess whether they're actually being carried out in both the public and the private settings. That is essential. There can't be a two-tiered system going on here in terms of quality. Monitoring has to be there and a periodic public review so that people can be assured that what we say we're doing we're doing in the best interests of these people. Then policies have to emerge from that continuing review that say: we've learned this much, and now we have to make more changes as a result of this independent and authentic review of what's happening and, with that, an examination of whether the dollars are being well spent and whether they're actually resulting in the kind of changes that we say we want and that our seniors deserve.

A commissioner would be empowered to gather some of this data and analyze the data so that real actions and real recommendations could arise without bias and without vested interests influencing them. I think it would be a real demonstration of courage and leadership from this government if we were to see this come about, with the commissioner having free opportunity to inspect, investigate, and act, including imposing fines or penalties at least in some cases where the standards were not being met. This has to have teeth, or no one really responds to it.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the province must do the right thing and be seen to be doing the right thing in terms of a transparent, open, accountable process for the people. There's a profound dependency and powerlessness that many feel, including the families of some of these dependent seniors and dependent adults, and there must be a really clear demonstration of a commitment to address some of these in an objective way through an empowered individual who acts on behalf of citizens in all respects. Staff and family must have input into this process as well. That may be a feature that we might emphasize in this particular role. When the vested interests in the institutions are not feeling free to speak for whatever reason – and whistle-blower legislation comes to mind in the context of the Legislature – when staff in these institutions do not feel empowered to speak, there must be the capacity for the commissioner to listen to affected families and the individuals themselves.

I hope that the Legislature will indeed support this important innovation, that is forward looking and inspired by a life of commitment to seniors' care by our member. It would demonstrate not only the willingness to do the right thing but the willingness to be seen to be doing the right thing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, do you wish to close the debate?

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly grateful for all the kind words from my colleagues in this House, certainly from both sides of the House. I feel that my views are respected. That, I think, is what this House is all about, that we all stand up and be respected for our views.

This bill is asking for a person with legislated authority to enforce provincial standards with consequences, to protect all those in care regardless of where they live or who delivers the service. It becomes very complicated because basically what happens to someone in a facility is that they are one person but fall under two ministries. I think that's even more reason for one person independent from both ministries to be able to oversee the standards and to be able to have enforcement. Standards must be enforceable, or the paper that they're written on is useless.

The two committees, the Health Facilities Review Committee and the Protection for Persons in Care Act, have done some very good investigations, but they can only make recommendations. They have not had the teeth that people have been asking for. Had this been an effective way to deal with the problems previous to this, we wouldn't have heard that it isn't working. In fact, the Protection for Persons in Care Act cannot conduct complaint or regulatory reviews in long-term care facilities for basic standards, policies, procedures, or legislation. The Auditor General called for such a person to be able to review and also have powers of enforcement. The MLA task force heard time and time again for some accountability, particularly from families who felt that they were on a treadmill. Not unlike a gerbil in a wheel, they would go around and around and around and never ever come to a satisfactory conclusion. I also believe that we cannot have accountability delivered by class-action lawsuits.

This is a seniors' issue because the greatest number of people in continuing care are seniors. But let's be clear: it can be anybody in group homes, designated assisted living, assisted living, lodges, enhanced lodges, or even private, for-profit homes. It can be any permutation of any of these. We are still awaiting the provincial standards that will give us clear definitions as to what these actually are because they tend to be different across the different regions.

That's why I'm asking for support for Bill 205 to move forward to Committee of the Whole. I believe that we need a chance for further discussion and certainly the opportunity for perhaps amendments. I believe that we have two different concepts here, which have been spoken to with what I thought was a bit of a misunderstanding. I'm speaking of a commissioner to deal with continuing care, which is different from the seniors' advocate that has been asked for and actually has been presented to a government standing policy committee. That is why I believe that we need further clarification at this point on the difference between these two concepts. The advantages would be that we could discuss how the bill could be implemented and the advantages that it would provide.

We must fight for our vulnerable citizens, knowing full well that as a rule they don't vote and, therefore, don't have as strong a voice. We have to protect them from neglect and abuse because it is the right thing to do. The government members have shown that they can vote as they see fit, so I ask for a vote from the heart and the head for the vulnerable in this province.

The Auditor General and the MLA task force have spent hundreds of hours working with stakeholders all over this province: with staff, families, and administration. I feel that to not go forward at this time to at least have further discussions and conversations in Committee of the Whole would be a disservice to this process. Therefore, that is why I am asking you to support Bill 205 to pass to Committee of the Whole.

505. Mr. Webber moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the positive and critical role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren and to encourage access when it is in the best interest of the child.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In today's society where violence is prevalent on television, where dangerous drugs are hurting our children, and where life is becoming more complex and is changing at an ever-growing pace, the positive role that grandparents can play in the lives of their grandchildren cannot be overstated. This is why I brought forth Motion 505.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as a society I believe that we must encourage grandparents in this role and that we must ensure that grandparents have the opportunity to take part in the lives of their grandchildren when it is in their grandchildren's best interest. However, as a society we are also obligated to follow the law, which is largely based on historical precedents and the balancing of rights. This balance is often a very delicate one that has to be re-examined and reconsidered routinely. The examination of this balance is what compelled me to bring forth this motion. This balance is very delicate, and any changes to it must be made only after very carefully exploring the options.

Unfortunately, I don't have the answers. Instead I will put forward the issues and hope that we can have a productive discussion on the matter. Now, apparently, Mr. Speaker, we have a very long list of members who wish to speak on this motion, so I will attempt to keep my remarks brief so that others do have an opportunity to share their thoughts on the role grandparents should play in the lives of their grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, legal precedent tells us that in the absence of evidence that demonstrates a parent's inability to act in the best interests of his or her child, a parent's right to make decisions on his or her children's behalf should be respected. Alberta's Family Law Act seems to agree with this notion. The legislation includes provisions that allow for grandparents to apply to the courts to obtain a contact order to see their grandchildren.

It is more difficult for grandparents who want to gain access to their grandchildren when the family is intact. To clarify, an intact family is one where the parents are not separated or divorced but rather are together but don't allow their children to see their grandparent or grandparents. In these cases grandparents must go through an additional hoop: they must first obtain leave from the court, which means that they must obtain the court's permission to apply for access to their grandchildren. The reason for this provision is that allowing grandparents to apply for access to grandchildren in cases of intact families may be disruptive to those families.

Mr. Speaker, according to Marilyn Marks of the Alberta Grandparents Association this provision is unfair to grandparents in intact families. This organization believes that parents should be charged with the responsibility of proving that grandparents are unfit to have access to their grandchildren. Currently the onus is on the grandparents to prove that they are worthy. This group also believes that the right of access and visitation is the right of the child, not the parents. Finally, the group complains that Alberta's intact family children are discriminated against and that nonintact family children are seen as needing their grandparents more.

Mr. Speaker, these are clearly two very different positions, and finding a resolution is no simple task. However, the Alberta Grandparents Association has some suggestions. One of these suggestions is to include mandatory mediation as a means of bringing all parties to the table to find some kind of resolution for everyone involved. This may be a valid solution; however, we cannot simply make mediation mandatory and call that the end of it. There may be many considerations to discuss. We may be limited in the number of mediators that we have in the province. It may take a substantial amount of time and money to make mandatory mediation a possibility.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the issues surrounding grandparents' rights to see their grandchildren, and mandatory mediation may be one of the possible solutions. As our Premier often says, "For every action there is an opposite and often negative reaction," and with this issue there is a very careful balance to strike between the rights of parents, grandparents, and, most importantly, children.

In the meantime, however, I would like to stress that I believe that in most situations grandparents do play a very positive and critical role in the lives of their grandchildren and that they should be encouraged to play a role when it is in the best interests of the child. This is why I brought this motion forward and why I want it discussed here tonight. As for the more difficult question of whether our laws find the appropriate balance or whether mandatory mediation may be a reasonable solution, I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In speaking to Motion 505, I am a grandparent. It's a role I cherish, which brings me great joy, fulfillment, and pride. Accessing grandchildren, fortunately, is not a problem for many families. There are definitely unfortunate situations where it may not be in the best interest of the child to spend time with their grandparents, and parents have legitimate concerns about gaining access. There are, however, times in which the situation is not clear-cut, and grandparents have unfairly been denied access.

Once they have to use it, the Family Law Act is difficult for grandparents to understand and navigate. The onus is placed on grandparents to bring an application before the courts in order to be granted the right of access in single-parent families. The process is even more restrictive in intact families, as the member opposite mentioned, for grandparents are required to obtain the leave of the court prior to bringing application for access before the court.

Grandparents face extra hurdles that are not in their best interests and certainly not in the best interests of the child. This onus on grandparents is counter to what we know intuitively and what research supports in terms of the benefits of a grandparent's access to the child, the parents, the grandparents, and society as a whole.

In the past two throne speeches the government recognized that it doesn't take a single parent to raise a child; it takes a community, and grandparents are an important part of that community. The Family Law Act doesn't appear to include the assumption that the child has the right to have a relationship with grandparents. An application must be made in order for the child to obtain contact with a grandparent. When parents or guardians deny access to grandchildren, they should be required to provide valid reasons for denying access. Legal fees are financially prohibitive, especially as many grandparents are retired and on fixed incomes. At this point grandparents are assumed guilty and then have to prove themselves innocent. That is the reverse of the process of law.

In Alberta the family law system is fragmented, sometimes resulting in two to three different levels of courts, which can be confusing and exhausting. An alternative which has been put forward is the notion of mandatory mediation as an amendment to existing legislation, thereby facilitating a conflict resolution process where all parties involved could come out winners. This is a suggested alternative. I'm not suggesting that the government take this particular approach, but it would be one of the tools in potential resolution of the problem.

In 2000 the unified family court system was suggested to help facilitate resolution of family disputes, but this concept, unfortunately, was dropped. We need this type of unified family court system in which to deal with grandparent/grandchild access denial issues. This unified family court concept makes sense, with specialized judges and services that will enable Albertans to resolve their disputes with the least possible damage for those involved.

Access decisions must be in the best interests of the child. This important concept can and should be processed in a more simplified manner with less financial and emotional burden. Burden of proof that the grandparents' access to grandchildren would be detrimental should fall on the court, a mediator, or the Children's Aid Society or its equivalent. Decisions must be evidence based, not hearsay based.

I support the arguments of organizations such as the Alberta Grandparents Association, which the hon. member noted, who are calling on this province to make family law more child friendly as it pertains to grandchild/grandparent access. It is with this in mind that I have put forward a notice of amendment. I have gone over my intentions and the amendment's intentions with the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

The intent of the amendment – it's being circulated as we speak. My intent in the amendment is to restore the original wording of the motion as it was first conceived. It was conceived in partnership with Marilyn Marks of, I believe, the Grandparents Association.

I want to provide a very brief history of this. I doubt very much that there's a member in this Assembly who has not had some form of correspondence from Marilyn over the last number of years. Marilyn has presented to a number of individuals and to the rural caucus as recently as last week. She was very appreciative of that offer and felt that she was heard out. I'm very pleased that people took the time to listen to Marilyn's concerns.

Marilyn approached me about a year and a half ago. I had just fairly recently become a grandparent, so I was extremely receptive to what Marilyn was saying. I worked with Marilyn over the past year and a half. This past summer I spoke to a number of grandparents who were in a similar position as Marilyn found herself, who did not have access to their grandchildren. I believe that just about everybody has received the amendment. My intention is to move this amendment and if I could seek explanation from the Speaker as to how he would like to number the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you moving the amendment now?

Mr. Chase: Yes. That is my intent.

Mr. Chase moved that Motion Other Than Government Motion 505 be amended by striking out "recognize the positive and critical role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren and to encourage access when it is in the best interest of the child" and substituting "protect the rights of grandparents by introducing legislation to make it less onerous and burdensome for them to gain access to their grandchildren."

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. We will circulate the amendment. I believe it's circulated now. We will refer to it as amendment A1.

When you're finished, we'll proceed with debate on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Speaking to the amendment, continuing the background history, there are hundreds of grandparents who, unfortunately, find themselves denied access for a variety of reasons, many of which are unjustified. When Marilyn approached me and asked for my advice – as I say, I worked with her – I consulted a number of grandparents over the summer and heard their very sad stories. I advised Marilyn based on the reality that private member's bills or motions that are put forward do not succeed very well, especially, unfortunately, if they're brought forward by opposition members. Marilyn asked me, "Can you think of an individual who was elected as a representative of the government who might take on such a task?" and I will indicate that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills came very quickly to mind.

He's a member of the Calgary-Varsity constituency. We share concerns about a wide variety of things, including not wanting to see Nose Hill park paved over. We worked together and supported Brentwood mural initiatives. So it seemed to me that this would be the individual to approach. I believe he's sincere. I believe he's passionate. I believe he's compassionate. I don't give you permission to use that in your next election brochure, but recognizing the wisdom.

What has happened is that I believe the member has been persuaded to change the original wording which was, as noted in this amendment which recalls and calls for the original wording to be reinstated, to "protect the rights of grandparents by introducing legislation to make it less onerous and burdensome for them to gain access to their grandchildren." Now, in both his original motion and the somewhat watered-down motion, well, tremendously watered-down motion, the word "urge" is there. There is still no compulsion on the government's part to undertake any of the suggestions that have been provided. Both motions urge the government; however, in the original motion it was much stronger. It said, "protect the rights." It recognized that grandparents had rights, and that's extremely important.

By introducing legislation to make it less onerous, the introduction, the type of legislation is completely up to the government. I'm not trying to suggest how that legislation should occur. I recognize the government's role in creating that legislation. In order to protect grandparents and recognize their rights and improve their accessibility to their grandchildren, just talking in terms of recognizing the positive and critical role, you know, do we send them a card: "Dear Grandparent, I recognize that you have a positive and critical role to fulfill"? I believe we need to go further and not just recognize but protect. That is the key point of my amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on the amendment.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and make some comments with respect to Motion 505 and the proposed amendment A1. The motion as originally drafted recognizes “the positive and critical role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren and [encourages] access when it is in the best interest of the child.” I think it’s fair to say that when you hear those words, you almost assuredly would say: of course. Alberta Justice recognizes the positive role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren. Fortunately, in the vast number of cases grandparents are able to access their grandchildren without any difficulty whatsoever.

However, in those situations where there is conflict between the parents and the grandparents on the issue of access, the new Family Law Act applies. So the remarks that I’m going to make this evening are to enlighten those who are listening and the members of the Assembly who might not have been here before the last election as to how we got to where we are today. There is a history to that, and I think it’s important that we revisit it.

The Family Law Act applies where there is a conflict with respect to access for grandparents to their grandchildren. The Family Law Act changed grandparents’ access provisions to strike a balance between the rights of grandparents and the rights of parents. It did this by establishing conditions that must be met by grandparents before an access application can be made to the courts. The nature of the conditions that must be met differs depending on the reason for the interruption of the grandparents’ access.

To explain that, I’d like to outline how these cases were addressed before the Family Law Act. Before the Family Law Act the Provincial Court Act allowed a grandparent to apply for an access order any time access to their grandchild was refused. Although this appears to be a broad provision, the courts were reluctant to grant access orders where there was an intact family and both parents were opposed to the access. The courts generally found that it was not in the best interests of the grandchildren to order access in an intact family when it would continue the conflict between parents and grandparents.

Additionally, parents often incurred significant cost to defend these applications, leaving the family impoverished after the court process. This also was not in the best interests of the grandchildren. Because of this practice, under the Family Law Act grandparents now need to seek leave or permission from the court to apply for contact. The addition of this first step gives the court a chance to assess the merits of the grandparents’ case and decide if it should proceed to the next phase, the actual application for access per se. This helps prevent unnecessary litigation, hardship, and cost.

As I noted earlier, the courts are very reluctant to interfere with parental decisions in an intact family, and the legislation now reflects that fact. Grandparents do not require leave from the court when one of the parents is deceased or where the parents are living separate and apart and as a result the grandparents’ contact with the child has been interrupted. This reflects the fact that denial of access in a nonintact family may be a reflection of a changed family circumstance that may be unfair to both grandparents and grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, before the court makes a contact order, it must be satisfied of the following: the contact is in the best interests of the child; the child’s physical, psychological, or emotional health may be jeopardized if the contact is denied; and the denial of contact between the child and the grandparent is unreasonable. They consider these things because sometimes there are valid reasons for parents to deny access to grandparents. So we can see that the Family Law Act has provided a good balance between the rights of parents and the rights of grandparents, depending on the individual family situation.

Before it was passed, the Family Law Act went through a rigorous public consultation process, where this very issue was debated extensively. I believe we reached a reasonable solution at that time, especially for children who stand in the middle of the debate. Throughout the consultation the interests of children were of paramount concern for everyone involved, and it is those interests that the Family Law Act protects first and foremost.

Given that the new act was just passed into law last spring and came into force only last October, it would be premature to look at amending the legislation just yet. We need to take some time to determine if the policy objectives of the legislation are being met. This will not only give the legislation time to work in practice, but it also recognizes the efforts of the many Albertans who took part in the stakeholder consultation process.

I can also tell the members of the Assembly that the Alberta Grandparents Association participated in the Family Law Act public consultation process in 2002. They’ve also corresponded on many occasions with Alberta Justice, met with the previous minister, met with myself, and made a presentation on grandparents’ access to the Justice standing policy committee prior to the passage of the Family Law Act. Mr. Speaker, we’ve heard their concerns, and as a result the previous minister identified grandparents’ access as an issue requiring special attention in the legislative process. All sides of the grandparents’ access issue were heard from during discussion of the Family Law Act when it was before the Legislature, and the Legislature made an informed decision to proceed with some restrictions on grandparents’ access.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, the government does not propose to reopen grandparents’ access provisions until we have had some significant experience with the existing provisions of the act and have determined if the policy objectives of the legislation are being met.

As to the amendment A1 put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, that would call for change to legislation which, quite frankly, is premature and for which there is no basis, this matter having been gone through extensively in the very recent past, just before he came to this Assembly.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta government recognizes that grandparents often have a special relationship with their grandchildren, and wherever possible we want to see those relationships remain intact. However, the interests of grandparents sometimes conflict with the interests of parents, who may find that grandparents interfere with their ability to raise their children or to manage their family life. We are certainly aware of the concerns raised by grandparents who want access, but our first consideration must be what is in the best interests of the children. Quite frankly, we believe that the Family Law Act at this point is structured in such a fashion and allows the courts to balance the rights of grandparents and parents, considering that contact will be in the best interests of the child if, in fact, it is awarded to the grandparents.

It is always a tragic situation when access is denied to someone who loves the child in question. But the fact is that whether you’re talking about grandparent access or whether you’re talking about access of separated parents, these kinds of conflicts almost assuredly become intractable. I can assure you that it would be much better if we did not have the parties going before the courts and bringing forward experts to give evidence and having incredible sums of money spent on the process, but that is unfortunately an aspect of our society. This particular process that we have here is in large measure similar to the type of process that is available for parents. It would be better to not need any of it, but it is necessary to have some method of this nature.

As I’ve indicated, it is early days. We need more time to assess

it. We will assess it in the future, and it may be that the system will require some change at that time. At that time we can consider some of the proposals that will be discussed here this evening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing the motion forward and special thanks to my colleague from Calgary-Varsity for introducing amendment A1 to make the motion more aligned with the original intent of the motion, I believe; that is, to recognize the critical roles that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren. I, too, have communicated with the Grandparents Association, and as a new grandparent myself I empathize with the concerns of this group and of grandparents who do not share the joy of raising a grandchild.

It is unfortunate that this bill, the Family Law Act, has the effect of placing such a unique burden on grandparents wanting to have access to their grandchildren. This has the effect of robbing children of the positive influences that grandparents can have on the development of children. Does the new Motion 505 really recognize the positive and critical role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren? According to the Family Law Act as it pertains to grandchild/grandparent access where the parents are together, grandparents are required to jump two additional hurdles and must obtain the leave of the court on notice to the parents or guardian prior to perhaps being permitted to bring an application for access before the courts.

This legislation makes the process for grandparents in this position so burdensome that it becomes extremely difficult for them to be successful in the process. This is systemic discrimination by virtue of being a grandparent involved in this legislation. This discriminatory treatment contravenes grandparents' constitutional right of equality before and under law and equal protection and benefit of law.

The Family Law Act as it pertains to grandchild/grandparent access makes it extremely difficult for grandparents to play a positive and critical role in the lives of the grandchildren. This is not in the best interests of the child. When I look at division 3, Contact Orders, section 35(4) of the Family Law Act, this section does not inherently support the child developing a relationship with grandparents. Instead, this section places obstacles in the way of such a relationship developing. This is not in the best interests of the child as research suggests that children will benefit emotionally, physically, relationally, and socially from a healthy relationship with grandparents.

There are many benefits that I think we can talk about. Certainly, grandparents provide a stabilizing force in times of family crisis. Sometimes a grandparent may be the only stable element in a chaotic family situation. This suggests less reliance on public resources, such as social services, children's hospitals, and community counselling centres. Research also indicates that grandparents contribute to child development by socializing with grandchildren, giving financial and emotional support, passing history, values, and traditions to the grandchildren. Relationships with grandparents add qualitative and quantitative dimensions to the pool of adult role models available to children, and children's relationships with their own grandparents affect their relationships with their own grandchildren down the road.

In terms of developmental issues researchers have found that the unconditional love that grandparents bestow upon grandchildren aids in their self-esteem and in their confidence. It gives them a belief that they are important and that they matter and that they can be successful. During adolescence grandchildren find it beneficial sometimes to tap the wisdom and ancestry of grandparents as they're trying to figure out their own identity. This positive psychosocial role that grandparents play suggests that the family unit as a whole may rely less on public social resources to aid with developmental tasks. From a long-term developmental perspective, continuity in relationships is helpful. In our current society, with high divorce rates, economic hardship, and drug/alcohol abuse, grandparents may be a long-term stabilizing force in a young person's life. Again, this suggests less reliance on public resources to assist with filling emotional needs.

The overriding principle of the Family Law Act in terms of access to children by grandparents if the parents do not want to provide access is the philosophy that the parental rights come first. Therefore, the test that has been placed in the act is against the grandparents. They have to prove that they have valid reasons to have access to their grandchildren or contact with their grandchildren rather than the parent having to prove that the contact should be denied. This test is too onerous on grandparents. It is too hard. It should be the goal of the Family Law Act to promote positive relationships in a young person's life, to have positive role models and loving individuals to look out for children as much as possible. However, this act has placed a barrier to grandparents wanting to provide that unconditional love and support. The test is too harsh and, in fact, presumes that grandparents are guilty of being incapable of providing a positive influence.

This reverse onus is contrary to the fundamental principles of justice that state that an individual is innocent until proven guilty. The onus should be on the parent who wants to deny access to prove that the grandparent is unfit, not for the grandparent to prove their worth to have contact with the grandchild. In essence, when parents want to deny access to grandchildren, the onus should be on them to provide valid reasons for denial of access.

I support this amended bill because it is the right thing to do, I believe, for Alberta's children and grandparents. I realize that the bill is new, that it needs time, and that we may be looking at revisions down the road, but I believe that this bill right now does not do anything close to what should be done for the grandparents of this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in order to speak to the amendment on Motion 505. I believe that this is an important issue, that grandchildren are very near and dear to the hearts of those of us who are fortunate enough to have grandkids. Grandparents are often an important part of the children's lives. Many grandparents look after their grandkids on a regular basis and have a positive influence on them.

When I was very young and growing up as a farm boy, I lived with my mom and dad two miles from my grandparents. Two miles where I'm from is like two blocks in the city. They not only babysat my sisters and me; they were also teachers of the things my mom and dad didn't have time for. They taught me the basics of the German language, the appreciation of history both in Alberta as homesteaders and of the way of life in the old country. They also taught me the appreciation of our environment and of our way of life in southern Alberta. From the age of about seven or eight I rode my bicycle two miles to my grandparents' house to visit, to enjoy my grandmother's cookies, to help them with the yard work, and just to be around them. These are times that I will cherish forever.

I myself, Mr. Speaker, have 10 wonderful grandchildren. Spending time with them is something I enjoy and I look forward to. I can't imagine how badly I would feel were I unable to see all 10 of them on a regular basis or at all.

Mr. Speaker, if grandparents are not abusive or violent toward the children or their parents, I believe they should be allowed access to their grandchildren. Children can benefit from grandparents in their lives. Therefore, such relationships should be encouraged whenever possible. If grandparents do not pose a threat to their children or grandchildren, I see no reason why they should not have access to their grandkids.

When parents deny access to the grandchild because they're upset with their own parents, whatever the reason may be, it's not fair to the child. Children should not be used by parents as bargaining chips. It's the children who lose out when their parents or guardians deny access between them and their grandparents.

I believe the problem of access, Mr. Speaker, is especially worrisome in a case where two parents separate or divorce. These are difficult times for all parties involved. However, I believe that the grandparents' access to the children is often left as an afterthought. This is very unfortunate. These are difficult times, no doubt, but a child's relationship with their grandparents is a special one and one that should not be ignored regardless of what is occurring between the child's parents.

I do recognize that we have in Alberta an established process to address grandparents' access to their grandchildren under the Family Law Act. The Family Law Act includes a process by which grandparents can apply to the court for a contact order with their grandchild. In granting a contact order or in refusing one, the court must consider what is in the best interests of the child. I think this concept of the best interests of the child is vitally important. Therefore, if the court feels that contact with the grandparent is in the best interests of the child, then the contact order will be granted.

I also recognize that there's a different process for families that are still intact versus families that have broken up. In cases where families are still whole, grandparents are required to ask leave from the court first before they can apply to the court for a hearing regarding a contact order with the grandchild. I understand the reason for this procedure is that going to court is seen as disruptive to the family, and it may not be in line with the desires of the parents or guardians of the children. However, as Motion 505 indicates, the fact that the Family Law Act places the burden on grandparents to essentially prove that they have a legitimate right to see their grandchildren may sometimes be requiring a bit too much.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand the basis for the process as established in the Family Law Act regarding grandparents trying to obtain an access order to their grandchildren. However, I also believe that we should try to ensure that the relationships between grandparents and their grandkids are not inhibited unnecessarily. As I previously mentioned, grandparents can be a very positive role model for their grandchildren, and their involvement in the lives of their grandkids can have a very positive influence as children grow and develop.

As a grandparent I can't imagine what it must be like to have your own child deny you access to your grandchildren. Sincerely, Mr. Speaker, I hope that I never have to experience that situation. Yes, parents are by far the most influential people in the lives of their children, but grandparents often play an integral role as well. In this day and age I think it's important that all children have as many good role models surrounding them as they possibly can.

Mr. Speaker, because I'm a grandparent and feel that this role is an important one and one that should be taken very seriously, I stand today to offer my support for Motion 505 as originally written. I cannot support the amendment. I look forward to hearing from the other hon. members on this subject.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to see this go back to the original intent. I understand that the law is new and perhaps should be given a chance for evaluation, but I'm not sure that this is something we should be waiting on. The divorce rate is almost 2 to 1, and that certainly doesn't constitute the intact family. How many of our children are falling through the cracks because grandparents can't step into that void and help?

The power and the influence that grandparents have has been alluded to, and certainly in many cultures grandparents actually do raise that second generation while the parents go out and work. I'm thinking that the native community and certainly many of the Asian communities have that skip, where the grandparents are actually doing the raising. Yes, it does take a community, but more importantly it often takes that community that is drawn together and connected by blood.

I heard the expression "babysitting," and I probably would take exception to that because I like the term "grandparenting." I don't babysit; I grandparent. I think it's very important that if we start using that kind of language, people will start thinking and recognizing that importance.

It has been mentioned that children should never be used in a situation where adults are acting more like the children that they're supposedly looking after. I just think that at this point in time it's very important to go back to the original intent and the original motion as it was presented. This amendment A1 would then take us back to the beginning. I think it's very important that this be done at this point in time. We can actually work very hard for those kids that are falling through the cracks as we speak.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak against amendment A1. Most of the members of this Assembly who are present this evening can likely recall fond memories of the times spent with their grandparents. They may recall the anticipation that they felt on those family car trips to visit their grandparents, trips that felt so long, or the special candy their grandmother would keep in a bowl on the coffee table in her living room. They may remember the special fishing trip with their grandfather or the summer they spent an entire week at their grandparents' all by themselves.

Many of the members here now have grandchildren of their own and are making new memories. They now realize that their grandparents enjoyed the time spent together just as much as they did. Grandparents play a virtual role in the lives of their grandchildren. The interaction between children and their grandparents is extremely valuable. The time spent with the grandparents is an important way for children to learn how to interact with older people. Often the first significant contact that children have with seniors or older individuals in general is with their grandparents. Children learn how to better relate to people of different age groups. They learn from the visits with their grandparents that they should interact differently with older people than they would with playmates of their own age or even with their parents or teachers.

Grandchildren are forever learning from their grandparents. This may sound like a cliché, but grandparents are a link to the past. Through their grandparents children have learned more about their family's history, their heritage, and their communities. Grandparents teach their grandchildren about different times. Times pass so quickly now, and change is greater from generation to generation. We've become so caught up in the present that it's easy to forget about the past, even the recent past. It is important to maintain and celebrate those links and remember where we came from.

Mr. Speaker, I do realize that the issues of access to children by grandparents can be a touchy subject at times. It is important to strike the right balance in this matter. It is necessary to be fair to the grandparents who wish to visit the grandchildren. The process of visitation should not become too onerous. Grandparents often play a critical and positive role in the lives of grandchildren, and access should be encouraged when it is in the best interests of their grandchildren. Children can never have too many loving, supportive family members in their lives.

Nonetheless, it is necessary to recognize that at the end of the day parents are parents, and parents must have the right to raise their children as they see fit. It is also imperative to acknowledge the rights and well-being of the children. It is sometimes easy to get caught up in the debate of the rights of the parents versus the grandparents and lose sight of the children. Decisions regarding access should always be made with the best interests of the child in mind.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I can't support amendment A1. I strongly support Motion 505. I'm pleased to recognize the positive influence of grandparents in the lives of their grandchildren, and I feel it's important to encourage access where it is in the best interests of the child.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the amendment to Motion 505 regarding grandparents' access to grandchildren. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this motion forward for this discussion. It's a very sensitive and complex issue.

In a perfect world legislation would not be required to allow grandparents to visit their grandchildren. I believe that children, parents, grandparents, and all of society benefit from having access to those who love them most. We all have memories of our grandparents and the joy we felt in our hearts whenever we went to visit them, or perhaps we might remember the fear as well. I remember the love and consideration that my grandmother bestowed on all her grandchildren, and I also remember the fear I felt when my grandfather discovered us in the peach orchards eating his profits.

I did not, however, realize the impact and the sacredness of the relationship between grandparents and grandchildren until after I had become a parent and was visiting my parents in their snowbird home in Florida. They lived in a retirement park along with many other seniors. While visiting with my parents and their neighbours and listening to their conversations, I began to realize the importance of grandchildren in their lives. They talked about each other's families. The greatest news in the park was that Jane and Leo's two grandchildren were coming to visit and that Nick and Bernice's grandchildren were staying for another three days and that Bea and Harry's daughter was having her first baby. Their greatest joy was sharing stories of their children and grandchildren, looking forward to visits with their grandchildren, and sharing their time with these little shining stars.

It was an incredible revelation to me because as a parent of three small children at the time, I had no idea why snotty noses, dirty faces, and stinky diapers could bring such joy. Now as a grandparent of five of those wonders of the world I understand. It's those tiny arms wrapped around your neck or your leg, whichever they can reach at the time, and those butterfly kisses that say without words that you are the most important person in the world and the most loved that make every moment together with them a piece of paradise.

Sadly, however, this is not a perfect world, and legislation is required to assist some grandparents in gaining access to grandchildren, and we need to ask ourselves: does the current Family Law Act protect the rights of all parties involved? This is a straightforward question that may have a much more complicated answer. This is especially true because every situation is different. For example, there is no doubt that the involvement of another positive personal influence aside from a parent can have a profound impact on a child. Grandparents are often seen as role models for children, acting as a means of support in good and difficult times, able to share advice, or simply willing to share their time.

In most situations, Mr. Speaker, it can certainly be argued that it is in the best interests of children to have grandparents involved in their lives. It is for these reasons that grandparents should have access to their grandchildren. They have the ability to make such an enormous contribution to their upbringing, but this is not always the case.

Even though the grandparents' relationship with the child can be strong, their relations can still become strained with the parents. Sometimes disputes between parents and grandparents can lead to the parents blocking the grandparents from contacting the child. It is subjective situations like this that make it difficult to determine if such an obstruction is justified.

To the contrary, there are situations where grandparents can have a negative influence on a child. Physical abuse at the hand of a grandparent can be just as damaging or more damaging to the spirit of a child than abuse from a parent. Similarly, mental abuse or neglect can have an equally damaging effect on a child. Ultimately, it is up to parents or legal guardians to use their judgment in who they decide to expose their children to. Even so, it is important that laws are in place to formally protect the child from this sort of abuse and to minimize the potential for people to have a negative influence on their lives while at the same time assisting those who have a positive influence.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that this is a question of governance alone. The Family Law Act exists for this very reason. It is a mechanism that aims to protect the best interests of everyone involved but most importantly those of children. Under this legislation parents have the right to deny grandparents access to their children. I believe this debate to be more about efficient governance. More specifically, does the law go too far in making it difficult for grandparents to see their grandchildren with no substantiated reason? The difficulty lies in determining whether grandparents should have to prove that they are fit to have access to the grandchildren or whether parents should have to prove that they are not.

Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that seems to have no easy answers. There appears to be a dichotomy between how far the law should go to protect children and the risk of alienating important people from their lives in the process. One thing is for certain: whether it is determined that current legislation should be modified or not, the best interests of the child must remain the first priority.

As the debate goes on, I look forward to hearing from my other colleagues on the subject. I would not support this amendment as I believe that it fails to recognize that it is a natural law that two parents intact should make decisions that are in the best interests of their children.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to join the debate on the amendment to Motion 505 as sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. In contemporary society it is vital to recognize the importance of strong and supportive families. It is crucial to the well-being of all Albertans to create and foster a social environment that encourages such families. We cannot stress enough the value of the family as the family is the cornerstone of our democratic society, the human and social link between the past, the present, and the future. We should recall the adage that civilization may be a thousand years old, but it's only a generation deep.

It is the experience of the family that socializes children into a contemporary society and that transforms the "me" into the "we." Today we see the corruption and erosion of the traditional family. Deterioration of the family experience is becoming all too common a reality in our society as divorce rates continue to rise. The decline of the family has resulted in the weakening of civil society and brought about negative social and economic consequences. According to the philosopher Rousseau it is the experience of the family that attaches children first to their relatives and then to their fellow citizens. If family ties are weakened, the larger social ties are also weakened.

While the core of the family, the mother/father/child triad, must be protected, it is important to recognize the positive influence of members of the extended family in the lives of children and particularly the role of grandparents. Children need the love and support of family members, and grandparents often play a substantial and positive role in the lives of their grandchildren. Grandparents contribute to the well-being of a child. The positive interaction between a child and her grandparents is an important method of social development.

Grandparents are important sources of knowledge. Their infinite reserves of patience make them excellent teachers. Grandchildren have an opportunity to learn about respect, tradition, and history from their grandparents. They can learn more about their families and their heritage. They can also learn more about what life was like during their grandparents' generation. Let's be frank: grandparents are a lot more fun than parents.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to promote the well-being of our children and ensure that families are provided with tools to that end. If it's in the child's best interest for her grandparents to be granted regular access, then such access should be encouraged. Access should be fair and not overly burdensome to the grandparents. However, the right of the grandparents to visit the grandchildren must be balanced with the rights of parents to raise their children in the manner they think best and make decisions on behalf of their children. I strongly believe that as a society we must do all we can to promote strong, nurturing families. We must protect the societal values that are based on the family.

By recognizing the social importance of family relationships and encouraging family relationships that are in the best interests of the children, Motion 505 speaks to that end. I oppose the amendment to 505 for the reasons given by previous speakers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak against amendment A1. Children are our precious resource, but for children to reach their full potential, they must have positive influences in their lives. We were all children once, and we can all remember the degree to which our opinions and values were shaped by those around us.

Those children who are fortunate enough to have known their grandparents benefit from a truly unique opportunity. The relationship between a child and a grandparent is a truly special one, a relationship that is built on a lifetime of caring and giving. When we speak of giving, Mr. Speaker, I think we should all consider the magnitude of what grandparents have to give. They have an unbelievable amount of experience and wisdom to share. These are things that can instill in children a sense of historical connection and understanding that can't be found anywhere else.

Many adults today – and I'm sure there are many of my colleagues among them – look back with great fondness on the time with their grandparents. They were a link to a different time, a simpler time when the values of community and family were paramount, a time when people helped each other without question and worked together to overcome adversity.

To approach the future, it is necessary to have an understanding of the past. Grandparents have a lifetime of knowledge and experience. They have a living connection to a past that would otherwise exist only in history books and television documentaries. Experience and wisdom aside, Mr. Speaker, I also think that each inclusion of a loving and caring individual into the life of a child is in that child's best interest. Every positive influence, every happy experience: these things will all become part of that child's foundation as he or she grows older.

This relationship works the other way as well. I don't think that there's anything that brings more joy to the heart of a grandparent than time spent with a grandchild, unless it's the opportunity to spoil grandchildren rotten and send them home again. That is something which I'm sure some of us have enjoyed and the rest of us look forward to.

Unfortunately and increasingly so, the lives of children are not always happy. It is a sad fact but a fact nonetheless that more and more couples are getting divorced. Often children become caught in the middle, especially in cases where parents are involved in a dispute with each other. This process can be terribly hard on children, but sometimes the pain is compounded when grandparents are denied access to their grandchildren because of a dispute between parents. This is awful and tragic, but it does happen. On other occasions a dispute may occur between a child's grandparents and parents with the same result of access being denied. This is also tragic. It is another example of conflict affecting an innocent third party.

Now, I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there are certain cases where grandparents shouldn't have access to their grandchildren just as there are cases where parents shouldn't either. As much as we would like it to be otherwise, there are bad people who do bad things. These people, whether they are abusive, violent, or otherwise potentially harmful to a child, have no business being around children. We have laws in place to deal with these situations, laws which I believe provide a good degree of protection for those who need it.

Current family law legislation is centred around the premise of the best interests of the child. This is an admirable goal, but it is perhaps a test that is more suited to resolving conflict between parents and between a parent and a third party, such as a grandparent. My main concern is that children are sometimes used as pawns in a war between adults. The specifics of family law are a discussion topic for another day, Mr. Speaker, but I think the debate here tonight has brought forth a very important and worthwhile point that may resurface if and when the time comes to re-examine those laws.

The point that I and many of my colleagues have made here tonight is that the relationship between grandparents and grandchildren is special, special enough that, in my opinion, we should recognize it and encourage it not only on a personal level but with our affirmation of Motion 505 as it stands without the amendment. Grandparents are special people with a great deal of love to give to their grandchildren, who in turn have a great deal to give back. From such a relationship we all benefit.

So I would urge my colleagues to join me in not supporting the amendment A1 as I believe that Motion 505 in its current form addresses the concerns raised. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I was actually hoping to speak to the motion rather than the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time under Standing Order 8(4), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate – I would invite the hon. member to do so at this time.

Did you want to speak on the amendment in your time allotted?

Mr. Rodney: I'll speak on the motion, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to close?

Mr. Webber: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. In my opening remarks I spoke about the Family Law Act, legal precedents, and the need to find an appropriate balance between the right of a parent, a grandparent, and a child. These are very important issues that are difficult to balance. On the one hand, parents have a right to raise their children in the manner they see fit. On the other hand, grandparents can play a very important role in the lives of their grandchildren, and as a society we should be encouraging positive and nurturing relationships.

Alberta's Family Law Act is based on the concept of best interests of a child, and all decisions made by the courts must be made according to this concept. However, according to the Alberta Grandparents Association, the right of access and visitation is the right of the child, not the parents. To resolve these differences, the association suggests creating a unified family court system where prosecutors and judges are specially trained in family law matters.

Another possible solution that is supported by the association is mandatory mediation as a means of bringing all parties to the table to find a resolution that is good for everyone involved. Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that most people in this Assembly place a great deal of value on the positive role that grandparents can play in the lives of their grandchildren, and as the population ages, this issue is likely to become more prevalent. As I stated in my opening comments, a possible solution to this may be mandatory mediation. However, making mediation mandatory may take some time. They may need to train more mediators, and to set up such a system takes time and money. The courts are currently very busy. The population is growing. All of these factors are causing strains on the system, which complicates things even more.

These are some of the issues that need to be resolved. For now I will agree with many of my colleagues and would therefore like to recognize the importance of the relationship between grandparents and their grandchildren. I believe that such relationships should be encouraged when they are in the best interests of the child.

I'd like to conclude by thanking everybody for participating in this important discussion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 16 Peace Officer Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 16, Peace Officer Act. I compliment the hon. member who is bringing this bill for all the work that has gone into this particular bill. It brings a lot of clarity to the whole structuring of the peace officer program.

I think that we have already said in second reading that much of the substance of this bill is left for the regulations, so when it comes to trying to anticipate what we're looking at when we would look at the peace officers in terms of the categories, appropriate training, and ability to bear arms and so on, it's really difficult to pinpoint where we're going. It seems that a lot is left for the regulations in the future.

Well, there are different sections of this bill, and hopefully my colleagues will address some of these sections. I'm going to focus on part 2. Part 1 deals with the employer's authorizations and peace officer's appointments. Part 2 deals with complaints and discipline, and in this section, the beginning of section 14, it says that any person may "make a complaint in writing regarding a peace officer to the peace officer's authorized employer," and then in section 15 about the investigation it focuses on the authorized employer. If the authorized employer receives a complaint and if "the complaint is frivolous, vexatious or made in bad faith," then the authorized employer can set it aside.

Now, I think that there are some problems with that in terms of discerning what is frivolous and vexatious. Who is making that decision? The act seems to imply that it's the authorized employer who is making the decision, but there's no independent examination, no independent witnessing or investigation or decision about what is frivolous or vexatious. So this again raises the issue, which we've discussed before in this House, namely with Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, the whole issue concerning the necessity of independent investigation by some public body. Unless there is that independence in examining complaints, then the public won't necessarily have the kind of confidence that it needs to have in policing. I mean, what would apply to police should also apply, I think, to peace officers. There should be some kind of parallelism between the complaint process here and the complaint process outlined in Bill 36.

Continuing on, I could make the same comments about 15(4), (5), and (6), which focus on the director. When the director receives a complaint through the authorized employer, then the director must review the complaint and make a report, a decision. Again, all the authority is focused on, first, the authorized employer and then on the director without any kind of independent investigation. I think that that is not in the interest of public confidence.

You know, I could refer to the same issues that we raised with Bill 36. For example, when we talked about the need for independence and impartiality and presented a proposal for a public oversight mechanism to look at complaints against the police, we made all kinds of points; like, we need an independent and impartial judge. Also, the need is to preserve the appearance of impartiality and objectivity so that members of the public maintain confidence in the system.

I think that the government is underestimating the whole element of public confidence. Even in cases coming before the courts, whether bail is to be accepted or revoked, there's a primary ground: will the person flee? There's a secondary ground: will the person be a danger to the community? Then there's a tertiary ground, namely public confidence. What is the public confidence in the criminal justice system? I think that there's a big issue here with public confidence if we don't have some sort of public oversight mechanism present in this act.

Continuing on, Mr. Chairman, to section 19, that's the section that I'd like to focus on and bring an amendment. Again, the issue here is some sort of public oversight mechanism. In section 19(1) "an authorized employer must provide a report to the Director, as soon as the authorized employer becomes aware" of the following incidents: for example, if a peace officer "used excessive force" or "used a weapon" contrary to the regulations; "an incident involving a weapon used by another person"; "an incident involving serious injury to or the death of any person"; or "any matter of a serious or sensitive nature related to the actions of a peace officer." If any of these incidents occur, then the director must investigate the matter. That's section 19(2).

Then subsection (3): "The Director may request a police service or other person to conduct an investigation into an incident or matter, or to take over an investigation." I don't know who this "other person" is. I think it is commendable – and this is consistent with Bill 36 – that there's a request for a police service to be involved in an investigation. That's taking it outside of the circle of peace officers and the relationship between the authorized employer and the director and so on. The RCMP would be a good example of a police service that could bring some sort of objectivity. I don't know what the reference to the "other person" is, but I think that the problem here is the lack of a public oversight mechanism.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an amendment to 19(3) to make sure that there is some reference to a public oversight mechanism in here, so here is my signed copy and all the other copies.

The Chair: We will call this amendment A1.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill 16 be amended in section 19 by adding the following after subsection (3):

- (3.1) If an investigation is conducted under this section, the Director shall appoint one or more members of the public as overseers to observe, monitor or review an investigation to ensure the integrity of the process of the investigation.

I think that with an expanded role for peace officers, including traffic enforcement and other duties that sort of move into the traditional role of policing, it is really important that there be some form of public oversight of peace officers. This is in the public's interest and would ensure public confidence in any investigations against peace officers that are really serious. Now, this is the same public oversight mechanism that the Solicitor General used in Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005.

Now, it's a puzzle to me. It's not clear why a similar oversight mechanism is not included in this bill, given the expanded roles and responsibilities of peace officers. They must have confidence that all investigations of a serious nature have a public oversight component. That is why we're bringing forth this amendment. This is not particularly an onerous amendment, Mr. Chairman. This is the exact language that was used in Bill 36 to provide public oversight for serious incidents and complaints involving police officers. It seems logical to use the same language so that we can have this same element present. I can't emphasize enough the importance of some kind of public oversight mechanism, which is in place in other police acts. Why can't we also apply it here to special constables if we're going to really be serious about the proper accounting of the work of special constables and peace officers?

That is my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Anyone wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I look at this amendment A1, it brings me to think about the actual bill, where I think a great deal of the concern, from the constituents I have spoken with, is a lack of confidence. There are many questions that they have about how these peace officers will be utilized, what training they will have, how long that will be, and there are just not enough answers in the bill as it's being proposed. Another question that comes up often is: who are these peace officers going to be accountable to?

As I look at amendment A1, the rationale is to address that lack of public confidence with an expanded role for peace officers including traffic enforcement and other duties that may encroach into traditional police roles. It is imperative that there be some form of public oversight for peace officers. This is in the public's interest and would ensure public confidence in any investigation of a serious nature against peace officers.

One of the questions that has been brought up to me, probably because of my background in high schools, is the concern that peace officers may take over the role of school resource officers. Again, these questions aren't answered in this bill. If that role is given to peace officers, I'm concerned because, with my high school experience, I believe that those students would see these new officers as much the same as shopping mall security guards, and there would be little respect or credibility for them. Again going back to the amendment, we need to ensure public confidence.

This is the same public oversight mechanism that the Solicitor General used in Bill 36, the Police Amendment Act, 2005, and to me it's not clear why this was not included in Bill 16. I don't think it should be onerous. The exact language was used in Bill 36 to provide a public oversight for serious incidents and complaints involving police officers. It seems logical that the same rules should apply to this level of law enforcement that may be performing the same duties in some cases.

So I'm saying that we need a truly public, transparent process so that the public can be sure of being free from undue political influence. The rationale here is to ensure the integrity of the process and to ensure that there is no appearance of police investigating their own. Let's be realistic. Peace officers will work closely with police officers, and there will be a common bond between them. We must have a public monitor of these investigations. This was the rationale the government used in Bill 36, and it is the same rationale that we are using now.

I support this amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To the amendment. Much reference has been made to the Solicitor General and Bill 36 and the independent investigation citizen oversight committee. Last year especially residents of Edmonton can remember all the controversy with regard to the former chief of police, the basic entrapment, the use of police computers to get private information on individuals. There was a great deal of kerfuffle, confusion.

Fortunately for the city of Edmonton the new police chief is a wonderful individual. This gentleman has done a lot of the repertory work in establishing himself as a very credible officer. His training in Toronto has stood him very well in terms of understanding big city concerns, difficulties with ethnic violence that Edmonton, unfortunately, is now experiencing. But even with his wonderful abilities and his openness and transparency and his very quick off the mark comments with regard to disappointment with the police reaction to the beating death of the individual on the Mill Woods bus and the response time, even with these admissions and recognitions, we need an external oversight citizen component in order for citizens to have faith in the larger process. Again, with reference to Bill 36, this component was a part of the bill.

When we're talking about law enforcement, and particularly at a level where there has not been the degree of training provided for the individuals, I would suggest that more oversight rather than less is needed in terms of establishing both professional and ethical conduct. Without this citizen oversight committee the public gets a sense that it's a closed shop, the report cards are being prepared by the individuals evaluating themselves, and the public would lose faith in their ability to self-regulate.

There is also concern with regard to how well they integrate with existing police forces and to what extent their process will be evaluated, by whom, and over what period of time, and what the standards are by which this evaluation process will take place. It appears that we're getting somewhat more of a definition of what a peace officer does, clarification of roles, the equipment they can carry, and so on, but in terms of their evaluation and supervision, that is missing from Bill 16. That is why I support this amendment, which calls for greater citizen oversight, input, and clarification of role as well as evaluation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to join debate on Bill 16, the amendment to section 19(3). We all know that the job of peace officers is a very demanding one and that the peace officers, in fact, have to use force, sometimes lethal force, and that the incidents in which force is used lead people who feel that they are victims of excessive use of force to lay complaints. It is, in my view, very much in the interests of all of us, including police officers, to see that we have procedures and processes in place which increase public support for the work that peace officers do. The measures that we give authority to in this Legislature to increase that public confidence and support should be clearly designed to enhance public trust in the legislation that governs this.

I think that the amendment and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who has proposed this amendment, are right in drawing attention to the fact that there is a flaw here in the legislation in that it doesn't provide for effective public oversight with respect to the process proposed here for the manner in which the director may request a police service or other person to conduct an investigation. First of all, I think it's important that the investigations be independent and not only be independent but be seen by the public to be independent of the peace officers and police services themselves. But even when a police officer and service is involved in the investigation, if that has to be the case, it's even more important that there be public presence in the form of legislated ability to oversee the investigation so that there's a transparency and the public knows that the investigation has taken place in a manner that meets the standards of transparency and independence and impartiality.

So I think the amendment proposed here, as (3.1) to section 19(3), is a very appropriate one, and I certainly indicate my support for the amendment. I hope the House will find doing so a reasonable thing to do as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Anyone else wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wish to speak to this. I could not support this. In response to the comments from the members opposite the information given and the example given by the Member for Calgary-Varsity is relating to police in Edmonton. I wish to reiterate that this is a peace officer act. This is not police. This, once again, is a peace officer.

The various sections in the complaint process: while there are stops, the first stop is the employer. That is the first level. The second level is the director of law enforcement for the more serious complaints. So that's a level. The amendment for an independent body as in Bill 36 – and I have to admit I haven't seen Bill 36, that part of it – is not required as, again, this is not the police.

I cannot support this amendment.

The Chair: On the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple other points, and perhaps my colleagues can direct their attention to other parts of this bill. In terms of the same section, part 2, towards the end, when we get into the issues around the Law Enforcement Review Board. It just is curious that the language used in reference to the Law Enforcement Review Board is the language of recommending "to the Minister that the decision that was the subject of the appeal be confirmed, reversed or varied." That's section 21(4). The same in subsection (5)(a) in terms of the recommendations that are put in writing. So I guess the ultimate authority is the minister.

I don't know whether this is an undermining of the authority of the Law Enforcement Review Board, but does the minister consider that he is more informed than the members of the LERB? Surely, the LERB are capable and can decide on this issue without the reference to the minister.

This section I think is problematic. It allows the minister to vary or overturn the decisions of the LERB without really stating why. I think that that should be reviewed, and I wondered if the minister can explain why he wants to have this authority to reverse or vary the decisions of the LERB and kind of undermine their authority.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Regarding the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora regarding the Law Enforcement Review Board in this Peace Officer Act the Law Enforcement Review Board conducts an appeal, as it states, in the case of the cancellation of an employer's authorization. This would be, for example, the town of Rocky Mountain House or the city of Camrose. That's the employer. It's not a police service. The employer is the municipality. So if there's an investigation regarding an individual, a peace officer that is employed by the municipality, it's the municipality that actually has the authorization to receive the peace officer classification. It's the officer himself who gets the designation, but the authorization actually goes to the municipality.

Therefore, the Law Enforcement Review Board has that ability to make recommendations to the minister whether the authorization for that municipality should be gone or upheld. As it says in section 5(b), "in the case of the cancellation of a peace officer's appointment, the Law Enforcement Review Board must provide its recommendation in writing to the appellant, the peace officer's authorized employer and the Minister." So all three are provided with their written recommendation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. We ran out of time when we were talking about special constables, and some of the confusion still remains with me that I would like to apply to peace officers in Bill 16, and that has to do with the titles and the ranking and the various levels of authority. I'm talking specifically about section 11, use of titles, under Bill 16. The negative aspect of this is that the public may find the different designations of peace officers confusing, and they may not understand the difference between a level 1 APO and a level 1 CPO. Everyone knows what a police officer is in terms of RCMP or city police and what authority that title carries, but the different levels of peace officers will cause confusion.

Does the Solicitor General have a plan to deal with this confusion? Is there a public awareness component to the implementation of this act so that Albertans are aware of the different levels of peace officers? If so, how much is that public information, which is absolutely necessary, potentially going to cost, and if that's not going to take place, why has the department not considered the public's perception of the peace officers and the inevitable confusion surrounding the different levels?

The comments I made with regard to the hierarchy of police officers and how they relate to the other levels of policing come to mind as well. I talked earlier with regard to special constables about uniforms, equipment, insignia. The minister must ensure that the difference between the various levels and their roles is made clear to the public so that they can understand the different levels of law enforcement.

I'd also like to reference section 23, inspection and investigation. This entire section gives the director of law enforcement the ability to enter an authorized employer's premises, at will it appears, and inspect anything he wants to, including records, vehicles, weapons, equipment, to ensure compliance with the act. I'm just wondering about that degree of authority. To what extent is it justified, and how can it be substantiated?

In section 29 of Bill 16 it says that information must be provided and conditions must be met by a person to be appointed as a peace officer or a person applying for the employer's authorization. Where are the prerequisites, the education, the expectations? Shouldn't this information already be determined? There must already be criteria that define this process, but where are these criteria? Why is this left to regulations? We should know what type of information needs to be obtained in order to become a peace officer or an authorized employer. Can the minister explain what these requirements are? What are the physical requirements for all levels of peace officers? What are the necessary academic requirements and experience necessary to be a level 1 APO? What are the conditions that must be met? Is there a psychiatric evaluation for these officers that will be required to carry side arms or shotguns? I can't imagine that there isn't, but if there isn't, why wouldn't there be given the level of armament?

There are many questions to be asked here. Clarification of what these requirements are is needed. I can't imagine that the minister is just going to make them up as he goes along, but it doesn't appear that within Bill 16, at least within section 29, these clarifications are provided.

With regard to training regulations, what type of training are these officers going to receive? Can the minister provide these levels of training so that we can understand what types of individuals will be carrying weapons, conducting traffic, enforcement, and so on? How will we know that they have had sufficient training that they're qualified to be out there in the public protecting the public interest?

With regard to standards of conduct, practices, procedures, protocol, once again, a lot of the regulation-making authority does not seem to have substance. What information sharing will police officers have? What is the intercommunication process? Will they have access to CPIC, the Canadian police intelligence centre? Will they be connected with MOVES, the registered car owner database, and OSCAR, Edmonton's Police Service database? If so, what controls will be placed upon these to ensure that the access is not abused, as I referred to earlier with the Edmonton police force?

Respecting the time within which an authorized employer must provide to the director the information required under section 18, notification to the director of complaints of investigation of police officers, why is this in regulations? Why is the time frame not spelled out in the act itself? For instance, why isn't there a clause that stipulates that when a peace officer is being investigated, the director must be notified within 30 days? Why is the time left for regulations? We have debated the difference between legislation and regulation and the manoeuvrability and the room that does not clearly spell out what the intent is. This information should be up front so that the public understands what's going on.

With regard to more of the time frame and the colour of the uniforms, the insignia and so on, which I brought up earlier, how is the peace officer badge going to be distinguished from a police badge? It should be clear in the act that upon termination of employment as a peace officer the badge obviously has to be returned forthwith to the Solicitor General, and failure to do so should result in penalties. The last thing we want to be doing is going into Value Village and being able to purchase peace officer uniforms. There's a difference between justice and a Halloween costume, and the opportunity for abuse is out there.

If the minister could address many of these concerns and questions, it would be much appreciated. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Let me begin by going back to section 11, use of titles. Again, really, this allows the minister to "authorize the use of titles for peace officers or classes of peace officers in accordance with the regulations."

Obviously, the regulations will be coming forward, but it does provide the governing for titles of peace officers. The community of Rocky Mountain House may want to call their officers enforcement officers. The community of Wetaskiwin may want to call theirs community peace officers. Those titles are up to the municipality but as well have to be approved by the minister.

When it goes to the next section, 12(1), we talk about the uniform and the restriction regarding uniforms, what the uniform will look like. The problem that we have right now is that special constables and police officers run around with a red stripe on their pants, and no one knows who they are. The issue is that by removing the special constable title, by moving the red stripe from peace officers to blue for provincial and to grey or another colour for peace officers, that will provide a clear distinction right across the province that we have four levels of peace officers: one being yellow for federal police officers, those being the RCMP; red for municipal officers, being police officers; blue for our provincial peace officers; and grey for municipal peace officers. That will provide an obvious clarification to the public when they do see that versus the assortment of striping that we have out there today.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity also mentioned articles regarding 23(1), inspection and investigation, and the ability of the director to enter an authorized employer's premises. We're not talking about some employer in a shopping mall somewhere; we're talking about the city of Camrose or the town of Hinton, where we're going to be going into the city to look and inspect the practices, the training procedures for any internal training, again, their records management, their vehicle signage. These are requests from the Auditor General. If the hon. member would like a copy of the original review that we did to consult with Albertans, I have additional copies I can provide to him that show the consultation that we had out in all of Alberta with peace officers, with municipalities, with the Alberta associations of both police officers and peace officers. So we have that information for him if he'd like to do some additional reading on that. I can get copies for all of you. Actually, you can get one on the Internet. I believe it's still up on our website.

The prerequisite in the regulations, Mr. Chairman: we don't go to adding prerequisites for police officers, nor do I believe that in any other profession we put those requirements in an act because those can change. Those can change any time throughout the year. If an organization wanted to change the level of training that they want to do, then you would have to make a complete change to an act, which is deemed to be a little redundant. Therefore, the regulations will be in place regarding the prerequisites, the prerequisites of physical fitness testing. Again, this is covered in the document, the review that was done, and those issues will be addressed further in the regulations as they come forward.

Lastly, the hon. member spoke about the relationship between the peace officers and the police officers that they're working with in a community. Whether those are RCMP or whether those are municipal police services, obviously, there will be an memorandum of understanding developed between the two. We have some tremendous models in the province right now in a number of municipalities. I don't want to say one municipality is better than another. We saw two of the models, one in Grande Prairie and one in Strathcona, two tremendous models where the memorandum of understanding clearly describes the role and responsibility of the officers that work in that community, how they're tied into the RCMP, how the supervision is provided between the two, and the relationship that is formed between them as well. So that's going to be done in the MOU, again, covered in the regulations to detail how they're going to work together, what level of service the municipality may want them to do. That changes from municipality to municipality, Mr. Chairman, as one municipality may want them to enforce various different acts versus all provincial acts. That's up to a municipality to make that decision. They are given the authority to respond to any provincial act or write summonses under any provincial act if they have the qualifications, if they have the training, if they have that ability, and if the municipality has deemed that that's what they want them to do within their municipality.

So I think I have outlined a number of the responses to the hon. member, but if he'd like a copy of the review, we'd be more than happy to get one to him tomorrow.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very, very much. Within Bill 16 is there a clarification of the supervisory roles of the higher levels of the police service? In other words, what I'm saying is: if you look at the RCMP or the city police forces as being at the highest levels of training, is there a clearly spelled-out evaluatory chain of command? From an education point of view what I would compare it to is a student teacher and their practicum adviser or an established teacher. If you have a good student teacher, the benefits to both yourself and to your class are tremendous. If you have a weak student teacher, then the extra evaluatory roles and the extra responsibilities that are placed upon you are increased. I'm wondering if there is any kind of recognition of the extra workload that training these individuals has with the regular police forces, whether it be municipal or through the RCMP.

Another example would be in terms of the, sort of, chain of command. You've got registered nurses. You've got licensed practical nurses. The registered nurses are given a supervisory role over the licensed practical nurses. Then you have the orderlies. Again, if these people are working together in sync, you have a wonderful system, but if they're not, it places a strain rather than a support for the people in charge at the highest levels, in the case of RCMP, city police; teacher, student teacher; registered nurse, LPN, orderly; and so on. I would like to ask the minister: are these roles clearly defined? Who evaluates the roles? Who evaluates the interconnectedness? How do we know that the existing forces are going to be supported and not spend a lot of time on the job trying to correct mistakes or bringing the people up to the level that they've received given their limited training?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to remind the hon. member that this isn't new. This function has been in place for 30 years. The relationship with the RCMP and throughout rural Alberta has been in place for about 30 years. The functions that are taking place right now in our communities throughout Alberta have been in place, but what we're doing here is we took out the various sections from various acts regarding peace officers and built it into Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act.

There's no hidden agenda here. There's nothing of subsequence other than this new act is going to provide them the foundation of what we need to move forward in the future regarding peace officers. They didn't have that in the past. So now when we talk about the memorandum of understanding, that's already in place. That's done. They've done that already. All we want to do is cement it into the regulations and ensure that that relationship is there so that we can build stronger relationships because there are municipalities, there are areas in the province where they don't have a good working relationship. Those are the areas that we want to concentrate on and work on to ensure that the county, special constables right now, and the RCMP can form that relationship, can work together in a better relationship such as we've seen in some tremendous locations throughout the province.

So this really is there to build on what's in place right now. The function of what's in Bill 16 isn't new. This has been going on for some 30 years already. So I think the regulations obviously will clarify that. This, again, will provide a stronger sense of security for the public but as well have those checks and balances in there, working with the Auditor General because he's the one that told us we have to have standards out there. Whether it's standards for policing or whether it's standards for peace officers, those standards will be in place. We need them. We need those checks and balances, and I'm sure that's what the hon. members want as well. So this will provide us with that foundation to move into the future.

Mr. Chase: At this point I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall progress on Bill 16, Peace Officer Act, be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 23

Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to make a few comments on Bill 23 in committee on behalf of the hon. Minister of Community Development. There were a couple of points which were raised during second reading that I have answers to.

There are 70 permanent conservation officers, and an additional 88 will be added in May for the summer season. This is the same number of permanent officers as last year, and the seasonal number is slightly higher.

While the Provincial Parks Act does not contain provisions to address vehicle use, including off-highway, it does allow for specific regulations to be used to govern vehicles, which continues to be addressed in general regulations. I feel that these regulations are sufficient to deal with all types of vehicle use in the parks.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. As I noted earlier, I was much in support of the intent of Bill 23. Can the minister provide me some type of assurance that the part-time seasonal officers, who are so frequently discouraged by their lack of opportunity to achieve permanent status – is there any recognition that these seasonals based on previous years' evaluations will be added to the regular staff and have some degree of job security?

What happens is that a number of these very qualified individuals who work season after season fail to receive part-time, and as a result they're forced to look for work in other areas. These people have gone through the process, a number of them at the wonderful University of Lethbridge, and receive tremendous training. But instead of being out in the wilderness, which ideally is their first choice, they end up being recruited by a variety of other police forces, and their training allows them to make these switches, but their heart is truly in the wilderness.

The other concern I have is that in order for the regulations to be in place, we don't just need a few extra full-time employed conservation officers; we need to go back to the full allotment that we had prior to the cutbacks in the early 1990s. Currently we have almost half as many officers trying to patrol a vast area, and they're handicapped in trying to provide that kind of coverage. They can't provide the regulation that is absolutely necessary, which is a large part of Bill 23, if they don't have sufficient manpower, womanpower, human resources to carry out their job. So back to the original question: is there any hope in sight that more full-time officers will be hired and that part-time officers who have demonstrated their previous abilities will be first considered for those full-time jobs? If the minister could respond, please.

The Chair: Does anyone else wish to speak on Bill 23?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 23, the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006?

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It would be appropriate at this time to rise and report progress with respect to Bill 16 and to report Bill 23.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 23. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 15 International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Stelmach]

Mr. Stelmach: I believe we extended all the information on the bill. It's a very worthy bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have spent a little bit of time with the past minister, and he was kind enough to keep me informed of exactly what is going on. I'm really not that familiar with airplane parts. I didn't think that I would hear myself saying this, but basically this is housekeeping, and it is to keep the province in line with, actually, what would appear to be global conventions that need to be signed. Canada has signed but not ratified the convention on international interests in mobile equipment, and because a convention affects an area of provincial constituent jurisdictions, it's necessary for us to pass this through the House.

One of the things that is expected when this convention is ratified, not only by Canada but all the other signing partners, is it would lower the cost of financing high-value mobile equipment such as aircraft, which is mainly what this is geared toward. I guess at that point I'm wondering if I'm going to be lucky enough to have my airline tickets lowered. Certainly, WestJet airline, which is Alberta-based, would be supporting this.

One thing in the three-column document is an exceedingly interesting way of using the word "accountable." What they say is that the act will establish remedies in the event of a default. I must remember to use that language when I try to get accountability again in this House.

The actual international registry will be in Ireland. The operational registry will no longer be required by multiple countries and, in turn, multiple provinces. It will be pretty straightforward once it gets going. I think that everybody could recognize that if you need a part for an aircraft and it's not flying, you need it now. You need to be able to get it through all the different customs.

I just would have one question that I'm sure the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville could answer. It says that a legal review will be undertaken to determine whether these elements from the convention protocol need to be included in the Alberta legislation. Obviously, that's what we're trying to do, but I'm just wondering what the time frame on that was and if, in fact, this legal review has been done prior to this discussion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 15, International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act. I want to indicate our support for this bill at the very outset. The minister's introductory remarks on it make it very clear what the purpose of the bill is. It really is a bill that is prompted by two international agreements signed by the federal government, the first one being the convention on international interests in mobile equipment, also known as the Cape Town convention, and the second is a protocol on aircraft equipment. I think eight countries have already ratified the convention as well as the protocol. The U.S., of course, and Ireland are included in these eight. Canada and 24 other countries have signed the convention and protocol but haven't yet ratified them. Ratification requires, where necessary, the provincial assemblies to pass legislation that will then enable the federal government to ratify the agreements that are already signed.

Both of these agreements, Mr. Speaker, I understand from the minister's comments and from reading quickly through the bill – lots of words there – touch on an area of provincial jurisdiction having to do with the registering of interests in personal property. The minister also tells us that the government of Canada has assured us that it will not proceed with ratification unless it's got a substantial number of provincial jurisdictions that have passed the necessary legislation. Of course, Quebec, Ontario, B.C., Alberta have all indicated their support. Ontario and Nova Scotia have already passed but not yet proclaimed the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it's a bill that deserves the support of the House. It certainly has the support of our caucus. My question to the minister is: are there any costs involved in passing this legislation, and if so, what's the scale of the costs that the province will incur having passed this piece of legislation? That's my main question. I'm sure that the minister will respond to it either now or perhaps later.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Acting Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to close the debate?

Ms Calahasen: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 20

Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 23: Mr. Lund]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. A former Prime Minister, who was fond of using middle digits and some questionable language, when confronted about the language he used, said: oh, I just said fuddle duddle. I've heard members of the media basically spell out the meaning of FOIP. I'll substitute fuddle duddle, and IP stands for: it's personal. That is the feeling that members of the media have expressed and, for that reason, awarded the government the title of most secret all across Canada based on their lack of willingness to share information.

Without going into great depth, we are hampered from carrying out our roles as equally elected Members of the Legislative Assembly by the government's use of FOIP to withhold information. It causes the taxpayer unnecessary draining of resources for us to put forward a FOIP request. Maybe it's just a peculiarity, but when we finally get that information, it usually arrives on the day when the House is about to adjourn, so opportunities to discuss the information that has finally been retrieved are extremely limited.

In order for us to carry out our job in what I would like to think would be a more collaborative fashion, we have to have equal access to information. The information has been paid for out of the public purse. In order to carry on the joint responsibility that we have, regardless of whether we're government or opposition, we cannot be hindered and hampered by the inability to access the information that is required.

My first FOIP request last year was to determine what had happened prior to the young gentleman finding himself down at the base of the elevator chute. I had asked for very simple things such as when the elevator was last inspected, when the door was last inspected, what the physical circumstances were that led to this door being so faulty that this young individual was unfortunately killed by a fall to the bottom of the shaft. That was a clarification question.

We also put out FOIP requests for flight logs. Fortunately, we received the answer prior to the recess that those flight logs would be tabled, but given the change of affairs that's happened in the last couple of weeks, I have no sense that we'll finally get that information, that we requested some time ago.

This should not be a game of hide-and-seek. It should not be:

“We’ve got the information; tough on you. It’s our right because we’re the government, and you have no rights as the opposition.” Imagine the Alberta that could be, where we were hon. members of policy committees.

Mr. Snelgrove: Oh, I can only imagine.

Mr. Chase: Well, given the recent state of affairs and the lack of confidence within the party itself, you won’t have to imagine much longer because Albertans are demanding greater transparency. They’re demanding greater accountability. They’re not accepting, basically, a funeral procession in the form of a leadership race that is going to take over two years. They want accountability. They want transparency now. [interjections]

Well, these are all very clever comments, but they don’t address the need for sharing information. Until this government can demonstrate to the people of Alberta that it is transparent and accountable, why should the people of Alberta want to prolong 35 years of hide and seek?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d just like to make a couple of comments. Four of the amendments are aimed at further restricting the information that can be made available. I think part of my big problem with a lot of this is probably based on my personality. I’m not afraid to stand up and be counted, I’m not afraid to be responsible for what I say, and I sure as hell – I’m not afraid to be responsible for my behaviour. Whoops. I’m responsible for that.

I really have a problem with people who do a whole pile of hiding. I absolutely admit that there have to be some areas where people must make decisions. But once those decisions are made, I think there has to be an accountability of how that was arrived at. I don’t think you need to go through all the nitty-gritty of every piece of information that was discussed, but I think that if you are responsible for making the decision, then you should be responsible for standing up and saying why you made that decision. I think that’s part of the integrity of the people that are making these decisions.

Also, there are pretty powerful timelines: 15 years, I believe I read, for one of them. That’s actually a long time and will certainly make for excellent bedtime reading 20 years from now, when all of this stuff definitely will be coming out. Certainly, there will be some young, bright masters student that’ll just be salivating, waiting for all of this to come out. So why not just get it up front, say what you’re doing, stand up for what you believe in, stand up for the decisions that you’ve made, and quit trying to hide behind FOIP so much?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, in its second reading. The bill is a sort of mixed bag. It has some, I think, promising initiatives in it. For example, it includes a response to the recommendation made to the government by the Information and Privacy Commissioner of the province; specifically, legislative measures that need to be taken in order to protect information pertaining to the personal and private records of Albertans.

In view of the requirements of some foreign pieces of legislation – for example, the USA PATRIOT Act, which requires all companies or persons in possession of information that the law enforcement or investigation agencies of the U.S. state may require to be made available to them as a legal requirement. All records in possession of or collected by or handled by any agency and organizations that may have any connection with U.S. parent firms or businesses are under the PATRIOT Act obliged to surrender that information to U.S. authorities. Since lots of government data, information is handled through contracting out to either U.S. agencies and corporations or their subsidiaries in Canada, the information that’s provided to the government and held by government agencies in confidence, in trust, provided by Albertans, then becomes subject to access by the agencies of a foreign government. So the Information and Privacy Commissioner recommended some changes. This bill responds to the recommendations made by the Information and Privacy Commissioner that will protect the information related to Albertans’ health records or financial records or private records under the U.S. PATRIOT Act to American courts. That’s well and good, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, that part of the bill is something that I support.

The question with regard to the penalties, whether or not the penalties proposed if the provisions of the proposed act related to the protection of privacy are violated, is another issue. We can certainly deal with that in the debate during the committee, but in principle I think I am supportive of the attempt made in this bill to respond to the Information and Privacy Commissioner’s recommendations.

However, there are other parts of the bill, Mr. Speaker, which are highly objectionable; for example, that the ministerial briefing notes now will become inaccessible through FOIP requests. I think there’s absolutely no justification to remove ability to access those briefing notes because they are of substantive significance to the debates that happen here, to the ability of this House and certainly of this side of the House to be able to scrutinize government policy and the background information on which that policy is based. That background information is contained in those very notes that the bill will put beyond the reach of members of the Assembly. We certainly take a very serious view of the provision that will in fact make access to information related to public policy impossible to get. How do you get public debate and public scrutiny and public examination of vital issues associated with the public policy if you don’t have access to those background materials the briefing notes contain? So that’s something that we will not be able to support, Mr. Speaker.

Also, some questions about some information that may be now deemed in this act as non-FOIPable and some published works, you know, that may be available in libraries and other places. I’m curious about it. Why is this proposed legislation specifically attempting to include under what is called non-FOIPable materials published works that may be available in other places? Maybe the minister can respond to that. If the materials are already available in the public domain – and self-published works as such are available in libraries; they are all catalogued and may be taken out – why should they be excluded from FOIP access? Just because they’re available, there’s no need for them? I don’t understand exactly what the concern is here and how that concern is being addressed by that particular provision in this bill.

Secondly and again importantly, Mr. Speaker, the five-year FOIP exclusion on ministerial briefing material is something that is very, in my view, undemocratic in nature. Why this is being done is beyond my understanding at least. Maybe the minister will respond to that. For a government that really is already plagued by lack of accountability and transparency, it's striking to note that such amendments are being in fact proposed. The very spirit of a sort of democratic debate and discussion on public policy rests on the fact that the government is obliged by law to make available to the general public and certainly to the members of this House the information that the ministers and the executive use to make their policy.

The argument that allowing access to briefing notes will be considered as revealing the substance of deliberations of Executive Council is a kind of novel argument. That's an interesting invention, but I don't think it justifies making access to information of public interest more difficult than is already the case any more acceptable.

The 15-year exclusion of documents belonging to the chief internal auditor of Alberta is another provision of the bill that makes no sense and is equally unacceptable. Again, the question is: why the 15-year provision to exclude documents belonging to the chief internal auditor? The chief internal auditor deals with the expenditures of budgeted public money and how departments and different branches of the department spend those public dollars. Why such documents should be put beyond the reach of the members of the Assembly and the public at large for at least 15 years requires some explanation and serious addressing by the minister responsible for bringing forward this legislation.

Another provision of Bill 20, section 7, allows for the unlimited suspension of a FOIP request while the Information and Privacy Commissioner considers whether it should be FOIPed or not. While there may perhaps be a reason to stop the clock, so to speak, on the 30-day limit for processing FOIP requests while such consideration takes place, the specific amendment proposed in fact makes the 30-day time limit simply useless, meaningless. There's no assurance in the bill that a request will be handled expeditiously and that the 30-day limit, if not exactly to the letter, at least in spirit would be respected. When FOIP requests are made, I think the justified expectation is that such requests must be responded to within an appropriate time, and a 30-day limit seems to be fine, but now with the suspension of the 30-day limit the government could take perhaps as long as it wishes and thereby frustrate the very purpose of seeking the information through a FOIP request that may be before it. So that's another part of the bill that's highly objectionable. I think it's a serious flaw in the bill and will need to be addressed.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I only want to just conclude by saying that the manner in which FOIP requests are presently handled – and I speak on the basis of the experience certainly of my own caucus. When we have put in these requests for information, there is an undue delay, and there are various ways available to the government to postpone and to prolong the duration for which the government can find ways to deny access to the information. That shouldn't be the case, and the amendments as proposed in this bill will simply make that bad situation far worse. Therefore, the bill in whole is one that I'm afraid will not receive our support unless we can amend it to address the flawed parts of the bill that I've just drawn briefly some attention to as we move to the next stage of the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to call the question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:28 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Curry.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce five people from CAUS, the Council of Alberta University Students, who I had the honour of meeting with earlier this morning. In the public gallery today are Jen Smith, Samantha Power, Jason Blades, Duncan Wojtaszek, and Gaurav Singh. If you would please stand and accept the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two classrooms to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly. This group is visiting the Legislative Assembly today from St. Gabriel school, and the group consists of 40 individuals with two teachers, Mrs. Svetlana Sech and Miss Kandise Perry. Also in attendance today are three teacher assistants, Mrs. Louise Depuis, Mrs. Anu Khurana, and Mrs. Tammy Toronchuk. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 38 brilliant students from Holy Family Catholic school from my riding accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Beth Devlin, Mr. Karol Wawrykiewicz, Mrs. Marlene Norsworthy, and the parents are Renée Laporte and Mrs. Theresa Gibeau. They're all seated in the gallery behind me, and I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you today a group from Rosemary, Alberta. Before I introduce them, I'll just draw to your attention that this is the 14th year that Mr. David Blumell has brought his school students to the Legislative Assembly, and it's the 14th time that I have introduced them. The teachers are David Blumell and Laurel Nickel with parent helpers Scott Simpson, who also happens to be the mayor of Rosemary, as well as Harold Unruh, Marina Petker, Mary Laforest, Chris Dyck, Pam Byers, and Chad Fika. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Water for Life Strategy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta a combination of economic growth, population increase, years of drought conditions, and climate change has raised dire warnings about the sustainability of our water supply. Today a renowned water expert is voicing his concern that if we don't put a water conservation plan in place immediately, critical water shortages will occur in the near future. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Will the minister commit to full implementation of the Water for Life strategy now, backed by legislation and full funding rather than the piecemeal approach that's occurring?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. As Dr. Schindler from the University of Alberta pointed out yesterday, the Alberta government's Water for Life strategy is perhaps the most progressive water strategy in all of Canada. I want to commit to all Albertans that with this blue gold that the hon. member talks about, we will endeavour to continue to carry out the good work on our Water for Life strategy with the water councils and watershed councils that we have across Alberta because that is so important. Information is power when it comes to protecting such a valuable resource that the hon. member has mentioned.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will he lift this progressive plan off the paper and put it into action with full funding?

Mr. Boutilier: I want to thank the Minister of Finance for the last budget, where she committed $52 million for infrastructure. Fifty-two million dollars. As the hon. member has mentioned – and I still have that gleam in my eye – about a hundred million dollars a year for an environmental endowment and such important initiatives as Water for Life. I do know this. This government is committed to the strategy, we are acting on this strategy, and we will continue to act on this strategy in terms of protecting and sustaining the water that we enjoy in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A gleam in his eye isn't enough to protect the water of this province. When is the Water for Life strategy going to be fully funded?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as we speak it is being funded. It will continue to be funded today, tomorrow, and the next day because it's so important to us.

[Standing ovation as Premier Klein entered the Chamber]

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Fee-for-service Contracts

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another day, another skeleton. Public accounts documents from 2004 show that the Premier's former chief of staff, Rod Love, received $46,000 from Alberta Finance. Access to information requests regarding this contract failed to show adequate documentation for the services received. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Can the Finance minister tell us what reports Rod Love Consulting completed for the Department of Finance in order to receive 46,000 taxpayer dollars?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't tell him off the top of my head exactly what they all were, but I can tell you that there was a significant amount of advice that was provided verbally, some probably in written form. But I would remind the hon. member that when we contract for consulting services, much of the advice you receive might be strategic, might be in written form but quite often will be in verbal form as well. I will undertake to review this for the hon. member and respond.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that access to information documents failed to show any reports, studies, or significant frameworks for services provided by Rod Love, how can Albertans know that they got value for their hard-earned taxpayer dollars?

1:40

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans can know they got value for their hard-earned dollars when they look at the success of this province and what we have achieved. So advice that we've received from this consultant and others that help us formulate our policy and, more importantly, carry it out is invaluable to the people of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister have us believe that it is just a coincidence that Alberta Finance toughened up its contract policy just months after these access to information requests were filed?

Mrs. McClellan: What I would say to the hon. member and to all members is that I think you should be very, very encouraged by the fact that we review all of our contracting policies on a regular basis, and if there are ways that we can make those contracting policies better, we do. We did do a review of our contracting policies and others. We've made some changes in those, and I think the policies are very good. But I can say this, Mr. Speaker. That won't be the last review of the contracting policies. We will continue to do that as the province grows and evolves.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold Bar.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After purchasing 503 acres of land in the Edmonton restricted development area for $10.2 million in 1987 from the late Joseph Shekter, Ernie Isley, the Progressive Conservative public works minister at the time, stated: if you were to talk to some of the affected property owners in those RDA's, I don't think you'd get too many of them who would use the word "generous" with respect to my dealings. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Does this Progressive Conservative government now consider the sale of 160 acres of prime real estate in southwest Edmonton by Ernie Isley for $2 in 1988 to the late Joseph Shekter to be generous or very generous?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as we all know, this transaction happened back in 1987-88. We are continuing to research it. In due course, as we get all of the information, we will be able to share it with the House. I suspect that there is another side to the story as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister explain why this government sold an additional 100 acres of prime residential land at the same time in southwest Edmonton for $1, bringing the total now to 260 acres for $3. Did Mr. Shekter hit the jackpot?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the hon. member is bringing up another sale that happened back in the '80s. If he would be kind enough to give me the information as to the location, we would then be able to expedite the finding of all the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It will be tabled at the appropriate time.

Again to the same minister: were any of these parcels of land sold to the late Joseph Shekter for $3 pledged as security to refinance the West Edmonton Mall in 1994?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I have to repeat that this is virtually 20 years ago that these transactions occurred. Certainly, we don't have at our fingertips the information that the hon. member is asking for, but we are looking for it.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Wellness is pushing for private, two-tier health care with no regard for the impact on Albertans. The greatest harm of all will fall on those Albertans who live in small towns and rural areas, yet the minister has failed to answer concerns that this will leave rural areas with fewer doctors as they leave to make more money in the big cities. To the minister: other than vague personal guarantees and other trust me types of lines what, specifically, is going to keep doctors in small towns and rural communities if the third way proposals are adopted?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, fundamentally the one important thing to remember is that we indicated clearly in the policy document that we would not be moving on any access proposal if, in fact, it would in any way imperil a strong public health system. We indicated that whatever access proposal came forward would have to make sure that it did not damage the public health system, so that doesn't matter if it's in Lloydminster, in Grande Prairie, in Lethbridge, or in Calgary.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, what research has the minister or her department conducted to show the impact of the third way on rural health care?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the policy framework and our discussions of it have gone out to a number of people, and we've had considerable response from rural Alberta. I think the most important thing that we can do is follow up on the initiatives in the rural physician action plan to look at some of the other things like the medical bursary program, the endeavors that we've got under way with the minister of advanced learning to make sure that we are doing a recruitment in a proper way. We have been looking recently at funding for international medical graduates so that we can train more specialists and place them in other parts of Alberta. The alternative relationship plans with physicians enable us to draft business plans and agreements with physicians that support them being located in places where there are vacancies.

Mr. Speaker, we are making every effort on the side of the workforce initiative to make sure that we have the appropriate number of staff. In Calgary recently in discussions about the third-way policy Calgary, for example, identified that until at least 2010 they're quite optimistic that they can fill their spots. That's a good-news story because then we're less likely to lose physicians from rural or outposts to fill up the urban spaces.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is a plan in place. We are working on workforce on a number of fronts. Stay tuned. We'll continue to do that.

Mr. Mason: Sounds like a plan to move doctors to Calgary, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the minister has failed to do her homework and cannot tell us the impact of the third way on rural and small-town health care, will she now do the right thing and withdraw the third-way proposals altogether?

Ms Evans: No.

Physician Supply in Rural Alberta

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, in my constituency the Palliser health region is experiencing among other specialist shortages a shortage of anaesthetists. The regional hospital in Medicine Hat requires up to six of these specialists, and it's had to cancel over 200 surgeries over the past four weeks until more anaesthetists are recruited. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could this minister explain how this problem is being resolved?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this was a very unfortunate situation in Medicine Hat where we had illness, a personal leave, and a sudden resignation. When this occurred, at least half of the residents that were anaesthetists were not available to perform their duties. We've been working with the Palliser region, the health region in Medicine Hat, to resolve these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister outline what is being done to deal with the shortage of medical specialists, including anaesthetists, especially in meeting the health needs of rural Alberta?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the idea of a pool for physicians, both for rural family practitioners and specialists, is in place in Alberta, and that's one of the things that we've been evaluating. The Alberta Medical Association specialist locum program makes it easier for specialists to locate into regions when something like this occurs: when anaesthetists leave suddenly, for a placement, then, for five days up to a number of weeks. We are looking at this very favourable evaluation of this locum program to be able to assist in circumstances like we have found ourselves in in Medicine Hat.

Mr. Speaker, I've given a number of other answers on the previous question that might accommodate some of the responses.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is Alberta and Alberta Health and Wellness doing to train, recruit, and retain more medical students?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think it was evident in the budget this year that there were more physicians being educated at the University of Calgary. In the provincial nominee program since April 2002 280 foreign-trained physicians have been put in place. Eleven of these have been anaesthetists, and I understand that Palliser health region has availed themselves of some of these specialists.

Mr. Speaker, beyond getting the active plan for workforce in place, we're working with health regions to see if we can level the playing field a bit, especially in rural Alberta, so that access to physicians or attracting physicians from out of country, trained professionals to come in and fill spots, is something that will be more smoothly undertaken without the pullback from other urban areas to conflict with their progress.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 10 Provincial Court Judge D.C. Norheim found a Hinton area Métis man guilty of hunting without a licence. Judge Norheim found that the man could not claim the right to hunt without a licence under the interim Métis harvesting agreement. In his ruling the judge said, "I recognize that this defendant and others may have been misled by the actions of the province in stipulating in the Interim Métis Harvesting Agreements that any Métis would be able to harvest wildlife anywhere in the province." My question is for the minister of aboriginal affairs. With the harvesting accord now in shambles, what does the minister tell Alberta's Métis population now? What are they supposed to do?

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware of the decision that was rendered. At this point we can't discuss it because the appeal period has not elapsed.

Mr. Tougas: This dates back to March 10.

How does the minister respond to the judge's ruling that "the IMHA purports to extend to all Métis in the province, for all areas of the province, the rights defined by the Supreme Court in Powley . . . It cannot do so." How do you respond to that?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again I cannot respond to what's going to happen or could happen, and as a matter of fact, if the time frame hasn't elapsed, I cannot discuss anything relative to that.

But on that note, let me just talk about the Métis. First of all, they come at me saying that they did not support anything to do with Métis, and now all of a sudden here they are. They can't suck and blow at the same time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Tougas: That's not true at all. Never said any such thing.

Now, since the minister has clearly botched the writing of this accord, will the minister now hand this important negotiation to another of the signatories of the agreement, Sustainable Resource Development or Community Development, who might actually get it right?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Justice minister speak on this issue if he wishes, but let me just talk about process. He is taking the lead on this issue. [interjections] Well, either you want to listen or you don't.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Calahasen: Just so that you know, Mr. Speaker, let me first of all talk about what has been going on in terms of the issue. We are working with the Métis, and it will be decided in terms of when the information comes forward from the MLA committee.

On the IMHAs, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't only the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development that was involved in the negotiation. There was also Sustainable Resource Development. There was also the Minister of Justice's department who was involved. It was not only the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, and I want to make sure that every Albertan understands that because the misinformation that has been given by a lot of people is really wrong. I think that, first of all, it's important for Albertans to really understand what has been going on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Internet Luring Related to Children

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Justice. It's been reported that adult men are using the Internet to lure young girls into sexual conversation and invitation. Recently our hard-working police forces have found some of these men and charged them, but it seems that the charges are not holding up in court. Will the minister strengthen Alberta's laws so that we can put these child molesters in jail?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm aware of the specific case that the hon. member is referring to. It has just recently been decided, and the Crown prosecutor is currently reviewing a potential appeal of the matter. So stay tuned. We'll be able to tell you more about that particular case as we go forward.

The provisions under which these charges are laid are Criminal Code, which is a federal jurisdiction, and therefore ultimately we have to work with the federal government, as we do, to make changes to the Criminal Code or suggest changes, and that's an ongoing process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for that answer. Given that we have a new, common-sense Conservative federal government, will the minister now lobby the feds to raise the age of consent to 16 so as to help curb the Internet child luring?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would be happy to hear that even when we had a Liberal government, this government lobbied for an increase in the age of consent to 16, and we will continue to work towards that goal, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to hear that, but what else can the Department of Justice do to assure the parents of Alberta that their kids are safe when using the Internet?

Mr. Stevens: Your question raises a very important matter because the Internet has given rise to a new breed of crime. Alberta was the first jurisdiction in Canada to have a special prosecutor. We did that in I believe February of 2003, and since that point in time our prosecutors work closely with the police to very good success. I believe it was two weeks ago that there was a press conference in Chicago indicating that a national and international ring of child pornographers was busted. I can tell you that this particular budget that we have has provision for additional Crown prosecutors, some of whom will be put into this particular area of specialty.

Lastly, I can tell the hon. member that while there are an increasing number of cases, the success ratio of our prosecuting team is at present in excess of 90 per cent, which is an incredible success ratio in the area of prosecution of crime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Affordability of Postsecondary Education

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike their predecessors, the elected student leaders I met with again today are determined to convince this government that enough is enough. Tuition and debt loads are too high, and the cost of postsecondary education is a genuine barrier for too many students. I along with these students want to make sure that the government delivers on the Premier's promise that the new tuition fee policy will be the most affordable in the nation. To the Minister of Advanced Education: given that the draft tuition policy has apparently been delayed again until May and that he may not be the Minister of Advanced Education after June 1, could he please tell us what becomes of the draft policy and his promised consultation process?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, a bit hypothetical: presumably, maybe, who knows?

Mr. Hancock: I was just going to say, Mr. Speaker, that the presumptions are invalid.

Mr. Taylor: Can the minister perhaps guarantee that under the new policy tuition fees in Alberta will be lower than they are today? A simple yes or no will suffice.

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. It would be impossible to make that guarantee.

Mr. Taylor: Is the minister prepared today to say no to the flawed income contingent loan repayment schemes that may ease repayment but which actually increase total costs for students?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I've always found it prudent that when you ask knowledgeable people to form a committee and to examine all the possible options that might be available and to make recommendations about which ones are most appropriate for students in our province, to make sure that affordability is key, that every Albertan has the opportunity to access an education and can afford that education, one ought not to make presumptions about the conclusions until they've actually got the recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are heartened to see the glimmer of hope that the long-standing Canada/United States softwood lumber dispute may be on its final legs. Last week President Bush and Prime Minister Harper discussed the softwood lumber dispute at the summit meeting in Cancún, Mexico. Over the weekend the U.S. ambassador, David Wilkins, predicted that the dispute would be resolved before the year-end. My question is to the Acting Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Does the Alberta government see these developments as an indication that an end to this dispute is finally in sight?

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this is really a long-standing dispute. I wish I could give an easy answer, but that's not basically what's happening. We welcome, however, President Bush's intervention in this respect. I know that Albertans and the Alberta government will continue to work with the Canadian government, with other provinces and, of course, industry to prepare for the resumption of negotiations, and I know that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is also involved to find a solution.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's bottom line is this, and it's unchanged. Industry must be guaranteed access to the U.S. markets, and number two, duties collected by the U.S. must be returned to Canadian industry. In the end any resolution of the dispute depends largely on the U.S. industry's willingness to settle this dispute.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Yesterday the World Trade Organization issued a softwood ruling against Canada. What significance does this ruling hold for the Alberta forest products producers?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the World Trade Organization ruling does not weaken our resolve to work with industry for a fair and just settlement. It does not stop us from continuing to insist on Alberta getting the $500 million in duties back to Alberta and into the economy. Yesterday's decision did not rule on the validity of the duties. It focused on the formula alone. That's all it did. The NAFTA panel has already agreed and determined that the duties are not justified. When I speak with my federal and provincial counterparts on forestry in the upcoming weeks, I will ensure that the concerns of the Alberta forest industry are brought forward to help solve this dispute.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Fort McMurray Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The citizens of Fort McMurray are being sacrificed by this government's insatiable appetite for unsustainable, without infrastructure support, oil sands extraction. While billions of dollars in royalties flow south, scarce dollars remain or return. This message was echoed by residents at their doorsteps and in a series of our Liberal caucus outreach meetings last week in Fort Mac. My first question is to the Acting Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How much has the much-needed upgrading of highway 881 been shelved completely or put on hold while the twinning of head-on highway 63 takes place?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there is good progress being made on highway 881, and none of it has been put on the shelf. There are sectors, the overlay, that are going to be completed this year and sections that are going to be completely restructured this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Fort McMurray people will be pleased to hear that.

My second question is again to the acting minister. What is your ministry doing to address Fort McMurray residents' concerns about the ever-increasing volume of industrial traffic going through the centre of the city, with the potential for toxic spills?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, certainly, this is a big issue for Fort McMurray. There are a number of things that we're doing. We're looking at how more traffic could go around. We're also looking at the possibility of some rail service that would go across the river and up into some of those areas. That, of course, would alleviate a lot of the heavy traffic that is currently in the centre of the city.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that the sons and daughters of long-time Fort McMurray residents as well as teachers, nurses, RCMP, and municipal employees cannot afford to buy or rent a home in Fort McMurray, what is your ministry doing to make affordable housing available?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've addressed in the Assembly before, we have worked hard in Fort McMurray to ensure that we have a thousand acres of land come available on the market in 90-day increments. We have one parcel that has been completely through the request for proposals, which we anticipate will provide over 2,000 housing units, possibly more, as we work with planning with the municipality of Fort McMurray because of the increase in the density of that area. We are currently in the process of a second RFP, and I will speak more to that in my estimates today.

The Speaker: That's correct. The hon. minister's estimates are up today, and it's usually not normal to raise a question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After meeting with skepticism and outright opposition from average Albertans, the Minister of Health and Wellness finally found a receptive audience last week at a Calgary Chamber of Commerce luncheon cosponsored by Radiology Consultants, which runs a for-profit MRI and CT scan clinic. The minister finally found a group who agreed with her ideas. My question is to the minister. Why did the minister go through a sham consultation process, in which she claimed that no good ideas for fixing public health care were brought forward, if she intended to only listen to groups, like the Calgary Chamber of Commerce, which agreed with her preconceived notions?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, at some point in this Legislature I hope to table the list of people that I've met with across Alberta. They include seniors, community leagues. They include several people that gathered one day in Forest Lawn from various parts of the community: Millican, Ogden, a number of other points. They include people who represent municipalities as mayors and reeves. They include people who represent the professions – the physicians, the optometrists – people who came in and discussed glyconutrients with me. There is a broad range of people that have made representation.

In the case of the Calgary Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Speaker, they provided a release in February that talked about the third-way initiatives. They invited me to their health committee. They are the only chamber of commerce that has a health committee, I believe, across Alberta for sure, but it seems to me that it goes much broader than that. They had focused on the third way from a number of initiatives. So I met with them, and I was invited to speak about the third way at their luncheon.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the point that I was making to the minister: given that she indicated to them that there were no good ideas previously from all her consultation, will she admit that the whole consultation process was just political window dressing and that she's only listening to people like the Calgary Chamber of Commerce privatizers who happen to agree with her?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, what I said – and I should clarify. I didn't say that there were no good ideas. I said that in terms of sustainability, in terms of the kinds of things that would ensure that our health care system would go on for decades to come, in terms of innovative things that would look over the hill and challenge us to a higher level of thinking, in terms of things that would improve accessibility and be a departure from what we've provided in the provincial health policy framework, there were very few. Some of them that did come forward that were good ideas reflected on different ways to train, different ways to progress on prevention and wellness strategies, and different ways to build upon something that we're already doing, which is building upon the access proposals to expand to cardio, cancer, cataracts, et cetera.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minister just talked about the consultation. If she's truly – truly – listening to Albertans, will she now agree to pull the proposals on private, two-tier insurance and doctors working in both systems and concentrate instead on proposals to make the public system more sustainable, like a pharmaceutical savings agency and primary care reform?

Ms Evans: As part of Getting on with Better Health Care, that was published last July, the pharma strategy and a number of other strategies are already in place and are working. They are not as complete as they will be, but we're making significant progress in the numbers of ministries that are cosponsoring support for pharma purchases. We're doing a number of things already, Mr. Speaker, that we've launched that are part of the health policy framework on areas that people have agreed on.

In terms of why we would still look at doctors opting in and opting out and working in part and what we define as the middle ground, I think it's clear that what we want to do is protect the public system, reinforce the importance of people serving the public system in terms of on call and extra supports. We don't want to lose those physicians, Mr. Speaker, to the private system.

I would be very pleased to sit and explain this to people and the detail of how we intend to advance that if, in fact, we move forward on this particular initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

2:10 Criminal Justice System

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following some high-profile criminal cases in Alberta, Albertans are starting to be concerned with bail being issued to the accused. Would the Minister of Justice and Attorney General outline the judicial guidelines under which our judges and justices are now allowed to issue bail?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. Briefly, please.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, briefly, Mr. Speaker, but it is a good question because people read about this in the paper on a daily basis, and they'd like to know how the administration of justice occurs.

The Criminal Code deals with the circumstances surrounding bail, and the Crown, which is prosecuting the case, must prove to the judge on the evidence that's available at the time of the application that it's necessary for a particular accused to be detained, one, to ensure his attendance in court; two, to protect the safety of the public – in other words, to establish that there's a substantial risk that another crime will be committed if the accused is out – and lastly, to maintain the confidence of the public in the administration of justice, having regard to the circumstances of the case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in view of these concerns some Albertans have taken the initiative to file petitions with the minister, MLAs, and the Crown prosecutors' office. Can the minister advise what result such petitions have on the actual dispensation of bail?

Mr. Stevens: I appreciate that the hon. member has had petitions raised in his area, that matters have occurred there that have, you know, engendered a lot of interest from the public. The matter of a petition I think is quite appropriate for the public to engage in. It's part of the expression of interest that we recognize here in the House. It is something that members can receive from their constituents and is quite appropriate to file here. I would encourage, given the nature of what we're talking about, that the petitions also be filed with the federal government because it is a Criminal Code matter.

However, as it relates to the administration of justice, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for all members, all Albertans to understand that the judiciary is independent, that the Crown prosecutors' office, indeed, is independent of political considerations, and that a petition per se will have no influence whatsoever in a particular case that is before the courts relative to the issue of bail or any other matter.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, without interfering with the independence of the judiciary, how can Albertans constructively express their potential dissatisfaction with sentences or bail?

Mr. Stevens: I think that a petition, letter writing, and so on are appropriate, but what we have as politicians is an opportunity to dialogue with other AGs across the country, to dialogue with the federal Minister of Justice on the rules of criminal law, whether it be bail or conditional sentencing or the like, and to the extent that we determine that the rules we currently have fall short of what public expectation is – in other words, they aren't working the way we think they ought to – we can lobby through federal/provincial/territorial meetings, that are held on a regular basis, to try and effect change. That is a long-term prospect, but it all starts with the public indicating that they think there is need for a change, and then people will review it and determine whether or not there is some basis for that concern.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities in Alberta are struggling to provide services due to limited financial resources. In areas like infrastructure and police funding Alberta's municipalities are being left on their own to foot the bill while the provincial government, awash in resource revenue, still cannot come up with a long-term, predictable funding solution. One-time unconditional grants are not the answer. My questions are all to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister explain how one-time grants through the targeted investment initiative will provide long-term financial stability and security for Alberta's municipalities? There is no guarantee from one year to the next.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I have explained to this member and to all members of the House a number of times the process that the government is engaged in right now. That is a process of working with members of the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability to put together the long-term plans and long-term, reliable sources of funding that the member makes reference to. In the meantime, I think it's appropriate, and the government has already indicated their strong support for municipalities through a couple of programs. One the member makes reference to, which deals with our smaller municipalities, but the big one, obviously, is $3 billion in funding that flows through to municipalities to deal with their municipal infrastructure needs on an interim basis until we can put that long-term plan in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So the next question would be: how long would those municipalities have to wait before that long-term plan is in effect?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister's council has been advised by me that I expect them to have at least the basis of their recommendations in place by late this summer, early in the fall so that necessary changes, if possible, can be made during the spring session of next year's Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain why this government will not sign a memorandum of understanding with Alberta's municipalities granting them full budget participation in those critical decisions and those areas that really affect them directly, involve them as partners?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the member might accompany me to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities convention this year in June because at that meeting last year Alberta was being shown as the example of excellence and participation and co-operation between the province and municipalities. We have a commitment to our municipalities to work with them, and we take that commitment very seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Provincial Water Supply

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An earlier question today referred to Dr. David Schindler's report. I would like to further expand on Dr. Schindler's concerns. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that southern Alberta has had a long history of drought, which significantly impacts industry and farmers, what is the government doing to prepare for water shortages due to drought?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During a drought as part of our Water for Life strategy we bring together our farmers, communities, and industry to ensure that we have an adequate water supply. The natural steps, I want to say, will be this: as we collect that information from over 200 weather stations that we have, we need to be examining what are the other options for storage, such as off-stream storage. Also, part of our Water for Life strategy is on-stream storage. Now, for those members that's just a fancy way of saying the potential construction of another dam.

To be quite direct, as we go forward, we will be working with our watershed councils, such as in the Bow River and the Battle River and all over Alberta, to ensure that we have the best information possible to deal with the very serious question that Dr. Schindler has raised.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the minister of agriculture. Given that Dr. Schindler's report also points to agriculture as one of the biggest users of water in southern Alberta, what is the government doing to limit agriculture's impact on this precious resource?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do know that agriculture has an impact on the water supplies in the province, but we also know how important water is to the livelihood of agriculture in this province and to thousands of farm families in the province. Irrigation is certainly a major user of water in the province. It does so, though, in a very efficient fashion. In fact, in the last 30 years the irrigation sector has made huge efficiency gains in the order of 50 to 70 per cent, and it is continuing to make further gains in terms of the expertise that we use in irrigation and, really, the science of conservation of water in the agricultural sector. No one in the province would depend on water more than those trying to grow crops using it. We're very good stewards of the land, and we'll continue to be so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

2:20 Retention of Provincial Government Employees

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. MLAs received a 5.23 per cent salary increase on April Fool's Day. Most provincial employees will receive a 3 per cent increase this year. The private sector and especially the conventional oil and gas industry is offering far more and with lots of extras. They're grabbing workers. Employee retention is an issue everywhere in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What measures does the government have in place to retain Alberta government employees in the face of greener pastures and better offers in the private sector?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that is a very, very good question. It is a very important question because without those employees this government would probably not be able to operate. When it comes to representation by their unions, we have what are called collective agreements – this person is aware of that – and 99.4 per cent of the collective agreements, of the 12,000 or so collective agreements, are settled without interruption. Therefore, I feel that what we have in place – to do appraisals, recommend increases, et cetera, et cetera, are all in place already.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A second question to the same minister: what will this government do to maintain proper government services such as water safety and environmental regulation if it cannot replace employees lured to the private sector?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, just in the last couple of months we had 25,000 more people move to Alberta, and this member thinks that we can't operate the province. We have over a $27 billion budget a year in ministries in our government to operate the province of Alberta, and we have the best – the best – civil servants anywhere across the country.

Mr. Backs: They are great civil servants, Mr. Speaker.

The third question to the same minister: will the minister finally catch up the 5 per cent rollbacks for all employees in the public sector who have never had that returned?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I'll monitor that situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's become clear in recent years that there is a water crisis across not only Alberta but the prairie provinces and into the Northwest Territories. We are seeing a summertime flow reduction in our major river systems, between 30, 60, or even 70 per cent of the water that we depend on for our urban and rural areas. The questions are to the Minister of Environment. When will the minister bring out his Water for Life strategy and ensure that, in fact, we're going to have water for the future for our agriculture sector, our industrial sector, and for our urban areas? When are we going to see the Water for Life strategy unveiled?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question, but perhaps I can speak in this way. First and foremost, I want to thank the Minister of Finance because in her most recent budget it was announced that $175 million will be used for our Water for Life strategy. That $175 million is clearly an important signal in terms of the money we are spending relative to protecting this valuable resource.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister: considering that using dams and water diversion projects has been disproven as a means by which we can in fact retain water, will this minister please tell me whether or not he's willing to use dams as a way to preserve the water systems here in the future, or will he look for a conservation system by which to ensure water for the future in this province?

Mr. Boutilier: I think it's a very important point, and in fact there are three points to it. Number one, the Water for Life strategy indicates that by the year 2015 the usage of water in our province will be improved by 30 per cent. Albertans, though, have an attitude that we can even do better than that. I'm certain, in terms of their daily practices that the minister of agriculture talked about earlier, that will be and continues to be a key component of Water for Life. Also, though, step two is that of off-stream storage. How do we build reservoirs to be able to capture yet at the same time meet the obligations to our neighbouring provinces? I believe that we can do both. Also, point three, a dam would be a last resort after exploring, of course, these first two important steps that I've indicated this afternoon.

Mr. Eggen: Well, considering that the main increase in water usage in this province is for large industrial projects such as the oil sands, will the minister, then, commit to a conservation system that will reduce the water consumption of large industrial projects such as the oil sands, where most of that water, in fact, is being lost?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say this. In actual fact the water consumption that is being done by development in the oil sands is significant, but I also might add that their recycling, their conservation, and their off-stream storage that they have today are also excellent examples of how they have been working with our Water for Life strategy. I am imploring them and others: with the development that's taking place, we will protect so that nothing – absolutely nothing – will damage the Athabasca basin, where the water is drawn from. We will ensure that 25 and 50 years from now I will answer to my grandson and granddaughter that we have done our job by protecting the basin and this important resource we call blue gold.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today in the question period there were 92 questions and answers. That's very remarkable.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: I do have some comments that I do want to make with respect to a number of questions.

First of all, the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-

Gold Bar. I would refer all hon. members to Beauchesne 410(6), that basically indicates that the chair should give “the greatest possible freedom . . . to Members consistent with the other rules and practices” in their questions. Having said that, I then want to take the member to Beauchesne 409(6), which says: “A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.” Beauchesne 409(7), “A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it,” and 410(16), which says that “Ministers may be questioned only in relation to current portfolios.” The chair has listened attentively now on two occasions, yesterday and today, with respect to the questions. Unless there’s a connection to the current environment of 2006, I don’t know how we can proceed with a third question of something happening 20 years ago.

Now, to both the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, I’ll expect that because both of you used quotations today, you will be tabling the source of those quotations in the House at the appropriate time for tablings.

As a result of the discretion given to the earlier two members that I’ve just mentioned, some discretion then was given to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs with respect to his question because Beauchesne 408(1)(c) says that questions should “not require an answer involving a legal opinion.” I think we were right on the edge with respect to a legal opinion, but that was given because of discretion given earlier in the give-and-take of what we deal with on a daily basis.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker’s Ruling

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 13(2) I’m wondering if I could ask the Speaker to explain his ruling on 409(6). My understanding is that the question is to be within the administrative competence of the minister to whom the question is directed, is responsible for the present ministry. The question was directed towards the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, for which that individual is minister. Your ruling seemed to indicate that one could not ask a question about something in the past. Could you clarify, please?

The Speaker: Well, 409(6) basically talks about “for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.” There has to be some flexibility given, as there was by the chair yesterday when he listened very attentively, and he listened very attentively today as well. But this is the year 2006. The current minister has only been the minister in this portfolio for some period of time, and if we’re talking about events that happened 20 years ago and they’re being asked of a current minister today, then what is the purpose of the Public Accounts Committee, which meets on a weekly basis and is supposed to review the events of the previous fiscal year with respect to the Auditor General’s reports and the like? I mean, if we’re going to stand up in this question period and a minister has to account for something that happened in 1923, then where’s the relevancy and the currency and the urgency that we find in all of these?

Citation 408 (1) says that such questions should

- (a) be asked only in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer.

If we’re going to go back 20 years or 40 years or 60 years, hon. member, I don’t know how that works, quite frankly.

So the explanation has been given. I said that there would be some flexibility. Tie it together. We move forward.

2:30 Vignettes from the Assembly’s History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I introduce the first of a number to participate today, let me fulfill you with some more knowledge about the previous history of the province of Alberta. The first provincial election held in Alberta on November 9, 1905, was governed by the regulations in the Ordinances of the North-West Territories. It was not until 1909 that the province enacted its own election legislation with An Act respecting Elections of Members of the Legislative Assembly. This act, like its predecessor, indicated that the Clerk of the Executive Council was responsible for overseeing the administration of general elections in the province.

The responsibility for administering general elections in Alberta remained with the Clerk of the Executive Council until The Election Statutes Amendment Act, 1972. Under this new legislation the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, a nonpartisan officer of the Assembly, took on administrative responsibilities associated with elections. This legislative change coincided with an administrative change which saw the appointment of two different individuals to the position of the Clerk of the Executive Council and the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. Although the two roles themselves were always distinct, it was the practice in Alberta from 1935 to 1973 to have the same individual serve in both offices concurrently.

It was not until 1977 that legislation came into effect to create an officer of the Legislature, the Chief Electoral Officer. Appointed by a special committee of Members of the Legislative Assembly, the office of the Chief Electoral Officer continues to administer all by-elections and general elections for the province of Alberta.

Since 1977 four individuals have occupied the role of Chief Electoral Officer: Kenneth Wark from 1977 to 1985, Patrick Ledgerwood from 1985 to 1994, Dermot Whelan from 1994 to 1998, and O. Brian Fjeldheim from 1998 to 2005. The Legislative Assembly will soon deal with the appointment of Alberta’s fifth Chief Electoral Officer.

In 30 seconds I’ll call upon the first.

In the interim might we proceed with Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly my son Mr. Wayne Prins. He’s seated in the visitors’ gallery. He’s down from Fort McMurray, where he works very hard recruiting and training workers for the oil sands business. I’d like him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Members’ Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m particularly proud to celebrate the 300th graduation from the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre in my constituency. Matt and his family graduated from a life of addiction, pain, and desperation to a life full of hope and new opportunities. Congratulations to Matt and family.

Mr. Speaker, in 2005 an evaluation of the AARC program was conducted by a noted addiction program evaluation authority, Dr. Michael Patton, PhD. He studied and interviewed 100 consecutive cases and found that 85 per cent of the graduates were still clean and sober after five years. Those are enviable results, and Dr. Dean Vause and his staff are to be congratulated. The dedication and caring of the parent support group is also commendable and a major factor in the success of the AARC program.

I'm excited to say, Mr. Speaker, that AARC is currently in the ground on an expansion project that will see their facilities double to about 70 spaces. The project, estimated to cost around $8 million, is more than fully funded through fundraising efforts of the board, chaired by Mrs. Ann McCaig. Congratulations to Ann, her board, and all volunteers and supporters.

AARC has rebuilt 300-plus addicted lives and that of their families. Well over a thousand souls have been touched. But, unfortunately, waiting lists are growing, and demand is accelerating. Addicted teens take drugs to feel good, Mr. Speaker. AARC rebuilds self-esteem and teaches addicts to feel good about themselves by harnessing the power within and sometimes external higher powers.

Hon. members, please help me thank and honour this marvellous miracle in Calgary-Egmont.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Family Law Legislation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night in the Legislature there was a debate about grandparents' rights with respect to having contact with their grandchildren. Listening to the debate, one can see that this is a very difficult and sensitive issue that has no simple answer. In response to this and many other difficult family law issues the government developed the new Family Law Act, that came into effect on October 1, 2005. The idea behind this new legislation was to simplify legal procedures for families in distress. It is part of the Alberta Justice family law strategy aimed at creating a simple, integrated, and effective family law system that promotes the well-being of children and families.

This new Family Law Act updates family law and makes it easier and simpler for Albertans to understand. It protects the best interests of the child when families break down. It encourages parents to work together to reduce the effect of conflict on children and to reduce the emotional and financial costs to families during these troubled times. It supports, where appropriate, ways of resolving conflicts outside the courtroom.

The Family Law Act is supported by services to assist families as well as streamlined court procedures. Section 35 of the Family Law Act has attempted to make the process easier for grandparents whose access or contact with their grandchild has been interrupted as a result of the separation of their guardians.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good law, that intends to help families in distress. As with all new laws there may be some sections that require a little tweaking. However, I believe this bill is succeeding with the goal of making life a little easier for families during difficult times.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Fort McMurray Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray is caught between the push and pull of two titans whose policies and practices directly determine the quality of daily life of its residents. The Alberta government plays the dual role of slum landlord and carpetbagger. It keeps raising the rent without maintaining the tenement's infrastructure. When the building along with its tenants collapses, the landlord moves on.

The huge oil sands companies can quite legitimately claim that they have paid their dues to the government. They have lived up to the conditions, economic and environmental, that the government has required of them. Are they a good neighbour? To what extent do they share their growing good fortune with the citizens of Fort McMurray? Is their presence contributing to or taking away from the community?

City councillors accurately reflect the mood of their constituents. They are frustrated by the imbalance between the government's new oil sands project approvals and its failure to maintain and expand the most basic of infrastructure requirements: roads, hospitals, schools, waste and water treatment plants.

Every individual and group we spoke to last Monday and Tuesday, whether on their doorstep or in a series of outreach community meetings, despaired of the lack of affordable housing. The constant stress that temporary and permanent residents of Fort McMurray are feeling is showing up in the classrooms, in the divorce courts, in the hospitals, in the shelters, and at the food bank. Both government and industry have a responsibility to restore balance by promoting smart, sustainable, infrastructure-supported growth in the Fort Mac region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Democratic Reform

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a day when political change is in the air in Ottawa and Alberta, I want to speak to the question of political parties in the democratic process. I am a member of the Alberta Liberal Party, but I do not speak primarily as a Liberal. I speak as a concerned citizen, an Albertan, and a Canadian in a world where partisan differences, like ethnic and religious ones, are secondary to our shared humanity.

Political parties began in an attempt to win control of the Crown, to make it accountable to parliament, but in Britain much of parliament's power was held by a hereditary upper house. Responsible government began in Canada in the 1840s, when the elected assembly won control of the Executive Council from the appointed governor. Strong party discipline was the only way to do this; otherwise, the government could play on factions to control the agenda.

Today the situation is different. Parties often hold power at the expense of citizens. It is time to recognize this, to focus on MLAs' responsibilities to their constituents, to increase the role of legislative committees, to make greater use of private members' bills, to permit debate that genuinely makes a difference.

I belong to a party that has no wish to be a 40-year dynasty. We want to change the system so no party can do that. Alberta needs to open government as we have opened the marketplace to citizen initiative. Let us look to a better way so that Alberta can lead in democracy as well as economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

2:40 Canadian Senior Broomball Championships

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the organizers, volunteers, and more than 500 athletes who were involved in the 30th Canadian Senior Broomball Championships, held in the great city of Leduc within my constituency of Leduc-Beaumont-Devon from March 27 to April 1.

These athletes came from across the country: from Quebec,

Newfoundland and Labrador, B.C., the Northwest Territories, and across the prairies. They came to work and they came to play, for this annual gathering was not just an athletic tournament but also a convention for delegates of the Canadian Broomball Federation. Over a period of four days approximately 66 games of broomball were played at Leduc's Black Gold Centre to determine the best in the land. The host teams from Alberta came from across the province: the Lethbridge Panthers, Leduc Fire, Edmonton Express on the men's side and two ladies teams, Edmonton Wasabi and the Calgary Bullets.

Mr. Speaker, like all good hosts, our athletes allowed their guests to enjoy the glory. This year the men's championship was won by the Bruno Axemen from Saskatchewan, and the women's championship was claimed by the defending champions, the QC Huskies from Quebec.

I would ask the members to join me in congratulating the organizing committee from Leduc broomball for staging a successful tournament and convention – Nathan Pountney, Jason Walters, Patrick Gillis, David Ramsey, Sharon Fenske, and Patrick Kesler – as well as a host of volunteers and all who made this championship possible.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to inform the hon. members that AADAC has answered the call from Albertans to offer more addiction services for youth and their families.

Here's some of the good news. AADAC has received $19 million in new funding this year, and that's going to go a long way in allowing the enhancement of services and continuing operation of 25 area offices, three urban clinics, three adult residential treatment centres, two adult detox facilities, two youth service centres, and two youth residential and detox facilities. This increase brings AADAC's annual operating budget to $95 million, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure you that the dollars are being utilized wisely.

In addition to sustaining AADAC's ability to meet demands through regular operations, of which two new AADAC offices will be opening this summer, it will also provide funding support for 37 different nonprofit organizations across the province and add two new agencies to the network. These new services will build on considerable work already under way as AADAC follows through on commitments for the Alberta drug strategy.

In terms of youth focus, a total of $14 million will be invested across the province to expand services. It will ensure that treatment is available to families who are experiencing problems associated with alcohol and other drugs, including crystal meth.

Key priorities for the upcoming year include, number one, doubling the number of voluntary treatment beds for youth by expanding programs to locations in southern and northern Alberta; number two, expanding AADAC's continuum in youth services in implementing detox and assessment services in support of the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, or PCHAD, which comes into force July 1, and that will mean additional beds in five sites across Alberta; and, number three, continuing to build relationships with regional health authorities and other provincial partners to deliver addiction services in innovative ways, including continued work on concurrent disorders. Other projects include an aboriginal youth treatment pilot in Edmonton, working with national partners, and an expanded public awareness campaign on crystal meth and with schools.

Thank you and thank you to all hon. members for support of AADAC.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table a petition signed by 16 students and staff of Glendale middle school in Red Deer. This petition urges the government of Alberta to "introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the . . . increase in teenage smoking in Alberta as reported by Health Canada."

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 207

Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 207, Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising From Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling today is a letter from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Mrs. Shauna Warrilow, LPN, in which she states her opposition to the third way. She highlights the issue of staff shortages and the growing demand on nurses to work longer shifts and put in overtime. She questions the rationale for wanting to go private and doesn't want the government to add to people's pain and suffering by requiring them to pay more for health care.

The second tabling is also with regard to the third way: a copy of a letter to the Premier from Ms Cheryl Touchings, in which she states her support for the Canada Health Act and her objection to any measure which could undermine Alberta's public health care system. She opposes allowing physicians to work in both public and private spheres and forcing Albertans to acquire private health insurance. Lastly, she comments that personal income should not determine the level of care one gets in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Arising out of my questions in question period today to the Finance Minister, I'm pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of documents obtained through the access to information for services provided by Rod Love Consulting. As I had indicated during question period, these documents are full of expense accounts and invoices from Rod Love Consulting; however, contain no reports, studies, or significant frameworks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have letters from constituents. The first letter is from Sherry Ewing, in which she is expressing her extreme disappointment at the extreme short-sightedness of the government in not funding full-day kindergarten in our province.

My second letter is from Rod McConnell, stating that now that Alberta has dramatically increased the amount of money in its coffers, how much of this money is actually going to be in research, development, and deployment of alternative energy sources for this province?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, do you have a tabling?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I do. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Several tablings. The first is from Ileene Breton: a letter to both the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Premier with her fears that the third way will lead to excellent private care for some and a poor public system for the rest.

A letter from Joan Buhr, appreciating the Official Opposition's attempts to fight the third-way proposal.

A letter from Brian Burke, sharing his disgust with the Alberta government's desire to privatize out the health care system.

A letter from Dave Burkhart, noting that the health policy framework is simply a play for profits by American insurance and health care corporations.

A letter from S. Burrows, expressing an opinion that the major reason for long wait times is a serious shortage of health care professionals.

From Elizabeth Carmichael, feeling that seniors, the disabled, and anyone with a pre-existing condition will be the victims of private health insurance.

From Catherine Carson, noting that the competitive advantage not just for Alberta but Canada in attracting transnational and global corporations to set up shop is our publicly funded system.

From Aaron Chubb, noting that the government is keeping taxes low for oil companies while claiming that we don't have enough money for health care.

And, finally, Darrell Clarkson, noting that he's a senior, a father, a grandfather, and someone who's taken time to research and study health care with a very long and thorough report on health care.

Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a historical land title certificate from Alberta Registries for the short legal on 4;25;52;9;SE. In 1988 the registered owner of this property was the Galfour Development Corporation in Edmonton.

The second document I have today is from the Alberta Government Services land titles office. It is a document indicating that the value of a parcel of a land, a hundred acres of which is developable, is $800,000, and it was sold by the public works minister at the time, Mr. Ernie Isley, for $1. Again, this transaction occurred in 1988.

My third tabling is an article from the Edmonton Journal titled New Documents Show Middleman Assisted in 1994 WEM Refinancing, and this was part of my question today.

For the record, the quote that I used in my question earlier in question period today, Mr. Speaker, was from a tabling that I provided to all members of this House yesterday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, do you have a tabling?

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the judgment of the Hon. Judge D.C. Norheim, which I discussed earlier today in question period.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter from Sandra Stadnek of Wetaskiwin. Ms Stadnek is very concerned about the lack of details forthcoming about the government's so-called third-way reforms. In particular, she doesn't want to see physicians fast-tracking patients who are paying privately while allowing patients in the public system to wait.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Rashpal Sehmy. Mr. Sehmy spent 12 hours on March 22 protesting in front of the Legislature to show his support for public health care. He strongly believes that a person's wealth should not determine the quality of care that they receive.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before going to the next step in the Routine, I'd just like to draw your attention to the Order Paper. There's a slight change in today's Order Paper. Bill 15, International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act, now in Committee of the Whole and introduced by the former minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, now appears under the name of the Acting Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Seniors and Community Supports

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to be here to present the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports business plan and budget. It really is hard to believe that this is already the second budget for this ministry, and I think that the results we've achieved during the last 16 months speak for themselves. Together with our community partners we've accomplished a great deal on behalf of the people that this ministry serves: our seniors, Albertans with disabilities, and low-income Albertans who require housing services. I'll spend most of my time this afternoon outlining the key programs that assist these Albertans and how we are supporting those programs through Budget 2006.

This is certainly a good-news budget for this ministry. As I'll discuss shortly, the funding that we've been allocated will go a long way in making a difference for the people that we serve. As minister it is my responsibility to present the ministry's budget, but as I highlight our programs through this afternoon, you'll see that the ministry is more about the people we serve, the way we have developed comprehensive programs that are flexible and responsive to their unique needs.

Once again, I believe that our business plan for Seniors and Community Supports was the very best that it could be. It was a challenge bringing it together last year, and this year we were able to enhance it even further. Our ministry's vision is for "a vibrant province where all Albertans live with dignity as full participants in society and experience the best possible well-being and independence." Our mission, Mr. Chairman, is to "provide and co-ordinate support, services, programs, information, and strategic planning that contribute to the inclusion, well-being, and independence of seniors, persons with disabilities, and persons in need of housing supports."

Before I discuss our program areas in detail, I'd like to briefly mention to you our core businesses. The first is to "provide targeted financial and health-related benefits," which reflects the work we do on behalf of low-income seniors and persons with disabilities. Our second core business is to "provide a range of housing options and supports for lower-income Albertans," which speaks for itself, Mr. Chairman. Our third core business is to "provide and co-ordinate a range of supports for living in the community."

Our ministry's program expense budget for the coming 2006-07 fiscal year is $1.8 billion, which is an increase of nearly $190 million, or almost 12 per cent over last year. That's a significant increase in support of our programs, Mr. Chairman, and I'm very thankful for that.

Prior to being appointed to this portfolio, I remember the words of our former minister responsible for seniors, our Deputy Premier, and the ones that stand out for me are how she'd say that Alberta has one of the most comprehensive packages of seniors' benefits in the entire country. That was quite a statement 10 years ago, and it certainly remains true today.

The first program I'd mention is the Alberta seniors' benefit program, which has a budget of nearly $274 million this year, and that's an increase of $25 million over last year. This program provides low-income seniors with monthly cash payments to supplement income from other federal income-support programs and/or their personal pensions or savings. This program continues to have the most generous monthly cash payments and eligibility thresholds of any provincial financial support program for seniors. That's something that we in this Assembly can all be very proud of, Mr. Chairman.

Some of the new funding will be used to address caseloads, which we expect to increase slightly this year. However, the vast majority of the increase will allow us to provide increased benefits to low-income seniors living in continuing care facilities. Specifically, this funding will allow us to increase the level of support being provided to Alberta seniors' benefit clients living in long-term care and provide the same level of assistance to low-income seniors residing in designated assisted living facilities. That is new, and it's important, and I'm so pleased that it's occurring this year. These changes are good, Mr. Chairman, as we administer our Alberta seniors' benefit program, and they respond directly to recommendations made by the MLA task force on continuing care.

When talking with seniors, many of them will often tell you of the impact that their dental and optical health have on their overall quality of life. Our dental and optical programs have made such a difference in our province, so much so that more than 14,000 seniors have received support from these two programs each month. That's 14,000 a month, Mr. Chairman, since it was introduced last April, which I think is just outstanding. Because it was so successful and well received, we did reallocate some funding last year from other programs to help meet the demand.

The program is available to seniors with incomes of up to $30,310 and couples with incomes up to $60,620, and it provides a range of dental and optical coverage depending on a senior's or senior couple's income level. Recognizing the demand we expect to see once again, we have increased the budget for the dental and optical assistance program by $8 million, bringing total spending to $60 million this year.

Before these programs were introduced, some assistance with dental and optical costs were provided under the special-needs assistance for seniors program, which provides financial coverage with one-time, emergent expenses that seniors simply cannot afford. The introduction of the dental and optical programs has reduced some pressure on the special-needs assistance program, and that is why the budget number for this year has stayed the same.

One of the programs that we reallocated funding from last year, Mr. Chairman, to assist with the demand for dental and optical assistance was the education property tax program. This program provides senior homeowners with a rebate for any increase in their household's education property taxes over the amount that they paid in 2004. Because education property taxes went up only slightly overall last year, the average benefit paid out to about 60,000 households was relatively low, around $40, but because the base year of the program will remain at 2004, we expect to see an increase in the number of households receiving benefits and the average benefit paid to each household this year. That is why we've budgeted $9 million for this program this year.

Before I move on to our housing programs, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to mention to you and to the Assembly our work to move forward with the new continuing care standards in the coming year. We have allocated additional funding to assist us in implementing the new accommodation standards which will cover the entire continuing care system, and that means our lodges, designated assisted living facilities, and long-term care facilities.

Prior to last week's break there was much discussion in the Assembly about the standards and our progress in implementing them. My ministry is working closely with Alberta Health and Wellness, which is responsible for the health care services in continuing care, while Seniors and Community Supports is responsible for the accommodation side. As we bring the new standards into force, they will include new monitoring, reporting, and enforcement processes as well as the development of a new concerns resolution process for residents and their families. The funding that we've allocated, Mr. Chairman, through the budget will allow us to begin implementing the standards this year, which I know is important to all members of this Assembly and the Albertans that I've been hearing from as well.

When you consider continuing care, there is a full range of options available to Albertans, beginning with our lodges, where seniors receive assistance with their meals, housekeeping, and other accommodation services; designated assisted living, which is for Albertans with high health needs who also require accommodation services; and long-term care, which is reserved for those Albertans with the most complex or highest health care needs. When we refer to our standards, they will address the accommodation services in all these different facilities.

Through the lodge assistance program we provide grants on behalf of nearly 90 per cent of seniors living in provincially supported lodges. That funding helps lodge operators address increasing operating costs while ensuring that the program continues to support low- and moderate-income seniors. This year we will increase that budget by $9 million, bringing total spending to more than $30 million annually.

As you may know, Mr. Chairman, seniors entering lodges today are older, frailer, and have higher needs than ever before. About two-thirds of that funding increase will be used to support recommendations of the continuing care task force, which will allow us to provide increased support to some lodges that are providing special dietary meals, increased housekeeping services, and additional monitoring. These enhanced services are making a difference for those seniors, and with this funding we are working toward ensuring that lodge operators have the support that they need to continue offering those enhanced services.

Like the range of continuing care options, our province also has a range of housing programs which are responsive to the unique needs of low-income seniors, individuals, families, and persons with special needs. The most immediate need is to assist those who are homeless, those who require our assistance, usually in the form of emergency accommodations. We've substantially increased our support of homelessness and transitional housing spaces over the last two years, which demonstrates our commitment to addressing this issue and to working with community groups who are meeting the needs of homeless Albertans on a daily basis. I know that we have a very important conference in Calgary this week regarding this issue. It is important to note that significant funding – there was a 40 per cent increase in funding last year, and we've now increased the funding once again this year by nearly $3 million, or 14 per cent. This support will help address the demand for emergency spaces and assist operators with the cost of providing services.

While most of this funding is for operating expenses, funding will also be allocated through the provincial homelessness initiative to meet the needs in our province's seven major urban centres, and you know that those are Calgary, Edmonton, Fort McMurray, Red Deer, Grande Prairie, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. This funding is allocated to these communities, and they can use it to address local priorities based on their community plan, which can include new capital projects or to expand capacity in their existing facilities.

This year as well, Mr. Chairman, we've also increased our support for our province's subsidized housing units in the new budget. We currently have nearly 25,000 provincially owned or supported housing units that provide safe and affordable accommodations to over 47,000 low-income Albertans. What makes these units so effective is that the rent is subsidized at 30 per cent of a household's income. When you consider that these Albertans would otherwise struggle and pay substantially more than that in the private sector, you can imagine what a difference this program is actually making. We've increased our support to housing operators by about 9 per cent this year, primarily to cover increasing operating and maintenance costs for these projects.

I'd also like to briefly mention that we've increased our support to the rent supplement program, which subsidizes rents for low-income Albertans living in privately owned apartments. Like our provincially owned housing, the rent supplement program effectively caps the rent at 30 per cent of the household's income. We were assisting 4,000 households through this program, and with new funding allocated in Budget 2006, we will assist another 600, which is a significant increase of 15 per cent.

With that, I'd like to briefly discuss our capital funding. You will see, Mr. Chairman, that our capital funding allocation is reduced, but that is because we had some large, one-time funding to programs last year. This year we have $44 million for the final year of the current phase of the Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement. This program has made such a difference over the past four years. When I signed the phase 2 agreement with the former federal minister, Joe Fontana, back in August, he spoke very highly of Alberta's support of this program.

We are certainly leading the nation in this area, Mr. Chairman, with funding committed for nearly 3,070 units to date. While this program is focused primarily on high-growth urban centres, we also have $24 million for the final instalment in our rural affordable supportive living program. This program will help establish new supportive living units in our rural communities throughout the province. These projects will help to keep families together and ensure that our seniors have access to services that they need in their own communities.

Before I finish speaking about capital projects, I'd also like to briefly mention that the ministry has been allocated a one-time increase of $117 million to settle loans, first established in 1990, with the heritage trust fund. These loans were internal to government and have no effect on government's overall spending. Settling these loans, however, will simplify accounting for future years. These loans helped fund the construction of our provincially owned subsidized housing units, which, as I explained earlier, are certainly valuable to our work to assist Albertans who require housing services.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to talk about a very key area of our ministry, which is supports to persons with disabilities. This year we have an initiative link to the MLA task force that will allow us to provide younger Albertans with special needs with additional supports to participate in rural communities when they are residing in a continuing care facility. This is an important new initiative, and it is also a good example of how our programs have really evolved and moved to be more responsive and supportive of persons with disabilities.

In the context of our $1.8 billion budget it is important to note that more than $1.1 billion of that budget is allocated to only two programs: the assured income for the severely handicapped and the persons with developmental disability programs. These are very important programs because together they help address the unique needs of people with disabilities in our province. Part of the benefit of having all programs that support adults with disabilities under one ministry is that we can consider their needs and respond to them in a more holistic way.

The AISH program provides both income and health supports for approximately 34,000 Albertans with disabilities. The AISH program has seen very substantial funding increases two years in a row, Mr. Chairman. Our budget has increased $85.5 million this year, which is nearly 18 per cent for AISH recipients. That's very significant because it allows us to fully implement the recommendations which were made by the MLA committee which reviewed the AISH program last year. These changes include increasing the maximum living allowance to $1,000 a month, which will start this month, providing personal income support benefits, and increasing the employment earning exemptions for the approximately 14 per cent of AISH clients who work. The budget will also allow us to cover anticipated caseload increases as well as cost increases to the comprehensive health benefits package that the program provides. In addition, we are providing additional support to assist AISH clients to cover the accommodation costs of living in continuing care facilities. These individuals are receiving what we call modified AISH benefits. We have also increased their living allowance so that they have additional funds at the end of the month for their personal expenses.

The AISH program has truly been renewed, Mr. Chairman, and with the new legislation currently being discussed in the Assembly, I'm confident that the program is more responsive to the disability needs of clients than ever before, which brings me to the persons with developmental disabilities program, known as PDD.

There have been some concerns raised about the funding to this important program. In February I announced a $10 million increase for front-line, contracted agency staff wages, which was a much-needed wage increase, that was made retroactive to April 2005. Then on budget day the Finance minister announced an additional $13 million for PDD. All together that's over $22 million in new funding, a 4.6 per cent increase to the PDD program since last year, which has brought total funding to nearly $509 million for the approximately 9,300 people receiving PDD support. That is very significant, Mr. Chairman, because, as you know, the funding has gone up by 84 per cent since 1999 while caseloads have grown less than 30 per cent during that same time. I've assured people in PDD that we have worked and will continue to work with individuals, families, and service providers to meet the needs of persons with developmental disabilities.

I would be more than pleased to answer any questions that may come about. I know that AADL, Mr. Chairman, is important as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd certainly like to thank the minister. I think that was a very comprehensive overview. However, there are some questions that do remain. Many of my questions may well be philosophical in nature, perhaps, as opposed to actual dollars. I think the minister used the word "people." This department is about people, and people often come along with philosophical views of how things can be done. Attitudes can make a huge difference.

Over the last number of years long-term care has been slowly deregulated. Possibly that's because we don't have elected health care boards. Be that as it may, we now have housing under one ministry and care, which is often referred to as a service, under Health and Wellness, but it's still the same vulnerable members of our society that we're talking about. Sometimes the questions overlap, and it may be difficult to answer them specifically.

There was $140 million for upgrades of facilities. My questions on that one would be: how many of these facilities are private, for-profit? How many were public and turned over to private operations that may be for profit or not for profit or actually turned over to local foundations? How many started off as public and have remained in the public system? What amounts of public dollars are going into these facilities? More importantly, I think my question would be: how are these dollars actually tracked after they've been given to the health regions? How many of the foundations actually have requisition rights? Is that a concept that's being considered for other foundations that may arise in the future or actually are, perhaps, public at this point? How many public dollars are actually going into seniors' centres? These are the centres where people meet to socialize and learn and those sorts of activities. Again, how are those dollars tracked, or do they go through municipalities, and the only way they can get it is through FCSS?

A figure of $250 million was suggested to meet the recommendations identified from the Auditor General's report to improve continuing care throughout the province. Again, it becomes sticky because of the complexity of having it under two ministries. How are those dollars being divided between the ministries? Are those calculations being based on standards that haven't come out in their totality yet? One of my questions was going to be the date of release of the standards. You addressed that in a fashion, but I guess that I would like a date if I possibly could have that. It's unfortunate that the standards hadn't been released prior to the debate on Bill 205 because I think it would have made more sense, and certainly the arguments from my side would have been more in depth and perhaps might have pushed it forward into Committee of the Whole, where we could have discussed them in a much broader fashion and perhaps even more specifically if we knew exactly what they were.

The minister has often referred to the concerns resolution process. In relation to the bill that I had on the floor, Bill 205, I guess my question still would be: where exactly does the buck stop when there's a problem?

The business plan refers on page 327 to the shift to supportive living from long-term care accommodation by facilitating the development of affordable supportive living options, and maintaining quality supportive living . . . In addition, the Ministry will work to adjust long-term care accommodation rates in a fair and incremental way.

A question that arises around that one would be: have there been any dollars put aside to actually evaluate the success of this changeover to supportive living? I had a question further on, but I'll put it into here. Are these standards actually going to come out with provincial definitions, that will be across the province as opposed to being different within the regions?

The seniors who aren't considered low income and wouldn't qualify for financial benefits: how can we ensure that they have safe, affordable care and housing without having to spend all of their savings or, in fact, in some cases having to bankrupt their families so that by the time that next family gets into long-term care, they won't have the dollars that they're going to require?

There's also confusion when it comes to identifying and understanding the basket of services and levels of care provided in homes. Again, this would refer to clear definitions. I'm hoping that that means it is across the entire continuum of long-term care. Systems must be in place so that residents and families know what level of care to expect, and then they can decide on the type of facility that would best meet their needs. I believe that that choice in some areas is not available. People are being assessed for a certain level of care; therefore, that's where you're going to live.

I think that despite the increases that have been given to PDD, I'm hearing that there is still a great deal of discontent out there, particularly in the segment of people who are functioning to the very best of their abilities within our society. Some are actually attending postsecondary schools, but they simply can't do it without their workers with them. I'm wondering if there's any contemplation of extra dollars coming out of supplementals because, as we know, budgets appear to have ways of finding magic dollars after they've actually been released.

I think that for the moment I would ask for responses from the minister on that, and as other people speak, I may have other questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond now or have a few speakers?

Mrs. Fritz: I'll respond to the last question now, I think, Mr. Chairman. Others may have more questions regarding the housing side, along with that, as they ask questions.

The question about PDD that was put forward, Mr. Chairman, was regarding funding and whether or not there would be further funding in supplementary estimates over the $509 million, whether or not we're looking at that for the first, second, or third quarter of next year. That remains to be seen because this budget, as you know, has just been announced, and the community will be responding to their needs.

The way that the budget is allocated, Mr. Chairman, is that Treasury Board allocates the funding to the ministry. The ministry then allocates that funding to the provincial board for persons with developmental disabilities, and then that is allocated to the six regions. The regions then take that funding and allocate it to the agencies that they're going to contract services from, and the agencies hire contracted workers with that funding. Then, finally, it reaches the client. So there are a lot of steps in there.

We are looking to increase accountability and to more transparency with the funding. The reason I say that, though, is because this ministry for the first time has had persons with developmental disabilities under one umbrella along with our AISH recipients, so disabilities as a whole under one umbrella. Our AISH budget, as I indicated earlier, has increased by $85 million this year, which is an increase of 18 per cent. That budget is accessed by persons with developmental disabilities, and their budget increased by approximately 5 per cent.

You can see that it's a little bit early to know, by the time it reaches down to the contracted agencies, whether or not they will be looking for further funding. I suspect that the one area where they may in the future be for staff providing the service to our people with disabilities. That's approximately 12,000 staff that would be looking for funding. So that's the answer to the question regarding a supplementary estimate increase in funding.

One other thing, Mr. Chairman. As I said earlier, this budget is $1.8 billion. Of that money, $1.1 billion is for persons with developmental disabilities and for persons on AISH, so a significant part of this budget is for that area.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Further to that answer, if I might. I believe that I had sent a letter to the minister asking if the PDD boards may be reviewed. I think what I was asking for, after the explanation, is that it's very, very complex to get those dollars down to the front-line person, the person who's using it. I'm just wondering if the minister would be free to make a comment on that. I really believe that there's an easier way to get these dollars, which, quite frankly, would probably save a whole pile of dollars as we cut out some of these middlemen. I think that's probably what I'm getting at.

Another thing that I had forgotten to say, too, was that the Premier had mentioned that actually it was being considered to have continuing care, seniors, whatever we want to call it, under one umbrella. Having AISH and PDD I believe is probably a first very, very good step so that we can actually not have to divide it between two ministries. So a comment on perhaps where that process is going as well would be appreciated.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We did have a good conversation, as the member mentioned, regarding the number of steps that are taken with the allocation of funding through the ministry to persons with developmental disabilities, a person receiving supports. I can tell you that it has worked for a number of years, but I agree with the member – she had brought that forward to me – that it is important that we re-evaluate and look at all the number of steps and see where we may be able to save costs, whether they're administrative costs, whether they're, you know, operational costs in a particular board. That is being contemplated, and I'd ask the member to stay tuned about that.

The question that was raised in the Assembly before through the member was that of having long-term care not divided between the two ministries but placed together, as you mentioned, hon. member, under one umbrella, and at this time that is not being contemplated to my knowledge.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I thank the minister for the comprehensive approach. I'd like to go through, as I see it, sort of the four main areas and make a few comments and ask questions. I know that the minister probably can't get through all of it, and perhaps she'll have to reply to us by letter.

The first category is the seniors. Just some general comments if I may, first, Mr. Chairman. Last year the consumer price index for lower income households in Alberta increased much more than for higher income households, and unfortunately many seniors fall, as the minister is well aware, into that category. The government still did have the audacity to boast that our government will also reduce school property taxes by over 7 per cent and continue to protect Alberta seniors from paying increases in school property taxes, but we notice that there's still more money coming in as a result of the price of property going up.

I guess that the question we asked last year, I think, is still relevant, and perhaps the minister can take this: rather than sort of a selective tax break to perhaps the wealthier seniors, why not a tax break for all seniors, not just those still lucky enough to own their own houses? I know that this is all money, but I would remind the minister – and I know it's not in her department – that we did offer tax breaks of $370 million to the wealthiest corporations in the province. A lot of seniors could have used that particular tax break.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the point that I'm making to the minister comes down to the priorities that we have. This money, if it had been given to all seniors, low income and the rest of it, could have circulated among the economy and probably have been better for everybody in terms of even enhancing the economy. I guess that that's the point I'd make to the minister – I know it's not going to change in this budget – that the last thing we needed in an overheated economy was that tax break, and certainly a lot of seniors, especially low income, could have used that particular tax break.

The other point would be a lobbying one, Mr. Chairman, coming back from question period. Again, we're talking about two departments here, but I take it that the two ministers work together. The ministry business plan, I think, lists pharmaceuticals, and certainly we agree. I think the minister of health in a speech to the Calgary chamber talked about a 17 per cent increase as the fastest growing component of health care costs. Obviously, this particular group is going to be the group that has the most cost here. Again, if she has any clout with the other minister and the government, we would really push our party's pharmaceutical savings agency program. I hope that the government is looking at this because in our estimation if we did what New Zealand did, then it would be the bulk of this that would save us $75 million in the first year and after that over $100 million. It would be good, again, for this particular group. So I pass that on to the minister and hope that she would push for that.

Let's look again briefly at long-term care. Admittedly, there's some more money, but I think that even the minister would admit that the supplementary funding in March of $36 million was well below the minimum $250 million recommended in the MLA review. Still to this day we're getting complaints in long-term care. As recently as last week I had people coming forward about problems there in terms of long-term care. We haven't even begun, I don't believe, to solve the problems in this area. Our seniors are receiving inconsistent service across the province. Some facilities charge for certain things, some don't, and the minister is well aware that not even the Auditor General could make sense of the billing schemes that are used across our 150 or so facilities.

Again, we come back to the point – we made it, I think, both of us last time – about the need for standards. The Member for Lethbridge-East talked about, you know, a commissioner or an advocate or something. We need to have some way to implement and to know what's going on, and we need to press for the standards that we've talked about. We need to legislate minimum requirements for the number of nursing staff and staff-to-resident ratios. We have no minimum requirements. We need at least four hours of care per day. Alberta's requirement of 1.9 hours is not enough. We need standard qualifications and training for staff – we have no legislated standards – and we have to take inspection seriously.

In all due respect, even if the MLAs that are going around the province were saints – and I've never accused them of being that – it's not the way to do it, where people know two or three weeks ahead that they're coming in. This is why we were suggesting a seniors' advocate or commissioner. They could begin to go in unannounced and toughen up the standards. To the minister, there are still things happening in seniors' care that are not acceptable.

We'll continue, I'm sure, to have this debate, but I asked the questions that went to the minister of health about, you know, the money. Were they tracking the money? The minister's aware, and in fairness to the minister of health, she said: no; maybe we should be. Again I would remind the minister that the massive long-term hike of 2003 – it seems that they're paying a lot more out of their pockets or their families' pockets for a lot less, and there's no tracking going on there. Now, I know that's under the other minister, the minister of health's department. She told me even as late as today that she's going to try to look into that. I think that we should be looking in this rich province at perhaps reversing some of those long-term fee hikes because it has created a lot of hardship for a lot of families. Again, in a wealthy province like this surely we could afford it.

I keep coming back: if we can afford $370 million in the budget to the wealthiest corporations in Canada and the world, surely we should be able to do this. We have to follow the money. There's no tracking. So if that minister is talking to the other minister, I hope that they can at least do that.

Let me move quickly from there to AISH. I guess that the one question I have is about the waiting times, and it's good that the minister is trying to get the waiting times down. The current wait time is 30 days, and the plan for this year is to drop it to 25 and then to 24. The question I'd have: if we can move that quickly down five days in one year, what's the ultimate goal of the waiting list? The sooner the better, but what's the ultimate goal that the minister wants to get to?

I was just a little curious: the government's 18 per cent announced last week will still leave AISH recipients with less than the MLA AISH Review Committee asked for, a little less than we advocated during the election. The thousand dollars which the AISH recipients will now be eligible to receive is certainly welcome, but it was $25 less than requested. I've wondered why the $25 difference from the review committee when they looked at it. Twenty-five dollars doesn't seem like a lot, but it certainly is a lot to these people when you live on that sort of amount.

Again, I make the case for indexation. If we can index MLA salaries, certainly we should be able to index the most vulnerable in society so that they don't have to wait for another review. The minister knows that there was – what? – six, seven years before they got any increase at all. I think the minister mentioned that they'll review it in a couple of years or something. It seems to me that if it works for MLAs, indexation should be automatic in terms of people on AISH and, I would argue, for other vulnerable people too.

The only other point I would like to make: there still are a lot of people falling through the holes. I raised this question about the Winspear fund with the minister of human resources, but there were a lot of AISH people on there too with emergency funding.

Just to give the minister a couple of examples to show that there's still some difficulty in the AISH area. For example, a man with terminal cancer requires coats and boots for his wife and three young children. This 43-year-old man has been diagnosed with terminal renal cell cancer. He's on AISH, admitted to palliative home care. On AISH he needed to go to a private firm to get $500. I know the minister is not aware of this specifically. I can certainly send over this report. Another: a 64-year-old man was diagnosed with terminal prostate cancer that spread to his bones. He needed a grant for $500 to help pay half a damage deposit. Another one, a grant of $500: a young man moved to a new accommodation. He had to pay his damage deposit and utility hookups out of his AISH income, which then left him falling behind in his rent and utilities. There's a whole raft of them, these sorts of things, and I know that the minister from time to time will look at these.

This is still happening with the Winspear fund, and there were a number of cases, not all in AISH, some in Human Resources. But they looked at this and said: well, we just have to help these people out. I would suggest that this is the government's responsibility rather than a private fund. If the minister didn't see this particular report, I would certainly be glad to make sure she gets a copy of it. So that's the point I would like to make about AISH, Mr. Chairman.

The third is PDD, and I just have some questions for the minister. I've had discussions about the PDD and whether a 2 per cent increase is a cut or not. My understanding from the minister – and I hope that she'd correct me if I'm wrong. I know about the $10 million, and that was desperately needed, although some people are arguing, as the Member for Lethbridge-East said, that they're still not living in great luxury. But they certainly appreciate getting the $10 million. Now, in the budget she's saying that there's another $13 million for the service areas, if I heard her right, and I hope I did. That would raise it, rather than 2 per cent across the board, to I think she said 4.6 per cent. I'd just like to confirm that with the minister, if she could do that sometime while we're here. We're still getting a lot of letters and calls, you know, about the funding in this area.

I would point out what the reality was with the 2 per cent. I know that it was happening across the province, but in terms of the Edmonton area, which I know best, they were projecting – I don't know if this was before the budget, and the minister's aware of that – that they would have a budget deficit of nearly $10 million. They laid out why they had that deficit. It was new people coming in during the year, for instance, that weren't covered to begin with, and there were all sorts of reasons. Then they would have a deficit of $12 million for 2007-2008, and they just had no way to cover this deficit.

Now, I don't know if other districts are in the same position, but certainly that was their position, and they laid it out fairly dramatically, and it did mean cuts. Whether there was more money there or not, the reality is that with inflation and more clients to service, they were facing a crisis. I'm trying to fit in my own mind what the minister said with the extra $13 million into this, whether this is in the equation or whether they're still in the same position. It's not only them. I know that the south board was facing some of the same sorts of problems. I'd like some clarification on that.

I'm not sure how much time I have left.

An Hon. Member: Five minutes, Ray.

Mr. Martin: Okay. Thank you.

The last part of the minister's portfolio is the housing. She talked a fair amount about that, but one thing that has become painfully apparent during this last session is how grossly inadequate our current shelter capacities are as many women and children are turned away each year from shelters. That becomes a serious problem.

We've had bills in here talking about stalking, and they're good bills, but the problem is that right now I know that in Edmonton – and I'm sure it's true in other parts of the province – a lot of people are turned away. They just can't take anymore. So we put in new bills, and again they were good bills that we supported. There are just not the capabilities there. I know that there's a 39 per cent increase in housing, but I guess my question would be: what does the minister see in terms of women's shelters and the desperate need there? I know that in Fort McMurray it's a problem and, I was told, in Grande Prairie and other places. I'm sure that Calgary, Lethbridge, and others might be facing the same problems. I think that there's a real need there to deal with that issue, especially in view of some of the other things that we're bringing through the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman, I would just conclude by saying to the minister that there are a lot of areas here, but if we would get some written answers. I know that a lot of things that I'm talking about are political in nature, and we may have a disagreement with the government about that. We'll debate that in the budget, but there are some specific questions that I do have about this budget, especially in the PDD funding, to see where that sits so that we can get back to some of the people that are contacting us.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll address that last question first regarding the PDD funding, if that's all right, although I know I had discussed it earlier. In regard to persons with developmental disabilities there is a spending target of $508.7 million. That target is comprised of funding provided by our ministry, of course, as well as revenue from other sources – for example, fees that are collected or interest, up to $2.1 million there – and the net effect of expense items that do not require revenue; for example, amortization of capital items and vacation liability costs, and that is $0.4 million.

I know that your question is specifically about the $10 million for the wage increase for the contracted workers. PDD will be receiving a $22 million increase from the ministry in 2006-07. That is a 4.6 per cent increase. That does consist of $10 million to provide for growth in the number of individuals that are supported by PDD, which is approximately 9,200 people, so that they can live, work, learn, and contribute to community life. Also, there's $10 million for an increase in wages for the front-line staff that provide supports to PDD. Those funds provide a salary increase to staff that is retroactive to April of 2005. So it's retroactive for the year. Also, there's $2.34 million to fund future GOA staff salary settlements.

The program receives funding annually, and that's to address a wide range of cost pressures. PDD's first priority, Mr. Chairman, is to ensure that eligible people, as I said, receive the supports that they need to live quality lives in our community. That was another question that you had in regard to the regions and those that say that this funding allocation isn't sufficient to meet their spending pressures.

I believe that PDD will have to carefully manage their caseload, the cost per case growth, and their continued cost pressures for community agencies. While a modest increase has been provided, those three cost pressures still remain, and that may be why you're hearing back when people do overspend on their budgets and continue to look for further funding, which was back to this question: will that happen in the estimates?

I think that it's really important to recognize that it's changed. AISH had been way over here, at arm's length, and PDD over here, but now under the one umbrella, the disabilities area, PDD clients receive AISH dollars as well. Part of the 34,000 clients on AISH includes the 9,200 people with PDD. So not only is it the significant budget of over $500 million just allocated to PDD, but if you think of a dotted line going down between the two, PDD accesses AISH, which is the thousand dollars per month here in April for the living allowance, which is the medical benefit of a medical card and optical, dental, no health care premiums, et cetera, which is – and I want to talk with you about this too – the personal income support, which may address the case that you brought forward for utilities, for example.

Someone on AISH may require support in that area. That's a new initiative that came out of the AISH review. We have legislated this personal income support benefit, and that will be approximately $360 for each client if they apply when they have these types of needs that you identified. When the AISH budget is increased 18 per cent, the PDD budget is increased 4.6 per cent. When you see that the clients can access both, that's a significant increase in funding. So I'm hoping that that does address that question.

Just quickly, Mr. Chairman, another question that had come forward was about the school property tax assistance. Yes, that is a program that is in place that is working, and it is for senior homeowners. It's to shield them from the increase in the education portion of their property tax. The school property tax assistance program provides an annual rebate per household to cover those increases, but it's not based on income. It provides long-term protection against increases in the school portion of the property tax. Approximately 60,000 senior households, or 35 per cent, received rebates in 2005-06, and that was approximately $39 per household. The payments ranged though. You know, that's an average. The payments did reach up to $1,700 for some households. As the property taxes rise, it allows our seniors to remain in their homes for a longer period of time, and that's a benefit to the seniors overall.

What you wanted to see was that we take that a step further and that we offer savings to seniors with taxes in other ways as well. We're certainly always reviewing and seeing how we can assist seniors in that regard, and I'll take that under advisement here from you today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I'd just like to quickly follow up on what we were talking about in terms of the school tax. Because this department deals with people, this is a story, a people story. When I was in Fort McMurray last week, I visited the seniors' centre, and one of the suggestions that they made was about the school tax. What they're saying is that if they took the seniors that pay into the school tax and actually took that tax and put it into seniors' centres, they felt that that was a better use of the seniors' portion of the education tax.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't ready quite that fast. I thought I had one more speaker, but that was a short one.

I appreciate the minister for the excellent presentation that she gave at the start. I realize that some of my comments will be repetitive, but I think perhaps that will compound the desire to get it done and fix some of those things. I'm pleased overall with the increase in the budget, and we'll just go and address some of the various issues as we go through there.

I probably want to start by just going through the expenses with the school property tax assistance. Seniors trying to live in their homes definitely struggle. The property tax and the reassessment of houses is a real struggle for them. Many seniors that bought their homes at $35,000, $40,000 are now being assessed at $100,000, $150,000, in the big centres maybe $200,000 or more. Their income and the Canada pension plan and the other pension plans certainly have not kept pace. I would continue to urge the government to remove property taxes completely from senior citizens on the education portion of it. That would definitely be a benefit.

Running a surplus, we're definitely overtaking our people, and that would be one area where I feel that we could easily move forward that would be of great benefit to all of the seniors and to our communities as a whole because they could stay where they've been for years. They're an important hub of their community. To have to move out because of economic reasons, to me it is very disappointing when they have to do that.

To go to the next step, it's been mentioned many times, but I guess I'd like to talk about AISH and the income for the severely handicapped in that we've raised it. I think anybody in the province realizes that it's a real struggle for them to get by. They come and get together in the same apartments and other areas to try and make ends meet. What I would really like to see is a government that's helping people to help themselves.

We've raised the AISH earnings from $200 to $400 before there are any clawbacks. I really see that there are some individuals that can move into and be part of the workforce, but there's such a huge gap. They have a job that may be only paying $200 or $300 a month, and they don't dare take on anything more because if they do, they lose their AISH. I mean, if someone's bringing in an income of $2,500 in this province today, that is not an excessive amount of income. I've asked many times in the House that we should just be raising the tax – well, we shouldn't be taxing anybody under $20,000, $25,000. More importantly for people on AISH or with PDD, we should be encouraging them, with our shortfall of employment in the province, to get out and get a job, and if they could earn $1,200 a month, they should enjoy the fruits of those labours. By working full-time and still having their assistance, they'd be able to dig themselves out. They'd start to have something that's of consequence, and they'd all of a sudden start to feel a part of and have that reward of full employment.

Right now across the board for anybody who gets a little bit of income, immediately that extra help they get from the government is taken away, and they say: well, why should I go and work for $1,200 or $1,500 a month when I get a thousand dollars a month for being on AISH or PDD or whatever it is? So I'd really encourage the government once again that with our huge surplus this is an ideal time to allow those people to go out and work and to still have that support. So if something happens in three months, they've still got it, and they don't have to go through all the bureaucracy, if something fails, to try and get back into the system. They feel safe, secure there, and there's no encouragement to get out.

I'd like to go a step further to help those people with low income and all those in the fact that if they were to set up a savings plan, much like we encourage parents right now to invest money into an RESP, with their social worker for when times get tough – if their car breaks down or their water tank goes in their house, whatever it is, if they had a savings plan and they weren't in dire straits as soon as they hit something, it would be a benefit. If we were to work with their social worker and start a savings plan that they would have cosigning on and encourage them by matching a percentage, that if, in fact, they got out there, were working, and then when all of a sudden things get tough and they need $2,000 to rebuild their car, there's a savings plan there that helps them to keep going . . . [interjection]. Well, we're working up to that.

You know, you've got to be visionary, looking to the future, not just to the fact that they don't have it. We want them to earn some money. They have to have a vehicle, quite often, to get to a job. Why do we take all those what I call necessities in this life and say that you're not allowed to have them? It's shameful. We shouldn't be doing that to them. Anyway, I would encourage a savings plan where the government would perhaps match, like we do with RESPs, and encourage them to start saving so that they have that and they're disciplined in that area.

Another area that I'd like to talk about is with the PDD and the inequities in the funding across the province. For the areas in the south it very much seems like there's higher funding per capita going into different regions. They don't understand it, and it's something that I feel needs to be addressed and at least allow the regions to understand.

I've talked to you before about the provincial board and definitely have a problem. In the past, before things were restructured, the different boards from the regions were there, and they were accountable to the different facilities that were helping those people through PDD, but now those boards are very much like our hospital boards, that are under the thumb of the minister. These regional boards are very much under the thumb of the provincial board, and it seems like they're more accountable and have to worry and be dictated to on what they're doing. It would be great to see the regions given back their authority and their due diligence in serving the people in their area and not having to justify to a provincial board. It seems very frustrating to them.

Another area. Perhaps I'm missing the news; I get a lot that I'm trying to follow. There are a lot of individuals that are coming from child care and moving into PDD as they hit 18, and these facilities have already been told that there's no more funding to come to them, and they're in a real dilemma. They can't accept new clients because there's no new funding. I don't know if you've announced anything on that. I haven't heard it. No one has commented to me on that, but we need to have a program in place so that they know that when a child turns 18 and going forward, those programs are extended and coming forward. Right now the biggest fear, I guess, is for those parents not knowing what happens to their kids. The unknown is always the worst. It might not even be that bad, and the ministry might say, "Oh, no, we're going to look after them," but the fact of the matter is that the parents and the PDD facilities that I've gone to all have a great fear of where these individuals are going to go and how they're going to be there.

Another area with the PDD that I've had a few people bring to my mind is that in so many of the budgets that we have, whether it's the hospital, education, seniors, child care, we really don't know – and the good Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview brought it up yesterday – what the real cost is of looking after these children with PDD. What are the parents paying, and is there some way that we can facilitate and help the families more directly? It seems very much like we're organized and set up: if you bring them to us, we will help. But if you stay at home, there are lots of questions on what their motives are and whether they're trying to take advantage of the system. That runs not only to those with developmental disabilities. It also runs to seniors that are having to move out. If there's, you know, home care or an enhanced lodge, how much are we spending when we move a senior out of home care and say, "Well, you need to come to enhanced living," and they move in there?

What are we really subsidizing in those areas, and would we not be better off to allow a family member to move in that might be paid or to bring in a live-in caregiver? What are the real dollar values there, and are we taking people out of their community, out of their families by saying: well, we won't give you the money, but we will give it to these facilities? I would like to see an actual assessment to show how much we're really paying and family are paying total cost as opposed to: well, could we do more to help in-house, in-family care to look after these?

I have great faith in the assessors that assess these individuals. They know that this much money is needed and that the care is being given there. I don't think that we should say that it shouldn't go to the family or to one of these other facilities. Again, that assessor is being held accountable to see that there is no abuse in the system, but if the assessor can't do that, well, then, why have them? Let's get rid of them. But I say that they can, and I have great faith in the assessors and those people that are doing those that they can and will do a great job on that.

I guess that one of the other things, the implication of funding reduction, that one of the facilities has brought to me, is: are there funding cuts in PDD? We've questioned this back and forth. From down in the south the staff had a proposed 8 per cent cut because of the size of their facility. It's another one of those questions that I don't know has been addressed yet, and I look forward to the minister answering on that. In the budget that they received, they were saying that they're going to get an 8 per cent cutback. It's very difficult for them to know where they really are in those areas, so hopefully that could be clarified, and they'd understand that.

Skipping down now to rural affordable supportive living, $24,000,000. I'm not sure – and I'm not fully up to speed on what all of the program is – but I think that's a good initiative. Definitely we need more facilities in rural Alberta. There's already a shortage in the big cities. I've talked to people that are living in some of our small communities: Cardston, Magrath, Taber, Milk River. They're having to move into Lethbridge, but they would dearly love to have seniors' facilities and be part of their community and stay there. So I would encourage the government to continue looking in that area to see what they could do to help those facilities because I know there are many people that are coming forward that want to do those areas and provide that for them.

I'd also like to talk a little bit about private care. There's one facility – and I haven't talked to them, so I'd hate to bring up their name specifically – and they've set up a seniors' home. It's a private centre. People have paid to go in there, and the seniors that I've talked to that have gone in there absolutely love it. It's small, just 10 people in there. One registered nurse is the one who set up the facility, and she lives there. It's her home. They retired and built this what I'd call a retirement home, but they treat those people like royalty. If they don't wake up till 8 o'clock, they can come and get breakfast then. They can have the kitchen.

When I talked to the owners of the facility, the requirements were onerous on what they had to meet for government regulations. Safety is always an issue. We definitely want to keep them safe, but sometimes our regulations are ridiculous when we take two steps back and look at them and ask: why have we put all these things in? The example with this one is that they were half a mile away from a six-inch main line. In order to put in a firefighting facility, because they had over eight people, I believe it was, they had to spend I think $70,000 or $120,000 in order to put in a six-inch trunk line to have the overhead sprinklers meet the so-called engineering specs. They were way, way overdone, in my opinion. There are many areas like that where facilities struggle in wanting to provide an excellent service, yet with our safety rules and regulations sometimes we need to take a second look and realize that this is a small facility, that it's not a facility with 120 people in it.

The other thing I'd like to encourage on that aspect is that one of the great fears we have in our society today is the pandemic or spread. When these seniors come together and they live in a facility, the bigger it is, the more they'd get affected if, in fact, something comes into their facility. That's where rural Alberta and those small areas have an excellent opportunity to have small, functioning facilities that keep their community alive. There are tax dollars that are going back to those communities and jobs that keep them there, but the most exciting thing is that you don't have a huge group being brought together. They're much healthier, and their standard of living and the personal touch that is received in those facilities are very impressive in the ones that I've visited. I'd encourage the minister to continue looking at and finding some of those different facilities.

I'm just checking through the list here to see what else we had. [interjection] Checking it twice too.

Anyway, overall we need to realize that the most important thing as government here is that we have to look after those that are most vulnerable. I know that it's in your heart, and you're reaching out and doing that. I hope that you'll continue to have your ear open to the ideas that come forward, that we can and will look after our seniors better. To me the key there is that we don't want centralization. We want to meet them, if possible, in their homes, in their communities, in a small family setting, not in huge facilities, though they may be necessary in some of the areas. Smaller, more dispersed is what I've received.

It's the same with the PDD in that they, too, love their little, small groups where they can get together in the different towns. It's a great benefit to those people that they don't have to travel long distances or actually get up and move their family to the city because they have children with disabilities and problems. I'll encourage the government to continue looking down those roads.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I'll just attempt to answer a couple of those questions, and if you don't mind, I'll put the others in writing and give that to you, hon. member.

You began with vote 2, about the education portion of the property tax for seniors and the importance of seniors staying in their own homes. I couldn't agree with you more because it's true, and we are attempting to do that. We have a number of programs – some I addressed in my opening remarks – that assist seniors. Especially as people age, their oral health is extremely important, and one is, of course, the dental and optical assistance program. That program is for low- to moderate-income seniors so that people with moderate incomes living in their own homes accessing this program realize a cost saving where they don't need to pay for their oral health care. As I said earlier, we have about 14,000 seniors that access that program right now per month, which is an incredible number of people – and we're pleased about that – that are realizing that that is there in place for them.

The maximum coverage is available to seniors with incomes that are less than $20,000 and to couples with incomes less than $40,000, and that's at maximum coverage. The partial coverage is available to seniors with incomes between $20,311 and $30,310 and to couples with incomes between $40,620 and $60,620. That's up to $5,000 of basic dental coverage every five years. So you can see that that is significant.

Another program that we have in place as well – I know that you mentioned, as I said, the tax program – that assists seniors with staying in their own homes is the premium-free Alberta health care insurance. All seniors are exempt from paying health care premiums, and that is a saving of $520 per year for a single senior and $1,056 for a senior couple. That, too, is another significant saving, that thousand dollars.

Then we have our premium-free Blue Cross coverage. That means that premiums are paid for all seniors, their spouses, and eligible dependants at a maximum of $25,000 in benefits per year and per person. It covers 70 per cent of prescription drug costs so that seniors pay 30 per cent and up to a maximum of $25 per prescription or refill. It also covers the ambulance services, clinical psychological services, home nursing care. What I'm just trying to show you is that there are other programs, meaning that it's comprehensive, holistic, and benefits the seniors overall so that they can stay in their homes.

We have approximately 360,000 seniors in the province. Eighty per cent of the seniors in long-term care and in our supportive-living facilities receive significant support through this department, which is why we had that $10 million increase in the third quarter for long-term care. That assists our seniors as well. I hear what you're saying about regulations not being too onerous, especially in our rural communities. That, of course, is something that we can always evaluate.

Your comment about fire and needing sprinklers: I think that that is an important regulation, and I know that you agree with that. It's important because seniors that are in homes, when they've left their own homes, have more chronic needs. They're very frail, for example. In our lodges the average age of a senior is 86. Their frailty includes mobility problems, meaning they're using walkers or wheelchairs. Those are significant things in our lodges, not just mobility but vision and oral health. That age is 86.

As you move up the line, which you were talking about, I think, maybe with the unique home that you were discussing, we do pay people to have seniors in unique homes in the province and in the rural communities. We fund every bed that's available, whether they have a senior in that bed or a person that may have a disability. We fund that whether they're there or not. We try to keep the home fully funded so that as they go through the transitioning of their patients or their clients, they can receive funding.

In the area of PDD, though, I hear your comments about the provincial board, that people in the community have commented on that to you. We did have that conversation, and I would just ask that you stay tuned because you will be seeing changes in that regard soon.

Also, when you indicated about the south region shortfall of 8 per cent and that they said there is a funding cut, I've tried to explain today: there is definitely no funding cut. There is a significant amount of funding in this program. Out of the total $1.8 billion that we have in this budget, $1.1 billion is for people with disabilities, and it's significant funding. The south region, though, overspent their budget, and now they would like more funding once again for the overspending that did occur. I know that 21 per cent of their budget goes toward administrative costs, and I can send you more details in that regard later as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments that I'd like to make, but first of all I'd like to congratulate the minister on a job well done, not only for Albertans but for my constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. You have made a difference. You know, I'm so proud that I was able to get support for capital projects in Whitecourt and in Onoway. Also the concerns that came from seniors throughout Whitecourt-Ste. Anne that I needed help with, you and your ministry were there to help me.

I want to talk a bit about the PDD increase and how that relates to wage increases. You know, if the lion's share of that increase will go to wages, how much will be left for those that really need the care? I have a constituent that is very concerned about this, and I have a family member, too, that has previously lived in the Michener Centre and is now in a group home that gets funding through your ministry, so I'd like to know a little bit about that.

I have a facility in Mayerthorpe that's about 40 years old, you know. The staff offer great services – they're dedicated; they're loving – but the seniors that live in there live, I guess I'd say, in cubicles. I look forward to an opportunity for the Lac Ste. Anne Foundation, that takes care of the Mayerthorpe facility, to be able to access funds that may be available through your capital projects.

I'd like to know if there are opportunities for funding in your capital funds for retrofits and for those renovations that need to be made. With these new facilities in Whitecourt, which is in the west end, and Onoway, in the east end of my constituency, and Mayerthorpe, in the centre along highway 43, I do see an opportunity for seniors from those communities to move back home. Then I do see some opportunity in Mayerthorpe, where we may have some opportunity to go in there and do some retrofits, maybe make two units out of three, but they're going to need some help, and they're going to need some funding. So I'd like to know about that.

I will end this off, again, thanking you for all the help that you've given my constituents and the caring and loving way that you have treated them whenever they've approached you. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, did you want to respond?

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for those kind comments, hon. member.

The lodges renovation and repair funding was part of the $140 million that was allocated in this area, and $15 million was allocated last year for this as one-time grant funding. It was provided to lodge operators to assist with the renovations, as you mentioned, for the smaller cubicles, knowing the mobility problems and so that people could access the bathrooms and whatnot, and repairs to the facilities. This funding priority was for life-safety items, repairs to major building components, including the windows, the heating, the plumbing, and the electrical equipment.

The number of lodges that we were able to assist: we had 86 lodge operators that requested funding, and they are being assisted with their first priority items. That is, 77 of the 86 lodge operators are being assisted, and all lodge operators were asked to submit their renovations and repair funding needs. The lodges with the life-safety items and repairs to major building components were given first priority.

Do we have that funding in this budget now? The answer is no. It was one-time grant funding, and it was provided last year. Those decisions on a priority basis have been made. I'll send you the information about PDD.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very, very pleased to rise today to speak to the estimates on this department. I must commend and congratulate the minister on a professional and comprehensive presentation. I'm sure the minister would like to see more money go to our seniors, our persons on AISH and PDD, and to see some ways that we can deal with the poor in our society that cannot deal for themselves quite often. I mean, I heard from the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner who said that we should have savings plans for people on AISH. Gosh, that would be wonderful if there was that sort of level of income there for people on AISH.

I managed to procure some movie theatre tickets for a couple that are in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning who are on AISH. They continually are budgeting, they told me, you know, for things like bus passes and trading off a bus pass for one month from one of them to the other so that they can have some transportation and some entertainment and some variety in their lives. I managed to get them these movie theatre ticket passes, these $20 sort of things, and they went for a family celebration to see a movie. They said that to them the definition of luxury was what they had, was to see this movie and to actually have buttered popcorn. For them that was the definition of luxury.

It would be very difficult to see a savings plan with these levels that we have right now in our society where they can save any more than just a few dollars or pennies a month.

On PDD: I was at a town hall meeting last Thursday at an historic church in our capital city of Edmonton. There was not a representative from the fourth party, the Alliance opposition. There was not a representative from the third party, the New Democrat opposition. There was not a representative from the government, either in the public service or an elected official, yet here was a full, full church of people, many of them on PDD, many parents. They were very, very concerned, so they asked me, "Are you the government?" I said, "No, I'm not the government. I'm in the opposition." "Well can you speak for the government?" I said, "No, I can't speak for the government. I'm here to listen." "Well what can you do for us?" "Well, I can say what I would like to see."

I heard from these individuals, who were shocked. I'll ask a question about PDD, and I'll bring it forward from these people to the minister. They said that Edmonton would see a 3.8 per cent reduction in their PDD funding, which would cause great hardship for many of the contractors and for many of the people that they are dealing with and for.

They spoke of the great concerns over the maintenance and retention of employees. The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne mentioned that just before me. I think it's a huge concern as the conventional oil industry and other employers provide tremendous opportunities in work and much better paying opportunities and work that draws people from all areas of our economy and, certainly, from the lower paying areas. Historically, it has always been in areas such as PDD and the provision of support for seniors as well.

They said that the $10 million increase amounted to 30 cents per hour, which for them was significant; it was substantial. Thirty cents an hour really meant something to them, and they were happy to see it. But 30 cents an hour really was not going to do them any good because the way the budgeting is working and the way their employers are having to deal with the budgets and the restrictions that are happening now, they would have reduced hours. So the reality is that there would actually be much less income for many of the individuals working in that. They were saying that they would be forced to leave their employment and leave the assistance of these people. Many were almost at a loss as to what they could do to try and deal with these problems.

Many of these outfits, many of these companies are so tightly budgeted and just have so very little to deal with that they become very, very stressed on a few minor areas. In reality, to hold many of their people they would need $2 or $3 or $4 an hour, which if they were in the oil sector, would be nothing to give. I've heard of welders being asked to go on standby when it was warm in the wintertime, and they were just being held on the company payroll and staying at home in north Edmonton for $350 a day. For some of the people who work in these areas, that would be just a wonderful windfall that would be beyond their comprehension.

The problems with Alberta Seniors and Community Supports, I think, were documented by the Auditor General, and the need to look at these was looked at very clearly by the committee, the MLA task force. I think the members of that task force desired to come up with some solutions. I attended some of those meetings, and I've had the opportunity to speak with many people who have been affected. Some members of my family have been affected by difficulties and severe problems with the system. That is why I think Bill 205, that was put forward by the Member for Lethbridge-East to institute a continuing care commissioner, should have gone forward. I had put forward at an earlier stage that such a position could even be called an inspector general.

I think there would be a great deal of feeling on the part of many, many seniors that they would not have that fear of retribution that so many of them have when they are bringing up any problems that they might have with their facilities. This is a very, very real fear. They're old. They're elderly. They're frail. They don't have a feeling that they can fight back anymore. Many of them don't even have anybody that can speak for them. It is such a problem for so many that they lose hope.

We had many things that were brought up: the inadequate facilities in some areas, sometimes poor maintenance, understaffing – the staffing problem is becoming unworkable for many of these facilities – the lack of staff training, the standards problem, the lack of accountability directly due to conscious decisions made by this government in the past. I would ask the minister to look at something like a continuing care commissioner in the future because I think an independent office with the power to inspect facilities and to ensure compliance with standards would do a great deal to give a sense of stability, a sense of ability to deal with their problems for many seniors and would, in reality, enhance the lives of our seniors.

There's often confusion among seniors and families when it comes to identifying and understanding the basket of services and levels of care provided in homes. I'd ask if the minister could look in the future – because I don't see it here – to provide a consistent province-wide classification system in order to eliminate this confusion. Terms such as “assisted living,” “lodges,” and “supportive living” must be clearly defined. The government must also require that all homes outline in unambiguous terms who is responsible for the cost and delivery of these services, that they be really defined in clear ways.

Systems must be in place so that residents and families know what level of care to expect and can decide which type of facility would best meet their needs. In the Alberta Liberal opposition we've also called for a website, a simple thing to be created, where all facilities are required to fully disclose their staffing, their levels of service, their programs, and all related costs and fees.

Some specific financial questions from the estimates on page 372. For line item 2.1.2 I'll be a little bit more specific than the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. There seems to be on line item 2.1.2 a discrepancy in the '05-06 budget. There's a difference between $8,652,000 and the '05-06 forecast of $5,652,000. The question is: how does the minister account for the dramatic reduction in spending for the Alberta seniors' benefit and school property tax assistance program delivery?

Another question is: what steps has the ministry taken to more accurately forecast its spending? It's difficult, but it's such huge numbers and such broad projections in the population that it would be appreciated if we could see some sense of an answer to that question.

The minister mentioned it in her earlier answer, but I think it should be underlined and be made clear that the Alberta Social Housing Corporation debt repayment – and I believe that was to the heritage trust fund – is something that is to pay an old loan. Really, it's nothing new, and it's not providing new monies that could be seen to be dealing with providing more assistance to seniors.

It continues to come up again and again that much of the confusion among Albertans about programs and services – and I think all MLAs here get that, people coming to their office. They get this confusion, and it's related to continuing care and the result of housing and health care and human resources and others being split between various ministries. As well, last fall the Premier indicated that consolidating seniors' programs and services is “under active consideration.” To build a little bit more past the previous answer, can the minister explain why this plan was abandoned?

I've mentioned the Auditor General. What steps is the minister taking to ensure that the Auditor General is able to determine how much money is going into long-term facilities, what it's being used for, and how effectively it can be spent? To echo the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in the problems with the 2003 increases in accommodation: I hear this time and time and time again, that there is some need to take care of that because this is still a huge hardship for many seniors. What will the ministry do to at least ameliorate some of the accommodation rates which were increased so dramatically a few years ago?

The importance of this ministry is huge. It is one that in many ways determines how we're seen outside of Alberta in terms of how we deal with those who are disadvantaged, and I just hoped that we could get some more for many of these people. More isn't always better, but for many of these people there is a clear need.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I answer the questions any further, could we revert to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce the staff that I have here with me this afternoon. I'm pleased they were here and have heard all the questions that we've had so far, and there'll be more to come. I'd ask that they rise as I introduce them to you: my new deputy minister, Tim Wiles; Dave Arsenault, our assistant deputy minister of strategic planning and supportive living division; Mahmud Dhala of our financial services area; and Jason Chance, our communications director. Of course, many of you know my executive assistant, Wendy Rodgers.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to stand this afternoon and give a little bit of a testament first to the minister that wears her heart on her sleeve. Last fall during the caucus retreat in Bonnyville-Cold Lake the minister so graciously met with the PDD community in my constituency, and they raised the different issues and concerns that they had. The culmination of that meeting led to a presentation last week of a $600,000 cheque for low-income housing for PDD clients in our constituency.

At that presentation, Mr. Chairman, the parents of these unfortunate individuals spoke of the minister who came and listened and did not interrupt but continued to listen, and they felt that that was a rare quality in politicians. So I guess that maybe I learned something from that personally myself. At the end of the discussion the minister made a firm commitment to assist them, and the culmination of the hard work over many, many years by these individuals will soon be realized before the end of this year.

To the minister all I can say is: continue the good work. The good work that you've done without the assistance of a deputy minister leads me to believe that now that you have a deputy, we can see a lot more great things to come from your department to assist the seniors and other individuals in need in our province. So I look forward to that.

I had some questions to ask the minister, but they have been asked by previous members, so I won't take up any more of their time. I just want to say thank you very much to the minister, who wears her heart on her sleeve.

Mr. Chairman, is it all right to give the minister a hug before I sit down?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to get a few minutes to get on the record with some of the issues around this portfolio. I was the previous opposition critic for seniors. This department is slightly reconstituted, but because of the constituents I represent, AISH is a big issue in my constituency, as is Aids to Daily Living, and I continue to be interested in seniors' issues because I have a fairly high percentage of seniors living in my constituency. I'm also interested in housing. So let me run through some of the issues I want to underline for the minister but also a few questions I have along the way. I'm aware that we're starting to get short on time for this debate, so if she wishes to reply in writing to allow others to question her today, that would be fine by me.

I'm wondering if we're anticipating any future increase in Aids to Daily Living. When we look at her long-term, rolling, three-year plan, can we expect that there would be any kind of indexing or a consistent inflationary increase for ADL? The flip side of that is: can we be expecting that there is going to be any kind of reduction or clawing back or delisting or any change in the level of benefits available through that?

While I'm on the subject of indexing, I would urge the minister to consider indexing PDD and AISH. We keep getting into this cycle where there's no indexing. Yes, there's been an increase this year, but there won't be next year or the year after that or the year after that. We get four, five, or six years down the road, and the rates are seriously behind inflation, and then it's a fairly large budget increase to look at, and I know that it's difficult for the minister to go before Treasury Board and argue for quite a large increase.

If the government MLAs in this House believed in the wisdom of indexing the MLAs' salaries to the Alberta weekly wage, I fail to understand why that same wisdom isn't transferred to the benefits that are available for PDD and for AISH. I hasten to add that the Alberta Liberals believe that MLAs' salaries should not be set that way. It shouldn't be set by ourselves. It should be decided by an independent committee.

I'm looking to the minister for clarification now around housing, and whether her ministry covers shelters and how much of that she covers. Perhaps she can give us a list of where, under which department, we would find funding for things like temporary shelters which include a mat program – in other words, mats on the floor that people sleep on overnight – whether she is covering the women's shelters now, if there's a portion of her budget going toward women's shelters or if that's still coming out of Children's Services. It continues to irk me that we have women's shelters under Children's Services, but this government doesn't seem to see the irony in that.

Is she responsible for the transitional housing as women, for example, move away from the short-term, three-week shelters and into what we call transitional – that's three months or even further than that – third-stage housing? Is she covering that, or is that in a different location?

We do know that she is responsible for the housing in Fort McMurray, and I was looking for more leadership from the minister around that housing crisis in Fort McMurray. I was up there last week, and I was really shocked at the position that this government would put that city in. I expected that there would have been a better understanding and more support for that particular city. So much of the wealth that this government is able to get its hands on and exploit – I mean, the people in Fort McMurray didn't put it in the ground, but they're certainly helping to get it out. I was shocked at the position that they have been left in, to fend for themselves there.

I realize that the minister has released, I think, at this point two small amounts of land to allow for additional housing to be built, but the crisis there is far beyond two allocations. I was looking for a longer term plan with some vision to it that would give us some idea that Fort McMurray was going to be able to come out of the situation that they're in within a specified period of time, whether it's three years or five years or seven years or 10 years. At what point would we expect that there would be enough housing units there to support the workers that need to be on-site for the projects that this government is approving through its processes?

I was able to meet with groups like Canadian Mental Health, and I went to see the HIV/AIDS network. I was visiting with some of the people associated with the regional health authority. The same issues just come up over and over again. They can't get a quality of life up there because they can't get enough workers to build those recreational facilities and cultural facilities that would give them a quality of life because there's no place to house the workers.

So there really needs to be a team effort here, and I was hoping that I would have seen more of that. I'd like to draw the minister out on what she sees as the longer range solutions to this because if we don't see action that starts today for five years down the road, then five years down the road we're going to be in an even worse position. So what is the vision from the minister regarding that?

A number of people have spoken about the move of the government toward an enhanced living, or assisted living, or supportive living, situation. I note with some chagrin that this idea sprang from a very good idea that was started, I think, in Copenhagen, in which they started a supported living environment for people with dementia, and then it got picked up in the States, and God bless them, they do seem to be able to take a good thing and pervert it in the good old U.S. of A. It turned from a very positive, supportive environment into a way of having people pay for things more and more, so getting away from the medical model and calling it a housing model.

Really, what we know happened in the States is that you've got what used to be a long-term care facility, except that if you've got someone that, you know, can't really propel themselves down the hall to the cafeteria for lunch, well, the solution to that is to give people more choice, and I'll put quotations around that word "choice." So they now have the choice of paying someone $2 to wheel them down the hall, or, gosh, they'll extend the eating hours so if it takes you an hour to get yourself down the hallway, dragging yourself in your wheelchair, by the time you get to the cafeteria, it's still open.

I'm really offended by the thought that that's the situation that we would be in in Canada, that we would be steering towards, you know, racing towards the bottom in the care that we give people. But there's no question that the model that is being followed with this supported, slash, enhanced living is exactly that model. I'm interested to see how the minister is going to roll that out over a five-year plan and how many of these units she expects to see under her ministry three years out, five years out, and 10 years out and what kind of fee structures will be associated with the services and with the accommodations there.

I appreciated my colleagues from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and Cardston-Taber-Warner raising the issue of earnings thresholds for people on AISH. I think that that is an area of great fear for people. I know that the government was trying to take some tentative steps in that direction, but they've created such fear over the years for individuals in these programs that somehow they'll lose their benefits if they start to earn more money. I think that there's more that can be done there, and I encourage the minister in that direction.

One of the questions that I get from constituents is whether there is any consideration to making funding for alternative medicine available through the seniors' programs. Increasingly, people are being steered towards acupuncture or various kinds of alternative therapies that are not covered under traditional health care plans. Nonetheless, that's what's being prescribed for them, or seniors are being encouraged to try those therapies out, but they find it very restrictive because they're paying out of pocket for it. I'm wondering if the seniors' benefit program is looking to make any kind of an allocation or an allowance for payment that people could apply for, to cover additional costs that come through an alternative medicine program.

So those are some of the questions that I'm looking for the minister to discuss. Obviously, I'm most interested in the longer range policy frameworks, to hear what she has in mind there that goes beyond the exact numbers on the page now. In particular, I'm looking to see whether the government is planning on continuing to follow the path that they're on right now or if there are, sort of, larger plans in the future and what those would be.

Thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the member for bringing forward the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program at the beginning of her comments because I didn't have an opportunity to address that in my opening remarks. As you know, this program provides assistance to people who have a chronic disability or an illness, so that they can access basic medical equipment and supplies, and that will allow them to be more independent in their home or in a home-like setting. This program, AADL, supports approximately 78,000 clients annually, so over a five-year period more than 400,000 Albertans may have used this program on a cyclical basis. For example, some may receive a new hearing aid or walker every five years, if needed. It's an important program for people, so that's why they do access it frequently.

Mr. Chairman, back to the question that the member had asked, the budget for AADL benefits has increased from $79,185,000 to $83,935,000 for '06-07. It's really important what that increase is for. It includes a million dollar increase to begin the implementation of a three-year pilot project for augmentative communication devices. The community has been asking for that for a very long time. This is an initiative that my assistant deputy minister, Dave Arseneault, who is here today, put forward and advocated for strongly on behalf of people. I'm glad that he did because we did receive funding this year. The pilot is going to assist Albertans who have difficulty communicating due to medical conditions or physical disabilities.

The budget also includes $300,000 for an innovative program assisting Albertans with problems such as diabetes, and that's to lower their risk of foot amputation. It will be instituted at high-risk foot clinics in both Calgary and in Edmonton.

As well, a $3.45 million increase for the AADL program supports the caseload growth, price increases, and necessary maintenance to computer systems. Current program pressures include an increasing volume of clients, the complexity of needs, and the increasing costs.

These pressures are due in part to the changing demographics, which you can understand, of an aging population and the health system's move to provide people with health services in the community rather than facility care, which goes back to many of the questions that you've brought forward here today. So from '94-95 to '04-05, over the 10-year period, we've had a 16 per cent increase in the number of clients, with significant increases this year alone in this program for important needs.

The other area, Mr. Chairman, that I'd like to address as well because the member did mention that she had been to Fort McMurray and what she saw were the needs there and asked about the Fort McMurray land sales and how they relate to this ministry – we know about the Auditor's recommendations. Because of those recommendations I have brought in an improved process to sell Crown lands in Fort McMurray. It's through the Alberta Social Housing Corporation that those Crown lands are available. The process that we developed is open, is accountable, and I believe that it will help address those concerns, but more importantly it will truly help to have housing developed quickly. There was a new request for proposal process that I did bring in. It included strict timelines for housing development, providing affordable housing for low-income Albertans. Also, there was a set price for the land. That reduces the impact of the inflated market that the member referred to in Fort McMurray.

The parcel that we just sold recently is known as parcel D. The agreement for that parcel was between our corporation, Alberta Social Housing Corporation, and Centron Residential Corporation. The sale of that parcel was finalized on February 9, 2006. Now, my understanding from my communication with the municipality, with the planning people there, and with my department is that they're actively working on planning and engineering approvals. They are anticipating completion of that parcel D land development by the end of 2007, Mr. Chairman. It is anticipated, as I mentioned earlier, that that parcel alone will bring 2,800 housing units and it may even be over 3,000 if the density increases, which I understand is a request through the proponent to the municipality.

So we have had an open review process, considered a number of factors, including new affordable housing, and I have to tell you that I am confident that this is the best overall proposal for Fort McMurray with parcel D. More importantly, every 90 days we're bringing another parcel on the market. We are bringing parcel F onto the market, which will provide 220 acres. That RFP is out there now. We're looking for approximately 1,500 housing units with that parcel. Then after that parcel, by the end of June, when we've received the proposals and made the decision, we will include a condition that the development of the lots will need to be completed by 2008.

Then immediately, too, we've been working with Sustainable Resource Development, and that's to obtain another 102 acres of land to be included with the existing 204 acres in the North Parsons Creek. That together could add up to another 1,800 housing units. As I said, I'm confident that that is going to meet very quickly the housing needs of people in Fort McMurray.

Thank you for letting me put that on the record, Mr. Chairman, and I will answer the other questions in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make a few remarks and also compliment our Minister of Seniors and Community Services for the simple reason that in West Yellowhead we have aging population.

Of course, I really want to mention Grande Cache. She was a driving force to help us move forward on the aspect of a lodge in Grande Cache called the Whispering Pine. I think that's a real model to have in smaller communities. We're able to work with Peace Country health to have the units connected, so we saved a lot of money in operations, especially the aspect of laundry, and with food services and everything.

I just find that working with her is such a pleasure, to move along the common-sense things. I mean, this one project that I'm speaking about today has been going on for quite a while. Sure, we had to work through the different authorities to move ahead to get the land to build it, but I just want to reiterate the great co-operation I had from her on this project.

Furthermore, with Evergreens Foundation we did some changing in the town of Hinton. There was an expectation with Mountain View that we had some long-term care units there. We had some assisted living units. We also had a dementia area. Through the work of her and the previous minister we were able to do some changing in there. We've doubled the amount of rooms for dementia, and we went with designated assisted living in the town. We're almost full there with that aspect. The people are very pleased with the kind of service that we're getting, and we're moving along on that.

I guess that the other thing that I have a little bit of wonderment – and I would like to ask the minister on this if she could basically give me understanding of it. We have some people in our area that are sort of looking at the aspect of working on and possibly setting up some low-cost housing units for the seniors in our area. I notice in her budget that on the line item talking about Canada/Alberta affordable housing, for 2006-07 we have $44 million, but basically there's no more for the out-years of our three years. I realize that this could be a program change or just a program system that we had prior to her becoming minister. I'm just wondering what her ministry is doing to move forward so that we can have programs like this since we have an aging population, if we can work with the municipalities and with entrepreneurs to put up facilities like this so that our seniors are able to stay in our communities because they are a great asset to our communities.

I also want to compliment her on the work she's done to try and move ahead with Jasper. As you realize with Jasper, in a national park a lot of times it's hard to get any type of development. Once again, what we're working on in Jasper is a system where we can move together with Aspen regional health authority to put a lodge in the community so we can have those people stay. What transpires, as you know, in a national park the majority of the time is if you've got residency there, you have to have a job. We don't want to lose those people because they're a great asset.

I guess my final comment I would like to make is about the remote housing. I know that some of my other colleagues, like the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater and the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, have done a lot of work convincing previous ministers to move ahead on this remote housing. We have to look after the aspect of our people in our region, and we were able to get the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation some manufactured homes on their different co-operatives. You wouldn't believe how much that has helped the area, and they have got good residents there. They're great contributors to our society. This is going to certainly help in the long run with the elders.

Conversely, when we opened up the Whispering Pine, a lot of people felt that the elders from the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation would not move in there. Well, I'm sorry to tell you, but they did, and they enjoy it immensely. They're very well in the community. I think that with this type of program we have to look at where we came from and give some support. So if I could have the minister give me an answer on that funding, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Once again, on behalf of all the citizens in West Yellowhead I just want to compliment her for great co-operation and basic understanding of what we have to do to move forward to make a precious resource of the seniors, and therefore we'll be a lot better off in years to come.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Mrs. Fritz: Just briefly, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the Member for West Yellowhead for those kind comments because he's a strong advocate and understands this Canada/Alberta affordable housing agreement very, very well. As he indicated, the funding for this program will be ending March 31, 2007. It's a program that we're moving into our fourth year with. We've had $153 million dedicated to it since June 2002 in support of affordable housing units being built across the province. So $44 million has been budgeted this year, for 2006-07, to complete phase 2 of the program, and that includes $22 million in funding from Alberta and $22 million from the federal government.

Having said that, when you asked about our vision or our plan for the future, with the new federal government we are hoping that this program will continue. As the member knows, Mr. Chairman, and helped to bring this change in the funding that was allocated to the various projects, phase 1 had approved a level of only $50,000 per unit, whereas now the phase that we're in, it's $150,000 per unit, which means that we're building 400 units with the funding up to March 31, 2007. So it's a significant contribution to the community for housing, and I am hoping that in the discussions we have with the federal government, we will have the program continue after March 31, 2007.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'll be very brief. I just wanted to address some comments that pertain to the new housing units in Fort McMurray. I, too, was up there last week. You can send me the answers in writing.

I'd really like to know what the criteria would be to get into that housing. What I'm concerned about is the people that are there trying to create community. They want to stay there. They want to live there. They've got grandchildren. What I'm so afraid of is that it will be the transient workers that are there until the project is built, the physical buildings are built, and then they're long gone. So I'd just like to know what that criteria is to get into that housing because I think it's very, very important that we address the fact that we have a community in crisis. If more transient workers can go in with their little LOA cheques in their hands, it's not going to help.

Oh, and one more thing: check the contracts with the companies. I do believe that there are some contractual obligations out there that perhaps they're not meeting, like by providing camp housing for their own workers.

Energy

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. [some applause] We obviously need a little more energy among this group, but we'll get that going as the night gets going.

I'd like to first take the opportunity to introduce a number of officials from the Department of Energy and from the Energy and Utilities Board. This is clearly one of the most exciting departments in this government, in this province, in this opportunity of this province for the future ahead. First, I'd like to introduce Dan McFadyen, Deputy Minister of Energy. He recently joined us as of January. To the right of him is Don Keech, assistant deputy minister. We also have with us David Breakwell, assistant deputy minister; John Giesbrecht, chief financial officer for the Energy and Utilities Board; Joe Miller, our executive director of policy, planning, and external relations; and Katherine Braun, associate executive director, electricity. I'll have them stand and please accept the warm welcome of the House. There are others listening in attentively to this exciting debate that we'll have tonight, and we look forward to comments from all members.

We know of the prosperity that Alberta enjoys presently and has over the decades because of the energy industry. This industry is going to continue to play a very prominent role and should play a very prominent role in the future opportunities for Alberta. We've had record levels of energy activity this past year. Exploration, development, production, technology advances continue to be coming in a variety of methods, improved environmental technologies, and protection. The list is really getting quite vast as the ongoing improvements and efficiencies in the industry itself.

Oil sands productions are really at the infancy of production at this stage, about a million barrels a day. Probably by 2007 that might represent close to 75 per cent of the total oil production in Alberta.

We know of our conventional sources – we've been producing them for decades – and we still have vast untapped conventional sources of gas and oil. In fact, with technology improvements we'll probably find a whole new Alberta just in all of our conventional sources of oil and gas.

Yet we continue to have enormous activity and opportunity in the unconventional sources: the coal bed methane, tight sands and shales, the gas that would be available in those areas, the oil sands themselves. Then if we start adding onto all of that the coal opportunities – with the advances, really, in some of the technologies in the future coal can and should play one of the clean environmental solutions of energy as one of the more economic platforms to accomplishing that objective.

We are very much working in the department on an integrated energy strategy that looks at the integration of all of these sources of hydrocarbons together with renewable sources. We could be at the forefront of all energy development and continue to be global energy leaders. We have centuries of opportunity, and it really is only going to be the challenge of putting together and managing that opportunity that would limit us.

This past year we've had more than $14 billion that came through energy resources, 35 per cent of the total provincial revenues, a record year in many aspects. The next year, going forward, looking at our estimates, likewise should be a very promising year for the energy industry in Alberta. They'll continue to provide a very substantial source of funding for priority programs as they have continuously done for health care, education, social programs, and the like.

We've also announced that Alberta consumers will continue to have the protection of the monthly natural gas rebate program. It was extended for three years and is now a six-month program, starting in October through the end of March. So there's a rebate that's commensurate as the price of natural gas goes up and down.

We'd also like to just mention that for us to continue to ensure that we tap into the opportunity, we're going to ensure that investments are made so that Alberta continues to build the capacity and capability needed to support the innovation that's needed to be at the forefront of a globally competitive energy sector. We are certainly monitoring and looking at Albertans receiving their fair share of the resources through royalties, taxes, bonuses, and rentals. We likewise will make sure that we're attractive to investors, both conventional and unconventional sources alike.

I know that in the estimates, in the budgets there's continuously the discussion about the government's projection of commodity prices into the future, and that will no doubt continue to be again this year. It's very volatile, and it doesn't matter what number you pick; you're likely to be wrong. You certainly might get some indications of where revenue and commodity prices might go, but they have very significant sensitivities. Just for example, in Budget 2006 a $1 change in oil is $104 million. A 10 cent change in natural gas is about $123 million. If the exchange rate changes by 1 cent, that could have a $172 million change in revenue. So minor changes, really, in these commodity prices do have substantive impacts upon the revenues of the province, both up and down.

With respect to the royalty structures one of the very significant aspects of the department is establishing royalty policies and collecting of those revenues to ensure that Albertans receive their fair share. We want to ensure that we remain competitive and attractive to investors so that it will create that growth and employment opportunity for Albertans into the future. There have been numerous studies on our royalties regimes. Van Meurs, Wood Mackenzie, even our own associations such as CAPP in Alberta as well as other competitive sources talk about our royalty regimes as being quite tough in many respects. Yet I would say that in the work that we've done in the department, we do continue to establish and find that we are obtaining a fair-share value for Albertans.

I would like to in one discussion of royalties, though, announce that one thing that we've been working on for some time and we are going to commence starting today is that we are reviewing the Alberta royalty tax credit program. We will be talking specifically to industry about the purpose and need of that program. Clearly, the Auditor General has spoken about identifying the needs of that program, so we are now actively going to be reviewing that program. Any changes, if they were to happen, would be made by January 1, 2007. The review will focus on ensuring that this tax credit is meeting its intended purposes, simplifying it, replacing it, or eliminating it, all of the above. We will work aggressively to ensure that programs that continue to go forward are designed to meet the purposes and reflect the vibrant time of the day.

With respect to energy price forecasts Budget 2006 assumes that we are using an average $7.50 Canadian per gigajoule for natural gas. That's lower than last year's third-quarter forecast, yet we've already seen quite a bit of softening. Natural gas prices have gone up from $15 to the peak and back down into the $7 range, substantive volatility just even within the one year. For oil prices we're going to be using a benchmark of $50 U.S. west Texas intermediate crude oil price. Once again, it's almost impossible to estimate what that price might be.

But in forecasting for budget purposes, I would continue to say that it would only be prudent that you establish and let the public know what your assumptions are. We've given the price sensitivities to that. When prices go up and down, public will be able to quantify the impact of that variation from our budget. Also, we want to ensure that we don't get too aggressive on those price forecasts so that you don't want to undermine your ability to finance the programs that are in your budget. You ought to be some degree of conservative in forecasting, not out of line. So it's going to be impossible to ever say that you will ever get something like this forecasted correctly.

The highest bonus this year: our bonuses came in at $3.4 billion land sales, a record year, about three times higher than any other previous record high. This year we're going to forecast land sales at just under $1.5 billion, which would be the second highest year ever, though substantially down from this, more in acknowledgement to put it back in line of not knowing how to forecast the level of activity that may occur this year, though the forecast in our estimates still would end up being second highest ever.

In respect to the Auditor General's comments we have accepted all of the recommendations, and we are actively working on those. I'd be happy to answer any questions if committee members had them going forward.

I'll spend a few moments just talking about some of the changes in the budget itself, in the estimates for this year. The Energy ministry's operating spending for 2006-07 is $218 million. That's an increase of $16 million over the forecast of 2005-06. That's up 8 per cent over the third-quarter forecast. The capital investment budget of $18 million is $5 million higher than the previous year. That's up 28 per cent over the third-quarter forecast. These are both an acknowledgement of two key areas of investment, both in the department and in the Energy and Utilities Board.

There's an acknowledgement of the high level of activity that's occurring and the need for having ensured that we are properly resourced with people and systems to keep pace with both the regulation and the monitoring and the compliance of the industry as well, not just approval of applications. This is in recognition to see that the industry and the department and the Energy and Utilities Board are both adequately financed to keep pace with competitive wages, tracking the people to hire additional staff, and see that we have the resources to update some antiquated systems that are badly in need over the next few years, that our budget accommodates to replace those old systems. They'll be adequate for the time, but given the level of activity, those upgrades are necessary.

As we've worked with the Energy and Utilities Board and with industry and our own department, this should address the needs of being able to keep pace with the level and quantity of activity that's coming at them to be able to manage on an efficient and daily basis.

I think I'll leave my comments there. We'd be happy to entertain any questions that the members have on our estimates through the evening and respond in more detail as needed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. One of the most fascinating aspects of being an MLA is the people that you meet. This evening on the steps of the Legislature I had the great fortune of meeting a very interesting and diverse group of visitors to our city, accompanied by a recent immigrant to Edmonton. Living in Edmonton now but originally from El Salvador is Julio Orellana. Accompanying him is a visitor from Cuba, Mr. Lazaro Rosa, and three visitors from Mexico: Miguel Angel Reyes, Carlos Chulin Cordillo, and Maria Concepcion Chulin Cordillo. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm reception from this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: For the benefit of those sitting in the galleries, we are at the committee stage, which is a much more informal session of the Assembly. That's why you see people moving around, removing their jackets. It's a little more relaxed. In a regular session it's much more formal.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I stand to participate in the estimates debate this evening on Alberta Energy for the fiscal year for which we are currently debating the entire budget. Now, I'm looking first at the three-year business plan, and I'm also looking at the fiscal plan, and sometimes I'm referring back to the annual report from the previous year of the Department of Energy.

The hon. minister is absolutely correct: this is a very, very important ministry. It is responsible for not only collecting our royalties but ensuring that there's a regulatory framework in place so that resource companies can have confidence in this province and its regulatory approval process.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor, and I think he deserves the courtesy of a little silence in the room.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Now, certainly the Department of Energy is requesting the total supply of $132 million for operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases. This is an increase of roughly 10 per cent from the fiscal year '05-06 forecast. The ministry will be spending in total $219 million, which is an increase again of 8 per cent from last year's forecast. The majority of the increase, as I understand it, is the spending that will be used by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to accommodate improvements to regulatory requirements and operations practices relating to the public and environmental safety and reliability and adapting regulatory activities to new energy sources, such as coal-bed methane.

Again, I can't emphasize how important this department is to not only Albertans now but for future generations because this department has the responsibility of making sure that we are receiving a fair share of the royalties that are created, the Crown revenue share from resource development. I was disappointed. I learned earlier this winter – and it was certainly reflected in the business plan – that the actual percentage of the royalties that we're collecting is going down, but I'm pleased to learn from the minister that there's going to be a review of the royalty tax credit. Certainly, that may have been necessary whenever resources were more modestly priced for natural gas on the North American market and for oil on the world market.

There are a lot of issues to discuss in this small department. Particularly, at this time I would like to focus on royalty rates, the accountability factor in all of this, and certainly on electricity. We can't forget about electricity. Mr. Chairman, in the business plan on page 144 it states that "Alberta will have a financially stable, open and accountable government." In the spirit of accountability will the hon. minister please begin sharing royalty information with the owners of the resources: Albertans?

Now, the hon. minister referred to a Wood Mackenzie study, and I sure would like a copy of that. I would like to see how that study compares our royalty structure to that of, for instance, let's say, the lower 48 states or Norway or Alaska. If that information exists, I would appreciate that. The hon. minister mentioned another study. I couldn't hear, but I believe it's the same one that the hon. minister referenced in question period about three weeks ago. If we're going to have this open and accountable government, well, let's put our money where our mouth is and provide this not only to this hon. member but through the House to the general public. We have to question: who, exactly, is Alberta Energy accountable to? If your goal is to be open and accountable, can we expect that you will be making public the details of all reports on your recent royalty review? I know that we can go back to different annual reports, and we can certainly see where there are royalty reviews all the time, but I think it is important.

Another question that I have for the minister is: how does the hon. minister plan on facilitating a more open and transparent department? A guy shouldn't have to fight for this information. It should be tabled in the Legislative Assembly maybe on the second or third day of session, at the start of session. It should be a routine matter. We shouldn't have to fight for this or ask for it. That, Mr. Chairman, is quite important because I do notice that in the fiscal plan we are changing how we track the forecasts of natural gas prices.

I'm reading directly from footnote (a) on page 101, the economic outlook. This is the same economic outlook where I can't find a comparative price of electricity, but we'll get to that later. That used to be always in here, but it's not anymore because I consider this government to be ashamed of what electricity deregulation has done to prices. They've gone nowhere but up.

- (a) The natural gas price is the US price of natural gas at Henry Hub Louisiana, as this is the benchmark for natural gas prices in the rest of North America. Since many consultants do not forecast the Alberta Reference Price, which is used in the Alberta Budget and is the basis for Alberta natural gas royalty calculations, the table has been changed this year to the US Henry Hub price of natural gas. The Alberta Government forecast in the table above is also the US Henry Hub price.

My questions would be: if we were to use the Henry hub price, which I suspect we are, will that make a difference in how our royalties are calculated? Can the minister tell us how using the Alberta reference price in the past has impacted royalty calculations? Have we lost money that we should have been collecting? Has Alberta Energy conducted any studies to determine whether using the Alberta reference price in the past to determine royalties has resulted in lost revenues? If not, will you do so? Will the minister provide a comparison of the royalties collected using the Alberta reference price versus the Henry hub Louisiana price for the past 10 years to prove that we have not lost revenue?

Again, the hon. minister talked about the Alberta royalty tax credit, and that's good news, as far as I'm concerned, because it's a program that we don't need at this time, as far as I can see.

Getting back to the business plan, on page 147, Public Awareness and Understanding: "In order to support future energy development, Albertans need to be confident that energy resources will continue to be developed and managed in a responsible manner." How can Albertans be confident that energy resources are managed responsibly when, again, we have such difficulty in getting information from the department? Given that the Albertan slice of the pie has declined by 4 per cent since 2001, what is the department going to do to restore confidence in resource management? From page 158 what steps has the minister taken to more accurately forecast revenue numbers?

Mr. Chairman, in the business plan on page 148: core business 1, goal 1, performance measures, Crown revenue share of industry's net operating revenue. We talked about this earlier: energy companies are making record profits, yet our cut in percentage is decreasing. Again I have to ask: how much revenue are we losing at this time of opportunity that could be saved for future generations? Certainly, many people are quickly becoming aware of just exactly how much money this government is spending, and we still have that same long list of problems. We're spending more and more money, and we don't seem to be solving any of these problems. When we're spending the money, we've got to be conscious of the fact that we also have to be saving money. A lot of this resource revenue belongs to the hon. minister's children and great-grandchildren. Certainly, we have to make sure that there's something set aside for them.

Again in regard to page 148, why is the department failing to meet your core business 1 goal? Who is responsible for the failure to meet this goal? Given that you've allowed Albertans' share of resource revenue to decline by 4 per cent since 2001, how can you claim that the royalty structure is now healthy and competitive? What are you doing to ensure that you do not miss your own targets again this year?

You maintain the status quo for your targeted share of profits from resource development through to 2008-09. When will this government raise its targets to take advantage of the current economic situation? I'm not going to call it a boom. I'm just going to call it a prosperous time.

Energy companies are exceeding their revenue goals off Alberta's resources while you cannot even meet your own modest goals. Isn't it time that we adjusted the royalty structure? We have a 25 per cent royalty on synthetic crude production after capital costs are paid, and that's net. So why can't we have 25 per cent as a target for conventional crude oil production and natural gas production?

Failing to meet the department's goals results in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars. Can the minister please explain this evening his department's failure to collect sufficient royalties on behalf of Albertans? On the issue of royalties I also have some additional questions as to how that is calculated. When we look at the department list, we see natural gas and by-products. We see crude oil royalties. We see bonuses and sales of Crown leases, synthetic crude oil, rentals and fees, coal, and then off that, of course, is the Alberta royalty tax credit. We have all these programs for royalty reduction programs. I think that we have 10 going at the present time. I know that two years ago we had nine, but I think that we have 10 now. I could be wrong. If I am, I'd appreciate a correction from the hon. minister.

When we look at natural gas and by-products royalty, what are the by-products? What's included in the line item natural gas and by-products royalty? Does it include pentane? Does it include butane, propane? If I could have a breakdown of exactly what this by-products category consists of. Is it NGLs, or natural gas liquids? What exactly makes up that royalty, or are they separate? I know that if you look at Stats Canada production figures, all those by-products are listed separately, but which ones are included in the line item natural gas and by-products royalty?

I think it's a good idea that bitumen now has its own separate line. A lot of people in this province don't realize the difference in price between conventional crude oil production and some of those heavier oils, and I think that's a good idea. Certainly, if I could have that information, exactly what makes up that item and what is included in it, I would be very grateful.

Now, in the time permitted – there's not much time to discuss this department's budget, I'll say that – if we could spend a little bit of time on electricity. There are certainly a number of outstanding issues surrounding electricity, whether you're in southern Alberta or whether you're in Fort McMurray. In southern Alberta, of course, many people are questioning this whole idea of the Montana/Alberta tie-line and how it is necessary or why it is necessary.

Certainly, documents that have been provided to this side of the House indicate that in some cases exports of electricity will drive up the price here domestically. When we think of the domestic price, we just have to look at the wholesale electricity market last year in this province. The average wholesale market price of electricity in 2005 was $70 a megawatt, which was up from roughly $54 the year before. Now, that's a significant increase. We're all told – and the minister and the government are trying to sell us this bill of goods – that electricity deregulation has worked and will continue to work, but that tells a different story.

You have to look at the prices. Prices haven't gone down, and I don't think we can blame it on the cost of natural gas. That's only a small portion of that price increase. We just can't simply say: oh, the price of natural gas has gone up, so the price of electricity has gone up.

We've got transmission issues. In fact, I don't know where to start on the whole issue of transmission. Certainly, I was taken aback, to say the least. I got another phone call from an unidentified person. It's not long ago that we had asked in question period because of the whole issue of the Department of Energy's paper on role and mandate requirements for Alberta electric industry implementing agencies, as it was called, this whole role and mandates policy paper that was produced by the electricity business unit leader, Mr. Kellan Fluckiger.

People were up in arms over this. They thought it was wrong that only certain stakeholders had been consulted. The hon. minister stood in this Assembly and said, "Oh, no; the consultation process is good," and the hon. minister indicated that he was quite satisfied with it. But more and more people are coming all the time with more and more information that they're not satisfied with it. Not only some of the electricity retailers but, for instance, the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta in a letter dated December 7 were very dissatisfied with it. The EUB felt that they weren't consulted in a manner that was respectful of their regulatory role, and I agree with the EUB, and now we've got the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta expressing the same sort of displeasure.

So I get this phone call, and it was from a concerned Albertan who wouldn't identify themselves to me. I could look in my Daytimer, and I could tell you what day it was. It was shortly after I had asked for the resignation of this electricity business unit leader, Mr. Kellan Fluckiger. I would like to know what sort of conflict of interest rules the Department of Energy has. There was a serious matter brought to my attention, and I think it has to be dealt with. Now, according to this source – and I would really appreciate it if the hon. minister would follow up on this and get to the bottom of this. Hopefully it's not true, but this source by telephone indicated to me that Mr. Fluckiger's spouse is CEO of AltaLink and felt that there was a conflict of interest there because Mr. Fluckiger is setting the rules for the transmission policy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. On some of the comments I'd be happy to supply a little more detail in due course. I'd like to first state a couple of things that got repeated a number of times.

Talking about fair share of royalties, specifically in the business plan notes it goes down to 19 per cent, as if we are somehow losing a percentage in the take. That's kind of the reference: that the slice of the pie is decreasing, that our cut is decreasing. Actually, our royalty rates haven't decreased. It's not a result of our structures having been changed to take a lesser percentage. Our percentages are still there. So when price goes up, we do too. Our structures are factored by two things: the price of the commodity, both for oil and gas, and by the production volumes. So there are two things that come into play with how much we'll get.

As we get more mature fields, as the production volumes go down – and they are in our conventional fields of gas and oil – those wells become less productive, so they will have a lower royalty rate associated with them. What we're trying to ensure is that you don't make the cost too prohibitive so that those wells are shut in. You want to extract all the resource you possibly can, so you want to still encourage those low-producing wells. The economics are still there so that they can produce from low-producing wells, and we have more and more of those in Alberta. We don't have some of these large pools of conventional sources compared to, say, Norway or something like that. Production volume has been one of the real key successes, actually, in helping to get the last incremental barrel of oil or the last amount of gas that you can from that well.

But the other very significant change that's caused in the overall average is the fact of the increasing production out of the oil sands. The reason why it's gone from, say, the mid-20s down to 19 per cent in our business plan is that our oil sands royalty regime is at 1 per cent until payout. So you can see in the estimates this year that we're getting $1.716 billion for the crude oil from bitumen royalties. It was $1.184 billion last year. When you see the more oil that comes from the oil sands, that royalty structure is different, so it's going to change the average mix. We're not reducing our take on all of our conventional oil and gas. It's just that when you add in increasing production from a different source, of course it changes the overall averages, and that's what's happened to the take. It hasn't changed anything, that we are getting less. You have to look at and separate the two.

The design of the generic royalty regime for the oil sands was to ensure that these are the highest producing sources of oil in the world. These are the highest risk projects, because of the high cost structures, of anywhere in the world. This is still a volatile commodity. Heavy oils aren't even commanding $60, like you'd mentioned. Heavy oils have had a very substantial differential in the past year. They've only been commanding the $30 range for a good part of the year. Our heavy oils in the oil sands take substantial investment of upgraders to get them so that we can even get to that price.

These are very expensive, long-term projects, and it really is in our best interest to ensure that that risk capital is paid out quickly so that we will have a long-term, viable project, so that those jobs will be secure for the future. It was designed with two things in mind. These projects are the least cost-incentived projects in the world, though the resource is great, so you have to take into account also the multi-billion dollar projects' high capital. When you blend in something like oil sands, which has been a very successful regime thus far, the projects are now starting to pay out faster because of high prices, so we will benefit on the upside sooner on more of those barrels than in the past. That will start altering, once again, that royalty percentage share that we take.

We're just at the beginning of the stages of production in oil out of the oil sands, about a million barrels today. In a few years we could be at about a million and a half barrels a day of production, just in our next three-year business plan. We're forecasting that in another decade it could be up to about 3 million barrels a day. As those projects come on, it is going to take some time, another decade or so, before those projects all get paid out. This is long-term, patient capital both for industry and for Albertans to ensure that there's a long-term viable future for these oil sands in a world where commodity prices can come back down. There are lots of scenarios that could see commodity prices for oil and gas in North America come right back down. We're not forecasting that to be a substantive change though we are seeing some even in our own forecast, not being quite as aggressive on that price because there is a lot of downside risk to that price as well.

You'd mentioned the Henry hub price and why not use the Alberta reference price. One of the great things that's happened is we've created an Alberta hub, and it's a market hub. It's actually one of the largest gas-trading hubs in this world. What we want to continue to build on is that we have this trading platform right here in Alberta, and they use the Alberta reference price.

The Henry hub is another market. We don't price our gas off Henry hub. It's only used there for comparative purposes. It wouldn't change what our take would be. It's just that you would base your royalty on a different reference price. So we've used and want to strengthen the Alberta hub as being the right marketplace to develop more trading to be expanded off this and that our gas is traded off this hub. We'll continue to reference that that's the price that we realize on the sale of that product right here.

There are different oil commodity prices throughout the world. There are different gas commodity markets in the world. You can use them for comparison's sake, but it doesn't change that we would take more or less. You would just now all of a sudden use a different reference price if you wanted to price everything off a different market. We use it because this is the market that's been established in Alberta, where the gas is sold closest to the point, one which we want to continue to develop and increase.

Natural gas and by-products: I'd be happy to get a list with more detail. That clearly will include all of the natural gas liquids. You'd mentioned some of the propanes, butanes, pentanes and the like, and C₅ and plastics. We do realize royalties on all those structures, on all of those products. That's included in there. I'd be happy to give you more of a breakdown on that.

You'd mentioned also some of the studies: Wood Mackenzie. Van Meurs was the other one that I'd cited previously. I'd be happy to share those studies. I don't have any problems with that. A lot of our work does stay. We have been preparing for it. We do a lot of work internally, continuously. This isn't a matter that you're commissioning a report. We do continual monitoring of our royalties and of places around the world, so we would have to go to quite a bit of work in just comparing and building reports. This isn't an event other than that it's something that we continually monitor. If we get to the point of having a report prepared, I'd be happy to share that report. There's no intent to have to do anything other than ensure that Albertans understand what it does mean and to what extent you can benchmark and ensure that we are receiving our fair share, all things which I'd be happy to share with yourselves and with the public.

One of the royalty things we have looked at is the programs. That's why the Alberta royalty tax credit is something where we are undertaking a very significant review as to the need for its continuation. We will look at that one with respect to the small companies in particular as to: is there really a need to continue with that with the small companies? Clearly, there's less of that need demonstrated with the larger companies. So we'll take a look at that. Any changes would be happening through this year, best implemented in January of 2007.

The reason I say that is the history. The Alberta royalty tax credit program actually came back in '74, when the federal government disallowed the deduction of royalties. In response to not being allowed to deduct royalties, as with any other royalties that were allowed for federal tax deductions – this was singled out, so the Alberta government of the time put in an Alberta royalty tax credit. Later on the federal government had a number of tax changes introduced: a resource allowance, which was an approximation of the royalty deduction. That's changed over time. Prices collapsed, so there have been modifications of this program through all these years. Now, all of a sudden when we were examining this project, this program with the Alberta royalty tax credit, in light of higher price scenarios not having been anticipated, is there really a meaningful need to continue this program?

The reason for January of next year: that will be the final transition of the federal tax changes to allow for the full deductibility of royalties. They're eliminating the resource allowance. That will be phased out by the end of this year, and the full deductibility of royalties happens as of January 1, 2007. As well, they were allowing for corporate income tax changes for the oil and gas industry. So the timing coincides with the federal government finally reversing all those policies which led to the creation of this program in the first instance.

On electricity. You had mentioned the Montana/Alberta tie-line. That's a merchant line. That's a private-sector line totally. Exports don't drive up prices domestically. It really depends on what markets are everywhere else. What has happened in natural gas – and it's not really a fair comparison to take natural gas and electricity in this sense. The natural gas supply has really been constrained in North America, and it's a North American contained market. Electricity is somewhat of a North American contained market, but the capacity to find substantially more generation of all sources is quite unlimited in electricity. If there's a market for it, they will find an ability to put on new generation.

Quite to the contrary, what more interties would give us would be more stability in our system. We have already a tie-line between Alberta and B.C. We already export or import, both ways. These lines aren't just a one-way export; they are for imports too. When all of a sudden we're a growing market and we have a need or a plant is down, if you have other plants because of more export and import capacity, we will find more stabilization of our own market. We will find that even the generators here will have a broader market to both sell their product and to import in the time of need to meet the demands right here. They will also then be subject to having to be competitive with the broader markets of electricity.

You mentioned that one of the successes has to be price. You say that the price hasn't gone down, but quite frankly, price has gone down substantively over this. In the early days of deregulation price spiked because of natural gas. The first spike that we'd ever seen to that extent was when gas – we were used to gas being in the $2 to $3 range – all of a sudden went to the $10 to $12 range. The first time we'd ever seen a spike like that happened to coincide with when we deregulated. It led to the substantive increase in electricity costs. Today one of the main contributing factors to higher electricity cost is natural gas. Natural gas is not the price it used to be a decade ago. I don't know if it's five times as much, but it's still in the $6 to $7 range. It's been up to $15 this year. It traditionally was in the $1 to $2 range. It is a major component of an increasing cost in the market unrelated to anything to do with deregulation. It is a cost that's borne not just here but throughout, clearly, North America in the gas market that we have.

The other thing we see is that there's been a substantial drive towards environmental issues, which we support. Being prudent energy developers, we want to attend to the environmental kinds of questions: how do energy and environment kinds of things coexist? In that light, there's been a greater demand placed on natural gas as a cleaner burning fuel rather than things like coal. What has happened in response to that, though, is coal. Genesee 3 that's come out recently has introduced a very . . .

An Hon. Member: You had to do it, didn't you?

Mr. Melchin: Yes. Should we mention coal one more time?

What coal is doing and will do for the markets of the future is that they, too, can address the environmental issues but not at the same price as old coal was. Genesee 3, one of the later ones, has come in with a substantive decrease in the NO_x and SO_x in particulates and even in carbon dioxide. That's the direction you want to go, but it is at a higher cost. If you want electricity, it is still more competitive than other sources that we could bring in.

We still have in Alberta, other than hydro – we're not blessed with everything. We have many great advantages here. Hydro is not one of them. Still our sources of electricity are the least expensive of anywhere in Canada other than hydro. We have produced a very good market, one of the overwhelmingly great successes of generation in excessive capacity: in the last couple of years a very substantive reduction in electricity prices in this province is a clear result.

You look around even to the provinces to the west and to the east of us. They're facing, really, shortages when they don't have the markets that are growing as fast as ours, and a very high, escalating challenge they're going to have in their electricity costs. I would say, on the contrary, that we've had a tremendous success in deregulation in price to Albertans. It's not lower than historically because of the factors that have changed both environmentally in gas and the like, but those are things to which we have all come to accept are the right directions in developing of energy.

You mentioned the conflict of interest of Kellan Fluckiger. That has been through all the ethics. Those have been declared. It is true that his spouse is not the CEO but is a member of AltaLink. That's correct. But that has been cleared and vetted not by our own Ethics Commissioner but by all of the codes of the departments to ensure that the conflict of interest has been addressed and that there is not as is being purported. There should not be a penalty to have your spouse employed somewhere. These things have been declared openly before the contracts were let, so certainly all the precautions have been made to ensure that he, too, can do his job without being placed in a conflict of interest.

Allegations to the side would be complete unfair statements, and I would stand up in defence of a person that's doing tremendous work. He has an enormous understanding and a great understanding – spend the time with him – of electricity and markets in general and has provided tremendous benefit and value to this department in particular. So happy to clearly state that those issues have been dealt with prior to any of these allegations being made, to ensure that Albertans are protected from there being a conflict in any real or even perceived fashion.

Happy to respond to any further questions of the members.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with great interest to speak on the Energy budget for this year. I would like to thank the minister for his thorough preparation, and his staff as well, and also for the line of communication that the minister has extended towards me on a regular basis to discuss specific issues. Certainly, we don't see eye to eye on many of these issues concerning energy, but we do have, I think, a similar goal in mind, which is to provide energy revenue and energy for domestic consumption here in the province of Alberta. So I'm sure we can work that out somehow.

I'm hearing at least a couple of encouraging signs, especially in regard to revisiting the royalty tax credit regime, and I know that many people across the province would be very heartened to hear that. I am a little disappointed to know that we're not going to go there for another year. Regardless of changes in the federal tax credit deduction scheme, I think that it's incumbent on and, in fact, the responsibility of this House to make sure we are capturing revenues that are otherwise not tax revenues, Mr. Chairman. They are a question of ownership, and royalties are paying that portion to the people of Alberta that is otherwise theirs. For every day that we fail to impose a royalty regime that is capturing that money in a fair and reasonable way for every single Albertan, then I believe that we are doing a disservice to both them and to our economy.

I just wanted to briefly go over the numbers in the budget, and then I have quite a number of questions. If the minister would answer me now or in writing later, either way is fine with us.

First, the revenue changes for this past year and then projecting to next year for both natural gas and crude and synthetic crude oil. I think one of the issues or one of the flags that should be raised, Mr. Chairman, in regard to how natural gas and crude oil royalties are actually going down in terms of the revenue being captured is that we must be concerned, as the minister pointed out, that the crude oil and natural gas are coming from depleted resources. I believe that if there are not other ways by which we can highlight how finite these royalties are and, in fact, how finite these products are, then perhaps this is the most graphic example that we can show Albertans that, you know, oil and gas revenues from royalties and, indeed, the domestic products that we consume in oil and gas are finite here in this province.

We need at this juncture to look for a way to bridge into other fuels, to encourage conservation, and to make sure that we are capturing the revenue from the last bits of these reserves before they are finally depleted. A third of the entire budget, to my calculation, in fact is coming from this ministry. If we could expect a 13 per cent decrease in the royalties over the last year in both oil and gas, then I think that should be a red flag that we all should take very, very serious note of.

In regard to other royalty revenues coming in, I think that I would like to just highlight briefly the coal royalty, which otherwise is – no one's hitting the thing when I say coal; I don't know why. [some applause] There we go. This is static, right? I would just like to highlight that at this juncture. Perhaps I'm not familiar with how much, more or less, coal we are in fact cutting in the province here, but I think that we have to remember that if we are going to move forward on using coal technology, which I have some reservations about, and burning more coal in the province of Alberta, we should consider changing this royalty. This, again, is going back to the old trap that we found ourselves in with oil and gas, saying: well, we have to give them a good deal because otherwise they will go elsewhere, and la-di-da. But, in fact, with the depletion of hydrocarbon reserves around the world once people set up, let's say, a coal-fired electricity plant in a certain area, they're not going anywhere.

I think it's important for us to charge a fair royalty that probably reflects the environmental degradation that is resulting from the burning of that coal, including the holes that are dug and whatnot, so that, in fact, we are thinking more seriously about what we're burning. There's this perception out there which I find troubling, which is that we're sitting on an infinite mountain of coal which will somehow come in to save us all, a special, clean Alberta coal. You know, there is lots there, but I think we need to be a little bit more prudent and thoughtful about it as opposed to the sort of gold rush mentality that has depleted our conventional reserves of crude oil and natural gas in this province so quickly and, I would say, perhaps prematurely consider that we do need the domestic-consumption production of natural gas to survive in this province for ourselves. We have to wonder what we're going to do if it's all gone.

I have just a number of questions, as I said, for the minister in regard to the budget, and I'm going to move through them reasonably quickly. I'm feeling constrained here, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned. This is a very important ministry, and I think that we need to focus more attention, perhaps, on it than we do. I hope that some of these issues come up during the course of the next year or so and that we can revisit them because I know that the public certainly has an interest in them, both financially and otherwise.

The ministry is forecasting $11 billion in the next year, a third of all provincial revenues. As I said, we must be very careful to imagine what it would be like for anything less than a third to be coming from that source. The budget bases its numbers on $50 per barrel for oil and $7.50 per gigajoule. In a way this is sort of a two-edged sword. I'm happy to see that these projections are more realistic, but they do sort of fall within the very minimum projections for the next year that I had found from various sources I have in Calgary energy companies. I was told that if the fee goes a dime under $50 and $7.50, then you can call him because those would be very, very lowballing but not entirely unreasonable. So it's good to see that there is some movement that way. They're at the low end but more realistic than in past years.

I'd like to ask why the government has suddenly decided to raise its numbers after years of these huge surprises, which were not surprises at all, which ensured billions of off-budget spending. I'm wondering what the big change is here. Why are we being somewhat more realistic? I'm certainly hoping that this is the first of many changes which move toward more accountability and transparency because, of course, these off-budget spending sprees that we've seen over this last year and other years as well are very confusing and certainly less than democratic, I would say, Mr. Chairman. I'm wondering if maybe this is a way of keeping some ministers off of these giant, unbudgeted surplus purses that they like to throw around. Hopefully, they might stick to their budgets a bit better this year.

Given that the energy prices are hovering around $60 a barrel right now and factors leading up to this sharp increase in prices, including decreasing fuel reserves around the world, environmental disasters in the U.S., and continued instability in the Middle East, I would like to ask: why does the minister foresee a sharp decline in oil revenue over the next few years? There seems to be in the budget this downward sort of trend, and I'm curious to know why that might be so. For example, the natural gas prices just happen to be low, and I know that some energy companies were experiencing some difficulties with that, but that was because of the very warmest winter on record. Certainly, once the heat that probably corresponds with that warming trend hits the U.S. market, the air conditioners will fire up, and we'll see natural gas fly high once again.

This government keeps talking about its concern about health care costs supposedly eating a third of the budget, but more than a third of our revenue is from nonrenewable finite sources. So I would like to ask the minister what he is proposing that we replace these decreasing oil revenues with if not alternative and renewable energy sources. I find it difficult to swallow that we would move from one fossil fuel to another, and I'm wondering if perhaps this government is thinking about changing the minister's title from Energy to the Minister of Fossil Fuels, since we don't seem to be focusing on anything else besides those particular products.

Minister, please, if you could explain to me as well why the energy and utilities regulation is seeing an $8 million increase. I'm curious to know where or why that money is going there and why it's increased by that amount. I would like to know.

As well, given that the EUB has somewhat of a mixed reputation in regard to independent regulation of the energy industry and that the public is often perceiving the EUB to be more industry-favoured rather than perhaps looking at things in a more judicious way – I'm asking this because one of the key elements, I think, of the Auditor General's report and something I'm very concerned about is increasing the effectiveness of the verification program for royalties, verifying if, in fact, energy companies are paying the royalties that they should be for the energy that they're taking from the ground. So I'd be curious to know more precisely how this might be improved over this coming year because a lot of it is now, Mr. Chairman, on the honour system.

While we certainly do expect the best from people and the best of their behaviour at all times, we do, as a regulator, need to expect less than that and, in fact, put measures in place to regulate in a policing sort of way to ensure that we are getting the money that we need. I seem to recall that there was at least $300 million or $400 million worth of royalties that seemed to be, well, not missing, but there seemed to be some confusion about. So I would like to know what the progress is on verification.

In that regard as well or more generally in regard to royalties, if the minister is committing to some change or a review of the royalties, I think it would be reasonable for us to see something of what he has in mind in regard to perhaps a draft proposal of where the royalty program is going at least in terms of its objectives and its performance rates because, again, we have some difficulty with that at this point in time. I think that the public and the industry deserve to know where we're going.

Given, Mr. Chairman, that global oil reserves are dropping and that access to them is becoming increasing difficult and given that Alberta's oil sands have recently been recognized as the second largest oil deposit in the world, I'm assuming that the oil sands development is here to stay. Given that this industry is no longer in danger of moving in a downward trend, I would ask the minister if he would be willing to change the royalty scheme that is currently used in the Alberta oil sands. I'm asking to look for a reasonable regime that is going to be more in keeping with the tremendous revenues that are being generated from the oil sands at this time.

This government has insisted that one of the reasons our oil development bonuses are so high and our royalties kept to a minimum and our corporate taxes kept so low and lowered still even more in this year's budget is so that we can maintain Alberta's competitive edge in light of rising labour and energy costs. Even if we buy this — of course, I have my doubts — I'm wondering: how can this government not encourage and reward through incentive programs, research grants the development and use of cogeneration sources of energy in the industrial sector? We have a tremendous potential for cogeneration across this province, and we need to encourage that in a more proactive way. Certainly, it's there if the balance sheet demonstrates that it's useful, but I think we need to encourage that to make it easier so that industry generates this energy right at the source. That's always the best way to conserve and to be efficient.

This would bring down everybody's energy bills, increasing our industry's competitive edge, and this is one of the ways by which we can change the way we use energy here in this province. So I'd ask if the minister would commit to examining the possibility of microgeneration projects like we see in other countries. I know that in Norway and in Great Britain microgeneration is a very hot topic and not just a hot topic but something that will bear fruit in the next while. You know, it's interesting to see that countries that are serious about reducing their greenhouse gas emissions are also countries that lead the way in providing alternative energy sources, which actually bring down the cost of energy in the long run. So I would like to be counted amongst those regions of the world to do that, and the sooner we do it, the better.

While we begin to develop alternative generation projects, I would like to just focus on another contentious issue in terms of energy in this province, which is coal-bed methane extraction. I would like to know if we could have the review of the coal-bed methane extraction that was done last year in public and see exactly where the government is going in regard to that. We're seeing a tremendous amount of criticism by residents living in places where coal-bed methane is being tested and utilized, and I would like to see where the government's going with this in a transparent sort of way. I don't preclude the possibility of extracting coal-bed methane, by any means, but we have to make sure that we don't do it at the expense of the surface rights of farmers and people who live in the affected regions.

I would also in that regard ask if the minister would commit to giving landowners, the people who are affected most directly by CBM developments, the people whose land is devalued, whose air quality is degraded and water as well, primary consideration in the review debates instead of making them queue up as observers or peripheral stakeholders. This is a big problem, Mr. Chairman, and I'm hoping that we can meet it head-on in an honest and transparent fashion.

So in that regard I would ask if the ministry would commit to a moratorium on coal-bed methane projects until a nonpartisan public environmental health and safety review can be conducted. We've seen such reviews in the United States, and I think it's a useful process. Sometimes it's a dirty process, but it is a democratic process nonetheless.

I know that my time is limited, so I just want to switch gears here a bit in regard to increasing royalties. My issue here is that we need, I believe, a royalty increase that is reflective of the windfall profits that are being generated at this time, very much like a progressive tax regime, which we should be familiar with here in this province. The windfall increases along with the amount that's being made at any particular time, and I think it's incumbent and responsible for us to in fact enact something like that so that we are recovering the money which is now being generated at a windfall rate but won't be soon enough.

In that regard as well, I think it's our responsibility to manage how the industry grows in terms of energy in this province. By having low royalty regimes, we're contributing to this gold rush mentality, where there's all manner of drilling and activity that outstrips our capacity to regulate it, outstrips our capacity to support it, and often outstrips our capacity to in fact even meet the labour needs that are there. So instead of developing it all at once, I think that we should be trying to have some regulation there. I think it's good for all of us, for longer term development of important resources, for the conservation of those resources, and ultimately for better profits over a longer period of time.

Thanks a lot, Mr. Chairman, and I wish I could have another 20 minutes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess that in your opening comments you said that you didn't quite see eye-to-eye on all facts. We'd like to confirm that that still is the case, especially after some of those comments. In fact, quite the contrary. We have a very different viewpoint on many of the policy kind of questions you said.

You know, when we talk about royalties and the assertions of low rates and giving it away and all that, it's not surprising to hear that the answer is: let's have a tax at a higher per cent, put a higher per cent to everything we can so that we can create a smaller pie, drive everything out, let the investment go somewhere else, let the jobs go somewhere else. That seems to be a philosophy that permeates continuously: why would we want anybody to have a profit? I mean, it's such a terrible thing to have a good year; therefore, if we take everything and extract everything that's supposedly windfall, that would be good for us all.

What has happened by being competitive is that we are attracting people, and it's been very much a success. There's lots of oil and gas around the world. The challenge is that there aren't places where it's safe. There aren't places where it's actually competitive and where you have fiscal regimes that actually work. The reason they're coming to Alberta is because those things are in place. It's not just by accident and by luck, just because we have all these resources that we're finding success. There are many, many places throughout the world that can't attract people and capital for projects that are a lot less costly and expensive than the ones right here in the oil sands. It is because of setting competitive environments that let people reinvest the profits, that create greater productivity, greater returns, and greater benefits for the government, for the people, and for jobs, and that's what's been proven out.

We talked about this extrapolation, that we're somehow lowering our rates, which is not true in royalties at all. What is happening is that, yes, our average has gone down because, as I mentioned earlier, oil sands are starting to come in as a higher volume of production at a higher percentage of the royalties. That's maybe lowering the overall average, but we're still collecting those same percentages everywhere else. In reality, we collected resource revenues last year of just under $15 billion. It's not going down. We used to average $4 billion through the '80s and '90s. That's the average. Now prices have gone up and have done a lot for that, but volume increases are also substantively doing it.

There's also the assertion, that I do agree with, of the integration of hydrocarbons, nonrenewables, and also renewables. You had some good ideas about continuing to be at the forefront. You talked about microgeneration kinds of projects on the electricity front to even some of the other renewable sources of energy that could come. I think that's the right approach, to start building off the hydrocarbon base that we have, to start allowing for the other ideas to come forward by research, by technology, by facilitating so that there's a methodology to bring these things into the mix. Over time they will play a part of the solution and a larger part of the solution. Let's not forget that even with our conventional sources we leave 73 per cent of the conventional oil in the ground. We leave 40 to 50 per cent of the conventional gas in the ground.

An Hon. Member: Terrible.

Mr. Melchin: That is terrible. It's technology kinds of questions that will continually improve that, and we'll find a whole new Alberta. We've said that before. We know where it is, and it's technology that's going to be the ability to unlock and, rather than leave 73 per cent of the oil in the ground, to leave only 50 or 40 or 30 or 20 per cent of that oil in the ground. It's those things that will continue to expand the life of the conventional reserves not for decades but into the next century.

Our unconventional sources have centuries of supply. Why do we put so much emphasis on them? They still provide the most economic environmental solution to energy affordability for the public. They still provide so many benefits. It's going to be a substantial source of energy for the next century because of the demand for energy and the growth of energy not just in growing economies like our own but throughout the world.

The ARTC. We need time, even for January. You want to do it instantly, but you need time to give notice to industry, to have discussions with industry on any of the programs we have, and January is a pretty fast date.

Depletion of reserves. I think I've spoken quite a bit about that.

You mentioned more realistic projections. You know, anybody can forecast. The fact is that you're likely to be as wrong as any other forecaster on a commodity price. We might say that we're more realistic today. Some think: why all of a sudden did we raise ours this year? Industry too. No one, when they saw the first blips – oil has been in the $20 to $30 range, if not lower, forever. We've never seen any period of time above $30 for oil until the last couple of years. When you saw the first year going up, no one had the expectation that this might be sustained. There's too much risk associated with it. It could also fall back into the $20 range. Today there's maybe a little more growing confidence with more experience and time, and that's why we've increased our projections.

All of us, I guess, are becoming more accustomed to it, that our economy has adjusted to a higher price scenario. It hasn't caused a recession, but it has caused a substantial increase in costs to industry, to individuals, and it is and can still be a potential softening of the economic question in the United States, Canada, China. There is still substantive risk of that price being lower than where we forecast. I know you can choose a higher one, and you might likely be right, but you could just as easily be wrong. Therefore, in this case I would say that we have been actually fairly aggressive in our forecast.

The EUB. I just want to comment about the Energy and Utilities Board. It's easy to make an assertion about the public perception that they're favouring industry, but that couldn't be further from the truth in this sense. They process thousands of applications every year. It is by policy of the government to which they're applying those regulations. It's the standards of Sustainable Resource Development, of Environment, of Energy, and together with the other bodies out there, when they develop standards, they do provide a very efficient and thorough regulatory environment. The objective is not to say, no, and put a closed for business sign. It's only to suggest that we can approve those applications if they meet the appropriate standards. Given the quantity of applications there are bound to be some challenges and some concerns, but they do a very valuable, very independent, and a tremendous service to the public.

Auditor General, verification of amounts paid: we have accepted those. You know, there are a lot of ways. With the extrapolation of the industry because there are so many joint venture agreements on all of these wells and with the reporting of information, there are so many checks and balances that we are collecting the right volume of production data and quantity of royalties that the risk level is really remote that we are not collecting it. Now, the Auditor General talks about some risks of having volumetric accuracy and data. Those things are being addressed, are being actively worked on. The Energy and Utilities Board recently put out directive 019, Compliance Assurance-Enforcement, effective January 2006. If you're interested, you might refer to that one in particular as to some of the progress being made on that front.

On the statements such as: oil sands are here to stay. There's no longer any danger; therefore, just change the generic regime to which you've invited everybody to invest, investment structures that are over decades. Now that you've got their money in, just all of a sudden change the financial structures.

There is still a huge, huge risk to all of these industries. I'll mention again that these are the highest cost oil deposits of any other in the world to extract. These are still at the margin, still risky projects given that they need decades to recover the very significant risk capital that is put up front. So, no, I wouldn't suggest at all that that would be prudent in Alberta's interest in receiving the long-term fair share that just because you have a high price today, everything changes instantly. We also benefit on the high-price scenario. That means that all of these barrels are being paid out faster, the risk capital is recovered faster, and we are going to the higher rates, 25 per cent of net, on a much sooner basis, which is the exact design that will benefit Albertans.

You mentioned to encourage cogeneration, microgeneration projects. I'd agree with that. We will continue to explore how you can facilitate. One of the advantages of our deregulated electricity market is that we've seen more variety of cogeneration, of wind, of renewables than any other jurisdiction. It's because we've created and facilitated a market that doesn't respond to only building the one megaproject plant, like we did in the past under the regulated model that had to guarantee the supply for everybody; therefore, you only did the 400- or 500-megawatt plants, and in Alberta coal was the predominant source to which we'd build and some hydro. What we have done by creating a market is that you allow the facilitation of some of these things to come in, so I think that would be a great expansion, even the ideas that you suggested would just add to it.

Coal-bed methane extraction. Categorically we'll not entertain a moratorium. There's no need for it. The risk is not there in that category, and it's fully unwarranted to mention that there's a risk for the public to their health, their safety, their water. Yes, there's lots of coal-bed methane, but we've had decades of experience with drilling in shallow areas, in southeastern Alberta in particular. These wells are not unlike all those wells. Yes, there's a little different formation. Yes, there's a little difference in techniques, but it's the same drilling rigs. It's the same operations. Yes, there have been some procedures that are somewhat different, but for the most part they look the same. They're the same procedures. We have tremendous experience and standards set by the Energy and Utilities Board for regulating this type of production. This is not new production. It's not new in methodology. It's new because it's going to get larger, and in that seam it's going to become larger. It's not new in methodologies and design and regulation.

That said, because it is going to become even larger in scope, it was at the initiative of this department to create the multistakeholder advisory committee two years ago. That report has had a tremendous amount of public stakeholder involvement, feedback: industry, landowners, all of the people whom you mentioned. That report, a draft one, was out last fall. The final report is in our possession at this stage, and it's an excellent report. It does talk about the air and the water issues. You've heard some of that from the Environment minister in a previous question period. We've heard about baseline testing of water, a lot of these things. We and industry too want to continue to be at the forefront of all regulatory and environmental standards for development so that we can safely and reliably develop these resources to ensure that the water and the aquifers are not destroyed. We do have lots of practice to ensure that that's the case. What we're going to do is to continue to improve. As we learn more, as we gather more information and more science, it will only help us in the future to guarantee the reliability and the confidence of the public, which is truly at heart too.

From that report we hope to come out with an action plan of the various departments that are impacted. It's got many recommendations by the Energy and Utilities Board, by the Department of Energy, Department of Environment, Department of Sustainable Resource Development, and a couple of the other departments. There are a number of recommendations. We are going to be coming out with an action plan. These are some very solid, thoroughly thought through ideas that we plan to implement. There's a process we're taking it through right now. We've just had this report, so we're actively working on that, and it should be out in the near future, to make that public and to demonstrate in what fashion we will continue to gain and show the support of the public that this can be done safely and reliably, which is being done.

I think I'll conclude my remarks at this point. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, appreciate the opportunity to stand up and respond to the 2006 budget for Energy and to the business plan. I think that it's very exciting and that our opportunity here in Alberta truly is unique, and we want to be as innovative and efficient and wise as we possibly can be. I want to see a wonderful, integrated energy system. I think all Albertans do realize, as the minister mentioned, how much goes into our health care, our education, our social programs, and the other benefits that we have. Therefore, we do want to look at things in a beneficial way.

At this time I would also like to compliment the minister and the government, that I appreciate a conservative estimate on the value of gas and oil. I think that that's a wise and prudent way to look at things. Let's not count our chickens before the eggs are hatched because things can happen. It does worry me that we're already at an unsustainable level on what our spending is if that glitch was to occur again, and I certainly feel that we need to address and be aware of that.

I'm pleased to hear that they're going to have a review on the royalty tax credits. I wish that would have started three years ago so that industry could have had lots of heads-up time. I understand the importance of industry needing to know the rules and regulations long in advance and the detriment that it is to investments if, in fact, we're changing those rules, as we did with the NEP and saw the drastic reduction and the removal of equipment from our province because of a government change in policy. Though I'm going to mention many things, at no point do I want to see a drastic change or anything that would upset the apple cart and cause damage to our industry or the faith that we have throughout the world that this is a great place to invest because we have a stable and understanding government of the importance of investment here in Alberta.

I would also like to comment, I guess, on the conservative side as well, that everybody says that we're in the information and technology age. I still feel, though, that we're very much caught up in the energy age. With that, at any time fusion could be discovered, and perhaps the carbon world would be to the side, and we would be left out, perhaps like Newfoundland without its cod, if a breakthrough in technology was to come forward. So I feel that that also is something to be cognizant of. Like I say, I am grateful that they are looking at the different reviews for the royalty tax credits and other areas. I think that it is something that definitely needs to be done, and I appreciate their going into that.

I very much would like a copy of some of the different documents that you mentioned. Please send them down this way as well. We don't want one party receiving that benefit and not the rest of the House, as was earlier mentioned by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

I guess I'd like to go into some different areas. Your business plan: there's way too much – I see I forgot to start my clock. There's just an immense amount of information. It is such a huge portfolio that I feel I can only scratch the surface.

Speaking of surface, I'd like to go into surface rights. This is an area of concern that a great deal of people are calling me about. I'd like to address a few specific cases just to make you aware of some situations. It's been brought up many times that in the last 20 years there's been no increase in what landowners receive from oil and gas exploration. The landowners are just now starting to realize and run into the different problems that are affecting them. I'll give you a couple.

I wasn't able to get up and respond to the historical railroad society bill, Bill 203, and I was disappointed. I sat in here and wasn't able to get in line and get recognized. Stirling has the Great Canadian Plains Railway Society there. It's an historic one, and they've set up on a little piece of land. They've lost their spur lines, or they will lose them, and they want to be able to run one. As we've been discussing here, it would have been a great asset to the tourism industry there. They own I think 60 acres, and they want to set up a track to run around. Lo and behold, though, there's a high-pressure pipeline going through there. ATCO says: oh, sure, go ahead, but you need to put in this $100,000 worth of structure before you can do that. Yes, there's benefit to those things, but landowners very much receive the brunt from the EUB and the gas pipelines that they, in fact, seem to own those areas, and we are reduced to tenants on the land in many areas.

I would certainly ask and appreciate and many landowners throughout Alberta would appreciate it if you would readdress and look at surface rights and perhaps make the EUB more aware of that. As I've mentioned to the minister before in private, if they won't allow elected people to that board, perhaps appoint people that specifically look after the interests of landowners and the difficulty that they run into when they do that.

I have another landowner who in his best interests wanted to level his land so he could flood irrigate. There are 400 feet of high-pressure pipeline going through his property that prohibits him from doing that. It costs $35,000 to lower the line so that he can flood irrigate.

A gravel pit that has a pipeline going through it: $200,000 worth of gravel underneath the pipeline, a million dollars to move the pipeline.

The reason why I'm pointing these out, Mr. Minister, is because there are high costs, many times 30 and 40 years after a pipeline goes through, to the detriment of the landowners, and there is no compensation for them. It becomes a liability for them, yet the province seems to state that that is the way it is to be.

Just to read from your opening statement, it says here that "Alberta owns 81 per cent of the province's mineral rights. The Ministry of Energy manages the development of these resources on behalf of the people of Alberta." I appreciate and understand that responsibility, yet I have to question: why do we always seem to give precedence to what's under the land and not on the land?

I'll give you an analogy of this. We have a lot of people in the province with kidney problems who have to have dialysis. If, in fact, we just have surface rights, should we as a people look at having everyone tested and typed and say: "Well, you know, you don't need two kidneys. We're going to take one out because we have other people that, in fact, need a kidney. We're going to take it from you and give it to these other people." That's very much how landowners feel. Whatever is inside or under their property, they become insignificant as property owners, and the EUB is just going to arbitrarily say how much compensation they will get, and they're going to take that. So that's a concern, and I would really appreciate the minister looking into it and standing up for the rights of property owners.

In your business plan you talk about value-added. I'm a great advocate of value-added, and I feel that we need to be doing all we can here in the province to continue to put in incentives so that businesses will come, will have the desire to set up businesses here because we are a business-friendly province, and we know that that gets the economic wheels spinning and is of great benefit to the people. We need to take a closer look at the big picture because many people seem to have the attitude: not in my backyard. I think we need to educate Albertans and understand better that we want to process those things.

I'll give the example of the tanning industry. We used to have a lot of tanneries here in Canada, but because of the acids, the tannic acid and the other dangerous chemicals that are associated with that, we've pushed the market off to China, and it's done over there now. I've seen pictures of how they process those hides. There is no environmental concern, and that stuff is now just dumped. If we set up rules and regulations here in Alberta, we can process those in a safe and proper manner rather than pushing them off, perhaps sending our bitumen to China. How they process it may not be in a very environmentally friendly way. I'd like to see the processing done here, where it is controlled and regulated in an environmental way, in the best possible way in the world, and to continue developing the technology so that the whole world can benefit from it.

I'd like to see new regulations whereby competing companies – one of the concerns that landowners also have, going back, is that the EUB takes the stand that it's the corporation's right to be able to put in a pipeline even though there might be one there. You can get as many as three pipelines crossing a piece of land by three different corporations. I feel that the EUB should take the flip side and say: "You guys figure it out. You're putting one pipeline through here, and if you can't decide, then we'll arbitrarily tell you what it's going to be and how you'll defer that." We don't need more pipelines; we need efficiency and to save the industry and use more gas.

Another concern that I've had many complaints about is the competing attitude of having to suck the gas out because of the different locations of the wells. We're burning up a lot of our own natural gas just so we can suck it out of here before competitor B over here can get it. We're burning up 25 per cent of the gas here, but economically it still balances out. I think that we need to look and address something like that, where it's not who can haul out the most the fastest who wins. We need to look at some way – and I'm sure that your ministry has got lots of great ideas, if they'd address that – to weigh that out so that we'd bring it out in a good fashion and not just burn up that gas to help extract it.

The use of water in the industry is very concerning to many Albertans. In light of the research just recently released by Bill Donahue and David Schindler, I think that it should, as mentioned today in question period, heighten our resolve to do something about that. I'll use the example of California, how they very much take the attitude that they want to reduce smog. They pass a law, and lo and behold somehow technology catches up, and they're able to meet it. I think that if we were to look at regulating water use and what could actually go down those wells, maybe that would fast-track sequestration or who knows what to look at different technology because we can't afford to be putting water in the ground to get oil out. In my little finite understanding of the industry it just seems to go against all common sense for me.

I'd like to switch for a minute – as two previous speakers said, we run out of time here very quickly – to talk a little bit about electrical generation and what we could possibly do. We have a lot of innovative ideas going on in the province. Down in my area there are a lot of windmills going up, and they're a great benefit to the system. We've had many mentions of the Alberta/Montana link going in there, which will benefit, and a lot of windmill people are looking and wanting that to tie in there.

Once again we come back to a land-use problem and what we're going to do there. I've had several landowners come and talk to me about this. We need this land-use study put in place, and we need to really think: where do we want these corridors? We need to get actual transmission corridors. Why put them through the most pristine and the most productive part of the province? Perhaps the government needs to be more involved in where these lines are going and not just private industry to push it through. It just seems like further east is a beneficial place to be putting major transmission lines to go north and south because what we're really trying to do, I understand, is to go north and south rather than east and west, where we're kind of locked in, and to look at that.

One of the things that we need to address that landowners are frustrated with is that their house could be on the corner of a quarter section and the transmission line can be one yard across, and there is no compensation. That goes back to the corridor region. In fact, if we were to set up some regulations on how far we're going to buy out, you know, whether it's a quarter mile, a mile, we need to address that and let landowners know: look, we do have a plan; we're going to protect you.

You know, it's like dams. It's like so many things: roads, everything else. There are some times when we're in the wrong place. The transmission lines need to come forward because I don't think there are too many Albertans that would say: we want to get rid of them all; I don't want them in my backyard. We see them, but we need to have a better handle on how we're going to compensate landowners as we want to go through or right beside them, and look at that.

Looking at some other areas here, these are just some ideas that many of the constituents and other people have come to me with. What would it be like if today our highways were owned by private corporations and we had to bid to get on, and they were to possibly say: "You know what? We're too busy here. We're hitting peak traffic flow. Those with the biggest bucks can come on." Right now we're facing that with our shipping industry to China. There are a lot of smaller industries that have lost because there aren't the containers or the ships to get things over there. So the lower products are lost, and we can't compete.

It's very much that way with the electrical. If, in fact, we were to maybe look at owning the big transmission lines and some of these other ones, we could regulate who and what could come on and not have a monopoly that is prohibitive to the small generator. One of the things that was brought up last year and that I'm very much in favour of is zero-based metering at the very least to allow people to set up and to be self-sufficient in a small way yet be contributing back into the big grid. It's there, and we need to work out a more equitable way that's innovative for the small guy to be able to be part of that and to be able to get on this so-called highway with his moped and not say, "Well, there are only super semis and super Bs on here." Right now the small generator cannot get on and link up. You either have to cut and be off. It's prohibitive, and there isn't any innovation there.

Another area to look at – and this kind of crosses over with both oil and with electrical generation and not really in your jurisdiction. We've talked a lot and they're talking about a bigger piece of the pie, and I want to use the example of the electrical industry first; for example, wind farms, where it's easier to do the economic analysis of it. If, in fact, you put up a million dollar generator, they need to be able to generate, you know, a hundred thousand dollars a month before it's economical and see that the wind is there. They might pay 3 per cent royalty to the landowner on that windmill. Yet if electricity was to double and there were now set costs on their capital assets and now electricity is producing $200,000 for them, the fact of the matter is that that landowner getting $3,000 a month is going to go to $6,000.

If we were to link that royalty somehow where it was to double if, in fact, the product doubled – and we have to take into account, you know, the different industries, what their costs are. For example, with the tar sands the extraction costs and the use of energy are very high, so they can't necessarily be the same, whereas with electricity with a fixed cost they could easily double it from 3 per cent to 6 per cent. They're getting $200,000 a month, and the landowner, then, would get $12,000 instead of just $6,000. It would be a win-win situation for everybody, and there would be a desire to go there.

[Mr. Rogers in the chair]

I really feel like we need to be more innovative in how we bring industry in and to allow that. On innovative ideas I'd like to address a specific concern in my area, Rogers Sugar. The sugar beet industry is big down in Taber, yet many times it is on shaky ground because of the cost of energy. Yes, since the Alliance pipeline and the NAFTA agreement came in, we're in a situation where we have to compete now on a world market. My good neighbour here talked about cogeneration. I've talked to the people at Rogers Sugar, and the cost of converting over to coal to generate the heat to process the beets is prohibitive. But if they were able to have incentives, much like the tar sands area, where capital could actually be recouped, perhaps they could switch over to a coal generation and cogenerate electricity with the excess when their season isn't being used and have something there. But we need to come up with some more innovative ideas to have industry able to utilize the coal and to move forward because natural gas has gone through the roof and makes many businesses, like I say, at best not economical.

It's another major problem for farmers and irrigation in the south. All the residents of the province are hurt with the price of natural gas. The province has done very well, and because of that you have the rebate program, which Albertans can certainly appreciate.

Another innovative idea that came up after reading your report was new to me. I don't know; maybe I'm going to run out of time here. On page 144 it says that conventional crude oil royalties are received in kind. Perhaps that's one of the solutions that we can have. We should take natural gas in kind, and we could redistribute it through the co-ops, a certain percentage to Albertans, and there would be no cost. It wouldn't affect NAFTA, and it would benefit Albertans that we could receive that at a very – well, like Medicine Hat. They're in their own area and capable of using that.

We need to come up with an innovative way where Alberta is not competing with the rest of the world for what our natural resources cost. That just seems like a natural, where we could and should move any way that we could possibly jump through the hoops to benefit Albertans rather than to suffer the consequences of a tightened market and export which is hurting us.

There are a few other questions that perhaps you could explain to me; for example, the $40 per metre that Albertans pay to Direct Energy because of the cost of the purchase of the billing agents. I've never been able to understand the EUB, how they . . .

This is really sad that we run out of time so fast.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. I'd be more than happy as questions come forward – I've mentioned, actually, to all of the opposition members that certainly are critics of the energy department that I'd be more than happy to facilitate dialogue on an ongoing basis. This doesn't have to be an event that happens only at this stage. If there are questions and things we can help out, we'd be more than happy to do just that. So it doesn't have to start and stop on a clock that's just right here.

That said, you went through a whole host of ideas. You're suggesting that there could be some innovation. I don't know how to necessarily respond to all the what ifs and could be's. I think the challenge in energy development of all sources is: how do you create some more innovation? That's at the heart of this. Technology and innovation are going to be the formula for success, so how do we continue to see that we do just that? The Minister of Innovation and Science has obviously been paying very close attention here to ensure that he's captured all of the innovative thoughts that could be here for his own department. But it is in part true, so if there are some ideas that come out of here that we see are things we could act on soon, we'll be more than happy to report back on them.

One of the things that you also mentioned was about various royalty studies being done. That would be circulated to the House at large, so they'll be made available.

Surface rights does get also as a topic much more into Sustainable Resource Development, which has the Surface Rights Board directly under them.

It is true that one of the challenges that we have and will continue to have, probably in growing proportions, is the balancing of those accesses to the surface rights and the competing interests of those surface uses, be it recreation, be it agriculture, be it some of the very forested areas or even ecologically sensitive areas and the like. Those are the ongoing enormous challenges, and I would only concur that that's a balancing, forever moving, difficult one to satisfy everyone.

Compensation is at the heart of a lot of these questions too. I think that's a real statement. You still have to somehow ensure that in both high-price and low-price scenarios the industries can survive. You don't build the structure so expensively that if oil and gas prices also return to low prices, everybody's out of business. So that's a tough structure to have to see about getting the balance.

We've heard the comments. You know, it's hard to predict the future. You put these pipelines in. They're in there for lengthy periods of time, and times change, and needs for that community and those lands will change. So I do think those are worthy comments, that we continue to explore how we can find solutions to those ongoing problems. You need the co-operation of those landowners to continue the confidence to develop the mineral resources going forward, and I think that's a fair statement.

When you talked about how that extrapolates to some of the utility corridors and the siting and location of those, that's a similar challenge that we have. No one really wants those power lines in their back yard. There's no easy answer to that question. But compensation is part of that mix as well. I know that's been part of our – we've had a Committee on Transmission. The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is chairing a committee that has been very much looking at those issues and has worked with the various boards and agencies to deal with what is fair, appropriate compensation when you're siting these lines.

Long-term planning and trying to move them further east – actually one of the long-term plans looks like we'll probably need both those utility corridors on the western side and on the eastern side. Likely, then, the connection is in one or two spots throughout the province, especially as we're growing. I think it is the right approach that we look more forward in planning for those utility corridors, putting those caveats on, getting access to those lands now, resolving those conflicts now for the long-term planning in future. We very much support – and I know our committee that's working on it; that's part of their work and suggestion.

That will form very much the basis of not just finishing up this 500 kV line and the one in southwestern Alberta that are the urgent need today but how we look longer down the road and plan with those stakeholders, when you have an appropriate amount of time to plan, with all of the landowners, and to look down the road and ensure that you've put in place those transportation highways for electricity for the long-term future and viability of this.

Ideas such as – you know, you've gone through a whole host of them, things even like zero-based metering. We need to be able to accommodate and examine and explore how to encourage more efficient use, not whether it's in that or what you said about the use of natural gas and the burning of it. All of those things, energy efficiency and less waste and more capturing of emissions, are part of the platform as well so that they become end-use, valuable products rather than just waste products. All will become part of that really, I think, the future of development and use of energy.

One of the things you commented on, I think, that is really quite insightful for the challenge we face is the value-added opportunity, which is enormous. We are great resource extractors, but we have an enormous opportunity to also be providing more finished goods. Out of this service when you think of the development of the oil sands, we have been very much working and trying to get in front of how you do more than just take bitumen out of ground and ship that to United States or China for processing, especially if you introduce overlays of different standards in things like, say, a Kyoto accord.

If we punish ourselves so that we price ourselves out of the market of being able to do that processing, then we allow all of that to go somewhere else like China, as the example mentioned – not that they would, but they might – or a different country. It could be any other Asian country. It could be even the United States. It could be somewhere else. They could end up producing those value-added products at standards lower than we might. So in the context of the world environmental outcomes it would be a worse outcome rather than us trying to be at the forefront of the energy and environmental solutions to these questions.

That doesn't mean you go ahead with zero emission because that technology as yet is too expensive, but you continue to advance, probably incrementally, with technology and research and best available equipment and practices that keep moving the yardsticks forward, so we demonstrate to the world how to progress on that front. We need to in our integration, be it from royalty – that's part of the royalty review we're thinking about. How do you ensure that the structure would be built to facilitate doing the value-added here?

One of the real encouraging signs that is happening in the marketplace already. We've been concerned about bitumen being produced or sold and upgraded to the light grades of crude in places other than Alberta. We're even looking at studies on doing the refining here. I don't know how far we can keep moving up there. The feedstock for the petrochemical industry – it's in those areas that we can put quite a bit of priority to ensure that as these projects get positioned, we're thinking about those next steps down the road, especially as the capital is being invested and before it gets invested in some other jurisdiction, making it too late for us to actually be able to do it here.

What is one encouraging sign, actually, is that the list of projects for upgraders today is projects that are either in place, announced, or money is already being raised. There's a list of upgraders that have been announced to produce about 2.7 million barrels per day of oil. What is a very good sign is that most of the bitumen projects that are going in the oil sands are actually now a contemplation of the markets reacting to building the upgraders here. So we've gone to one step of threshold, I think, already. Our designs are helping us facilitate to get to that step. The next step is the continual push to the feedstocks for petrochemical refineries and looking at those other structures.

We've had also quite a bit of work done on looking at ethane extraction off even the Alliance pipeline, for example, as a project in specific. We're looking forward to: how can we do more value-added to our more long-term secure supply of ethane stock for the petrochemical industry here.

An Hon. Member: How many barrels is that?

now have an active role in protecting against, investigating, and detecting mortgage fraud. As I said earlier, mortgage fraud has become an issue, a real issue here in this province. There are examples, and they have been discussed at previous stages of this legislation in this Assembly. There are straw buyers. There are flipping properties. There are low down payment scams.

The committee that was formed a year ago to combat the growing problem of mortgage fraud in Alberta has delivered, as I understand it, its final recommendations to the government. These recommendations, as I understand it, are reflected in this bill. Certainly, when we look at this and we review it, it should be beneficial to both buyers and sellers.

Now, I understand Alberta Government Services and the Real Estate Council of Alberta have developed a tip sheet to help consumers, lenders, and real estate professionals protect themselves from mortgage fraud. This is a good thing, and I look forward to it. I hope that this government also is going to provide a tip sheet for consumers so that they, too, can get in on these dollar deals for property and everyone can qualify for the purchase of surplus government property for what amounts to giveaway prices.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks on Bill 13, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006, and I certainly hope it follows its purpose and that we will now have a first line of defence against mortgage fraud in Alberta. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate.

Mr. Strang: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

10:10 Bill 23
Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now ask that Bill 23 be read a third time.

I thank all colleagues in the House for their input into the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006, and my only comment, to follow up on yesterday's discussion in Committee of the Whole, is that Bill 23 addresses the authority of conservation officers but not operational matters such as how many officers should be employed.

Other than those comments, again, Mr. Speaker, I thank colleagues for their input and ask that the bill be read a third time.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise on behalf of the Official Opposition this evening and speak to Bill 23, the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006, in third reading. I'm sorry I missed the debate yesterday in the committee stage, but I did have a chance to review some of that. I appreciate some of the explanations that were offered.

I had indicated in second reading that I and my colleagues from the Official Opposition would be supporting this bill. I believe it does accomplish a number of important things, not the least of which, Mr. Speaker, is moving a number of issues related to land-use dispositions out of regulations and into the act. I've been known to comment many, many times in this House on my concern over the propensity to move legislation into regulation. Here's an example where we're going the other way, and I appreciate that. In fact, the opposition has commented, lamented many times on the fact that this House does not sit as many days as other Legislatures. I would hope that the goings-on this fall in terms of selecting a new leader for the governing party would not interfere with a fall sitting, Mr. Speaker, because there is important business for the province to be done. Certainly, we're looking forward to the opportunity of being here this fall to do that.

Back to the bill at hand, Mr. Speaker. As I said, it does accomplish a number of things. I'm particularly supportive of the stronger fines that are going to be in place for serious infractions that may take place in provincial parks. I think that the parks certainly needed tougher legislation to protect them from industrial activities. It may not go far enough. We still have a situation where in many parks the density of oil wells is actually higher than in some nonpark areas. We allow drilling to continue in the Rumsey natural areas, as a matter of fact, and in many natural areas, so I'm not sure that the bill goes far enough, but certainly, again, it is a step in the right direction.

We would have liked to have seen the special places campaign restarted, Mr. Speaker, and that doesn't happen in this bill. I think it's fair to say that it's important to seek a balance and ensure that there are proper offsets within those protected areas between industrial use and recreational use.

Mr. Speaker, we talked before – and unfortunately it's not reflected in the bill – about the idea of enshrining the requirement to maintain current park master plans. Currently, too many park master plans are either out of date or, in the case of some parks, there isn't a plan at all. We would have liked to have seen a requirement that a transactive park master plan be completed every seven years and that that would have been approved by the minister and tabled in the Legislative Assembly. I think that that would go even further in terms of addressing some of the concerns that the Official Opposition has.

There has been some money announced for infrastructure renewal in some of the parks. In fact, one of my favourite parks, Miquelon park, is closed this year, Mr. Speaker, for some renewal, which as a frequent user of that park I know for a fact was long overdue. What's missing is a meaningful renewal program for all of the parks that would include regular maintenance so that we don't find ourselves in an infrastructure deficit relative to the provincial parks such as what we're seeing, in fact to the tune of billions of dollars all across the province. So that's something that's not in the amended act that I would have liked to have seen, but again it's definitely a step in the right direction.

I talked in second reading, Mr. Speaker, and I do just want to reiterate how I'm pleased to see that in the amended act the minister will actually have the wherewithal to allow free flight activities to take place in the provincial parks. As someone who participates in that myself, I find that very important.

The minister indicated in second reading that he wasn't aware of the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford partakes in hang-gliding, and I'd like to offer right now to the minister that at some point if he'd like to come out and partake in hang-gliding lessons, I would be more than happy to offer them. [interjection] Now, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is asking whether or not I would supply the minister with a parachute, and I must admit that I hadn't really contemplated whether or not I would make a parachute available to the minister, but you never know. There may be an occasion when he might need one. I'm not sure.

I think, lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to wax eloquent for a second about the value of provincial parks, and I think I may have had an opportunity to do that last year during debate at some point.

I was fortunate enough to have grown up in this province with parents who owned what at that time was probably one of the very first motorhomes in existence on the highways in Alberta. It was actually built by Atlas Van Lines in Edmonton. They took a cube box and converted it into a home on wheels. It wasn't pretty. We have pictures. It looks somewhat like an apple box. But my parents were very insistent that from the Easter weekend right through to the Thanksgiving weekend every year they would get the children out of the city at every opportunity, and we spent literally every weekend out of the city and primarily in provincial parks. So I grew up with a tremendous appreciation of our special areas in this province and a recognition of the value that parks and protected areas can have and do have in terms of raising good citizens. I'd like to think that that might in fact have something to do with the fact that I turned out to be a relatively good citizen myself and stand here in front of this Assembly today having the opportunity to speak about the value of our parks.

So, Mr. Speaker, again, anything that we can do to protect and preserve the parks and the value that they provide to Alberta citizens is very worth while. As I've suggested, perhaps in this amendment we didn't go quite far enough but certainly a step in the right direction, and perhaps next year we'll be back here with another amendment in front of us that may even go that next step. Were that to be the case, I'm sure it would meet with my support as well.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to lend my support to Bill 23 in third reading, and thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development to close debate.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for his thoughtful comments and personal history and call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The Acting Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the progress made this evening and the events of the day I would like to move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:20 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 5, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/04/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 63 grade 6 students from Westlock elementary school. They are accompanied this afternoon by their teachers, Mr. Dan McDonald, Mrs. Maggie Cournoyer, Mr. Marcel Turcotte; student teacher Miss Heather McMillan; program assistants Mrs. Heather MacKenzie and Mrs. Randi Lethbe. Their bus drivers are with us as well, Mrs. Kerry Perryman, Mrs. Susan Jaeger, along with parent helpers Mrs. Ezan Lategan, Mrs. Heather Christenson, Mrs. Rachelle Koch, Mr. Todd Ducharme, Mr. Ryan Stonehouse. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education and MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today Dr. Don Cook, his wife, Dianne Cook, and their nephew Chris Rodgers, who are all seated in the members' gallery. Both Dianne and Don are constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud, while Chris Rodgers is visiting us from Ottawa, where he's employed with Natural Resources Canada. I would just like to point out that this is his first trip to Edmonton, where he's having meetings with certain officials. Just prior to this he was in Cambridge Bay, where he was having other meetings. I'd ask Chris and Don and Dianne to please rise now and accept the warm applause of our Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, once again on behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education I have a second introduction that I'll make with great pleasure, and that is to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly six outstanding members of the Council of Alberta University Students, more commonly referred to as CAUS. These outstanding individuals represent the interests of students at the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, and the University of Lethbridge. In fact, many of them took part last year in the consultation A Learning Alberta, where, the Advanced Education minister tells me, they brought great insight and value to those discussions, to the process, and offered important contributions.

I would ask each CAUS member to please stand and remain standing as I call his or her name: Jen Smith, CAUS chair and student union vice-president external at the University of Calgary; Samantha Power, CAUS vice-chair, student union vice-president external, and student union president-elect at the University of Alberta; Graham Lettner, student union president at the University of Alberta; Bryan West, student union president at the University of Calgary; Jason Blades, student union vice-president, administration at the University of Lethbridge; Duncan Wojtaszek, CAUS executive director.

Mr. Speaker, we thank these young individuals for working with us and for their constituent students to ensure that we have an affordable, accessible postsecondary education system in Alberta for Alberta students. God bless you and thank you all.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program seated in your gallery: from Priority Printing Ltd. Mr. Tim Downey, president; from Access and Canadian Learning CHUM Television Edmonton Mr. Craig Roskin, station manager; Mr. Eric Rice, manager, creative/production services; Ms Pam Hnytko, publicity manager; and from the downtown Rotary club Mr. Jack Clements and Mr. Sol Sigurdson.

This program gives grade 6 teachers from all over the province an opportunity to relocate their classroom to the Alberta Legislature for a week. Supported by 35 teachers and over 400 parent volunteers in fiscal 2005, over 800 students from 32 classes attended the School at the Legislature program. We're very grateful for the support we receive from our community partners, and I would ask our guests now to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a large group of mostly seniors from Lacombe that have travelled up here today with a tour group. With these seniors I'd like to introduce a few individuals. Mr. John Parsons of Parsons tours is the tour group leader. He is a virtual walking, talking encyclopedia of Alberta. This man knows, I think, probably more about this province than anybody but yourself. Along with him in this group are a number of special guests that I want to introduce. First of all is my father, Mr. Ralph Prins; my sister Judy Van Heron; my father-in-law, Mr. John Oudman; my wife, Pauline Prins; and a couple of aunts and uncles, Gerrit and Dorothy Meindersma and Jake and Agnes Prins. This is not really a family reunion because there's a total of 36 of them up there, and my family is a lot larger than that. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce three guests who are seated in the public gallery today: Mr. Ken Eshpeter, who's a grain farmer and former reeve of Flagstaff county; Mr. Paul Schorak, a retired Alberta government employee and former reeve of Flagstaff county; and Jerry Iwanus, a real estate appraiser and former mayor of Bawlf. I'd ask them to rise. They are from the Battle River-Wainwright constituency area. They're members of the executive of the Alberta Liberal constituency association. We're proud to welcome them to our growing team. They're rural Albertans concerned with the state of agriculture in Alberta, and they are here to witness democracy in action. I know they look forward to participating in the democratic process. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce a very good friend of mine and ours who served with me as my former administrative assistant, then went on to International and Intergovernmental Relations, and now is in the private sector. I'd like to introduce to this Legislature Jamie Davis, who's in the members' gallery, and ask that he receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Rutherford and a very dedicated public servant, the manager of my constituency office, Mr. Daniel Langdon. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Agricultural Assistance

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers are facing an unprecedented income crisis and are being forced to leave a cherished way of life on the family farm. The federal government wants to change the CAIS program, but they need support of all provinces. Farmers want to make a living. They deserve to make a living. They work hard to make a living, but low commodity prices and skyrocketing input costs are tough realities. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that the minister says that there is, quote, no question that the CAIS program needs to be fixed, how is he going to fix it?

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. There are a number of ways that we can fix CAIS. The federal minister and all provincial ministers met two and a half weeks ago in British Columbia to talk about just that. In fact, unanimously all provincial ministers of agriculture – Liberal, NDP, and Conservative – agreed that CAIS in its principles is exactly what we're looking for. What we need to do is fix the administrative side of it, and I'm happy to report that our group, our management of the CAIS program through AFSC, is leading the country in software development. It's leading the country in turnaround time on CAIS applications. We have made substantial strides in fixing or moving towards fixing. It's by no means fixed yet.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will this minister commit to making rural development a priority by ensuring that any agriculture assistance programs are designed to sustain the family farm?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member needs to do a little bit more research because 97 per cent of the farms in Alberta, the 53,000 of them, are family-owned farms. The other 3 per cent are probably owned by shareholders who are also from the same family. The idea is that the programs we're putting out there are to sustain agriculture and the industry of agriculture in this province. We have done a great deal of work in making sure that what we bring forward as business risk management programs for agriculture in this province are not designed to create an atmosphere where farmers are trying to farm the program. What we want to create is the environment where farmers get their income out of the marketplace, and we are there to help them in a disaster.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. I note that the minister refers to sustaining the industry of agriculture, so I ask: will the minister make a distinction in policy among agribusiness, farm co-ops, and the family farm?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult to make a distinction when some of those farm co-ops are owned by families. Some of those agribusinesses are exactly what we need to do in agriculture to sustain it. We talk about a value chain. We talk about having our producers have ownership in everything, from field to plate. That's what sustainable agriculture and making the family farm sustainable into the future in a global environment is all about. If the hon. member would like to spend a couple of hours with me and a number of producers from this province, I could perhaps educate him a little more on that.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private Health Care Services

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is already experiencing a shortage of doctors and nurses in the public system. Allowing doctors to work both privately and publicly will only put more stress on a system that already has a limited supply of physicians. This government has not presented any evidence, none, to suggest that the third way reforms won't lure doctors away from the public system to work in the more profitable private system. To the minister of health: does the minister deny that allowing doctors to work in both systems will place doctors in a conflict of interest?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that essentially it depends on how you do it. We've talked about a regulated private delivery system, a system whereby we make the first principle a strong public health care system and evaluate any access proposal on the basis of whether or not it would have any impediment or infringe. Now, it's true that during the public consultation process people that expressed interest or concern about that asked for more detail, asked for very specific items that we would use to evaluate an access proposal. I have assured those people along with members of the college, with people that represented the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the nurses and pharmacists that we would do an evaluation or a description of what protocol would be used to value the merits of each proposal to ensure that we protected a strong public health system.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why is this government considering placing doctors in a position where there is a motivation to provide services that aren't necessary just to make a profit?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm a little confused by the question because I wouldn't believe that any surgeon would deliberately do anything that wasn't, in the long term at least, something that was necessary to be done. If this is an attempt to talk about medically necessary or the definition of what is nonemergency services or nonessential, then I don't think that we can do that in the time that I would have to answer here. I would say this. I'm quite of the belief that any doctor that would advance a clinical procedure would advance it on the basis that both he and the patient's condition were evaluated to need that procedure at some point; if not today, in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister or her department done any research into the impact of the profit motive on the prescribing habits or surgical procedures of medical doctors?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there may well be a plethora of data and research on this. However, having said that, it would be better for me to do an evaluation of what we have so that I can bring it forward.

Let's be clear. The policy framework generated a lot of discussion around how the doctors would be utilized in terms of the policy on choice and patients paying for access. It also generated a lot of discussion around sustainability. We intend to provide more detail in the weeks and months ahead. I'll be very pleased to look into the data that could be presented relative to doctors' prescribing and procedures.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Galfour Development Corporation acquired from this government in 1988 two parcels of land amounting to 223 acres in size for $2. They sold this land in 1999, only seven years ago, for over $21,000 per acre, or roughly $4.8 million. Buy for pennies, sell for millions. A good deal for the developer, a very bad deal for taxpayers. To the minister of infrastructure: given that the current owners of this land now have a mortgage registered with Alberta Treasury Branches for $20 million, how does this minister justify the sale of this land for less than a penny per acre?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this is dating back to that 20-year issue again, and the fact is that our research currently, as far as we've gone, but we're getting more, shows that when that land was originally purchased – and you have to understand that it was a large parcel of land – in order for the government to get a portion of it, of course, they had to strike a deal. The other would have been to subdivide, and rather than going through that whole process, the province had a purchase agreement for the entire block. Part of the agreement was that once the government had determined exactly what they needed, they would return to the owner for $1 the remaining parcels of land from the overall agreement that was entered into. That's what the hon. member is talking about. That is what has happened. This nonsense about selling the land back for a dollar – that was part of the original agreement when they purchased the whole parcel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why was the sale of this land never made public?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, these are agreements that the public could get, and I'm hoping that before too long I will have them physically and I will be able to table them. I don't have them yet today, but I can assure the hon. member that that will happen.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why was this deal not registered with land titles on the documents that are associated and come with those land titles?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member filed documents from land titles that clearly showed the transaction of the land, so I'm not sure what he's talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Health Care Cost Projections

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government keeps repeating the very scary but very unsubstantiated claim that health care costs will eat up the entire provincial budget in 24 years. Similar claims made five years ago in the government's Mazankowski report have been proven false, yet the Premier and the health minister keep repeating their message of fear, hoping, no doubt, that with enough repetition Albertans will finally believe it. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What research has she or her department done to project the costs of health care in Alberta over the next 24 years, and will she please provide it to the people of Alberta and table it in this Assembly?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to point to the evidence of the last six years where we have been consistently exceeding 9 per cent. For this year we've added $735 million. Perhaps the most frightening thing is that there doesn't seem to be any way to reduce health care expenditure without directly impacting the health of Albertans.

I'd ask the Minister of Finance to supplement, based on the financial projections.

The Speaker: No. We're going to move on.

The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would expect the minister to know that.

Can the minister tell the House what the increase has been in health care costs in this province, factoring in both inflation and population growth?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's more than inflation and population growth. It's also the aging of our citizens. It's the rapidly escalating costs of drugs and new technology where we're going up by 13 to 17 per cent. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor. That's who is recognized.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's most helpful.

I think it's fairly responsible to give documented evidence about this. We'll be doing our budget estimates later this month, and we can go into great detail about what our projections are. Frankly, when you're dealing with over $10 billion for 3.3 million Albertans and when you are looking at the fact that on any measurement scale we are over $400 per capita higher than any other place in the country on our expenditure and when we are the highest in Canada and we have consistently maintained that position, I think it would be better to provide detailed explanations about every factor that is causing this inflationary impact.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the minister has clearly either not done her homework again or at least cannot show her math or won't show her math, will she do the right thing and admit that the third way is based on false premises and withdraw it now?

Ms Evans: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. [interjections] The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care certainly is recognized as the number one issue throughout the province and consumes approximately one-third of our budget. We have experienced a great deal of reform, everything from regionalization and appointment of health boards to the shutting down of many rural hospitals. Efficiency is not always found in centralization and larger facilities. Often there are many services that could also be available throughout the province. One would assume that the minister has appointed capable, competent administrators for the health region. However, the minister appears to have handcuffed them by not allowing them the freedom and autonomy to bring services and procedures that they feel are important to the region. The Chinook health region has a desire . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's get to the gist of it all. Okay?

Mr. Hinman: I have 45 seconds, don't I?

The Speaker: You're way beyond that.

Mr. Hinman: The health region has the opportunity to bring a doctor from the U.S. to perform angioplasty. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the minister reverse her decision and allow the CHR to recruit a doctor to perform angioplasty and receive the necessary funding for that service?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the extensive preamble the issue of angioplasty was not clear as it related finally to the question, so I would like an opportunity to look at the Blues and respond to that question. It seems to relate to the Calgary health region, and I'd like more information about it before responding to that question.

Mr. Hinman: It would be better if they listened to the preamble, but thank you. [interjections] It was within my parameters.

My second question is also for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the minister realize that she is putting rural people at risk of losing their doctors by shutting down rural hospitals and opening up urgent care facilities before a billing formula for those services provided by the doctors has been provided?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat confused about what rural hospitals we would be shutting down. We have not made any move to shut down rural hospitals. None of the policy framework identified shutting down rural hospitals. It talked about wiser use of facilities where we could in fact bring in more primary care networks. It talked about use of community-based facilities. It talked about a number of things in terms of co-operation between the regional hospital authorities, between the various providers in the province. There has been no suggestion of shutting down rural hospitals.

Mr. Hinman: Why has there been two years of negotiations since the closing of the Picture Butte hospital and the opening of the urgent care centre, and the doctor still has not been paid for his services provided there?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to look into the circumstances at Picture Butte. I have visited the long-term care facilities there and the wonderful use being made of a facility where assisted living capacity has been built and where a number of different measures have been undertaken to acknowledge the demographics in the community. There has been extensive work done to provide more immediate services there to make sure that the community is working together. The MLA in the area has been very involved in consulting on the various ways that we can make better use of facilities, and there are new dollars that have been spent there in private/public partnerships to make it better – and “private” meaning nonprofit work done by community members – to make sure that we're building on the capacity in that particular community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Forest Sector Competitiveness

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government of Alberta announced a partnership with the Alberta Forest Products Association to help address the industry's competitiveness challenges. This release follows the one from the industry's product figures for 2005 that show a decline in revenue for Alberta's forest sector compared to 2004 and predictions of worse news in 2006. My question is to the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How do we respond to the concern that the Alberta government is bailing out industry through this partnership?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta industry to their credit, as I have said, is not asking for a bailout for their industry. What the Alberta Forest Products Association is asking government for is a common dialogue and good approaches to staying competitive globally. That's what they see in this partnership that we announced today.

What we will do through this partnership is conduct a current survey on assessment of the industry and their competitiveness. We will consult, and we will propose solutions that address both industry and forest community needs. Finally, we want to make sure that that's the way that we operate an effective and relevant matter as it pertains to the industry and its changing dynamics.

2:00

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplementary question is to the same minister. Will this project emphasize secondary and value-added products?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a follow-up to our questions in question period over the last couple of weeks. Sustainable Resource Development already has a number of initiatives under way with industry and research organizations to add value to our forest products. We recognize that getting more out of a tree is the future for our industry in Alberta. The partnership that we announced will address the whole of the competitiveness issues and the challenges and potential solutions specific to the Alberta industry from the primary right through to secondary manufacturing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Private Health Insurance

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many international trade law experts have raised serious questions about the impact of private health insurance and private health delivery on the future of the public system due to international agreements such as NAFTA and the WTO's general agreement on trade and services, yet this government continues to ignore the risk. My questions are to the minister of health. How can the minister maintain that proposed reforms allowing more private insurance and more private delivery will protect the public system when the real decision-maker on this will be a NAFTA dispute panel, not the ministry?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, during the public consultation process and on behalf of the opposition party the hon. member raised this question, and I will give the same answer that I gave then. It is my understanding that with very carefully articulated government controls built around what we would do – bear in mind that we're still defining the government as being protective of the public health system so that somebody that was working in the public health system as a doctor or a team providing the service can be very careful in articulating under what circumstances we would engage private providers – the public health system would still be in control of the provision of private service through the definition of the access proposals, and we should not see the impact of NAFTA, as is being suggested by the member opposite, as having any effect in that kind of capacity.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the same minister: when the minister contracted with Aon to design a system for parallel private health insurance in Alberta, were they asked to assess the risk this could pose because of our obligations under international trade agreements?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Aon was not contracted to define any part of a private parallel system for Alberta. Aon was asked to define some actuarial models that would enable us to understand what the costs would be if there was any different mix of paying for public/private care. That report is something that has yet to be tabled with me, is not something that has been a driver on the health policy framework, and is not something that we should be talking about in terms of how we would look to the future for payment of public or private care in the province.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the same minister: given these binding international trade agreements, why would the minister choose to lock us into an untested and unwanted relationship with American insurance companies that we may not be able to reverse? Why would you make that choice?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that choice has not been made. That choice and the questions that are being raised by the hon. member are hypothetical at best. They do not deal with the reality of how we intend to proceed . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have made no selection that would mitigate one way or the other to opening the doors for other private deliverers, either medical professionals or private insurance companies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Canadian Agricultural Income Assistance Program

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been much discussion on the federal government's future plans regarding the Canadian agricultural income stabilization, in other words CAIS, program. In Ottawa it was reported that the federal agriculture minister, Chuck Strahl, is encouraging producers to approach the provinces if they wish to replace CAIS. I know that this question has been brought up already, but I like to keep my questions positive. We get enough negativity from the other side of the House as it is. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. Please proceed.

Mr. Groeneveld: My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given what we heard a few weeks ago at the ag ministers' conference about the need to transform CAIS, what is the minister planning to do now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again a good question. It was, as I mentioned earlier, about two and a half weeks ago in British Columbia when the federal/provincial/territorial ministers' meetings were held. The provincial ministers unanimously said to the federal minister that "replace" is not the word that we would use, that "transform" is the word that we would use. We believe that the principles of CAIS are sound, but it needs to be fixed. It needs to be transformed into what we want it to be. So it is very frustrating to hear the federal minister still describing it in terms of replacement.

In fact, this morning I met with the Canadian Bankers' Association on ag issues and ag lending. I would say that that meeting was very positive about the direction that we're taking in fixing CAIS, and I believe that we're on the right track. The federal position, the Liberal position of ad hoc payments: they didn't get it when they were in power, Mr. Speaker; they don't get it now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the same minister. What kind of CAIS program is the Alberta government pressing for, and how does he see it helping the farmers in the short term?

Mr. Horner: Well, the first part of that, Mr. Speaker, I did answer somewhat in the first question today in the House. On the second part of that question, about short-term response and getting dollars into producers' hands, in fact Alberta presented a proposal to the federal government some time ago that we believe would flow dollars to producers very, very quickly utilizing the CAIS program, with a retroactive adjustment to the reference margins across the board for all producers. It's targeted. That's what we like about the program. It reaches producers in need. It reaches those producers who have gone through a period of rough years in the last few years, and we can handle those types of payments very, very quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is again to the same minister. The minister mentioned that he went and met with the bankers this morning. Could he tell us why he did that?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the bankers in the ag industry are extremely important. [interjections] If the hon. members would care to listen, they might learn something.

The banking industry is extremely important to the agricultural sector, as we know. The bankers need to be our partners in putting forward these programs. The problem with the changes that we've made to our various business risk management programs is that most of the banks and the accountants are sitting back saying: when you guys are done tinkering with all of this, we'll come to the table. What I wanted to express to them was, "We're done tinkering; we're starting to fix the problem," and we want them to be our partners in fixing that problem.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The closure of a school has a lasting effect on its community spirit and economic viability. Last night the Calgary board of education, handcuffed by this government's flawed space utilization formula and failure to accommodate the reduced class size initiative, announced the closure of a relatively new school in Calgary terms, Jerry Potts school, built in 1971. As the dominoes continue to fall, the English program at Varsity Acres shifted across a six-lane, 70-kilometre stretch of Shaganappi Trail to Marion Carson school while the Brentwood elementary regular program closed and Juno Beach Academy got its marching orders. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Given that these dramatic changes, which all occurred in the Calgary-Varsity constituency, that I represent, are echoed on an ongoing basis throughout the province, how can you justify the unnecessary grief, frustration, and anger felt by thousands of students, their parents, teachers, and trustees caused by your ministry's faulty funding formula?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, quite a bit of nonsense in the last part of that question. Let me just say that we have something like 13 brand new schools that are opening in Calgary over the next several months. That's what the Calgary board of education through its consultation process arrived at. They made decisions. They are locally elected people who deserve the respect of the member who just asked the question.

Now, we have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that when new schools are built in one area, they will have an impact on students that are being bused out of that area to attend a school over here. So that's the net result of it. The Calgary board has taken this consultation program very seriously. They've done a thorough job on it, and we have to understand that they are certainly empowered to make those decisions about closures in one area and openings in the other. I might add that we funded those new schools to the tune of about $111 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the minister: given your ministry's death knell either by closure or collapse of hundreds of Alberta schools, when will you change the utilization formula to accurately reflect the reduced class size initiative?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it's so unfortunate to listen here to such a bunch of nonsense being asked. You know, it's just absolutely nonsensical. When you consider that we've just added through this budget that's before the House right now 330 million more dollars to education and that we're providing $5.3 billion, which amounts to about $26.5 million per school day, don't give me that nonsense, hon. member opposite, because it's just not true. There are a lot of good things happening. We have the best education system in Canada and one of the best in the world, and it's time we started recognizing that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Education minister: will you commit to resolving the educational program and infrastructure funding shortfall through the established budgeting process rather than through off-budget spending? Where's the plan?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think it's been made fairly clear over the last few days, but if it hasn't been for this member who's asking the question, let me make it clear again. We do have responsibility now in Education for the entire school infrastructure envelopes. Those envelopes are comprised of three things: new school constructions, plant operations and maintenance, and the infrastructure maintenance renewal. We do have a plan that we are completing from previous years, and we're marching forward with bringing in a new plan approximately in June. That's the target date. At that point he'll see how that dovetails out of the existing budget and perhaps some help from elsewhere. Who knows? The fact is that right now we have a capital plan. There are billions of dollars in there, and there are some school construction projects already budgeted in there, 21 of which will be completed this year, 51 of which will be completed over the next several months. So there's $734 million from the infrastructure budget augmenting current school infrastructure needs.

Royalty Tax Credit Program

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, since its inception in 1974 the Alberta royalty tax credit has assisted the oil and gas sector in our province. This program returns a percentage of Alberta's Crown royalties back to the companies through the income tax system, and this in turn, of course, spurs oil and gas exploration and development. Over the past few years Alberta has seen several oil and gas companies dramatically increase their exploration activities while realizing record profits. My question is to the Minister of Energy. In light of Alberta's active and robust energy sector, is the Alberta royalty tax credit still a necessary program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true that this program originated in 1974 in response to circumstances of the time when royalties were not allowed for deduction for income tax purposes on federal taxes. It's gone through a number of changes over the years to respond to differing circumstances, not just nondeductibility of royalties but price, when low prices were there. In response to today we've decided and even last night in estimates announced that we are reviewing the Alberta royalty tax credit program.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, last fall the ARTC and the Alberta royalty system were the subject of recommendations made by the Auditor General, including the Department of Energy's controls and accuracy of well production data. Again to the Minister of Energy: how is the review of the ARTC helping the Ministry of Energy ensure that Albertans are receiving their fair share of royalties?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, receiving the fair share is really one of the paramount reasons, fundamental principles, behind the royalty structure as created. We have been working very closely with the Auditor General's department. He specifically commented in his last report about the Alberta royalty tax credit program in response to that and in response to our review of royalties in ensuring that Alberta is receiving their fair share. In light of changing circumstances of the markets today, higher prices and the like, it is for those reasons that we're specifically reviewing that program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My final supplemental is again to the Minister of Energy. When can we expect the review of the Alberta royalty tax credit to be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We expect the review of this program to be conducted over the next few months. It's our anticipation that any changes would be effective as of January of 2007, so it would be a very short time period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Aon Consulting Inc.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the Conservative government gave a $1.5 million contract to Aon, one of the world's largest insurance corporations, to cook up a private, parallel health insurance scheme as part of its broader agenda to bring in privatized, two-tier health care. Other than the original request for proposals everything else about the Aon contract and the work they are doing is being kept secret and hidden from Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the minister's professions to engage Albertans in the scrutiny of her third-way proposals, why is she not lifting the veil of secrecy and making public for the benefit of Albertans the studies and reports that the Aon corporation has been doing using 1.5 million tax dollars?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, although the tone of the question is quite alarmist, there is a simple and clear message. What Aon was contracted to do with about a million and half dollars was to define actuarial models to give us some opportunity to study exactly what the state of the art was in terms of current funding and what it would mean if we changed any mix of funding on things like but not exclusively held to continuing care or drugs. What we've also had to look at and ask them to evaluate was to make sure that they factored in a model that would take care of those with pre-existing conditions, noting that today seniors don't pay for health care premiums. So it was something that was going to take an extensive amount of work, and my department asked for more time to work with Aon because the original models built did not answer all the questions they felt they should answer before delivering it to me.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I ask the minister: how can the minister justify the continued secrecy when the Aon study was supposed to be completed by January 20, 2006, yet absolutely no information has been released to Albertans paying Aon's tab?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if I don't have the report or the policy and recommendations that would be a natural outgrowth of the report, there seems to be no prerogative in releasing something that is yet unfinished business. I want to be sure that we do a prudent evaluation of what they are evaluating themselves and what kind of natural policy outgrowth there would be. I think it's responsible to wait and make sure that we've got all the i's dotted and t's crossed before coming forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has no research, no information to proceed with the third way, yet she wants to go ahead with it. Given the minister's refusal to come clean on the Aon study, will she at least commit to providing the results of last month's so-called third-way consultations with Albertans at the same time as they are provided to the government caucus, and if not, why not?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, maybe it sounds petulant of me, but I have never cast aspersions on any of the members that sit in this House nor the opposition, and by suggesting that I don't come clean with things, by saying that I wouldn't come clean with things, you are directly taking an attack at my character, and I refute that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fiscal dollars for schools are missing for the best education system in the world. The entire modernization and renewal needs of the Edmonton and Calgary public schools surpass the estimate for the whole province. While the government has a long list of spending priorities, it appears to me that parents and children aren't a priority of this government. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Why did the minister call a meeting to discuss the capital priorities of each school district when he already had their three-year capital plans, and we're already waiting for a decision from the minister? Why did he have the meeting? [interjections]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a strange question, I agree. However, let me try and answer it.

The meeting that I held on March 24 was with school board chairs so that we could discuss several important issues. One of them was infrastructure primarily because the infrastructure envelopes, which I alluded to even earlier today in this House, have now been transferred from Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation over to the Ministry of Education. I had to answer questions from the school board chairs so that they would know how this affects their local planning and so on. I have seen what their capital plans are that were submitted last year, but there are some changes, hon. member, that they themselves wish made. So we're going through that process of listening to them, as we always do. We listen, we review, we discuss, we decide, and we keep them very much in the loop in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the minister's comments, in light of this, the multiple supplementary requisitions for '05-06 budget for plant operation and maintenance, does the minister believe that a 5.1 per cent increase for spending is sufficient for this year? Will it fit the needs of schools across the province of Alberta and those in the Edmonton area? Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the increase in plant operations and maintenance takes us up to about $395 million. That's a sizable amount of money for heating and lighting our schools and looking after custodial costs. Now, that having been said, I don't want to confuse that or have the member confuse it at all with the IMR, or infrastructure maintenance renewal, envelope because that envelope in fact increased by 68 per cent, up to $81 million. So we're flowing more and more money into the system. I hope the hon. member isn't criticizing that. Those two envelopes have received sizable increases. Is more money needed? In some areas perhaps that is the case; in other areas perhaps not. That's what we're reviewing right now, and that's what will be in the plan that will come forward, I hope, later this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister open the capital projects envelope? Will there be schools in the 75 new neighbourhoods in Edmonton and 40 new neighbourhoods in Calgary? When will that envelope be opened? Thank you.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe there will be 13 new schools opening in Calgary between now and the next several months, totalling about $111 million. There will be 20-some new schools opening elsewhere over the next several months, and there will be 51 other new schools, projects, or modernizations or right-sizing or upgrades and so on opening over the next several months, as I indicated earlier. So once we've finished all of those openings and we track them through, we will then see what the impact is, such as what his colleague from Calgary-Varsity asked about on the neighbourhoods where students are being vacated or where the population is shifting or where we have declining enrolments. There is a lot of complexity to this issue, and we're going to be addressing that complexity in this new plan that will be coming forward very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

School Infrastructure Maintenance

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A growing number of residents in the constituency of Calgary-East are so concerned about our schools' structural integrity. They are telling me that unless the government is getting out of the business of educating young Albertans, immediate investment in deferred maintenance projects in many schools across the province must be made now. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Education. What plans does the minister have to address this issue now that the responsibility for the deferred maintenance in schools has been transferred to his department?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly very much in the business of educating our young people, and I think that all members here know that. I've alluded earlier today to the $5.3 billion that's going into this area. Now, that includes a significant amount of money for school infrastructure, for plant operations and maintenance and so on, to the tune of about $734 million in total. That having been said, we are working on this new plan, which I've just talked about here, and part of that plan is to look at the so-called deferred maintenance. But let me make it very clear that local boards, which are constituted from locally elected trustees, have the right to make local decisions from within their envelopes. A lot of those envelopes exist today, and some of them that I've looked at, I noted, haven't been touched for a couple of years in some cases. So I'm hoping that, perhaps, in the region that he represents, both of those boards will take a look and see if they have any available monies and that they will continue making the priority decisions necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what consultations has the minister had with the school boards to identify the priority schools of each board?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've consulted three times now with the boards in the past year and couple of months. Throughout those meetings, particularly the one we just had on March 24, we went around the table and every single school board chair or vice-chair who was there had a specific comment about certain items. A lot of those items had to do with school infrastructure maintenance needs. We are now looking at what their priorities are. We don't see all of them, but for the ones that they have highlighted for us, we are now seeing where they fit in terms of critical or emergent or need to have or whatever. As we come forward with our plans, there will be more opportunities for those consultations to occur because they're a very good two-way street for communication and for resolving and solving problems.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will this plan be made public so affected students, parents, and staff at these schools are informed of your department's plans of action to address these pressing needs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's my sincere hope that we'll have that accomplished somewhere in the month of June. That will include some additional contact with our experts in Infrastructure and Transportation, who have a lot of expertise in this area, working with staff in my area, working with locally elected trustees and with their counterparts: secretary-treasurers, deputy superintendents, and so on. As soon as we feel we have that plan fleshed out and ironed out to the best of our abilities and as soon as we can put the appropriate amount of dollars required that would otherwise be approved, we'll be making further comment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

International Medical Students

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency has a significant number of medical professionals who came to Canada based on their qualifications and experience but are doing ordinary jobs to provide for their families. I have received many complaints from foreign student doctors about one particular group getting 80 per cent of the total licences provided by the Alberta College of Physicians and Surgeons while others are denied for not meeting Canadian standards. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the minister doing to address this issue?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question and one that several people have asked me about. In the first instance and most recently we provided $3 million for international medical graduates to come to Canada, to come to Alberta and specifically to have an opportunity to interface with residency programs at the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta. It's our expectation that dependent on the specialty this will assist us in providing spaces for at least 14 of these international medical graduates.

The other thing we're looking at and contemplating is a second intake. We have had essentially one intake in universities on an annual basis. We are looking with Advanced Education at the possibility of a second intake process, allowing us to maintain spaces for educating those graduates that have come from either Australia or Ireland, for example, who are Canadian students who have by necessity taken their training in other universities and other places, so we can provide them some opportunity as well. But it's an issue that we're looking at not only with the federal counterparts in terms of immigration policies but to try and expedite this with the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you. Will the minister increase the quota for medical students in Alberta because 14 extra residency seats are not enough?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is our target. We have added, as you will note, some student capacity for physicians in Calgary at the University of Calgary, and we are looking at a workforce plan in conjunction with the Minister of Advanced Education to not only look at those placements for foreign students but expansion of other programs. Here at Capital health one thing that isn't well understood is a clinical assistant program that's been very successful, enabling us to add some of the foreign trained physicians. But the hon. member makes a good point. It's something that we continue to work on with the universities, to see what we can do to increase that capacity.

Mr. Agnihotri: Same minister: will the minister urge her federal cousin in Ottawa to update the information they provide to health professionals considering immigrating?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, we really hope to do that. There are many issues that I'm looking forward to talking to the Minister of Health about, and this is one that I will also advance. I'd be pleased for any of the documentation any member of the House wants to provide me in support of raising this issue.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, before too long I'll call on the first of six hon. members to participate, but first of all some history. While E. Peter Lougheed was the only Official Opposition leader in Alberta's first 100 years to become a Premier, four former Official Opposition leaders were to become Lieutenant Governors. John C. Bowen served as Lieutenant Governor from 1937 to 1950. He served as a Liberal MLA for Edmonton from 1921 to 1926 and was not re-elected in 1926. Mr. Bowen's tenure was the longest of any Lieutenant Governor in Canada in the 20th century. He died in Edmonton on January 2, 1957, at age 84.

John J. Bowlen served as Lieutenant Governor from 1950 to 1959. He was first elected in the 1930 election as a Liberal representing Calgary, was re-elected in 1935, then ran as an independent in 1940 and was re-elected. He was defeated in 1944. During his term he was referred to as the Vice-regal Cowboy. He died in Edmonton on December 16, 1959, at age 83.

J. Percy Page served as Lieutenant Governor from 1959 to 1966. He was elected as an independent in Edmonton in 1940, re-elected in 1944, defeated in 1948, and in 1952 was elected as a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, as he was again in the 1955 election. He was defeated in the 1959 election. Perhaps Mr. Page is best known as the coach of the very famous Edmonton Grads basketball team, which was famous internationally. He died in Edmonton on March 2, 1973, at the age of 84.

J. Grant MacEwan served as Lieutenant Governor from 1966 to 1974. He was elected as a Liberal in 1955 in Calgary and was defeated in the 1959 election. Dr. MacEwan was well known as an agriculturalist, popular historian, educator, public speaker, conservationist, and publisher of a multitude of books. He died in Calgary on June 15, 2000, at the age of 97.

Of Alberta's 16 Lieutenant Governors four were former leaders of the Official Opposition. A fifth, Helen Hunley, was a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Happy birthday today to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Enoch Cree First Nations Casino

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today in recognition of the Enoch Cree First Nation and their initiative to construct and operate Alberta's first ever First Nations casino.

In 2001 the Alberta government approved the First Nations gaming policy, the government's commitment to provide First Nations with an opportunity to enter the casino business as a means of improving economic benefits to their communities. This coming fall the Enoch Cree Nation will open the $140 million River Cree Resort and Casino that will include a 255-room, four-star Marriott hotel, a state-of-the-art sports complex, several restaurants and bars, meeting and conference facilities, a health club and spa, and a 62,000 square foot casino with 600 slot machines, 40 gaming tables, and a high-limit gaming lounge.

The River Cree Resort and Casino will bring new employment opportunities, at least 300 new jobs for members of the Enoch band and residents in surrounding areas, and will generate significant economic spinoffs for the region. It is anticipated that the casino will provide $9.3 million in funding to the host First Nations charity as well as $32 million for the Alberta lottery fund. Forty per cent of these funds from the Alberta lottery fund will go directly into the First Nations development fund grant program for social and community development projects for First Nations. These funds will also help create much-needed economic growth and stability for the First Nations communities. A portion of the Alberta lottery fund revenues generated at the Enoch Cree Nation casino will also be used for traditional lottery fund initiatives, which benefit all Albertans in a variety of ways from new playgrounds to programs for seniors.

Mr. Speaker, First Nations casinos are good for Alberta's First Nations and for all Albertans, and I would like to extend my congratulations to the Enoch Cree Nation on the upcoming opening of their new casino.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin and County Sports Hall of Fame

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the efforts of a group in my constituency to promote and recognize excellence in athletics. On Saturday, March 18, the Wetaskiwin and County Sports Hall of Fame held their inaugural induction dinner. The hard work and dedication of all who are involved with this project is to be admired and applauded. This project will better our sports community and have a positive effect on aspiring athletes, coaches, and other sports-minded individuals by showcasing what has been achieved by Wetaskiwin area residents.

While I don't have the time to mention everyone involved, I would like to single out the president, James Pelehos, who, along with the board of directors, was responsible for this initiative.

On that evening we honoured those who have made a great contribution to sport in our community. This ceremony recognized not only the contributions of athletes who get us on the edge of our seats but also those without whom our teams would have no coaches nor a league in which to compete nor a venue in which to play.

The hall of fame recognizes outstanding contributions in six categories: athlete, builder, team, special, honorary members, and pioneer award. The inaugural inductees include the Falun Live Wires ladies softball team, Doris and Cec Colwell, 1904 Wetaskiwin Cubs men's baseball champs, Al Arner, Norm Brown, Clayton Monaghan, Norma MacEachern, Glen Jevne, Randy Wyness, Val Fonteyne, Sandra Wright, and Rodney Schneck. These inductees' contributions to sport in the Wetaskiwin area have been immense.

Not the least is inspiring and helping area children of all ages to become involved in sport. Participation in athletics gives youth a sense of pride and accomplishment. Additionally, the health benefits of an active lifestyle are immense. Highlighting the success of those who came before will hopefully inspire more people to become involved in the sporting community.

Thank you.

University of Calgary 40th Anniversary

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise in recognition of the 40th anniversary celebrations of the University of Calgary as an autonomous university. The institution's history is, however, much older than 40 years and can be traced to the Alberta normal school for training teachers, which was established in Calgary in 1905, making it the oldest postsecondary institution in the province. In 1945 the normal school became a southern extension of the University of Alberta Faculty of Education.

In 1951 the Calgary University Committee urged an expansion of the Calgary branch of the University of Alberta. As a result, first years of the bachelor of arts and bachelor of science were offered. In 1957 the name was changed to the University of Alberta in Calgary, or UAC. In 1958 sod was turned for the present campus of the university. However, functioning as a branch campus of the University of Alberta, UAC was deprived of its rightful place in the academic sun, and in 1963 students, with the tacit encouragement of their professors, began a drive for autonomy from the University of Alberta.

On May 1, 1965, the University of Alberta at Calgary was granted academic and financial autonomy. The Faculty of Engineering and the division of continuing education were founded. At last, with the proclamation of the Universities Act on April 1, 1966, the university became a truly autonomous institution under the name the University of Calgary. Dr. Herbert Stoker Armstrong became the first president of the U of C.

With the arrival of autonomy the university began to truly blossom as the faculties of Fine Arts, Graduate Studies, Social Work, and Medicine were created. The following year, 1967, at the first convocation, held on March 29, the Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson became the first recipient of a degree from the University of Calgary, an honorary doctorate. The next year, 1968, the Business school was established and offered a four-year bachelor of commerce, and the board of governors approved the establishment of the School of Nursing.

I'm sure all hon. members join with me in congratulating the faculty, staff, and students of the University of Calgary on their 40th anniversary of autonomy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Governance and Democratic Renewal

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to talk about the need for democratic renewal in Alberta. I am proud to have been chosen to chair the Alberta Liberal caucus committee on governance and democratic renewal and to report that in the last few months my caucus colleagues and I started looking at ways to restore democracy and encourage citizen participation and engagement in this province. Our work is challenging, exciting, and thoroughly rewarding. It can be divided under three main headings: legislative renewal, electoral reform, and transparency and accountability.

Reforming the electoral system was the theme of an important and interesting forum which we held on February 13 at the Stanley A. Milner Library here in Edmonton. Changing the Face of Democracy was the name chosen to begin the journey of examining and improving our first past the post system of voting. British Columbia studied this system, and we hope to learn from their experiment.

The Official Opposition invited two members of the B.C. citizens' assembly to tell us about their experience and the results of their work. The British Columbia Citizens' Assembly on Electoral Reform was the fulfillment of a campaign promise made by Gordon Campbell, while in opposition, to correct the system which saw his party win a majority of votes yet fail to form the government. When he became Premier, he also wanted to right the inequity, which saw a complete lack of opposition when people cast ballots for candidates whose parties did not win. Citizens were invited to participate; 180 people were chosen from all 79 constituencies, including two members from the First Nations community. Those chosen went on to study election practices in 23 jurisdictions within the Westminster system, so for someone in this House to imply that to look at electoral reform would somehow be contrary to British parliamentary tradition would be an inaccurate assertion.

The volunteers had many meetings, and they even went out into their constituencies to inform the public and to poll opinion. When they reached their decision, the clear winner was the single transferable vote, or STV, a version of which was in use in Alberta until 1955 and similar to the civic voting system we had in Edmonton until the 1960s.

Stay tuned, everyone, for part 2 of our series Changing the Face of Democracy. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Joseph Anthony (Tony) Mercredi

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to bring to your attention the passing of a great Albertan and a proud aboriginal leader. Tony Mercredi was a former grand chief and an accomplished aboriginal rights activist who died last Sunday of colon cancer at age 58.

Mr. Mercredi, who was a Dene from just outside Fort Chipewyan in northern Alberta, was a celebrated former chief in his own band, the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation, and a grand chief of Treaty 8, which represents 23 Alberta First Nations. In the 1980s Mr. Mercredi helped negotiate the Meech Lake accord, fighting for constitutionally entrenched aboriginal rights. He travelled extensively, explaining treaty rights to the United Nations in New York, and he made a presentation on inherent rights to the Vienna convention on human rights. At the 1992 Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro he shared the podium with the late Jacques Cousteau.

He was a father, a grandfather, and at the time of his death still studying to become a pastor.

Mr. Mercredi was born on June 26, 1947, near Old Fort Point, the place he always called home and returned to many times throughout his life. After finishing high school, Mr. Mercredi studied political science at the University of Western Ontario. Eventually he was drawn into politics. Mr. Mercredi's decisions were always well considered, his leadership style kind but firm and rooted in the traditions of his nation. Mr. Mercredi believed deeply in securing rights for aboriginal people, but he also wanted to help his band get on its feet financially and politically.

Mr. Mercredi leaves his two children, Nicole and Edmund; his mother, Victorine; nine siblings; and four grandchildren. His funeral is scheduled to take place tomorrow, which is Thursday, at the Roman Catholic church in Fort Chipewyan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak today on the government's third way. After 15 years of rule this administration has failed the tests of governance and leadership, most recently in its dishonest attempt to sell Albertans on the third way, a two-tiered health care process. This erosion to a cherished public service, touted as a way to improve access and sustain the funding for illness and injury care, violates the evidence, Canadian values, and basic business principles.

Despite repeated calls for a careful analysis and real health reform in the past decades, what we have in the third way is an ideological blindness and the support of vested private interests. There has been no systematic attempt to examine critically current spending on the health care system; to establish specialized public centres with tight referral systems; to establish needed primary health care centres, that have shown efficiencies for 40 years, along with alternate funding for physicians; to optimize scope of practice of all health professionals as teams; to investigate meaningfully prevention and health promotion; and to expose the adverse impacts on business and competitiveness.

In terms of business principles the most fundamental premise of private enterprise is that of social supports, equal opportunities. These must be there to enable people to compete economically. Health care is one of those basic needed rights in our society to meet human potential. In addition, the Canada Health Act and basic ethical principles clearly cannot support physicians working in both the public and private systems at the same time, a clear conflict of interest that this government persists in promoting.

The third way violates both evidence and public values and follows a pattern of many years of public policy failure, including the handling of BSE, chronic wasting disease, coal-bed methane and water protection, electrical deregulation, neglect of seniors, the poor, and the handicapped. The third way does not represent progress. It does not represent governance or leadership. It represents incompetence or corruption. Albertans will decide.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, you caught my eye when the previous member was speaking.

Ms DeLong: I'm a little unsure. Are we allowed a point of order at this point?

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. member, the chair will not recognize any points of order with respect to members' statements. The reason for that is that when the House dealt with members' statements a number of years ago, this was an innovation brought into this Chamber, and originally they were statements of a certain length of time. Hon. members would be given the freedom to participate on any subject they wanted to and to have an opportunity uninterrupted. We've had occasion in the last number of years where hon. members have attempted to interrupt another hon. member when they're giving a members' statement, but the chair has in all cases said, no, that would not be viewed as a point of order.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present to this House today, the first with 304 signatures of people mostly in the Calgary and Edmonton areas. They say:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to recognize the financial burden borne by postsecondary students in this province, and to take action by implementing a significant rollback of tuition fees.

The second petition, signed by 96 people primarily from the Calgary area:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

Ms Blakeman: Yes, indeed. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise today and present the first 116 signatures of what I know are going to be thousands on a petition which is petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to abandon plans to implement the third way; not to allow expansion of private, for-profit hospitals; to oppose contravening the Canada Health Act; and asking the government to vote against any scheme to pay for private health care insurances for services that should be covered by medicare. One hundred and sixteen signatures from across the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first of all like to table a petition with 119 signatures on it. The petition urges the government of Alberta to "eliminate private clinics and private delivery in the health care system, and develop a comprehensive plan to strengthen and extend Medicare."

The second petition is from my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona, also with 119 signatures on it, also urging the government of Alberta to "eliminate private clinics and private delivery in the health care system, and develop a comprehensive plan to strengthen and extend Medicare." So far, that brings the total on this particular petition to 953.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We're not all tabling the same petition, are we?

Mr. Martin: No, we're not, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to present in this Assembly a petition on behalf of a group of my constituents. The petition is signed by 116 students at Sir John A. Macdonald high school which is located in my constituency of Calgary-Nose Hill. The petition calls on this Assembly to urge the government to take action to reduce teenage smoking in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce a petition signed by 106 concerned Albertans primarily from Calgary, Airdrie, and surrounding communities. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income supports benefit levels may be increased.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to table 15,297 names primarily raised by two people of the Chinook regional health authority, Alan and Mary Heggie, who are petitioning to have radiation therapy services made available in Lethbridge. It's my privilege to present on their behalf.*

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of tablings on health care again today. From Isabel M., a letter noting that she feels that the poor would not have health care in the future.

From Blayne Newton, with a copy of an article called Alberta's

Chicken Little: After All These Years, Why Run into Foxy Loxy's Jaws?

From Don Ronaghan, asking for dates and times of public meetings where members of the voting public can attend and give input.

From Marty Richardson, asking why the government doesn't reopen second-year and third-year nursing school programs so that nurses could be educated and ready to work more quickly.

From Cec Race, who submits a satirical poem which is an expression of his opposition.

From W. Procter, who hopes that the third way will get dropped like a hot potato.

From David Pearce, who notes that many of the so-called cost savings come at the expense of the lower ranking front-line staff and from union bustings.

From Ray Palmer, who feels that physicians, if they're going to practise in both systems, should have to be in one or the other.

And from Mike O'Reilly, noting that he cannot afford to pay for special care and that it is totally wrong and should not be allowed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon to support the questions I asked in the Legislative Assembly earlier today. The first tabling is an Alberta Government Services land titles office document. It is a document that indicates there was a transfer of land for $5.2 million from the Galfour Development Corporation to two numbered companies, one in Edmonton and one in Vancouver. This document is dated 1999, I believe. Yes, July 1999.

An Hon. Member: It's getting better.

The Speaker: Well, we'll deal with the chair in these matters, okay? Let's continue to move.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. The next document that I have is also an Alberta Government Services land titles office document. It is a caveat forbidding registration, and it is a document that associated Galfour Development Corporation and the notice that Peterco Holdings Ltd. has an interest in the land held by Galfour Development Corporation.

The third document that I have, Mr. Speaker, is the short legal title for west of the fourth meridian, range 25, township 52, the fractional southeast quarter of section 9. This is a historical title.

The fourth document that I have is from the Alberta corporate registry system, and it is the details on Galfour Development Corporation. This document is dated January 31, 2006.

The last document that I have to table – and I appreciate your time and patience, Mr. Speaker – is a historical land title certificate for a property west of the fourth meridian, range 25, township 52, the southwest quarter of section 9.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Pierre Gosselin. Mr. Gosselin is appalled at lengthy wait times but is adamant that the third way is not the solution. He says that the solution is simple: reinvest in health care the same way that the government's cuts destroyed it.

Also, on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona a couple more tablings. One is from Elisabeth Ballermann, who is the president of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. Ms Ballermann agrees that there are ways to improve the existing system but disagrees with the proposal to allow doctors to straddle the public and private systems and feels access should be based on need instead of ability to pay.

The third letter is from Lucia Teixeira, also opposed to the so-called third-way proposals, who says that a private, parallel health system would take providers away from the public system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling today is a letter from Vinay Jhass, who describes the government health policy framework as vague and compares it to a campaign pamphlet. Vinay wants us to listen to the will of the people and assures us that the third way will be as disastrous here as it was in England, Australia, Spain, and Italy.

The second tabling is from Edmonton-McClung constituent Ms Lorna Berlinguette with respect to violence against indigenous women in which she urges the government to improve police response protocols to missing person cases, protect the rights of sex trade workers, and provide funding for more shelters and counselling services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Little Bow, do you want to try it again?

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that 15,297 signatures weighed on my mind. I might have presented it as a petition, and in fact I should have presented it as tabling a return. I apologize, and here it is one more time on behalf of Alan and Mary Heggie, from southern Alberta.

Thank you.*

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is my pleasure to table the appropriate copies of the annual report card for 2004-2005 of the School at the Legislature. This program is cosponsored with community members Priority Printing and Access Media Group along with VIA Rail Canada and the Edmonton downtown Rotary Club.

Main Estimates 2006-07

Infrastructure and Transportation

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Acting Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I start, I would like to introduce staff from the department that are here with us today: Jay Ramotar, the deputy minister; Rob Penny, assistant deputy minister of transportation and civil engineering; Jeanette Espie, executive director, office of traffic safety; Barry Day, assistant deputy minister, capital projects; Winnie Yiu-Young, acting assistant deputy minister, policy and corporate services; Gary Boddez, chair, transportation safety board; Angela Paterson, director of policy and corporate services; Bart Johnson, director of communications; and John Enns, executive director of property management. If you folks would please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Roads and infrastructure play a critical role in the success of our province and the quality of life for Albertans, and the number of these Albertans is steadily rising. Alberta is experiencing unprecedented growth. As our economy continues to flourish, our province is attracting more and more people; our population is continuing to grow. According to Statistics Canada, during the last three months of 2005 the population of Alberta has grown more than five times the national average, gaining more than 25,000 people between October and December. As the province grows, so do the number of challenges faced by the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. The state of Alberta's core infrastructure and our roads and highways has become a high priority issue for this department and for this government.

Deputy Minister Jay Ramotar, his executive team, and everyone who works in Infrastructure and Transportation continued to do a very outstanding job for the shaping of Alberta's infrastructure. This department is ensuring that Alberta's infrastructure continues to serve today's Albertans and will meet the growing demand in the future. Roads and facilities are the backbone of our communities. The Alberta government recognizes the important role that infrastructure and transportation play in the success of our province. It demonstrated its support with unprecedented funding for infrastructure in last year's three-year capital plan and again in this year's plan.

Over the next three years Infrastructure and Transportation makes up over $7.7 billion of the 2006-09 government of Alberta capital plan. The estimate I am presenting is closely tied to the capital plan. In fact, about two-thirds of the voted budget for '06-07 is related to the capital plan.

Thanks to the ongoing support from the government, the ministry has undertaken a number of programs and projects over the last year. I would like to share some of these with you today as I present the ministry's estimates for the '06-07 fiscal year. This year the department's estimates to be voted include approximately $2.6 billion for expense and equipment/inventory purchases. Approximately $1.1 billion is for capital investment. This makes an overall budget of $3.7 billion. This figure does not include $148 million in statutory capital investment funding related to the P3 project for Anthony Henday Drive southeast. This is the southeast section of the Edmonton ring road.

Of that $3.7 billion, $345 million is for noncash items like amortization, nominal sum disposals, and consumption of inventories. This leaves the ministry with $3.4 billion as an actual spending target for programs. As in past years there will be two votes, the expense and equipment/inventory purchases vote and the capital investment vote.

First I will address the expense and equipment/inventory purchases vote, which has a spending estimate of $2.6 billion. Programs that fall under this category are generally related to operations and maintenance. In past years this category included funding for supported infrastructure, including schools, postsecondary institutions, health care facilities, and rural affordable supported living. However, this funding, over $700 million, has now been transferred to the respective program ministries, so I won't be speaking about these areas any further.

What the category does include is $317 million for government operations. This funding enables the ministry to maintain the day-to-day operations of government-owned properties as well as leases and the Swan Hills Treatment Centre and capital and accommodation projects. Funding is also for the maintenance of government-owned facilities, site environmental services, land services, and the management of government air and vehicle services.

Alberta is known for its safe and efficient highway network, and we're intent on maintaining this reputation. The expense and equipment/inventory purchases vote includes $360 million for provincial highway systems and safety. This funding goes towards the maintenance of highways, vehicle inspection stations, rest areas, and transportation infrastructure in provincial parks and on native lands. Under this program the ministry is providing $37 million for transportation safety services. These dollars support vehicle and driver safety programs, monitoring of the commercial carrier industry, a number of traffic safety initiatives, including the implementation of the new traffic safety plan, and the operation of the Transportation Safety Board.

Our province is only as successful as its cities, towns, and villages. To support municipalities, the expense and equipment inventory purchases vote includes over $1 billion each year for the next three years for Alberta municipalities through various municipal support programs. This includes the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, which government introduced last year. The program provides municipalities $600 million a year as part of the five-year $3 billion program. The program allows municipalities to target funding at infrastructure pressures they deem to be priorities. Using these funds, local governments can direct funding at projects, including roads, bridges, public transit, water and waste water, and emergency services.

In addition to the municipal infrastructure program Infrastructure and Transportation is providing grant funding to municipalities through other initiatives. These initiatives include $32 million for the Water for Life strategy to address regional water systems; $30 million for the Canada/Alberta municipal rural infrastructure fund, a cost-shared program between the federal, provincial, and municipal governments; $14 million for the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, another cost-shared program between the federal, provincial, municipal governments and one that puts a focus on green infrastructure projects; $57 million for the new deal for cities and communities, a federal program initiated last year which sees federal fuel tax dollars flow back to the Alberta government, where it gets distributed to municipalities; and some $309 million for other transportation grant programs. These fundings provide formula-based grants to assist counties, municipal districts, special areas, and Métis settlements in developing and upgrading their network of local roads and bridges.

The expense and equipment/inventory purchases vote also includes approximately $480 million for other programs and services related to operations and maintenance. Most of this funding, $362 million, goes toward the energy rebate program, which has been extended to include the month of October. An additional three years has also been added, and the program will now run until March 31, 2009.

The funding also includes $50 million for the new capital for emergent projects program introduced last year. The CEP is meant to address small, emerging capital needs that fall outside the current capital plan. This $50 million represents the expense portion only, and additional funding is also included in the capital investment vote. Finally, funding is also allocated for programs and strategic services, which is primarily for the program support staff.

The second category of spending is for the bricks and mortar and asphalt that make up the roads and facilities of this province: $1.1 billion in funding under the capital investment vote will go towards government-owned infrastructure, including facilities and provincial roads and highways. The capital investment vote allocates $139 million for major construction projects and land purchases. This includes funding for projects such as the Royal Alberta Museum and the Calgary Courts Centre. The land purchases budget is $13 million and is largely to purchase land that will enable us to proceed with construction on the ring roads in both Edmonton and Calgary.

The capital investment vote allocates some $801 million for the provincial highway network. The provincial highway network includes building and enhancing provincial highways and bridges, so we can continue to meet the transportation needs of Albertans and others who drive through our province.

Some of the major projects include twinning highway 63 south of Fort McMurray, and the government will start twinning the 240-kilometre highway between Fort McMurray and the junction of highway 55 near Grassland this year; continuing work on the north-south corridor, Alberta's part of the Canamex trade corridor, that stretches some 600 kilometres from Anchorage, Alaska, to Mexico City – Alberta's leg of it stretches about 1,175 kilometres, and we're about 80 per cent complete already – continued work on upgrades to highway 63 and highway 881 in and around Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo region; and continued improvements to hundreds of kilometres of highways throughout rural Alberta.

Provincial highway network funding will also allow construction to continue on new key segments of both the Calgary and Edmonton ring roads. This funding will assist government in meeting its target to complete the ring roads by the year 2015. We are in the request for qualification stage of a potential public/private partnership arranged for the northeast leg of the ring road in Calgary.

As I said earlier, the capital investment vote does not include the $148 million in statutory capital investment funding related to the P3 project for the Anthony Henday Drive southeast. That's the southeast section of the Edmonton ring road. This is not voted because no cash outlay is required by government up front, one of the benefits of P3.

Finally, the capital investment vote includes $148 million for other programs and services carried out by Infrastructure and Transportation. The majority of this funding, $122 million, is for the capital for emergent projects, CEP, program, which I mentioned earlier. The CEP is meant to address smaller emerging capital needs that fall outside the current capital plan. This program has both an expense and capital investment portion. Some of the funding in this program is a result of reprofiling cash flows from the '05-'06 fiscal year.

The ministry will also invest some $26 million for water management infrastructure, supporting construction and rehabilitation of dams, canals, spillways, and other components that make up our water management infrastructure. Funding will go towards rehabilitating the Carseland-Bow River headworks system and the St. Mary to Milk River Ridge reservoir.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my presentation of Infrastructure and Transportation's estimates for the '06-'07 fiscal year. I would like to reiterate that the department did a wonderful job over the last year and made many strides in ensuring that Alberta's roads and infrastructure will meet the needs of Albertans for many years to come. I expect that we will see the same outcome from the work this year.

I would be only too happy to take comments and questions now, Mr. Chairman, as we move forward to vote on these estimates.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I don't know whether to extend congratulations or sympathy as your workload has doubled with your double ministries.

I am pleased that the government, specifically Infrastructure and Transportation, took our Liberal opposition advice of returning the infrastructure responsibility back to the major ministries of Education and Health and Wellness. With decision-making power comes funding and responsibility for accountable, transparent, well-planned taxpayer dollar expenditure, and as the ministers of Health and Wellness and Education know, they are being grilled on that responsibility on a daily basis in this House.

The Department of Infrastructure and Transportation is requesting a total supply of $3.7 billion for operating expense, equipment/inventory purchases, and capital investment. Last year it was $3.1 billion. The 2006-2009 capital plan commits $13.3 billion to provincial and local infrastructure over the next three years, compared to the $9.2 billion budgeted in the 2005-08 capital plan. I want to commend the Minister of Finance and the acting minister of infrastructure for putting this in the budget rather than off-budget spending. Thank you.

With regard to the air fleet, it's unfortunate that the government members aren't more satisfied with their taxpayer-funded, on-autopilot air limousine service. I know that on a scale of 1 to 6 it only received a 5.1, and the target is 5.6. Will regular members be able to find a seat on the plane while leadership hopefuls flit about the province at taxpayers' expense during the leadership campaign? Has the department done a cost-benefit analysis of the government's aircraft fleet "to ensure that program operations are aligned with program objectives, user needs, and use policies" as was pointed out on page 23 of the Auditor General's report? Will the acting minister release the flight logs as the former minister had promised to do this week? Will Albertans know on a daily basis during the leadership race which ministers are flying and for what justifiable purpose? I suggest that the minister post this information daily on the government website during the leadership race.

The government is allocating $362 billion – sorry, $362 million; I wish it were billion – for energy rebates in 2006-07. However, in the last fiscal year it was expected to have spent $726 million, according to government estimates on page 291. Why is the government lowballing the estimate? Why is the government relying on the sustainability fund to cover its overspending initiatives?

With regard to highways, the government lottery estimates indicate that provincial highway rehabilitation is being cut from $99.7 million in 2005-06 to $63.3 million in 2006-07, according to page 290. I would appreciate having an explanation for this reduction, considering the larger scale projects, including ring roads and the twinning of highway 63, as was noted yesterday by the minister, not at the expense of highway 881 upgrading. The capital plan indicates a "$1.7 billion increase, with $1.4 billion in additional funding for highways in key regions." This comes from page 70 of the report. We're pleased to see that the government listened to the opposition and Albertans' concerns that highway 63 needed to be twinned. That's a key project, and I give the minister and the ministry full credit. I am so glad that this is finally happening. We've been calling for it since the late '80s. We've seen this government make other promises, such as the McDermid report, but unfortunately they haven't followed through. I'll be talking about the McDermid report in another section.

How does the government expect to fill the potholes when the price of oil and gas drops? If the government would adopt our surplus policy, as it seems to be adopting so many other policies that we have put out, 25 per cent of surpluses would be put into an endowment fund, providing ongoing funding. Unfortunately, we do not see a capital fund in this budget like we're proposing. What we do see is a capital account, something that the government can drain while resource revenues are at all-time highs, putting Alberta's future in jeopardy.

With regard to the business plan, goal 2, "plan, develop and manage government-owned . . . infrastructure." This is found on page 257. With regard to the physical condition of provincial highways and the allowable percentage in poor condition, the last actual allowable amount was 11.2 per cent. When you add that to the number that were allowed in fair condition, basically we have over 60 per cent of Alberta highways being tolerated at between fair to poor condition. Last year this department was increasing the target for highways in poor condition from 11 per cent to 18.5 per cent. Hopefully, we're heading in the right direction.

Highway 2 provides such an advantage to the Calgary/Edmonton corridor. I would like to know why highway 3 heading east and west wasn't twinned to provide the same economic opportunities, to create a southern corridor as opposed to simply passing lanes so that you can pass by the opportunities.

With regard to infrastructure debt, on page 77 of the capital plan it states: "alternative financing can be used to fund capital spending." Why is the government claiming that it is not running a deficit when it enters into P3 contracts that extend payments over multiple years? The ring road payments are extended over a 30-year period. We have no crystal ball capabilities of analyzing what our infrastructure interest debt repayments will be in each of those 30 years. We're gambling. There's far too much gambling going on within this province. What is the current dollar figure for the infrastructure debt? The last figure we heard was in the $7.3 billion area. We keep hearing larger and larger amounts coming from health regions and coming from school districts. I'm just wondering if that has been added to the current deficit/debt. How can the government claim that it's debt free when the deferred maintenance shortfalls continue to grow?

As indicated on page 290 of the 2006-07 government and lottery fund estimates, why is the government operations budget increasing for property operations and leases? Would the minister please elaborate on the $3.8 million being invested in the strategic economic corridor investment initiative, which is found in government estimates on page 289? Also, page 289 of the government lottery estimates shows that noncash items are increasing from $271 million in 2004-05 to $345 million in 2006-07. We'd like to know why, and if you could, please provide us with a breakdown in writing so that we could appreciate that significant increase.

As indicated on page 290 of the 2006-07 government and lottery fund estimates, why is the minister's office budget increasing from $450,000 in 2005-06 to $495,000 in 2006-2007? I'm sure that needy communities would have appreciated a share of that lost $45,000. As indicated on page 290 of the 2006-2007 government and lottery fund estimates, why is the deputy minister's office budget increasing from $470,000 in 2005-06 to $535,000 in 2006-07? It seems that there is an awful lot of money being increased within the department itself, that isn't getting out to average Albertans. As indicated on page 290 of the 2006-2007 government and lottery fund estimates, why is the department's communications budget increasing from $788,000 in 2005-06 to $810,000?

We're seeing all these internal increases. I would like to see that these actually represent investments for Alberta in increased efficiency. Possibly the RAGE ministry should look into the efficiency as well as the Auditor General. Would the minister please provide a detailed list for the increases in the strategic services budget indicated on page 290?

Municipal infrastructure. We have a very active mayor in Calgary, and he does appreciate, as noted, the Finance minister's visit with him, which provided him with some temporary relief. Explanations were provided, and hopefully dollars will soon be sent. Likewise, Mayor Mandel of Edmonton, who takes a quieter approach but has equally worthy concerns. Hopefully, the budgets for the municipalities will increase. That $3 billion figure basically will come to an end next year. What will it be supplanted by?

The capital plan has also failed to provide municipalities with sustainable funding. This is noted on page 73. The government continues to prefer grants, which do not meet the long-term needs of municipalities. Far too much is ad hoc. The municipalities need sustainable, committed infrastructure financing. Sort of doing the napkin approach just does not work.

The government's estimates indicate that land and site environmental services are receiving $13 million. This is indicated on page 293. Why, in this particular case, is funding for this initiative so low? It seems that environment loses out. The Environment ministry received only 1 per cent of last year's provincial budget, and $13 million for land and site environmental services I don't believe will come anywhere near to providing the necessary protection and the rebuilding of the areas in question.

Under the client satisfaction survey the percentage of municipal clients satisfied with the overall quality of service is still very high. It's dropped slightly, very slightly. Could the minister please provide the question or questions that provide this overall score? In other words, are these questions designed to require a positive response? Could we please see the survey? Also, could the minister please provide the name of the market research contractor that conducted this survey, and who are the municipal clients that are asked this question?

With regard to overall infrastructure, can the minister provide us with the total cost for the Calgary courthouse that is expected for completion by 2007? This courthouse has gone through a series kind of like phoenixes rising from the ashes, but each time the phoenix rises, it's a smaller bird than it started as. The initial plan called for approximately $350 million. When that ran up to the $500 million cost with some very funny, creative excuses that it had been asked to become planeproof after 9/11, it went from a P3 project to a regularly funded public works project. However, two of the courthouses that were originally included in that $350 million estimate were left out. So what we're getting is more for less.

The government lottery estimates indicate that the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program is being cut from $27 million in 2005-06 to $14 million in 2006-07. This is on page 290. I would appreciate an explanation on this line item. Why has it been halved? Is the program coming to a conclusion?

How can this minister assure rural Albertans that the $24 million allocated to complete the rural affordable supportive living program is enough? This is noted on page 76 of the capital plan.

This budget has also provided inadequate funding for long-term care facilities. The government lottery estimates indicate that the seniors' lodges line item is being cut from $5.5 million in 2005-06 to nothing in 2006-07, and this can be found on page 291. What is the matter with the initiative that it is now being dropped? What is it being replaced by? That, perhaps, might be the question.

Business plan goal 6: "Collaborate with other ministries in the development and preservation of schools, post-secondary institutions and health facilities through the provision of technical expertise and project management services." That's found on page 261. I would be very appreciative of the acting minister explaining just how much freedom both the ministries of Education and Health and Wellness have in determining their infrastructure allotments. Possibly the Minister of Finance could provide some of that information. Do the ministers of Education and Health and Wellness come to the Ministry of Finance separately now? Is there any commitment to go through Infrastructure? Can they appeal directly to the Finance minister in their proposed budgets?

Health facilities. Physical condition, percentage in poor condition. The last actual was 4 per cent. The target is 4 per cent. Could the minister please provide the names of the hospitals that it expects to remain in poor condition? Why is the target for hospitals in poor condition not zero? At least it's in better shape than the highways.

Schools. Physical condition, percentage in good condition. The last actual, 61 per cent. I'm sure that estimate was done before Marlborough Park's roof came close to a cave-in. I'm surprised, actually, that it's as high as 61 per cent given that the average age of schools in Calgary is 48 years. But how can we accept a target of 75 per cent? When we have royalties and surpluses in this province totalling billions, why do schools and health regions have to come on bended knee before their departments to receive the funding that is essential? It's a matter of: are people an investment, or are they simply a line item, part of a deficit?

Why is the government allowing 4 in 10 Alberta schools to be in fair or poor condition? The 3 per cent of schools in poor condition is the most concerning statistic seeing that recently we've had to see a school evacuated. Schools were neglected in this budget. On Monday the Education minister is quoted as saying: I think there is some great urgency with respect to certain health and safety concerns at some schools; help is on the way; there are unbudgeted surplus dollars in that budget – if we're successful and if the plan is embraced by cabinet and caucus – that the source money could come from. That's a lot of maybes. I'm not sure to what extent, having handed off those infrastructure responsibilities, the minister can comment on those questions, but if he can, if that is still part of his concern, I would appreciate his comments.

The capital plan does not indicate the construction for any specific new schools. Again, we're in a transition period. I'm not sure to what extent the minister has responsibilities in terms of his collaboration with the ministers of Education and health care, but if he could clarify his role in terms of approving projects and assisting with financing. Does he go together with the ministers and approach the Minister of Finance for the funding?

The government is committing to new modular classrooms . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired] Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll respond the best I can. It's rather confusing when members jump all over in the books. I'm only keeping track myself, so on the questions that I miss, we'll get the answers to you in writing.

The member spent a fair bit of time talking about the aircraft. It's really quite interesting when you look at what the Auditor General had to say about aircraft and use of aircraft. He was suggesting that, in fact, we use them more. He was suggesting that we replace aircraft because of their age. When you talk about using aircraft for campaigning, the fact is that the only – the only – people that can schedule an aircraft are ministers, and as the Premier has said, any minister that is going to enter the race must resign by June 1. So as far as I'm concerned, there is a real safeguard in place relative to the supposed use of the aircraft for that function.

Now, you mentioned the logs. I want to make it clear. There's a difference between the manifest and a log. We will not be posting the log; we will be posting the manifest. The reason that you don't post the log is simply because there's private information on those logs – for example, phone numbers of individuals and those types of things – because that's what the pilots take onto the aircraft with them. If there are messages that they have to convey as they're in the air, those numbers are on the log. You will get the manifest which shows the destination, all of the passengers on board, the purpose for the trip, and that sort of information. I think that really, quite frankly, that's what you would be interested in, and I'm sure it doesn't make a lot of difference to you how much fuel is on board and exactly what time the aircraft took off and exactly what time it touched down. The information on where the plane originated, where it's going to, who's on board, and the purpose for the trip: that's all on the manifest.

The energy rebates: you asked why we didn't budget for the full cost. Well, that's quite simple. If gas prices are high and therefore we have to pay out more money under the rebate program, the sustainability fund, in fact, will have the additional money, so we can take it out of the additional money in the sustainability fund. You cannot nor can anybody else forecast exactly what the price is going to be. Nor can you forecast the weather. Of course, we don't know how much gas is going to be consumed, so we put in a reasonable number. If we get lower gas prices, if we get a reasonable winter, there will be no problem. It will be below that number. Yes, if gas prices are high, it will be higher. However, the sustainability fund will have those extra dollars, and we can take it that way.

Now, you talked about provincial highway rehabilitation. The reason that those numbers, from '05-06, are currently this much lower in '06-'07 is because of some 30.5 million dollars that was given during the last fiscal year. It was given to that line item, so we're not budgeting it this year because the dollars may not be there. That's why that difference. I'd be really happy if we were able to get those extra dollars, but currently we can't.

You referred to the McDermid report. There were a lot of very good proposals and information in the McDermid report. The fact is that we've implemented quite a few of them. There are a number of them that cost extra dollars, and we're working our way through them. You'll see a safety plan coming out, and it will implement some more of those recommendations, but it is one of those things that takes a little bit more time.

You mentioned highway 3 east and west and asked why we're not twinning it and why we're spending the amount of money on the north/south. Alberta is an export province. We export so many goods, and much of that travels by truck. The U.S. is the number one buyer of our products. So a commitment was made back – I don't know – in the late '90s that we would put a real effort into the Canamex highway. There's been a great deal of effort to get that highway twinned because of the trade issue.

We recognize that highway 3 is very important, that east/west corridor, and there have been dollars spent on it. There's more work being done. There's some engineering being done, particularly looking at the Crowsnest Pass area and what we can do there. That's just one of the east/west corridors. There are others that are being looked at because, truly, getting out to the coast is also important for our trade and for people.

Now, you talked about P3s and the gamble. I'm sorry; I don't know the number on the courthouse, but it's a P3. You indicated that it's not P3. It is a P3. Your definition is not the same as mine. The government can still pay. That's not the issue. The fact is that when it's a P3 like we've got in the courthouse, it was done by the private sector. We've got a firm price on the building. We've got a 30-year contract. They're responsible for all of the maintenance and the operation. Those are all predetermined. They're in the contract today. It's a P3. Quite frankly, when you see the escalation in the price since they started, since the ink was dry, we're very fortunate that we got a P3 because all the way to the furniture, which is included in the original, you'd pay a lot more for it today if you had to go out and buy it, but that was all included to start with. So it's turning out to be an even better deal.

As far as two courthouses that were not included, that's not true. That's not true at all. The fact is that there were different configurations. The one that was chosen had as many square feet as the one that had the other configuration. It was basically about a million square feet. That's about what it was in all the different configurations.

It is true that originally we were hoping that all three courts would come into it. The Court of Appeal decided that they didn't want to, so they're not in there, but certainly the other two courts have got what they need to have.

Mr. Chase: Wasn't the aboriginal court supposed to be part of the project?

Mr. Lund: No. There was no aboriginal court as part of it. There were three courts. The Provincial Court, the Court of Queen's Bench, and the Court of Appeal were the three originally that we were hoping to house in the one area, the one structure.

You talk about the debt in infrastructure. It's true that there is a backlog. You questioned what that number is. Well, that's a very difficult number to really quantify. The reason that it's difficult is that if you have a structure that, say, is 90 per cent of new, would you say that there's a deficit in that building? If it's 50 per cent, what would be the deficit? Would it be 50 per cent of the replacement cost, or what would it be? Now, what we did in, particularly, schools – and it started in about '98 – is we did an audit of the schools. What they did is they took an assessment of the schools and then came up with a number that would put them up to about that 80 per cent of new. They came up with a number, but that doesn't mean that there's that deficit because you can easily live with and work with – and it's very functional – that small level. Yet there's a number there. So they added them all up, and they came up with some different numbers.

I don't know – I haven't come across it exactly – what we're using as a number today as far as the infrastructure debt, if you wish, but one thing is very, very positive. If you look in the third-quarter report of the province – and I forgot the page number – you will see that if you take the assets of the province, whether it be physical or monetary, and all of our liabilities, in fact we're the only jurisdiction that is truly debt free. We have a number that is above all of our liabilities, and the Treasurer, I'm sure, could supplement that answer quite easily.

You asked about the strategic economic corridor investment initiative. This is to accommodate minor construction costs, such as interim engineering and planning, for the strategic economic corridor investment initiative program. That's what those dollars are for. As you can see, it's a new line item, and that is the purpose of it.

You talked about the minister's office and the deputy minister's office. As you know, in '05-06 the two, infrastructure and transportation, were melded together, and what has been found in the minister's office is that it wasn't a realistic number. In fact, if you take the percentage there, it's a 10 per cent increase in the cost, but this is a more realistic number of what it costs in those offices. The fact is that as far as the deputy minister's office, once again that's the same situation. When they melded the two departments together, they didn't take the number out of infrastructure and the number out of transportation and put them together. That's not what they did for the '05-06, and they then found out that, really, it was a lowball number.

You talked about communications, and you wondered about the $22,000 increase. Well, in fact, that's allowing for salary increases. It's only a 3 per cent increase, and that's to accommodate the salary increases.

You asked about our budget relationship with schools, postsecondary, and health. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, those are not found in here at all. There's about $700 million in that area, that used to be housed under supportive infrastructure. There are two kinds that we used to have, the government owned and the supportive, which were those things like schools, hospitals. But those are now found in those others, so I can't comment on them and on what dollars are going to rehabilitation, those kinds of things.

Also, you mentioned the problem with that school in Calgary where there was a roof problem, Marlborough. It's unfortunate, of course, that that happened, but I also know there was some money that the Calgary board of education had that originated back in '01 that was given to the Calgary board for the infrastructure renewal program, and they are just now spending it.

Mr. Chairman, I think that that is what I caught, but we will answer more of your questions in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The minister is new but not so new in this department. When I was a trustee, of course, he was in this particular department, so I'm sure he has some knowledge of what is there that would take others to get up to speed. [interjections] I saw that. I'm going to lobby for you, hon. member. My fans over here want me to.

Mr. Chairman, I want to just make some general comments about the infrastructure deficit and why we're here because the numbers look huge when we look at it in terms of the budget. Remember that when we got preoccupied with the economic deficit back in the mid-90s and concentrated only on that, we did let a lot of other things suffer, including the infrastructure and, I would argue, health care, education, all the other valuable services that we needed.

At this point, with an overheated economy, I would suggest that we are playing catch-up. Whether this is enough money to catch up in a very short period of time, I doubt it, but sometimes it's what we can do at that particular time. When I look at the budget highlights, Mr. Chairman, it sounds like a lot of money: $13.3 billion over three years. It is, I guess, a lot of money, but we are playing catch-up. I don't know. When we look at the problems – and we can talk about hospitals, schools – and we look at roads and we look at water and all the rest of the things, it may not even be enough at this stage.

I guess my argument – and we can't roll the clock back – is that we should not have been so preoccupied with just the economic deficit that we allowed this to flow. I'm not sure we're saving money over the long run in doing what we're doing in terms of playing catch-up. If we had been doing some of those needed infrastructure things like roads and hospitals and the rest of it, we probably would have paid a lot more money. Now we're competing with the overheated private sector, as the minister is well aware, and probably paying a lot more than we have to for our infrastructure needs right now. It's hard to get, as we know, labour. It's hard to get supplies. So it's much more expensive than it would have been a few years ago.

Whether the $13.3 billion over three years is the right figure or not – probably we need more, but, as I say, on paper it looks like a lot. I notice, though, that the total capital and operating budget, including energy rebate funding, is down this year from last year about 10 per cent. I think it's $2.5 billion to $2.2 billion. In view of all the needs we have, I wonder if the minister would comment on why that is the particular case that we're talking about. I think it's $3.6 billion in provincial highways and municipal infrastructure that was announced and the rest of it, but we're facing some real problems just maintaining what we have, as the minister is well aware.

In this particular budget, as I say, the catch-up – we're having CBM-related problems in Rosebud. We know what's happening with our schools, and I can talk more about that, but I know that's not under the minister. I'll save that mainly for Education. I do have some questions there, certainly, about the well-publicized Marlborough elementary school. These are things that have occurred because we have allowed our infrastructure, as I said, to slowly die while we concentrated on one area, and now we're paying the price somewhat for that, Mr. Chairman.

So I would hope – and I'd say this to the minister, for any influence he has with the Minister of Finance over there – that we will not allow this to happen again, that in our budgeting, whatever budgeting we do on a regular basis, there is that recognition that we have to balance off the various deficits: the infrastructure deficit, the social deficit, and the economic deficit, the economic problems. When we're out of debt, that should not be a problem. But I suggest to you that we're probably paying too much now, and this is going to go on with an overheated economy, Mr. Chairman, I would say for a number of years. Again I would come back to: what number we need is a very difficult one to grapple with at this particular time.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just move to – and we had some discussion about this. There are a number of departments involved in the Alberta Water for Life initiative. This seems to me to be crucial right now, and certainly this ministry is part of it. I notice that in this year's budget there's a 63 per cent cut in the investment in Alberta's Water for Life initiative. Now, I bring this up in view of the fact that we've had some startling revelations, certainly from Mr. Schindler, about what's happened to our rivers because of the economic development in Alberta. Obviously the tar sands have some role to play in that. We've had some discussion about coal-bed methane in this particular Legislature, and it seems to me ironic that when we're moving ahead with these sorts of megaprojects and economic development, we're cutting back on what was, I think, a worthwhile initiative. I would ask the minister to comment on why it is that when all these things are happening and the news is out there, we're actually cutting back on what is a good initiative. In doing that, can the minister explain why last year's forecasted spending on this initiative and this year's estimates are so very, very different?

You know, I would just come back to the environment here, that this minister is playing a role in. We're doing the right thing with Bill 1, the cancer endowment, and we're pushing into some of these other areas, but with our rivers it looks like it's impacting our neighbours; rivers in Saskatchewan, for example. They're complaining and others are complaining, and Mr. Schindler is saying that this may be the case. It seems to me that we have to take a real look at this and at the very minimum reinvest back into our Water for Life initiative so that we know what we're doing.

Mr. Chairman, we don't have a lot of time. I just want to move into the discussion more on the P3s. There's always been a private perspective. We let out tenders, we ask the private sector to come in with the best bid, and in the past we owned those particular buildings. With all due respect, the Calgary courthouse was going out of control, so we had to move away from that particular P3. It was financed the regular way, through the private sector admittedly, because the costs were skyrocketing. I think that if the minister checks, he'll find that that's the case. But let's have a discussion about the P3s generally. Everywhere they've been tried they've been a disaster. They brought in P3s under a Liberal government in Nova Scotia, and the new Conservative government had to get rid of them. In Britain they've been a disaster. I look at the Henday, the biggest one that we have going right now. I know it wasn't on this minister's watch, but we were told one thing, and then the documents kept coming different. According to PricewaterhouseCoopers' value for money report, building this road using public dollars would have saved taxpayers most likely about $71 million. In the worst-case scenario Albertans would have saved $6 million. The best-case scenario would have saved $73 million. Either way, this was a gift, Mr. Chairman. The point is that when this occurred, we were told one thing, and the numbers came out very different. We'll have to wait down the way to see how this ends.

Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make to the minister is that when we talked about the Calgary ring road, the questions that were sent out with the particular release said: "How can you ensure the P3 won't be more expensive?" Well, it says: "The three proposals will be evaluated" – and I'm not talking about the Calgary ring road – "against a public sector comparator to ensure they represent good value for government and taxpayers. If clear benefits cannot be demonstrated, the project will not proceed." But then they won't release the public-sector comparator, that they at least did with the Henday, because, we're told, that might distort the bids. That was the answer from the previous minister. Well, surely the public of Alberta, that is putting this up, should have the right to know what we're dealing with instead of hiding it.

The real question they have in this press release: "Isn't a P3 just another term for debt?" Answer: "No. The government is simply paying for the project over a 30-year period rather than all at once. The Alberta government would not start making annual payments until after construction is completed." I've said in the past, Mr. Chairman, that if it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it is a duck. It's still money that's going to be coming out of the taxpayers' money over a 30-year period. The Anthony Henday will be over a billion dollars – I don't have the exact figures – when we pay that over 30 years. It's still a debt. It's still going to come out of the taxpayers' money.

So no matter how many ways you want to put it, that's what it's going to cost the taxpayers of Alberta. Before, we owned the building in the traditional way, and that was part of our assets. So to be fair to people, don't send out documents, if the bureaucrats are up there, and tell us this. This insults people's intelligence. They know that on Henday we're spending another $32 million a year, and it will come from the taxpayers of Alberta. That has to be looked at over the long range of time, too, when we're doing this.

I don't know what this preoccupation is with P3s. Admittedly, as the minister said, the private sector plays a very important role. It always has. They bid on these particular documents, we see if they have the wherewithal to do it, and then we take the best bid. It worked well in the past. I don't understand this preoccupation, especially when they have the record that they have all over the world. Is it ideology? Is it the concept of ideology over common sense? I don't know. Maybe the minister can tell us.

I know they'll all get up and say that P3s are wonderful, but even he will admit that the Auditor General – and I know the government has accepted the recommendations, although I still haven't seen how the Henday and the Calgary ring road will follow with his recommendations.

Mr. Chairman, I just really say to the minister: let's have some caution. I don't know how far along the Calgary ring road is in this P3 proposal. Perhaps he's been briefed in the brief time it's been there about where that stands. It's my understanding that it's not a done deal, at least from the releases, but I'd like to know exactly where that stands at this particular time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to move on fairly quickly to Fort McMurray and the roads in that area. Recently, as of yesterday, I put in a petition on moving the pace along for highway 63, and I think that highway 28 tags into that. It seems to me that the whole engine of economic growth that we've been talking about centres around that Fort McMurray area. It's a very dangerous road, I'm sure the minister is well aware, and I know that we're moving in some direction. People there want it speeded up. That's almost 9,000 names that I've put in from this one petition from people in Fort McMurray and Edmonton about speeding up that process. If the minister can, would he give us an update of what the most recent time frame is for that to be twinned, if there's some possibility.

As I say, we're using that whole area as sort of a cash cow. At least we should have safe roads going up there. If he could also talk about highway 28, where that stands, because that connects to highway 63. [interjections] Mr. Chairman, my fans want me to also bring up 813. Right? Highway 813. Please give us an update on where that is in the government's plans, how soon we can move ahead on 813. I know certain members would be . . .

An Hon. Member: Highway 813.

Mr. Martin: Highway 813. Yes. I've said it. All right? [interjections] Well, you can talk about that too, but make sure that you talk about 813.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to conclude by asking in a general way about the so-called $13.3 billion that comes back there over the three-year period. Is this the reality, or is there going to be perhaps more money as we go through? I guess I want to know how solid that particular number is. We seem in budgeting to move fairly quickly through. We have a budget, and then pretty soon we're into other estimates and money going. Perhaps when he's doing this – and maybe it's premature to ask, when the minister has just been brought back, what sort of figures are we looking at with the economy? Have they been doing any projections over the next five to 10 years? If we're moving ahead as quickly as we are with a number of these projects, I'd like to have some estimate about where we're perhaps going if he's able to do that. I would understand if he hasn't had time to do that.

I would just conclude, Mr. Chairman, talking about the schools. The question I have – and that's another whole issue that I think we'll save for the Department of Education, having formerly been a trustee. The minister is aware that we had public schools falling apart in Edmonton because the majority of them now are over 50 years of age, and the maintenance is becoming insurmountable. We moved from Infrastructure to Health and Education, and there would be a joint sort of sign-off, if I can put it that way, on any major projects. Now I'm told that there has been some announcement – I haven't been able to see where – that these would be solely under Education and Health and Advanced Ed now, those three departments. I'm wondering: if that's the case, is that permanent, or is that just a temporary situation while we sort through the people that are coming and going in terms of government? Is this sort of a permanent solution, that the capital projects and maintenance will fall under those three departments rather than Infrastructure in the future?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks for those comments. You talked a lot about the debt and the accumulated debt and whether, in fact, this is a correct amount of money to be spending at this time to catch up. One of the things I must point out is that it is true that there was a period of time when there wasn't a lot of money spent on some of this infrastructure as we were wrestling with our deficit and debt. However, if we were just happy to catch up with what we lost, that wouldn't be too bad, but the fact is that at the rate the province is growing, the demand for new – and always in these situations you don't start collecting the taxes until after people are here and after there's activity going on. So we're sort of behind the curve, as it were, in that the services are required now, but the payments start coming later. It is an issue of trying to balance what is the right number.

You mentioned the overheated economy. Absolutely, that is a problem. To get work done today is considerably more expensive than it was two years ago: materials, labour, the whole thing. So the more we dump in, the more we help heat the economy. I think that it's important that we recognize that fact and be careful just how fast we're doing it.

You commented in more than one area about a reduction. One must look at the budget for '05-06 as opposed to the forecast. The forecast includes the money that was put in during the course of the year. So that's why you'll see that reduction if you just look at the forecast, but you won't see that it's a reduction if you look at the budget for '05-06. I just wanted to point that out.

Water for Life is a prime example. There was some $54.1 million added to that program during the fiscal year. As I was just explaining, in '05-06 the budget was $32.2 million. The budget this year is $32.1 million. But the forecast was $86.21 million. That was because there were dollars added in. Now, as you know, this is a very, very important area, and the Minister of Environment has said many times that he would like to see a minimum of a hundred million. So we recognize the issue, but this is a budget, so we have to work within the dollars that are available. The Minister of Environment, I know, has some money that he uses for this Water for Life strategy, things like basin planning. That's one of the things that's happening. Certainly, I agree with the member that, in fact, this is an important one that we need to continue to take a serious look at.

P3s. Now, you and I will never agree. I know that. I know that because we believe in saving money when we can, and I'm not sure that that's part of your ideology. The fact is that the Calgary courthouse – and it really bothers me when I hear people saying that it was exploding. No, that wasn't the case at all. Because of the way that the accounting principles work, yes, it did look like it went from 300 and some million dollars to $500 million. But that was because it was going to be booked in two years at present day value. That's where the difference comes in. The fact is that we are very, very fortunate that we got a P3 with the courthouse because if you look at costs since the ink dried to today, the costs have gone way up. I was heavily involved in that one, so I know a little bit about it. The fact is that I went to the Auditor General and asked him: "Could you give me a number? What is the off-loading risk? What is that worth as a percentage of the total cost?" Because that's what we're doing. That's one of the big things that you've got to consider when you look at a P3: what are the costs that you're off-loading when you move over the risk?

The contractor reported to us that when they went to purchase just the rebar for the Calgary courthouse, the price had gone up $8 million from when they first had estimated the cost – $8 million just for the rebar, never mind the cement and all of the other building materials and the way those costs have gone up. The other thing is that that courthouse will be completed and will be opening in the fall of '07. Had we done it in the conventional manner, you wouldn't have that, of that kind.

Now, as far as the highways are concerned, I believe they are probably an even better deal. But you've got to remember that none of these P3s go ahead until the business case is done. When you talked about "why aren't we releasing the comparator?" whatever that comparator is then becomes what the proponents would use as the base. Why would we do that? Why would we give that? What will happen is that the day the tenders are opened, the comparator will be released, and that will happen. But you never give that kind of information to the folks up front. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, we're at the point of the request for qualifications relative to the northeast portion of the ring road in Calgary.

We'll get back to you on all those different highways. I could look up a lot of it, but that would take a considerable amount of time, so rather than that, we'll get back to you with the time and the numbers and what is ahead of us there.

As far as the schools are concerned, there is still discussion going on about just exactly how this is going to work with the line ministries having the money in their budgets and the capital. That's all I can tell you at this point. We're still trying to figure out what the most efficient and best way of doing that is.

While I'm on the schools issue, even though it's not in our department any longer, in both Calgary and Edmonton it's a major problem because of the location of the schools. The old schools are built in the areas where there aren't nearly so many children. We heard today the problem as soon as the boards want to close schools, and the member, having been on the school board, knows how difficult that is. We know how difficult it is for boards to close schools, but the fact is that in some cases your utilization goes way down because the children aren't there. You have to bus; that's an added cost. Yet probably the right thing to do would be to close it and to build a new school closer to where the children are.

This is not a new phenomenon. I remember the Minister of Education back in the early '90s pointing out to us in Calgary a problem that was developing because that's when the city was really expanding, so you had a lot of families living out of the centre core and the school, of course, in the wrong location.

So with those, Mr. Chair, I'll get back in writing on those other questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to speak on infrastructure. I guess I'd like to start off by reading halfway down the page on page 253, under Aging Infrastructure: "A significant backlog in deferred maintenance has been created." It's sad that we're in that situation, that we were so busy paying off the debt that we didn't realize the accumulation of the backlog. As it goes on to say, "Major repair can be expected to cost more than routine maintenance would have cost, and all-out replacement can cost up to five times what repair would have cost." It's hopeful that we can catch up because of our windfall revenues, but the question is: are the priorities going to be in the right place, and what are we going to do about that? [interjection]

You'll have to talk louder, Shirley. I can't hear you.

The Chair: Order.

Mr. Hinman: I apologize. [interjections] That's right. Surely, whoever is speaking should speak up.

First of all, I'd like to start with a few highways because that is the backbone of our trade industry and how we move things around. You've mentioned many times about the twinning of the Can-American highway.

There's still a problem down in my area in Milk River. It's long overdue. It should be taken care of, and it isn't. One still has to wonder: why is it continuing? Milk River is in a dilemma there. Their hospital has been reduced and shut down to barely what you'd call a swing-bed operation. They have the desire there to downsize the school because the ratio isn't good enough for the facility they have. They're talking about taking away their big gym down there because they don't have enough students. So all three of those are a triple whammy for Milk River. On top of that, with where they want the twinning to go, they want to take out the elevators and move the railroad tracks. It'll be a major loss in their tax revenue when in fact they lose the elevators that are there in the community.

This government promised a long time ago to take over the secondary highways throughout the province, and they were going to pave them. Highway 501 west of Cardston has still not been paved. It's a treacherous road at best, and when the weather is poor, which is often the case down there close to the foothills and getting into the mountains, they actually can't run the buses more often than on most roads because it's in such poor shape. I know that the previous minister has been trying to strike some deals to cover that, but to date I'm not sure if, in fact, an agreement has been agreed on. It's a real struggle.

Another intersection: highway 36 and highway 3 there at the Taber sugar beet factory. I'm sure that the hon. minister has been down there and seen that. It's a problem there. In your first goal in your report it talks about helping municipal governments achieve infrastructure where industry and highways meet. The town has asked for an overpass. They're putting in lights. It's going to cause major problems there, they feel, in the area.

The question that I would like answered if you have the answer is: how does the government make a decision on putting in an overpass? Is it the traffic flow? Is it safety? Do you have numbers? Is there something that we have to reach? Everyone has a question on that as well as highway 3 going to Medicine Hat. You've mentioned it several times today already, but I would really like to see a report that shows the traffic flow on the major highways in Alberta and those intersections and what type of formula this government has or the priority list on when these areas might receive the upgrade that they desperately need.

Like I say, it would really be nice to have those volume reports and see if you're there. When you take those volume reports, for example, do you monitor during the sugar beet harvest when it's going to Rogers Sugar, or do you go in the spring when there isn't the harvest going on and all of the traffic that's there in the fall between the corn and the sugar and everything else, the potatoes that are growing out there? We have two major potato plants in the area also. The amount of trucks on the road has really increased in the last 10 years there.

Then we'll go on a little bit further. Just when we're talking about Taber and in that area, it seems that we've created a monopoly on the road maintenance system. It's very frustrating for some of those MDs that there are certain areas where they have to look after and maintain the road between different highways when they would very much like to go back to the old days where they could bid and take the maintenance in an area. But it just seems like what we've created is a multilevel marketing scheme where the two big companies, Carmacks and Volker Stevin, can monopolize an area, and then they subcontract out the work to be done. It seems like we're paying a very high fee for the management of the road maintenance. Many of the MDs down there would like to be able to bid on it; others are happy with the service. So I realize that this is definitely a balancing act, but it's something that they would appreciate looking into.

I guess that I'll expand a little bit further just on highway 501. A group of individuals tried to put in a bid to get that paved and raised some money, and the government said that there was a liability problem and that that wouldn't be doable. Yet with the bid that came back, what the government paid for six or eight miles was a significant amount more than what the private bid was. This government talks about P3s and lots of those types of things. I believe in opportunities to bid and to take what best serves the province, yet here's a case where it seems like the province has turned a blind eye and says: well, no, we're going with our system status quo. You haven't fulfilled the promise of paving those secondary roads, and this one is a fairly important one.

I guess that I'll touch on the same thing that's been brought up many times, a little bit different twist. We definitely have a superheated construction industry. With the $13.3 billion that's been promised over the forthcoming years, there's a shortage of equipment and manpower to do that. There's no question that the bidding has gone up. Whether it's 30 to 50 per cent, it's significant. Everybody knows that.

It seems like we're put in a situation where it's the last day on the island. We're going to go home from our holiday, and we've got to spend everything now. It just seems common sense to me to look at those infrastructure debts, what needs to be accomplished, and to allow the different municipalities to take that money that's going to go there, put it in the bank, and then let them use their good judgment on when an opportunity comes to get the upgrade they need or to do the repair work. That way they can look at it and say: "You know what? We don't have to spend the money this year and, therefore, lose 30 per cent. We would rather wait one or two more years and get the full job done rather than just half the job with the same amount of money." I think it would really take a lot of the pressure off in this superheated economy and the inflation that we, ourselves, are creating by putting more money in there and saying that it needs to be spent now.

I guess that the other area I would like to touch on is the schools and the formula that they have, needing to reach 80 per cent occupancy. I understand that it works well for the cities, but there again rural Alberta needs a different look at it. I'll refer specifically again to Milk River. They raised a lot of money many years ago and put up a beautiful gym, and now Infrastructure says, "Well, you really don't need that big of a gym for such a small school," and they're considering tearing it down. It just seems sad that they'd want to do that when we could keep that gym and just tweak the formula rather than say: well, this is the formula; we've got to tear down this many square feet because if we don't reach 80 per cent occupancy, we can't rebuild. It just seems a little bit backwards in our thinking and not as forward thinking as we should be, wanting to destroy those good rural schools that are still usable for the students there.

Another question that I have: dams and off-stream storage. I wasn't able to get through all of the report like I would have liked to, but I haven't been able to find anything on that. I believe that's in this portfolio. We're trying to hammer out an agreement down on the Milk River. When we come up with that agreement, which I understand could be as early as next week, are we in a position to move forward and to develop the dams and off-stream storage in southern Alberta? There are several on the books that could be and, I believe, should be looked at. Are we in a position to be ready to take the opportunity to put those structures in place? Water is very critical in the south, and something that we're really desperate for is increased storage there.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that that covers most of the subjects that I wanted to cover, so I would appreciate hearing some of the answers on that. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks for the comments. I find it interesting, of course, when people talk about the backlog and that we should have done more a few years ago; 20/20 behind is always very, very easy. Nobody had any idea that we were going to hit a boom like we've hit in these last years. While it's easy enough to look back and say, "Yes, we should have done more when the cost was lower" – I'm sure all of us would agree – the fact is that at the time nobody had any idea that this kind of a situation was coming.

You talked about Milk River and the town. The bypass around Milk River is, as you know, a very, very expensive situation, with the railway tracks and the elevators and the whole situation there. One of the things that we ran into as far as the bypass is concerned is the fact that because of the rail and the federal involvement there had to be a very extensive EIA done, and that's in the process. So that's being completed, and hopefully we'll be able to address that issue because, certainly, it is important that that one be finished.

I'm sorry; I can't tell you on the overpasses exactly, but we'll get information to you. It'll be a combination of factors, of course, the amount of traffic, the danger. I've been down on those highways when the sugar beets or the potatoes are being harvested and even just the traffic with the silage operations and the amount of trucks that are on the road and those kinds of things. I know, for example, that with the beef plant, the Cargill plant at Brooks, they were looking at a flyover. I don't know whether that was ever done. I'll have to check that out.

The bidding for maintenance. As a matter of fact, those contracts are five-year contracts. So every five years there's a new tender. I know that in the area that I live, the company that had the contract for the last five years lost it based purely on bidding. Now, you talk about the municipality getting into that business. Quite frankly, I don't agree. I don't agree that municipalities should be into that kind of business. That's not their core business. I really have difficulty if they start getting into that kind of business when to serve their ratepayers is what they should be concentrating on, not other kinds of business.

I didn't catch exactly what you were mentioning on 501 as far as a private bid and what that might be. Yes, when Premier Getty was in an election, he committed to paving all the secondary highways. Those of us that were on municipal councils knew at the time that that's not achievable. Sure, you could go out and put some pavement on those roads, but what good would it do? The base isn't there, the width, so you have to do all that construction. What we are doing to try to accommodate more of the secondaries is do some secondary and perhaps turn it back over to the municipality once we've done the capital so that they can maintain it. There are cases where it's very inefficient for us to be doing the maintenance on some of those, especially when you look at snowplowing and sanding in the wintertime. We need to work on more of those.

You mentioned about the money to the municipalities. Well, in fact, the $600 million that goes annually to the municipalities, they've got 10 years to spend. That was for the very reason that you touched on, so that they can make the best use of those dollars. They get the money. They bank it. It's there. They can take 10 years to spend it. I think that was a real wise move when the decision was made to allow them the 10 years.

An Hon. Member: Where does the money go?

Mr. Lund: Well, I know that the market is going up, but what goes up, comes down, so we'll see. I know that some are spending a portion of it and saving some. I know that it gets frustrating sometimes when you see money sitting in the bank and not working. Nevertheless, I also really appreciate the fact that the more we put in, the less value we get for the dollar. So we have to be cognizant of that.

You commented on schools. Now, because of the way the utilization formula works, we established – and I've forgotten the number now – schools by necessity, and it was to accommodate the very thing you were talking about. Even though it's not in my portfolio any longer, I would be very disappointed if there was talk of tearing down a perfectly good gym because it didn't fit in the formula, and I'm sure that the minister of learning would agree with me. So if in fact that's what is happening, then you need to talk to him. One of the things we were really encouraging is that the community use those facilities more as well. That way, hopefully, it could be handled.

The water issue and the storage: if you noticed, in my opening comments I talked about the $26 million that is set aside to do the very things that you're talking about. Absolutely, that's got to be part of the Water for Life strategy, more off-stream storage. That's critical. We've got to get moving on a lot more of it. Currently, about 70 per cent of our water eventually flows into Saskatchewan. We need to capture a lot more of it when the rivers are high, so we get that.

That's it, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Degore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to talk about a few of the trips that I've had around the province and talk about municipal infrastructure to start off with.

Mr. Tougas: Do you have slides?

Mr. Bonko: No, I don't have slides. Thank you, though, for asking.

The latest trip that I had gone on with a number of my colleagues was up to McMurray, where a lot of the boom seems to be happening and a lot of controversy with regard to lack of funding. We were driving up there, and I probably know why the Minister of Environment doesn't drive his Smart Car up there: some of those potholes would probably swallow it. They are huge. The road conditions with the amount of trucks travelling back and forth on there and just the sheer traffic and volume – I mean, when you're trucking 4,000 or 5,000 workers back and forth, your roads are going to take a beating. Absolutely. There's no doubt about it. The road conditions there are deplorable, just like a lot of places, but we're just concentrating on McMurray for right now.

We talked with a number of the civil council members and business owners there, and they all came up with the same conclusion: we certainly feel that we are neglected up here in McMurray; we would like to see more infrastructure. Some of the concerns were about taking a percentage of the royalties. I know that this ministry can't control that part of it. This controls infrastructure. But the point was that they feel that if that much money is coming out of the whole industry and the area up here and we're taking in that much more people than we would normally accommodate, then we would need to have a little bit of consideration with regard to funding.

I did talk about the roads. Even going up from McMurray across the bridge – and I'll note that it's just a single bridge – up to a number of the plants, it is quite concerning there. Whether you have to ride on a bus or you drive in a car or a rig, you're almost sometimes taking your life in your hands. You pass some of the markers there. You can see, certainly, that there were tragedies on the road, because the hard hat is there on the cross with the flowers and wreaths to pay respect. A number of deaths have occurred, and that's just from McMurray north. I'm not even talking about the 63 between Edmonton and McMurray.

That's a nice piece that was given within the Speech from the Throne. My only concern was: what and why has it taken so long? There are still a number of injuries and deaths that occur. Perhaps we can speed that up. We realize that that is a very, very busy road to the north, and we're continuing to ask for more investment. Without the needed investment in roads, how are you supposed to get up some of these big coke machines that do come up there, 580 tons that are driving on a road that I don't believe would have ever been built to withstand some of that tonnage?

The single bridge, that dual lane that does run over the river there separating McMurray and the rest of the oil sands, is a big concern. If that ever has an accident or is shut down, that's going to essentially bring everything to a grinding halt on there. It would certainly be nice to see an additional upgrade or another means to be able to get across the river, perhaps another expansion there.

The other thing in McMurray again is water. You have a town that's base was about 40,000, and I believe that's what the infrastructure and water needs and facility handling was able to accommodate. But now that the population there balloons anywhere from, you know, 50,000 to 75,000 depending on the time of the year, you're going to have that much more stress on the water conditions and on the facility itself. So, I mean, the concerns about the upgrades.

Door to door a lot of people talked about being neglected, about the total infrastructure. They'd like to see more facilities put in there for the kids to be able to get off the street. Drugs are a concern and if you're able to have them do something constructive. Some of these community facilities, a pool or just a gym or hockey arena, would be great, to be able to give them something like that, to have something for the kids to get off the street and do something constructive. That's something that all of the other municipalities –

I know that the big cities like Edmonton and Calgary have various, you know, community facilities where they have a pool and a hockey arena all adjoined into one centre. That would be something great for McMurray to have and to be able to enjoy.

Another trip I had taken – and I'll probably get applause from the Member for Lesser Slave Lake – was up to the town of Lesser Slave Lake. I talked to a number of MDs, surrounding areas, as well as the town council in there as well. They were concerned about the quality of water, potentially, from some of the runoff of the confined feedlot operations out on the outskirts and how that is going to actually impact them. They're worried about the increase and the need to upgrade their water facility. They're also worried about when we handed out the big rebate cheques, $1.4 billion. Now, that could have really offset a lot of these infrastructure needs, at least in some of the smaller towns and municipalities. Whether or not it resonated as well with as many people, that's debatable, but again that could have certainly gone a long way to offsetting a lot of the needs in some of the smaller rural communities, which are being pinched for infrastructure. Their main concern is affordable housing, let alone some of the specifics that I mentioned.

If we're going to go down, then, further, we'll talk about highway 2 between Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary. Some people talk about the facts about a high-speed rail link. The jury's still out on that. What we're concerned about is even the roads and upgrading with some of the bridges that are going along there. I mean, I have actually seen only a couple of patches on some of the highway between Red Deer and Calgary that have been upgraded and do look a lot better, but there is still a need to ensure that some of that road is maintained and is kept well driveable, especially in the winter conditions too.

Moving into the hometown that I reside in, Edmonton, some of the council's concern was with the ring road. It's on the track. It's on the radar scope, but we're hoping that it can be pushed a little bit further and a little bit faster. We had at one point the bridge concerns. Now, I'm not sure if those were actually ever addressed, that concern where they had the design or some specifications on the bridge. At one point there were engineers out there to look at some of the concerns that had previously been missed. But some of the councillors said that the ring road is certainly one of the priorities that they do want.

If not that the ring road can be completed, we can also look at some of the upgrades on the Yellowhead. That's getting awfully busy between the west and east of Edmonton, and the big trucks and the cars that are going along there are just spelling disaster in some cases. We could certainly use more overpasses to be able to alleviate some of the ongoing traffic concerns and the backlogs.

Another one would be, well, look at the Whitemud that they have. You have one accident on there, either direction, and it puts a stalemate on the entire traffic process depending on where it happens. It blocks it back for hours. Maybe we'll upgrade that or give them a little bit of relief to be able to put on upgrades. That would certainly be well received in that section of town as well.

The hospitals. Well, everywhere where the towns and municipalities are growing, they're looking for hospitals. Certainly, Edmonton is no different than McMurray or Calgary. Again, you know, we have got a growing population, and I think we'd be able to need to fit, for the concern is to have those hospitals in there. McMurray's main concern for the hospitals was that they can't even get some of these machines, such as MRI machines. They actually have to have some sponsors from the big oil and gas industry purchase these and put them in the hospitals, which is awfully sad if that's the case that is happening. It's more like: sponsor your spot. That should never happen. I think that's always the responsibility first and foremost of the government.

Hospital upgrades. Again, that's a huge concern, especially in Calgary, where some of the beds aren't going to be completed for another two years. The need is there. The need is now. In Edmonton we've had a couple of expansions, such as the east hospital and that addition to the Sturgeon hospital, but that still doesn't relieve some of the congestion and some of the backups that we do have within our own hospitals that are currently there, the Misericordia and the Royal Alexandra.

Going over to school buildings. Having sat as a trustee prior to this, the concern always was with the infrastructure and the ongoing backlog of the school buildings envelope there. I know that that's not necessarily part of this ministry, but at one point it was. This government is so sure that they've paid off the deficit. There is an underlying deficit here, and that's infrastructure. I don't know exactly what the number is. I'd estimate it between – what? – $7 billion and $10 billion of deferred work that's gone on for a number of years, that really wasn't addressed. It was kind of put on the back burner. Now we do have a huge concern. The other concern is the lack of labour and affordable costs. From what we once projected, the cost of building has skyrocketed from the delays and the increase in labour costs. Now, I'm not sure how you're going to address that one. It's just that, you know, when we've not addressed it to begin with, we're continuing to put it past, and it's going to continue to cost more and more.

Those are just a couple of the concerns, Mr. Minister and Mr. Chair, that I would raise as some of the specifics under this ministry. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. We all acknowledge that, in fact, Fort McMurray has a great need, with the rapid growth, the traffic that's up there, the activity that's going on, and certainly we are attempting to address it. I want to point out to the member, though, that, for example, the Fort McMurray municipality gets some $17.5 million from this department for infrastructure. Of course, there are other grants that come from other departments that they're getting. That's the municipality. That's not money that we're spending directly in those areas.

You commented on highway 63 and then: what else? Well, I'll just run through some of the what else. There's a lot more. We'll probably see more. The twinning of the highway south: of course, if you were up there more recently, you would have seen that that work has already started, and that will all happen. We will be twinning 63 north up to Fort MacKay. We'll be paving the rest of 881. We're building a new bridge across the Athabasca. You're right; that is a problem right now. If something should happen with that bridge, things would really get shut down, so there's a big need for that. Then along highways 63 and 881 seven truck staging areas will be completed. Those are pretty critical, particularly when you're moving that heavy, big equipment. They've got to have an area to get off the road so that traffic can continue to move. Then, of course, right within the city itself there will be intersection treatments, which will greatly improve the situation within the city.

You commented on the water situation. Truly, that is a big concern across the province. There are many places. There is no question that we need to really be focusing on clean drinking water for sure and, of course, proper treatment of the sewage and waste water.

You talked quite a bit about a lot of extra spending. Now, I always find it really interesting here. Just a moment ago we heard one member talking that when we dump all this money out, we're getting less value for our dollar, we're inflating things and all that, yet we hear that we should be doing more.

There's an interesting stat that I want to give you. In the budget this year, the capital plan, we will be spending about $1,300 per person. The average in all of the provinces across Canada is $400. We're spending $1,300; average in Canada is $400 per person. I'm pretty proud of what we're able to do. To accelerate it? Well, I know that it would be nice to have some more of those things right away, but the fact is, I think, that we have to get a balance here. We've got to be careful that we don't overheat the economy even more and get less value for our dollars. So we'll be looking at that.

The situation with the MRI. Tell me what's wrong with industry buying an MRI. I don't get it. I don't know what's wrong with that. The fact is that the government has got so many dollars to spend. If, in fact, industry is prepared to step up and pay for an MRI, that's great. That's wonderful. Then we can do more in another area or do more in Fort McMurray because of their huge demand.

I'm not going to get into a discussion about all the hospitals because that's more appropriate if you talk about that when the Minister of Health and Wellness has her budget before the committee.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The acting minister of infrastructure indicated that only ministers are permitted to use the government planes, which would prevent leadership candidates from flying. At the same time, you said – and I know this was the case last year as well – that in order to justify the use of the planes and not have a single individual travelling from A to B, you would like to have the planes utilized to justify the fuel, so you'd have many people on the plane. Now, we know that last year there were a number of nongovernmental ministers, particularly an individual by the name of Rod Love, who racked up a number of frequent flyer miles at taxpayer expense when he was not contracted or directly employed by the government. Is this a change in policy, that only ministers are permitted on the planes? If so, when was this change indicated? I'm not aware of it, and I think the ministers who are currently elected would like to know that. How will you prevent leadership contenders who are currently elected from riding on government planes at taxpayers' expense for their own self-promotion?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, I said that it's only a minister that can book the aircraft. Only a minister can book the aircraft, and there has to be a purpose for the aircraft.

You mentioned an individual. I don't know what the circumstances were. The fact is that there are times when nonelected people are on the aircraft. If they're doing some work for a department, they may ride on the aircraft if, in fact, they're doing some work for government somewhere.

The idea of one individual on the aircraft. If at all possible we avoid that situation, but that can't be avoided at all times. There are times when a minister has to be at a certain place at a certain time, and the only way that they can get there is with an aircraft. What we meant when we would prefer that they don't travel with just one passenger is if, for example, there is a minister going to Calgary, say, and he has to be there at 9 o'clock in the morning, and another one is going at 10, well, get together and go with just one aircraft. Those kinds of things.

I know from my own experience – it hasn't happened very often, but I can think of two or three occasions where I had to go and I didn't take my EA. That would have put two people on, but there was no need for the EA to come along. There were no staff coming, but I had to go. I had to meet with people. So it does occasionally happen, but we try to make sure that it's to a minimum.

You will see that there are times, particularly when there's a committee that has some people that are not MLAs on it, and, for example, they're going to hold a hearing somewhere, there may not even be a minister on, but a minister has got to be responsible for booking that aircraft. The minister that would be responsible to book the aircraft would be the minister that's in charge of that committee. So if there's an individual on a committee, a public member, yeah, they would ride on the aircraft. That's true. As far as I am concerned, there's been no change in the policy. I'm not aware of a change.

Will a candidate for the leadership be on one of our aircraft? Yes, but it won't be for campaign purposes. Yes, if they're still an MLA. If they're an MLA, they can't book an aircraft, but if the aircraft is going and they're going as an MLA, then they will be on the aircraft.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've just got a few items that I want to express. I guess what I want to talk about is highway 40 north. First of all, I want to compliment the department for their diligence to move forward and do the S-curves just south of Grande Cache and also for the help that they afforded us last year to do some upgrading on highway 40, especially the overlays.

I guess what I want to state and state strongly is that we have to look at moving more to put some passing lanes on highway 40 north for the simple reason of the amount of traffic that is going up there. Just to give you some idea, the town of Grande Cache has close to 4,000 people living there. This year we have in the neighbourhood of 3,500 people living in bush camps north and south of Grande Cache. Then the other thing is the resurgence of the oil and gas industry in that area. Prior to 1997 they used to just drill and cap. Now that we've got delivery through the pipeline system, it is really busy. Of course, last year they put in a pipeline for Syncrude. This year they're putting another 104 kilometres of pipeline in there. So it's really busy.

I guess the other thing: just north of Hinton, where we're utilizing the LOC of West Fraser, we have 4,000 vehicles a day on the LOC road. They're utilizing a lot of that because of the aspect of moving on highway 40 north. For hauling different aspects of dangerous goods, they can't use it as much. I guess what I'm looking at is if we can sort of move up and at least start doing some passing lanes there because when they're bringing in a compressor station or something, they have to block the traffic. They have to wait until they get to an area where there's a turnout. You know, we're getting a lot more people in that area. Of course, that area now is serving a lot of the Peace River country, and we have to move and look at some passing lanes.

I guess that I'd be remiss if I didn't talk about highway 47 south, that also goes into the old trunk road, and that goes into the hon. minister's riding. A number of years ago, when the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville was the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, we were able to develop a partnership, basically a P3, and build a bridge across the Brazeau River, which has served very well. But because of the large usage by oil companies, what's happening right now is it's affecting other industries, and they're utilizing the roads that are built in the forest management agreements. Their cycle times now are anywhere from 20 minutes to a half hour longer, so it's costing them a lot more. I know that we work on road-use agreements, but I still believe that we have to look at that.

As some of the members from the other side were talking about Fort McMurray, well, I don't want to disillusion them, but West Yellowhead is having the same problem, maybe not to the same magnitude, but in respect to what's transpiring there, it is the same magnitude. I'm just wondering if the minister can comment on the possibility of looking at a program where we're moving towards doing some upgrading and a plan so that when I go back to my riding, I can let my constituents know that we are going to be moving ahead on at least highway 40 north and also on highway 47 to the trunk road to his constituency in Rocky Mountain House.

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Thanks to the hon. member for those comments. I'm sorry, but I'm not up to speed on exactly what we have in store for highway 40 either north or south. I must inform the House that the plaque with the name of the Member for West Yellowhead on it on the bridge that was built across the Brazeau was planted on the side of the bridge that was in my constituency, so he got all the credit for it.

What is happening, Mr. Chair, is that there are deals being struck. One that I'm familiar with is in the Rocky constituency, and this agreement was struck about a year ago. The department is paying 50 per cent, and the municipality is taking the lead to gather up the other 50 per cent, and it looks like it's going to involve the First Nations, the municipality, and some forest companies.

Now, the member mentioned about the turnaround time, and this is really interesting. The one forest company that is really interested in participating did a study on what the benefit would be to them if that road was upgraded and paved, and I was quite surprised at the kind of numbers they came up with because of that turnaround time issue, and then, of course, you throw in with the turnaround time the safety of having those kinds of roads done. So I think there's a real possibility there to get into some of those bigger partnerships.

The bridge that the member referred to: the fact was that for any rig move across the Brazeau River it cost the companies at least $180,000 to get around that crossing because they had to go a long ways east, get across the river, and then come back west. I'm sure they've probably recovered their investment already because of all the activity that's in there. So I think that there are opportunities like that that we need to explore.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. More flight questions; it intrigues me about the possibilities. If a sitting minister supports a leadership candidate, can he or she simply say, "come fly with me," which is, basically, an end run? To what extent is the potential overuse or abuse of these planes going to be controlled?

One last comment. I know my hon. compatriot from Calgary-Currie would like to speak about Advanced Education concerns. I'd like to put in a plea as the hon. Member for Yellowhead put in. I'd like to put in a plug for the twinning of the bridge leading to Drayton Valley in the constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar, which, like Fort McMurray, sees the wealth go by rather than staying in the town. Please add that bridge to the list.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the member that there is an approval process with the aircraft, and we will be watching that very closely because I think it reflects on all MLAs if, in fact, there is abuse. We will be watching for abuse, and we will be watching very closely what exactly is happening.

On the issue of Drayton Valley, in fact, they are currently doing a traffic count on that issue. There is the possibility of lighting the bridge to assist in the wintertime. I don't know if the member has been across that particular bridge, but that can be a bit of a problem, just the configuration of it and the way it sits there. I do have to say that to twin it or even to just widen it will be a big undertaking because of the location and how it's situated. But it is on the radar screen, and they're doing some studying on it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I guess one point that I forgot to mention to the hon. minister goes back to the aspect of the resource roads. As you realize, we never seem to get enough dollars put into that funding.

I'm just wondering how we can work that because it works as a great partnership with the municipalities. With the Yellowhead county and, I know, more than likely with the MD of Greenview in my riding they have a lot of resource-based people that are working, and they're taking the goods out of the area; therefore, the direct cost is on the municipalities. I know one good example just east of Edson is Wolf Lake Road. That service is all down in the area into Drayton Valley-Calmar, even up into Rocky Mountain House. So I'm just wondering if we can work a little bit better partnership so that we can get more money in that funding. I know that a lot of times we work with the industries to try to get them to partner up, but they always say they're paying enough taxes. So I'm just wondering if we can really look at that issue because it's a safety issue. A lot of the forest industry is hauling out of those areas, taking fibre into Whitecourt-Ste. Anne too. So if you could give me a comment on that, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Mr. Lund: Well, I thank the Member for West Yellowhead for those comments. Certainly, that resource road program is a very important program as he commented, particularly in the timber. It happens in the oil industry as well, but in the timber the companies are harvesting the fibre in one municipality, using that municipality's roads to move it to their mill, but there are no taxes coming out of the area where they're doing the harvesting. So I think that his suggestion of increasing the resource road program and trying to leverage that money is probably a very good idea. I think we need to take another look at it, and I thank him very much for that suggestion.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe that I only have a few minutes, right? We end this at 5:15, so I'll be very, very quick here.

Just curious on the advanced education, postsecondary, front. If the minister could give me a sense of the sort of dollar value behind working with postsecondary institutions to provide the expertise that Alberta Infrastructure has on building a physical plant and various other things for our colleges and universities, which have in and of themselves a pretty substantial infrastructure deficit, as the minister knows. The infrastructure responsibility on one level seems to have been handed back to the Ministry of Advanced Education; on the other hand Infrastructure is still involved here. So if the minister could just very quickly give me sort of a dollar value that I can attach to that division, or sharing, of responsibilities, whatever it is, and perhaps a little bit of insight into Infrastructure's role and whether this will actually help speed construction of new capital projects in our advanced education system or whether it just kind of bureaucratizes the system.

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Thanks for those comments. The fact is that the dollars are all now housed in Advanced Education for postsecondary. Health has all of the health capital dollars; Advanced Education, all the postsecondary; K to 12 . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$2,593,312,000
Capital Investment	$1,089,590,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The newly appointed Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It has indeed been a very illuminating afternoon of debate, and on that note I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Infrastructure and Transportation: expense and equipment/inventory purchases,	$2,593,312,000;
capital investment,	$1,089,590,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and that we reconvene tonight at 8 in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 5, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/04/05

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Executive Council

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, I move the estimates for Executive Council.

Mr. Chairman and hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2006 to 2009 Executive Council budget estimates and, of course, the business plan. Programs under Executive Council include the office of the Premier, Executive Council, corporate internal audit services, and the Public Affairs Bureau. My remarks this evening will include a brief fiscal overview for 2006-2007, and then I'll provide some details on upcoming initiatives contained in the business plan.

Executive Council spending for 2006-2007 is forecast at $25.3 million, an increase of approximately $3 million over the 2005-2006 budget. The increase covers three areas: $1.4 million for salary adjustments and increases to pension plan contributions, and I would point out that all ministries across government are seeing the same increases; $1.4 million to implement recommendations of the Public Affairs Bureau review, which I will explain later, which includes adding a small number of FTEs; and some $200,000 for Executive Council to cover additional costs due to the expanded strategic planning work of the policy co-ordination office and for additional support to the Lieutenant Governor's office.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to offer an overview of Executive Council program areas and goals as outlined in the business plan. I'll begin with a brief summary of programs under Executive Council. They include administrative support to cabinet and cabinet committees, my offices here in the Legislature and in McDougall Centre in Calgary, the protocol office, administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor, the Alberta Order of Excellence Council, and the deputy minister's office, which includes support for policy co-ordination as well as business and strategic long-term planning for the government as a whole.

A key activity for Executive Council is co-ordinating the government's long-term strategic plan for the province and the government's three-year business plan. As I touched on earlier, part of the $200,000 in this year's budget for Executive Council will support the expanded role of the policy co-ordination office in co-ordinating efforts on those plans.

Now, Executive Council works to ensure that individual ministry strategies are co-ordinated and that all ministries are working collaboratively on government's priorities. For example, the policy co-ordination office supports government's work to achieve the four main strategic priorities. Those four priorities include building Alberta's infrastructure, building and educating Alberta's workforce, using and respecting the land, and of course improving the health care system. The office also works to identify and assess strategic long-term issues requiring a policy review, improve overall policy co-ordination across government, facilitate collaboration amongst ministries to achieve more integrated policy, and facilitate and monitor work on priority cross-ministry initiatives and related strategies. Government and Executive Council also work with private, public, and not-for-profit sector partners and individual Albertans to set and co-ordinate those strategic priorities for the long term.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to now touch briefly on the protocol office and the office of the Lieutenant Governor. As members of the committee will know, the protocol office is responsible for provincial government ceremonial events and visits from international dignitaries, senior dignitaries. This year protocol staff will co-ordinate numerous visits of international dignitaries to Alberta, including heads of state, foreign ministers, ambassadors, and consuls-general. The protocol office is also busy co-ordinating the May 2006 visit of Canada's new Governor General, Her Excellency the Right Hon. Michaëlle Jean.

In addition to co-ordinating these visits, the office also provides important protocol advice to government offices, community groups, the private sector, and individual Albertans who may have questions about protocol requirements for special events. One provincial government ceremonial event the protocol office is responsible for is the Speech from the Throne, delivered by Alberta's Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Normie Kwong. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to point out the exceptional role the Lieutenant Governor has played as the Queen's representative in Alberta. His first year as Lieutenant Governor was an incredibly important and busy one with the royal visit and hundreds of centennial celebrations across the province, and I think he did a wonderful job. The Lieutenant Governor keeps a very active public schedule, and a small increase has been budgeted to provide him with communications and writing support for his official duties around the province.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to now turn to another part of Executive Council, and that is corporate internal audit services. This past fiscal year included three important changes for the office of corporate internal audit services, with more changes planned for the coming year. The first change already in place is the appointment of a new chief internal auditor, Heather Zomar, who brings with her an extensive background in risk management. One of Heather's first objectives on the job was to address questions around the identity and the role of the internal audit within government, which brings me to the second important change. Early on Heather determined that one of the best ways to clarify the role her office plays in government was to change its name.

The new name, corporate internal audit services, was chosen to clearly differentiate between the three separate audit functions that take place in government. We all know about the office of the Auditor General, the department's specific auditing services, and, of course, corporate internal audit services. These three audit functions have been a source of confusion, not the least of which is a source of confusion for me. Most importantly, however, the new name was chosen to bring together two important aspects of the office: corporate, to signify that internal audit provides assistance to government as a whole; and services, to illustrate the servicelike nature of internal audit. The goal of this office is to advise departments on the types of systems and controls that should be in place so that taxpayers get maximum value for dollars spent while helping government managers and employees be more productive and effective in their jobs.

Effective use of taxpayers' dollars brings me to the third change within corporate internal audit services, and that is the transfer of some audit staff back to specific ministries. By nature ministries that provide front-line services and income supports to Albertans, ministries that have small amounts of money that are continuously moving in and out of the departments, require more internal auditing services. To accommodate this need and to ensure the most effective use of taxpayers' dollars, some audit staff have been moved back to certain ministries such as Seniors and Community Supports, which administers the persons with developmental disabilities program. Additional upcoming changes for corporate internal audit services include a stronger focus on risk-based auditing. This is an emergency and strategic audit methodology that will allow the office to focus on high-risk systems. Heather and her staff will be using a best practices review to help them develop a made-in-Alberta audit program designed to provide the most efficient and effective assistance for managers and employees.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to now touch on the business plan strategies for the Public Affairs Bureau. The bureau supports all eight of the government's three-year business plan priorities, and while the bureau's work is diverse, each communications program across government has a common goal of making sure that Albertans receive the information they need quickly and effectively. Recently the bureau underwent an internal review to make sure that that goal was being accomplished in the best possible way. The review was conducted by an MLA committee, or a committee headed by an MLA, the hon. Member for Calgary-West, and recommendations were presented to caucus last September.

The review identified the following overarching goals: to strengthen strategic communications, to enhance internal communications, and to better co-ordinate corporate services like the government of Alberta home page, advertising, and research. Of course, the driving force behind the review and the goal of the Public Affairs Bureau remains providing Albertans with high-quality, co-ordinated, and cost-effective communications.

As I mentioned earlier, this year's budget shows a change in expenses for the Public Affairs Bureau to support that goal. The additional dollars will help ensure that Albertans continue to receive high quality and co-ordinated communications from government. Albertans have told us that they want more communication about the government programs and services that matter the most to them. That budget increase will help make that happen.

In addition, the new FTEs in the budget will focus on the third goal of the review, and that is better co-ordination of corporate services like the government of Alberta home page, advertising, and research. I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the budget increase is to allow for better co-ordination of advertising that delivers important information to Albertans.

This year advertising campaigns co-ordinated by the bureau and funded by ministries across government will inform Albertans about a range of topics from social campaigns on crystal meth awareness and family violence prevention to information campaigns and programs such as farm safety and the Alberta lottery fund. Government has a duty to tell Albertans about its decisions and policies and about upcoming initiatives, so the additional dollars will help us to better co-ordinate in the quick and efficient delivery of information to Albertans and also allow the bureau to provide more strategic and targeted communications that address Albertans' priorities.

In an effort to strengthen the bureau's strategic communications, the business plan organizes upcoming communications activities into five strategic priority areas. The first strategic priority is to ensure that Albertans receive ongoing, effective, and meaningful information about government's long-term plans. Mr. Chairman, as I said before, Albertans have told us that they want more communication about the government programs and services that matter the most to them. That's why the plan includes increased co-ordination of information about key government programs and public opinion research to ensure that Albertans are receiving the information they require.

The bureau's staff in all ministries of government have a unique ability to not only communicate with Albertans but also to understand Albertans' perspectives on a large number of government programs. This allows government to incorporate those perspectives into our long-term plans and in turn communicate those plans back to Albertans. This is an important example of the bureau's role in two-way communications with Albertans.

The second strategic priority, communicating to Albertans about how government will manage the province's growth, is another key focus of the bureau's business plan. Mr. Chairman, by growth I'm referring to Alberta's booming economy, growing population and, of course, the challenges and opportunities that that growth represents. So upcoming plans to communicate about growth include informing Albertans on ways that government is improving the province's infrastructure and transportation systems, the creation of effective traffic safety programs to crack down on aggressive and careless drivers, and the development of an Alberta energy strategy to make Alberta a leader in the global market and to ensure the best return to Albertans as resource owners. The strategy also involves giving Albertans continuous updates on our province's fiscal situation.

The third strategic communications priority is building and educating tomorrow's workforce. Mr. Chairman, this priority includes investing in the people of Alberta and communicating to them the opportunities available to invest in themselves and their future. Bureau staff assigned to ministries across government will assist with a number of varied communication initiatives that fall under this priority. What they all have in common is a focus on training and educating Albertans, attracting and retaining skilled workers, and ultimately addressing Alberta's labour shortages.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to turn now to the bureau's fourth priority, and that is creating a dialogue on land use and the environment. This area of the plan involves continued communication with Albertans on our province's resource and environmental management, greenhouse gas reduction, and the Water for Life strategy. Albertans' quality of life depends on the wise management of our provincial resources, especially Alberta's water supply. Related communication initiatives will focus on enhancement to municipal water and waste-water treatment facilities, reducing the risk of liabilities from flooding, and testing and protecting Alberta's water supply. The bureau will also support government's plan to explore the use of surplus revenue to create a lasting legacy for the environment.

The bureau's fifth strategic priority is emergency communications. It is obviously my hope that a serious public emergency never occurs. However, the government has a fundamental obligation to be prepared should one occur, and detailed and co-ordinated emergency communications is an important part of that preparedness. Mr. Chairman, I can tell members that planning for emergency situations, such as pandemic flu, environmental incidents, and public security threats, is a top priority for government and for the bureau.

I'd like to now turn to the bureau's second core business and goal, which is making sure that Albertans have quick and easy access to government information. For many years the Service Alberta call centre and Alberta Queen's Printer served as front-line service points within the bureau. Members will note, however, that these areas are not mentioned in this year's business plan. As a result of the internal bureau review, the Service Alberta call centre and the Queen's Printer have been transferred to other ministries as of April 1.

Government Services already oversees the Service Alberta website and over-the-counter elements. It makes sense for the full program to function under that ministry. As a central service the Queen's Printer has moved to Restructuring and Government Efficiency, RAGE. Both services were a valuable part of the bureau, and I am confident that they will continue to be a valuable part of government. Of course, the bureau will continue to ensure an efficient flow of information to Service Alberta staff who deal with public inquiries on key government programs and announcements.

The bureau will also maintain other important services for Albertans to gain quick access to government information, and the bureau will continue to ensure that two-way communications vehicles are timely and efficient so that they provide Albertans with the best means of accessing government information.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my introductory comments. I welcome any member of the committee to ask any questions they may have about the 2006-2009 business plan and, of course, the estimates for this fiscal year.

Thank you.

The Chair: Before we proceed, may we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. Following this exhaustive introduction of estimates, it's my pleasure to introduce some of my favourite constituents from the community of Lorelei Beaumaris and, in particular, representing the Lorelei Pathfinders and Guides. Today with the Pathfinders and Guides are some leaders: Dawna Shirley, Angela Stringovits, Angie Amer, Jan Sutherland – and Jan is also the president of the Lorelei Beaumaris community league and a tireless worker in the community – John Dugdale, Elizabeth Story-Tiedemann, and Todd Dutchak. I would like them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciated the extensive comments from the Premier in introducing his budget for Executive Council. I think it's worth noting that this is, presumably, his last budget unless he pulls a sort of Pierre Trudeau and calls a snap election or something. I don't know. Anyways, I'm honoured to be here for this discussion.

I think it's worth setting out a contrasting sense of what Executive Council might be like and then comparing that to the budget. I couldn't help noticing today that Executive Council seems about to expand by another member in the cabinet, and I'm concerned, of course, about the growing size, the growing number of cabinet ministers. I think it will be at 24 now. It's a trend that I would like to see reversed and sent back, perhaps closer to 17 or so, when this government first came to power.

I'm also and have been for many years an attentive student of the Public Affairs Bureau, which I have described historically as kind of a secret weapon for this government and a very effective one. I recall the time when this Premier first took office and the changes that were made to bring the Public Affairs Bureau into reporting directly to the Premier's office. One of the effects of that was to politicize the Public Affairs Bureau in a way that it hadn't been historically, and I think that that's an unhealthy trend.

I've talked to former employees of the Public Affairs Bureau from times when other people were in the Premier's office, and they've shared with me, for example, accounts of being approached by cabinet ministers to prepare speeches and saying to the cabinet ministers, "You know, Mr. Minister, that's not the Public Affairs Bureau's job; that's the job of your political staff." Of course, that's completely changed now. The Public Affairs Bureau is a political servant of this government and, frankly, of the Premier. It provides enormous resources for the Premier's message to get out, which is fine, except it becomes very much a political message, even to the point, I'm quite confident, where staff with the Public Affairs Bureau draft questions and answers for use in question period, the infamous puffballs.

Mrs. McClellan: You're not serious.

Dr. Taft: I am serious, yes. The Deputy Premier is questioning my comments about the role of the Public Affairs Bureau. Certainly, it has been my experience in places like the Public Accounts Committee, sitting beside government officials, to watch them follow along line by line as they read off the question from a government member of that committee and then read off the answer from the Premier or other ministers. So I do know that the Public Affairs Bureau has a substantial role in those kinds of affairs.

I would like to see a return to the depoliticized version of the Public Affairs Bureau and a recognition that of course we're all politicians and we all need political communication staff but that that line needs to be drawn around those staff and separated from the public affairs agents who are working in the public service.

I'm also equally concerned, I guess, about the role of the internal audit committee, and I'll come to that in a minute. So I make those as some general comments.

I'm also concerned, of course, about the long-term growth of the spending of the Executive Council. As the Premier said, a 13 per cent increase this year, which I might note – I can't resist – is significantly higher than the increase in the department of health. I think that we need to make a serious effort at containing costs in all departments, including Executive Council, as we seem to in Health. So broad comments there.

Now, I will ask some questions of the Premier, and if he is inclined – and I think he usually is. I understand that he may not have the answers, but if you have the answers or reactions, you're welcome, of course, to make them, and I'll be very interested to hear them.

If we focus for a moment on the Public Affairs Bureau, the Premier went through four, as I recall, strategic priorities for the Public Affairs Bureau. Last year there were six. Two have been removed, and I would be curious to know why, if I've got the correct information here. One was to "ensure Albertans are aware of opportunities available to themselves and their families." The other, strategic priority 4 last year, was to "provide disadvantaged and vulnerable Albertans with information on available programs and supports." So I'm just curious, if I've got the correct information, why those changes were made.

Goal 1 this year for the Public Affairs Bureau is to "increase communications with Albertans" in priority areas, as the Premier said. I'm on page 173 of the business plan here. The goal says that Albertans "have a right to receive clear facts about the issues faced by the province so they can form their own opinions about how they want government to handle those issues." We are concerned about the approach of the Public Affairs Bureau to some government initiatives, such as the third way, in which internal communications documents that we've obtained and have made public have spelled it out that the government's communications plan, in the government's own words, is designed to, quote, shift public expectations. In other words, the communications efforts of this government, of the Public Affairs Bureau around the third way actually have been intended to shift public expectations so that they no longer see health care as an entitlement.

I find that when I read those internal documents and I contrast it to the public goal of the Public Affairs Bureau that speaks about providing information so that Albertans can form their own opinions, I think there's a real contrast there. Are we just providing objective, open information, or are we actually wanting to change and shift public expectations? So it's a difference between communications and propaganda, I guess, Mr. Chairman.

Any comments the Premier has on those would be most appreciated.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, in the preamble the hon. member alluded to the bureau being a political servant to the politicians. I don't see the bureau as that at all. As a matter of fact, just to set the record straight, I had to ask my communications director where the bureau was located. It's somewhere near where the Department of Environment is located. I'm not quite sure where the building is. I can tell you that except for the briefing prior to this estimates hearing, I had no communications whatsoever with the Public Affairs Bureau.

Mr. Chairman, there are five priorities, as I outlined, and one of the priorities is not there because it's already been achieved. That was the complete rewrite of the Alberta statutes, and that was a priority that was completed last year. In addition, the Queen's Printer and the Alberta Connects number have been transferred to other ministries.

The five strategic priorities are, one, to "ensure Albertans receive ongoing, effective and meaningful information about government's long-term plans." Mr. Chairman, as I said before, Albertans have told us that they want more communication about the government programs and services that matter the most to them. They want open, honest information, and that's why the plan includes increased co-ordination of information about key government programs and public opinion research, to ensure that Albertans are receiving the information they require.

Mr. Chairman, the second strategic priority is communicating to Albertans about how government will manage the province's growth. This, of course, is another key focus of the bureau's business plan, and it's extremely important that we communicate properly what we are doing to meet the challenges of that growth. As I pointed out in my speech, by growth I am referring to Alberta's booming economy and its fast-growing population and the challenges, of course, and the opportunities that that growth represents.

The third strategic communications priority is building and educating tomorrow's workforce, and this, of course, is consistent with Bill 1 last year, the Access to the Future Act. This priority includes investing in the people of Alberta and communicating the opportunities available to them to invest in themselves and their future.

The bureau's fourth strategic priority is creating a dialogue on land use and the environment: extremely important, especially as the minister now prepares a land-use strategy and the Minister of Environment works on the Water for Life strategy. This area of the plan involves continued communication with Albertans on our province's resource and environmental management, greenhouse gas reduction, and of course, as I mentioned, the Water for Life strategy, which is extremely important. As a matter of fact, it was mentioned in the media by Dr. David Schindler, a well-respected environmentalist and an expert on the use of water.

The fifth priority is the bureau's emphasis on emergency situations, and this is absolutely necessary. You know, I saw it in action when I travelled the province reviewing the damage from floods. I saw it in action at Pine Lake when I visited the tornado site. It's obviously my hope, as I said before, that a serious public emergency never occurs. However, government does have a responsibility and a fundamental obligation to be prepared and to communicate what all emergency authorities are doing should an emergency occur.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments from the Premier.

We can switch topics from my old favourite, the Public Affairs Bureau, to a new favourite, the internal audit committee and internal audit services, which the Premier briefly described in his opening comments. There are, as the Premier said, three audit functions. There are getting to be a lot of audit functions, and I can understand why he said that there's some confusion around that. I find it a bit confusing as well.

The vision of the corporate internal audit service is to "be recognized as delivering high quality internal audit services with objectivity and professionalism." That's their vision. That's great. The mission is to "provide objective and independent assurance and advisory services." Most members of the internal audit committee are, in fact, public servants, deputy ministers. The one external member of that committee is also the vice-president of finance for the PC Party, Mr. Gary Campbell.

I just have to ask: of all the people in Alberta, of all the people with expertise, why this one particular person? He may well be qualified, but he certainly isn't the only one who's qualified, and surely the government realizes that there's a tremendous appearance of conflict of interest or of an internal and unfair and even inappropriate relationship when you have the vice-president of finance of the PC Party sitting in on the internal audit committee of the government. There's a merging there, an overlap of politics and public service that I think needs to be reconsidered. In fact, I would rather just have it ended. When I read that the vision of the corporate internal audit services division is to be objective and independent and I see that kind of a relationship, it doesn't add up for me, so I really need the Premier to justify that. Frankly, again, if I were the Premier, that's the sort of relationship I would end. I'd hope this Premier will do the same thing.

There are quite a number of questions around internal audit services. Given that the office of the chief internal auditor is supposed to co-ordinate its work with the work of the Auditor General, which again the Premier referenced, and provide a basis for the Auditor General to rely on the work of the office of the chief internal auditor, it does get confusing. You've got the Auditor General and the chief internal auditor. What steps is the Premier taking? What safeguards are in place to ensure that the internal audit function of the chief internal auditor doesn't actually obstruct or in some way substitute for the more independent arm's-length work of the Auditor General? We've got the Auditor General working with the internal auditor when I'd rather the Auditor General was going straight to the department. That's a relationship that I think has a risk of becoming a control valve, an access limiter for the Auditor General.

Why does the internal audit charter say that the work of the internal auditor is to reduce the extent of external audit procedures when in fact what people want, I think, are more external audit procedures, more external arm's-length reviews of government, not less, especially not less done by a committee in which the vice-president of the PC Party sits? There is a really complicated and probably unhealthy web of relationships here.

Given the close functional relationships between the internal auditor and the Auditor General, I'm wondering if the Premier is aware of or if maybe somebody else is aware of any plans to reference the body, reference the office of the chief internal auditor in legislation in relation to the Auditor General. Perhaps there could be a formalization in legislation of the relationship so that we know what the limits and opportunities are here.

In the spirit of opening government accountability up to the public, I'm wondering if the Premier could table any recommendations, any at all, made by the internal audit committee or the chief internal auditor to deal with some of these problems. Frankly, in particular because the Premier spoke about risk and the special knowledge of the new chief internal auditor in risk management, has there been a risk assessment done of the persistent overspending across government departments year after year now for some years? Has there been a risk assessment done of the government's growing direct dependence on energy royalties? What are the risks that we face from sudden drops in the prices of oil and gas and, therefore, a direct hit to our royalties? Any risk assessments done by the office of the chief internal auditor on those areas would be much appreciated.

I've also got questions about the relationship between the office of the chief internal auditor and RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency, because the office of the chief internal auditor is responsible for improving the effectiveness, efficiency, and economy of government operations, including financial and nonfinancial matters, which sounds to me like the job of the Minister for Restructuring and Government Efficiency. How do these two connect? What's going on here? Maybe we can get rid of one or the other? Maybe we can. It wouldn't be a bad suggestion, in my view. I guess that if we're going to keep that overlap, which appears to be the case at least until the next election, why is the Deputy Minister of RAGE not on the internal audit committee? So there's a suggestion for the Minister of RAGE. Maybe that deputy minister, given the department's mandate, should be sitting on the internal audit committee.

There's a whack of questions there, and I don't know if the Premier is prepared at this point to respond to those or if he'd like to come back at a later time. I do also before I sit down – and I guess that'll be perhaps my last crack at it here – just have to raise a concern about the extent of the increase in the budget for Executive Council over the last few years. I think that if we go over the last three or four years, there's something like a 60 per cent increase. The Premier's office, in particular, has had a budget increase of 67 per cent since 2001-2002, and that's a tremendous increase, 67 per cent in five years. That's unsustainable. We hear that word so often in here. That is a rate of increase that is unsustainable. So some explanation for that and some sense of how we are going to stop this rapid growth in the budget of the Premier's office would be much appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, an increase related to millions of dollars doesn't relate to a 13 per cent increase on a $10 billion budget. If my math is right, a 13 per cent increase on $10 billion dollars is $1.3 billion dollars. That is a huge, huge amount. So when we compare apples, we should compare apples and not mix them with grapes, oranges, grapefruits, and other things.

Mr. Chairman, relative to Gary Campbell it was news to me that he's even on the internal audit committee. But the internal audit committee chair – and I don't know who that is – appoints people to provide external viewpoints as well as specialist business, financial, or audit expertise. This is in keeping with the internal audit committee charter. I can tell you something: Mr. Campbell has his ear to the ground. He is well known in the city of Edmonton and throughout the province and is a person who keeps his ear to the ground and finds out what is going on.

I would like to point out about the honorarium – Mr. Campbell is a lawyer, so obviously he can earn a lot more than $118 for up to four hours and $196 for a full day. I think that he can earn a lot more than that. It is, in fact, a volunteer job.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked about risk assessment on energy royalties, and what if there is a drop. That question I will take under advisement because I think that that is a reasonable question to answer. I don't know if the internal auditor or corporate services auditor has addressed that issue relative to risk management, but it indeed is a good question and deserves an answer.

On the issue of the internal audit committee it was a recommendation of the Auditor General. He recommended that we set up the internal audit unit. The Auditor General, Mr. Fred Dunn, reviews how the internal audit is carrying out its function. I'm sure that he will address the question of a political appointment, particularly as it relates to Mr. Campbell.

As I pointed out in my initial remarks, the internal audit services role is to advise management on processes and systems and controls. The purpose of the Ministry of RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency, is to look at the plethora of regulations, rules, policies, written and unwritten, and legislation that fills volumes and volumes and volumes and volumes and find out what is useful and what isn't useful. So really there is a distinct difference between the function of the internal audit services role and the role of the ministry. I can tell you that relative to the internal audit services an advisory committee, called the internal audit committee, of which Mr. Campbell is a member, also includes a number of deputy ministers and two external people, one of which is Mr. Campbell. I don't know who the other one is.

Mrs. McClellan: Jack Halpin.

Mr. Klein: Oh, Jack Halpin. Okay. Well, he's an FCA; I know that.

They review the work plan of the internal audit services, the corporate internal services, and make recommendations as to whether Heather Zomar is carrying out her functions and her duties.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm very pleased to be able to rise and debate the estimates of the Executive Council and the hon. Premier. I think one of the things that I'm going to regret about the hon. Premier is that we haven't had as much time to debate as I would have liked. I always enjoy engaging the Premier in the House.

I'd like to begin by asking about the increase in expenditures for Executive Council as a whole and, in particular, the expenditures for the Public Affairs Bureau. I know that he has dealt with this in part, but there has been an increase of about 16 per cent in Public Affairs. If that was a one-time thing, Mr. Chairman, I think we could appreciate that, you know, it's a fairly small number, and it isn't a problem. But it's been a fairly consistent aspect of budget, since I've been here, at least, that the Public Affairs Bureau tends to increase more, in a general sense, than other expenditures within the government. I see that the Public Affairs Bureau in this case has an increase in the number of personnel, of full-time equivalents in the department. This year's budget says that there are 109 employees in the past year, but when we go back and look at the last year's budget, it listed 133 employees in the Public Affairs Bureau.

One of the things that I find difficult to follow, Mr. Chairman, is just how people are apportioned to be on the books of the Public Affairs Bureau or performing similar functions in the line departments of government and how, you know, people do similar functions, how decisions are made, where they sit, and whether or not we could have some consolidated information on all the number of people performing those kinds of communications functions whether or not they're in the Public Affairs Bureau or assigned to some other departments in the government.

Mr. Chairman, the Premier has talked about the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in dealing with public emergencies, and he's mentioned a couple, including a visit to Pine Lake. There was another emergency more recently at Lake Wabamun in which it took the Public Affairs Bureau five full days to inform residents of the Lake Wabamun area that they may have been exposed to toxic chemicals. That was a serious lapse, so I wonder if the Premier can indicate if he's taken any action to make sure that that sort of thing doesn't happen again. I'm assuming that he wasn't satisfied with that kind of communication, but the Public Affairs Bureau's task is to ensure effective and timely communications with Albertans during public emergencies. I think that it would be reassuring for all of us and, in particular, people in Wabamun to know what the government has done to make sure that this kind of thing doesn't happen again.

The target for public satisfaction with government communication priority areas in the 2005-06 fiscal years was 65 per cent, but I'd be interested in knowing how the government plans to raise the public satisfaction by 10 per cent and how that's going to be done.

I would like to know with respect to international travel, maybe a question there, how the government makes decisions about expenditures to ensure that ministers travelling abroad can do so most efficiently. There was a minister who travelled to Hong Kong in December 2005 and expended $14,727 in travel expenses, but even if it was travelling first class, it would be less than half of that. So it means that at least $11,000 of that was for expenses other than air travel. I'm just wondering what criteria Executive Council uses or the Premier uses to control travel expenses when people are travelling abroad.

You know, I'm really interested in the whole question of how we control or what guidelines are set for expenditures. I know that the Premier has said, Mr. Chairman, that they want to bring the increase in health care expenditures down to the rate of inflation. This has clearly not been accomplished, not only in health but in other departments, including the Premier's own budget. I'm just wondering why health has been singled out and whether or not the government is going to try and apply the same yardstick to other expenditures. Health is clearly the largest expenditure of any department in the government, but it is certainly not the only one. Although Mr. Mazankowski predicted four or five years ago that expenditures would rise to 50 per cent of government program expenditures, they have, in fact, remained fairly static at 33, 34 per cent of total government program expenditures. So I'm just curious about how that objective was arrived at and why it's seemingly only being applied to Health and Wellness.

I'd be interested in the Premier's answers to those questions, Mr. Chairman, and I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To answer the last question first, again I would remind the hon. member that you can't relate my budget or the budgets of other ministries to the Department of Health and Wellness because we're talking about 10 billion – billion – dollars. That's a huge amount of money. I don't think that this room would be big enough to hold it if you had it all in loonies, 10 billion loonies. That is a huge amount of money, and we're talking about increases to that budget. We're talking about asks of 13 to 20 per cent and actual giving of 7 and a half per cent on average to that department. So that clearly is unsustainable.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked about the Wabamun issue. I'll deal with that first.

First of all, we did receive the report prepared by Eric Newell, who was asked to do an assessment of the whole situation. I can tell you that communications staff – that is, staff of the Public Affairs Bureau – were on the site immediately upon finding out. Well, within a half an hour or so. There were some issues that are still being sorted out on receiving information from the company, in other words the railway company, and communicating correctly that information. But our communications people were on the site immediately and were communicating the best possible information that they had at that particular time.

The expenditures. Now, I will certainly take this up with my chief of staff and caucus relative to the expenditures. But the reports relative to international trips: reports are filed on the website, including the expenditures, and these are all published and very open and very transparent. On that particular issue and on that particular trip, if the hon. member will provide me with the information, I certainly will check it out.

An Hon. Member: We also issue news releases in advance.

Mr. Klein: Yes. I'm just reminded that prior to any trip being taken, a press release goes out explaining the purpose of the trip and the estimated cost of the trip. The trip includes not only the minister's expenses and airfare but those of his staff and any officials that he takes along with him.

Now, relative to the Public Affairs Bureau the breakdown is as follows. There are 117 full-time employees in the Public Affairs Bureau. In strategic communications – strategic communications, I will stress – we have added five new full-time employees to implement the recommendations of the review committee headed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

I can tell the hon. member that communications staff are seconded to 23 departments to develop and implement communications plans and programs. Those in the department plan, co-ordinate, and execute cross-government communications activities. They co-ordinate government communications to and from Albertans for government initiatives and during public emergencies, and that has already been alluded to. They're responsible for co-ordinating government communications to and from Albertans on priority areas for government initiatives, and they're responsible for providing specialized writing and editing services to government. By writing and offering specialized editing services to government, I don't mean in a political sense but in an information sense.

Relative to corporate communication services there are 13 full-time employees, and that includes one new full-time employee to implement the review recommendations. Corporate communication services manages the government of Alberta website – that's very important – manages the Alberta Connects phone and e-mail system, provides advertising consultation and support to ministries, coordinates corporate advertising, and also distributes government news releases. That's under the corporate sector.

Under corporate services, as opposed to corporate communication services, there are 21 full-time employees, including two new full-time employees, to provide additional human resources and records management support to Executive Council, including the corporate internal audit service. Now, this corporate services section manages the human resource and financial needs, provides business plan and budget preparation, performance measurement co-ordination, annual report development, and record management and FOIP administration, and that is a huge, huge task. FOIP administration is huge, and thank God, for the opposition across the way, that they have those FOIP services. They provide information technology support and provide technical support for major government news conferences and announcements.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Today we're examining the budget estimates for Executive Council: the brain, if you will, of this government, where all decisions are made, i.e. cabinet, and where the sales job to market those decisions to the public is planned and communicated; that is to say, the Public Affairs Bureau. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, the leader of the opposition, has asked very good questions. Most of them were on my list of things to ask, so he, frankly, stole some of my thunder. But he is the leader and he can have that, absolutely. I will try to brief.

One thing I really cannot help but notice – and it was alluded to, Mr. Chairman, and I have personally said it before, last year when we discussed the previous year's budget – is that this government is bloated and is getting fatter. Immediately after the November 2004 election a whole new ministry was created, and ironically it was created to make government leaner and more efficient.

An Hon. Member: Which one was that?

Mr. Elsalhy: It was called Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

An Hon. Member: RAGE.

Mr. Elsalhy: RAGE, yes.

Only 16 months later, Mr. Chairman, and just this afternoon a new cabinet post was custom created, or tailor-made, to fit the hon. Member for Little Bow, who now joins cabinet as someone referred to as the Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How many Progressive Conservative MLAs does it take to keep this machine running? How big will cabinet get for all work to be done? Compare this again, as was mentioned, to the lean cabinet back in the early '90s, and you would notice immediately that there's something wrong with this picture today.

With a larger cabinet there are more employees on staff, bigger salaries, including this member now receiving more than what he was earning as just a private member, and a bigger severance package or transition allowance when he's no longer here and more capital spending. Oh, and get this, Mr. Chairman: this hon. member, or minister, now is going to be the minister in charge of capital planning. Well, I guess this is not good overall, but maybe the only positive thing would be for those infrastructure employees getting some overtime, you know, as they move four new cabinet ministers to their new, nicer office locations and the three ministers who left cabinet to pursue the Tory leadership adjust to their new, more humble surroundings.

Speaking of cabinet shuffles, the Liberal opposition members chose between them three MLAs from the government backbench to be promoted, but our picks were not selected, unfortunately. Well, you can't ask for everything. It would not be good. It would make too much sense.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, Executive Council did not lose any staff, nor did its budget shrink after transferring responsibility for Service Alberta to Government Services and the Queen's Printer to Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

I know we've spoken about RAGE before. I really think that what they're trying to do is add more work to this ministry because all of a sudden after SuperNet is finished, they only sell surplus and stuff like that. They're trying to find work for this ministry, and it's not justified.

An Hon. Member: Mo, you still haven't got it quite right.

Mr. Elsalhy: As a matter of fact, the Executive Council budget is growing, and 10 more full-time equivalents are going to be added.

Last year I talked about my concerns surrounding the Public Affairs Bureau, and I will not repeat them today, but I want to put on the record that they still exist, if not compounded and if not getting worse. The whole mandate and structure of this body must be re-evaluated. It has to be restored to a dialogue with citizens type structure compared to its current objectionable propaganda distribution role. It should be there to ask the public their opinion and to receive direction and feedback, not to steer public opinion or deliver spin.

The other thing I want to talk about tonight is finances. In this year's budget estimates the office of the Premier and Executive Council is asking us to vote $6.6 million, which is up 14.8 per cent from the 2005-06 forecast; similarly, $14.4 million for the Public Affairs Bureau, which is up 15.7 per cent since last year. Now, that's really a lot of money, Mr. Chairman.

I usually find it useful to compare Alberta to other jurisdictions in Canada to see how well or how poorly we measure against them. Typically I look at our neighbour to the west, British Columbia, and our neighbour to the east, Saskatchewan. I often include Ontario in my comparisons because people say that Alberta and Ontario, economically speaking, occupy the front seats in Canada. It is needless to say, of course, that B.C., Saskatchewan, and Ontario spend less on their equivalents of our Executive Council and mass propaganda machine than Alberta does.

To use just one example, I'll cite some numbers for reference. British Columbia's 2006 budget, which coincided with ours – they came within two weeks apart – lists operating expenses under their executive and support services, which includes their office of the Premier and the executive operations, at $6.9 million. I know that the very few of my esteemed colleagues across who are paying attention will comment immediately that this is more than the $6.6 million that our Premier is asking for. However, I have two points to clarify. First, this represents a reasonable increase in British Columbia of only 4.2 per cent over their 2005-06 forecast compared to Alberta's 14.8 per cent increase. Second, when you also look at their intergovernmental relations secretariat, which is something not even remotely resembling our mammoth Public Affairs Bureau, their 2006-07 estimate is only about $3 million. So, in effect, when you add those numbers, you add $6.6 million for the Executive Council plus $14 million for the Public Affairs Bureau. That's $20.6 million in Alberta versus $6.9 million plus $3 million, which is $9.9 million, in British Columbia.

Now, why are we comparing both jurisdictions? Because it's a province with a comparable population and a fairly similar scheme for how their finances are conducted. Where it differs is that B.C. is working on addressing its deficit and repaying its debt, so it is trying to be fiscally restrained, or conservative. On the other hand, you look at Alberta – debt free on the books, awash in nonrenewable resource revenues – and our government forgot the lessons learned from the past and is spending and growing like there is no tomorrow.

I know that some people would find this interesting, to say the least, that it's coming from the Liberals, who advocate or support program spending. However, the conclusion I'm starting to reach now, Mr. Chairman, is that we as the Alberta Liberals represent or occupy the political centre in this province. It's the whole idea of balance. It's really how you spend the huge amounts of money and on what: prioritizing, setting goals, setting targets, and respecting performance measures.

If this increase in money for the Executive Council or the increase for the Public Affairs Bureau was spent on schools or roads infrastructure or AISH or PDD recipients or a personal income tax cut or trying to strengthen our public health care system or eliminating the need for schools to charge fees for basic instructional services, things like that, then you would not get any criticism from this side. However, in less than 13 years, as I mentioned, you have added seven ministries, and you are now creating associate ministries. The size is growing, and the operational costs are ballooning. We definitely have issues there.

My esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Riverview also mentioned the corporate internal audit services. I appreciate the explanation given by the Premier, but I disagree with the direction to rename it to a corporate audit because I think that the term "corporate" further removes this department away from the public eye, and it doesn't in my humble opinion contribute to transparency and accountability. It was also mentioned that the line is being blurred between the Progressive Conservative Party as a party, as a political structure, and government in general. It was quoted that the vice-president of finance for the PC Party is also sitting as an independent member on this internal audit committee.

I have another example, which might not necessarily be under the immediate responsibility of Executive Council and the Premier, but again as the head of the government he would be interested to find out. Another example would be the manager of government services at the Workers' Compensation Board. He also happens to be the vice-president of communications of the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta. You know, if we're trying to eliminate even the remote appearance of conflict of interest or if we're trying to really draw the line between what is partisan and what is government – government is here to serve everybody – then I urge the Premier to be looking at things like this, you know, to clean up government and avoid that even remote appearance of conflict of interest.

Most of the other questions I had were already asked and answered. I appreciate my chance, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for your indulgence.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll try and answer as many questions as I possibly can.

Relative to the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency I explained that this department will focus on going through the massive amount of regulations, legislation, policy initiatives that have been developed over the past God knows how many years to determine what is relevant today and what isn't relevant. I think that overall and over a period of time we will achieve efficiency in government, and we will achieve effective restructuring.

Relative to tomorrow's announcement of a new associate minister I would remind the hon. member that we have received in terms of infrastructure spending something in the neighbourhood of $13 billion.

Mrs. McClellan: Thirteen and a half.

Mr. Klein: Thirteen and a half billion dollars. We need someone to keep that in line. Mr. Chairman, I would remind this Legislature that most of the spending requests, at least suggestions for spending, come from the opposition. Relative to infrastructure we need someone to really do some capital planning because there has to be some rationale to road systems, to schools, to hospitals. We need to do this.

Relative to the comparisons that the hon. member alluded to between B.C. and Saskatchewan, I don't think that you can compare because I don't know what Executive Council is responsible for. In other words, the hon. member mentioned that they have $6 million in British Columbia assigned to Executive Council, that could include the Premier's office. If it includes just the Premier's office, it would be very, very low. I have a chief of staff, who has an administrative assistant. There's the deputy chief of staff, the director of scheduling. I have two administrative assistants, a receptionist. Then there is an executive assistant to the Government House Leader, David Gillies, and an assistant to the executive assistant to the Government House Leader, Michelle Zolner.

Then we don't know if B.C. or Saskatchewan has a correspondence unit attached to it. This is under my budget. The correspondence unit includes eight staff, and believe me, they are busy. I don't count my mail; I weigh the mail. You know, I say, "Well, what is it today?" "It's 30 pounds." We have a manager of the correspondence unit. We have seven correspondence writers. We have all of the Public Affairs Bureau attached to my department. I have my own communications staff. That includes the director of communications, who's sitting in the gallery, the media relations manager, the communications manager, and the communications officer.

We have the Calgary office. I don't know if he includes the Vancouver office as well as the Victoria office. There's an executive director, a secretary, a receptionist, the building co-ordinator, and a communications manager.

Then there is Executive Council itself, which includes a deputy minister, a secretary, an executive director of policy co-ordination. That position is vacant right now. There's an issues manager, policy manager, policy manager, planning manager, administrative assistant, administrative assistant, deputy secretary to cabinet, co-ordination officer, cabinet policy co-ordinator, cabinet policy co-ordinator, co-ordination officer, co-ordination officer.

Then in protocol, which is also assigned to Executive Council – and I don't know if it happens in B.C. or Saskatchewan – there is the chief of protocol, the secretary, the deputy chief of protocol, the protocol officer, director of Government House, the associate director of Government House. I don't know if that's assigned to the Executive Council in B.C.

Then there is the office of the Lieutenant Governor, and all the expenses associated with the office of the Lieutenant Governor are charged to Executive Council. So I don't know.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, here's an answer. B.C. moved their Public Affairs Bureau.

Mr. Klein: Oh, I see. I have this note here, where B.C. moved its Public Affairs Bureau to its Department of Finance.

I am advised that we have compared our Executive Council costs to other provinces in the past, and our size of budgets are similar in range. That's the advice I get.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I've just got a couple of questions with regard to finance then. Specifically, one would have been: why does the office of the Premier get a 12.6 per cent increase, and could this money that the increase equates to, which is about $750,000, be better spent on funding school nutritional programs or with the drug awareness/resistance education? I know that the drug program, the task force that the Premier's wife is in charge of, certainly could use money like this, and it would offset perhaps the ongoing experimental use by the kids. Have it in junior high and reinforce it in high school. They're just not getting the message yet, and I think that money could be better spent putting it into drug programs.

Another one: it looks like the Lieutenant Governor's office is getting an increase of about $100,000. This is after the centennial budget. I'm not sure if there is an explanation for that particular piece.

We've talked a little bit about the Public Affairs Bureau getting a 15.7 per cent increase to its budget year. This is a staff that many are complaining about, that is overabundant in use. It's far larger than that of the White House in the United States. We're wondering if the increase is for the advertisement of, perhaps, the push of the third way still. How can the Premier ensure that the money or the resources don't indirectly provide leadership candidates with potential free advertising on the public dime? The other point is: within the Public Affairs Bureau is the corporate communication service getting an increase of about 30 per cent?

My last piece there, Mr. Chairman, would be with recommendations for the Auditor General. We can empower the Auditor General to have the same far-reaching powers as that of the federal, of Sheila Fraser, because quite frankly right now the Auditor General does not have the power and ability to do overarching audits and concerning internal audits that we would like to see. We'd like to see him with a little bit more power. That would obviously give a little bit more credibility to the position.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Does the hon. the Premier wish to respond?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Chairman, I don't think that there is a computer large enough to compute what percentage of our total budget is $750,000. I think it must be one one-hundredth of 1 per cent. I'm certain that, you know, a program could do with that money, but there is sufficient money to address nutrition programs.

There is sufficient money to address drug-use prevention programs. There is a huge amount of money being spent on programs, about $28.3 billion – $28.3 billion – and the hon. member is talking about $750,000. It's a lot of money to me, it's a lot of money to everyone here, and it's a lot of money to the hon. member, but in the scheme of things, as I say, it would hardly compute. You would need a very, very large computer to figure it out. I don't know if anyone is figuring it out here.

An Hon. Member: Working on it.

Mr. Klein: They're working on it. Yeah, right. A lot of teachers in caucus and a lot of teachers over there, and still it takes a lot of figuring out to make the computation.

What was the other question? I don't know what question was asked, Mr. Chairman, but I did comment on the comment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It almost seemed like we're on a merry-go-round here and it's going faster and faster. We're going to end up falling off.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Hinman: Question? Can't you guys come up with something new? [interjections] It's only once a week. Think of something new. [interjections] Start watching.

The Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has the floor.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get up and to address the budget of the Executive Council. I guess I'll have to start off with: I must say that I'm a little bit alarmed at the number of times the Premier has gotten up and said that this is a minuscule amount. I was always taught that if you don't look after the pennies, you'll never be able to look after the dollars. I'm concerned with the discussion going on so far regarding that.

I guess I'd like to go to page 173, where it says, "Increase communications with Albertans in the areas they identify as top priorities" and to reread, "They also have a right to receive clear facts about the issues faced by the province" and "clear and timely communications" from this government. Many good points have already been brought up, but the dilemma that I am constantly asked is: what are their real plans? What are they doing with health care? We would really appreciate a more forthright government that would say that these are exactly what we are doing, not just that doctors can work in and out of the system and that they're going to have private insurance. How are those things going to be implemented? We could have a real discussion on that.

Also, when it comes to the Public Affairs Bureau, the vision there: "The Public Affairs Bureau will be a centre of communications excellence and one of Albertans' preferred choices for news and information about their government's policies, programs and services." I must say that the programs, the policies, and even the ministries are changing at such a fast pace that it's very difficult for Albertans – seniors, PDD people, caregivers, anybody – who wonder, "Where do we apply, and how do we find out what programs are there?" It isn't clear. I'm hoping that with the extra staff and the things that they're bringing forward they can make it clearer and more simple for Albertans to find what they need. Even municipal governments making applications for their different policies and programs are finding it very difficult to track down the ministry and where it is. Infrastructure and Transportation has now been split again, and the schooling is taking over the infrastructure there. There's this constant change, and it's a major concern.

I also have to comment on the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency and the fact that we're following B.C. and their example, but I don't think they created a whole ministry in order to reduce their red tape and the plethora of regulations which they had. It just seems that we've gone full circle here.

I appreciated the Premier when he came in and said that we need to restructure government, we need to reduce the size, and we need to be more efficient. I feel that we need to go back to that instead of expanding to 24, 24 and a half, or 25 ministries, however we want to count them. Very alarming to the people of Alberta, I believe, the growth of this government. The Premier has mentioned many times that, "Well, you know, 13 per cent or 22 per cent in Executive Council doesn't really count," but it's the discipline on whether we're going to continue. When the Premier came in, that was very much his goal: we're going to cut; we're going to hold; we're going to be restrained.

He made the comment a few weeks ago which proved to be so true, "It's much harder to manage when we have money than when we don't." I think we need to take a couple of steps back and say: "You know, we need to tighten the belt. We need to put away in this time of plenty." They've mentioned many times that we need to be conservative when we look for the income and the revenue from our oil and gas because that could change drastically very quickly, and we need to be prepared for that. What we've currently got isn't sustainable with a slight drop in the price of those commodities.

I guess the other thing I'd like to address is number 3 under the strategic priorities, building and educating tomorrow's workforce. I appreciate the ideas and that we're working with Advanced Education and labour supply and the apprentice and skills programs, but I'm concerned. Many times we talk about early education. I'll go back a few years. In my high school years I had the opportunity to try welding, drafting, woodworking, plastic, pottery, glazing, auto mechanics, assistant teaching . . . [interjection] I did a lot and had that opportunity. Absolutely.

What I would like to see is to go back to that. We have kids that, by the time they reach grade 9 and grade 10, are no longer interested in academics. Our schools are being reduced, and if we want to put money anywhere, we need to increase the trades. We need to increase the industrial arts in many of these schools and catch them earlier, so when they leave high school, they've tried several things. Whether it's electronics, whether it's mechanics, whether it's woodworking, they have an opportunity to engage. We get them going in extracurricular sports, and we get them going in the arts, but we need to get them going in the trades industry.

I'd like Executive Council to consider bringing that into the high school level because that's where the kids drop out. If they've had the opportunity to try several areas, I think that that would be a great benefit to the youth of this province, to be able to keep them engaged and find something exciting that they like.

I guess I'd like to close and thank the Premier for his comments. When he was asked a few days ago if he had any, I guess, instructions for the next leader, he said, "Well, whatever you do, keep a balanced budget, and don't go into debt." I hope that we would remember this currently and realize that now is the opportunity to protect ourselves from doing that.

The Premier put in legislation years ago that all surpluses would have to go to paying down the debt. I would very much like to see

Executive Council take the step now that all surplus would go, perhaps, 50 per cent to savings and 50 per cent to a tax refund, and then there is no fighting over what to do with the surplus. It's already legislated. We know where it's going. If we had a $5.8 billion surplus, half could go into the heritage trust fund; half could go back to refund the flat tax. Of $5.8 billion it would be $2.8 billion or a little bit more. Albertans could in fact enjoy that, and we wouldn't be having this dilemma and this fight over where to put the surplus every time, which seems to be a major problem.

With that, I'll sit down. Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Chairman, there are all kinds of suggestions, including those from the opposition, as to what we should do with the surplus. Thank God we have a surplus instead of a deficit.

A number of points were raised by the hon. member, and I'd like to reply to those points. First of all, I didn't say that $750,000 is minuscule. I did say that it's a lot of money to all of us, including members of the opposition, but in terms of this year's $28 billion budget, you would need a computer as large as this room to compute what percentage of the total budget that is. That is what I said. Apparently, the computers that we have here won't calculate that many front zeros. It's one one-thousandth or less of 1 per cent. But it's still a lot of money.

I would like to say something, if I may, about this government because it was raised. It was raised in the context of not looking after our house, and indeed we have looked after the house very well. I would remind the hon. member that when I came to office, there were in excess of 30,000 public service employees. Now there are 22,927 – 22,927 – who work directly for government. We have no control over what the regional health authorities or the school boards hire in terms of teachers and medical caregivers and so on. But those who work for the government directly: 22,927, down from 30,000.

I can tell you relative to the welfare rolls that they have not grown. We have still half as many people receiving welfare payments as there were in 1991 – half as many people receiving welfare.

Relative to ministerial responsibility. First of all, I mentioned that we have had something like $13.5 billion in requests for capital spending, and we need to get a handle on that. But as the opposition, including the Alliance opposition and the ND opposition and the Liberal opposition, so often point out, the buck stops here. The one thing I have learned in my 25 or 26 years in politics is that the buck does stop here. If a public service employee, no matter how senior, screws up, the buck stops here. So if we are going to have ministers to take the blame, you might as well have the ministers. Indeed, we're only adding one more minister, and that is an associate minister to look after a very serious situation in a very significant department. That is the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, where the requests, as I have mentioned, have exceeded $13 billion.

The hon. member makes some interesting comments relative to building and educating Alberta's workforce, and on this point I have to agree with him.

Mrs. McClellan: Whoops.

Mr. Klein: The hon. Provincial Treasurer said "whoops," but I do have to agree with him.

Not so long ago, less than a week ago, I had a meeting with the Canadian Home Builders' Association. They raised this very point that high schools – and I'll address this to the Minister of Education because it will be addressed to him if it hasn't already been – are not concentrating on shop programs like electronics and woodworking and welding and so on, and they ought to be.

Now, the Canadian Home Builders' Association have provided – and I have sent it to our Minister of Human Resources and Employment – a tool box. This tool box doesn't contain tools; it contains a lot of information, and I'm sure that the hon. minister will share it with the Minister of Education. It contains a lot of information on how a young person can pursue a trade as opposed to going to university or a college, how that person can pursue a trade. Believe me, I was telling the story of an individual in our caucus who was a welder by profession and could make as a welder about 10 times the salary that he's making right now or that he will be making. He said: "If you were a welder, I would hire you tomorrow. Well, I'd hire you right now. I'd hire you yesterday."

The Home Builders' Association is working very hard to first of all encourage high schools to reinstitute shop programs and, secondly, to have young people pursue trades. I'm advised by the Minister of Education that he will address these issues in his first-ever high school completion symposium this fall. Perhaps the hon. minister can attend, and this, by the way, was mentioned in the throne speech.

So on that point I agree with the hon. member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to thank Mr. Premier and all his staff, who worked so hard to prepare this budget. This ministry of Executive Council consists of three or four major departments: the office of the Premier, corporate internal audit services, Public Affairs Bureau, and the latest that the Premier just added, the land-use strategy. I will touch on a couple of them because I don't think I have enough time.

Despite losing responsibility for both the Service Alberta call centre and Queen's Printer, the overall Executive Council budget is increasing 13.5 per cent, estimates page 180. The budget for the Premier's office has increased 67 per cent since the year 2001.

I have a few questions for the office of the Premier. Why was the responsibility for the Service Alberta call centre and the Queen's Printer moved to Government Services and RAGE, respectively? Why, given the shift of these areas, is there no ability to reduce the budget for Executive Council? Why is there an increase in overall staff of 10 full-time employees? That is also on page 187. With the reduction in areas of responsibility shouldn't this go down? What specific positions are being filled by the PAB's eight new full-time employees? What specific positions are being filled by corporate internal audit services' two new full-time employees? How will anyone know whether they are necessary, useful positions that provide value to Albertans?

The annual report for Executive Council in the year 2004-05 reports that the total compensation for a number of senior positions increased dramatically. Is it safe to assume that the chief internal auditor increase from 131K to 184K is simply due to a person holding the position for the full fiscal year, or is there something else here? Why did the executive director of corporate communications get an increase of nearly 30K, now totalling 143K, between fiscal years ending 2004 and 2005?

The Public Affairs Bureau is supposed to be nonpartisan, but I'm sorry to say that the government is the only one who uses the money from this department. I think that if it's nonpartisan, if there is a priority sometime, they should give money to the opposition to use, money for advertising, especially now that the third way is coming. At least they should have the say to advertise their points of view in the media.

The structure and function of the Public Affairs Bureau has recently been reviewed. When can we expect to hear of the outcomes of this review? Mr. Chairman, will the Premier relinquish control over the PAB and return the communications professionals to their departments, where they can truly serve Albertans in a nonpartisan, professional way? Is moving the Service Alberta call centre out of the PAB part of this review? Does it mean that the PAB is even less about two-way communication and dialogue, as is claimed, and even more about one-way spin?

The PAB's strategic priorities have all changed in this year's business plan. Last year's plan included two priorities that would seem to be worth mentioning. Number 2 was to "ensure Albertans are aware of opportunities available to themselves and their families." Number 4 was: "provide disadvantaged and vulnerable Albertans with information on available programs and supports." Will the Premier agree to make such information public in the name of goal 2? I saw it on the government's website: making government information more accessible.

Another one that I want to talk about is strategy 1.3, the communications strategy about building and educating Alberta's labour force. We were in Fort McMurray last week and discussed with some stakeholders. We should give some priorities to the people living in Fort Mac because they are the people giving us most of the money, and in return they're not getting enough. I suggest, Mr. Premier, to make a note of this one.

Strategy 1.2 is centred on ensuring "Albertans and all relevant stakeholders are informed of government's efforts to manage growth and prosperity." When we talk about prosperity – I mean, all Albertans work so hard. They have sacrificed in the last 10, 15 years, so everybody deserves part of the prosperity. I know that Mr. Premier has already helped the AISH and some other departments, but there are still low-income people that are suffering, and the gap between rich and poor is widening. I ask him to make a note of this. If possible we should give them priority and help them out as much as we can because they have sacrificed a lot, and they deserve this.

The next one is the internal audit services. I think we should give some more powers to the internal audit services department like we have in Ottawa, the federal government, like Sheila Fraser. In Alberta every time we see the Auditor General's report, most of the recommendations are suggestions. I'm not criticizing him. I'm not the authority. I'm just suggesting, Mr. Premier, that he can look into it and be a little bit more strict in the future and make sure that if the Auditor General finds something suspicious, they should point it out a little bit more strictly, like Sheila Fraser did in Ottawa. I'm sure that they will find lots of things happening here in . . .

Mr. R. Miller: Do you think they might find some skeletons?

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, you may say skeletons, but I don't say it's skeletons.

Definitely, I'm in favour of giving some more powers to the Auditor General so that they can investigate properly. I saw an investigation of the Applewood community in Calgary. That was Community Development. I'm not sure whether they returned that money to the government. There should be a process where the minister or the Premier should have some authority. We should be very strict on that.

I know that I'm running out of time. I once again thank the Premier and the staff for working hard. If he can answer my questions tonight, that would be appreciated. If not, he can always respond in writing as soon as possible.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you. I'll try and cover as much ground as I possibly can, Mr. Chairman. In the overall budget $1.4 million is for salaries. There's no reason why any of the staff connected to Executive Council should be treated any less than any other employee of the provincial government. Now, that's $1.4 million. The Liberal opposition would be the first to complain if I treated my staff differently than any other employee. They would be the first to complain.

The only extraordinary expenditure was the result of a review of the Public Affairs Bureau, which resulted in a $1.4 million expenditure for more staff. I'd like to comment just a bit on the review. The PAB review committee, as I mentioned, was headed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West. They recommended to increase the corporate and strategic communications focus of the bureau. This was no different than any other internal government review, and the changes amount to a minor tune-up for the bureau. A minor tune-up. The people interviewed as part of the review did so with the expectation that their comments would not be made public, and the committee's recommendations were provided for internal purposes only. The interviews were conducted in person or over the phone, and no minutes of committee meetings were kept. Since this was an internal government process – an internal government process – and since the findings were prepared for Executive Council management's information only, we won't be releasing the committee's report or the government's response other than what is contained in the budget, and that is a direct result of the review.

The Auditor General, I would remind the hon. member, is an officer of the Legislature and is fully accountable to the Legislature. But I can tell you, notwithstanding Sheila Fraser, the federal Auditor General, that Mr. Dunn does a thorough job as an officer of the Legislature. When he submits his reports on any government – what is the proper word? – department or any government deficiencies or functions within a department, he makes recommendations to correct those deficiencies, and we act on all those recommendations. If we don't act on those recommendations, then the Auditor General is required by legislation to do a qualified audit of the particular department or situation to find out why we didn't accept the recommendation. So it's all open. It's transparent. He is accountable to the Legislature, and believe me, we either have to accept his recommendations or submit ourselves to a qualified audit, which is much more severe than the original audit. So the Auditor General is very valuable to the government in making sure that we remain efficient, accountable, and responsible.

I'm just trying to think of what other questions he asked. Oh, I'm sorry. Mr. Chairman, the executive director of communications and the salary increase: I'm not sure to whom he refers, but I will try and read Hansard and review the situation.

I thank the hon. members opposite and all my colleagues for their kind attention this evening. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of pleasure that I have this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the grade 6 class from the Bentley elementary school in my constituency. I have to apologize to them that because of the turmoil in the building today I wasn't able to spend much time with them. They're in the members' gallery along with their teachers and group leaders Mr. Mervyn Leidl, Ms Diane Scarlett, and Mrs. Wendy Friesen. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 24 guests here today from the Kneehill Christian school in my riding, which is just outside the industrious village of Linden. There are 24 guests, made up of students and teachers and their helpers. In addition to the students, we have Miss Terri Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Les Klassen, Mr. Bert Boese, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Baerg, and Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Toews. I'm not sure which gallery they're in. There they are in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise and introduce some special young guests from my constituency. We have with us this afternoon students from the Evansview school in Evansburg along with their parents and teacher helpers. I had the pleasure of joining this very bright, young group of Albertans for a photo this afternoon. I'd ask my guests now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour today for me to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly three very special guests: Brendalee Loveseth, who's a legislative assistant; Mrs. Lois McLeod, who's been my constituency assistant from Little Bow for 14 years; and my wife of – holy cow, Mary – 36 years. Would you please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure again today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of bright, young kids from the Clive school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Robert MacKinnon, and I believe this is his 17th or 18th trip down here to the Legislature with children from the Clive school. With him are parent helpers Mr. Vince Landry, Mrs. Hanne Giles, Mr. Abe Klassen, Mrs. Paula Law, Mrs. Carol Law, Mrs. Rachel Stahl, Mrs. Kathy Walker, and in addition to these helpers there's always the bus driver, Mr. Robert Smith. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five visitors from the Edmonton Seniors Centre who are joining us in the public gallery. I'd ask them to please rise. We have Mrs. Joyce Cwyk, Ms Hilda Doyle, Ms Elizabeth Doktor, Ms Thresa Ramsay, and Ms Evelyn Morrison. They are standing now. I'd ask you to please give them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of students from my constituency of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Visiting us today from Innisfail is a bright group of 46 students in grade 6 from the Innisfail middle school along with their teachers, Judy Bourne and Mary Schatz. Within that group I would also like to give a special welcome to parent helpers Trevor Lawrence, Tina Reid, Michelle den Dekker, Eva Looker, and Mike Wilkie. I think they won't be in until later, but I wanted to give them a great welcome anyway.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of mismanagement and inaction by this government the Peace Country health region and, in particular, the Queen Elizabeth II hospital in Grande Prairie is facing a crisis. They're short 75 health professionals, which is affecting core hospital services, including medical units, surgery, orthopaedics, psychiatry, the emergency ward, and long-term care. This government's disregard for rural Albertans has become so apparent that even the government's hand-picked chairman of the Peace Country health authority says that he is receiving only nominal response to the very real crisis he's facing. To the minister of health: what action is the minister taking to end this crisis immediately?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Health and Wellness has been in close communication with the people in the regional health authority of Peace Country. We recognize that there is a crisis there where people are not having the support that they would wish to have. I responded to it somewhat yesterday in a previous question relative to some of the shortage of physicians and the health care professionals. We are looking at a relationship with another health authority to in fact second on a temporary basis some professionals there to bridge the gap so that the Peace Country health authority can function as fully as possible to assure patient safety.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that this crisis, as the minister confirms, has been developing for years, can the minister explain how this government failed to prevent this crisis from developing?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member opposite would like to believe that this is something that's been going on for years, it is, in fact, a function of a number of things: workforce, yes, but also some very unfortunate situations that are best discussed in a private situation when you're talking with human resource personnel. We do not in this House discuss why a member of any staff left. If there are personal reasons, we honour that. So there are a number of people that have had other options, other relocations for personal and private reasons.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, it's a challenge, and I guess the good news about the Alberta economy is that it's robust, that it's attracting a number of people, and it's put a lot of pressure on the infrastructure both in Northern Lights and Peace Country. We're doing our best to provide recruitment for those situations. It is not a statement about any lack of due diligence relative to rural Alberta. One more fact: since 2004 we've had a 3 per cent increase in physicians in rural Alberta, which is significant.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when will this minister recognize what the chairman of the Peace Country health authority recognizes and what a number of Tory leadership candidates have already recognized as well, that the third way must be dropped?

1:40

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have to believe that there isn't a member of this House that doesn't want us to proceed with the many policies in that document of the health policy framework that say that we are working towards access and sustainability. There have been one or two policies that, admittedly, have actually been confrontational, obviously, to the opposition, that have been queried, not slammed but have been queried, by people who have asked for more detail. I think that rather than throw the whole thing out, as I hear on the other side that they would like us to do, we should actually keep trying to advance towards sustainability, accessibility, and at all times doing what we can to support a strong public health care system.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Cabinet Appointments

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier loosened another notch in the government belt to further extend an already bloated cabinet. The creation of yet another minister position brings the total now to an unbelievable 25, almost half of the members of the caucus. Ironically this comes just a year after the creation of another cabinet spot designed specifically to help streamline government. My questions are to the Minister of RAGE, Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Was the minister consulted on the efficiency of restructuring cabinet to include yet another ministry? Was he consulted?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member across knows quite well that the appointment of cabinet is entirely in the Premier's purview.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of RAGE.

The Speaker: It's called Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Dr. Taft: The Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Okay. Thank you. To that minister: is it the minister's position that a larger cabinet is a more efficient cabinet?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member said earlier in the first question, that's in the complete purview of our Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency: can the minister tell us if he or any of his ministerial counterparts will be acquiring an associate minister to help further the efficiency of this government?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, again I will have to say that that's under the complete purview of our Premier.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. Bonko: Yesterday in the House the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation referred to the $1 land deal to the Galfour Development Corporation, owned by Mr. Joseph Sheckter: "You have to understand that it was a large parcel of land [and] in order for the government to get a portion of it, of course, they had to strike a deal." Mr. Sheckter did more than strike a deal; he hit the jackpot. My question to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: why was the $1 buyback price needed to strike a deal when Mr. Sheckter had already been overpaid $6 million for the land, according to the Provincial Treasurer at that time?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that if the member would go back and read Hansard, he would see that, in fact, when you buy large blocks of land, as I explained yesterday, the person that is selling the land – if you were going to define exactly what you needed, it would have to go through the whole subdivision process. So what happens: the whole parcel is bought. Incidentally, likely they will bring up another parcel because in fact there were four parcels, totalling about 800 acres. The way the process works: the government took title of the whole parcel. Part of the deal was to then subdivide out the area that we needed for the ring roads and give the other back to the person that we purchased the land from in the first place.

But, Mr. Speaker, in case the second and third questions have something to do with the current value, I must caution that I can't get into this too deep because the fact is that there's currently a civil lawsuit. So if that's where they're heading, then we cannot get into it.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: why was the surplus land given back to Mr. Sheckter's company for less than a penny per acre when the government's own independent appraiser valued the land at $45,000 an acre?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, obviously the member has never purchased land – obviously he hasn't – and probably has never purchased anything more than a bicycle. The fact is that it was part of the agreement to sell that we would subdivide and purchase the land that we needed for the ring road, and then the seller would take possession of the remaining parcels. That's exactly what happened, and that is what was in the original agreement to sell.

Mr. Bonko: Why didn't other landowners who had their lands expropriated for the ring road receive the surplus land back at pennies per acre? What made Mr. Sheckter so special?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, of course, there are different ways of purchasing land. There's the method of negotiating, and then there is the ability to expropriate. That's another way. There can be a negotiation subject to the expropriation, which basically means that the initial price would not be established but would be established at a later date. In this case there was a negotiated agreement, and the other parcels that may have been purchased along the right-of-way could have – I'm not sure, but they could have – been expropriated. In the case of expropriation, they only expropriate the land that they need. They don't expropriate the whole parcel. So that's the difference. Perhaps, if they need even more information on this sort of thing, they should put a written question because this is a fairly complex area.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, before I begin my question, I wonder if might ask for some guidance from the chair. I understand that the appointments to the Executive Council are entirely within the purview of the Premier, yet I would like to ask questions related to that. Can you advise me how to proceed, please?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party is a big boy with a lot of experience in this House, and the hon. member knows full well how he should proceed, so continue.

Mr. Mason: Actually I don't, Mr. Speaker. I asked the question legitimately. Well, then, I will proceed as best I can.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have no idea what question you want to raise, so how can I give you any advice? So proceed and we'll find out.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, yesterday's cabinet shuffle was disappointing but hardly surprising for those who have watched this struggling government for some time. First, one of the most intelligent and loyal ministers in this government was unceremoniously dumped from cabinet. Second, representation of Edmonton, of women, and of youth was overlooked in favour of cronyism. My question must apparently go to the Deputy Premier. Were there no qualified women available in the caucus to be appointed to cabinet? Were there no qualified women?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I will again remind the hon. member that appointments to cabinet are not a matter of House debate. You may debate the choices; you may debate policies in those areas, but they're really not a matter of debate here.

However, I do take exception in the preamble to the dumping of a minister because in my knowledge of the events a very talented minister with a great deal of integrity stepped down from cabinet.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jumped before he was pushed.

To the Deputy Premier: were there no qualified Edmontonians in the Conservative caucus available to be appointed to the cabinet?

1:50

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier has the floor.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of very talented people that may not be entirely in Edmonton but are in the capital region. I will point out that the minister of health is from Sherwood Park, an overpass away, in the greater metro region. Of course, we have the Minister of Education, again a very talented and dedicated Edmonton minister in the cabinet. I might also say that a number of MLAs from this region play a very major role in a number of committees. I would point out members of the Agenda and Priorities Committee, the Member for Sherwood Park, the Member for Edmonton Mill Creek. We have the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, again, a member of that committee. So to suggest that this city has been overlooked is entirely without foundation.

I would be very dismayed if this hon. member tried to in any way through his comments impinge on the very, very good working relationship that we have with the mayor and the council in this city and the best interests of all the people in this city.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, after the next election they're going to have to go to Wainwright to find a representative for Edmonton.

Was there no qualified member of the caucus who is under the age of 45 years that could have been appointed to this cabinet?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to offend the members of this caucus by asking them their ages.

You know, I find one thing very curious in this hon. member's line of questioning. He spoke about qualified women. Half of the women in our caucus sit on the front bench. Half. Now, I am looking at the ND caucus and seeing that there are no women.

The Speaker: In response to the hon. leader's original question to whom he should direct the question, it seems to me that he followed the correct procedure.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Health Care Guarantees

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question in a very, very, very long time is to a very capable woman, the minister of health. Madam Minister, the Prime Minister of Canada, the government of Canada, the Canadian Medical Association, and the Alberta Medical Association have all endorsed the concept of care guarantees. I know how much you care and why you care for the public health system, so could you tell me how you plan to deal with this concept of care guarantees?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of ways that I plan to deal with it. It is a good question because in the last few weeks and months there has been significantly more said about care guarantees. I know what the Prime Minister is urging us towards, and that is more timely access and making sure that we look at benchmarks as things that are firm commitments by health regions of the country to advance the case of public health care delivered in a timely way and making no excuses about lapses.

I would like to just say that we've taken to caucus the outline of a plan. I will be going further with care guarantees as a plan to caucus. I intend to talk to the Minister of Health for Canada more about the expression of interest in this concept as he has identified both through the Prime Minister and in the throne speech.

Further, in discussion with Senator Kirby this morning I have talked to him about what kind of targets and planning we can do to make sure that we bridge from a situation where care guarantees are an aspiration of the federal government to something where it's practically possible because of resource planning, because of human resource planning, and things that we can do at the provincial level.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much for that answer, Madam Minister.

Care guarantees have the ability to make the government and RHAs accountable for access, which is, realistically, the number one health care issue in Alberta. When can we expect this idea to be made public and to be taken public for discussion?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope soon. I can't give a date, but I would hope that sometime this spring we will have an answer. Clearly, in the letter that our Premier just received from the Prime Minister of Canada, he identified that the health planning that was done in the policy framework was laudable and that many of the issues in that framework were things that he commended us for, acknowledging that the primary responsibility for the province was in health care delivery. So I hope in the next few weeks to be able to bring a plan to caucus and be able to advance it by discussing it further with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the other health care professionals.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that by the end of June we would have at least made some statement about our support or the qualification of any support level for care guarantees for more timely access.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Madam Minister.

How will you deal with the new federal minority government on this issue when they face tremendous pressure to enforce the Canada Health Act? In many ways the care guarantees may be the compromise that is needed to ensure compliance with the Canada Health Act.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, during the last election I noted with interest that all of the parties – whether they were the winning party, the successful Conservative government, or the Liberal Party that is now in the opposition or the NDs – had advanced the issue of care guarantees. I think that what I would first illustrate to the Minister of Health is our interest in being co-operative. I would show the success of the work improving access times in the hip and knee replacement project, the fact that we've advanced at least $15 million more this year for improvements on the coronary artery bypass grafts, on mental health, on prostate and breast cancer, and on cataracts. I would illustrate how we are advancing, at least philosophically and practically, towards a position of shortening the wait times and hope that he would understand that what we are attempting to do is to meet those kinds of targets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week we revealed that this government had sold 260 acres of prime residential land in southwest Edmonton for $3. Today we learned that there is yet another parcel of land sold for $1. After 35 years in power this Progressive Conservative government has so many skeletons in the closet that the PC flag should be the Jolly Roger. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. If the $1 buyback was only part of the original agreement when this government purchased these parcels of land, why are the remaining details not registered on the title?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I didn't explain well enough the process, and maybe I need to go through it a little slower. The fact is that if an individual or a company, an entity, wants to sell a portion of the land, then they have to have it subdivided. If the government wants to take only a portion of a parcel, then the easiest way to do it is to buy the whole parcel, take out whatever is necessary for the government need, and then return the rest of the land to the seller.

Mr. Speaker, this was the agreement. That's the way it was struck. In fact, I get a little nervous when we start talking about the value of it because, as I indicated earlier, there is currently a lawsuit against the government over these parcels.

Incidentally, yes, there are four parcels. It's about 800 acres – I'm doing your research for you – and we gave back about 290.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of infrastructure: who now owns this latest parcel of land that was sold to Mr. Sheckter for a dollar? Who owns it now?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there was nothing sold for a dollar. Absolutely nothing. There was land returned to the seller, and in order for that transaction to be legal, you have to have a dollar. That's the process. In fact, I've got no idea who currently owns it. Nor do I care who owns it. That was returned to the seller, and there have been transactions, I'm sure, with that land. What the member should be doing is praising the Lougheed government for thinking about buying these corridors because if we were to go and purchase those properties today, we'd be paying several times what was paid back then.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how many times did this government meet with Mr. Sheckter before agreeing to this buyback for $1 of all these parcels of land? How many times did you meet with him?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this was 20 years ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Eighteen years ago.

Mr. Lund: I don't care if it's 20 or 18; it's in that neighbourhood. That was before I was in this House. That was before our current Premier was in this House. So to say that it's this government is wrong.

As a matter of fact, there are a number of things that we've done since then. For example, when we purchase land today, it's gazetted. Back in those days it was not gazetted. That's one of the things that we did as a government, and it's the right thing to do. It's open and accountable. There's nothing shady about this at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Trans-Alaska Pipeline

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that presently the state of Alaska and their main oil companies and explorers in Alaska are having a talk on a major pipeline that's going to affect Canada. That pipeline is going to go from the north of Alaska down to the southern part, across Yukon, into B.C., and into our Alberta territory. Now, I'm very interested to know if that pipeline is going to be a line that goes straight through Alberta or if it's going to hook into our hub. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Can you tell this Assembly: what is Alberta doing in connection with the Alberta hub or the bullet line that's being proposed from Alaska?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to be able to stand and respond to some of the last questions that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne will have in this House for some time.

It's been the Alberta position for some time and will continue to be that the Alberta hub is at the central point of our policy and direction. We would welcome that there be more resources from the north, that they be developed, but the Alberta hub, being the central point, is going to be the formation of our direction. We will not support a bullet line coming into this province and exiting straight out. That will not be something that we will support. That's being communicated to all parties – the producers, the state of Alaska – and to all other provinces.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister: if there's not going to be a bullet line and they're going to be hooked into the Alberta hub, what advantages can our petrochemical industry see for having this volume of gas coming into our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our position on the Alberta hub actually makes a lot of sense for the producers from the north. They, too, have acknowledged the tremendous economic advantage of connecting into the Alberta hub. It provides access to multiple markets instantly once it arrives here. You're going to be able to utilize excess, spare capacity of existing pipelines to take it to differing markets. We will ensure that there's take-away capacity of Alberta gas to ensure that it's not stranded. The point which he mentioned is that access to the liquids for the petrochemicals so that there's a long-term supply is very vital to ensure that we have a long, prosperous opportunity for the petrochemical industry in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: given that the Alaska economy is as hot as the Alberta economy, where is the labour pool to build such an enormous line, and where is the labour pool to help develop that petrochemical industry here in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I hadn't realized that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne was volunteering to go back to being a welder on that line. We'll need a lot of welders. We're going to need pipefitters. We're going to need many people to help. It's not just that; there's the pipeline from the Mackenzie Valley as well. That's the challenge. It's a wonderful challenge to have. We have so much activity in the oil industry, and clearly it's not just confined to Alberta. The Alaska pipeline is going to put a tremendous stress on additional labour, certainly, access to labour from Alberta and across the country and also qualified people from around the world. We're going to have to ensure that the training is part of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Health Care Reform Public Consultation

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 23 more than 400 Albertans attended a public forum on health care hosted by the Alberta Liberal caucus in Calgary, a strong indication that Albertans care about the future of health care, that they are hungry for genuine consultation. There were no government members in attendance despite the invitation that was extended to the Premier, the health minister, and all government MLAs on March 8. To the minister of health: why does the minister continue to refuse to attend or hold public town hall meetings?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, some time ago, at the end of February, we announced that throughout March we would be conducting stakeholder meetings, that we would accommodate members of the public who came forward and asked to have an opportunity to be heard. Many of those, in fact, were heard either through MLAs who made arrangements in their constituencies or by invitation from the people that called my office. We have had an opportunity to evaluate what was said during the health policy framework. Could I reflect through the last few years on the consultations that were extensive and exhaustive on the Mazankowski report? Many of the policies from that health policy framework are an outgrowth of those. So it's not as if we have not consulted.

Mr. Speaker, we have not tabled legislation at this point. We have got some indication of how many Albertans feel about the policies, and we'll look forward to a complete analysis of that and then act in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister of health: given that the minister only provided Albertans with a vague policy framework, leaving Albertans desperate for details, will the minister commit to transparently collaborating with Albertans before legislation is forced through?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have every intent of indicating to Albertans exactly what we've heard in the consultation process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. At what point will the minister provide real answers to the questions from doctors, seniors, rural Albertans, and even her own members?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, on Friday morning I will be meeting with some physicians on the issue of opting in and opting out. We have never said that we wouldn't still entertain, as we always do, comments from the public. It's just that we have not had any plans for further public consultations. So we continue to get that feedback.

Mr. Speaker, I have spent an extensive amount of time doing follow-up with every one of the larger groups who did pose questions. We will continue to respond to them. When we're ready, in due course we will bring forward the plans of this government in response to the people on the health policy framework.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Contaminated Sites Cleanup in Calgary

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Calgary-Fort constituency covers the largest industrial park in Calgary, and its surrounding living environment is of critical importance to the daily living of my constituents. My question today is to the Minister of Environment. Given that the Lynnwood Ridge contamination cleanup in my constituency has still not been started, dragging on for four years, too long, and missing too many construction seasons, my constituents become impatient. Can the minister update us on this action of speedy cleanup and when it will start?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My approach would be simply: damn the torpedoes; full speed ahead. To the hon. member, I know that his residents – we all value this environment. Our ministry actually acted very quickly in terms of issuing protection orders relative to this site. As you know, the protection of water and the protection of our citizens was top of mind. But after the order was issued, for the benefit of this House and Albertans I want to say that there were over 225 homes that were impacted, and Imperial Oil took the proper approach. They bought over 200 of those homes. There are about 20 homes that are in fact remaining, and my ministry is working closely with their officials to ensure that they continue to enjoy the protection of our water and the environment, that I know they enjoy, in the hon. member's constituency.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given another situation in the southeast corner of the community of Ogden, where the seepage of cleaning chemicals from the large rail yard was discovered two years ago contaminating underground water, can the minister update us on this cleanup as well?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, one of the key planks of our Water for Life strategy is exactly that: protecting underground water. In fact, I might say that the air quality tests that have been completed in all the buildings that have been affected, of course, have come back in a very positive manner. I might also say that we've required Canadian Pacific Railway to install leading-edge technology to preserve air quality, remove any contaminants, and also monitor the groundwater to ensure that contamination does not leave the area. Now, my ministry continues to work closely with the Calgary health region as well as with CP Rail and will continue to do so in protecting the residents in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. There's another situation in the northeast corner of the industrial park where there was a recycled-oil plant demolished by fire. Now it's found that it has contaminated the land there. I will ask the minister to update us on that cleanup as well.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is making reference, of course, to the Hub Oil site, which now does not pose any threat to residents. My ministry has, in fact, an action plan from Hub Oil in terms of putting land back into use, and that could include commercial and industrial activity. Once we, the Ministry of Environment, are satisfied with Hub Oil's plan and it meets our very, very strict environmental standards, full implementation of this plan will be carried out. I do expect that the plan will be finalized before the end of this year.

To the hon. member: all three sites which the hon. member has mentioned are being cleaned up according to very strict specifications of Alberta Environment, and I want to say as Minister of Environment that our responsibility is to ensure that every Albertan enjoys the environment we've been blessed with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Fort McMurray Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At Tuesday's municipal council meeting in Fort McMurray a regional councillor confirmed what the Alberta Liberal caucus heard during our latest visit to Fort McMurray, that there's deep concern that the Conservative leadership race could hurt the region's infrastructure priorities. He's concerned that Fort McMurray's interests will be pushed aside or overlooked. Yesterday in budget debate we were pleased to hear the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation state, "We're building a new bridge across the Athabasca." Could the minister please provide the residents of Wood Buffalo with a specific timeline as to when this project is going to be completed?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult to assess exactly the dates because, of course, there are a number of variables. It's going to be a very expensive project. We have already committed to a number of major projects in the Fort McMurray area, and of course it will depend a good deal on availability of labour, of materials, of money as we move forward. I can tell you and the people of Fort McMurray that it's on the radar. It's in the planning, so it will eventually happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the soaring construction costs in Fort McMurray, why didn't this government boost the interest-free loan that it offered them when this year's budget was announced because the loan amount is not adequate anymore?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the whole thing with budgeting by the provincial government is a case where you have to look at what is the most critical need, at what has to be done across the province. We can't just focus on one area. Yes, we know that there's a huge, huge demand, a huge need in Fort McMurray and surrounding area, but we are doing things like twinning highway 63. We are finishing the work on highway 881. It's going to be paved all the way. There's a number of other projects that we're funding in that area. The bridge is going to be built. I can't tell you exactly when, but we will build it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Fort McMurray desperately needs more land for residential development and given this government's willingness in the past to make substantial land deals for a dollar or two, will it offer Fort McMurray the same deal in the Timberlea area rather than charging them market value?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's reasonable that the Minister of Municipal Affairs deal with this question given that the loan referred to in the earlier question is actually a Municipal Affairs loan. I want to make it clear that that loan has not been drawn upon yet, that we're working very closely with the city council in Fort McMurray, and that we will continue to work with them as their needs progress. With respect to the land, we've been monitoring the situation for some time. Seniors has got a very good plan in place. Again, Municipal Affairs is working with the council, continues to work with the council, and is committed to stay on this file as long as is necessary. I can assure the member and I can assure the people of Fort McMurray that we will not allow their situation to fall off of our radar screen. I can assure you of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Royalty Rates

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Newfoundland and Labrador Premier Danny Williams has a lot of good advice for Progressive Conservatives in Alberta. He said, and I quote: how can we ask our citizens to continue to bear the burden of high oil prices and turn to companies making billions of dollars and give them tax incentives and breaks on fuel prices? That is not to mention the burden of high utility costs, disappearing water, and dead-end energy planning for the future here in this province. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Given that our fire-sale royalty regime is so far out of step with the going rate paid everywhere else in the world, will the minister now commit to royalty rates that give Albertans fair payment for our energy assets?

Mr. Melchin: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the assertions are completely false, the answer is no.

Mr. Eggen: Well, considering, Mr. Speaker, that hundreds of millions of dollars of Albertans' money will fly out the window while the minister waffles on royalty reforms, why can't the minister impose at least a modest increase in the royalty rates now based on windfall profits that are currently being enjoyed by energy companies?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, you have to remember that our royalty regimes have been put in place in response to the very unique and specific characteristics of our resource. We have some very small-producing conventional wells, a fraction of the volume of many areas of the world in our conventional sources. They come with still some very fixed costs and operating costs that are very expensive. When you look at the economic rent, that's what royalty regimes are designed upon: to ensure that we get our fair share of the economic rent or the excess profit. That has been accomplished in our structure. We have one of the highest cost producing areas of the world. Oil sands is the highest cost area. The largest amount of dollars invested is required to get into the oil sands. All of these factors have to be taken into consideration in designing royalty regimes, which our province has been overwhelmingly successful in, creating more economic activity than any other place in the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister when he and the EUB will then get tough on energy companies to ensure completeness and accuracy of volumetric production data on the royalties that we should be collecting now based on the regime that we have now.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General raised the issue of volumetric data in his last report, and I'd like to comment that, yes, we have accepted those recommendations. The EUB has already put a directive out on that that has been in place as of January 1 of this year if he wishes to refer to the directive. Furthermore, there are many ways to ensure that the level of risk is very, very, very minimal in potential loss of royalties. Given the complexity of the industry, the multiple joint venture kinds of partners, the multiple parties reporting on the same level of activity on any one well reduces the risk to a very minimal amount. The structures put in place will continue to ensure that Albertans do collect all the royalties as required.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Rural Policing Services

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true that our province's booming economy is the envy of every province in Canada, not to mention across North America, but our healthy economy also attracts criminal activity and not just to the big cities. Criminal networks are spreading out into rural communities and setting up shop. My questions today are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. In Budget 2006 you announced the addition of 80 new RCMP officers. Where will these officers be stationed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, yes, in Budget 2006 we did add 80 new RCMP officers to work on the front line, which actually complements the additional 130 that were announced in last year's budget for front-line policing. We don't do the operational side of where they will go. That's the assistant commissioner of the RCMP, Rod Knecht, that will make those decisions. There are a number of areas that they have to look at: criminal caseload, population growth, and those types of issues that they have in their communities. They look at all of those, and they'll make a decision on where to deploy those in one of the 104 detachments we have throughout a very large geographic province. But if the hon. member has a concern regarding any one of his communities in his constituency, I'd be more than happy to speak to him about that.

Rev. Abbott: Very, very perceptive. Given that the small community of Breton in my constituency recently lost an RCMP position, how can they qualify for the criteria for placement of one of these new officers?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, I'd be more than happy to speak to the member, but, again, obviously the municipality of Breton may want to speak to the assistant commissioner. There are other opportunities as well, though, to enhance your local police service through an additional contract with the RCMP through Canada. So those options are all open, and we can explore those in any community throughout the province as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: would the minister please provide an update on the Alberta police and peace officer training centre and advise how RCMP would utilize this facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the police and peace officer training centre, we're moving forward with that program. We actually had to ask the municipalities for additional time for our review committee to go over all of the submissions that we did receive. I think that we were a little astonished with the number that came in. We're working on all of them right now. We hope to have a short list selection by some time in the first part of May, and as we move forward, obviously, we'll be notifying those municipalities. But the plan is in place. We're progressing on the plan to take that before Treasury Board. We're refining the business plan right now, and we'll be taking that to Treasury Board in the next short while.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Specialized Drug Court

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The war on drugs has been a colossal failure. No one is winning. On the supply side drug dealers and organized crime are destabilizing the world, and on the demand side our sons and our daughters are literally dying. The war on drugs just simply fills our prisons to overflowing with offenders with substance abuse problems, and we desperately need other solutions such as drug courts. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Will the minister report on the progress of the Edmonton drug court, and also tell us whether Alberta Justice is supporting a new drug court in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a good question. Last year the federal government indicated that they were prepared to entertain pilot projects with respect to drug courts across Canada and solicited applications from courts that would be interested in holding or setting up a specialized drug court. In Alberta we had two applications go forward. One was from Edmonton; one was from Calgary. I'm pleased to say that the federal government at that time chose the one in Edmonton. I believe that there were other ones from other parts of the country that were also selected. The Edmonton drug court is in its initial stages. I think it is too early to make any determination with respect to it, but it is a pilot project. We are monitoring it.

I think it's important to understand that the reason that the federal government is involved in a drug court is because this is the one area where the federal government is responsible for the prosecutions. The prosecutors in a drug case are federal Crown prosecutors. Our involvement as a province is to provide support through the provincial court judges, the facilities, and through to the staff that would be in the court at the time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. My supplementary question is to the same minister. He didn't answer the question about Calgary. There seems to be a lot of interest in Calgary about the setting up of a similar drug court. Would Alberta Justice support that?

Mr. Stevens: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we're interested in discussions with the people in Calgary who are interested in pursuing this. As I indicated in my initial answer, there was an application at that time. But additional resources are provided by the federal government relative to a matter which is in large measure, through the prosecution, dealt with by the federal government. I would say to the people in Calgary: contact your MPs; contact the federal Justice minister. I'm happy to work with them to try and arrange for the same kind of support for Calgary that Edmonton got so that we can have a pilot project down there also. I'm perfectly accepting of having another specialized court if we can provide the resources on our side.

Dr. B. Miller: On the same subject. There are so many of our inmates in prisons that have addiction issues. My question is to the Solicitor General, minister of public safety. Will the minister provide mandatory drug treatment programs for offenders in our prisons before they are released back into our community?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do provide programs in our centres for those individuals that do have addictions, and there are a number of programs for them. Obviously, not all offenders go into our correction facilities once they are sentenced. Some of them are released on conditional programs. Some of those programs do include drug addiction programs, whether it's through the John Howard Society or whether it's through some of our other stakeholders that we utilize within the community. So not all of them pertain to just our correction facilities. We do have programs as well in there, but I'd like to remind the hon. member that it is difficult because the average length of stay is only 34 days in a correctional facility. Those are some of the issues we have to deal with. While they are in our facilities, we do deal with the issues, and we do have doctors and psychologists and specialists that are there to assist them.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, very shortly I'll call on the first of a number of members to participate, but first of all our historical vignette of the day. Today four members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly will be appointed to the cabinet, or Executive Council of Alberta, for the first time. Their tenure as a minister will begin immediately upon the administering of the oath of office.

Such, however, has not always been the case in Alberta. If you had been appointed to the provincial cabinet following the 1905 election and you were re-elected in the 1909 election, you could continue to hold a cabinet position. However, if you were an MLA appointed to cabinet for the first time in the post-1909 period, you had to return to your constituency and be re-elected in a by-election. By way of an example, D.M. Marshall was elected as a Liberal member for Olds in the general election of March 22, 1909. He was nominated for the position of minister of agriculture, returned to his constituency, and then was re-elected in a by-election held on November 23, 1909.

This practice was to continue following the general elections of 1913, 1917, and 1921. It was discontinued following the election of 1926. During the time between the elections of 1909 and 1926, 14 such by-elections were held. Five were held in the post-1909 period, one was held in the post-1913 period, three were held in the post-1917 period, and five were held in the post-1921 period. All new appointees were successful in their by-election bids and subsequently served as ministers of the Crown.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: 2:30 Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: I'll call upon the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that I've introduced this group before, but they weren't in the House. Now they've arrived, so I'd like to welcome them. They're 46 students from grade 6 at the Innisfail middle school in Innisfail, and they're accompanied by their teachers, Judy Bourne and Mary Schatz. With that group I would also like to give a special welcome to parent helpers Trevor Lawrence, Tina Reid, Michelle den Dekker, Eva Looker, and Mike Wilkie. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Tartan Day

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in this Assembly today in recognition of Tartan Day. The 6th of April marks a significant anniversary for Scots across this province, this country, and many parts of the world. Tartan Day is celebrated to commemorate the signing of the declaration of Arbroath, the Scottish declaration of independence, on April 6, 1320. This declaration has been recognized around the world as one of the earliest statements of the rights of humanity to a peaceful, productive, secure, and well-governed life and has become the standard for freedom from oppression and for responsible government.

Also, it's the day to recognize the tartan as a symbol of Scottish culture and clans, providing Scots with a visual symbol of their heritage. Tartan Day offers us the opportunity to recognize the important influence of Scots to the progress of civilization and good government.

Moreover, it allows us the occasion to celebrate the significant contributions made by Scots in our province. From the first contacts of Alexander Mackenzie in the 1780s and the arrival of the fur traders in the north to the coming of missionaries in the south, Scots have played a major role in the formation and progress of our province. Our province has seen significant Scottish influence on almost all areas of life. From early exploration and settlement, government, business and industry, or cultural life Scots have played a vital role in Alberta. Our first Premier, Alexander Rutherford, was even of Scottish descent.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the contributions of Scots to this province, past, present, and future, I ask all hon. members to join me to celebrate Tartan Day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Finola Hackett

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am particularly proud to rise today to recognize the achievements of a very young constituent of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville who is a true champion. Ms Finola Hackett at the ripe age of 14 and from the fabulous town of Tofield beat out 28 finalists and 160,000 other students across Canada to become the two-time – I repeat: the two-time – National Spelling Bee champion.

Finola, in true Alberta style, beat the representative from Ottawa by spelling the word "dghaisa," which, of course, we all know is a small sailboat from Malta. What makes this so phenomenal, Mr. Speaker, is that I tried to find the word in the Oxford dictionary, and it's not there, so how this young girl knew how to spell the word . . .

An Hon. Member: You didn't know how to spell it.

Mr. Stelmach: Maybe that's the problem here.

Finola is a very talented individual in both music and dance. Her family is on their way back from Ottawa. I'd just ask all members to join me in congratulating not only a great ambassador for the town of Tofield but also a true Alberta champion, Ms Finola Hackett.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a time of strong and rapid economic growth within our province. Our healthy supplies of energy resources along with an overwhelming demand for labour have made Alberta a very popular place to call home. All across our province we're experiencing an enormous increase in population as our strong economy continues to attract hard-working and free-enterprising people from all over the country.

As an MLA from Calgary I just want to focus on the Calgary example. All my MLA colleagues from Calgary witness this growth. The Calgary population will increase by 50 new Albertans every day. This represents a severe challenge to Calgary. It is imperative that we are able to address the needs of the growing population by maintaining a quantity and quality of public services. In order to ensure that the citizens are getting the most reliable services possible, it is important that the local authorities and institutions receive appropriate funds from the government, taking into account the estimated growth of population.

As another example, as Calgary continues to grow, there is increasing pressure on the city's infrastructure. There are now close to 60 per cent more the number of vehicles on Calgary roads today than there were 10 years ago. That's about 30 more vehicles added each day, contributing to the considerable traffic congestion throughout the city. Roadways, schools, and health care facilities have all continued to experience the stress of accommodating more and more people.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is important to sustain the progress of our economy and promote Alberta – Calgary, Edmonton, and elsewhere – as the finest place to work, live, and raise our families. I believe that this can be accomplished by funding which goes along with population growth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

National Daycare Program

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The prairie giant Tommy Douglas said that the ultimate test of society was not how its members relied on themselves but how we care for each other. Health care was pioneered by New Democrats, accepted by Conservatives, adopted by Liberals, and paralleled by Social Credit governments. It is not a partisan but a human issue that grows out of a recognized need for us to take care of each other.

In earlier days religious denominations provided help to their members in time of need. In our day this function has been assumed by society as a whole. Child care is a new issue for our generation. It comes from two causes: more families with two parents in the workforce and many families led by a single adult. Few families can afford private child care. Like health care and education earlier, the first initiatives in child care were undertaken by churches. By the 1990s the need was part of the election platform for the Liberal Party of Canada. It took another decade for the national child care agreement. This was achieved by bargaining a variety of agreements between Ottawa and the provinces and territories.

Now a new government in Ottawa plans to scrap the agreement and replace it with a tax credit for parents and incentives to business. It says that it wants to provide greater choice, yet choice was written into the agreement by Alberta's government. There is nothing to stop the Conservatives in Ottawa from introducing their tax credit and keeping the earlier plan, nothing except attitude, a belief that we are not our brothers' and sisters' keepers and that the best society is one where self-reliance is the prime virtue, everyone for himself or herself.

That was the attitude that sank the Titanic 94 years ago: a society that boasted new luxuries for those who could pay and space in the lifeboats for those who could get there in time. It took disaster to establish a principle that seems obvious now, that of lifeboats for all. This is a principle of caring that needs to be learned by those who are steering our ship of state.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: The provincial government's third-way proposals to implement two-tier health care are the most radical changes to our health care system in a generation. These proposals will inevitably lead to the deterioration of the quality of the public system, higher costs, and longer wait times. As Albertans become aware of these effects on their health care and their quality of life, opposition has grown, and no wonder. The rural areas of Alberta are already struggling to keep their doctors and other health care professionals. The third way will worsen the situation, leaving thousands of Albertans with far worse health care. Astoundingly, the government has done no research into the impacts of the third way on rural health care.

The government has repeated the claim that within 25 years health care will consume the entire budget of the province. However, there is no indication that the Minister of Health and Wellness has conducted any research to back up these claims. It's an unsubstantiated claim designed to frighten Albertans into supporting more private health care. At the same time, the government refuses to implement proven cost-saving measures within the public system, such as a pharmaceutical savings agency proposed by the NDP that would reduce costs by $75 million a year in the first year alone.

During the 2004 election Albertans were told by the Premier that he had no plans to privatize health care and that an election was not the time to discuss health care policy. As a result this government does not have a mandate from the people of Alberta to dismantle our public health care system. The government has an obligation to Albertans to clearly set out their plans for the health care system and seek a mandate from the people of Alberta in an election before proceeding. Anything else is both deceitful and undemocratic.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on to the next order of the Routine, there is a very distinguished Canadian, if my eyes are serving me correctly, in the members' gallery, and I would like to have him rise. Mr. Jim Edwards is a former Member of Parliament representing a constituency here in Edmonton, a former member of the national cabinet, and I believe currently chairman of the University of Alberta. Welcome, sir.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of tablings of letters from individuals. The first is from Stewart Millman, noting that our private system is the most expensive per capita system in the world and the most inefficient.

Next is from Jonathon Lytton, who is concerned that allowing physicians to jump between private and public systems will achieve precisely the opposite of what the people of the province need.

The next letter is from Matthew Smith, who notes that to standardize the referral procedures and invest in a province-wide system to manage health care referrals is more successful, and "seriously, invest in disease prevention."

Next is from Donna Sahuri, who notes the conflict of interest in having doctors work in both systems and wonders, "Whose best interest would it be to provide proactive medical advice to avoid these surgeries?"

From Danny Sutherland, who notes, "If the current health system is so unsustainable, then why are we receiving $400.00 cheques?"

From Frank Meunier, who states, "We Canadians are proud of the fact that anyone – no matter what their economic status – can receive quality care."

From Elisa Sereno-Janzen and Tim Janzen. They believe, "It is time for Alberta politicians to think of those of us on the middle and bottom of the totem pole of our economy."

A form letter that is signed by a number, but two specifically: Janet Carruthers and Elizabeth Loeffler.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader to share with us the government business for the week of April 10 to 13.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be indeed a pleasure to do that. On Monday, April 10, in the afternoon we will deal with private members' business, which normally includes written questions, motions for returns, public bills and orders other than government bills and orders. On Monday evening from 8 to 9 we will continue with private members' business in the form of motions. That would be Motion 506. At 9 p.m. we will go to Government Bills and Orders, and in Committee of the Whole we should be able to address Bill 15, the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act; Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act; and Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006.

On Tuesday afternoon we'll deal with government bills and orders, specifically Committee of Supply, that being day 6 of 24, and the item under discussion will be the Ministry of Environment as per the Official Opposition's request. Tuesday evening at 8 we will deal with Committee of Supply, day 7 of 24, so to speak, and that will be the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. Assuming things go well and we have time, we would very much like to look at second reading of Bill 28, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act; Bill 24, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act; Bill 25, the Securities Amendment Act; Bill 26, the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act; and Bill 27, the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act.

On Wednesday, April 12, under Government Bills and Orders we would look at Committee of Supply, day 8 of 24, and consider estimates for the Ministry of Advanced Education. Wednesday evening we will look at day 9 of 24 and in Committee of Supply discuss the estimates of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. There being time thereafter, one would hope to get to Committee of the Whole on Bill 10, the Engineering, Geological, and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act; Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, and otherwise as might be indicated on the Order Paper.

Thursday, April 13, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we would do day 10 of 24 under Committee of Supply and consider estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services, and that should be it for that week. There may be other stuff on the Order Paper that could get attended to. We'll see. Thereafter, I'm anticipating that the House would adjourn for one week for Easter and return on April 24.

Human Resources and Employment

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is set between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister for Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move the 2006 estimates for Human Resources and Employment. In addition, I'd like to introduce the staff that are here with us today, who will be taking notes and helping me throughout the process: Ulysses Currie, our deputy minister; Alex Stewart, assistant deputy minister of corporate services; Duncan Campbell, senior financial officer, finance and corporate services; Shelley Engstrom, director of financial corporate services; Dale Silver, assistant public service commissioner of PAO; Erin Johnston, executive assistant of PAO; and also, of course, Donna Ballard, my executive assistant.

I would also like to take a moment at this time to thank the other 2,000 or so staff that we have that work very hard for our government to deliver services to the public. Thank you very much.

Alberta, of course, is in a very fortunate position, Mr. Chairman. One of the challenges we face is managing the growth and opportunities our strong economy brings. Human Resources and Employment will continue to meet the needs of today while taking steps to ensure that Alberta's prosperity continues in the future.

To make the best of our opportunities and to address our challenges, Mr. Chairman, I'm asking for $790,278,000 to support the work our ministry requires. The ministry, of course, includes the Department of Human Resources and Employment, personnel administration office, Alberta Labour Relations Board, and the Appeals Commission for workers' compensation. The workers' compensation, which is an independent, employer-funded organization, is not included in the ministry's business plan.

Alberta's economy is hot. In 2005 our unemployment rate continued to be the lowest in the country at 3.9 per cent. Our success is a national good-news story, and Albertans should be proud of what they have accomplished by working hard. It is a good time to be a worker in Alberta. In 2005 the average Alberta wage increased to $21 per hour. I'm sure you have noticed that help wanted signs are popping up all over.

Employers are having a tough time finding and keeping workers. Human Resources and Employment has just wrapped up consultation on a proposed strategy to guide labour force development over the next 10 years, and this is short- and long-range strategy. I expect to release this final labour force strategy this fall; however, we are also taking action now to deal with the short-term issues.

In 2006 and '07 Human Resources and Employment will dedicate close to $294 million to programs and services to address skills and labour shortages, an increase of approximately $25 million over what was spent last year. This includes, of course, investing in skills training, offering services to job seekers and employers, and providing supports to working people, such as the Alberta child and adult health benefits. We will help more Albertans take training, bringing the total to over 30,000 people. For example, an estimated 5,000 people will be helped with their tuition and living expenses while they learn a trade, training in occupations experiencing labour shortages will be available to 4,000 people, and 1,200 people will be able to take self-employment training.

I have always said that our priority is to help groups underrepresented in the workforce to get the skills and support they need to get jobs and keep jobs. This year Human Resources and Employment will invest over $6 million in aboriginal training to employment, an increase of $4 million. By partnering with aboriginal communities in the private sector and training institutions, we expect 1,300 people to obtain new skills. We will also continue to provide specialized services to people with disabilities, young people, immigrants, and older workers.

This fiscal year Human Resources and Employment will invest over $45 million, which is an increase of $6 million, to implement strategies under the Alberta government's immigration policy. English as a Second Language training will be expanded, allowing a total of 3,500 people to benefit; 1,300 foreign-trained professionals will be assisted to get the Canadian work experience they need to fill job vacancies; and we will work with professional associations to assist in timelier foreign credential recognition.

Human Resources and Employment spent less than expected on training in the last year. We have made program changes to help us meet our targets this time. As you know, we no longer have welfare offices in Alberta. We have now 59 service location centres across the province, where we help both job seekers and employers, and of course 19 of these 59 centres are colocated with the federal government. We also help people over the phone and the Internet. In 2006-07 we will increase funding to job placement services to enhance and expand our services.

Throughout the province our staff are developing innovative ways to partner with business and the community. Just a couple of weeks ago Human Resources and Employment worked with community groups in Red Deer to hold a job fair, which attracted 88 employers and more than 2,000 job seekers.

The nature of the work done in our offices has changed considerably in the last decade. Once our people enter the workforce, Human Resources and Employment wants them to be safe on the job. Phase 2 of Work Safe Alberta is under development and will continue to identify new opportunities to reduce injuries in Alberta work sites. We will focus on youth and industry sectors with poor safety records. Since we implemented Work Safe Alberta, the lost-time claim rate has been reduced from 3.4 per cent in 2000 to an estimated 2.4 in 2005. This is a 24 per cent drop, a record low, and means that there were 10,000 fewer work injuries last year compared to where we would have been had we not improved the system. Claims fully funded by the workers' compensation have dropped by $285 million per year, which means additional dollars for the employers.

I am committed to building on this success. This fall I held a minister's forum on workplace safety to consult with stakeholders on a new three-year strategy, the workers' compensation health fund, a workplace health and safety program, contributing in excess of $12 million to support Work Safe Alberta. In 2006-07 workers' compensation will contribute an additional $2 million. As a result, Human Resources and Employment plans to hire more occupational health and safety officers and other staff who will work with stakeholders to ensure our workplaces are safe. As part of Work Safe Alberta we are also developing a road safety at work strategy, working with Alberta Education to enhance workplace safety resources in schools, and promoting best practices.

Despite our hot economy there are Albertans who have significant challenges that make it difficult for them to get jobs or keep jobs. These not expected to work clients will see their financial assistance increased by 5 per cent starting May 1 of this year. This will bring the total spending on financial health and other benefits for this group to more than $151 million. Close to 12,000 Albertans will benefit from this rate increase. For example, a single parent with two children will receive an increase of $51 per month, raising the family's monthly financial assistance to $1,030 per month.

Human Resources and Employment is also increasing the support available to individuals and families who are making a fresh start after leaving abusive situations. Our budget requirement to help people in transition, in other words people who are between jobs or already working, is lower in 2006-2007 due to Alberta's strong economy and our success in helping people move back into the workforce. In fact, an average of 26,900 households received financial assistance in 2005-06, compared to 28,935 the previous year. This is a decrease of more than 2,000.

If our caseloads had remained at the same levels as they were before the welfare reforms which were commenced under this good Premier and our government in 1992, the government would have spent an additional $600 million per year, or a total of $8 billion since 1992. That's a lot of money saved, Mr. Chairman, and that money, of course, was directed to other high-needs programs. During my answers, I may expand on that particular area. As a result, this year Human Resources and Employment can commit more money to supporting employment and training. While the total amount committed to helping people in transition has decreased, I want to make it clear that we are not decreasing the amount of assistance that we provide to these individuals and families. In '06-07 we expect to spend $138 million on financial health and other benefits for people in transition. Of course, people who are between jobs also benefit from our investment in employment services.

I'd like to take a few moments now to discuss the personnel administration office, better known as PAO. Maintaining a strong public service is very important to Alberta because without a strong public service and good employees our system of government would probably not operate. PAO works with ministries by developing and implementing progressive corporate human resource strategies. Our government faces the same challenges as other employers in Alberta. We are trying to find and keep talented employees in a labour market where there is a lot of competition for workers. Our demographics show that 40 per cent of the executive managers in our public service are over the age of 55; 27 per cent of all management employees are eligible to retire by 2007 and 2008. It is important to invest today to maximize the impact of those changes and make sure that we have a strong public service for tomorrow.

This year the PAO budget is increasing by $4.1 million to approximately $17.7 million. This additional funding, of course, will benefit all ministries across the government. Three million dollars is going to an executive and senior managers' development initiative so that as current leaders begin to retire, there are people with knowledge and skills needed to move into their roles. The remaining increases will be used to support other human resource initiatives to ensure that our public service is an employer of choice with a quality work environment and quality employees.

I would like now to turn my attention to the Appeals Commission for the Workers' Compensation Board. The commission is independent from the Workers' Compensation Board. It hears appeals from workers or employers on decisions of the review bodies of the Workers' Compensation Board. The operating costs of the commission are paid from general revenue and then reimbursed from the workers' compensation accident fund. An increase of $1.4 million in the commission's budget will help decrease the number of days it takes to process these appeals.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, in 2006-07 Human Resources and Employment will build Alberta's workforce and continue to help those in need. Over $790 million will be invested in Alberta's people, skills, and workplaces and in building a strong public service.

I have presented the highlights of where these dollars will be invested. I look forward to comments and questions from the hon. members, and I will try to answer as many questions as possible. If there are any questions that I can't answer today, of course the staff are here to take notes, or we'll read the Blues and answer in writing.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I must compliment the minister on a professional and well-delivered report on a very, very important department of this government. This ministry, indeed, is important. In fact, along with Education and Advanced Education it is one of the most important when we look to the future of Alberta. It does cover skills development. It does cover people in need. It does cover labour relations and personnel administration. It does cover WCB. It does cover the Appeals Commission. It does cover so much, but much of it deals with how we work and how we develop our workforce. The minister mentioned that there is a major push to have a final report on the labour force strategy for this fall, and I welcome the moves that are being made in order to at least look at this.

One of the greatest problems we have seen in my short period in this Legislature is the fact that there is not a lot of information on the labour market that has been provided to really give a true picture of how the labour market operates in our province and in our country. So often – and I've said this before – we've relied on certain studies that have been done by certain organizations, which are good organizations, and they do them in good faith, I'm sure, but perhaps they will do a survey of large employers, and those large employers will say that they will need lots of employees. It's sort of like going to do a survey in a grade 3 class and asking them how much candy the grade 3 kids will want in the next year. Of course, they'll say they need lots of candy. They'll always need lots of employees, in the same sense, when you're talking to large employers.

Some of the studies are very good. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has come up with some that I think are quite comprehensive and deal with a lot of smaller businesses, and they look at the needs. One of the interesting ones in the CFIB studies, of course, is the fact that one of the problems is the ability to pay for new employees. What that underlines for small businesses in our Alberta market is the clear fact that much of the demand side in our market today is being driven by $60 to $70 per barrel oil and similar high levels of pricing in gas, because of those high levels, the incredible amounts of wells, incredible amount of exploration, and incredible amount of pipeline work and other activity that we see in the conventional oil and gas industry.

We also see down the road an incredible amount of need in the oil sands industry. We're seeing right now in Fort McMurray the development of projects which we knew were coming for five years, which we have had approved for quite some time, which we knew were in development for a long time. Obviously, we didn't have the labour market things that we needed for Fort McMurray in place for that area for now. We're going to have a greater problem down the road as our actual needs increase. I'll get back to that a little later. But the need for good statistics which really look at the actual supply side and how we can also affect the supply side is absolutely important in the development of this ministry.

Now, I'll just touch on a number of the line items in the ministry. We have many, many different types of projects that are coming up that will need skilled employees, that will need people to work and who will actually have to have their skills and trades and other types of professional qualifications developed and put into the proper perspective and proper force for our economy.

Just to look at a number of line items – and I'll go through them, starting on page 276 of the government estimates. Some of these will just be questions as to the nature of the changes in the spending.

I look at 2.2.3, youth connections. I see a budget increase in 2.2.3, but if we look at the actual spending of the 2005-06 forecast, it shows as a decrease. Why is that?

I look at the basic skills and academic upgrading, and I don't see a significant increase in that. You know, we're seeing a lot of need to bring those basic skills up.

One that gives me some consternation is the decrease in the disability-related employment supports. If I could have some understanding of why there is a decrease at all in 2.2.6.

The STEP program, 2.2.7. I see that the budgeted amounts are the same and stayed the same although the budget was not at all nearly taken up last year. I think that the STEP program opens up some opportunities, and I know it'll close fairly soon. You know, I look to some of the initiatives such as the one put forward by Ruth Kelly, the past president of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, to provide summer employment for aboriginal students. If this could somehow in the short term be looked at to ensure that the STEP program could be made available to employers in this area, this would be of great benefit, I think, to many aboriginal students to get into the workforce this year.

I look at 2.2.8, the self-employment training. Again this was an area where the monies were not spent from the budgeted year, so the budget is much reduced. I talked to many people in my constituency, and self-employment and small businesses are areas where I think we could see some major effort put into publicizing the things that people could put forward to be self-employed.

I appreciate the comments of the minister in his opening statements on supporting people in transition, but I still wonder why these income supports are so decreased in much of 2.4. In reality, some of the supports across the board do not reflect the fact that many of these supports did not go up for many, many years.

Just moving on to page 277. You know, I look at some of the professions and occupations. It's one of the things that, as legislation is put forward in this House, often does not get very much publicity, but it's very important to those people in those professions. Being in opposition, I of course take the responsibility seriously to speak to these professions and to try and understand some of the varying needs that are targeted by this legislation, which affects how our economy works in a big way quite often.

I was at a rally here some few weeks back with people who are very, very concerned about the upcoming veterinarians' amendments. They are stakeholders, and they complained that there was no government representative that would come out. You know, I'm very pleased, most often, with the employees from Human Resources and Employment, and many of them do an excellent and very professional job. It would be very nice to see, when there is a request for consultation, a request for government representatives – it doesn't have to be politicians or MLAs or the minister – at least some help and some information from those that provide some understanding from the government.

Again, you know, I seem to have run into that somewhat with the bill regarding engineers and engineering technologists. It seemed to drop off the radar screen for a bit. Some things were problematic, I think, for both organizations, APEGGA and ASET, the association that represents the engineers and the one that represents the engineering technologists, on how that developed. I'd like to see the departmental representatives work very, very closely to try and deal with some of the issues that these organizations have. Some can be very difficult and almost need the wisdom of Solomon to try and take care of, but they are indeed very important for the tens of thousands of people working in these occupations.

The Labour Relations Board, item 4. I've heard tremendous criticism of its operations over the last year and a half. Some people, well-respected lawyers, have called it the Christian Labour Association implementation board or the CLAC state union board. The impression of fairness for some reason does not seem to exist. This is supposed to be just like any court, where the reputation of the adjudicator, the reputation of the board, the reputation of what in fact is a labour court should not be in question as an independent and impartial arbiter.

In looking at item 5, the personnel administration office, there are indeed many challenges, and I touched on those in some questions in question period and on how the ministry will look at it. I've had some people in the government who have come to me quietly and questioned what the government is doing in its own demographic in its attempts to actually bring aboriginals into the workforce in the government, in attempts to increase its access for people with disabilities, its access for people who are nontraditional perhaps – I don't know if nontraditional is the right word – nontraditional employees for the Alberta government.

WCB has made some improvements. I think there always is a need for greater improvement in WCB. It's an area of great controversy. It so often is an organization that touches on people's lives when they are reduced from being productive citizens almost immediately, at least in the severe cases, to those who all of a sudden have no income and may have no prospects and, in the very difficult cases, go through endless appeals and difficulties with some of the caseworkers. Many, many of the caseworkers are very professional, very good, but you run into the odd ones, and somehow I don't know if there are all the proper safeguards in place to ensure that indeed all of the caseworkers are taking the best interests of the people who look to workers' compensation as their fallback. All workers, indeed, look to that in many, many occupations because they have to deal with it because there is no recourse to the courts. This is the nature of workers' compensation.

I've had some of the people in occupations come to me, again, to look at improvements in how workers' compensation affects them specifically, and I think my colleague from Edmonton-McClung will speak to that. I hope he has time to get up. One for sure is the extension of the period for myocardial infarction for firefighters past the 24 hours to at least a week. Another would be the extension of that to other emergency workers, specifically volunteer firefighters, who are often in exactly the same situations that professionals are, and certainly with police and emergency personnel and other personnel who are involved in this area.

The clear need to look, though, in this next year to try and ensure that we take care of some of our labour-market problems I think is paramount. There's going to be great and increased controversy as we look for ways to provide personnel for the oil sands. There is a very well established interprovincial labour mobility system in place that has actually been able to supply most of the projects to date. There continues to be unemployment in other provinces.

I would ask the minister to look at some of the successes in the department in the past with engineers, to look at perhaps expanding past the engineers and into some of the trades areas, to look at the Pacific Northwest as an area to have greater provincial mobility for workers. This could provide economic advantage not only to Alberta but also to our neighbours in the northwest states and the other provinces and territories as well in Canada.

The nature of our labour market will see huge ups and downs as price fluctuations, as projects, and as the nature of the workforce even within those projects moves up and down. There are cycles even in a major oil sands plant where, for example, all the insulators will be hired at the end, and there will be none needed at the beginning, so you'll have big unemployment in the province if all those projects go at once and need their insulators all at once. The same goes often with welders and such.

3:30

You get interindustry movement. Conventional oil and gas will often take rig welders, who are also often in demand in the pipeline industry, which is also very related to conventional oil and gas. Quite often these rig welders will move into industrial welding and can do so quickly. It makes for stats that are sometimes difficult to understand. Those things should be brought into flow in terms of how we train people and how we bring immigrants into the country.

The steep employment curve in conventional oil and gas – and it's not exactly a curve. It's been a cliff as tens of thousands of wells have been drilled in Alberta. This steep cliff is something that will cause some difficulty in the future because once all of those are drilled and the numbers for drilling drops off, suddenly we don't need all those people.

The Chair: Does the hon. minister wish to respond?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would like to thank the hon. member for his professionalism. As my critic he always handles it very professionally and is always interested in making it better for the employees out there. So I thank you for that and also thank you for some of the recommendations you've made.

To start with, you mentioned the labour force strategy, the short- and long-term, the 10-year strategy we're developing, and you're thinking of, you know, the positive sides on that. I would also hope that as the process moves forward, you would help us whenever you can participate in the process because I'm sure that you have some expertise in certain areas that we may not, and we sure can use your assistance.

You are right; there are real problems in identifying labour needs. I think it's something that probably should have started years ago, but industry and training institutions were doing their own assessments and determinations as to what jobs may become available and the types of training programs that may be developed in order to provide the labour force that was needed.

You are right; the oil sands industry is going to continue to provide thousands of jobs in the next 10 years by all indications. In fact, I think that within 10 years or less there will be over 400,000 jobs developed, and by all indications we may be able to provide, you know, 300,000. That would be a shortage of at least 100,000 employees. So, yes, we have to do a lot of work to ensure that we do meet the needs.

One other that you mentioned that's really important is the Youth Connections itself and some of the decreases in expenditures in that and also, of course, the decrease in employment disabilities and the STEP program not being fully utilized. I would suspect that the reason for that is the competition from the private industry, which possibly pays more. STEP has to pay minimum wage. Competition from the private industry probably hires a lot of these youth that used to work through STEP programs. On one side, it's positive. On the other hand, as long as we don't reduce the STEP program to the point where it's not there anymore if the economy goes down. It's always hard to bring back programs. So we'll have to make sure that we do proper marketing, maybe more marketing in the STEP program to ensure that it's fully utilized. On the side of STEP for aboriginal communities or aboriginal youth, again, I know that's a real challenge, and we will definitely do more work on that.

One area you mentioned also, which is very important, is the income support and the lack of increase in providing more dollars for those people that are not expected to work. For the benefit of the members here and the public I'd just like to explain what has happened in the area of welfare reforms and how we're where we're at today because it is very, very critical.

Back in '92-93, when our Premier took over and started restructuring government, I was assigned as the minister of family and social services and aboriginal affairs. At the time the welfare caseload was about 97,000 cases, and 80 per cent of the people on the system were single people and couples without children, that were ready to go to work. They were using up most of the dollars that the high-needs area needed, like persons with developmental disabilities, aboriginal people, and also, of course, children's services, who were under this department. Our plan with the restructuring was to get those 80 per cent back into the workforce as quickly as possible through training. Today you see the welfare caseload down to around 25,000 cases. Only 12,000 of those are expected to work. The other 12,000 or so are not expected to work, and we need to continue looking at how we may assist those. It may be wise for some families to move into the AISH program because I think AISH may provide them more money and more benefits than being on Alberta Works. So we're looking at that very closely.

What has happened since the restructuring started in 1993 is that the original target was laid out to have children's services with its own separate ministry, and as part of the reforms, of course, today you see the hon. Children's Services minister, sitting next to me here, with a pretty large budget. The program I think is going well because those dollars are now concentrated on families and children. At one time those dollars were used by single people and couples without children, sitting on the system. The other part, of course, is the aboriginal section of the original department. Again, there is a minister of aboriginal affairs now, whose sole responsibility is to work with aboriginal people. The third one, of course, is persons with developmental disabilities, which now has its own ministry, also, with its own budget, concentrating on expending those dollars in those high-needs, targeted areas.

So I think that the social reforms worked very well because the money now is used by the high-needs area. That was the original plan back in '92-93, and I think it's worked very well. What we need to do now is monitor very closely for those 12,000 or so that are not expected to work. How can we further assist those people?

Another area that you mentioned was the professions and occupations. The veterinarians were one you mentioned that had a concern. The proposed bill, of course, in that particular area was pulled and, therefore, will not go ahead at this time. The other one you mentioned, of course, was the engineers and engineering technologists. We've been working with those two groups. Both did a presentation to the standing policy committee. There is a letter going out from our department to both of those organizations, suggesting as to how they may resolve the disagreement they have.

Of course, the other that you mentioned, which is very important again – and thanks for all of those recommendations – is the issue of the Labour Relations Board and its neutrality. We'll definitely have a serious look at that.

The PAO in relation to hiring more aboriginal youth in government. We definitely need to do a lot of work on that. I do get phone calls from people asking me: how do I get on to be a government employee? I think we need to look at the field level mainly as to: how does a person, say in Athabasca, access a government job? There are challenges, and I think we can always improve that.

The Workers' Compensation Board. I would like to thank you for your comments. Yes, I think they've made improvements. The approval process, to start with, I think has improved quite a bit. Of course, the appeals process and the timeline it's taking to do appeals and stuff like that I think has also improved. I'd like to thank you for your positive comments on that. Of course, we'll continue monitoring the workers' compensation very closely in relation to firefighters, police, and other volunteers, and you can be assured that we will make adjustments in that particular area as required. Again, I could use your help in that area.

The other one, of course, is the mobility of workers not only within Alberta but also across Canada and maybe even into the U.S. You mentioned the northwest region, if that is something that we need to look at.

The last one you mentioned before the clock rang was the issue of immigrants and the need to possibly have more immigrant workers in Alberta. Of course, I am in charge of the Alberta immigration policy, which we announced last fall. Basically, that policy is designed to market Alberta. In the past what happened is that we worked with the federal government under their immigration policy. In fact, if an employer wanted to hire an employee through either the temporary foreign workers or through direct immigration, they had to go through the federal government.

As you're aware, the federal government's policies in the past have been to bring at least 250,000 people into Canada. The problem with that is that most of the people settled in Vancouver, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec, and a smaller percentage settled in areas like Alberta. In fact, through the normal immigration process, out of 250,000 I think that we got 16,000 last year, and 3,000 of those moved back to larger centres. The other part is that 50 per cent of the people that came through the immigration were professional people, and only 5 per cent were technical trades, so we need to make some adjustments there.

Now, I haven't met with the new immigration minister yet. I am in the process of setting up a meeting to try to find out what their policy is going to be and how we may improve the process. Through Economic Development, who is a partner in our immigration policy along with the Minister of Advanced Education and the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, we are putting a process together that will actually go out and market Alberta. I won't be doing that; the Economic Development minister will. Once we go out and market Alberta and convince the individuals to come to Alberta, then what we'll have to do is ensure that the federal government's approval processes are in place to deal with them as rapidly as possible so that they can come here.

Another one, of course, that I've been working on is with an individual restaurant owner, in fact in Edmonton here, where they said, yes, we can bring family members that want to come here and work, but the criteria you have to set up as far as giving them a stable employee for a year was not there. In other words, they could spend money, bring an employee into Alberta, and the employee could leave immediately and go somewhere else. They're making some good suggestions as to how we could allow companies like that to bring people in, work, and stay at least maybe a year on the job before they can move on to another job. I think that's another thing we need to look at, more flexibility in that area.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In 20 minutes I'm sure we can cover quite a large territory.

Mr. Cardinal: We need your help.

Mr. Martin: Oh, I know that. I know that, yes, and you're about to get it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to first of all talk, not for a long time, about the labour laws in this province and, as we have an overheated economy, to try to find some balance in terms of the employers and the employees. Of course, we will come back, first of all, to what we know about some very terrible strikes that have occurred. The most recent one was, of course, at Tyson, where you had an antilabour employer that was bound and determined on a first contract to get rid of the union. The minister and I have had this conversation, and I would hope that he would not rule this out. Finally, the union was able to win there, and they did establish a contract, and they're now settled in that particular union, with Tyson being famous throughout the world for being antilabour, sort of Arkansas first laws.

The point that I would make to the minister is that these things come and go, and as surely as night follows day, there'll be another confrontation if we do not have first contract arbitration. It seems to be working well in all the other provinces except three, especially the major provinces that have large labour forces. I think, Mr. Chairman, that first contract arbitration forces both sides to negotiate. Otherwise, somebody else is going to come in with arbitration that one or the other may not like or both of them may not like. So I think that is a very important situation. I know the minister said previously that they would look at it. When I asked him questions, he said: stay tuned. So I'm staying tuned, but a reminder that we think this is absolutely crucial.

Now, I believe that in this province we have the most unfair labour laws, you know, in the country. I know that they like to say "the world," well, maybe the most unfair labour laws in the world or the universe because that seems to be what the government talks about all the time. But, Mr. Chairman, that in particular should be, I think, a no-brainer. Nobody wants to go through the Tyson thing again, I don't think, employers or employees, if they have common sense and want some way to do it. We certainly don't have to open up the whole labour code to do that. I would hope – and I will keep putting pressure on the minister – that he begins to look at that.

I know it's not going to happen with this particular government, but if I had my druthers, I'd do as other provinces have done. When you see these particular strikes – and I go back to the Gainers strike in the 80s where you had replacement workers walking across the picket lines – that leads to a very dangerous situation, Mr. Chairman. At some point I would hope that we would look at banning replacement workers because I think strikes would be settled a lot quicker.

The only other thing that I want to talk about in the labour laws that did come up, too, that I think we should look at comes back to what the hon. members talked about: the Labour Relations Board. There is a perception – and we must be clear about this perception – that it's unfair, that the Labour Relations Board is always going to come on the side of management. I think the most recent example of that was in the Finning situation. Well, we had the example going back with health care.

I remember being here in the Assembly very early on where there were the 24-hour unions, where companies could get out of union contracts by setting up spinoff unions for 24 hours. That was a major debate. I really worry about that tendency. It again deals with our friends CLAC. It seems that they are involved here all the time. The Labour Relations Board ruled, I think, correctly on Finning and then reversed themselves with the bigger one, where you can set up subsidiaries as they did in Finning, where one company can say: well, we still own it, but we can go across the street or down the way a couple of blocks and set up another subsidiary, and therefore we don't have to belong to that same union. I think this is a very bad tendency that major corporations could start to do. Why did the Labour Relations Board rule that they still had union rights or successor rights to begin with and then turn it over? I think it's those types of decisions that always seem to go against labour that have people bothered. If people don't trust sort of the quasi-judicial boards set up and they believe that they're one-sided – and Finning was a good example – then you're not going to get the sort of co-operation that we need in this overheated economy.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, if we could begin to look – I hesitate to open up the labour laws, though, with this government because it could get worse for labour. I think those are really absolutely crucial things if there's to be some semblance of fairness. I think it makes good economic sense to have that fairness, too, as we're trying to bring skilled employees in. They want some fairness in the workplace, so I would suggest to the minister that he at least take a look at these sorts of things. Those are sort of big issues. At the very minimum I think that if the minister said that he was going to keep looking at first contract arbitration, that would at least be a start. I, for one, would applaud him over on this side if all of a sudden we were to see that.

Now, just moving along, another area in labour that doesn't fall in the labour code but is a real irritant is this division 8 with Horizon. Mr. Chairman, it bothers me that we can have this sort of act. I know it was used in the past. I believe it has been there in the tar sands. The minister can correct me, but it has probably been in the books for 30 years or so, but it was never used the same way it was used just recently to deal with the CNRL project. For the first time in 30 years the government is allowing an oil sands project to bypass normal collective bargaining with the construction trades, which guarantees working conditions, wages, and benefits for skilled tradespeople. In one case I know it has to do with overtime, I think going from double time to time and a half.

Mr. Chairman, again, I suggest that if we want to have labour peace, there has to be some fairness. I can't believe that with this other union, the union of convenience for employers, CLAC, waiting to be there all the time, this is fair. I would suggest that we need skilled tradesmen. We really do. We need to bring them in from other parts of Canada. We need to do all the things that the Member for Edmonton-Manning was talking about in terms of training. But if you have labour laws that people perceive as unfair, it's going to be very hard to get this.

Now, I know that this is not part of the labour code, but I doubt that there would be anywhere else that I am aware of in Canada that would ever have a section 8, this sort of bill, and for it to be used. I think that we'll regret that in the future. I'd hope that the minister would never use that again and would do something about getting good bargaining for us, getting good collective agreements. The building trades in the province have bent over backwards in the past to be co-operative on major projects, and, Mr. Chairman, I'm sure they would do it again, but you can't do it this way. You can't do it this way. Again, these corporations aren't exactly poverty stricken. They can afford to pay a decent wage. The Alberta advantage has to be there not only for the companies but for the employees.

I want to move from labour laws, though, into sort of the employment standards debate. I know that there's been a review. I think, from my understanding of my conversations with the minister, that we're still under review and that there won't be any announcements until next spring, perhaps, but I would like to throw out some things.

I was shocked, and maybe the minister was too, and I would like him to comment about the compassionate leave. It seems that, Mr. Chairman, we're the only province that doesn't have compassionate leave for people who are looking after relatives that are I guess dying. They can't take time off. There's no such thing as compassionate leave. This is certainly not an Alberta advantage that I think we can be proud of. I would ask the minister for his thoughts on that.

As I understand it, compassionate leave works much the same as pregnancy and parental leave. A person is allowed to return to the same job after time away. I'm told that workers in Quebec and Saskatchewan can receive up to 12 weeks of compassionate leave. The Liberal government in B.C. has changed its employment standards; it gives eight weeks. Of course the federal government has it. So I'd like to ask the minister if that's part of the review for employment standards. If not, it should be, I think.

The other comments I want to make on this are on child labour, Mr. Chairman. In this overheated economy we can't take 12-year-old kids. It's time for them to be kids. If the parents need money, that's a different issue. That should not be part of the employment standards. I would hope – again, I know the minister has made comments about it – that we look at this whole situation of child labour. I think it's wrong. I think it can lead to safety concerns. I think there are all sorts of problems. Surely employers in the fast-food industry or wherever they are can afford to do better than that.

That leads me to – and I just have one question, and I'm not sure the answer to this that minister can allude to – the employment standards if we're looking at night work. I remember in Calgary a few years ago a young woman was killed at work. Are we reviewing that whole situation? I know it happened under a federal act in Ottawa recently. Is that being reviewed, and are the standards there for people that happen to work alone at night? It's a very dangerous situation in cities that are growing. They're not the same cities that they used to be. We know that those things are there. So I'd ask the minister if that's part of the review.

The other part of the review, Mr. Chairman, that we really have to look at is the whole idea of farm workers having no employment standards. Now, nobody is suggesting that people who work on a farm are those one or two people that are there periodically. We're not talking about this. We have a growing agribusiness in this province, and for an agribusiness to not even have to go by minimum employment standards, to me, is absolutely ridiculous.

I use the example – and I've used it with the minister before – of the most recent strike at Tyson, UFCW. On the one side of the road you had people fighting, admittedly, to keep a labour union, fighting for a labour union; you had people with the same company right across the road that didn't even have employment standards. Now, does that make any sense at all? Surely, we've got to get away from this idea.

If it's a family farm, we could say one or two employees or whatever. But we have a growing agribusiness, and surely, Mr. Chairman, they should be part of the labour code. I think that's a no-brainer. If you're talking to people – you have to convince the others – talk to them about Tyson: one, a labour union; across the street, employees without even employment standards. I think that says it all. So I would hope that that would be part of this review, and I'd look forward to it.

Mr. Chairman, the other area I want to talk briefly about – there's a lot we could talk about with the WCB, but we don't have that amount of time – is the Appeals Commission. The minister had some interest in that. We keep getting more and more calls into our constituency office. I don't think I'm speaking for anybody here. The WCB and the Appeals Commission take a lot of our time. We've increased the staff over there, but there are still six months delay on the Appeals Commission. Justice delayed that long is justice denied. Now, there are other problems with the Appeals Commission about who they're hiring, and the minister knows that a lot of them are coming right from the WCB. Some people believe that there is still that culture of denial there. There seems to be a preoccupation with people moving from one step into the other. Surely we can do better with the Appeals Commission in terms of the delays, and I wonder if the minister can give us an update on what's happening there. Why are we increasing employees from 33 to 50, yet the length of appeals is still longer and longer. Perhaps he could talk to us about that.

In the remaining time I just want to quickly turn to Alberta Works. The minister has alluded to this. It's nice, yes, that there was a 5 per cent increase, but I would suggest that in this day and age, especially if you live in the major cities – I think I have figures here that if you have one child and yourself, you'd make 900 and some dollars. I would just ask any Member of the Legislative Assembly if they could live on that. The minister has alluded that the people that he wanted are not there now. I think he said that roughly half of the 25,000 are people that can't work and never will be able to work, and a lot of those people are falling through the cracks. I mention that because I've talked to the minister before about the Winspear fund, a private fund that's really picking up this sort of work.

Just let me give the minister two or three examples here of how these people are falling through the cracks and are having to go to people like Winspear. It's nice that they do it, but it shouldn't be their responsibility. They have other things to do. Just a couple of examples, and these are the type of people that I think the minister wants to help.

Here's a disabled student who registered for courses at Concordia College, a grant of $400 that they handed out. This young woman is a student at Concordia College. She was registered in a career development program but was unable to work during the summer break due to health problems. She had to make a deposit to secure her courses for the next term when her student loan would kick in. Income supports would not pay for this. Now, this is a person that is trying to pull herself up, if you like, and get to work. Surely, that's what we would want them to do. That's the type of things that are happening. Even the 5 per cent increase is not going to deal with this.

Here's another one. A young woman on income support wanted to take courses at Olds College. This young woman was on income support as an unemployable client. She was registered in a career development program but was unable to work during the summer break. Her counsellor felt that the Olds program would be useful to her training program and would help her explore future job options. It would be a one-time occurrence. Income support would not cover that. Again, precisely, Mr. Minister, the type of people that you want to help, trying to help themselves but not getting that little extra.

Another one here: a grandmother with the custody of grandchildren needed to relocate. They gave her a grant of $700. This woman was married for many years and raised four children. She has legal custody of her grandchildren. Her husband became involved with addictions, and she left him. She had found accommodations and paid the damage deposit. She works for $7.50 an hour. Social assistance would not help her because her income exceeds $750 per month. She was in need of assistance to pay the first month's rent and to help pay for the groceries until her next paycheque as she had used her available money to pay the damage deposit. Again, a person trying to help herself, Mr. Chairman.

Finally, one other one: a grant of $500. This woman was on income support of $635 per month. Her rent was $600. So she's meeting her rent costs but not eating properly. It was not taking care of her personal needs. She was malnourished and very depressed. So her social worker was working to get her support increased and help her find work. These are surely the types of people that we should be helping. These are people trying to help themselves, Mr. Chairman, and I think we really need to take a look at that.

Let me just conclude. The minister talked about the labour review. Correct me if I'm wrong. I thought he said that they would be coming back with this by the fall. I would hope that one of the things he would look at – and I only have 20 seconds here – would be with the Minister of Education. If we're going to deal with people, that dropout rate is one of the major concerns that we're going to have in a labour review in this province.

I think that I'm near the end of my time. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Those are good comments, of course. I know that the hon. member and I have worked together on issues like this for, I guess, over 10 years now, maybe longer. We do share similar concerns about the needs of people that are not expected to work, or the high-needs area of our public out there.

The first area he mentioned was in relation to the first contract arbitration. Yes, that is an important area, and we've discussed it back and forth. I've asked my department to pull all the other contracts that are in place. The last one I was reviewing – and the member and I discussed it – is the B.C. model. Yes, I intend to look at these models, and if there's anything that would be suitable for Alberta, of course, I'd have to take it through the process to start with: the standing policy committee, cabinet, full caucus, and then legislation if that is what's required.

When you look at the labour relations issue itself in Alberta, we do quite well. You know, there are, I believe, about 1,200 or so collective agreements; 99.4 per cent of the collective agreements were agreed upon without any major labour disruption. It's very unfortunate that the Lakeside Packers situation went the way it did because everyone gets hurt when that happens: the workers, the community, the industry also. I did tour that plant. Some improvements have been made; no doubt, more will be made. The local union member, of course, was there with us, and I gave him my card along with my cell number where he can phone me any time, 24 hours a day. If he thinks as a local union representative that there is something wrong, that the company is not living up to their commitments, he would call me immediately, and I would go down there immediately to sit down again with the local union rep and also the manager from the company. So those doors are open, and I hope that he does call me if there's a problem. You know, if you're talking to them – I'm sure they call sometimes – make sure you let us know because I have no problem going there.

At this time they feel that things are improving and that, you know, the company is doing some changes. I guess that, unfortunately, maybe it took some form of a strike to improve the situation. If that's what it did, then that's good. Hopefully, we shouldn't have to have a strike to improve working situations in industry.

The other item you mentioned, of course, is division 8. As you're aware, that was used a number of times in Alberta in other locations before. At this time because there is a legal challenge filed already, I won't comment on it here. But I will ask my staff to look at the Blues and Hansard and give you whatever comment we can within our rights without getting in trouble with the law. So I promise you that we will do that.

The employment standards, of course, as you're aware, are under review. You know, the process is under way, and definitely compassionate care is being considered as part of the review. The review, no doubt, will include the youth workers you mentioned and the night workers, et cetera. So far the government has received input from about 5,500 Albertans during the public consultation process. That also involved about 750 employers. We are currently analyzing all of the feedback we've received to date from the discussion guides and also the telephone surveys.

There are a number of employment standards that require further consideration. We anticipate that there will be follow-up with affected stakeholders on technical aspects of the code, and we are in the process of planning these consultation sessions. It's been 18 years since the last employment standards review. That's a long time. When the economy is booming like it is in Alberta, it's a long time. We intend to finish the process by March of '07, so hopefully, you know, if there's any legislative changes that are going to be required, we can do them at that time. It will also deal with the youth workers, of course, in the whole process.

The other issue you mentioned is the issue of farm workers. We've talked about that issue before. When you're talking about the farm operations themselves, farming is a very, very important industry in Alberta. A lot of farmers are struggling at this time. With the way things are set up, to implement new standards or conditions would probably create further hardship for the agriculture industry itself in Alberta. The hon. member and I have discussed the issue of the cookie factory, for example. Well, that might be a little different situation than the actual farm operation. It's something that, again, we'll review further and maybe drop you a note.

The Workers' Compensation Board, of course, is an independent body. We just have legislation. It's owned and operated by the companies themselves that pay into the compensation fund. Again, I will review Hansard and get them to respond directly to you, with copies of letters to myself. If there is anything we can do to improve the situation, of course, we'll continue working on that. That is our target: to ensure that when someone gets hurt, the application is processed as quickly as possible. I think that that's improved drastically because I remember that one time it took so long that the people had to go on welfare so that they could continue to meet their financial obligations and then had to pay back the system. That's not there anymore. It doesn't take that long now to approve a package, so that's a step in the right direction. I think that the backlog of the appeals process is also improving, but it can be better. You can be assured that whatever we can do, we'll continue working with the board and their staff to make it better.

The last item you mentioned, of course, is the 12,000 or so people we have that are not expected to work. Yes, I agree that we'll have to continue monitoring that situation closely and looking at how we may assist that particular group of people.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've just got a few items that I would like to discuss to get some clarity on from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. I guess, first and foremost, I must compliment his staff for their diligence. Every time the staff from my offices phone him, they get back to us right away and certainly help us. Even though we have a flamboyant economy, we still have some issues in labour.

I guess I'm wondering about moving ahead on Alberta Works. What happens sometimes with some of the people that are caught in this position where they're trying to better themselves to move on so they become more self-sufficient is if they get their wages up just a bit, then there's a clawback or they are unable to get health benefits. So I would hope that what we would do for these people that are trying is that we would take a more collaborative approach to work with them.

Then on the aspect of your number one core business. As I review that and think about it, I know that, you know, it's very positive, and I appreciate that. I know that we're working on it. Alberta has a productive workforce that meets the needs of the economy today and into the future, but I guess what I'm really looking at now, being that labour is short in my region – and it's not only the skilled. We really need some help in some of the hotels and fast foods, where a lot of them now are willing to set up accommodations and everything else to have them come in and help them move along. So I'm just wondering how the minister is working on that issue with the federal government. I realize that it's not his portfolio, immigration, but I'm sure that he's working with Economic Development, too, to make sure that we get these people in.

Then, I guess, in co-operation with the aspect of the Minister of Advanced Education, are we enticing and working with some of the people on Alberta Works to try and move them into a trade? That is going to be another area that is going to make it awful hard on our regions now because I know a lot of our trade people are getting to the age of retirement.

One other area that I was wondering about too: the co-operation and the understanding we need with a lot of parents now, where their children are of the age that they don't need as much looking after. I know that we worked with the Yellowhead regional consortium to get some money out of the Advanced Education department to move forward to have a nursing program in our region. Therefore, they live in the area, so then they don't have to travel that far for their practicum, yet they can work in the area. So I'm just wondering if we're working with Advanced Education to look at some of these because we have a lot of people that with a little bit of enticement and that, we can get some of these people back in the workforce.

The other thing I want to thank the minister for is the aspect of the co-operation that we get in some of my aboriginal communities, especially with the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation in Grande Cache, where they are working with the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development on partnerships with the industry. So we've been able to move along on that aspect too.

The bottom line is: what I'm really looking for is help on the aspect of being able to look at the labour force we have now and where we can involve other people in the area. How are we campaigning to get that? I mean, when you look at your number one goal, that's where we need to move. I know that we've got competent staff in the region, but I think we need some stronger direction so that we can move that so that we can get more people in the workforce to help these different industries. It's getting to dire straits now. You're going through the major communities now. We've got so many people working in bush camps. Well, when you come into the local towns of Edson, Hinton, Jasper, Grande Cache, a lot of the facilities that have been open 24 hours now are closed because they can't get staff.

So if the minister can sort of give me some insight on what he's trying to do with our other departments and with the federal government to try and alleviate and bring on more people that we can get into the workforce.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just very briefly I'll answer some of the questions, but some we'll do in writing. I'd just like to thank you for your concerns and your positive comments and good suggestions because it is a critical area. I think your area probably faces the same problems or the same challenges that most jurisdictions in Alberta are facing. You know, when you go back 15 years, it was completely the opposite. There were no jobs or very few jobs around. Today we are faced with too many jobs and not enough people, so I'd rather have the problem we have today because it's something that's positive, and it's something that I think we can handle.

You mentioned the Alberta Works and some of the policies we have in place in relation to clawbacks. Most of our programs are designed to encourage people to get back into the workforce. I'll get my department to look into that specific area of yours to find out if we are administering that office differently than any other office because we operate with just the opposite attitude. We'll do almost anything within our policies to ensure that transition takes place when people are ready to get back into the workforce. So, you know, I promise you that.

Of course, you mentioned the labour shortages, especially in hotels and the fast-food industry. Again, that's a challenge we have across Alberta. I think the labour force strategy, the 10-year strategy we are developing, will deal with both short- and long-term strategies.

We have to look at all the areas he mentioned, including immigration and the First Nations, and I'll give you an example. In Canada there are about 200,000 First Nations youth between 15 and 25 years old that could be trained and could be put back into the workforce. I am arranging a meeting with the federal minister of Indian affairs right now to talk about a couple of things: off-reserve housing for one, and the other one, of course, is the labour force strategy and labour problems we have. For the 200,000 youth that are there now, some on reserves, the unemployment is very high. It could run 70 to 80 per cent or 90 per cent, yet the industries are next door.

Where we've made changes and we've proven that when you do social policy changes like we have in Alberta, the unemployment rate of First Nations off the reserve is only 9 per cent. Yet if you go to a reserve next door, it's 80 to 90 per cent, so there is something wrong. What I believe is wrong – and this is what I'll be talking to the minister of Indian affairs about: to look at changing the social and economic policies on the reserves like we did in Alberta.

You can see. When you go back to '92-93, which I mentioned earlier, the welfare caseload was 97,000, a $1.7 billion budget, 5,400 staff. We had welfare offices all over the place, and 80 per cent of the dollars at the time were being used by single people and couples without children that were ready to go to work.

You mentioned assisting people to get back into the workforce. I think Alberta has done well because the caseload today in Alberta – we have no welfare offices, we have 59 employment centres and 19 co-locations with the federal government, and the caseload of employables and trainables is almost nil. So they are back into the workforce. A lot went through training programs.

It's not only my department that does it. Advanced Education was heavily involved in it right off the bat. In fact, we used to put through sometimes 35,000 individuals that were on assistance at one time through training programs, and they've become independent and self-sufficient. So I think that portion as far as the opportunity to train more people that are on assistance is limited because I think most of them have gone back into the workforce. But we will continue working with the federal government, this time in relation to the aboriginal issues with the federal minister.

The other person, of course, we need to work with is on the issue of immigration. I won't repeat myself because I already mentioned the processes we have in place in relation to immigration.

One area I may not have mentioned was the issue of individuals – for example, if a restaurant owner, say, in Edson wanted to bring a member, say, from a foreign country to come and work for them, the policy that we have presently is that, yes, they can come and work. But as soon as the employee gets settled in with housing, health care, and everything else, they could leave that employer and go to another employer. Those are some of the things I think we need to look at to ensure that there is some protection for those people that can find employees in other countries and bring them down here. They cover all the costs, et cetera, et cetera.

So, again, thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few points here. First of all, I'd like to compliment the minister on being in the right area and being sensitive to the people that he serves in the department. I think it's commendable. I also would like to commend him on being open and able to listen to comments and give some reply.

Let me just comment first of all, then, that if I understand the mission of the department, it is to assist and support the clients that he deals with, the people he deals with. I was wondering if he would just tell us or answer the question of how the new approach to daycare will affect the clients that he works with. I'd be very interested. I think there are a fair number – and I may be wrong about this, and he'll correct me – of single women with children. I just wonder what the implication is there for them in terms of the support service you offer them.

The other thing I'd like to talk about just briefly is job placement and career development. The thing I'm wondering about here – and maybe you want to comment – is the training of your staff. I've listened to you answer questions, and you're suggesting that a lot of the staff are being put back into careers, vocational. The implication is that you're looking at vocational counselling, career development, and that kind of thing. So maybe you could tell me about your staff's background because that intrigues me. Do they have counselling training that you're looking for? Do they have experience in testing, for example? Do they have experience in the world of work? That kind of thing. I'm just trying to get a feel for that kind of thing.

The other question I'd like to ask you – and I'm rushing quickly here – is to comment on the mechanisms you use in the department to interface with business: what kinds of things come about and the specific processes you may use for that. I'd be interested in knowing that.

The question, again, that I'd just mention that I'd like to also ask you is on youth employment. I noticed – and I'm not sure, Mr. Chairman, if I'm allowed to use the name of the company. Anyway, I noticed, getting coffee the last two or three weeks, that some young people are able to handle it very well, and for some people I think it's over their head. I think the member from the third party mentioned today child labour. What I'm wondering is if there isn't some way of doing work exploration and giving kids of that nature – you may want to use some summer initiative. You may want to do it with other departments of government. I can think of – what's it called? – the ecology corps that they trained. I'm thinking more about a vocational setting and training for students that may be open, to be mature enough to go into these projects with small business. I think that would enhance the summer population, too, to be able to do something productive. Again, that takes money, and you know more about where you can get that kind of thing. But I think there's a need for that.

The other aspect I think, Mr. Minister – and it's a dream of mine – is that we look at the Edmonton region to develop what I'd call an exploratory centre for careers. I know that now we don't have the large vocational schools anymore, but I'm wondering if industry and government could meet and look at what I'd call an exploration centre so that people that you're dealing with and also some of our people that may go into apprenticeship programs in the schools could go in and get an experienced level of exploring what they may want to do in the future and meet people from industries. Maybe even like a career fair concept of some type.

Now, I guess apprenticeship is one other thing that I'd like to mention. I'm not sure exactly, again, how your department, sir, interfaces with schools, but I think that there's a lot more we could be doing in that area of schools, especially for kids that are not going to be in the academic stream. I think that we have to first of all – and this is not your area – have good career counsellors in our schools. In many of our schools that's lacking, and hopefully we'll see some change in that. I think there's a whole need to work with disadvantaged students in schools and make sure that they have access to some of the things that you talked about earlier.

I would just mention quickly one other comment. I don't know if this is the forum to do this, but I'll just mention it. One of my constituents was offered a job in your department, sir. Unfortunately, at the eleventh hour, after quitting her job with the city of Edmonton and then receiving a letter from your department that she had a job, about a week before she was to report, she was told that she didn't have the job that she was going to get. She didn't have it any longer. Now, I haven't heard from her lately. I'm just suggesting that in personnel practices, I think it's very important that there's a sensitivity here. This particular lady that I'm talking about was a single mother with a child, and maybe she had some experiences in her life that I don't know about. Maybe I could eventually come and see you privately when I hear from her and see how she's doing.

So I'll just leave those comments with you, sir, and hopefully I can hear a few of your comments. Thank you very much, and keep up the good work. I appreciate it.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much for your positive comments and compliments and, of course, the continued good working relationship between us. I appreciate that.

You mentioned the new approach to daycare and what impact that may have on our programs. Of course, what we do is that, number one, we don't claw back. If there's additional money provided to individuals under this program, we'll not be clawing back the money. In addition to that, we will monitor the situation very closely and determine what impact it has, if any. If it's a negative impact, then we'll have to look at a policy change. I don't mind doing that because that is a high-needs area. You know, both the daycare and also the day home concept works quite well because a lot of families use the day homes.

In relation to training of staff, from social workers to career counsellors, you're exactly right. It's a good point because it's not mentioned very often. When we started back in '92-93 to reform the welfare system, we had 5,400 staff. A lot of the staff were trained social workers, and their role was to try and counsel individuals. In most cases the only time they had, because of caseloads, was to provide financial support. These were vouchers or welfare cheques. When we started reforming the system, one of the concerns that staff had – they said: “Yes, we can put people back into the workforce. Yes, we can reduce the number of clients we have, the number of files we have. But what happens to our job?” In '92-93 I promised: “Yes, years down the road you’re going to be a career counsellor, a job placement officer. Most of the clients you’ll be dealing with will be placed in jobs or training programs, and we’ll only provide the social supports that are necessary to ensure that people become independent and self-sufficient.” That’s exactly what happened. Now most of our people are trained career counsellors, and 85 per cent of the people, in fact, that come to our offices in Edmonton here are with the general public. Only a small percentage have some financial or social support programs.

So, yes, the criteria have changed. People are now career counsellors, job placement officers. Placement officers even do follow-up on a job. We’ve gone that far, even, for the hard-core cases. I can tell you one thing: the clients are much happier. Nobody wants to be on welfare. We’ve almost eliminated welfare in Alberta. Also, the staff: the staff are more positive when they see positive results, and I find the staff are a lot happier. That is one of the reasons, also, that I came back to this department. I purposely asked our Premier to bring me back here because I had some concerns in caucus, you know: you have no welfare caseload, but you’re asking for $700 million to operate the department. My argument is: look, it takes all that money to keep people in transition to the workforce rather than getting back on the welfare caseload.

The other promise I made is to ensure that their jobs are protected as career counsellors, job placement officers, et cetera, et cetera, instead of handing out welfare cheques and vouchers. So I think that’s been really, really positive.

As far as exploratory centres for careers, that’s a good point. We need to do a lot more of that. NAIT has a number of programs right now where they go out into various areas to be exposed to welding, carpentry, and different programs. These are mobile units.

One of the things that’s popped up lately – and you’re exactly right on it – is the issue of vocational schools. Where the schools at one time had equipment for mechanics, equipment for welders, carpentry, cooking, and a number of other programs, for some reason – I don’t know what the reason is – a lot of those have closed in a number of areas. I don’t know if it’s finances or what, but it’s something I think we need to activate because when you look at the apprenticeship program, although the apprenticeship program is not under my department, the average age of a journeyman in Canada is about 51 years old. [interjection] Yeah, that’s right. Almost as old as me.

The average age of a person completing a four-year program to be a journeyman is 26 years old, yet if you go to a school in Athabasca in my constituency or Lac La Biche, that region, over 60 per cent of the students want to take technical trades. Why are we not, you know – if a person knows at grade 10 that they want to be a journeyman carpenter, why is it taking so long? Why is it taking from grade 10 until a person is 26 years old to get their first ticket? So we definitely need to improve that area.

The other area that was important and he mentioned, of course, is youth employment and stuff. That is a very sensitive area. The way we have it set up right now, of course, is that the employer and the family have to agree that the person can be employed in certain jobs. In fact, there has to be an agreement signed by the parent and also the employer, and a copy of that comes to our department. If there is a complaint, then we’ll investigate. In fact, sometimes we’ll investigate without a complaint and have a look and see how things are going.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to participate in this budget debate on Human Resources and Employment. This ministry, as was mentioned more than once, is quite an important ministry, and its work is greatly appreciated by everyone in this House and the people that its services affect.

4:40

If you look at departments under this minister like Alberta Works, including employment training services, income support services, child support services, and health benefits, more notably the Alberta Blue Cross drug benefit list and the drug benefit supplement – and I can probably talk at length about that because I’m a pharmacist, as you know, but I won’t. Employment standards is another area, and workplace health and safety, immigration, labour relations, professions and occupations, labour market information for businesses, and all that stuff. Under the purview of this minister you also get certain boards: Alberta Labour Relations Board, as was mentioned, the personnel administration office, the PAO, Workers’ Compensation Board, and the Appeals Commission through the Workers’ Compensation Board. So it’s really quite an extensive and far-reaching department, if you will.

[Reverend Abbott in the chair]

I have to say that this whole business around Human Resources and Employment and the work that this ministry does is interesting to me. Having said that, I also find it sometimes difficult to fully comprehend. Honestly here, I’m trying to fully understand the ins and outs of this ministry, especially when it comes to programs that are geared toward the needy, the sick, disenfranchised, or disabled. Of course, what adds to the confusion sometimes from a layman’s standpoint, somebody who is new to this House, are situations or instances where one might compare programs under the purview of this minister to similar programs or others, like programs that are under, for example, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, who in turn shares some of her responsibility with the minister of health. So you get this bit here, that bit there type of situation.

In light of recent cabinet changes and cabinet growth I actually looked at this this morning, and I’m, like: why don’t we consolidate these programs from all these different ministries into one central area? If you’re a person who is in need of care or you’re a person who needs to be looked after or cared for, there is one department. We can maybe rename the Department of Seniors and Community Supports to the department of seniors and community services and just have it as one collective agency that looks after all of these sort of holistically.

Some of those who need AISH are also afflicted with disability, and some of them are also trying to be trained and to get back to work, so it might be one person seeking support or seeking help from three different departments. Why not have it in one central area, providing that service collectively or holistically? This is definitely one of the areas that my colleague from Edmonton-Manning is looking at as the Official Opposition critic, you know, and it’s hopefully going to be part of our next platform in the next election.

Part of my intrigue again, Mr. Chairman, also stems from some work I did personally and town hall meetings that I hosted together with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie. Under the leadership and guidance of our honourable and esteemed colleague from Edmonton-Manning we held meetings in Edmonton, Calgary, and Red Deer when the Alberta Liberal opposition was reviewing the employment standards. We met with many Albertans. Some were workers, be it unionized or not. We met with employers, mostly small-business owners. We met with students, and we even met with parents of children who are now allowed, as young as 12 years old, to join the workforce, sort of like cheap labour. This is a move that definitely was opposed. I know that the minister is faced with pressures, you know, and certain realities that he has to work with, but this is definitely a direction that my colleagues and I did not support. Anyway, I did learn a lot from those trips; hence, my interest in attending today.

Employment standards in particular must in my opinion be thoroughly and periodically evaluated, and they should be improved. We're looking at things like wages, working conditions, safety, the issues surrounding holidays, the relationship between the employer and the employee, and things like that. I realize that the hon. minister and his staff are trying very hard to address those situations. Like I said, it is not an easy task, but in my opinion a lot more can be achieved.

Most of my technical questions from today's budget estimates have already been asked by the previous speakers, Mr. Chairman, but one question in particular that I would like to elaborate on pertains to minimum wage. Even with the increase last year we're still in the bottom 50 per cent if we compare Alberta to the other provinces and territories. Surely, in this day and age and with our massive revenues and surpluses we can readdress this issue. I would suggest, personally, an annual review of minimum wage and tying it to market-basket measures and/or inflation. You know, you have many indicators that are readily available that would tell you what's fair and what's the acceptable minimum and so on. Perhaps we can even take it a step further and stipulate that it should not be lower than, say, 40 per cent of the Alberta average hourly wage.

I have printed some press releases from the ministry's website. I note here that on January 31, 2006, there was the Building and Educating Alberta's Workforce survey, which was conducted and, as it says here, "developed to guide Alberta's labour market development and investments over the next 10 years (2006-2016) to ensure individuals and businesses are able to compete within an increasingly global and knowledge-based economy." Now, this is wonderful, but that was really what triggered my colleagues and I to actually tour the province. We felt that an online survey was not adequate. We're faced with similar restrictions or similar objectionable practices currently as we discuss things like the third way, Mr. Chairman, where the consultation process was very limited and not open or accessible enough. So we feel that to do it online is only one way, not the only way.

We know that on March 10 the consultation process for that particular purpose was concluded. We know that the minister also announced that his consultation included certain meetings, and his communications people highlighted in that press release that 60 key stakeholder groups were involved. So I would be very interested to know which interest groups were involved, and I would appreciate receiving the results or the findings of that consultation. We think that if we're looking at 2006 to 2016, if we're laying the course and charting our path for the next decade, we definitely have to do a tonne of consultation here and involve as many people as possible, from employee and employer groups to chambers of commerce to parents of people who are in the workplace and so on and so forth.

So again we're urging the minister to not only rely on online consultations from now on and to share the results with the opposition and with the people of this province.

I talked about minimum wage, but I also have this press release, which was released on March 3, 2006, talking about hard-working Albertans creating thousands of full-time jobs, which is great. I am actually happy to be living and working in this province at this stage. It's amazing. But, again, my overriding argument will always be that a lot more could be done. Alberta's unemployment rate, as per this press release, "remained the lowest of all the provinces for the second year in a row," which is great, and "Alberta's average hourly wage continues to climb . . . an 8.7 per cent increase" from 2003 to 2005, and it now hovers at about $21.39.

So back to my 40 per cent suggestion. If we do a minimum of 40 per cent of the average hourly wage and call that our minimum wage, I think that would not only be fair, but it would be applauded by everybody. I don't think it would necessarily add any unnecessary burden to the businesses we have in this province.

Another layer I would add, Mr. Chairman, is to expand something like the STEP program, the summer temporary employment program, which was designed to encourage students to work and encourage employers to hire people and subsidize that wage or salary as an incentive to small business. I always advocate for small business. It's also part of my experience as a pharmacist working in an independent store. Sometimes it is difficult to compete with the bigger firms or the more established companies. So why not look at this as sort of a tool to level the playing field and have more, you know, availability or more access to small business owners? So now they can attract, you know, energetic, educated, smart individuals rather than just competing with the bigger businesses on wages only. Some of those small businesses, of course, are family operated or owned, and it would really be difficult for them to compete.

Potentially, we can even think about the third way, as I mentioned, because once or if it is implemented against the wishes of Albertans, this disparity, this gap, between small businesses and the larger firms is going to get wider and bigger. You know, why would an employee apply to work in a small store or sort of a family operation when he or she can go to a bigger firm and get their private health insurance paid for by that firm? This is definitely going to be restrictive on small business, and we know that the Canadian Taxpayers Federation and people like that are looking at this. There are going to be implications and consequences, and I would urge the minister to maybe look at this from his department to see if maybe an incentive or a subsidy could be offered for smaller firms to be able to afford retaining or attracting employees.

Another issue was that when we discussed in this House extending presumptive coverage for cardiovascular events for firefighters, I and my colleagues in the Liberal caucus wanted to extend that presumptive coverage to a week instead of just 24 hours, but this suggestion was rejected by the government members. We could have compromised, perhaps, and settled on about 48 or 72 hours, but again there was no success there. We also wanted to extend the same protection to other emergency response personnel, like ambulance workers, paramedics, police officers in certain situations, but again we did not meet with support from the government side.

What was amazing, Mr. Chairman, however, or really puzzling is that the government didn't allow us to try to extend the same courtesy to volunteer firefighters, who work just as hard as their employed counterparts. So it didn't really make sense that, you know, if you're employed as a firefighter, you would get this, however small, 24 hours, but if you're a volunteer, then you don't get it. They do the same work, and they are faced with the same threats and stresses. So again I would urge the hon. minister to revisit this whole issue and either himself or through a private member bring it back to the House and look at this, you know, with the same favourable eye as we did in the fall sitting. It's the angle of fairness and care.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your indulgence, and I thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Yeah. Just very briefly. Most of the questions we'll put in writing for you. One area I'd like to ask you to assist is in relation to the STEP program and small business. Maybe you can, you know, provide some information, and we can sit down and look at what options may be available, just what thoughts may be there to improve the situation. There's nothing out of the question, you know. We can do that.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The other area you mentioned that I just want to touch on briefly is the issue of providing a program for seniors, persons with developmental disabilities, children in high-needs areas. You mentioned that maybe, you know, one department or one ministry should provide all those services. At one time, when I became the minister of family and social services and aboriginal affairs – I mentioned earlier the caseload, the dollars spent, et cetera, under one ministry. We looked after family and social services, we looked after children's services, we looked after persons with developmental disabilities and also, of course, aboriginal affairs under that department.

The whole restructuring, then, was to go in the other direction, actually, where we'd, you know, take the people who are employable and trainable back into the workforce. While we did that, then we'd redirect the dollars and actually develop the Ministry of Children's Services, for an example, its own ministry with a budget that concentrates on dealing with children and families to improve the service to the people. The cost is about the same. The cost hasn't really increased that much. Then there are persons with developmental disabilities and seniors, who now have their own minister, their own budget, and they concentrate, again, on providing a really good service for those high-needs areas. Of course, the other one is aboriginal affairs. Now, it also has its own ministry, and that's a very high-needs area. They concentrate on providing high-quality services because it's a high-needs area. Then the department I operate now with Alberta Works and those other programs support people to get back into training and into the workforce. So I think that that has worked quite well.

No doubt, when you really look at the overall cost – when I took over as sole minister with those four high-needs areas, my budget then was $1.7 billion. When you look at the combination of Children's Services, Seniors, PDD, my department, and the aboriginal affairs department, I don't think they run $2 billion. I think it's less than that, yet there are four ministers and four departments concentrating on providing a good service for those high-needs areas. So I think it's working quite well. It's never perfect. You know, it's a challenging area, but I think that Alberta has done quite well in providing services to the high-needs area. I have to agree that there are pockets where we need improvement. Again, you know, the issue of people that are not expected to work: we need to monitor that very, very closely to ensure that what we are doing is right.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There are some further items that I'd just like to touch on somewhat. The labour market strategy that the government is looking at has identified a need down the road, quite a ways down the road actually, a shortage of a hundred thousand people that we may need. I really haven't seen the absolute proof for that, and it seemingly is something that is far down the road, that you have to be very, very careful of.

Many of the members in this House were in Alberta when we went through the downturn in the 1980s and saw, I think, the construction portion of the Alberta gross domestic product drop from 12 per cent to 2 per cent. We saw the multinational oil and gas companies go elsewhere for various reasons, and the oil prices died. Basically, a lot of the activity ended, and there was no work. A lot of people that I speak to now are happy that there is lots of work right now but are very concerned that we might face the same thing in just a very few years. There really is not overwhelming evidence that we might need a hundred thousand. We may need more. I would just say that we must be very, very careful and prudent in looking at how we deal with our workforce.

Now, immigration is important. It is something that will determine the future of many businesses, will determine the future of many industries, and indeed will determine the future of Alberta. The use of temporary foreign workers is something that has become very distasteful and an issue for many workers, especially in the building trades, because many of them think that it's being used as something to further the interests of some employers who just want to avoid them.

The nature of trying to bring immigration in and then using temporary foreign workers brings about some inherent difficulties. The labour force strategy identified that retention in Alberta is a very real problem. Retention is something that is very difficult if you don't have certain factors in place for a worker, like their family here. Certainly, a temporary foreign worker will not have their family here, and they will get pressures to leave and will want to leave very quickly to see them and do those sorts of things. I heard the former minister of transportation talk about immigration at a west Edmonton business luncheon here just some weeks ago, and he's talked of meeting the leader of communist Vietnam. That leader in communist Vietnam said that he would love to drop 200,000 people on the international market and have them send home money because he had lots of unemployed. He said that they could be trained to build any project, and I'm sure they could. Vietnamese are very resilient and very intelligent and very capable people.

But I don't know if that would be the real solution for Alberta, to have those workers come in as temporary foreign workers. I expect we'll see an expansion in the provincial nominee program given some of the statements of the federal government. I think the provincial nominee program and to bring actual immigrants in is probably a much better way to do it because somebody who comes in with a family, somebody who comes in with the idea that they will be staying here and will be working and living and becoming an Albertan will work to have them stay here, will solve that problem of retention that has been identified as something that is so difficult for Alberta for some reason over the years in competition with some of the bigger cities that we see in the rest of the country and certainly in the continent, to be truthful.

The need to access some of our present unemployed and to deal with the problem of vocational training – and this deals with education as well – is something that is of severe concern to many employers: numbers like over a million unemployed youth in Canada between the ages of 18 and 25. Some different figures are used for the apprenticeship starting age, but I've seen averages of the actual age being 25, and that seems to just be a total disconnect.

As has been mentioned by the minister, part of the problem is: why do we not have as much vocational training in our schools? I've spoken to teachers and administrators and principals, and they say that you can't get a tradesman to teach anymore because he's going to make a lot more out in the field. Maybe there's some need to combine some compensation programs somehow to deal with that.

There's need to somehow look at how we give incentives to our high schools and our junior high schools for vocational training because they're dumping their programs. For example, Jasper Place composite is not composite anymore; it's Jasper Place high school. We have these things which are working against vocational training.

RAP, the registered apprenticeship program, has worked nicely, some employers and some apprentices have told me, in a few trades but not in very many. A number of employers have told me time and again that they're just getting the dregs. They're just getting the outcasts and the people that don't want to work and maybe are problems. So they've rejected the RAP program. There are very few in that right now, so I think we have to somehow look at extending that past mechanics and extending it so that it actually works to attract kids somehow and to give some sort of incentive for them to be involved in there.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview mentioned the importance of first contract legislation, and I think there are economic arguments to move ahead on that. Certainly, in Alberta there has not been a high record of strikes. I think all Albertans have a can-do mentality and want to be working and don't want to be out on strike, and when they do so, they're doing so for a reason. Certainly, when you look at something like the building trades, I don't think they've had a strike or a strike in the oil sands or anything like that for a generation. Nobody as much as can even remember one. Some have been long in their career and have not even seen that. There's a commitment to build, a commitment to work, and a commitment to make things happen in our province.

I hear now, though, that there's beginning to be less of a problem with the jingle in the jeans, sort of thing. There's less of an incentive now because of the economics. There will always be people that will want to get a stake together, who will want to work, who want to work as much as they can. You know, a lot of the actual restaurants and other businesses in Edmonton and in other areas, being farms and such, have been started by tradesmen who got their stake together in the oil industry and in the oil sands and other areas.

Employment standards now puts a limit of 24 and four on the number of days a person can work, with 24 days on and four days off becoming a very overused way of scheduling work. I know some employers that actually do that and do far more than that and get away with it. To extend that, I think, would make things far more difficult in areas like my riding of Edmonton-Manning and, indeed, I think, all over the province where there's no parent at home for extended periods of time because they're working. A lot of these parents just don't want to be away that long. If we're setting up our workforce, I think we're putting in place a time bomb for lesser productivity just to take short-term needs into effect. I think most of those workers would rather not be forced because when they are in that situation, usually they're told, "That way or the highway," and there's no third way.

The labour costs are not, I think, a huge issue in Alberta. I look at page 123, the Alberta advantage in the economic outlook there are 11 cities, and Edmonton has the lowest cost of many major cities in North America on this graph, and Calgary is number four. The actual labour costs have not been high.

Productivity in our economy is affected by and how we're going to be building some of these projects will be affected quite a bit by things such as hours of work. In employments and standards we have to look very, very carefully at it because we could cause problems in retaining workers who just don't want to be forced to work those types of hours. We don't really have the labour costs. They're not a huge problem in Alberta. It's odd because we have a booming economy, and there are quite a few people that would like to come here and work.

The immigration thing I'd touch on again. I think the Member for West Yellowhead had some very good statements on the problems that small business is having. We've got to be careful about not looking after those problems. Many of these small businesses are restaurants. I mentioned another time in this House how a very nice restaurant in my area has cut their lunch hour trade off because they just can't get a sous-chef. At the same time two sous-chefs I talked to the same day – one was actually a full chef – were heading out to the rigs. You know, they could make twice as much. That's the nature of this particular boom. The nature of that boom is that many of those people once those wells are drilled will be back into other areas, and it might not be a hundred thousand. They won't necessarily be drilling all those wells forever because there are only so many areas to drill, and we've got to be careful.

Some of the other areas that deal with productivity – I think productivity is something that we should always try and remember. Some people look at it as a difficult and a dirty word. The transportation issues in and around Edmonton: we will see some changes in where people are working and what jobs Albertans are working at.

A project just talked about recently, it's an Inco project in the minister's riding, will draw a lot of people who are presently working in Lloydminster and in Fort McMurray and that could have been working on some of the other projects. They will be drawn into those upgraders. There could be many, many thousands, and we may have a productivity problem because of transportation in the northeast of Edmonton and even in the Redwater/Athabasca area. We've seen it actually in the Scotford project. We've seen it in my riding at Christmastime, when everybody who are all working outside of the city right now came back to the city.

It's something that people call counterintuitive. The Edmonton Journal couldn't understand why jobs are down in Edmonton, 16,000 in its last report. It seems like everybody is working, and everybody is employed, and everything is up. Well, the thing that's happening is they're all in the bush. They're all at Lloyd, they're all at Fort McMurray, they're all in the Peace, they're all in the northeast Peace and B.C., and they do come back. Once many of them come back to work on the upgraders, we're going to see a change in the labour market, and we're going to see some real demands on transportation on the north side. Many of us saw that at Christmastime, when many of them had a week off, and that will be amplified and made worse. We, perhaps, should be looking at that as a productivity as well as a transportation item in the near future because this will be affecting those huge projects that will be taking place in Fort Saskatchewan, in Redwater, in the area northeast of Edmonton.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following questions after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Human Resources and Employment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $790,278,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It has indeed been a very pleasurable afternoon discussion. On that note, I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Human Resources and Employment: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $790,278,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind the enormous progress that was made this week, mostly on estimates, I would move that the House stand adjourned at this hour, which we would call 5:30, and that we reconvene at 1:30 on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:14 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege to introduce two distinct groups today. The first group is a very special group because they feel like family to me. They are Emilia Karosas, who emigrated from Lithuania, a place where my grandparents on my father's side were born, and her daughter Nejolla Korris, who is very active in the Lithuanian community and who will be visiting Lithuania very soon. Every one of you know at least one member of this family, our wonderful young page Taddes Korris, who is here today and celebrates with me the opportunity to welcome both his mother and grandmother, who are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to please rise, and could we give them a wonderful welcome.

The second group today, Mr. Speaker, is 65 students and an additional number of group leaders and parent helpers from Campbelltown elementary school, including a class of French immersion students. They are seated in both galleries. Let me cite the teachers' and parent helpers' names for you. The teachers are Mrs. Roes, M. Levesque, M. Wu, Mrs. Klaassen, Mrs. Nichol, and M. Perrault, also parent helpers Mr. Graham, Mrs. Gelineau, Mr. LeBlanc, Mrs. Tomkins, Mrs. Bambush, Mrs. Girard, and Mrs. Steinke. Would the students with their parent helpers and teachers please rise, and would we all please give them a warm welcome on this occasion.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today and introduce 28 visitors from the St. Joseph Catholic school in Whitecourt. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 25 special guests from my old community school. They're in the public gallery. They've come an awful long distance on a bus today. I'd like to introduce their teacher, Mrs. Booth, and parent helpers Mrs. Lahd, Mr. Deitz, Mrs. Prentice, Mrs. McKay, Mrs. Fetkenher, Mr. Henry, and Mrs. Heather. This is one of the first schools I'm aware of that went to the four-day school week. Milo is a small village at the north end of Lake McGregor, a really nice middle-of-the-prairie vacation spot, where there is lots of sailboating and lots of fishing. I'd like all our guests to rise and receive a special warm applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon to all on this beautiful Alberta day. It's my pleasure to introduce two constituents from the oil sands capital of the world, Fort McMurray. With me today are Iris Pasareno, the program director of the Salvation Army START program, and Niki-Lou Mackin, who is the co-chair of Family Voices in the northeastern region. They are truly two champions, capturing the spirit of having energy in Fort McMurray, caring for those in need. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the members assembled Ryan Schubert, a resident of Fort Saskatchewan, a first-year political science student at the U of A, and a worker in several successful campaigns. Also accompanying him up in the gallery is Theresa Lightfoot, who serves the constituents of Strathcona from the office here in the Legislature. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two incredibly important people in my life. The first is my strength, my confidence, my rock: my wife, Sue. The second, I'm proud to say, is my future and the future of this province, my son, Austin, who's three months old. I'd ask them to rise in the gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a young lady that I have known for many years. As a matter of fact, this gal and I graduated from Blackie high school together. Her name is Sheila Macklin. After high school she received her postsecondary teaching degree and taught in the Willow Creek school division for many years. Always an avid reader, she was appointed to the board of the Marigold library system in 1998 and for the last number of years has served as chairman of the board. We are all aware of the tremendous success of the Marigold system. No doubt, Sheila is here today to check out our new Minister of Community Development, responsible for the libraries. I would ask Sheila to please rise and receive the usual warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

1:40 Tuition Fees for Postsecondary Education

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the new Minister of Advanced Education noted over the weekend, this government's approach to their alleged top priority, advanced education, has been, quote, willy-nilly and no plan, unquote. News flash: there's no plan in any other ministry either. My first question is to the new minister. When can we expect to see the long-awaited draft tuition affordability policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess that it's kind of a unique opportunity to say that for a maiden question, being presented by my critic, who's also my constituent, I want to make sure he understands that my door is always open for all of my constituents. I don't ask them how they voted.

On the question, this was with Don Braid in Calgary, and I must say that he as well as his wife, Sydney Sharpe, who's also a journalist in Calgary, have always treated me fairly. We were talking about what happens when there's a perception that if you build something in Edmonton, you have to build one in Calgary too. What I want to do is essentially have an 80,000-foot view of Alberta, look at where all our facilities are, look at where all our students are, look at where the bottlenecks are, and make decisions that Albertans will understand.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was in answer to my second question, so I'll reask my first. When are we going to see the tuition policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much. I heard you this time. I had an opportunity to meet last Friday with my executive committee and this morning with 150 of my staff. I can tell you that we've got a great team. I'm being assured that over the next few weeks the reports on both A Learning Alberta and tuition are going to come my way. I will take them through the process that we have with respect to standing policy, cabinet, and caucus. So stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Watching that channel for a long time.

Given that today, April 10, is the second anniversary of Mount Royal College's written proposal to become an undergraduate university, can the minister confirm that MRU will be a priority if and when he comes up with a plan?

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. Mount Royal College is doing all the right things. You know, they've applied for applied degrees. There is a whole list of them: bachelor of nursing, bachelor of business administration, bachelor of arts, bachelor of arts in justice studies, bachelor of science, bachelor of communication. Those particular applications are currently being reviewed, and as soon as that is done, we will proceed further.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Official Opposition revealed that the Finance ministry paid the Premier's former chief of staff, Rod Love, $46,000 in 2004. When asked why the consulting contracts did not provide adequate documentation for the services received, the minister stated, "A significant amount of advice . . . was provided verbally, some probably in written form." This government appears to have learned nothing from the Kelley Charlebois scandal. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Given that the minister stated that some of the services were probably in written form, why did they not show up in the access to information that came back to us?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, you may recall that when the question came from across the way last week, I said that I would review that and see if there were any written reports, which there aren't. It was strategic advice. It was given in verbal form. I indicated as well that Alberta Finance had reviewed its contracting mechanisms, which I think is a good thing and a positive thing. We should all do that on a very regular basis and have some very stringent terms of reference and expectations that will be in any contracts that we write with anyone for consulting or any other endeavour. They will lay out very clearly what the expectations are and whether it will be written reports, advice strategy that may be verbal. It will be very clear in all contracts as to what the expectations are of the person that we contract with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister tell us if Mr. Love won the $46,000 contracts through a proper competitive tendering process?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that with any certainty. I was not the person who entered into the contract. Again, I will review that and get the hon. member an answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister assure this Assembly that contract completion evaluation forms were signed and dated for the $46,000 as per the Auditor General's recommendations following the Charlebois scandal?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I can review that for the hon. member and get back to him.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Private Health Insurance

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our publicly funded health care system offers Albertans a competitive advantage that will be lost under the third way. Increasing the role for private insurance shifts costs to individuals and will increase the financial burden for businesses that are forced to spend more on employee benefits. For private-sector employers it will mean reduced profits, and for the public sector it will mean reduced services. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the larger employers are in a better position to afford extended health benefits, what is the minister doing to prevent smaller employers from being placed at a disadvantage when it comes to attracting and retaining workers?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the health policy framework did not contemplate that we would introduce private insurance in either a mandatory or voluntary way. Our whole discussion surrounding this has been relative to the removal of the prohibition for people in Alberta to purchase private insurance. Simply that: removal of the prohibition. There's no barrier in Saskatchewan, no barrier in Manitoba. In fact, there are no barriers in five provinces and territories. The only barriers that exist in terms of purchasing private insurance are in Quebec, B.C., Alberta, P.E.I., and Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, since the Chaoulli decision by the Supreme Court, which identified that it was mitigated against the Charter rights of the people in Quebec to have a prohibition on private insurance, and since many constitutional lawyers believe that this is transposable – in other words, section 1 of the Canadian Charter is like section 7 of the Quebec Charter – we have been looking at removing the barrier to providing private insurance opportunities for those who wish to avail themselves of them. That has no suggestion whatsoever of the government either selling insurance or forcing that on anybody.

Ms Blakeman: It has everything to do with it.

To the same minister: given that auto manufacturers like Toyota and GM have chosen to operate in Canada rather than in the United States because medicare saves money, why would the minister proceed with third-way private insurance initiatives, removing barriers, or however she wishes to frame it, that will increase costs and make Alberta less competitive? Why would you do that to us?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that my first answer was particularly clear, that we were not trying to do anything that would in any way affect the stability of the health insurance program here under the Alberta health insurance plan, the medicare plan. But I will take the opportunity to remind Albertans that almost a third of the services that we pay for here from our general revenue fund are things that the Canada Health Act does not mandate us to pay for. We do so under our health insurance plan, the medicare plan. They can call it what they will. The Alberta health insurance plan that we currently have covers Albertans for chiropractic services in co-payment, responsibilities for much of podiatry services, for much of psychiatric services, and for many other services that are not mandated under the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, I would just take exception to the fact that there is some belief being perpetrated by the opposition that we are going to foist private insurance on Albertans or corporations. We have absolutely no intent of doing that.

Ms Blakeman: It's called delisting.

To the same minister: how does the minister intend to deal with increasing costs in the public sector given that organized labour is now encouraging groups to include a clause in contracts so that extra costs generated by the third-way reforms will be covered by the employer?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I've had the distinct pleasure of meeting with some of the organized labour groups either because they came in for consultation or in one instance because I went out to visit them at the offices of the AUPE, the public employees, over on 170th Street. They never ever once suggested to me that they were introducing extra clauses in bargaining. They did identify that if there were extra costs as a result of any moves that we made, they would be looking for those from employers, but I assured them on that occasion that that wasn't the case.

Mr. Speaker, we know today that we get less than a billion dollars from our health care premiums, and there's less than $2 billion that comes from the federal government. So in terms of a budget that's over $10 billion, there's a considerable amount that comes from the general revenue fund. Whether it's under this government or any other government, there's a considerable gap in what we're receiving for revenues and what we're actually expending.

Mr. Speaker, none of the labour groups have made contact with me to formally indicate that they are writing those clauses for collective agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Opposition to the government's two-tier, private health care scheme is not limited to New Democrats, the Friends of Medicare, or even Martha and Henry. It's not limited just to the Tory leadership contenders either. No less a person than the Prime Minister of Canada himself, a Tory, has fired a warning shot across the bow of the Minister of Health and Wellness on her third-way proposals. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the Prime Minister of Canada wrong when he expresses concern about dual practice creating conflicts of interest for physicians as there would be a financial incentive for them to stream patients into the private portion of their practice?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's letter has some wonderful news in it in that for the first time a Prime Minister of Canada has written a letter to this government suggesting to our Premier that much of what we have done is laudable but also that, in fact, the provinces themselves have the responsibility for the delivery of health care. We have never had that acknowledgement before. The Prime Minister opened the door for the health minister, myself, to have discussions with his Health minister surrounding some of those proposals. He's identified a concern; he's expressed it relative to doctors working in both systems.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to use the opportunity to speak to the Health minister about why we would engage in that kind of opportunity. We are in fact trying to make sure that we protect great doctors from leaving and moving over to the private system, where, for example, in Quebec there's absolutely no control, nothing that implies that those doctors make a contribution to the public health care system. They move to the private system without any engagement whatsoever in on-call or any other capacity.

So I have received that concern. I acknowledge that concern expressed by the Prime Minister, and I hope to persuade them to look at some of the other options or at least why we are providing the options that we have in the health policy framework.

Mr. Mason: The minister should have kept reading after the first paragraph. The Prime Minister goes on to say that allowing double-dipping doctors "legitimizes queue-jumping as it provides an approved mechanism for patients to pay to seek treatment at the front of the line." Given that, is the Prime Minister wrong? Will the minister come out of her message box and answer the Prime Minister's question?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to answer the Prime Minister's question and the Minister of Health's question. In the manner in which this is posed, it would sound like there hasn't also been a kindly gesture made by the Prime Minister for us to engage in further dialogue. I think he made some pointed references to things that he would like us to review. He also identified care guarantees for us to review and indicated that there were discussion points that he encouraged us to be a part of. I am confident that we can engage in that kind of discussion.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the Prime Minister has expressed concern about the dual practices proposed by this minister being a magnet for rural physicians to migrate to urban centres, what guarantee can the minister give – guarantee – that rural doctors will not leave rural areas and small towns and move to the big cities where they can make more money? Is the Prime Minister wrong?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the hon. member on this point, and I think his underlying message is: what are we going to do to make sure that there's an adequate workforce in rural Alberta if in any capacity of the system we introduce private care? I think that's a very legitimate concern. It's one that many of the rural MLAs here in government have expressed to me. We have a workforce plan that is being developed in more detail to try and make sure that we're attacking the workforce from a number of areas. I think that what we have to do in detailing the type of supports that could be provided or the framework for private delivery is make sure that whatever type of private delivery is done would not negatively impact the public system. I use my favourite example of the ophthalmologist in Calgary that spends two weeks of every month going to California to lecture at university because he is not able to do a full four weeks here because he's paid only for the amount that he can afford to do within a two-week period. In fact, if he were to practise here in private care, it would not negatively impact rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Due to tremendous growth in Calgary and area, including of course Calgary-Lougheed, over the past decade, many of my constituents have expressed rather extreme concern about traffic congestion. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Could the minister please update us on the status of this important project?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important road, of course, not only just for the city of Calgary but as we look at the Canamex highway and how this all ties in together. The road, of course, goes through some of the Tsuu T'ina First Nation, so there has to be negotiations with the First Nation, and those negotiations seem to be progressing quite well. There's real motivation on both sides to complete them. However, there's some discussion about the appraised value of the property, and of course that is very important because that relates to what the First Nation is to be paid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister unless he would like his associate minister to be part of the answer. The question is: when will the negotiations conclude – not begin but conclude – with the Tsuu T'ina Nation so that the project can be undergone with construction?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, the negotiations are moving along quite well. However, I can't give a definite answer on how soon they'll be completed. I can tell the hon. member that a lot of preparatory work is being done, like some of the engineering, some of the public consultation, and some of the functional planning. Of course, the environmental issues are being looked at as we speak. So we're getting in the position where once it's ratified, we'll be able to move forward quite rapidly.

Mr. Rodney: My final question, then, to the same minister: once an agreement is reached with the Tsuu T'ina Nation, can you tell us how long it will be before construction begins and people are actually driving on a ring road in the southwest part of Calgary?

Mr. Lund: Well, as I indicated, a lot of that preparatory work is being done. The actual engineering, of course, the detailed engineering, would take probably six months, maybe a little longer. Then, of course, the contract would have to be tendered. So I would imagine that it would probably be at least a year after the negotiations are completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

2:00 Applewood Park Community Association

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General found that the Applewood Park Community Association could not show how it spent its third grant of $20,000. In fact, nearly $6,000 is missing; no receipts, nothing. The 2006 fiscal plan states very clearly that the Wild Rose Foundation board is seeking recovery of the third grant of $20,000. To the Minister of Community Development: has the department collected the money back, yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. As he indicated, the Auditor General came up with some recommendations, so an entirely new set of guidelines and accountability requirements has been developed for the program. The new guidelines and the accountability requirements were developed by the department's staff, and they were reviewed by an independent agency. The program has recently been reinstated, and in regard to the Applewood grant I can inform the member that the file has been forwarded to the Crown debt collections to recover the funds. The process is now under way.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: does the minister know what happened to the $6,000 missing in the third grant?

Mr. Ducharme: I'm not aware of that, but as I indicated, we are going to recover the monies.

Mr. Agnihotri: Well, you should know that.

Anyway, to the same minister: given that the auditor for Applewood and the chief financial officer for the Calgary-Montrose constituency association are the same person, can the minister offer any explanation or assurance to this House that funds were not used in support of constituency association business?

Mr. Ducharme: I can't speculate on that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Bowness High School

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bowness high school is a vibrant school with academic, drama, dance, mechanics, construction, computers, and multimedia education. Unfortunately, for years health concerns have also been attributed to the old math wing of the Calgary Bowness high school. My question today is for the Minister of Education. What steps will the government take to address health issues in this facility?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta provides money to locally elected school boards, who in turn prioritize the expenditure of those dollars. In fact, we provide hundreds of millions of dollars to accomplish these purposes. Let us say that locally elected school boards are the government's trustee, and in this particular case they have taken some very positive steps. They have done some extensive air quality testing. They have found no health-related concerns. As a precautionary measure they did remove the carpet in that math wing, and they'll do whatever else is required to try and eradicate the problem. But at the moment there is nothing that can be tracked to that specific problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In addition to health concerns Bowness high school is in need of modernization. Does the modernization have to be designed to strictly follow our old school utilization formula, which includes things like narrow hallways, smaller classrooms, generally trying to get the square footage of the building down, or does the board just have to design the school to be cost-effective to maintain?

Mr. Zwozdesky: That's a complicated question, Mr. Speaker. Let me say that school boards develop their capital plans, and this particular renovation request for Bowness high was, as I recall, in the 11th ranked spot for priorities from what I remember the board having turned in relevant to its '05-06 needs. I don't know if that will move up the ranking schedule or not when the June requests come in from that particular board. However, I am satisfied, at least for the time being, that the formula that has been used has had some merit, and if necessary we will be addressing that and perhaps changing some of it now that we have the responsibility in Education to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. My final question regarding Bowness high is very direct. Is money forthcoming from Alberta Education to address the needs of this high school and other school facilities?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it depends on what the specific needs might turn out to be, and that has yet to be determined. If it's determined that monies are needed for some new construction, it could come out of one envelope. If it's a different type of upgrading or modernization or more of an infrastructure and maintenance renewal type of project, then that money would come out of a different envelope. But it's always up to the priority of the local school board and how they feel about it.

The second part of the answer is this: I have been asked to develop a school infrastructure plan that will deal with new construction needs, new school replacement needs, modernizations, upgrades, rightsizings, and so on. That includes modulars and portables as well as the second envelope, which is infrastructure and maintenance renewal. I hope to have that plan ready sometime in June, and I'm then going to be sharing it with the school boards; in fact, they'll be helping develop it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday the minister of infrastructure stated in regard to the sale of Edmonton ring road lands: "If we were to go and purchase those properties today, we'd be paying several times what was paid back then." Yet records show that this government purchased ring road land in 1981 for $42,000 per acre, and then sold most of it in 1999 for only $7,500 per acre. It appears that while ordinary Albertans are charged premium rates for property in Edmonton, some companies which donate to the Progressive Conservative Party acquire land at fire-sale prices. My questions are to the minister of infrastructure. Why did this government sell the ring road land to Lehigh Portland Cement Limited for only $7,500 per acre when taxpayers forked out $42,000 per acre 18 years earlier?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that it seems to be getting better. At least they gave me five minutes' notice today of this very complex deal, and I'm now requested to answer questions relative to it. Once again, we'll have to investigate. We don't know the details of this. Actually, some of this dates back to '92, so it's getting to be quite old. But we will investigate it and see what we can find.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the process in his department for appraising such lands given the huge discrepancy between the purchase price and the recent sale price?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, once again, I've got to investigate what this deal was all about. As you remember, last week we had about six questions relative to some land that was purchased, and in part of the agreement there was excess land to be returned to the person that sold us the land in the first place. I don't know, from the quick perusal that I've had of this particular deal, which amounts to several pages, just what all of the answers are.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a process question.

However, will the minister ask the office of the chief internal auditor to investigate the liquidation of this land and others like it?

Mr. Lund: Once again, we'll look into the whole situation, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:10 Calgary Registry Services

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has recently come to my attention that the Department of Government Services forced a registry agent to sell their registry, which was located in downtown Calgary. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Why did your department take this action against the owner of this business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Shaw is correct. Government Services did uncover a long history of unprofessional practices, and there were some contract breaches, so I have to say that as a result of the investigation that was conducted by the department staff, the owner was notified to sell the business; otherwise, his agreement would be cancelled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. I just have one supplemental. As a result of your ministry's actions, will Calgarians now be forced to travel to other locations in the city to be served?

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, Calgarians will not have to travel to another location. This agency has been sold. Government Services will work with the new owners and operators to ensure that there's a smooth transition, and Calgarians will be served properly and correctly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serviced industrial land around the Yellowhead Trail and 178th Street is now listed for sale at at least $55,000 per acre. Members of the inner circle of the PC Party, including Jack Agrios, Robert Lloyd, and Gary G. Campbell, sold land to the province in 1981 for $42,000 per acre, a deal worth $6.2 million for themselves, but now we find out that it's a bad deal for the taxpayers because the government turned around and sold this land in 1999 for $7,500 per acre. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Is Gary G. Campbell, the gentleman who was one of the sellers of that land in 1981, the same person who now sits on this government's Internal Audit Committee as a public member? Also, is this the same person who is a fundraiser for the PC Party in Alberta?

An Hon. Member: Is it the same guy?

Mr. MacDonald: Same guy.

The Speaker: The latter part of the question, dealing with political party matters, is really not relevant in here. The first part is, though.

Mr. Lund: As I indicated earlier, this is the same parcel of land that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung asked about. We will be looking into the whole situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that Lehigh Portland Cement sold the land to CN immediately after they purchased it from the government, was there a public tender on the sale of this land?

Mr. Lund: Same answer as last: we'll have to look into how it was handled. It was a number of years ago.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why is this government selling public land now for so little when last week the hon. minister stated in this House that we're selling land now for the taxpayers and indicating that we are getting more money for it than when we purchased it when we were accumulating this for the ring roads? Why is there this liquidation price for this specific parcel of land?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, in the process that we use today – and this is what I will refer to – we get the land appraised. We will then put it on the market through real estate companies. They attempt to sell it. In some cases, in fact, it's sold for even more than the appraised value. If there's something different with these lands, we'll try to find out what exactly it is. But at this point that's the process that we use to make sure that we're getting top value for the land for the taxpayers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Security of Children's Services Offices

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the NDP opposition has learned that on the weekend of April 1 and 2 a number of computers were stolen from the Children's Services ministry offices located on the 11th floor of Sterling Place. The 11th floor houses a number of very important children's services, including resources for children with disabilities and adoption services among others. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Why did the minister fail to publicly disclose the thefts of laptop computers from its offices if for no other reason than to at least reassure the families of the Children's Services' clients and the general public that confidential information has not been compromised?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, I have to say in all honesty that I'm not aware of this situation, but I certainly will check into it immediately after question period and get back to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these computers were stolen over a week ago, why have none of the officials briefed the minister about this, particularly in light of possible breaches of client confidentiality?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that, but as I said to the member, immediately after question period I will be going to my office and I will be finding out why that has happened, and I will get back to him.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, it's really surprising that the minister hasn't learned about this very serious breach of security.

Given that we have been told that the stolen computers were laptops, making it more likely that sensitive data is stored on the computer's local drive than on a server, how can the minister be so lackadaisical about the whole matter rather taking responsibility for her own failure to do anything about it?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I'm not is lackadaisical. I can tell you that the minister is sitting here quite taken aback by his question. I was not aware of it. I think that probably being honest about the situation is the best policy. I have indicated to him that I will immediately after question period go up to my office and get to the bottom of this and get the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Traffic Safety

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September 2004 the government accepted all the recommendations of the McDermid report Saving Lives on Alberta's Roads. It has been more than a year and a half since, and while we continue to hear about the fatalities on our roads, we have heard little about the government's plan to implement these important recommendations. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When will the government take action and finally implement the recommendations of the McDermid report?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that immediately when that report was given to the former minister, he got together some 12 government departments and some 35 groups of stakeholders, and they went through the report and came up with a traffic plan. Now, some of the plan has been implemented, things like passing an emergency vehicle and that you have to reduce your speed if you're in a lane next to it down to 60 kilometres or whatever the posted speed limit if it's below that, but there are a number of things that are in that plan that require a lot of work, changes of legislation. Some of it is to do with engineering of the roads, some that are controversial and will be going out for further consultation. So it's not as though there's been nothing done. We will be implementing even some more of it fairly shortly, but there has been progress made.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. How much longer do we have to wait before all this traffic safety plan is finally implemented?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, there's a lot to be done here with things like engineering, legislation, but there are some controversial parts to the proposal as well, things like the speed on green photo radar, the fact that people over 75 would have to have medical assessments done annually. Those are very controversial things, so we will be putting that out for public consultation. They're just proposals coming out of the committee, but we want to consult with Albertans and find out whether, in fact, those are the kinds of things they want to see happen.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

How is the minister going to make sure that we have enough police officers, special constables for enforcement since one of the main recommendations of the McDermid report was enforcement?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. In fact, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation and myself and the Minister of Justice are meeting tonight at 5:30 to discuss the traffic safety plan.

As well, though, in response to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead's question there are a number of issues that we want to look at, obviously education and enforcement. Interdiction teams are very critical as we move forward regarding traffic enforcement education for all of our highways. But the real issues that we want to look at are the 400 fatalities and the, I think, 18,000 or 13,000 serious collisions on our highways in Alberta, which, obviously, have a huge impact on the lives of those individuals that have been injured but as well on our whole health care system. We want to be able to look at the strategies in place throughout Alberta so that we can work with our officers, whether it's police officers, whether it's sheriffs, whether it's peace officers that are hired by municipalities, that are in place right now. It's a strategy to build on how we can educate the community, educate young drivers, educate old drivers but, as well, ensure that the enforcement initiative is there to provide again that understanding by drivers that have the privilege of driving in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling in Horseshoe Canyon

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Environment announced much-needed baseline testing of water wells as now a mandatory requirement prior to coal-bed methane drilling only after public pressure from the opposition along with rural Albertans. This is progress, but many landowners have serious questions about the contamination of groundwater and drinking water over the past five years. What can Albertans count on in terms of lost confidence in the investigation of this department in holding responsible parties accountable? To the environment minister: will the minister appoint an independent, scientific panel to investigate the impacts of five years without baseline testing?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, first, I want to thank the hon. member for recognizing the very positive and proactive action that the Ministry of Environment has taken pertaining to the issue of water. I also want to say that the protection of our air, our land, and our water is a top priority for me as the Minister of Environment, and I am the Minister of Environment. With every fibre of energy that I have, we are testing – not only that, but we have an independent panel that is reviewing the results of the baseline testing that we are developing. Even more importantly, we're going to be comparing apples and oranges and turnips, not, shall I say, the examples of where we are doing some testing that ultimately were comparing apples, oranges, and turnips as opposed to in fact comparing apples and apples. It's a very proactive approach that I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View would agree is very positive in securing our water supply well into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could we try again? To the Environment minister: what is your department doing to establish an independent, scientific panel to investigate five years without baseline testing of the Horseshoe Canyon?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, for any member of the public or landowners located in the Horseshoe Canyon area or anywhere else in this province, they can, number one, call our hotline, which is a 24-hour environmental protection hotline, relative to concerns raised. It's 1-800-222-6514.

Also, pertaining to independent reviewing, test results will be shared directly with the landowners as well as with Alberta Environment. We will then review the results of the database of information from this very proactive testing that we're doing, and we will report it in a very transparent way to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: why does the Energy and Utilities Board refer water contamination complaints from a landowner to the company drilling the coal-bed methane well rather than investigating the complaint?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the first responsibility of any company that's applied for an application to drill is to follow all of the standards that are there. Therefore, if there are problems and concerns, it is their requirement, first and foremost, to be proactive in dealing with the landowners on these issues. That's how it is, and we would continue to encourage that.

The industry has been very proactive even on the water issues that you'd mentioned. It's the industry working with stakeholders that has brought forth these recommendations that there be baseline testing. This has been very much supported. These are the kinds of initiatives that industry continues to work with. There are challenges from time to time given the quantity of the activity, but they take a very proactive establishment to ensure that those water, environmental, and landowner issues are dealt with. It's in their interest, and it's in all Albertans' interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Water Quality in Wabamun Lake Area

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On August 3, 2005, a train derailment at Lake Wabamun caused over 700,000 litres of bunker C crude to spill into the lake. Since that date, the village of Wabamun has had to truck in water for its potable water use. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What is his ministry doing to resolve this ongoing concern?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, I want to say how proud I was of Alberta Environment when we issued enforcement orders to Canadian National within the first 48 hours of the incident. I also want to say that our Water for Life strategy, which commits to safe, secure drinking water for all Albertans, is something we take very seriously. We're working closely with the municipality. As well, we're working with Capital health. I want to reassure all members of this Assembly but also all Albertans and especially those in the Wabamun area that they presently have access to a supply of water which is safe and clean. They will continue to have that safe, clean drinking water. As we go forward in our Water for Life strategy of our regional system, we're working very closely with the affected municipality involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. There are a number of other municipalities in the area who have water concerns not directly related to the CN spill; however, they do have issues regarding potable water. So I'd like to know what his ministry is specifically doing to address these regional water supply issues.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question because of the importance of groundwater wells. In fact, you may not be aware, but there are three new groundwater wells that have already been drilled for one of the municipality's villages. These are being connected in a regional way to the existing treatment facility, which again, I think, is taking energy and resources, pulling them together to ensure that safe and secure drinking water. These wells will supply water for the village in the region for many years to come. So I want to personally assure everyone in this House, all Albertans, and the members of Wabamun that we will continue to do everything possible in securing safe drinking water for the members in the Wabamun area based on this terrible, what I call, ecological disaster that took place last summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. He's responded in regard to the village of Wabamun's concerns directly, but I wonder if he could tell me what the long-term commitments for other communities in the Wabamun region are regarding their water concerns as well.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as you know, we have a new policy committee chair of Energy and Sustainable Development, which is so keen on our Water for Life strategy. He's from Battle River-Wainwright, and he often pontificates about the importance of water.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that as we go forward, the $174 million in the Minister of Finance's estimates, of course, as part of our budget this year will be a welcome addition of money that, in fact, will help supply some of those regional water treatment facilities that we are endeavouring to prioritize in terms of that secure, safe drinking water that I've spoken about earlier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Caribou Mountains wildland provincial park was designated as home for one of Alberta's threatened caribou herds. On Friday we discovered that the advisory committee struck to develop a plan to steward this precious ecosystem has gone off the rails and recommended revoking the wildland park status. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Will the minister assure this House today that he will not allow the Caribou Mountains provincial park to lose its protected status as a wildland provincial park?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta considers all suggestions that Albertans bring forward. The local community nominated the Caribou Mountains wildland area for protection through the special places program. As the questioner has identified, a local advisory committee is working with parks staff on the management plan for the Caribou Mountains wildland area. Input from the public and stakeholders regarding the management plan will also be considered. There is presently no industrial activity occurring in the Caribou Mountains wildland. Hunting and off-highway vehicle use are allowed. As has been identified by the member, the issue is off-highway use off designated trails. I basically just was briefed on it briefly today. I cannot provide you with an answer today, but I'll certainly be looking into the matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit today to table all recommendations made by all parks advisory and planning committees in this House?

Mr. Ducharme: My understanding is that it is a public, local committee. I will be looking over the recommendations that come forward and will do the right thing at the appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's not just this park. It's all parks advisory plans, please.

Given the lack of legislated protection from industrial development such as drilling in the Rumsey natural area will this minister commit to actually protecting Alberta's protected areas?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, the government does try to provide a good balance in regard to the benefits of the natural resources that we have along with the protection of our environmental areas. I'm sure that all considerations will be put on the table at that time, before a decision is made.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of a number of members to participate in Members' Statements, but first of all I want to start off today with a quotation.

There have been significant extensions in the amount of time and effort required by an M.L.A. The very nature of the expansion and growth of Alberta has expanded those duties. The nature of modern government has expanded those duties. The modern communications age has expanded those duties. I think that has been a very useful expansion, and I think a very good thing for democracy that we in fact do have a much closer contact with our constituents because of modern communications.

That quotation is found in Alberta Hansard, November 2, 1972, and those are the words of Dr. Hugh M. Horner, who was the federal Member of Parliament for Jasper-Edson from 1958 to 1967. In 1967 he was elected as the MLA for Lac Ste. Anne as a member of the Official Opposition and served as the Opposition House Leader from 1967 through to 1971. He was re-elected in 1971, 1975, and 1979 in the constituency of Barrhead. He resigned in September 1979. Among the portfolios held by Dr. Horner in addition to being Deputy Premier was that of minister of agriculture, the portfolio currently served by his son the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. Dr. Horner passed away on March 25, 1997.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House several guests here who come in support of Bill 206. Some of them are from ECMAS. I'm not sure whether I have all the names up there, but let me just say a few names: Gary Devries, Verena Primeau and her wonderful little son Brayden, Kay McCaig, Elsie Cable, and Abdulahi Mahamad. Could you please stand?

Thank you.

Mr. VanderBurg: I'd like to introduce a good friend of mine and a good friend of many MLAs. He's off abroad right now studying, but he took the time to come and visit us today while he was touring this part of Canada. I'd ask Bart West to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Child Access Exchange Centres

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The initial period following a divorce or separation is often a stressful and confusing time for a child. This stress is further compounded by the sudden absence of one parent from the home. Study after study has shown that children are much happier and healthier when they have access to both their parents.

Reducing the obstacles to child access and visitation is an important way to ensure that children have the opportunity to spend quality time with both their parents and realize their full potential. One method of addressing child access concerns would be to establish provincially designated child access exchange centres for individuals to use both voluntarily and on court order. These would be childcentric facilities where one parent could drop off the child to be picked up by the other parent in a neutral, confrontation-free environment.

The standardization of such facilities would ensure that drop-off and pickup services were delivered in a uniform and non-confrontational manner by trained personnel and staff province-wide. In addition, the staff at these centres could help foster understanding between parents and guardians and help them better resolve disagreements pertaining to access and exchange of children.

I have received correspondence on this matter from community organizations such as the Boys & Girls Clubs of Calgary and the Southside Christian daycare in Edmonton, who have expressed their support for designated child access exchange centres. Moreover, these groups have indicated that they would be willing to offer their sites for use as designated access exchange facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly feel that the provincial designation of child access exchange facilities would be a valuable step in reducing the stress associated with child visitation and access.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Una Maclean Evans

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to take note of one of my constituents. On March 11 last Mrs. Una Maclean Evans celebrated her 80th birthday. This recognition was researched and written by our mutual friend, John Patrick Day.

Mrs. Evans has been active at all levels of public life in our province and country for 60 years, ranging from her service in World War II to her ongoing interest and advocacy at all levels of government.

Hon. members will possibly first think of Mrs. Evans for her service on Edmonton's city council. During that time she was instrumental in changing the entire direction of Edmonton's transportation policy and in planning the direction of new subdivisions, most memorably that small city now represented by our colleagues for Edmonton-Mill Creek, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and Edmonton-Mill Woods. Anyone who served with her will recall the great intelligence and integrity she brought to city council. She remains quite active in advising and assisting civic organizations and in keeping policy matters before the public.

For several years she served honourably and well as a citizenship court judge. In this capacity she welcomed several tens of thousands of new Canadians to this country as citizens. It is perhaps possible that some hon. members here are among their number.

Mrs. Evans, of course, was married to the well-known and well-loved journalist, Art Evans. This in itself would have made her a public figure. As she often remarks, she was never quite sure how much of her home life would appear on the front page of the Edmonton Journal the following morning. I think, though, in this regard, accompanying her husband, Art, on his round of community places, coffee shops, hotel lounges, and other such places kept Una close to the ground, hearing what the people of Edmonton and Alberta were really saying. She remains a good listener today.

More significant – this is what she thinks is her own greatest contribution – is her historical work on the UFA government and its leading members. As a researcher for the Glenbow-Alberta Institute she conducted long and detailed interviews with former Premiers Brownlee and Reid, not to mention many others. Most of the historical record we have of those governments is her work. I would also add, Mr. Speaker, that there is hardly a part of Alberta's history that does not have some contribution by her to our knowledge of it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:40 Longest Indoor Soccer Game

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here in Alberta we have a long-standing tradition of athletic excellence, from our professional teams to the excellent showing of our provincial athletes at the recent Olympic Games.

Today I bring forward another example of this excellence. Yesterday morning dozens of athletes wrapped up their participation in the world's longest indoor soccer game. One hundred and sixty people spent 36 hours playing soccer in an attempt to break the world record. I'm sure that once their sore muscles subside, they will realize that their endurance has led them to a great accomplishment. I understand that their attempt will be submitted to the Guinness World Records book.

Setting a world record demands the most from a person's physical abilities and concentration and determination. Considering the popularity of this sport across the world, it would be exciting if a group from Alberta is able to carve out a special place in history. Events like these also raise the many benefits of sports: they keep us active, Mr. Speaker, healthy, and on the right track to success.

The legacy of this weekend will go beyond setting the record. The world's longest indoor soccer game was also a fundraiser for the Mill Woods youth centre. Thanks to their efforts $65,000 was raised. These funds will benefit Mill Woods' youth through the support of a drop-in centre.

I'd like to ask all members of this House to join me in congratulating these young people on raising the money and doing this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Before and After School Care for Children

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a booming economy, and with a booming economy comes booming economy problems. One major concern that we are facing everywhere in Alberta is the great demand for employees in every area of industry, small business, retail, health care, home care, and school-age care.

Red Deer Child Care has been forced to close two of their before and after school programs because they are unable to find qualified staff. High staff turnover is a fact of life in child care, but the situation is growing worse every day. Low unemployment rates and low wages for child care workers have not allowed Red Deer Child Care to replace staff.

Closure of more programs is imminent. These closures will not only impact the immediate families but will have a domino effect on the rest of the community and the province. If parents do not have consistent, safe child care, they are left with few choices: not working or leaving their children in unsupervised situations. Employers pay the price, too, with increased absenteeism at work as parents try to juggle their lack of before and after school child care.

Before and after school child care is a concern for all communities in Alberta. If we believe that it takes a whole village to raise a child, then this is a time when the whole community needs to work together. Corporations, governments, and communities should come to the table together to brainstorm for solutions to this mutual concern. Perhaps industry and small business need to adopt flexible hours for employees with children. Perhaps corporate sponsorship of before and after school programs is a solution. Perhaps volunteerism has a role to play in this issue. Perhaps more government funding is also part of the solution. There is more than one solution to a concern that affects everyone.

Mr. Speaker, for the sake of our children, our communities, and our economy it's time to come to the table together to find the solutions to a safe and sustainable before and after school child care system.

University of Calgary Achievements

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to speak today on some of the accomplishments of the University of Calgary as it reaches the milestone of 40 years of autonomy. In its 40 years as an independent, public university the U of C has grown in status until it has become one of Canada's pre-eminent teaching and research universities.

In teaching the university has gone from an enrolment of 4,000 in 1966 to over 27,000 today. During the same time period the number of graduate students exploded over twelvefold, from 334 to over 4,200. Degrees granted went from 635 in 1966 to over 6,200 last year, bringing the total to more than 110,000 graduates who have received their degrees from the U of C and who have gone on to contribute to the growth and prosperity of our province. The university now offers over 2,400 different credit and noncredit courses, and its library holdings now exceed 2 and a half million books and periodicals.

In the field of research in the most recent fiscal year the U of C brought in over $280 million in research revenue, which places it among the top seven universities in Canada. In many diverse areas, including petroleum geology, civil engineering, anthropology, chemistry, and medicine, important discoveries and breakthroughs have been made which have pushed back the frontiers of knowledge, enriched our province and our country, and contributed to the greater public good. Last year the U of C received record donations of $70 million, bringing its total endowments to $330 million, which is among the top 10 in Canada.

But the University of Calgary is not content to rest on its laurels or to maintain the status quo. Under the inspired leadership of President Harvey Weingarten the University of Calgary is boldly moving forward towards a vision of the future. The U of C is proceeding with innovative ideas which will focus the university on areas of excellence and which will meet the aspirations of the people of the city and the province in which it lives.

I'm sure all hon. members will join me in congratulating the faculty, staff, and students on the success of their gala last evening, which had a sellout crowd of 750 Calgarians, including our Minister of Advanced Education, our Minister of Health and Wellness, and our Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. I look forward to the bold and innovative plans that they have outlined for the future of the University of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Proportional Representation

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, to continue my changing the face of democracy in Alberta series, I wanted to talk more about B.C.'s citizens' assembly. As I mentioned before, the assembly members settled on the single transferrable vote system as the best suited for British Columbia's purposes. The people of that province, represented through the assembly, wanted to revitalize their democracy. The government wanted to encourage more participation and to offer the assurance that no vote is wasted and that all voices are heard.

We know, and the people in B.C. knew, that opponents of proportional representation usually raise flags with respect to the perceived or anticipated threat to effective local representation and the possibility of growing party powers through the use of central candidate lists. The B.C. citizens' assembly heard those very concerns as they studied the different models and came up with the idea that is proportional representation within each constituency, not throughout the province; that is to say, outcomes are still going to be determined locally, not dictated centrally or top down.

The recommendation was that constituencies would be merged or combined into larger electoral districts to be represented by multiple MLAs. In large, densely populated urban ridings you can have up to six or seven MLAs while in rural areas only two or three would be needed. The actual overall number of MLAs will not change from their current total of 79 members. The Premier would still be the leader of the party winning the most seats, but cabinets can now include members from other parties, and coalition governments would be encouraged in situations with close vote counts.

A referendum was held in B.C. in May of 2005, and when the numbers were tallied, 77 of the 79 constituencies and 57.8 per cent of those who voted supported proportional representation. The idea fell slightly short of the arbitrary 60 per cent approval threshold chosen by the Premier. When asked, the people who voted against it simply explained that they needed more information. You see, there was no funding for educating the electors, and the work done was voluntary by the citizens' assembly alumni, who acted as ambassadors to their communities and tried to explain the merits of their decision.

That proposal is going to be reconsidered in 2008 in the municipal elections and, if successful, is going to be implemented in the 2009 provincial elections.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to present a petition of 175 names of students and staff from the Sir John Franklin school in my riding of Calgary-East. This school is located in the community of Mayland Heights. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to take measures to reduce the number of teen smokers in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition from 11 residents of central Alberta from the Olds, Carstairs, Bowden, Sundre, and Penhold areas. It says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta as reported by Health Canada, that include but are not limited to; (1) a tobacco tax increase, (2) legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing, and (3) legislation to make all workplaces completely smoke-free.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table 104 names from the Calgary area calling on the Legislature to consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased.

Dr. B. Miller: I'd like to present a petition by 98 citizens who also urge the government of Alberta to "consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling a petition from citizens across the province but mainly from Edmonton and Sherwood Park urging the government to, number one, abandon its plans to implement the third way health care reforms; two, defeat legislation allowing expansion of private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta and permitting doctors to practise in both the private and public systems; three, oppose any action by the government of Alberta that would contravene the Canada Health Act; and four, vote against plans that would force Albertans to pay for private health insurance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm privileged to present a petition to this Assembly with 28 signatures from the Cardston-Taber-Warner constituency. The petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta as reported by Health Canada, that include but are not limited to; (1) a tobacco tax increase, (2) legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing, and (3) legislation to make all workplaces completely smoke-free.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to give oral notice today of the following motion:

Be it resolved that the following changes to the following committees be approved by the Assembly: on the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts that Mr. Griffiths replace Mr. VanderBurg as deputy chair, that Mr. Groeneveld replace Mr. Oberle, that Dr. Brown be added; on the Select Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund that Mr. Johnston replace Mr. McFarland; on the Select Standing Committee on Legislative Offices that Mr. Strang become deputy chair, that Mr. Mitzel replace Mr. Ducharme; on the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing that Mr. Oberle replace Mr. Groeneveld; on the Select Standing Committee on Private Bills that Mr. Webber replace Mr. VanderBurg, that Mr. Rogers replace Mr. Oberle; on the Select Special Standing Committee on Members' Services that Mr. Knight become deputy chair, that Mr. Lindsay replace Mr. Horner, that Mr. Lukaszuk replace Mr. McFarland.

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006.

This bill would bring forth six amendments. The first amendment provides authority for a new regulation to allow the electrical sector to conduct emissions trading in nitrogen oxide and sulphur dioxide. This amendment will help make Alberta's air emissions controls some of the toughest in North America. It reflects a consensus among industry, government, and nongovernment stakeholders as well as the recommendations of the clean air strategic alliance.

The second amendment clarifies industry's obligations to report and remediate contaminated sites closed before the EPEA was enacted. This amendment ensures that any closed sites that continue to have an adverse effect on the environment are reported and cleaned up.

The third amendment allows us to improve our programs for reclamation of coal and oil sands mines and ensures that we promote and acknowledge progressive and ongoing reclamation of these sites.

Mr. Speaker, the next three amendments would, number one, streamline the approvals process by supporting continued use of codes of practice for activities with low environmental impact, give Alberta Environment the flexibility to partner with a broad range of organizations and individuals to deliver our environmental protection mandate, and, number three, increase the amount of environmental information Albertans can obtain without the need for a formal request through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

I ask for support on these amendments.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Bill 33

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 33, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this act will increase the basic spousal and eligible dependant tax credit amounts by $100 on top of inflation-proofing, or indexing, for a total increase of $376. These large tax credit amounts are the highest by far in Canada, and they are the key reason why over 1 million of Alberta's 2.36 million tax filers pay no provincial income tax. It will also reflect changes in federal legislation and implement miscellaneous housekeeping changes.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

Bill 34

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, between 2001 and 2004 we reduced our general corporate income tax rate from 15.5 per cent to 11 and a half per cent. The small business rate was at that time cut in half to 3 per cent, and small business income threshold was doubled to $400,000. This act will reduce the general corporate income tax rate to 10 per cent from 11.5 per cent and, again, will also reflect changes in federal legislation and implement miscellaneous housekeeping changes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a document containing nearly 20,000 signatures of Albertans. Now, that's a petition. I recognize that petitions and documents as such cannot influence matters before courts. Judges, crown prosecutors, and the officers of the court must be free and act without any interference. However, these Albertans have clearly expressed their view that the rules on bail restrictions for those charged with serious offences should be reviewed. It is appropriate, then, Mr. Speaker, that a policy of this petition be accepted.

As bail in a Criminal Code matter is under the purview of the federal government . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have repeatedly said: let's be very, very precise with tablings. Table it.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you.

Mr. Horner: On behalf of the Minister of Environment, Mr. Speaker, I request leave to table Alberta Environment's Standard for Baseline Water-Well Testing for Coalbed Methane/Natural Gas in Coal Operations. This is part of the Water for Life strategy's goal of safe, secure drinking water and supplies. I have the requisite number of copies here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, and they're all concerning questions from earlier today in question period. The first is a reference document indicating the sale of the land 4, 25, 53, 21, southwest quarter in the restricted development area for $6.2 million. This happened in 1981.

The second tabling I have is from the Alberta Government Services land titles office. It's a transfer of land from the province to Lehigh Portland Cement Limited for $1,800,000, and this document is dated the 30th of March, 1999.

The last document I have is from the Alberta Government Services land titles office, and it is a transfer of land from Lehigh Portland Cement Limited to the Canadian National Railway Company. This document is dated the 18th day of March, 1999, and the sale of this land includes the price of $1,700,000.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of individual letters from people, the first from Dr. David Fleiger wondering what is the devil in the details around allowing doctors to practise in both systems at the same time.

Next, from Roxanne Felix noting: how will the government measure that all people receive the same quality of service, and what are the outcomes for that?

From Robert Evans noting that in the U.S. a middle-class family member hospitalized for a week had a bill of $45,000. He's against private health insurance.

From Hank and Sharon Espeseth a number of questions but asking: "How is the average citizen to pay health [care insurance] premiums from limited income? And what about pre-existing conditions?"

From Diann Duthie giving her experiences, that her care surpassed that of a friend's who received it at the Gimbel clinic and raising the concerns of doctors as salesmen.

From Lana and Andy Dong asking for clarification on how doctors practising in both systems can be efficient and cost-effective.

From Harvey Dick and Laurette Lund noting a number of points but the first being that private for-profit clinics "will take all of the easy, high margin surgeries . . . leaving the more costly procedures for the Public system."

From Melanie Crisfield noting that "as a society, we should value the health and productivity of all Albertans," that this will not happen with private care.

From T. and E. Cliff, noting that with a scheme the poor could sell their place in the queue to make money, and that would be taxable, so the province could make additional money on it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one letter to table, with the appropriate copies: a letter from a constituent, Michelle Chaloner, in which she asks about the third way and points out that it will "undermine Alberta's public health care system."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from Judith Da Silva. Ms Da Silva is very concerned about funding cuts for adults with developmental disabilities. In particular, she is concerned that this will cause staffing shortages due to low wages and that further staff shortages will make it impossible to adequately help individuals to "become productive and intricate parts of their communities." My colleagues and I have received over 80 such letters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table appropriate copies of a letter dated April 3, 2006, sent from the Prime Minister to the Premier of this province. In the letter the Prime Minister notes that allowing doctors to practise in the public and private systems would create conflicts of interest, allow queue-jumping, and encourage rural physicians to move to urban centres.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first tabling today is a letter from a senior citizen, E. P. Ellis, expressing strong opposition to the third way and urging the government to study the recommendations of Roy Romanow, which could help sustain the public health care system.

The second tabling is from Ms Valerie Shell with respect to funding for persons with developmental disabilities. She disagrees with the minister of health, who claimed that Alberta is seen as heaven, because that description doesn't extend to her daughter's situation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first, another third way letter from a constituent, Anne McCracken, concerned about the impact of the NAFTA agreement and also whether or not we can have fair administration of public funds in a system that allows doctors to work both the public and private sides.

The second tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a freedom of information request from the Official Opposition to the Department of Gaming. It would appear as if this is further oral or verbal consulting services supplied by Rod Love to the Minister of Gaming.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five tablings, all regarding Bill 206, Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, the first one from the Boys and Girls Club, pleased to offer their community-based sites as potential designated and assigned approved sites.

One from Southside Pentecostal Assembly, again, offering their facilities.

A couple from Ontario in support: one from Fathers are Capable Too, a parenting association; a further one from the Canadian Children's Rights Council, who wrote in support of Bill 206.

The last one is from Jim Baccari, who signs as a friend to ECMAS, MERGE, and MESA, hoping that this will help parents find a common ground for co-parenting their children.

Order Paper Changes

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, I'd like to draw to the attention of all hon. members the Order Paper. There are some modifications in today's Order Paper to reflect various appointments and resignations which took place last week.

Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006, currently at third reading stage and introduced by the former Minister of Government Services, now appears under the name of the new Minister of Government Services.

Bill 15, International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act, now in Committee of the Whole and introduced by the former Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, was changed April 4, 2006, to reflect the name of the acting minister. The bill now appears under the name of the new Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Motions Other than Government Motions 520, 544, and 577 have been withdrawn to reflect the appointments of the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne and the hon. Member for Little Bow to Executive Council.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 6, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

Third Reading

Bill 203
Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway)
Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006.

During the first two stages members on both sides of this Chamber supported this bill and what it is trying to achieve. Some hon. members spoke of the importance of trains in opening the west and, more specifically, Alberta's railway heritage and its impact in our 100-year history. Some members also discussed the success of the four existing operations which preserve and recreate our rail heritage. The Alberta Central Railway Museum, the Alberta Railway Museum, Fort Edmonton Park, and Heritage Park have done a great job of not only maintaining working heritage rolling stock but also of recreating the rail experience of yesteryear for many Albertans.

We also had some questions raised by hon. members, and I would like to take this opportunity to address these questions now. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had a number of questions, and I will answer these in the order in which they were raised by my colleague. Mr. Speaker, the member raised a question about the definition of a heritage railway, which includes the following: a railway that is "comprised of rolling stock and structural facilities, any of which was manufactured in 1965 or earlier." This part of the definition was recommended by stakeholders, and I understand that it is in tune with the age of the equipment presently being used by the operators of railroad park museums.

The second question which was raised by the member was concerning the last part of the definition of a heritage railway. This section of the definition reads that a heritage railway "is operated for the sole purpose of providing rides to individuals and is not operated for the purposes of transporting goods or commodities for a toll or a fee or of being a common carrier." The intent here is pretty clear. It is true that the Alberta Central Railway charges fees for rides, but even in that statement, we can see that they are charging for a ride, not for transporting goods or people between destinations. If this were the case, then the railway would be considered a public railway.

A third question raised by the member was asking for a clarification between a heritage railway and an amusement railway. The main distinction between the two is the age of the rolling stock which is being used in the park. An amusement railway can use any age of equipment which they choose. It does not have to have been manufactured before a certain point in time. Quite the opposite when we talk about heritage railways.

The entire drive behind introducing this legislation is to better recognize the contribution which is made by heritage railway operators in preserving pieces of Alberta's heritage. This is accomplished by adding the heritage railway category in the Railway (Alberta) Act, around which regulations appropriate to the historical railway equipment will be written. At present railways in park settings fall under the same regulations as national carriers.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked for an example of how present regulations do not work for heritage railways. The best example which I can think of has been raised by many of my colleagues and has to do with track inspection. At present the operators of the Alberta Central Railway Museum must inspect their track twice a week. This operation runs two trips daily, five days per week for five months of the year. This means a total of 10 trips per week in a train which does not exceed 10 miles per hour. In comparison, national carriers CN and CP also need to inspect their track twice a week; however, these rails are carrying far heavier loads at much higher speeds, and there are more than 10 trains passing over these rail lines in a week. This is only one example, but it illustrates the difficulties which are being experienced by the operators of heritage railways.

By reducing the difficulties facing heritage railways, this bill has the potential to lower the expenses for the operators of the affected railways. It is the intent that the department of infrastructure will work with the stakeholders after the passage of this bill to draft appropriate regulations to their operations. These regulations would of course be drafted in a way that safety remains the highest priority. Having said that, there can be operational requirements which these railways are currently meeting which are likely unnecessary. If these requirements are altered to suit the needs and operations of the railway affected, then there can be cost savings. Regulations and safety requirements are necessary, but it is paramount that they are appropriate to the function of the equipment and operators to which they are being applied.

Mr. Speaker, through Bill 203 we will be assisting vintage railway operators in this province. The idea for Bill 203 was brought forward by the operators of heritage railways, and they have been consulted in the drafting of this legislation. In every discussion with the operators it has been stressed time and again that safety is the number one concern, and Bill 203 will not change this. The organizations which operate heritage railways do a great service for Albertans in preserving our railway history and by providing our citizens the opportunity to ride the rails as early Albertans did.

I'd like to thank all my colleagues on both sides of this Chamber for their support and for the questions which were raised during the debate. I ask that they once again support Bill 203 and pass it through third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really am pleased to be able to speak to Bill 203, the purpose of which is to take into consideration the difficulty of the Alberta Central Railway Museum as well as the three other active sites in Alberta that utilize vintage equipment on full-gauge tracks. These include the lines at Fort Edmonton Park, Calgary Heritage Park, and the Alberta Railway Museum.

By creating a heritage railway designation under the Railway (Alberta) Act, we will build a platform to free them from the unnecessary burdens they currently face. By following this legislation with more appropriate regulations, we will be giving them a chance to operate under more fitting guidelines but will not be giving them free reign that could possibly endanger the visitors and riders. I think that railways have a very strong connection to our past and teach us a lot about the history of our province and how it developed, and they can also teach us about the future and how, in fact, they will come back to serve us again here in Alberta. Effort to support the continued use of trains is worthwhile.

I have a number of observations about the subject matter of this bill and the intent of this bill. First, it recognizes the principle that one size does not fit all. This is true for the special class of railways we're discussing here that have vintage equipment, often of wooden construction, slow speeds, and low tonnages. However, it is also true at other levels of the rail industry.

Last year, in addition to the Wabamun spill here, there were some serious derailments in B.C., including two on trestle bridges on the British Columbia Railway. One of these spilled toxic chemicals that killed virtually all the fish downstream in the Cheakamus River. The British Columbia Railway was recently taken over by CN, but it is not built to Canadian National standards. Many of the bridges are wooden grasshopper trestles built out of the sides of canyons and mountain slopes. Its curves are tight, and some of the grades are steep. However, CN was attempting to operate this line with milelong, heavy freight trains as it does on its transcontinental main lines. The Canadian Transportation Safety Board recognized this. In its report on the accidents it restricted CN to trains of 80 car lengths in this territory in the future.

A parallel situation existed in Alberta in the former Central Western Railway that ran 20 years ago. Central Western was able to operate a line that CN had found unprofitable by working on different scale. Instead of maintaining a dozen distinct trains with separate staff on each, workers doubled up and did different jobs on alternate days. They ran trains two to three days a week, cut the grass along the track, and did shop work on the equipment the other two to three days. They could save costs here, but they had to lay more out in other areas. For instance, because the track was of older, lighter steel, it could not handle the heavy grain trains that operated the main lines on the major carriers. Even the large grain cars from these trains could only be filled to two-thirds of their normal capacity. These are examples of differences in operating conditions between different freight railways that are common carriers.

Then, there are different standards for passenger operations. Passenger trains are shorter and lighter than today's heavy freight trains. This means they can start and stop more quickly and travel at higher speeds. A line that is designed primarily for passenger traffic will have a number of features different from a freight line, including banking to prevent people and dishes being thrown to the outside edge on curves. A freight line that is used to handle passenger trains must either upgrade its trackage to this standard or limit them to lower operating speeds.

I have fond memories of travelling on the train 23 years ago. Two weeks ago I also had the opportunity to join a group of friends for a day trip to the mountains on Via Rail's train the Canadian. I was impressed by the atmosphere, the decor, the food, and the service. The dome and dining cars, built in the 1950s and refurbished, are only semi wheelchair accessible, yet the staff proved very adept at manoeuvring me through passageways and up and down stairs. I understand that handling special-needs passengers is part of their training and is upgraded regularly. I strongly urge any member of this Assembly to support the retention and increase of this service from three times weekly to daily as Via would like to do in time for the 2010 Olympics. It is an excellent way to see the country, meet people, and reduce the traffic on our roads.

Regular passenger services, heritage railways, heavy haul, and short line freight operations all have different conditions and point to the need that underlines Bill 203. Canada's two major railways, Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, led the continent in the size and efficiency of their operations. They have achieved this position by maximizing what they do well: hauling heavy, long-distance, bulk freight commodities. But because they are good at what they do and serve a vast majority of the market does not mean that their operational standards should apply to everyone. Mr. Speaker, our legislative framework must address all needs and situations, and that is what this bill is trying to do.

While supporting, I have a couple of questions that perhaps the hon. member can answer at another time. Of the four Alberta heritage railways he cites, two, Fort Edmonton Park and Heritage Park Calgary, are freestanding lines; that is, they do not directly connect to any other railways. Any equipment, locomotives, or coaches brought in and out must be loaded by crane onto flatbeds and hauled by truck. The other two lines, Alberta central and the Alberta rail museum, do connect to the railway grid, one to CP and the other to CN. This means they can receive and send out equipment by rail if it meets interchange standards or if the railways agree to handle it under special conditions. My point is: is the difference whether a heritage line connects with other rail lines not as important as the distinction between a heritage railway and a common or statutory carrier? Is this a difference, or should it be recognized, perhaps, in this legislation?

My second point is about the maximum speed on heritage railways; 30 kilometres per hour translates to about 20 miles per hour. North American railways, Canadian ones included, still use miles as a unit of measurement, and 12 to 13 miles per hour, which is what 20 kilometres per hour comes to, I believe is below the speed at which some excursion trains operate using heritage equipment. I believe the 30 kilometre per hour maximum for heritage trains operating in rural areas, with longer stretches of track than Fort Edmonton and Heritage Park conditions, where they can operate faster without risk to people on the ground that comes in an urban park setting is reasonable.

I am happy to endorse Bill 203 and the sector of heritage preservation that it benefits. I think Bill 203 achieves the desired end in a simple way and at the same time gives these historic sites the designation of heritage railway, which is accurate, fitting, and worthwhile.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. This bill would amend the Railway (Alberta) Act to create a new heritage designation for railways that meet certain criteria.

Bill 203 would currently apply to four historical railway attractions in our province: the Alberta Railway Museum, Fort Edmonton Park, Calgary's Heritage Park, and the Central Alberta Railway Museum. These railways are currently classified as amusement railways and must often adhere to regulatory standards that are intended for different usage. The object of this legislation is to create a new set of rules that would be more appropriate for these railways. The creation of a new heritage designation would allow greater flexibility in the operation of railways located at these historical attractions. By reducing some of the cumbersome rules and regulations that often burden these railways, they would be able to cut down on operating costs associated with overregulation. This would lead to potential savings from maintenance costs, which could be redirected to other vital areas.

When there is talk of regulatory change, many people often assume that there will be a corollary drop in safety standards. However, hon. members can rest assured that that will not be the case for these railways, Mr. Speaker, for at least as far as rules and regulations relating to safety are concerned, standards that are appropriate to the speed and the operations of those railways will be taken into consideration. Safety will obviously remain the number one priority for these railways and for the government, and any future regulatory changes will be sure to reflect the priority of safety.

The new rules that would result from the creation of a heritage railway designation would not compromise the safety standards in place at tourist attractions. The Department of Infrastructure and Transportation would work with stakeholders and other agencies to develop appropriate rules, regulations, and standards that would better reflect the unique nature of these railways. New regulations would be more indicative of the operational realities of these heritage railways. Regulations and rules are not one size fits all, and this bill would reduce some of the unnecessary red tape.

This would be consistent with one of the goals articulated in this year's throne speech, which announced the government's commitment to undertake a comprehensive regulatory review intended to review and identify unneeded rules and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 could also increase the potential for heritage railways to better maintain the character and historical nature of the trains that they operate. I'd like to offer one example to illustrate this point. For example, current regulations could require a specific type of brakes or a specific type of crossing warning system to be used in conjunction with the operation of these railways, and these particular mechanisms might be more expensive than required – by mainline railways such as CP Rail or CN Rail. While they might be necessary for trains that travel at higher speeds and that cross highways or transport people or goods over long distances, they may not be required for the purposes of slow-moving locomotives at the Alberta Railway Museum, for example, which are used to provide rides to visitors.

Under new regulations for heritage railways the original integrity of the trains could be enhanced. The regulations could allow for more use of original equipment. Moreover, the potential savings on maintenance costs could allow the Alberta Railway Museum to be better maintained in its more original and more authentic state.

Over time the importance of trains in our society has diminished, and steam locomotives are no longer the engines driving our economy, so to speak. New technologies and improvements to our highways have lessened the prevalence of railways in our society. There may be fewer lines today, but the tourist destinations that would benefit from heritage designation would ensure that railways and the past are not forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, we do have a responsibility to do all that we can to protect this part of our history. We need to ensure that future generations of Albertans understand and enjoy this once prominent part of our heritage. I want future Albertans to know and love the distinct sound of the steam engine as it travels down the rail tracks sounding its whistle. Bill 203 provides an excellent opportunity to aid this noble pursuit. The designation of heritage railways and the subsequent reduction of the overregulation and obstacles encumbering these railways assists these historical tourist attractions in maintaining the high level of service and historic value that Albertans have come to expect.

The heritage railway designation would do more than aid affected railways through regulatory change. It is also a symbolic gesture that would show a commitment to preserving this important part of our history. The new heritage designation could breathe a new life into Alberta's historical railway attractions. The debate surrounding this bill and the subsequent changes may raise the profile of these attractions and draw more Albertans out to enjoy the Alberta Railway Museum, Alberta Central Railway Museum, Heritage Park, and Fort Edmonton Park. The heritage designation could also add further credibility to these railways and generate further interest among Albertans eager to learn more about our history.

Regulatory changes resulting from Bill 203 could facilitate the creation of more heritage railways by reducing the red tape and may even result in the future establishment of more museums and tourist attractions dedicated to historical trains.

Mr. Speaker, there are many valid reasons for supporting Bill 203. I'm very supportive of this bill, and I urge fellow members to support the bill in third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to rise today in order to join the discussion regarding Alberta's heritage railways. The operators of these facilities need us to redesignate these railways so that they are not faced with excessive costs in trying to obey standards that were not designed for them in the first place. It is unreasonable for us to expect the operators of these small railways to follow the rules set out for big operators like CP Rail and CN Rail.

These parks are not making excessive profits on train rides by any stretch of the imagination, Mr. Speaker. In some cases rides on these historic trains are free with admission to the park or museum. In order for these groups to follow the rules, costs must be incurred for an individual to inspect the lines a certain number of times a week or perform other tasks that these regulations demand. I do not believe it would be unreasonable for new legislation to be passed in order to create more appropriate standards for these heritage railways.

3:30

Safety would of course still be a first priority, Mr. Speaker. Albertans need not be concerned as to the safety of these railways after they have been redesignated from amusement railways to heritage railways. These rules would be specific to these railways but would still provide for safe operation. They would simply be specific to heritage railways. The safety of these railways would in no way be compromised.

Mr. Speaker, our heritage railways are an important part of our history. They give our children an idea of what the west was like in the past when trains crossed the vast expanse that was the new frontier. Trains were a fixture in our communities, and it would be a tragedy to lose this part of our heritage.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a minute to discuss some of the history and facts about one of the parks with a heritage railway that would benefit from Bill 203 and the eventual creation of appropriate regulations for these small operators. The railway I would like to discuss is that of the railway at Fort Edmonton Park. The train running in this park is a remnant of the train that began running in 1902, over a hundred years ago. The train was run by Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway, or EY & P Railway, whose operations carried them throughout the Edmonton area. This railway carried passengers until the middle of the 1920s and ceased its main operations in 1951. The railway did continue to be used as a spur line as opposed to a main trunk line, however, until the 1970s.

Most of the railway cars date back to 1905 or 1913 and were purchased from the Northern Alberta Railway. The most impressive part of the train, the locomotive, was built in the early 1900s in Pittsburgh by the Baldwin Locomotive Works. It took a whole year for the park to restore this piece of the train. Originally the locomotive was used in the state of Louisiana. For 50 years it pulled both passengers and freight.

Mr. Speaker, at present the park offers rides for free on the former EY & P Railway, stopping at both the entrance to the park and at the rear of the park, where the fort is located. This train is a moving timepiece, capturing the essence and the spirit of a day long ago.

Mr. Speaker, these railways are there to teach our children and youth about trade and the building of our province and western Canada in general. Without these railways Alberta would not be the province it is today. There may be some individuals who believe that the current rules work fine for these operators as they have the option to apply for exemptions from them. Those involved do not feel, however, that the system is very responsive. Therefore, why not create legislation that deals with their needs separately? Why not create legislation that would actually be geared towards these heritage railways? Why make these parks and museums follow standards that were not designed for them in the first place? In most cases these railways are only part of a park's or museum's historical offerings. In Fort Edmonton Park they have buildings and streets dedicated to different time periods such as 1885 Street, 1905 Street, and 1920 Street, for example.

Mr. Speaker, this park charges a very reasonable fee for entrance to its facilities. I do not think that this park or any other facility can afford to focus a great percentage of their time and funding on following rules originally designed for railways such as Canadian National or Canadian Pacific. We would be doing our children a great disservice if we did not try to help out these facilities by creating legislation designed for them particularly. These four historical trains at Fort Edmonton Park, Alberta Railway Museum, Calgary Heritage Park, and Alberta Central Railway Museum are providing our kids with the opportunity to ride a full-size train. This is an opportunity they may not otherwise have.

All full-size trains are regulated under the Railway (Alberta) Act. However, under the current legislation there is no special designation for heritage railways. This bill, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, has been proposed to address this need.

Mr. Speaker, I support the small heritage businesses in this province, and I would happily endorse reasonable changes that would support them. As MLAs for Alberta I suggest that we come together in order to create legislation that will have a positive effect on these important historical facilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Alberta's railroads are an integral part of the heritage of this province. From the late 19th century, when the first railroad was struck in Alberta, to the present day railways have served as an important link between the people and the communities of Alberta. My own father participated in laying railroads across Alberta. Not only did railroads aid early settlers to Alberta in founding the communities that now make up the province, but they also allowed for the marketing and transporting of the goods and ideas necessary to sustain these communities.

Mr. Speaker, the heritage of this province is something that we as Albertans cherish. Creating tangible links to our past allows us to see where we came from and contributes to the overall vitality and richness of life in our province. Unfortunately, preserving our heritage is something that can often be extremely costly and burdensome to nonprofit groups that choose to take on this important responsibility. This is particularly true with respect to the preservation of railways.

The present legislation governing Alberta's railways often compounds this challenge in that it simply does not take into account the operating realities for our heritage railways. Under the current legislation Alberta's heritage railways adhere to the same standards and operating procedures as national carriers such as CN, CP, and Via Rail. It simply is not realistic to expect these organizations to continue to operate in this manner. Bill 203 will rectify this situation by creating a designation that recognizes the special contribution that Alberta's heritage railways make to the cultural and historical mosaic of this province and that will better reflect the operating realities that organizations responsible for preserving these railways face. Only railways that were constructed prior to 1965 and which are not used for commercial purposes will be eligible for this designation.

Presently the Railway (Alberta) Act, 2002, stipulates that all railways operating in the province fall into one of three classifications. These classifications are industrial, public railways, and amusement railways. At present heritage railways typically fall within the amusement railway classification. This is problematic for a number of reasons.

Firstly, amusement railroads must follow the same rules as railways operating on mainline track. This means that, for example, heritage railway operators must inspect their tracks twice per week. This is perhaps not necessary as heritage railways operate at far lower speeds, much less frequency, and over considerably lesser distances than do railways which operate on mainline track. Moreover, it is not reasonable to expect organizations operating on very limited budgets and with a very short yearly operating period to perform inspections this frequently.

Secondly, the current legislation affords very little flexibility to the operators of heritage railways. In order to apply for any exemptions to the current legislation, heritage railway operators must go through a time-consuming process. This process wastes valuable resources that could be put to use to maintain and better their current railways and enhance their value as historic sites.

Finally, the current system misclassifies an important aspect of our province's history. Generally speaking, heritage railways are currently classified as amusement railways. Certainly, it is not to categorize an important part of Alberta's historical legacy as amusement. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing amusing about this classification. To describe heritage railways in this way is in effect to lessen the value of our province's past. We must simply find a way to more effectively capture the significant contribution that railways have made to this province.

Bill 203 will help to remedy this current situation by creating a system that recognizes the historical value of railways, is responsive to stakeholders, and accurately reflects the operational realities faced by our heritage railway operating groups. By creating a specific classification for heritage railways, we will ensure a system that is able to flexibly respond to current and future challenges posed to heritage railroad operators. A separate classification will allow for regulations that are specifically tailored to the needs of heritage railway operators and the environment in which they must work.

Recent events such as the CN spill that occurred in my constituency at Lake Wabamun in August of '05 have highlighted the need to keep our railways safe. Some concern has been raised that this bill would compromise public safety and our environment by lessening the standards that railway operators must face. Indeed, the contrary is true. By creating a separate designation for heritage railways, we will be able to create safety standards that better reflect the unique operating environment of these railways. Moreover, by separating heritage railways from mainline commercial and industrial operators, we will be able if necessary to strengthen regulations for these commercial operators to address current safety issues without unduly harming our heritage railways. Ultimately a system that is more responsive and better fitted to the needs of those operating under it will also increase safety for the general public.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is nothing that is more important to me than the safety of Albertans and the integrity of the environment, and I certainly would not support legislation that would in any way compromise this.

In recent years much progress has been made in the area of legislation that pertains to the railways of Alberta. The creation of the Railway (Alberta) Act in 2002 transferred authority of short-line railways operating in Alberta from the federal government to the provincial government. This helped to make the system more efficient by localizing it and making it better able to respond to the concern of stakeholders.

While this is certainly an improvement over the previous system, the unfortunate reality is that the position of heritage railway operators was largely overlooked in the creation of this legislation. Thus Bill 203 is really about building on the progress made by the creation of the Railway (Alberta) Act and extending its benefits and efficiencies to the operators of heritage railways. As with many other pieces of legislation the benefit of time has allowed us to see possible shortcomings and areas where improvements can be made.

It is time, Mr. Speaker, for us to make the necessary changes to the act so that our heritage railways can operate in the most efficient way possible and continue to educate Albertans on the meaningful contributions that railways have made to our past, present, and future. I urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 203 and take decisive action to facilitate the preservation of an important part of our heritage. By passing Bill 203, this House will demonstrate that it is willing to preserve our heritage for future generations to enjoy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and join the third reading debate on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. I was very pleased to see so many of my colleagues rising to speak in favour of this bill. I was even more pleased to see the genuine interest expressed in our heritage from both sides of the House. I think that our appreciation for the past is a universal concept, and I commend all hon. members who shared their views on this legislation.

We've heard so many stories and anecdotes, some of which made very definite points about the relevance and importance of this bill. Every Albertan treasures their heritage, and its preservation is a pressing concern.

This is what Bill 203 is attempting to do: to aid a limited and specific group of heritage railroads by providing a separate and distinct classification for them. Those who sacrifice their time and labour for the love of history should be helped in their efforts in every possible way. They shouldn't be subject to undue restrictions and regulations that don't necessarily apply to their situation. With Bill 203 an attempt is being made to advance the interests of Albertans by preserving our past. It is a very simple proposal with very simple intentions.

I would like at this time to address a few of the comments made by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I would like to thank the hon. member for sharing with this Assembly her recognition of the importance of heritage and the vital role that the railroad played in our province's past.

I would, however, also like to address the comments made by the hon. member in relation to the insurance coverage that is utilized by the railroads affected by the proposals of Bill 203. A statement was made to the effect that the bill will help reduce, among other things, the insurance costs of railroads affected by the provisions of the bill. I would like to point out that the bill effectively creates a separate classification for the railroads which does not have any direct bearing on the insurance burden they will incur. It may or may not, but this is an issue that will be determined solely by the regulations. Insurance assessment is a departmental responsibility. It is not within the scope or the intent of this bill to set specifics for rate reductions or rate determinations.

There was also a comment made to the effect that a probability existed of non-Canadian insurance companies providing service at present to currently operating heritage railroads. I cannot answer whether or not that is actually the case, but I would like to clarify that it is completely irrelevant to what is being proposed in Bill 203. The relationship between a historic railroad operation and an insurance company is determined by financial or other considerations and is made wholly outside of the legislative realm. Insurance rates are determined by insurance companies regardless of which country it is located in and are based upon the unique situational operating conditions of the railroad in question and risk assessments done by the appropriate department. Once again, regulations and assessments will be the final determining factor in the insurance costs that are incurred by the railroads. Bill 203 will have no effect on the business practice of insurance companies, and railroads will be able to buy insurance from companies of their choice regardless of whether it is domestic or not.

The hon. member also made reference to a historical railroad in Manitoba, the Prairie Dog Central Railway, and how its situation was similar to what we have in Alberta. I would like to address this point as it is not an entirely fair comparison if made in relation to Bill 203. The Prairie Dog Central Railway operates on a line of tracks in the Winnipeg area and goes from the Inkster junction station to the town of Warren, Manitoba. This is unlike the railroads which are affected by Bill 203, which currently operate entirely within a park setting. Section 2(a)(d.1)(i) states that for the purpose of the bill: "is operated wholly or in part within the confines of an historical park or similar park or site." The Prairie Dog Central Railway travels a considerable distance completely outside of a park setting and is therefore quite unlike the railroads covered under the provisions of Bill 203. It is quite similar to the Alberta Prairie Railway, which operates out of Stettler and which is unaffected by Bill 203. As the train operates over a great distance and passes through populous areas and crosses roads, it was felt to be more appropriate that it not be classified a heritage railroad as defined by that bill.

The railroads affected by Bill 203 operate fully within the parks, parks which bring thousands upon thousands of tourists from around the world to our province. They come to experience our heritage, heritage which has been preserved through the hard work and vision of dedicated Albertans. This tourism gives Alberta international recognition, but more importantly it brings history alive in our own backyard. We don't have to travel halfway around the world to experience the past as it was. We have it alive and well in our own backyard.

Bill 203 recognizes the importance of this heritage while at the same time providing an opportunity for smoother operations of these railroads. By recognizing their unique situations, we are enabling the creation of a new regulation that will have the potential to facilitate the daily operations of these historic treasures. At the end of the day a recognition of history is the purpose of Bill 203. The bill recognizes the importance of the railway in the formation of our province and honours it and our pioneers by helping to preserve it for our children and our children's children.

As legislators we have the responsibility to represent the best interests of Albertans in all that we do. Private members' bills provide us with a unique opportunity to bring forward issues that are important to our constituents, issues that do not necessarily deal with government policy or so-called big issues like energy revenue or health care. There is a time and place for debate on issues like those, and there is a definite need for private members' bills like Bill 203. With this bill we are seeking to preserve Alberta's heritage, something I feel is worth while debating, something I feel honoured to have been given the opportunity to stand and express my opinion on and, in turn, hear the opinions of other hon. members.

We cannot understand the future without a link to the past, and Alberta's heritage railways provide that link. They provide it for every Albertan, and I'm sure Albertans will agree that we have been representing their best interests in our debate on Bill 203.

In conclusion, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for introducing this legislation. Offering our opinions will support preserving the proud heritage of Alberta, and I'll ask all members of the Legislature to join me in doing so.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for bringing forward this bill. This is a functional bill and one that all members of this Legislature appear to support, as they should.

During the debates in second reading and Committee of the Whole we heard numerous positive comments and personal stories surrounding Alberta's railways and trains generally. From rides on railways as a child to squishing pennies on the tracks, I believe that most members of this Legislature have had some personal experience with trains and the culture, if you will, surrounding them. They are part of our heritage, our past. They brought this province and the whole country together, and many settlers chose to settle in Alberta near the railways because of the increase in opportunities for trade that the railroads provided. Many of our Alberta communities are located where they are because of their proximity to the rail lines. Thus, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's railways have been an integral part of Alberta's heritage and the building of this wonderful province.

Bill 203 will help to preserve this heritage by ensuring that those who still run heritage railways have regulations that apply to their needs in particular. We should not require them to follow regulations designed for the larger railroads, such as CP and CN, when they do not travel the same amount of distance or carry the same types of loads, et cetera. Mr. Speaker, I don't think any of the members of this Legislature dispute the fact. Thus, I would like to take this opportunity to attempt to respond to some of the remarks made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

The hon. member stated during the Committee of the Whole stage that he wished there were some bills other than Bill 203 that were bills that Albertans want to see. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006, is in fact a bill that Albertans want to see. I know that this is true of the stakeholders in this situation, who want to see legislation that is specific to their needs rather than being lumped in with the needs of Alberta's entire railway population. They are Albertans, are they not?

I also believe that Albertans would like to see legislation that promotes the interests of our heritage businesses. Without those operators Albertans may not have the opportunity to enjoy the experience that a ride on a heritage train can bring. Parks such as Fort Edmonton Park and Calgary's Heritage Park provide Albertans with a chance to look back and see what life may have been like for those Albertans that settled here before us. Therefore, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is indeed a bill that serves the interests of Albertans.

In mentioning that he would like to see more bills dealing with priorities for Albertans, the hon. member stated that he wanted to see more bills regarding security for transportation. Now, I'm not entirely sure what the hon. member meant by this statement, but I believe that Bill 203 actually does deal with security and transportation. Bill 203 will ensure that the new regulations still have safety in mind when dealing with heritage railways. Bill 211, the Traffic Safety (Mandatory Motorcycle Training) Amendment Act, 2006, which has gone through first reading, will provide another opportunity for this House to debate transportation issues. I'd also like to point out that in the budget this year spending on Alberta's highways increased $3.6 billion in order to improve our highways, including the twinning of highway 63. This also brings me to the member's postulation, essentially, that Fort McMurray is getting nothing from this province.

In relation to Bill 203, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie did not state that it was a good bill. I agree that it is a bill that will bring the regulations for those heritage railways in line with their needs and with their usage. The member supported the bill during the Committee of the Whole stage, but mentioned that he would like to see more bills regarding resource policies, savings, prevention of crime, and other issues that are a priority for Albertans.

I believe I have already expressed my reasoning for believing that this bill, Bill 203, is an important issue to Albertans. I also feel that the priorities of Albertans are being looked after in the proposed legislation we have seen in this House this spring session.

In relation to preventing crimes, as the member brought up, we have had numerous bills before this House this session that have allowed for discussion on this point. For example, Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006; Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act; private member's Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Methamphetamine) Amendment Act, 2006; and Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Driver Disqualification and Seizure of Vehicles Arising from Drug Offences) Amendment Act, 2006, have all provided a great deal of opportunity for discussion on crime prevention.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that in questioning the importance of Bill 203, we do a great disservice to the bill. Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta)(Heritage Railway) Amendment Act is a good piece of legislation and one that will be beneficial to all Albertans by helping out those individuals and groups who run our heritage railways within parks and museums.

In responding to the request that we discuss savings, Mr. Speaker, we as a Legislature have in fact had the opportunity to examine the issue of saving. The budget tabled on March 22, 2006, includes $4.1 billion that has been allocated to various areas, such as $1.9 billion to savings and endowments such as the heritage fund and $325 million to our sustainability fund.

We've covered a number of those issues already that the hon. member wishes to talk about as opposed to bills such as Bill 203, which brings me to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that private members' bills can only address certain issues as there are parameters that they must be brought forth within. If we were to address an issue of appropriation in a private member's bill, that would be against the rules, if you will, because it would then fall into the category of a money bill. As private members we cannot ask that legislation involved in the allocation of the province's funds be created through our private members' bills. I am surprised that the hon. member would even suggest that we try to deal with that in our private members' bills. I am sure that he must know what the limitations are on such bills already. Thus, I think he should understand that the needs of the stakeholders involved in Bill 203 are well suited to discussion through a private member's bill.

These facilities – Fort Edmonton Park, Alberta Railway Museum, Calgary Heritage Park, and Alberta Central Railway Museum – operate on short tracks. They could definitely use a revamp in the standards that require them to follow the same procedure as the large commercial or industrial railways.

Mr. Speaker, our Alberta railways provide a great deal of nostalgia for older Albertans and a source of enjoyment and opportunity for discovering Alberta's rail history for the younger citizens of this province. Railways brought this great expanse of land that we call Alberta together in a time when travelling great distances was a difficult and challenging feat. They made trade and habitation possible throughout much of this province.

I ask that all members of this Legislature join me today in supporting Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta)(Heritage Railway) Amendment Act. This is an important bill even if all members of the Legislature do not agree that it is so. I'd like to again thank the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for bringing this bill forward and for all the work that the member and the stakeholders have done in creating this piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Did the Minister of Justice want to speak? There are less than two minutes. I'll recognize you.

4:00

Mr. Stevens: Well, I can certainly in that time period, Mr. Speaker, congratulate the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose for bringing forward what is not only good in policy but good in practice legislation.

Heritage Park for my first two terms was a part of Calgary-Glenmore and now forms part of the northern boundary of the constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. I'm intimately familiar with it. Heritage Park has operated for in excess of 40 years, and for many of those years the heritage railway line that operates there has been operational. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they have operated that without any problems, any safety issues, whatsoever.

They in large measure rely on volunteers. I think that each year in excess of 60,000 volunteer hours are put into the park, generally, and many of those are with respect to the railway. Last year somebody came to town, so to speak, and started to suggest that the higher standards applicable to the common carrier railways be applied to Heritage Park. For a period of time there was an issue as to whether or not they would be able to continue to operate their heritage railway.

So, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member, thank you very much for bringing this forward. I can tell you that the staff and directors of Heritage Park are most appreciative of your good efforts.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to close debate.

Mr. Johnson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to thank all the stakeholders in our railroad museums for their input into this bill. The need for a special designation that is heritage railroad in the Railroad (Alberta) Act was first raised by them, and I want to recognize them for that. Secondly, I want to thank all the members of this Assembly. There are many of you that have spoken to this particular bill, and to my recollection I believe that all of you have spoken in favour of the bill. I would just encourage all of you to vote in favour of the bill at this time.

Bill 206

Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and begin debate in second reading on Bill 206, Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act. I'm looking forward to the debate today and hope to see many different takes on the issue.

I bring Bill 206 forward to this Assembly because I believe that families are the most important part of this province. Families are not only important; they are vital to the success of our society. There are many types of families in our society: from single-parent families to two-parent families to extended families and community families. There are different families, but the one thing that's vital in all of these families is that there needs to be the presence of both mother and father whenever possible. Both parents need to have a presence in their children's lives. That's my reasoning for bringing Bill 206 forward.

I have been concerned that many of the children in Alberta do not have positive access to both of their parents when a marriage breaks down. In debate today I think we're going to hear a lot about how the divorce rate is on the rise. To me this is extremely unfortunate, but it is a reality of the world we live in today. I realize that marriages break down for many reasons, and I'm not saying that they should all be fixed. My concern is that the children in these broken marriages are often put in the middle of these situations, and there is difficulty in children having access to both parents.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about a couple of things this afternoon that I have found in my research for this bill. First off, it's widely accepted that parental divorce is extremely difficult on children. It puts incredible strain on their lives and does have long-lasting effects. Children are exposed to high levels of stress during the breakup of the family unit, especially when there's a battle between parents for the custody of the children. Once divorce and separation has occurred, the stress levels do not go down but actually rise because they now have to deal with spending time with parents in two different households. What's also found is that this stress level rises higher if there is persistent conflict between parents after separation, especially if conflict continues during the exchange of children. Stress levels rise even further when there is continuing conflict over access to children. Studies have shown that conflict between parents over their children have long-term effects on development, especially into adolescence.

One thing that I would like to mention is that it's often the case that fathers are the ones who are viewed less favourably in terms of access. There is one statistic given by Braver and O'Connell that states that 25 to 35 per cent of custodial mothers try to interfere with a father's visiting rights. As well, Department of Justice statistics show that 48 per cent of nonresident parents do not have regular access to their children and that 25 to 35 per cent of nonresident parents with access orders are denied access to their children. Now, this kind of statistic is alarming, in my opinion. Both parents need to have access to their children, especially when it's granted.

I think that the fathers have to work the hardest to see their children, and in a majority of cases mothers are looked at more favourably in raising children. Now, I don't necessarily disagree with this, but the onus is usually put on the fathers to ensure that they're able to see their children. It's usually the father that has to go and pick up children from his former home in a lot of cases, and this causes much of the conflict in regard to access. This type of conflict is hard on children and hard on the parents as well, especially the noncustodial parent. There are many studies that have also found that fathers stop trying to see their children after so many years of separation because it has become so difficult for them to gain access to the children that they do stop trying.

Like I said before, the onus is on the father to ensure that he can see his children, and this is very difficult and does not help to alleviate the situation of conflict. This is horrible. Children need to see both their parents, and they need influence from both their parents. Both the mother and father need to see their children, and they need to have influence over how their children are raised. Fathers are vitally important to the life of their children. If the father starts to give up trying to see his kids because it's become too difficult to do so, it has long-term consequences. There are plenty of examples of kids who turn to a life that's not beneficial to society because they lacked the father figure or, conversely, the mother figure in their lives.

I want to stress how important both parents are to the life of a child. When children have the influence of both their mother and their father, they're often raised to be very productive and important members of society because they've had the total, full, support of both their parents. In fact, it has been shown that the number one determinant of whether a child is successful in life is whether or not both parents were involved in that child's life.

That's why I bring this bill forward. This is extremely important to me because I believe that if we allow a place where a mother can drop off her child, where the father can pick up the child without conflict with the ex, the children will be better off. I envision this bill making it easier for noncustodial parents to get access to their children in a positive, conflict-free environment.

I'd like to paint a picture of how I envision this bill working. First off, a family breaks down. During the divorce proceedings the judge decides that the mother gets custody of the children; however, the father gets to see his children every weekend. So mother, weekdays; father, weekends. Fair enough. Now, the way the schedules work is that the father cannot pick up his children from school because he works too late and must go to the home he used to reside in with his wife and kids to pick them up. When the father comes to pick up his children on Friday evening, he walks through the front door to greet his children, and he's met by an ex-wife and quite possibly the new love of the wife. This situation is extremely difficult for fathers, and it's very tough on them to keep their heads held high, especially in the first couple of years after divorce.

This sort of conflict is very real, and it's one of the reasons why some fathers decided to forgo many of the visits with their own children. It's also a reason for many fathers simply just giving up on access because it's become far too difficult. However, with Bill 206 the judge in the divorce proceedings could order that the mother must take the children, after school perhaps, to a facility designated by the minister where the father could pick up the children. Conversely, an even better situation would be if the mother and father come to the conclusion on their own accord that there is conflict and voluntarily decide to use a designated facility to necessitate access.

This is my main hope for the bill: that families will be able to use these designated facilities voluntarily. This facility could be a daycare, a boys and girls club, or even a church. When the father finishes his work day, he can come and pick up the children without having to face his ex-wife and her new life. I believe this will minimize and pretty much eliminate any kind of emotional conflict that there might have been in other situations.

As well, the staff at a facility would keep documented evidence that the children were dropped off by one parent and were picked up by the other. This way if ever there is a conflict involving access and it comes back to the court, there is third-party, documented proof of the access and the exchanges. If one of the parents does not live up to their end of the agreement, the judge would know this and be able to rule accordingly.

I believe that this bill will help the majority of families in Alberta who are dealing with access issues. This bill is a tool which is meant to help all those families where one parent has difficulty seeing their children because they're not comfortable going into a home where they possibly once resided. I believe my bill can help families grow stronger even if they are separated. I think it offers children the chance to see both their parents without being stressed out because of tension between the mother and father. Better and easier access allows for happier and healthier children.

I appreciate that there are many views on this topic, and I look forward to hearing all of them this afternoon. My hope is that all members will think critically of this bill and will come to realize how important this can be. I urge all hon. members to support Bill 206 this afternoon.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to speak to Bill 206, Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, and I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this bill forward. I, too, agree that it's very important. The bill facilitates the creation of child-access exchange centres, where the exchange of a child between parents, guardians, or other individuals involved in the life of the child can take place in a neutral, impartial facility. These centres will also ensure that the exchange is documented.

In essence this bill is aimed at making the transition for a child easier when she or he is exchanged between parents or guardians. The logic is that without such centres the exchange of a child often takes place in a confrontational or tense environment, thereby making the transition difficult on the child.

As I'm looking at the suggestions for this bill, I have some questions that I think need to be addressed, like: where are these facilities going to be located? Will there be centres designated in rural communities, northern communities, and aboriginal communities? Will these be government buildings that are going to be designated as centres? What type of agreement are you referring to when you say an agreement between parents or guardians?

I'm wondering, too: where you say that those two persons "are not to be in each other's presence when they exchange . . . the child," will these centres only be available to the individuals who have been ordered not to be in each other's presence during the exchange of a child? Will these centres be available to individuals who may not have a formal order to stay apart but who, regardless, prefer to use the centres as a means of exchange?

The conditions on access to the centre make me wonder, especially that some individuals are going to have to "pay or agree to pay any fee charged by the centre." It seems to me that by making individuals pay to use these centres, we may limit their practicality. It may be more useful to provide the services free of charge, and we do need more elaboration on that.

I recently became acquainted with a young woman who had experience with such an access facility in another jurisdiction. Her family had gone through a very messy divorce in which one parent was awarded sole custody because of the mental instability of the other. Because of the instability factor and the court orders that restricted this parent from normal access, this kind of access centre was the only way the children could have limited contact with the one parent until they reached an age when they could decide for themselves what further contact they would like. It seemed to work in that case, and in the circumstances where these limitations apply, I would support the provisions of this bill.

I want to note in response to the previous member's comments that there are many cases where the father does have the right to access but never uses it, never indicates any desire to use it, although the mother perhaps would like him to. Of course, we can believe that children should have the love and nurturing of two parents. The reality is that some adults have their own interests as a priority. I can speak of situations where the father has been the stable, caring, and devoted parent, and the mother has pursued her own interests and shown little concern for the children. We need to be careful when we're making assumptions here about the situation the children are dealing with and which parent is taking the responsible, mature, and caring role.

The objective of this bill is a positive one. I believe that creating these centres should reduce the level of stress on a child in a case where the parents or guardians do not get along or have a history of confrontation or violence. It is abusive for children to be involved in those types of situations where they are seeing and hearing violence.

In short, I think these centres will foster a more structured, controlled exchange between parents and guardians and allow those exchanges to be documented, which may be useful for the provincial courts. The provincial courts may find the creation or designation of such supports beneficial as the bill requires that exchange times and other information be documented.

In conclusion, there isn't anything much here that I'm concerned about except what I have mentioned, about the use of these centres and the fact that some people will have to pay to have these centres available to them. I guess I would have to say that if we can get some answers to those particular questions, I believe I can support this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to be able to rise and enter the debate on Bill 206 today, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act. As I look at the preamble of the bill, it says, "Whereas there is a need to encourage parents and guardians to have access to their children in keeping with the best interests of [children]." When I look at that particular statement and we start to look at what is good for children and what it is that they need in their lives in order to help them to grow and become all that they can be and what environment that is that would allow that in the best way, for me the tragedy of this piece, of course, is divorce.

I often think back to the '70s when I think I first recognized that divorce existed. I'll even go back before that. I remember that my grandmothers used to call divorce "d-voorce." It was like the big D word, and it was not a common practice in their day. You know, in spite of the problems that were within families, families often stayed together.

I also remember in the '70s when they started that common thinking that if you were unhappy in your marriage, your children would be happier if you got out of that marriage because if the parent was happy, the child would be happy. I think that in some ways that kind of thinking sort of gave people permission, and you started to see the divorce rate climb and climb rapidly.

It's been so interesting to watch later studies. I remember reading one in Reader's Digest not so long ago where they said that they think that thinking was wrong, that, in fact, children are much happier in a marriage even if it's an unhappy marriage if their parents stay together, that the children actually fare better in those circumstances. In further looking at the study, they said that in divorce boys act out right away and that girls often don't act out until they try to form permanent relationships of their own later in life and that those kinds of things become very, very destabilizing to them.

First of all, I'd like to say that I wish that there didn't have to be divorce, but I'm pragmatic, and I recognize that there are a lot of children that are involved today in families that experience this condition, so we need to look at those issues.

When I look at whether both parents need to be involved in their children's lives, you know, to me that is a no-brainer. I think we all accept that value and understand it. I consider myself to be an expert only in one thing, and that is being the mother of four sons. I mean, I've been their only mother, so I must be the only expert because I'm the only one that has been there as well as a father in their life. I've always said to my kids that there are two types of love. There's a mother's love, and then there is a father's love. I've always considered a mother's love to be more emotionally supportive, perhaps. I know that when my boys have problems, they tend to come to me before their father sometimes because they know that I'm going to be a little more patient, perhaps, in some aspects of their lives than their dad might be.

When you raise four sons, you quickly realize that there are times you really need a father's force as you're trying to keep them from going over the fence. All of my sons at this point in time are over six feet tall. They're bigger than I am. They're physically stronger than I am. I think they're still afraid of me, sort of. I don't know why when I look at them. But when it comes to their father, they can all describe the look. They call it the look. Now, my husband is not even aware that he has a look, but every one of my sons can tell you what that look is. They can even imitate the look, and they can tell you how terrified they are of the look, not that he's ever had to do anything beyond look at them, but there's just something in a boy that understands that look. I would say to you that a mother brings certain things to a child and a father brings certain things to a child, and they're both all so important. So I would agree with the hon. member who brought forward this bill that access of both parents is critical in a child's development and in the prognosis of their future.

I found it very interesting as I was talking to my son the other day. I was lamenting the fact that I'm a mother of four boys, none of which has chosen to get married and provide the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw with grandchildren. I'm one who thinks that's a great idea, and they, of course, keep reminding me that they have lots of time. I said: well, I just don't understand what it is with your generation; they're marrying so much later. I said: even when they do form a permanent relationship, they often want to test run that relationship for a long time before they actually get married; it's almost like they have a fear. I said: what is the problem with your generation? He said to me: "Mother, don't look at our generation. Look at your generation. In fact, many of my generation are the walking wounded of divorce, and they are afraid. They're very afraid. They lived through those circumstances. They know what those battles were like between their parents, and they don't want to take a chance or a risk." So he, in fact, blamed us, which all kids are very, very good at, turning things back on their parents. But in this instance it did stop me, and I did reflect on that, and I thought maybe he was making a very good point there. So I think that that generation definitely can tell us about what it looks like when moms and dads do not have good access to their children and in fact children become the bargaining chip sometimes in marriages that are breaking down.

Some of the toughest files and moments in my constituency office have been when constituents have brought to my office the fight that they could not solve in their marriage and did not seem to be able to solve through the courts, so they bring it to my office thinking I'm going to help them find some justice that they haven't found anywhere else. I think the part that has always dismayed me is that it always seems to be about the fight and not about the child, and I always caution and advise them to please look to their children's best interest in these circumstances.

When I look at this bill and the merits of it, at first glance I like it. I like the fact that we're trying to keep the best interests of children, but when I move on to the next paragraph where it says, "Whereas the Province should promote access exchange in a positive environment by designating existing [child care] facilities for this purpose," I think: is this a good practice? I'm not certain, Mr. Speaker, and it's one of the reasons that I wanted to be here for today's debate. I wanted to be able to hear what other members had to say about this. I have some concerns about this. I'd like to hear some answers to this. Is this a good practice?

I'd like to hear whether the Minister of Justice, in fact, thinks this would work well with the court systems, if this could be a good practice. I need to know: would this create or move a flashpoint to a place where other children are present, and do we have some concerns around that? I mean, the last thing that I would like to see is centres becoming the place where parents battle with other children present. There would have to be some special circumstances around these centres that are chosen and some special kind of training that would happen for those staff members that would participate there.

Can we feasibly do this across the province? That would be another question that I would have. I know that we often talk about rural Alberta and how their services are a lot further apart.

So those are three of the questions that I would like to see answered before I could support or not support the bill, but I do fundamentally believe that children always benefit when they have access to both parents in their lives and that it is critically important to them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think Bill 206, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, is trying to grapple with serious problems. I note that the member said – and I think we could all agree – when she introduced it that "there is a need to encourage parents and guardians who are separated or divorced to have access to their children." She goes on to say, "This bill promotes access exchange in a positive environment by designating child-centred facilities in Alberta for this purpose." I believe that we can all agree that it is beneficial for both parents to be involved with their children. I suppose that in an ideal world we wouldn't be in that position, divorced or not, but it happens. So I compliment the member for trying to deal with this.

I'm not going to go through clause by clause at this particular time, but I want to just lay out some concerns that have been said to us by the NDP opposition, and perhaps the member can allude to it later on in the debate. The act proposes to designate existing child care facilities as child access exchange centres, but it does not establish a mandate for such redesignated centres. For example, what services are to be offered there? Are they merely sites of child exchange, or are there to be supervised visits? I'll get in to what I'm talking about. Nor does the act stipulate staffing, security, or funding issues, Mr. Speaker, rather leaving everything to regulation or applying existing child care facility standards. Now, I believe that these are clearly insufficient. We need all the necessary additional requirements or modifications to be legislated to ensure that they receive proper funding and attention.

The act stipulates that individuals may use the services of the centres either by court order or by agreement, but I think that in that case, we have to define what agreement or services mean. The bill as it is does not establish whether or not these exchange centres would be merely exchange centres or sites of supervised access. As the member is well aware, the needs of each are quite different, and they must be addressed.

I'll point to what I'm driving at. The bill – and maybe the hon. member can talk to it – does not begin to address the reasons why people might use child exchange centres. Domestic abuse is often one of the reasons at least. The figure that we have is that of 76 per cent of women and children who are victims of domestic abuse, more than half of them flee their homes with their children. More than 30 per cent of them have been there before, and a little better than half of them eventually press charges and manage to extricate themselves and their kids from dangerous situations. I know that that's not all the cases, but that happens.

Now, once they do, many of these women find themselves victims of retaliatory violence and must therefore make use of child exchange centres to ensure their continued safety while obeying court-ordered visitation rights of their former spouse lest they be charged with denying visitation rights. The point I'm making is that these exchanges now take place at Edmonton Police Service or RCMP detachments. The reason, of course, is obvious: security measures to protect both mother and children. The mother is guarded in a back room while the police or RCMP exchange the children with the father at the front of the station.

That's one type of situation we have to look at. I take it – and the member can perhaps enlarge on this after – that that's not the situation that she's looking at because we have to be very careful in that situation. Obviously, supervision is absolutely necessary, I think, in those cases. Perhaps this is what we're driving at, but it's not clear in the bill, and that's why I'm asking that this be clear. Child exchange arrangements are not always, of course, due to violent circumstances. Rather, the realities of divorce or separation result in difficult situations for all involved. A neutral exchange centre is laudable, and I believe that that's sort of what we're looking at.

This is a great idea, but I think we need a little more in the bill, in the legislation itself. For example, I don't know if the minister is aware that the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters has produced an in-depth analysis of this issue, one that recognizes the many complicated facets of the problem, the least of which is that child access exchange centres need a whole new type of staff: part social worker, part remand centre guard, part psychologist, part legal aid, part mediator. I would suggest with all due respect that leaving such staffing requirements to regulation – and we know what's happened in long-term care – often doesn't work. It does not ensure that proper funding is dedicated to the training of such staff, that the staffing levels and competence will be monitored, what training staff will undergo, and what support staff will be on hand.

In other words, we're into a very complicated area, and I think we need to spell this out. The idea, I believe, has merit, but it can't be left to regulation. I think this is too serious a problem. I see that the centres themselves must be multipurpose to accommodate for the various domestic situations leading to their use and also to reflect the needs of children in question, whose ages can range, you know, from infant to teenager. Their security and comfort must be paramount, and simply redesignating child centre facilities, even modified, will not do so. So what we're suggesting is the training, and some thought has to be put into this.

One I will bring up. I said I wouldn't go into it, and I won't go into all the sections. I would like the member to take a look at section 4(3). This stipulates that use of the centres may be denied if either parent does not wholly comply with requirements for use. Now, obviously, we understand that there must be consequences, you know, if people lie to the centres or whatever, but denying their use would hurt the children more than anyone else. I think then we go against what the bill wants. The whole purpose, I think, of this bill is to do what's right for the children so they have access. I would ask the member to take a look at that particular section and see if it doesn't defeat the purpose for what the bill wants.

I would suggest – and maybe it's necessary in this – that it's a bill that's a good idea, but probably we're asking to do too much in this bill without the detail. We really, before we pass this bill, I think – hopefully the member would agree – need detail regarding safety requirements, staffing requirements, parental agreements, et cetera. The fact that these are all left to regulations modelled by existing centres ignores the reasons these centres are so needed: to make use of child exchange centres to ensure their continued safety.

I guess what we're saying also here: if we're going to use daycare centres, that's a very different role. Again, it comes back to what I was talking about with the training and the rest of it. If it's an exchange and they're doing other things, they can't do that. There's going to have to be the other trained people. You're going to have, perhaps, teenagers around, you know, in a daycare. That's not necessarily bad if there's proper supervision there.

I could go through this, but I don't think it's appropriate at this stage. Those are some of the broader concerns, and they would tie into sort of the preamble that I talked about: the use of daycares, sections 2(1), 2(2), 3, and 4.

I guess what I'm basically saying, Mr. Speaker, is that this is probably a good idea. Something needs to be done. I think we need to flesh it out a lot more because just setting this up, if we don't have, as I said, the proper standards, the proper training, and what the purposes are, how this works with the daycare that we already have – some other members have talked about, you know, the differences between rural Alberta and, say, Edmonton or Calgary. I don't think we can leave it to regulations. It's just too important.

I will certainly commend the member for bringing it forward. I think the idea is good. It's the direction we have to move in, but we'd better think it through and have the proper safeguards there.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and join the debate on Bill 206, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act. I'd also wish to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow for initiating discussion here today as I feel this is a subject worthy of attention.

I feel that this is an issue of family dynamics. Strong, healthy families are the backbone of this great province. Families give purpose and identity through collective values and beliefs. They form the foundation on which to build solid, vibrant communities, providing a sense of cohesion and co-operation to all our citizens. Having said that, times have regrettably changed. When many marriages once remained intact through good and bad times, nearly half of all marriages within Alberta now result in separation or divorce. This is an issue that has surely had an impact on more Albertans than can be imagined and has altered the once strong family dynamics for both parents and children. Unfortunately, we can't change what has been done, but we do have an opportunity to help parents and especially children cope. We should do all that we can to ensure that despite these discouraging situations where families become separated, the best interests of the children are considered in an attempt to maintain relatively strong family dynamics.

A strong sense of family is extremely important to children of any age. They must feel safe, comfortable, loved, and at peace. They need to live in an environment that is supportive and stable. In most situations children are very tuned in to what is going on around them, seemingly able to sense positive and negative energy. Mr. Speaker, the breakup of a family can have an undeniable impact on children. Divorce can lead to feelings of confusion or abandonment. It may also alter a child's perception of healthy relationships. Studies have shown that children of a divorced family are more likely to experience academic, behavioural, and social problems further on in life. These feelings may also apply to the parents as they attempt to come to grips with the end of a marriage.

Regardless of the situation opportunities should be provided to help everyone involved, particularly children, adjust to the changes as well as they can. This bill would offer that opportunity. We should be doing all that we can to help all Albertans live healthy and happy lives.

The majority of divorces result in a child living with only one parent and in some cases living in a completely different town or city than the other parent. This makes visitation on the part of the nonresidential parent challenging, to say the least. Mr. Speaker, for example, in some studies it is estimated that in regard to children in Canada living with only their mother, nearly half of these people visited their fathers at least once every two weeks. One-quarter of the children saw their fathers only once a month or less. Some statistics paint an even bleaker picture of the years following a divorce. It's estimated that two or three years after a divorce roughly one-quarter of children in Canada never see their fathers at all. These numbers indicate that a great deal of children in Canada may not be seeing their fathers nearly enough, and Alberta is no exception.

Additionally, there are sometimes cases when the residential parent will interfere with the visitation process in an attempt to deny their former spouse from accessing the child. A situation like this not only impedes the right of the nonresident parent to see his or her child but ultimately denies the child the right to visit with a parent that they may not see very often. This presents the need for exchange centres where certified individuals are present to document any relevant data pertaining to the exchange. As outlined in Alberta's child care regulations, this could help to ensure that all appropriate access orders are being followed. In the event that they are not being followed, the court would then have the ability to review said documentation and to make an appropriate ruling based on the findings.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 will increase fairness in regard to visitation in that it would not allow the custodial parent to unjustly withhold access to the child and through documentation provided to the courts create a safeguard, protecting the rights of both the noncustodial parent and the child. This is the biggest strength of the bill.

Several supervised access and exchange centres do exist in Alberta; however, there seems to be no regulatory consistency in terms of how they each conduct their business. Many other jurisdictions in Canada and outside the country are facing the same challenges as we are in this regard, although some have taken different approaches to resolve the issue. The province of British Columbia, for example, has approximately 10 locations that provide supervised access and access exchange of children. These facilities are regulated by the supervised access and access exchange program and are responsible for a series of directives, most of which relate to their staff. These regulations are in place to ensure that all staff members are trained and equipped to provide a safe access and exchange environment for all family members under a variety of circumstances.

The use of these centre, however, does have some limitations, Mr. Speaker. Only families who have been referred by a court justice are permitted to use the service. These particular families may only use the service for a three-month period, although extensions may be granted in some cases by the court. Even though the families who use these services may do so for a given period of time, the constraints do oblige the families to explore other independent, long-term solutions for visitation or the transfer of children.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this aspect of the child access centres in British Columbia should be closely considered. Not only does this province provide a valuable standardized service to those in need, but it also facilitates a process where the family must work together toward creating a long-term solution regarding the issues of exchange on their own. Current programs within Alberta do exist to an extent although it's important to make constant improvements. An advanced system could aid in improving relations between family members to some degree and could also alleviate some pressure that is being placed on the access facilities by promoting the family to become self-sufficient.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, this is what the process should be all about. Separated families that are unable to interact cordially for their child's sake should have access to a facility that will open the possibility for impartial exchange while learning how to compromise and to make similar decisions down the road on their own, although I would cite that after reviewing Bill 206, I was struck by the fact that this legislation is being proposed to the Assembly before we have completed the cross-ministry initiative dealing with visitation exchange.

Alberta Children's Services and the Department of Justice and Attorney General are both currently working on the project, which aims to shed light on the realities of this issue and explore the options available to improve the situation within the province. The current cross-ministry initiative led by those outstanding departments is designed to take an environmental scan of safe visitation exchange centres. This pilot project, so to speak, came from a large investigation by the Alberta Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying entitled Finding Solutions Together. The report listed safe exchange as an aspect of visitation that required attention and investigation.

Results of the current initiative are, to my knowledge, not far off, and if we proceed with Bill 206 before that time, it seems to me that we might be putting the cart before the horse and, in doing so, defeating the purpose of completing the initiative altogether. It's important to be patient. However, with this being said, I think that this bill does provide us with a good starting point for discussion. In due time if legislation leading to the designation of child access exchange centres was passed, our province would become the first to do so. This act could demonstrate to all Albertans that the government is committed to helping separated families interact in a way that always keeps the best interests of their children at mind. Therefore, I strongly urge all members to join me in supporting the intent of Bill 206.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by Calgary-Hays.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a few comments on this Bill 206, Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, and thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow for this initiative. I came into this discussion asking the questions: how serious is this and what are the numbers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow has indicated the seriousness of the issue, that children do not have access to their parents when there is a broken marriage, and it is a very serious matter. She offered the statistic that 48 per cent of nonresident parents do not have access to their children. That's a very serious statistic.

I don't need to be convinced that there's a need for a safe, secure environment for the exchange of children. Having been involved in marriage counselling throughout my previous career, I think the most difficult thing was just dealing with the tremendous anger and vindictiveness on the part of parents who are going through a divorce, an anger so great that sometimes I felt threatened myself, so I can imagine what young children feel when they are put in difficult situations when their parents are in conflict. So I don't need to be convinced of the need for this kind of thing.

The next question I had was: well, are there other alternatives? Maybe there are other structures that could provide this kind of thing. I know that there has been discussion in the past about a unified family court, and perhaps one of the services that a unified family court could provide would be this kind of service.

Why do we need such legislation if, as the hon. member mentioned, there is a volunteer aspect to this? I suppose that we wouldn't need legislation just to cover the volunteer aspect, but it's the court order aspect that we need to seriously consider. So if the court order is involving custody issues and the transference of the children, then it makes sense that there be a designated exchange place where the parents can take their children.

Okay. I'm convinced that we need the legislation. What kind of legislation? I notice that there are lots of examples throughout the country. It's easy to find examples. Just google through the Internet. There are different kinds. As the previous speaker mentioned, there are different types of centres.

In the state of Maryland, for example, such services are provided through the circuit courts of Maryland in co-operation with Catholic charities of Washington DC, which is interesting because the hon. member did raise the issue of the use of churches. I don't think the bill is specifically focused on daycare centres. I don't know why we get hung up with daycare centres because there are lots of other possibilities for the focus of this kind of facility, and churches would be a good one. I think that in Maryland it's not quite as developed as the hon. member envisions in this bill. I don't see that in Maryland they use trained staff, for example, and there's no cost involved, which is interesting. They don't charge anything. They just provide through churches a comfortable place for children to wait until another parent picks them up.

Now, Ontario is an interesting example. I know that some hon. members don't think that many good things come from Ontario, but Ontario has supervised access centres. In fact, there are 52 of them in Ontario. These supervised access centres provide a safe and secure setting where visits and exchanges can take place under the supervision of trained staff and volunteers. So it's much greater developed in Ontario. It's funded by the Ministry of the Attorney General and delivered through partnerships. So, again, there's that partnership aspect, which I find intriguing. I don't see anything in the bill that indicates that, that there ought to be partnerships between government and, for example, children's mental health centres or YMCAs or YWCAs or churches or local children's aid societies to provide these kinds of centres.

In the Ontario example there's a cost, as is recommended by this bill, but it's a limited cost. It's actually a well-defined cost, a one-time yearly fee up to $300 or a per visit/exchange of no more than $25, which I think might be important. Also, in Ontario fees are waived for those unable to pay, which I think is also extremely important for families on low income.

As others have mentioned, there's the issue of the training of staff. There's the issue of cost and how this is funded. There's also the issue of what department this would come under. I mean, if this was brought not as a private member's bill but as a government bill, it would probably be more specific about which department it would be under. In the case of Ontario it's the Attorney General, so the equivalent here is the Minister of Justice. I could see Justice bringing that as a government bill so that this would be authorized under Justice. The same with Saskatchewan. That's administered through Justice and their social work units. I think that's important to know exactly what we're doing here in terms of developing this legislation. The bill leaves it quite vague in terms of the minister. The minister would be whatever minister is defined under section 16 of the Government Organization Act. It would be better if it came as a bill from Alberta Justice, and we could move from there.

Anyway, those are my initial comments on this bill. I thank the member for bringing this because this is, indeed, an important issue.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise in this Assembly and join the debate on Bill 206, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Speaker, our children are the future of this province. In order for our province to continue to enjoy the economic prosperity and social stability that we are currently experiencing, it is essential that we do all that we can to ensure that our children are given every advantage possible. In this regard, I'm encouraged to see that this government continues to fund education and children's services so that our programs for youth are the envy of the country and our children are given every opportunity to succeed in the competitive world of tomorrow.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, while we ensure that our children are properly educated and enjoy the best access to social programs, there may be more that the government could do to ensure that the children are taken care of during cases of divorce. Divorce is, at the best of times, an extremely painful and difficult experience for a child. Divorce subjects children to conflict and instability at a time when they require a stable and nurturing environment. These difficulties are often compounded when there is conflict regarding visitation with children or parents are simply denied access to their children.

Our current laws surrounding access and visitation are quite difficult to enforce. While courts do have the power to fine or jail those who willfully violate an access order, the reality is that a lack of adequate documentation often allows one parent to hide behind conflicting testimony and deny the other parent access to the children.

Denial of access is something that occurs far too often in Canada. In 1999 the National Longitudinal Survey of Children & Youth found that in cases where children of divorce were living with their mother, only 47 per cent of children saw their fathers regularly. This is not fair and it is very harmful. Statistics have shown that trauma caused by divorce or separation has many detrimental, long-term effects on the personal development of a child. Children of divorced parents are far more likely to have behavioural, academic, and other types of social problems. Sadly, these problems often become far more serious later in the child's life, especially when children are denied access to one parent.

One American study which tracked 6,400 boys over 20 years found that those who grew up without the active involvement of a father in their lives were three times as likely to commit a crime. Moreover, the state of Wisconsin reports that in their state children who grew up without the involvement of both parents were 12 times more likely to serve time in jail than those who came from intact, two-parent families. We must ask ourselves why this is happening. The answer to this question is that raising a child is something that requires the time, energy, and love of two parents. We are fooling ourselves if we think the children are as likely to be successful later in life when they are denied contact with one parent.

I support Bill 206 because it puts into place a system that ensures that in case of divorce or separation children continue to have regular contact with both parents. By setting up a system whereby documentation of access exchange is kept by a neutral third party, we are making it easier for our courts to enforce access orders and thus more likely that both parents will continue to play an active role in a child's life after separation. Bill 206 will help protect children at a time when they are most vulnerable.

One of the chief criticisms of Bill 206 has been cost. Some of my colleagues have raised concerns about the costs that would be incurred to set up the system for designating and regulating child access centres. While I believe that cost is an issue that merits careful consideration, I also see an opportunity for us to save money for the taxpayers of this province. There are a number of reasons for this.

Firstly, Bill 206 will help our courts to perform their functions far more efficiently. Currently courts are forced to devote a considerable amount of time and resources to enforcing child access orders and monitoring compliance. A system whereby accurate documentation is kept will allow our courts to easily monitor compliance with a child access order and act swiftly in cases where one parent is denied access.

Secondly, there is a great potential to save money with respect to criminal justice. There is ample evidence, some of which I have previously discussed, that suggests that children are far more likely to commit crime later in life if they do not have the benefit of having both parents play an active role in their lives. As we all know, the social and monetary costs of crime are staggering. Housing an offender in Alberta costs several thousand dollars per month; moreover, there are additional costs such as court costs, administration, and costs to reintegrate an offender into society. This is not to mention the economic costs that crime has on businesses and private citizens as well as the many negative social implications of crime. Mr. Speaker, if by passing Bill 206 we can put into place a system that contributes to the stability of a child's life and make it less likely that a child will commit a crime later in life, then I think that is a worthwhile investment.

Another concern that has been raised is that the province may be legally liable if during a supervised exchange the safety of a child is compromised. This may be a risk, but I believe that Bill 206 actually reduces the risk to children by putting into place a system whereby the Alberta government works with child care providers to ensure that staff are adequately trained to handle child access situations and to minimize conflict. Minimizing the risk to our children and ensuring their safety and future health must be foremost and trump all concerns about legal liability. Mr. Speaker, to be sure, Bill 206 does have drawbacks and potential risks. Still, I feel that the potential benefits to Alberta's children far outweigh the risks.

Ensuring the future of our children must be a priority for government. Bill 206 will make a positive contribution to this endeavour by reducing the amount of stress that thousands of Alberta children whose parents divorce or separate are subjected to. This will pay dividends in the future by reducing social problems and contributing to the stability and vitality of Alberta. I urge all members of this Assembly to strongly consider making an investment in the future of this province by giving their support to Bill 206.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and participate in Bill 206. I feel that this is a very important issue, and I am very glad that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow has brought this bill forward so that we may debate it.

Families are the foundation of Alberta, and it has been proven time and time again that it is imperative that children, as they grow up and develop, have both parents involved in their lives and that both parents are active participants in their development. It is to the detriment of a child when either of his or her parents is no longer part of their life. Doing what is best for the children of Alberta is something I am sure that every member of the Legislature would agree with. Protecting and helping our children grow into productive and successful individuals who help make this province an even better one is an ideal that I am confident we are striving towards.

As an Albertan I am concerned with the vast number of couples who have separated or divorced within the province as well as within the country as a whole. Back in 2003 there were approximately 8,000 divorces in Alberta, a very large number, Mr. Speaker. With the breakup of so many Alberta families we must ensure that children have as many opportunities as possible to remain in contact with both parents.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, proposes one method for facilitating the continued relationship between noncustodial parents and their children. This can be done by designating facilities that are already children-specific, such as daycares and clubs, as areas for the exchange of children between their parents, thus cutting down on the need for the parents to come into contact with one another following a difficult divorce or separation.

One of the great aspects of this bill is that these designated child access exchange centres can be used both on a voluntary basis or by court order. Allowing average Albertans who are struggling emotionally with separation or divorce to use these facilities is a proactive step toward ensuring that both parents are able to actively participate in their child's life regardless of what may be going on between the two parents. Allowing these centres to be used under court order will also provide a useful tool for the courts. Not only will this help them to ensure that children are able to associate with their parents, but the staff of these child exchange centres will then also be available to record the access exchange between the two. This is an important feature of the bill, Mr. Speaker. Having these facilities available for the courts to assign couples to use in exchanging their children will no doubt be a useful resource for the courts to use. In having an independent third party that is able to record any information the court may request, such as the time a child was dropped off and picked up at the centre, the courts will then have available to them a record of the access exchange.

As well, courts could possibly assign guardians to use such a centre for a period of time if they feel that previous exchanges have been too difficult on the child. Courts could also use these designated child access exchange centres if a couple has appeared before them and the story presented is conflicting. Thus, as has been mentioned, the courts can order the use of such facilities so that documentation of the exchange could be carried out by a neutral third party, and it would be available for the courts to use. Currently judges are always making decisions in this regard on he said/she said circumstances. By having documentation present, the courts will be able to make better decisions. This clearer picture presented to the courts of how well both parties have been doing in terms of following access exchange agreements will serve to be extremely beneficial.

Mr. Speaker, whether these facilities are used voluntarily or by court order, they are a good resource for Albertans to ensure that those involved in a child's life remain in a child's life whether their parents separate or divorce. I believe that as the government any time we can reasonably encourage parents to take an active role in their children's lives, we should do so. The development of youth is influenced primarily by their parents; thus, they should both have the opportunity to participate in their child's life. In fact, our Family Law Act recognizes parents as the greatest influence in children's lives. If we can promote the access of parents to their children, I believe we should do so. The designation of these centres would provide such an opportunity. If these sites were also used voluntarily by some families following separation, it may reduce the amount of stress that children experience when their parents are no longer together. I'm sure that we have all seen the effects that divorce has on children. It can affect their ability to sleep, their performance in school, and their overall happiness. These designated centres for access exchange have the potential to reduce the level of stress that children face in such situations by increasing the likelihood that they will be able to remain in contact with both parents.

The designation of child access exchange centres for the purpose of voluntary or court-ordered exchange of children in a child-centred, neutral, and impartial facility with the ability to document the exchange is a good resource for any couple going through separation and for the courts, as has been mentioned. These centres will also be a good resource for separated parents to use in that the facilities designated by the minister will no doubt be places that are already used for the care of children or as a space for their recreation. Thus, children will not be exposed to a confrontational, negative environment such as a police station while access exchange between parents is occurring.

Mr. Speaker, I focus primarily on parents accessing their children as it is parents who have the greatest influence on a child's development and their life in general. However, I would also like to point out that the bill does not exclude others who have a valid interest in the child's life. Therefore, it does include guardians as well as other individuals, for example grandparents. This is an important feature since these individuals can often be left behind in a situation of separation or in the event that other people in the child's life are not getting along. This allows access to occur between a child and those people who are important in their lives.

Mr. Speaker, a week ago the members of the Legislature passed my motion, Motion 505, recognizing the positive and critical role that grandparents play in the lives of their grandchildren and encouraging access when it is in the best interests of the child.

Grandparents are definitely an important part of many children's lives. This bill would help to ensure that grandparents have access to their grandchildren even when there is a conflict or disagreement with the children's parents.

Again, in keeping with what is in the best interests of the child, Bill 206 can help ensure that those with a legitimate interest in a child's life are able to remain a part of the child's life. Because these centres could be such a useful resource as a place for separated parents to go voluntarily, for the courts to order couples to go, for the documentation of access exchange, and for potentially facilitating access for grandparents with their grandchildren, I stand to give my support to the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services, followed by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 206, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act. First, I would like to commend the hon. member for bringing forward the bill, that her heart is in the right place on the well-being of children. I think all members of the Assembly would agree that protecting children who are innocently caught in the middle of a parental dispute is of the utmost importance. Sadly, too many Alberta families have experienced violence resulting from conflict between parents. Too many children have paid the ultimate price for violence between family members. Providing children with a safe place to visit family is an admirable goal.

Our communities also recognize that it's an important issue. When my ministry had the province-wide Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying in 2004, safe visitation and exchange was identified as an area to explore further. I'm pleased to say that we're working to develop an Alberta solution to the issues in the best interests of the children. Safe visitation is in our current cross-ministry business plan. Together with the Minister of Justice, Children's Services staff have been working to understand the issue and the services that are now available. We've completed an environmental scan of programs across Canada and the United States, and we'll use the information to determine the next step for a safe visitation and exchange model that best meets the needs of Albertans.

Although this work is well under way, there are still many avenues to explore as we work towards building services that meet those needs. For example, we have to determine the value and the principles that will guide safe visitation and exchange programs in Alberta. We must look at ways of training staff in already existing agencies to build on the quality of service they provide. We must also develop a sustainable plan to expand availability and access to safe visitations. Our key consideration is keeping the focus on the best interests and safety of children.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, appears premature given that there is still limited understanding of the services that currently exist, the diversity between existing programs, and a lack of knowledge by those programs regarding best practices related to the safety of the children involved. We also need to further examine the various needs of rural and urban communities. One single approach cannot work in circumstances that vary widely from family to family.

It is important to note that Alberta has several projects already working to provide children with safe access to family members. For example, Mr. Speaker, the YWCA Sheriff King Home safe visitation program in Calgary works with parents to provide a safe place to have court-ordered supervised visits or monitor exchanges.

Also, our regional child and family services authorities fund many agencies that provide supervised visits between children and families. The clients served through these agencies are not specific to custody and access disputes. The focus of supervised visits is to maintain a child's safety in a wide range of circumstances. These local projects give us a good example to follow but need to be considered in the larger context of helping families across the province.

I would also like to mention that we are in the process of reviewing the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act and the regulations that apply to facilities providing care to children. The outcome of this important review could also have an impact, especially if it is to apply to the proposed safe visitation centres.

Children's Services, Mr. Speaker, is certainly supportive of initiatives to ensure the safety of children and families and to promote appropriate parental contact. Before proceeding, it is fundamental that information about current practice be thoroughly reviewed. Doing so will ensure that we have the best and most current information from which to move forward and make decisions for children. I would also suggest that it would be wise to ensure that any proposed legislation addressing safe visitation and access takes into account the findings and expertise gained through the cross-government ministry. This will ensure a co-ordinated, sustainable approach to addressing the issue of safe visitation and access.

At the end of the day we need to realize that this is not about adults; it's about children. I am very supportive of anything we can do to keep children out of harm's way while maintaining important connections to their family. However, Mr. Speaker, the issue is complex. The work we're doing now to more fully understand the issue and put together the best possible service for Alberta's children must happen first. Only once we've got a better grasp can we move forward with effective, accessible, and sustainable help for children who need a safe place to visit family members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 206 in second reading. I'd like to start by congratulating the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow for allowing us the opportunity to discuss this important issue.

Bill 206 highlights an important justice issue facing many separated families. It is a sad truth that many children do not continue to have a close relationship with both parents after separation. Children benefit from knowing that they are loved and wanted, and we need to keep working to reduce the impact of family breakdown. Fortunately, many parents in Alberta manage to put their children first and to work together to keep the children's relationship with both parents intact.

Before I speak to the specifics of this bill, I'd like to clarify a question of terminology that arises from the difference in federal and provincial legislation. The federal Divorce Act refers to a parent's time with a child as "access" while Alberta's Family Law Act calls this "parenting time." Each of these terms is correct, and though access is the term more commonly known, parenting time is what this time is intended to be. This time together is very important for both the child's well-being and for the parent.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that every member in this House has received calls from constituents who are not able to see their children. I can tell you that this government has been investigating the options for helping families find solutions. I appreciate that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow has raised the question of exchange centres for children.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons that children are not able to spend time with both parents. This makes the issue very complex. In some cases the problem is simply logistics. One parent may move away from the children to find work or family support after a relationship breaks down. In these cases it becomes extremely difficult for parents to see their children and remain a meaningful part of their lives. In other cases the problem is that one parent deliberately makes it difficult for the other parent to continue a meaningful relationship with their children. Unfortunately, some parents do use their children as a means to get back at their former partners. For some it may be an issue of control instead of what would be the best for the children. A study appearing in the Family Relations journal indicates that as many as 25 to 35 per cent of parents admit having interfered with the other parent's time with a child.

Mr. Speaker, there are other serious reasons parents give to explain why they deny the other parent time with their child. For example, we've all heard terrible stories of parents showing up to visit their children when they've been drinking or using drugs. Also, some parents might not yet have the skills or experience they need to keep their children safe and well cared for during visits. Some may have a history of violence. At other times the problem is that one parent simply does not make the effort to see their children. There could be many reasons for this also.

Some parents do not ask the court for court-ordered time with their child. Others fail to show up at the scheduled time. Other reasons include emotional concerns, a lack of a proper home to bring the children to, or frustration at dealing with the other parent. Failure to exercise access and access denial are very complex issues, yet I think we would all agree that we want children in Alberta to be able to have a healthy and continuing relationship with both parents in most cases.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud that some of the initiatives offered by Alberta Justice through family justice services have helped a great number of Alberta children maintain a good relationship with both parents. While parenting disputes arise – and in many cases they inevitably do – this ministry has ensured support to resolve conflicts. Over the years we have offered increasing levels of service to help families get through separation or divorce and to protect their children during the process. These services are in addition to the many supports offered by other ministries, such as Children's Services and Human Resources and Employment.

We also help parents of young children going through separation or divorce through the focus on communication and separation course. This specialized course is offered at no charge and helps parents learn how to better communicate even though they may be in conflict.

Mediation services have been another key component of our services for many years. Every year about 2,000 families use our mediators to work out their custody and access disputes, and over 75 per cent of these parents reach an agreement that works for them. For most parents this service is also available free of charge.

This past October the Family Law Act came into effect. This act continues the effective access enforcement provisions formerly contained in the Domestic Relations Act. Through those provisions people being denied court-ordered time with a child can seek relief from either the provincial court or the Court of Queen's Bench. The act also helps those parents whose children are not returned to them or who incur additional expenses because the other parent does not appear for scheduled time with the child. To make that legislation effective for parents, family justice services offers assistance to parties in bringing forward their court applications, and new initiatives are being considered as we seek to improve service.

I appreciate that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow has raised the question of exchange for children. It's an important concern for this government. I would like to note that as a result of the Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying, work on the cross-ministry safe visitation and exchange initiative has been started. The goal of that initiative is to improve the quality and consistency of safe visitation and access to programs across the province. Key staff from both Justice and Children's Services are working on this project as we speak. The hon. member's work has helped put focus on this very important issue facing many Alberta families, that of facilitating access to their children, but I would prefer to allow the cross-ministry group to complete its work before considering passing any legislation in this area.

There have been a number of questions posed by members who have spoken to this bill this afternoon. They need to be addressed. I would respectfully submit that there needs to be appropriate consultation with people who are involved in this area, the stakeholders, because they will be able to offer insight.

To give you an example, Mr. Speaker, in the Department of Justice we have initiatives such as domestic violence courts. There is a new initiative called ARTAMI, which is the Alberta relationship threat assessment management initiative. These matters did not occur overnight. There was a great deal of consultation and a great deal of work that went into these particular matters before they ever saw the light of day. They have started as pilot projects, and it has been an issue obtaining resources in order to expand these projects once they get going, not only in the location where they happened to start but also to other parts of Alberta.

While this is a very good idea, Mr. Speaker – that is, to improve access to children – it is also an idea that requires a great deal more work and answers to many of the questions that have been posed here this afternoon. So I would encourage that this matter not proceed at this time, but I do congratulate the hon. member for bringing it forward.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and reconvene this evening at 8.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:20 p.m.]

Use of Highway 41

506. Mr. Mitzel moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to promote the use of highway 41 up to and including highway 63 from Wild Horse to Fort McMurray as an alternate north-south transportation corridor from the United States.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to stand tonight and present to you Motion 506. What I'm proposing here tonight will be beneficial to our transportation system and to the economy of our province as a whole. In 2005 Alberta's exports of manufactured goods hit a new high of $79.2 billion. This was up 18 and a half per cent from the year before, with more than half of these exports going to the United States. Alberta does a great deal of business with the United States, both exporting and importing. We must have the necessary transportation corridors in order to ensure that our roads and highways can support our growth as a province. This is what my motion proposes.

By promoting highway 41 as an alternate north-south corridor with the United States, Alberta would be better able to move products and machinery more easily and efficiently to northern Alberta and Fort McMurray. Also, by promoting this highway as an alternate supply chain, we'll be able to stimulate economic opportunities for these communities located on the eastern side of the province.

As I previously mentioned, Mr. Speaker, Alberta does a lot of trade with the United States. Just to give you a better sense of how much trade we actually do, between 2000 and 2004 we exported approximately $255 billion worth of products from all industries to the United States and imported about $48 billion worth of products from the United States.

The oil and gas industry in this province spends a great deal of money on machinery and equipment. Something like $4 billion is spent on machinery and equipment, with the greatest portion of this being used in Alberta's oil sands. In 2004 we imported about $3.3 million worth of oil and gas field-related products from the Midwest United States alone. In urging the government to promote highway 41 as an alternate north-south transportation corridor, I'm asking that we have a transportation corridor to better serve these trucks hauling heavy machinery and equipment to our northern energy projects from the United States.

There are a great deal of north-south truck trips that happen daily in our province, and according to a recent report developed by the Van Horne Institute, 25 per cent of this country's heavy trucks are located in Alberta. This same report noted that our traffic volume as a total is going up 3 and a half per cent every year. It also notes that over the next 10 years we'll see an increase of 40 per cent of Alberta's total traffic volume. The need for good transportation corridors and alternate routes for traffic is therefore quite evident.

Mr. Speaker, when we discuss traffic volumes, it's quite evident that our main north-south corridor with the United States, highway 2, the Canamex, is heavily used. If we promote highway 41 as a supply chain, we can possibly reduce some of this heavy volume. Highway 41 has relatively low traffic volumes and can therefore support an increase in traffic by these heavy, wide, and slow-moving vehicles. Highway 2 and highway 36 will not be able to accommodate these increases in traffic in the future. What I'm talking about is the increase of 40 per cent in the next 10 years. Highway 41 will help to mitigate some of these pressures.

Mr. Speaker, by promoting the use of this transportation corridor, we can also ensure that these big trucks bypass Alberta's more highly populated areas. Highway 2 travels directly through Calgary and Edmonton, our two largest urban centres. By using highway 41, we can relieve some of the pressures due to traffic volumes on these highly populated centres. By doing so, we can also ensure that regions on the eastern side of our province see an increase in economic opportunities. With more truck travel we should see an increase in commercial businesses such as restaurants and mechanical shops amongst others.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that it's not too uncommon for trucks coming from the United States to clear customs in other provinces, at other border crossings, before continuing into Alberta. This translates into a loss of business for existing Alberta companies who would benefit from having these carriers travel through Alberta en route to northern Alberta. If they cross in British Columbia or in Saskatchewan and travel up through either of those provinces before coming across to Alberta, this means a loss of business for Alberta companies. It may also mean that some companies may choose to locate in other provinces rather than Alberta in order to take advantage of this business.

By promoting highway 41 as an alternate north-south transportation corridor and, in conjunction with this, asking the federal government to give Alberta a second 24-hour crossing at the current Wild Horse border crossing, we could encourage these trucks to come directly into Alberta from the United States. This would increase our potential for economic development. Mr. Speaker, for the amount of trade we do with the United States, we need a second 24-hour border crossing in order to accommodate this business. In contemplating my motion, I hope that the government will also consider urging the federal government for a second 24-hour border crossing. By opening a second 24-hour border crossing at Wild Horse, we could encourage some of these trucks to cross the border into Alberta from the United States and travel up the eastern side of the province by way of highway 41 and up to highway 63 to reach Fort McMurray and our Alberta oil sands.

Mr. Speaker, in asking the members of this Legislature to support my motion, I'm not suggesting that any other corridor be ignored or not considered as a transportation corridor as a result. We need to promote highway 41 as an alternate route to northern Alberta to ensure that trucks coming from the Midwest cross into Alberta and travel through our province to reach the oil sands rather than doing so by travelling the majority of the distance through another province. We should promote highway 41 in order to stimulate business in this area of the province, and we need to be sure that the heavy equipment and machinery used by our northern energy projects can reach their destination easily.

The use of highway 41 as an alternate supply chain could be one part of our provincial grid of highways. Eventually we may see the entire province covered with economic opportunity, infilling every area within this grid. Highway 41 can be viewed as a skeleton with the possibility for subsequent ribs to be added to the frame.

Mr. Speaker, promoting highway 41 as an alternate north-south transportation corridor with the United States will increase Alberta's transportation system. It will increase economic opportunities with the eastern side of the province and will likely help alleviate some of the strains due to the traffic volume that currently exists along highway 2. This would be a good step toward improving our overall provincial transportation strategy. It's an opportunity to be proactive rather than reactive.

I look forward to the comments from my colleagues and all members of the Legislature regarding Motion 506. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I very much appreciate the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat's Motion 506. I'm in complete support of the motion. The southern part of our province economically has been basically ignored for the last number of years. It seems that the Calgary-Edmonton corridor is the area where the province spends and receives quite a bit of its money from. That leaves the southern portion, such as Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, out of the loop. Highway 41, promoting its use and not only its use but the maintenance of it, which I would think would be part of the motion, is extremely important because without that ongoing maintenance the accomplishments that the member is suggesting will not occur.

I mentioned in earlier discussion that I'd like to see another highway to Medicine Hat improved upon so that we're not just dealing with the north-south corridor. Although the greatest part of our trade is with the States, we do have to consider east-west transportation, and that's where I would like to see the twinning of highway 3 come into place. In expanding our trade globally, internationally, as well as strictly with our main trading partner, the States, this government has recognized the importance of investing in the Prince Rupert container shipment port. While this particular highway 41 would not contribute directly to moving goods up and through to Prince Rupert, I believe that the southern highway 3 would accomplish that end.

Also, as the member pointed out – and I don't want to go repeating everything he's put forward – the importance of taking some of the load off highway 63 makes absolute sense. Highway 63, highway 881, and Fort McMurray infrastructure in general have been ignored by this government, yet private companies are still willing to invest billions of dollars into further oil sands extraction. Of course, in order to facilitate and speed up this process, we have to get the heavy machinery up there. That machinery cannot go by rail. It's too heavy. The rail allowances are not wide enough to accommodate the type of heavy equipment that needs to go up, so using highway 41 as an alternate access route takes a lot of that heat off highway 63. It's not an either/or; it's a multihighway approach.

Unfortunately, the province has seen fit to see almost 60 per cent of our highways be in poor to fair condition. So I would hope that if this motion passes, which I would encourage all members to support, there will be a built-in ongoing maintenance plan for the highway so that we have some assurance that it won't be allowed to deteriorate to the point that highway 63 has.

Speaking of deterioration, this weekend I had the opportunity to travel down to the Finance minister's territory, and I made the mistake of taking highway 9. So while I'm talking about 41, I also want to put in some honourable mention for highway 9. It's a sad circumstance that in order to get to Drumheller from Calgary, one of your options would be to take highway 9.

Speaking also of the importance of east-west highway corridors, to try and get away from highway 9, I took the Trans-Canada back to Calgary. I tried a different route when I was enjoying the East Coulee festival. I thought: my fifth wheel can't take it anymore; I'll try a different route. So I went onto our main east-west thoroughfare of the Trans-Canada. I would hope that the Infrastructure and Transportation ministry will have a good chat with the federal minister of highways because the Trans-Canada is in terrible shape. We must promote not only the north-south corridors; we have to promote the east-west connections as well.

The opening of an additional customs agency makes tremendous sense as well. Particularly during the period of the BSE and the ranchers' beef disputes we received a lot of difficulties from our Montana border. It may not have been deliberate, but it certainly had the perception of a great deal of extra inspection of vehicles, a very slow process getting across the border. Of course, for Alberta's economy, whether it be on the hoof or boxed meat processed here in Alberta, that north-south corridor is extremely important. Having a second station at which to cross as well as improved security relations with our southern neighbour would do us great facilitation for improving our truck traffic.

I'm not sure if the member had considered the possibility of a parallel rail system at one point, but we certainly need a variety of transportation routes to open up our north. Possibly considering a rail connection would definitely be helpful.

Once highway 41 does connect with highway 63, hopefully there will be a promotion and maybe even a speedier result for the twinning of highway 63. As we all know, that highway needs to be not only upgraded, but the grading of the highway itself needs to be changed. So any improvements that can see our highways returning to the standard that they were prior to 1992 I would very much support.

For that reason I very much support, as I first indicated, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat's Motion 506. Well done.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always an honour to stand before you and this Assembly. I truly appreciate the opportunity to join in the discussion of Motion 506 here tonight. I'd also like to take a moment to commend the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for introducing this proposal.

As Albertans today we are certainly envied by our neighbouring provinces as well as most of the United States. The cities of Calgary and Edmonton are rightly being recognized world-wide as economic, political, and cultural powerhouses. This success is not the product of luck or random good fortune, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta spirit is the reason for our success. I see the hard-working, persevering, entrepreneurial nature of citizens first-hand every time I deal with my Battle River-Wainwright constituents, and I know that other members of this Assembly see it in their ridings as well. As the representatives of these citizens it is only fitting that we reflect the same outlook while we govern this province.

Motion 506 is a fine example of how we continue to show Albertans that we are dedicated to providing for their needs. It is also an example of our vision for all regions of our province, not just our major centres. To a large extent the current economic growth that our province is enjoying is focused in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary and the communities that exist along the highway 2 corridor between them. By creating an alternate north-south transportation corridor, we will be benefiting many regions, Mr. Speaker. Pressure will be taken off the other often overcrowded routes. This can ease the maintenance costs of these highways and, most importantly, improve the safety for all travellers using them. If the Alberta government would also request that the federal government open a second 24-hour border crossing at Wild Horse, the import/export capabilities of this province would be enhanced. This aspect of Motion 506 has obvious benefits to the entire economic structure of this province.

Today it is becoming more and more apparent, Mr. Speaker, that alternate routes are needed not only to deal with growth but to create economic growth. Just recently numbers were released showing that Alberta's population grew by 25,100 people simply from October to December. This rate of expansion equates to .76 per cent population increase over that time period, dwarfing the national average of 0.14 per cent. This news made the headlines in many local and national papers, and it certainly deserves the attention of this Assembly. We as the leaders of this province must step forward to address the growth and prepare for the years to come. One of the best ways in which we can do this is by expanding our infrastructure through timely and appropriate projects. These projects need to be expertly planned and done in ways that not only deal with this issue but deal with the issue in the best possible way.

In the case of our highway system the utilization of different routes such as the highway 41 route from Wild Horse to Fort McMurray or even potentially the highway 36 route, now called the Veterans memorial highway, will address the demand for increased north-south transportation. It will also revitalize rural areas. Once the concept behind Motion 506 is expanded to create a so-called transportation grid, all rural Albertans will be strengthened in many ways, Mr. Speaker.

The need for transportation is a key factor in Alberta's rural development strategy. As chair of the steering committee on rural development I was lucky enough to ask rural Albertans what they felt the problems were in their communities. Many rural residents feel that the roads and other transportation services that serve their communities could be enhanced to inspire economic development. This is seen as a significant challenge, but one that can be overcome through efforts such as Motion 506.

By moving in this direction, we will be acting directly toward at least two of the pillars, Mr. Speaker, outlined in the rural development strategy: number one, "providing opportunities for rural communities to develop strong economies and benefit fully from the Alberta Advantage," and number two, "ensuring that rural communities have the capacity, the quality of life, and the infrastructure necessary to remain vibrant and attractive places to live, work and visit." Establishing a more expansive transportation network will sustain rural communities, providing security to their economic base and community capacity, both of which are essential to their survival. The use of highway 41 and highway 63 or highway 36 as an alternate north-south corridor will provide that lifeline to rural areas that it covers.

Motion 506 fits well into the rural development strategy, Mr. Speaker. It's a proposal that wields enormous potential for numerous regions in this province. It also creates a beginning point from which a complete transportation grid can be expanded to touch the entire province. It is a vision for trade and transportation within this province. Our duty as legislators of this province is not to ensure that one or two cities or regions or jurisdictions are represented; it is to ensure that all of Alberta is served.

An Hon. Member: Including Wainwright?

Mr. Griffiths: Including Wainwright.

Motion 506 is a fine example of how we can continue to achieve this mandate. It's a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker. In one way or another all the constituencies in Alberta could be beneficiaries of a transportation network. That is why all the members in this Assembly should join with me in supporting the principle of Motion 506.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak to Motion 506, that urges the government to promote the use of highway 41 up to and including highway 63 from Wild Horse to Fort McMurray as an alternative north-south transportation corridor from the United States.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, highlights two things. First, the motion attempts to promote discussion about opening the east side of the province for economic development and trade and, number two, the motion makes no commitment to infrastructure upgrades. The motion is not controversial. I'm sure that it will help rural Alberta. Of course, an alternative route from the U.S.A. to Fort McMurray would reduce strain on central Alberta. This motion makes no commitment to infrastructure upgrades. The motion is primarily for economic discussion.

I have a few questions for the sponsor of this motion. Will the trade corridor actually be used by industry? Does the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the sponsor of this bill, actually have a plan for developing highway 41? Has the member looked at traffic safety? Has the member lobbied the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to implement the McDermid report on traffic safety? Could the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat provide us with an update on the condition of highway 232, which is the American highway leading up to highway 41, ending at Wild Horse? Is the hon. member aware of the most popular commercial route for traffic travelling west on highway 16 from Saskatchewan en route to Fort McMurray? Presently is most traffic turning north on highway 41, or do they continue west before turning north? What is the fastest route for commercial traffic to Fort McMurray from highway 16 at the Alberta/Saskatchewan border? What is the safest route for commercial traffic to Fort McMurray from highway 16 at the Alberta/Saskatchewan border? I mean, the main thing is the plan. Building a castle in the air is something else. How much approximately will this project cost, and where will the money come from? Are we going to use the money from the government side or plan for a P3 or what?

Those are the few questions I would like to ask the sponsor of this motion. Otherwise, you know, this is a good motion. I support this 100 per cent.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, also, consider it a great pleasure to join in the discussion on Motion 506, Alberta's alternate north-south transportation corridor. I appreciate the comments that have been made here so far tonight. I would also like to extend a thank you to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for introducing this proposal.

I'm a very strong supporter of this motion and its suggestion to create an alternate north-south transportation corridor through the promotion of highways 41 and 63. I'm also a proponent of a transportation grid, that has been mentioned by other fellow members. This motion obviously talks about transportation issues, but what it really is, Mr. Speaker, is an important part of a much larger rural and economic development strategy for a significant part of this province.

On that note, I would like to take a moment to share a project with you that has great potential to be an integral part of this future grid. After all, it seems logical to me that after we have reinforced the north-south connections both to and through this province, we would shift our focus to the east-west projects. The Howse Pass is one such route which I feel deserves attention in this regard. You know, we can talk about highway 1, the Trans-Canada highway, and the Yellowhead Pass, but the Howse Pass doesn't have a road. I believe this concept, which involves the expansion of highway 11 through the Howse Pass, has been looked upon with favour for more than 60 years.

With the tremendous growth that is occurring across this province, the time is certainly right to look forward. Much of the demand that this latest boom has created has been in central Alberta, and the businesses of this area need a substantial east-west corridor now more than ever before. I'm not saying that we should start clearing the right-of-ways tomorrow or any time soon, but we should certainly look more closely at the realities of expanding highway 11 through the Howse Pass. I know that the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce in addition to all the central Alberta municipalities find the latest findings in the prefeasibility study on the Howse Pass and this route to be positive and worth further investigation and investment and exploration, and I fully agree with them on this new initiative.

The merit for the Howse Pass expansion lies in the economic infilling that results when a transportation network is set up. The same would be true for future enhancements of the east-west routes through Kicking Horse and Grande Prairie. However, the need for the Howse Pass is more imminent. In the spirit of Motion 506 I would like to have this government consider a prompt and transparent assessment of the Howse Pass expansion. This study should be used in part to raise the level of awareness of the project with municipal officials, all provincial representatives, and the general public.

I know that there are probably some people who feel that projects such as the highway 41 expansion and Howse Pass extension will have a negative environmental impact. While the impacts of roads are very real, as in all situations there are often many sides of the issue that we can look at. Considering that this route would save the total travel distance for numerous highway users, I would like to see an emissions-savings calculation done as part of a comprehensive Howse Pass study as well as the studies for the highways 41 and 63 possibility. The actual number of vehicle miles travelled would be greatly reduced for both north-south and east-west routes. Perhaps this would be a balancing factor for the concerns for environmental impacts and other cumulative impacts that highways would bring.

Another thing that I would like to talk about is the development of water systems. Now, this is totally different from highways, but I think it's an illustration to show what happens when you develop other infrastructure in the province. I want to talk about water systems for municipalities and for farms in east central Alberta. I can speak from experience on the development of adequate and good quality water in communities. If you look at the building of the north Red Deer River water system from Red Deer to Blackfalds to Lacombe and Ponoka, you will see that even before the water is flowing, there is a building boom going on in anticipation of the increased and secure supply of water. This means jobs and security for workers and their families. It means economic activity that has huge spinoffs that will benefit a much larger area if not the whole province.

Another possibility for this area, east-central Alberta, is the further development of gas resources throughout this area in this part of the province, gas resources and gas lines with the possibility of straddle plants and the further development of petrochemical plants and related industries. This is what happened in my constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka in the Joffre and Prentiss areas. The industry that is established there is only there because of transportation to water and the availability of feedstocks like ethane, propane, and butane. This has created thousands of jobs, a huge tax base, and security for families in the area.

If we continue to move forward, first with Motion 506 and then with other pressing projects, we'll be well on our way to creating a transportation and employment legacy for the entire province, from east to west, north to south, urban to rural. I'm sure there are critics out there who say that such a plan is excessive, that a transportation grid of this nature is only a pipe dream that is unpractical and unnecessary. To these people I just say: look at the past. The former leaders of our country saw the necessity of the railways to bring in goods, services, and citizens to the western prairies. They had their detractors as well, but they moved forward because they had a grasp of the present and a vision for the future. If it were not for their guidance, the province of Alberta may have never been born.

With this in mind, we the leaders of today need to support the creation of a co-ordinated transportation network across this province, and Motion 506 is a great place to start. I ask the members of this Assembly to recognize the opportunity that is here before us today to expand our north-south transportation potential. By moving forward with this motion and investigating east-west routes to complement these actions, we will have undertaken the beginnings of a comprehensive transportation grid to serve this province well into the future. When we discuss these kinds of issues, we are often accused of overstating the benefits, but if we look at the lessons we can learn from history, we will see that most often we vastly underestimate the end results of these ambitious projects. So this is part of my vision, Mr. Speaker, for the future of this province. I certainly hope that you my fellow colleagues will join me in making it a reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak on Motion 506 this evening, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for bringing forth this proposal. I think it's incumbent upon this Assembly to think creatively about transportation and development in this province. I know, certainly, that the eastern side of our province, while enjoying some development in the past, is probably looking forward to some development along this roadway, highway 41, and the economic benefits that it would receive as a result.

Where roads go, economic development is likely to follow, Mr. Speaker, and certainly we've seen in the past where good industrial roads and well-built roads usually end up with economic development along the corridors. Highway 41 has tremendous potential just because of its capacity to move, perhaps, around some more congested areas that we have had spring up over the past 30 years or so and move goods and services up to Fort McMurray, not just Fort McMurray but also the heavy oil centres up around Cold Lake and Lloyd and Vermilion. Past Lac La Biche there's a whole myriad of possibilities that I could see by focusing on this route.

I think that most members here would agree with me that the necessity of having an alternate route to move large, heavy equipment is painfully obvious. If you travel, say, along highway 36 or even 21, it's very common to encounter a number of oversized loads, which are certainly a sign of economic activity, which is good, but are also a traffic hazard when multiplied across the road. I saw the other day several, perhaps four, of these very large oil installations moving along, and when they sort of meet on a two-lane road, it's a somewhat disconcerting thing. So just to think of that highway 41 as sort of meeting that function I think would assist us considerably.

Highway 2 is such a busy corridor, both for the movement of people and of goods, that it makes sense to move transport trucks off the main highway, especially if they're travelling north to Cold Lake and to Fort McMurray. It's unrealistic to consider that regular citizens would be using this road so far out of the way, so the corridor I think we must focus as a heavy transportation for trucks and oversized loads specifically.

By moving heavy oil sands related traffic off of highways 2 and 36 and 21 as well, we reduce the need for a great many travel advisory warnings in regard to heavy and dangerous goods, which limits our access to these roads for individual vehicular traffic. I think, however, we cannot move this traffic onto a less developed highway system as highways that typically service these trucks have been specially designed. I would suggest that this motion gives us an opportunity to think forward on this, but there are many practical considerations that would involve a tremendous expenditure in infrastructure. These heavy trucks require extra load-bearing capacity on the road. Accesses and slopes have to be re-evaluated. So there would be a number of considerations in that regard, but it's certainly not insurmountable.

One issue that I would just like to point out, though, is that at Wild Horse it's not a 24-hour border control right now, and then south of there secondary road 232 from the States is not a well-travelled or developed route at all, so there would have to be some integrations with the state of Montana to co-operate with such an endeavour because certainly 232 is very undeveloped, even less so than highway 41. We certainly do support the opening up of alternative routes that may prove more efficient for north-south transportation, but I think that there is a problem in regard to lobbying the Americans in this regard. You know, they would have to be in full co-operation with that, and we must take that into consideration.

The proposed north-south corridor travelling up highway 41 to join 63 has very few industrial centres on it, although there are a number of towns. This might seem ideal for the transportation of oversized and dangerous goods. It does complicate emergency service access in some of the areas and limits the servicing of these roads to some degree as well. Because of the lower population along this proposed route it raises the question of basic services, I guess, as well for trucks moving through the area, but as I said before, where the roads do go, the traffic and economy is soon to follow, so one sort of breeds the other.

Long combination vehicles, or LCVs, make up about 1 per cent of our traffic on Alberta roads, but if we move industrial traffic over to this proposed corridor, we must be prepared for LCVs to make up a much greater percentage of vehicular travel on this route, so the road conditions must be made safe and fortified for this. Currently the conditions on these roads are not met at this point in terms of tracking weather and issues like that too. So those are just some considerations that we have to consider.

The government announced that it plans to have highway 63 twinned, which is fantastic, but it will take a number of years before that project is complete. I suppose that we are looking at this as a motion right now for highway 41, but considering the tremendous pressures on our capacity to build these days with so many projects going on, we'll just have to look down the road for 41.

Another issue that I just wanted to bring up is the Canamex trade corridor, which is to facilitate north-south trade specifically. The standards for the roads making up that corridor are aligned somewhat loosely, but still there is an international standard for the Canamex road, and the services being offered along that route are quite extensive. You know, we do have a lot of new economic activity in this province, but I do not want to take away from the focus on the Canamex trade corridor, which is very important to the future of this province's economy.

So, in closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation and my support of this endeavour, and I hope that the people in east Alberta have an opportunity to have their road upgraded to a standard that might approach other highways in this province. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand today and join the debate on Motion 506, sponsored by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Our province is growing at an almost unbelievable rate. Our population is booming. In the fourth quarter of 2005 alone our population grew at five times the national rate, which translates to about 25,100 new Albertans. More than 17,000 of those new arrivals came from other provinces. Our province has not seen growth of this magnitude since the petroleum-fuelled boom times of 1979-1980.

People are flocking to our province to share in the Alberta advantage. Low taxes, strong social programs, no provincial sales tax, and a robust economy are attractive incentives. The unemployment rate in Alberta is about 3.9 per cent – let me repeat that, 3.9 per cent – the lowest rate in Canada. Albertans also have the highest median family incomes in Canada. Half of Alberta families earn $61,800 or more after taxes.

Mr. Speaker, our economy is flourishing. Flourishing may even be understating the situation. Our economy is red-hot. Over the past decade Alberta has consistently had the highest rate of economic growth in the country. In 2005, for example, Alberta's economy grew by about 4.9 per cent.

Now, the city of Calgary offers a wonderful illustration of this staggering economic success and growth. Calgary is our nation's number one economic performer. In fact, Calgary is North America's fastest growing economic region. Over the past five years the Calgary region has had an average annual population growth higher than any city in Canada. Calgary also has the youngest and most highly educated population among the six major markets in the country.

Alberta has also consistently had the highest investment per capita among Canada's provinces. In 2005 $60.3 billion was invested. This is about triple the 1995 level. This figure works out to about $18,250 per capita, more than double the national average. Alberta's exports of goods and services have more than tripled over the past decade, to about $86 billion. Much of our trade is conducted with the United States. In fact, the U.S. is by far our largest trading partner, buying over 89 per cent of provincial exports. In addition, the U.S. provides two-thirds of foreign investment in Alberta.

Alberta's energy sector has been a huge component of trade with the United States. For example, in 2003 the combined value of energy, mining, and petrochemical exports to the U.S. was more than $42 billion, or 83 per cent of Alberta's total export to the U.S. I like numbers.

Mr. Speaker, the oil sands development near Fort McMurray represents the largest oil sands reserve in the world with over 174.5 billion barrels proved reserves. Development of oil sands and production growth require significant resources and logistical planning, and billions of dollars are spent each year on machinery and equipment to this end. Not surprisingly, much of this equipment and machinery is imported from the United States.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506, which calls for the government to promote the use of highway 41 from Wild Horse to Fort McMurray as an alternative north-south transportation corridor, is an excellent idea. Increased use of this corridor would provide one more option and positively contribute toward our province's continued development and maintaining our incredible economic momentum. We should consider innovative ideas such as this to reduce the stress on our existing infrastructure and facilitate economic development in our province. This proposal would provide a more direct route for trucks destined for Fort McMurray travelling north from the mid-western United States, from where an estimated $3.3 million in oil and gas field-related products were imported in 2004 alone.

This proposal would also be beneficial to the city of Calgary. By promoting the use of this alternative north-south corridor, existing pressure on infrastructure in the Calgary region would be reduced. Thank goodness. Also, it's important to note that when Fort McMurray benefits, Calgary also benefits as Calgary is Canada's energy capital and is a central hub to our province's thriving oil and gas industry.

Motion 506 could facilitate further trade with the United States and encourage additional economic expansion in our province. We should consider new ways to open up our province to continued growth and foster our economic potential and prosperity. Mr. Speaker, I support Motion 506 and urge the other members of this Assembly to consider the merits of this proposal.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the time to stand up and join the discussion on Motion 506, and I appreciate the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for bringing this forward. There's no question that the highways are becoming the backbone of our province as they've torn out most all of our railroads. But I have a few questions, I guess, first for the hon. member. That is: on the U.S. side of the border, if he's familiar, are they're planning on upgrading highway 87 north from Billings to go and hook up with Wild Horse? I appreciate his comments and his desire to be there, but I wonder if we're building something that has no connection from the south, and that worries me a great deal, that they want to have the best possible route, the most convenient for those that are transporting the goods and looking at that area. I guess we need to take one step at a time.

Looking at the map and the north-south connections, we see interstate 15 coming up to the Sweetgrass-Coutts border crossing and the opportunity there as soon as we cross into Alberta to look at highway 36. It just seems like that's a much more popular route, and if we were to build on that hub, we'd have greater success.

It's also very true that in transporting, we want to go the most direct route possible, and highway 36 lines up that way very well.

If, in fact, we need to cross over, though, I wonder if it wouldn't be more prudent to develop highway 36 to Taber and then a four-lane highway on highway 3 going to Medicine Hat and continue developing our east-west highways and use 36 as the main route going north-south as a secondary route to the Queen Elizabeth II and the Canamex highway. The great advantage of highway 36 is that it is a direct route, and it gives people the opportunity to cross, whether it's on 9 or 16 or 13 or highway 3, to go east and west. I very much would like to see highway 36 also brought into the discussion and to see which one is the most economical and the best to serve the entire province for the benefit of the transportation of goods. It very much does appear, though, that our east-west highways are lacking, and because of that, perhaps, we seem to think that we need to have a highway further over to the east because there aren't the good crossroads. Hopefully, we could upgrade that.

The other point that I would like to bring out is that there's been lots of talk about power line transmissions. We need to develop a new corridor that is serving the whole province, and it just seems like 36, going north-south, would serve the province very well. It would handle the large equipment that needs to go up north to Fort McMurray, whereas I question – and perhaps the good member could tell me – if at Wild Horse on the U.S. side the roads are sufficient. Like I say, when they come to Billings off 90 or 94, is there a route where that big equipment would possibly be able to go north? That is a concern for me. I would very much hope that he could address that, seeing how it's his bill and the passion that he has for that highway 41.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just thank the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for the opportunity to talk about the development of highways here in Alberta because it is very much a factor that we are a bottleneck when moving goods north and south, east and west. We do very much need to find another secondary route that we can develop to benefit all the travellers of Alberta and to make it safer here. Because of the congestion moving this heavy equipment is causing a problem.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege and opportunity to address the motion brought forward by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I think that for so much of the time here in Alberta in the last couple of years we've been focused on Fort McMurray and all of the growth up in Fort McMurray. Quite frankly, the Cold Lake Esso development and other heavy oil development around Cold Lake and Lloydminster are certainly there for the long term for this province, too, and just on the Saskatchewan side there's huge potential for mine development and also heavy oil. So the route of highway 41 – it makes a lot of natural sense that we would guide the traffic through from Minneapolis, Minot, and over to Havre instead of going up through Portal. So there is an opportunity for us to become and maintain the gateway to the north being Alberta, not just Edmonton.

I think, Mr. Speaker, if you just look at the map that we have now with the great conglomeration down highway 2, it looks too much right now like a one-legged stool. I think that by moving over to highway 41 and developing a specialized, specific truck route, we would be able to develop a border crossing with this in mind: it can have the latest concerns of the American homeland security bills looked after; freight can travel both ways at the speed that industry wants it to now.

We know that we have a tremendous backlog at times at Coutts. We know that the tourism industry is more inclined to go to the mountains, to go through that area. Well, let them go. As a trucker for 20-some years I know that they probably didn't like following a big load, and I didn't like following a Winnebago being pulled by a Volkswagen with 12 kids and a dog at 52 miles an hour up a big hill either.

So I think that the hon. member is onto an idea that we need to look at as a government as developing – now, I don't want to use the term that he used, “skeleton,” because I don't think that's really a proper term. I think that a foundation for a grid for highways, the east-west development the hon. member talked about, is very important. The basis is there, but let's lay out the strategy for the long-term foundation and stability to the transportation industry. I think that in developing these main highway corridors, we need to keep in mind that much of our exports go out in pipelines, and we need to be able to have access to these pipelines. The whole deal. We need to look at the land that we need for what we need to transport, and we need to build it with that in mind.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that everyone would support this motion with the intent the hon. member has. As someone who's lived in that area and has seen the huge development all up and down the east side of Alberta, I think it gives Alberta just another opportunity to diversify, to add stability to the long-term goals, and to give the people on the east side of the province a part of the tremendous Alberta opportunity that we're faced with in the next generation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my chair. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to join the discussion on Motion 506, the Alberta alternative north-south transportation corridor. Transportation is an issue that many Albertans are concerned about as our population and economy grow, and therefore I'm happy to have the opportunity to discuss possibilities of solutions for improving Alberta's transportation corridor.

Mr. Speaker, I do believe that Alberta needs to promote another transportation corridor for vehicles, especially commercial vehicles, heading from the United States to northern parts of our province. Promoting highway 41 as an alternate north-south corridor is definitely one possibility and a great one. As I'm sure we are all aware, Fort McMurray and our Alberta oil sands and other northern energy projects are the destination for many heavy tractor-trailers coming up from the United States. Therefore, I think that it's important that we are discussing different points for their travel in order to reach northern Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, northern Alberta is full of potential when it comes to our economic development through tourism, transportation, and what have you. If we can enhance our transportation corridors, we can hopefully increase our economic growth. This is true for all Alberta, not just northern Alberta. If our corridors serve their purpose well, new commercial opportunities will no doubt be encouraged.

Alberta highways essentially form a grid of highways travelling from east to west and north to south. The more able these routes are to handle commercial vehicles and the transportation of goods, the more economic activities will be possible for our province. I'm always pleased to be looking for new ways to bring new, enhanced, current economic opportunities to Alberta. We have a strong province with boundless opportunities for new business enterprises.

Again, by improving our transportation system within the province, we can advance development on the eastern side of the province and in the north as well as develop within the entire province.

Mr. Speaker, $3.6 billion was allocated to improve our roads and highways in this year's budget. This includes the twinning of highway 63 and highway 43 as well as expansion of both Calgary and Edmonton ring roads. Our roads and highways are a priority for Alberta's government. I believe that the recognition of highway 41 as an alternate north-south transportation corridor fits in well with the government's effort to improve our roadways and promote better transportation systems for our province. With the development of the oil sands the entire northern area of Alberta needs to be supported through development of transportation corridors to enhance Alberta's economic development as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting topic and one that I'm happy to have had the chance to discuss. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for bringing forward this motion. I hope other members of this Legislature will offer support for Motion 506, as I am doing tonight. I look forward to hearing what comments the rest of the members of the Legislature have regarding Motion 506.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I commend the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat for his motion. I think it's a commendable goal to promote the use of highway 41 as a north-south trade corridor. I would like to point out, however, that highway 2, or the Canamex trade corridor, which is Alberta's main north-south corridor, has by far the greater volume of north-south traffic, and it still needs resources as well. There are still stretches of undivided highway south of Calgary, between Calgary and Fort Macleod, and there are areas of congestion, particularly in the city of Calgary on the Deerfoot Trail.

There are many priorities for highway infrastructure, including highway 43, highway 36, highway 63, and, yes, highway 41, so I would hope that by supporting Motion 506, it does not imply that some sort of priority should be given to developing that corridor at the expense of other important priorities.

With that qualification, I would support the motion.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to commend the hon. member for bringing this one forward. As has been pointed out, we have in the past concentrated on the Canamex highway, and of course to get through the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, very expensive. As was just recently pointed out, there needs to be more money spent on that particular road as well.

When you look at a map and look at what's out in the eastern part of the province, it is a good idea to upgrade highway 41, but I do also want to point out that it's extremely important that we be sure to take a good look at the east-west roads as well. When you go down to highway 3 and its connector link highway 1 and then, as the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka talked about, highway 11 through the Howse Pass, from the economic studies that have been done there, it's a very, very viable pass. As a matter of fact, if you look at the history of the railways, that's where the railways should have gone, not through Calgary.

The Acting Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. Minister for Infrastructure and Transportation, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate on Motion 506.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all the members of this Legislature for their comments towards Motion 506. I'd also like to recognize my researcher, Elizabeth Jeffray, who is up in the stands listening to this very carefully. She worked very hard on this for me. I believe we've had a very productive debate here tonight, and I'm pleased to have the opportunity to address some of your comments and concerns.

I'd like to begin by discussing some of the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and also the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie regarding promoting maintenance. The first thing to consider is that the highway is already there. It's not a scenario of "build it, and they will come," but realistically it's "recognize it and promote it, and they will use it." I guess the other points on the east-west ribs: these will go a long way to infill the province and improve our total transportation infrastructure.

I'd also like to thank the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for his positive rural comments. The question I answered about building it and they will come also answers the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie about what it will cost.

He asked a question also about the safety of the highway. If I may read this, "the majority of Highway 41 is classified as a major two lane highway" at the moment. It meets, or exceeds, the Typical Minimum Acceptable (trigger) Values for Pavement Quality Index except for approximately four sections . . . all less than a kilometer long . . . For Surface Distress Index, there are two cases (ranging from . . . 18 kilometers to 16 . . .) where Highway 41 does not meet the Minimum Values. [However, it] exceeds the Minimum Values for all other sections of the Highway . . . exceeds the Typical Minimum Acceptable . . . Values in the Structural Adequacy Index.

So I think that answers that question for the member.

I'd like to thank the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for his comments regarding the east-west continuum on the grid.

I'd like to thank all the other members. One question was asked about the Montana side of the border. Montana is looking at its future needs regarding their highway stretches. They are supportive of the improvements and have invited us as their northern neighbours to participate in talks regarding their transportation future at the moment. The other question was regarding the highway from Billings. Well, this highway down here would connect up with Havre and highway 2, that goes east. We're talking about traffic and transportation supplies that would be coming from the Midwestern states, not from the south, and therefore would be using the Minneapolis-Minot area and hopefully be using Havre as opposed to the north portal port in Saskatchewan.

I think we've heard a great deal tonight about Alberta's population and economic growth and pressures on the growth points on our transportation system. We've discussed the enormity of our trade with the United States and the need for highways to support this trade. We've discussed how a second 24-hour border with United States would help to improve trade with the United States and facilitate greater economic opportunities with this province.

We've also heard how the recognition of highway 41 as another transportation corridor within the province would ease the traffic volumes on highway 2 and create greater economic growth for the eastern side of the province and for Alberta as a whole. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reiterate that this is but one step in the creation of a provincial highway grid. If we can promote highway 41 as one of those grid lines, we will always be able to add more ribs to the system, thereby creating a greater opportunity for economic infilling in every region of the province.

I'd like to thank all the members once again for their support and their contributions to the discussion. I hope my colleagues and all members of this Legislature will support Motion 506 tonight as the promotion of highway 41 has the potential to create many economic opportunities in the province and the potential to help deal with the increase in traffic volumes along our major routes and in our major cities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Second Reading

Bill 27

Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It's my pleasure tonight to move second reading of the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there were some demonstrators out front of the Legislature this afternoon. I'm not sure if that was this bill that they were demonstrating on. If it is, I would just like to put some of them at ease. Although this is what some might consider to be controversial, we are in fact repealing an act that really hasn't been used in some 20 years. In fact, all of the processors and packers and many of the folks we've had contact with very recently have said to us that this is not an act that they use. For that reason, we've decided to remove it from our legislation as federal regulations and, really, the marketplace are dictating what is happening as far as grading of these types of products.

Just to note again, Mr. Speaker, I did mention when I brought this act in that some kids may believe that this means that vegetables won't be on their plates. That's not true. They will still have to eat their vegetables, and certainly my kids will as well.

With that – and I know that there are many, many members of the House who would like to speak to this bill, but we do have other things that we need to do – I would move that we adjourn the debate on this bill.

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 16

Peace Officer Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to respond to the points and questions that have been raised about this bill. There appears to be confusion on what this act is intended to do. We are not changing direction as some members of the opposition have suggested. The intent of this legislation is to clarify the roles of peace officers to develop a more co-ordinated law enforcement system to support the work of police services across Alberta.

There are currently 275 employers and 2,800 peace officer appointments in the province. The process to hire peace officers is a two-pronged approach. The province is the largest single employer. All levels of government, health authorities, and postsecondary institutions apply to the Department of the Solicitor General and Public Security for authorization to employ peace officers. Once approved, the employer may in turn apply for individuals to hold a peace officer appointment. The peace officer then reports to the authorized employer. This is clearly outlined in section 10 of the bill, that states: "The authorized employer of a peace officer is liable for the actions and omissions of the peace officer while the peace officer is acting within the scope of the peace officer's authority, responsibility and duties." This remains unchanged from the current legislation governing this program.

The role peace officers will fulfill in a municipality is based on the needs of that particular community or organization. The jobs could include traffic duty, court and prisoner security, commercial vehicle inspections, animal bylaw control, and fish and wildlife management among others. The proposed amendments will not expand these roles or increase the number of peace officers. They are intended to clarify the existing roles, strengthen accountability within the program, improve the quality of services, and increase co-ordination with police services.

During debate there have been comments that this draft legislation includes security guards and the use of private security. I want to be very clear to opposition members that security guards and private investigators fall under a separate piece of legislation, and that legislation is the Private Investigators and Security Guards Act. That act is currently being reviewed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

This legislation, Bill 16, is a result of extensive consultations with police services, police commissions, the RCMP, the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, municipalities and counties, community associations, police associations, educational facilities, and health regions. We have talked to anyone and everyone that is or would be an employer of peace officers, peace officers themselves, and police representatives.

During the review of the special constable program we sent out discussion guides to all police services, including the RCMP, police commissions, and police associations across the province. We received nine submissions from these organizations, which were thoroughly reviewed and considered when changes were being contemplated. We also met with these groups almost two dozen times to get their feedback throughout the process to ensure that we were on the right track. Overall they support the directions outlined in this legislation. We have every intention of continuing to work with them as we develop the regulations and policies.

Criminal Code authority. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora raised several scenarios that need to be clarified. In terms of criminal matters police officers are always in charge. This won't change. The current policy is very clear concerning all Criminal Code occurrences such as arriving at a murder scene or discovering drugs in a vehicle. To ensure their safety, peace officers will continue to be thoroughly trained to know the circumstances under which they must contact the police and request assistance.

Training is another key that has been mentioned several times. I want to make this point very clear: peace officers are not police officers, so they won't be trained to the same level. They do not investigate the types of serious crimes police officers do. Having said that, the training they will receive will accurately reflect their responsibilities. We will work with stakeholders to develop the training and recertification for all peace officers and their employers. Creating these provincial standards is vital to the quality of the program, the safety of the officers, and the safety and security of the public. Consistency in how training is delivered will ensure the highest possible standards across the province.

Increased accountability reassures the public that peace officers are doing their job and maintaining the highest regard for professionalism and the rights of the citizens they serve. We're strengthening the standards of accountability to ensure that both employers and employees adhere to the requirements across the province. Authorized employers will be required to investigate complaints and report them to the director of law enforcement within the Solicitor General and Public Security, who has increased authority to investigate a situation if it is not resolved in a satisfactory manner. The employer is also required to report specific incidents such as use of force to the director. The complainant also has the ability to request a review of their concern by the director if they are not satisfied with the employer's decision.

In addition, the director is also required to investigate certain situations and may request a police service or other persons to conduct an investigation into an incident or take over an investigation if it's in the public interest to do so. This process ensures that concerns or noncompliance issues are dealt with in a responsive manner. This will result in increased accountability and transparency across the board. The complainant will be updated every five days on the status of their case. Pending the outcome of the investigation the director of law enforcement has the ability to vary, suspend, or cancel an employer's authorization as well as a peace officer's designation. This direction is also supported by our stakeholders. We strongly believe that these lines of accountability will meet the needs of communities and organizations who hire peace officers.

The hon. member has also suggested that peace officers should report to the local police commission. I can't state this enough, Mr. Chairman. Peace officers do not perform the same function as police officers, nor do they have the same level of responsibilities, so we don't feel that they should report to the police commission. The legislation will ensure an effective process of accountability.

Complaints and discipline. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora raised concerns about the terms "frivolous" and "vexatious" regarding complaints. These would be complaints that have no merit or are deemed to be contrived or trivial. Similar wording is used in the Police Act. An authorized employer could dismiss the complaint, but it would still be reported to the director of law enforcement, who could still order an investigation.

The hon. member also suggested the necessity of independent investigation by a public body. The use of a public body would add unnecessary layers and drag out the entire process without adding value to the outcome of an investigation. Being responsive to the issues is paramount to resolve these situations in a timely manner. The process established in the legislation will ensure that the complaints are managed in an appropriate, timely, and fair manner. The outcomes will produce results that will satisfy the public's confidence that the system works the way it was intended to. To this end, we feel that there is no need to establish another level of bureaucracy.

School resource officers. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill

Woods raised a concern that peace officers may take over the role of school resource officers. We are not aware of any peace officers formally being tasked as school resource officers. There are a number of municipalities that have their peace officers involved with school programs to help deliver safety awareness programs such as bicycle safety, crosswalk safety, and some antibullying programs. The issue of school resource officers is a matter for the school board and police service to discuss and determine how best to meet the community needs.

Equal pay. During second reading debate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre questioned the pay that peace officers receive. She suggests the government is trying to find a cheaper way of delivering services. Mr. Chair, that's simply not true. As I have stated several times before, peace officers are providing a complementary service to police officers. The peace officer's rate of pay is determined by the individual employer and varies across the province. It's reflective of the individual's role and responsibilities. Again, let me be very clear: peace officers are not filling the same role as police officers. Their responsibilities are very limited, and they do not have the same level of authority as a police officer. With separate and distinct responsibilities it's obvious that they would be paid differently.

Equipment. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity made comments about equipping peace officers with protective vests and puncture-proof gloves. The decision on whether a peace officer would receive this equipment would be made by their employer. That decision would be based on the peace officer's role. For example, a fraud investigator may not require a vest or gloves.

Vehicle markings and uniforms. Several questions have been raised regarding uniforms and vehicle markings. We're currently developing new uniform insignia and vehicle markings based on feedback from stakeholders during the special constable program review. Once we have finalized a mock-up, it will be sent to stakeholders for further review and feedback.

Transferring levels. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity also raised questions about a peace officer's ability to move from one level to another. Bill 16 creates the foundation that will clarify the role of each level of peace officer, and the policy that flows from the legislation will make the distinctions crystal clear. The policy that will support the legislation will clarify four levels of peace officers. There will be two levels of authority for Alberta peace officers and two levels of authority for community peace officers. Alberta peace officers would work for the provincial government. Community peace officers would work for municipalities, health authorities, postsecondary institutions, or police services. A peace officer's level will be determined by their employer and level of responsibility. Conceivably, a peace officer could move into another level or area provided that they have the necessary level of skill, training, and expertise.

In conclusion, Mr. Chair, peace officers provide a service that is critical to the safety and security of our communities. Their service is designed to complement, not replace, police officers. The proposed Peace Officer Act will ensure a more effective delivery of law enforcement services that will help make Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to rise tonight and participate in the debate on Bill 16, Peace Officer Act. I probably have to start by saying that I'm not a legal expert, and my prior involvement with or exposure to matters surrounding law enforcement does not really exceed that of a spectator or observer.

9:20

An Hon. Member: Ticket receiver.

[Ms Haley in the chair]

Mr. Elsalhy: I have only received one ticket in my entire life. Thank you very much.

However, today as an elected representative I have to wade into this discussion and express my point of view, especially as the questions that I have are shared by many ordinary Albertans out there.

I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, who is the critic for both the Ministry of Justice and the Solicitor General and Department of Public Security, has spoken before me at this committee stage. I know that he went into some detail on some of the clauses and provisions of this bill. I was also disappointed that the common-sense amendment that he suggested last week was rejected by the government members. However, tonight I want to try to cover some more territory and raise the following points.

One, with regard to part 1 of the bill dealing with employers' authorizations and peace officers' appointments, what is going to be the definition of an authorized employer? Who would qualify, or which entities are going to be captured under this definition? We've said time and time again in this House that we have concerns when things are left to be placed in regulations or discussed behind closed doors or left to the sole discretion of the minister and his staff, his inner circle, things that are done in regulation and are not put within the act or debated on the floor of the Assembly. So I have certain examples of situations, and I need clarification.

Take, for example, private companies which offer home or business alarm monitoring and security services. When the alarm sounds or a burglary is detected, sometimes an emergency response vehicle is dispatched. Sometimes this crew is comprised of one guy only. Sometimes it's two people. Sometimes it's a guy and his dog, for example. Will these people then be called and expected to behave like peace officers?

Do you remember the idea a short while back when it was brought up that some rural government MLAs don't feel secure in their homes and would like the Legislative Assembly Office to pay for their home alarm monitoring? I thought that was exaggerating a bit, and from an expense standpoint I believe that it would be a minimal monthly cost on their part to ask the taxpayers to cover it. I was reminded, however, that some of those rural settings see homes or ranches few and far between and that if someone is unhappy about a certain direction or decision taken by that particular MLA or his caucus colleagues, that person or group may decide to pay a visit to that MLA's home, and we know how scary or uncomfortable this can get. The point is: will home alarm response personnel be captured under this act?

Another example. Is this act going to cover companies which offer bodyguards or personal protection services?

A third example can be bouncers at bars, lounges, raves, and concerts. [interjection] Okay. We can call them crowd controllers, but will they be considered peace officers too? You see where I'm going with this, Madam Chairman.

Take this as an example as well. Will our employer, the people of this province but in the more technical sense the Legislative Assembly Office, or LAO, qualify to apply as an employer under this act now so that all 83 of us MLAs would become peace officers as well? We're responsible, smart, and dedicated. I would certainly agree to receiving the necessary training required and potentially participating in this new capacity. I know that some of the hon. colleagues would say that they don't like this idea, probably because of the risks and inherent dangers that are involved. Why would we want something for or wish something on somebody that we do not want for ourselves?

Seriously, though, I can count numerous occasions when I personally wished that I had policing authority or some sort of a mandate maybe not to intervene in a situation but at least to report it with some force. Take for example traffic violations – speeding, tailgating, zigzagging, or careless driving, things like that – as simple as they may be till there is some loss of life or damage to property.

I once witnessed a large truck tailgating a little old lady in a small sedan. It was sort of road bullying if I can refer to it as such. On the back of his truck was an identifying letter code and a phone number for people to report him if he was driving badly. Well, I did just that, and the lady on the other end of that line first tried to dismiss my complaint, then she started questioning whether, in fact, I saw their truck on the road and if I could describe the truck. She wanted me to read her the licence plate number and so on, and that's all going on while I'm driving. Then she implied that maybe the little sedan was driving too slowly and that perhaps the driver of the truck was frustrated and some nonsense like that. Boy, that day did I wish to have been not only able to complain to his company, which may or may not take any action, but I also wished that I had the power to perhaps assign him demerit points or maybe place a note on his driving record or something like that.

Another incident happened right in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung one Sunday afternoon when I was driving with my wife and children down 178th Street. Right at the bus stop next to the YMCA there was a teenage girl exposing herself and signalling at cars driving by. Not only was I upset about what I saw, I was concerned about that young lady perhaps being on some drug or substance or even alcohol and the risk that she ran if someone sick-minded pulled over and offered her a ride and the risk, in fact, that she could have caused a traffic accident as people were slowing down to look at her and to check what she was doing.

That afternoon, Madam Chairman, I phoned 911 and reported her. They were nice and professional on the phone, but they asked what triggered me to report it and why did it matter to me. When I explained that I was a parent and a concerned citizen and that I was also the MLA for that area and that I found this behaviour objectionable in my neighbourhood, the officer did not hide his surprise that I had chosen to take action, and he thanked me for bringing it to his attention. What could I have done differently? I don't know, but calling 911 was the only thing that I could do, and that was the only thing that came to my mind.

The question is really this. If we are serious about stepping up our crime-fighting efforts, why not fully recruit, train, and retain top-notch, qualified, full-fledged police officers rather than relying on those peace officers? I don't want to delegate more responsibilities to a new class of officers who don't receive the full training and resources necessary like their full-fledged counterparts.

You know, Madam Chairman, you can draw some sort of a parallel here with some of the changes that were done to our health care system, for example, over the years. You remember back in 1992-93 when the axe fell and many of our hard-working registered nurses were fired or let go, and then we've seen over the years that LPNs – and no disrespect to LPNs and the hard work that they do – were given more to do. They were assigned more responsibility, but they themselves sometimes admit that they need more training and more professional development. After LPNs were sort of elevated, then you got nursing attendants or orderlies that are now doing what the LPNs were assigned initially and so on. So we're deregulating services, and that might actually affect the quality of the service offered.

Now, you notice that I mentioned training. What conditioning, physical and mental, are we going to offer these guys? How extensive and comprehensive would their scenario training and situation practice be? Will they receive ongoing training and professional development opportunities?

I also know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore has some specific areas that he wants to cover, so I promise to brief, and I will focus on just a few.

Section 5 in part 1 of this bill is talking about an employer's authorizations. It sets out the process that an employer has to meet in order to be authorized to engage the services of a person as a police – as a peace officer. You know, I get this tongue twisting between police officer and peace officer, and I think it might be intentional to some extent. Specific requirements are providing the information required to apply for and receive authorization from the minister. Also, the employer must comply with any conditions provided for in the regulations, and we've mentioned regulations and how uncomfortable we are with this direction that the government seems to be willing to take all the time. But on to my next point.

What is obvious here is that most of the substance governing an employer's authorization is left to the discretion of the minister. What are the standards of conduct that apply to peace officers? What are the policies that authorized employers must abide by? All of these important details are left to the minister to decide, and the minister can change those from time to time, again without it ever being debated here in the Assembly. Can the minister give us a sense of what policies, practices, procedures, and standards of conduct will apply to peace officers?

This section also gives the minister, as I mentioned, the ability to alter the terms of reference at any time he or she pleases: very strong control for the minister; too much concentration of power within one department or one level of that department. Again, I find this questionable.

It also appears that this particular section is worded to allow the minister flexibility in determining what authority peace officers can and cannot have. So if we're confused or hesitant at the beginning, you can probably appreciate why we might be hesitant or reluctant, you know, two years from now, four years from now. As ministers change and as cabinets change, to leave this to the will or the whim of the day is probably not acceptable. How will things like this be determined? Will policing services and employers be consulted before changes are made? For example, if the minister wants to expand the authority of peace officers for traffic enforcement, will the RCMP be consulted in this process, or will the minister's department just make the decision and tell everyone that this is the policy from now on and expect everyone to adhere to it and abide by it?

On to my next point, talking about the use of titles, which is section 11 under that part. I know that, you know, most of these suggestions might appear to be common-sense ones: the use of titles in accordance with the regulations, which level of peace officer gets which designation, and all that stuff. The only negative aspect of this is that the public may find this confusing, to say the least: different designations, different levels of authority, different job descriptions if you will. You know, as an elected person I find it difficult to understand who is a level 1 APO versus a level 1 CPO, for example. Everyone knows what a police officer is and what a peace officer does, but it is probably going to be hard on just the average person to determine whether this person who's pulling him over or this person who's searching his house or this person who's pushing him aside has the right to do so and has the mandate and training to do so.

Does the Solicitor General have a plan to deal with this confusion?

Will there be a public awareness campaign to educate the public as well on which peace officers do what and where and when? How much is such a campaign going to cost, and is that cost justified? If not, why has this department not considered the public's perception of the peace officers and the inevitable confusion? Again, that's going back to my point that perhaps we should have spent our energy and our resources and our money training more full-fledged, regular peace officers than we are going for that sort of level b.

Section 12 talks about restrictions with regard to uniforms and weapons and stuff like that. Again, this is not really a major issue, you know, talking about what colour uniform or what badge they might wear or all that stuff, but when you're talking weapons, this is a bigger sphere that we have to investigate more thoroughly. The minister must ensure that the difference is clear so that the public knows the difference between the two levels of law enforcement.

Subsection (2) states that the peace officers can only have in their possession the weapons and equipment that they are authorized for in their appointment. So this is a good clause, but a lot of clarity has to be factored in here because different situations have different pressures, and we don't want to have instances where a person is making rash decisions to discharge a weapon, for example, when other avenues could have been investigated. So that's, again, part of the training, you know, in terms of empathy training, language training. Sometimes there might be language barriers. We've heard over and over again that miscommunication might lead to dire consequences.

Also, section 13 is talking about peace officers providing emergency services. We need a lot of clarification here. Are these guys going to be the first-response people at a certain scene? If there is, you know, injury or a situation after, let's say, a crime has been committed or there's an accident scene and these guys are the first people there, will they be trained to perform CPR, for example, or some sort of resuscitation? Will they have access to communication devices that might summon better trained emergency response personnel to that scene?

This section allows the minister in the event of an emergency and with the consent of the authorized employer and the peace officers themselves to by order declare the peace officers

- (a) to have jurisdiction in all or any part of Alberta, and
- (b) to have the [additional] authority, responsibility and duties specified by the Minister.

Subsection (2) states that an order under this section expires after 90 days unless it is renewed for a period of time as specified by the minister.

As noted previously, special constables were utilized effectively in London, for example, after the subway bombings. So we're not necessarily against them as people and as, you know, people who are trying to do a service to Albertans, but we want to empower them and to give them the tools necessary for them to do a good job and to not necessarily be inferior to or less than regular, full-fledged police officers.

I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora talked at some length about part 2, which is dealing with complaints and discipline, so I'm not going to go there per se. I know that I promised you that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has more to say. He's advising me that he wants you to stay tuned and continue to be alert and attentive.

With that, I will take my seat, Madam Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity, and I thank you for your indulgence.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.
Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chairperson. It's very nice to see someone from the female persuasion in the chair. It's very nice. [interjection] No. We're certainly advocates for equality in all ways.

I rise with a great deal of interest to speak on this bill in committee this evening. I've been studying this issue and debating it, rolling it over in my mind over these past couple of weeks because I certainly do recognize the value and the fine work that special constables undertake on our behalf for the public. Much of it is dangerous work, as several members have spoken to already. But, you know, there's a real difference between training of police officers and peace officers. Given that police officers receive 35 weeks of training compared to peace officers' only two weeks of training plus four days weapons training, I must pause to wonder not only whether or not we're properly qualifying these people but whether or not they are sufficiently trained to cover the scope of the job that we are asking them to do with the expanded roles that seem to be in line with this bill and the shortage of police officers that we have in this province.

According to Statistics Canada Alberta has one of the very lowest per capita police services in the country: one officer for every 600 Albertans. My understanding is that that is the lowest in the west, west of Ontario or even, I think, west of Quebec actually. So I'm wondering if we are trying to perhaps fill that gap with an expanded role of peace officers. I guess we have to take a sober and logical look at whether that's the best way to provide policing for Alberta.

I have a number of specific questions to ask in regard to this bill on separate sections and then just general, so let me just make the general comments first and carry on. First of all, with this bill are we not in fact heading towards more lower paid positions on which to off-load police responsibilities? This is a real concern that I think is shared not by just myself but others. As my hon. colleague from Edmonton-McClung mentioned, there is a comparison that we can perhaps make in the nursing profession, and I am concerned that this might be happening in our policing service as well. I mean, certainly you can realize efficiencies, Madam Chairperson, by looking at different ways to deliver services, but if, in fact, we are just basing it on cost efficiencies as opposed to policing efficiencies, I think that's where I would like to place some logical inquiry or questioning.

Second of all, my question is: are we endangering the peace officers by asking them to pick up more and more police services? Subsequently, should their pay perhaps not reflect this danger, and then if we're going to pay them more, why don't we just hire more police? This is a circle that, again, we saw in the nursing profession. LPNs, I believe, just received an 18 per cent raise. An LPN with full experience and working, let's say, a differentiated shift is making the same as a nurse anyway, so in terms of savings, I don't necessarily see that.

The question is arming different forms of peace officers and the danger that we could be putting them in with arming them. I think that's something else we have to look at.

What oversights, as well, are we putting in place to ensure that this peace as opposed to police officer, of course, will be held accountable to the public and accountable in a way that we can in fact count on? We've run into a number of difficulties with accountability with our police service, so I think it's important for us to put in some firm guidelines before trouble might develop. Again, with less training I can see a potential for problems.

Accountability to an employer is insufficient when you're dealing with complaints given that we know nothing about training or employment requirements. We need to be assured that all complaints will be dealt with seriously and by an appropriate body that's well versed on the issues that are being raised. Relying on your employer is not enough as the employer might not have the legal wherewithal to properly assess the situation, so this lack of public oversight must be addressed. It's a very large and profitable, expanding industry, the private security industry, and I think we owe it to the citizens of Alberta to set up an independent regulatory board and board of inquiry to deal with these things.

We might hear the argument that this act pertains to peace officers rather than police officers, but when we see more and more police duties being handed off to peace officers, this argument becomes moot, particularly given that this bill attempts to address the increasing demands placed on peace officers, and the redesignation from special constables I think is an indication of the desire to tie them into police work, so we cannot argue that they are not a police force, just simply doing a lot of police work. I find that to be a rather spurious argument at best, that we heard previously on this issue.

The argument was also raised that there's nothing new in this legislation, that there is no hidden agenda, and that we're not inventing any new roles for people. If you follow that argument a bit further, Madam Chairperson, perhaps then all that's intended is cementing in regulations the rights and responsibilities pertaining to this already existing relationship, but I would say that if there's nothing broken, then why fix it? If it wasn't broken or bending, let's perhaps firm up this relationship before we have some further trouble. I don't see that we are in fact addressing what the full nature of this bill is head-on by suggesting that it's not bringing up new ideas.

Just because the relationship between police officers and municipalities has been useful in the past doesn't mean that we can't improve on it. Asking for public oversight of peace officers is a democratic and reasonable request, and I think that that is the general way by which we can provide a service to this province here in the Legislature: to provide accountability and a democratic means by which to oversee these institutions. So it's incumbent upon us to in fact put those things into place.

Those are some of my general comments.

Specifically, I think that there are at least four or five places in the actual legislation that have some problems. I guess the first place that I would like to look at is on page 4, section 5(3). It says that the minister may require an employer to "implement or comply with policies, standards of conduct, practices, procedures, protocols or rules provided for in the regulations." It says "may," and I think that perhaps "must" would be more emphatic in that situation because, of course, as I said before, that is what we're meant to be doing here in the Legislature, not just suggesting that there should be standardizations but, in fact, putting those into practice.

On page 13, section 23(2), it says, "An inspection under subsection (1) must be conducted at a reasonable time." What does that mean exactly in terms of an inspection? I would perhaps seek further clarification there.

On pages 17 and 18, section 29, the ministerial regulations listed allow for control over many recommendations found in the special constable review. Again my problem is with this "may" issue as opposed to strengthening that perhaps with "will," and might we be imposing regulation as opposed to just suggesting it?

So these are my concerns, Madam Chairperson. Certainly, we do recognize the value of peace officers in their various forms as helping to provide and keep the peace in our province. I just want to tighten up this legislation to some degree and clarify the intention of the bill as well so as not to be somehow suggesting that we don't require more actual police officers throughout the province of Alberta.

Thanks a lot.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Edmonton-Decore.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Bonko: Oh, I may raise some, though. Thank you.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for my being able to speak to this specific one. When my colleagues were up in Fort McMurray just a couple of weeks ago, we did talk to some residents door to door, and there was some appreciation for what the special constables have done thus far as far as curbing some of the traffic concerns and the flows as they go up and down the highway.

The biggest concern was the safety not only of those on the highway but of the special constables. Need I remind this House that there have been a number of deaths of police officers with what appears to be perhaps a simple pull-over. A park that looks over the river valley in Edmonton was dedicated to one such officer, Officer Ezio Faraone, who pulled over two low-lives and was shot and thus, you know, passed away, and that park was named after him. This was a fully trained officer, not someone who went through basic training – I will highlight that part: basic training – however much that is according to this specific act.

A camera could and should be installed now with these special constables. This would in fact be something that I think could benefit all involved. It's not something that's new. It's something that's already being used. This technology could serve two purposes. One, it could review cases where there's a dispute between the driver and the so-called peace officer or the special constable. Who knows what could happen with the camera? They could be used for a testimony, or it could be used to ensure ongoing improvement on this pilot project for the special constables. After all, they're in ongoing performance, and we'd review that ongoing performance.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

There would be far less training, as we said, with this situation compared to the RCMP or the city police officers. Last spring we talked about the public oversight committee and who would oversee or intervene on behalf of the public when such a question arose. [interjection] Exactly.

With the questioning of city or RCMP officers, who comes under the review under section 2? Who are the investigators, impartial or independent, for the special constables, who now carry side arms?

Other sectors – and it was mentioned this evening by the Member for Edmonton-McClung – of the public who do maybe constitute special security also carry side arms, such as Loomis guards or Brinks guards. Could these people become special constables? They already have FACs and engage with the public. I don't know, but it does beg the question because there is such loose information. Similar to the third way it lacks in detail.

The main point is that there is a lot that's left in the regulations, and due to this, we can't be sure as to what the final effect of this act is because the act in itself serves as a framework without much being in the details. We don't know about the training of the peace officers. Will they receive different levels? What qualifications are necessary? Are those requirements going to be stringent like with the police officers, or are they going to be accommodating for the private security officers? Details like this I think are important, and they're left in the murky recess of the regulations.

Perhaps this is because the details haven't yet been decided, or the minister wants to push ahead without the careful process or the details being released. This is not in the public's best interest. These are going to be officers delivering at the level of law enforcement that is beyond the former restrictions of that of the special constable, areas that the police officers work within. We need to know and the public has the right to know that the people doing this job are trained and mentally fit to react in all the situations. However, again, we do not know about these very important details because they're all left within the regulations.

If we talk about section 21, conduct of appeal – and that appears on page 12 – this states that part 2 of the Police Act applies to an appeal made under section 20. Part 2 of the Police Act deals with the process of the Law Enforcement Review Board, also known as LERB. There are certain sections of part 2 of the Police Act that are exempt from applying under this section, but it's because it deals specifically with a chief of police or police officers that it does not specifically apply to the peace officers.

Subsection (2) allows for the LERB to require the person making the appeal to produce all copies that are relevant to the information to the LERB, and that's fine. We have no problem with that.

Subsection (3). This is an exemption to the clause that applies to a peace officer giving testimony in the LERB appeal hearing. Where a peace officer is compelled to give information to the appeal, if that evidence tends to incriminate him or her or subject that person to punishment or establishes his or her liability, it shall not be used against them or that officer in any of the civil proceedings. This exemption is in effect if the officer is being charged with perjury or the giving of contradictory evidence. Similar clauses apply to police officers under the Police Act, so it's inconsistent that the same rules apply to the police officers. So there is a question of concern with regard to that subsection there.

Subsections (4) and (5). Basically, these two subsections state that the Law Enforcement Review Board must give its recommendations to confirm, reverse, or deny the appeal. The key work here is "recommend." In other words, the decision of the LERB is not binding and/or final. It's left to the minister, which is later explained in section 22, to determine if the recommendation of the LERB is to be "confirmed, reversed or varied." The question here is: why does the minister need that final authority on the decision-making ability of the Law Enforcement Review Board? Does the minister think that he has more informed opinion than the members of that board?

This section is problematic because it allows the minister to vary or overturn decisions of that law board without stating why. There's nothing here that states that the minister must inform the complainant in writing as to why the decision was varied or reversed. There's no appeal from the decision of the minister. The decision is final. This authority of the minister takes away the ability of the LERB to make the binding decisions based on their expertise. The question is: why must there even be the ability to appeal to the law board when the minister has the ultimate authority? The authority of the minister to overturn decisions of the LERB or alter them makes a mockery of the fairness of the appeal process. This is no different than the Minister of Justice having the ability to overturn decisions of the Court of Appeal without an explanation. Can the minister explain to us why he wants to have the authority to reverse or vary the decisions of that law board?

This is one of the most controversial parts of the bill, and I cannot support it as it gives the minister far too much power over an appeal body. It is not in the interest of justice to have a government minister have that much ability to reverse decisions of a quasi-judicial appeal board without any explanation.

Those would be some of my specific concerns with this particular piece, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] Careful. The last guy that did that lost his seat.

An Hon. Member: I think I'm good for a few more months.

Mr. Mason: Move to Edmonton.

Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to rise and speak in committee to Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act. I want to just raise a number of questions that I have. One deals with the level of training for peace officers as opposed to police officers. As my colleague from Edmonton-Calder has pointed out, the bill deals with training. Police officers receive 35 weeks of training, and peace officers receive two weeks of training and four days of weapons training. That is a concern, I think, with respect to the degree of employment of people as peace officers as opposed to police officers. If the bill has as one of its unwritten intentions the extension of peace officers into a number of areas with a much greater use of peace officers to supplement police officers, then it gives rise to the possibility that they may actually be asked to serve in positions for which the training is completely insufficient.

Mr. Chairman, I know from personal experience that the training period for a bus driver, a transit operator in Edmonton is six weeks of training, including a week learning on the trolleys. Two weeks of training and four days of weapons training for people who are responsible for enforcing laws and, in fact, are armed to do so and may indeed be called upon to use their weapons really is insufficient if these people are going to be placed in positions where they may need to use force or the threat of armed force in order to do their job.

So the real question that I have, then, is: given the bill and its attempt to sort of unify definitions for all peace officers and regulate those things, what really is the result going to be? Is the result going to be more and more and more use of peace officers and falling into beginning to provide services that police officers no longer do? Then they may place themselves and potentially members of the public in jeopardy if they're put into positions for which they are not adequately trained. I can certainly foresee and anticipate that there may well be positions or situations for which two weeks' training is insufficient.

The question that I would like the government to respond to is: just exactly what limits do they propose on the operation of these peace officers, formerly known in many cases as special constables, and will the special constables in fact be putting themselves or anyone else in harm's way through a lack of training?

A related question to this, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the potential for peace officers being used increasingly by private employers. The question is: what private employers does the government anticipate peace officers working for? What is the government's intention with respect to private employers who may wish to employ special constables? Is there, in fact, going to be a much greater utilization of special constables by private employers, and is this merely something that will allow the government to unfund or reduce funding or fail to provide new funding for full-fledged police officers?

Mr. Chairman, I know that in the election the NDP opposition put forward a proposal that we hire 500 additional police officers in this province. Interestingly, Alberta has one of the lowest numbers of police officers per capita in the country. Our proposal would have increased the number of police officers in Alberta to or above the average in the country. The government has yet to take action to bring it up to that level. They have seen, I think, the writing on the wall – and we'll take some credit there – and have decided to hire some additional police officers and provide more resources so that that can be done. Most recently they did that with the RCMP.

Mr. Chairman, tonight I attended a meeting dealing with community issues, including drugs and prostitution, that was put on by the city of Edmonton as part of their Safedmonton project. It was attended by a number of city councillors and by a number of MLAs from the Legislature. The new chief of the Edmonton Police Service, Mike Boyd, was there, and he gave an excellent presentation, also Kate Quinn from the organization PAAFE. It's an organization dealing with trying to reduce prostitution in the city and get street-involved women off the street.

There were lots of community people there, and it was interesting, Mr. Chairman, the great lengths to which people in the community were prepared to go as volunteers to take on tasks to assist the police and take on tasks that brought their neighbourhood back under their control. But it was also disturbing, the extent of disruption to community life by the activities of drug traffickers and pimps and so on. The extent of the problem and the task facing the police and the community are very great.

I'm not certain how this bill will affect that fight, Mr. Chairman. I believe that just setting out new rules around peace officers and unifying the definition of peace officers in and of itself is not really the solution. Clearly, the Edmonton Police Service and I think the Calgary Police Service and urban police forces in general didn't get a fair share of the increase that was recently announced. Certainly, the government needs to go farther in supporting community policing in this province.

It's been my experience – and I have some, dealing with some of these issues as a municipal councillor – that community policing and fully-trained police officers who practise community policing are one of the best assets a community can have. Repeatedly I've seen community police working with people in the community – with agencies, with community leagues, with interested citizens, with local businesses, with local politicians, with landlords, with all sorts of organizations, even service clubs – and getting them involved in the community, developing a strategy, bringing together the resources that are latent in the community, and mobilizing those resources towards solving the problems that exist.

I'm not convinced that simply extending the number of peace officers is going to resolve those issues. I think, Mr. Chairman, we have to be tackling crime at its root source. We need to be working with the community to develop strategies that actually make the problem go away rather than continually just responding to it over and over and over again. When the police get a call for service, they keep going back to the same place over and over again instead of considering what needs to be done specifically to get rid of the source of the calls by solving the problem that is engaging the police and disrupting the community and hurting people in society. Those things are important.

Another thing that's very important, Mr. Chairman, is, in fact, that there's a consistent failure on the part of the government to adequately fund the services that are necessary in some of these communities to prevent crime or to allow people that do get off the street or have gone through some corrections to actually get back on their feet and be a strong, contributing member of the community. That's a difficulty.

I remember the bill, a private member's bill, put forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North dealing with young people who may be addicted to drugs and allowing their parents to put them into mandatory treatment. While we supported that bill at the time, Mr. Chairman, we reminded the House and the hon. member that, in fact, the number of places that were available to treat youth at that time were oversubscribed based only on the young people who were voluntarily willing to enter treatment. We warned that unless those rehabilitation spaces and drug treatment spaces were expanded, the bill would be of no effect because you'll just simply be trying to push more people into a fixed number of spaces, and if it's already oversubscribed, it won't make any difference.

Of course, the government has not adequately funded those things, and there is still a significant shortfall in the number of places. So if the government is not willing to put our money where its mouth is, then we can see that, in fact, we're not going to bring about change in our society and in this province on some of those kinds of things.

Supporting the police, Mr. Chairman, in my view means not just changing the definition and not just putting more what used to be called special constables, more peace officers with a lower level of training in to fill the gap. We need to provide, number one, an adequate number of properly trained, highly qualified police officers in sufficient number. Number two, we need to ensure that the most up-to-date and progressive techniques of policing are used in the province, and in my view that is community policing. It's unfortunate that in recent years in Alberta police forces the commitment to community policing has eroded. Based on what I heard from Chief Boyd, I hope that at least in Edmonton it's going to be making a strong comeback. That's the kind of policing that actually resolves problems, that prevents crime and doesn't just simply lock up people who have already committed the crime. In my view the real key is to prevent the crimes in the first place, to solve the sources of the crime as they emerge.

Finally, the last important piece is that there needs to be supportive social programs and community-based programs to enable people that do want to get off the street, that do want to get away from crime or have been released from jail and want to make something of their lives and go straight. There needs to be those kinds of supports in the community available to them so that they can do that. You know, we won't tackle drug crime, we won't tackle the effects of drugs unless the government invests much more significantly in treatment, drug prevention programs, addiction support, and all manner of those types of programs.

Mr. Chairman, we could go down the American path. I know it's very popular among some Conservative circles to follow the model that people who are involved in crime should have higher penalties, stronger penalties. That's very popular among Conservatives right across the country. In fact, I just heard Stephen Harper, the Prime Minister, talk about his government's commitment to stronger penalties for criminals. You know, that has a certain resonance. We could follow the American model. That's exactly what the Americans do: they have stronger penalties, and they incarcerate more people per capita than any other country in the world.

If you do crimes in the United States, you do get locked up for a long time. Many states have three-strikes-and-you're-out kinds of laws, which put people away for the rest of their lives in some cases. Of course, the United States has some of the highest crime rates in the world, particularly in the western world, so obviously that approach does not work.

What you're doing by locking up many people is simply providing them with on-the-job training to become career and professional criminals when they eventually do leave. The vast majority of people who are committed to prison, regardless of whether or not we have stronger penalties or moderate penalties or whatever kind of penalties, do come out and do come back into the community. When they come from prison, if they're not rehabilitated, they are at least trained in a vocation, and that vocation is often gang activity and becoming a professional criminal. It doesn't solve the problem. It's very, very expensive, and it's a tremendous waste of our fiscal resources and a tremendous waste of the resources of the people that are involved there. It should be avoided if possible. We should find alternate measures that will help people integrate into the community and act in a responsible fashion and not in a criminal or a marginal fashion.

If we look at the United States, Mr. Chairman, we can clearly see the fallacy of the argument that stronger penalties and more police to arrest people is in some way a deterrent to crime because the opposite is proved by the case in the United States. They have more crime and more serious crime, more violent crime than we do in Canada as a result of their punitive approach to corrections.

We need a more nuanced and balanced approach, Mr. Chairman. As I indicated, it includes having sufficient resources of highly qualified police. It involves involving the community in a community policing approach. It involves making sure that programs are there for people who need them. I'm not sure that this bill gets us any closer to those goals. It certainly has some value, I suppose, in making things a little bit more simple and systematic, but the real risks that I haven't heard addressed yet are that we are going to simply be increasing the levels of less qualified police, cheaper police in different forms, including peace officers employed by private employers, instead of a comprehensive crime strategy based on community policing and based on adequate funding of the various aspects of policing, supports for communities, and the kinds of social programs that are necessary.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'd be pleased to take my seat and listen with interest to the many comments from the other side on this bill as we do our due diligence as we work through this bill with the kind of scrutiny that it clearly deserves.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we proceed with the next item before us, I just need to draw to the attention of all members – and this is an issue of courtesy – that when any member is speaking, other members should not really be standing with their backs facing the person who has the floor at the time. This is just a courtesy. I'm just drawing this to everyone's attention; I'm not singling out any one person.

Bill 20 Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak in Committee of the Whole in two stages, the first stage to review the eight amendments that this bill presents and then to answer the questions from members when we had the second reading.

In reviewing the eight amendments of the FOIP Act, the first amendment, the published works in a library of a public body, clarifies that the FOIP Act does not apply to these published works. The issue central to this amendment is not one of access but of privacy. An individual can make a FOIP request for a library book, but the library can refuse to process the request and direct the applicant to obtain it in a more suitable way by borrowing the book or purchasing it. The amendment addresses the technological developments that allow an individual to self-publish works which may contain personal information. This amendment will require libraries to give some thought to privacy before they place a privately printed memoir containing personal information about others onto their shelves. The privacy protections in the act will not apply as long as the library has collected books in accordance with an acquisition of materials policy. Most libraries have such policies in place to guide their acquisitions.

The second amendment limits access to ministerial briefing material for five years. Specifically, it provides an exception to the right of access for government records created for briefing a minister who is assuming a new responsibility for a ministry or briefing a minister for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly. For briefings for a sitting of the Legislature the five-year period was chosen to coincide with the life of a Legislature, which is five years at most. The same period applies for briefings developed for a minister assuming a new responsibility.

Amendment 3 limits access to records relating to an audit of the chief internal auditor of Alberta for 15 years. This amendment adds a mandatory exception to disclosure for records held by a public body that relate to an internal audit and applies to the records of all audits conducted by the chief internal auditor when those records are in the custody of the auditor or a public body. An individual can still make an access request for records about a program or service of a ministry but not for records about the audit.

Amendment 4 is to further enhance the security of Albertans' personal information. Currently the act allows a public body to disclose personal information to comply with a subpoena, warrant, order of a court, or a rule of court; however, it is not clear which court these provisions refer to. The proposed amendment clarifies that a public body or its service provider may disclose personal information only if ordered to do so by a court with jurisdiction in Alberta or in accordance with a rule of court binding in Alberta. This will make Albertans' personal information less vulnerable to collection by foreign agencies.

The fifth amendment suspends the processing of an access request while the Information and Privacy Commissioner consults with an applicant on whether to allow a public body to disregard a FOIP request. Before a public body can disregard a FOIP request, it must seek permission from the commissioner. These requests are rare. In 2004-05 there were only six such requests, and there were only 10 in all of the previous three years.

As the decision to take away an individual's right to make a request is a serious one, the commissioner consults with the FOIP applicant. Since the commissioner's consultation takes time, typically a decision comes after the legislated 30-day response time has expired. The problem is that complying with one provision of the act causes the public body to breach another provision. The amendment is purely administrative.

This amendment would allow the 30-day processing timeline for a FOIP request to stop while the commissioner makes his decision. Concerns were expressed in second reading that public bodies could make more requests to the commissioner to disregard requests in order to delay the processing of requests. Should this occur, the commissioner has the ability to immediately order the public body to resume processing the request. The commissioner has the power to immediately deal with any public body that is out of line.

Amendment 6 sets higher penalties for disclosing personal information to a foreign court. Should an individual or a corporation disclose personal information pursuant to a subpoena, warrant, or court order when that court does not have jurisdiction in Alberta or pursuant to a court order not binding in Alberta, that person would be guilty of an offence and would be subject to a fine. The proposed fine for corporations could be up to $500,000 to deter such disclosures, and prosecution would have to commence within two years of the offence.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may delete a public body from the list of government agencies, boards, and commissions in the FOIP regulation in specified circumstances. Before a deletion can occur, the commissioner must be satisfied that the deletion is "not contrary to the public interest." Deleting a body from the list does not necessarily mean that it is no longer under the FOIP Act. If the body operates as a part of a ministry or as part of a local public body, the FOIP Act still applies.

A body can only be deleted from the list if all of the following apply – the government of Alberta does not appoint the majority of members of the body, the government of Alberta does not provide most of the funding, and the government of Alberta is not the controlling shareholder – or if one of these conditions exists: the body has been discontinued; the body has amalgamated; the body is a local, public body, not a government public body; there is a more appropriate act, the Personal Information Protection Act or Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act, that should apply to the body. Also, the minister will be able to delete public bodies from the list under the same conditions in between updates of the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulation.

The eighth amendment is about the ministerial authority to bring a public body under FOIP. Finally, this last amendment allows a newly created government agency, board, commission, or committee to be made subject to the FOIP Act more quickly. This new regulation-making authority gives the minister the ability to bring a newly formed government body under the FOIP Act without waiting for the next amendment of the schedule of public bodies in the FOIP regulations. Without this temporary designation the new body would be subject to the Personal Information Protection Act until the next regular update of the regulations.

The second part of my Committee of the Whole presentation will be to answer the questions that were raised in the second reading. The Member for Edmonton-McClung asked why five years had to pass before members' personal briefing notes could be viewed. The amendment act will only limit the right of access to briefings provided to the minister when he or she assumes a portfolio and when he or she is preparing for a session of the Legislative Assembly: those two instances. The FOIP Act was never intended to cover records relating to the workings of the Legislature. Nevertheless, after five years these records become fully subject to the act. The five-year time period was chosen because it restricts records prepared for the legislative session only for the life of the Legislature.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder asked for clarification regarding the proposed inclusion of public works available online or in public libraries. The FOIP Act was never intended to apply to published works. The act already allows a public body to advise an applicant to obtain materials that are readily available on a website, from a library, or for purchase as it is unnecessary to use the FOIP process for such materials.

This new provision is being added to address privacy concerns. Technically, the FOIP Act applies when a library buys or lends an autobiography or other book that contains personal information. This was not the intent. Technology has made it very easy for individuals to publish works themselves, perhaps only producing a single edition. This provision ensures that libraries give some thought to privacy before they put a privately printed memoir containing personal information about the author's family members and perhaps members of the local community on their shelves.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre was concerned that the documents from the chief internal auditor would be exempt from FOIP requests for 15 years. The position of the chief internal auditor is relatively new in government, and this limited exclusion for the chief internal auditor's working papers and reports is comparable to the exclusion of the Auditor General. The aim is to continue to protect the provision of advice within government to ministers and their senior officials from their professional advisors to ensure the quality of ministry programs and services. The FOIP Act will continue to provide access to other departmental records about a program or service of a ministry. In addition, the Auditor General will still be able to review the records of the chief internal auditor and publish any findings that he believes to be of interest to the public.

To answer the member's second concern, changes to the FOIP Act will not affect operations of the Public Accounts Committee or other processes of the Legislative Assembly.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre was also concerned about health information. Health information is subject to the Health Information Act, so I would refer this question to Minister Evans.

I answered the question from the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but I will repeat my answer to the question of why five years. The five-year time period was chosen because it restricts records prepared for a legislative session only for the life of that Legislature.

To his second question, of exempting the chief internal auditor for 15 years and how the government is then made accountable, I would say that the Auditor General has full access to the records of the chief internal auditor and can publish any findings he believes of interest to the public.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie also asked a third question, regarding FOIP fees being restrictive. FOIP fees generate a small percentage of the cost of underwriting the FOIP program. Those fees have recently been reviewed, and many fees were reduced as of February 8 of this year.

The last question from the same member was about the priorities of this government. The FOIP Act attempts to balance the right of access and the right to privacy. This government has taken a strong stand on protecting the personal information of Albertans that has been entrusted to its care. Privacy has been a defining issue of this new century, and we want to be in the forefront when it comes to ensuring that privacy is an important value in the delivery of programs and services to our citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I would call for adjournment at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've had the usual pleasure of excellent progress tonight, so I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act, and progress on Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried]

10:30

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 16. The committee also reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:31 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 11, 2006 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 06/04/11
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two groups of students. First, seated in the public gallery is a group of 25 inquisitive grade 6 students from Annunciation school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Leslie Zydek. I'd ask them to please stand and accept the traditional warm greeting of this House.

Seated in the members' gallery is a group of 39 sharply dressed students from Aurora charter school. They are accompanied by two teachers, Mrs. Vicki Leong and Mr. Jamie Andrews. Mr. Andrews, by the way, is participating in a teacher exchange, and he is visiting us all the way from Australia. Would you please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this House?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of bright and intelligent students from Steele Heights junior high school. On April 25 these students will be travelling to Atlanta, Georgia, to compete in the FIRST Lego League World Festival representing the province of Alberta. The team's challenge is to build a completely autonomous Lego robot capable of completing several defined tasks during a two-and-a-half minute competition. The students have designed their robot and as a team will demonstrate its abilities while competing against 64 teams from around the world. We'd like to congratulate them on their achievement in representing our province and wish them the best of luck at their competition. I would now ask that they rise as I call out their names: James Hoffman, Graeme Archibald, Matthew Music, Bradley Matsuba, Paul Gelinias, Ryan Bliemel, Chris O'Donnell, Jesse Squires, teacher Vin Stocking, and parent helpers Darryl Hoffman and Mark Archibald.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions for you today. I would first like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Jack Century. Jack is a petroleum geologist who founded and chaired the environmental geology division of the Canadian Society of Petroleum Geologists in 1990. This is the largest earth science society in Canada and has over 3,500 international members. Jack's main concerns are related to energy sustainability and environmental issues, particularly those of the Alberta oil sands. He's lived in Calgary for many years and is very welcome to have this opportunity to visit the Legislature. I would now ask Jack to please stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 23 students from the mighty Spruce Avenue elementary school along with Miss Shelly Juhlin, aboriginal commitment coach Mr. Kyle Campiou as well as parent Miss Jennifer Dubois. They are on tour today and having a wonderful time. I would ask them now to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three newly elected student leaders from the University of Alberta Students' Union. They are Samantha Power, president; Dave Cournoyer, vice-president external; and Chris Cunningham, vice-president operations and finance. They are here today to watch the proceedings of the House and to remind the government of its commitment to an affordable and quality postsecondary education system that's accessible to all Albertans. I understand that they're seated in the public gallery. I would now ask these guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Government Accountability

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the federal Conservatives in Ottawa are introducing a bill to improve government accountability and openness, but the Conservative government of Alberta refuses to do the same for the people of this province. Alberta has a system of grants, contracts, and land sales that's out of control, no mechanism to bring it under control, and a taxpayer-funded propaganda bureau to continuously remind citizens to just keep moving, that there's nothing to see here. My questions are to the Deputy Premier. Will she support an all-party legislative committee to make recommendations to strengthen the statutory authority of the Auditor General so that he can follow the money to the end recipients?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no need to do that because the Auditor General today has that authority. The Auditor General in this province is an officer of this Legislature, and he has the authority to follow the money right to the end and, in fact, has done so on a number of occasions. So I think the question is quite redundant.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, he doesn't have the same authority as the federal Auditor General.

Again to the Deputy Premier: given the clear failure of this government to protect whistle-blowers at the Alberta Securities Commission from retribution, when will this government introduce legislated whistle-blower protection for public-sector employees?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, in reference to the Alberta Securities Commission and whistle-blower rulings, that has already been done and has been in place for some time now. As far as an overall government policy we've made it very clear over and over and over again that no one who brings forward a valid concern will have any adverse repercussions at all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Deputy Premier: when the feds are cracking down on the lobbying industry, why is this government allowing it to flourish behind closed doors? Why won't she acknowledge a problem exists?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, a rather obtuse question at best. However, whatever he might be referring to, contributions that are made to political parties here are a matter of public record if that's the part he's talking about.

Mr. Taylor: I'm talking about lobbyists.

Mrs. McClellan: People that come to meet ministers in ministers' offices: that's an occurrence. I suppose you could suggest that everyone who passes these doors, whether they come to see the opposition or the government or the third party or the fourth, et cetera, would be a lobbyist. I'm not sure exactly what he's framing the word "lobbyist" around.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that there is no behind closed doors as far as we're concerned. People who come into our offices are met. They usually discuss matters of mutual interest but certainly matters of interest to them, and I would be against anything that would preclude the public from coming and meeting with government to express their interests or their concerns.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

1:40 Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, if it looks like a skeleton and smells like a skeleton and rattles like a skeleton and especially if this government says that it's not a skeleton, then it's probably a skeleton. To the Minister of Finance. Now we learn that Rod Love Consulting billed Alberta Finance a further $25,022 in 2004-05. Will the minister please tell Albertans if the same loosey-goosey process was used to justify this latest contract?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I've answered questions on this contract at least twice in the House. There was definitely a contract with the minister of the day for specific services, which were performed. I also outlined in this House and I would be pleased to table at an appropriate time the contract policy that I put in place as Minister of Alberta Finance. It's very specific. It's very rigid. I have given the elements of it, but to make it very clear, I would be pleased to table that policy.

Mr. R. Miller: She's already tabled the policy, Mr. Speaker. She should table the contracts.

My question is for the Minister of Energy. Given that 2004 documents show that Rod Love Consulting received 48,625 taxpayer dollars from the Energy ministry, can the minister please tell us what goods and services were received to justify this payment?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it's a delight to be able to stand. He's absolutely correct: $48,625 was paid to Rod Love Consulting through the period of April 2003 to March 2004. Those are public documents that we put out in public accounts, available to the public. It's disclosed. It's open. Nothing hidden for it. This one was for strategic advice that was provided to the department. It has been reviewed by the department. Value has been received for that. It's been appropriately disclosed, and all terms of that contract were fulfilled. All things were very open and accountable to the public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can you say sponsorship scandal?

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that 2004 documents show that Rod Love Consulting received $8,484 from the Department of Municipal Affairs, can the minister please tell us and all Albertans what goods and services were received to justify this payment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be more than pleased to advise the member. I would like to add that this is no secret document that arrived at this. This is our own public accounts. Public accounts revealed that there was roughly an $8,000 expenditure to Rod Love Consulting. The individual was contracted to provide facilitation of a day-long workshop between the developers' association of Alberta and municipalities in the development of regulations regarding off-site levies. I understand that the day was very successful, that all the participants were very pleased with the outcome. It ultimately resulted in the development of regulations, that are now in place.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Alexander Forbes Elementary School

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall I asked the Minister of Education if he was aware of the situation at Alexander Forbes elementary school in Grande Prairie. He said that he had met with the parents, and he would undertake to fix the problem. The budget has been introduced, and the schools in Grande Prairie and other parts of the province were left out, Mr. Minister. How long will the 330 students in mouldy 25-year-old portables continue to wait for a more modern school in Grande Prairie, sir?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of speaking with the chair of the parent council just a few days ago and explained to her that as soon as we finished our budget estimates, in a few weeks, I would be getting back to her. So if the hon. member would just stay tuned, we'll be getting along with this new plan, that will be coming forward shortly thereafter. We'll take one project at a time, then, and start addressing the needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the teachers and administrators in Grande Prairie believe they are teaching in the best education system in the world when portables are lacking suitable washrooms and the walls and floors are mouldy, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think everyone here knows, but in case they don't: we do have the best education system anywhere in Canada. That's the truth. We also have one of the best education systems anywhere in the world. That's a tremendous credit to the students, the parents, the teachers, and our other education stakeholders. There are situations that occur from time to time, obviously, where some maintenance needs to be done or some replacements or modernizations need to be done. We are putting the plan together right now to ensure that those projects get done on a priority basis. I've indicated publicly, and I'll reiterate it for this hon. member's ears, that Alexander Forbes is absolutely a priority. As soon as we get the money allocated, we will be helping the school board there with that priority.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why was there no funding in the budget to fix the problem? The minister was quoted as saying: I am pursuing it and will solve it soon.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I've just indicated that that's exactly what we're doing. Let's be clear that every school board does receive a significant amount of the now $81 million for infrastructure, maintenance, and renewal projects, and they also receive a portion of the $395 million in operational and maintenance funding. From within those envelopes they have some abilities to fund some local projects as well.

Now, we do have a bit of a backlog with respect to modulars and/or portable needs, and they're being built as fast as they can be built. We're getting them out to the highest priority areas on that basis, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

School Property Taxes

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, for the fifth straight year this Conservative government has broken its promise to freeze provincial school property taxes in absolute dollar terms. Alberta homeowners will on average be facing a school property tax increase of about 2 per cent this year. The raiding of the municipal property tax base by the province continues unabated despite previous promises. To the Minister of Finance: can the minister tell us why, despite the fact the Minister of Municipal Affairs sold a false bill of goods to Alberta's municipal leaders at their annual conference last fall by promising school property tax reductions, this year's budget once again sees a hike of school property taxes?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely disagree with the hon. member's preamble in its entirety, and I would invite the Minister of Municipal Affairs to answer this.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond. The assertion that a promise was made that there would be a freeze of municipal property taxes this year is completely inaccurate. There was a commitment made a number of years ago which as a result of the events of 9/11 became obsolete. There have been over time some commitments made to try and revert to some form of relief to municipalities. In fact, this year we did succeed in reducing the amount of the increase to only one-half of the new assessment so that municipalities this year were able to retain the tax revenue on half of all the new construction in the past year.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that when I attended the AUMA conference, I clearly heard the Minister of Municipal Affairs indicate that it was at least his intention that the province would vacate or reduce its dependence on the property tax and when I attended the Alberta school trustees' convention, the learning minister gave an opposite indication, can the Minister of Finance please tell us what the government's long-term plans are for the school property tax?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs just answered that very well by saying that the government vacated half of the room of any new growth.

There is a process that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is leading. He has mayors, councillors on a committee that is establishing the roles, responsibilities, and relationships. I made it clear when I spoke at AAMD and C that I wanted to see that work done this summer. Once we establish whose role it is, then we'll establish very clearly whose responsibility it is to fund it. Of course, the third part of that, relationships, is incredibly important to our urban and rural municipalities.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that one minister is telling municipal councillors one thing and another minister is telling school trustees quite a different story, when will the government get its act straight and live up to the promise made five years ago when Dr. Steve West was the Provincial Treasurer?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I've just cleared that up I think. I spoke at AAMD and C. My colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs was there. A number, in fact, of my colleagues were at the table. I spoke about the committee that's dealing with roles, responsibilities, and relationships. I said very clearly – and the Minister would support this – that we wanted that work completed by this summer. I have spoken individually to AAMD and C chair, AUMA chair, mayors and told them exactly the same thing, and frankly they concur and are prepared to meet the challenge. We have broken no promises. We are not telling different stories. We are telling exactly the same story, and our municipal leaders will bring us that information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Groundwater and Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing a great deal about the potential of coal-bed methane development as an economic opportunity, but my constituents are also asking questions about the risks this new type of development has for the environment, particularly on our water supplies. They want to know that this government will do everything possible to protect our precious water. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister explain what he is doing to make sure our water is protected while Alberta develops this new energy resource?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member and to the House, obviously this is part of our direction on our Water for Life strategy. First and foremost, the new standards, the newest standards anywhere in North America, that we implemented last week are about protecting not only our land but our air and our water. So no longer do I say: the mother ship. I say: it's the law. I will enforce the law to protect that land, that air, and that water because every Albertan has that right, and that's exactly what we are doing.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: how does the department decide on the baseline testing standard of 600 metres?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I'm not a scientist. Many of you may be surprised that I'm not a scientist. [interjections] It's true. But what we do is that we use the best scientific evidence. What we have been doing is working closely with our scientists and biologists and chemists and also working with a very notable environmental group, the Pembina Institute, who traditionally are not always positive about some of the work that is going on in this province. I want to say that Dr. Mary Griffiths, who is a leading scientist in this area, agrees with the distances that we are doing so that we are ensuring that safe drinking water that the hon. member speaks of.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: what is the Minister of Environment doing himself to make sure that testing takes place?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, first of all, on our Water for Life strategy, we're executing it. Second of all, the $174 million from the Minister of Finance, which I'll be dealing with in estimates this afternoon, is a critical component of that relative to that testing. Third and foremost, this is a transparent process, where we share the scientific evidence not only with the landowner, but we share it with the public because the public have a right to know, and this government and this ministry are transparent about these important issues.

Methanol Spill in Mitsue Creek

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, on January 18 a tractor-trailer carrying 52,000 litres of methanol used as antifreeze in oil pipelines flipped over and spilled most of its contents into the Mitsue Creek. The attention must now turn to the cleanup of the creek and possibility of contamination of the nearby lake. The government is responsible to act decisively in events of hazardous spills. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. What has been done to ensure that Mitsue Creek is cleaned up and there are no long-term, lasting effects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, thank you. To the hon. member: first and foremost, our environment people have been on-site. We have what is referred to as a SWAT team, which is ultimately a team that we overcommit to and overreact. So, to the hon. member, the approach that we are taking is that we overreact and then pull back resources as opposed to underreacting. So we're overreacting. We're working closely with the stakeholders, and we are taking a very diligent approach to ensure that that lake and that stream and that area are protected well into the future.

Mr. Bonko: To the same minister: given that for the spill at Mitsue Creek Alberta Environment held both the company who owns the hazardous material and the transporter responsible for the cleanup and remediation, can the minister tell us if this is, in fact, the normal operating procedure of Alberta Environment?

Mr. Boutilier: Obviously, the law of Alberta, perhaps the strictest law in all of North America if not in Canada, for certain, number one, is this: the polluter pays. Is there any question about that? The polluter pays, will continue to pay because this resource is owned by all Albertans. Not all Albertans would have to pay; it is the polluter that will continue to pay. We will continue to enforce that type of regulation because it's the law in protecting the land, air, and water.

Mr. Bonko: Given that for the Mitsue spill both Celanese and Boychuk Trucking, the owner and transporter, were held responsible for the spill, can the minister explain why Imperial Oil was not held responsible along with CN for the Wabamun disaster? Why the difference in policy?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting things about the law in Alberta is that we do investigations. The fact is that the Ministry of Justice – and he may want to supplement – has 13 files of intensive investigation relative to the sad situation that I refer to as an ecological disaster. I can assure the member, I can assure everyone in Alberta that the full extent of the law, both in spirit and in letter, will be followed relative to this ecological disaster.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Groundwater and Coal-bed Methane Drilling (continued)

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Coal-bed methane development is increasing in my constituency as well and, indeed, throughout much of the province. There are still many questions about the safety of the groundwater and aquifers. In coal-bed methane development a process that requires fracturing, or fracking, the formation to recover gas from the coal seam is being used. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What is being done in the energy industry to ensure that groundwater is being protected due to the fracking process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first mention that the techniques employed in the coal-bed methane are not at all unlike our shallow and most of our gas drilling that we've done for decades in this province: the same typical drilling rigs that go in and a very structured and rigorous process to ensure that there is protection of all aquifers and all zones in all formations. So you can rely upon the fact we've had a tremendous amount of experience in dealing with fracturing techniques. They have to break apart that zone where the gas is so that it will flow into the well bore and up to the surface. So it's very critical in the design of engineering, which is done year in and year out over the decades, to ensure that they can control any migration of any foreign substance out of that zone to another one. So the freshwater is protected as the requirement of drilling.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the Minister of Energy. Can Albertans be assured that these measures will go far enough to ensure that Albertans and their water supplies are safe and being protected?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the regulations that are put in place are literally designed to do just that. They can take great confidence that they have a regulator in the Energy and Utilities Board that knows and has the basis of knowledge and expertise to be able to ensure the safety of these resources.

I thought I'd mention, though, how that groundwater is protected. When they actually drill through a formation like our aquifers where the water is closer to the surface, it is required that all those wells in the completion be cased or cemented so that there can be no migration of gas into that water from a lower surface to a higher one. There is a very stringent way that they can ensure that the freshwater is also supplied, that there's a surface casing requirement as well. There are additional requirements put in the regulations to ensure that the surface water is not contaminated with drilling and activity and fracturing that's below that level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is also to the Minister of Energy, and this is relating to the preliminary findings document that was released last summer by the Multi-stakeholder Advisory Committee. It outlines a number of recommendations related to water and coal-bed methane. My question is: when can Albertans expect to see the final report from this committee and the recommendations associated with water and the coal-bed methane development?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there's been a Multi-stakeholder Advisory Committee that's been hard at work over the past two years in conjunction with our department, the Department of Environment, and the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. Jointly we have been working collaboratively. We have the report in our hands. We're working through the policy questions of that. It's an outstanding report. It will only help improve an already good existing regulatory environment. We do anticipate that this report should be released to the public with our recommendations within the next weeks to the next month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1980 the then Minister of Environment wrote a letter to the Premier proposing that the government identify "special interest names" who had received special treatment in the purchasing of lands for the ring road in Edmonton. Perhaps this explains why some companies today, such as Lehigh Portland Cement Limited, are able to flip land before they actually even pay for it. It appears that the Alberta advantage extends to some people more than to others. My questions are to the minister of infrastructure. Is it the policy of this Progressive Conservative government to target special-interest names for land transactions while other Albertans are "dealt with in the usual departmental manner as provided by legislation"?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it appears that there has been over the last ten days a pattern developing here where the members opposite have dug up something from back in the '80s, 20 years ago, and they don't have the courtesy of giving me ample time to get the information on the land that they're going to ask about. If they're really, really interested in getting answers about what happened, I would urge them to send me the information so I would be prepared.

From the first set of questions, when they dragged the name of Mr. Sheckter through the mud – and I really am opposed to that kind of thing – I remember telling the member that, in fact, we buy a parcel of land, have it subdivided, then return – return – which was in the original agreement. I would like to read to the Assembly and all others interested the offer to sell. The purchaser, who is the government, at its sole expense, shall on or before the 31st day of December, A.D. 1987, or sooner if practicably possible, subdivide the Sale Lands from the remainder of the Lands, (which remainder is referred to as the "Remaining Lands"), and the Purchaser shall thereafter, at its expense, transfer the Remaining Lands to the Vendor, who is the person that sold it, in this case Mr. Sheckter, or its nominee.

This is exactly what I told the members, and they're trying to pretend as if we sold it for a dollar, which in fact was in the agreement, and I'll be filing this agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This answer had nothing to do with what I asked, the policy question.

Is it the policy of this government to open up the sale of surplus lands purchased for the ring roads here in Edmonton and in Calgary to the general public, or are such lands only reserved for identified special-interest names?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we do advertise it for sale, but as it relates to the issue that they brought up yesterday when they dragged through the mud the name of another prominent citizen in the city of Edmonton, Mr. Gary Campbell, for those parcels of land that we sold to CN and Lehigh Cement, we had two appraisals, and we sold the land to them for the highest of the two. I hope to be able to table that.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister. Given that Lehigh Portland Cement agreed to transfer this land to CN Rail on March 18, 1999, nearly two weeks before it officially purchased it from the government, on March 31, 1999, can the minister explain how this deal was negotiated with the province? Were they guaranteed this land no matter what? Were they assured that they would get it?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the fact is, as I said earlier, that we sold at the higher of the two appraisals. It's none of our business what the purchaser does with the land.

As a matter of fact, it's rather interesting: a major development in the city of Edmonton, the intermodal, where CN purchased the land so that they could accommodate that major development. An extremely important thing for the city of Edmonton. So I'm really surprised that members representing the city of Edmonton would in fact be pooh-poohing that kind of an agreement because the fact is that it's extremely important for the city of Edmonton.

The Speaker: The chair heard the hon. member indicating that he would be tabling the appropriate documents at the appropriate time?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling this document.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta agriculture producers are frustrated and perplexed. One day they hear that the province and the federal government are coming up with a plan – and I stress – to transform the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, otherwise known as CAIS. The next day we hear out of Ottawa that the federal government is intent on ditching CAIS and starting over again. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and it is a simple one. What is going on? Will Alberta farmers and ranchers have a CAIS program or not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, I too obviously was frustrated with the comments that came out of Ottawa last week about the CAIS program because only weeks before that all of the provincial ag ministers and the federal minister did agree to transform CAIS, not to replace it. We don't want to start from scratch and end up at the same point where we are today two years from now. The CAIS program and its principles are sound, and after a very quick survey of our ag community last weekend, we've discovered that our ag community is indeed looking to transform, not to replace.

After my conversations with the federal government and, indeed, with their further communiqué just recently, I think last Friday, it now appears that we're a lot closer than we thought we were in terms of what we're doing. It seems that the federal government may be suggesting that they would fix CAIS and replace that disaster component with a separate program or another option that works. Mr. Speaker, we're not opposed to that. In fact, it's something that we've been advocating for some time.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is again to the same minister. The argument about replacing CAIS or fixing it wouldn't exist if we had a program that worked for Alberta producers. What's broken, and how are you going to fix it?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. We've had a lot of discussion about what we can do to make some changes to CAIS. It is a national program. Alberta has actually been at the forefront of doing some of those changes with the negative-margin discussions that we've had, with the three-year averaging pilot program that we've had, which other provinces are looking at. We've made the commitment that we're going to share the information as to how well that is coming to our producers.

We know that administration is also a serious issue within the program. In fact, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business survey cited administration as the number one cause for concern in the program. The principles around it, the targeted application of the program, are sound. We want to maintain that, but we want to fix it by fixing administration, by trying some new things in the pilot project that we did, by bringing our national partners onside, and by bringing the federal government onside with our changes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is also to the same minister. My question is: what is the minister's plan of action when he's going to meet with the other agriculture ministers and the federal government in June? I mean, what can the producers expect?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has told us that they're going to be bringing forward some proposals in June. What the producers can expect from the Alberta government is that we're going to stand for what the producers have told us they want to see in that type of a business risk management program. We're not going to abdicate our responsibility to our producers in this province. It won't be just Alberta's voice at the table. All of the other provincial ag ministers are of the same mind as it relates to a business risk management program. They are all of the same mind when it comes to the fact that ad hocs don't work. We recognize that. It's unfortunate that the current opposition in the federal government hasn't figured that one out yet.

As I said, the federal minister has said that he's bringing forward some proposals on transforming the income stabilization part and replacing the disaster component. We are interested in looking at those proposals, but if they don't fit what Alberta producers want, we may have to review our options at that point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A 1995 settlement proposal between the late Joseph Sheckter and the province reveals how land was acquired for the ring road in Edmonton. It appears that taxpayers were the big losers again, while the land speculators and the developers were the big winners. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Why is the return of surplus ring road land to Mr. Sheckter in 1989 by the province for $1 per parcel not mentioned in this settlement proposal from 1995?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it's rather disheartening that the member is not listening or is incapable of understanding what I read from the agreement dating back to 1987, so I'll read it again more slowly. The purchaser, who is the government, at its sole expense, shall on or before the 31st day of December, A.D. 1987, or sooner if practicably possible, subdivide the Sale Lands from the remainder of the Lands, (which remainder is referred to as the "Remaining Lands").

That means that whatever we need, we take it, and then we subdivide and give a title to the remainder of the land; that's in this agreement.

And the Purchaser shall thereafter, at its expense, transfer the Remaining Lands to the Vendor, [who is Mr. Sheckter's company], or its nominee.

"Transfer" the land. This is the original agreement.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how many millions of dollars did Triple Five make by buying property and then selling it to the government for the ring road in Edmonton? How many millions of dollars did they make?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, that is totally unrelated to the question that he asked to start with. Once again asking a question – if they're really interested in the answer, they would have given me the detail at least two days ahead so that I could present the answer. But this pattern that has developed: they are not interested in getting the answers. They're trying to make it sound like some individuals are getting special deals, and that's not true.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister should have the settlement proposal in his ministerial binder.

Now, again, in light of the evidence presented by Mr. Sheckter in 1995, will this government start a full, independent judicial inquiry into the purchase of all ring road land and the sale of what was deemed surplus?

Mr. Lund: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Postsecondary Education Review

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the new Minister of Advanced Education told this House that he expected to receive the reports from the accessibility and tuition affordability reviews in the next few weeks. From that point on these reports are going to disappear down the black hole of the standing policy committee, cabinet, and caucus review process. First, my best wishes to the new minister, and I follow that with a question. Exactly when is the minister going to make public to Alberta's postsecondary students, faculty, and other stakeholders the reports resulting from the postsecondary review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much. It's a very good question despite some of the black hole inferences. As you know, standing policy is a very important process because proposals from Albertans can come there and result in action. Albertans are closer to this government than ever before or anywhere else.

With respect to the question, as I indicated yesterday, I do expect to get the reports, which I really look forward to getting within the next few weeks and scheduling the government's response, to going through the process – standing policy, cabinet, caucus – as quickly as possible. I want to assure the hon. member that nothing is going to disappear down any black holes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: as a new Minister of Advanced Education will he make a clean break with the past and make the reports from the postsecondary review available to student unions and faculty associations at the same time that they are forwarded to the government standing policy committee? If not, why not?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the hon. member does not understand the process. You know, before reports can be released to the public, there has to be an approval process to release them. That starts in standing policy and goes to cabinet and then caucus. So as soon as they're available for distribution to Albertans, we will be providing them.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, given that this review was a public review, why is the minister now saying that this review belongs to the government and not to Albertans? When will he release this report? That's our question. Why is he keeping it a secret?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure about any secrets because I haven't seen any of those reports yet. They are coming in the next few weeks, and we will process them as soon as possible because they deal with issues that are extremely important to students and to all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ownership of Resource Revenues

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the great moments in Alberta's first century was in 1930 and the achievement of the natural resources transfer act. Since that date every Premier of Alberta from Brownlee on has fiercely protected Alberta's natural resources. My question today is to the Deputy Premier. Will our Premier, who is meeting today in the east to discuss the equalization formula, restate and reinforce Alberta's long-standing policy that not only do the natural resources of Alberta belong to Albertans but also the revenues derived from those resources?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier and Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations are indeed in Montreal today, and they are meeting with the Council of the Federation to discuss a report on fiscal imbalance. There is no question that Alberta and Albertans are proud contributors to Confederation, always have been. But make no mistake: under the Constitution natural resources belong to Albertans, and it will be Albertans that decide how that resource money is used.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the Deputy Premier. After 30 years of equalization the list of have-not provinces continues to grow rather than shrink. This province and this government have had some experience with turning the hand up from the handout. Will the Premier in Ottawa be giving any advice to the other Premiers on how to turn the equalization formula from a handout to a hand-up program?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, there is no question that equalization has not always led to provinces reducing their dependency. In fact, there have been a number of reports written on this very subject, some that suggest that some provinces will take decades to recover from the equalization payments that they've received. Mr. Speaker, you might recall that our Premier was a very strong supporter of Newfoundland receiving a fair share of their natural resources in order for them to reach a level of independence rather than dependency. It has always been our philosophy that you should give a hand up, not a handout.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:20

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the Deputy Premier. What are the government's long-term plans to protect Alberta's resource wealth? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier has the floor.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that you can do, but actually, constitutionally, we do own the resources and have the determination of how they're spent.

I think what's maybe as important in this conversation is to continue to ensure that people across this country understand what this industry in particular means to the rest of Canada. The energy industry actually prepared a report that showed very clearly that the largest tax benefit of this industry in fact goes to Canada, about 41 per cent, higher than what we receive as a province, which is about 36 per cent. The balance of that tax revenue is shared among other provinces. So, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that all Canadians understand that every part of this country benefits from the industry and the activity around that industry.

I think, Mr. Speaker, there's no question that most people understand that Alberta contributes more per capita than any other province in Canada, and in fact I think most people understand that there are only two provinces that are net contributors. What we need to work towards is ensuring that all provinces in this confederation are strong by giving them a hand up, not a handout.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Capital Planning Portfolio

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta taxpayers are troubled by this government's excess. My questions are to the Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, capital planning. Given that the majority of, to quote the Minister of Health and Wellness, heavy lifting for infrastructure has been handed back to the ministries of health and education, reducing your department's responsibilities, why does it take two ministers to carry out the job?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question, a question that I think a lot of people will be asking in the future, and I think the answer has to be reflected in the future. There is a huge potential, an awful lot of investment that's going to take place in this province. I believe the Premier had indicated over the past period of time that capital planning was a very necessary and integral part of our future. I think it's an exciting time, and I guess that's why the Premier appointed me as Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation and as minister responsible for capital planning, so that we can put together a solid plan so that all our municipal partners, our school boards, our colleagues, our MLAs know in a predictable way what's going on in the future.

Mr. Chase: Again to the associate minister: how does the minister justify to Alberta taxpayers the cost of his unnecessary political appointment?

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, what you see is what you get, and I think you may not like my answers sometimes. I guess what I would say to people that ask for this: it's a very important portfolio; there is over $14 billion worth of projected investment in capital over the next three years, over $4 billion this year alone. Don't you think that requires a little bit more than four-day planning, like most people expect?

Mr. Chase: My final question again to the associate minister, and the minister received this question prior to question period: what would be the full financial benefit for the associate minister, including salary increase, averaging of severance benefit, committee payments, vehicle allowance, and any other monetary benefits for one year?

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I do want to indicate one thing very clearly. Over 14 years ago, when I ran in a by-election to become a member of this Assembly, I did not know, nor did I care how much an MLA made. What I along with what I hope a lot of MLAs in this Assembly did was to run to try to make a positive difference in this province. When the Premier asked me six days ago to assume this position, the first question out of my mouth was not: how much do I make? To this day I'm only assuming that my stipend will be the same as any other member of cabinet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Supports for Aging in Place

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few concerns have surfaced in my recent talks with the senior groups in my constituency. The government encourages senior Albertans to age in place and to stay in their own homes as long as possible. The costs of living are rising fast, but their incomes are fixed. My questions today are to hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that the minister presented her ministry budget last week, what are the new, specific items in your plan to help senior Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like the Member for Calgary-Fort I certainly understand the concerns of seniors, especially those on fixed incomes. I, too, realize the importance, hon. member, of our seniors living in their own homes, staying in their own homes that they've often lived in for many years close to their friends, their families, and their local community centres.

Mr. Speaker, we do have seven programs that are important in this ministry that address the various needs of seniors through the financial or health support needs. One that I would like to mention to you is the Alberta seniors' benefit program. That program supports 142,000 seniors per month. It has a significant budget through the ministry. In fact, it has the highest monthly payment for our seniors and the most generous income threshold for seniors of any provincial program in Canada. So all the programs together in the ministry do assist our seniors in living independently in their own homes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that dental health is a key concern for Alberta's seniors, can the minister advise how she is addressing this important concern?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, that too, Mr. Speaker. We all know that oral health is fundamental to the quality of life and well-being of our seniors, and we did introduce the dental and optical assistance program last year. That program has been so successful that we currently have a take-up of 14,000 seniors per month that are accessing that program.

To address the needs of the oral health of our seniors living in our continuing care centres, which we've heard in the Assembly before, I was pleased to recently approve an $800,000 pilot program with the leadership of the Alberta Dental Association and College. That mobile dental program will go out to our senior centres, and it will offer reliable, affordable dental services for our seniors in the community. Importantly, too, it will go out to the remote centres and, as well, serve seniors that we know to be shut in in the remote centres. So we're looking forward to measuring and tracking that and seeing if that is assisting in the long-term care centres as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. My senior constituents also expressed a concern about the rising property taxes on their homes. A big chunk of it is to the school tax. They say that they have been paying taxes all their lives and that they need a break as they don't have any children attending school now. What can the minister do to address this concern of rising property taxes and school taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have an established program in the ministry for our seniors, the education property tax assistance for seniors program, and that offers a rebate for increases in the education portion of the seniors' property tax over the 2004 amount. Since the amount that they pay is fixed at the 2004 levels, seniors no longer have to pay any increases in the education portion of their property taxes. It's available – that's important to know – to all senior homeowners regardless of their income. We did have 50,000 seniors access that program in 2005, and it as well assists seniors with what the Member for Calgary-Fort has brought forward to the Assembly today.

Thank you.

2:30 Vignettes from Alberta's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll call on six today to participate in Members' Statements, but first of all just a brief review with respect to some items so that hon. members know about the history of Alberta.

In 1901 the area to be known as Alberta had a population of 73,022 people. Between 1901 and 1905 some 40,000 homesteads were granted for future Albertans, and in 1905 the life expectancy in this province was 53 years of age.

On April 25, 1906, a motion by Calgary Liberal MLA W.H. Cushing to make Calgary the permanent capital of Alberta was defeated by a vote of 16 to 8, and Edmonton was declared the capital.

In 1906 the speed limit within cities in Alberta was 10 miles per hour, and in the rural part of Alberta it was 20 miles per hour.

In August of 1907 the sod for the new Alberta Legislature Building was turned, and in October 1909 Governor General Earl Grey laid the cornerstone for this building.

In 1914, on the eve of World War I, the population of Alberta had surpassed 470,000 people, two-thirds of whom were farmers or farm-related people.

Challenge North 2006 Conference

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week on April 5 through 7 the Northern Alberta Development Council hosted the Challenge North conference in the town of High Level in my constituency. This conference is held every three years, but this is the first time it was held in such a northern location and in such a small town.

The purpose of the conference was to address the issues many communities in the north are facing, either the challenges of unprecedented growth or the inability to capture growth and development. Northern Albertans gather at the conference to network and share ideas and to listen to some fascinating guest speakers share their thoughts and ideas. Some 215 delegates were in attendance, Mr. Speaker.

Information sessions were designed to help delegates build and expand effective community, industry, and government partnerships. Sessions included information on forming aboriginal partnerships, on education needs, on infrastructure needs, and on a host of other topics.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chair of the NADC, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, and the entire NADC staff for the great decision to step away from the norm and to host the conference in the town of High Level. I also want to thank them for a truly great conference, a wonderful opportunity to forward the cause of northern development.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend everyone in the town of High Level, from the organizers to the town staff to the hotel staff, who once again, as they always do, took it to a new level of excellence and did a great job of showcasing the north.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

SAIT Polytechnic

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak on an increasingly important and urgent need for Alberta's continuing economic development and prosperity. It is the development of our human resources, the skills and the expertise of workers in Alberta.

SAIT Polytechnic is embarking on its development of a new state-of-the-art trades and technology complex that will bring Alberta and Albertan learners to a higher level. SAIT plans to double the number of seats it will offer in energy, construction, manufacturing, automation, and transportation. All are industry areas with huge demands for more skilled workers. SAIT plans to meet the demand in this area by offering an additional 2,735 student seats in certificate, diploma, and applied degree programs as well as 5,898 more apprenticeship seats.

With its track record and past achievements I'd strongly suggest that our government support and continue to invest in SAIT. It's public money well spent, an investment with a solid and high return to Alberta.

Last year SAIT selected one of its key partners and allies as recipient of the 2005 president's partnership award. Along with previous recipients such as TransAlta Corporation, Calgary Motor Dealers Association, EnCana Corporation and with its global presence in the energy industry around the world, Nexen Corporation is well known for its leadership in the business community. Nexen, through its president and chief executive, Charlie Fischer, supported nearly $3 million in scholarships at SAIT.

Late last year Mr. Keith MacPhail, president and CEO of Bonavista Energy Trust, donated $10 million toward SAIT, and this donation is matched by our government's funding. Yesterday the Enerplus president gave $5 million to SAIT.

I would like to ask the Assembly to recognize and thank these corporate leaders for the future of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Pat Fredrickson Rita McGregor

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now like to recognize the outstanding achievements of the two ladies we are celebrating today. These ladies are licensed practical nurses, Pat Fredrickson and Rita McGregor.

Both these women represent the finest in leadership in the nursing profession and have influenced nursing policy provincially and nationally. In fact, Pat Fredrickson was among the health care professionals who received Alberta centennial medals for their exceptional contribution to the community and society.

I join your colleagues in thanking you for the dedication to advance licensed practical nursing, and good luck with your future endeavours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The intent of my member's statement is to challenge the new Minister of Community Development to raise the profile of the parks and protected areas portion of his portfolio.

Since 1994 parks and protected area's infrastructure along with health, education, community services, and seniors, to name just a few, has suffered greatly from this government's neglect. While paying down the $23 billion debt that the government had accumulated through poor management was eventually accomplished due to the increased global price of oil and gas, in the interval the condition of parks and protected areas deteriorated greatly.

Although the reinvestment in Alberta's photo op, pavement parks such as the Canmore Nordic Centre and a handful of interpretation centres, has mercifully begun again, the wilderness parks and protected areas, the diamonds in the rough, have been at best ignored and at worst deliberately abandoned. Considering the small percentage of land set aside, less than 5 per cent for parks and protected areas, Albertans expect that the government consider these areas sacred and do its utmost to protect and expand them.

Government bills 18 and 23 are heading in the wrong direction when they remove public advisory boards and buffer zone protection. The proposed coal-bed methane intrusion into the Rumsey ecological area as well as an attempt to remove the protected park status of Caribou Mountains provincial park to permit drilling is offensive to hundreds of thousands of Albertan environmental and outdoor enthusiasts.

The new minister has a chance to make either his mark or blot on Alberta's park landscape and personal well-being. Hopefully, the minister will whip up the enthusiasm of his caucus members to protect existing parks from industrial intrusion and to support extending protection to wilderness areas like the Castle Crown by establishing the 1,040 square kilometre Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp wilderness park.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Bow Island and District Emergency Services

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 8 I was given the opportunity to present the Alberta emergency service medal to a number of very deserving individuals from the Bow Island and district emergency services. In order to be eligible for the medal, nominees must have worked for at least 12 years in municipal emergency services. The nominees in Bow Island all had numerous years of service, combining for a total of 268 years of volunteer service. Two hundred and sixty-eight years. Giving anywhere from 13 to 42 years of service, each of these individuals has dedicated a great deal of their time and energy in serving their communities.

Mr. Speaker, the colours of the Alberta emergency service medal represent the qualities that the nominated volunteers and the winners have. The blue on the ribbon represents the province of Alberta while the three white stripes represent good service, loyalty, and conduct. Each of those nominated for the emergency services medal from the Bow Island and district emergency services deserve our appreciation and respect for the volunteer work that they do.

Again I'd like to extend my congratulations to those winners of the medal and to all the nominees. Volunteers need to be recognized for the volunteer work that they do. Without volunteers Alberta would not be the wonderful province that we know and love today.

Mr. Speaker, April 23 to 29 is National Volunteers Week, and I'm proud to have been given this opportunity to discuss a great group of volunteers who have given so much to their communities and to our province generally. They have selflessly dedicated their time and energy, and I would like to take this opportunity to once again thank them for their efforts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Water Management

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the province's much-vaunted Water for Life strategy Albertans should by now have a comprehensive strategy in place to protect Alberta's drinking water. We're still waiting. Recent reports have underlined the urgent need for a strategy to ensure that safe and reliable sources of water are available to all Albertans.

The urgency of the situation extends beyond Alberta's borders as our neighbours have voiced their concerns about the decline in water levels and the quality of rivers flowing to the east, north, and south of our province. It is hypocritical for the government in its Water for Life strategy to stress the importance of water to Albertans and then fall behind in terms of meaningful legislation and regulations governing the industrial use of our water. In some cases the water used by industry is locked away forever in coal seams or down oil wells, never to be recovered again.

The situation is urgent. There should be immediate steps taken to ensure that there is no privatization of Alberta's water, that there are no interbasin transfers of water, and that there is strong and meaningful legislation passed here to protect water from pollution and overuse by industry. Individual household consumers throughout the province must be assured of pure and inexpensive drinking water for their own domestic use. Our province's water must be maintained as a publicly owned resource. We must not allow the private trading of water and not allow the sale of water to other countries, particularly to the United States.

Albertans know the vital importance of water to their continued health and prosperity. It's time for the government to ensure that it's properly protected.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 51 energetic young Albertans from my constituency. Basically, they're petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to present a petition from 60 residents of central Alberta, from the Mirror, Bashaw, and Alix areas. It says: we the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta as reported by Health Canada that include but are not limited to a tobacco tax increase, legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing, and the legislation to make all workplaces completely smoke free.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a Standing Order 40 application.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I give notice that I will move under Standing Order 40 of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly affirm the position that revenue from nonrenewable resources should be excluded from the formula by which federal equalization payments are calculated."

The Speaker: Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Bill 30
Persons with Developmental Disabilities
Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move first reading of Bill 30, Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006.

This legislation will enhance the way our province administers the persons with developmental disabilities, or PDD, program. Bill 30 proposes that the roles and responsibilities of the PDD Provincial Board be transferred to the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports and that the reporting lines of the PDD community boards be enhanced so that they would report directly to the ministry. This legislation will enable the ministry to better co-ordinate programs that support adults with disabilities, which were placed under the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports in November 2004.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move that Bill 30, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Amendment Act, 2006, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Bill 31
Health Information Amendment Act, 2006

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 31, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2006, for first reading.

This legislation will make substantial amendments to the Health Information Act to reflect changing technology and to better assist in the administration of health care spending in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 31, being the Health Information Amendment Act, 2006, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Bill 32
Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce first reading of Bill 32, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act.

This new legislation will not only incorporate much of what was in private member's Bill 201 but will also replace the Human Tissue Gift Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 32, being the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not usual that we would table this, but given that the opposition seems to want to play games with the land that was purchased from Mr. Sheckter, I'm filing today five copies of the agreements for four parcels, clearly showing that, in fact, the land that was in excess would be returned to the vendor.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from myself that has been sent to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The letter responds to the questions he raised yesterday regarding the theft of computer equipment from Children's Services, and I trust that the information in this letter will answer his questions. As I stated in the letter, Albertans can be assured that no client information was stored on the stolen laptops, and at no time was personal information at risk. The police are investigating this incident.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today, and they all relate to my questions earlier in question period. The first tabling I have is a settlement proposal between Joseph M. Sheckter and the province.

The second tabling I have is a page from the Alberta Gazette from 1981 indicating that land in the northeast section of 29-51-24-W4 was sold for a total amount of $4,394,500, or $55,000 per acre.

The third tabling I have is a historical title of land, and it indicates that this land changed hands from Robertson Properties to Aristocrat

Holdings and the amounts that this land was bought and sold for are in this historical title.

Now, certainly, this next document is also a certificate of title from the north Alberta land registries district, and this is the southeast quarter of section 8, township 54, range 24, west of the fourth meridian. This is also land that was addressed in question period today.

There is also a certificate of title from the northern Alberta land registries district, and this certifies that the Atlantic Dairy Farm Ltd. and 248290 Alberta Ltd. are owners.

This is a certificate of title indicating that Tigris Holdings Ltd. is now the owner of a one-third interest.

The last tabling that I have is, certainly, an Alberta registries land titles certificate. This is for 4, 24, 51, 25, northeast section, and this indicates, again, that land in 1981 was sold to Her Majesty the Queen in right of Alberta for $6.2 million.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is from Jim Moses, noting that by setting up a pay-for-service system, it's diluting the existing capacity by removing doctors and nurses, et cetera, from the health care system.

The next letter is from Ian Morgan, noting that "foreign qualified immigrant doctors and nurses can be brought to Canadian standards."

A number of suggestions from K.T. Moorthy and S. Moorthy, noting that they need to ban smoking in the workplace and public places; supporting sporting activities by reducing the cost for rental of ice time and playing fields, et cetera; a number of very proactive suggestions.

From John Mathewson, wondering if the Premier is taking into account "potential rising government income that will be produced by the rising population of workers . . . It is critical that Albertans are confident that the numbers are derived fairly as we weight the argument."

The next letter is from Adele McDonald, noting that public health care "has always recognized . . . and managed the balance between services that fell within – and outside – of the public care system."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the proper number of copies of a paper called Equalization Reform: A Fair Deal for Saskatchewan. The paper supports Alberta's position that nonrenewable resources should be excluded from calculation of federal equalization payments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, each with the requisite five copies. The first tabling is a memorandum dated October 9, 1980, from then minister of environment Jack Cookson to then Premier E.P. Lougheed with respect to Edmonton's and Calgary's RDAs and containing those quotes about special interest names which I used in today's question period. Another sentence of note in that memo talks about purchasing land "quietly, quickly and cleanly."

The second tabling is Alberta Government Services land titles office document number 992086598, showing Lehigh Portland

Cement Limited offering to sell a certain parcel of land to Canadian National Railway Company on March 18, 1999.

My third tabling is also an Alberta Government Services land titles office document, 992086220, showing Lehigh Portland Cement Limited buying that same parcel of land from this government on March 31, 1999, almost two weeks after they had already offered to sell most of it.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the Farm Implement Board 2005-06 Annual Report.

Speaker's Ruling
Petition Procedure

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I go to the Standing Order 40 application, just a note with respect to petitions. We do have a standing order with respect to petitions, Standing Order 83(3). In the case of one petition that was filed today by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, it doesn't meet the requirements of that particular standing order, so the petition is being returned. It is an onus of responsibility on members to know what that standing order is.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a Standing Order 40 application.

Federal Equalization Payments

Mr. Mason:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly affirm the position that revenue from nonrenewable resources should be excluded from the formula by which federal equalization payments are calculated.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In order to satisfy you and the House that this in fact is in order, I'd like to make the following comments. First of all, it appears, based on the research that we've been able to do, that there will be no suitable opportunity to raise this in another forum. I think the closest, perhaps, would be the estimates of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, but it in no way affords an opportunity for the House to clearly express a position with respect to this matter. So we are unable to find any other opportunity for the House to clearly express its opinion on this very important question.

With respect to urgency, Mr. Speaker, just today the Premiers are meeting in Montreal at the Council of the Federation. Each of these provinces will be arguing in their own self-interest, and we believe that it's important that Alberta's position would be best represented if we could show broad political support for the position that nonrenewable resource revenues ought not to be included in the calculation of equalization payments. We know that the Premier is down there, that it represents a position, as we understand it, of the government, but I'm not aware of any occasion in which the entire House has had an opportunity to express its point of view.

Mr. Speaker, adding to the urgency is the position of the government of Quebec. They have been very clear that they would like to see nonrenewable resources included in the calculation of transfer payments. If that were to happen, of course, it could have a significant impact on Alberta's overall financial position.

We believe that it's important at this point to have this debate and, particularly in light of recent political developments in the province of Alberta, to express the position nationally based on the entire Assembly rather than just the position of the Premier and the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are the arguments. We believe that this is the only and, in fact, the best opportunity to express this position. We also believe that given recent political developments and the negotiations currently taking place in Montreal, it is not only timely but very important to express a clear and united position from the province of Alberta. So I would respectfully request unanimous leave from the Assembly in order to debate this. If that were to be given, we are prepared to commit to only one short speech on the matter, and we would ask other parties to consider the same thing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under a Standing Order 40 application unanimous consent of the Assembly is required in order to give consent.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: As the estimates this afternoon of the Ministry of Environment are coming up, I just want to leave, hon. members, with this short little historical vignette with respect to ministers of Environment.

3:00

There was a Minister of Environment once who actually sat, I believe, in the same chair that the current Minister of Environment is in. The rule of the day said that you had two hours for your estimates, and a minister at that time was given 30 minutes' speaking time. The then Minister of Environment began to verbalize lucidly, not unlike certain other ministers of Environment, and reached the point of 30 minutes in his discourse at which time he concluded in his mind that he was not finished. So he asked the chair to ask for unanimous leave of the House to continue speaking. The House gave the minister unanimous leave. The minister proceeded to go on for another one hour and 30 minutes and completely and totally filibustered his estimates. We arrived at the two-hour time frame in which there was a demand for the vote to be taken, and the vote was taken. But thereafter the House levelled the playing field with that particular Minister of Environment to his woe.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Environment

The Chair: I'll call the hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to say this afternoon that on such a beautiful Alberta day perhaps I could be asking for unanimous consent that we reconvene out on the lawn of the Legislature, which would be a beautiful thing. I guess that I could try that motion, but it may not be administratively possible. That being the case, joining me today is my huge staff: the Deputy Minister of Environment, Peter Watson, as well as Laurent Auger, le chef du cabinet. I'm pleased to talk today. It's an honour and a privilege to talk about Environment's business plan for the fiscal year.

Let me begin by walking you through some of the major changes in my ministry's expenditures. There has been an increase of about $1.7 million for approvals required under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the Water Act. We issue these approvals for new activities that might have an adverse impact on the environment, such as oil sands projects or new drinking water systems.

We also have reviewed our program to identify projects with low environmental risk because I do believe that risk assessment is so critical in terms of how we use our energy in the most efficient way possible. For example, we will implement new standards for urban drainage and storm runoff works and temporary water diversions and no longer have to issue approvals for those works. That's a small example of the efficiencies we are building within our ministry. As a result – and I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View would appreciate this – we've been able to reallocate $600,000 because of that efficient use of our time and energy and money into '06-07 to higher risk approval activities.

We now also require professionals to sign off on the remediation of petroleum storage tank sites. Professional engineers from APEGGA will review these sites to ensure that they are properly cleaned, and we will audit these sites.

We will also continue to be involved in the higher risk sites area. For instance, under the compliance and enforcement categories the educational activities that we have always conducted in this area are now being assigned to the ministry's educational awareness program. Now, this results in a decrease of about $490,000 in this program. However, I want to stress that we have not reduced any resources for the field inspections and surveillance of the activities. What we are truly looking for are the outcomes that are so important relative to how we spend our money, get the best value for our money and the lowest environmental risk relative to what we're dealing with. This is just another small example.

So we will continue to enforce and take action on those who do not follow our strict environmental legislation, but we also want to educate Albertans to make sound environmental choices. It's almost like the boy and the man who sit on the end of a dock, and the question is: do you give the boy a fish when he's hungry, or do you teach the boy how to fish? Ultimately what we are doing is using our energy in a way so that for generations to come that boy will be able to fish based on the lessons that he has been taught relative to the environment. That's exactly what we're doing. I know that my wife will be very proud of that story that I just told this afternoon.

One other small example of that is monitoring and evaluation. This program area increased by $1.5 million. You ask me how much? One point five million dollars because we are improving and expanding our information systems for measuring groundwater and other water sources, which are so important on the blue gold that we talk about in this Assembly.

We're also making it easier for Albertans to access information by expanding what we put on our website. We truly believe that information is so critical in terms of the mapping, the geological work that we're doing relative to the information of groundwater aquifers, and how we share that in an open, transparent way with all Albertans. We continue to enhance those procedures and that framework that we have in place within the Ministry of Environment.

The increase of $200,000 in this program reflects the cost of sharing information with partners such as the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, CASA, and the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment. Now, in one small area, water operations, I want to say that a decrease of $900,000 is reflecting savings through an increased use of technology, again for programs that maintain provincially owned water infrastructure such as is often referred to as on-stream storage, but the real word, I think, is more appropriately framed as a dam.

A decrease of half a million dollars was achieved by moving more initiatives into, again, our education program. That's aimed at teaching that boy how to fish as opposed to giving him a fish in terms of the important environmental seeds that we work for into the future.

Also, on an innovation and policy perspective we are increasing $1.8 million under initiatives of sustainable resource environmental management, which I know that the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development supports, SREMs such as emissions trading systems, a streamlined regulatory system for upstream oil and gas, and better systems for managing contaminated sites.

From a drinking water perspective, we're increasing it by a small amount of $36,000. This, again, supports the workforce needed for the drinking water branch, which is part of Water for Life. In addition to the workforce increase in this area, we are also devoting about $1.7 million – you asked me how much; $1.7 million – in each of the three areas out of our Water for Life budget to help small communities have the support they need to continue to provide safe drinking water. I know that to my colleagues all over this province it's so important to have safe drinking water in our smaller communities as we work collectively with them as partners. Partnership is very important. A partnership is: what can we do for you that you can't do, and what can you do for me that I can't do? Collectively we're using a resource end of Alberta Environment to work toward strengthening that partnership.

I want to say that in reclamation we're decreasing about $1.2 million, but this $1.2 reflects the upcoming completion of reclamation work at the Smoky River coal mine. I know, to the hon. members, that the Smoky River coal mine is an important initiative that I think it is very important.

An increase of $3.7 million supports a number of critical initiatives such as programs that help First Nations. I know, to the hon. minister of aboriginal affairs, that the programs that will help our First Nations and small communities supply clean drinking water and make sure that they have dependable backup systems and maintain healthy aquatic ecosystems are so important.

Again, speeding up completion of flood risk mapping throughout the province is an important initiative.

As well, groundwater mapping throughout the province with a focus in the next two years in central Alberta is a key area where we have been focusing some of our dollars and our infrastructure.

Partners with communities and Albertans to improve watershed conservation through the Alberta Water Council and other partners is another important initiative.

I want to conclude on this point by saying that part of our Water for Life strategy, again, in helping us achieve a very noble goal: we want to improve our water conservation by 30 per cent by the year 2015. I want to say that I know that that goal is being achieved as we speak through our Water for Life strategy.

On the issue of climate change, of course, we are increasing about $43,000 to support some of our workforce needs in the critical area. We continue to focus on technology developments, such as the Drake Landing solar community in Okotoks. To the hon. member from Okotoks and High River: I'm looking forward to joining him.

Last week, as you know, he was very successful in getting from the Minister of Environment an additional half a million dollars based on a question that was asked in this House. I want to say that he has actually started quite an incredible trend because everyone now thinks that when they ask a question to the Minister of Environment, they are going to get a half a million dollars. I want to assure you that that is not always the case. But I want to say that this type of initiative, pertaining to the Drake Landing solar community, is an important one when it comes to looking at reducing greenhouse gas emissions and intensity, and I want to applaud the hon. member for his good work working with partners in that community.

I also want to say that we will continue to work with the federal government to influence national and international agreements. In fact, I will be attending later in May in Bonn, Germany, with the federal Minister of Environment, Ms Ambrose, where Canada will be leading the way, and I know that Alberta plays a key role relative to the importance of the plan we have in place.

Did you know that we're the only province in Canada that has a climate change law? No other province in Canada has a climate change law, and I'm very proud to say that it's right here in this province. Just like it's right here in this province: we were the first province in Canada to have a Ministry of Environment, dating back to 1971, for some of the members who may not be aware.

An increase of $700,000 also reflects a commitment to sharing timely and accurate information about the environment with Albertans and our partners and our stakeholders. We want to ensure that all Albertans are well-informed in a transparent, open process when we come to making the right choices about the environment, and I want to say that that is working very well.

From an integrated resource management perspective, we have an increase of just under a million dollars, reflecting our new environmental response team. Of course, this team is a recommendation of the Environmental Protection Commission, which I established last August as a result of the ecological disaster that took place in Wabamun. Working very closely with the hon. member from the Stony Plain area, I want to say that that is moving ahead on schedule, on time, and, I might add, on budget.

From an intergovernmental relation perspective, we are increasing about $130,000, that reflects a focus on stronger partnerships, on environmental research with the Department of Innovation and Science, and I had an excellent visit last week with the Alberta Science and Research Authority, where they are doing excellent work with the Ministry of Environment.

I want to continue on and talk about the fact that no matter what it is that we do, we want in this 21st century to move away from labels because labels just simply disenfranchise. They just simply pigeonhole. Basically, a label just simply says: you go in one corner, you come in another corner, and let's come out fighting. Well, I think that is really not a good efficient use of energy, and this budget this year reflects that we are using our money and our dollars in a more efficient way because rather than labelling and rather than disenfranchising Albertans, what we are doing is working in partnership with Albertans. My good friend, who I had breakfast with last Friday morning in Vancouver, Dr. David Suzuki, said that what we want to do is move away from labels. Labels we should keep not for people but for planets.

What it really does more than anything is that it talks about the importance of our education system in terms of teaching that boy how to fish because, ultimately, this is generational. This is a long-term approach. In fact, some of our dollars this year will be reflected in the youth summit. This will be the first-ever Alberta youth summit all across Canada, that's going to be held in Kananaskis in the early months of the fall. In fact, what we will be doing is we'll be having university students, college kids, kids from high school, but also grade 5 students. The grade 5 students will be there because of the fact that that's where they learn about the important principles of the environment. Again, we're taking those seeds and planting them so we have long-term impact of the money we're investing in education.

From a land perspective and contaminated sites I want to say that this is an important issue relative to the cleanup and the reclaiming of contaminated sites. Our legislation is without question the strongest in this country. My ministry acts immediately where contamination exceeds environmental standards or could cause potential health risks. We use environmental protection orders if deemed appropriate, if needed to ensure that the company cleans up. The polluter will pay because it's the law. We will continue to protect our land, air, and water as we move forward because we have strong Alberta laws. For example, we used environmental protection orders with a company in northern Alberta after tests confirmed that salt runoff from their site was contaminating adjacent property. It's just one small example where the polluter pays for any violation of a law that takes place in the strong Alberta law that we have.

I want to use another example of things that we are doing that I think are so important. Immediately after the spill at Wabamun we issued enforcement orders, which clearly outlined the steps that Canadian National, CN Rail, needed to take to clean out the lake to our strict environmental standards and to keep the public informed on the cleanup status. That's so important. I want to say that I was proud to hire Dr. David Schindler from the University of Alberta, who, as you know, is a leading ecologist, as well as Dr. Ron Goodman, who was the cleanup manager for the Exxon Valdez. We took that action in the first 24 hours.

I want to say that I compliment my team of people within the Ministry of Environment, who acted very conscientiously, and the good work that they have done relative to restoring and building back the confidence of the people in the Wabamun area. We are continuing to be involved with our staff. We have an office in Wabamun to ensure that. Residents have questions. I think that's a good investment of Alberta Environment dollars, that this budget is all about. We will continue to hold CN's feet to the fire to ensure that the laws are followed and also to ensure that the lake is restored to its full and best use for its residents.

I want to also for a moment take an opportunity to say as we go forward that, clearly, I believe our Water for Life strategy is perhaps the most progressive piece of public policy that we have in our government. Perhaps I'm biased as the Minister of Environment, but it is forward thinking. Not only are we thinking about down the road; we're also thinking about around the corner. I think that in this 21st century that is the type of public policy that Albertans are expecting on such an important resource as our blue gold.

I want to say that we have a target of a 30 per cent improvement in water efficiency by the year 2015. That means that for the way we use our water today, we have to do an even better job pertaining to the issue of water conservation. To meet this target, we are working with our municipalities and also with industry to measure actual water usage. We are educating Albertans pertaining to water conservation. Again, we're feeding that young boy who is sitting on the dock. We're planting seeds.

I don't know if you are aware, but about 50 years ago there used to be a sign. It was a regulation of government, and it used to say: do not spit. That was the law. There used to be signs saying: do not spit. If you notice, today there are no signs anywhere in Alberta that say: do not spit. The culture and our society have come to understand what is expected of them. In the same context as we go forward with our young grade 5 students, we want to plant the seed so that from an educational awareness perspective it's not about "do not spit" anymore. It's about what we are doing individually as Albertans in protecting and sustaining our environment today and well into the future.

I want to say today: do we need to start putting signs up? I don't think so because I think Albertans are already there when it comes to the fact of how important the environment is to them in terms of their children and their grandchildren and their way of life. As Minister of Environment responsible for the Water Act I also want to say on the quality of water in Alberta that I will continue to use every fibre of energy in my body to ensure that safe, secure drinking water is top of mind when it comes to the actions we take and in the money reflected in this budget when it comes to the money we expend for protecting our water.

The tests that are being carried out relative to coal-bed methane drilling will show well water quality. They will show well water production capacity in terms of flows. They will also show the presence or absence of methane gas in the well. What we are doing is developing a rock-solid base of information that we will be able to use. Information is truly power when it comes to the decisions we make pertaining to water usage and water conservation. We have a very open and transparent process that we are using for any landowner anywhere in Alberta. The new standards that we have put in place and the monies that we are expending will force any industry that is doing the drilling to pay for the testing: 100 per cent of that testing will be paid by industry. In fact, any resident who has a concern or even a fear of anything that is going on can relieve those fears because we have a 24-hour hotline at 1-800-222-6514 that any resident anywhere in this province can call at any time and get answers. Of course, Alberta Environment will be there in terms of being able to react quickly to concerns.

It's so important that citizens are also the eyes and ears of Alberta Environment officials. If everyone thinks about it, we all have individual responsibility in dealing with the environment. I think this is an important approach of spreading our wings and our tentacles even further. Again, we may not have to beam up to the mother ship because the tentacles to the mother ship will be to every Albertan, so ultimately we will have all corners of our province covered.

Alberta leads this country when it comes to drinking water programs, and my ministry, I want to say, has just completed the most comprehensive review of its drinking water facilities anywhere in North America. I think those were dollars well spent, and I think the money that will be allocated in this budget this year will also be well spent in terms of securing that blue gold.

I also want to say that last week Dr. David Schindler, who I consider a very good friend, in his report confirms what we are already doing. Water is scarce in Alberta and across the prairies. This is especially important in southern Alberta, which has a long history of drought. I don't know if you would be aware – did you know that 200 years ago the North Saskatchewan actually suffered a major drought in this area? Two hundred years ago there was a major drought right here in the North Saskatchewan River that was unprecedented. So we use the information that Dr. Schindler has provided in this type of forward-thinking reporting, that Alberta Environment welcomes.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my leave. I'm quite prepared to answer any questions from members from all parties in the Assembly this afternoon.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is my privilege to stand and comment on and ask questions about the estimates briefing for the Department of Environment. I thank the hon. minister for his comments and for his attempts to lead the province on environmental issues. I have to acknowledge that this minister has inherited a mess from years of neglect and underfunding, with grossly deficient staff numbers and capacity to measure and take action on issues relating to our environment.

This is the third most vital issue to Albertans, the protection of the environment, which requires significant investment in testing, analyzing the results of the tests, and taking action on the results of the analysis. It has been over a decade since the Department of Environment has been adequately funded to do its job, and the results are showing themselves. With less than 0.5 per cent of the provincial budget there is a profound loss of confidence in the capacity of this Environment department and this Environment minister to carry out the responsibilities of protecting our water, our soil, and our air. Fundamentally, this has impacts on the public health and safety. Clearly, in the area of groundwater alone there has been a serious lack of ability to monitor, to analyze, and to hold industry accountable for the progressive loss of quality and in some cases quantity of water in our groundwater aquifers.

There has been a lack of capacity in the Alberta Environment department to do comprehensive environmental impact assessments. We continue to rely on industry to do their own environmental impact assessments on approval projects. This is clearly a failure of leadership by this government. The lack of investment, the lack of putting the environment first is a failure of vision and the recognition that we cannot sustain any kind of economic activity and health in this province until we invest properly in the environment. Legislation is fine, and we have good legislation. The problem is enforcement. We have no capacity to enforce the good laws that we have. Industry is being called upon to regulate itself. This cannot be sustained. The people of Alberta are increasingly anxious, angry, and demanding a more accountable system.

We have thousands of contaminated sites around the province, and unfortunately there still is no fund which will deal with the cleanup costs. Many of these companies have walked away. They have gone bankrupt or changed ownership, and now the public purse will be on the line again to clean up these messes. This clearly has to be dealt with. The debt that we are leaving to our children is absolutely phenomenal in terms of multibillion dollar cleanup costs because of the failure to establish a cleanup fund in the interests of all Albertans.

The Water for Life policy is a good policy, but it is simply ideas. We need action after three years on this plan. It is simply a plan that needs to be implemented, and funding needs to be provided to allow the watershed groups to do the research, to do the planning, to do the testing, and to carry out the actions needed to protect our water, particularly our watersheds. We will spend billions and billions of dollars, as we are doing again this year, on treating water because we are not protecting the water in the first instance at its watershed level. Now we're seeing signs of that in the groundwater particularly. We must invest in the Water for Life policy and get it going on the ground.

One of the fundamental aspects of investment in sustainable water and other environmental characteristics is an integrated land-use plan. In 15 years this is the third attempt to get an integrated land-use plan in this province. Failure to plan is planning to fail. Without this land-use plan industry is simply going from place to place, project to project, and the regulatory bodies have no capacity to say no because the government has already sold them the land, sold them the subsurface rights. They have to be allowed to go ahead, then, without serious attempts at a systematic, overall provincial plan that would protect us into the future, protect industry into the future, and protect our fundamental lifeblood, groundwater, into the future.

We have to be able to do cumulative impact assessments. We're still not doing them. The upgraders in the industrial heartland are still going ahead without a proper scientific assessment of the cumulative load on the atmosphere, the cumulative load of pollutants on air quality, water quality, soil quality. There are significant concerns out there. Again, huge investment is needed in the scientific realm of doing cumulative impact assessments in order to make decisions about what is sustainable and what is not sustainable.

Finally, there needs to be funding for meaningful public consultation. When a decision is being made in their locale, whether it's an intensive livestock operation or industrial activity or a refinery site, people have to be meaningfully involved in those decisions, or we're headed for increasing community fracturing and increasing court challenges at a great cost to both communities and the province.

We are looking for serious investment in the Environment department, significant courageous leadership to move this agenda forward, and once again are disappointed at the very small increase in budget that this ministry has to work with. The Water for Life strategy got a $3.6 million increase this year. How is that going to actually move the series of watershed programs that are needed, that are already being degraded, especially in the South Saskatchewan basin? How are we going to get a handle on some of the overallocations that have already been made in some of these watersheds? These watershed groups have to be adequately funded to do the work, or we're headed for real trouble. So I would appreciate some answers to some of the questions around investing adequately into this ministry, questions around how the integrated land-use plan is going to unfold and what proportion of investment this ministry has to pay into that and is compromised as a result of it.

You've indicated $33 million to improve our understanding of groundwater. That's a very important initiative and is long overdue. With the complaints and concerns based on testing that I've heard, we have a major problem in our underground aquifers that we have only begun to address. We also need to do much more in terms of the characterization of volumes and chemistry under surface because of the tremendous number, over 300,000, of wells now in this province, some of which have been there for 75 years and are breaking down and are continuing to show signs that they, too, are contributing to gas migration and to connections between aquifers, with one aquifer polluting another. So we have serious questions around how you're going to address these issues without more funding. We will do all we can on this side to ensure that the pressures are mounting to get this ministry adequate funding to do its job.

There was discussion last fall about interbasin water transfer into the special areas. I hope that the lack of legislation this year to review it reflects a change in culture here, that we cannot continue to take water to people and support unsustainable development in the areas that are drought ridden. We have to bring people to water. It's a question, I guess, also of whether or not this minister has decided against this. I hope he has. I think that would be a progressive decision. We've already had two major interbasin transfers in the province, and with climate change coming, it's clearly going to be an increasing demand for these unsustainable practices.

In relation to climate change I'm hoping the minister will look at enforceable limits and shift away from this intensity target. When the oil and gas industry is burgeoning as it is, there is only one way that our contribution to climate change is going, and that is through the roof. We have to have building code changes and vehicle emissions testing and a greater commitment to renewable energy. I've spoken with the Energy minister. He doesn't express any interest in renewable energy. I'm hoping the Environment minister will press for more renewable sources of energy. We simply cannot continue on this single-minded approach to fossil fuel extraction.

In relation to the climate change program I'd be interested to know how the minister assesses the impact of the climate change program so far. It's been a number of years since it's been going, and it's been doing some good work but extremely limited because of the very low budget it's working with. We need leadership on this climate change file. We are the richest province in the richest country in the world. We are looking for leadership on climate change.

Another area of concern is holding industry accountable for pollution. The minister has stated several times in the House that he plans to hold industry accountable. Well, that requires much greater investment in testing and monitoring and holding the various industries accountable. We need to see that, and we need more money invested in those areas. Your staff are clearly handicapped by a lack of technology, a lack of manpower to do what is vital to all Albertans.

In terms of emergency preparedness another question I had is: how much money now is coming out of the Environment budget to ensure emergency preparedness, and is it appropriate that no new money is coming in for this extended job that is needed to ensure a prompt and effective response to environmental disasters?

It isn't clear to me how much is going to be spent on this new groundwater testing program. It's been indicated that the industry will pay the shot, but from what I've seen so far of the protocol, I think it's inadequate. Indeed, the most expensive tests have not been included in the protocol, and that is isotope testing. If industry is not going to pick up that tab, then we really don't have an adequate baseline assessment. All we know is whether there's gas or no gas in the water. Without isotope testing we will not know whether new gas that comes in is actually coming from deeper sources or not. So I hope we can get some further scientific review of the protocol before it gets established for May 1 because the chemists who have spoken to me about it feel that it is simply not going to answer the question of what caused a water body to be contaminated if we're simply looking for whether there's gas or no gas. There have to be much more sophisticated testings in the protocol.

In addition, we need to have some funding committed to an independent evaluation of the testing process. I don't see anything in the budget to address the 20 or 25 families whose water has been either lost or contaminated. I don't see anything in the budget to investigate those, and these are extremely expensive investigations. If we don't do a good job on those, we are going to be in serious liability from a public point of view, and these are going to end up in court. My understanding from the chemists is that each one of these isotope tests that's required in some of these complaint problems could be upwards of several thousand dollars. I do think we have to find out more about how you're prepared, within a very limited budget, to address the concerns of these families. It's my understanding that the minister has also guaranteed clean water, potable water for families that have been impacted. I'm waiting to see how that will unfold, but it's clearly yet another stress that hasn't been adequately provided for in this budget.

A question I raised earlier this week is that of the importance of now looking back over five years of coal-bed methane drilling and the potential impacts that these have had on other areas of water, some of them on public lands, some of them on private lands where no one has actually recognized that their water has changed. A huge investment is going to be needed there as well to assess just what impact this has had on our groundwater.

So with those comments and questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down, and I welcome the responses from the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much. You've covered quite a lot of important points, and I certainly agree with them. I want to say that at one point I used to say that I always found myself to be an optimist and not a pessimist, but then I've also been accused of being colour blind. If I could draw an analogy, an optimist always thinks that the light is going to be green, and a pessimist always thinks that the traffic light is going to be red. But you know what? The truly wise person is colour blind to each. I guess that when I was accused of being colour blind, I thought it was inappropriate because optimism and pessimism are really all about labels and really provide no real constructive measure when it comes to the work that we do relative to improving the environment we enjoy.

Relative to renewable energies I want to first comment that you may not be aware, members of the Assembly, but the lights that you see in this very Assembly, the thousands of lights that are here, are in fact an initiative that Alberta Environment worked on with Alberta Infrastructure to ensure that this is renewable energy. Did you know that the lights in here are solar powered? In fact, did you know that 90 per cent of the energy that the Alberta government buildings use is by renewable energies? I think that statement in itself speaks for the actions that the government is taking when it comes to renewable energies. I know that all members in the front row and in the back rows and all across this side of the government certainly agree with the important initiatives of renewable energies.

I might also say on a personal note that I'm looking forward to constructing and erecting solar panels on my cottage this summer. In fact, I have to reposition the cottage a bit to make sure that I get the most intensive part of the sun that is coming in. But, again, that is a personal responsibility that Albertans are demonstrating each and every day when it comes to environment protection and sustaining and enjoying what we've been blessed with.

If I could for a moment, the hon. member did talk about the idea of the dollars that we have in terms of saying that it didn't go up as much as others. That is true, and I recognize that. But I think it's equally important to recognize that as we go forward, we also have to talk about what we have put in place in terms of feeding that boy that's on the wharf because what we have done is establish watershed councils. They are out there being our eyes and our ears. They are doing things. And you know what? A tribute to them for the little funds that we do dedicate to them, it's absolutely incredible the value that we get in return. So often it is believed that if you spend a lot of money, you should be getting great value.

In the dollars that we spend with our water councils across Alberta as part of our Water for Life strategy, the watershed councils are providing, if I could use the term – it is absolutely priceless. It is truly priceless in terms of the value they are providing to us and our ministry in terms of their excellent efforts relative to the issue of watershed monitoring as well as the work that they do on the water councils that we have established as part of our Water for Life strategy across Alberta.

I also want to take a moment to say that climate change and the renewable energies that we have undertaken as a government is a commitment that has been ongoing for the last few years. The reason behind that is that it's everyone's business, and it makes good sense, and I say sense, s-e-n-s-e, and cents, c-e-n-t-s. I think that reflects the value of Albertans. They want to ensure that their government dollars and their own personal dollars are used in a way that is efficient, that is an effective manner relative to protecting the environment but also in terms of their individual needs.

So as I talk from a personal perspective about this summer; in fact, investing money in solar panels to put on the roof. The solar panels that I'm going to be constructing I think are a small example of the way Albertans think. I'm looking forward, in fact, to never getting a bill from any utility company or any water company because I'm going to be able to heat the water and provide the lighting because of renewable energy from the solar panels.

I ask each and every one of you to put up your hand if, in fact, you have renewable and you've taken that initiative as a personal responsibility. If you haven't, that's okay. I'm not here to say that that's not good, but think about it. Think about it this year. Being a Bob Vila and getting out there and picking up, you know, and constructing is actually healthy. It makes you forget about politics, and it actually talks about more important values in life, and that is the renewable energies that the hon. member has talked about.

I can only say: judge me by my actions, not by my words. The actions that this minister is taking and the personal actions I am taking, I can assure you, are towards those long-term sustainability efforts in terms of protecting and sustaining our environment and also, I might add, in helping financially because financially we're more efficient when we're using the solars and the renewable energies that we invest in.

An Hon. Member: What about your Smart Car?

Mr. Boutilier: The Smart Car is just another small example. Do you know how much it costs to fill up a Smart Car?

An Hon. Member: How much does it cost?

Mr. Boutilier: It costs $9. And you know what? In actual fact my wife and I have an SUV. In the middle of winter in Fort McMurray, when we're in the middle of the snow . . . [interjections] It's true. Do you know what? That costs $68 to fill, but I tell that I have a great degree of pleasure knowing that it costs $9. I was saying that it makes good sense, s-e-n-s-e, but it makes good cents for my own wallet, c-e-n-t-s, because of the fact that we are using our dollars in an efficient manner. I think that is what makes good sense.

So as we go forward on some of the initiatives, the $170 million that is reflected in this budget, in our three-year business plan, is specifically for the important questions the hon. member has asked when it comes to water infrastructure, when it comes to not only just simply taking ideas but taking those ideas and putting them into action, and that's exactly what we are doing with the $170 million.

The hon. member has mentioned also an important point – and the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development may want to comment on this as well – on the issue of an integrated land management perspective. I believe truly that the more proactive thinking this government shows rather than thinking in silos – the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the Minister of Energy, and the Minister of Environment are collectively working together rather than thinking that it's one ministry or the other. The land, the air, and the water cover all ministries in one way or the other. It may impact Health. It may impact Infrastructure. It may impact Sustainable Resource Development. But what's most important is that we are making efficient use of our energy. We are using our energy in a positive way, and I think that that is really what is so important.

If I could just use another example of how we are pooling our energy together. It's on the cumulative impacts. It is so critically important today. In fact, just the other day I was speaking with industry relative to water needs, in terms of inflow needs. I, of course, have been speaking with Dr. Schindler, who is a wonderful independent adviser from the University of Alberta. I truly have always welcomed his advice and his experience and also the science that he provides. Actually, I'm looking forward in the next couple of weeks to being with Dr. Schindler as we visit what I call out in the trenches at Lake Wabamun, seeing first-hand the scientific work we're doing, the monitoring we're doing, the evaluating we're doing to ensure safe, secure drinking water.

From a cumulative impact perspective I want to say that as we continue to see certainly in my own backyard, the oil sands capital of the world, Fort McMurray – let me assure the hon. member and all hon. members that on cumulative impacts, first and foremost, number one, the Athabasca basin will always be protected so that I can answer to my grandson 50 years from now that when his grandfather was Minister of Environment, we did the right thing, took the right actions, had the right laws and the proper regulations in place to ensure that 50 years from now we can sit out there and fly-fish on the Athabasca River and that the basin has been protected.

We use a science base to be able to determine that, and I can assure you that in my discussion with industry that basin will be protected – that is my own backyard – just like all the basins in this province will be protected because that is the value. If we eliminate the political rhetoric and the platitudes and get to the value, every single Albertan wants to ensure that the basins we enjoy in this province, that we've been blessed with, will be protected and will be sustained. They will be. We are taking action to ensure that they will be.

From a cumulative impact perspective I am working closely with all of the stakeholders both environmental and industry, the CEMA group, which is the cumulative environmental impact group, that is of course situated in northern Alberta with the oil sands development. We are working with them on the integrated land management perspective. We are working with them in terms of the issue of water inflow needs.

I might say that sometimes it comes to a reality that there is never agreement, and that's where Alberta Environment believes in a consensus base, just like the CASA approach that we've taken in the past, but we also believe that it's so important as we work forward from a consensus-based approach that the inflow needs that we will provide to industry, who require water for the development of the oil sands, will never ever compromise that value that Albertans have; that is, protecting and securing ecologically the basin of the Athabasca.

The real issue is about optimization, and that fits so nicely into our Water for Life strategy. It's about: what can we do better? You know, that really reflects a value that Albertans have. We have an attitude in Alberta that we can always do better, and I believe that the goal set out by the Water for Life strategy, that by 2015 we will have a 30 per cent improvement in our water usage, is so critical. The reason I say that is that that is exactly the value and the principle that I am imploring upon industry in terms of the full optimization and usage of what water, in fact, is taken out of the river, how it is conserved, how it is recycled, how it is put back into the river.

For instance, in terms of critical points: when there are droughts, how are we better going to use our water? It's a very good question, and that question is exactly what I'm working with all our stakeholders on. If there is a drought, the bottom line is that there will come times when industry will not be allowed to take water out of the river because the value we have and that Albertans share with us is this: we will not compromise the ecological and the biological value of that basin. So we will not damage it.

Do we have other options? Absolutely. First of all, it would seem to make good sense that industries work with each other, that industry work with the Ministry of Environment when it comes to conservation and optimization; for instance, things such as perhaps even an off-stream storage area, a reservoir so that in drought periods we can in fact capture the advantage of thinking ahead. But not just with the Ministry of Environment. I'm expecting every industry to be working collaboratively. In fact, maybe it makes sense that rather than building five off-stream storage units that would be of benefit, maybe there only needs to be one in terms of what can be done by that collaboration of working together.

I have an expectation, and it's a value that's reflected in Albertans' way of thinking, and that is optimization when it comes to water conservation. We are using that type of direction in our Water for Life strategy, and in terms of industry I will continue to hold their feet to the fire relative to the actions that they take regarding optimization, regarding conservation to ensure that we are thinking collectively together rather than independently.

We are looking for that interdependence among the users of our water. Great examples of that are in southern Alberta. I think the province of Alberta perhaps has the greatest reputation for water management over the last 100 years. Certainly, if you go and look at what's taking place south of the international border, you'll quickly learn what things are being done, that perhaps they are following – not perhaps, they are following – many of the actions we have taken in the last 100 years. There is no question that Albertans are experts when it comes to water management, and I'm proud as the Minister of Environment to be associated with so many Albertans that are water experts.

Industry needs to understand and fully comprehend that there is an expectation of them from a cumulative impact approach that they will work collectively with each other, that they will work and follow the regulations of this Environment ministry. We will use our stakeholder group. Again, we have a consensus-based cumulative impact committee in Fort McMurray. There have been areas where there has not been agreement, and that's where I as Minister of Environment will instruct what the law will be relative to the strong Water Act that we have in this province. That actually is taking place as we speak, today. I might add that I am putting, shall I say, very, very strong directives to industry in terms of that optimization of our water.

I look forward in the months and years ahead to being able to say that, one, we have protected our basins. We will always protect our basins, and no industry anywhere will ever damage our basins. That's a value that Albertans share and, I know, support in terms of the direction that our Water for Life strategy has been taking.

Cumulative impacts is something for which we will continue to use all of our resources from all corners of our province. There is no political border for water, there is no political border for land, and there is no political border for air. We need to be looking broader than silos, and that's exactly what our ministry is doing. We don't have silos in the Ministry of Environment, and I might say that at this time in this place there are more integrated approaches taking place with the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, with the Ministry of Health, with the Ministry of Energy than ever before when it comes to these important initiatives that we are taking forward. SREM is just one small example of that type of approach that we are taking.

I do have some more information that I'd like to talk about, that the hon. member has brought up, which I think are important points, and I thank him for them because it allows me the opportunity to talk about some of the things that we're doing; for instance, our strategy for sustainability in the government of Alberta initiative. As we look at safe, secure drinking water, we also want to look at healthy aquatic ecosystems. We want to ensure that quality water supplies for our economy as well as for the basin are there long into the future, so we have a variety of programs. For instance, a major initiative in '06-07 is that we're developing a drinking water abatement program. That's where we're developing a program to support smaller rural centres and First Nation settlements to lower the risks associated with supplying safe drinking water through remote monitoring, operating training, and backup systems.

This also supports the rural development strategy, that the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright is so familiar with. I'm so pleased to say today that he now chairs the Standing Policy Committee on Energy and Sustainable Development. I was not aware, but did you know that the hon. member, in fact, has an honours in environmental science? I was quite shocked to learn that. He has assured me that he is not educated beyond his own intelligence, so that is very important as well.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that as we go forward in '06-07, we will spend on both operating and capital over $10 million just on this small drinking water abatement program. We also want to continue to support our waterworks operators to implement a source to tap a multibarrier approach to improve the safety and security of our water delivery system through our approved facilities. This includes providing abatement and operation support to assist these facilities and completing the development of an alternate lab accreditation program to reduce operating costs while maintaining safety.

Also, we want to sustain the quality of life in Alberta's healthy aquatic ecosystems. We're developing a new test technique and tools for defining, monitoring, and assessing water. It also talks about the quality and health of the aquatic ecosystem, enhancing our knowledge required to assess the ecosystem's cumulative impacts of development. We also continue to work closely with our partners, with the Alberta Water Council system, part of our Water for Life strategy.

The Water Council, I might say, hasn't been mentioned here, and actually I haven't received a question. To the members across the way: maybe a question will come in the future because I would welcome the opportunity to talk about the great work by the Water Council but also relative to our provincial wetland policy. I have not heard anyone talk a lot about wetland policy. Wetlands are, of course, an important part of our system relative to our environment in the future. So maybe in the weeks ahead we'll be hearing about wetlands. That's so important, the wetland policy relative to the good work that the Alberta Water Council is carrying out for me.

I also want to talk about the reduction of risk and liabilities from flooding. As you know, in terms of the three top issues this ministry has dealt with in the last year, two of them were dealing with the Wabamun spill as well as the flooding down in southern Alberta. I want to say that I'm very proud of our people in the Ministry of Environment, very proud of the partnerships they have and the capacity they have in working with local officials at the municipal order of government. That, collectively, is why we don't need sometimes as much money as you would think. What we're doing is pooling our resources together. Ultimately, Albertans, who own and enjoy this beautiful resource, don't charge us to do things because they are the eyes and ears of the capacity that we have. I want every single person in this province to bear some of their individual environmental responsibility because ultimately, then, it doesn't cost the taxpayers money because they're doing some of the work for us. So that's very important as we go forward.

I want to talk about the values of reusing and recycling; that is so important as well. I might add that for any of you who would like a free recycling container, please feel free to contact my office as we have these wonderful educational tools regarding the recycling containers that educate young people about recycling, reusing, being able to take plastics, aluminum, as well as glass so that they're recycled in a proper order.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you as well to the Minister of Environment for presenting his budget for this year to this Assembly. I would like to make both some general and specific comments in regard to this year's budget, and certainly the minister can feel free to answer me in writing or verbally or both. I would appreciate either interaction.

I'm very interested in this ministry, as many Albertans are across this province. I just wanted to remind this Assembly briefly what the core reason or business of the Ministry of Environment is and then, perhaps, use that as the framework by which I can apply some constructive criticism. The core businesses of the Ministry of Environment are to assure environmental quality in the province, make sure that Alberta's environment is clean and safe, receive effective and efficient services in regard to environmental issues, share environmental management and stewardship, and work with others to safeguard the environment.

Now, my most general criticism of this year's budget echoes, perhaps, what I had mentioned last year but even more emphatically so, that this budget as a whole is woefully inadequate to meet any or all of these needs in a realistic and honest manner. So we continue on for another year, Mr. Chairman, I think with lots of interesting ideas concerning the protection and enhancement of our physical environment but with very little means by which to enforce, to regulate, to monitor, to police the very intense impacts that we have on our natural environment here in the province of Alberta in 2006 and 2007. We are in the midst of an unprecedented amount of economic and industrial growth from the tip to the toe of this province, east to west. There has never been such economic investment and industrial development, resources extraction, population increase, infrastructure building, yet here we are again with pretty much the same number of a budget for the Department of Environment.

I know that the minister has told me that he has pushed hard to increase this budget, but then it really, I think, speaks to me to the lack of value that this government puts on the ability of this department to monitor and to regulate and to protect our environment that he has been refused, and in fact we end up with the same numbers that we had last year: considering inflation, really a reduced number for this ministry.

We see specific increases in some small areas. Certainly, the Water for Life initiative is an example of where we do see some investment. I'm encouraged by that in some small way, minus the fact that we haven't seen a concrete sort of plan coming out yet.

In regard to monitoring and enforcement and, as I said, this policing aspect of this ministry's duties I really, really have grave concerns. I think what we saw last year in Wabamun is indicative of that, and I know that what's come of that – and I'm encouraged by it to some small degree again – is the environmental SWAT team, for lack of a better word, which has been promised. I await to see the results of that. I certainly was encouraged by some of the parameters that were set out to implement that early response emergency team. Hopefully, we can see something better for there.

I'm thinking of other things that would be similar to $143 million for the whole of the Environment budget. You know, I'm thinking about the South Edmonton Common interchange, which was considerably more than that. To compare the two, perhaps, is slightly unfair, but I think it gives us an indication, Mr. Chairman, of where our priorities are in regard to budgeting the resources of this province. For us to spend considerably more on one overpass system, albeit a very interesting and undoubtedly complicated one to negotiate once it's finished, and for that to exceed by half the entire Environment budget I think tells us that we have a problem in regard to environmental protection.

I beg to differ with the minister. I think that in 50 years from now we still have time to change and to reform ourselves. Reform might be an interesting word echoing through here in the next 12 months or so. I think that we need to do something now, and with each opportunity that slips away from environmental protection, the sadder and the poorer we leave this place for the next generations.

Perhaps more disconcerting than this small sum the government has allocated to the ministry, that basically ensures that all other ministries can function, is the fact that the Minister of Environment's business plan is written in such a way as to seemingly place principle responsibility for all matters environment related, be they preservation, reclamation, stewardship, et cetera, upon the citizens of Alberta and, by proxy, the industry that our citizens of Alberta are engaged in. It goes back to some criticism that I often remark on here in this room, and that is that the basic responsibility of the government is not being realized here. We are meant to be regulating and to be providing some framework by which industry and individuals can operate in this province. We are doing a disservice to both industry and individuals and the environment by not enforcing that regulation in a reasonable way through this House.

The much-lauded Water for Life strategy and many other documents and performance plans that come out from this government seem to lay the principle responsibility of care for our environment on the individuals in this society, the regular folks. While that might be proved useful to some degree, I think that it abdicates some fundamental responsibility that will only lead to disastrous consequences.

While it is, of course, every citizen's duty to do all they can to minimize their own personal environmental impact, we as a New Democrat caucus find it curious that not once is industry actually named in this business plan. The rather broadly inclusive and completely nonspecific term "stakeholders" is used, which I'm getting a bit tired of – when you overuse a word in a nonspecific way, it loses its value – which one could assume refers to industry as well as average citizens. Continued emphasis on shared environmental goals, stewardship programs, endowments, educating the public and whatnot all results in the overall impression that anything wrong with the environment in Alberta is the problem of the individual. I would once again say, Mr. Chairperson, that this is a very dangerous strategy on which to base an environment policy.

The Auditor General's findings would seem to support this, for the last eight years – I suppose it was the preceding Auditor General – recommending that the minister obtain sufficient financial security to ensure conservation and reclamation of industrial sites. We need to heed the Auditor General's concerns about this for eight years. I think that's time slipping by, not doing something that is very important to this province. Currently no sufficient security is sought for large land-disturbing industries like coal and oil, natural gas, and the taxpayers, regular people, are left footing the bill for reclamation projects that are otherwise abandoned by industry.

So I would ask the minister: please, would he be finally addressing the recommendations of the Auditor General regarding financial security for land disturbances? Will he table a specific plan and enforcement policy that might back up this policy? Second of all, must the Auditor General be the one to point out these inadequacies for another eight or 10 years or so while the minister speaks in a very generalized way about local watershed stewards and allows industry's methane to leak out of the citizens' water taps in CBM situations? I would certainly like to see some specific answer on that. Would the minister as well push to have financial security legislation updated before all remaining oil and coal sites are drilled?

Specific to the budget, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask why it is that this government manages to spend outside the budget in just about every other ministry except this one. The Minister of Environment is either much more efficient, I suppose, with his spending, we could say, or this government is simply thrifty and not thoughtless where the environment is concerned and refuses to give this ministry any more money than the tiny little amount that it allocates every spring. Does the minister care to comment on the fact that his ministry is actually losing money this year? His overall budget has only increased by 1.5 per cent while inflation, according to Statistics Canada, which is a very low number – I would suggest it's higher – is at least 2.8 per cent. I would say that here in Alberta it's closer to 3 or 3 and a bit.

Enforcement. As I said before, specific now, monitoring and enforcement are very important in all ministries but perhaps more so for Environment. Without proper monitoring and enforcement, this ministry is rendering ineffective and unproductive whatever good intentions it might be putting forward in paper or verbally.

The assuring the environmental quality program has its budget increased by $2.9 million, an increase of 3 per cent, barely above inflation. How can this minister justify the 6 per cent decrease in compliance and enforcement and the 13 per cent increase in approvals after a year that has seen so much activity and so much crisis? I think that those two numbers tell us a lot of what we need to know about the problems of this ministry: a decrease in compliance and an increase in approvals. I find that to be very troubling.

The citizens in Rosebud can light their well water on fire, and they're trucking water into ranches in the area because the cattle refuse to drink from the streams and from well water. Meanwhile, the events at Wabamun last summer are labelled an accident or an environmental disaster, which he likes to say verbally. In the ministry business plan it's just called an incident. If we're going to call it an ecodisaster, we're going to have to devote some funds to rehabilitating the lake and make sure that we see the results of the investigation on CN coming out in a reasonable time. We've been hearing for the last six months or more since CN was raided, and we haven't seen any of that information at all. I think I probably have more information and have released it in regard to CN's activities than this ministry has, and we need to see if CN is in fact culpable for the full disaster on this lake. The part of justice that we like to hear from the Tory side is timeliness in judicial process, and I think that we are behind the times in regard to the prosecution of the perpetrators of the Wabamun disaster.

Given that the citizens in the area surrounding Wabamun went for days without even being told they were being exposed to a toxic spill, it's even more shocking. It's outrageous that the ministry has seen to cut its reclamation and emergency preparedness budget by 25 per cent according to this budget. I find that to be unbelievable.

How can the minister justify this decrease? What possibly could be said to warrant the decrease in a budget meant for reclamation and for emergencies?

Is the Water for Life's sizable increase in the budget for this year indicative of an attempt to actually address some of these issues? I would like to see if perhaps we're moving from one place to another in order to address what is obviously a gaping hole in enforcement and reclamation and emergency preparedness.

The ministry's business plan likes to use verbs such as assist and recommend and work with and develop and implement, restrict, fine, punish, and any of the other verbs that might indicate that the ministry has some weight to throw around, but we don't see any real sign of that. I'm saying that fine, punish, restrict, and implement are things that we might like to see more of and less of this sort of work with, recommend, develop and whatnot because you do have to have the teeth behind the regulation that you put forward as considered to be important. Rather than endless platitudes and stated commitments to ensure high-quality environment, will the minister please actually commit to be pushing toward some change in this ministry: stricter emission standards, harsher penalties, quicker action in emergencies.

In regard to the goal to increase the use of renewables and alternative energy generation in reality we only see 1.2 per cent of energy generated in Alberta from renewable and alternate resources, and I would like to ask the minister, then, what he's going to do to change this. Why are the targets so low in years to come: 2.5 and 3 per cent respectively for the next two years?

Climate change. The climate change program budget only increased by 1 per cent between last year's budget and this year, and I would like to know why the ministry is not making any serious commitment on the question of climate change. We are seeing now from even the very most conservative circles that climate change is in fact upon us, and the main contributor to this climate change is human activity producing carbon dioxide into the environment.

As we develop our oil sands in northern Alberta, we will become one of the very largest, if not the largest, single source of CO₂ not just in North America but in the entire world. We need to do something about it. This is not acceptable. We're heading down a dead-end road that is only going to lead us to necessitate emergency change further down and lay that upon our next generations of people. Really, it's irresponsible to do that. We can spend the money now. We have the capacity to do some bridging into other forms of energy and to promote conservation. Really, there is no magic silver bullet that's going to save us from using hydrocarbons and to something else at this point in time. We can wax poetic about scientists saving the day, the 12th hour, the 11th hour, but really the main means that we have at our disposal right now is conservation, and we're not supporting conservation in any realistic way here in this province right now. It's a shame. It really is.

You can realize efficiencies in regard to electricity use that would not necessitate building new power plants or running these big 500 kV lines down to southern Alberta, which were mostly for export anyway. There are lots and lots of ways to produce electricity on a local level and to conserve the energy that we are using so that we don't even need those things. Once we set up the infrastructure that uses a coal-based system or a combination, we're stuck with that for a long time afterwards. Really, it's a dead end. We need to be supplying a system that is increasing its renewable factor and that does not continue to give people the illusion that they can consume energy with impunity. It's irresponsible to do so, and it goes against any best principle for change.

This whole $3.6 million for our climate change program is not nearly enough. Considering the potential severity of consequences of ignoring climate change, $3.6 million really is just for public relations, as far as I can see. All of the intensity targets that we've set to suggest that we're actually doing something, again, are just simply for communications – otherwise known as propaganda – purposes.

What is being done in regard to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance regarding the capture of waste heat as an alternative source of energy? Cogeneration and all of the efficiencies that can be realized from an energy-producing province could revolutionize our energy production in this province, yet I see very little being done to encourage that sort of behaviour.

I just have a few more budget things that kind of pop out here to me. I would like the minister, please, to explain the massive increase in last year's expenditures related to intergovernmental relationships and partnerships and explain why none of that additional money is needed this year.

Number two, the ministry's business plan shows that stakeholder satisfaction with ministry programs is very, very poor: 55 per cent. First of all, who are these stakeholders? How has this number been generated? What's the minister proposing to do to address such public dismay with this ministry's performance?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. member, first of all, for recognizing our efficiency within the Ministry of Environment. He did say that our ministry is obviously efficient. Certainly, that is correct. We are efficient, and we'll continue to be efficient.

I want to say, though, that enforcement issues that the hon. member talked about are very important. It seems like some of the repeating comments this afternoon – and I understand – are more about: well, your budget only increased a small amount. Really, I want to share with you that I believe that the Ministry of Environment's budget, in terms of value, is worth billions of dollars because we have Albertans each and every day out there doing a lot of the work for us so that we can concentrate our time and effort on ensuring that Albertans are following the law through strong enforcement principles, where we have dollars allocated for enforcement to ensure that the law is being followed.

I thank Albertans as a whole because they are our eyes and our ears. They are the ones that are carrying out so much of the work be it on watershed councils or be it on our water councils. I want to say that I believe truly that our budget is worth billions and billions of dollars based on the good work and the excellent work of Albertans each and every day, many of the Albertans that give us our jobs in terms of the elected positions that we have. It's truly Albertans that are doing some of the great work for us through water councils, through watershed councils, through cumulative impact associations and stakeholders.

I think that that is important to recognize and to indicate so that any comments today saying that there's perhaps not enough money – sure, just like the way we run our household: would we like to have more money in our budget? Yes, we would. On the other side of it: do we have our neighbours help us to build a fence? Do we have our other neighbours help us to build a roof or repair a roof? Yes, we do. So it may not be reflected in the budget. Maybe it's simply perhaps a pizza and some Coke afterwards that determines that we got real value for working in association with each other. Let's not lose sight of what makes Alberta great. It's Albertans' energy, harnessing that energy. I know that our Ministry of Environment, in fact, harnesses that energy when it comes to getting good work and, in fact, demonstrating that good work each and every day.

Pertaining to the issue of climate change I'm very proud to say that I was the only provincial Minister of Environment in all of Canada to speak at the United Nations to 189 countries in Buenos Aires, Argentina. In fact, I was invited to speak because of the initiatives and the green energy that we have demonstrated, the fact that 90 per cent of our green energy is in fact provided in the provincial buildings across the province – even the lights, as I mentioned earlier, that are in this room today – also because of the technologies and the innovation that we have. Clearly, we're going to be able to share the science and innovation and technologies that we have with the rest of the world because of our forward thinking. In actual fact, we will even have better long-term sustainable results in our energy efficiency because of the fact of that technology.

What are we doing? We're bringing in good people, bright minds, so that that technology that is not even created – did you know that the solutions five years from now have not even been created yet? What we are doing is creating an environment through such areas as the Alberta Research Council, our Climate Change Central board, the area boards, and the Minister of Innovation and Science: all of these collective energies we are using and tapping into.

For instance, did you know that, in actual fact, there are nine ministries that are carrying out duties relative to our Water for Life strategy? Not just one, Alberta environment protection, but nine ministries. Water, air, and land are impacting so many ministries when it comes to the good work that is taking place. I think it's important to recognize that we are not pigeonholing this just simply into one ministry. That's why I say that my ministry is truly worth billions of dollars because of the many partnerships that we've developed relative to educating and promoting best practices when it comes to such things as water used, for instance, for crops and livestock. We're also working with the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development when it comes to so many best practices that we could use from an agricultural perspective. We also are working closely with the Alberta Water Council to develop strategies to help meet these important targets that I've set out. So let's not lose sight of the important initiatives that we're working with relative to the good work that we are doing.

I think it's also important to recognize that we are spending more than $10 million on climate change through the Climate Change Central board and the work of the other ministries. You may not be aware, but the Climate Change Central board is the only climate change board in all of Canada, once again a first for Alberta. I think it reflects again our forward thinking. I want to compliment our Premier because it was about eight or nine years ago – in fact, I had the honour at the time of being the chairman – when the Premier asked to play a role in formulating Climate Change Central. I want to say that that forward thinking – well before others and the buzzword of climate change was out there – by our government and the actions and the direction from our Premier demonstrated that, in actual fact, we are not only out in front; we're around the corner when it comes to the proactive approach we're taking, when it comes to such important issues as climate change and in terms of the actions we are taking. So I don't want to lose sight of the important fact that over $10 million is actually being carried out.

When it comes to emission standards, our emission standards in the province of Alberta without question are the highest standards and are leading North America. How many other ministers in terms of other provinces can stand up and say that relative to what we're doing?

Let me give you an example of that. We have taken some huge steps when it comes to keeping toxins out of the air. Our action plan includes cutting mercury emissions from coal-fired power plants in half. I ask you: by how much? By 50 per cent by the year 2010. This is a reduction of about 1,200 kilograms. You asked me how much? Twelve hundred kilograms annually. That's a substantial amount when it comes to what we're doing. We also are requiring a reduction in nitrous oxide emissions by 50 per cent by the year 2025. That's a reduction from 140,000 tonnes to 60,000 tonnes per year. Did you know that we require a two-thirds reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions by 2025? That's a reduction from 180,000 tonnes to 65,000 tonnes. The mercury emissions regulation that, of course, I talked about in this House when I received some questions from the hon. member earlier during this session, the fact that we now require industry to design and install a mercury control program in their plants by the year 2010 – that's four years from now – is certainly proactive, looking outside the windshield down the highway as opposed to looking in the rear-view mirror. It's so important for us to be looking to the future in terms of protecting the environment. That's exactly what we are doing. I want to say that they are just small examples of some of the things that we're doing.

I also want to say that relative to the issue of Wabamun there is no question – I just received a note that I have to move my estimates. I will move my estimates at the appropriate time, but I appreciate the wonderful reminder because we work as a team when it comes to important initiatives.

I would like to continue on. [interjections] Would you like me to carry on? Would you like me to ask for unanimous consent? I would like to ask for unanimous consent to carry on for the next period of time because I have so much to say.

The Chair: You still have 10 minutes.

Mr. Boutilier: I still have 10 minutes. Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, then, I will continue on.

I want to talk about approvals for a moment because the hon. member asked some very good points relative to the approvals and compliance numbers that, in fact, we have. I want to say today that the approvals and the compliance that we carry out within the province of Alberta are so important.

I want to say that the more money we spend on issues such as those in the speech I made earlier, there is no increase or decrease in compliance because we've moved our money to focus in on sweeps. I don't know if you're aware of what that means, but in order to move forward, what we try to do is more education to ensure companies do what they need to do. But we are not afraid of enforcing the strong Alberta laws that we have because the strong Alberta laws are something that Albertans expect of us. From an enforcement perspective it's so important as we go forward that the enforcement efforts we are taking are strong, are direct, are transparent, and that we communicate with all Albertans relative to the work we are doing there. We'll continue to do that because of the important value that Albertans place on that type of initiative.

I want to say that it's a common goal in each of the sectors that we work with on a very frequent basis, as we work collectively together, that we want to ensure things such as building an excellent program for launching public awareness when it comes to education campaigns, stewardship campaigns, programs for paint and construction and demolition waste, the organics in packaging and printed material.

When's the last time any of you were to a Future Shop? It is my dream that we will have a conservation strategy that when you go to a Future Shop to buy a headset or an iPod, you won't need a chainsaw to open the package. In fact, did you know that 140,000 accidents actually take place every holiday season, Christmas season, because when people are opening the packaging, it is so strong and it's so encased with plastics that there are 140,000 injuries that take place? So rather than requiring this incredible, incredible waste of plastic and paper, I believe in a conservation strategy that forces small business or big business to in fact not have packages.

In fact, what do you think of this? When you go to the grocery store to shop in the next while, bring your own actual shopping bag with you rather than using and wasting the plastics that they provide to you. Bring your own bag with you. Okay? Show individual responsibility. Albertans are doing it, and I applaud those Albertans that are doing it. How many in here bring a bag with you when you go to buy your groceries? Well, I do, and others do. I've seen the hon. members from Calgary and from down in Cypress-Medicine Hat. They are taking that action. Again, it doesn't need to be a government regulation. You can do it by your own individual action. These types of examples are, I think, really important.

Now, I want to say that the hon. member also talked about reclamation. We have a very aggressive plan when it comes to reclamation. We are responding to the recommendations of the Auditor General. Security is in place, and I want to say that we take the recommendation seriously. We will continue to work with industry and environmental stakeholders relative to this important issue, when it comes to that of reclamation, and that's exactly what we are doing.

Pertaining to stakeholders, including industry, NGOs, citizens, and other levels of government, our job is to provide oversight and to ensure that the environmental outcomes are met. We are the regulatory backstop. It's like a baseball game. You need a backstop there, but ultimately the players are each and every one of us. Industry, NGOs – all citizens are involved. I want to assure the hon. member and all members of the Assembly that all Albertans can be assured that the Alberta environment protection ministry is the backstop when it comes to regulatory backstopping the laws that we have, and I will continue to be that backstop because I believe that we need to continue to work collectively together.

Let me just say, Mr. Chairman, that my ministry is without question in the billions of dollars. I thank the Albertans that give us our job, and I'm sure all members will join me in thanking Albertans for providing the work and for the individual responsibility that they take. Many of them actually volunteer to sit on a watershed council, to sit on a water council, to sit on a cumulative impact, to sit on a variety of committees that are so important in doing the work of Alberta Environment. Is there a lot of money associated with that volunteerism? No, there's not because that is truly, just like MasterCard, priceless. I want to say that as Minister of Environment that's how I view their work each and every day and that priceless effort that they put in because of their commitment to the environmental principles that I've talked about.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say today that the questions that have been asked are important questions. They're good questions. I want to say that we'll continue to enforce those principles that we have in protecting and sustaining for the long-term benefit of all Albertans 50 years and a hundred years from now.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, share enthusiasm for the environment, as does the minister and the other members that have spoken here and as most Albertans do. It is exciting, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the minister at this time regarding his portfolio.

One of the things that I'd have to say is that we are bringing all Albertans together, Alberta businesses, and the environment. We are a family, and if we don't realize that, we're going to die because we need to sustain all three in order to enjoy the prosperous and good times that we have here.

We very much need to find a balance between energy and the environment, and I appreciate that the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment are showing more co-operation and having the desire to work together. Being a long-time scouter, I've always believed that it is our stewardship to use our resources wisely. If we don't leave the province in better shape than what we found it in, then it's: shame on us and what are we doing?

Our forefathers had a time when they struggled through the Dirty Thirties, and we saw the land erosion and the problems that went forth. Innovation and the people of Alberta overcame that. Once again we're in a time where we're destroying much of our environment, and we need to take a step back to see how we want to do it. To quote from a speech that Mr. Manning recently gave to many of you, he said: the environmental impact of energy extraction in a province built on oil and gas wealth needs to be addressed. I feel that we are doing that, but we have a lot more that we need to do in order to reach that challenge.

Perhaps the biggest challenge that we face as a province is because of the prosperity that we're enjoying, and too often we don't look after the bounty. A number of times I've gone into the mountains to a pristine, unique place, and people are wanting to chop down trees or do other things because they say: well, nobody else gets here. But in no time the footprint of human invasion destroys that environment, so we want to put it high on the list. So I ask the question: what can and should we do as Albertans for the environment?

I would like to start off with some environmental initiatives. We just currently filled the Alberta furnace replacement program. That initiative was filled, and the people of Alberta responded I think more overwhelmingly than the ministry expected, and that was shut down, saying: well, we've reached that.

I'd like to talk about some other initiatives that we should and could be doing. I very much appreciate the different communities throughout the province that are wanting to put in environmental, I guess, communities and the money that the government has put in there, but I ask the question: is a half million dollar grant the proper way to go at that? Or should we be putting in business tax credits or property tax reductions that would have people want to develop and reap the benefits but not have to put in the dollars? Too often when government is the one who is putting the initiative forward, it's not necessarily the best – well, what would I say? – free enterprise that takes place, but they're being driven very much by the different programs that are put out there. So perhaps if the minister would consider looking at more tax incentives like we use in the oil and gas industry to bring on those initiatives, it would be a benefit.

There are many areas where we could have green power, whether that's solar, wind, hydro, geothermal, biomass reactors, or even thermal biomass reactors, that take a huge capital expense to put up, yet there are no tax incentives or even a dropping of tax in order to bring that investment into the province at a greater and more amiable rate than we are at the current time. So I would encourage the minister to look at the different initiatives that we could do.

Some other ones. There are some very unique and – well, what would I say? – excellent toilets. When Australia was faced with the Olympics down there, they designed a new two-flush toilet that is slowly starting to come into the province. What could we do if we were to give a tax credit of $100 a year to a family that wanted to install the two-flush toilet or, for example, that new Banff area that's going to collect their rainwater and use that for flushing their toilets? There are many, many good ideas out there, yet there's no initiative or no incentive other than our own personal ones to do that. There are many Albertans that are doing that, but let's inspire them to reach greater heights and to quicken the pace of our turnover by putting some initiatives there where they are rewarded more than just by the personal aspect.

I want to speak for a minute and read a quote. When one first reads it, it's almost offensive, but it says, "The best thing that could happen to the environment is free-market capitalism." That was by Robert F. Kennedy Jr., not the source you'd think it would come from.

I'd like to refer for a minute to my area down in Waterton national park. It's a very beautiful, pristine area there. The ranchers were being driven out by people who wanted to go in and put up cabins in other areas. I had many of them come to me and say, "Well, Paul, you've got to do something to stop this. I said: "Well, it's a free market. What can we possibly do?" I more recently had those developers come to me, and they're concerned. They said: "Paul, you've got to stop this. We can't afford to buy the land for development because now the conservation groups are coming down and spending more money than we can for development." That is the free market. If, in fact, it is so near and dear to Albertans, allow them to put the money in there and protect our property. They will do as they're doing in my riding down in the Waterton area.

There are a few other areas that I wanted to go into. We've spoken a lot about water, but I'll touch base on it just for a little bit here today. The Water for Life strategy, to my understanding, is three years old now, I believe, and it was said there in the intent of going out mapping and having inventory and testing the groundwater and aquifers throughout the province. One of the most alarming things that's come out in this last week – and you're saying that it's law now – is this water well testing if, in fact, we're going to have any development for the coal-bed methane or anything else.

I asked the minister: do you realize that we have many underground waterways and aquifers that are larger than just a quarter section or 600 metres? Many landowners have talked to me and are concerned about this. They say: "You know what? They're going to drill a mile away, but I know that that aquifer I pull my water out of goes out that distance, one mile away." Yet we're saying that, oh, it isn't going to affect you because the science says that 600 metres is a good distance.

I put it to this House that it isn't a good distance, and there are many waterways that go for miles, underground streams that flow. The farmers and ranchers are tapped into those streams, and we need to have a much broader view. We need to go forward and actually do this mapping that we've been talking about and not protect it for a 600-metre region around a home.

We need to go forward. We need to do the entire mapping. We need to do the testing, the isotopes, and know what's down there to prevent a disaster in the future. An ounce of prevention is better than a pound or a billion dollars' worth of cure after.

I'm very concerned about that, and I hope that we can readdress this temporary 600-metre law that's been passed and that the EUB is facing, but it's not sufficient. Science tells us that these underground aquifers are much larger, and we need to look at that. I hope that the minister will take note and be able to act on that.

There are other areas when it comes to water. He's referred several times to flooding this spring, and the damage that's done by that flooding is enormous. It's caused a lot of problems throughout Alberta, but we also have to look at it from the other side. We lost a lot of opportunity when that water went down and left the province on its way to the ocean. I would ask the minister again: how many environmental assessments have been done? Is the off-stream storage and dams that could be put in place for 20 years down the road there, and are we ready to act upon them?

If an international agreement is reached for the Milk River, have we got our house in order to act promptly and quickly on that opportunity to place water storage on that river? I hope that we do and that the minister could update us on that and let us know. All across the province I would ask that we would be doing that and enhance the studies if they're not done so that we are prepared at a moment's notice when the opportunity is there.

Other initiatives when it comes to damming of the water and using it for the production of agricultural produce. Irrigation continues to grow in my area in the south. It's definitely the breadbasket of Alberta with the diversity of products that are produced down there, but one of the ongoing challenges that we're faced with is updating many of the old canal structures and realizing that as you're wanting to reach that goal, buried pipelines are a much better and more efficient delivery of water. Not only that, if we were to take the initiative to put in some larger pipelines, there's a lot of head or pressure that could be developed that would dramatically reduce the amount of energy that we need to irrigate our lands if we use the initiative and look and do the engineering to capture that energy and use it.

Another area that I'd like to switch to is the flaring of gas wells. It's been an ongoing problem. I've spoken of it in the past. We do have the ability. Because that gas is just being flared, you could easily bring in compressors and have those companies compress that, put it into tankers, and use it in other parts of the province. It seems wrong that we can just flare it and it's gone and that there's no value to it.

Another area of concern. I guess I should start this by saying: what environmental regulations could we adjust in the province that would be a benefit to our environment as well as to business and take some of the competitive angles out? Two or three areas. One is that our pooling system currently often puts two companies into competition to see who can get the gas out of the ground quicker, and they sometimes use as much as 25, 35 per cent of the energy in order to suck it out because it's to their economic benefit but not necessarily to the province's. Whether we could look at some regulations to do that from an environmental point perhaps would be a benefit.

Also, the environmental impact of all the pipelines that cross our property. If Environment would say that pipelines are intrusive and we don't want that many, perhaps we could look at passing an environmental law where they have to get together and co-ordinate the use of fewer pipelines rather than so many that are currently being used. Another area that we'd like to see is basically, like I say, with the pooling, to somehow adjust it so that the competition isn't there to try and take it from the neighbour or the competition before they get in and have time to drill a well and capture that.

The other area I'd like to switch to is electrical production. There's an enormous opportunity to produce electricity, whether that's with a small windmill at someone's home or out on the farm, whether we use solar energy or other areas, but there's no incentive there from the government, whether it's tax credits or something else, to put that in there other than the fact of people wanting to be self-sufficient, which is an inherent trait with Albertans. Perhaps we could go back, and one of the most important things to do would be to look at zero-based metering again for both industry and homeowners, that would be a benefit, in order to increase the production of electricity throughout the province.

I realize here, as I'm looking at my notes, that another area that I missed on initiatives is that there are a growing number of Albertans that are actually drilling down 100, 200 feet for thermal heat in order to heat their homes. Actually, a few people have contacted me wanting to disconnect their gas lines to their house because they're using geothermal heat to warm their homes at a cost of between $5,000 and $12,000. Is that another area where we could look at perhaps some incentives to reduce the necessity of natural gas for many things that we have in our homes?

Another concern that I have is the geologists and the mapping that has gone on across the province for the fossil fuels is just immense, and the amount of seismic work and all of those things that we have, yet we haven't started to scratch the surface on doing that for water assessment, which you've talked so much about and is so near and dear to you. I wonder if there isn't some way, possibly, as these drilling processes continue, especially with coal-bed methane, that they need to report the different aquifers as they're drilling and as they strike and go through a water zone. My understanding is that it would be easy for them to document and to perhaps assist Environment in doing a lot of the assessments going on there.

You've spoken passionately about innovation and the abilities that we have, and I'm very much in tune with you on that. What can we do and what can we discover here in Alberta that we can share with the rest of the world? One of those is coal generation of electricity. We have an immense amount. We could bring in a lot of research, and to have zero emission I believe is achievable and something that we should look at with coal gasification, with CO₂ sequestration, and inject them down into the different areas in order to increase the production of oil.

Perhaps the biggest and most important point – and you've brought this out – is: what can we do and what technology can we share with the rest of the world? I'm still very much concerned with the 500-plus coal-generation plants that China is wanting to come forward with in the next 10 years. If we don't do the research and develop that here, there's very little chance that they're going to do it over there. We live in a prosperous land. We have the revenue and the ability to do it, and I would encourage the Minister of Energy to continue working with the Minister of Innovation and Science to get perks and ideas that would aid the industry in developing that so that we could have clean-coal production of electricity, that would benefit all of us, not just here in Alberta but around the world.

Perhaps, in closing, I would just encourage the minister to realize that he very much has the opportunity to protect the environment as he works with the different ministries. As you said, there are nine other ministers that you're working with. Our environment is our most important asset. Human nature in the past has been to use and move on, but we don't have new places to move to. We were the last frontier. We're developing it here. We have an abundance of resource, but let's balance the two. Let's make sure that this is something that will benefit not only us at the current time but future generations so that they can look back and see the stewardship that we used for the benefit and the protection of the next generation.

With that, I'll wait to hear from the minister. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. I certainly agree with a lot of what the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has said. I couldn't agree with him more in terms of the examples of Climate Change Central where we had a furnace retrofit program where $300 was offered as an incentive. If you had an old furnace that was in fact emitting and was inefficient, we offered $300 as a tax incentive that citizens could then apply for. Not only have we broadened that, but we've expanded it now to washing machines, for the efficient use of water. I don't know if you're aware, but for those of you that do your laundry, there are more efficient washing machines today.

I want to commit to the hon. member, as well, that we will continue to look for innovative fiscal tools so that we'll be sustainable well into the future. In fact, it's where citizens recognize that it's good sense for them in terms of the operation and the usage of the resource we have, but it's also good for the government because it makes the Alberta environment a better place. I believe that when we talk about climate change, when we talk about fiscal instruments, that is so important for us.

[Ms Pastoor in the chair]

I believe we need to continue to focus on best practices. So what are the best practices? In fact, if I were to go around to every member of this Assembly and ask what are the best environmental practices that we carry out each and every day, I know that one of them is simply this: I get into my little Smart Car and I drive to work. There's even a better smart practice than that, and that's walk to work or bike to work. I think we all know that. Certainly, that's a long way to go from driving an SUV to get to work in terms of what that cost is on a daily basis.

Now, I also want to talk, for example, about the initiatives that we've taken. I want to say to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster that I'm going to be visiting his constituency later on this evening. I've had the honour of visiting down in the Milk River area. Lakeland College is where they're actually using new, innovative alternative energy solutions because of biodiesel. That's where they're able to take a waste stream and turn it into the biodiesel that is being used now. I want to compliment the ideas that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster had, and I'm looking forward to visiting the students at Lakeland College later tonight. I also want to say that it's a real tribute to the students who have shown their typical ingenuity where they're taking this potential waste stream, but it also provides a cleaner energy solution, and that's exactly what the hon. member has been talking about.

What are the best practices that we can demonstrate? Of course, Albertans have been so innovative and entrepreneurial. One of the weaknesses we had in our furnace program was that when we retrofitted their furnace or they decided to replace it with a new furnace, what happened was that they took the old furnace and put it in their garage and actually used it for another energy source. I guess one of the flaws of our program was that we had to make sure that it was completely retrofitted and wasn't used in an inefficient way to heat your garage. So we've got to perhaps strengthen our public policy. But that's the entrepreneurial spirit that Albertans have in terms of best practices.

I want to say that as we have moved to so many important initiatives from a broad range of water management tools and techniques, we will continue to use our resources available in a variety of ways when it comes to flood risk avoidance and warning. We also are developing, of course, regulatory and nonregulatory tools and incentives to encourage, support, and reward good environmental performance. We're also developing and implementing a third-party contracting program to support and assist the minister's efforts to review major projects. We're also providing a review and a process to increase capacity to continuously improve and integrate the regulatory regime, including clarifying approval requirements, streamlining it, and evaluating and streamlining reporting requirements, that are so important to us.

But it's really important, in response to the recommendations of the Environmental Protection Commission, to build ministry capacity in terms of supporting all hazards, environment incident planning, which the hon. member has mentioned, and response systems throughout the province and improve business continuity regarding planning and preparedness in partnership with Emergency Management Alberta and the other government stakeholder agencies. I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is responsible for Emergency Management Alberta, which is so important, but I want to say that collectively we're working together with all of our energies so that we get the best result and the best outcome in serving Albertans. I can assure members of this Assembly that that's exactly what we are doing.

I don't know if you are aware, but actually for the washing machine rebate program we had over 3,000 citizens from Alberta that applied – in southern Alberta, central Alberta, and northern Alberta – and actually had their washing machines retrofitted. As much as that may seem small, just think of the water that we have saved from a conservation perspective. So you may not be aware, but we had over 3,000 that in fact applied and were successful in being able to take advantage of this instrument.

Mr. Lund: How does the program work?

Mr. Boutilier: The way the program works is that you apply on our website. If you go to Climate Change Central and energy solutions, you see that if you want to go ahead and retrofit your washing machine or retrofit your furnace, you can apply. Of course, what I'm encouraged by is that we actually have more applications than we have money. So, obviously, having, as the hon. member talked about, different fiscal instruments that we can use to incent I think makes so much sense and is no cost to the government because what we're really encouraging is best practices, that is so important.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The hon. member did talk about flaring. I don't know if you are aware, but CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance – I want you to be aware, to the hon. member, that we had over a 62 per cent reduction in flaring. I want to let you know that that is so important. In fact, I want to let the hon. member know that we're going to increase that number even higher in the future because flaring reductions are the good work of Albertans coming together, working together to get the desired environmental outcomes. So we've had a 62 per cent reduction in flaring, which I think is a tribute to Albertans who have worked on this consensus-based model.

I also want to say that for the furnace rebate we had over 1,700 applications and, in fact, spent almost half a million dollars relative to that. But I'd like to enlarge that, and I'd like to engage even more Albertans because they truly are best practices.

So what we have been doing is investigating by investing significant dollars in research into so many areas. I'm looking forward, I want to say, to the fact that this province will be the first province in all of North America, the first state for those in America, when it comes to a CO₂ pipeline, a pipeline that will take something that has been determined to be not good, in fact is contributing to global warming because it's really simply humanly made, the CO₂ from our car or whatever. I want to take all of that CO₂ that is harming our climate, global warming, and I want to put it into something good. So I want to take all of the CO₂ – I want to capture it and store it – and use the CO₂ for enhanced oil recovery, put it to something good.

I want to be able to do that in a way that we will have a pipeline network all over our province so that this pipeline, I am convinced, will in fact surpass the Kyoto targets that were established by perhaps a flawed public policy example. I do want to let you know that I believe that it is so important as we go forward that we will surpass the Kyoto targets, and we'll do it because of the innovation and the technology that we have in this province. I want to say that the hon. member talked about that we're going to export that technology and that smartness all across the world. Albertans will have a reputation as being the leaders because this province will not only be, as the Minister of Energy often talks about, the energy capital of Canada; we will become the environmental capital of North America in terms of our leadership and innovation that we are going forward with so that we will share it with countries like China, that has 300 coal generating plants coming forward.

We're going to be doing it in a way that, clearly, even the new Minister of Government Services – I know that he's shaking his head in agreement with the Minister of Energy when it comes to these environmental practices. I want to thank him for his good work as the former chair of the standing policy committee because many of those initiatives on mercury regulation that we have put in are the strongest standards in the country, and they're right here in the province of Alberta.

Now, I know that often the media don't in fact talk about those types of good, positive, proactive measures. In fact, it's really interesting. You may not be aware, but this week when we announced the standard on water in terms of what we're doing, did you know that as much as there have been lots of concerns in the past months about water, which I think are legitimate and important, what is really important is that it seems like this good news and the positive stories about what Alberta is doing, reflecting the value of Albertans, is not being seen on the front page of the newspaper or as the lead news story? If it's not bad news, then it's not necessarily news.

I'll tell you that I will stand on the highest mountaintop of this province to talk about the excellent work of Albertans, the excellent work of their practices, and the excellent work that we continue to do as a government in protecting this environment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, would the minister like to move his estimates?

Mr. Boutilier: It would be my pleasure to move the estimates of the Ministry of Environment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the hon. minister. I can tell and so can everyone in this House that this minister is passionate about the environment, absolutely. It reflects in his tone of voice. It reflects in his spirit. It also reflects in his answers to all the questions that were asked so far. If anything, he definitely tries to understand his department, and he's representing it quite adequately.

I have just a few points, and I realize, looking at the clock, that I might not receive a full or comprehensive answer, but I'll get them on the record. I would appreciate it if the hon. minister reviews Hansard and then possibly responds in writing.

This is quite an important ministry, of course, and as mentioned by the speakers before me and by the hon. minister himself, it deserves more attention, and it deserves more recognition, and it needs to be empowered more. I noted, and so did my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, that the budget for this particular ministry only receives .5 per cent of the total provincial budget. For an important ministry like this one I think that this is an estimate, an allocation that needs revisiting. This is quite low. As was mentioned before, it needs to at least be quadrupled from this current level to have any decent effect on the environmental affairs of this province.

Now, over this past week there was a lot of talk about government size and about, you know, restructuring and how things could be done better and so on. I'm of the belief that the two departments, Environment and Sustainable Resource Development, did not need to be split when it happened and that maybe one area of streamlining and consolidation and saving taxpayers' money would be to bring them back together into one. Really, some of the work is shared. It could be run centrally by consolidating both departments. That's a comment on sort of the budget angle of things.

My main focus today, Mr. Chairman, would be around water. Many people talk about water as the greatest resource and how it's more important to our lives and the lives of our offspring, our children and grandchildren, than things like oil and gas, for example. I'm not taking away from oil and gas, and I'm not belittling those other resources, but basically water, in my opinion, is the utmost resource.

Recently my caucus colleagues and I went up to Fort McMurray, where this hon. minister comes from, and we had wonderful visits with the constituents there. Water was brought up two or three times in discussions with the locals not in terms of, you know, the quality of the drinking water and so on, but basically some of the residents – and I'm sure that this is a concern that the hon. minister shares – were concerned about water usage for industry and how the oil sands projects, huge revenue-generating opportunities for this province, are also placing a bit of pressure or some strain on our water system, for the water that they draw out of the Athabasca River is never put back. Now, I know that there's an argument that these oil companies recycle some of that water. I agree, but they recycle it for their own purposes. They recycle it internally, and it is never put back into the water source where it came from. So it is, in a way, water that is lost. It never comes back.

Another area is about reclamation and restoration of oil sands land. We received a tour of Albion sands, and we were also shown a video and a slide show of how land is reclaimed. I must admit that it was eye opening. It was really amazing. However, one concern I have as a layman – I'm not a scientist, but as a layman. You remove the top layer of land, which is sort of the cultivated component, you set it aside, and you store it. Then what you do is that you excavate, you remove the oil sands, and you process them. Then you have the sand that's left in that tailings pond at the end and some water. This land is sort of restored back by putting the sand back and then replacing that top layer.

The question I have is basically a question of volume. If you've taken, let's say, 10 cubic meters out and now you're putting 7 cubic meters back in, the elevation of this land is lower than it was originally. I would ask the hon. minister if he's considering all this new research about land fillers. There is technology out there now that talks about land fillers. They're inert substances that are totally innocuous and are put back to restore the volume of the land. Why would this be important? Well, first, over time if the topographic and the geographic image, or map if you will, of those lands is changing, the least we can do is restore it to as near natural a state as possible.

I would use the parallel of having mountains and valleys. Mountains are there for a reason. People look at them as sort of anchors, and I'm not only referring to them from the Biblical sense. From a topographic definition they are there for a reason, and basically it's for seismic control. It's for, you know, different reasons pertaining to the environment. So I would urge the minister to consider the use of land fillers to restore the height or the elevation of those lands after they have been excavated.

Water. Back to that main issue, water being the main resource. We've heard over the past few weeks some complaints or some cautions about exporting water outside of this province. You've heard this from scientists. You've heard it from, you know, citizens groups. You've heard it from noted Albertans – the hon. Peter Lougheed as one example – saying that maybe we should be thinking twice before we export any drop of water outside of this province. I know that the minister is definitely aware of this and is considering all the different aspects of something like this, but it was worth putting on the record that there is definitely mounting opposition to exporting our water when the resource is dwindling, and it is disappearing.

If I we're going to sell water, my approach or my advice would be to sell a finished product, the bottled water, the commercial retail type of water, and you sell it at a premium. If you ask me, Mr. Chairman, I would charge more for a barrel of water than we do for a barrel of oil. We're using water to make oil. Oil is not more important. If we're selling water to the U.S. or whomever, we would sell it at a premium in a finished-product format. We're not going to truck it in the raw format to whomever uses it. You know what? They might end up selling it back to us as bottled water, which really defies any sense from a business standpoint.

It was also mentioned about conducting a total inventory: surface water, deep aquifer, rivers, well water, the whole bit. I definitely support this, and I look at it as a snapshot, a picture of where we're at today. Then we can use it as a benchmark against which we measure where we're at tomorrow and a year from now and 10 years from now. There are technologies out there which might not be as expensive as people would think. You can take satellite imagery. They call it piercing satellite imagery, which basically pierces the layers of earth, and it tells you how much water and where.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoon, I must now put the

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Municipal Affairs

The Chair: I'd call on the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure this evening to move the estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs for the fiscal year 2006-07, and I'm also looking forward to presenting and discussing the three-year business plan for 2006-2009.

Just before I get started, Mr. Chairman, if I could, I would like to introduce some of the staff that have joined us in the members' gallery this evening: Deputy Minister Dan Bader; assistant deputy minister, local government services, Brian Quickfall; acting assistant deputy minister, public safety division, Ivan Moore; executive director, financial and information technology services, Peter Crerar; communications director, Jay O'Neill; and many have met my executive assistant, Richard Westlund.

The Chair: Hon. minister, I was requested to have some introductions before you start. Would that be okay?

Mr. Renner: Sure.

The Chair: Is it agreed to have Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a fine group of young people, the 114th Lorelei Cubs. They are today assisted by leaders Mr. Joe Hart, Mr. Scott Wilson, and Mr. Mike Sokoluik. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks again, Mr. Chairman. I want to also welcome the Cubs here. I was in Cubs a long time ago. In fact, it was so long ago that I was in Cubs that we still had green uniforms and short pants. So that was quite some time ago.

Mr. Chairman, before I move on to the rest of the report, I was in the process of introducing my staff, and I know that they've heard me say it before, but I want to reiterate how proud I am of not only the executive staff that are with us this evening but all of the employees in Municipal Affairs. No matter where I travel all over the province, whether it be to municipalities, to various associations,

I get nothing but compliments about the professionalism of everybody that's working in Municipal Affairs. I think it is worth noting that this is an organization that really is truly committed to their stakeholders, to our municipalities and to Albertans, and I want to publicly acknowledge that before I go on any further.

Mr. Chairman, I'll start my presentation by providing an overview of the '06-09 business plan. This will illustrate the basis for our spending estimates. Our '06-09 plan hasn't changed much from our '05-08 plan. In most cases it's been fine-tuned to reflect opportunities and challenges that have been identified. We've identified four opportunities and challenges that have affected our business plan.

The first is our relationship with our municipal partners. The ministry has an opportunity to play a significant role in making services provided to Albertans more effective and efficient. The key role to this is enhancing the relationship between government, municipalities, and municipal organizations. The Ministry will be working with its municipal partners to identify ways to enhance these relationships through various mechanisms, such as the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability.

One of the challenges we've identified has to do with growth. With growth intensifying in many areas of the province, municipalities are in some cases struggling to address this growth. We've heard from our stakeholders that they want us to work with them to address broad planning and coordination issues. This will help us to both maximize opportunities and minimize disputes.

Tied into this is the challenge of municipal financial sustainability. The rural development strategy hit the nail on the head when it pointed out that while some municipalities are growing, others are facing economic and demographic decline. Municipal Affairs needs to work with other ministries to determine what the province might do to work with these primarily small urban and rural municipalities to assist them in exploring ways to deliver services within the constraints of their resources.

The final challenge that we've identified deals with public safety. The safety of Albertans is a priority for Municipal Affairs, and we're working extensively with our many partners to enhance the province's ability to mitigate, prepare for, respond to, and recover from disasters and emergencies. Part of this process involves completing a risk management which will include all hazards from weather to terrorism to environmental incidents. We will also continue to work specifically on hazards to critical infrastructure as well as high-priority issues such as pandemic influenza and business continuity planning.

Continuing in the public safety vein, the province's safety codes and standards need to continue to be reviewed and revised. This is in response to industry innovation and to ensure that buildings and equipment are constructed and operated safely. An opportunity for us in this area involves working with Alberta's fire service to develop a framework to assist in better co-ordinating the fire service operations across the province. This will provide communities with the option of choosing service standards that most appropriately meet their local needs. With the ongoing support of partners the ministry is committed to addressing new opportunities and challenges, accommodating new technologies, and developing effective solutions to meet the changing needs and priorities of Albertans.

In terms of our strategic priorities our first priority focuses on provincial/municipal relationships. The key here is to work with our municipal partners to reassess and better define the roles and responsibilities of municipal governments and their relationship with the provincial government. Increased clarity regarding roles and responsibilities will enable each order of government to more efficiently and effectively deliver the services for which it's responsible.

We'll also help determine the most appropriate funding vehicles attached to these roles and responsibilities. The role in this case is an understanding that clearly delineates which order of government is best suited for delivering which services.

Our second priority is emergency management. Local and world events have emphasized the need to enhance existing provincial government emergency management. We also need to further develop provincial and local capabilities to deal with major emergencies and disasters. While we have a solid emergency management framework in place here in Alberta, my Environmental Protection Commission's report into last year's train derailment at Wabamun pointed out the need to focus on this for enhancement. The report made several recommendations where we could improve our collective preparedness and responsiveness to emergency situations. Addressing these recommendations is a priority for Municipal Affairs. We will continue to work with our partners to ensure that our citizens and infrastructure are safe from all hazards and that response and prevention activities are planned, practised, and co-ordinated.

Our third strategic priority has been modified a bit from last year's business plan. It's been changed from land-use policies to using and respecting the land, but the goal is still the same: an updated set of land-use policies that are co-ordinated with and supported by affected provincial ministries and municipal stakeholders. We'll achieve this by working with other ministries in the context of land-use framework to ensure that the land-use policies remain appropriate. This will ensure that policies meet the challenges and needs of municipalities and Albertans in a way that balances the interests of all parties.

Our fourth strategic priority is to focus on intermunicipal partnerships. We will continue to encourage and facilitate partnerships involving joint planning, innovation, and common opportunities for things like shared resourcing and the delivery of services and programs. This approach provides opportunities to deliver services more effectively, which will help municipalities make the most of limited resources. Our goal is an increase in the number of municipalities working co-operatively to improve service delivery, including partnerships established through the regional partnerships initiative.

Our fifth strategic priority deals with safety system enhancements. I mentioned the growth that's occurring across the province. Part of dealing with this growth is to review the province's safety legislation to ensure that it's current and responsive to changing needs. This review is already under way and includes a move to introduce harmonized objective-based codes in the building, fire, and plumbing disciplines through national and international code standards.

I also mentioned our work to establish a unifying framework for Alberta's fire services. We feel that this will provide a strong foundation for innovation in the fire service as well as the ability for fire departments to deliver fire services that meet individual community needs. This ties in with our goal of continuing to meet national and international safety code standards.

Our final strategic priority is newly identified and deals with municipal growth pressures. I think you'll find that this issue runs through much of our work in the coming years. Municipal Affairs will continue to evaluate the impact of high growth on municipalities, including infrastructure, land-use service, and revenue needs. This will help us to assist in building the capacity of these municipalities as well as improve the co-ordination of the government's response to growth-related challenges. We want to ensure that high-growth municipalities in the province are better able to anticipate and meet growth-related challenges. This should result in a reduction in the number of disputes caused by development pressures and help ensure that Alberta's continued economic growth is not impeded by a lack of infrastructure and services.

In terms of our core businesses they have remained the same; namely, an effective, responsive, co-operative, and well-managed local government sector; financially sustainable and accountable municipalities; a well-managed and efficient assessment and property tax system in which stakeholders have confidence; a comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety; an emergency management program that enables effective mitigation of, preparation for, response to, and recovery from major emergencies and disasters; and in relation to the Municipal Government Board an independent system that administers appeals and issues timely and impartial decisions of high quality. As you've heard, we've set ourselves an ambitious course, and I have no doubt that we're up to the challenge.

So now that we've heard a little bit about our future, I'd like to identify some of the spending estimates attached to our plan. For '06-07 expenses and equipment/inventory purchases we're seeking approval on a total of 140 and a half million dollars. This is an increase of $13.4 million, or about 10.5 per cent from our '05-06 budget of $127 million. Our revenues for '06-07 are expected to be approximately $28.1 million.

Municipal Affairs is made up of two main divisions: local government services and the public safety division. I'll start with the local government services. This division is responsible for $111.2 million of our total '06-07 expense. You'll note that this is the lion's share of our budget, but with 356 municipalities and more than 1,900 elected officials to support, it's a big job that requires commensurate funding.

Mr. Chairman, $86.6 million of the division's amount is for grants to municipalities and other local government entities. The final $24.6 million is needed for nongrant initiatives, which I'll describe for you. Funding for the local government services division supports key initiatives such as supporting the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability to explore issues around municipal sustainability and to enhance provincial/municipal relationships; supporting strategic projects related to the evolution of provincial/municipal relationships and provincial/municipal planning co-ordination to support economic and population growth; supporting the municipal excellence program and other initiatives to improve the knowledge of municipal administrators and elected officials; providing improved linear property assessment by using the Alberta linear property assessment system; conducting detailed assessment audits of municipalities to help ensure that municipalities are being assessed fairly and consistently; supporting municipalities through facilitating and encouraging intermunicipal co-operation and self-directed dispute resolution; and, finally, administering the municipal internship program, which works with Alberta's municipalities to train future municipal administrators.

The expense total for local government services is rising to $111.2 million from $99 million, an increase of $12.2 million, or 12.3 per cent. This is primarily due to the addition of interest costs on a loan to Wood Buffalo that was made earlier this year to help with some of the infrastructure needs as well as increases to the grants in place of taxes program, which I'll talk about shortly. In terms of program amounts, specific to $86.6 million.

Local government services administers the department's five major grant programs for municipalities. The unconditional municipal grants program provides grants to municipalities for their general use and to help offset some of the costs of restructuring municipalities. This program also provides funding for the regional partnerships initiative. The estimate for this program is $17.6 million.

The second program is the grants in place of taxes program, which I referred to earlier. This program provides grants in place of municipal taxes on certain property owned by the government. There are currently more than 6,600 properties that fall under this program, including things like the northern and southern Jubilee auditoriums and the new Calgary courthouse. The estimate for this program for '06-07 is $36.7 million.

Financial support to local authorities funds a number of initiatives in support of municipal associations, mediation, internships, and the ME First energy savings program. The estimate for this program is $16.4 million.

We also deliver the very popular municipal sponsorship program, which supports municipal innovation and co-operation as well as projects that improve municipal government practices. The estimate for this program for '06-07 is $13.7 million.

Finally, we have the municipal debenture interest rate program, which subsidizes the interest rate paid by municipalities on certain high-interest debenture borrowings from the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. The estimate on this program, which is being phased out as these high-interest rate debentures mature, for this year is $2.2 million.

I'm reading this somewhat like an auctioneer because I'm afraid that whoever wrote my notes got a little bit optimistic about how much I could actually say in 20 minutes, so you'll have to excuse me. If it's going a little fast, we'll get into it a little later, I'm sure.

Next we have public safety, which accounts for $14.7 million of the ministry's estimates. Funding in this division supports key initiatives such as implementing the action plan approved at the January 2005 federal/provincial/territorial meeting of ministers responsible for emergency management. It includes things like establishing a national emergency response system and establishing a critical infrastructure protection strategy for Canada; developing an annual process for conducting a provincial all-hazards risk analysis, which will provide relevant information to provincial emergency management stakeholders with the goal of forming mitigation, preparedness, response, and recovery strategies; supporting the Fire Services Advisory Committee and its project partners in their work on the Alberta risk protocol, the ARP project, which will help municipalities identify risk levels and appropriate levels of response within their communities; partnering with fire departments to deliver the fire services training initiative, which gives firefighters from across Alberta access to high-quality, certified training at regional centres located throughout the province; providing emergency management training to municipal officials and ground search and rescue training to emergency response personnel to enhance their ability to prepare for and respond to emergency situations; and continuing to monitor the Safety Codes Council administration of the underground petroleum storage tank site remediation program, which was created to help municipalities and small retail operators clean up their contaminated sites.

Also part of our estimates is the Municipal Government Board. The board is responsible for deciding property, linear, and equalized assessment appeals. They also deal with a limited number of subdivision appeals, annexations, intermunicipal disputes, and other matters referred by myself or by cabinet. The estimate for the Municipal Government Board for '06-07 is $3.1 million, which reflects their commitment to hearing and issuing decisions within the legislated time frames despite increasing volumes and greater complexity in appeals.

Finally, we have ministry support services, which provides the two divisions as well as my office with legal, financial, information technology, communications, human resources, business, and administrative support. They're a hard-working group, and the '06-07 estimate for this area is $10.4 million.

I hope I've been able to clearly illustrate to you what it is that Municipal Affairs does and how we plan to make use of our estimated budget for this year. We have a very strong business plan as well as a variety of excellent programs and initiatives, and when you combine the two, you will see that we are indeed working towards Municipal Affairs' mission, which is to "ensure Albertans live in safe, well-managed communities . . . served by open, effective, accountable and well-managed local governments."

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to answer questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

8:20

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for his rapid-fire comments there. He delivered them right on time, and I'd better watch my own time here.

The minister and I and probably everybody pretty well in the Assembly will agree that this is a very important department, that the structures we provide for municipalities to manage their responsibilities, to indeed manage their destinies is so important. The tools they have, the supports they're given, the resources they're provided to do the job are vital.

Our caucus has travelled extensively around Alberta this year, and we've visited, of course, the two big cities. We're in Calgary extensively. I'm in Calgary almost weekly, sometimes two or three times a week. We've gone to all of the sort of middle-sized cities: Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, which is the hometown of the minister, and Lethbridge. I'm going to reserve some special comments for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and Fort McMurray in a moment. Of course, we're going through the smaller cities like Olds, for example, and Lloydminster and all the many smaller cities and towns constantly. Just yesterday I was in Hinton and Edson and Spruce Grove and Stony Plain and so on and, of course, enjoying all the counties and municipal districts in between.

We're meeting with many, many of the councillors, sitting down listening to them, as the minister does, and learning what their concerns are and what their success stories are, and there are some wonderful success stories that I really like to encourage. I'm most impressed, for example, with the efforts of Red Deer city council to eliminate homelessness. I think they've set a goal of zero homelessness in Red Deer by the end of this decade. I think that sort of thing is terrific. I do note that a number of Alberta cities – Calgary in particular and, close behind, Edmonton and a number of other Alberta cities – have been listed as some of the best cities in Canada and for a couple of places in the world on a couple of lists.

Mr. Renner: Lloydminster.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, Lloydminster is another one – that's right – the minister points out.

So we have lots of success here, but there's no question that there are some enormous challenges. I did say a moment ago that I wanted to reserve a special comment for Wood Buffalo and Fort McMurray. I'll go there right now.

In the last year I've been up there three times. Almost our entire caucus was up there two weeks ago today and yesterday, and other MLAs have been up there repeatedly. Fort McMurray and the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, like every part of Alberta, face challenges of growth, but having been up there a number of times, you can feel the difference in the stress that the growth faced by Fort McMurray is imposing as opposed to the growth in any other part of Alberta.

I was telling the people of Fort McMurray, the city councillors and the school trustees, that they have as much as anything a communication problem to communicate to the rest of the province how big their challenges are. I toured Syncrude last summer. We toured Albion sands a couple of weeks ago. These are projects. The Albion sands project outside Fort McMurray was a budget of I think about $6 billion for phase 1. I told them that people don't understand what $6 billion is. You've got to communicate that because other municipalities, as much as they're facing growth, aren't facing that kind of growth.

I thought about it for a little while, and I called back to our research staff. I said: what's the value? What's the value of the Calgary skyline? What's the replacement cost of that photo you see of the Calgary skyline with the Calgary Tower and Bankers Hall and the Petro-Canada tower and so on? You could replace that skyline. You could replace all the class A office space in Calgary for less than one phase of one oil sands plant, for less than $6 billion. The total investment in downtown Calgary, which is going through an oil boom in the last 10 years, is barely half of $6 billion. It's barely $3 billion.

When Fort McMurray talks about the challenges they face, they're facing the challenge of something like 10 Calgary downtown skylines being built over the next decade there supported by an infrastructure built for probably 60,000, accommodating 75,000. That's not happening anywhere else in Alberta. That's not faced by the people of Red Deer or Medicine Hat or Edmonton or even Calgary.

So I have tremendous respect and sympathy and understanding for the challenges faced particularly by Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo, and I would encourage this minister to look at special means beyond just a loan. I think it's a $130 million or something loan for the city of Fort McMurray, which drives them further into debt. I think that they are now per capita the most indebted municipality in Canada. We need to go beyond that, and we need to recognize that that region is in a league completely separate from anywhere else in this province, in this country, and we need to rise to that challenge.

I also sometimes get concerned because as we go around talking to councils, you hear the rivalries, and you sometimes hear resentment even. I hear people say: well, the rest of Alberta is sucking money out of Calgary to pay for school facilities or this or that or the other thing. When you go to rural areas, they say that the big cities are sucking the oil wealth out of these areas to build those big office towers and so on. I would ask all of us to remember that we're in this together as Albertans, and it's not just a matter of rural areas sucking the wealth out of the big cities or the big cities sucking the wealth out of the rural areas or what have you. We're all in this together, and we need to come together as Albertans and, indeed, as Canadians. If we do that, we can achieve remarkable things.

The challenges that we hear about from municipalities of various kinds across the province frequently stem from growth pressures. The minister himself made a particular note of the growth pressures facing the cities, and those pressures turn up in the form of labour shortages. Again, the most extreme case is probably Fort McMurray, where they've had to approve a work camp inside the limits of the townsite of Fort McMurray in order to attract labour to work on municipal infrastructure, but that's true in Medicine Hat too. There are labour shortages and challenges in Medicine Hat and in Lethbridge and across the whole province that's having inflationary pressure on municipal governments, particularly their infrastructure demands, and it's causing various other challenges for them directly and indirectly.

The infrastructure problems and challenges faced by Alberta are immense. This government is taking some correct steps. We need to consider the possibility in the Wood Buffalo region of just biting the bullet and saying that this is a city that all odds indicate will be 125,000 people in the next five or six or seven years; let's get on today with building infrastructure for a city that size so that by the time the infrastructure is built, by the time sewer treatment and water treatment and roads and recreational facilities and so on are all there, the population and the scale of the infrastructure will meet because right now we're years behind, and we're always aiming too short. But infrastructure challenges plague cities and towns and municipal districts across the province. Calgary struggles. Edmonton faces big challenges as well.

Another thing we hear about a lot – and the minister mentioned these – although I would like the government to move much more quickly and aggressively on this, is the need for a land-use strategy. The conflicts between one form of municipal government and another – Red Deer city, Red Deer county; Grande Prairie city, Grande Prairie county; Calgary, Rocky View; et cetera, et cetera – are destructive. There's not a systematic way to manage them. There's not a clear set of rules. There's not any real strategy in place province-wide that imposes a set of rules and a structure for municipal districts to sort these issues out, to say: here is appropriate land use for Rocky View, and that's not appropriate for something else. So we need to work very hard on accelerating the government's efforts on land-use strategy. There are models to follow. These are issues that have been addressed in U.S. states and in a number of other provinces. We're behind the eight ball. Let's get out in front of it.

There are some other particular issues. I mentioned Red Deer city's goal of eliminating homelessness. I wish that all municipalities would get serious about that goal. I am concerned with the extent of homelessness that I see now, for example, when I'm in downtown Calgary, where I am, as I mentioned earlier, very, very frequently. It's a problem in that city. It's a problem in this city. It's a problem in Grande Prairie. We need to get serious about homelessness.

We need to get serious about policing. We need to revisit and continue to revisit – and the minister isn't the only one responsible for this – policing issues and policing funding formulas for municipalities.

There are water challenges of various kinds, both drinking water supply, regional water systems across municipalities, and water treatment/sewage treatment challenges.

Recreation challenges. Living in the neighbourhood I live in and representing the constituency I represent, the river valley flows right through the constituency, and it's within a few minutes' walk of my house. There was a time when that was a leading park globally. I'm sad to say that too often now as I walk through the river valley park in Edmonton, it looks shabby. The pathways aren't in good repair. The fences aren't in good repair. There's too much litter. By and large the facilities are now years and years old, and that's a problem.

There is incredible opportunity, though, as well, and I'd love this government to seize the opportunity. I would love, of course, to lead a government that seizes those opportunities. The River Valley Alliance, that proposes a wonderful park system from Devon through to Fort Saskatchewan, needs to go ahead. Let's get on with that. Let's recognize that that's a wonderful asset that touches many municipalities and would help them all. That same kind of thinking needs to be brought to municipalities across the province, whether it's Fish Creek in the south or development of Nose Hill or development of parks in Grande Prairie or where have you.

Arenas as well are a challenge. We far too often see our arenas overtaxed, overused. They're pushed to the limit, operating at midnight or later, not just for ice hockey but for lacrosse and, of course, for indoor soccer. Why is it that we can't provide enough arenas for our citizens?

Finally, I will mention the arts in general and the huge role that the arts play in making our towns and cities special places to live, adding the richness to urban life that takes it from being just existence to having purpose and pleasure and beauty. Our support for the arts in this province lags terribly. It's an embarrassment, and it needs to be corrected. We could do so much with relatively little in Alberta through stronger support of the arts.

That's kind of a broad oversight of some of the issues, some of the challenges, some of the opportunities that we see for municipalities.

I'd like to turn specifically, as the clock runs down on my time here, to some questions. Perhaps first and foremost on the minds of many municipal councillors are questions around taxes and tax opportunities. They often speak about the need for more tax tools. There's discussion of various options. You know, we've all heard the calls of one degree or another for the province to abandon the school property tax and open up tax room for municipalities. We're not in favour of an entire abandonment of the school property tax. A hard cap at the 2004 level, $1.2 billion as I recall, would be an outstanding step and then a gradual rollback but not a complete elimination.

My question to the minister – and I think he's probably prepared or willing to engage in a little bit of back and forth. This is such a fundamental question. What options has this government considered and either is still considering or has eliminated for providing municipal governments with more tax capacity or tax ability? Do you want to respond to that? And then I'll ask a few more questions.

Mr. Renner: I'm more than happy to answer the question. I just want to address a few of the comments that the hon. Leader of the Opposition brought forward in his discussion. I think he makes some good points, and there are some areas that I want to just briefly discuss.

He points out, and quite rightly, that there are challenges. Municipalities throughout the province are facing challenges. Some are facing challenges related to growth. Others are facing challenges related to the lack of growth and a declining tax base and declining infrastructure. To some extent it maybe could be accused of spin, but I prefer to think of these challenges more as opportunities. When we identify where there are challenges, rather than looking at these as impediments, as barriers, let's see if we can see them as opportunities, find some ways that we can actually engage in and create success out of these opportunities. Let me give a couple examples of that. There was a good deal of discussion around Fort McMurray, and no one can deny that there are tremendous "opportunities" in Fort McMurray, very real challenges.

Before I forget, I want to acknowledge that the MLA for Fort McMurray certainly has kept this minister and all ministers more than aware of issues related to Fort McMurray. Like many other ministers I've had the occasion to visit Fort McMurray on a number of occasions.

There are some things that we can do. One that the hon. member referred to is bridge financing. Let me talk just a little bit about debt and debt limits and the concept here. As the member quite rightly pointed out, Fort McMurray is growing at such a rapid pace that to provide infrastructure for today's population is almost redundant. By the time it's completed, it's obsolete. You really do have to build into the future. There is the fact that municipal infrastructures, particularly rate-based infrastructure like water and sewer and those kinds of investments, are self-sustaining, and they needn't be part of the overall debt structure of a community. Yes, they're part of the debt, but they're not tax-supported debt. They're rate-supported debt.

The difficulty that you have when you overbuild something is that today's ratepayers can't afford to pay for what tomorrow's ratepayers essentially will be paying for. That's the reason that we go with bridge financing. We provide the necessary funding to make the significant investments today. We defer the need for capital repayments against that loan. We also cover – and it's included in my budget – the interest on that loan, and that's deferred for a period of five years. During that five years the project is completed. The population has increased. Then the rate-supported debt is quite within order. They're in a similar situation to any other municipality that's dealing with rate-supported debt from utilities. So I think that there is a reasonable plan in place there.

The other thing that I've said when I've met with the council in Fort McMurray is that there's a unique situation in Fort McMurray in that they are a community that will basically be created over a period of 10 to 15 years, and ultimately they could well become the third-largest city in the province of Alberta. They will certainly rival Red Deer, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. They're already there now, and there's no doubt that they will exceed those populations. But those other cities had 75 or 100 years to develop all of that infrastructure that the member talked about, parks and recreational facilities and all of these kinds of things. Through that 100 years there have been various provincial and federal programs that have assisted municipalities to develop that infrastructure, albeit a little bit at a time, but over a period of time most municipalities have been able to provide a lot of those kinds of facilities.

I've suggested to Fort McMurray that that may well be something that I can do on their behalf, to put together an inventory of this kind of infrastructure that would be comparable to places like Red Deer or Lethbridge or Medicine Hat that is lacking in Fort McMurray and then have a look at how the infrastructure in these other communities was financed and work with them on that. Some of it was financed through local taxes. Some of it was financed through various grants, through various contributions from the private sector.

I think that a case can be made and will be made that this is something that the provincial government should very seriously consider along with the federal government in dealing with an emerging new community and bringing that emerging new community up to the similar kind of standards that the existing communities already have. It's fast-tracking all of this funding that formerly took place over 50 years and putting it all into five or 10 years. That's the reality that we're facing in Fort McMurray. So I think that there are some opportunities for us to work with to deal with these challenges, but we have to look at it through some more innovative ways.

On the relationships that the member talked about, there's no doubt that we are having an increase in the number of intermunicipal disputes. Many of them have to do with land planning issues. Many of them, frankly, deal with the almighty dollar and who's going to get assessment and tax revenue on what and who's paying for whose residents to do this. I think this is another reflection of the tremendous amount of growth that we've experienced here.

We had a system in place in years past, regional planning commissions, that dealt with the planning side of things. Frankly, the regional planning commission system didn't work very well, and I certainly don't think it would work well today at all because the concept of a regional planning commission was that rural areas should serve as land banks for the gradual planned growth of urban areas into greenfield development. A message that I've been sending to municipalities – and it's as a result of the changes to the Municipal Government Act in 1995 – is that all municipalities are now equal. There is no definition in the Municipal Government Act of urban and rural municipalities. Every municipality has the right to grow, and they are exercising that right. What they don't have a right to do is to impede their neighbour's right to grow, and that's where we're running into some of these conflicts.

We do have something in place now that's called an intermunicipal development plan. They're optional. Under legislation they're one of those that municipalities may enter into. That's something that I think we need to have a good look at, and I've actually floated the idea with some municipalities, to find out if there is a way that we can incorporate something like an intermunicipal development plan and have it with a little bit more teeth than an optional program. As soon as something is optional, you also run into problems in resolving disputes and enforcing something. So that's something that we'll be looking at.

That leads me to the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability. Now, that's the council that I've had the members here in the Assembly and introduced them. Everyone on that council is very excited about the potential that we have to solve some of these issues that we've been discussing tonight. We've got the mayors of both large cities, the mayor of Edmonton, the mayor of Calgary, along with the president of the AUMA, representing the urban municipalities, and the AAMD and C, representing the rural municipalities, as well as myself, so it's a council of five. Those five members have taken on a number of different working groups. We will very shortly be taking those working groups out into the broader cross-section of both public and stakeholder discussion to deal with these very issues, one that the member referred to: opportunities for municipal revenue sources. That gets specifically to the question that you asked. Long preamble.

At this point I am not constraining the council to explore any sources. As long as we have a full discussion, I don't see anything wrong with discussing something. I'm not saying that at the end of the day we're going to accept everything, but I think we have to have a full and thorough discussion not only with the municipalities but with taxpayers. So there will be discussion on additional sources of taxation that have been discussed in the media, primarily by the mayor of Calgary but by others. By all means, the school tax issue is part of this on how we could implement some kind of a phase-into for municipalities, phase-out for the province. There are all kinds of things that we can discuss.

One of the working groups is just looking at the revenue side, total and separate from the expense side, because the expense side is another working group. That's the roles and responsibilities. That's the part that's critical. Until we define what the roles of municipalities are, what the responsibilities of municipalities are, how much it should reasonably cost to run a municipality, I believe it's pointless to start to match up the various sources of revenue. It's somewhat like: we'll just keep throwing money at it until the problem goes away. Well, if we haven't identified the problem, we may never have enough money. So we've clearly said that the roles and responsibilities have to be done in conjunction with.

The third major working group that we have is the relationships group. I'm very, very pleased that that consists of the mayor of Edmonton working in conjunction with Don Johnson, the president of AAMD and C. They're working on this whole issue of relationships and how we can put in place the necessary procedures so that municipalities can work together, can get into regional – not regional governance. Let me make it abundantly clear that I am not saying that we should be forcing amalgamations on people. What I've consistently said, ever since I became minister, is that I think that there really are some opportunities for regional delivery mechanisms. I see, for example, around the city of Edmonton here St. Albert buses, Edmonton buses, Strathcona buses, all driving around in downtown Edmonton. It seems to me that there should be some efficiencies in having some kind of a regional transit system.

Those kinds of things I think can be very seriously explored in addition to the other area that the member talked about, and that has to do with recreational facilities and how we would have a look at how we deal with those kinds of facilities. Again, what is the role for the province, what is the role for municipalities, and how can municipalities, particularly those that are coterminous, put some of these things together? The river valley project that the member mentioned sounds quite intriguing. I haven't heard a lot about that project, and I would like to hear more. I'm sure that there are many, many other projects that are similar.

We do have success stories. We have municipalities that will come together, put in multi-use facilities, and have two or three municipalities that work together on a project. They're not constantly fighting, but we need to – and I think that's the role of Municipal Affairs – put in place the incentives and the opportunities that municipalities should be encouraged to find a win-win solution. It's to their advantage to work together to form partnerships. I think it's to their advantage, and it's to Albertans' advantage if we get them doing that.

So I hope that answers your question, and I'm certainly prepared to deal with anything else.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you. I appreciate the minister's comments. I was hoping for something more specific on the list of possible tax tools, but the explanation I got is that you're going to be waiting for the council or the committee to put those to you. I hope it doesn't take too long.

I'll go through just several other questions that the minister can note as I go through them. While we're still on funding, we hear, not just from municipal councils but from all kinds of organizations, tremendous frustration over the one-year planning cycle. I wish that it could get stretched out to two or three years so that some of the inefficiencies of just getting one budget and one round of reporting done and having to turn immediately to start the new one might be improved so that there's longer term stability and reliability on provincial funding. I'm wondering if there are any plans by the minister or the government to develop a more stable and predictable funding framework, such as some kind of a three-year budget cycle that was very solid as opposed to just the current business plans, which are, frankly, unpredictable from year to year.

The question of ambulance support comes up as we go around. There's still uncertainty around how that's going to play itself out. It's a complicated issue although it's been on the government's agenda for some years. So I'd be curious for this minister's perspective since municipalities are one-half of the equation along with regional health authorities – then there are in some areas, I guess, third parties getting into ambulance service as well – any elaboration he can provide on the progress and direction to the transfer of ambulance services or not from municipalities to regional health authorities.

The minister talked and replied to my comments about land-use planning, and we all recognize how crucial and urgent that is. I'll be interested to see what ideas come out of the committee on sustainable municipalities. I can't remember the exact title but something like that.

The whole notion of smart growth. I personally am coming to the conclusion, as I read more and more, that environmental issues are going to be overtaking us in ways that we have not experienced in the past. Climate change, for example, and pressures to reduce energy consumption, to reduce urban sprawl, to protect land and water, wetlands, all of that; I think those pressures are going to become absolutely immense in the near and middle future and will be permanent.

So we might as well, in my view, anticipate that and really get focused on smart growth and reducing the impact of urbanization on the natural environment, doing things like the minister spoke about: supporting urban transit systems that really work well. Every great large city in the world has a really outstanding urban transit system. We're getting in that direction in Calgary, ironically a city that's also incredibly spread out, but we need to go further, and I think we need to make plans and then fund those plans with some real leadership from the provincial government.

Water links into the issue of smart growth, and I'm wondering if there's been effort and attention paid, for example, to using watersheds as planning units in municipal planning and land-use issues because they define so much of the nature of development and land use and that kind of thing.

A different concern around environmental impact comes from the petroleum tank program, which has been on the government books for some years now and I think had the right idea behind it. Am I correct in saying that there's no more funding for the underground petroleum tank storage remediation program? The minister is nodding yes, and I think that is a real shortfall. As I go around this province, the number of abandoned petroleum sites that I see, far too often in prime locations, is a problem. It's a blight in some of our cities and towns. I think this government needs to show some leadership. I look and have to ask, at a time when many petroleum companies are making enormous profits, why the public has to carry so much of the cost and the burden of contaminated gas station sites, and there is any number of those in Edmonton and Calgary and other locations.

I have also made a point of talking to owners of small gas stations who are really struggling because they can't dispose of their businesses. They can't sell their businesses because of the contamination, and the petroleum tank remediation program no longer exists. I would encourage the minister to take a serious look at this program and at least consider ways in which the petroleum industry can be held accountable for sites which it used to draw enormous profits for many, many years. It's a concern, and I could go into dramatic, vivid examples, but I won't elaborate further, to give others a chance to jump into the debate.

The minister talked about emergency preparedness and emergency management responses, and I think I'd give him marks for acknowledging that there were real problems exposed through what happened at the Wabamun spill. We need to learn from those because there will be other spills, there will be other environmental disasters and emergencies, and we need to be much better prepared next time.

It is astonishing to me, actually – after the Wabamun incident I began thinking about this. There was an irony there. I had just arranged to spend a week holiday at Lake Wabamun when this spill occurred, and my holiday went up in smoke because I ended up at any number of meetings with the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and others. Afterwards I thought about the amount of train track in this province that runs by water, by lakes and rivers, and it is a miracle, almost, that we haven't had more of those kinds of emergencies and potentially much worse. You know, if that spill had occurred along a river, where the oil was washed downstream into intakes like in the Bow River valley upstream of Calgary, we could have had a very much more serious problem. So we do have to be ready, and I will support the minister's efforts in improving emergency preparedness in this province.

I will send the minister information on the River Valley Alliance. It's quite an extensive plan. It's being developed for the North Saskatchewan River valley, so I'll make sure that the minister gets that information.

I'm just looking through my own notes here, and I'm thinking that while there are many, many issues on municipal grants and a whole host of other issues, I'll leave some of those for other members to take up. I gave the minister several questions there. If he can respond to those now that would be great, and he can also respond to them in writing.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks. Well, those that I don't get a chance to respond to early, I will respond to in writing. First of all, I want to talk a little bit about the timing of the minister's council. The Provincial Treasurer actually alluded to it in question period this afternoon in that we made it very clear that there is a relatively short timeline. We would like to have the information, recommendations, through the minister's council by late this summer. That allows us to then move into our government planning process this fall, with the intention of having any possible legislation that's required for implementation introduced in the spring session of 2007, about a year from now. So that's roughly the time frame.

Now that being said, with issues such as the education property tax, one thing that I have said that doesn't often get reported is that when the government is in a position to consider significant tax cuts, I want to be the minister at the front of the line with the solution that says: Finance minister, here is how you can do it. Let's not forget that the Municipal Affairs minister is going to be competing with a number of other ministers. We hear often from individuals saying: well, why don't you get rid of the health care premium? There are all kinds of suggestions on ways that the government can cut taxes, but if we're going to do this and we're going to do it responsibly, it cannot be a one-time tax cut. We can't do it for one year and then go back on our word in subsequent years. So this has to be something that we can be relatively assured is sustainable in the long term.

I really do think that the only way that we're going to be successful in transferring any significant amount of education property tax from the province to the municipalities is to have a win-win-win. There has to be a win for the taxpayer because the average taxpayer isn't going to see it as much of a tax break if they just write the cheque to a different government. So there's going to have to be some way for the taxpayer to save some dollars in this. There's also going to have to be some way that the province is going to benefit from this. Otherwise, I don't have the advantage that other ministers have when they're standing up with their tax-cut proposals. So I'm looking for that win-win-win, and I'm hoping that we can get there somehow.

The one-year versus three-year. We have a three-year business plan, and albeit there is some flexibility, particularly in the third year, I think we do an amazing job of trying to stick to the three-year business plan. Most of the discussion, when it came to putting together this business plan, was related to the third year, not the first year, because we were basically bringing that forward from the previous business plan. Municipalities also have an opportunity to work in three-year business plans, and some of them are beginning to do that now. I think that it would benefit the municipalities as much as anyone if they would also convert their operations to a three-year business plan.

The Chair: Hon. members, the side conversations are getting fairly loud. I'd appreciate it if you would settle down.

Mr. Renner: The ambulance I can't really comment on other than, as the member knows, the grants for ambulance have been extended for one year. That is the responsibility of the Minister of Health. I have not been advised on what her plans are. Obviously, as Minister of Municipal Affairs I'll be working with municipalities to assist them in whatever transition there happens to be, but I'm not in a position to advise the member tonight on where that is leading.

The land planning. A comment was made, and I've heard it repeatedly, that we have to be concerned about urban sprawl. I don't deny that we have to consider what the impact of unrestrained urban growth is, but I've suggested to some that we don't right now have as much problem, in my opinion, with urban sprawl as we have with urban fringe development. The rural areas, I think, are as much to blame as the urban areas because we're seeing such a huge proliferation of development in that urban fringe area. That is also putting pressure on the relationships. We've got to deal with the urban situation, but we can't overlook the fact that the rural municipalities need to take some of the responsibility and accept some responsibility for this development as well.

Let me just briefly comment on underground storage tanks. The member is absolutely right that this is a program that ran out of funds before it ran out of underground storage tanks. There is an ongoing demand, and should another source of funding become available, I'm more than willing and my officials are more than willing to carry on with the program. We haven't been able to identify that source of funding.

Let me also make something very clear. A number of the sites that we see around the province are owned by small businesses and small retailers, and those are the ones that this program was designed to assist. I'm hoping that at some point, whenever that happens to be in the future, we're able to have a similar program to assist these same folks. We never intended and I certainly would not anticipate any future programs to be intended to assist the major oil companies. The expectation is that they would look after their own.

The problem is identifying the small retailers. It's fine to say: well, the small retailers can't afford it, and big oil companies should look after it. With some of these small retailers it's just about impossible to identify which of the oil companies should be responsible. Once we've been able to deal with the small sites, once we've been able to deal with the municipal sites, then I really think that we can start to put some pressure on the large oil companies to deal with their own sites. There are a significant number of retailers that were and continue to be owned by the major companies. Those ones this program does not deal with. Those are the ones that I would really like to put some pressure on.

In this world you can't identify and say: if you're big, you must clean it up; if you're small, you get to wait. So that puts all that much more pressure, I think, on our department and our government to find some alternative funding of some kind to deal with these small sites, to deal with the individuals, many of whom acquired property that they didn't even know had tanks involved with them. We do need to deal with those, and once we have dealt with those, I'm going to be working with my colleague the minister of infrastructure to put some additional pressure on some of the larger oil companies to clean up their sites because we do have some significant problems, particularly in the downtown cores of small-town Alberta. Much of those are sites that are owned by the larger oil companies.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments and some questions as we go along. The minister was talking about sustainability. There's one thing that I think is a pet peeve of mine, having been on the public school board. I'm not sure what we can do about it, but I think something has to be done because in many parts of the world they aren't realizing that this is a problem, even in the United States. I'm talking about urban sprawl, especially in our two major cities, Edmonton and Calgary.

For all the reasons that we can talk about, the environment, farmland, what often happens – and this is what puts some pressure on these major cities – is that developers want the expansion. The expansion goes further and further to the edges of the city, and then there's a demand for all the services almost immediately. That comes in terms of schools; it comes in terms of the other services that people want. The city governments are unable to deal with this.

Of course, around Edmonton we have, you know, the competition. The minister alluded to it, that it would be better if we could cooperate and work together on this. Even in the United States they've realized that they've made a mistake with sprawl. Certainly, Europe has learned this lesson. We may think that we have all this land use forever, but we're going to have to come to grips with land use. I wonder if the minister has any thoughts about that and thoughts about what is happening in terms of urban sprawl. We talked about Fort McMurray. I can tell you that on the school board that created a real problem. There was the pressure then: oh, well, you've got to close schools down in the inner city. That leads to, you know, decay in the inner city, which is to nobody's benefit because the population is going out there. So I think it's a serious problem in the two major cities, and I would certainly be interested in the minister's reflections on it.

Of course, we have mentioned it to the minister of infrastructure, and Municipal Affairs is involved in that. We know that we have – and the minister has alluded to it – an infrastructure deficit. Again I would argue that we got preoccupied with the economic deficit and forgot these other things. So we are playing catch-up to some degree, Mr. Chairman.

I go back to the question period today about the education tax. I'm not going to spend a lot of time on this. I think there was a perception at least before this minister that that would at least be frozen at some point. I know that we can say that we've cut the increase, but the fact is that it's still a 2 per cent increase. That is an irritant to the municipalities, as the minister is well aware. He's talked about it. With all due respect, the minister is talking about – and he's right – that you can't take a tax and cut it one year and bring it back the next. It has to be sort of looked at as a permanent solution. I agree with that, but I would also suggest that in this latest budget we give out roughly $370 million in an overheated economy to a corporate sector that is doing very well, thank you very much. That is money that could have been used, I think, to help out in certain tax breaks like the minister was talking about.

You know, when we get into it – and I'll just allude to it; the Leader of the Opposition did too – I don't know what the answer is specifically, but the minister said that he had a committee, I believe, set up to look at the whole revenue side of it. I take it, then, that that committee is looking at some form of revenue sharing if possible, or they're looking at all options: gas taxes, whatever. I think he mentioned that there were five people on it: the two mayors of the cities, the presidents of the AUMA and the rural municipalities, and the minister. I wonder if he could just expand on that a little bit if there are some options that they are looking at. Revenue sharing – and there are various forms of revenue sharing; it's a term that we throw out – has been in the discussion phase for a long period of time. Municipalities would like – and the minister is well aware of this – some avenue so that they're not always coming cap in hand to the provincial government, some form of revenue sharing that's theirs so they can budget. I take it that that's what that committee is looking at, so if he could expand on that.

Just a few questions and then a few more comments if I can. I was just sort of curious about the increase in financial support to the local authorities. I believe that that's up $9.5 million. What I'm curious about, of course, is: what is this money being spent on, and why such a large increase when last year's forecast is well below the budgeted amount? Last year it was forecast at $6.9 million, and the budget allowed for $9.6 million. Now we're back up to $9.5 million. So some explanation of those figures: $9.5 million last year, but we only spent $6.9 million. I guess I'm wondering if that's the same situation. Why the overbudget?

I want to talk just briefly about the emergency preparedness of municipalities. It seems to me, Mr. Minister, that we consistently underestimate the amount each year that will be needed for disaster recovery. I know that last year was exceptional. I think that it was $170 million plus last year, but if we look back – correct me if I'm wrong – we underbudgeted beyond reasonable anticipation. I'm wondering if it is not in this case better – and I hate to say this across the board with this government – when we're dealing with emergencies, to overbudget rather than underbudget each year.

The other question to respond to. The Environment ministry took most of the criticism raised for the government for the Wabamun response, but I would be interested in the minister's comments. Did we learn from this? How does the minister respond to criticism that citizens involved in the cleanup didn't know that toxic substances had been released for five days, and what role did this ministry play? Most of the discussion, I know, was with the Minister of Environment, but it goes over two ministries. I'm wondering: what role did this ministry play in response to the Wabamun disaster? Have they learned anything? What role should this ministry play if something like this happens in the future?

The other thing deals with emergency preparedness. There's been a lot of discussion in this Legislature, Mr. Chairman, about coal-bed methane. It's a serious source of concern for public safety, and I wonder if the minister has some responsibility or is working with the other ministries in terms of some potential problems there. At least some citizens are talking about it, and it would seem to me that if there is a serious problem that it would again fall partly into his department. It stands to reason that with increased development there's going to be increased risk. Given that there is increased oil and gas development within or near municipalities, the question I'm asking is: are we going to increase and not just maintain municipal safety? What are the plans if something serious happens again?

On a little more positive aspect they like to talk about the ME First program, Mr. Chairman. The ME First program was launched in September 2003, and it's a great idea. ME First is a four-year, $100 million interest-free loan program administered by Climate Change Central that is designed to help municipalities. My understanding is that it is to achieve energy savings, reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and replace conventional energy sources with renewable or alternative sources. I would say that that's a very good idea, and I'm glad that the ministry is doing this. I might say to the minister that perhaps it's time for an expansion of this program. I think it comes to an end in 2007. I would hope that we're looking at expansion of this program beyond that deadline.

I'll just throw out that maybe we can look at the United Kingdom. What they're doing is similar. They have a more expanded program. Obviously, it would be more money, but hopefully in the long run it would save money. In the United Kingdom they include individuals' homes and business owners, not just municipalities. They're helping public buildings such as schools and churches as well as private residences to buy equipment such as solar panels. By subsidizing the mass purchasing of such equipment, the British government hopes not only to decrease harmful pollution but drive down the costs of such technologies by driving up demand and therefore supply. It's good for the environment, and hopefully it could be something that is economically beneficial for the province. I think we've got the right start here with the hundred million, so I would ask the minister if they're looking at expanding that, similar to Britain and all the things that they're doing, to other public buildings and also if that deadline could be extended beyond 2007. I think this is something that is a very good first start, and I commend the ministry for doing that.

Of course, while we're on sustainability, I think we all realize that the more public transit we have and other infrastructure designed to lessen automobile use – that could also be included in the program. Automobile exhaust represents a major and growing source of not only greenhouse gases but also pollution. Now, I know that you're not going to get everybody out of their cars overnight, probably most of us, but I think this program could be the start of a catalyst in terms of that direction, the ME First broadening. Just a suggestion to the minister that we take a look at it.

I guess that while I'm asking that, does the minister expect to increase the amount available for the ME First program in looking at some of these other suggestions that I'm making? I think it could be a very, very powerful program and a very good one, and I think there are examples of where it has been expanded, as I said, in the United Kingdom that we could take a look at.

Ambulance service was mentioned by the minister. This has created a problem, I recognize. A few weeks ago there was a discussion in the House about a motion brought forth by a government member, Motion 504, calling for and encouraging municipalities to "provide minimum standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services." It's a good idea, but it made no provisions for additional government funds for these services. You can't do that without the government funds.

This became a political issue, as the minister is well aware, in terms of the ambulance system in Edmonton. The figure that comes to mind is $55 million, and then they backed off, and now Edmonton has serious problems with their ambulances, growing pressure. I know that it's probably true in Calgary and others; I'm just more aware of it in Edmonton. I have it here that in Edmonton the present paramedics union is warning that if things continue at this pace, patients with non life-threatening conditions may soon end up waiting for up to 45 minutes for an ambulance.

Now, the city of Edmonton has responded. Mayor Mandel is now prepared to go halfway and suggests that council should spend $1 million to hire 11 paramedics. But, again, I think there's some responsibility here. Certainly, with the government announcing they were taking it over through the health regions and then backing off, now it's created, I think the minister would recognize, problems in the cities. That comes from other monies that they would be taking from other areas. So I wondered if the minister would comment on that and if there's anything down the way.

Mr. Chairman, to conclude, because I think there are other people that want to get in, I'll just come back to where we started and talk specifically about the revenue sharing. There's got to be some way. I recognize that the province gave $3 billion for infrastructure over a three-year period across the province, but with all due respect that's, again, catch-up. The ministry, I believe, just as part of the budget announced that $10 million to municipalities, and I think they appreciate it, but when you look at 123 municipalities, it's not going to solve a lot of their problems. I'm sure that they receive it and will take it and will use it very valuably, but I think we have to look again at a more sustainable area. Maybe revenue sharing is not the right word, but some way that they can organize their own affairs without having to come cap in hand to the government.

I hope sincerely, Mr. Minister, that the committee that you're working on does come up with some good suggestions and that we can get it through this government because, frankly, that's another level of government. They can handle their own situations well. They have elected people that can run it, I'm sure, just as well as we can the Legislature, but it would be easier for everybody if there was some way that that can be done. So I wish the minister luck. That could be a very important committee, and I hope that they do come back with some form of revenue sharing that will work.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to go through most of the questions, some of which I will refer the hon. member to my previous answers, specifically with respect to sustainability and land use. I don't know that there's a whole lot more that I can say there.

On the issue of school tax. If I understood correctly, the member was suggesting that there are some opportunities that were in this budget with respect to income tax that perhaps could have been applied to the property tax. I guess it's necessary again to talk about this long-term sustainability. The difference between an income tax and a property tax is that an income tax is very elastic. As people earn more income, they pay more tax. Conversely, if we ever have a crash and people earn less income, we collect less tax.

Mr. Martin: I was talking about the corporate tax.

Mr. Renner: Same thing. Same thing. In fact, corporate tax is even more elastic than personal income tax because corporate income rises and falls dramatically, and on a recovery corporations even can carry forward losses from previous years. So we can go for a stretch where we have very little corporate income tax if we go through what we went through in the '80s. We have to be cognizant of that.

Property tax, on the other side, is a good tax, and why municipalities use property tax is because it's very inelastic. Property values remain relatively constant over time. Businesses continue to pay property tax even if they're not profitable. They don't pay any corporate tax, but they pay property tax because they still have assets. I'm not saying that it's not possible to trade one off against the other, but there are pros and cons, and frankly I'm not so sure that municipalities would want to get into the corporate tax game because of the elasticity of that form of revenue.

Good question on the support to local authorities. About a $9 million increase there this year; $7 million is for interest on the Fort McMurray loan, a $137 million loan. It's about $7 million a year in interest. It has to come from somewhere, and unfortunately it comes from my budget. The other 2 and a half million dollars is for a special infrastructure grant that was provided to Banff and Jasper to help them deal with the unique circumstances there of having a significant tourist population that requires services that are not necessarily covered when we look at per capita grants. They have a relatively small permanent population but need to serve tourists whose numbers are massive. So we put in place a program that will provide 2 and a half million dollars a year for the next I believe five years, Member. I'll confirm that. But it's 2 and a half million dollars this year, anyway, and that's where the $9 million comes from.

You asked what the role of our ministry and Emergency Management Alberta was at Wabamun. Frankly, it was very little. Our role historically has been one of co-ordinating. We are there to provide services when requested by first responders, and that's the municipalities. Our role is to put in place disaster services plans and to assist municipalities to implement those plans. As a result of Wabamun, as a result of the recommendations that came forward from the environmental commission, we are going to be reinventing ourselves at Emergency Management Alberta, creating an independent agency that will be much more proactive. While we never want to forget that it is the municipalities primarily that are the first responders, always will be, the role of Emergency Management Alberta will become more directive. So rather than being passive, waiting for someone to ask for services, we'll have people on the site that are assisting municipalities and directing them and if necessary advising them what services they need even if they haven't requested it. It's something that we'll have to develop some goodwill over time. We don't want to give anyone the impression that we're simply going to rush in and take over and do everything, but we do see the necessity to be more proactive.

At the same time Environment has put in place a special SWAT team within Environment that will deal with the environmental impact. That wouldn't be the responsibility of EMA. They'll be there. They'll be there with their people in the same way as Health would deal with health matters. So EMA will continue to be a facilitating organization, but we envision it as being much more proactive and less passive than what it has been in the past. We don't want to get into a situation like we witnessed with the hurricanes in the southern U.S., where everyone was standing around waiting for someone else to ask for assistance. We want to have people there that will be pointing out where the assistance is and acting if necessary but not in a threatening way or a way that would suggest that the local authorities don't have the capacity to deal with the situation.

ME First. Frankly, hon. member, I've been very disappointed with the ME First program. I, like you, think it's an excellent program. Unfortunately, I think we have a number of circumstances that have been working against the ME First program. The most important is that the interest rates are so low right now that municipalities are reluctant to borrow just to save the interest. Many municipalities are debt averse and prefer to pay as you go for these kinds of things. That's part of the problem, particularly in the rural and smaller municipalities. They just don't see the savings to them in borrowing and receiving an interest-free loan. They would rather pay cash.

The other problem that we have with the program is that it's a five-year term on the loan. If you're going to do something that is a large capital project, it's pretty hard to be able to amortize that over five years. Even interest-free principal payments are a little unmanageable for a larger project. We have accommodated a few municipalities with larger projects by calculating and distributing the interest-free portion over a longer period of time, but there are some restrictions on the program that, I think, have contributed to the lack of take-up on this program.

Nevertheless, we do have a $4 million expenditure for this year, and we have recently made some announcements of projects that have gone forward. I think that given enough time municipalities may see some opportunities here, but I'm beginning to think that there may be some other directions with which we can more significantly assist municipalities than through this program. Maybe there are some ways we can partner either with the federal government or with other sources to provide some direct grant money as opposed to interest-free loans, which just don't seem to have the take-up that one would expect.

I talked earlier when the Leader of the Opposition talked about ambulance, so I won't deal with the ambulance issue.

The issue of resources. Again, I thank you for your comments. I am looking to have the minister's council come forward with some ideas. My reluctance to start to put specific concepts and suggestions on the table is that I don't want to pre-empt the work of that committee. I don't want them to find it necessary to have a huge debate about something that I put on the table tonight that they may have already considered and decided is not feasible, is not workable. I'm willing to wait, and I ask the hon. member to wait till this summer, until we get those ideas and concepts back. I certainly make the commitment that there will be ample opportunity to discuss those that manage to stick to the wall and look feasible to go forward.

Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to cede my questions at the moment, but I will get back on your list, please.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity and the offer from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to let me go first. I do have, really, some questions around one specific area. This relates, of course, to one of the ongoing issues that I hear about from constituents on a very, very regular basis: market value assessment. Calgary-Currie is by and large an inner-city residential constituency in Calgary. I'm sure the minister is well aware of what has been happening to property values in the city of Calgary over the space of the last year although this issue with market value assessment has been going on for a number of years now.

I'm not sure how to argue this one because, on the one hand, I recognize that when it comes to assessing properties for the purpose of calculating property taxes, the market value approach is probably the least worst system we've come up with yet. I can't call it the best system. Yes, I mean, there's a sense of fairness and equitability in market value assessment that you can't really find in other approaches that have been tried, but we're far from perfection on that issue. Were this the place to get into this debate – and I'm not sure that it is the time and the place to get into this debate – I would perhaps be arguing rather passionately that we need to move right away from property taxes altogether. Let's not just talk about the school portion but moving away from the whole notion of property taxes and looking at new ways of allowing municipalities to raise the revenue they need to cover the expenses that they have. But I think there's another time and another place to go into that in detail.

For the present I'm going to accept that we're stuck for now with market value assessment as the least worst way we have of calculating what property taxes should be. I'm going to accept that that does come with a number of problems, two key problems, really, from the point of view of an inner-city constituency. I think my colleagues from Edmonton would probably agree more or less that the situation is much the same in the city of Edmonton as well, but it can be particularly acute in Calgary with what has happened to property values in recent months and recent years. First of all, you have a fundamental inequity. You know, the Leader of the Opposition talked earlier about needing to all be in this together and not play one area off against another. I understand that, but the reality is, of course, that areas do play themselves off against other areas.

Part of the problem with the way market value assessment works right now, of course, is that in a city like Calgary residents of desirable inner-city communities where property values are going through the roof – I mean, I'm sure that a house in my constituency, any particular house that I chose, would be worth more now than it was five minutes ago, when I got up to speak; that's how fast property values are rising there – are paying relatively high property taxes. Of course, most of the benefit of that is happening out in the fringes of suburbia, so they're driving back and forth on bumpy roads, they're tripping over cracks in the sidewalks, and they're suffering water main breaks, that sort of thing, for the privilege of living in an inner-city community and paying high taxes.

That's a basic inequity, I think, that exists across the board as far as my inner-city constituency is concerned. Within that context, there are, of course, many, many specific examples of in most cases seniors on fixed incomes who've lived in their house, in their neighbourhood, in their community, in my constituency for decades. They bought the house when it was perhaps worth $15,000, you know? Today they have developers knocking on their door on a regular basis offering them half a million dollars to sell their property so that the developer can knock down that bungalow and put up two half million dollar infills in its place and double his investment. In many cases we're dealing here with a senior who may be widowed, who's probably living on a fixed income, who on paper is very well off provided that she sells the property. But she doesn't want to sell the property. She wants to stay there for the rest of her life because it's her community; it's her place; it's what she's known.

If she were to sell it, she might get a half a million dollars for the property, but there's no way she'll get back into the neighbourhood, you know? So she's faced as well, desiring to stay in her house in her community, with ever-escalating property taxes to the point that it gets for some seniors on fixed incomes exceedingly difficult to pay these taxes. You can see it in the week to 10 days after the assessment notices go out in Calgary. You can see across Calgary-Currie by the appearance of new for sale signs that the folks are having trouble with that.

Within that context, I'd like to ask the minister – and I'd like him to refer to line 2.3.1 on page 344, assessment services. I see a decrease of almost $2 million from last year's forecast of $9.2 million, almost $9.3 million, to the estimate for '06-07 of $7.4 million, which is slightly above what the minister budgeted last year but well below what the minister is now forecasting that his department will actually spend on assessment services. I might be out in left field here – I don't know – but it seems to me that assessment services are pretty darn important because it's their job to ensure that Albertans have as effective and efficient a system of assessment and property taxation as we can under the circumstances. The minister will correct me if I'm wrong, but I think it's the function of this branch to properly apply tax rates to properties' assessed values to determine the taxes payable by the owner of that property. We all know that municipalities rely, perhaps much more heavily than they should in an ideal world, on property taxes as their main source of revenue. If I'm on the right track, it's critical that this branch do its job right, and I'm wondering why the decrease in the budget of assessment services.

That is essentially my question with, as the minister referred to earlier, a long preamble. So I'll sit down now and wonder if I can get an answer to my question from the minister.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thanks very much. Well, this time I'll give you the short answer and then the long postamble. How's that? The reason for the decrease in assessment. First of all, Municipal Affairs doesn't do the assessments in the city of Calgary. The only assessments that Municipal Affairs does are linear assessments. We do pipelines, wells, utilities, power lines, those kinds of assessments, so that wouldn't affect the individuals that you're talking about. In fact, we have increased the manpower in that area for some of the reasons that the member has identified, and that was a $202,000 increase; $142,000 is an increase responding to increased salary settlements. The decrease of $2.2 million, for a net decrease of $1.8 million, is because we have estimated a significantly lower cost of legal fees related to property assessment appeals in the upcoming year. It doesn't have anything to do with our ability to deliver quality work. It has more to do with the fact that we've come through some appeals, and we are anticipating that we won't have to have as much of a resource in our department allocated to dealing with appeals in the future.

Let me talk a little bit about this issue of market assessment. As the member said, least worst way. I've heard it put that way, and in some ways I tend to agree with him. Property tax is a somewhat regressive tax, and if we could replace it with something else – I don't disagree with the member that it would be nice if we could replace property tax with something of a less regressive nature, but we haven't come up with that yet. I'm hoping that some of the work of the minister's council that we referred to earlier may come up with some ideas there. Frankly, I'm not optimistic. I think we're stuck with property tax for some time.

The market value assessment is somewhat reflective of the value of assets. It works particularly well. You do have some anomalies in a place like Calgary where you get one neighbourhood that's really spiralling compared to the rest. For the most part property values in municipalities are relatively comparable within the municipality. Where you run into some real disparity is when you try and compare the values in Fort McMurray to the values in Taber, Alberta, for example. The same property would have a huge difference in value from a market value assessment.

If all the property taxes were used within that municipality, it really wouldn't make any difference because they've set a mill rate based upon the needs associated with the municipality. If we all have high-value houses, then we just set a low mill rate and collect the same amount of money. If we all have low-value houses, and we need the same amount of money, we set a higher mill rate, but because our houses are less, we end up paying the same amount of taxes, so it works out really quite well on a municipality basis.

Where it gets a little complicated is with the education property tax because we're setting one mill rate across the province, and then we get into putting into place some modifiers to try as best as we can to equalize those high-growth areas, those high-rate areas and try to have some comparables with some of the other areas in the province. I'm the first one to admit that the system is not perfect, but we attempt. Like the member says, it's probably the least worst way of doing it.

I do have some suggestions for you to deal with your constituents. One, I just want to remind all members that the government has frozen the education property tax portion of seniors' taxes. If a senior owns a home in the area that the member has been discussing, that tax rate has been frozen at last year's tax rate. That's part of the Seniors budget when we get to it. There will be an allocation in the Seniors budget to cover the cost of those tax increases.

There also is the ability of a municipality to defer taxes on any property. A deferral is not like it costs the municipality because it almost works like a reverse mortgage. It's not a reverse mortgage. It's not that the individual has to go to a bank and negotiate a loan. It's a deferral. There are interest costs associated, but the interest costs are relatively low compared to what you might find on a reverse mortgage, and the administrative costs are relatively low. The province of Alberta basically finances municipalities, so if they had a huge number of these that they were dealing with, I assume that they would be coming to us and asking them to finance these on their behalf, so their cash flow remains even. The amount of taxes that would be payable in relation to the value of the property is relatively insignificant, and I don't think that it would materially affect the value for the sale at some point in time. I think it really is, particularly in some of these very high-growth areas, something that is viable and should be and could be explored.

I'd certainly be willing to assist the member or his constituents in dealing with the city of Calgary to see if we can't get some of these things going because I do really feel for some of the difficulties that some of those individuals are in. Certainly, there are ways that it can be resolved. Oftentimes it's more than just the tax issue that is causing some of the problems. We all know that other costs are going up. Utility costs are going up. There are inflationary pressures on some of these. There may be other reasons why they find it necessary to sell their home. But if they're selling their home purely and simply because they feel they can't afford to pay the taxes, there are ways that we can deal with that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this time I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the estimates debate for the Department of Municipal Affairs. Certainly, we see that the budget for Municipal Affairs has increased by roughly $13 million over last year. A lot of the highlights have been outlined by previous speakers, but I have some issues in regard to this department. Consumers certainly have issues in regard to this department each and every time they open their power bill or their natural gas bill.

We know, Mr. Chairman, that the Municipal Government Act gives municipalities the authority to charge these fees on electricity bills and natural gas bills. The whole idea of this is to charge these fees for the use of land upon which an electric distribution system is located as well as the exclusive right to charge these fees through the Municipal Government Act. How are these fees set? Well, the Municipal Government Act allows municipalities to make an agreement with the utilities, as I said, to charge and collect these fees. Certainly we need to pay heed to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and what their recent study from last November said about these fees. I think at this time we can have an alternative way for municipalities to fund their programs. This fee calculation varies across the province.

Now, I'm just going to talk quickly about natural gas rates, and this is as of January 1, 2004. In the city of Calgary it's 11 per cent of total charges before GST. In Edmonton it's 32 per cent of delivery charges. In Red Deer it's 17 per cent of delivery charges. In Lethbridge it's 32 per cent of delivery charges. In Medicine Hat, the minister's hometown, as we heard earlier, there is no franchise fee agreement for electricity and natural gas, which is unique as the only city with its own gas and electric production and distribution facilities. The citizens of Medicine Hat are prudent. Certainly, they saw through this whole deal of electricity deregulation and natural gas deregulation, which has connected our domestic price to the North American market. They're very, very wise, the citizens of Medicine Hat. So they have no fees. I find it ironic that our minister – and I wish him well in his endeavors with the department now and in the future – is from the city where there are no municipal franchise fees on gas and electricity bills. But that doesn't mean, Mr. Chairman, that I don't want to do anything about it. I certainly would appreciate it if he would work if not at eliminating these fees, at least at getting some sense to this.

I think we should have a look at electricity now. We talked about natural gas. In Calgary, again, the fee as a percentage of total charges on the electricity bill is 10 per cent. In Lethbridge it's 9 per cent. In Fort McMurray it's 6. Leduc is 4. Edmonton is 4. Red Deer is 3.8. Camrose is 2.1. Medicine Hat again is zero. The calculation of these fees is all over the map depending upon which area of the province you're in. How much do local governments collect in fees? The City of Calgary took in $130 million in 2004, accounting for close to 10 per cent of its total revenues. The city of Edmonton collected $55 million, the city of Lethbridge $8 million, and the city of Red Deer $3 million. In per capita terms Calgary relies more on these revenues than the other cities.

I don't think this is a fee. I've been referring to it as a fee. It's a tax. It really is a tax in my opinion. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business in their thorough investigation and report on this matter asks: where is the accountability?

If the intent of this fee or the tax is to compensate local governments for access to their lands, there is simply no rationale for linking this compensation to a commodity price. One of the principles of fair taxation is that the tax be visible. Although it is true that the fee is now broken out as a separate line charge on utility bills, it can be argued that consumers in Calgary for example do not know that the fee increases with the price of electricity or natural gas . . .

Now, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business goes on to say,

. . . assuming that they are actually aware of the charge in the first place.

That is interesting.

It is extremely unfair that while businesses, and households, feel the crunch of [paying] high energy prices, they are unknowingly paying more to their local government. When municipal governments attempt to increase property tax rates, there is generally much public discussion and debate over whether an increase is required or, at the very least, over the size of the increase. In the case of franchise fees and local access fees, government revenues quietly increase while consumers are left to face high utility bills.

The EUB has expressed its support of delivery charge based fees for natural gas. In 2002, the City of Grande Prairie filed an application with the EUB to change its natural gas franchise agreement. The fee would no longer be based on total natural gas charges but on delivery charges. In its decision on the matter, the EUB found that the change was in the best interests of all stakeholders. The EUB stated that delivery based fees provide more stability for customers and that it supports this methodology.

Similarly, the . . . AUMA has created standardized electricity and natural gas franchise agreements which base the fee on a percentage of distribution or delivery charges. All municipalities can use the AUMA's template agreement when they negotiate agreements with utilities. When it released the natural gas agreement, the AUMA noted that the choice of methodology was a key element of the agreement.

Now, I would like the hon. minister to consider the conclusions and recommendations that the CFIB has provided. The CFIB recommends that the Government of Alberta take the initiative to put in place a common fee calculation methodology that ensures that electricity and natural gas consumers are treated similarly across the province and that local governments do not profit from high electricity and natural gas prices.

They also recommend that local governments, especially those that impose high rates, find ways to lower fee rates and reduce their dependency on municipal franchise and local access fee revenue. Those municipalities who currently charge fees on total charges should voluntarily and immediately abandon the practice.

Also, another recommendation:

Governments should examine all aspects of franchise and local access fees, including but not limited to the following:

- Properly investigate whether the charges are actually a form of hidden taxation and comply with Supreme Court decisions in this area;
- Examine whether the amounts charged to consumers reflect the true intent of the fees.

When the local governments have to rely on this as a revenue source, that tells me that this provincial government is not funding municipalities adequately. I would certainly like an answer in regard to this from the minister. I thank him for listening. This is an important matter.

Mr. Renner: While I would have liked to give the answer, unfortunately the member took so long asking it, I don't have any time left to give the answer, but I'll try and give the very short version. I'll give the member the same answer that I gave the CFIB when they came to see me, and that is that, like the CFIB, the member is bringing his question forward to the wrong body. This is a decision that is made by the locally elected councils, not the province.

It's interesting that we should be talking tonight. A number of members have brought forward the suggestion that we need to explore alternative sources of revenue for municipalities, but I can tell the hon. member that the last thing I want to do is begin to approve additional sources of revenue for municipalities and then have the province be held accountable every time they decide to raise their taxes. That should be their responsibility, not our responsibility.

While I can understand that there are some concerns that individuals have, all I can say is that you need to take it up with the elected body that's authorized to deal with them, not the elected body that authorized them to levy these taxes in the first place. I think it's appropriate that they do have the opportunity to raise these, and the member has quite rightly identified the reason that they were put there in the first place. If they're not being used the way that they were intended, then I think the city councils and the mayors need to be held accountable, not necessarily the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Let me just very briefly talk about the city of Medicine Hat.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the following questions after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Second Reading

Bill 28
Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Keeping with the business of the House tonight on municipal affairs, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 28, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006.

The Local Authorities Election Act is an important piece of legislation that prescribes the standards and processes for the election of municipal councils and school board trustees.

Before I go into the bill, I'd like to give a bit of background. As most members will recall, in the 2004 municipal election in ward 10 in Calgary there was voter fraud in the use of special ballots. That prompted the Minister of Municipal Affairs to appoint Mr. Bob Clark to conduct an inspection. His report made 16 recommendations, some of which are incorporated into the amendments that are before us tonight. Following that report the Minister of Municipal Affairs appointed an MLA committee to hold meetings throughout the province regarding the act. I was a member of that committee along with the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. A total of 18 public meetings were held in eight locations throughout the province. We heard 66 presentations and received 89 written submissions.

There were several recurrent themes heard throughout the public sessions and in those submissions, but overall what we heard, Mr. Speaker, was that the current process is generally working well, and significant reform is neither wanted nor desired. Some of the themes that we did hear are that the legislation should be more enabling and not prescriptive, that it should provide the flexibility to municipalities to address local circumstances. We also heard that returning officers' responsibilities should be focused on running the elections and not policing them, and that resolution to the problems in the city of Calgary in their municipal election should not result in a cumbersome and onerous process for other municipalities. Finally, and probably most importantly, we heard that voter apathy and low voter turnout are concerns, and any proposed amendments should support enhancing voter participation and involvement.

Mr. Speaker, in support of the feedback from public consultations Bill 28, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006, will improve the act in the following ways: by providing an elected authority with the discretion to make a bylaw regarding the use of voter identification, including the type and number of documents that may be required to verify identification and age; allowing the returning officer to set aside special ballots that are received that the returning officer believes may be in contravention of the act and then to report the alleged contravention to a person or persons who will have been appointed by the minister to determine the validity of the ballots.

Another provision will be allowing the candidate the discretion to appoint an official agent who may act in an official capacity on behalf of that candidate. The bill makes a person who is convicted of an offence under the Local Authorities Election Act, the provincial Election Act, or the federal election legislation ineligible to be a candidate, an official agent, or a scrutineer for a period of 10 years. It also makes candidates, not returning officers, responsible for issuing identification to campaign workers. It will allow an elected authority with a population of 10,000 or more to set the number of signatures required for nomination up to 100 and the amount of deposit up to $1,000.

Several other provisions will allow an elected authority, in addition to a candidate or elector, to challenge an election before the courts, will allow a local jurisdiction the discretion to provide written voting instructions in languages other than English at voting stations as required, will allow an elected authority the discretion to have a candidate's campaign disclosure statement audited, and will eliminate the requirements to vote at an advance poll.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is an example of the government's determination to respond to the differing needs of Alberta's municipalities. It is important to emphasize that the amendments have been developed through consultation with Alberta's local governments, school boards, and citizens. Through the many discretionary provisions elected authorities will be able to better provide for the needs of their citizens by encouraging public participation in the election of their representatives at the local level.

In conclusion, these proposed amendments overall will promote integrity and public confidence by providing more security and transparency in the election process.

That concludes my remarks, and I look forward to the debate on second reading. Thank you.

10:10

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill in second reading. It's a bill that cuts to the heart of our democratic process. It's a bill that has a messy genesis, shall we say. It comes out of a very, very serious controversy involving allegations of election fraud on a substantial scale in a municipal election in Calgary. I think there are still outstanding questions about that scandal and still, I believe, court cases pending. I think we need as an Assembly to pay particular attention to these kinds of scandals and misdeeds because they do cut to the heart of how the democratic system works, and that's through a legitimate, open, honest voting system. So this is a very, very important piece of legislation, addressing a very important issue.

For democracy to have legitimacy and for elected members to have legitimacy themselves, the citizens, the voters in any society need to have confidence that their election processes and mechanics are working properly. Unfortunately, those election processes and mechanics broke down pretty badly in the last municipal election in Calgary in a scandal that involved a number of people, including potentially relatives of a member of this Assembly. This is a very serious situation. We have to pay attention. We have to clean these messes up. If we do not do so, then we are allowing a threat to democracy itself in this province to grow.

One of the reasons that this kind of legislation is so important is that we are watching voter participation rates drop election by election, and they are particularly low in municipal elections. There are undoubtedly many reasons for that, but I am sure that one of those is a sense that the process may be less than entirely legitimate. So we need to reinforce the legitimacy of the process, to clean the process up if we're to reverse the decline of those voter participation rates.

It's worth noting that irregularities don't just occur in municipal elections. We ourselves have raised a concern about irregularities in a provincial election, the last provincial general election, in which votes were cast in Edmonton-Ellerslie – ballots were cast on election date by voters who weren't even in the country and physically were not capable of voting. We've raised those concerns, and we've not had them adequately addressed. We have allowed a provincial system of election to develop that is open to abuse in ways not unlike the abuse that occurred at the municipal level. That's also a very, very serious issue. In closely contested elections illegitimate ballots can make a difference between the proper and duly elected person attaining office or somebody who could attain office through improper means. Those are things you think about in banana republics where elections are rigged and ballot boxes are stuffed. To think that that culture is beginning to intrude into Alberta is very, very worrisome.

I'm also concerned about this legislation allowing too much discretion to local municipalities. I think that if we're serious about democracy, we need to impose consistency and we need to require a province-wide cleanup of our voting system. While there are many, many good steps in this legislation, I do have one particular concern, and that is that this allows too much local discretion. We could end up, in fact, with a patchwork not unlike what you see in the United States in federal elections there. We were all, I think, astonished to learn what a patchwork and mishmash of electoral processes there are in the U.S., which were exposed in the presidential election of the year 2000, when we discovered that it took some states days and even several weeks to tally up their election results. Some states could do it quickly; others could do it slowly. There were serious questions of distortion of the outcome in a number of states, including Ohio and Florida.

So we cannot take for granted the integrity of our voter system. We have to be vigilant. We have to be assertive. We have to set the highest possible standards to ensure that democracy survives with full legitimacy. While this bill does address some of the issues successfully – at least, it allows municipalities the option of addressing some of the issues successfully – I am concerned, as I said a few moments ago, that it is allowing too much discretion to local authorities.

Certainly, I know that the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and I think also the AAMD and C are onside with this because they don't want municipalities treated like children of the provincial government. They want to be able to control their own voting systems, and I hope it's the subject of some debate in this Assembly. I can see that all the members are hanging on every word I'm saying, listening closely. We have to ask ourselves if we don't in this Assembly have a responsibility to set the bar high on a province-wide basis to ensure that every voter in every election in every voting station in every corner of this province can have confidence in the same level of integrity of their voting system.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will leave my comments for second reading. With that, I will summarize them by saying that this is important legislation addressing a very messy situation, that it allows the right step to be taken, which is commendable, but I raise for all of us to consider the question if this legislation should not in fact require some of those steps to be taken and not simply allow them.

With those comments, I'll wrap up my debate on second reading of Bill 28. Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour tonight to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a good friend of mine up in the members' gallery that happens to have Easter break right now. He's a very good math teacher in the town of Innisfail, and I think he's been doing that for between 25 and 30 years. He has quite a large grain farm just down the road from my house. Second Reading

Bill 28
Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, a lot of the questions that I have I'll save for the committee stage.

Obviously, how we elect representatives, whether it be provincially, federally, municipally, is very important. The Leader of the Opposition talked about it. We know that there is a great deal of cynicism. There's a great deal of apathy. I think the hon. member bringing forward the bill indicated that. When we have a situation as we did in ward 10, unfortunately that does just add to the cynicism that people have. Frankly, nobody wins when that happens. Nobody wins because it doesn't matter which side of the House you're on. If people have that feeling, then it goes into all politics.

This is an important part of it, and I would say to the mover of the bill that I've had some discussion too. I think the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and the member bringing it forward indicated a while ago that the concern heard overwhelmingly by the committee was not to adopt a one-size-fits-all approach. As they indicated, what works in ward 10 in Calgary won't work in a small village, and to try to impose those things would be very difficult. I also heard that in talking to some people in the rural areas. They thought that if it got too top-down, it would actually discourage people – I think that's what the member is saying – from voting. I can live with that. I can live with that, but maybe we don't need an overall approach, the same for Calgary and Edmonton as for Delia if I could use that as an example.

I do have a couple of questions at the start. I'm not going to go through the whole thing. I recognize the importance of special ballots to our electoral system. After all, a great many people would not be able to exercise their right without special ballots. I have a few questions, that perhaps the member can come back to after, on the provisions made for special ballots in the proposed amendments.

The one question I have. The Leader of the Opposition talked about problems provincially, but it's my understanding that the provincial returning officers do require contact with the person requesting a special ballot. With a request placed on behalf of someone, for example an ailing parent – they're only processed once the provincial returning officer has assessed or actually contacted, written or telephoned, including enumeration if necessary, the ailing person that wants a special ballot. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I see no such stringent measures of contact for municipal authorities. Nor is there any contact policy through e-mail requests. It seems to me that this would be logical. We should have some idea that they do have the authority to actually represent the person that may be ailing or whatever. I'd like the member to comment on that.

The inspection report found that while there are improvements that might be considered for website application, the design, operation, and security of the system of programs were appropriate and were in line with the standards and procedures used by other jurisdictions today. That was on page 46. But here's the conundrum that I see because of the ward 10 thing. Knowing that the ward 10 inspection report also revealed that the major factor contributing to the irregularity was the use of the website application process to receive, complete, and submit special ballots in the names of unknowing electors, I guess this is the crux of it. There are a lot of good things to this bill, but this is sort of the key to the matter in terms of ward 10.

How can this legislation, then, add the right to apply for special ballots through e-mail? In other words, are there technological changes that will be brought in before e-mail requests for special ballots continue? I'd want to know this. Through the e-mails seems to be the problem in this particular instance in ward 10. I want to know how this bill, then, solves that particular problem, still using the e-mails. I think that's the crux, really, of what it's all about. If I can be convinced that that problem is solved and can't happen again, then I certainly would support the bill.

There are some other minor questions that I might have in the committee stage. It seems to me that I still don't understand how this particular part of it – we still have the special ballots through the website. That was where the abuse occurred. Now, with this bill, how will that abuse stop? I think that's really the key thing that we're trying to deal with this at this particular time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for those who have a question or comment.

Seeing none, anyone wish to speak to the bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-West to close.

Mr. Liepert: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Bill 25
Securities Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today to move second reading of Bill 25. In fact, with the recent couple of days that I've had, it's a pleasure to stand anywhere. Mr. Speaker, I'm moving Bill 25, the Securities Amendment Act, 2006.

The purpose of this legislation is threefold: to enhance protection for investors, to broaden the passport system of regulation, and to allow further harmonization of Alberta's securities regulation with other provinces and territories.

First, Bill 25 would introduce civil liability provisions allowing secondary market investors to sue public companies for issuing false or misleading information. Investors in the primary market who buy shares from public companies, for example as part of an IPO, already have that legal right. Bill 25 enshrines in legislation the same statutory right of legal action for secondary market investors.

I can't understate the significance of these provisions. More than 90 per cent of all securities trading takes place in the secondary market. This includes Albertans with RRSPs, pension plans, and other personal investments. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is passed, Alberta will be working with its provincial and territorial counterparts to improve investor protection across Canada. Ontario implemented essentially identical legislative changes on December 31, 2005, and other jurisdictions have indicated their intent to do the same.

Regulators have consulted widely on this issue over the last several years, and we believe this legislation strikes a balance between issuers concerned about frivolous lawsuits and the need to enhance investor protection.

Mr. Speaker, I also stated that this legislation will further harmonize Alberta's securities legislation with other provinces and territories. Bill 25 amends or repeals a number of provisions within Alberta's existing Securities Act. The repealed provisions would then be placed into national instruments or national rules regulating securities trading. This helps ensure that our securities legislation remains modern, streamlined, and harmonized with other jurisdictions, particularly Ontario.

Alberta is the second largest capital market in Canada, and it is important to show leadership and keep our legislation up to date. Harmonization and simplification of securities law is essential not just for Alberta but for Canada to compete in a global marketplace.

Now, certainly I'm aware that there are calls for a national securities regulator. Whether that might happen one day, Mr. Speaker, I cannot predict, but at this time the provinces and territories with the exception of Ontario are not prepared to commit to that step. Regardless, the changes we are making in concert with other jurisdictions are required to improve securities regulation across the country.

Last year this Assembly passed Bill 19, the Securities Amendment Act, 2005, which facilitated the creation of a passport system for securities regulation. The passport system was implemented in September last year, giving businesses a single window of access for capital markets across most of Canada. Bill 25 builds on that milestone in provincial/territorial co-operation. These three broad initiatives, taken together, are important to our ongoing efforts to improve securities regulation across Canada. Alberta remains committed to working with other provinces and territories to improve investor protection and enhance the efficiency of Canada's capital markets.

I urge all members of the Legislature to give their support to Bill 25. Thank you.

10:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and lead off debate on behalf of the Official Opposition on Bill 25, the Securities Amendment Act, 2006, in second reading. I'd like to begin by thanking the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for his comments this evening in second reading, and I'd also like to thank the Finance minister for allowing the staff from the Department of Finance and from the Alberta Securities Commission to visit the offices of the Official Opposition and provide a very thorough briefing on this bill to us. Included in that briefing was what is known as the three-column document. It's something that hasn't always been made available to this critic, but it seems as if we've developed an environment of collaboration and co-operation with the Finance minister, and I appreciate that. I do believe that it leads to better debate in this Assembly and, ultimately, better legislation for all Albertans. I hope that it's a sign of more to come.

In general, Mr. Speaker, I support the intention of this amending bill. The comments that have been made by the mover tonight pretty much reflect what I understand is the intention of the bill in terms of what it would accomplish. However, I would be remiss if I failed to mention my perpetual concern with the all-too-common practice of this government to repeal parts of legislation and move them into regulations, thereby allowing future changes to be made away from the public eye and outside of the watchful guardianship of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, there have been comments in the media about the size of this particular document. It's a big bill, perhaps the biggest I've seen in the time that I've been in this Assembly, yet when you flip through it, the majority of what you're looking at are sections that are being repealed and then pages of legislation that are referred to in that repealing. I'm certainly not a fan, as I say, of repealing legislation and putting it into regulation.

Having made that comment, I guess that if there was ever a case where I could live with that action, with the idea of repealing sections of legislation and putting them into regulation, it might be in this particular situation. That is because, as the mover indicated in his comments this evening, the intention and, in fact, it would appear to me, the result of this bill being passed would be that it will bring us in line with other jurisdictions, particularly Ontario. If that makes it easier for Alberta business to operate and seek capital in the market, then that is a good thing for all of us, I'm sure.

The minister also referred to the fact that this will allow investors in the secondary market to sue public companies operating in Alberta if, in fact, they provide false or misleading information; so again consumer protection. You won't hear this critic speaking against that, that's for sure.

Mr. Speaker, there was some comment to the fact that currently we have 13 security market regulators in the country and not one, not a single market regulator. There was a lot of talk about that last year as we saw some of the goings-on at the Alberta Securities Commission and how that reflected badly on Alberta, yet there's a general understanding on this side of the House as to some of the advantages of continuing to have an Alberta Securities Commission. Certainly, it provides local companies faster access to public equity. Alberta companies, with that possibility, of course, are less likely to fall by the wayside to central Canadian companies, and it allows us to maintain increased local control. Those are good things.

However, of course, having a multiregulator environment causes a number of challenges, Mr. Speaker. Companies operating in several different provinces have to deal with several different rules, and while I understand that the passport system has made tremendous strides towards addressing that situation, we do still have a situation, particularly with Ontario, as the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky acknowledged, where they're not quite in line with everybody yet. So this does create sometimes conflicting and confusing regulations for investors and for companies that are seeking that capital investment.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that others also would suggest that a multiregulator environment increases fees and reduces enforcement. So while this is a step in the right direction or a further step in the right direction, as the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky suggested, Bill 19 last year took us some way down that road, and this is maybe the next step down that road. It does fall short in some areas, particularly in areas that would address some of the problems or concerns that were identified last year, as I said, when we were going through some of the challenges and struggles at the Alberta Securities Commission.

Things that I particularly would have liked to have seen in this amending bill are things that would, for example, Mr. Speaker, prevent Alberta Securities Commission employees and board members from trading in companies that are being investigated. The opposition would like to have seen some regulations prohibiting Alberta Securities Commission and employees and board members from trading in companies that are listed with the Alberta Securities Commission and would certainly like to see some rules that would restrict MLAs from nominating candidates for commission at the Alberta Securities Commission.

Those are some of the concerns as it relates directly to the Securities Commission.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we've indicated before that moving towards a passport system fails to provide a single enforcement regulator and, again, what that means is perhaps a different level of enforcement or a different application of regulations across the country. That can lead to confusion for investors and, of course, for companies as well.

There's some concern that a passport system might allow market regulators to pass the buck on enforcement files. As an example, the Alberta Securities Commission might investigate a small part of an irregularity and then pass another portion on to a different regulator. One investor advocate has indicated to us that this pass-the-buck system actually risks leaving an investigation incomplete.

Another concern that I would raise is the $1 million cap on the administrative penalty. Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that there are literally hundreds of millions and at times billions of dollars' worth of trading done with some companies, and a $1 million cap on an administrative penalty might not be enough, depending on the circumstance. So as we move to committee stage, that would be one of the questions that I will likely be asking.

I'll just highlight some of the good things that I see in this and the reasons why I'll be supporting the bill, two in particular. We talked about investor protection. Currently, people that purchase stocks through the secondary market, as an example, through stockbrokers or online day trading themselves, don't have the opportunity to sue those public companies if there's false or misleading information provided. You only have that opportunity right now if you're purchasing through the primary market; i.e., buying directly from the company. As the minister indicated, in excess of 90 per cent, I think, of trading is currently done through the secondary market. It's time that we caught up with Ontario's lead, and certainly it looks like this amending bill will allow us to do that.

I mentioned a little bit about the move towards a passport system and the fact that there is certainly some value to be gained by harmonizing our security legislation with rules that the other provincial jurisdictions are using as well.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, that this will be the sum of my comments for this evening. I look forward to having the opportunity to address this bill at the committee stage so that we can dig into some detail on the many, many pages – I think it's a total of 72 pages – of the bill as it sits in front of us.

I thank you for the opportunity to have spoken to it in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's just say that going through the bill is like reading not a very exciting book. It would be interesting to know if the hon. member has read it all through and understands all of it. [interjection] Yeah. Right. He does, he says. We'll take his word on it for now.

I just want to make a few comments. Certainly, we would all support, I think, the protection for secondary market investors. We have to because let's not forget that the Securities Commission here in Alberta has had a very rough go of it in the last number of years and has lost a lot of credibility, and when they lose credibility, this is not good, as we'd all recognize, for the economy, especially for small investors in the province.

I might say that while we've had a discussion here in the Legislature about the Securities Commission, not so much this session but in the previous sessions, when I was working in the private sector, there was a lot of discussion back then, you know, eight, nine years ago, about things that were happening with the Securities Commission. They've had, perhaps, not as bad a reputation as B.C. before it, but certainly it was out there. I hope that this particular bill solves some of the problems. Certainly, as I said, things like the protection for secondary market investors, where they will have the legal right to sue public companies: I know that's been somewhat of an issue here with some investors that I've talked to. The minister talks about Ontario enacting similar legislation, and I'll come to that.

We've had some discussion with the Alberta Securities Commission, about protecting secondary market investors. They talk about – and this is one that's a little more disconcerting to me – the second major reason to move legislation to regulation in order to facilitate cross-jurisdictional alignment of policies: they claim that it's more difficult to do this within legislation. Therefore, they're moving these items from legislation to regulation to make them more flexible nationally. These regulations are national rules that carry the weight of law. Therefore, according to the SEC there isn't a loss of oversight in just the switching of who is doing the overseeing.

Well, that may well be the case. I guess that at this point we have to take their word for that. But, again, that begs the question that we're talking about. When we take a document like this and move it back into regulations, how do we ever know if there's something occurring that we should be talking about in this Legislature because we have responsibility? I know it's nice to have the system there. Perhaps it does work better if people can work behind closed doors. But it does beg the question that we should have the responsibility here because, ultimately, we are responsible for it. I understand what they're saying, that they can do this quicker, they can do it better through regulations, that it's easier than trying to juxtapose different legislation. But I would ask the minister: where is that tipping point?

That brings me to the point, and the member alluded to it, that for the life of me I don't understand, with all the problems we've had with these various securities commissions. I remember 15, 20 years ago in British Columbia all the talk there, and we've certainly had our problems here in Alberta. You've said that it may come down the way, but I don't know why we don't move towards a national security regulator as has been called for by the Canadian Council of Chief Executives among many others. The reason I say that is that it's not a federal act. It would be the provinces working together the same as this bill is attempting to do. It seems to me that that would make the most sense rather than moving everything to regulation, that we'd have a national security regulator. We would all be working under the same rules then, and all investors would be protected right across Canada.

I think the member is right that Alberta, with our economy, is probably the second biggest one after Ontario, but it's a global economy now, and what we know of small investors, it could be in two or three different areas. That's the purpose of this bill. I know that, but it seems to me it would have been much better to say: okay; we still have provincial jurisdiction. It's not the federal government but the provinces getting together – we'd have a lot of clout on it, being the second biggest one – and having the same rules laid out as recommended by a lot of people that do the investing. For instance, a national securities regulator would surely have gone much further than requiring the ASC director of enforcement, Mr. Petch, simply donating to charity the profits made from unethically traded stock.

If that was national, that wouldn't have happened, I don't think. The rules would have been there.

The member did say – and I was encouraged by that because I thought this government had sort of ruled it out, you know, that we can't do that, that it's national, that it's sort of the federal government. It's not the federal government. It would be the provinces working together. I think that would make a lot more sense and would be easier than this 162-page book, moving it back into regulation.

So I really would suggest – I know that it's not going to happen here with this bill – that the government take a good look at this. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I think Ontario would support a national securities regulation. I don't know where the other provinces stand, but if Alberta put their weight behind it, being second biggest, I think you'd see it come about. So I really would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we begin to take a look at that because most investors that I've talked to think that this is the way to go. It makes the most sense.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate in the bill?

Does the hon. member wish to close?

Mr. Knight: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 26

Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act

[Debate adjourned March 23: Mr. Strang]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead still has 13 minutes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to add a few comments to the second reading debate of Bill 26, Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act. Oh, that's right. This was moved by West Yellowhead on behalf of Calgary-North Hill.

This is the second time that this Assembly has seen for the most part the ideas in this bill because it had an earlier incarnation as a private member's bill which, in fact, passed in 2004. My understanding is that there were some concerns that were raised aside from the ones that were raised during the debate of the bill, additional concerns that came to light after it, and that this bill is now coming forward as a government bill and has attempted to address the deficiencies that existed in the previous one.

I remember from the time of the debate that there was a lot of support from emergency personnel, so police officers, firefighters, correctional workers, emergency workers, basically anyone that was in a job where they could come into contact with someone who may have a blood-borne infection – HIV, AIDS, hep C, that sort of thing – where they might get contaminated by close encounters with people, and it was intended to assist them.

The problem that I had with the previous bill was that it just was too open to interpretation and abuse by others. I think at the time I brought forward issues that were raised by EGALE, which is the Equality for Gays and Lesbians Everywhere. This is a national organization, but they were concerned that the legislation as it existed could be used to target homosexuals. I think that in my reading of this bill now, those concerns have been for the most part addressed because we're not hauling people off to draw the pint of blood out of them to be tested. There is an administrative function that's now coming in between. I think that's probably what was new in the bill and what will make it successful.

I wasn't very supportive of the previous incarnation because I felt that it could be used to target specific groups of people, maybe not always members of the GLBT community but urban aboriginals or prostitutes or any number of other people who could be sort of targeted as a group. It was just too open for interpretation on that one, but I'm aware that a number of my colleagues did in fact support the bill.

I note that this bill is now based on the Uniform Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act, which is coming forth from the Uniform Law Conference of Canada, and they are recommending it for enactment by all of the provinces and territories. In a quick scan I see that Ontario did pass similar legislation in 2002. There was a private member's bill. It was actually an opposition member's bill, I think, at the federal level, which I don't think ever really got very far. I believe that there's currently discussion in B.C. about similar legislation. So, obviously, this is moving to the front burner if it isn't already there, but it's addressing a situation that many people have identified.

When I go back and look at the Ontario legislation, it requires mandatory blood samples from individuals who expose victims of crime or emergency workers and good Samaritans to bodily fluids. Now, the difference there – I'm sure everybody picked it up as I read that phrase – is that Bill 26 as it stands does not include victims of crime but I think does spell out the other categories.

The rationale for the legislation in Ontario was that it would reduce the number of preventative drug treatments that emergency personnel are required to take, including drugs that have side effects. For people that suspect that they may have been exposed to HIV – and hep C is a different treatment – this is not a pleasant experience. You are basically exposed to a cocktail of drugs. There are fairly significant side effects, and it is uncomfortable, painful for some, myriad side effects. It is not something that you want to be doing lightly or want to do unless you're pretty sure you're going to need to do it.

Part of the issue is: why would we subject these emergency workers who are doing good for all of us? They truly are performing a public service as firefighters or police officers or emergency personnel. You know, they're doing us a great public service, and for us to then place them in a situation where they're not only inconvenienced but have health implications to deal with, we really need to try and avoid that if at all possible, and certainly we want to. I hasten to say that if it's serious and if they need that, then absolutely they should get all the assistance that we can possibly offer them, but if it's possible for us to not have to expose people to that, it would be better.

That was the Ontario legislation.

The federal legislation was from a member of the opposition. It did pass first reading but went to one of their committees for review, and it died on the Order Paper. It did have strong support from some sectors and very strong support from others. We had support from police forces and the paramedics, but the Canadian Bar Association came out against it with some of the same concerns that I was raising. The Canadian Bar Association felt that the federal legislation would not withstand a Charter challenge and would lead to systemic discrimination against certain groups of people. The former federal Privacy Commissioner had serious reservations about what was then Bill C-217 and the issue of mandatory blood testing in general. He identified a really good test to use, and I'll come back to that later.

The situation that we have right now is that there are only two instances where the authorities can take samples without consent. Those situations are testing for alcohol where there are reasonable grounds to believe that there is impaired driving and DNA samples related to prosecution for certain serious offences. There's a seriousness and a weight to both of these examples. They're both under the Criminal Code, and they do have an expectation that there are reasonable grounds of serious criminal wrongdoing.

Overall, I like this bill much more, Mr. Speaker. I think the intentions of the bill are good. The intentions of the previous bill were good. I just felt it was very flawed in the way it approached it. I've talked already about our need to protect the people that protect us, and I think that is carried through in what's being proposed here. As always, I hope that we're attempting to balance the rights of all people, and that can be difficult. I don't feel that it was achieved in the previous version of the bill, but I think there's more success this time out. You really are trying to balance that infringement. Let's face it; when you're talking about taking blood, you are piercing – I'm sure that there's a legal word for it – the corporeal body. You're piercing their skin to get that blood. You really are assaulting them. You could put it that way. So you've got to be very careful that you're doing this in circumstances where you're very confident that this is going to withstand a number of tests, that you would not be infringing on someone frivolously.

Unfortunately, despite what's anticipated in this bill, it's still likely that we would have to have those emergency workers commence with that cocktail of drugs just to be able to protect them, but if there's a way that we can save a few and balance so that we're able to pass this legislation with good heart, then I think it's worth doing.

We need to be aware that it takes time to get the order that is anticipated and described in the bill and to carry out the testing. As always, we've got to be aware and very cautious that there can be false positives and false negatives. Getting a negative result the first time doesn't mean that somebody is free and clear. They could be in a window or an incubation period, or it could just be a false negative, and we've got to be alive to that. I think there's a minor danger here with the negative test that they could do more harm than good by creating a false sense of security.

Rev. Abbott: Question.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm getting great enthusiasm from Drayton Valley-Calmor. I think he wants us to stay much later and debate much more. Thank you so much. I always appreciate that support from that back corner there. It inspires me and wakes me up, gets me energized. It could be a good night.

I was talking about a negative test sometimes doing more harm than good and that it can create a false sense of security, which in fact is not accurate and can delay treatment. So we've got to be careful about that.

I'm going to go back now to the four tests that the federal Privacy Commissioner suggested when we're anticipating infringing on someone's privacy. The tests were: is the bill necessary? Is this particular action necessary? I think my personal version of that is: is there a problem? Maybe I can prevail upon the Member for Calgary-North Hill to give some additional information on the statistical need for this bill. How many times in a year do we have emergency workers who believe they have been placed in this position? Is it happening, you know, 10 times a night, 10 times a shift, or once a month? What is the level of demand for this? I think that would be interesting to know, and it helps us judge whether we need to even be bringing something forward that could impinge on somebody's privacy rights if there isn't that large a demand. I'm sure that the member has done the research, and I'm sure that he'll be happy to share it with me as to what the magnitude of the problem is.

The second test was: is the bill effective? My version of that is: is this going to solve the problem? If there is a problem, is this going to do it? What we're seeing here is that it would take time to get an order and carry out the testing; the results are not conclusive, and a negative result doesn't necessarily mean the person isn't infected.

Test three: how much of an invasion of privacy is the anticipated action that's being proposed in the bill? More questions to the member: how many people refuse a blood test when they're asked to give it? In other words, how many times would we have to use this legislation to enforce it if the blood would not be given voluntarily? How often could it be used? How many people could be impacted by it?

The fourth test from the federal Privacy Commissioner was: are there less invasive alternatives to use for the same circumstances? On this one the . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Oh, that's really disappointing. I'm willing to support this and continue the debate in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to close debate.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to address a couple of the questions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had earlier this evening. One of the things that was looked at – and she did mention the gay community and that she had talked to a gal in some of other groups. When the stakeholder group was first created, they had firefighters, paramedic professions, the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the regional health authority, medical officers of health. The Alberta Advisory Committee on AIDS and the Alberta Community Council on HIV were all included in this. I was privy to a couple of those meetings, and they seemed to think that this would frankly work at this point in time.

One of the other comments that she made about the drug treatments not being pleasant: that's absolutely accurate. What happens to these people when they do become infected or if they think they have a possibility of being infected is that they must go for the drug treatments because there is no alternative. One of the nice things that this bill does is it simply makes the first place they go the communicable diseases database, so hopefully none of this will take place in any event.

One other question that she had was about protecting those who protect us, but I'd like you to take note and pay careful attention to a provision within the act that also protects the source individual in a great many ways throughout this bill. So it's not just the person who's the victim; it's also the person who's the source of the problem.

How many times is it refused when people are asked to give it? Well, right now there's no law in place that allows them to take it, so consequently we can't give you the numbers on how often it's refused. I will check that, and I will check Hansard tomorrow to see if there are any other questions in there.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to committee stage on this bill, and I close debate on second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Bill 27

Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act

[Adjourned debate April 10: Mr. Horner]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The highlights of this legislation indicate that it will remove the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act into enabling regulations as vegetables are now graded nationally.

Certainly, when one looks at this bill and one considers that there is so much legislation and government business that goes behind closed doors, it doesn't hurt. There's no harm in having this bill moved through the Legislative Assembly Act and having it repealed. One only has to think of some of the other matters that sort of routinely go through this Assembly, and there is no public scrutiny. When there's no public scrutiny, sometimes, Mr. Speaker, one looks in the past, and they realize that they have maybe made mistakes.

Now, I go back, Mr. Speaker, to November of 2001, when in miscellaneous statutes we transferred millions and millions of dollars worth of land from one government department to another. That's land that was purchased over the course of time mostly in the early '80s for the ring roads in both Edmonton and Calgary.

So there is a benefit to moving legislation through this Assembly and not through miscellaneous statutes. There was a time when it was thought that perhaps it's possible that this bill be repealed through the miscellaneous statutes, but in light of that example that I just quoted from November of 2001, I think it's a good idea that we let all hon. members of the Assembly have a look at all the legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 27, the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act. I had the pleasure of listening to debate last evening when the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development spoke to this bill in second reading, and there was a lot of hooting and hollering and fun poked at the minister and the piece of legislation and a lot of light made of vegetables and the sale of such. I find it ironic that it's left up to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to defend the honour of vegetable growers and market gardeners in Alberta, but here I am.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the manner in which vegetables are sold has changed almost as much in 100 years as the technologies with which they are grown. Let us not forget that the beloved Lois Hole, the former Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, had her roots in vegetable gardening. [interjections] Somebody's listening. That's good.

The market garden that the Holes operated on the south-facing banks of the Sturgeon River in St. Albert is still there today. I think all members are aware of her book, I'll Never Marry a Farmer. I could go on and on, but it's important that people be reminded that that's where Lois came from.

Mr. Speaker, land in Edmonton's northeast features some of the very best number 1 grade loam to be found anywhere in North America. This is grade A growing soil which has been and continues to be under attack by urban sprawl and the construction of Edmonton's badly needed and much anticipated ring road. Ironically, this is some of the same land, at least, that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar referred to a minute ago, which has been in the news an awful lot in the last few days.

Mr. Speaker, this primary agricultural land has supported many successful family farm operations such as Kuhlmann's Market Gardens & Greenhouses, Brenneis gardens, Visser Farms, Wallish Greenhouses, Simon's market gardens, Laskiwski's market gardens and greenhouses, and, of course, there are many more. Such diverse crops as kohlrabi, turnips, broccoli, cauliflower, peas, carrots, cucumbers, squash, pumpkins, string beans, cabbage, famous Alberta potatoes, and I could go on and on. These are all grown right here around Edmonton. Don't forget, Mr. Speaker, famous Taber corn. I'm sure there's probably a member in here who would be thrilled at my mentioning Taber corn. Sunflower seeds are grown in southern Alberta, and I'm not really sure whether or not sunflower seeds are a vegetable, but I thought that I would mention them just the same. Of course, we've got sugar beets grown in the southeast part of the province. Some wonderful market gardens operate in the mighty Peace Country, and, in fact, Mr. Speaker, there are even vegetable gardens in Hay River and Fort Smith, north of the 60th parallel in the Northwest Territories.

In the early 1900s, Mr. Speaker, people living in urban centres often had large enough lots that would allow them to grow their own vegetables. For decades those who did not or could not grow their own often had a personal relationship with their local supplier, and they would travel directly to the farm to purchase their produce, milk, eggs, and/or meat. In the '60s and 1970s pick-your-own farms were all the rage, and city folk could make a family day of an outing to the country and buy their fresh produce at a steep discount.

Now I'm going to beg your indulgence for just a minute as I read from an article in the May 27, 2005, edition of the Edmonton Journal, Mr. Speaker. This is about the history of farmers' markets. It says

Before 1973, only four farmers' markets existed in Alberta: Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat. The Edmonton City Market was Alberta's first farmers' market and was established in 1900, but despite many years of success, farmers' markets did not initially flourish in this province.

In 1973, Alberta Agriculture announced a new grant program for the establishment of farmers' markets in Alberta under the direction of then minister of agriculture the Honourable Hugh Horner.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the father of the current minister of agriculture, and I'm surprised that the minister didn't acknowledge his father's contribution to farmers' markets when he spoke last night. Mr. Speaker, it continues:

Under the new program, farmers' markets began to flourish and by 1975 there were 35 farmers' markets in the province. In 1994, the Alberta Farmers' Market Association became incorporated and today there are between 110-120 farmers' markets in Alberta . . .

Farmers' markets provide an opportunity for urban residents to purchase goods direct from agricultural producers and consequently offer a supplementary income source for producers. They also serve as incubators for new businesses allowing them to test out new products and establish markets before growing bigger. For communities, farmers' markets are a social event, a gathering place, and a shopping venue.

Now, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately far too many children growing up in our cities today believe that carrots come from the grocery store, and they have never had the opportunity to learn anything different. It is my sincere hope that with projects like the City Farm in northeast Edmonton children and their families will once again have the opportunity to visit and experience the farm first-hand by growing and processing food, caring for animals, and simply experiencing nature. Perhaps along the way they will develop a greater appreciation for vegetables and the sale of vegetables.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, does anyone else wish to participate in the debate?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We've made some very good progress tonight, and I know that some of the members have some plans afoot. We certainly want to give them an opportunity to do whatever between now and the stroke of midnight, so I would ask that we adjourn the House until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

1:40 Investigation of FOIP Documents

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The saga of the government's secret flight logs continues. Now the Information and Privacy Commissioner has requested that a special prosecutor be brought in to investigate alleged document tampering, allegedly done by an employee of Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation to stall the release of information damaging to this government until after the 2004 election. I doubt that the employee would have taken such action of her own accord. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation – and this skeleton is just a little over a year old; it's not 20. Is the person who allegedly tampered with these documents still involved in processing FOIP requests in the minister's department?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, they're still not certain as to the individual who allegedly tampered with any e-mail, so it's hard for me to say whether, in fact, an individual is still in the department. I can tell you that there have been no individuals removed from the department.

Mr. Taylor: To the Deputy Premier: does the Deputy Premier deny that there was any political motivation behind delaying the release of the FOIP flight logs until two days after the 2004 provincial election?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the hon. member is that I have no knowledge of the affair at all.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Deputy Premier again: does the Deputy Premier deny that there were any directives given from any member of government to tamper with the e-mail in question?

Mrs. McClellan: Again, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the hon. member is that I have no knowledge of any individuals being involved in this at all.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the CNRL Horizon project north of Fort McMurray 50 temporary foreign workers with Shanghai Construction have now moved into camp 2 to work on tank farm construction for that oil sands project. It is common knowledge that 550 more temporary foreign workers are being processed and will move into that camp soon. Thousands of apprentices are waiting for spots at NAIT and SAIT. Many qualified trades workers are available in other provinces. Alberta aboriginals would like to learn and earn and work. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How are Albertan and Canadian contractors to compete on oil sands contracts if foreign contractors with their workforces are given preferential contracts and access to the work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. No doubt, Alberta has had the hottest economy in North America. We're blessed with many resources and many job opportunities and economic opportunities for the businesses and individuals out there. I've always said in this House that our top priority is to hire Albertans first. Hire Albertans first. Of course, we have aboriginal people, we have persons with developmental disabilities, we have older workers, we have youth out there that we can access. That is the number one priority. Second to that, we bring people from outside of Alberta in Canada to also work and share in those opportunities. If that doesn't work, if a company out there can prove that they have exhausted all resources to get local people to work or Canadians to work, then they do apply – and this member knows that it's not the Alberta government – to the federal system, to the federal ministry of immigration in order to bring in foreign workers. That process is in place. This member knows that.

Mr. Backs: The oil sands process for temporary foreign workers was negotiated by this government with the federal government.

To the Minister of Finance: why are the citizens of Alberta making massive tax concessions to encourage oil sands development when they will not and cannot get work on the oil sands developments?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that this comment on development in the oil sands would be more appropriately put to the Minister of Energy, who is very well versed in the activity, the wonderful activity, actually, in our north.

Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Human Resources and Employment has said a number of times, we have a number of strategies for workforce improvement, looking at employing Albertans first, Canadians next, and then, of course, looking at other workers. There is some suggestion that government should intervene. I have found in my experience that whenever government intervenes in the marketplace, it's not a good thing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what will the minister say to encourage apprentices, thousands of them, waiting sometimes all night for NAIT and SAIT spots, when they see cheap temporary foreign labour flooding this country and eroding their future working conditions and wages?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In terms of apprenticeship systems I think the hon. member knows full well that Alberta has the best apprenticeship system anywhere in Canada. In fact, we train more than 20 per cent of the Canadian apprentices, and we have less than 10 per cent of the population. We have about 1,400 high school students that are getting started in the RAP program.

Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that my estimates are up this afternoon. I'd be happy to provide him with more details then.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Reform

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the numbers are in, and the third way should be out. Results of a recent poll show that the third way does not have the support of any identifiable group. By gender, by age, by geography, and by political ideology Albertans do not support queue-jumping, private payment, or allowing doctors to work in both systems. My questions today are to the Deputy Premier. Is this government proceeding with third-way privatization legislation this spring that removes the barriers to private insurance and allows doctors to work in both the public and private system? Yes or no?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I understand that it's a Friends of Medicare poll that was released today that shows that about 60% of Albertans are opposed to the third way. I find it interesting that they will take this poll and say that we should act on it when over the last several days I've heard over and over again from the opposition benches that nobody understands the third way. So this is a bit of a travesty, in my mind.

Mr. Speaker, the health minister has stood in this House and commented numerous times on what she heard in her consultations one-on-one and in groups with Albertans. What she heard was that there are elements of the third way that they like very much, and there are elements of the third way that they have concerns about, that we're going to continue to work with them on.

So to give a definitive yes or no today, given all of what I said, would be, I think, quite impossible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. My next question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Given that 59% of seniors polled oppose expanding private health care and fear that more costs will be downloaded, what specific actions has the minister designed to assist seniors who face financial hardship if this plan goes through?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am interested in that result that the member has mentioned here and will look into that further in my consultations with seniors. As I explained in this House yesterday, we have seven programs for seniors in this ministry that are funded significantly through our budget. We have the Alberta seniors' benefit program.

Actually, I'd like to talk about one program that we haven't talked about before in the Legislature, that really does assist our seniors, and that's the Alberta Aids to Daily Living program. There are 80,000 Albertans that are supported through this program, significant funding, a significant increase in the budget this year. That assists our seniors with being independent, with living in the community. I know that it's the only program of its type in Canada, Mr. Speaker, like most of our programs, and they all work holistically together for the independence of our seniors.

I would be pleased to give this member further information regarding all seven. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Deputy Premier: after years of teasing, threats, and abandoned privatization plans when will Albertans know exactly what the government plans for our health care system? Give us a date.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the only threat on privatization seems to be, to me, in the opposition benches. Frankly, most Albertans that I talk to understand the private sector's role in health care. They understand that the private sector has played a very positive role in our health system for years and years and years and years and will continue to. I think what Albertans understand also is that our health system is a precious, precious system.

Alberta enjoys the best health delivery system in Canada bar none. Mr. Speaker, that's not simply our opinion. That has been well documented by social policy writers in eastern Canada, by Maclean's magazine twice stating that the Capital health region right here has the best delivery system in Canada. What we want to do is have a dialogue to ensure that we continue to enjoy this high-quality health system long into the future. To not do that would be irresponsible.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the tide against the government's two-tier, private health care scheme, the third way, continues to rise. Today a Friends of Medicare poll shows that fully two-thirds of Albertans oppose two-tier, private health care. Also, today Alberta's NDP opposition launched its website, www.ndpopposition.ab.ca, where Albertans can find out how to take positive action to protect public health care. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Will the Deputy Premier herself visit www.ndpopposition.ab.ca and learn why Albertans oppose the third way by a margin of 2 to 1?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've heard the dulcet tones of the opposition leader advertising this on the radio for the last couple of days, and I must say that it did kind of tweak my interest so that I might sit down at my laptop sometime and visit that site.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is: will the Deputy Premier visit the site, which is, by the way, www.ndpopposition.ab.ca, and learn why rural Albertans know that the third way will cripple health care in small towns and rural Alberta?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this member probably has a little more knowledge about small-town Alberta than my respected colleague across the way. I happen to live in small-town rural Alberta. I happen to have lived in small-town rural Alberta in various parts of this province all of my life, and I happen to interact with people in those small communities on at least a weekend basis now that the House is in and oftener when it is not. I think that what small-town rural Albertans are concerned about is that they continue to receive a quality level of care. I don't hear concerns from them as to whether it's a private-sector delivery model or whether it's a public-sector delivery model. What they do understand is the public pay side of the system.

Mr. Speaker, we have high-quality health services in my communities. We appreciate them, and we enjoy them. We have high-quality health services in this city and the city of Calgary and in our regional hospitals, and I can tell you that rural Albertans appreciate those services as well. So I think the hon. member would do well to come to small-town rural Alberta instead of just a website and find out what's really going on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Deputy Premier: given the strong opposition among Albertans to the third way, will she visit www.ndpoposition.ab.ca and use the handy e-letter tool on that site to declare the death of the third way?

Mrs. McClellan: You know what, Mr. Speaker? I will continue to have conversations and meetings and discussions with Albertans on the important subject of preserving a health system that they cherish. Doing that is not hiding your head in the sand, pretending that everything's okay and that costs aren't accelerating and that we're not expending about $10.3 billion on health care for 3.2 million people.

This is not an issue in Alberta only. There isn't a Premier in Canada that is not having this discussion. There's not a health minister in Canada that is not having this discussion. I only hope that the opposition parties in those other provinces are more constructive than what I'm finding here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Water Management

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Water for Life strategy is important for our future here in Alberta, and we all agree that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. The mapping, recording, and analysis of our water systems will be part of that ounce of prevention for our water in the fact that many of these underground aquifers and waterways stretch for miles and are interconnected. This base evaluation is critical to have if we are to protect our water supplies and landowners from the loss of our most precious resource. My questions today are for the Environment minister. Will you protect our water resources and insist that all of the data on inventory is completed before allowing drilling and development of new wells and not limit it to 600 metres, which is scientifically inadequate and only an arbitrary number that is not in our best interest?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises some very important points that I agree with. However, one point that I think needs to be articulated is that of the 600 metres. You may not be aware, but the scientists and the biologists that we used, in fact, were from some leading environmental groups across this nation. We had Dr. Mary Griffiths from the Pembina Institute, who is not always complimentary to this government but in fact indicated that the approach that we are taking and the distance we are taking is the right approach in order to protect and secure our water today and well into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Will the minister take further steps to protect landowners and our water resources by passing regulations that require oil companies to give prior notice to adjacent landowners within one mile of all development activity, including products to be used in and at the well sites?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as I said in this House in the past, it is the law to protect our land, air, and water. It is the law that we have the strongest regulation. We're the only province in all of Canada that has the standard that we introduced last week. We will ensure that the hon. member's son or daughter will be able to use the basin that's close to him to be able to fish a hundred years from now, if he lives that long, because of the value that Albertans have, and that is that we value our environment, we value our water, we value our land, and we value our air. We are doing everything in order to achieve that objective, and we're doing it as we speak.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Will the Environment minister work with the Energy minister, the E and E, to change the regulation limiting a landowner's ability to hire and be represented by whom he chooses to work with and be present at the EUB hearings?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, not only will I work with this minister, but I'll work with any member in here, any minister, and I will certainly work with you in order to achieve the objective that we want to attain.

The Speaker: Ah, the love.

Capital Planning Process

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, it seems that a day doesn't go by without hearing about the need for more schools, upgraded health care facilities, improved highways, expanded seniors' facilities, and added infrastructure, such as a new remand centre in Edmonton. My questions today are for the Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation responsible for capital planning. With so many competing capital needs and demands in all corners of the province how does the government prioritize what gets built and what doesn't?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. Again, we'd like to congratulate him and his wife on the new-generation Albertan that came into this world this year.

Mr. Speaker, the capital planning process, as I indicated yesterday, is really an important one. It's a huge amount of money, and one of the main things that I think people have to be reassured about is that, number one, health and safety are primary issues in considering any type of infrastructure. Secondly, all the departments, the 11 that we work with and will work with in devising future capital projects, have a handle on the usage, the existing conditions, and the future projections that we see coming out of it. So based on all those factors, I think that you'll be very confident in developing a capital plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. To the same minister: recognizing that Alberta is not growing equally or as dramatically in all areas, what special considerations does your department give to rural Alberta, where well-maintained schools, quality health care facilities, and important community infrastructure are just as important and badly needed as in fast-growing centres?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For those of us that have had past municipal experience, I do think we do appreciate that there are four corners to the province. I do think it's really important, not only in lip service, that we do recognize it, and we will through the budget, which, by the way, will over the course of the next three years allocate over $3 billion to our rural and small urban municipalities. I think that's fantastic, and I think that's the kind of planning we're looking for in the years beyond the next three.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you. To the same minister: given that the transportation system is key to developing economic and trade opportunities in rural Alberta, how will the minister respond to the transportation needs and opportunities of rural communities in the capital planning process?

Mr. McFarland: Well, I think it's a lot of good news that all of us can look forward to. Not only are we devising a plan that will recognize the needs in rural Alberta and urban Alberta, but we also have to remember that within the existing budget – and this will be the difficult part, projecting it beyond the next three years – we're already contributing over $1,300 per man, woman, and child in the province, versus the nearest province which is about $400, just on capital investment. How we keep that up is a challenge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

Regulatory Review

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2006 Speech from the Throne states:

This year the government will embark on a comprehensive regulatory review to identify and remove unneeded red tape between Albertans and their government. This will help maintain a competitive edge for business and improve access to services for Albertans.

In a recent survey the percentage of business owners who feel that red tape has indeed increased over the last three years is highest in Alberta at 66 per cent. My questions are to the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Given that the minister established a committee to reduce red tape, but Treasury turned down its request for funding, what is the minister going to do next?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it is true that regulatory review is a very, very important part of this government, and yes we do have money in our budget. There was a small portion that we asked for in our new budget, which is going to be coming up soon, that he can question me on later. But I want to say that this is so important to this government. We do have a certain amount in our budget already. We also are working on all kinds of different efficiencies and maybe some trimming we can do. We have some good employees in our department that said that they would take some extra time from their jobs they're doing to work on this, and we will be going ahead and getting some regulatory review done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister follow British Columbia's lead and establish regulation benchmarks so that the government and Alberta businesses can actually measure red tape reduction as they go?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, our committee right now, chaired by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, is working on some different types. We may not use the exact same type as British Columbia, but we will definitely show some benchmarks on how we're getting rid of red tape.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the same minister: will the minister ensure transparency and accountability and guarantee that regulatory burden reduction counts are going to be publicly released or publicly shared, again like they do in B.C.?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this government takes a lot of pride in showing transparency in everything we do, and it will be done in this also.

EUB Hearings on Electricity Transmission Line

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, last year the Energy and Utilities Board approved the need for a new 500 kV transmission line from the Genesee power plant to Langdon and chose a corridor through the heart of the eastern slopes area. The proposed transmission line has elicited strong landowner opposition all along this western route, and opponents have asked why they chose the western corridor over the less populated and less environmentally sensitive eastern corridor east of highway 2. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the new EUB hearings that have been called reconsider the question of which corridor – east, west, or central – would be the most appropriate, or is it just reconsidering different options for routes within the western corridor?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's correct: the Energy and Utilities Board, in response to a request for variance application from a number of people on the western corridor, as mentioned by the hon. member, has decided to re-open a hearing to make sure that everybody would have an opportunity. These are very important questions, that we site these badly needed transmission lines, that we make sure that we've got them located in the right place. That said, this hearing is for those impacted in the west corridor to bring forward their information, to talk about that being the western corridor or not. It isn't about opening up the discussion of the central and east corridor though it is for them to provide the evidence in anything that we might hear to make sure that the west corridor is appropriate or not appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My supplemental is also to the Minister of Energy. In light of the government's new land-use framework initiative and the criteria of best use, will these new EUB hearings take into consideration Albertans' new appreciation of the eastern slopes' environmental and recreational value?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The original decisions and all of the Energy and Utilities Board will take into consideration those environmental, recreational, technical issues. All of those things are part of what any affected person can bring forward. So those members, if they have special issues that they wish to raise, they are allowed to bring that forth in these hearings coming up likely this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Morton: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. Where do we go from here? What's the next step in this process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. It has been announced, as mentioned by the hon. member, that Energy and Utilities Board is going to conduct a hearing on the western corridor for the transmission line, this 500 kV line. That will likely happen somewhere late spring, early summer. The date hasn't yet been selected. That will be announced fairly soon. Those that are interested, I would suggest that if they wish to make an application and be part of that hearing, they should get a request for variance – that's the normal application process – and talk to the Energy and Utilities Board. They could help facilitate how they might be able to appear before that hearing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Progressive Conservative government allows the same land to be sold twice by the same owner, both times for millions of dollars. Now, you can't get that deal at the dollar store. Yesterday in the House the minister of infrastructure tabled documents regarding these dollar deals and stated: "I'm filing today five copies of the agreement for four parcels, clearly showing that, in fact, the land that was in excess would be returned to the vendor." This statement is not true. To the minister of infrastructure: where in this offer-to-sell document that you tabled yesterday in this House does it state that the excess lands would be returned to the vendor? That's document 4213.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, but I don't have the document right in front of me. But I certainly can quote out of Hansard because I read directly out of Hansard, and I do remember that it is item 6 on page one. Number 6. You have to go past 2 and 3. That's where it clearly shows that the land will be returned to the vendor. "Vendor" means the person that sold it, incidentally.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the hon. minister's information, item 6 on this document states: "Time shall be of the essence of this Offer."

Now, my question is to the minister. Why were only choice properties of prime real estate west of the North Saskatchewan River returned to Mr. Shekter for $1? Why is this special deal being made?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there are no special deals. As I stated earlier, the fact is that it clearly states that land in excess will be returned to the vendor. Those parcels were quarter sections. So if there's a parcel that's split off in another area, that was part of the original sale.

2:10

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. This is a map that was provided. Given that the government already knew that some of the land would be surplus because the ring road route had already been surveyed, why did you make this deal with Mr. Shekter to return land for one dollar that he turned around and sold for millions?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, first of all, as we pointed out before, this is 18 years old. That was before I or even our Premier was in this building.

Now, as far as: why did we do it? I have explained it, but I guess I have to go through it again. When we bought the whole parcel of land, we knew that there was going to be excess land, but the fact is that if we didn't buy the whole piece of land, if Mr. Shekter or his company would have maintained that land, then they would have had to pay for subdivision, go through the whole issue. The fact is that by the province buying it, we don't have to do that subdivision. We were then able to simply survey it out, create a separate title on the lands that were going to be given back that were in excess and that were identified as being excess in the original agreement, and those were to be returned. Now, to make it absolutely legal, you have to charge one dollar, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Siting of Calgary Halfway House

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The John Howard Society has proposed a halfway house with 32 beds for federal inmates in downtown Calgary. This proposed location is within close proximity of not one school but two elementary schools. It is entirely possible that this facility would house child sex offenders, and having it so close to schools would place the children at risk. It is no surprise that this proposal has been greeted with strong negative reaction from residents in the area. My questions are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Does the minister feel that this is an appropriate location for a halfway house?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. First of all, let me say that the John Howard Society is a very respectable not-for-profit organization, that provides programs for inmates coming out of our corrections facilities, both federal corrections facilities and provincial facilities, and they do provide very good programs to transition offenders back into the community.

The issue, Mr. Speaker, in the two communities of Sunalta and Scarboro is that the facility and the land that they purchased on the site that they planned to build is within two blocks of Sunalta school and five blocks from the Sacred Heart elementary school. The concern that I and many of the residents have is that this will pose a significant risk to those children that are of a very vulnerable age, being in that close proximity to a 32-bed facility that will house sex offenders as well as other offenders from our corrections facilities.

Ms Haley: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what have you done to prevent this halfway house from being built there?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of issues that we have to look at. I met briefly with the mayor of Calgary last night as well as having sent him a letter on Monday regarding the concerns that we have regarding the safety and security of not just the children in these two schools but as well children in other locations that are close to facilities such as this.

We want to work in the future regarding how we can manage these types of programs but as well ensure that we are not placing at risk children, young adults, those for whom English is a second language, or others that may have disabilities that are in close proximity or in institutions in close proximity to a facility of this nature.

We're working with the mayor, working with a number of aldermen in the city of Calgary, looking at the possibility of other locations that they could purchase, whether it be private land, city land. In fact, I spoke briefly with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation regarding the possibility of the potential for the purchase of provincial land that might be available in and around the city of Calgary as well.

Ms Haley: Well, my last question to the same minister is: what can the residents in and around the city of Calgary do to prevent this from being built in their neighbourhood?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. In this case the John Howard Society provided a community forum that over 200 residents attended. The question-and-answer type of forum was there and available for them. Obviously, more questions were asked than answers provided, but their concerns are related to the safety and security of their children, as it would be in anyone's community. I support the residents wholeheartedly in contacting myself and in contacting their aldermen and other elected officials as we move forward.

I have a meeting with the federal Minister of Public Safety at the end of this month. We'll be speaking with him regarding this as he is responsible for corrections and looking at these types of locations not only in Calgary or Alberta but, as well, ensuring the safety and security of all children in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Investigation of FOIP Documents

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this one-party state a culture has developed where the civil service has become politicized. Bureaucrats believe that their job is to protect the government from bad publicity. This culture is growing and is rampant. Now we even see examples of altering documents to protect the government immediately before the last provincial election. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. How does this minister justify employees in his department doctoring e-mails to protect the government?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there's an assumption in that question that I'm not sure is true. I'm not sure if it was a person in our department or who it was that allegedly tampered with an e-mail. The commissioner has not identified. Yes, the commissioner passed it on, but the fact is that the commissioner did not identify. So the assumption that there's someone in our department that did something untoward is purely an assumption.

Mr. Martin: I'm sure that the Privacy Commissioner would not be going to this unprecedented move if he didn't think something was there.

My question, simply, to the minister is this: how far up the chain of command was the decision made to alter a November 12, 2004, memo, thereby ensuring that embarrassing details about high-flying Tories didn't get onto the front page of a major daily newspaper shortly before the last provincial election?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I knew absolutely nothing about this incident until sometime after the election. To have an accusation that someone somewhere did something in order to avoid some information – I can't answer that kind of an accusation because the fact is that I do not have that kind of information. I'm not sure why the commissioner sent it on. I assume that he was anxious to try to get to the bottom of it if there was something more to be found by his further review. I assume that's why he sent it on.

Mr. Martin: Is this minister saying, Mr. Speaker, that the Privacy Commissioner had somebody go in there for a seven-month investigation – they've been looking into this for a long period of time – and this minister knows nothing about it? Is that what he is telling us?

Mr. Lund: That's not what I said. I said that I knew nothing about this so-called tampering of an e-mail. I knew nothing about that. Yes, I knew much about the request for the logs. That was an extremely, extremely expensive adventure that this department had to bear because of the number of logs that had to be looked at. I don't remember the exact number, but I do know that it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 12,000 pieces of paper that had to be gone through, every one of them, Mr. Speaker, in order to fulfill the request that was out there before us. I know all about that part of it, and yes, it did take a long time, and yes, it was a very laborious undertaking. As far as this tampering, I knew nothing about that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The intrigue continues to grow around the Rod Love affair. At the latest count we have the Premier's former chief of staff being paid $94,789 for verbal advice, even though the Auditor General condemned this practice following the Kelley Charlebois scandal. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Given that your ministry employs several well-trained and highly qualified employees, can the minister tell this House what financial skills and qualifications Mr. Love had that rendered Alberta Finance employees unable to give adequate financial advice? Or was he maybe giving political advice?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely accurate in one thing. I do have some very talented and dedicated staff in Alberta Finance, very capable staff.

I have answered this question on this contract to the best of my ability. I did not enter into the contract. I know no more than I have told this hon. member about that contract. It was for strategic advice, and I expect that is what was received for that. Mr. Speaker, there has been no attempt to hide anything on this. All of the payments to this consulting firm are listed in the blue book that is tabled in this Legislature.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will later today, at the appropriate time, table the guidelines for contracts with Alberta Finance today, and if the hon. member has any questions on any contract that I've entered into, I'd be pleased to answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. She tabled those policies a month ago.

Given that Rod Love was a paid political lobbyist for Imperial Tobacco at the same time as being a paid strategic consultant for Alberta Finance, how can taxpayers be assured that Mr. Love wasn't advising this minister to further invest in big tobacco?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, Mr. Love did not – did not – give any advice to this minister. I've already made that clear. I have not entered into a contract with Mr. Love.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the investment management division of Alberta Finance are the people who actually make the investments, not the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Deputy Premier: as Deputy Premier can you advise this Assembly if Rod Love is currently under contract, today, in Montreal to provide strategic verbal advice to this government? Yes or no?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I could not say either he is or is not. You know, I don't follow the whereabouts of Mr. Love on a daily basis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Alberta Film Development Program

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta film development program was recently transferred to Alberta Economic Development from Alberta Community Development. My question is for our Minister of Economic Development. Does the transfer mean that our government now views film as a business and not an art?

Mr. Dunford: Oh, I love to help out young people, Mr. Speaker. The question, really, is whether we view this as a business and not an art. Certainly, film is an art form, but fortunately for Albertans it's more than that. It's also a business. It's a business that's growing in Alberta. There are tremendous opportunities for young people within the film industry. It provides them the opportunity for our fantastic postsecondary institutions around the province to get involved in some exciting programming.

Of course, we know that movies and commercials that are being made in Alberta are increasing, and it's for that reason, then, that the government really supports the film industry. It certainly is the intent of this minister to try and grow that industry within Alberta. A way in which to do that and to I think try to take advantage of perhaps synergistic opportunities, film was then transferred to our department. Really, film is a way to market Alberta. We're the department that markets Alberta. I think it's a great fit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. My first supplemental to the same minister. There are some film producers that have been saying that they're concerned about changes to the program. What are you changing and why, and wherever did you find the time to do it?

Mr. Dunford: Well, the biggest change, of course, is in the budget itself. Our estimates will be up later on in this particular session, but we have had a 10 per cent increase in overall funding. Where the producers are concerned – and perhaps this is advice, then, that members of the House would be able to provide to them should they come forward. Basically, we've removed some of the rules around who could actually film in Alberta. We're not saying now that you actually have to have Alberta producers or Alberta creators or screenwriters, but we're providing the incentive. The fact that the more Albertans that you do have, then of course the more we can provide offsetting funds for those particular costs. We haven't tightened the parameters around travel, by the way.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll go on to the third question, please.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the same minister. Will these changes compromise the number of films being made in the province?

Mr. Dunford: No, I don't think so. We've had 53 films shot in the last number of years. We think that there'll be more. There's a tremendous upswing in the packages that are being asked for. I think that it's a fun thing for members of this House to be involved in this industry, and I hope that when they get invitations to attend sets, they'll take us up on it. [standing ovation]

The Speaker: That was very nice. This Assembly can be very, very classy at times.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Recognition of Time Served in Remand

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are unanimous in their wish to have safe communities, communities safe for their children and safe from criminals. It's the government's responsibility to protect Albertans from criminals getting an early exit from prison, but conditions at the remand centres in Alberta are so atrocious that offenders regularly earn reductions in their sentences of two or three days for every day served in remand. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: given that the conditions in the remand centre in Calgary directly resulted in a heroin dealer being given 3 to 1 credit for time served in that facility, can the minister explain what he is doing to deal with this dangerous precedent?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite right that not only in Alberta but across Canada there is a recognition that there is going to be recognition for time served in remand upon conviction of a particular offence. In Alberta I can tell you that as a matter of standard that time is 2 for 1. In other words, there is a doubling of the time in remand recognized in a reduction in the sentence for the accused who is found guilty or who pleads guilty. I can also tell you that across this country, in many of the jurisdictions, that time is more generally 3 to 1, so on a comparative basis Alberta is doing relatively well, but I can tell you that this condition is not unique to Alberta. It is something that is found across this country.

Dr. B. Miller: To the same minister: given the judge's opinion in the Chan case – and I'll table this case later – that “the reason for giving enhanced credit is the exceptionally hard time that Chan experienced” in remand, can the minister explain how the public can feel safe when criminals are first mistreated in prison and then released early?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no doubt that on each individual case the circumstances surrounding the time in remand is part of speaking to sentence, so the hon. member is correct to the extent that he alludes to that in his question. However, the facts of each case are different, and it seems to me that we're not talking about people getting out of jail earlier. What it does is go to the length of the sentence per se, and those are two different things.

Dr. B. Miller: To the same minister: given that the new Tory Prime Minister has stated repeatedly that if you do serious crime, you'll do serious time, why are his provincial cousins being soft on crime by allowing drug dealers back into our communities early because this government refuses to construct even one new remand centre?

Mr. Stevens: Well, that's an interesting perspective. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this government is not soft on crime. In fact, we have been saying for the last five years that those people who do serious crime ought to do serious time. That is why we have led the way in asking the federal government to change the rules with respect to conditional sentencing. I can also tell you that on the basis of the information that I have seen, Alberta is one of the toughest places with respect to those who are convicted of drug offences. If you go to B.C., for example, I think that something like nine out of 10 people who are convicted of drug offences do not do any time whatsoever. I'm very proud – very proud – of the Crown prosecutors and their success rate with respect to convictions regarding drug offences in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was during the question period a point of order raised by the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. We will deal with that as we go through the Routine this afternoon.

In a few seconds from now, I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate in Members' Statements, and then, hon. Member for St. Albert, you may move if you wish.

First of all, our historical vignette of the day.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, on seven occasions in the history of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, strangers – that is, individuals other than members or officers of the Assembly – have been given permission to attend and address our Assembly on the floor.

In 1935 William Aberhart spoke to the Assembly about the Douglas Social Credit plan before he became a member and Premier of the province later that same year. In 1997 wheelchair athlete and fundraiser Rick Hansen addressed the Assembly on the 10th anniversary of his Man in Motion World Tour. Daniel Novak, page speech contest winner, read his entry to the Assembly in 1999. In 2002 Prince Michael of Kent, cousin of Queen Elizabeth II, addressed the House on the occasion of the Queen's golden jubilee celebrations. In 2005 the hon. Sam Lieberman spoke on behalf of the province's Second World War veterans on the 60th anniversary of VE Day. On May 24, 2005, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II delivered the first ever address by a reigning monarch to the Assembly, and on March 15, 2006, Ray Speaker presented an address on behalf of all former members.

Shortly the Assembly will be asked to give permission to allow Her Excellency the Rt. Hon. Michaëlle Jean, the Governor General of Canada, to attend and address the Alberta Legislative Assembly on May 4, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

National Volunteer Week

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week, April 23 to 29, marks the celebration of National Volunteer Week across Canada. Over the course of this coming week communities and organizations across our province will be recognizing and celebrating the contributions made by Albertans who donate their time and energy to active volunteerism. Citizen service has always been a cornerstone of strong, active communities and is an essential part of our identity as Albertans.

I'm aware of a handful of events taking place in my constituency of Stony Plain recognizing the importance of volunteers to our community and their considerable contributions. On Monday I attended a volunteer flag raising in Stony Plain. I'm sure that there are similar events planned in other ridings in this province.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to recognize our volunteers and to let them know that their tremendous contributions are genuinely appreciated and not taken for granted. National Volunteer Week allows us a wonderful opportunity to do just that. This year's National Volunteer Week theme is Volunteers Grow Community. Volunteerism is indeed a vital part of our communities. The hard work and generosity of volunteers truly do help grow and strengthen our communities. Volunteers are the backbone of our communities. Their contributions are immeasurable.

With that said, I am pleased to recognize the tireless effort of volunteers in my community, our province, and across Canada. Their thoughtfulness and kindness make life better for us all. In a province blessed with an abundance of resources, our volunteers are one of our most important resources of all. Hopefully, by recognizing our volunteers, others will come forward to volunteer their time to improve and build upon what our communities have to offer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Canadian Federation of Independent Business

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to join the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in celebrating their 35th anniversary. Since 1971 the CFIB has been giving small firms a big voice in the public arena. Best known for high-profile actions with governments on policies like tax, labour laws, and public-sector spending, they have also achieved many behind-the-scenes changes that have meant real dollars-and-cents benefits to all firms.

For example, persistent CFIB lobbying was instrumental in achieving the capital gains exemption, the small business reduced corporate tax rate, and beneficial changes to the Bankruptcy Act, the Small Business Loans Act, and RRSP rules. Recent efforts in Alberta include working to reinvigorate the province's regulatory reform process, providing new research on municipal franchise fees, and encouraging more competition in the retail electricity market for small businesses.

CFIB has 105,000 small and medium-sized business members across Canada, including 9,200 in Alberta. CFIB members determine CFIB policy positions through regular surveys in a one-member, one-vote system. They survey their members on every issue that impacts small business from taxation, shortage of qualified labour, and WCB to health and work/family balance. Lastly, the CFIB is financed 100 per cent by their members, and they do not receive funds from government, banks, or big business.

Mr. Speaker, myself and many other members of this Assembly came to this House with a background in small business. I believe I speak for all of us in offering congratulations to the CFIB for having achieved 35 years of successful advocacy for small and medium-sized businesses in Alberta and across the country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

High River and District Health Foundation

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great pleasure in rising today to recognize the outstanding work of an organization which is very active in my riding. The High River and District Health Foundation recently celebrated its 20th anniversary. This foundation dedicates its efforts towards raising funds to support health care services in both High River and Nanton. This celebration also coincided with the 20th anniversary of the annual hospital dinner held by the foundation. This year the dinner raised $55,000 towards purchasing a new residents' bus for the long-term care facility in High River.

Great success has been achieved over the past two decades by this organization. Through their efforts multiple programs have been initiated or supported at the High River hospital. The implementation of a cataract surgery program and continued support of surgical and emergency care at the hospital are only two examples of the benefits which are realized due to the work of the foundation.

Part of the success of this foundation can be attributed to the innovation which they have shown in raising funds to support their efforts. In addition to holding an annual dinner, they also hold the Chinook Country Cattle and Grain Roundup. This unique fundraiser accepts donations of not only cash but also grain and cattle. Using the proceeds gained from this, the foundation acquires a herd of cattle, which are then sent to a feedlot which manages them through the winter using the grain and donated cash. In the spring these cattle are sold, and the profits are used to further the goals of the foundation. This is a very innovative way of fundraising and one which I must say is a distinctly rural method of raising funds.

The other great factor in the success of the High River and District Health Foundation is the exceptionally supportive community in which it operates. The people of the community believe in the mandate of the foundation and give it outstanding support year after year.

I would like to recognize the contribution of the foundation and of the community which supports it for the good work which they have done over the past 20 years, and I hope it continues into the future.

Thank you.

Excellence in Teaching

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour and a privilege to rise today to speak about excellence in teaching. Alberta has an outstanding education system. Whether it is the dean of medicine at Harvard or each of us here or so many Albertans serving our communities as doctors and nurses, technologists and technicians, professionals, entrepreneurs and businesspeople, volunteers, or NGOs, all of us are able to give our best because we learned to read, because we got an education, because we went through the education system.

But the system, Mr. Speaker, is nothing without teachers. Each of us has a memory of a teacher who inspired us. Each of us knows that at the core of anything good are good people: dedicated, passionate, and committed. Those talented people in education, those teachers inspired us to think, to sing, to write poetry. Our history includes teachers like my mother, who went out to teach 12 grades in a one-room schoolhouse, or teachers like yourself, Mr. Speaker, who took his team of students from Barrhead to win the national finals in Reach for the Top.

Teachers play a significant role in our lives. It is only appropriate that we encourage excellence in teaching, and it is only appropriate that we recognize excellence in teaching. This past week the finalists for the 2006 excellence in teaching awards were announced: 134 finalists from across the province representing many, many more who were nominated by parents, colleagues, and students. I cannot read all of the names of the finalists at this time, so I will table a list at the appropriate time.

But I know you will forgive me for singling out one of the 134 of whom I'm very, very proud. Carrying on the tradition of excellence of his great-grandfather as a teacher, his grandmother and my mother as a teacher, and his mother and my wife as a teacher and junior high school principal, my son, Ian Hancock, who teaches at Sandhills elementary school in La Crête, Alberta, in the riding of the Member for Peace River, was one of those 134 finalists, those 134 excellent teachers who represent the excellence we have in teaching and the hopes that we have for the future of our learning society.

I know each of you will want to join me in congratulating all 134 of the 2006 excellence in teaching award finalists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Industrial Development

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Smart growth or a free-for-all in Alberta? Albertans appreciate the tremendous contribution made by oil and gas activity in the province. Too often resource companies are being pitted against local citizens, landowners, and environment advocates. The conflict, though, is not ideological. We all need the benefit from the resource industries. The problem is also not primarily with the regulatory bodies: the Energy and Utilities Board and the Natural Resources Conservation Board. The problem is with the lack of leadership in this province expressed in clear legislation and enforced by capable and sufficient manpower.

Albertans want governance that uses good science and public values to guide the scope and pace of growth in the province: smart growth rather than a free-for-all. Again and again Albertans have been frustrated by the lack of leadership despite reassurance and rhetoric. What is the vision and plan for our lands and water? What rate of development and scope of environmental impact at the watershed level is sustainable? Who decides at the local level for development that is consistent with the region's priorities? What revenue return to the province on resource extraction is fair?

This government has failed to deliver the three most fundamental elements of governance: first, a vision grounded in a legislated land-use framework that balances sustainable economic, environmental, and social values. Two, the government has failed to deliver scientific assessment of the present and projected impacts of development on air, water, and land. Witness the absence of baseline water testing before coal-bed methane drilling and fracturing.

Number three: the government has failed to deliver a process for meaningful public involvement in the key development decisions affecting people's lives and land. The government of Alberta's role is to set the course for development, balancing between public and private interests, short-term benefit, and long-term sustainability for our children's grandchildren. It's time to challenge the Alberta advantage, which without a plan, without science, and without meaningful public consultation fosters a free-for-all for resource extraction at the expense of the environment, community cohesion, and our future.

I used to think that the oil industry ran the province. I was wrong. No one is in charge. The lack of governance is negligence, and negligence is either incompetence or corruption. Albertans will decide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

City of Lloydminster

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I would beg to differ.

Recently the Canadian publication MoneySense magazine released results on the best place to live in Canada. MoneySense pulled data from 108 communities of more than 10,000 people and crunched the numbers to figure out which communities across the country actually do have the best combination of natural advantage and economic good fortune. They focused entirely what they could measure: weather, how many people can walk to work, population growth, household income, unemployment, economic diversity, house prices, and unique community features. The result, no surprise to me, number three on the list and notably in the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency is the beautiful city of Lloydminster.

The city of Lloydminster has many features that cannot be measured so easily: Lakeland College, including the Vic Juba theatre, the new Common Wealth Credit Union centre, the Lloydminster Exhibition Association, and many many more.

Mr. Speaker, Husky Oil has had a long and successful relationship with Lloydminster, and their recently announced expansion of the upgrader as well as the soon-to-open ethanol plant are just more good news for this area.

Business icons like Ray Nelson, like the late John Page and the late Bob Jack Sr. set the bar very high for community involvement. That torch has been lifted and held by people like Cliff Rose, the Musgrave family, Ken Kay at Agland, Wayne King at Grithog, and the Rusway group, all of them donating tremendous time and financial resources to the many community projects.

Mr. Speaker, led by the incomparable Vic Juba, a host of volunteers also contribute daily to make Lloydminster truly a great city to live near and be from. No community gives more of their time and effort than these.

To Mayor Ken Baker, city council, and all the people in the wonderful city of Lloydminster and surrounding communities, congratulations on being recognized for something we've known for a long time: the city of Lloydminster is truly a great place to live, work, and raise a family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Southwestern Alberta Attractions

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a rich history and a vibrant heritage. The Cardston-Taber-Warner constituency is no exception. The southwest corner of this fine province is full of interesting destinations for our local tourists and international travelers alike.

The Milk River winds sweep through the hoodoos in Writing-on-Stone provincial park, which contains rare pictographs depicting an earlier Alberta civilization, while Warner's Devil's Coulee Dinosaur Heritage Museum and egg site are a footprint of an even earlier time.

The town of Taber celebrates its famous sweet corn with its annual Cornfest and hosts a successful farmer's market with wonderful local produce during the summer months.

Over in Glenwood visitors can enjoy a treat from the historic ice cream parlour and the Cheese Factory Museum. In nearby Hill Spring you can kick up your heels at the Great Canadian Barn Dance, complete with chuckwagon grub and live entertainment.

Raymond is home to Alberta's original stampede and still hosts cowboys and cowgirls on July 1. Motocross riders can also catch some air time at the local motocross track.

The Garden City of Magrath offers a look at agricultural technology development with the Galt irrigation canal and the buffalo sloped grain elevators.

The Stirling Agricultural Village is a national historic site depicting an original 'rurban' layout that is also home to the Galt Historic Railway Park.

Cardston's Remington Carriage Museum is one of Canada's best indoor attractions, displaying over 225 fully restored horse-drawn carriages. The museum has also gained notoriety in The Simpsons sitcom. Tourists are welcome at the visitors' centre of the Cardston Temple, another Canadian historic site.

Another gem of the south is Waterton Lakes international peace park, home of the famous Prince of Wales Hotel. Waterton park is a UNESCO world heritage site, just a short drive from Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, also a UNESCO site.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all Albertans, members of this House, and tourists from around the world to visit some of the many wonderful attractions in southwestern Alberta.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from 206 Albertans urging the government of Alberta to abandon its plans to implement the third-way health care reforms, which will undermine public medicare.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I think I pretty much have everybody in the Official Opposition having a petition. Is this correct?

Well, we'll go, then, with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, then to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and then we'll go to the front row.

Okay, hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition from 202 citizens who urge the government to abandon its plan for third-way health care reforms, which undermine public medicare.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. As the past chair of the organization Friends of Medicare it gives me great pleasure to table 205 signatures that the organization collected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two petitions. One hundred and ten signatures from Edmonton, Calgary, Spruce Grove, and various other places, all from concerned citizens urging the government not to proceed with expansion of private, for-profit hospitals, opposing any action to contravene the Canada Health Act, and voting against forcing Albertans to pay for private health insurance.

The second petition is the same from an additional 208 persons, and again this is essentially against the third-way proposals from the government.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling a petition from 204 concerned Albertans from throughout the province, mostly from communities including Cochrane, Sherwood Park, Edmonton, Calgary, Whitecourt, and Vegreville. It calls on us to defeat any plans to go ahead with the third-way reforms, to defeat legislation that would allow the expansion of private, for-profit hospitals, to oppose any action that would contravene the Canada Health Act, and to vote against plans that would force Albertans to pay for private health insurance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table a petition with 108 names from the Calgary and Edmonton areas calling on the government of Alberta to increase funding "in order that all Alberta Works income support benefits may be increased."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here with 228 names on it from the Alexandra junior high school, urging the government to address the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have four tablings. I'm tabling the annual reports for 2005 for the Automobile Insurance Rate Board, for the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, for the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table Finance's contract policy as I indicated I would do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one tabling. It's five copies of a report released today by the Friends of Medicare. The report shows that Albertans oppose the government's so-called third-way proposals by a margin of 2 to 1.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table here this afternoon. The first one is from William Thomas of St. Albert. Mr. Thomas is a senior who believes that the third way is a money grab for doctors and insurance companies.

I also have a letter from Carolyn Campbell, who's expressing her strong opposition to the third way. She notes that Peace Country health chair Marv Moore has publicly opposed the third way because it will worsen physician shortages in rural Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling today is an e-mail from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Ms Donna Thompson. She asks why our schools need to rely on fundraising so much when Alberta is as rich as it is today. Her children's school's latest newsletter delivered the bad news that they can no longer afford a full-time librarian due to budget constraints.

My second tabling today is from Ms Janna Stirling Gilchrist, urging me to do everything in my power to prevent the privatization of health care. She states that as a taxpayer she is satisfied that her tax dollars go into supporting the public system and ensuring access for all people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the document I quoted from in question period, the judgment of Hon. Justice McIntyre in the case where the accused was given a 3 to 1 credit for his time in a remand centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in my member's statement today, I wish to table the requisite copies of a news release from Alberta Education which attaches as a backgrounder the names of the 134 finalists for the 2006 excellence in teaching awards.

As well, the requisite copies of an ad that was placed in the Edmonton Journal on Friday, April 7, which has some commentary which is important to the process and, again, lists the names of those 2006 finalists for the excellence in teaching awards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A number of tablings from concerned Albertans today. First is from Pat Boehm, who notes that "prior cuts to the public health system have been damaging."

Next, from Desiree Bauer, who notes that "women have the most to lose under the Third Way."

From Diana Bacon, who states that "waiting lists of those unable to pay for private service will be longer, not shorter" under the third way.

From Scott Babcock, who notes that with almost a million people in Calgary, why are there only three adult hospitals, that they are the only major metropolitan city without an inner-city hospital, and how that relates to the third way.

From Anne and Dale Rowat, expressing opposition to the third way, believing it introduces the greed factor into the practice of medicine.

From Paul Ammann, who opposes the idea of payment for certain procedures.

From Bill Alton, noting that if there's a private system, it should stand completely alone, and quite a bit of detail on how he sees that happening.

From Allison Akgungor, with a number of responses to the health framework but ending with: "health care must seek to benefit its patients first."

From A. Paziuk, who asks for more family doctors, centralizing record systems, and they advocate creating private labs.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, it seems that the chair violated Standing Order 7(4), which allows for the recognition of six members to participate in Members' Statements. Today I called on seven members to participate in Members' Statements. What I find so startling about this is that everybody was prepared. I don't know who we can eliminate, but let's just say that in the spirit of this time of the year we had seven today, and they were all very well done. We'll try and abide by the rules with greater certainty into the future.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation on a point of order.

Point of Order

Imputing Motives

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising under Standing Order 23, probably (i) and (l). It reads:

A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member . . .

(l) introduces any matter in debate which offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

I would assume that that means that one would understand what they're talking about before they would make comments.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this evolves around the whole issue about the remaining lands, the lands that would not be needed for the ring road, and how those lands would be dealt with in this agreement. Anyone that understands contract law and these sorts of things will clearly understand that when a body like the provincial government takes possession of property and the lands that were not going to be needed for the ring road would at all times remain the property of the vendor, then in fact the lands weren't entitled to the province at any time. Clearly, under the offer to sell agreement number 6 clearly states that these lands would be going back to the vendor.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has had this agreement in his possession for some time, and if he read 6, 7, and 8, clearly it shows that what I was talking about is what was in the agreement right from day one, from the time that the offer to sell was agreed to.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if you could rule on it because I believe that it was terribly unfortunate that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would indicate that what we were saying and what is written in the agreement was not accurate.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that there is a point of order here today. The situation that we have in hand here is that the minister under questioning yesterday referred to some documents and later tabled them. In fact, in examining the documents, which is what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was doing today and questioning based on the documents that were tabled by the minister, he found that three of them contained more or less the same offer to sell agreement, but a fourth one did not. The member was very clear and actually named off the sessional number and the identifier number in his question. That fourth document does not contain the contract specifications that the minister was responding to.

Now, it is the job of the Official Opposition to be holding the government accountable and to be asking for information from it. If I'm interpreting the minister correctly, he seems to say that if the opposition doesn't understand the issue, they shouldn't be asking the question. Well, the point of asking the question is to get information and to help everyone understand the issue.

So I would say that Standing Order 23(l) was not offended in any way, shape, or form. As a matter of fact, I note in a number of cases that Beauchesne 409 does state that questions should be asked about important matters which fall "within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific Minister to whom it is addressed." That's perfectly appropriate, and that, in fact, is what was done.

I notice later that in 409(6) it also notes that "a question must be within the administrative competence of the Government," and "the Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decision taken in a previous portfolio." Therefore, it was perfectly appropriate that the questions were directed to the correct minister, and he was under, we hope, some obligation to attempt to answer.

As to the citation of 23(i), "Imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," I have the questions that the member was asking. I don't have the Blues, so I am unable to check against delivery, but he was asking: why was the choice made to return this particular piece of land to the individual for a particular price? I don't know how that's imputing a motive. It's asking a direct question about why the government made a decision to do something, asks again, you know, given that the government knew that this land would be surplus.

The questions that were asked by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar were all entirely appropriate, were directed towards the minister responsible, did not impugn any motives towards anyone, and they were specifically directed around the fourth document, which does not contain the clause that the minister continues to point out. It has an entirely different clause. The questions were specific to that document, and that was outlined by the member as part of his question.

I'm looking at the documents again, and indeed, yes, there is a section 6 that appears to be identical in three of them but is most definitely not the same in the fourth document, and the questions were around the fourth document.

So there is no point of order here either under 23(i) or 23(l). Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other members who would like to participate?

Hon. members, the chair has listened very attentively to the questions and the answers in the last number of days and, first of all, appreciates that there was a temperate emotion attached to the questions and the responses by both members participating.

I would, however, like to draw all members' attention to Beauchesne 494. Essentially, the subject heading is Acceptance of the Word of a Member, and I quote from Beauchesne 494.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly with their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

It would strike the chair that there may be some dispute among the two participants with respect to the facts, and that is part of the parliamentary tradition and the democratic tradition, that, in essence, hon. members may look at the same thing and somehow see two different things. Our job, of course, over time is to try and find the one thing that's common to all.

Thank you very much for the interjections. We'll now move on.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Advanced Education

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a real pleasure to move the Ministry of Advanced Education's business plan for 2006-2009 and our budget estimates for 2006-07.

I would like to take a moment to introduce the people from the department who are in attendance today. Dr. Bill Byrne is my deputy minister. Please stand. Thank you. Phil Gougeon, assistant deputy minister of adult learning; Mark Douglas, acting assistant deputy minister of apprenticeship and industry training; Rai Batra, assistant deputy minister, strategic corporate services; Gerry Waisman, executive director, learner assistance; Blake Bartlett, executive director, financial services; Bill Spaans, director, planning and measurement; and Michael Shields, communications director for the ministry. I can't really tell if there's anyone else up there that I might have missed, but certainly two people from my office that need to be mentioned are Fran Cuglietta, who's looked after keeping me on the straight and narrow for five years at the SPC, and Jack Janssen, who is providing some valuable services in transition. So these are the people that make it happen.

You know, it's sort of like where the rubber meets the road. We who are elected deal with the big picture. We debate policies, and these professionals make it all happen, so I intend to let them do their job and to hopefully unleash their passion and their creativity to try new things and to celebrate their successes.

My staff will be listening very intently to your every word and reviewing Hansard to provide all of the answers to the questions that I may not get to. They are the experts, after all. All I ask of you, hon. members, is that you tell me which page and which line item your question relates to to make their job a little bit easier.

I have some brief opening remarks, and then I will take questions from the committee, but I will share some of my biases and ideas with you as I go along.

There's no doubt that postsecondary learning is a key priority to Albertans, and we need to get on with the job. I want to clear something up right up front because there have been a number of daily and weekly scrums and maybe even some people in this Legislature who have been talking about things like they don't expect much to happen in the next year, you know, lame-duck government, all this sort of stuff. Well, let me say this. Please don't underestimate the resolve and the passion of the people on this side of the House for good government. Please do not underestimate the resolve and the ability of our departments to get the job done. We are open for business, and I know that we shouldn't underestimate the ability of members of the opposition to keep our feet to the fire.

Alberta's future prosperity is a knowledge-based and global economy, and our future quality of life will depend upon having the skills, knowledge, abilities, and creativity to succeed. This is a province that is faced with depleting natural resources, and we're just beginning to catch up with respect to advanced education because the growth has been so phenomenal. But what better way to turn a nonrenewable resource into a renewable one than to invest in advanced education that turns into better jobs for Albertans and, as a result, grows the tax base year after year? Now, that's what I call a renewable resource worth investing in, a gift that keeps on giving and giving, not to mention improving the standard of living and the quality of life for Albertans.

This government's vision for Advanced Education embodies this and more. It's a vision that uses a wide lens in thinking about advanced education, and I have to say that governments do not have a monopoly on good ideas. I intend to be open to good ideas regardless of which side of the House they may come from.

It's a vision that includes the full spectrum of learning. When you talk about advanced education, it's not just about, you know, universities, colleges, technical institutes. It's a full spectrum of learning from literacy, apprenticeship, immigrant programs, second-language programs, distance education, e-learning in addition to the more traditional programs offered through our colleges and universities. From public institutions to private, not-for-profit institutions and private vocational schools, from Alberta College of Art and Design to Zeneba Academy of Esthetics, we have it all, from A to Z. So when we talk about creating more access – call it what you will: seats, positions, spaces, or learning opportunities – we are talking about the whole spectrum of what we do from literacy to postdoc.

It's a vision of a province where education is a valued and central aspect of life from birth right through to death. That's why, Mr. Chairman, we have conceived and, in fact, created a plan called ACES, the Alberta centennial education savings plan, that essentially encourages every parent to invest in the future learning of their children. I find it quite interesting, though, that there was more interest with the $400 cheque than there seems to have been with the $800 cheque. We're going to be looking into why that is and improve the results because only about 5,700 children, I think, have been registered in that program.

So this is a province where Albertans, regardless of where they live, have access to learning opportunities, and they have these opportunities in many different forms. I think of the potential of SuperNet, for example, where education is delivered remotely. I think of all of the different applications that we're just starting to see emerge in learning, advanced ed, and health, and so on. This is a real opportunity, and I think that we need to take advantage of it and we need to celebrate the successes and distribute the ideas around the province so that people can learn from each other.

It's a province where education is understood to be a central component of every community and the most fundamental foundation of all for the future. It's a vision of a full and seamless continuum of educational opportunities. Those opportunities are available to all regardless of where they live or at what stage of life they are or their lot in life. The best way to break the poverty cycle is to educate the next generation from early intervention right on through to postgraduate degrees. It's a province where everyone in every corner is able to move through each step in his or her educational pursuit easily and efficiently. If we've got regulations or processes that get in the way, we will find ways to get them out of the way. We want Albertans to be inspired to reach their full potential through advanced learning, to move beyond where they are and where they can be.

So I want to work with the Minister of Education and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Health and the Minister of Innovation too, of course. I want to work with them to turn our kids on earlier in life. So much of what happens in postsecondary starts earlier in life, and I need to share with you a belief that I have with respect to these particular points because I happen to have had an experience 50 years ago, when I was in grade 6.

An Hon. Member: It's not possible.

Mr. Herard: Absolutely – 50 years ago. You know, it makes you think, doesn't it?

I was in a little country school in Beaumont. In fact, I think we had grade 1 to 12 in four rooms or five rooms or something like that. The principal there was, you know, our math teacher. He was our guidance counsellor. He was the principal. He was the hockey coach. He did all those things. One day I decided to ask him: how do you determine what you should be in the future? He said, "Denis, the word 'vocation' comes from the Latin word 'vocare,' which is a voice from within."

I really think, Mr. Chairman, that maybe we've forgotten that. I think he was right. Fifty years ago he had it right. That's why I want to work with all of these other ministers to see if there aren't ways that we can in fact tune in to the voice from within our children. Once you've tuned into it, then fan the flame because a turned-on child does so much better than one that isn't. I think that there are some direct implications with respect to that and advanced learning because these kinds of things speak to values and attitudes.

I want to share with you some information with respect to other things that are involved in all of this, initiatives such as character education, which I'm pleased to say now is part of the citizenship curriculum. You might be interested to know that, you know, the former Minister of Advanced Education has done an awful lot of heavy lifting. Thank God, because it's making my job so much easier. You might be interested to know that the former minister's wife, Janet, first introduced me to character education, which she implemented at Harry Ainlay high school. I went over there to have a look. I saw it in action, was sold on it, worked with the ASBA committee to get it into the curriculum, then got three boards to present at the SPC and magically pass the motion to make it province-wide.

I think those kinds of initiatives speak to the values and attitudes that we have to have to succeed in postsecondary education because when you think about life-long learning, you have to think about independent life-long learning. The word "independent" speaks to having taken ownership of one's own learning. To take ownership means that you must have the right values and attitudes to make it happen. So I think that these are extremely important kinds of initiatives to make the transition into postsecondary better and make postsecondary more of a success.
