Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. For the record, Mr. Speaker, the Gazette that's in the library indicates that that land was sold for $2,800.

Now, my second question: given that over the last six years the government sold surplus land in Fort McMurray for over $36,000 per acre, why was this land sold for less than half that? Why was it not sold for the market price?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there's land being sold in the city of Fort McMurray. There's land being sold outside of Fort McMurray. To compare apples and oranges and stand up in this House and pretend that they're the same is ludicrous. They're not the same. As I pointed out earlier, the Gazette was changed. It was corrected on February 28. To say that that $2,800 number was accurate, no, it wasn't accurate. I've got proof here that it was changed. The correct number is on the title of the land: $2.8 million, Mr. Speaker, not $2,800.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're not talking about apples and oranges here. We're talking about the difference between incompetent and inept.

Now, my next question: why did the government not wait until the Auditor General finished his report into surplus land sales in Fort McMurray before proceeding with this land sale?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the process used on land sales is that, first of all, it's determined whether a department within government needs the land or not. If the answer to that is no, then the land will be appraised, and it will be offered to the municipality at the appraised value. If the municipality is not interested in it, then in fact it will be advertised and put on sale. As a matter of fact, many times we end up getting more for it in the sale than it's appraised at.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

School Board Finances

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards across the province are facing a financial squeeze. Edmonton public is the latest school board to be looking at a deficit. In their proposed planning base document presented to the April 18 board meeting, they have projected a $7 million deficit in this year's budget. My question is to the Minister of Finance. At a time of multibillion dollar surpluses why are school boards facing a financial squeeze so severe that they are forced to run deficits?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish I had the answer to that. We have school boards that are elected to carry out the business of providing an education program for our students. We're charged here with ensuring that they have financial opportunity to do that. Education received over a 5 per cent increase in this year's budget, and I think the Minister of Education expects that that should suffice to operate those schools. However, I can say that the Minister of Education is working with all of the school boards, has met numerous times with them, prebudget and postbudget, to look at all of their concerns whether it be capital or operating. I would say that some of the areas of concern for school boards have been on the operating side with costs in energy. The minister has very rightly brought that forward, and we have responded in the past year to help them with that. So I would expect that Edmonton public will be meeting with the Minister of Education to deal with this issue.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that it's a responsibility given to this government to present enough money to do the job. The point, to come back, is: why are our school boards facing budget deficits that will inevitably lead to cutbacks of teachers and deterioration of learning conditions when the kids return next fall?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, as I said, school boards are elected. They're duly elected by the public to operate schools.

The minister has provided over 5 per cent in operating alone in this year's budget to school boards. Now, if the Edmonton public board is experiencing a problem, they can meet with the Minister of Education and explain why they in particular are facing this problem.

I don't understand it. We pay on a per-pupil basis. We have programs that deal with special needs, ESL: a number of things, Mr. Speaker. So I can't speak for one board as to why they find it difficult to operate within the budget they're given. There are sixty-some-odd boards in this province.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is something coming from this Minister of Finance, who had $3.2 billion in supplementary estimates, and we're going to lecture the boards on how to do it.

My question is to the Finance minister, Mr. Speaker. Doesn't the Finance minister see the irony of this government being able to afford to give away $370 million in lost revenues to a corporate sector that's doing really well at the same time that school boards are facing such a financial squeeze that they could be laying off teachers this fall? Doesn't she see the irony of that?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I see the irony in the hon. member not being able to understand the correction I made in his numbers on the corporate tax reduction that was in this year's budget. I pointed the page out to the hon. member, and I invite him to attend the estimates – I think it's a week tomorrow – to further discuss this. The preamble to that question included comments on a supplementary requisition, of which a fair number of those dollars went to education. My point is that you don't like supplementary estimates, but you want more money for all of these things.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat: there is over a 5 per cent increase to education in this year's budget. I know that the Minister of Education has had repeated meetings with these boards. He has met with every board when they wanted to meet with him. If Edmonton public is experiencing difficulty, I know that the Minister of Education will be sitting down with them forthwith.

Alberta/B.C. Trade Agreement

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, Alberta and British Columbia held their annual joint cabinet meetings last Friday and signed a landmark trade agreement that is being described as setting the standard for free trade within Canada because of how far it goes to remove trade barriers. When we think of trade barriers, we think of tariffs and import quotas and things like softwood lumber issues. We know that we don't have those kinds of barriers between our provinces. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What kinds of barriers does the new Alberta/B.C. trade agreement remove, and what does that do for our economy?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, what this free trade agreement between our two provinces will create is a marketplace for 7.5 million people. It'll be the second largest economic region in Canada. What it does is remove barriers to things like trade, investment, transportation, energy procurement practices as four examples. For example, if a tour bus operator is working out of Golden, British Columbia, for temporary movement of their buses into Lake Louise, they won't need different permits. They'll be able to come in without a great deal of additional restriction. Skilled workers will be able to move back and forth between two provinces. If you're registered as a business in one province, you can do business in the other province. These are all examples where there will be a great deal of economic activity generated among and between these two provinces. Another example would be in the area of government procurement. Suppliers from either side of the border can meet the procurement needs of governments. Engineers and architects will be able to practise in both provinces.

We're very, very excited about this, Mr. Speaker. While there are not the same kind of barriers that exist among and between countries, there are barriers that exist interprovincially. We think that the rest of Canada should follow Alberta's and British Columbia's lead on this.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also to the same minister. Given Alberta's already tight labour market and the fact that we will have a shortage of about a hundred thousand workers over the next 10 years, how will the free movement of Alberta workers to B.C. help our industries and businesses?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, this agreement is not intended to drain workers from Alberta but, in fact, create opportunities for them and also help to attract workers to come to this province. Once workers know that they're certified in one of the economies, that they can move freely to where the other jobs are, where there's a great deal of economic activity as there is in Alberta right now, we expect that people will be moving in. As we move forward on reconciling the occupational standards, skilled workers from British Columbia technical schools and universities certified by B.C. standards will be able to work here in Alberta. So it can work both ways, but we think on balance it's going to work very much to the advantage of both provinces.

Mr. Shariff: My final supplementary is also to the same minister. Would this agreement apply to every profession, including professions such as medicine, engineering, or other professions?

Mr. Mar: There is an agreement on internal trade in Canada, Mr. Speaker, that says that you are part of the agreement if you're specifically listed in the agreement. The agreement on internal trade that exists among and between provinces in Canada is very weak. It's not very specific. There's no real dispute resolution mechanism that is of particular advantage. However, in our agreement with British Columbia, instead of saying that you must be in the agreement, we assume that everything is included in the agreement unless you're specifically enumerated as an exception.

So there are some exceptions, Mr. Speaker, with respect to water and environmental protection that will remain within the purview of each individual province. Health and social services, social and aboriginal policies, labour standards, consumer protection, taxation of royalties, public safety: these are all things that will be exempted from this agreement. So those will continue to be within the purview of each individual province, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Integrated Land-use Management Strategy

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Forest Products Association released its survey of Albertans' values of their public lands. The survey clearly describes the failure of this government to meet Albertans' expectations and that Albertans expect their government to play an active role in forest management. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why has this government consistently failed to implement any land-use strategy, considering that more than 80 per cent of Albertans support an integrated land-use management?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Forest Products Association did do a survey of Albertans, and they did come up with Albertans' values in relation to the forests and public lands. Albertans were wanting to make sure that tree planting and replanting and reforestation was their number one priority. Protection of the wildlife and habitat in which wildlife live was another priority. Harvesting practices and the management of ecological impacts were definitely on their minds as well as regulations and restrictions on industrial land use. We're not surprised at those values because the Department of Sustainable Resource Development and this government share those same values and want the same things to happen on the land. Our policies have been put in place over this past number of years to make sure that those values are kept for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll go with my first question again because the minister did not answer it. The government has failed consistently to implement a land-use strategy. How long can we expect one?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did mention that we identified the issues. They're consistent with the issues that this government deals with on a day-to-day basis. We do have management practices in place to make sure that we use best practices. We plant more trees than we cut every single, solitary year. That's consistent with Albertans' values. We do management plans to protect the wildlife and protect critical habitat in forested areas. Our forestry management practices are among the best in Canada, if not North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that reforestation is a fundamental expectation of all Albertans, when will the minister require that oil and gas operators reforest disturbed lands that they already harvest?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, we have very strict rules in place to manage the impacts that industry has and the activities that they have on the land. We have many strict requirements for companies to use best practices and to try and reduce the footprint by ILM practices. Industry through the chamber resources and through their own associations, both oil and gas and forestry, is looking at integrated land management. They're wanting to reduce that footprint. It saves them money, it saves the environment, and it is consistent with the values that Albertans have put in front of the AFPA.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Agricultural Trade

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development was in Geneva last week attending WTO agricultural negotiations. Agriculture is an industry that has a large reliance on trade, so these negotiations could have a major impact on our province. It is my understanding that very little progress was made at these meetings. Could the minister please explain what this means for Alberta's producers and processors?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. The WTO, or the World Trade Organization, talks are extremely important to Alberta's producers. We're probably 80-plus per cent trade dependent in terms of our agricultural industry, so a positive and aggressive outcome at the WTO is critically important to us. It is unfortunate that they missed their April 30 deadline, which was set last year in Hong Kong. But from my meetings with those individuals I would say that the negotiations are far from dead. There's no formal ministerial meeting in Geneva at the end of April, but they have committed to the next six weeks of very intensive negotiations. They are going to be going very hard trying to overcome some of the impasses that were there. Really, a clear political commitment is needed from all of the countries, including Canada, to ensure that we do get an ambitious and timely conclusion to those negotiations. I'm still hopeful that we can get there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. With the federal government being responsible for negotiations, what role did you as a minister play at these meetings?

Mr. Horner: Well, that is correct, Mr. Speaker. It is an international agreement that the federal government is responsible for. Agriculture is the key to our getting an agreement. The federal minister has committed to being consultative with us on whether or not and how he's going to proceed on that, and I'm very confident about that. It was also important for us to make sure that we had some idea where these negotiations were going because we have to make those plans, we have to make those policies, and we have to work with our ag food industry. There's a lot at stake here. We had meetings with Canada's chief negotiators, and we pressed Alberta's trade interests in those negotiations. We also were able to give to him our priorities as to where we thought this would be the best outcome.

We also had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to meet with more than 12 of the ambassadors and senior trade negotiators in Geneva in the day and a half, two days that we had to express to them what Alberta's position was and why it was so important to a province like Alberta. We also had many members of Alberta's ag industry with us in Geneva.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that a finalized deal could present challenges to some segments of the agricultural industry, what is being done to prepare industry once a deal is complete?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, a deal is not going to happen overnight, and anything that is decided is not going to be implemented overnight. Certainly, there are some decisions that have already been made; for example, the removal of all export subsidies by the year 2013 as well as work on domestic support. So there are things that are going to happen over a period of time, and as I said before, we want to get a better understanding of where these negotiations are going to land and what effect that may have on some segments of our industry in a negative fashion so that we can prepare them, so that we can work with them. Indeed, we've opened those discussions with them and have been talking to those industries over the last year. We've had two round-tables on the WTO negotiations and the possible outcomes, and we're moving in that direction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Tuition Fee Policy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three questions to the Minister of Advanced Education on the report prepared by the Transforming the Advanced Learning System Subcommittee of the A Learning Alberta review. Is the minister satisfied that the recommendation to merely roll back tuition to 2004-2005 levels, when they were at the time some of the highest fees in the nation, really fulfills the Premier's promise of the most affordable, entrepreneurial, and innovative tuition policy in Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to tell the hon. member that I'm now on the NDS' leaked distribution list, and I see that maybe he is too. With respect to the recommendations what I can tell the hon. member is that we are beginning tomorrow morning to meet about many things. Stay tuned.

Mr. Taylor: All right, Mr. Speaker. If that's the case, then, is it the minister's position that tuition will be manageable for every Alberta student and that fees will never again become too high?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that one has to look at the tremendous value that postsecondary education is to the future of all Albertans. I think one has to look at a balance: a balance between parents, who ought to be partnering with their own students; business – you know, the word business doesn't seem to come up that often with respect to support for postsecondary students – the students themselves; and, of course, government. What we're going to do, hon. member, is strike a balance that I think you're going to be happy with.

Mr. Taylor: Well, the minister has promised legislation this spring, Mr. Speaker. Will he commit to keeping the legislated tuition controls in the act, or is this something else he plans to move into regulation and beyond the scrutiny of the public, the Assembly, and the students of Alberta?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I know that the legislation is progressing through the process. I know that tomorrow I'm being asked to go to Leg. Review on it. Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been hearing a great deal about the potential of coal-bed methane development as an economic opportunity, but my constituents, like most rural Albertans, expect their well water supply to be safeguarded from contamination and depletion. That was reinforced in a meeting that I had last week with several of my constituents over this issue. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Given that 90 per cent of the rural water supply comes from groundwater, can the minister explain what he is doing to make sure that my constituents' water is protected while Alberta develops coal-bed methane?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, all Albertans should expect an essential, basic principle of safe drinking water, and that is happening, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all Albertans. I think it's important that as part of our Water for Life strategy about 30 days ago we announced a new water standard when it came to coal-bed methane: effective May 1 testing is required by all industry and companies that are doing any potential drilling. Before they are issued a licence, they have to do the proper baseline testing. Three areas that we look at are, one, the water quality; two, the pressure of the water that is in existence before any drilling takes place; and of course then the issue of the presence of any methane that may be in the existing reservoir.

As we move forward, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and all Albertans that we'll continue with the geological mapping and inventories of our ecosystems and watersheds. That is all part of our Water for Life strategy.

Mr. Johnson: My second question to the same minister: how can my constituents trust industry's test results? Who will make sure that the tests are performed correctly?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and all Albertans that this is a very open and transparent process regarding the testing that is done, that is obligated to be reported back to the actual residents that perhaps could be impacted or that have complained regarding the coal-bed methane drilling. Also, Alberta Environment as part of our ministry's responsibility is working very closely with the lab, the accredited agencies that are doing this water testing to ensure that safe drinking water is provided to all Albertans.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: who can my constituents call if they can no longer drink from their water well because of fears of contamination?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the fear of contamination, I think, is an important responsibility of each member in here when it comes to getting the facts out. There is a 25 to 30-year history of geological testing, mapping. The new standards that we introduced are all part of what the expectations are of Albertans. I think it's also important that any Albertan who has a concern can call the 24-hour environmental hotline, which is 1-800-222-6514. We will not only investigate. We'll work closely with the partners, with industry, with the proper testing to get to that ultimate blue gold that I talk about, that we'll continue to protect and sustain well into the next hundred years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Métis Hunting Rights

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the government accepted the recommendations of an MLA task force on the interim Métis harvesting agreement, a document which has left a legacy of confusion and ill will that will take some time to heal. The question that remains is: how did the interim agreement ever see the light of day in the first place? My question is for the minister of aboriginal affairs. Why has the Minister of Justice, who was not involved in the writing of the interim Métis harvesting agreement, been handed the lead on this file?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me talk about what happened. I think that you have to understand process in government. There were negotiations that were determined by the three ministries: Alberta Justice, Sustainable Resource Development, and Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development – three ministries. At that point the negotiations took place with the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Métis Settlements General Council. Those negotiations then were determined in terms of recommendations that were brought to the table. Those recommendations were taken to Agenda and Priorities, and Agenda and Priorities directed us to take them to cabinet. At that point cabinet made the decision that we would go ahead with the recommendations.

I would like to say a little bit about those interim Métis harvesting agreements. They have provided us with a way to be able to understand whether or not there were some areas that we needed to expand on, to change. As you know, they're called interim agreements. We were breaking new ground, Mr. Speaker. We were making every attempt to make sure that nothing would happen out in the field that would create chaos. What we wanted to do was to be able to ensure that the province continues to manage its natural resources.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: in that the infrastructure minister was quoted as saying in reference to the aboriginal affairs minister that she didn't take it through the process, that it was there before we knew it was there, why did the minister circumvent her own party's rules and push through this agreement?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just outlined what process we utilized. In terms of whoever said what, I don't go into he said, she said, they said, whatever. What I deal with are the issues. The issue of the day was to be able to see what we could do in terms of making sure that we had issues that we had to deal with. We wanted to make sure that there would be no chaos out in the field. We had to ensure that we were going to get people to come to the table. The Métis Nation and the Métis Settlements General Council said that they would come and negotiate with us, which we did in good faith. I think that in terms of what the situation was, we had a really good group of negotiators, who, I think, deserve a lot more than what you're saying, Mister.

Mr. Tougas: At least I got a "Mister" out of it.

Now, after more than a year under an agreement that granted Métis wide-ranging hunting rights, how is the minister now going to tell the Métis people that the rights they have today may no longer apply tomorrow?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, answering on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, Alberta has always been a leader in recognizing the Métis culture and Métis society. We wanted to negotiate an agreement that struck a balance between the rights of Métis people and legitimate concerns with respect to fish and wildlife conservation. So the interim agreements have served their purpose. We did have to respond at the time to the Powley decision, a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. The MLA committee was struck to address the concerns that arose as a result of the interim agreement. In the course of preparing the report, this committee has consulted with First Nations, with Métis organizations as well as conservation groups, outdoor organizations, and members of the public. I'm optimistic that the new agreement is going to ensure hunting and fishing opportunities for all Albertans while respecting the constitutional rights of aboriginal peoples.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution-related Offences

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In May of 2005 this Legislature passed Bill 39, which corrected deficiencies in an earlier bill which allowed the seizure of vehicles involved in prostitution offences. Last May the government indicated that it expected proclamation of Bill 39 by last fall, and even just six weeks ago the then Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation said that he expected proclamation within the next month or so. Well, residents in inner-city neighbourhoods that are plagued with this problem continue to wait and are getting increasingly impatient. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that our neighbouring provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba have had vehicle seizure laws involving prostitution offences in place for several years, why is it taking Alberta so long to proclaim its own legislation?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it is true that this is taking much longer than we had anticipated. We had hoped that we would be able to be at a point where we could proclaim the act much sooner. Currently we are continuing to work on the regulations. There has to be a lot of consultation with the law enforcement side and with other aspects of seizing a vehicle. So we're hoping that it can be proclaimed very shortly because it's extremely important to curb prostitution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister perhaps be a little more precise as to exactly when residents of neighbourhoods who are impacted by street prostitution can expect these negotiations to be complete, and can the minister assure the House that this legislation will be proclaimed before this Legislature rises from its spring sitting?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very hard for me to assure the hon. member that it will be proclaimed before this session rises. I don't know when it's going to rise. Perhaps he does, but I sure don't. I've got to tell you that we are continuing to work on all of the aspects of this exercise. It's not quite as easy as it looks on the surface because we are taking property before a court case, so there are some unique aspects of this kind of legislation. But we are working on it. I hope that we can proclaim it very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister please be a little bit more expansive as to the precise nature of the difficulties or the issues that need to be negotiated before the legislation can be proclaimed? Could he itemize those for us?

Mr. Lund: As I indicated, there are a number of administrative procedures that we have to go through in order to seize a vehicle. It also gets into a whole area with the RCMP, the city police, and other law enforcement agencies, exactly how they're going to handle this situation. As I said earlier, really what we are doing is we are seizing vehicles prior to there being a conviction or going to court. So that whole administrative procedure is one that we have to be sure that we're on solid ground and are able to do. We all know that it's the right thing to do, but legally it's sometimes difficult to work our way through and make sure that we can do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Skilled Labour Shortage

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of construction union constituents advise me that they find it difficult to obtain employment in their trade and that the supposed shortage of skilled workers in Alberta is a figment of this government's imagination. Apparently, many union workers line up at union halls in search of work. I also hear that for this very reason local unions oppose the possibility of importing skilled workers from abroad. However, I have some conflicting information that I need clarification on. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: has the minister examined correspondence issued by Alberta union local 488 dated July 25, 2005, addressed to their U.S.A. counterpart union requesting a transfer of 10,000 workers from the U.S.A. to Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: That's what happens when you have a good government and a strong economy and thousands of jobs. Mr. Speaker, I have seen the letter that the member is referring to but certainly cannot speak about why a particular union may take one position or another. That is their business. But I can say one thing: there is definitely a shortage of labour in Alberta. It is real. There is a real shortage. Alberta's economy has created skills and labour shortages throughout the province and does create many challenges for us.

As everybody knows here in this House and in the province, we are going to have over 400,000 jobs in the next 10 years, and with the existing processes we have, we can only create 300,000 jobs. Mr. Speaker, that is a challenge. But you can be assured that we still have the Alberta priority of hiring Albertans first, Canadians, ensuring that there's mobility throughout the country, and of course there are aboriginal persons, persons with developmental disabilities. The aboriginal youth, I've always mentioned, is one very important area. There are 200,000 aboriginal youth aged 15 to 25 years old, and there's lots of unemployment and underemployment on those reserves.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling that letter later.

To the same minister: is the writer, Mr. Rob Kinsey, correct in stating that as of spring 2006 there are some 3,000 steam fitter, pipefitter, and welder positions available in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: As I said before, Mr. Speaker, there are skills and labour shortages in many sectors throughout the province because of our strong economy and good government, of course. We can't say exactly how many positions are available in these occupations because the companies in Alberta do not by law have to report what positions might become available and may be reported.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is confusing. Is there a shortage of skilled labour? Are unions opposed to importing workers from abroad? Which one is it?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, there are skills and labour shortages in many sectors throughout the province because of our strong economy and good government. Again, one thing I want to say: I can't speak on behalf of any union and what the union wants to do. I've said that before in this House. The unions run their own shops, and I think that in a lot of cases they do a good job.

Our government, on the other hand, is spending close to $300 million, Mr. Speaker, to help support and ensure that people get the proper training they deserve. Maybe the Minister of Advanced Ed would want to supplement on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Funding for Wellness Initiatives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Incoherence, poor planning, false assumptions, and fearmongering have been the highlights of this government's health strategy. On top of that, the government is constantly saying one thing and doing another. My questions are to the minister of health. Given that the minister has claimed that we can reduce health system costs by promoting the health of children, why does the government refuse to support a school nutrition program?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the school nutrition program, as well explained by my colleague the Minister of Education, would be under the auspices of the school in terms of the school trustees, the local priorities. So school nutrition programs are not a part of my mandate.

However, the school boards, the Ministry of Education, myself, and the Ministry of Children's Services co-operate on a number of programs that benefit schoolchildren, including the physical fitness program that has been initiated, where students are receiving regular physical fitness. Many of the conversations we've had on the cross-ministry initiatives – both the ACYI, administered by the Minister of Children's Services, and the health initiatives lend themselves to conversations about improving the wellness of all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, for example, in Eastglen school there was a wonderful demonstration of mental health awareness in launch of mental health awareness week. So in many activities we're integrally involved. But the actual policy development and the initiation and delivery of that policy would be, essentially, the purview of the Minister of Education.

Ms Blakeman: Say one thing; do another.

Again to the minister of health: if this government truly wants to make the population healthier, why was the funding for the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy cut in this year's budget?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we had hoped to take very real advantage this year of federally initiated and advertised programs, particularly as it came to national ads. There were some excellent demonstrations of advertisements, television ads that we believed could enable us to divert some of our funds into other areas. Through the chair of AADAC, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, we will be undertaking further investigation of what we should do to make sure that we reach those target audiences where tobacco has been apparently on the increase. But we're very pleased with the results we're getting for 15-, 16-, and 17-year-olds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the minister of health: when will the minister stop blaming individuals for rising health care costs and support programs that will truly reduce the cost in the public system, like a pharmacare program?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been working on a pharmacare program, but this minister has never once blamed individuals. This minister has cited a number of the rising costs in health care. Many governments are doing exactly what this government is doing. We're looking at those cost drivers and how we can maximize efficiency in some areas, how we can improve wellness, and how we can in fact target those areas not only of the rising costs of pharmaceuticals but also use more evidence-based information for improving and adding to our system. We look forward to making some of those cost efficiencies really benefit Albertans as well as benefit the health care system overall.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I will call on the first of six to participate, but first of all we'll have our historical vignette of the day.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: This will be part 2 of an historical overview. On March 21, 1940, Albertans elected their second Social Credit government with 42.9 per cent of the votes and 36 of 57 seats. For the first time in our history the Liberal Party was neither the government nor the second-largest party in the House. Nineteen independents were elected with 42.4 per cent of the votes. Liberals elected one member.

The election of August 8, 1944, saw the Social Credit government returned with 51.88 per cent of the votes and 51 of 57 seats. The second-largest grouping was three independents with 16.75 per cent of the votes. Two Co-operative Commonwealth Federation MLAs were elected with 24.92 per cent of the vote. There were no registered Liberal candidates in the election of 1944.

On August 17, 1948, 55.63 per cent of Albertans voted Social Credit and returned 51 of 57 MLAs. The CCF polled 19.13 per cent of the votes and elected two members, as did the Liberals with 17.86 per cent of the votes.

Four years later on August 5, 1952, the largest number of political parties ever, 13, contested the election. The Social Credit Party received 56.24 per cent of the votes and elected 53 of 60 MLAs. Three Liberals were elected with 22.37 per cent of the votes.

On June 29, 1955, in Alberta's 50th anniversary year, 37 of 61 seats went to the Social Credit Party with 46.42 per cent of the votes. The Liberals elected 15 members with 31.13 per cent of the votes.

In Alberta's 14th election, held on June 18, 1959, 55.69 per cent of Albertans elected 61 Social Credit members out of 65 seats. The Progressive Conservative Party elected one MLA with 23.88 per cent of the votes. For the first time in Alberta's history a political party received more than 200,000 votes; Social Credit received 230,283 votes.

Almost four years to the date later, June 17, 1963, the Social Credit Party won 60 of 63 seats with 54.81 per cent of the votes. Two Liberals were elected with 19.76 per cent of the votes.

In Canada's 100th year and on May 23, 1967, 44.60 per cent of Albertans returned 55 of 65 MLAs to the Legislature as Social Credit MLAs, and six Progressive Conservatives were elected with 26 per cent of the votes. The New Democratic Party received 16 per cent of the votes and elected no MLAs while the Liberals elected three MLAs with 10.81 per cent of the vote. This was the ninth election victory in a row for the Social Credit Party.

The score to date is four Liberal governments, three United Farmers of Alberta governments, nine Social Credit governments.

Tomorrow, part 3.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer Vipers Hockey Team

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you probably know, Red Deer is located on the busy, booming corridor between Calgary and Edmonton. Because Red Deer is the centre of paradise, not only do we have the privileges of cheering for our own teams – the Rebels, the Chiefs, and the Vipers – but we have the glorious opportunity to choose between Alberta's great teams in Edmonton and Calgary. In fact, it's not unusual to see a car going down the road in Red Deer with an Edmonton Oilers flag on one side and a Calgary Flames flag on the other.

Last night the Edmonton Oilers fans had the chance to celebrate a great first-round victory against the Detroit Red Wings in the Stanley Cup playoffs, and last night the Edmonton fans were erupting with joy. Alas, the Calgary fans were sad because they have to wait for the seventh game to celebrate, we hope.

Red Deer, however, gets to celebrate a great victory for one of their very own teams, the junior B Red Deer Vipers. The junior B Vipers are a team of young men between the ages of 18 and 20 who play hockey for the love of the game. Some players work, some go to school, and some work and go to school while they play hockey. With hard work and dedication these young hockey players earned the title of Alberta junior B champs for the second time in three years and the western Canadian champions, the highest honour for this level of hockey.

Mr. Speaker, please let me congratulate the players and the coaches of the Red Deer Vipers: Jared Brookes, Dan Saniszlo, Cody Mast, David Horsley, Ryan Kure, Dave Dow, Devon Haley, Brent Foord, Jay Adams, Kelly Rogers, Ryan Lund, Ryan Edgeworth, Brian Renaud, Colin Christensen, Randy Kloss, Dave Kozlowski, Brett Sparks, Taylor Britton, Stephen Gebbink, Bryce Campbell, Mark Walper, Adam Casemore, Mark Horsley; coaches Mel Christensen, Trevor Stoddard, Nick Kletke, Barry Brookes; their general manager, Gilbert Renaud; and their trainer, Lynn Richards.

Mr. Speaker, go, Vipers, go. Go, Oilers, go. Go, Flames, go. Long live hockey.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and recognize the achievements of a diverse group of young individuals from my constituency. Each and every year Wetaskiwin and Camrose hold separate award ceremonies honouring the volunteer achievements of young Albertans in the area. The leaders of tomorrow awards recognize and highlight the commitment to community which is displayed by the nominees. The age of those nominated ranges from six years of age all the way up to 25. While only eight people receive the leaders of tomorrow awards, being nominated is a sign of the commitment which these young people have shown to a variety of causes. The nominees volunteer for many varied organizations, helping out many different parts of their community.

On April 24 the dedication of four young people from Wetaskiwin and area was recognized. The recipients at this award ceremony were Destiny Schmidt, Katherine Fraser, Sonja Fedorak, and Christopher Kirwan.

On April 26 four outstanding individuals from Camrose and area were honoured for their achievements. The recipients at this award ceremony were Shawn Eelhart, Jodi Harrison, Jamie Wold, and Jennifer Redstone.

Each of the winners as well as all of those nominated have demonstrated a strong interest in making their communities a better place to live. I look forward to seeing what amazing feats all of these young people will accomplish in the years to come. These individuals have been recognized by their communities as the leaders of tomorrow, and their actions leave no doubt that they are also leaders of today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Universal Child Care

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Universal child care and caregivers. This past Saturday, April 29, the hon. members for Edmonton-Mill Woods, Calgary-Currie, Calgary-Mountain View, and myself sponsored a child care public forum at the Banff Trail Community Centre, located in the Calgary-Varsity constituency. Sixty-four individuals from a variety of child care backgrounds, including stay-at-home mothers and fathers, public and for-profit daycare workers and owners, representatives and care providers from before and after school care organizations, shared their concerns. Regardless of their personal situation or their varying approaches to providing care, the common message that they shared was their love and concern for the well-being of children.

They also stressed the need to raise government awareness of the importance and the value of caring for children, whether in the home or in an accredited institution. They praised the Alberta Children's Services minister for the bold five-point plan which she had negotiated with the former federal minister, Ken Dryden, as a good first step. The plan recognized the need for accreditation and funding increases for institutional caregivers as well as financial support for stay-at-home parents. Everyone present called upon our provincial Minister of Children's Services to honour her commitment to the principles of the five-point plan regardless of Prime Minister Harper's failure to recognize the importance of and to fund the inclusive plan that was 18 months in the making. They urged us and through us the Minister of Children's Services to work with them to create and fund a made-in-Alberta plan which recognizes both the value of children and their caregivers, whether within or outside of the home.

We have pledged our commitment to work with and assist in the organization of child care committees as well as to hold child care public forums throughout the province. Today's children determine tomorrow's future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Portage College Sports and Education Dinners

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 28 and 29 Portage College hosted two major fundraising events in Cold Lake and Lac La Biche. The annual sports and education dinners saw 240 participants in Cold Lake and 250 in Lac La Biche.

The headline speakers were two well-known Albertans: former NHL hockey star and Stanley Cup winner Brian Skrudland and world long drive champion Jason Zuback, who has won the championship an unprecedented four times. The funds raised from these two popular events will go towards supporting learners of Portage College through bursaries and scholarships. Additional speakers included scholarship recipients Richard Baikie and Belva Cardinal as well as local athletes, Canadian bodybuilding champion Tammy Becotte, and former NASCAR driver Ken Staples.

The result of these two fundraising events was that more than $35,000 will be added to the scholarship endowment at Portage College for future learners. There is hope that these funds will be matched perhaps on a 2 to 1 basis from the access to the future fund through the Department of Advanced Education. This could generate an additional $70,000, bringing the total amount raised in the two events to over $100,000 in scholarship funds.

At the Lac La Biche event Canadian Natural Resources announced

a generous donation of $150,000 to Portage College to demonstrate the commitment of CNRL to the communities they serve in north-eastern Alberta. We thank them for their continuing support.

Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to see these initiatives geared at improving our postsecondary services for students in northern Alberta.

Thank you.

Motion Picture Industries Association Awards

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this past weekend in the city of Edmonton 1,000 members and friends of the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association gathered to honour and recognize the best in class. I was privileged to join about 20 of our colleagues from the Assembly at the 32nd annual film and television awards gala dinner. More than 600 entries resulted in a total of 53 category winners ranging from best actor and actress to cinematography, costume design, and finally, best overall production. The big winner of the evening was the film Waking Up Wally, which most in the Assembly will recognize as the Walter Gretzky story.

Mr. Speaker, an evening like this past weekend gives one a brief glimpse into the incredible potential this renewable resource has for our province. We have more than 3,000 Albertans earning a living as members of our unions and guilds in their roles as cameramen, actors, grips, costume designers, writers, directors. Of course, the foundation of our industry is made up of the hundreds of producers and production companies and small businesses that serve this great industry. Many of those small businesses, which range from caterers to equipment rental firms to hotels and restaurants, are located in rural Alberta. Many of the productions recognized this past weekend were filmed in locations such as Drumheller, Canmore, High River, Bragg Creek, Peace River, and Longview.

I should point out that the Alberta motion picture awards, known as the Rosies, is the largest provincial event of its kind in Canada, a tribute to the commitment and enthusiasm of the people that make up our film and television industry. So today I would like to recognize these 53 award winners and all of the committed Albertans that make the Alberta film and television industry the envy of Canada, an industry we can all take pride in.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Groundwater Safety

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On gas migration and groundwater. Alberta has a brilliant future in energy development, both nonrenewable and renewable, but it must be done right. Public health and safety comes first. Water quantity and quality are paramount in ensuring people's health and livelihoods.

It has long been known that many groundwater sources in rural Alberta contain hydrocarbons, especially methane gas. The question that continues to be asked by landowners and not answered by regulators is whether the gas is indigenous to the water well or it migrated into the water from nearby oil and gas activities. Industry has done investigations, and little public information is available. There is now substantial evidence from laboratories and researchers across the province that gas has migrated into aquifers in some instances due to fossil fuel extraction. However, this has not been systematically examined to identify specific causes and remedies. We don't know what we need to know to assure citizens, especially rural landowners, that their lifeblood is safe.

Several steps are needed to ensure safe, sustainable groundwater. Number one, Alberta Environment must establish a valid, reliable baseline testing protocol, both quantitative and qualitative, for groundwater in conjunction with scientists and laboratories. Number two, Alberta Environment and the EUB should establish a public and independent groundwater committee on gas migration and groundwater to oversee the investigation of groundwater problems, starting in the Horseshoe Canyon, and make recommendations. Number three, Alberta Environment should move quickly to establish accurate groundwater mapping as a priority in the Horseshoe Canyon. Number four, the Energy and Utilities Board must review and implement the best available technology for CBM extraction to ensure minimal adverse effects. Number five, the Environment and Energy ministries should consider a multistakeholder organization similar to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance to review and make recommendations on CBM to ensure that regulations reflect the priority of environmental protection and groundwater protection.

Future generations will judge us on the degree to which we face our ignorance of our groundwater, learn what we need to, and prevent further migration of hydrocarbons into our aquifers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following private bill proceed: Bill Pr. 1, Burns Memorial Trust Amendment Act, 2006.

The committee recommends that the following private bills proceed with amendments: Bill Pr. 2, Mary Immaculate Hospital of Mundare Act, and Bill Pr. 3, Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006.

As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the proposed amendments to bills Pr. 2 and Pr. 3.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

The Speaker: Will all hon. members who concur in the report please say yes.

Hon. Members: Yes.

The Speaker: Would those who oppose please say no. It's carried.

head:

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition that I received from staff and students from the Nordegg school in Rocky Mountain House, Alberta. I have six copies from the six petitioners, who are proposing some initiatives they believe could be used to curb an increase in teen smoking.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have, actually, three different batches of petitions. I'll present them as one. They total 3,126 signatures. These are all from people who were protesting the government's third way, asking them to abandon those third-way plans – obviously, they were successful – asking to defeat legislation expanding private, for-profit hospitals, and asking the government to uphold the Canada Health Act.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition from my constituency in St. Albert, which totals 75, regarding the implementation of the third way, which will drain key resources of the public system, and the contravening of the Canada Health Act. The same with the petition from 204 constituents in rural Alberta. I'd like to table these with the gentleman to my left.

Thank you.

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a memo dated April 18, 2006, from Corinne McCabe and Bob Holt, executive directors with the Edmonton public school board. The memo refers to the board's proposed planning base for 2006-2007 and notes an anticipated $7 million deficit for the 2005-2006 school year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies of the Alberta Gazette, part 1, February 28, 2006. It clearly shows that there was a correction in the Gazette which shows that the land in Fort McMurray sold to Fort McMurray Housing Inc. was sold for $2.8 million, not the $2,800 that was formerly indicated. I can inform the Speaker as well that there will be another erratum. In fact, this one still says that it's block 1, lot 2, and there were two parcels: block 1, lot 1 and lot 2. It's interesting to note that this land was appraised at $1.8 million, and we received $2.8 million for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter to which I earlier referred from union local 488 to their U.S.A. counterparts, advising that this government is "conspiring" to import workers from Venezuela, South Korea, India, or Pakistan but instead invites 10,000 workers from the United States.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head:

Main Estimates 2006-07

Government Services

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you very much, and good afternoon, colleagues. Thank you for the opportunity to move the estimates for Government Services and speak to the business plan for 2006 to 2009.

Government Services touches the lives of Albertans each and every day. Whenever someone in Alberta registers their car, buys a house, starts a business, or needs help to deal with a consumer issue, they are accessing the services, products, and information offered by my ministry, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to share with you today the business and financial plan that we've outlined for the next three years to ensure that we continue to provide these and many other services to Albertans effectively and efficiently.

Before I do that, I want to thank the previous ministers that have taken over this posting and have done a great job and made my job a lot easier. This department is very well run, and I have to tell you that I'm so very, very proud of the staff that work for Government Services but, more importantly, work with me. Up in the gallery today we have with us my assistant, Daryn Fersovich, who came with me from the chairmanship of the standing policy committee on energy. He has been learning this posting with me and has been doing a great job. Beside him is Colleen Quartly. Colleen has been just an outstanding member of my team in the office.

Mr. Chairman, I'll start by giving you an overview of the three core businesses. First, we provide efficient and secure access to government programs and services. This includes our licensing and registration services as well as the Service Alberta website, a new addition to Government Services, and the Service Alberta call centre, which was recently transferred to Government Services from the Public Affairs Bureau.

Some of the staff that has just joined us I'd like to also introduce. Like I said earlier, I've had just a great team that have got me up to speed with this ministry. I'd like to mention the deputy minister, Mr. Robert Bhatia. Robert would have been here today, but his mom was in a car accident, and he's where he should be: with this family. He has given me the opportunity to work with some great people: Laurie Beveridge, the assistant deputy minister of consumer services and land titles; Wilma Haas, the assistant deputy of Service Alberta and registries; Sue Kessler, the acting assistant deputy minister for program support services; Lori Cresey, our senior adviser officer; and Cathy Housdorff, our communications director. Cathy has been very, very valuable to me, giving me advice on the many people issues that we deal with. Also today joining some of the staff is Donna Rogers. Donna, as most of you know, served the previous Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and Infrastructure and Transportation. She has been around here for a while, so when Donna says something, I just say, "Yes, Donna, I'll do that, thank you," and I just get to work.

Anyway, about our ministry. As well as the Public Affairs Bureau, we deal with the second core business, and it's to support a fair and effective marketplace here in Alberta. We do this by regulating a variety of businesses that provide services to Albertans and by providing consumers the information they need about their rights and responsibilities. Also, under our second core business the Utilities Consumer Advocate represents the interests of Alberta residential farm and small commercial consumers in the restructured utilities market. They work towards improvements in the regulatory process and the service delivery. I think most of you here know my background in this Legislature on protecting consumers on the utilities side, so I'm very much interested in working with these folks within my ministry.

Finally, our third core business is that we provide strategic leadership in information management and access and privacy protection. That includes the responsibility for Alberta's privacy legislation and overall approaches for managing the information of government.

In providing these core businesses to Albertans, Government Services strives to fulfill our vision to serve Albertans with excellence and innovation.

Now to our business plan. Mr. Chairman, to effectively manage our core businesses, we developed our business and financial plan by prioritizing our programs and services to focus resources on the most critical areas. To do so, we considered the impacts on Albertans, our legislative mandate, the financial benefits realized, and the opportunity for future expansion of the program. We also took into consideration the growing challenges facing us as a government and as a ministry.

The biggest challenge we face is simply how fast this province is growing. According to a recent Stats Canada report, Alberta's population increased by more than five times the national average during the last three months of 2005. That's amazing. You ask me: what was that? It was more than five times the national average during the past three months of 2005. Our economy has also been growing by leaps and bounds, bringing with it, you know, a wealth of new opportunities for this province.

Our economic and population growth also brings us new challenges. This is particularly true for Government Services. As I outlined earlier, Government Services delivers many of the day-to-day services that the provincial government provides to Albertans. They demand that the services increase as our population does. For example, Mr. Chairman, with the significant increase in the numbers of homes being built, bought, and sold in Alberta, there's an equally significant increase in land title transactions.

I have to tell you about an experience that Daryn and I had down in Calgary when we went to the land titles office. These queues of documents come in each and every day, and in each file there's a land transaction. They deal with files not in numbers of one, two, or three; they deal with it at six feet as an average working day. Six feet of files. The day or two previous to the day that we visited the land titles folks down in Calgary, 12 feet of transactions came in. It's amazing, the volumes and volumes of work that this department does, and they can only keep up because they're so experienced and so dedicated, Mr. Chairman. I'm so very, very proud of the fact that we have people that can take on that work, take on that challenge, and deliver to Albertans each and every day.

We experienced an increase of nearly 975,000 land transactions, including both registration and searches, this year compared to '04-05. This upward trend is expected to continue as well. That's what I talk about when I talk about six feet a day of files in an office, and all of a sudden one day 12 feet appears. You know, there's a huge, huge increase in the workload that Government Services staff have.

The increase in homes being built has also put pressure on consumers, who seek reputable contractors and tradespeople. We hear from members from Calgary who talk about a home being completed every 45 minutes in Calgary. The growth is just amazing in parts of our province, and all that growth is managed through Government Services. This challenge translates into an increased workload for our staff that investigate consumer concerns. Demands on our motor vehicle and vital statistics registries are also on the rise, with no end in sight. As we all know, with 65,000 Albertans moving to this great province each and every year, they need services, and Government Services staff and this ministry will deliver. In addition to the increases in the sheer volume of transactions, we're also seeing an increase in expectations. Albertans expect a very, very high level of service, and we plan on delivering, Mr. Chairman. You can count on that.

But more than ever Albertans expect us to be diligent in identifying mortgage and identity fraud and ensuring the security of the documents and the information that we hold. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, my ministry will colead one of the government's eight top priorities, and that's protecting people's personal information. We talked a little bit about this with staff in the last while. We do a little exercise in our home. We have a shredder in our home, and my mom and my sister and my brother bring documents to our house every time we have a birthday or a gathering. They use our shredder, and they're shredding these documents.

I think each and every one of you have probably received a credit card in the mail, and it says: just simply call in and activate this and sign it, and you've got a credit card. Well, you know, identity theft is on the rise, and when we have the activity that we do here in this great province, we also have some con people that are out there willing to take advantage of people. So I've talked with our staff. Maybe we need to make consumers aware of the risks of taking one of those credit cards that we get in the mail or taking our utility bills and just throwing them in the garbage. A lot of us rural MLAs that live a couple of blocks from here that like to walk to work – and I've talked to most of you – have all seen people digging through the bins, and you never know what they come up with. Mr. Chairman, maybe we're going to have to have a shred day or something like that in Alberta to teach people about the value of the identity theft that may be occurring each and every day in our back alleys. Maybe we're going to have to do something like that to make Albertans aware.

But, Mr. Chairman, we also need to improve Albertans' awareness of the services offered by the ministry so that they know where to turn when they need us and of the renewal of our personal property, land titles, and motor vehicle registry systems so that we can meet the growing demands for the services and increased security requirements.

Mr. Chairman, keeping the extensive portfolio of legislation and regulations that we're responsible for current and responsive to emerging issues is very, very important. You know, Government Services is up to the challenge, and we are continually striving to enhance our services to meet the growing demands. I'd like to outline for you now some of the specific opportunities that we have identified to improve service delivery in many areas of the ministry through the strategic application of resources and technology.

In support of our three core businesses we have prioritized our programs and services to focus our resources on five major goals. Our first and our highest priority is "efficient licensing and registration services." You know, we work hard to make sure that our registry services are accessible, affordable, and secure. As stewards of personal information of Albertans, Government Services has the responsibility to ensure the integrity of this registry information and protect it from all risks, Mr. Chairman.

Of the five registries that exist in Government Services, vital statistics produces documents that are amongst the most sought after by identity thieves. You know, these documents, such as birth certificates, can be used to obtain other important documents such as drivers' licences and credit cards, so we're developing a more coordinated and integrated approach to security solutions for the vital statistics registry. Changes include improvements in the physical transfer and storage of registry documents, information technology access to registries, and processes that promote compliance with any security measures.

We are also committed to keeping our fees affordable and are confident that our key services will remain competitively priced below the national average for similar services. Mr. Chairman, I have had lots of discussion with our staff to make sure that we are competitive and that we will remain competitive. We continue to provide examples every day of the Alberta advantage through such things as the low cost of registering your home. I bet most of you in this Assembly didn't know that currently we are 82 per cent below the national average on the cost of registering a home.

Mr. Danyluk: I didn't know that.

Mr. VanderBurg: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul didn't know that either, and I'm sure that most of us didn't know that.

On our automobile registration fees, most recently I've been given the information that we're 27 per cent below the national average, and our driver's licence fee most recently is 29 per cent below the national average. Mr. Chairman, these are figures that we can be very proud of. We are competitive, we offer a great service, and I'm not shy about telling Albertans about this fact.

In addition to measuring our fees, we also measure our success by ensuring that clients are satisfied with the services they receive from our registry agents, and, Mr. Chairman, they are. Albertans continue to be highly satisfied with the service provided by registry agents, and the most recent results show that 89 per cent of the clients using our registry services are satisfied. That's a pretty great figure.

You know, I would say that this is a significant accomplishment since Alberta's vibrant economy and population boom mean that our registry systems support over 17 million transactions every year. [interjection] The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul says, "17 million?" Yes, it is 17 million. That's five transactions for each and every Albertan. Whether you're using our services electronically or at the door, that's a lot. I would say that over the next period we'll see even a greater pressure on our registry systems. Of course, as I mentioned earlier, economic growth is particularly evident in the record number of transactions completed by our land titles staff as well.

Mr. Chairman, extra funding in the past years for additional staff helped to ensure that turnaround times remained at acceptable levels and that client satisfaction remained strong, and it has. As economic growth in Alberta has continued, extra funding has been included once again in our budget to hire additional staff at land titles. I will stand here and I'll tell you, colleagues, that additional staff are needed because of the growth and because of the expectations that Albertans have for great service, and we'll provide that service.

We're also working to improve our systems to manage this growth, and as we progress further with our registry renewal initiative, we anticipate additional improvements to our service delivery for all registries. In total, our registry and licensing services account for 76 and a half million dollars' worth of expenses, and I'm glad to say that we generate revenue in excess of $376 million. [interjection] The Member for Calgary-Shaw asked me to repeat that. We spend 76 and a half million dollars, and we collect $376 million. Mr. Chairman, this is a great accomplishment for Government Services, and, you know, we contribute to the greater wealth of this province.

Our second goal relates to Service Alberta, where we strive to provide "efficient and convenient access to government information and services" across all delivery channels. The most recent result shows that 74 per cent of Albertans surveyed are satisfied with their access to government information and services and that 74 per cent are satisfied with the timeliness with which these services and information are provided. It's like I told my sons when they came home with their report card and said that they got 82 per cent or 74 per cent. I'd say, "Well, what about the other 26 per cent?" or "What about the other 18 per cent?" We can do better. We will, Mr. Chairman. I can guarantee that.

Effective April 1, 2006, government approved the transferring of the Service Alberta call centre, also known as the RITE centre, to Government Services from the Public Affairs Bureau. Mr. Chairman, that number remains 310-0000, and we all use that each and every day, especially when we're travelling up and down the road. It's a handy number to know. Transferring this significant and well-used public service to our ministry provides a tremendous opportunity to fulfill our long-term goals for Service Alberta initiatives and to facilitate both the service improvements and operating efficiencies.

Mr. Chairman, I can talk for hours on this ministry, and I will.

The Chair: Hon. minister, you haven't moved your estimates yet. Would you like to do that?

Mr. VanderBurg: Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman. I did move that right at the beginning of my speech, but I will do that once again.

The Chair: We didn't get that.

Mr. VanderBurg: Okay. That's fine.

The Chair: That way, we have something to debate.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the clarification, and thanks to the hon. minister for moving his department's estimates for 2006-07. I respond in my capacity as Official Opposition critic for Government Services.

To begin with, I must emphasize the positive and functional relationship I have had with the former Minister of Government Services and his staff and now with this new minister, who just last week stood in this House and offered to co-operate with me and with all other Albertans. On Thursday of last week my researcher and I had the pleasure of meeting with the minister, the deputy minister, the communications director, and the minister's assistant. It was sort of a get-to-know-you type meeting and an informal discussion on the issues.

You know, Mr. Chairman, we have many opportunities in this House to act synergistically, but sometimes we don't seize those opportunities for whatever the reason may be. I can tell you, however, that this hon. minister is genuinely interested in co-operation for the benefit of all Albertans and in the interest of doing what's right for the land and its people. As such I, too, will reciprocate and will not only offer to work with him; I will insist on it. I also want to thank the staff at Government Services and wish them all the best.

Now we move to the budget estimates. As the minister mentioned, under Ministry Support Services on page 246 of the budget the estimate for the minister's office is $402,000, which is an increase of 31 per cent over the 2005-06 forecast. Can the minister tell us why this increase was necessary and if it was planned ahead of time? Or was it only an effect of his assuming this new role? Will the minister be increasing the number of employees who are going to work in his office, and if so, why is it necessary? The increase for the deputy minister's office is not as pronounced, and I think that's good.

We move on to consumer services and land titles, which also appears on page 246. Line 2.0.1, program support, the estimate is $607,000. Now, this is a 60 per cent increase over the 2005-06 forecast. Can the minister tell us why such a significant increase in funding was necessary? It's also interesting to notice that this particular program underspent by $201,000 last year, based on the forecast figures. So can the minister tell us why in one year they're underspending, which is really good – you know, if they don't need to spend it, then they don't – but then all of a sudden there is an increase of such dramatic magnitude? Did the minister encounter any serious concerns or complaints in program services last year to warrant such a big investment? How exactly will this additional funding be utilized, and how does he anticipate this money improving program supports?

I am moving on to Service Alberta and registries, which received a significant portion of the hon. minister's introduction this afternoon. On page 246 as well, under line 3.0.1, program support is increasing by 29 per cent over the '05-06 budget. It's now going up to $840,000. Now, this is a significant increase, and again I would appreciate any clarification from the hon. minister as to why this increase in funding was necessary and why so drastically. Were there problems that occurred in program supports, or were there objectives that were not met; hence, the increase in funding?

Moving on to 3.0.2 on the same page, Service Alberta is now going to receive $1.88 million, which is 22 per cent higher than was budgeted last year. Again, this is a significant case, in my view, of overspending. Why did Service Alberta exceed its budget last year and now are receiving more money this year? What factors contributed to that overspending? Service Alberta is essentially unchanged from when it was under the Public Affairs Bureau to now being under this hon. minister. So where is the discrepancy, and what's happening there? Also, from an efficiency standpoint we notice that the Public Affairs Bureau, after relinquishing this responsibility to the hon. minister, did not shrink in size. So they're not getting any smaller. This ministry is also growing. The program was transferred from A to B, but there's more money being pumped in and more FTE staff. Again, we need clarification from the hon. minister.

Moving on to 3.0.3, registry services, which is again a significant component of this ministry, are receiving an 18 per cent increase over the '05-06 forecast. It's now stipulated at $26.4 million.

The Official Opposition continues to hear from Albertans who are very unhappy with the registry services. You know, it would be very hard to justify putting more money into a program that doesn't seem to be receiving a lot of favourable review from the citizens and from the customers that actually use that program. Most of those complaints are regarding the level of service or the quality of the service delivered. I know that the minister quotes satisfaction surveys and so on, but again it's a matter of how representative the sample data are and which people are responding and which people are withholding the response and so on and so forth. Mr. Chairman, as you know yourself as an MLA and as all members of this esteemed House already know, most of the questions raised pertain to the privatization of the registries and, as I mentioned, the services delivered and the quality of the service but also the fees charged and general questions with respect to privacy and security of information.

Today I was discussing this very subject with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning, who is hoping to speak after me, and we agreed that we both like not having to wait in line for extended periods of time. Also, we like having the choice of location, hours of operation, et cetera. But what else did privatization accomplish? As I mentioned, we all receive complaints from constituents about the registry fees and how they have gone up substantially after privatization.

The hon. minister indicated that our registry fee structures are competitive compared to some other jurisdictions. But the question here is: are they really? Why hasn't there been a study conducted to fairly and independently evaluate the effects that this has had on fees? How can we be assured that, yes, indeed, we are competitive? Asking a person if they think $20 is fair is different from comparing our $20 to the other jurisdictions in Canada. Also, how do we compare ourselves to ourselves, factoring in inflation and how costs typically rise, sort of a before and after assessment, before privatization versus after privatization, comparing Alberta to Alberta, not just Alberta to other jurisdictions like Saskatchewan and British Columbia?

Also, I would personally advocate for a periodic review of all the fees charged, both the government component and the registry agent part. We can probably say, "Let's do it every three to four years," for example, to make sure that Alberta is always in the bottom 25 per cent on the fee scale across Canada. So maybe it should be a target not only to assess satisfaction amongst the users or the customers that actually access registry services, but let's set it as a target for this government that we always have to be within the bottom 25 per cent on that fee scale.

If you're thinking more towards including the U.S.A. and Canada as one big region, you know, thinking about NAFTA or free trade, for example – and now particularly, as of today, for example, our dollar is at the 90-cent U.S. mark – how about expanding this registry fees review to include the northern or northwestern states as well to make it a comprehensive and thorough national/regional review?

Mr. Chairman, if I move to the business plan, page 203, under goal 8, ministry services, it states: "Maintaining a competitive licensing and registration fee structure in support of the Alberta Advantage." So, again, it's the idea of: where does that Alberta advantage extend and who does it extend to? When aiming to maintain a competitive structure, does the minister know how competitive we are today compared to, say, 10 or 12 or 15 years ago? That's the question of the before and after, as I mentioned before. If the minister has any statistics as to what is deemed to be attributed to inflation only versus the higher fees after privatization in terms of what percentage the government keeps for itself and what percentage the registry agents charge, then that would be very useful.

Moving on in the business plan, page 208, performance measure 1.c, comparing us to other jurisdictions: this is where I'm saying that we should really set our own goals to be in the bottom 25 per cent rather than just evaluating it. When it's convenient to highlight that we're competitive, then we do; when it isn't, then we don't talk about it. This is me trying to be the consumers' advocate, Mr. Chair. It's looking after business and allowing business to grow and services to be delivered more efficiently while at the same time looking out for our consumers and protecting them.

Another issue at the registries is security, and by that I mean two things: one, the ease with which one can fraudulently obtain government ID. We've received many communications from people in Alberta who have talked to the MLAs from the opposition about, you know, how it's very easy to obtain government ID or a birth certificate, for example. Number two is the security of the documents and information housed in or handled by registry offices. Continuous training and professional educational development for our registry agents are important. Fairly and adequately compensating them so that they don't yield to financial temptation is another angle. We can even add another layer here: empowering and protecting them so that they don't succumb to threats or bullying from organized crime and biker gangs, for example, all that stuff. Identity theft is a growing problem, and tackling it starts at the front line, at the local neighbourhood registry office front desk.

Before I conclude this point, Mr. Chairman, I just want to make an observation. I thought that after privatization this government was going to spend less on registries as it claims to be out of the business of doing business, but the trend is that they spend more each year. The Auditor General in his 2004-05 report on page 211 indicated that the ministry spent $37 million from 2002 to 2005 and now expects the costs to significantly exceed the original $100 million estimates. They call it the registry renewal initiative.

Take into consideration, Mr. Chairman, please, that this is so while no significant work has been started on (a) the motor vehicle registry or (b) the registration subsystem of the land titles registry. So what exactly are we looking at here, and how can this be justified to Albertans, who are now being asked to fork out the money twice: right, as a registry services user or consumer paying more; left, as a taxpayer supporting more government spending on the registries? So we need clarification here, please.

Moving on, under the government and program support services estimates on page 246, line 4.0.1, this is a 16 per cent increase from the 2005-06 budget, a significant increase. Can the minister tell us why this increase was necessary? How exactly will this additional money be used? Were there concerns with program supports from last year that needed to be addressed?

Line 4.0.4, the estimate for legislative planning and freedom of information and privacy services is a 60 per cent increase – 6-0 – from the 2005-06 forecast, now going up to $749,000. Now, this is very significant. I'm approaching this from two sides because I also look after freedom of information and the protection of privacy as the critic. So how much of this money is going into the implementation of the proposed amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which is now being discussed in this House under the title of Bill 20? Now, it's no secret, Mr. Chairman, that the opposition is definitely against the passage of certain parts of Bill 20, and we are concerned that some of this money might be used toward adding more layers of secrecy to a government that is already overly secretive.

When we met with the minister last week, as I mentioned, he assured us that he's interested in working with Albertans. I think that this is one area where he can demonstrate such genuine interest by agreeing to some of the amendments that the opposition is proposing to make the government open, transparent, and to hold them accountable. Adding more layers of secrecy now, especially with this estimate, is the wrong way to go.

Moving on to the Utilities Consumer Advocate, which was briefly mentioned by the hon. minister. I have to start by saying that my feelings go out to the deputy minister after his mother's car crash, and I wish her and him all the best.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate, as is evident on page 247, line 6.0.1, is receiving a 40 per cent increase from the '05-06 budget. Again, very significant. Can the minister tell us how exactly this money is going to be spent? How will the Utilities Consumer Advocate be improving his advocacy services for Albertans?

We raised this last year in budget debate, and we're doing it again this year, that we think it is not the proper way to go to have the Utilities Consumer Advocate, who advocates on behalf of citizens and people and consumers, be the same person as the deputy minister. He's wearing two hats, and we think that there is a conflict or at least that he might not be allocating the necessary time and resources to doing both jobs efficiently. Nothing against the person, but the question is with the scope, the mandate, and how effective this position is. Especially after deregulation many people have issues. Their only recourse is to go to the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

The role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, Mr. Chairman, also comes into question because this government seems to think that the bulk of his job is to inform Albertans on why deregulation of utilities was good for them. So it's more of a sales job rather than a recipient of complaints and somebody who reacts to those complaints. Why is this government increasing the budget to educate consumers about government policy instead of advocating on their behalf? Again, we think he should be at arm's length, and we think that it's time to separate the role of the deputy minister from that of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. If the minister agrees and if he takes that direction, I would not only be appreciative, I would actually support him and back him on that decision, the issue of impartiality and the issue of doing their job effectively.

Mr. Chairman, I can probably go on and on dissecting the line-by-line composition of this budget, but I can't help but drift back to the angle of consumer protection. Alberta does not have a stand-alone consumer protection act, unlike other jurisdictions. I know for sure that Ontario, for example, has one. Instead we have several little acts here and there dealing with various topics and instances but nothing central or paramount or overarching. So I think it's time now, in Alberta's second century, to look at a stand-alone consumer protection act, and it would be great if the hon. minister champions that cause and puts it forward. Again, this would be something that I would be in support of.

This is an item that I forgot earlier. On page 207, under core business 1, goal 1, strategy 1.3, to "undertake initiatives to validate and secure information held within the Ministry's registries." On the issue of privacy again, can the minister tell us exactly what initiatives are in place or what is being currently worked on, you know, to secure and ensure the safekeeping of information that is either housed in or processed by Alberta's registries? The issue of security does not only extend to the equipment or the computers or the records but also to the personnel and to make sure that these guys are trustworthy and that we are minimizing the possibility of leaks and waste and abuse.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. You know, I appreciate the comments that the Member for Edmonton-McClung has made. I do expect that I'll have to give you some of the answers in writing because I don't think we'll have the time to cover it all. But we are working on the issues that you have raised.

Mr. Chairman, in the upcoming years we look forward to working with all ministries to enhance the services offered through the Service Alberta call centre and the content and functionality of the website that they offer. We'll also collaborate to develop a business and service delivery model that will position Service Alberta to deliver more services on behalf of government. For example, in order to meet changing expectations for licensing and registration services, we plan to implement online renewal of licences for regulated businesses. I think that will really enhance the services needed. The Service Alberta initiative amounts to approximately $2.4 million of our expenses.

Mr. Chairman, under our third goal we aim to ensure that Alberta has "informed consumers and businesses and a high standard of marketplace conduct." The success of this program is mainly measured by client satisfaction, which is very high for both the call centre and our tipsheets that we provide. Investigative services are evaluated based on the likelihood that a client would recommend this service to a friend, and our indication is that 84 per cent that have used the service would recommend it to a friend. I think that that figure speaks for itself.

Oversight and management of Alberta's residential tenancies legislation was also a major initiative related to this goal. This legislation provides a framework for Albertans who rent their homes. As we talked about yesterday in this Legislature, we introduced in Edmonton a pilot service to handle landlord and tenant disputes without resorting to the courts. This service will allow Albertans to resolve tenancy issues in an effective and economical manner without placing an additional burden on the justice system. Mr. Chairman, 5,000 cases went to our courts last year dealing with residential landlord disputes. It's hoped that through this service we can divert about 1,500 of those cases through the Government Services ministry and provide a much quicker service and for sure a less painful method of resolving disputes rather than using the courts.

On other fronts, we'll continue to consult with industry and the public, and yes, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, I'll be working with you on issues that affect Albertans each and every day. To the Member for Edmonton-McClung, you had brought up issues that a lot of people that you talk with aren't happy with our service. Maybe that's because you're an opposition member – I don't know – but people come to me, and they're pretty darn proud of the service they get. But I'll make that commitment to you, right here in front of all our colleagues, that if you have any specific concerns and if people come to you that aren't satisfied, I'd ask you to write down their name, get their address, get their concern. We have staff up here that handle that. They specialize in dealing with people. Let's not just talk about "people are unhappy." Let's get those unhappy people and make them happy people, and let's get these stats up for all Albertans. So I'd like that commitment from you that you'd do the same.

Mr. Chairman, I think that we can serve Albertans in a much better fashion if we get everybody on the same page. Our department staff will ensure that those people are taken care of whether they are your constituents, mine, or the members' around here. All Albertans deserve good service, and we'll provide that.

On other fronts, Mr. Chairman, we'll continue to consult with our service providers in an effort to develop the most efficient structure for the Funeral Services Regulatory Board, just to name one. Again, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung had brought this to my attention, and we will make sure that we enhance consumer protection dealing with those sensitive issues.

We allocate about $10 million of our expenses to protecting and educating consumers. Again, the Member for Edmonton-McClung brought up the Utilities Consumer Advocate office. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that this service as provided is one of the gems of Government Services. You know, whether you have a concern or whether a constituent has a concern, we can just simply pick up the phone, call the Utilities Consumer Advocate, take it off your desk, put it on theirs, and when they phone the utility company, I'll tell you, they pay attention. That's what this service is for. I'm very proud of the fact that so many Albertans have received such great service out of our advocacy office, and they'll continue to. We'll get that message out to Albertans to make sure that this office is there for consumer protection. It's not there for the utility companies; it's there for consumer protection. So you can count on it that we'll be sending that message to Albertans over the next few months.

Mr. Chairman, our fourth goal – and this would cover off a lot of the points raised – is to provide effective advocacy for those 100 million residential, farms, and small consumers that receive utilities. The Utilities Consumer Advocate undertakes a number of vital activities, including ensuring that utility companies address those consumer questions and concerns in a timely and fair manner, not just the call centre. This is going to be in a timely, fair manner, and those Albertans will get results, I can assure you that. Also, on the utilities advocate's interests with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and their other regulatory proceedings, we're there to make sure that consumers are represented. It's not our intention that we take over the intervenors that regularly attend, and I can tell you that there are lots of people that make a profession and a very good living intervening just for the sake of intervening. We're there to protect consumers.

In the coming three-year cycle the Utilities Consumer Advocate intends to improve representation of consumers at the regulatory hearings. If we need to bring in some specific witnesses or experts, we will, and we'll make sure that consumers' issues are taken care of. We'll make sure that we make Albertans more aware of the role that's offered by the UCA office, and we'll meet that challenge.

Mr. Chairman, I think most, especially the rural members, are aware that the new regulated rate option will come into effect this July, and we're going to make sure that the UCA will play a role informing consumers and stakeholders. I think especially the REAs, that represent the farm consumer out there, will need a little bit of help, and we'll provide that. Therefore, this year we're also implementing a program to build consumer understanding of their options in the restructured electricity and natural gas markets and increase the awareness of the services that the UCA can offer.

The UCA, let's not forget, is fully funded by the electricity and natural gas consumers through the electricity balancing pool and the natural gas distributors, respectively, at a cost of $6.7 million per year. Any funds not required for the program in a given year are carried forward to the next year.

Mr. Chairman, I talked about five goals. I got through four of them, and our fifth and final goal is to provide "effective programs and services for information management, access to information and protection of privacy." Again, the Member for Edmonton-McClung had talked about the protection of privacy. Both the business community and the public make good use of our information services. We respond to over 180,000 calls and 10,000 e-mails per year and receive approximately 700,000 hits on our website per month. The member behind asked me, "How many hits was that?" That was 700,000 hits per month on our website. That's a lot of hits. I can tell you that I've used that website, and it's very friendly to users. Those of you that are interested, I encourage you to take the time to see how you can better serve your constituents by knowing that website a bit.

Mr. Chairman, new this year. Government Services will provide leadership through the development of best practices and educational tools for protecting people's personal information, a top priority of the government of Alberta and a top priority of this ministry. Another major initiative under this goal is our comprehensive review of Alberta's private-sector privacy legislation, scheduled to start by July of '06. This legislation establishes clear, concise, and common-sense rules for private-sector organizations that collect, use, and disclose personal information here in Alberta.

We also plan to work with the Provincial Archives of Alberta to develop a comprehensive digital preservation system to ensure that information of historical significance to the province is preserved digitally and can be accessed into the future. You can only imagine what we would have in our vaults across the province.

Nearly $3.3 million of our expenses are allocated to information management, access to information, and protection of privacy services. I think that would answer another one of the questions that the Member for Edmonton-McClung has raised.

You know, as you can see from the programs and services that I've spoken about today, our ministry has a major impact on the lives of all Albertans. We take pride, Mr. Chairman, in delivering high-quality services, and I'm very pleased that the government's new budget provides significant funding increases of over $10.3 million to allow us to continue the level of quality. The additional funds will allow my ministry to address the many challenges that I've mentioned here today.

Of that funding, Mr. Chairman, $3.2 million has been allocated to address the protection of personal information held in our registry system and to augment training and support for registry agents. Seven hundred thousand dollars has been added to our land titles division to address the increasing demand for services. Like I talked about, when I went into that office and they were dealing with six feet of files, all of a sudden one day 12 feet come in. You know, expectations of Albertans are high. They deserve good service. You can't do that by sitting on your hands and expecting the issue to go away. We need to recruit people, we need to get them into our training program, and we need to put them to work as fast as we can. The Member for Edmonton-McClung is nodding his head. I can tell that he understands this issue. This is a growth issue that we're facing in this province. We'll manage this. Maybe not to the expectations of Albertans instantly, but we'll manage this. I can assure you of that.

There was a million and a half dollars that will be used to address inflation areas and volume increases related to our information technology services. Like it or not, inflation exists, and we have to meet that.

I talked earlier about the pilot project for the opportunity for landlords and tenants to resolve disputes out of court. We'll spend about $300,000 on that. That issue won't go away. It's my expectation that next year we'll be talking about this again. It'll be a higher figure. I really think that for this service, which we're going to offer Albertans once we do an evaluation of the one-year pilot project, you'll be hammering me for all Albertans. You'll say: why aren't we delivering this service to the folks down in Calgary or in Red Deer or in Mayerthorpe or in High Level? My answer to you will be that this has been a successful pilot project, and we'll have to find the resources.

You know, to think that we can deal with 5,000 cases of landlord/tenant disputes in the courts when we can have an opportunity through mediation – well, it's not even mediation. It's an opportunity to sit around, discuss this problem one-on-one, pay $75 to do that, not hundreds and hundreds of dollars hiring lawyers. I think the court application alone is $200. So I think that you'll be hammering me on this a year from now: why aren't we spending more to deliver this service throughout Alberta? I can tell you that we won't just jump into it. We'll evaluate the program, and you and I will talk about the successes of the program and how we're going to convince our colleagues around here to spend a little bit more money and deliver that service to all Albertans.

Also, you asked a bit about the extra money that has been spent on the access to motor vehicle information. Yes, we're spending almost an extra $300,000 to expand our ability to review and ensure compliance of various users of motor vehicle information, so that's where we're spending it.

I think $1.6 million also will go towards increasing public awareness of the services provided by the UCA, so you're going to see some information going out to Albertans. That has to come from somewhere. It'll come out of this budget and the increase that I'm defending here today and asking for your support.

Mr. Chairman, $1.1 million of that increase will be used to fund government-wide increases in manpower costs. Again, that's a fact of life.

Finally, we've added an additional $1.6 million for previously approved increases in amortization and minor adjustments for several programs.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I believe we put forward a fiscally responsible business plan that reflects our continued commitment to excellence in providing vital services to all Albertans.

At this time I'll sit down and hear from other speakers. If for some reason I haven't covered off every point that you've raised, my staff are making some notes and will provide you with some additional written information.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and enter the debate on the motion that was put forward by the Minister of Government Services less than an hour ago, which is about approval of the estimates for the department for the current fiscal year, 2006-2007. I should extend my best wishes to the minister, who is relatively new to his portfolio. He seems to be already fully engaged with the challenges that he faces and the opportunities that he has in order to improve the delivery of services to Albertans that this government provides, to protect their private information, and to make information accessible to them better and faster than has been the case, looking at the record of this government.

Before I get into these issues and get into them in detail, let me quickly put on record the fact that the minister's and my acquaintance goes way back, long before either I was a member of this Assembly or he came in post the election of 2001. I was a young teacher, I guess, at the time in Whitecourt, and he was a very young student in the school where I was teaching. He reminded me as soon as he got elected. In fact, he produced a school yearbook of those times, which had a picture of me with a crewcut. It was kind of an interesting reminder.

An Hon. Member: No. You?

Dr. Pannu: That's right. I wondered if he almost violated my privacy by sharing that picture without first consulting with me. It was quite a pleasant reminder of my wife's and my stay and work in Whitecourt for a little over two years in the early '60s. I'm very pleased to now see this member as a colleague and as a minister doing the things that he is doing.

With respect to the estimates before us, I think many questions with respect to the budget items have been raised, and the minister tried to address several of them. One that I have is about the Utilities Consumer Advocate. There's a fairly large increase in the budget there, I think 40 per cent, from $4.58 million for 2005-06 to 6.4-plus million dollars now. We do need some more information from the minister, although he tried to address this issue, I think, when the question was asked by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung. But more information would be helpful in satisfying me that the quite substantial increase that is showing in that line item is in fact justified and is something that I should vote for.

The ministry's business plan states on page 211, although the Utilities Consumer Advocate's budget is being increased quite substantially, that only 31 per cent of Albertans surveyed were aware of the roles and services that are provided by the same office, so a very small percentage, less than one-third, of Albertans are even aware that an office like this exists. I wonder what the reason for this is. It has to have something to do with more than just the fact that this office is only three years old. I think it was established in 2003, if I am correct, but that alone doesn't explain such a low level of awareness among the Albertans who were surveyed with respect to what this office does.

My suspicion is that if the Utilities Consumer Advocate took more of a public stance on issues and concerns that are brought to his attention by Albertans, if he made his position public more often, if he advocated more than just sending back information when someone complained, that would be a better way of raising awareness than just, I suppose, spending money on increasing awareness through education. Education may be necessary – that is, provision of information on a broader scale – but building a more public advocacy profile for this office might be the way to go if Albertans are going to see much value in the money that this government plans to spend on this office. This office has to be more effective in the eyes of Albertans as an advocate on their behalf for them to have an interest in the office.

The business plan does set a new level of awareness, I guess about 50 per cent, but that's still, I think, very modest given the importance that was attached to this office when it was established in the wake of the deregulation of our utilities in this province and the public outcry over the negative impact that that deregulation had on their pocketbooks. It still continues to bother them to a very large extent.

One interesting report that the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate produced in February 2005 still noted concern over electricity deregulation. I know that this minister as an MLA before he became minister was very much involved in addressing those concerns. This report said that all of the five options suggested by Alberta Energy for the future of residential electrical sales would penalize bill payers and benefit sellers. The report's authors added that we are surprised and disappointed. Albertans expect and deserve that their government will protect their interest in this policy where the individual has little influence on options.

Clearly, the advocate's report here I think puts a finger on a very important issue. It seems that there may be a need to change the powers of the advocate, or some regulations surrounding those matters may have to be changed in order for the advocate to be able to be more effective in providing the protection against those deregulation policies. Better still, I think it might be important to heed the message in that report and perhaps revisit the question of deregulation and if that needs, in fact deserves a closer look for deregulating the system. In any case, there is a concern there that's expressed by the report, and I would like to hear the minister's response to that.

I think the report makes another interesting observation, Mr. Chairman. The consumer advocate's report does in fact express real skepticism about the eventual success of deregulation, based on his survey of the experience of other jurisdictions in North America where deregulation has not succeeded at all in meeting the expectations that were associated with that by the advocates of deregulation. Here's a quote from page 14 of the report which I think would be of interest to the minister.

Government's transition to a competitive retail market has the potential to impose additional costs and risks on small consumers who could face 40% to 45% higher prices based on the current offerings by competitive retailers.

This is on page 14, and the report, of course, is from 2005. It does raise questions about the future of deregulation given what the consumer's advocate has to say. So that's sort of one area.

I want to quickly switch, Mr. Chairman, to another issue which in the business plan is one of the core businesses of the department. It has to do with access by Albertans to the information that they may need about the government. Now, in that connection I think the report of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, that the minister, I'm sure, is aware of – I think this was completed and presented to the government several months ago – has led in fact to the proposed changes in some of the legislation. Some of those changes are included in Bill 20.

While there are some I think justifiable responses by way of proposed changes in the legislation which address the concerns created by the PATRIOT Act in the U.S. and how it might impact the ability of the government to protect information related to Albertans, there are some other very unacceptable aspects of Bill 20, which I want the minister to perhaps look at. I'll be very happy to meet with him in the next day or two to see whether there is any room for making changes in the legislation so that it doesn't make it even more difficult for Albertans to have access to the information that's very, very important for them to make sure that the government has the levels of transparency that they expect this government to have.

The two items there that I have concerns about and have heard from other Albertans expressing concern about, including the press in this province, have to do with two sections, one which will make inaccessible, beyond the reach of Albertans, access to briefing books and briefing notes that the ministers have. I just want to remind the minister that it was that information included in briefing notes that led at the federal level to the sponsorship scandal becoming public. The rest is history. We know what's happened as a result. So that's one part of Bill 20 that I want him to perhaps pay some special attention to. As I said, I'll be very happy to meet with him on very short notice to see if he would be willing to discuss it with me.

The second has to do with the internal audit reports, that that information will not be accessible to Albertans for 15 years after the report had been prepared. That makes the situation worse than it is presently. So Bill 20 has parts of it which will make, in fact, access to information much more difficult and beyond the reach of Albertans, thereby defeating the very purpose of the act that's being amended.

Past that, I have some questions for the minister from the 17 recommendations that were made by the Information and Privacy Commissioner with respect to what needs to be done to change our existing statutes in response to the concerns expressed by the B.C. Information and Privacy Commissioner by way of a long, lengthy report on the impact of the PATRIOT Act in the U.S. and how we need to change our legislation to make sure that our information doesn't get called into courts without our knowledge and revealed to jurisdictions outside of Alberta and Canada.

Recommendations 3 and 4 deal with legislation. There are five recommendations there, Mr. Chairman, which deal with legislative changes, and I'm talking about numbers 4 and 5 of those recommendations. Recommendation 4 says:

Ensure that the offence provisions of the FOIP Act and the HIA . . . That is the Health Information Act.

. . . can be reasonably sustained, that is, the standard is not so high as to preclude a reasonable chance of conviction. The current standard is "willful".

I want to ask the minister what actions either he's proposing to take or the department may have taken already with respect to implementing recommendation 4. Similarly, recommendation 5 says, "Consider the advisability of making similar amendments to the Health Information Act." So those are the two recommendations. I hope the minister can answer that question or that at least he will take it under advisement and inform me about it later.

Mr. Chairman, then I go on to the section on the commissioner's conclusions, which is section 4.3 on page 36. In the last paragraph of that section on the commissioner's conclusions this is what it says:

The position of Canadian ICT outsourcers linked to US-based companies remains unclear and would benefit by reinforcement in law and in model contract provisions. These improvements to legal and contractual frameworks should be matched by more rigorous attention to outsource agreements management by public bodies which choose to use them.

My questions for the minister are these. Does the department have an up-to-date list of public bodies which use information contractors for technology purposes, outsourcers? Does it have a list of those public bodies that outsource this information? Secondly, is that list public? Will the minister make this list public? If it's not already complete, if this list is not up to date, if this list is not there, when does he expect this list to be completed? Unless that is done, any changes in legislation or policy will be all for naught.

Another question that I had is with respect to recommendation 13 under the section Policy/Operational. It's recommendation 13, the very last part of the recommendation. Again, given the pressures of time, I will not read the whole recommendation into the record but part of it.

Whether to make such policy into law poses a dilemma, as discussed. As stated, the decision to outsource is based on a large number of factors. The decision to outsource outside of Canada requires reconsideration of these factors in light of the fact that the public body is that much more removed from the outsourcer.

The reasons that are given are these:

- Different laws;
- Different customs (are laws pertaining to fraud, theft of information and so on regarded or enforced differently?);
- Different workforces (are the outsourcer's employees more transient, less reliable, more difficult to hold accountable, etc.?)

To conclude this recommendation, the Information and Privacy Commissioner gives very strong advice. It's that "the gains realized from outsourcing have to be weighed against the risks presented by the nature (sensitivity, value) and the volume of the information outsourced." My question to the minister is: what action, if any, has the ministry either already taken or is planning to take with respect to recommendation 13?

The Chair: Thirty seconds.

Dr. Pannu: Oh, 30 seconds. In that case, I think I'll conclude and sit down, and maybe the minister will respond to what I have said already. Perhaps I'll have another chance to make some more comments.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Don't worry that you just have 30 seconds left. I did send a note up to my staff to make sure that we set up some time to talk together on some of these issues because there's no way in this set amount of time that I'll even have a chance to answer everything raised.

You know, Mr. Chairman, it's said that the first 10 years of your life set you for the rest of your life, so I thank the member opposite for all that he had done for me in my first 10 years of life and for many, many of my friends that I grew up with in Whitecourt.

The Chair: Hon. minister, perhaps if we could get the ministerial conference in the corner to quiet down a bit, I'd be able to hear you better.

Please proceed.

Mr. VanderBurg: My batteries went dead in my hearing aid, so it doesn't matter anyway.

So I thank the member opposite for his questions. You know, you talked about the Utilities Consumer Advocate funding, and the increase is laid out very well on page 247 of the document. You're right: we have had an increase in our expenditures. In '05-06 Government Services moved to a single deputy minister as opposed to one for the department and one for the UCA.

The Chair: Hon. minister, if I could just interrupt one more time. The conversation that's going on there makes it very difficult to hear you. If you want to carry it on in the back room, that would be good. Please carry on.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Mr. Chairman, we had combined that to ensure the continued excellence in service. Operational responsibility for the UCA was moved to the assistant deputy minister of consumer services and land, who also acts as the assistant Utilities Consumer Advocate. The deputy minister within the government has more impact, authority, and ability to influence government policy and marketplace behaviour than an outside body. The minister already has a mandate to be the protector of the consumer, so the UCA role fits well within his portfolio, and you can be assured that I'll be taking great interest in this role.

It's important to increase the awareness of the UCA so that consumers become aware of the service available to assist them in making their energy choices if they choose to go that route and in dealing with their utility concerns. I've experienced within our constituency the very valuable role that the UCA can play when you do have utility concerns. When the UCA picks up the phone, like I said earlier, and calls the utility company with a concern, there's action. I will make a point of talking with our utility companies about how we can better interact and get better results for all Albertans when they do have a concern.

So it's important to make Albertans aware of this service. We've initiated steps to further advance this awareness. We're doing that by communication via our website and consumer information centre, so I'd ask the member opposite to take advantage of that website and give me your opinion on what you see. I need that feedback as well. We're going to make sure that there are speaking engagements by the advocate and staff, so if you have an area where there are utility concerns, contact me, and we'll make sure that we have an opportunity for the advocate and our staff to get out throughout Alberta and meet with consumers.

The Utilities Consumer Advisory Council has been throughout Alberta. I don't know if you've taken the time to go and attend one of those meetings, but those town hall meetings are very, very important, and we'll continue to do those.

I'll make myself available for media interviews on various topics, and I think you've seen me. I've only three or four weeks in action in this ministry, but I'm not afraid to attack consumer issues, and we'll do that. A full-time consumer and market communications manager will be involved with making sure that this does happen.

The UCA information materials, including a folder for plain energy language contracts, must be distributed to consumers when they sign the contract. I witnessed a lot of these contracts that were given to Albertans early on in the marketplace, and I'll tell you, you needed a Philadelphia lawyer to explain to you what it really said, plus you needed better glasses than I had to read the fine print on the back side. I don't think it's very smart on behalf of utility companies to offer a product like that to average Albertans. It's different if you're an Alberta Newsprint or a Millar Western, that I have in my constituency, that use a couple of million dollars a month worth of energy. Well, they have people on staff to make sure they get the best deal, but our neighbours and our family sure don't have that opportunity. So that's where the UCA can play a very, very important role.

We're going to target marketing and advertising, and we'll include that in trade shows. All of us in our small communities have trade shows, and thousands of people walk through those trade shows. That one-to-one information, I think, is very, very valuable because you know yourself that you can take an ad out in the Edmonton Journal or the Edmonton Sun, and who knows who's reading it? But when you're out at one of our local trade fairs, you can directly talk to the people that walk by you each and every day.

The UCA has developed a protocol for co-operation among small consumer intervenor groups at regulatory proceedings of the EUB. By providing a protocol for review and consultation on regulatory issues, we've reached consensus on more issues, and we're improving the strength and effectiveness of all interventions while maximizing the return to the consumers. Mr. Chairman, you know how important that is at our homes each and every day that we get the best deal that we can.

The protocol has been included as part of a memorandum of understanding between the advocate and consumers' groups. A list of signatories include the AUMA – the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association – the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Public Institution Consumers of Alberta, the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, the Alberta Federation of REAs, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Alberta chapter. So we're working with those groups to make sure that Albertans are protected on the utility side.

The percentage of intervenors expressing satisfaction with the co-operative protocol utilized by the Utilities Consumer Advocate was dropped for the following reasons, and I've made some notes. The survey of intervenors, including parties outside of the signatories to the protocol, including industrial consumer organizations: these parties can oftentimes be at odds with positions taken on behalf of the small consumers. Given the very small population of intervenors and conflicting interests of some of the responders, this measure was not an accurate indicator of success. Accordingly, it's been dropped as a measure.

The member opposite also talked about the privacy of information, and maybe I can talk a little bit about that. I can assure you that protecting people's private information is one of government's top priorities, one of the ministry's top priorities, and one of my top priorities. So I agree that the two of us can work together to better provide that protection, and we'll set up a meeting very, very shortly to discuss those issues together. That's why we've introduced specific amendments to the Alberta Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and that'll clarify the disclosure rules and increase penalties for violation, Mr. Chairman. For example, the amendments will clarify how the act applies to library collections of certain records of the internal auditor and ministries, and punitive fines have increased up to $500,000 from a maximum of $10,000 previously; $500,000 new, $10,000 old.

We are exploring other solutions together with other departments across government to address the potential for foreign authorities to view the private information of Albertans without proper authorization, including changing the language of our own contracts. This concern is nationwide, and we'll continue to work with other jurisdictions in a common approach to ensure that the issue is raised at a national level. I haven't been briefed on exactly when that'll happen, but when that happens, when that opportunity exists for me to meet with other ministers across the nation that are dealing with this, I'll make sure that you get that information because I see how important this is to you.

This legislation establishes clear, concise, and common-sense rules for private-sector organizations that collect, use, and disclose personal information here in Alberta. All legislation is reviewed on a regular basis to ensure that it continues to meet the need as it was intended. We're looking forward to receiving feedback from business and the public on this important legislation, and from you, sir. The legislation review will commence on or before July of this year.

Consistent and effective management of all information assets across government, including electronic records such as e-mail: Albertans will be able to access the digital archives of governments in years to come just like they can access paper records at the Provincial Archives today.

So to the member through you, Mr. Chairman, we'll provide additional written information for you on those topics and look forward to our meeting in the next coming weeks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to begin by commending the minister and his predecessor for the excellent service in the motor vehicle registries in the province of Alberta. Not only has there been a proliferation of locations at which one can obtain a licence, but the efficiency of those operations is highly commendable. Having said that, I want to raise to the minister's attention some concerns that I have and some particular data that I wish to bring to his attention as well relating to out-of-province vehicle registrations.

During the month of April 2006 the fine folks at the Calgary-Nose Hill constituency office conducted a small survey of licence plates in or near my constituency of Calgary-Nose Hill and northwest Calgary. We surveyed samples of 100 vehicles and counted how many vehicles were out-of-town licences. This was done during the third week of April. Transport and commercial vehicles were excluded from the survey, and the survey was repeated five times in a single day.

The results of those counts ranged from 3 per cent to 9 per cent out-of-province vehicles per hundred vehicles, which produced an average of 5.25 per cent of out-of-province licences on a total sample size of 500. A similar count was done on the QE II between Calgary and Olds with two samples of 100 vehicles, and the results were 5 per cent and 3 per cent, for an average of 4 per cent on a total sample size of 200.

As I said, the survey was done in late April, which is not a prime tourist month, and I'd venture to say that most of those vehicles were individuals who have moved into Alberta and, particularly in the case of Calgary, have moved there and chosen not to convert their licence plates within the mandatory 60-day period that our legislation provides. I suspect that many of those vehicles have failed to register because of (a) the out-of-province inspection requirements in our legislation and (b) the fact that they have cheaper public insurance available in the home provinces.

Now, based on the completely unscientific survey which we conducted and the total number of vehicles registered in the city of Calgary, which is 743,767, that would mean that roughly 39,000 out-of-province vehicles are driving through the streets of the city of Calgary alone. If that is so, at $70 per licence this would translate into roughly $2.7 million per year for one city alone in lost revenue. The concern is that this revenue is being lost to the maintenance of our roads and our infrastructure.

I believe that some sort of program ought to be co-ordinated in order to increase the compliance with the requirement to get Alberta licence plates once people move to the province. The question I guess I have for the minister is whether or not there are any statistics kept regarding the number of people that are moving into the province vis-à-vis the number of new vehicle registrations, because I assume that most of these people that are coming to the province come with their vehicles, and whether or not there is some way to do some calculations on the statistics with respect to compliance with the registration requirements under our legislation. Further, I'm wondering whether or not some sort of a selective enforcement program could be co-ordinated with the checkstop program or with some other program which the Solicitor General may be capable of conducting.

Those are my questions.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you for those comments, and I would say that most of them are comments. In my earlier discussions I had talked about the pressure on Alberta border to border: 65,000 people moving to this province. You know, we are going to face an increase of about 10 per cent in our registries in the upcoming year, and you know very well that once you become a permanent resident, you need to change your driver's licence; you're going to need to change your licence plates. I understand that even as early as last week, with the meetings between the Premiers of British Columbia and Alberta and other ministries, we will have some common work between our provinces on registries. Where that ends up, I don't know.

I can say that I haven't got any specific data that I have seen to date on how many Albertans are driving around with, you know, licence plates from other jurisdictions. I would say that in my community, Whitecourt, I probably experience the same kind of stats that you have. When we had our standing policy committees in Fort McMurray, I would say that it was even greater. But it all works out in the end, and I think that we're going to see those folks not only change their registration but, more than likely, make investments in Alberta, stay here because they're working here and they're finding that Alberta's a great place to work and live and play and raise their family.

So if there are some statistics that I can share with you, I will get those from the ministry and will pass them on, but I don't have anything at my fingertips that I can say will give you some solid evidence to back up your information.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I want to express to the minister congratulations on his appointment. It's been refreshing listening to him this afternoon. The last time I met a minister of that calibre, I got fired. So I hope that doesn't happen to me in the House, told to sit down.

The first thing I'd like to ask the minister is if he could enlighten me if he has any views on drivers' licences for seniors. I have a constituent who's concerned about the cost of his licensing and the kind of bad press he gets, and he's kind of getting worried. He's of the vintage of over 75. So maybe I could get his views on that.

Also, I have another constituent – and I think I've filed the letter in the House – I don't know what his particular handicap is, but he has to renew his licence every year. I think it's the cost factor and also the doctor's inconvenience, yet I know the handicap causes him worry on his ability to continue driving. I was wondering if the good minister could share any insights he might have into that issue?

The one other issue is from a constituent, and he's a good Tory, by the way. He's a teacher who has problems with his fire insurance. He's tried to get help through Government Services and now is probably seeking legal advice. I was wondering if the good minister could identify someone in the department that I could refer this gentleman to talk to? He's a very good teacher in my constituency and is sincerely seeking advice and assistance.

So I'll leave those three concerns, and maybe he would comment on that for me.

Turning to the specific budget as such, on page 246, line 2.0.2, the estimate for consumer services is $6.03 million, a very small increase of 4 per cent from the 2005-06 forecast. The Official Opposition continues to hear from Alberta consumers who complain that this government does not provide satisfactory services, yet you have only increased consumer services funding by 4 per cent. I guess the question to the minister is: can the minister tell us what he plans to do about better services for Albertans? He's kind of talked about that at various times this afternoon. How can this department improve its service to Albertans if the funding for consumer services is not increased? How can the minister justify giving his office, as it says here, a 31 per cent funding increase when consumer services is receiving only a 4 per cent increase?

Turning to the estimates on page 246, line 2.0.3, the estimate for land titles services is $12.71 million, an increase of 6 per cent from the 2005-2006 budget. I think I heard it correctly from the minister there: all that deluge, I think, of 975,000 transactions. There has been an increasing awareness of the frequency of mortgage fraud in this province. Can the minister tell us if any of this increased funding for land titles services will be directed towards combating mortgage fraud? How exactly will this additional money be used given that the 2005-06 forecast for this line item indicates that land titles services overspent last year? I can certainly understand why from his earlier remarks. Is the minister confident that 6 per cent is sufficient for this year, based on the increase? What is the minister going to do to ensure that land titles services does not overspend again this year? It sounds like they're really, really, highly involved and have a heavy, heavy load to bear.

Then if I could just turn now to the strategic information technology services estimates on page 247, line 5.0.2., the estimates for the systems transformation of $12.921 million, a 26 per cent increase from the 2005-06 forecast. There is a significant increase in funding here, Mr. Minister. Can the minister tell us why such a large increase for systems transformation was needed and how exactly he sees this additional money being used? Can the minister provide us with some details on the budget item?

The last one, Utilities Consumer Advocate. I'd just suggest to you, Mr. Minister, that on that particular issue if there's anything that you can do for education for my constituency of St. Albert, we would welcome certainly in September having a crew out to talk to us because we get a lot of concerns, and many times if we were better educated ourselves, we could do a better job of helping our constituents.

So with those comments – there are a few more, but I'll let my colleagues talk to them later. Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the Member for St. Albert for raising those issues. I'll ask you, Member for St. Albert: when you have a concern, don't file it in the House; give it to me. We'll make sure that your constituent gets taken care of. We've got some great staff, and they've got the ability to deal with those issues. So don't bother filing it in the House. Let's deal with your constituents like I deal with mine. We take care of it right away.

The same with your constituent with the fire insurance issue: give me a note on that. Give me the particulars. I don't want that here in the House. We'll have someone within the department have a look at that. That's serving Albertans, and I make that commitment to you that our department will take care of your concerns or your constituents' concerns equally to that of mine or my colleagues' on this side of the House.

You talked about senior drivers. Well, I guess maybe in some areas they're getting a bad rap, and in some areas maybe we need to have a look at the way that we deal with some of our safety issues. I've had constituents come to me and say: "Please take away Dad's licence; we don't want him on the road." I say: "What are you doing about it? Are you going to the RCMP and saying that?" "No, we want you to. We don't want to be the bad guy." So I think Albertans need to take a little bit of responsibility on their own when they're faced with those issues.

I'll tell you, my father-in-law is 84 years old, and he's pretty sharp. I have no issues with him coming at me or at my family on the road, but there are young drivers that are coming at me and at my family down the road that I'm concerned about as well. So I don't know if I'm willing to say that I'm going to single out any specific age class. I think that we have mostly good drivers in this province, but we have some bad drivers. I've made a commitment to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to work with him on ensuring that all drivers are treated fairly but that we do something about the bad drivers on our roads.

Yes, you heard me earlier talk about the 975,000 increase that we've had at land titles, 975,000 files. Like I talked about earlier – and I'm not sure if you heard – you know, when I did a tour of just one of our offices and I asked them, "Normally, how many files do you deal with here in a day?" they said, "Well, six feet of files." Maybe the deputy can give me a thumbs-up. I think that was 4,000 land registries in the six feet. So in one day previous to my visit 12 feet came in: 8,000. Well, that's just not going to go away by magic. We have to deal with those files. We have to deal with them in a timely manner, and the staff has to have the tools to deal with that.

So we'll need to bring on some extra staff, and you'll hear me next year because I don't expect that the volumes that Albertans are faced with today will be any less next year. The growth here, in this city alone, and in your city is absolutely unbelievable, so we'll need some people to deal with those issues and those pressures. I won't apologize for coming here and asking for more dollars for staff to deal with increased pressures. If we don't have the increased pressure, we're not going to ask. I can guarantee you that.

A little bit on mortgage fraud. It's serious. You know, we talked earlier about identity theft, and with all this activity here in this province, there are some shysters moving to this province as well, and they're following the dollars that are generated. You asked me: what is Government Services doing about mortgage fraud? Well, Government Services established a special committee on this subject last year with representatives from government, law enforcement, and the financial, legal, and real estate communities, and the committee has made some recommendations which include developing best practices to help government and the real estate industry combat mortgage fraud. We're amending provincial laws to permit increased sharing of information related to mortgage fraud. We're raising the public awareness of mortgage fraud and the penalties for participating in such crimes. We have to nail these guys and nail them quickly.

The ministry is already acting on the committee's recommendations and has introduced amendments to the Land Titles Act and to the Real Estate Act in response to the committee's report. Proposed amendments to the Land Titles Act would give the registrar of land titles greater discretion in requesting additional proof of identification for a registrant and to refuse registration where there are reasonable grounds to suspect that a transaction is related to fraud. The proposed amendments to the Real Estate Act will clarify that the Real Estate Council of Alberta has the appropriate powers to investigate mortgage fraud and enhance their ability to share personal information about mortgage fraud and the perpetrators while respecting the privacy rights of individuals. We have to make sure that those rights are always respected in Government Services and the agencies that we work with.

Government Services provides a tipsheet on this matter. Again, like I talked about earlier, I challenge you to check out our website and look at the ability to get good information for consumers on that website. It's a great website. If you see deficiencies, let me know. We'll have our staff and our in-house people make sure that that's corrected.

The Real Estate Council of Alberta is becoming the first mortgage broker regulator in Canada that requires all licensed mortgage brokers and realtors in Alberta to complete a mandatory education course on mortgage fraud before renewing their licence. I think that's one of the pieces that you asked about: what are we doing about mortgage fraud? Well, that's what we're doing with our partners. The Canadian Institute of Mortgage Brokers and Lenders is developing a mortgage fraud red flag checklist for their 3,400 members. I think that goes a long ways to protect Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak to the estimates of this department. I must commend the minister, who's a new minister, for becoming fully cognizant and fully grasping of his department in such a short period of time and looking to bring forward I think some very, very interesting and very timely and important things for the people of Alberta. Not to discount the previous minister, who I think has brought forward some interesting proposals in the department.

I am very interested in the landlord and tenants program that is coming forward, and I hope that that one will be pursued with vigour. I think that will hold some good potential to save money for the province, save time for our courts but, most importantly, will settle disputes in a quick and timely manner, and I've heard of many of them from constituents in my area of Edmonton-Manning.

Many of the areas that I would have liked to cover have actually been touched on already, but there are a few that I'd like to mention. This department is very important in terms of the nature of information and personal information that it deals with. One area that has become very much highlighted in the recent past is the problem with secure drivers' licences and the need to come up with something that will ensure that there is no fraud in this area, that there are no forgeries in this area, and that people are not using it in identity theft and all the rest of it, be they bikers, as mentioned earlier, or be they terrorists that might be using these identification pieces for much worse types of ends.

I see that the Canadian Bank Note Company has been given a multi-year contract to look to these secure drivers' licences. I guess a question arises as to how that was tendered. It is a private concern. What was the nature of the sourcing of it? Was it a sole-source contract? Was there any competitive tendering? Another question that would arise is: will that be reviewed periodically? Another question that may arise from the work of the Canadian Bank Note Company is: exactly how long is their contract supposed to be going, or is it just something that will be renewed and renewed and renewed? What work is the Canadian Bank Note Company doing when they are actually visiting many of the registry offices on-site? What is the purpose and role of those visits?

On another topic, the minister mentioned that there is a lot of revenue coming out of this department, hundreds of millions of dollars. I read here $284,494,000. Well, that's a lot of money. That's a lot of money. It's good to see that there is a surplus of revenue, but on the other hand I look at it as being tax and just another tax on hard-working Albertans. You know, looking at all the other revenue sources that we have for the government of Alberta, do we have to pull so much from these licensing fees and all the rest of it so that there are these types of actually very, very large revenues coming to the government in this area?

I understand that the minister said, for example, that we have a cost of a driver's licence which is 29 per cent below the national average. Well, you know, it's obvious that other jurisdictions are probably looking to this as a tax source as well. Maybe the whole idea across the country of using the fees or taxes that come from this source may be out of line, and Alberta could take the lead to simplify where our funding comes from and to take a look at this.

I know that a lot of words have been said about the increased access to registries and how that has made it more convenient. I think there was some feeling – and I'm just speaking anecdotally – that you could get better access in the years immediately after this was brought in. I'm beginning to see more and more lineups as I go to these places, and it seems to take more and more time. I wonder if they're being properly staffed, if we're seeing that these registries are putting proper training towards all of their people, and if in fact as the conventional oil industry pulls from all over, these registries are not in difficulty right now in getting people and that that is beginning to hurt service. To see a satisfaction level of 89 per cent sounds good, but if we're in this type of business, which is a retail level type of business, 1 in 9 is maybe not a very good percentage of people who are coming through the doors that leave with a lack of satisfaction.

Perhaps we're, you know, seeing a phenomenon that we're seeing right across many sectors in Alberta and something that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business identified in actually a very good survey, where they identified that I believe it was over two-thirds of businesses are having a problem keeping employees because of the fact that they don't think they can pay the rate to keep them and they're competing with the conventional oil and gas industry, which is able to pay much, much higher wages, salaries, and benefits. If we are seeing the wage rates in the registries much, much, much below and we start to see a drop even further in the satisfaction rate, I think it's something that the ministry should look at and see what may be done in this area. I had one report from a constituent who at one time, I guess, used to work for the government in this area. He said that the average wages are now about 68 per cent below what they were when they were actually with the government. It's astounding to see that the figure is that much.

The figure of 74 per cent satisfied with the access to government service in general is actually a very low figure. It should be much higher. I would hope that the department would look to very much try to improve that figure. Customer service to Alberta taxpayers, to Albertans is an important goal that I think we all must be looking to ensure is a high, high priority for our fellow citizens.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung asked me just to put forth a question on the FTEs, the full-time equivalents, and on the increase in the numbers of employees. Now, I know that the minister did mention that a little bit earlier, but I'd like a little bit more detail as to where these FTEs are actually going. Why the increase in employment? Which jobs will these people be doing, or for which roles in the ministry are these particular increases in employees going to be?

Another area was the issue – it was mentioned quite a bit earlier – of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. The awareness of the Utilities Consumer Advocate is not high in the population, with only 31 per cent of Albertans actually understanding that this important consumer advocate is there for them. There continue to be many people very interested in getting this type of service. To better publicize that and get it better known is I think something of great importance. I'd just like to ask the minister why it is the deputy minister that is taking that role. It seems to me that the deputy minister's role is something that is very much a full-time job in itself. This particular position could be one that certainly could see a much more focused effort by a single individual.

Other than the interest that I have in FOIP and the need to ensure that freedom of information and privacy are fully accessible, that concludes my comments. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, and thank you for your interest in the landlords/tenants program. I think you would get a lot out of coming just a few blocks over and paying a visit to the office. It's also the same office that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is located in. I think you could probably learn something that you could pass on to your constituents, and if you're hearing of landlord/tenant disputes, maybe there would be some pamphlets or something there that you could pass on to your office.

You know, you raised the point about the office, and I'll make sure that we get enough information sent to each of our constituency offices throughout the province so that we have that information. Remember that it's a pilot project for the Edmonton area. Like I had stated earlier, I do expect that the pilot will be successful, and I do expect that this would be a way that we can save a lot of court time and Albertans a lot of money. So I would encourage you to take an hour out of your day when we get out of session to go over and have a look at the office, and if I'm here in Edmonton at the time, I'd like to go over there with you and hear your views on it.

Yes, we do generate some extra revenue and I think about $300 million more than we spend, but, as you know, through our registries it's kind of like user-pay. The money that we have here transfers over to the minister in front of me, and he spends big bucks on rehab and restoration of our highways. So this is just a small way to contribute to those costs.

You talked about registry lineups or maybe specific problems. We have 225 registries that provide Albertans with a broad range of services, but if you're aware of a certain registry that's not providing the service to Albertans that they should be getting, I'd like you to make me aware of that. I'll have that discussion with my staff, and we'll let you know what will be done about that. We do want to ensure that Albertans receive service that's acceptable. You know, at certain times – it doesn't matter when – you can go to the Dairy Queen and hit a lineup of 20 people, but we have to make sure that that's not consistent. So if that is a concern in your constituency, I'd ask you to bring that to me, and we'll deal with those specifics. Of course, by doing that, you can help me get those satisfaction rates up.

You talked about the deputy also being the advocate. I'll tell you that that shows you the talent that this man has. This guy can adapt to those concerns, and he's handling it. Until he tells me that he can't handle it, I think we'll just leave it alone.

The next topic that you talked about was FTEs. We really want to make sure that we justify that additional labour that Government Services brings on and that those folks that we bring on are actually providing services to Albertans. I did scratch down some notes that I can provide you on those FTEs. As I talked about earlier, we continue to experience increases in the volume of transactions. Land titles, for example, experiences increases of 7 per cent a year. That's quite an increase. I talked earlier with the other member about an increase of 975,000 transactions last year in land titles alone. That's huge. That's a huge volume. In the ministry we deal with 17 million transactions throughout Alberta, you know, five for each and every Albertan. That doesn't happen on its own. Those take some time; they take people, and I'm not afraid to say that we have the people to meet that challenge.

A key indicator such as housing starts is up 6.4 per cent in the first 11 months of 2005, issuance of building permits up 40.8 per cent, and the number of resale homes up 13 and a half per cent in the first 10 months of '05. As the economic forecast suggested, these trends will extend well into the future. That's what we're doing with FTEs.

I'll also tell the member that when I witness these volumes, this six feet a day increasing to 12 feet, those volumes aren't only for land transactions. Maybe you should have a look at your next assessed value of your house compared to when you bought it. There's a lot of equity that Albertans have built up in their homes, and I think that, you know, we're seeing a lot of these volumes through land registries. Because of that assessed value, people are saying: maybe I need to purchase something else, and maybe I'll use my home for equity because it's a cheap way at this time for financing. Also, too, that may bring expectations that Albertans may be biting off a little bit too much.

I've seen this happen before. I remember when my wife and I had our home mortgage. It came to time for renewal, but that was renewal at 19 and a half per cent. I was glad that the province of Alberta shielded me. At the time I was a supporter of the Alberta Treasury Branch, and they shielded that down to 14 per cent. We're not quite into that scenario, but I am concerned that Albertans may be taking new mortgages and second mortgages out on their homes to buy motor homes and cars. But all of that requires registration, and we deal with that. Those are choices that Albertans make, and we handle those choices well.

When we determine staffing levels, the ministry must also consider the lead time to train new recruits. As an example, to get a paralegal out of a university or a college and get them into our system, get them working, first of all you have to have an experienced person to train that person, so you take that experienced person away from what they're doing today to train a newer person. They just don't come into land registries as a paralegal and start dealing with those files. They need some lead time. It takes approximately two years for those land titles personnel to reach the desired level of expertise. This doesn't just happen overnight and by itself. It happens with a commitment that we have from our ministry and from the staff that we have.

I want to also talk a little bit about our staff. You know, I've just had three or four weeks to meet the staff in this ministry. I've had the opportunity to attend some recognition of those staff. We have people that have worked 40 years plus in government, you know. I was signing the staff recognition letters to congratulate them, and I can tell the member opposite that I don't remember a lot of the names of the staff, but I can remember the years of service.

I was so very, very proud to be associated with folks that have been with this ministry 40 years, 35 years, 30 years, 25 years, and then also to have the opportunity to meet those people and to meet those new people that are coming on board that are looking to these folks that have been with us 35 and 30 years to mentor them and to get them up to speed with the issues that we have in land registries. I'm very proud to be associated with folks that have that kind of commitment, and I think that alone should tell the members here in this Assembly about the dedication and the commitment that the ministry staff and everybody that I'm surrounded with has. I couldn't stand up here today and talk about the issues in Government Services if it wasn't for the great people that have surrounded me to get me up to speed with the issues in this ministry.

You also mentioned the issue of identity theft, and I can tell you that I take this seriously and that Government Services staff throughout our ministry will tackle this problem of identity theft. It's too bad that the crooks seem to be always one step ahead of all of us, but protecting people's private information has been designated as one of the top priorities in our three-year business plan. Again, that doesn't come just out of the sky. We have to put people and resources to attack that problem. We're going to work with other ministries to make sure that we have the right people doing the right work to make sure that we can tackle this issue and that we charge these folks, that we don't just identify it and do nothing with it. We have to make sure that these folks are charged.

Government Services has already developed fraud prevention materials for registry agents, introduced a new secure driver's licence, and introduced new privacy initiatives to help ensure that the personal information of Albertans remains secure. By leading the protecting people's private information initiative and assisting in developing policies, procedures, guidelines, and documents, Government Services will ensure that it as well as other ministries is providing appropriate protection to personal information in their custody or under their control.

I had an opportunity to witness, again on one of my short visits, that we have some special investigators working with the Solicitor General's department folks to make sure that when you provide identification to our registry agents – it may be for a new Albertan getting a driver's licence. That new Albertan will need to surrender their previous documents for us to go through and make sure that these documents are correct, that these documents that are being provided to us show the past record of driving experience. You know, I'm talking specifically about the graduated driver's licence. If you're from another country and you say, "Well, yes, I have a class 1, and I've driven for many, many years in my country," we're going to make sure that that experience actually has happened because you and every one of us want to make sure that those drivers of vehicles on our roads are licensed properly and have that proper experience and that they are well qualified to drive, especially the big trucks, up and down our highways.

I could go on and on about some of the issues that we are dealing with to tackle the problem of identity theft, but I think I can tell you – and I think you see the commitment that I have and our staff has – that we will tackle this. But I end with a question back to you. If you hear of these issues, if you see a problem in your neighbourhood or in your constituency or in your caucus, will you make me aware of this so we can deal with it head on? You know, don't table your document here in the House. Don't file it. Come to me. We'll deal with it, and we'll get those services for Albertans that they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Mather: Well, one of things that I've been thinking about is this identity fraud concern, and I think the hon. minister has answered and convinces me that he shares that concern.

The other issues: I guess the questions that I've had have mostly been answered. I want to also thank the minister for all of the answers that we've received because it indicates a real concern for Government Services.

One of the areas that I wanted to ask about and have on record is related to the number of employees that are going to be hired. Full-time equivalent employment for Government Services increased from 500 in 2005-2006 to 555 in 2006-2007. This is on page 253. I have been wondering: will these additional 55 employees be working in specific areas? Can you tell me what they will be doing and why there was a need to hire another 55 for the department? That was one of my questions.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department for Government Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $109,226,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report the estimates for the Department of Government Services.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Government Services: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $109,226,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening, at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Before I recognize the minister, I'd just like to welcome all the members in the members' gallery from different points around the province that are here for the Forum for Young Albertans. Just for your interest we're in Committee of Supply, and during committee it's a little less formal than the normal proceedings, so you'll see members without jackets on, and they're not necessarily sitting in their own chairs although they have to be in their own seats to be recognized to speak. So that's why we're a little less formal.

Main Estimates 2006-07

International and Intergovernmental Relations

The Chair: I will now recognize the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At the outset I want to say that I'm pleased to move the estimates for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

In attendance with me this evening, Mr. Chairman, are a number of people from the department, and they are in the members' gallery. They are names that may be familiar to many of you in the House, and I'll ask them to rise and be recognized: Gerry Bourdeau, deputy minister; Carol Chawrun, communications director; Marvin Schneider, executive director, U.S. relations; Garry Pocock, assistant deputy minister; Daryl Hanak, acting Alberta trade representative; Steve Pritchard, executive director of the Smithsonian project; and, finally, Mr. Lorne Harvey, executive director of corporate services.

Mr. Chairman, Canadian mass media guru Marshall McLuhan was right: the world has turned into a global village. The job of my ministry is to help Alberta get along with its neighbours around the world in a way that assures our own economic and social future. We work with our Canadian neighbours to co-ordinate Alberta's role as a partner and share in interprovincial and national partnerships like first ministers' councils, the Council of the Federation, the Western Premiers' Conference, and the annual Alberta/B.C. cabinet meetings, which, of course, were just held last week. My ministry helps Alberta to work with our international neighbours by providing input into federal foreign policies, operating the Alberta office in Washington, pursuing relationships with 14 twinning provinces and states around the world and negotiating more at this time, co-ordinating missions to other countries, and welcoming dignitaries representing a world of opportunity to the province of Alberta.

This ministry is going to continue to raise our profile with our largest trading partner. Our biggest opportunity is Alberta's presence in Washington this summer as we are featured at the Smithsonian Folklife Festival, a festival which over 10 days will expose Alberta to somewhere between 1.2 million and 1.5 million Americans.

The World Trade Organization Ministerial Conference in Hong Kong last December gave Alberta an opportunity to pursue improved and more secure access for Alberta goods and services in global marketplaces.

Now, given the opportunities, the strategic priorities for this ministry that we'll call for this year are quite clear. Relations with other Canadian governments remain a priority, and Alberta continues to chair the Council of the Federation until July, that is this summer.

Internationally we will work to influence federal foreign policy in areas that are important to Alberta and to enhance our own bilateral relations with other countries through our Premier's missions, incoming delegations, and major events like hosting the Pacific Northwest Economic Region meeting, which will take place in Edmonton this summer.

We will continue to expand Alberta's influence with our largest trading partner through the Alberta Washington office and this year through Alberta at the Smithsonian. Negotiations to expand trade and reduce barriers to trade continue to be a priority this year internationally and within Canada.

Building and maintaining relationships across borders, time zones, cultures, and sensitivities comes at a price but, I should say, Mr. Chairman, not a very big price. The proposed budget for this year for a world of influence and reputation is just $10.7 million, and this includes a net operating increase of just $770,000. That this can represent a net increase of 8 per cent underlies just how small the base budget really is. Most of this net increase, $600,000, covers Alberta's per capita share of the increased cost for operating the Council of the Federation, and the rest meets negotiated salary increases and amortization.

The $10.7 million in our budget also include $1 million for the one-time funding to support Alberta at the Smithsonian. That is less than $1 per person to bring Alberta to the more than 1 million people expected to take part in the festival and to 100 U.S. Senators and 435 members of the House of Representatives and the hundreds of policy and business leaders we're targeting by invitation. That kind of influence cannot be judged by its cost. That one-time $1 million is added to this year's allocation to our international relations division; however, I stress that this is not an operating increase.

To meet the internal cost pressures, international relations also receives $100,000 reallocated from the Canadian intergovernmental relations division. The Canadian intergovernmental relations division shows a budget decrease of $410,000 from 2005-06. This shows the net difference between the $600,000 added this year for Alberta's increased contribution to the Council of the Federation and the end of one-time funding last year to host the Western Premiers' Conference and the Council of the Federation. This apparent decrease from last year's budget does not represent a cut in the division's operations or services.

The overall budget at my ministry is small compared to other departments, but we are fully committed to openness and accountability for every one of those dollars and to the people of Alberta. All expenses related to international missions are reported in their entirety and posted on the ministry's website within two months of the mission's conclusion. We weigh the cost of every event and expense against the benefits to the province, always cognizant of the fact that each contact and negotiation leaves an impression on people as well as on paper and positive attitudes help build beneficial agreements.

We can point to agreements and initiatives that resulted and will result in measurable savings to Albertans. We just signed an internal trade agreement with the province of British Columbia to remove barriers to trade, investment, and movement of labour between our two provinces. The Conference Board of Canada points out an estimated 1 per cent of gross domestic product lost to interprovincial trade barriers in Alberta and British Columbia. That figure is approximately $2 billion a year. Already we are saving $2 million in capital and $300,000 in operating costs per year from joint vehicle inspection stations under a previous agreement with the province of British Columbia.

Looking further afield, our annual report shows that we welcomed more than 70 incoming delegations last year, each one representing an international community. The Premier's planned mission to Ukraine and France will further build a growing respect and relationship to the benefit of Alberta business and industry for years to come. We are now working to influence the new federal government's position on World Trade Organization negotiations in areas of interest to Alberta producers. The Washington office is providing invaluable assistance in promoting Alberta as a secure North American energy source to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the experienced professionals at International and Intergovernmental Relations are good at providing a quality service to the Alberta government, to visiting dignitaries and overseas missions, to our relationships and trade negotiations nationally and internationally. Last year we exceeded our target for client satisfaction across the ministry in Canadian, international, and trade relations. Our Washington office set out to participate in 75 events and opportunities to advance Alberta's interests in the United States, and we met that target.

The Alberta government's current business plan seeks to unleash innovation, lead in learning, compete in a global marketplace, and to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. The relationships with other provinces and the federal government and the relationships we entertain and develop with other countries are essential to creating and seizing those opportunities.

Mr. Chairman, the world is a global village, and my ministry's $10.7 million budget will help our province keep and expand our place and role in this community. With all of that in mind I respectfully submit again that we move the estimates for this department.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate this evening on International and Intergovernmental Relations budget estimates. Certainly, building good relations with our neighbours is important, but whenever we look at this department with its 61 employees, or full-time equivalents, it may be a small department, but one has to recognize the significant contribution it can make to good government.

Now, the hon. minister certainly stated correctly that the budget for this year will be roughly $10.6 million and there hasn't been that much of an increase from one fiscal year to the next, which is probably true. But when you look at this budget over a two-year period, you can certainly see where there is almost a 20 per cent increase in this department's budget. We have to be careful whenever we compare this fiscal year that we're discussing in the budget, Mr. Chairman, to the previous fiscal year. I would urge all hon. member of this House to go back a couple of years, and that will give us a better snapshot of exactly how much money is allocated and where it is to be spent.

The first thing that would come to mind with this department is the trade office in Washington. There are many people from across this province who have questioned the merit of these trade offices, particularly this one in Washington. In the time we have, certainly last summer there was quite a controversy over the role that Mr. Murray Smith, a previous Energy minister, was having in that job. There was the whole issue around Mr. Smith accepting and then quite correctly resigning from a position on the board of Tusk Energy Corporation.

He, in my opinion, is certainly considered an employee of the Alberta government under the code of conduct and ethics for the public service of Alberta, and I don't know how Mr. Smith's appointment was allowed to remain in light of the fact that this was a clear violation of the code of conduct and ethics for the public service of Alberta. Now, I don't know what kind of arrangements have been made, but I for one think that is unacceptable. It was unacceptable last summer, and it is still unacceptable now, and there has never been really an answer. There has been acknowledgement of this appointment and then the resignation of, I shall say, the appointee, but Mr. Smith has still got his well-paying political patronage job in Washington.

I know that other hon. members of this Assembly will say: oh, no. In fact, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is shaking his head. But, no. This is, hon. minister, a patronage appointment, and I don't know how we can see it as anything else. Under this minister's watch I'm confident that it won't happen again. I was disappointed, and whenever one looks at the previous annual report of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, you can see where there were questions raised about Public Service Commission hiring practices. Now, I'm going to read this:

Alberta continued to express its concern over the federal Public Service Commission's use of geographic hiring criteria, a practice that prevents qualified candidates from applying for federal jobs solely on the basis of their geographic location. This matter was raised by Alberta at the most recent meeting of the Committee on Internal Trade and is presently being pursued by Alberta officials. It is expected that the Ministry, in collaboration with Human Resources and Employment, will use the dispute resolution provisions of the [agreement on internal trade] in resolving this matter with the federal government.

Now, that's fine. I'm not saying that the province doesn't have merit, but why does it not look at its own hiring practices? There are many that could argue correctly that, for instance, the appointment or the hiring of Murray Smith was simply done on a political basis. After the election there was a position, a well-paid position, created for this individual, the equivalent of a political soft landing, and it's not right. It was pointed out not only by the opposition but by various media in the province that it was not right. I don't know how this government could make a comment about another level of government and the Public Service Commission's hiring practices and allow this to continue. I just don't understand that. Hopefully, it won't happen again. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of confidence in this minister, and I will be very surprised if that happens again.

While we're on the subject of Washington, in the budget that's been set aside for the celebration of Alberta at the Smithsonian, will there be any extra money required to finish that project? I know it's going to be a 10-day festival, and we have read about it. There have been two allocations to date. Can the minister assure the Assembly and the taxpayers that all the bills are going to be taken care of in this budget?

Mr. Chairman, certainly, with this $10.6 million budget I would like to turn the attention of the Assembly to the business plan, page 282, the Council of the Federation. On March 31, 2006, the Council of the Federation commissioned a report reconciling addressing Canada's fiscal imbalance. Would the minister update Alberta's response to this report addressing Canada's fiscal imbalance?

Also, on the next page, 283, bullet 1: "Successfully conducting, co-ordinating, and participating in intergovernmental negotiations and discussions to advance Alberta's interests in Confederation." In what specific ways has the department followed up on the report by the MLA Committee on Strengthening Alberta's Role in Confederation? Has the committee taken any steps to support Alberta separation? What work has the minister done in examining the issues surrounding a firewall? I thought that firewalls belonged in laptop computers and in building codes. I didn't think they belonged in a country, a federation such as ours, and I don't think many Canadians do either.

Now, Mr. Chairman, has the ministry examined the issue of an Alberta pension plan? Have you had a look at that? What conclusions have been drawn? Will the minister provide information, documents, or reports that his ministry has prepared on these issues?

Canadian intergovernmental relations, page 284 of the business plan. [interjection]

Now, I heard, Mr. Chairman, that someone has a buddy named Danny Williams, the Conservative Premier of Newfoundland, who had a lot to say about this Progressive Conservative Party's actions on the last day of March in Calgary. Obviously, his remarks were not heeded by all members of this Assembly, but perhaps after this session ends, they will have a chance to review his remarks and take them into consideration. But some of those leadership hopefuls, particularly those that are in the back of the pack, may have to work so hard to try to catch up that they won't have time to have a look at Mr. Williams' remarks.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, the department, as I understand it, will promote solutions to redesign federal/provincial financial arrangements, including the Canada health transfer, the Canada social transfer, equalization, and cost-sharing arrangements. How does the department propose to redesign the Canada health transfer? How would this department redesign the federal equalization program?

Now, I'm going to have to go back for a minute to Washington, DC, and this is in the government's estimates on page 322. We can also have a look at this in the business plan as well on page 285. I would like a detailed breakdown for the $1.4 million budget of the Alberta office in Washington. What exactly are we spending that money on? What percentage of that budget is being spent on the salary of Alberta's representative, Murray Smith? How much money is the department spending on leasing accommodation for the Alberta representative in Washington, DC? Mr. Smith has gone somewhere where he'll hardly have to wear a cardigan sweater, and he won't have to turn the thermostat down. He might have to wear a sweater in the fall on the golf course. I'm sure that his heating bill and all his utility costs are probably paid for.

Also on page 322, Mr. Chairman, international trips. The Premier has recently announced a world tour before his retirement in December of this year. How do Albertans know that they are receiving value for their money on this world tour? Who is paying the Minister of Education's tab on this? I'm certain that it's not coming out of the hon. minister's department. I can't understand why the Minister of Education would not be more interested in fixing some of the schools here in the city of Edmonton. Anyway, if you could answer those questions or provide the information at a later date, I would appreciate that.

Also, what co-ordination occurs between International and Intergovernmental Relations and the Public Affairs Bureau and other government departments in setting up these trips? Who decides where to go, and who decides which backbench MLA is going? Certainly, when we have a look at the strategies and some of the travel that's involved, there is an initiative on Alberta/Ukraine relations to enhance bilateral relations with the Ukraine. There is a lot of travel to Alaska, to Montana. We're talking about the Canadian/American Border Trade Alliance, the Western Governors' Association, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, the Council of State Governments.

Now, that would naturally bring us to the whole issue of electricity exports and what role, if any, this department has had in the discussions to increase electricity exports to the Pacific Northwest. I'm not certain that the Department of Energy is willing to share their plans with anyone in this province, including members of the government caucus and including members of Executive Council. I'm not sure that that information is being shared with everyone. So if the hon. minister was to tell me that his department was not involved in any of these discussions, it wouldn't surprise me, but these discussions are very, very important.

There has been to date no information provided to tell consumers, Mr. Chairman, exactly how much money they will save if we allow an increase in our export of electricity to the United States either through Montana or through B.C. There has been no valid economic argument presented as to how this will benefit consumers. The discussions are certainly going on. The discussions are going on between various electricity bodies in America and the Department of Energy.

Now, what role this department plays in that I don't know, but they could play a significant role. In fact, the hon. minister is a lawyer by profession and certainly would be very familiar with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in America and how their rulings may or may not apply to the transmission system in this province if we are to increase electricity exports. I can't get any information from the Department of Energy. I suspect that they don't have any. Maybe this is a job for International and Intergovernmental Relations, to get involved in this matter and protect the interests of consumers.

The generators have certainly made it known that they would like to see an increase in electricity exports. We're going to eventually see, Mr. Chairman, in this province, if we were to look at the south part of the province as a step on the ladder and the north part of the province as another step on the ladder – if we're not careful, we are going to develop a series of steps on that ladder which are going to increase from the north to the south electricity exports to America. At the very top of this ladder would be, of course, the proposed dam on the Slave River, the proposed 2,200-megawatt hydroelectric dam there. That would be on the border with the Northwest Territories.

Now, the hon. minister talked about good relations with our neighbours. My next question would be: have there been any discussions with the governments to the north, the territories, in regard to developing that hydroelectric capacity? Certainly, we talked about this before, Mr. Chairman, in this House. Some government members don't want to talk about their past, but in the past, in the election of 1982, one of the planks of this Progressive Conservative government was the development of this hydroelectric resource. I'm wondering if any of the shelves in the library have been dusted off and those reports have been removed by the hon. minister's staff and if they have been read and if discussions are going on with the neighbours to the north.

While we're also talking about our neighbours to the north, what involvement does this department have with the Mackenzie Valley pipeline? Where does the hon. minister stand on that Mackenzie Valley pipeline? Hopefully, the minister would be supporting it, and hopefully the minister would be ensuring that – you know, this gets back to the whole issue of firewalls. We don't need firewalls. What we need is a government that's going to ensure that as this natural gas comes from the north, the petrochemical industry in this province has an opportunity to extract that ethane.

I look forward to further debate on this issue. Thank you.

The Chair: The background conversations are steadily increasing in volume. I would ask that we either keep those conversations down, Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, or perhaps take them out into the committee room.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the comments by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I thank him for his comments and his questions, largely which I would characterize as a piscatory exploration not only of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations but also of a number of other departments. But my undertaking to him is to review Hansard, and if I'm able to distill any cogent, reasonable, and relevant questions to the department, I'll be happy to answer them at the appropriate time in written format.

Thank you, sir.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with some interest to make some comment and criticism on International and Intergovernmental Relations, and I thank the minister for his very concise comments in regard to the activities of this particular ministry. As the hon. minister mentioned, it's not a large ministry but certainly an influential one and an important means by which we reach out and interact with other provinces, the United States, and other countries around the world.

I found it somewhat interesting that the hon. minister chose to quote Marshall McLuhan, who is very well known for speaking on the media. Actually, interestingly enough, Marshall McLuhan was born an Albertan, born right here in Edmonton. It's not a well-known fact. Certainly, he did most of his work at the University of Toronto.

It's an interesting, perhaps, stepping-off point for myself as well. Of course, in the discussion of the global village that Marshall McLuhan expounded on back in 1964 or '65 when he wrote the book Understanding Media, he was talking about this process of making culture and government and everything to do with human relations somewhat homogeneous throughout North America just because of its natural geographic singleness and a single language throughout most of North America. He was commenting with some despair at how there is this process towards homogeneity and making things the same, I suppose, from north to south.

Certainly, although this is a larger process that goes beyond our ability to control, at the same time I think it's important for us to defend against that to some degree and make sure that we are in fact looking critically at this process of making the world smaller and making sure that our own Alberta interests are being looked after more and in primacy over any other actions that might be taking place, particularly to the south of us with a much more powerful and influential neighbour. So my comment in regard to intergovernmental affairs in the most general sense is looking to make sure that we are looking after Alberta's best interests and being aggressive and somewhat critical as well when faced with decisions in regard to international and interprovincial trade and such things as that.

The main point that jumps to mind for me when examining this ministry's budget is sort of the lack of specificity. The breakdown of the budget kind of shows things in the most general way and very all-inclusive, so it somehow precludes any specific knowledge for me except through questions that I can ask. I think we have to wait for the annual reports to give us more specific information.

I find it interesting that there is a biennial client satisfaction survey, the performance measure of choice for this ministry. It poses questions that are so broad, such as "How satisfied are you with this service area?" or they're so specific that not meeting them satisfactorily is next to impossible, like the question that I see here, "I was able to access the website easily," which isn't really a question at all.

Another example that I see here – this is from the business plan – illustrates rather nonspecific information about this ministry. On page 286 of the business plan a performance measure states that there were 75 significant events or opportunities to advance Alberta's interests through the Washington, D.C. office. I would like to ask the minister: what does this category, significant events or opportunities that advance Alberta's interests – what does all that capture? What is included in those 75 things? Perhaps if we could see some examples, that would be much more illuminating.

I think that Albertans need to know exactly what's going on with International and Intergovernmental Relations. It's very important. The decisions that are being made in the United States, in Europe, and in Asia, federally as well, are very, very prescient to our understanding and to our decisions that we need to make on a daily basis. So I think that perhaps more, we could say, clarity and transparency would be appreciated from this ministry, and I'm sure that the new hon. minister would agree with me in that regard.

Regarding this whole idea of full disclosure this ministry like all ministries I believe should post all expenses and not just for international travel. I know that in British Columbia we have the capacity to look at all expenses that are incurred on the Internet, and while this might seem like a great mass of information that might sort of overwhelm us, I think it does provide that sense of transparency that our taxpayers would appreciate.

Actually, thinking of Marshall McLuhan again – I guess we can use that as a theme, right? – another quote that I always liked of his was that "mud sometimes gives the illusion of depth." I think that we can pass through the mud that sometimes is thrown up to confuse individual citizens by providing full transparency. I'm just asking in the broadest possible way. I have an example here of a five-day trip to Hong Kong in December of 2005 which cost $14,000 in travel expenses, and while I understand that it is expensive to travel at a level that's necessary to interact with ambassadors and trade missions and whatnot, I think that the citizens of Alberta would like to see where that money is being spent. So it would provide, perhaps, reassurance and illumination that would keep the mud, as Mr. McLuhan would say, from being thrown up into confusion.

The ministry has its Washington office, and last year it received a 38 per cent boost to its funding, bringing up its funding overall to $1.38 million. Surprisingly, it managed to stay within that very large budget. This year again another large budget is being asked for, so I'm looking specifically for performance measures that would perhaps justify this expenditure. I know that we've had some controversy in regard to this office. I'm not suggesting that the office is not necessary, but certainly it seems like a place where a lot of money is spent, including the $230,000 remuneration for our emissary there, which was topped up with an extra $30,000 for other things, I suppose. For my constituents, say, for example, this just seems like an incredible expenditure of money on an individual, and I would certainly like to see some more specific performance measurements, perhaps, and justification for that large salary.

Some of the performance measures that I would like to see specifically from that Washington office would be in regard to the whole BSE situation. BSE is creating a tremendous amount of uncertainty in our cattle industry, and borders seem to be opening and closing and not just between us and the United States, so I'd like to ask what the Washington office is doing specifically to ensure that Alberta cattle producers will be able to sell their beef across the border and to other places as well. Other countries sometimes will look at our open situation with the United States as being a potential place for infection as well. So it certainly is a complicated place to go, where our Washington office needs to take some leadership.

As well, there has been some political backlash regarding the selling of fake licensing here in Alberta through our privatized registry system, and I would like to ask the minister if we have had more input with the Department of Homeland Security in the United States, who stated back in February that they would be addressing this specifically. I just wanted to know what specific interactions we have seen there. Have we had to impose changes based on concerns from the United States that we were posing a security breach here in the province of Alberta by not controlling our privatized registries properly?

This next topic I have particular interest in because, of course, it's unfolding by the day, and this is the whole softwood lumber issue. The softwood lumber issue seems to have a framework by which we can resolve the dispute to some degree, and the minister mentioned that he was cautiously optimistic in regard to this potential resolution. I just wanted to ask specifically if the minister has made inquiries as to how our own provincial sawmill and pulp industry will be affected by this framework for resolution of the softwood dispute.

One of the difficulties that we're seeing is that smaller sawmills and pulp producers in the province have been on the brink of extinction because of this softwood dispute, so I'm certainly hoping that with whatever we might be signing on to here, we are first and foremost protecting our sawmills, which are often the lifeblood of small centres throughout the province. I would hate to see something in this framework agreement that would somehow compromise the ability of small producers to be continuing their operations.

As well, I would like to ask the minister if he believes that the payback of 80 cents to the dollar in this softwood dispute framework is sufficient considering, I believe, that it's $5 billion in tariffs that we've paid. If our own province represents at least something like 10 per cent of the total production of the country, then it's quite a significant amount of money to perhaps sign away for the sake of some tentative agreement.

I would like as well to just bring up this whole issue of the trade investment and labour and mobility agreement reached between Alberta and British Columbia. Today I believe the hon. minister brought up and said that health and social services, social and aboriginal policies, labour standards, consumer protection, taxation of royalties, and public safety would be amongst the exemptions from this agreement. According to the minister these are all exemptions and will remain under the sole control of each province. Perhaps I would like to ask the hon. minister to explain a bit as to why these areas were made exempt, and we would certainly like to hear about the mechanism by which it was decided that these areas were to be exempted from this agreement. There are comments around, that I've heard, that this agreement might in fact serve to worsen labour shortages across provinces, and we're asking if there's anything being done to perhaps investigate that allegation or that information that's being passed about.

Now, correct me if I'm wrong, but intergovernmental affairs would seem to be having some decision-making process over this new federal government budget initiative in regard to child care, and there seems to be a lot of confusion as to whether this new budget is giving a child care benefit or, in fact, is just paying sort of a baby bonus to individuals with children under six, which seems to be fine, but calling it a child care funding initiative I think is somewhat deceiving. So I would like to ask if the minister would be playing any active role in this issue as well as any re-evaluation of equalization payments into the federal government. There seems to be a lot of discussion around that, and I think that we have to be very diligent in ensuring that Alberta's interests are being looked after in the best way possible. I would like to ask then, as well, what the minister's assessment of budget windfalls or shortcomings for Alberta are, how that might play in the federal arena.

Those are some of the comments, Mr. Chairman, that I have in regard to this intergovernmental affairs budget. It's a very interesting, as I say, sort of ambassador for Alberta in the interprovincial and federal and international stage, and I am certainly looking with some anticipation with the present minister in charge. I admire many of his abilities, and I hope that he can engage the outside world to Alberta's best advantage.

I'll leave you with one more Marshall McLuhan quote that I like as well since we heard it. This is a good one, but sometimes it can lead us astray. He said, "I may be wrong, but I'm never in doubt." With that, Mr. Chairman, I beg your leave and thank you for the opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I did listen carefully to the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. I did find that he's done his homework and made a number of comments that I thought were insightful and asked some questions that, in fact, had specificity and cogency to them. I will also give the undertaking that I will endeavour my best to review Hansard for his questions, but let me take some time to address to the best of my ability now some of the questions that he did ask. I'm glad he recognizes the important role that the department plays as an adjunct to many other departments, be they in the area of agriculture or in the area of health and so on and so forth.

He asked about the cost of $14,000 in Hong Kong. I'm assured by the previous minister that this involved the costs of four people going over to Hong Kong as part of the discussions on the WTO. The cost of airfares to and accommodation in Hong Kong by itself are quite expensive. Fourteen thousand dollars strikes me as being perfectly reasonable, particularly in light of the accomplishments that were made by that mission at that time, that involved not only supply management but also issues of what's referred to as NAMA, which are nonagricultural products, as part of WTO negotiations.

He asked me to outline some of the rationale for the costs incurred in our office in Washington and what has been generated in terms of activity there. The Alberta Washington office has generated unparalleled and unprecedented U.S. media coverage of the province of Alberta and its key role in North American energy supply and security. The media coverage certainly has elevated Alberta's profile in the United States. I don't think that we've ever had front-page coverage in places like the Washington Times or the Wall Street Journal or the Washington Post. CBS's newsmagazine 60 Minutes, which featured the oil sands in January of this year, precipitated many, many calls to the Fort McMurray area with respect to our oil sands activity in northern Alberta.

Not only has there been significant media coverage of Alberta as a result of the Washington office but that office and the office holder, Murray Smith, have been instrumental in providing contacts and support and technical information to U.S. policy-makers and have given ministers from this province great access to appropriate people in Washington. The office has also lobbied on behalf of Alberta's agriculture sector, advocating the reopening of the U.S. border to Canadian cattle and beef, including a BSE policy forum that was held on Capitol Hill. I should say that the office has also provided leadership in the planning and execution of the province's participation in the 2006 Smithsonian Folklife Festival and will capitalize on the momentum generated by the incomparable coverage and attention that Alberta will receive as a result of that event.

The hon. member asked a very specific question about the softwood lumber deal. I believe that yesterday in question period I did address this question somewhat. I indicated that we were cautious about this and optimistic at the same time; optimistic because there is now a framework agreement but cautious because the framework agreement only provides a basis for a finalized deal, the legal text of which will be generated over the next few weeks. So the reason for the caution that I expressed is that we want to ensure, as the hon. member has asked, that the details of what's worked out pursuant to the framework agreement will ultimately be a benefit to Alberta producers.

He asked a very specific question about whether getting $4 billion of the $5 billion collected by the U.S. was an appropriate return. I would argue, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a perfect deal. A perfect deal would have resulted in all $5 billion coming back, including interest, but always when it comes to negotiations, what you can attain and what you desire are often two different things. This appears to me to be the best deal that we can in fact achieve or attain. I suppose we could have taken the position that we wanted all $5 billion back, but this may have ended up resulting in a protracted litigation that would have cost many, many, many, many more dollars than we would actually recover. It would be, perhaps, a situation where it is better to negotiate certainty of access to markets now rather than have the uncertainty associated with litigation long into the future.

The hon. member asked a very specific question about the trade agreement that we recently struck with the province of British Columbia and wondered why certain areas were exempt. I think many people would recognize that in some areas there are particular sensitivities that may exist between two different provinces with respect to the control of something like a social policy or the environment, so at this time those areas are exempt. That doesn't mean that at some point in the future there might not be some form of discussion where you might merge agencies that are separate agencies between two different provinces or at least increase the amount of co-ordination between two such agencies.

One area may be something that was discussed at the joint B.C./Alberta cabinet meeting, that being the co-ordination of efforts between the B.C. cancer board and the Alberta Cancer Board with respect to co-ordinating their research activities. That would be an area that falls within the overall rubric of health but still may be a fruitful area for a continued co-operation between those two areas.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat, and again I thank the hon. member for his thoughtful questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. To begin with, I want to offer, I guess, both congratulations and condolences to the new minister. I do want to commend him for recognizing the important role of family and deciding not to be part of the leadership race because of his love for his family. I commend him tremendously for his priorities.

One of the things that's interesting is that when Mr. Smith went to Washington, a Mr. Chase came to Edmonton. There is, I believe, a kind of direct relationship in those two events. Although my hon. members from Calgary-Currie and Calgary-Mountain View had no difficulty defeating recumbent incumbents, it added to the ease with which I reached Edmonton.

My concern with the former Member for Calgary-Varsity and his qualifications: I would very much like to know to what extent there was a competition for Mr. Smith to receive this Washington appointment, what qualifications the minister possessed, had demonstrated, and so on that made him rise to the surface, overcoming all other challengers. I'd like to know, for example, without necessarily naming names, how many other challengers there were.

I'm also concerned about Mr. Smith's selection based on Mr. Smith's very costly history for Albertans. Mr. Smith was the Energy minister during the period of deregulation. During that period Albertans basically lost anywhere between $5 billion to $7 billion in hardware, transmission lines, and so on in failed power auctions. I guess that would be a good reason to send Mr. Smith down to Washington.

Mr. Smith also made the comment, that my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar attested to, that, well, if you're cold or if the price of gas or electricity is too high, you can put on a sweater. That showed a tremendous amount of compassion for Albertans suffering from the deregulated price of electricity and the failure of the then Energy minister to bring in the promised gas rebates. It was very convenient prior to the election in 2001 to offer those energy rebates and then basically forget about them for the next two years.

Also, Mr. Smith as part of his past history stuck Alberta consumers with a $1.5 billion cost in transmission lines. Instead of just sort of splitting the bill with industry, Mr. Smith suggested that, no, this was for the consumers' benefit, and therefore they should pay for it. He'd already increased their prices; now he was increasing their hardware.

Now, Mr. Smith has been down in Washington. He was down in Washington at the time, as former members have pointed out, when we were suffering from a BSE crisis and a border closure.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Point of Order Relevance

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has gone on at some length about Mr. Smith and the conduct of his office in a previous time period. I'm wondering what the relevance is to Committee of Supply on the department of international and intergovernmental affairs. I see no relevance whatsoever in this diatribe.

The Chair: Anyone else on the point of order? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. There's no point of order here. There was no citation. I'm sorry; there's no point of order here.

The Chair: Before the hon. member starts, I will point out that it was pointed out earlier today that the use of the names of fellow members in the House is against the Standing Orders. It does say that you can't use your own either.

The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, and I'm glad that slipped under the radar.

With regard to the relevancy, this department, whose funds and budget we're discussing tonight, is directly responsible for the appointment of that former member, Mr. Smith, to Washington, so my comments have direct relevancy because, obviously, we want a very capable individual in Washington dealing with our affairs.

Mr. Chase: To go back, the former minister and now our man in Washington was there during the BSE crisis. He was also there for a large part of the softwood lumber dispute, as has been alluded to by former members. If this minister can point out the achievements, the speedier border opening – we seem to have a disagreement as to whether leaving a billion dollars behind for American forestry companies to use to fuel suits against Canadian softwood is a good idea or not. I can't help but think that a bird in the hand is worth a billion in the bush given the American presidential reference.

While I want Alberta to strike out on its own and develop its own trade deals, I'm not sure that we could not in partnership with the federal government, particularly now that it's that much easier for our provincial Conservatives to deal with the federal Conservatives, have a joint-space trade office. If we feel that this is necessary, why couldn't we potentially be sharing space and some form of leasing agreement, sharing our knowledge?

It seems to me that it would be under this particular ministry that the suggestion was made to gainfully employ former Alberta-elected Senators-in-waiting. At one point it was proposed that we have a stipend for these formerly appointed individuals or elected Senators-in-waiting and that we provide them with some kind of space or an allowance so that they could hang out in Ottawa until such time as, potentially, a Conservative government was elected. Well, we've had a Conservative government elected, and I haven't heard of any hasty calls from the now Prime Minister Harper to appoint some of those Senators-in-waiting. I know that one of the Senators who was elected has been gainfully employed in this House, but I won't mention his name.

I'm also concerned about where we stand with the federal government in terms of Senate reform. I know we've talked about an elected Senate, but on the other two Es of the Senate – I'm not sure to what extent we've discussed the potential new role of elected Senates with provincially elected Senators rather than the current appointments. It will be interesting to see. If the hon. minister would like to clarify the role he sees for elected Alberta Senators within the federal process, I would be pleased to hear his response.

I'm also concerned about BSE and the lumber. I would be interested in this minister's opinions and in what discussions he's had with our representative in Washington with regard to the proposed border wall and the access that we have to the States. I know that one of the things the minister indicated was that by having a representative in Washington, there's been an opportunity to highlight and profile Alberta and that part of that profiling could potentially result, given the right types of promotion, in further business here in Alberta. We've had the business of Hollywood coming to us because of our backdrops, which may not continue for many years into the future because we're intruding on those so-called Hollywood backdrops with an awful lot of drilling activities and a variety of other activities such as clear-cutting and so on, which makes our backdrops somewhat more of the receding type than the ongoing, preserved environmental beauty. It would be interesting to know if the minister can pinpoint specific examples or provide any kind of monetary numbers on where the appointment of Mr. Smith has had direct benefit if there's a financial value to his contributions.

Chair's Ruling Citations for Points of Order

The Chair: Hon. members, again the noise level is increasing.

While I've interrupted and have your attention, on the point of order that was raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, no citation was raised. The proper citation would have been Standing Order 23(b)(i). It did bring the speaker to focus a little bit more on the subject rather than on the personality, but a citation is required when you do bring forth a point of order.

I hope as well that this pause would also cause us to reflect that when I raise the question of noise level, it's adhered to for a while.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, please continue.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll try to be more dynamic and exciting so that I can hold everyone's attention. I know that my former students were always on the edges of their desks waiting for the words of wisdom to follow. [interjection] Well, he's awake.

Mr. Chase: I would also comment that with regard to the BSE and our oil sands, we have provided our American neighbours with some wonderful opportunities and, I believe, at our economic expense. We know that during the BSE crisis the American packing plants in Alberta did extremely well. The all-party committee that was formed asked the packers to open their books. That was prevented from happening because of a federal Conservative member. So my hope is that with the interrelationship of Conservative to Conservative, possibly we will have a better understanding.

I'm also concerned about the opening up of our environment particularly, as I mentioned, in the oil sands. We offer not only to America but to the world the greatest stable opportunity for oil and gas extraction, yet the royalty structures that we have agreed to, the 1 per cent which upon completion becomes 30 per cent, leaves us open to what I would see as almost a plundering possibility. Our southern neighbours receive the benefits of our oil, but they don't have the tailing ponds that we have as a result of our trading deals. I would hope that through this minister we could potentially with the federal government be renegotiating the prices that we get for our resources because I don't think we're served well.

I'm not going to talk about the Kyoto protocol and water transfers. I'm going to leave that up to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to raise. But considering what's happening in Bolivia, considering what's happening in Venezuela, considering the difficulties that are happening politically in the Middle East, we offer a tremendous stability. I think that there should be a price for that stability, and I would hope that the hon. minister would recognize that and possibly pass along to the appointed individual in Washington to drive a harder bargain. I'm not suggesting using oil as a lever with the softwood. I don't think that's the way to go. But I think that we should be recognizing that there is a tremendous environmental price and legacy as a result of America's growing dependency on our resources.

With regard to our intergovernmental relationship with Ottawa, I would hope, as the Member for Edmonton-Calder pointed out, that this minister might be talking with the federal child care minister, who has basically abandoned the opportunity for increased accreditation in daycares, better pay for daycare providers, and who has not recognized the need for stay-at-home parents with this $100 a month, which is a taxable part of the income for most families.

My hope with the intergovernmental affairs minister is that we're going to be looking for other economies to balance our future needs.

Our relationship with America has been profitable, but it's also been costly. I mentioned the environmental costs. Hopefully, some of the previous trips to China that have been alluded to will produce direct results. I know that China would like to put their imprint into our oil sands development as well.

I think we have to be very cautious that we're not viewed strictly as hewers of wood and gatherers of water, that our manufactured resources are as important if not more important. I know that the minister of agriculture, who will be speaking later, pointed out that he'd rather see beef in a box than beef on the hoof. Likewise, we have so many of our sawmill operators going belly up due to the softwood lumber problems, yet we're still sending trees instead of lumber across the border. So I would hope that this minister would encourage other departments such as Sustainable Resources and support the agricultural ministry in selling finished products, whether it be refined oil, butane, methane, et cetera, whether it be the beef in the box, or whether it be the plywood, the sheet lumber, the paper, as opposed to sending our raw products south and then paying for the price of having the finished product shipped back to us from the States.

These are all hopes. I know that other members wish to participate. I'll look forward to whatever responses the minister can provide.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the estimates briefing for International and Intergovernmental Relations. I'm particularly interested and will be brief on the issues of international action.

I don't know much about this ministry in relation to some of these environmental issues but would like to hear if there are any connections with the federal government in relation to the Kyoto and climate change issues, what, if anything, the department has in the plans at the present time in relation to international commitments on reducing greenhouse gases. Are there any kinds of connections with the Alberta Environment department? How does that connect between the two departments? What kinds of communications on international affairs would occur in this regard? Would the minister's department have anything to do with economic estimates of our international commitments, and is that part of the role of the International and Intergovernmental Relations department? If not, is there a potential for evolving that role with a view to having greater influence both federally and internationally?

In respect to water and the bulk sale of water, obviously many of us are concerned about the commodification of water and have been reassured in the past that this is not on the agenda both provincially and federally. The pressures are increasing. Has there been discussion, and what is the nature of the pressures that the department might be feeling on the issue of international or even interprovincial trade in water? Have any policy options been explored or developed on this? What research might be done, and what are the implications if the U.S., for example, did press the issue and seek to have access to our water?

A third area that I've been interested in these last few months has been the issue of foreign workers and what, if anything, this department has to do with the foreign workers issue. There seems to be a tension between provincial and federal counterparts over this whole issue and temporary foreign workers. What, if any, role does this department have there?

Those are the key questions I wanted to find more information on. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, in dealing with the comments made at the outset by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, I thank him very much for his support expressed for my position on seeking the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta. I will only say this, Mr. Chairman. There are many titles that a man may earn during his life. Those titles may include honourable, they may include minister, they may include Premier, but there are none that are more important than the title of dad.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View raised a number of very important policy questions, and I will say that the role of my department is this: it is to provide support for departments, like the Department of Environment, vis-à-vis other governments, be they other provinces or the federal government or perhaps even states or jurisdictions outside of Canada. So the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations would not itself have policy perspectives on areas of bulk water transfer or with respect to foreign workers or with respect to the area of Kyoto and climate change, all of which are important issues. But we would provide assistance in terms of dealing with other governments on these matters.

The hon. member knows that some of these matters, like environmental issues, have very much a perspective that covers different geopolitical boundaries. So we do provide important advice in working with other governments but don't have a particular policy perspective that would be independent of the Department of Human Resources and Employment or the department of health or the Department of Environment.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I think I'll take my seat and be happy to entertain any other questions that may arise.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise tonight and speak to the estimates for the current fiscal year for International and Intergovernmental Relations. I will be very brief tonight. I have really just one question that I don't believe any of the speakers have touched on yet this evening. I think it's a relevant question and should be asked, so I made a point of coming over this evening so that I would have the opportunity to ask.

For the minister. It's been brought to my attention that a lot of preliminary work has been done on the feasibility of establishing a trade office in the Middle East. When I look through the annual report of the ministry from 2004-2005, there's a results analysis on initiatives in the Asia-Pacific region, China and Korea, initiatives in Europe, both Germany and the Ukraine, and I note that we have international governance offices in China, South Africa, Russia, and Mexico, Mr. Chairman, but no reference that I could see there whatsoever to the Middle East. Certainly, when I go to the business plan for the ministry for this current year, again there's an awful lot of talk about improving international trade in various parts of the world, but I couldn't see any specific reference to the Middle East.

Given that there's an awful lot of oil and gas activity taking place in the Middle East, and certainly Alberta is renowned to be a world leader in oil and gas activity in North America, I'm concerned that perhaps we may be missing trade opportunities or not realizing the full benefit of trade opportunities coming out of that part of the world. So I guess that specifically I would like to ask the minister what the ministry is doing to actively pursue economic opportunities in the Middle East and trade relations with Alberta's oil and gas sector specifically. Also, when was the last time that the Alberta government ran an economic trade mission to the Middle East? I'm sure there have been some. I'm not currently aware of when they would have been. Also, I'm wondering whether or not there is a plan in place at the current time for opening a trade office in the Middle East.

I've been led to understand that, in fact, the agriculture minister and his ministry are supportive of such an idea, yet that's not necessarily the case with Economic Development. I'm going to assume that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations would perhaps be in the mix there as well. So, certainly, I think the minister may be able to shed a little bit of light on that, and that would be my question.

I'm hoping I can have some response this evening, and if not I'll certainly look forward to a response soon. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford should know that the offices that are in places like Tokyo, Beijing, Seoul, Hong Kong are offices of the Department of Economic Development, tourism. The only international office that falls under the purview of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations is the Washington office. The other ones as trade offices fall within the purview of a different department, so I'm not vested with any information with respect to any current plans to open an office in the Middle East. I'm not briefed on any such matters. So that will be a question that you will have to refer to the appropriate minister.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Again, I have more questions. I'm disappointed that the hon. minister has not indicated that he will endeavour to answer my questions from our previous discussion, and I note that with significant interest – significant interest, Mr. Chairman.

Now, again, I have questions in regard to the proposed Senate reform that has been discussed. Certainly, this department in the past has analyzed Senate reform and Senate nominee elections. You know, the credibility of this government on Senate reform and Senate nominee elections is certainly in doubt. This is a government that in the past has agreed to elect regional health authorities and then fired them.

So my questions, Mr. Chairman, in regard to Senate reform and the Senate nominee election are: has this provincial government engaged the new federal Conservative government on Senate reform? What long-range plans does the ministry have in place to pursue the idea of the triple-E Senate? We all know how fond this government is of spending public money on ad campaigns and public awareness campaigns. Is there one in the works by this department in regard to the triple-E Senate? If there is, how much of the ministry's budget is being devoted to this issue? Also, have any formal or informal discussions occurred between the Alberta and the federal governments in the past year regarding this elected Senate, and what were the results of these discussions?

Also, I too have some questions in regard to the Kyoto protocol, the business plan on page 285. Has the provincial government engaged the new federal Conservative government on the Kyoto protocol? What steps is the department taking to address the Kyoto protocol in future years? How is the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations working towards helping Alberta meet its Kyoto targets? What strategy has International and Intergovernmental Relations developed to deal with Kyoto? Are they working with other government ministries? What's going on there? Will the minister provide this House with copies of any economic impact assessments done by his department relative to the Kyoto protocol? Again, Mr. Chairman, will the minister provide copies of the documents his department has supporting the Alberta government's position relative to the Kyoto protocol?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View had some similar questions in regard to water. [interjections] They must be discussing selling memberships over there, Mr. Chairman. Seems to be going well too.

Now, exporting water. The business plans, again on page 286. We have some indication in the business plan of the future of water in this province and some of the discussions that are ongoing, but who is the department consulting on this issue? What work has the department done on examining the issue of water exports? Have any policy options been developed? What research is being conducted?

Also, the issue that was examined by the hon. member from Mountain View was the whole issue of foreign workers. If we look at the business plan on page 285, there is, certainly, an indication that there is to be a design, and implementation, and management of governance of "projects, particularly in priority countries, working with ministries, educational institutions, and private sector partners." Now, I realize that the whole memorandum of understanding for temporary foreign workers was implemented by a former minister of this government who is now sitting as an independent, but we need to have an examination of this, and I think that this would be the department to do that examination. I'm wondering if there's going to be any money allocated to do this.

Certainly, there could be work done with the federal government. First off, there should be a determination whether these workers are necessary. I did a little phoning around here this week, Mr. Chairman, and I was surprised at the number of outfits in the oil patch who indicated to me that they were not hiring staff at this time. It has nothing to do, they assured me, with breakup or any other thing. So examine the whole issue of whether we need temporary foreign workers.

The hon. minister talked earlier about being good neighbours. Well, I think we should first be good neighbours with our provincial cousins and ensure that all the people in British Columbia and all the people in Saskatchewan or Manitoba that may be interested in coming here have a chance to do so. Even if it's working temporarily – whether we consider a month or a year a temporary basis is no matter – we should ensure that all Canadians who are interested in coming here and working in our north developing the oil sands have a chance to do so. Certainly, the department could look at this issue.

I'm not convinced that Human Resources and Employment is doing it. Certainly, in Advanced Education they seem to just want to pretend the issue is not there. There are many examples of Canadians looking for work. Perhaps our minister could see what other Canadian provinces are doing in regard to manpower commitments and if they have any surplus in their labour force that perhaps could be employed here.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity talked about the whole issue of child care. Certainly, I was pleased to learn that child care negotiations were part of last year's business plan. I can only assume that that is going to be the case again. I was pleased to learn that the ministry had worked closely with Children's Services during the negotiations and will continue to support Children's Services in their endeavours. The hon. minister is not sitting too far from the Minister of Children's Services, so I'm sure those discussions and negotiations will continue with the Ministry of Children's Services, and hopefully the hon. minister is going to provide advice as well.

Certainly, there has been in the past, and the minister has talked about, the ongoing co-operation between Alberta and British Columbia and the joint cabinet meetings that have occurred and the meeting that occurred recently. There are a number of Alberta/B.C. agreements that have been signed. I hope that the minister can provide to this House an update on what negotiations are occurring at this moment.

What are we doing in regard to some of our oil royalty rates? Will there be consideration of a royalty structure that is identical, perhaps, in both provinces? I don't know if the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is going to be happy to hear this, but I am concerned about the difference in the coal-bed methane royalty structure in British Columbia. That may increase or enhance coal-bed methane development there at the expense of coal-bed methane development in Alberta. If the minister could update us on any of the negotiations that are going on in regard to this, I would appreciate it. Certainly, B.C. has some different ways of regulating their oil and gas industry, and there are some who say that their regulatory process is more streamlined than ours.

There are other questions, Mr. Chairman, that I have as well. I don't know how much time we have, but certainly there are many trade issues that the ministry works with. There's the issue of Canada/U.S. wheat. Again, live swine between Canada and the U.S. is a trade issue; aircraft conventions, the UNESCO draft international convention on cultural diversity, the Chinese investment in the oil sands.

Now, as I understand it, in November of 2004 the Ministry co-ordinated provincial initiatives related to achieving a presence in the federal government's China-Canada Energy Working Group, which is a forum for the discussion of Canadian and Chinese energy issues and interests, including oil sands development. These efforts resulted in the federal government agreeing to establish a separate session to allow Alberta to present information to the Chinese on the oil sands.

I don't think that we need to import Chinese workers on a temporary basis. I don't think that's good for the Chinese, nor is it good for Canada or Alberta, but certainly I think we should be encouraging Chinese investment in the oil sands.

I know that last summer, Mr. Chairman, there was significant interest expressed by the Chinese in investing in a major American oil and gas company, and of course the Americans would have no part of that. When we see the implications to our beef producers when the border with America was closed as a result of the BSE, we have to be very cognizant of what happened. It should be a reminder to us that we need to make sure that all our eggs, so to speak, are not in the same basket. I'm not talking about an Easter basket here but a market basket. That's why I think it is very, very important, and I would encourage the minister through the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations to find ways to encourage Chinese investment in the oil sands and also ensure that our export markets are diversified.

It's not in our interests to see all our bitumen production or our oil and gas go just to one market, the American market. I think that this is a very strategic development for our petroleum and particularly our bitumen production. It's in our interests to ensure that we have access to the Pacific Rim countries. Certainly, there is significant talk – and I think it's more than talk, but I think a pipeline is going to be built, whether it's to Kitimat or to Prince Rupert. Some of that production, at least, should go to the Pacific Rim. It don't think it's in our interests to see all this production going to go to Long Beach, California, for instance. I don't think that is in our long-term interest.

If we diversify our export market, I think we're all better off for it. What I would like to see this ministry do is take a very active role in ensuring that the export of our bitumen production is diversified. It's important not only for the market basket, Mr. Chairman; it's also important because with that pipeline from the Pacific tidewater to Edmonton then on to Fort McMurray there is going to be an additional line or loop, a much smaller line, that incredibly is going to take petroleum distillates from other jurisdictions, other oil fields in the world, to Fort McMurray, and it is going to be added to the bitumen before it is exported.

So the fact that we have in the past failed to protect our distillate production is now costing us because a lot of these liquids are of course running down the alliance line through the American Midwest. As a result of that – and I'm not saying that's the sole cause of this shortage – incredibly we will be importing some petroleum distillates to use as a dilutant in bitumen shipping, and this is where we're going to get it. So it's an important issue, and I certainly hope that the department is going to have an active role in any discussions.

Now, the softwood lumber dispute. We saw earlier this week where there was finally a resolution to this, and I'm wondering how this will affect the community timber program in Alberta. I know that this department, Mr. Chairman, in the past has been active in developing some solutions to the softwood lumber dispute, and I'm wondering if the minister could give us an update on that, please.

Also in the past, in reviewing the financial statements of this department, one will see that there are some deficiencies in the management employees' pension plan. Now, at the end of 2004 the management employees' pension plan reported a deficiency of $268,000, and the public service pension plan reported a deficiency of almost half a million dollars, and in 2003 that was over half a million dollars. What's being done to eliminate that deficiency? Where would I find that? In the estimates? If that is being fixed, I would like the hon. minister to point out where I could refer to that.

While we're on the topic of pensions, Mr. Chairman, is Murray Smith eligible for a pension once he retires from the political patronage appointment in Washington, DC? Did that compensation package come with a pension? It would be very ironic if the hon. minister was getting a pension because, certainly, he among others was advocating that pensions were not necessary at one point in his political career.

I understand that there are 60 or 61 members in this department. Does the ministry still share staff with the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development?

An Hon. Member: They do.

Mr. MacDonald: They do? Okay.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I'm at a loss. I could not possibly have anticipated a wide range of policy questions that are really outside of the purview of my own department, but I will attempt to spend some time going through the comments. There may have been a pearl of wisdom in the comments just made, but I will be shucking many, many oysters to find it.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm going to try and be very direct so that you're able to respond in kind. The trade office in Washington will celebrate its second anniversary this summer. I had asked earlier about the justification. As a teacher I frequently issued report cards. I'm wondering if the minister has provided a report card and if the Auditor General has been called upon to do a value-for-money audit of the effectiveness of the office. If it turns out that in this government's wisdom and through the Auditor General's verification there is value in this trade office, I'm wondering if the minister would comment about future trade offices. Throughout the discussion we've talked about not having all our eggs in one basket, and we've talked, as the minister did, about the need for a global market, a global economy. The obvious government that we have had trade missions to has been China, but the sort of sleeping tiger could also be a description for India. I'm wondering: to what extent has the minister considered potentially, again, as I said, not having a separate trade office but having an office within a Canadian embassy in India to talk about trade possibilities?

The other area that has been talked about is temporary foreign workers versus landed immigrants. Alberta is definitely the land of opportunity, and the government feels that we don't have sufficient in-province, in-country workers. I would be interested to know to what extent the intergovernmental relations minister has talked to his federal immigration counterpart to facilitate the immigration of the specific needs that we have in this province. Of course, one of the most outstanding needs that we have – and the government has tried to address this through third-way Americanization, privatization – is medical specialists. So I'm wondering to what extent the minister might be working along, as I say, with the federal immigration minister to speed up the process and the certification recognition for medical professionals.

I would very much appreciate having these individuals as landed immigrants, contributing to our taxes and to the quality of our life through the ethnic diversity, more than simply being indentured labourers, basically, being manipulated by not only their foreign government but by less-than-desirable employers working in some of our northern tar sands production areas.

The questions, again, then, to the minister: what kind of evaluation has there been of the trade office? If it turns out that this is a good way to go, in what other countries might we consider opening trade offices? To what extent has the minister been able to discuss with either the federal intergovernmental relations minister or the immigration minister about bringing to Alberta the type of talent where we definitely have a scarcity, such as the medical profession?

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Chairman, I should have thought that the issue of medical professionals would have been raised, perhaps, by the hon. member last week when the estimates of the department of health were before us. I note that at the standing vote time there were only three such members that in fact were in attendance from the Liberal opposition. I will simply say again that I will review Hansard to determine any relevant questions that may be specifically with respect to this portfolio.

The issue of trade offices in India, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity suggested, again, would fall within the purview of the Department of Economic Development. The office in Washington is not a trade office per se. It is co-located with the Canadian embassy in Washington, but its function is not trade per se, although the United States is our largest trade partner, with some $65 billion worth of material moving to our export markets south of the border. The purpose of the individual, Murray Smith, in our office is to facilitate good political relationships with policy-makers, decision-makers in Washington. He's done a fine job of that. I've outlined already some of the very specific results that have accrued to the benefit of Alberta as a result of his efforts.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would appreciate an opportunity to ask a few more questions about some of the intergovernmental relations with the federal government. It's not clear to me how and in what ways your ministry interdigitates with health and social services on issues like the transfer and equalization and cost sharing, and I would appreciate knowing more about, specifically, the equalization program and what role you play in either changing that relationship or continuing to support it and how you feel that's doing in relation to fairness to Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, these are very, very important issues for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, also for the province of Alberta as whole. With respect to equalization, fixing the fiscal imbalance, I can advise the hon. member that at this point there are now two reports that have been issued. One report, issued at the time of the meeting of the Council of the Federation in Montreal approximately three weeks ago, was a report that was commissioned by the Council of the Federation that outlined an actual formula for equalization and the equalization program.

More recently, Mr. Chairman, there has been a report that has been issued by the federal government – in fact, it was just this week – and it talks about a process by which provinces and territories and the federal government will be involved in the creation of a program to deal with fiscal imbalance. So at this point, in specific answer to the questions raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, there isn't a formula yet that has been agreed to by the provinces and territories.

There has not yet been a proposal for a specific formula by the federal government. What the federal government has done is set out a process by which they hope to achieve a formula. The main work is done by the Department of Finance. The Provincial Treasurer has responsibility for that, but the Department of IIR is involved at the side as an adjunct to discussions and a policy position that would be taken by the Department of Finance. So we work with the Premier, with the Minister of Finance to move forward on negotiating the position that ultimately is taken by the government with respect to items like fiscal imbalance.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Alberta has used the agreement on internal trade on two occasions that I'm aware of. I'm wondering: in regard to internal trade practices are there any challenges currently under way? Are there legislation, but there are some reasons to be cautious. We have a lot of features in this bill. The livestock identification and ownership: well, this act confirms that placing brands on livestock creates a presumption of ownership and that the inspection process is to assist in ownership identification or determination.

We're looking at another feature, which is the acceptance of other livestock identifiers. This act, as I understand it, broadens the type of identifiers that can be used to identify livestock to include identification devices used under other industry programs such as the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency tags.

There are also features around the bills of sale. This act establishes mandatory content for a bill of sale. Sellers and dealers will be allowed to customize the form of their bills of sale to meet their needs and practices.

Security interest and lien declaration: the act sets out a mandatory requirement that sellers disclose security interests in the livestock they are selling.

Prompt payment for livestock: the act requires all purchasers of cattle and horses to pay within two business days after possession or price discovery, whichever is later. There is protection of a seller's sale proceeds being held by a dealer. There is buyer's protection against conversion lawsuits.

There is standardized documentation.

There are also features to determine purpose and procedures for inspection, inspection sites, dealer licensing, and the livestock assurance fund.

You know, a strong cattle industry is vital to Alberta's economy. The minister has articulated that many times in this House. We know that the cattle industry has suffered as a result of the BSE crisis, and producers have been suffering from the ongoing issues of high input costs and low commodity prices at the farm gate. We should support legislation that will give the industry more efficiencies and, as a result, make it more competitive. But how will this bill affect the family farm in any way? There is a provision that requires payment within two days. I think this should benefit the smaller operators.

There have been many discussions not only on CBC radio but elsewhere in regard to organic producers.

An Hon. Member: The CBC?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, the CBC.

I would certainly think that there is no difference between any type of beef production. Alberta Beef certainly supports Bill 38. Now, as I understand it, not only to the minister but to his staff, to their credit they have discussed this bill with the beef producers. I don't imagine the hon. minister has discussed this with R-CALF. I don't see any reason why he would. [interjections] I didn't hear what the Minister of Environment, the minister with the green shirt, the light green shirt . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Mother ship.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. It's a fashion statement, certainly.

Mr. Boutilier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, on my shirt, I think under citation 23(c), (b), and (e).

I take back my point of order on my shirt, the disparaging remark by the member.

The Deputy Speaker: There's no point of order.

Carry on, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So we know the importance of the cattle industry to this province, and we know the importance of the value-added chain of that industry. I do have, however, some questions in regard to this legislation. We could perhaps have these questions answered during committee if that is appropriate.

In section 81 there is a time limit on prosecution. "A prosecution for an offence under this Act may be commenced within 2 years of the date of the alleged offence but not afterwards." I'm wondering why the minister and the department picked two years here. I'm curious. We could go into the cupboard and have a look at various statutes in this province, and there would be a wide range of time in which prosecutions could take place. I'm wondering if two years in this case is enough.

Also, in part 4, section 66, there is in this section an outline on tribunal and assurance funds. I would like a detailed explanation regarding this tribunal. I know that all of this is going to be done through regulation, but who are the members that the minister may have in mind to appoint to this tribunal, how many, and how much, if anything, would they get paid? Now, the tribunal is going to have significant power or authority. I note here that "the chair and other members of the Tribunal have the same power as is vested in the Court of Queen's Bench for the trial of civil actions." How is this tribunal going to be selected? How are they going to be paid? How many people will be on there? You know, all this is going to be done in regulation. I would just like to know, and I'm sure other Albertans would as well.

Now, section 88, section 122(4) of the Business Corporations Act. In regard to this could I please have from the minister an example of which corporations are going to be delegated authorities "in respect of the carrying out of a power, duty or function under this Act." If he could provide me with an example, I would be grateful.

Towards the back of this prospective legislation, or Bill 38, is detail on regulations. We're looking at details here for the regulation of prescribed livestock and prescribed livestock products, and the minister may make many regulations. Have the poultry producers or the turkey producers or any other parties that may have an interest in this matter been consulted in regard to this legislation? Certainly, when we look at the poultry industry, it appears to be singled out in this legislation by inspectors. Is there any relationship between the outbreak of bird flu in various flyways in Europe and Asia and this legislation? [interjections] You know, they may laugh across the way. For instance, let's look at what happened in the lower mainland in B.C. in the Fraser Valley, where entire flocks have had to be destroyed.

Now, what exactly is planned with this legislation? Is it to protect public safety? Hopefully, there never will be an outbreak of bird flu. For those members who are interested, we in the North American flyway are protected in some way by the Pacific Ocean on one side and the Atlantic Ocean on the other side. Hopefully, this would not be an issue with this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, those are certainly some of the questions I have at this time. If we have any other questions regarding this bill, Bill 38, I'm confident that the minister will during committee provide an answer for Albertans through this Legislative Assembly.

With those comments, hopefully, Bill 38 will be exactly what Alberta beef producers want and need to make their industry more competitive. Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Environment raised a point of order. Then he withdrew it. Just for the Assembly's interest, he did cite 23(b), which reads: a member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member "speaks to matters other than . . . the question under discussion." The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was speaking about the hon. minister's green shirt, which is clearly not mentioned anywhere in Bill 38. So had the Minister of Environment not withdrawn the point of order, it would have stood.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm sure it was with regard to the green grass upon which the cattle graze that prompted the comment.

I am in support of Bill 38. I just would like some qualifier-type questions to be answered. One of the impacts of Bill 38 is that the bill will streamline the inspection process currently completed by a delegated authority and licensed inspection services. If we go back in time to the first case of BSE, one of the problems in the identification of that case and the subsequent loss of billions of dollars in our global exports was the fact that we didn't have sufficient inspectors. It was, I think, because of a case of elk with CWD that it took three months before the actual BSE was confirmed in the original animal. That original animal that suffered from BSE had come from a farm in Saskatchewan that, unfortunately, a cousin of mine also purchased cattle from, and as a result his whole prized Hereford herd had to be culled.

What I'm wondering with regard to the CWD is to what extent, if any, this bill considers the testing for CWD. There is a concern, again going back in history, that when we imported elk from the States, within that herd there were cases of CWD that had potentially spread throughout other herds in the province. Along with CWD and the potential of contaminating wild herds, I know that the government has taken some precautionary measures in the southeast part of the province in terms of going after wild deer and testing those deer.

It seems to be somewhat of a catch-22 as to whether the CWD originated in domestic herds or whether it was transferred to domestic herds through the wild animals themselves, and these questions of intertransfer of CWD cause concern. So I'm wondering if the inspection process that's being discussed in Bill 38 deals with that particular concern.

The other concern, again with common potentially transferable animal diseases, is bovine tuberculosis, which apparently a number of the buffalo in Wood Buffalo park suffer from, and apparently that same disease is quite rampant in the herds in the Caribou Mountains provincial park. Ranchers, apparently, in the area of the Caribou Mountains park are concerned about their beef herds coming in contact with the buffalo.

Apparently, buffalo have a little bit of difficulty, I gather, distinguishing the difference between a female cow and a female buffalo. If they have an opportunity, they will take advantage of it. I gather that ranchers are concerned about the spread of this bovine tuberculosis, and that's why they've been calling for the culling of the herd. I'm wondering if the minister can tell me if there's been any development of a test for bovine tuberculosis other than . . . [interjection] Well, it deals with the inspection process, and that's what I'm trying to understand. Again, I'm trying to understand the inspection process. If there is such a thing as a bovine tuberculosis test without a postmortem effect, we could save a number of our buffalo. That's a concern I have.

I also have a concern as to whether we have increased the testing of our live cattle as part of renewing our trade agreements with Japan. With regard again to the inspection process, have we developed an economic method of BSE testing for live cattle, or is it strictly that we're catching them in the slaughtering process? While they're alive and prior to exporting live cattle, is there any way that we have now of economically creating more testing?

Under Bill 38 it talks about protecting buyers of cattle from debt. It talks about increasing fines and allows fines to be levied on a per-head basis. One of the after-effects of the BSE crisis was farmers being forced economically to abandon their herds. Animals were dying of malnutrition. I'm wondering if to any extent Bill 38 on the per-head basis area and the fines provides any kind of support for farmers and ranchers who are still suffering from the economic effects of BSE.

Another area. I know that the minister has talked about this in Public Accounts. The minister expressed reservations about the CAIS program, and I'm just wondering if Bill 38 offers any recommendations or substitutions for the CAIS program, keeping in mind that this is a city fellow talking to an agricultural expert.

Thank you very much, and to whatever extent the minister can answer these questions, I would appreciate it.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available after each speaker from this point on.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few points, questions. I haven't been through the bill, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act, as much as I wanted to, but one of the questions I have for the minister is: do they consider – and I haven't been able to find it anywhere – tattoos for purebred breeders? Often they don't want to put a brand on their cattle. I'm just wondering if that is recognized as an identifier. On page 6 under (n), "identifier" means," it goes through, but it doesn't talk about tattoos.

I'm also wondering about the new electronic tags, if they're coming through. Perhaps it's in here and I've missed it. Are these types of identifiers working for identification in there? It mentions in here freeze branding and hot branding. I've been told by some – and perhaps it isn't practised anymore – about acid branding. Are there any problems with that?

Also, some of the breeders that I'm aware of have been doing their number branding or personal identification on the opposite side of the cattle from where their brand is. For example, if their registered brand is on the left hip, they would put a number brand on the right hip. I'm wondering if that's legal because in here it says that it must be on the same side. I'm wondering if that's new to this legislation or if it's been that way and people haven't been following the legislation.

Other than that, I appreciate the minister bringing these three things under one act and trying to simplify it and bring it together because identification in commerce is certainly important in the cattle industry. I thank him for the efforts of going out to the industry and putting this together and, like I say, hopefully making it simpler, but it's still plenty complicated.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?
Would the minister like to close debate?

Mr. Horner: Yeah, I would.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to cover a couple of points before we did close the debate to maybe shorten the next phase of this bill.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned that he would have liked to have seen the three-column document. It's unfortunate that he was not able to attend the briefing session we had for the opposition a few days ago. He would have had opportunity to do that, and perhaps we wouldn't have gotten into all of this discussion about testing and a bunch of other things that are nonrelevant to what this legislation is.

When it comes to animal health, when it comes to protection of the animals' rights and animal husbandry, those are covered in totally separate acts. This has absolutely nothing to do with those. A number of the comments that were raised by the Liberal opposition were based on BSE, CWD, transferability of animal diseases: absolutely nothing to do with this legislation, totally irrelevant to what we're talking about here. I would encourage the hon. member to perhaps obtain the documents that we did send over to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar because a lot of that was in there, and it would save you the time of going through the legislation.

In regard to the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner the whole idea of bringing the three acts together was indeed to create an atmosphere where we could use these new forms of identification, like the radio frequency ID tag. That's part and parcel of what we're trying to do here: to bring three acts that were done many, many years ago up to the new standard. Indeed, those things are in there, and once we get into some of the other questions in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speaker, I will perhaps have more to say on it.

With that, I would ask that we call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a second time]

Bill 29 Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mr. Agnihotri]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few brief comments on Bill 29. Overall we have to applaud any enhancements to environmental protection in Alberta. I believe that most of this bill provides for a bulking up of existing legislation, particularly in regard to emission controls, trading, codes of practice for low-risk activities, and accessibility to sound environmental information.

As my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned last night – and I agree with him – the primary area of concern in this bill is in regard to contaminated sites and their management. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act requires the reporting and immediate cleanup of spills and accidental contamination when it occurs. Certainly, this is something we can all get behind. The principle of making the polluter pay, not the government and certainly not the people, must be paramount. I understand that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View will be bringing forward a number of amendments in committee to ensure that such is the case and to strengthen this bill.

Albertans have made it abundantly clear that the health and well-being of their environment is of paramount importance. Increasingly we are getting more and more worried about the impact of industrial development in Alberta, particularly at this time of record-high oil and gas prices and our headlong pursuit of profits. The numbers are quite staggering: over 350,000 oil and gas installations here and over 370,000 kilometres of pipelines, not all of which are in new or in pristine condition.

Alberta Environment has the awesome responsibility of watching over our most precious commodity, and every piece of legislation regarding the environment must be carefully studied for its impact. Albertans have placed their trust in Alberta Environment and the Alberta Legislature, so every piece of environmental legislation must be carefully examined. In amending the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and other legislation on the environment, we must guarantee that we do not in any way weaken our capacity to monitor, analyze, and hold accountable those people, companies, and organizations that allow release of contaminants into our environment.

Mr. Speaker, there will be plenty of debate during committee on the nuts and bolts of this bill and how to improve it, and I trust that the government will listen to any amendments in the spirit that they are intended, with an eye toward improving Bill 29, which will ultimately lead to a cleaner and healthier environment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. In this province value quite often seems to have a dollar sign attached to it. My concern has to do with the environmental ministry receiving half a per cent of this government's budget and being expected with that half a per cent of government budget to provide the protection that Bill 29 is suggesting that it undertake. This province seems to be hell-bent on extraction of resources. The government backpedaled a bit, I'm pleased to see, on the MOSS, the minable oil sands. The former minister that we referred to earlier in discussion, now our representative in Washington, Mr. Smith, from Washington urged the Alberta government to get the oil and the gas out of the ground as quickly as possible because of its economic value.

Albertans have told this government that the three most important areas that have come out in poll after poll after poll are health care, education, and environment. Environment seems to be not only from a monetary standpoint, which is symbolic of the attitude this government provides for the environment, but in terms of practice something that is talked about but not followed up on. I am concerned that in the limited parks and protected areas, the 4 and a half per cent of land use in Alberta, intrusion has been permitted by oil and gas, by forestry, logging, et cetera, that we can't even protect this small percentage of our province.

There has been talk – and I'm sure the drilling rigs are on their way – of the Rumsey ecological area. To what extent the Whaleback will be protected is not clear. There does not seem to be a desire for this government to advance with any rapidity on protecting the Castle Crown wilderness area. While Suffield falls under the federal government's auspices because of the military base, I would like to see Alberta at least setting aside a portion of the land and saying: this land is sacred; no industrial intrusion will be permitted into these spaces.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and myself have been out to a series of rural forums that were held by land-use concerned individuals about the environmental effect on their groundwater of coal-bed methane drilling. The Minister of Energy said: well, drilling for regular gas and drilling for gas in coal, or coal-bed methane, is very much one and the same. However, as the hon. Member for Calgary-

Mountain View has pointed out, we need baseline testing. The type of baseline testing that's absolutely necessary to protect our water, which the hon. minister so frequently refers to as blue gold, is testing that involves isotope testing. We not only need to know what type of gas is in the water; we need to know the percentages and the types of gas that are there.

We lost our opportunity. The government allowed the economic activity of coal-bed methane to go ahead, and now we're five years behind in trying to track the effects that the drilling has or hasn't had in the Horseshoe Canyon, where the majority of the drilling has taken place. We need to have the scientific expertise to have a form of baseline testing that is comprehensive. We need to have a committee of experts such as Dr. David Schindler, who seems to be in the favour of this government in that he was appointed to the committee to look at remedies to the Lake Wabamun spill. We desperately need that expertise.

This province is out of balance. Economic drivers are sacrificing environmental viability. A First Nations expression is that we borrow this land from our grandchildren. As a grandfather I'm extremely concerned about our economic rush. I'm not the only one concerned about the economic rush. Some people would try and sideline me or label me as a tree hugger. I'm concerned about the long-term effects. I'm concerned about not knowing how vast or how narrow our underground aquifers are. We are rushing into a circumstance that could potentially contaminate those aquifers.

We can't drink oil; we can't drink gas. When I've been out in the rural public forums, I've recounted the story of King Midas, and that sort of works very well with the minister's comment about blue gold. Maybe that's why I think in terms of King Midas. King Midas asked for the power to turn anything he touched into gold. The thing that he valued most was his daughter, and he lost that daughter when he touched her. She turned into gold.

My concern is that we are selling off our future to the highest bidder at this point in terms of the rapidity with which we're drilling without having gone back in time and tried to decide to what extent and to what quantity and what percentage the gas that occurs in water has multiplied. We don't know for the last five years what extent drilling has had on the loss of pressure for wells. Until we have both the past history and a viable baseline testing for future drilling, we are putting the safety of our water at tremendous risk. Coal-bed methane isn't the only risk to water. Water is to an extent a renewable resource, but, as we know, with the glaciers rapidly melting and the demand upon our rivers for a variety of industrial and agricultural usages, we are putting our future water availability at great risk.

In March, when we as a Liberal caucus went up to Fort McMurray, the oil sands companies that we talked to were proud of the fact that they had not taken full advantage of the water allotment that they were permitted to take out of the Athabasca River. As the oil sands expand, more and more permission will be given to draw water from the Athabasca River. The Pembina Institute, Dr. David Schindler, the Parkland Institute, a variety of reputable organizations and scientists have spoken out about the problem of the continued draw from the Athabasca River. We've taken some steps to limit further drawing from the Oldman River, but the government is still willing to do interbasin transfers.

Water is beyond a doubt with air, with land our most important natural resource. People are our most important resource. The future is not being looked into in our out-of-balance economic drive. If we don't take the time to slow down and get it right, we won't have a second time.

When I've spoken to representatives of oil and gas companies in our rural outreach, they've said that they want very definite regulations from the government. They said: give us the regulations, and we'll follow them; we're in this for the long haul. Self-reliance and self-governance isn't good enough. This government has to set the example and set the requirements. Set the bar for any resource extraction companies to meet, and they will meet it. We have examples of companies who are meeting these standards, but we need to raise the bar because water, air – obviously, we can't live without them.

I am concerned that while this Bill 29 starts to address some of the areas, such as abandoned well sites – although it still puts Alberta taxpayers on the hook for the cleanup, particularly of any companies that have gone bankrupt in the meantime – our environment continues to be threatened.

The government does not seem to be particularly selective of where it undertakes an economic activity; for example, the placement of wind energy turbines. While this is the alternative energy we very much appreciate, we question the location in the Cypress Hills where original historic fescue grass exists. We also are concerned about the effect on historic natural grasses where there's a proposed site east of Fort Macleod.

No amount of money, no amount of development, no amount of immediate gratification can pay for the loss of our future and the future of our grandchildren. We need balance in this province. We need the government to recognize that .5 per cent is almost not worthy of discussion. Albertans have been deserted by a government that puts immediate economic prosperity over long-term economic prosperity and over the quality of life and the survival of Alberta as we know it. The environment deserves much better than it is receiving at this time from this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member. As I listen to his speech, I just have one simple question: have you even read the bill?

Mr. Chase: Yes. To respond, I have. In addressing the bill I talked about its shortcomings. I talked about what it contained, I talked about it being a good start, and I also talked about its shortcomings. What it is missing is considerably more important than what it contains, and I am suggesting that the government look at these shortcomings, and within this bill, possibly during Committee of the Whole, we'll try to address its shortcomings with amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with a great deal of interest in making some comments to Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006. I see a great diversity of amendments within this act, six of them otherwise. The scope of the sum total is quite wide, and certainly I do see some merit in at least half of them. Really, I am quite optimistic that with some amendments this bill, in fact, would be a net gain to enhancing and protecting our natural environment here in the province, but I do want to put in that caveat that I do have some amendments to bring forward.

The proposed amendments from the minister here I just want to make some comments on specific to sections 4, 5, and 6, Mr. Speaker, straightaway. The proposed amendments relating to the minister's right to delegate to any person a great many of the minister's duties and obligations is somewhat disconcerting. Yes, this may give Alberta Environment some flexibility to work closely with environmental experts of some renown, and certainly we have quite a number of excellent experts in many areas right here in the province, but I also am concerned that perhaps there's nothing to prevent this partnering from occurring with environmental experts that are tied to industry. I think the independence of a tribunal or a consulting group is absolutely paramount when we're dealing with the environment, so I would ask: what oversight is available, then, and guaranteed to prevent conflict of interest with this partnership section of this bill?

I know that the Environmental Law Centre has contacted the minister's office to discuss their concerns with Bill 29, which very closely mirror my own concerns and the concerns of my caucus on Bill 29. The Environmental Law Centre recommended a public registry of all delegations and transfers of power as well as guaranteed access to all accompanying documentation: contracts, agreements, such like. Such an amendment would recognize that it was, in fact, beneficial for Alberta Environment to partner with various groups and individuals in certain situations yet at the same time recognize that the public accountability guaranteed by such a registry would help to ensure not only due process and the judicious use of delegation but also the proper completion of statutory obligations. So I will ask the minister then: will he be discussing such amendments relating to the public accountability of delegated powers? This is something that is absolutely crucial to the effectiveness of this part of the bill.

The ministry's government press release announces that "another proposed change will improve programs for reclamation of coal and oil sands mines, and ensure progressive and ongoing reclamation of these sites is promoted and acknowledged." I would like to ask: what exactly is this promotion of reclaimed sites accomplished by this bill? Does the minister propose to promote past reclamation when, according to the Auditor General, the ministry does not obtain sufficient financial security from the current sites to ensure reclamation? We have in the oil sands area some of the very largest sort of waste acreages that you'll find anywhere on the planet, and we have not seen adequate reclamation of tailing ponds and some landfills as well. I'm just not seeing that there's any real incentive for the various companies up there to in fact engage in starting to do effective reclamation, especially of tailing ponds. Perhaps they would if they had a financial assurance that would be submitted before that would somehow force them to engage in reclamation.

I would like to know: why is there so much emissions trading relegated to the regulations part of this bill? There's nothing that we can put into legislation to ensure proper emissions thresholds. If the section 8 purpose is to strengthen emission controls, why are there no controls to be put into legislation? Why are there no details? I think that it is the dominion of this House to put in guiding principles, and when we're dealing with the environment, with air pollution, I think it's incumbent upon us to in fact put those right into the legislation and not leave it to the vagaries of regulation.

So I would ask the hon. minister, please, to clarify what some of these regulations might in fact look like. If we're not going to see them in the law, then I think it's incumbent upon him to at least give us some idea of where he wants to go. What might some of them be? How might they be determined? What's to prevent industry from setting its own thresholds given that the minister may choose to delegate to industry this part of the regulation? We've already seen the fiasco of the alleged Kyoto targets that have been set here by this government, which aren't reduction targets at all but intensity targets, which are less than meaningful. I don't think we want to head down that same path with this important bill.

Given the extension of reporting and remediation responsibilities backwards to before the EPEA was enacted in section 12 and given that the Auditor General's report from a few years ago found that Alberta Environment was not collecting sufficient security to adequately cover the costs of remediation and that, in fact, in 2004-2005 this problem had still not been addressed after six years of being addressed by the Auditor General: with all of those things in mind I'm just curious to know what this new backwards extension of remediation responsibility actually amounts to. I think that after six or seven years this needs to be addressed in a meaningful way, and I just don't see it happening here in this section 12 of this Bill 29.

I'd like to ask as well: how does the hon. member respond to the Environmental Law Centre's concerns in regard to the reporting of historical releases? Without making the failure to report such releases an offence, it can easily be argued that this amendment has, in fact, no teeth. So I would ask: will the hon. member please consider the amendments proposed by the Environmental Law Centre, with whom I've been interacting quite closely here, especially those relating to sections 227 and 228 of the original act, making the failure to report historical releases an offence?

How about companies that are now defunct? The Alberta taxpayer is often held holding the bag after such a cleanup, and in fact companies are restructuring themselves so that they can disappear or implode or fall into a giant trust hole upon the completion of a project. With the scale and scope of the projects that are going on here now, it would be frightening to think that once they're done, they will simply cease to exist and thus cease to be able to pin any responsibility on them for the huge cleanups that are involved with these energy sites.

Does the hon. member know if the ministry is pursuing the environmental royalty initiative that he proposed here in this House in March, right? I was very heartened to hear it, but I also felt the stinging slap of some unseen force that suddenly removed the hundred million dollar a year concept to build an environmental trust fund, which I found very encouraging but then equally discouraging once it suddenly disappeared.

In the old act, section 112 read something like this: "take all reasonable measures to . . . remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment." Now the amendment says in the new bit, section 112: to "remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to prevent an adverse effect or further adverse effect."

While of course we recognize that there are a wide variety of techniques or technologies resulting in reclamation of polluted sites, the original section, in my mind, seems much more demanding than the proposed amendment. I would ask the hon. minister: what, in fact, prompted the language change in this section, and what does it represent substantively, if you please? Why not require or continue to require this maximum protection of human life, health, and the environment as well as remediate, manage, and otherwise remove the substance in a manner to prevent the adverse effect? If you stick those two together, the amendment I think then would be strengthened in remediation responsibilities rather than watered down. That would be my suggestion for that bit there.

Finally, what do the amendments to section 146 of the original act actually propose to do? Will your average person living in this province actually have better and freer access to information, or does this act restrict information? What do the changes allowing the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations concerning the access to information actually mean? Why do they seem limited to the progressive reclamation sites?

Mr. Speaker, those are my observations that I would like to bring up at this point in time in regard to this bill. I do have lots of specific comments on some of the language in each section, which I will reserve for the next reading. As I say, there are a couple of sections that I think deserve some amendments.

All of those things being said, at least we do have an environmental bill that has come up. Considering the wilful ignorance that I think takes place in regard to environmental protection in this House, I find that I have to look for some small signs of hope in the midst of everything else to suggest that we are addressing environmental protection and enhancement. Bill 29 does do that, so that gives me something to at least hang my hat on.

Thank you for the opportunity to make comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there others?

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened very carefully to all of the comments, concerns, and questions from all of the members that have spoken to this bill last night and tonight. I can assure you that I will be answering those questions, and I will be answering them when we go into Committee of the Whole. With that, I'd like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise tonight in Committee of the Whole on Bill 28, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006. I just want to take a few minutes to respond to some comments made by members of the opposition during second reading. The Leader of the Official Opposition stated during second reading:

For democracy to have legitimacy and for elected members to have legitimacy themselves, the citizens [and] the voters in any society need to have confidence that their election processes and mechanics are working properly. Unfortunately, those election processes and mechanics broke down pretty badly in the last municipal election in Calgary.

Well, as so often is the case in this House, the Leader of the Official Opposition is wrong.

The election processes in Calgary absolutely worked in the 2004 municipal election. The current process in place caught the attempted fraudulent voting, and there was not one special ballot that was in dispute that made it into the system. The process was caught, and the people have been charged with voter fraud.

Now, while the process worked in detecting the fraudulent ballots, the process that the returning officer was to follow wasn't as clear. So one of the changes being proposed in this bill is an amendment which will have a person appointed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs make a determination on those special ballots that were set aside by the returning officer, and this will help close the gap in that process.

Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Official Opposition also expressed concern that the bill allows too much discretion to local municipalities. Again, I've heard in this Assembly the Leader of the Opposition criticize the government for treating municipalities like children, and now he says we shouldn't give those municipalities the discretion to customize their own voting process. What works in a municipality of 1 million people is a lot different than what works in a village of several hundred, and our committee heard this request time and time again during the hearings throughout the province.

Finally, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview had concerns during second reading around the process of special ballots and whether direct contact is made by the returning officer with the person requesting the special ballot. The process in this legislation regarding special ballots will mirror what is currently in the provincial Election Act. Therefore, special ballots could be requested by e-mail, and there would not be direct contact. However, the important thing for the member to remember is that the special ballot only has importance when it is returned. He should be aware that when a person requests a special ballot and returns it, he or she must also sign a declaration similar to what is signed when voting in person. That declaration is a legal document, and if it is determined to be fraudulent, then appropriate court action will occur, as in fact it did in ward 10.

All of these changes are designed to enable as many people as possible to participate in municipal elections. Both members that I referred to this evening mentioned in their remarks the concern about the low voter turnout. Our committee was also concerned about that and cognizant of the fact that when it recommended many of the changes in the proposed bill.

With those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to discussion in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with some interest to speak on some of the specific elements of Bill 28, Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006. I certainly have reason to believe that this is a utilitarian and perhaps even somewhat progressive piece of legislation, that seeks to enable council elections to function in a more smooth and reasonable way. Certainly, we are as a caucus with the New Democrats considering tentatively supporting the legislation. I just want to look at some of the specific language that this bill has and try to look for some clarification and ask some questions. That sounds like fun.

Starting with page 1 of the bill and talking about "presiding deputy," this presumes to mean a person "who has been appointed as a presiding deputy pursuant to section 14, by a returning officer." Mr. Chairman, the creation of this new position begs the question: why is it needed, and what exactly is this new position addressing? It seems to me that it's already covered somehow, but perhaps I'm not seeing something that the authors could illuminate for me.

Section 10 of these proposed amendments reads, "A presiding deputy shall carry out the duties of a presiding deputy under this Act and any other duties that a returning officer assigns to the presiding deputy.” This doesn’t really clarify why the position is needed, in my mind. Obviously, we can assume that it is to give the returning officer something to look like the eyes and ears on the ground, I suppose, and allow the returning officer to be in more than one place at one time and address several issues in a more timely fashion. Perhaps the hon. member could give me a little additional information on that section, and we’d be happy to accommodate for that.

On page 2 it says: give unto the elected authority “the power to pass bylaws and resolutions.” Okay. This gives more sort of regional and jurisdictional flexibility, I suppose, to address needs that may arise in regard to special ballots; for example, when they must be received by and whatnot, opening of polls, and posting of voting instructions, I would presume in other languages as well. I don’t know. So that looks fine.

- 13.1(1) A returning officer must be independent and impartial when performing the duties of a returning officer.
- (2) No local jurisdiction, its officers or any other person shall obstruct or attempt to influence the returning officer in the carrying out of the duties of a returning officer.

The specification of impartiality seems to me a little bit odd given that it’s so obvious. You know, there haven’t been any accusations of partiality in recent years. However, many of the amendments being proposed here reflect the desire to anticipate potential problems, so I guess that, really, it can’t hurt.

Just pursuant to this impartiality section, though, if you do want to mention it, then I think you have to have measuring sticks by which to look and see if someone is, in fact, impartial. Do we look at, say, the associations of that individual, perhaps potentially being a relative of a candidate or perhaps a member of a certain political group or what have you? I mean, these things are perhaps what we should look at not just municipally but provincially in terms of returning officers because, of course, if it is even perceived, like if someone is married to someone who is a member or an executive of a political party and then is a returning officer, then I think that the potential for a perceived lack of impartiality is there. I guess we might as well take it the whole nine yards if that’s the way we want to go.

Pages 4 and 5 talk about a person being not eligible to be nominated as a candidate in any election under this act if on nomination day the person has been convicted of an offence under the Election Act. Okay. That’s pretty straightforward. Prohibitions in regard to official agents and scrutineers as well: that’s got no problem at all.

Page 5 specifies that nomination forms must include “the name, address and telephone number,” and I presume that this is the candidate’s campaign manager. But what if the candidate doesn’t have a campaign manager? We might want to suggest that this section read, perhaps: if applicable. If someone maybe doesn’t have an official agent or what have you, then it’s not an issue.

On page 5 again it talks about the minimum number of electors required to sign the nomination of a candidate. That number must be at least five and not more than 100. The maximum used to be 25. Why is it changed from 25 to 100? What’s the purpose of this? Are we serving the best interests of accessibility and democracy to increase that by such a large amount?

Page 6 talks about clearing up something about candidates’ responsibility for the actions of their campaign workers. The imposing of liability, though, Mr. Chairman, on candidates for the doings of campaign workers is very contentious and I think is perhaps a little dangerous. In that ward 10 case the candidate had to resign her seat and did not face charges, but five of her campaign workers were charged. I don’t know; perhaps we are opening a can of worms here that is beyond the ability of legislation to deal with. A court of law might be better suited to deal with these sorts of goings-on, cheating and whatnot, in a campaign.

Pages 7 and 8 talk about the languages section. I don’t see a big problem with that, but I guess I would ask the question: will the province, Municipal Affairs, be responsible for the procurement and translation of instructions? I’d be curious about that.

Page 10, I guess, is a bit peculiar because it says that notice of a bylaw to be passed under section 53 must be circulated in one newspaper publication or mailed directly to every residence. I would just like to perhaps highlight the idea that the section should say something like “a major newspaper” because, of course, there are many newspapers around, and if you pick something that is not widely read, then perhaps you wouldn’t be giving justice to this section, getting the information out like you should.

Other than that, I guess those are the main areas that I wanted to just point out, looking for clarification from the authors of the bill. My colleague previously mentioned the concerns we had in regard to special ballots, and I think that the hon. member did address that in his comments here earlier this evening, so that’s good.

Hopefully, we can see some proper administration of democracy at the municipal level here in the province. We certainly have in the past. I think that one of the things that’s important for us to try to encourage is the overall participation rate of voters in municipal elections. Hopefully, having smooth and straightforward regulation that shows transparency and impartiality will help to promote a higher voter turnout in municipal elections in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to hand out both bouquets and beefs. Under the bouquet I would like to thank the hon. promoter of this bill, who also comes from Calgary, that great city where the Flames will soon win. The bouquet I wish to provide is the fact that such great consultation took place. Eighteen different opportunities were provided to Albertans to comment, question, provide input into Bill 28, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2006. For that, the hon. member deserves praise, as do the members of his committee.

With regard to the beefs, the hon. member suggested that the problem in ward 10 was caught with great speed, and he suggested that our hon. Leader of the Opposition should have realized the speed at which the difficulties were caught. It took weeks and months before the government finally got involved in the process. One of the reasons they got involved in the process was that a Calgary judge had several questions that were not able to be answered, and the individual whose campaign managers and members subsequently faced court challenges basically pleaded the Fifth, and the expenses associated with a trial and investigation were waived.

However, in the meantime, other candidates involved in that election received no financial support, and their court costs in trying to get to the truth were in the $50,000-plus area. Had the Alberta government moved in somewhat faster than snail or glacial pace, these expenditures would not have taken place.

I would like to see the same kind of effort, the same type of election improvement concerns that Bill 28 provides for municipalities provided to our province. The need for identification of voters is absolutely a part of the democratic process. In a provincial election as well as a municipal election there should be a requirement for picture ID. The confusion that arose over the mailed-in ballots still has to be addressed to a greater degree, but with the majority of voters showing up to register their votes personally, having at least one picture ID with another accepted form of ID, a health card, whatever, would ensure that the process is, indeed, valid.

In the provincial election the same type of controversy did not exist to that magnitude, but there was definite controversy with regard to what constituted a spoiled ballot in the Edmonton-Castle Downs constituency. Three times the original vote was upheld. Three times the same ballots were gone over, and the same conclusions resulted. However, with a judiciary review the result of the Edmonton-Castle Downs election was reversed.

It would be great if elections were so successful that there was no controversy, that the person who won, Mr. Chairman, won hands down, that there was no doubt about the integrity of the process. This bill goes a long way to improving the municipal process. I would like to see the same type of energy, effort, and scrutiny applied to the provincial process.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that, and I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill 28 this evening. Certainly, when we review this bill in committee, it's important that we remember that we must promote integrity and confidence in the municipal election process by setting election standards that result in a more secure and transparent election process. It has been discussed here before that we must acknowledge and encourage the public's role and participation in the election process and ensure that the legislation permits both small and large jurisdictions to respond to their specific needs by permitting some discretionary procedural options within the framework of this legislation.

Certainly, when we're looking at amending the Local Authorities Election Act to make it more secure and transparent, the first issue that comes to mind is the Calgary ward 10 election in 2004. Of course, there was the subsequent review of that incident, and we have this legislation before us. We also have participation by Mr. Clark, the former Ethics Commissioner. The events that led up to this sort of – well, it wasn't really an inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Some members of the government caucus, the Progressive Conservative Party, at one point had advocated for an inquiry, but it was decided that there would be this inspection and that the inspection would get to the bottom of these problems with the ward 10 vote.

Now, we've been through this before in this House, but certainly the allegations that were presented in the ward 10 voting scandal were serious. Whether we had this inspection process or this inquiry or a combination of both through this MLA review committee, we're sitting here this evening in committee discussing Bill 28.

You know, there were statements made. This is a statement from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's discussions at second reading were challenged earlier in debate, Mr. Chairman, by the hon. Member for Calgary-West. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview had this to say. This is from the Calgary Herald dated Thursday, December 16, 2004, and this is in discussions around the guarantee that the inspection that will be conducted may not be the same as a public inquiry. The hon. member stated, and I quote: this feels like Tory insiders covering up for Tory insiders. End of quote. We can't have a process where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview or anyone else does not have confidence in the system. I hope that this bill is going to protect and enhance municipal elections.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as was previously discussed in this Assembly in regard to this matter, there were a lot of allegations that have led to this Bill 28, but we can't ignore the fact that election officials rejected over 1,200 mail-in ballots for that ward. The person who initially won the election had to resign a short time after that. Under the Election Act we know that no one can supply a ballot to any person or request a ballot in the name of some other person whether the name is that of a person living or dead or a fictitious person. Offences under this act carry a maximum penalty of $10,000 or six months in jail, so this is a serious issue, and this bill is hopefully, hon. Member for Calgary-West, going to deal with this in an effective manner.

Have there been any other cases in Alberta where there has been election fraud at the municipal level? Well, I can't recall any, Mr. Chairman. Other hon. members of this Assembly may be able to help me. I can't think of any other examples. I can certainly think of an example at the provincial level. This has been discussed in the Legislative Assembly, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and is around the whole issue of special ballots.

We have to be very, very careful about how we administer these special ballots. When we look specifically at section 38 of this legislation, Mr. Chairman, and the special ballots process, the key provision here is that it allows the returning officer to set aside special ballots received that are believed to be in contravention of the act. They can then report the alleged contravention to a person or persons appointed by the minister to determine the validity of the ballots.

This section is a direct response to the ward 10 situation in Calgary. This is a provision designed to ensure integrity in the process and also ensure that the returning officer is not put into a position whereby the returning officer has to police the provisions or has to accept special ballots that they feel are questionable. That certainly didn't happen at the provincial level with my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie. It was discovered that there were special ballots that went through the whole system there, and unfortunately the people who had supposedly voted were outside the country and had indicated – I'm not sure, but I think by affidavit – that they were certainly not in the country and did not vote, but someone had somehow used their name to vote. We may make light of a matter like that, but if we go up to the north side of the city, there were three votes that determined an election. So every vote counts, and we should count them carefully. Whether it's 1,266 or 4 or 3, every vote counts.

When we go through this, whether it's section 32 or section 33 or section 56, this bill will certainly strengthen our process.

As I understand it, the city of Edmonton has had a look at this legislation. They expressed no concerns. The AUMA was also contacted. They were involved in the consultation process and expressed no reservations about the content of this bill. This bill leaves the decision-making in the hands of the local authorities. This respects municipal authority and autonomy instead of prescribing rules to them like they are children of the province. This bill, I think, will go a long way to ensure the integrity and confidence in the election process at the municipal level with respect to the autonomy of municipalities.

Now, with that, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly – and I'm sure they all are keenly aware of this – of the fixed election dates that occur on the municipal calendar. This seems to work very well for the municipalities, and I think it would work equally well for this Assembly, Mr. Chairman. There's no one challenging me on relevance, but we're in committee, and I'm allowed a certain amount of leeway in discussion of this bill. Certainly, I would encourage all hon. members as they review this legislation to be mindful of the fact that there are set, fixed election dates at the municipal level. I think, even in light of the hour we should consider that at this level of government as well. I think it's a step in the right direction, and when we talk about promoting the integrity and confidence in the municipal election process, we should talk also about promoting the integrity and confidence in the provincial election process. That would certainly be one way of achieving that.

This bill unfortunately doesn't go to any length to encourage more citizens to participate in the election process. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, when we look at the press release that was issued regarding the recommendations of the Local Authorities Election Act review and the fact that the minister accepted recommendations of the MLA committee and the fact that the committee recommended that the amendments which are reflected in this bill be made prior to the 2007 general election, there is no information, particularly when we think about the campaign process, about how we could encourage or increase the voter participation rate at the municipal level. It is part of this bill, and it's a part of this bill that's absent.

How do we do that? Australia, Mr. Chairman, has some tough laws to encourage voter participation. You have to vote. I don't know if we need to do that here, but there has to be a way to encourage citizens to exercise their democratic right, not only at the provincial level but certainly at the municipal level.

Maybe October is a bad time to have the elections, but in the cities people are not voting in large numbers. If it was predominantly a rural province with no large urban centres, well, we could say that farmers don't have the time in October because they're busy getting their crops from the fields, and they wouldn't have time to listen to the campaigns, maybe attend a forum, and then exercise their vote. But that's not the case. In urban areas there's no reason in the world why people can't take half an hour out of their day, if they're eligible, and vote. Voter participation rates are going down, down, down. There is no attempt in this bill to stop that decline and reverse it.

Mr. Chairman, I'm having a good look at this. There is no indication that this matter has been considered. Certainly, I'm not going to be proposing an amendment at this time to Bill 28 to try to fix that, but it is something that this House should consider. How do we improve the voter participation rate at the municipal level? I think it's about time we did this. If the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has any thoughts on this – or maybe it has been discussed. I understand that the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was also involved in this committee. Perhaps he could assist this House and give us an update regarding this and if this issue was discussed at all. There are a lot of recommendations here, and we are implementing most of them, from what I can see, but this is one issue that I think warrants further discussion by this House.

With those comments at this time on Bill 28, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague. Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 28 agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 32

Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very briefly, there were a couple of questions posed by the members for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Glenora during comments in second reading debate, and I'd just like to quickly touch on those.

First of all, the Member for Edmonton-Centre expressed some concerns about whether the act will ever be proclaimed. I guess that I would like to assure the hon. member that since the introduction of this act I've had a number of groups approach me such as the Alberta Medical Association, and I can tell the hon. member that between these groups and myself we will ensure that the bill is proclaimed, that there's no delay in that.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre also mentioned the cost savings that the system would enjoy if we increased the number of donors, and again I couldn't agree more with her.

The member did raise some concerns regarding the selling and purchasing of tissues and organs, and that is expressly covered in the legislation under section 3(5). The regulations will specifically set out the rules and requirements of any organs or tissues being brought into Alberta for transplantation. These organizations tasked with procuring tissues in Alberta are accredited by the American Association of Tissue Banks or the Eye Bank Association of America, and they will ensure that proper screening and handling procedures are in place. Also, Health Canada has developed safety standards which organ and tissue procurement and transplant agencies must adhere to.

Once this legislation has passed, it will enable the government to require that all organs and tissues used for transplantation in Alberta, regardless of where they come from, come from accredited sources. In other words, Alberta transplant teams can only deal with organizations in other provinces and countries who meet minimum safety and consent requirements.

The member will also note that fines for contravention of this act have been substantially increased, which should also deter any persons thinking about such activities.

The member also raised issues around imminent death, and that has been dealt with in this legislation to the satisfaction of the medical community.

Finally, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora had some very complimentary comments, and I thank him for those. The only question he posed that I could see revolved around the issue of religious consent, and I'll concede that that's one area where he probably has more expertise than me. However, it's my understanding that most major religions encourage organ and tissue donation. Many of them at the very least allow their followers to make a personal decision in this regard. Religious beliefs vary greatly even within the same religion. My main comment regarding religious consent would be that if someone does object to donation of tissue or organs based on religious beliefs, they should make known to family members and document that expressed wish. In the absence of any such documentation it will be the family which makes the final decision.

With those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I'd be pleased to listen to others here in committee. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I want to indicate to the hon. member that I support the bill in all its facets. I would like to make a recommendation to the hon. sponsor of the bill, and that is to consider not only the signing of the Alberta health care card but also allowing the signing of the back of the licence because quite often the documentation that gets picked up is the photo documentation, and if we can capture the desires of the individual to donate their organs and tissues, it doubles the potential of life being passed on.

With regard to that desire, I want to provide the motivation for that suggestion. This letter came from Sandra Ronney, and it's self-evident.

In December, we lost our very healthy, 20 year old daughter, Raelyn Palmer, in a tragic car accident in downtown Calgary. I thought it appropriate that now, during the national awareness campaign for tissue and organ donation, I point out what I believe to be a serious flaw in the Alberta organ donation program.

Raelyn and her sister Megan were both adamant that they wished to donate their organs if anything should ever happen to them. When they received their Alberta Health Care cards, they signed the organ donation consent with me as a witness. How proud they both were to have made and committed to that decision! Both my husband and I signed our cards as well.

When EMS arrived at the scene of the accident in the early morning of December 2, 2005, the only identification they took with them to Foothills Hospital was Raelyn's driver's license, as that ID had her photo on it. I was told by the police officer who attended the accident that this is the only form of identification that usually accompanies accident victims to the hospital. Raelyn always carried her Alberta Health Care card and it was with her at the time of her death, yet her organs were not harvested because medical staff at Foothills did not have the authority to do so without her signed consent form. Because Raelyn died at the scene of the accident, we were not notified of her death until it was too late for doctors to ask permission to harvest her organs. I am truly disappointed that her wishes were not carried out and, every time I hear the advertisement for the current awareness campaign, I think that if we had a better consent system, perhaps her wishes would have been carried out and, through her death she may have saved lives.

My question to you is this: Why can we not include this consent on our driver's license as, I understand, is done in other provinces in Canada? In many cases such as this, EMS cannot afford to take the time to rifle through a purse or wallet for anything other than photo ID. It therefore makes sense to me, that government issued photo identification such as a driver's license should include such crucial information.

I look forward to your thoughts on this issue.

Best regards,
Sandra Ronney.

She is a Calgary-Varsity constituent who asked me to share her concerns.

Thank you very much. I would like to call the question.

11:50

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 32, Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 32 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Renner: I'd like to move that the committee now rise and report Bill 28 and Bill 32.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 28 and Bill 32.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the progress that we made this evening, I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 3, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much. Of course, Mr. Speaker, your constituency is Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, and we all know that some very special people in Alberta come from Barrhead. One of them is my wife, Phyllis, and another one is a special woman who has joined us this afternoon. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mrs. Joyce Shaw.

Many Albertans like to connect to our open and accountable and responsive government through a front-line staff person in our district offices. They appreciate the top-level service that they receive from Albertans like Joyce Shaw, who works for Sustainable Resource Development in the fish and wildlife division office in Barrhead, Alberta. Mrs. Shaw is an expert at answering questions about hunting and fishing and problem wildlife and for sure other areas. She knows who to talk to if a question comes up. That's because she has been providing this service to Albertans for 50 years. On May 1, 1956, Joyce joined the Alberta public service and remains an employee to this day. She is the longest serving employee in the Alberta government. During this time Joyce has provided committed and dedicated service to the people of Alberta.

I see that Mrs. Shaw is standing. The folks that are joining her today are Mr. Milt McKee, a fish and wildlife officer in our Barrhead office; Mrs. Eleanor Frazer, Mrs. Shaw's sister; Mr. Bob Frazer, her brother-in-law; Mr. Harry Barton, her brother; Mrs. Cecile Barton, her sister-in-law; Mr. Val Fischer and Mrs. Doreen Fischer; and Joyce's niece Rhonda Kozak. Mr. Speaker, this is an exceptional, dedicated lady. I see them all rising, and I'd ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Hon. members and to the minister, thank you very much for that kind introduction of a very significant constituent of mine. I just want to add a couple of words to Joyce. She not only has endured 50 years in the public service of the province of Alberta. That is half the history of the province. She is also, however, a very professional person, a very warm person, and a person very much loved by the people I have the privilege of representing. Can you imagine, hon. members – can you imagine? – how much roadkill has crossed her desk in the last 50 years? So, Joyce, well done. And she's continuing to work.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have three introductions today, and they're seated in the members' gallery, the public gallery, and your gallery. The first is an impressive group of high school students from the 2006 Forum for Young Albertans. They're here from all over the province and are spending this week learning about the inner workings of the provincial government. Yesterday I had the pleasure of meeting with them to talk about my role as Premier and answer some insightful questions they had about politics in our province.

Second, it's my pleasure to introduce Colin and Lila Eicher. Colin is the owner and CEO of June Warren Publishing, located here in Alberta. They publish, among other publications, Oilweek magazine. Colin was also the successful bidder on a lunch with me at NAIT's annual bigwig cruise fundraising event. He and his wife, Lila, and I just enjoyed a terrific meal of egg salad sandwiches. We enjoyed the meal in support of NAIT's education programs.

Last but certainly not least, I would like to introduce Deborah Owrain, her husband, Doug, and their daughter Kristine, who are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. Deborah has been a wonderful addition to the Legislature family over the past years as deputy secretary of cabinet. Her husband, Doug, served as vice-president academic and provost at the University of Alberta. Deborah and Doug will be leaving Alberta this summer as Doug has accepted a position with the University of British Columbia at their Kelowna campus. Their daughter Kristine is off to Carleton University this fall, where she'll pursue a degree in journalism.

I would now ask the Forum for Young Albertans, the Eichers, and the Owrains to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of home-educated students from my constituency of Stony Plain. There are seven students accompanied by their leaders Mrs. Ferne Cymbaluk, Mrs. Jolene Burnstad, Mrs. Dawn Sirdar, and Mrs. Janet Sawatzky. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a real honour for me today to introduce 17 dynamic young students from the aging and soon to be replaced Delnorte school in Innisfree. They are accompanied by their teachers, Miss Tiffany Tomkow and Mr. Mike Strom, and by their bus driver, Mr. Barry Feschuk. Out in Innisfree we say that we don't have a lot of students, but quality beats quantity every time. I would ask the students to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Darcie Acton, who resides in the hamlet of Wagner in the Lesser Slave Lake constituency. She is accompanied by her father, Jim Acton, of Edmonton. Darcie is the fund development co-ordinator for Northern Lakes College and a councillor for the MD of Lesser Slave Lake. She is in Edmonton for discussions on postsecondary education and the Northern Alberta Development Council.

Mr. Speaker, Jim Acton has had a distinguished career in government spanning 38 years as the director of operations and construction for Alberta parks and then as the government liaison for international sporting events. He is the founding director of the Alberta Provincial Parks Alumni and was the liaison for former Premier Lougheed at the Sarajevo Winter Olympic Games in 1984. Jim most recently served as one of Alberta's centennial ambassadors.

Mr. Speaker, if I could ask Darcie and Jim Acton, who are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, to stand up, and I would ask the Assembly to give them great applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure and an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 18 of Alberta's brightest and best students. That's right. They're here in the public gallery today. They hail from Lakedell school, and they're accompanied by two teachers, Ms Arlene Jackson and Mr. Rick Southern. I'm just glad that they could visit us today, and I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly John Patrick Day. John Day is a local historian. He is a keen observer of local, provincial, and national politics, and it is also interesting to note that he was also a coach of a rival high school Reach for the Top team when you were involved in those competitions. He told me earlier that your teams were always well prepared and very, very competitive. Mr. John Patrick Day is in the public gallery, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nearly a year after the Auditor General's scathing report this government finally released their new provincial standards for continuing care. Unfortunately, it appears that Alberta seniors will have to wait even longer for the complete remedy to our province's ailing long-term care system. In fact, legislative changes won't even be made until next spring. My questions are to the Premier. Why is this government releasing standards today but waiting until the spring of 2007 to make any legislative changes?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports can speak to the specifics, but I can say that the significance of the new standards is not just the improvements to accommodation standards. What we will now have is consistency across the system.

I'll have the hon. minister provide the details.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased that these standards are here today, and I know that everyone in this Assembly must be just as pleased. You're absolutely right. I think that we really need to thank once again the MLA task force, that met with Albertans and met more than once. I think we need to thank the Alberta Senior Citizens' Housing Association, the Long Term Care Association, the operators, the regional health authorities, absolutely everyone who had input into these standards. This is such good news that they're here today. As the member said, it has been a year. It's been a very thoughtful year. It's been a year of hard work. Our staff have worked very hard, and they need to be thanked as well. As you read through these, hon. member, you will see the goodness that is here for all Albertans in long-term care, in supportive living, and in our lodges. I look forward to any other questions there may be.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Can the Premier tell us how many of these standards – and there are three different kinds: the health, the accommodation, and the facilities, I think – will be legislated?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's entirely up to the minister as to whether legislative changes are required, but all facilities and operators are expected to implement these new standards as soon as possible. We will see them implemented either through regulation, policy, or legislation, as I understand it, by April 2007. I'd like to remind the hon. member that you just don't snap your fingers and expect changes to fall from heaven.

Ms Blakeman: You've had a year.

Mr. Klein: It's less than a year, Mr. Speaker, and all of the recommendations will be implemented.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the Premier: can he tell us why an independent provincial monitoring and enforcement mechanism was not put in place to ensure compliance with this standard? We've got checkerboarding across the RHAs. Why wasn't it independent and provincial?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, checkerboarding is the wrong term to use because what the report accomplishes is consistency across the system. Relative to the specifics of the questions, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important to recognize that the accommodation standards are going to apply for the very first time to all 400 facilities – to absolutely every facility – whether it is public or privately funded. That alone is key. I think that it's also important to recognize that there will be an accreditation process for every single one of those facilities as well.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: This government's notion that long-term care and aging will be responsible for bankrupting the health care system has resulted in new standards that off-load responsibility to regional health authorities, residents, and their families. Policies to ensure compliance with continuing care health service standards have also become the responsibility of the RHAs. My question would go to the Premier. Given that this government is off-loading responsibility for monitoring compliance with the standards, what additional funding will the RHA be getting to meet these standards?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll take the question under advisement, but I will say that, you know, it's never enough for the opposition. I would ask all hon. members to bring some perspective back to the debate. We do have a younger population than the national average, and our spending on long-term care is higher than the national average. So funding is not the only answer. Obviously, we need to do a better job, and that was pointed out in the report. The new standards that have been accepted by the minister will go a long way to addressing the concerns that have been raised.

Ms Pastoor: The next question again would be to the Premier. Why is the government off-loading more and more of the costs for continuing care services onto residents and their families? These are the ones that are paying the price.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance supplement, but I can tell you that relative to long-term care, the accommodation fees were increased to bring them in line with the cost of providing the service, and that's the only increase there has been. Relative to the specifics of the question, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, very briefly. I think the Health and Wellness estimates were in this House a week ago tomorrow, last Thursday. I'm sure that when those estimates were reviewed by the opposition they noted that there were additional dollars put in the budget for this very reason. In fact, Mr. Speaker, some of the controversial in-year spending went to this area as well. So to talk about off-loading to the RHAs, we have in fact front-loaded changes that are going to be made.

Ms Pastoor: I probably should have said downloaded.

What is the position of this government that residents in publicly funded centres should receive different levels of health care services than residents that are in privately funded centres? [interjection] I'm sorry. To the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the answer to that question. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that this is a question for our Minister of Health and Wellness, but having said that, I would just like to add to what you'd mentioned, hon. member, about the off-loading. In the budget, as our Minister of Finance indicated, we made a significant change in funding for people living in our long-term care facilities. One was the designated assisted living facility. I spoke to that in the estimates. We did add approximately $5,000 to each resident in that facility to assist with accommodating their care as 80 per cent of the seniors living in care receive subsidy through the government for that care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. leader of the third party.

National Child Care Initiative

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Child care professionals and families with children in Alberta continue to voice their concerns to the Official Opposition regarding the future of daycare in this province. In a meeting with the Minister of Children's Services this week the minister assured me that she would not allow the new federal child care plan to result in rollbacks in the progress that was made through Alberta's five-point plan. To the Minister of Children's Services: can the minister elaborate on how, specifically, she plans on maintaining the financial supports that were achieved through the five-point plan in light of the cancellation of the previous federal agreement?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. I spent about 15 or 20 minutes with the Liberal opposition critic, as I did with the NDP opposition critic, explaining what was contained in the budget. What I did explain to both of them is that we were getting very little detail at that particular time. We're still looking for more details on the federal budget. I told both of them that I'm meeting with my federal counterpart at the end of the month and hope to ask many, many questions. I did indicate that the budget for last year from the federal government was $70 million; this year, $66 million. It's in our budget. We will continue to operate as usual.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: given that a recent survey released by Public Interest Alberta indicates that only 37 per cent of Albertans support the new federal Conservative child care plan, is the minister lobbying her federal cousins to extend the previous agreement with Alberta beyond its scheduled cancellation?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on the Public Interest Alberta survey. I can comment on the fact that Albertans overwhelmingly voted for the federal Conservatives in the last election. They took every seat in Alberta. I can tell you, though, that I will continue to lobby on behalf of Albertans when I meet with my federal counterpart at the end of the month.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the minister has commented in this Assembly that Albertans should direct their concerns to Ottawa, can the minister clarify exactly what role she is playing in this whole process?

Mrs. Forsyth: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. As I have indicated in this House on many occasions, once the federal minister was appointed I probably phoned her within 48 hours of her appointment to the position. At that time she didn't have an office or a phone. From there I have followed up with two letters, and I have flown to Ottawa on behalf of Alberta's children and families.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Kelowna Accord on Support for First Nations

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Successive Liberal and Conservative federal governments have repeatedly betrayed Canada's aboriginal peoples. Yesterday's federal budget, which tore up the Kelowna accord, is just another in a long list. As a result, a historic opportunity to close the economic and social divide between aboriginal and nonaboriginal Canadians may be lost. My question is to the Premier. Is the Premier or is he not prepared to stand up for this province's aboriginal peoples by demanding that his federal Conservative cousins in Ottawa reinstate the Kelowna accord?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that the Prime Minister, if backed into a corner, will have the tendency of saying no. Now, I did have the opportunity of speaking with him shortly after he was elected. He indicated at that time that he has no intention of abiding by the Kelowna accord. Rather, he would bring in his own programs to address the concerns and the needs of Canada's aboriginal people. That is a simple fact of government.

Now, certainly there was concern expressed at the dinner that the new Prime Minister hosted for all the Premiers and the territorial leaders, that he should continue with the Kelowna accord, which I think designated some $5 billion for various aboriginal programs. He indicated at that time again that he was going to continue with his own programs. So that is the political reality, and we'll have to see how it washes out.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why is it that this Premier will jump to the barricades at the slightest thought that Ottawa might be after Alberta's resources even if that's an imaginary threat, yet when it comes to a program that could make a tremendous difference for aboriginal people, his criticism is almost nonexistent?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the first part of the preamble, there is no fear that that will happen with a Conservative government in Ottawa. There would be fear if it were a Liberal or an ND government because all they want is money, money, money. That's all they want: money. They don't want to be accountable; they just want money.

Mr. Speaker, I have stood up, and I have expressed my views on the Kelowna accord, but the Prime Minister will do what his political sense tells him to do.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the federal election is over. Why doesn't the Premier take off the duct tape and stand up for aboriginal people in this province? Now is the time.

Mr. Klein: Pardon me? I don't know what he meant by the duct tape. Is he alluding to Peter MacKay's comments, or he is alluding to Discovery Channel where a person from up north, deemed to be one of Canada's worst handymen, uses duct tape? I don't know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans take a leadership role when it comes to doing the right thing. Short-term pain for long-term gain. This current government came to power by acknowledging the debt and deficit and promising to do the right thing. We have another debt, and it's now time to recognize it and do the right thing again. Albertans' share of the unfunded liability of the Canada pension plan was reported to be $55 billion by the MLA Committee on Strengthening Alberta's Role in Confederation. This pension debt along with the teachers' $4.4 billion debt must be addressed. To the Minister of Finance: could she please inform us on the current unfunded liability of the Canada pension plan and what is considered Alberta's share?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the last actuarial that was done of the Canada pension plan to my knowledge was in 2003. It was an estimate at that time by the actuarial that it was about $516 billion. Alberta's share would be about 12 per cent of that. However, having said that, this does move, certainly, as the workforce changes and so on. It is also my understanding that there will be another actuarial of that plan done in 2007.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will this government do the right thing and take a leadership role by giving our notice to opt out of the faulty Canada pension plan?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did have a committee that looked at these things. I'm never stuck in a time warp. I'm willing to look at things on a fairly regular basis if there's a better way and a better plan. At the time that the committee did review it, my understanding is that they didn't advocate it. As I say, Mr. Speaker, this government's fiscal policy is ensuring that we have a strong fiscal position. If there are new arguments to be put forward on an advantage to Albertans and to Alberta to look at a pension plan, we're open to looking at those things.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. Finally, to the same minister: will the government direct our surplus revenue into the heritage savings trust fund, which we could transform into an Alberta pension plan for the benefit of Albertans now and in the future?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have certainly begun the process of renewing and strengthening our heritage fund, which has been a tremendous asset and continues to be a tremendous asset to this province, envied by many provinces in Canada. We began by adding $1 billion to the heritage fund in the third quarter of last year. We included another billion dollars to that fund in this year's budget. We began inflation-proofing that plan in the previous budget, and we'll continue to do that as we legislatively can.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a growing and vibrant province. We have, as everyone knows, significant pressures on infrastructure, on our schools and health facilities. We'll ensure that the most pressing needs are met in those areas, and we will continue, as our policy clearly states, to save a portion of the surplus.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's federal budget included $1.5 billion for Canadian farmers, but it comes with a high price tag because the federal agriculture minister says that he's going to scrap the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, or CAIS, as it is called. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Will our Alberta producers be in limbo while the federal and provincial governments start from square one with a new income stability program?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I too was very concerned about initial reports from the federal government saying that they were going to replace CAIS. We've said all along that CAIS needs to be fixed, that it needs to be revamped, but we certainly didn't want to start from square one, and our producers and our governments don't want to start from square one. So my provincial colleagues and I were on a conference call with Minister Strahl late yesterday, and he did clarify his intention. The federal government does plan to split CAIS into two different programs: one an income stabilization program, one a disaster program. In fact, Alberta has been advocating that type of change for some time. As far as the income stabilization side is concerned, the minister did talk yesterday about improving and revamping the program. That says to me that the basic principles of the CAIS program are still very sound, very solid, and that's what we're going to be building upon.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't care how we label the program. We can call it Fred. We can call it Bob. We could give it a new acronym. We can call it the Canadian revenue agricultural appreciation program if that works. What I really care about is that it's the best thing for the producers and it's long term sustainable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. The budget announcement – and I stress: the budget announcement – also included reference to the new inventory valuations for producers in the CAIS program. What will this mean for the pocketbooks of Alberta producers?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was another element to the federal budget that we were pleased to see. It appears that the federal government is proposing retroactive adjustments to the CAIS program, to the inventory valuations, back to 2003, similar to what we did back in the fall on the retroactive adjustments of the averaging on the reference margins. If that is the case – and we believe it to be – we do have the system in Alberta to make that calculation fairly quickly. We also have the system in Alberta that will be able to do that without a lot of going back to the producers.

I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government is talking about revamping and improving. This is one of the improvements that we have been talking about for some time. In fact, if this turns out to be the route that they're going to take, producers will need to be in CAIS to share in these dollars that are coming from the federal government. It is targeted support, and we support the federal government in this initiative and how they're rolling it out.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, we are in a situation where farmers are in a desperate situation. My final question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development again. How soon will these changes occur, and what role would the provincial government play in bringing them about?

Mr. Horner: Well, as I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government has made several of these kinds of suggestions, perhaps not in the exact same way that they're rolling out from the federal government as we saw yesterday. The National CAIS Committee is meeting as we speak. They're going to be discussing and crunching the numbers today, tomorrow. The federal minister is actually going to be in our province in the near future. We believe that we'll be able to turn these things around fairly quickly in the calculations, but it will depend on all the provinces coming onside as to how we're going to deliver this and how we're going to move it forward. I believe that all of the provinces are keenly interested in working with the federal minister to make this happen as soon as possible, and we await further details from the federal minister in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Sale of Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's sale of surplus ring road lands at fire-sale prices continues. In 1996 this Progressive Conservative government sold 94 acres of surplus ring road land in southwest Edmonton for $5,200 per acre to Gerard and Reta Haarsma. We already know that in 1999 the Galfour Development Corporation sold land in the same end of town, which they had purchased from this government for pennies per acre, for more than $21,000 per acre, an astonishing profit margin. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Why is this government continuing to sell taxpayer land for a loss when private developers are able to flip the same land for astonishing profits?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, if the member was actually really interested in finding out what happened on a specific sale, he would give me a chance to look up what exactly happened. You know that we sell hundreds – hundreds – of parcels of land annually. To pick out one parcel and then ask a number of questions about it without giving me the benefit of having a heads-up to the parcel and being able to come forward to the House and present the facts I think certainly indicates that he's really not interested in what happened.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that on the parcel from two days ago, the fact is, as I proved yesterday, we sold that parcel for $2.8 million.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Lund: For $2.8 million. The fact is that it was assessed and appraised at $1.8 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why did this government sell 94 acres of land to the Haarsmas for less than half of what the taxpayers paid for it in 1985? Why are you giving that land away?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I hate to have to give the members a bit of a history lesson, but the fact is that back in the '80s land was selling for a very high price. In the mid-90s the price hadn't started to escalate yet. Probably, if that same piece of ground was up for sale today, you'd get more than the $500,000. I know that that could very well be because the price of land is going up. So to take an apple from 1985 and think that it's going to be the same as an orange in 1996 – it's just ludicrous to think that there's that kind of a comparison.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. What is ludicrous is that the taxpayers have been burned by this Progressive Conservative government.

Again to the same minister: who in the Progressive Conservative government did the appraisal on the 94-acre Haarsma parcel and determined that the land was worth less than half of what the taxpayers paid originally for it?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, when I get a chance to investigate this sale, we will be able to give you all the details, but I suspect that the land was appraised and that it was put up for tender. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that any appraiser we use has got a licence. It's got nothing to do with whether it's a member of the Progressive Conservative Party or any other party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Workers' Compensation

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's booming economy is no doubt thanks to productive and hard-working Albertans. With a workforce in the millions accidents, very unfortunately, do occur. Therefore, the workers' compensation coverage and the process of handling claims becomes very important to injured workers and their families. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment responsible for WCB matters. I understand that the Minister's Monitoring Committee on Workers' Compensation has completed their report on the implementation of the reform to the workers' compensation plan. What is the status of this report? When will it be publicly released?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Those are very good questions. The Minister's Monitoring Committee on Workers' Compensation was created in February of 2003 basically to oversee the progress made on implementing recommendations from the Friedman and Doerksen report. Of course, the original date of the committee's report was March 2005, but this was extended to February 2006 so improvements could continue to be made in areas where there are ongoing challenges for the Workers' Compensation Board. The committee's report was submitted on time, but it still has to be reviewed, of course, by the full caucus. We would hope to release the report before summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Given that injured workers suffer very much physically, mentally, and financially and the necessary reforms for the WCB have been identified for years, can the minister inform the Assembly what specific important reform the WCB has implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Originally the Friedman and Doerksen report included, I believe, 59 recommendations, and of course 49 of those 59 recommendations of that absolutely good report have been released. I'll just give you three or four of the ones that are really, really important to the public out there and the people interested in the Workers' Compensation.

The Appeals Commission for workers' compensation, for example, was separated from the Workers' Compensation Board. The Workers' Compensation Board now holds annual meetings, and they're also open to the public. The workers' compensation files are made more accessible to claimants, and one of the most important parts is the reporting to the minister now. A medical panel process was established to resolve conflict on medical opinions, et cetera. So that is very important.

Mr. Speaker, the monitoring committee reviewed the information from the Workers' Compensation Board and the Appeals Commission and agreed that for the vast majority of the recommendations good progress has been made.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Given that a large number of injured workers are too weak in English language knowledge and communication to fight for their rights, how does the minister ensure that they are not unfairly and unjustly treated in their WCB claims?

Mr. Cardinal: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Workers' Compensation Board offers translation services to injured workers. Actually, they also pay for the services. In addition to that, an injured worker can bring their own translator. Also, the Workers' Compensation Board has posters in 14 different languages to explain how you may access workers' compensation if you are injured.

Additionally, through our department we do spend close to $30 million a year on English as a Second Language. In addition to that, Athabasca University as of September of this year, I believe, is launching English as a Second Language through distance learning.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Provincial Water Supply

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Water, both surface and groundwater, is the lifeblood of the province, and under this government it is declining in both quality and quantity. Growing agricultural, industrial, and population demands are occurring in the absence of an integrated land-use plan and a groundwater inventory. To the Minister of Environment: how long will we wait for an inventory of our groundwater in order to properly manage our water?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the preamble was somewhat vacuous in the fact that what he asserts is not entirely accurate in this context. Our Water for Life strategy, first and foremost, is the most progressive water strategy in North America. Second of all, he is aware that we are doing mapping as we speak. Third of all, the actual mapping that we are doing as part of our Water for Life strategy also takes a look at our lakes and our streams: what the water levels are, what we have to do to improve water management. I can assure all Albertans that that's exactly what we are doing because it is the law to protect our land, air, and water. We're doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is already charging the hydroelectricity industry for water use, when will the minister institute appropriate charges for water across the board?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, you raise a very important point. We will never rule out that option. The reason why: our most progressive strategy, Water for Life, in fact says that we will look at options. But one of those options right now is in the context of conservation. How do we optimize? How do we use proper mechanisms to ensure that our water is going to be there even with some things that we don't have control over such as Mother Nature and during drought periods? What are we doing in water management in terms of off-stream storage and on-stream storage? What are we doing to better optimize? All of those things are options. However, to the hon. member: we believe that conservation and how we use water today is the best approach in terms of going forward as opposed to quite simply saying, "We're going to charge you now." I do believe, though – and the hon. member is aware – that we charge money for water now. It's called treated water, and in fact every city charges as people use it. I will never rule out an option of potentially charging in the future. Right now my energy is spent on conservation and the best optimization of that valuable resource we have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two-thirds – two-thirds – of all the water allocations in the Athabasca basin are for oil sands. Will you consider charging for water use?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat to the hon. member: we believe that conservation practices are important. We also believe that all of the stakeholders have to be at the table. Rather than this company or that company, we are taking a totally regional approach. We are using our watershed councils, part of our Water for Life strategy. We are using our water councils and watershed monitoring. We are working with the cumulative impact people, the cumulative impacts of oil sand development. I can assure this member and all Albertans that 50 years from now I will be able to go and fly-fish in the Athabasca basin, where water is being withdrawn, because we will ecologically protect the basin now, tomorrow, and in the future based on our water strategy.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's rural municipalities are the backbone of this province. It's no secret that Alberta was formed from the hard work of our agricultural community. Recently the government of Alberta announced $10 million through the targeted investment program in unconditional grants to municipalities that have limited financial resources to work toward long-term sustainability. In my constituency of Highwood there was no funding. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why are some municipalities receiving financial assistance while others are not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Local governments, especially those that are faced with limited financial resources, require strategic solutions for long-term sustainable growth. The grant eligibility amounts under this targeted investment program are based upon the formulas that were developed by both the AUMA and the AAMD and C and are done in such a way as to identify municipalities of the highest financial need. The targeted investment initiative is really a significant first step as we seek permanent, long-term solutions. I might also add that it is my priority and that of my staff and my department to seek long-term solutions to this problem so that this becomes not an ad hoc annual program but a long-term program that's funded every year.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. Can the minister explain the criteria used to determine the funding levels for urban municipalities?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this year there was a $10 million payout in this program; $5.9 million of that was distributed among approximately a hundred different urban municipalities. There are two areas of funding, the first being full funding. Under full funding we identify municipalities that have less than $40,000 in per capita assessment. That is then paid out based on the population so that there is a maximum of $300 per capita, so the grants range from a low of $80 to a maximum of $300. Under partial funding there is a per capita assessment of between $40,000 and $45,000, so those municipalities receive between $40 and $300 per capita. The primary consideration, though, is that in all cases these municipalities have mill rates that are higher than average, so we've identified that they have a low capacity to generate tax revenue and they're doing their very best with the capacity that they have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the same minister. Probably just as important, if not more, can he explain the criteria used to determine funding for the rural municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rural municipalities were done in a very similar manner. The balance of funding of approximately $3.9 million was distributed among rural municipalities, and the difference there is that an additional factor is added on. In addition to assessment on a per capita basis, there's also an assessment on a per-kilometre basis because, as you know, rural municipalities have varying numbers of kilometres of roads for which they're responsible. The same as the urban municipalities, they again have higher than average mill rates, and their taxes are on average higher. They have a low assessment both on a per capita basis and as a factor based upon the number of roads that they're responsible for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's federal budget confirmed the very bad news that the bilaterally negotiated federal/provincial child care agreements are being unilaterally killed by Ottawa Conservatives. These agreements are being replaced with a so-called universal child care allowance that will benefit most those who need the support the least while doing little or nothing for lower and middle-income parents in need of quality child care. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that today we all know for sure that federal monies in support of Alberta's five-point child care plan are scheduled to evaporate by early next year, is the minister prepared to fight harder, and if so, how, to convince her federal cousins to respect the previously negotiated agreement, that is so important for the future of Alberta's children?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how this minister can fight any harder, honestly, unless I bring my boxing gloves out. I'll reiterate. The federal minister hadn't even been appointed, and 48 hours later we called. She did not even have a phone. She did not have an office. We immediately followed that up with a letter. I then flew to Ottawa to discuss with her my concerns about the child care program. I have since followed that up with a letter. We now have a federal/provincial/territorial meeting on the 29th of this month.

As I've explained in this House, there are many questions that need to be answered. We need to find out about the original hundred million dollars that was promised to the aboriginals. We need to find out about the hundred million dollars that was for a data strategy. We need to find out more information about the child care and the original discussion about the $10,000 that was to go to businesses on child care. There are many, many questions. I will continue to lobby on behalf of Albertans and their families as our five-point plan was based on Albertans' needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me ask the minister the same question again. Maybe she can be a little more specific about her answer. What exactly is the minister's action plan now when it comes to convincing her Ottawa cousins to continue funding this vital agreement beyond next March? Will you give us some details?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, he's yelling across the floor about details. I have phoned. I have written. I have flown to Ottawa. I am going again on behalf of Alberta's children and families to lobby on behalf of Albertans in regard to Alberta's five-point plan. I will also be talking to my provincial and territorial counterparts so that we can come together as a group and explain to them that we need more information, and we'd like the original plan that was in the agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister seems to have no concrete plan to take any action, will the government and will the minister or will she not at the very least join the five provinces who have already committed to not clawing back provincial tax credits and income support payments from parents eligible for the federal child care allowance?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I spent about 20 minutes yesterday with this hon. member after I got the budget by e-mail. I sat down and explained to him, and I also explained to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. She obviously got it. He didn't. I have told him and made a commitment that there will be no clawbacks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province's new standards for health in long-term care centres lack consistency across the province. RHAs are delegated the responsibility for filling in the details of policy and for monitoring and enforcement; in effect, a checkerboarding of compliance across the province depending on how much room is left in the RHAs' budgets. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why was funding not provided to the RHAs to ensure equal levels of monitoring and compliance across the province?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, across the province there are unequal resources in communities and unequal numbers of people. What we have is "shall." I should have counted the number of times we say shall in those standards because we say the regional authorities shall do this, shall do some other things particular to ensuring that the patient focus care is given. What I suspect is being missed is that in the very back part of those standards the Health Quality Council is responsible for the health quality matrix, and they have been granted the right to be as fully operational as a regional health authority. It will be partially their job to ensure that the quality matrix is applied, to make sure that quality care is delivered regardless of whether the regional health authority or other kinds of measures are being undertaken currently to make sure that the job is getting done to the benefit of the patients.

Ms Blakeman: No. Still different.

Again to the same minister: given that the RHAs will be the fox monitoring compliance on their own long-term care henhouses, why wasn't an independent – independent – provincial monitoring and enforcement mechanism put in place to ensure compliance with standards?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta I think we're uniquely lucky to have two ministers who are accountable for the delivery of both the care standards and the accommodations standards for seniors in long-term care for continuing care. Beyond that, we've identified the quality assurance council as being there to be a watchdog. We've identified through the work that we do through the Health Facilities Review Committee and the initiation of a legislative framework that is much stronger than before on quality delivery and on having quality operational plans and care plans and involvement on behalf of the resident. We have several people that are accountable for delivery of that care that residents or their families or caregivers can appeal to. Beyond that, we have to make sure that families themselves and guardians take some accountability for reporting those incidents that may have been untoward in the delivery of care. So at this stage hold the elected officials accountable, look at these standards as a stronger enforcement, and look over the next year to two years to see if we have improvement. I can assure that you we will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what is the minister doing to prevent conflict-of-interest issues from arising with RHA board members who are involved or may be involved with private continuing care delivery?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. We obviously have regional health authorities that are in charge of delivering care through various publicly funded facilities and then going back to examine the care. Well, that is why this year in anticipation of these care standards, in consultation with Dr. John Cowell, who has been delivering a very strong product in the Health Quality Council, we developed a framework and a regulated environment for the Health Quality Council to be an equal partner with regional health authorities. Whether you're in an acute-care setting, in a long-term care setting, in supportive living, whether you're receiving continuing care in any part of the system, they are a form of assessment body that can make sure that we are delivering quality care.

The important thing here is that if we were leaving it exclusively to the purview of a regional health authority, the implied criticism of the hon. member may be valid. But under these circumstances we have yet another body built within the ministry to conduct and follow up on that framework and to make sure that the quality is there regardless of whether it's a publicly funded facility, a not-for-profit facility, or any other facility that receives public funding, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the patient.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Federal Funding for Policing and Security

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the federal Conservatives announced their first budget. A key component was an increase to the law-and-order agenda with what is being hailed as the largest financial infusion in recent history for policing, border security, anticrime measures, and help for victims of crime. Roughly $1 billion in new money over two years will be spent for approximately 20 initiatives. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister highlight what areas of public security will benefit from the increased spending?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very encouraged by what we saw in yesterday's federal budget. I think we support any efforts that enhance safety and security for all Canadians, obviously, which includes Albertans. One of the initiatives that will have a direct impact on public safety in our province is the $161 million that will be injected into federal positions for the RCMP for roughly 100 officers that will be coming to Alberta. These are federal positions, which would include those areas of investigation such as commercial crime, drugs, immigration, passport as well as border patrol, the integrated border enforcement team that they have in southern Alberta.

As well, another $95 million was added for new transit security for municipalities throughout Canada, which, again, will assist in utilizing systems for terrorist attacks as well as the ability to do some projects regarding emergency preparedness, to respond to emergencies throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to meet with the Hon. Stockwell Day last Friday in Ottawa, and we reviewed some of these issues that came out of yesterday's budget presentation. These are issues that are of concern for all Albertans as well and issues that we don't take lightly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: what does yesterday's announcement mean for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I mentioned, the federal budget will provide an additional 100 RCMP officers that will come to Alberta. These are not front-line officers, as I mentioned. As well, though, we'll have a better understanding of the impact of the federal budget as we get more details and explanations on all of the packages that come out. I can say, however, that the addition of more RCMP officers to tackle growing concerns such as gang violence, gun violence, the illegal importation of guns and drugs into Alberta and into Canada obviously will have an effect. They will become partners with our 5,300 officers that provide policing throughout the province, and we will continue to work with the federal government on any new policing or security initiative for Canada and Alberta.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, in keeping with our discourse on the hundred years of democracy in Alberta, I must apologize. The length today is a little longer than the norm.

In the general election of August 30, 1971, 46.4 per cent of the votes went to the Progressive Conservative Party, which elected 49 of 75 MLAs. The Social Credit Party received 41.1 per cent of the votes and elected 25 MLAs. The Progressive Conservative Party became the fourth party to elect a government in Alberta.

On March 26, 1975, 62.65 per cent of Albertans elected Progressive Conservatives in 69 out of Alberta's 75 seats. The Social Credit Party received 18.17 per cent of the votes and elected four MLAs.

Four years later, on March 14, 1979, voters voted 57.4 per cent Progressive Conservative and elected 74 of 79 MLAs. The Social Credit Party received 19.87 per cent of the votes and elected four MLAs.

On November 2, 1982, 588,485 Albertans gave the Progressive Conservative Party 62.28 per cent of the votes and 75 of 79 seats, the New Democratic Party elected two MLAs with 18.75 per cent of the votes, and 947,644 Albertans cast ballots, the largest number to date.

In the election held on May 8, 1986, only 47.25 per cent of Albertans voted, one of the lowest turnouts in our history. The results gave the Progressive Conservative Party 51.4 per cent of the votes and 61 of 83 seats. The New Democratic Party elected 16 MLAs with 29.22 per cent of the votes.

Less than three years later, on March 20, 1989, Albertans returned to the polls and 44.29 per cent of voters gave the Progressive Conservative Party 59 out of 83 seats. The Liberals received 28.68 per cent of the votes and elected eight MLAs, the New Democratic Party received 26.29 per cent of the votes and elected 16 MLAs, and 53.6 per cent of Alberta voters voted.

In the election held on June 15, 1993, the turnout was 60.21 per cent and 991,472 ballots were cast. The Progressive Conservative Party received 44.49 per cent of the votes and elected 51 of 83 members. The Alberta Liberal Party received 39.73 per cent of the votes and elected 32 MLAs. The New Democratic Party elected no MLAs with 11.01 per cent of the votes. The highest number of candidates to date participated, with 382 candidates.

On March 11, 1997, voter turnout was 53.75 per cent and the Progressive Conservative Party elected 63 MLAs out of 83 with 51.17 per cent of the votes. The Alberta Liberal Party elected 18 MLAs with 32.75 per cent of the votes. Two New Democrats were elected with 8.81 per cent of the votes.

For the first time in Alberta's election history ballots cast surpassed one million, with 1,016,000 voters participating in the election held on March 21, 2001. The Progressive Conservative Party elected 74 MLAs of 83 with 61.91 per cent of the votes, the Alberta Liberal Party elected seven MLAs with 27.33 per cent of the votes, and voter turnout was 53 per cent.

On November 22, 2004, 450 candidates, the largest ever in Alberta's history, contested the election, which saw voter turnout at 44.7 per cent. The Progressive Conservative Party elected 62 MLAs of 83 with 46.8 per cent of those votes, the Alberta Liberal Party elected 16 members with 29.39 per cent of those votes, the New Democratic Party elected four MLAs with 10.2 per cent of those votes, and the Alberta Alliance Party elected one member with 8.7 per cent of those votes. The voter turnout, again, was 44.7 per cent, the lowest ever in the history of Alberta. In one constituency, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, voter turnout was only 26.4 per cent. However, the Progressive Conservative candidate won with 63.2 per cent of those votes.

The electoral score to date: Liberal governments, 4; United Farmers of Alberta governments, 3; Social Credit governments, 9; Progressive Conservative governments, 10.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Medicine Hat and Lethbridge Centennials

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year on September 1 our province celebrated its centennial anniversary. This year on May 9 two of Alberta's fine cities will also celebrate their 100th birthdays. The year 1906 was when both Lethbridge and Medicine Hat were incorporated as cities in Alberta. Both of these southern Alberta cities have contributed greatly to the province's overall growth. Lethbridge, in fact, is Alberta's fourth most populated city. It is home to the University of Lethbridge, whose construction integrated the building with the surrounding hills. Because of its placement and design, the school is sometimes referred to as a ship in the desert. The city is also home to the High Level Bridge. Completed in 1909, the bridge has the greatest height and length of any bridge of its kind anywhere in the world.

Mr. Speaker, Medicine Hat is also a particularly wonderful city. Most of the city makes up the constituency of Medicine Hat, represented by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. My own constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat includes the southern and southeastern sections of the city. The city has many great features, one of which is that it has the distinction of being Canada's sunniest city, receiving approximately 2,500 hours of sunshine annually. The city also only gets about 230 millimetres, or just under 10 inches, of moisture every year. It houses more than 100 parks and 85 kilometres of trails, giving the approximately 56,000 residents of Medicine Hat plenty of space to get out and enjoy the city's fair weather.

Medicine Hat also has the lowest property taxes in Canada and is known as Alberta's gas city because of the abundance of natural gas in the area. In fact, only a year after Medicine Hat was incorporated as a city, the famous British writer Rudyard Kipling said: Medicine Hat was born lucky; people in this district seem to have "all hell for a basement." This Alberta city has a rich and interesting history and is a wonderful city with great residents. I'm proud to represent this city and surrounding areas as the region's MLA.

I'd like to wish both Medicine Hat and Lethbridge a happy centennial anniversary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

National Mental Health Week

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The first week in May is National Mental Health Week, and I'd like to acknowledge the work done in my constituency and throughout Alberta by the many agencies working to offer support to people living with mental illness. From the Pride Centre volunteers to the part-time person at West Edmonton Seniors to the staff and volunteers from the offices of the Canadian Mental Health Association across Alberta to the hard-working health professionals working in the hospital psych wards and clinics to the many not-for-profit agencies like the Schizophrenia Society, who advocate for research dollars and other support for schizophrenia, and other organizations involved with bipolar, OCD, depression, ADHD, psychosis: thank you to all. You make a difference. You may not see it every day, but your work is helping people to live and cope as best they can.

I need to include other organizations on that list, agencies that exist to offer other services but who develop an expertise in working with people with mental illness: inner-city organizations like the Boyle Street Co-op, the Hope Mission, the Herb Jamieson Centre, the George Spady Centre, the Sally Ann, HIV Edmonton, and the many projects of the City Centre Church Corporation and indeed the staff of our constituency offices and still others, like those dealing with addictions, drug use, people involved with the correction system, like the John Howard or Elizabeth Fry societies.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I missed many individuals and groups with that short, short list. The point is that lots of people are involved because we want to be, we need to be, and we have to be. Mental illness is all around us. We have not achieved a good mix of community programming to support the deinstitutionalization movement of many decades ago. Government continues to promise concrete plans and assistance and continues to fail to follow through. Meanwhile, the cost of mental health service delivery and the cost to society is very high.

I recently visited Fort McMurray, an extraordinary city with amazing potential and phenomenal growth. They have stress, anxiety, and depression but few counsellors.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin Centennial

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise in this House and recognize the upcoming centennial anniversary of one of the cities in the constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Wetaskiwin was first incorporated as a city on May 9, 1906, and at that time the city had a population of roughly 1,650 people. This was two years after electricity was first installed in the city and one year before the CPR built a station in Wetaskiwin, a landmark that still exists today.

Since that time much has changed. Over 11,000 people now call Wetaskiwin home. While much has changed, ties to the past have been well preserved in this city. Wetaskiwin is home to one of the oldest provincial courthouses constructed in Alberta. Dating back to 1907, this structure is an impressive example of turn-of-the-century architecture with carved columns and ornate cornice work. Today this grand old structure is being renovated to be the city's new city hall, a worthy centennial project for this 100-year-old building.

Another remarkable landmark in this city is the Wetaskiwin water tower. Having served the people of Wetaskiwin for 100 years, it is the oldest working water tower in western Canada. It has also recently been refurbished as a provincial centennial project to stand tall and prominent on Wetaskiwin's skyline for another 100 years.

Wetaskiwin is home to the Reynolds-Alberta Museum, an institution which is dedicated to preserving, restoring, and exhibiting mechanical artifacts, bringing to life Alberta's transportation, aviation, agricultural, and mechanical histories.

I would be remiss if I did not mention that Wetaskiwin is also home to the Alberta Central Railway Museum, which re-creates our province's historical railway experiences.

Mr. Speaker, Wetaskiwin is one of Alberta's spectacular rural treasures, exhibiting much of our Alberta history. I invite all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to visit Wetaskiwin on this their special centennial year. Happy 100th birthday, Wetaskiwin.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Labour Market Supply

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The woes of the Alberta labour market will only worsen by using temporary foreign workers and temporary foreign contractors. Temporary foreign workers, without their families and the freedom to move between employers, will not stay in Alberta. They are only a short-term fix for short-sighted employers.

The driving force in our labour market has been very high oil and gas prices. The conventional oil patch has been sucking up workers from other sectors of the economy like some big vacuum truck. When they're paid big bucks for the short term, people will often leave their long-term work. This is what is happening.

Alberta and northeast B.C. have been going crazy in the bush. It is a conventional oil and gas boom that we are in. Contrary to popular mythology we are not in a construction employment boom yet. Labour supply is tight in housing construction because those workers leave to make more money elsewhere.

Counterintuitively, Alberta construction employment was down on a year-to-year basis in five of seven months between September of 2005 and March of 2006. We actually have available workers in most industrial trades but not all. The electricians' hall in Edmonton, for example, has almost 3,000 Alberta tradesmen out of work and ready to work. Many are still available in the rest of Canada. Some trades are in short supply because their skills are also in demand in the conventional oil patch or for short-term plant shutdowns.

Some unions do seek tradesmen from the U.S. because many of their own members would sooner work conventional oil and gas than a CLAC or merit job. These oil sands employers who are crying for temporary foreign workers are those who cannot get help because they will not pay the pensions and other benefits workers want. It is bizarre that some large projects are seeking labour concessions in the face of a tight labour market. It is sad that this Conservative Alberta government is accommodating them.

We still need skilled people soon. We have the people to train: Canada has over a million unemployed youth between 18 and 25; more women want into the trades; 76 per cent of farm family income is off-farm, and most farmers have trade skills and want work; immigrants want to learn. We must ensure that these jobs are for the benefit of Albertans and Canadians. All oil sands work must have some benefit for Alberta. Why just let all the benefit flow out of Alberta?

The Alberta government should cancel its special temporary foreign worker deals in the oil sands and concentrate on training Albertans and Canadians and real immigrants first so that there will be real long-term benefit for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. R. Miller: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Bill and Elvie Brown

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour to rise today and bring to the attention of this Assembly an approaching milestone in the lives of two very special constituents of mine. The constituency I'm proud to represent is home to thousands of remarkable people but none more so than Bill and Elvie Brown. During their life together they have shown an unmatched devotion to their community, their family, and to each other, and on July 22 they will celebrate their 70th wedding anniversary. They have faced the past seven decades together through good times and bad, through sickness and health, just as they pledged to do so long ago. Their union has produced two children, 12 grandchildren, and many great-grandchildren. It has touched the lives of countless others who have had the privilege of calling them friends.

Bill and Elvie recently moved from their home in Czar, where they lived for almost 50 years, to the Battle River Lodge in Wainwright. While their location has changed, their dedication to each other has not. It remains as strong today as it was in 1936.

As Bill and Elvie celebrate a milestone achieved by few, they will do so with my sincere congratulations, Mr. Speaker, and best wishes for many more years of health and happiness. In a world where divorce and conflict are all too common, they stand as an example of dedication and devotion that we can all admire and aspire to, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in doing so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member left 35 seconds on the table there, which really helps overall, considering other members did not.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Provincial Pension Plan

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. As an MLA I enjoy productive discussions on positive ideas that add to the long-term prosperity of our province and to individual Albertans. Mr. Speaker, in the coffee shops, the media, and even in this House here we have numerous discussions about what to do with our resource wealth. In the early '70s the heritage savings trust fund was established as a vehicle to accumulate resource revenues. Fortunately, this fund was there to help Albertans during the difficult time of the 1980s.

Now we need a plan for the future. The current 10 per cent contributions to the faulty Canada pension plan is not in the best interest of Albertans. The Canada pension plan is largely unfunded and fails to provide a respectable retirement.

Mr. Speaker, we should be establishing an Alberta pension plan supplemented by our surplus resource revenues. By combining the surplus royalty revenues and the existing heritage savings trust fund, Albertans would be able to build a pension fund to benefit all Albertans. The new plan would be seamless and totally transferable, offering greater benefits, better security, and flexibility as evidenced by the Robson report, commissioned by this government in 1999. Albertans could take pride in having their own, more equitable Alberta pension fund.

The Alberta pension fund would also create a pool of investment capital available to Albertans and our businesses similar to Quebec's caisse de dépôt, which has more than $133 billion available to Quebecers. An Alberta pension fund would reduce waste by creating a public expectation to save for the future. It is said that every dollar wasted today is 10 less dollars for retirement. The resources of Alberta belong to all Albertans, both those who live here today as well as those who'll live here in the future. By building a fund that belongs to all Albertans, we would be using our resources to the benefit of all Albertans.

In summary, an Alberta pension fund would yield economic and political returns. We need a made-in-Alberta solution to provide a respectable retirement plan for Albertans. Let's give serious consideration to creating an Alberta heritage pension fund.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a petition from 1,140 residents of Alberta. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to . . . defeat legislation allowing expansion of private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta and permitting doctors to work in both the private and public system, which will drain key resources from the public system . . . [and to] vote against plans that would force Albertans to pay for private health insurance for services that should be covered by medicare.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 382 people which expresses their opposition to the third way now and certainly for the future.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports I'd like to table five copies each of Continuing Care Health Service Standards, Supportive Living Accommodation Standards, Long-Term Care Accommodation Standards with the hope that this sets a new tone for a better and more qualified delivery and monitoring of long-term care and care for Alberta patients wherever they are.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you have a tabling?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings in relation to my question earlier today in question period. The first tabling I have is from the Alberta Gazette dated June 29, 1996, and this is the 94 acres of land that was sold for $500,000.

The second tabling I have is also in regard to this sale, and it is a transfer of land from the former public works minister, Stan Woloshyn.

The third tabling I have is an Alberta Registries land titles certificate in regard to this land and the transfer of this parcel of 94 acres for $500,000 to Gerard Peter Haarsma and Reta B. Haarsma of 199 Street.

The fourth tabling I have is a letter dated May 1, 2006, to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, and this letter outlines the reasons I believe that we need an independent judicial inquiry into the sale of surplus ring road lands in both Edmonton and Calgary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the appropriate number of copies of the 2003 and the 2004 vital statistics annual reviews. These reviews summarize all births, marriages, deaths, and stillbirths that occurred in Alberta during those years. Any member wishing to receive copies of these can obtain them from my office.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to table five copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View requesting that Bill 208, Protection of Fundamental Freedoms (Marriage) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, be given early consideration by Committee of the Whole on Monday, May 8, 2006.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Rutherford on a point of order.

Point of Order Interrupting Members' Statements

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon during a part of the Routine which we call Members' Statements, there were a number of interjections made by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar during a member's statement that was being given by the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Now, while I cannot find the specific citation that rules out interjections during Members' Statements, you will know that it is the convention of this House that we not interject during that particular part of the Routine. I certainly can cite in our Standing Orders section 13(4)(b) which states, "When a member is speaking, no person shall . . . interrupt that member, except to raise a point of order." I would submit to you that the two members that I mentioned were in violation of our Standing Orders and the convention of this House by making those interjections during the member's statement, and I would ask that you find that, in fact, there was a point of order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Anybody else want to participate in this point of order? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the member raising the point of order is correct. We have a convention where we do not interject into other member's statements, so if my insertion of accurate figures into the statement was of any interference, I do apologize.

Rev. Abbott: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to stand and certainly apologize if the member thought that I had made any untoward statements with regard to the member's statement. The fact of the matter is that the Bible clearly says, "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone." As we know, the members on that side of the House do the same thing to us when we stand on our members' statements as well.

The Speaker: Well, that's certainly interesting.

First of all, hon. members, there is no Standing Order pertaining to interjections or heckling during Members' Statements. That has never been the case, never been. What has been said by the chair on numerous occasions is that the chair will not entertain points of order or points of privilege as a result of comments made during Members' Statements. So there's nothing different with Members' Statements than any other part of the Routine.

The chair would like to caution members that the convention, the rules that are found in all the historical documents that we have, including Standing Orders, pertain to heckling and interjections at all parts of the Routine. It does not single out Members' Statements. The same applies during question period. The same applies during opportunities for members when they're tabling things and when they're giving speeches or raising questions.

I'm greatly encouraged by the interjection from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford because I'm sure that as the whip of his caucus he will now ensure that his members henceforth do not interject at any time during the Routine, in the same way that I'm sure the Deputy Government House Leader along with the government whip have heard that this will be the new decorum in the Assembly led now by the Official Opposition. Starting tomorrow, we'll see this rule applied. I can't speak on behalf of the third party. They haven't chosen to speak yet today. But I suspect that it will be just so quiet in here tomorrow that it will be remarkable. I would be very surprised if such a thing happened.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you. Colleagues, thank you and good afternoon. Mr. Chairman, I rise to move the budget estimates for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for 2006-2007.

I'm pleased to be here today to talk about our budget, but before I begin, I want to outline what I'll be speaking about today. I will be reviewing the ministry's overarching challenges and priorities for the coming year and how they will be served by our budget for 2006-2007. Then I'll explore several of the key initiatives that will be led by program areas in the year to come.

Before beginning, I'd like to introduce some of my department staff sitting in the members' gallery. I'd ask you to welcome Jamie Curran, my executive assistant; Brad Pickering, my deputy minister, and his executive assistant, Paul Leeder; Stew Churlish, assistant deputy minister for the finance and administration division and senior financial officer; Craig Quintilio, assistant deputy minister for the lands division; Cliff Henderson, assistant deputy minister of our forestry division; Ken Ambrock, our assistant deputy minister of fish and wildlife; a new member of our team, Brian Gifford, chair of the Surface Rights Board and of the Land Compensation Board – Brian is right there in the front row; Brian, just give us a wave so everybody can see you – Morris Seiferling, our assistant deputy minister of sustainable resource and environmental management; Joyce Ingram, executive director of our corporate business support; Dave Bartesko, manager of sustainable resource and environmental management; and Joan McCracken, our assistant director of communications. I see Joan up there as well.

Those are our staff. Those are just a few of the 1,900 dedicated, professional staff who enable Sustainable Resource Development to carry out its business each and every day of the year. These people do great work on behalf of sustaining the province's resources, and in doing so, they improve the quality of life in Alberta today and for Albertans to enjoy.

One example of exceptional effort is, of course, Mrs. Joyce Shaw from our Barrhead office, whom we honoured here today in this Assembly for her 50 years of service to the Alberta government. Perhaps I should say 50 years of service and counting as Joyce continues to help protect Alberta's natural resources for future generations. I'm desperately proud of the work that is being done by Sustainable Resource Development staff, and I commend all the staff for their tremendous efforts and their accomplishments.

Mr. Chairman, people are important to any organization, but to this ministry they are essential. They fulfill a mandate that is far reaching. As the primary manager of Alberta's wildlife, public lands, and forests, the ministry works with industry, communities, and other stakeholders to provide opportunities that support prosperity.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

Simply put, our job is to steward Alberta's natural resources. We work hard to ensure that our resources are managed for the benefit of both present and future generations. In doing so, we must achieve a balance between conservation and development, taking into consideration the economic, social, and environmental values of all Albertans. This is a difficult challenge, made even tougher by the unprecedented level of activity we have had on the land today here in Alberta and the new challenges that we face on the horizon, challenges like upstream gas and oil development, increased oil sands activity, and wind power, which are being added to our existing activities of oil and gas, agriculture, ranching, forestry, and recreational access to public lands.

It is all about the land, Mr. Chairman: how we use it and how we ensure that future generations have the same opportunities to enjoy the land. This is especially important to me personally. I'm from a small town, rural Alberta. I grew up there at a time when everyone believed that we lived in a land of plenty and that it would never end. Today I know better. Yes, we are blessed with abundant natural resources in Alberta, including the land and the resources on and under it. These resources are renewable, but they are not limitless. I believe that we have a responsibility to be stewards of our natural resources to ensure that we can enjoy them in perpetuity. It means placing the highest priority on healthy lands and natural resources for the future to leave this wealth in good shape for the people of tomorrow. It is about stewardship, protecting our natural resource wealth for future generations.

Budget 2006 is all about providing resources to sustain the land. Overall, the ministry's operating budget increases by $13 million to $238 million while the capital plan grows $11 million to $39 million. The increases include $5 million this year, part of a $15 million increase over three years, to fund initiatives to better manage the land. The $5 million includes $1 million allocated to land-use framework consultations with Albertans. Those consultations will begin this spring or early summer and include regional and provincial forums as well as public education and awareness programs, that are so important.

The $5 million increase also includes $2 million in funding for enhancing land-use planning and partnerships to improve public rangeland and to help us look for opportunities for greater efficiencies in stewardship of the public land base. These efforts will include entering into partnership agreements to develop new tools for the sustainable management of public rangelands, tools that will help us assess riparian health on grazing lands, for instance, and grazing distribution patterns. The work will also include helping public grazing reserve associations to repair the damage caused by recreation and resource development. It will also involve moving into an electronic process for handling oil and gas dispositions, improved disposition and inspection processes, and increased resources for access management planning for the Ghost-Waiparous and Bighorn areas.

Taken together, this $2 million in increased funding will allow the department to better meet the demands for land-use dispositions and to do the follow-up work needed to ensure that those impacts are reduced and that Alberta lands will be available for the use and the enjoyment of future generations.

Another $2 million of the $5 million budgeted for 2006-2007 will enhance natural resource information for land-use decision-making. The natural resources information project is a multi-year undertaking to update existing data and provide new information on grassland, vegetation, watersheds, forest resources, and land use/access. Once the information is acquired, it will be accessible all across government.

We will also look for information partners with rural municipalities, government ministries, and others to leverage our investment in the data. By doing so, we will provide the foundation for accurate and timely natural resource data needed for informed decision-making. This new information will allow us to move ahead on the provincial grazing reserves program and the grassland vegetation inventory, both of which support the sustainability of rural Alberta. We'll also directly support the sustainable resource and environmental management initiative, that is part of our land-use framework.

While that completes the overview of the major commitments contained in Budget 2006-2007, I will now review the commitments associated with the ministry's three core business areas. They are lands, including rangeland management, dispositions, and management plans; forestry, including timber allocations and controlling wildfires; wildlife, including fisheries and habitat management.

The ministry is also responsible for the Surface Rights Board, the Land Compensation Board, and the Natural Resources Conservation Board. As I mentioned earlier, Brian Gifford, the newly appointed chairman of the Surface Rights Board and the Land Compensation Board, is with us today. I am sure that he appreciates the importance of the land management tasks that are ahead of us. We have a lot of responsibilities in a lot of areas that are important to the present and future of Albertans.

When it comes to lands, which is the first core business, it deals with developing common goals for Alberta's public lands that address multiple stakeholder demands. The ministry has responsibility for 60 per cent of the public land base in Alberta, an area that includes 90 million acres in the green area and 10 million acres in the white area. This land base is under tremendous pressure today: pressure from population growth, from increased economic development, and from people who enjoy the land for recreation activities. These pressures will only increase in the years to come, and the ministry has to be positioned to manage that increased pressure.

Our immediate challenge includes managing increased volumes of disposition applications as well as the increasing complexity of issues on the land base and resolving increased conflicts amongst users. Budget 2006 specifically addresses these pressing challenges. As I have noted, additional resources this year strengthen the department's capacity to process and manage the growing number of dispositions and to have new sources of information to assist decision-making. I want to say that again: to have new sources of information to assist decision-making. That's so important. For example, the $2 million commitment to improve natural resource information will provide among other things new grassland vegetation information about Alberta's grassland natural region near the Drumheller area. Aerial photography will also be used to upgrade the national forest inventory, the road network, water data, and the Crown's portion of the Alberta vegetation inventory.

Other expenditures of note include $300,000 to help restore the productive capacity of the provincial grazing reserves and $100,000 dedicated to a partnership to help halt the spread of noxious weeds from vacant public land.

In forestry the challenges in our second area are no less daunting than those affecting our overall land-use decision-making. The province's forests provide multiple benefits to Albertans thanks to a combination of leading forest management, wildlife protection, and industry practices. We do a great job of sustaining the resource but not without having some hurdles to overcome. For example, wildfires are a continual threat to our forests, we currently face infestations of mountain pine beetles, and the forest industry itself is struggling under global economic pressures that threaten its competitiveness.

Budget 2006 gives us some ammunition to take on these challenges. Our capital budget is part of a $28 million commitment over four years to upgrade our air tanker bases across the province, improving the safety of our wildfire fighting operations. In addition, we'll put a $14 million commitment this year as part of a $42 million allocation over three years to upgrade provincial air tankers themselves, to better protect Albertans and their communities from wildfires. Meanwhile, the ministry's operating budget receives $2 million for wildfire reinsurance, to help spread out the year-to-year spikes in this cost area. Another $2 million is budgeted for this year's FireSmart program, to continue our efforts to reduce the threat of property and community losses from wildfires.

Turning to the mountain pine beetle, the ministry's operational budget receives $2.6 million for beetle work, part of the commitment of $7.8 million over three years. We want to continue our efforts to help prevent the spread of the pests in Alberta forests. Our policy was and remains: a hundred per cent control of infested trees. The funding for 2006-2007 will be used to continue this work, to conduct aerial surveys to identify infested trees. We'll do ground surveys to locate any new infestations and cut-and-burn activities to get rid of the forest pests.

We will also be hosting a major summit on mountain pine beetle at the end of May. What we'll do is bring together municipalities and specialists in the field to help us attack this forest pest, including representatives from British Columbia, who are partners in this with us. They'll be sharing the valuable lessons that they've learned fighting the beetle on the western side of the Rockies. The funding provided for beetle efforts is money well spent, Mr. Chairman, on the challenge that is both serious and formidable.

The ministry's operating budget for 2006-2007 also allocated $1.5 million to fund restoration of older cutblocks in need of replanting, to help reassure that we will continue to have an abundance of forest resources for our future. This is part of a three-year commitment to reforestation that we initiated last year. Still with our forests, the budget also commits $600,000 to promote forest products and market diversification. We feel that this is part of our future as well. This expenditure is part of our continuing effort to ensure that Albertans receive the highest possible value from our forest resources. It is also one part of the overall three-year, $1.8 million commitment to our value-added strategy designed to enable us to better compete in global markets.

In terms of fish and wildlife, our third core business, Albertans have a deep-seated connection to this wonderful natural resource, just as we have a profound responsibility to sustainably manage fish and wildlife values for future generations. We have key priorities for fish and wildlife management in this year's budget allocations. Among the highest is $600,000 for grizzly bear research and management, including bear DNA census work to determine our populations. It's a commitment that we made, and that commitment is ongoing.

An additional $240,000 is to develop and implement the BearSmart program to minimize bear/human conflicts. We're going to be rolling this out across the province very soon this spring, and we're going to go through our educational partnerships. We'll encourage communities and towns to set standards for safety for residents that live in bear country, to be able to have them learn how they can reduce possible and potential bear attractions.

Work will also include stepping up our bear aversion and bear management efforts, which are so important, that people rely on as well. I recently participated in a bear intercept feeding program, which supplied roadkill feed for bears as an alternative to ranchers' livestock.

The 2006-2007 budget also provides $25,000 for caribou management. We are committed to working with our departments, industry, and stakeholders to protect and recover woodland caribou and its habitat, and we are taking significant steps to ensure that woodland caribou remain on the provincial landscape. Following up on work done in the past years based on the caribou recovery plan, that means greater protection for caribou. For example, we have established a single Alberta caribou committee to co-ordinate management activities. We've also undertaken innovative programs like the caribou cowboy initiative, that prevents caribou from being hit by vehicles along highway 40. As well, we continue to work closely with industry to protect caribou habitat from harmful industrial encroachment. Efforts include reducing the width of seismic lines, inducing companies to share roads, promoting best practices, and adjusting harvesting sequences.

Over the past 10 years, Mr. Chairman, industry and government have contributed over half a million dollars a year into managing and monitoring caribou. Our 2006-2007 budget also provides funding to continue our work with the species at risk program, including species assessment, recovery planning, and implementation of recovery plans. Since the year 2000 this area has received over 1 and a half million dollars to help recovery planning and on-the-ground conservation efforts, a work that will continue in 2006 and for wildlife disease and surveillance work as well.

The budget will also allow us to continue our efforts to revitalize Alberta fisheries, including increased recreational opportunities. These are our fish and wildlife numbers for the year ahead at the moment, and if we can do anything to increase allocations, we will.

I've been speaking for some time about the program priorities that we will be able to serve through Budget 2006. Now I'd like to speak about what it will mean in terms of people. Last year we committed to bring 40 additional full-time and seasonal staff. We now have a total of 126 field, fish, and wildlife officers and 10 superintendents. This year we're allocating $720,000 for 20 seasonal public lands and forest division guardians to work throughout the province to deliver environmental and stewardship messages to the many people who will enjoy recreational land in this province. This commitment is part of the ministry's efforts to foster a strong stewardship ethic amongst Albertans who enjoy the province's natural resources. For example, we have established the public information and outreach branch, which brings together education services from across the ministry to better serve Albertans by providing education about stewardship.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my privilege to be able to speak to this ministry. I'd first of all like to congratulate Mrs. Shaw as well for 50 years of service. I'm not sure if maybe we hired her when she was 15 years old.

Mr. Coutts: Twelve.

Mr. Bonko: Okay. Well, that's even better.

The minister covered a number of areas: land use with oil, gas, agriculture, recreational use. That's pretty much how I want to start my specifics here. This provincial government does prefer to manage the forest by volunteer co-operation between industries, but clearly that's not enough. This government is committed to a massive industrialization strategy, I believe. Unfortunately for the various industries, whether they're forest, mining, oil, gas, perhaps coal, and ranching, there are going to be concerns with how we're able to manage the cumulative impacts. I believe that we're going to be caught in the crossfire there in the struggle for environment and lands and the animals as well, which the minister did mention.

Let's just talk about some of the industry's impacts here. When we drill a well, three kilometres of seismic lines are usually cleared when we're trying to obtain that area for oil and gas business, and then there are permanent structures that are left, which is concerning. At the current rate of disturbance every square kilometre of forest logged results in about 1.8 kilometres of fragmented habitat. This is exactly the habitat that the minister mentioned that he does want to preserve with regard to endangered or threatened species, and we can go on to specifics such as the grizzly bear, which was mentioned, and the Little Smoky caribou herd or, in fact, just the caribou herd itself.

Those are concerns that Albertans have listed and e-mailed and called about, with participation from groups such as the Alberta Wilderness Association or CPAWS. Those committed groups want to ensure that those two listed animals remain on the landscape for a very long time for generations to be able to enjoy in their natural habitat, Mr. Chairman.

If we talk about the grizzly bear, I would commend the minister on his three-year moratorium that was placed upon that. When we're looking for a little bit better information, he has committed to in fact using more monies to do a new DNA study as well as trying to get a handle on exactly the amount of bears. I would certainly like to know, as all Albertans would like to know: do we have an estimated best guess as to what we have out there currently as we're planning for the moratorium for the next three years?

The minister also talked about the fact that he'd like to lessen the amount of bear/human contact. I think that's commendable because one death is too many, but we have to realize that when we're in their territory, we're going to actually have more impacts, and we're going to have more encounters as we try and go to more areas out there. Has the minister considered the bear dogs they use? I believe they're about a $3,000 price tag and several years for training, but they're apparently well versed, as far as dogs go, with being able to keep humans safe. The same sort of thing with regard to ranching and sheep, the same with bear dogs: to be able to maintain the bear's distance from human contact.

We talk about $250,000 allocated to the woodland caribou study. I'm not sure how that number, $250,000, was obtained. Again, I think we need to realize that the whole reason why the caribou in that particular area of Little Smoky are in fact shrinking is because of the intrusion of the oil and the gas or the forestry and/or recreational use, which I'll get to a little bit later.

Some of the specifics I wanted to talk about were perhaps the boreal forest, where there is ongoing development and investment, a hundred billion dollars in announced investment in northern Alberta in the boreal forest. This region provides Alberta with fresh air, it supports the valuable energy and forestry sectors, and it's home to over a hundred thousand Albertans. The government participated in the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy. Do the estimates contain any funding to support any recommendations from the Boreal Futures forest study report? One of the first questions would be: is the minister going to commit to implementing, backed with full funding and legislation? Why is the government not using a strategic model to develop a strategic plan for Alberta's northern landscape? Why would the government not be using fiscal incentives to promote conservation within that region of the boreal forest?

I'd like to go on to forests again with community timber permits. Community timber permits are ideally designed to encourage local economic development and to meet the needs of small, local wood producers. While the local economy and the development of the manufacturing of local wood products in this program is good, it isn't happening. I believe that there are some loopholes. The minister continues to convert community timber permits into commercial timber permits when the permit holder no longer meets the requirements. If the minister is aware of this loophole, when does he intend to in fact fix that particular problem? What is the minister going to do to ensure that microscale operators can continue to operate and play an important role in providing local economic development and supply locally produced products as well as being able to have that economic base? Another concern with regard to that would be: has the minister considered or evaluated the impacts of allowing the transfer of community timber permits to commercial permits in terms of Crown revenue from stumpage fees? Those are some of the specifics on the woodlot.

Going to areas outside of that, burned-out areas as far as reforestation, I'm not sure who actually has the responsibility. As forest fires are now becoming an obvious thing within the province – there are some several hundred that were burning – whose responsibility is it to reforest the burned-out areas? Certainly, there are FMAs, and there are permits held within various communities or within large-scale logging, but whose responsibility is it?

Let's talk about the development or at least the process with the land-use management. I think we've all got a stake in this, Mr. Minister. I think that you talked about the fact that you're looking for new sources, I believe you said, for decision-making such as perhaps opposition as well. Perhaps that could be an opportunity for an all-party to be able to go and help you design or at least improve upon what you have to start with with the land-use management. The opposition right now does currently have plans – and they're in print in a red book – for land-use management for all of Alberta. I think there could certainly be some suggestions in there that the minister could carry on or could in fact improve upon.

In land-use management there needs to be a real effort with regard to being able to have off-road use. Neighbours of mine, in fact, go south of Calgary to be able to use their ATVs or their quads. That's a long drive, but they don't mind it because they think they get a good weekend out of it. They're able to do some camping and off-road use. But if we set aside areas that are already, in fact, not too valuable for ranching or for farming, agricultural – and I've talked with those at the Alberta Fish and Game Association as to their take on having some specific areas set aside so that they do have it to be able to use at their discretion, say 30 kilometres square with some hills and that. That would be an opportunity for them to be able to have their own area instead of continuing to encroach on some of the habitat areas where they continually are pushed and forced to go because of development. They said that they would certainly be pleased and could support something like that if we did have some designated sites, perhaps in the northern part of the province, some central, and of course down in the south part of the province as well. That would be great to be able to have that.

We talked about how as the minister was growing up on the farmland, he thought that this could last forever and that as he's gained a little bit more wisdom, he realizes, in fact, that the areas and lands aren't going to last forever with our continued development.

We talked – and, in fact, I brought it up in the past – about roadless areas. Has the minister considered having roadless areas where absolutely no activity would occur? There would be no roads for camping, hiking. It would be roadless, as I said. I used this before with regard to last year's estimates and review of this ministry.

We talked about the Alberta Forest Products Association's survey. I talked about it yesterday, brought it up with regard to some specifics on the questions and how the overall general population doesn't feel that the ministry or the government or, in fact, the industry is doing enough to protect. It is the ministry, the government's responsibility to ensure that the lands remain vital and they remain clean and usable. So, again, would the minister be able to give his take with regard to the survey? There were many specific questions on that, and I'd just like to see if he would be able to speak on that particular piece.

We talked about the pine beetle and their co-ordinated effort with B.C. to be able to talk and try to eradicate it. Well, this has been going on for some time. Have we talked about or even considered bringing in some experts from the U.S. side? I know that they've had this particular pest down there for some time. Have we considered bringing up some experts to be able to talk about where they are with regard to being able to manage this?

There's a joint effort, I believe, between here and B.C. on one of the Willmore areas. There's going to be a combined or at least a joint effort on the burning. We talked about some of the controlled burns before. In fact, the minister in his opening piece talked about how 100 per cent of infected trees will receive treatment such as eradication and burn. That's reactive. We're talking about proactive.

We can't anticipate where these bugs are going to be going, but if we could in fact start taking out some of the older trees, which I believe they're attracted to – I know we've got to, you know, either log them or we've got to cut and burn them. I mean, either way, we've got to ensure that the forest industry, which is a $4 billion industry and employs 59,000 people, Mr. Minister, remains vital and it remains strong because of all the people that are involved. [interjection] I know that you know that as well. I'm just reminding you of that particular piece.

The fishing derby. We raised that last time, on the lakes. When the thaw would come, you said you would certainly monitor the activity on the lakes as far as the overfishing and the concerns about that. Has the minister come up with any sort of specifics as to the concerns that were raised with the Pigeon Lake fishing derby and the overusage or the overfishing that does occur on that one?

Let's go to some of the efforts on the southeastern Alberta side. We'll talk about the culls on the deer. In fact, the fish and wildlife department had concluded and had done a cull in that area. It was successful, I guess, by their terms, and they called it off early. There are some reports suggesting that perhaps the culls aren't effective. The CWD is out there. Do we actually have an idea right now as to where it's coming from or the effects or where they are? There has been little talk on that particular area as well.

I'd also like to raise one of the concerns from the AWA. They're concerned – it's just rumours right now – about funding for a species at risk program that has been cut due to the administration boondoggle, they're calling it. It means the portion of the $48.7 million in line 3.0.1 that's endangered species will not be funded. I certainly would like some comments on that. The Alberta Wilderness

Association has stated that they are just entering into a busy summer this season in this type of work, and many consultants, researchers, university students are very anxious to get out in the field and start their careers – hopefully, it'll be long careers – within that particular work. Can the minister explain line 3.0.1, fish and wildlife, on page 406, detail the program level in writing? Specifically, how much money will be going to that thing?

The multiple species at risk program in southern Alberta. There is a report. The last one that was issued came out in June 2004. It's chaired by the Member for West Yellowhead. I don't believe that there has been another report since then. It looks great on paper, but that's as far as it goes. We contacted a number of people in various areas and industry to come up and get together, beef producers, fish and game, but there's not really much that comes out of this except for a report. In fact, I never see anything concrete, you know, to be able to get some of these particular species that they have concerns with listed as threatened.

We've got woodland caribou in here. It's still in fact endangered and on the verge of threatened. We've got the peregrine falcon as well as the grizzly bear. They're all listed in here, but again what good is this report if it doesn't go any further except in writing? I never hear much about this, and I'd like the minister, perhaps, to be able to comment on that particular piece as well.

I've given the minister a couple of specifics. I'll sit down here and see if he'd be able to answer some of those right now, then.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. member opposite for the questions and, first of all, some of the general comments that he began with, certainly about land use and sort of putting out a position from the opposition side about the need for land use. He brought in a number of questions that I certainly would like to have the opportunity to talk about because land use – no matter where I go or where I speak or who I speak to, Albertans really value the land.

The land has given us all the wealth that we have had in this province, Mr. Chairman, not only what's on top of it, whether it's grass or whether it's trees, but what's underneath the ground, the nonrenewable resources that are underneath the ground. All of these things have made Alberta what it is today and the quality of life that we have. I know that the hon. member appreciates that and certainly wants to make sure that those kinds of activities remain but, at the same time, that it's done in a responsible way. Albertans want that too. Albertans value that.

He mentioned the Alberta Forest Products Association survey that they'd done. I thought it was a very good report that was brought forward by the Alberta Forest Products Association, and I thought it was very noble of them to actually go out and find out what Albertans valued. Albertans certainly did value the fact that they wanted to see the forests sustainable. Secondly, they wanted to see habitat preserved for wildlife. Thirdly, they wanted to make sure that there were provisions and regulations in place to help protect all of that. That is exactly what Sustainable Resource Development wants as well, and that's what we're trying to do on behalf of the people of Alberta.

When I go out and talk about that with the people, I talk to them not only about what we do today but also what we have to prepare for in the future. What we have to prepare for in the future are policies that will deal with a busy landscape, with all the activities that traditionally we have had and will continue to have that preserve that quality of life but also having to deal with population growth. That population growth is going to change the demographics of the province. How do we deal with that? At the same time you've got industry doing a good job. You've got everybody employed. You've got population growth. Then how do we enjoy ourselves? How do we get into the backcountry? How can we make sure that that backcountry is there for future generations to enjoy as we do today? How do you manage it so that it's not destroyed and that it can be there for future generations?

Part of the framework that we're working on for the future is to take into account all of that busy landscape, the population growth, the expectations when you get into the backcountry and how you manage that, and at the same time look at conservation and preservation so that the Alberta that we see 50 years from now can be somewhat similar to the Alberta that we see today. That's the future, and that's what we're going to be working on. I want to talk about that a little bit more before I end this particular segment.

I want to talk about what's happening today. We have policies in place today that ensure good management of the wildlife, good management of the fish, good management in forestry. Our policy today is to make that sustainable for today. Now, I don't want the hon. member to confuse the land-use framework that's coming forward in the future with the policies that are in place today. While we're developing the land-use framework for the future, it's important that we keep the economic engines running today, so we continue to work on the policies that we have today in terms of making sure that our companies have good management practices, that they have good plans put in place, good cutting sequences, annual allowable cuts that are kept to the companies' standards. We have standards and regulations. We keep the companies' feet to the fire in terms of how they go about and do their work and make sure that the public interest is looked after in terms of management of the forest.

Also, on the public lands side it's about stewardship. Certainly, our grasslands have to be well looked after. Of course, it's all the things that you put in place to make sure that those are going to be there to serve the needs of today but also be preserved for the future.

I want to get to industry for just a moment. Industry itself, oil and gas and forestry, have been working in the northern part of this province for a number of years. They are pushing us to come up with good policies on integrated land management. They're already working on integrated land management, using the same roads to get to a cutblock or to get to a series of well sites. That reduces the footprint on FMAs. It reduces the footprint on public land.

Particularly the oil and gas industry now have the kind of technology that when they go and do seismic lines, they don't have to do the 60-foot lines or the 30-foot lines. They're now down to about two metres, and that reduces the footprint as well. So we're all getting a little bit smarter in terms of integrated land management. Now, what that does: it helps the habitat. That helps preserve the habitat for our grizzly bears, our caribou, and all of those types of things. So industry is taking a very responsible approach to working with us on integrated land management in this busy landscape.

I want to talk about the future of land use in just a moment, but I want to answer some of your questions. You talked about habitat for bears, and you mentioned what the numbers of bears are. Well, we have six or seven zones in the province, and we're continuing with our DNA study. Right now grizzly bear populations can only be estimated, and it's very, very difficult. It takes a long time to get all the DNA census. So in each zone they're pretty well estimated.

Because the estimates in our first set of numbers for each zone are strictly estimates, we want to have a better idea of the numbers, so we didn't put a moratorium on hunting. We suspended the hunt for three years. The hunt was and could still be in the future a management tool for the numbers of grizzly bears. But let's take a look over the next three years with this DNA study at exactly how many grizzly bears there are across the entire province and not just in individual zones. That decision will be made for the future.

But here's what happens if you suspend a hunt and you have more interaction as our population grows and we get into the backcountry with our style of living or our style of recreation: we have to be more bear smart. We're unveiling a BearSmart program here within the next two weeks. We're going to let the population of Alberta know about how to conduct yourself in the backcountry, some of the things that you should take responsibility for yourself in keeping bears away from humans. When you have a bear/human conflict – it doesn't matter whether it's an automobile or whether it's on a trail or whatever – and our fish and wildlife guys are called, the bear generally loses.

So we as people have got to assume some responsibility. The BearSmart program is going to outline some of those responsibilities: how we keep our food in camp spots and even how to make sure that they're more secure so that the bears can't get to them. The bear gets used to human food. They know where to go find it, and what happens then is that you get into the bear/human conflict, and we would like to stop that.

Now, you talked about the success of the Karelian dogs. The Karelian dogs were a pilot project, part of our initial BearSmart program, and the pilot project was started in the Crowsnest Pass. I got to know those little puppies when they were just secured by the department staff down there in the Crowsnest Pass, in the Blairmore office. That pilot project has worked out really, really well, so we're going to be expanding on the Karelian bear dog as part of our BearSmart program.

The other things: helping communities establish where their trails are, making sure that berry bushes are away from the trails, and again trying to get that distance between bears and humans. The biggest thing, as I said, is to make us as individuals aware of the fact that we have a responsibility as well to make sure that that separation is there. We can't always be relying on the bear to be making that decision because the bear is hungry. They have an insatiable appetite, and they'll go wherever the food is. That's why you see bears crossing back and forth over the Alberta and British Columbia border. It depends on where the food is. So to get back to the numbers, that's another reason why it's very hard to tie down the numbers, and we're really pleased to have the kind of co-operation that we have from British Columbia in trying to tie those down.

The same thing happens with the caribou study. Some of the dollars that we're putting forward is a partnership with industry and our stakeholders to make sure that the habitat is there and that the preservation of the habitat is there for the existence of the caribou, looking after natural predators, like the wolves. Nobody likes to go out there and destroy any wildlife, but when you have one species as a predator to another and that species is in danger, then you have to do something. It's part of our management tool. You have to make sure that the caribou are going to survive.

The other thing that we're doing, which is a great partnership with industry, is that we've taken a corralled area – it's a very large corralled area – and we're taking the caribou cows that are going to be giving birth this spring, and we've protected them in this corralled area. It was part of a conservation to make sure that the young calves that are coming up will have a survival rate. We and the industry think that that's really, really important for the survival of the caribou. So they are doing the responsible thing, and it's, again, part of our management.

Conservation of the boreal forest. You were talking a bit about that and looking at a strategic model for the boreal forest. You know, we look at policies. Alberta is only part of the boreal forest. It includes a number of provinces across Canada, and we certainly take our part in looking at the conservation laws and the policies in protection of the boreal forest of not only those other jurisdictions but also what happens, certainly, in our own forests. We look at it as part of our responsibility in responsible forest management. We want to have a healthy forest ecosystem. We know that we have to have a competitive industry, and we know that if that industry thrives, then we've got vibrant communities, and we've got people that have a quality of life. They have schools, they have hospitals, and it's a quality of life that they enjoy. If it's important to Albertans, if it's important to the sustainability of the resource, then it's important for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development.

What we've done is we've recently endorsed a boreal forest framework, which endorses what we believe is sound science and public partnerships to help address the boreal forest challenge. The first partnership under the framework is an agreement with Ducks Unlimited, which I've met with many times, to share expertise on watershed and water preservation because that's part of good habitat. That's part of one of the four corners of the framework that we're looking forward to in the future as well. But we want to share our expertise on those watersheds and, of course, integrated landscape management in the boreal forest.

It's a good point that you brought up that nationally the boreal forest represents 75 per cent of Canada's forests. In Alberta we've got about 10 per cent of that, as I said earlier. We've got foothills, we've got boreal forest, we've got parkland, and we've also got Shield ecosystems in that as well. The campaign is aimed to protect 50 per cent of the national boreal forest and establish Forest Stewardship Council certification for the other 50 per cent of the region. Alberta practices are considered amongst the best, and we're part of the planning standards that are recognized internationally. So the boreal forest is important to us.

The next thing I want to talk about is in terms of making sure that the habitat is preserved – that's kind of the context that you were going in – and also on the viability of the resources. Pine beetle: last year during estimates you talked about an Alberta-made solution. Now, this year you're saying that maybe we should be looking at expertise from somewhere else. Well, we've been doing that for a number of years. When it was first found out that the pine beetle was going to be a problem and it was coming our way, we were working with British Columbia, we were working with Montana, and we were working with Idaho. We know the folks down there. We take best practices from what they have done in the past. We apply them to what we have to deal with today. More importantly, now that the pine beetle is on our border, we have been very proactive in trying to stop it at the border. As a matter of fact, our goal is to take 100 per cent of the trees that are infested and get rid of them.

As a matter of fact, I want to share with the hon. member and the House and actually with all Albertans just a progress report on what we have done to date. We do aerial surveys, and then we do on-the-ground surveys. So far what we've done is we've done them in various regions across the province, and I've got five or six regions here that I just want to bring you up to date on.

In the Kakwa wildland park we have completed our survey. The trees that are to be cut are 283 trees. What we've done so far: we've completed 97 per cent of that control by cutting and burning 275 of those trees.

In the Willmore wilderness park – this is a big area where the beetle is coming over – we're ongoing with our survey. We have 7,480 trees to be cut and burned. At this point in time we have cut and burned 1,820 of those trees, so we have a long way to go there. With this big area of beetle-infested trees, that's where we would like to do the prescribed burns. We would have done that last September, but with the high humidity and the rain that we had during September, it wasn't practical to go in there and burn that area. We were hoping that maybe the cold winter would get rid of them, but we didn't have that cold a winter over there, so we're going to have to look at another opportunity to do a prescribed burn over there to make up the difference on those trees. I'll share this with you a little bit later on this afternoon.

We have the great co-operation of Community Development in going into these parks and identifying and cutting and burning these trees because they see it as a preservation of the other trees that could be infested years down the road.

When it comes to the southern Rockies area, in the Bow Valley we've completed our surveys. Trees to be cut and burned: 315. We're a hundred per cent done there. In Spray Lakes we've completed our surveys. We have identified 909 trees, and a hundred per cent of that has been done at this point in time. In the Oldman area we have completed our surveys, and we have cut and burned 81 out of the 102 trees that have been identified, and although that has been suspended for a short time, we'll have to pick that up in the future. The Crowsnest Pass: the same way. Our survey is completed, and we have identified trees to cut and burn at 1,226, and we've actually cut and burned 1,176 of those trees. In the Peter Lougheed area we have a status of ongoing surveying. We've identified 17 trees, and we will be looking at cutting and burning those 17 trees as well.

So far, the total of trees to be cut and burned is 10,332 and of trees that we have cut and burned is 4,593, so we have a long way to go.

At the next opportunity I will finish off on fishing derbies and . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the allocated time has run out.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to rise and make some hopefully constructively critical comments in regard to the Sustainable Resource Development budget. I'd like to thank the hon. minister and his staff for coming out with a very extensive group of information in regard to the budget and certainly some degree of clarity that makes my job a lot easier.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to look at the budget here in regard to the various categories of core business that the minister has identified: forest protection, forest land resource development, fish and wildlife management, rangeland management, and land-use disposition management. The ministry, of course, uses these classifications, so for my purposes it makes things similarly easy, I guess.

So, first of all, the issue I'd like to ask some questions about is in regard to wildfires. This is the season where the fire season starts, and unfortunately we already have several hundred hot spots across the province. I guess that this is a perennial question, but I do want to talk about it anyway. You know, clearly, this ministry is in need of significant funds in its planning and operations, and I believe that there is a gap here in the way that wildfire management allocates its funds. Every year it's probably a similar problem. Last year the ministry budgeted $62 million for its wildfire management program, and then by supplementary estimates that amount was increased last year by 143 per cent up to $149 million.

Now, of course, I'm not by any means advocating the refusal to grant emergency funds to fight fires and to let these fires rage out of control or anything like that, but I believe that we know from year to year consistently that the wildfire issue is a problem. It's a growing problem due to the increased human use of our wilderness areas, especially in northern Alberta, and the tendency for climate change as well, the drying out of the forests. This past winter was an extraordinarily light year for precipitation, and it continues into the spring. We can see a trend, certainly over the last 10 years or so, that I believe would precipitate the increase to this fund significantly, by at least 50 per cent. We know that, in fact, we're going to end up using it.

It's just good budgeting management practices. It gives us something more to work with. Perhaps we can talk about the wildfire question in more detail if we are in fact allocating those funds during the budget process so that we can look at the details of how we might tackle this problem in a constructive and creative way. Certainly, most of the dollars do go to direct firefighting, and that's necessary, as I said before. But at the same time, I guess, if we saw an accurate number from the beginning, then I think it would help us to employ best practices here during the budget debate every year.

I have a quote here from last year. "If we go over our budget, then we can go to the sustainability fund." This is the minister from last year. Of course, that's true, but I would just like to ask then: why does this ministry consistently underestimate wildfire operation budgets every year? Last year the minister admitted during the debates that "when you take a look at the number of wildfires that we have each year and you look at the $75 million that we have, that just basically gets us started." Again, that's from last year. By the minister's own admission this budget is grossly insufficient, so why not simply budget properly? That's my comment that I would like to make on that. Obviously, there is yearly variation to the expenses that this program might incur, however fires have consistently been increasing over time.

According to the minister's business plan and his estimate debate comments from last year one of the focuses of the department is education and awareness. However, according to the department's website more fires are caused every year by humans than by natural causes, lightning and such things. While lightning-strike fires might in the end prove more destructive in terms of hectares burnt, there is little that we can do with that one. The fact is that in 2003, which seems to be the latest available data from that site, 661 fires were caused by humans compared to 527 caused by lightning strikes. This to me, Mr. Chairman, suggests that the education program led by the ministry is not entirely successful by any measurable standard.

My question is then: does the minister have more up-to-date data in regard to these incidents? Why is there no data more recent than 2003? As well, I would like to ask if the minister will post this information on the website and give Albertans an indication as to how successful the 2004 wildfire prevention campaign was. This was the last time that concerted effort was being made to educate the public according to the website, and we would like to see some definable measurements as to the success of this expenditure from the budget.

As well, I'd like to ask what the minister is doing to educate people in regard to their responsibilities concerning wildfires. Recently there was a citizen who was fined $500 for starting a fire on his property that spread to a nearby forest. Five hundred dollars doesn't seem like very much at all, and it doesn't seem like a deterrent otherwise. I would be curious to know if the minister would be raising the amount that individuals are fined for in fact causing the start of a wildfire. I think that education mixed with deterrence is the combination that we use in the Justice department, and the SRD department would do well to learn from that precedent.

I think the issue that overrides many of these SRD categories – certainly, the wildfire section being no exception – is that we have the encroachment of increased human activity into formerly wild areas. We have to be realistic that the economic performance of this province is largely determined by how we use these resources that were formerly wilderness areas. You know, forestry, oil and gas and energy exploration, and a wide range of other activities in these formerly wild areas are causes of the wildfire increase that we see in combination with change in the climate drying out these northern forests.

I think we can expect reasonably that this trend will continue in terms of lack of precipitation and increased human activity in the wilderness areas. My comment that I've made several times with regard to wildfires and to all of these categories is that we need an integrated approach that will encompass not just the SRD development strategy but that of Energy and that of the Ministry of Environment, agriculture, and other ministries as well so that we are looking at an overriding plan that can be used to see what the province is going to look like in the next 30 to 50 years. As it happens, without an integrated plan it's sort of every person for himself, and the wilderness invariably loses out in that sort of scenario, Mr. Chairman. In regard to wildfires, without an integrated land-use strategy we are just creating the conditions by which more wildfires of greater intensity will be likely to visit us within the next season and coming seasons.

The next category that I have here is in regard to grizzly bears. Last year the minister announced that six biologists and one caribou/grizzly bear manager will conduct important scientific research that will help address the growing pressures faced by Alberta's wildlife population. I would like to ask the minister to update the House as to what research is being undertaken and what results, if any, will be forthcoming.

As well, I would like to ask if the minister can explain what will be involved in the BearSmart program. I heard something about it here. I think that in regard to identification of and maintaining the integrity of the bear habitat, this is the issue that I find is like the elephant in the room that nobody talks about. We're dealing with not just grizzly bear habitat and management but wolves and caribou and a range of other wildlife that I think serve as indicator species for the overall health of any given ecosystem. Obviously – and this is the unsaid comment that I believe – you know, with the crisis in the grizzly bear population, the caribou population, and now the wolves and whatnot, we're not protecting the ecosystem that all of these organisms require to survive. So the depletion of the eastern slopes natural areas and the failure of this government to protect those areas is the direct reason why there is a problem with the grizzly bear population in the first place. Same with the woodland caribou. The wolves are suddenly having a field day with the woodland caribou because the natural balance of that ecosystem has been almost irreversibly set out of whack by intensive oil and gas operations in those areas.

So we have to obviously face this fact. This idea of ad hoc, sort of fly-by-night solutions to try to save these populations will not go anywhere until we face the fact that the ecosystems have to be protected, the habitats have to be protected for these and all other species in a larger, integrated fashion.

The next topic that I would like to just comment on briefly is in regard to the chronic wasting disease problem that we have mostly in eastern Alberta. On this topic of CWD, the disease may have devastating effects not only on Alberta's game farmers but also on Alberta's wildlife populations. Government officials have so far assured the public that CWD has not had significant incursions into Alberta's game farms. However, if it does, the results could probably provide the finishing blows to an already embattled industry.

On March 23 of this year during question period the hon. minister again asserted that the key to reducing the incidents of CWD was by "reducing deer density." Again, I realize that there is a problem with the overpopulation of deer in some areas, but I would ask also to beg the question: does the minister not think that the ever-shrinking habitat may be a reason for the increasing incidence of CWD and that further culling the deer herd may not be, in fact, the best approach? Rather, it may be part of a larger approach which includes dedicating more land to native species. Of course, if you have a concentration of a certain species in smaller areas, then the incidence of disease can be more likely.

In order to save a species, the province is considering allowing more of them to be killed. In a specific area along the Saskatchewan border the government is apparently considering changing the hunting quotas. I would be curious to know what the changes will be for the upcoming hunt, including the cull that is precipitated by the spread of CWD in eastern Alberta.

The next category that I have here is in regard to the pine beetle. We would love to have specific information on the 10,000 or so trees that were identified by the minister as being focused on for destruction to try to control the pine beetle infestation. I would like to know some more specific information as well about the intentions of the ministry to control the infestation in the Willmore wilderness area. It seems to be the most prevalent part of the province that has infestation. If controlled burns are going to be utilized here at some point during 2006 to control that, where might those controlled burns be taking place? We'd certainly welcome increased awareness and research on the Rocky Mountain pine beetle infestation, so the minister's comment in regard to a conference that is going to be hosted I guess later this month is welcomed.

We know that the larger issue in regard to the pine beetle being able to move across the border, the Continental Divide, is because of climate change. Cold snaps are just not happening that otherwise would kill the beetle in its larval stage when it reaches our areas, where we traditionally have these very long cold periods. Certainly, we know that this is a manifestation of climate change, a harbinger of much more significant changes to come, I would suggest, Mr. Chairman. I think, again, this is a part of what we need to do: to have an integrated solution or an integrated means by which Environment and Energy and SRD and Agriculture can work together to address these large overriding issues such as climate change. I'd ask the minister if he could perhaps elaborate on that, if climate change specifically has been a topic for interministerial consultation.

The next category that I would like to discuss briefly is concerning softwood lumber. On page 356 of the ministry's business plan strategy 4.2 states that the ministry will "work with International and Intergovernmental Relations and other jurisdictions to resolve the softwood lumber trade dispute." Now that we have a framework agreement negotiated by the federal government, I think it's incumbent upon this ministry as well as others to do some serious critical work as to how this framework agreement will play out to ensure that it benefits our provincial pulp and lumber industry to its greatest potential.

I guess that just to have this framework agreement in place is some reason for cautious optimism. However, the proof is in the pudding, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, we have to look carefully as to what's going to happen because we saw already for the first negotiated part of this deal that we only ended up with 80 cents to the dollar on the illegal tariffs that were imposed upon our industry across the country. If this is their opening bid and if this is any indication of what sort of goodwill or otherwise that the Americans are going to bring to the table, then I think that we have to be on our guard most strenuously because, of course, the industry that we're talking about here is quite significant for Alberta and employs many tens of thousands of workers across the province.

Thanks.

Mr. Coutts: I want to thank the hon. member for some very astute questions. My answers will probably be a little shorter this time because some of them I have covered or parts of them I have covered, but I'm going to try and deal specifically with some of the questions that you asked.

Before I do, Mr. Chairman, there's another person from Sustainable Resource Development that has joined us in the gallery here. I just want to welcome Lauren Parker from our minister's office to the proceedings this afternoon. She's a young university student, working the summer with us, who is very interested in what happens with her future, and the land-use framework is one of those things that she's really interested in. Lauren, welcome. It's good to see you.

Regarding budgeting for wildfire, hon. member, things haven't changed since last year. We use our base budgeting to get our contracts set up so that we have everything in place for our wildfire season. You're absolutely right; this particular season we don't have a lot of moisture like we had last year. We didn't have a lot of moisture during the winter. As a matter of fact, these last few weeks we've even seen a lot of not only prairie fires but also forest fires. I think we're up about 150 per cent over last year in the number of forest fires and the amount of hectares that have been burned because of low humidity and the low level of moisture that is in the ground.

We know that we're going to have a very difficult season this year. We are prepared for it. That's what the base budgeting does. We go to the sustainability fund when we need extra funding on an emergency basis. It's something that has worked effectively for us. The reason that it has worked effectively is not that we're underfunding or underbudgeting or undervaluing our forests or our forest fire commitments; we just don't know how much is going to be needed. So for us to come here today with an actual budget figure is pretty well impossible, but with the ability that we have with the emergency fund, the sustainability fund, it really works very, very well. We do have the dollars to make sure that we're set up for the season, that we can have the infrastructure in place for the fire season so that we can protect communities and protect people's lives.

When I talk about preparedness, I also have to mention the fact that we're upgrading. The capital infusion that we get this year and in subsequent years will help us with our air tanker bases, which will provide a better service, as well as re-equipping our fleet of air tankers to make sure that we get out to the fires with the best possible equipment. So we welcome that capital infusion as well as the infrastructure on the ground to make sure that we're more efficient and can get out to those fires as quickly as possible.

With regard to education on the causes of fires you wondered about the latest update and the data that was available and posting that on the web. We'll continue to post on the web when information becomes available so that it's made available for Albertans and interested people like yourself. We want to make sure of the education component: again, people taking responsibility for their own backyards, making sure that they don't flick that cigarette onto the ground, making sure that they put out their campfires, making sure that there are burning barrels in municipalities where they live in forested areas, making sure that they abide by fire bans, making sure that when municipalities put fire bans on, we're consistent with their fire bans as well, using proper media outlets like radio and television to let people know about the fire situation and the hazards that are out there.

This last weekend, driving up from the constituency on Saturday night to attend the junior forest wardens annual conference in Leduc, I heard an advertisement on the radio at least five times advising people: "It's a very dry year out there. Please use caution when you're dealing with fire in forested areas. Use caution when you're dealing with your own fire on the dry prairies." That type of thing. It's a resource. It's part of our stewardship. It's a resource that we've got to protect.

The other thing that we do particularly involving communities is our FireSmart program. We continue to get the funds that we need to take that program to communities and to individuals that are close to and live in the forested areas. We're grateful for that because it's a very successful program and we want to continue it. As our forests mature and as we, expanding populations, want to enjoy our forests, we've got to take the measures to protect them as well.

Raising fines is one thing that I hadn't thought of, but it's one of the things that we will look at. Of course, collecting them is another thing, but certainly it's something that we will look at.

Grizzly bears. Have we got the staff in place? Yes. We've been able to maintain the staff that we had last year to continue with the DNA census. We want to make sure that we're dealing with more specifics when dealing with grizzly bears. We also need to make sure that as we go into the future, we have the best science available to make the determination of the estimated number of bears out there and the areas in which they congregate.

I mentioned to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore about the BearSmart program and the education that's required. Yes, people have got to know that bears are in their area, but they also have to know why bears are in their area. Is it because they're leaving garbage out in unprotected garbage bins, or is the landfill not being protected by proper fencing, et cetera? Are there things in the community that bears like to come into because they have this insatiable appetite? Is it all blamed on some of the ecosystem being forested and that type of thing? Last year I had the opportunity to go to the university and talk to a group of people that were doing some bear work. You can't blame the forestry industry for the loss of ecosystem. Even the roads that we travel on, bears come out and eat plants at the side of the road as well. So, again, trying to create that buffer between human and bear conflict. We think that it's a balance we're striving for in the province between our existence and our quality of life and the wildlife, that we like to see, that we like to enjoy, and that people like to have a hunting experience with.

You mentioned the caribou and ad hoc plans. I don't think that they are ad hoc plans. I think the recovery plans that we have in place, that are vetted and looked at by our recovery teams, which have stakeholders from all of the affected areas, are well-planned documents and I believe are very well executed by industry and government and the various stakeholders. We have people in place to check up on those plans, to see how well they're working, and to continue to work on them. Do we do a good enough job communicating that? I would like to think that we do a very good job of communicating that, but, you know, if it's the difference between going out and seeing a caribou or making sure that your young person gets to soccer, maybe the soccer is more important today, that type of thing. They may listen to the soccer announcement before they'll listen to an announcement on whether or not there are enough caribou out there. But it is an important part of our ecosystem, an important part of our province, and we try to find the balance.

That brings me to chronic wasting disease. This answer is for Edmonton-Decore as well as yourself. You talk about the chronic wasting disease and the actions that we're taking to provide that balance along the Saskatchewan border, right from Lloydminster down to Medicine Hat and south into the Cypress area. The criteria that we use for the cull of the deer in that area is part of a national strategy. It's part of a national surveillance that we're a part of.

You talk about chronic wasting disease: where did it come from? Well, it came from Saskatchewan, and ultimately it came from North Dakota. The disease is spread from infected herds in both of those locations. What we're trying to do in using this national strategy is reduce the herds to reduce the incidence of the disease being spread between the wild deer along the border. We find that the closer to the border we get, the more incidents we have of chronic wasting disease. Again, reducing those herds is part of the national strategy to make sure that we can absolutely stop that disease at the border. We need to stop the infection from coming over into Alberta because if it gets a hold in Alberta like it has got a hold in Saskatchewan, if we're not proactive in getting rid of the diseased animals, it will spread not only to the 400,000 deer that we have in this province, but it will also spread to elk populations. If it spreads to those populations, then it will continue to spread, maybe to our domestic populations as well. So that is our way of managing that particular disease: at the border and keeping it there.

Pine beetle. Well, yes, I will provide you with the information that I shared with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. Certainly, nature could help us here in this fight by having a colder winter. It hasn't happened. Is that climate change? I don't know, but the fact is that nature has not co-operated with us with minus 40 degrees, so we've got to do everything we can to stop that beetle at the border.

What we need to do – and this is what I was getting at in my previous answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, so I'm going to continue. Regarding the pine beetle, it's important that we take those shared best practices that B.C. has learned and that we have learned in this last couple of years and all the advance work that we've done and come up with a strategy on how to get rid of this beetle. That's why we're having the pine beetle summit at the end of May. We're making sure that we have all of the information on the table and that we're being proactive with the information to get rid of this beetle.

It's absolutely necessary that we do a number of things on a number of fronts. It's not just identifying and cutting and burning the trees. We also have to take a look at the threat to a mature pine forest because that's the eventual food for the pine beetles that will be available this fly season when they leave their parent tree and go to other trees. We're looking at strategies like cutting sequences for our forestry companies if they have identified pine beetle in their area, and those cutting sequences will be part of our management plans to make sure that the food source for the pine beetle is taken away but at the same time making sure that those cutting sequences are all part of a good management plan. It takes a lot of work to do that.

On softwood lumber, the framework that is put in place, we will continue to work with the industry to define some of the issues that they have. When we go into the legal text based around the framework, is it perfect? No, it's not 100 per cent perfect, but there are some things that are very positive about the framework that's put in place on the softwood. Federal governments have gotten together, both Canada and the United States, and they've decided on this framework.

What it means to Alberta, which only has 7 per cent of the exports, is that it gives us seven years and a two-year extension of certainty in softwood. We had a deal that nobody liked – everybody lived with it, and nobody liked it – where there was a countervail duty put on all of the product going across the border. That duty was held in bank accounts in the United States, and that's something that our industry didn't like. Getting 80 per cent of that back plus 10 per cent of it going to market development and things like disaster relief for Katrina: those will be some positive things that will happen for our industry. Industry has always said that they would like to have as much come back to their industry as possible, but leaving 10 per cent of it on the table is certainly something that they knew might have to happen. Certainly, they would want 100 per cent of it.

The idea of an alternative dispute mechanism being put in place is another positive thing. Rather than having the litigation going on over the border that costs millions and millions of dollars, having an alternative dispute mechanism put in place is another positive thing on the softwood framework. Again, I'll just repeat myself by saying that we will work with our industry to make sure that the legal text looks after their interests as well as we go forward.

While I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, I would like to just talk about a couple of things about integrated land management. This kind of goes off to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. We talk about integrated land management for the future. In my previous conversations, I was talking about some of the policies we had right in place today, but when you talk about integrated land management for the future – and I have read your booklet. I have read it. It's a number of chapters of things that have been done and could be looked at and should be looked at, and we have been doing a lot of those things with our sustainable resource environmental management office. We had said in the year 2005 that we would look at a land-use framework. That was announced in the Speech from the Throne in 2005, and in 2006 we expanded on that. We have set up a sustainable resource environmental management office to develop a framework. The framework will be somewhat different because it will be more policy orientated.

Looking towards tomorrow, the document that has been sent over by the Official Opposition, is basically a number of chapters of what could be done. Well, we're going to be more proactive than that, Mr. Chairman. We're going to go out and we're going to talk to Albertans this year, this spring, about their values. What do they see in the land? What do they see in terms of reducing the footprint, making sure that industry could still work, still thrive, still survive and provide good employment for people, but at the same time how can we do it better? How can we come up with integrated land management? We've talked with municipalities. We've talked with the AAMD and C. We've talked to the AUMA. We'll be going out and talking to urban communities about their values as well. What does it take to make a city a great place to live? How can we deal with the urban sprawl? How can we deal with rural sprawl as well? We'll be having a talk with them about their values.

Then we'll be talking about access management. While we're talking about access management, this spring, within the next week, we're going to be unveiling the access management plan for the Ghost-Waiparous. It's just one of many access management plans that we have across this province. You know, there is lots of criticism about what goes on in the backcountry. Certainly, when you see landscapes that are destroyed and just left for our department to go clean up after or rehabilitate or reclaim, we don't have the resources to do all of that. But, you know, we have 95 per cent of the people that use the backcountry that are really, really good at it, and they like it, and they enjoy it.

I'll get back to access management planning in just a few minutes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A couple of items that I want to bring up today with the hon. minister. What I want to talk about is your goal 2, Alberta forest and forest communities' protection from wildfires. I guess what I want to do first of all is compliment the minister and his staff for the FireSmart program, especially in Grande Cache, and now we're doing quite a bit of work in the town of Hinton. Also, I want to compliment your department for the aspect of co-operation with the national park. We've done a lot of work in there, and we've got everybody onside. So I just wanted to note that about your fire protection.

The other aspect that I was looking at is on your goal 4, "Alberta's forests support a competitive and sustainable forest sector." As we're moving along, I would really like to see us look a lot more at the added value. I know a lot of our forest management agreements have got certain clauses and everything in there that state what they have to do. I think we have to be more imaginative now and get more value out of that. We've got to get away from the old adage of hewer of wood and drawer of water. We've got to really make sure that we work on that.

We also have got to be really concerned and work with communities because when you look at the amount of communities that we have in the forest industry, we've got in the neighbourhood of 50. There are 10 or 12-odd ones that are out there, and that's their main resource, the forest industry, and that's the economic driver, so we've got to really work with them and get some understanding.

I guess the other thing I want to talk about is with your ILM aspects. I know that we've talked a lot about the aspect of integrated management on road systems. I think we've got to be a lot more aggressive with the aspect of the Energy department because in my riding, especially in one area, we've got one road where we've got over 4,000 vehicles a day on that, and that's just an LOC. You know, the average now is about 30-70. Thirty per cent of the road is used by the people that built the road; 70 per cent is by the oil patch. So, you know, it's good that we have that type of usage – I mean, there are road-use agreements and everything – but what I'm saying is that to minimize the footprint in the area, we have to play a stronger role on that, and I would like to see us push that a lot harder.

The third thing I want to talk about: Alberta's forests and forest landscapes support healthy ecosystems and vibrant communities. As we move along and work with the aspect of stewardship, I think we have to get a lot more involved with the aspect of education. We have done that in some areas, but I think we have to get a better understanding and get a lot more people involved, especially our schools so that our young people have an understanding of it. I know that we've done some work on that.

When we come to the mountain pine beetle, I just strongly believe that what we're doing is a good thing. Quite a bit of it is through neglect by our neighbour, by not acting soon enough. I guess we have to really work with the threshold around the aspect of the mountain passes coming into the western part of our province. We have to work with Jasper national park and, of course, Banff national park and work a lot faster and harder on that. I'm just wondering if we're working with the aspects of the forest companies in the area because at some time we might have to do an accelerated cut plan to make sure that we remove the food source from these beetles that are coming through from our neighbouring province.

The last one that I have is on your goal 5, that I just wanted to talk a bit about and question and get a possible answer on a couple of aspects. As I look at page 406, line 3.0.1, I look at what we had as actual in 2004-05, almost $40 million. It was $39,989,000. Then what we had projected for 2005-06 was $45,970,000. So we're looking at about a $5,981,000 increase. But then when we move on to 2006-07, we're looking at $48,743,000, which is only an increase of $2,733,000 over the previous year.

I guess that with your goal on Alberta's fish and wildlife resources and their habitat – healthy, productive, and sustainable – I come to the aspect of the species-at-risk committee and of the scientific subcommittee. As of the end of 2005 we have enacted already 15 recovery plans. Then when you look at the aspect of species that have been considered to the end of the year 2005, we've looked at 46. So the pressure is on on some of these species, and we've done some great work, and I certainly appreciate the efforts that the Scientific Subcommittee have done because they've done a real great job.

I've got to compliment the perseverance and the understanding of the 19 other groups that are on the Endangered Species Conservation Committee because we've had very good attendance, very good interjections. We've always come to a good plan that we submit to the minister, and then of course he gets back to us and lets us know, and that's how we move on to the recovery plans.

So I guess my bottom line on this aspect is that I'd like to have the minister give us some insight. Looking at those figures on page 406, it's hard to decipher what amount we're going to add in there because, as you know, the pressure is on. I guess the other thing is combining that with your goal 3 and goal 5, to get the message out. I know that one of the hon. members from the other side said that, well, you know, all we do is to paperwork. Well, at least we're showing what we've done. We're the envy of all other provinces because we're moving ahead. We publish those reports every other year. It gives people an understanding of what your department is doing to look at this aspect, and we have the great support of a lot of people.

I guess one thing that I'd really like to compliment your staff on is the western blue flag recovery team. It is a peripheral species, and what transpired in southern Alberta is that we found a few colonies of it. Of course, people were reluctant to get involved. Through the team of people in the south, they got some of the people together and the recovery team.

The other thing that they're doing now: they're not doing them in isolation. They're working with other species that we have to get more information or recovery plans on, so they work together on it. The bottom line that we're finding now is that we're finding other people saying: oh, well, I got this on my property. So they're seeing that we're out there and doing it in a progressive way.

I think we're going to be able to move along a lot better on a lot of these species because the people in the recovery team have proven themselves, shown how they can co-operate with the aspect of the farming or ranching industries so that they can move ahead. They're not getting the aspect where they feel, number one, that we're going to expropriate their land. They're working in co-operation to move ahead on that.

So if you could give me some insight on the aspect of funding on that and then any of the other four items that I mentioned in this, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I want to be able to just take a few moments here and provide some answers to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. Thank you very much for the comments on our staff. It's a difficult job when you're in charge of the entire province of Alberta from border to border to border to border with the amount of staff that we have, but we have excellent staff. They are concerned about fish, wildlife. They're concerned about the forest. They're concerned about the ecosystem. They're concerned about sustainability. It's a balance.

You're absolutely right: I believe our FireSmart program is one of those initiatives that tries to minimize the effect that fire would have not only on communities but also on the forest itself and that ecosystem that you talked about.

We also are grateful for the co-operation that we get from our national parks. You mentioned two or three things there about the corridors where the pine beetle would come through and corridors, obviously, for wildfires as well. We get great co-operation from our national parks in dealing with disease and fire as well. B.C. certainly has come to the table, and our parks people on the federal side have come to the table as well. We really enjoy that co-operation that we get because we can share best practices, and that helps us come up with the strategy that we have put in place. They're going to be participating in the pine beetle summit as well. So I'm glad you mentioned the parks.

Forest competitiveness, value-added. Certainly, our contract with Forintek helps us build on the value-added component. Industry itself puts a lot of dollars and energy into value-added, but more importantly they are also taking a look at the product that we have in the forest that can adapt to a marketplace. Then we together have to see how we can take and put that into our annual cuts to make sure that we have the product that can fill that marketplace.

We're working also with the Department of Economic Development and tourism to look at opportunities in the world for forest competitiveness. We think that that's going to help make our industry more viable for the future, recognizing the problems that they're having in the competitiveness, with cheaper workforces in other countries, faster growing trees, the fact that we're a long ways away from a port to get some of that export over there, and those types of things. So those are some of the things that we have to deal with.

Your comment on integrated land management, being aggressive there. We know that we have to be aggressive there, but when you're dealing with integrated land management, you have to plan better. There's a lot of economic development happening. You can't be taking different roads to go to different opportunities. We think better planning with communities, better planning with MDs, better planning with the industry and other stakeholders is necessary. You're right: you can take a road that might be suitable for a logging road, and all of a sudden you've got 4,000 or 5,000 vehicles a day going on that road. Then how do you upgrade it, when do you upgrade it, and for what purpose? So that's part of our better planning.

Forest landscapes and education. You're absolutely right: it's needed. It's part of our aggressive plan in trying to let the people know about the biodiversity that's in the forest. We have a biodiversity program that also involves endangered species. We want to continue with the species at risk, and I have to say that we have probably the best example of how to handle endangered species in our province, probably across Canada. We want to make sure that the work that's being done there continues. Our biodiversity program that we have industry involved with, that we have stakeholders involved with, will also help us continue with that species at risk program and make sure that it continues to be a success.

I want to get back to the wildfire there because you're asking about the increase. The actual increase for wildfire in our base budgeting is a $2 million increase in the wildfire reinsurance program, plus we've put an extra million dollars – and this is on page 406, that you've made reference to – into funding for manpower costs. Of course, we looked at an increase in transferring equipment and inventory purchases to our operating expense as well. That's to make sure that we've got the proper things in the proper place at the proper time to fight wildfires. It's a better use of the dollars.

Then what we have is a .1 per cent increase for the Hinton Training Centre. I have to say that that training centre just does an excellent job in terms of preparing the people that go out into the forests, put their lives in danger to protect not only the resource but also the communities: everything from helitack operations, who are trained right there at Hinton, as well as our guardians, who are trained there and who will go out and help educate people and provide more of a presence in the backcountry.

Of course, we also have a .1 per cent increase for our junior forest wardens and junior forest rangers in the province because it's the young people we need to invest in to make sure that they're well aware of what's going on in the forest.

So I hope that those kinds of answers are the type of thing that you were looking forward to, and I'll wait for the next one, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to ask the minister some specific questions again that I didn't have probably the chance to ask the first go-around with regard to some of the timber lot questions.

I might as well go through here. Is the minister going to continue to convert community timber permits into commercial timber permits when permit holders, in fact, no longer meet the requirements? If the minister is aware of this loophole, when will he close it up?

The other one was specifically with regard to the interim Métis harvesting agreement. The minister of aboriginal affairs has always said that it's a cross-ministry development with regard to this signing initiative between aboriginal affairs, Sustainable Resource Development, and of course Justice. What, in fact, did your particular ministry have to do with regard to that particular agreement? When we talk about the Alberta Fish and Game Association, those particular members were obviously definitely opposed to that particular piece, so I'm not sure if the agreement was signed after or before consultation had even begun with that group. With this new piece that's going to be going out and new consultations that are going to be taking place, how much is your department going to play in that particular role and how much consultation will be given to, in fact, the Alberta Fish and Game Association organization? That's one of the specifics there.

The other one, just to make sure that I get back to the woodlot piece, is the microscale operators. Are you going to make sure that they continue to play an important role with the economic viability of rural areas and ensure that some of the local suppliers are able to produce and maintain those jobs in that market? In fact, if one of the big producers say that they cannot produce in that area and make a go of it, they want to in fact relocate some of their operations such as in Hines Creek, will there be some consideration for the local mills to be able to take over some of the FMAs in that area then?

Going on to confined feedlot operations. Out of the 50 staff that the NRCB currently has right now, how many are inspectors for confined feedlots? How many of these staff make unannounced visits just to ensure that the amount that the feedlot originally said they were going to be operating under is in fact checked out in an unannounced inspection to ensure that they are keeping up to what the original permit is for?

Another piece here, then, is the reforestation. How many forest management units and oil and gas operators are actually harvesting more timber than the timber companies? I believe I touched on that somewhat. We talked about how much they do cut out for the seismic lines to be able to put down some of the compressor stations and that. Is that taken into account under the annual allowable cuts for some of the areas there?

So those are some specifics right there. I'll let you answer that, hopefully within the allotted time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much. Now, I've got a couple of things to answer from your previous and certainly from this last little bit that you asked a few questions on. In the time remaining I hope I can get it all done.

Métis harvesting. It is an interim agreement, and our role in that interim agreement is to make sure that we monitor the resource and do the enforcement. There have been some questions around the Métis harvesting. Certainly, when I go to Fish and Game Association dinners and that type of thing, on a regular basis there is some talk about whether the interim agreement would ever be made permanent. The government has gone ahead with an analysis of the interim agreement and, as was announced this last week, is looking at a process by which we can renegotiate. Our role will continue to be in providing information to the renegotiating team about the monitoring and our particular role in making sure that conservation is paramount. So that remains to be seen for the upcoming year, how that renegotiation goes, but we still have an interim agreement, and our role will still be to make sure that we monitor and fulfill the obligations of the interim agreement.

When it comes to forestry and the permits for smaller operators, there's no doubt that there's some consolidation going on there. There's no doubt that some of the commercial timber permits are made available to some of the smaller operators and the woodlot operators. There is some consolidation going on, and we've tried our best to make sure that we accommodate some consolidation. I know that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead had a number of small operators, and they've consolidated themselves to get some tenure. They think that that's some security for them. We know that in the province we have some very small operators, we have some medium operators, and then we have some very large, corporate operators. It's all part of our forest industry, what makes Alberta a great place to be able to live and certainly to work. If there is a problem, if there is a loophole, we'll certainly check into that, and I will get back to you personally on that one.

Another area that you had earlier talked about with the smaller guys was some secondary manufacturing operations and that type of thing. Certainly, we see a great opportunity in value-added as we pursue that, as I was speaking with the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, a great opportunity for smaller operators to fit into that. We see an excellent opportunity. Of course, the softwood lumber framework helps deal with the opportunity for secondary manufacturers to thrive in that marketplace as well.

Confined feeding operations. As you know and as I shared with you on a couple of occasions, what we've done is that we've gone through a search for a chair and a CEO for the operations part, for the NRCB, and those announcements will be made very shortly. On the operations side I believe that we have about 52 staff. If that's different, I will also let you know, but the last count that we had across this province dealing with applications, dealing with making sure that the regulations were looked at, dealing with enforcement and that type of thing, and dealing with people that make inquiries and providing education about confined feeding operations – those staff are in place to do that.

In terms of timber use on outlines and that type of thing, as I said, we have a much smaller problem there. Forest companies and oil companies are getting together to make sure that they use all the timber. No longer do they do a cutline and take the timber and burn it at the side of the road. It's too valuable a commodity. So that is being done today.

You talked about fishing derbies, and that's a very good point. We'll now put a licence out for fishing derbies. The small fishing derbies of 25 people or less will have a minimal fee. We want to make sure that it gives us an opportunity to know where a fishing derby is and how big or how small it is. If you get to a larger fishing derby – and they're all going to be made available to Alberta residents – a licence for that will take into consideration the size of the derby. We want to make sure that we give the people information about catch and release. A large fishing derby might be hard on the resource, but that'll give us an idea of whether or not the resources in that lake can actually stand that kind of a fishing derby. It's not to restrict anybody; it's just to give us an opportunity to provide nonprofit groups with the ability to have their fundraiser but at the same time protect the resource.

Particularly, I want to refer to the fishing revitalization, the extra million dollars on page 406 for fishery management revitalization. That's mostly for the walleye initiative that we've put forward. We're taking Alberta eggs and turning them into young fish, and then we're going to be opening up our hatchery in Cold Lake, making sure that we have walleye fisheries available. We're going to try and put together a pilot project in four lakes – Wolf Lake, Pigeon Lake, that you mentioned, Lac Ste. Anne, and Newell Lake – and try a tag system. The walleye is a much sought-after fish. You put the walleye into the lake and it can get fished out very quickly, so we want to make sure that more Albertans get an opportunity to go after this much sought-after fish. Therefore, we're looking at this tag system not to penalize anybody but to give more people an opportunity. It's part of our revitalization.

Now, I believe I've answered all of your questions. I just want to talk about the land-use framework in summing up here. There is $2 million this year for additional land management activities and, of course, $2 million for improved land information systems. This will help us set the stage after we do the consultation with Albertans. There's no sense in doing the consultation with Albertans and finding out what their values are if you don't already know what's happening on the land and having sort of an inventory of that. We're going ahead with this very strategic plan so that we know what's happening on the land today and we can adapt it to take into consideration Albertans' values and what we see as policy for the future in dealing with the issue that we talked about earlier of integrated land management, growing populations, access management, and conservation and preservation.

It has to come forward in a complete, sort of global perspective if I can say that. Of course, we're going to have competing interest; we know that. But as we go forward over the next few years, we think that we've got the dollars in place to deal with a proper land-use framework that will take into account not only what's happening in other jurisdictions but also what's happening on this unique landscape of Alberta, our busy landscape. We want to come up with an Alberta solution to land use in the future.

The Alberta solution is one that is unlike any jurisdiction across Canada or any jurisdiction across the United States. We have high use of oil and gas. The forestry industry is doing very, very well here, and of course the people using the backcountry and access management. So we have to work with our partners to make sure that that goes forward in a positive way, the way that Albertans want, and the policies would be put in place to reflect that.

One of the things that I've mentioned today so many times is partnerships. I was referring to this earlier with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. One of the partnerships that we have that is really starting to take shape is our partnership with the off-highway vehicle community. It is an industry here in Alberta not only in the summertime with ATVs but also in the wintertime with snowmobiles. We're now having industry associations. We've had discussions with the industry to talk about safety for ATVs and doing it in a controlled way, not giving the impression that they can go down the middle of a stream and that being sort of the fun part of it. You even see them coming up with brochures now of ATVs and fathers and sons on a trail, on a managed trail, on a designated trail, and that's what we need to get to. You talked earlier about designated areas. This is what we need to do in terms of access management: make sure that we have people going on trails.

The industry itself is going to be one of our partners in coming up with access management and trail systems that will work. We have local clubs who are responsible for putting together a lot of the trails that we have in use today, and they have participated heavily in our access management plans. Do they agree on absolutely everything that comes forward? No, because they have had access to the backcountry, and then when you go ahead and designate some trails, they feel like they've been restricted.

You know, as I said earlier, 95 per cent of the people that are out there are very responsible. They've gotten together in their local clubs, and they've put out brochures. They work with our Department of SRD to promote the respect the land initiative. It's an educational initiative that we have. So they work very, very closely with us to let their riders and their membership know that they have to take the responsibility and take the lead on making sure that they watch out for wildlife, that they go into safe areas, that they stay on well-defined trails, that they go across bridges and not through water courses.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Title: Wednesday, May 3, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/05/03

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Justice

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to present the budget estimates for Alberta Justice and the Attorney General.

Before I begin, however, I wish to introduce members of the executive management committee and senior officials who are attending here tonight. These are folks who in the area of justice make the government look good, make the ministry look good, and, as a result of all of that, make me look good. My eyesight is such that you all look the same from down here, but I'm pretty sure that these are the folks that are there: Terry Matchett, deputy minister; Nolan Steed, assistant deputy minister of legal services; Ken Tjosvold, assistant deputy minister of criminal justice; Gerald Lamoureux, executive director, court services, planning and business services; Dan Mercer, assistant deputy minister of strategic services; Shawkat Sabur, senior financial officer; Sylvia Church, manager of business planning in strategic services; Manuel da Costa, executive director of the maintenance enforcement program; Sharon Lepetich, senior adviser to the deputy minister; and Mark Cooper, who is director of communications. Also from my office are Andrea Hennig and Jeremy Chorney.

Before I make my comments, I thought that I should say to the hon. members opposite that the hockey game is on. You do have an opportunity to listen to my comments and accept that what I have to say is correct and cut the estimates short by about two periods. We can take a little adjournment between, say, 8:20 and 10 o'clock, watch a little hockey, come back and do some legislation. What's important: you have to listen up to what I say here so that you know that I'm answering all of your questions in my initial comments. [interjections] Only with the consent of the opposition. We wouldn't want to be accused of being oppressive here.

The business plan guides the overall direction and sets the goals for the ministry on how to meet our vision and mission. Our vision: "A fair and safe society supported by a trusted justice system." Our mission is to protect the rights of all individuals in Alberta and advance the interests of society by fostering:

- Safe communities
- Access to justice
- Respect for the law
- Understanding of and confidence in the justice system
- The legal foundation for social cohesion and economic prosperity.

The budget supports the direction laid out in the business plan by funding initiatives that meet our goals. Briefly, the five goals of the ministry are as follows. Goal 1 is to "promote safe communities in Alberta." Goal 2 is to "promote a fair and accessible civil and criminal justice system." Goal 3 is to "provide access to justice services for Albertans in need." Goal 4 is to "improve [knowledge] of and confidence in the justice system." Goal 5 is to "assist government ministries to achieve their objectives through provision of effective legal and related strategic services."

Alberta Justice has identified a fair and accessible civil and criminal justice system as one of its goals. Our objective is to make using the justice system easier, more understandable, and more user friendly for Albertans when they need it. We also must ensure that the system is working effectively. A growing population and economy in our province have placed increased demands on the justice system. I'm pleased that the department is slated to receive an increase in its budget this year to respond to those demands.

The Alberta Justice and Attorney General budget to be voted on for the 2006-2007 fiscal year is $342 million, an increase of $56 million, or 19.6 per cent, over the 2005-2006 forecast. Of this, $35 million is for program expenses, and $21 million is for capital investment. This new funding will make communities safer and give Albertans quicker, easier access to the justice system. Some of this new funding is aimed at shortening lead times to trial and responding to an anticipated rise in cases due to an increase in police resources.

I'll begin this evening by providing you with some highlights of initiatives we are undertaking this year with the new funding we have been allocated in this budget. You'll see how these link to our goals in the business plan, and I'd be pleased to address any questions you may have at the appropriate time.

I'll begin with initiatives that come under our court services division. The overall purpose of court services is to promote fair and equitable access to the justice system for all Albertans, which aligns with goal 2 in our business plan. This year's budget for the division is $143.9 million, which is an increase of $10.2 million, or 7.6 per cent, over the past year.

The government's commitment to safer communities resulted in Budget 2005 funding that added nearly 200 police officers through the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security. These officers are fighting organized crime, Internet crime, illicit drugs, and child exploitation as well as providing additional policing for rural Alberta. Increased policing increases demand on the courts. Alberta's Provincial Court is experiencing significant workload pressures, and lead times continue to rise in some locations of the province. Because of the increased complexity of the cases before the court, trials are taking longer, which adds to the backlog of cases.

The average number of trials scheduled has also increased dramatically in some parts of the province. Compared to February 2005, the average number of trials scheduled has increased by 6.4 per cent province-wide. In communities in the Calgary area the increase is 36.9 per cent, and the regional courts have increased by 19.6 per cent. More judges and court staff are needed to help ease these pressures.

Mr. Chairman, $4.9 million will go towards appointing six additional Provincial Court judges, hiring their 18 support staff as well as hiring 34 front-line court staff across Alberta. This will improve lead times, handle an increasing workload, and provide improved services to the public and the judiciary. Front-line court staff will help alleviate current pressures in Alberta's courts. These positions are required to maintain adequate courtroom and counter service levels to the public and the judiciary. This funding will allow the courts to operate more effectively and provide Albertans with improved service.

One of the key initiatives this budget supports is new funding for family justice services. In 2006-2007 $1.4 million has been allocated to expand services to families going through breakup. The first step of the family justice strategy was the proclamation of the Family Law Act last fall. The Family Law Act is part of a larger strategy to encourage people to resolve family problems in a more constructive way. The new funding for family justice services will support that strategy by providing more dollars for things such as information and assistance to help people through the court process, mediation to help with parenting issues, education sessions about communicating and parenting after separation, and helping people get information and resolve child and spousal support disputes. These services help families understand and resolve issues and disputes relating to coparenting and child and spousal support.

The goal is to be supportive of individual family needs and promote collaboration between parents so that they take into consideration the best interests of their children. The breakup of a family is obviously a very difficult time for everyone involved. By improving access to these services, handling the necessary legal process will be easier, faster, and less confusing.

In 2006-2007 about 20 new staff will be hired in regions of the province where in the past services have been more limited. The new funding means that we can enhance our out-of-court dispute resolution services, including family mediation. Mediation helps separated parents come to an agreement regarding the parenting of their children in a less confrontational manner than appearing in court. We've had a great deal of success using these approaches in projects throughout the province.

The new funding will also allow us to strengthen existing services and expand them to other communities in the province. Mediation services continue to be expanded to reduce travel and wait time for those who want this service. In 2005-2006 we hired five family court counsellors across the province, and in 2006-2007 we're hiring two more, one in Hinton and one in High Prairie. We've also hired four additional staff to prepare court orders so that people in Provincial Court receive their orders on the same day. We'll be hiring four more staff for that purpose in this year.

The case-flow conference program expanded to Calgary in April, where two case-flow conference co-ordinators will be hired. The program provides an alternative to a docket appearance before a judge in Provincial Court when an applicant files a claim for a parenting order, a guardianship order, a contract order, or an order to enforce time with a child under the Family Law Act. Since October 2001 a pilot project in Edmonton Provincial Court has reduced docket appearances in family court by 58 per cent. When the applicant does not have a lawyer, cases are automatically referred to the case-flow conference program. The case-flow conference provides an opportunity for discussion of the issues in a private, less formal atmosphere than a courtroom. Parties are provided information regarding resources available to assist them in resolving their dispute, or alternatively claims may be finalized if the parties are consenting to the terms of orders.

More staff has also been hired for the Family Law Information Centre to assist with child support calculations and to provide self-help booklets and other legal information for self-represented and unrepresented litigants. The majority of these positions will be in rural Alberta, where this service has not been available in the past.

Another service for families going through breakup is the parenting after separation seminar. These seminars, that provide information to parents who are breaking up, are being expanded to more Alberta communities. As access to family justice services is improved, the time and cost to families in reaching a resolution to their issues is reduced, and that makes the justice system better.

The number of self-represented and unrepresented litigants in Alberta courts is increasing, most commonly in family and civil claims court matters. Self-represented and unrepresented litigants have a significant impact on the day-to-day operations of the courts. They often do not have enough knowledge to adequately represent themselves in court. As a result judges and court staff spend time assisting self-represented litigants, which is an inefficient use of the court's time. To provide services and information for self-represented and unrepresented litigants, $720,000 has been added to this year's budget.

The civil mediation program will receive $871,000 to expand services to more communities outside Calgary and Edmonton. This program complements existing dispute resolution process, including the traditional court process. Mediation works, whether it's for family law or civil law matters. It gives people with disputes a way to work out a solution for themselves. Increased mediation means that more civil disputes can potentially be resolved without going to court, and that means that judicial and legal resources can be used where they are most needed.

Jurors play an essential role in the justice system and maintaining safe communities in Alberta. Albertans make a necessary and valuable contribution to our justice system by agreeing to appear and serve as jurors. To compensate Albertans for some of the wages they may lose by sitting on a jury, $280,000 has been allocated to increase the daily fees and expenses paid to the jurors.

The major information systems that support the Alberta courts and prosecution service are dated and need to be upgraded to meet the standards and needs of court administrators, Crown prosecutors, the judiciary, and ultimately our public. One million has been allocated to identify the business requirements, including the business case and strategy for development of a comprehensive information management system. It's a multi-year project that will require additional funding as we move forward with this important initiative. This system will increase the efficiency of the court process and enhance the service provided to Albertans.

I now move to the criminal justice area of the ministry. The overall purpose of the criminal justice division is to promote safe communities in Alberta by effectively conducting criminal prosecutions and striving for just outcomes, which aligns with goal 1 of our business plan. This year's budget for criminal justice is $50.1 million, 6.4 million of which is in new funding. A priority for Alberta Justice is a fair and accessible criminal justice system. It makes sense that a functioning justice system should have adequate resources to do the job.

Mr. Chairman, the 2003 national statistics show that Alberta has the second highest prosecutorial caseload in the country at 358 cases per prosecutor. In 2005 the Alberta government committed to safer communities through the greatest single-year increase in rural and organized crime policing that this province has seen in 20 years. Additional Crown prosecutors and support staff are required to effectively prosecute charges generated by additional police officers on our streets. I'm pleased that Alberta Justice will be adding to the prosecution service significantly this year with 20 prosecutors and 22 support staff. Many of the prosecutors will specialize in areas such as family violence, child exploitation, organized crime, and economic crime. There will be five new family violence prosecutors, four new prosecutors in the integrated child exploitation unit, also known as ICE, four new prosecutors in the integrated response to organized crime, also known as IROC, one new prosecutor in the integrated market enforcement team, also known as IMET, and one prosecutor in the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative, also known as ARTAMI, as well as general prosecutors.

Organized crime and Internet crime are increasing in Alberta. For example, in 2000 Alberta had three Internet child pornography cases before the courts. There are now about 90. Successful organized crime and cybercrime prosecutions depend on prosecutors being knowledgeable and available to work with police at an early stage in the investigation. Cases are increasingly complex and require specialized knowledge and a consistent approach to prosecute effectively.

In 2005 Edmonton experienced 38 homicides. This was almost double the 1999 to 2005 average of about 22 homicides per year. Many of these homicides arise from organized crime and drug-related activity. Organized crime is heavily involved in identity theft and mortgage fraud, two of the fastest growing types of economic crime in Canada. A recent W-Five documentary referred to Alberta, unfortunately, as the mortgage fraud capital of Canada. New police resources will assist in addressing these sophisticated crimes, and Justice will be there to assist the police in investigations and effectively prosecuting the resulting charges.

Sadly, Alberta continues to have an unacceptably high rate of family violence. Alberta Justice takes family violence very seriously and is committed to providing safe communities for all Albertans, and that includes freedom from violence within our homes. We need to provide victims and witnesses with services as soon as possible and protect them from further abuse. We also need to ensure appropriate sentencing of perpetrators to reduce the likelihood of them reoffending. Alberta Justice is involved in a number of initiatives to help combat family violence. For example, domestic violence courts have been opened in Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Medicine Hat, and most recently Fort McMurray. These courts allow for charges to be dealt with quickly by dedicated prosecutors and provide the best opportunity to help victims and, where appropriate, direct offenders to court-ordered counselling.

In this year's budget we're allocating $935,000 in new funding to hire Crown prosecutors and support staff who specialize in family violence. Domestic violence courts with specialized Crown prosecutors work with the provincial family violence treatment program framework. The framework is a cross-government initiative that's designed to provide co-ordinated and integrated assessment, treatment, rehabilitation, and follow-up services to victims and perpetrators of family violence. Linking government with community services improves our ability to deal with domestic violence cases more quickly and effectively. Albertans who are dealing with family violence need help, and they need it as soon as we can possibly provide it. I'm optimistic that this new funding will contribute to breaking the cycle of family violence and protect the safety and security of children, families, and our communities.

The Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative is intended to reduce and manage the risk in high-risk family violence and stalking cases, ultimately resulting in fewer stalking situations, injuries, and family violence related deaths in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege for me to stand up and respond in this budget discussion on the Department of Justice. I commend the hon. minister for the business plan, and I commend the department for a lot of good ideas. Funding increased by more than $35 million from last year, an 11.2 per cent increase, and it seems like a lot of the money is going to really good ideas: family violence, more judges, more Crown prosecutors, and so on.

I'll follow the business plan with my remarks, starting with the first one: "promote safe communities in Alberta." I'm going to start with a topic which the hon. minister didn't mention, but it's covered in 1.2 under the strategies of goal 1; namely, having to do with traffic safety, improving road safety in Alberta. I read very carefully the McDermid report, and the statistics are just simply staggering. The McDermid report was issued in June 2004. It states that "3,875 people died on Alberta roads between 1992 and 2002" and "traffic crashes take six times more lives than homicides." Despite all of our emphasis in terms of dealing with crime in our criminal justice system, it's just unbelievable the number of lives that are lost on our highways. "The societal cost of traffic collisions . . . is estimated at close to $4.7 billion in 2002." So adding all of the costs together – health care costs, property losses – the economic cost to Canadians in general "is as high as $25 billion a year."

After having met with stakeholders and having reviewed the Alberta government's approach and the basic best practices of other countries and provinces, the report focused on the fact that, in Mr. McDermid's opinion, there's a lack of overall leadership here in Alberta. We need a plan. We need some kind of cross-ministry initiative or delegating of responsibility to a single ministry. I guess my question to the minister is: what is the involvement of the Department of Justice in working with the other departments to carry this important, important topic along? Are there a lot of cross-ministry initiatives going on? The McDermid report listed a whole lot of things that could be done in terms of various committees that could be formed: a ministerial leadership committee, a deputy ministers' committee, a multisector advisory group, a single office for road safety, and so on. I don't know to what extent any of these things have been adopted.

It's interesting that the report also mentions the whole question of funding. We usually think that, well, you can't just throw money at everything. But, as a matter of fact, it gives an example of a state in Australia where there was a concerted effort to put money, a big chunk of money, $20 million, into dealing with road safety, and it did make a difference. It really did make a difference. I think that's what Albertans are looking for here in this province. So that's the first point I want to make.

Now, going on to the very next point in the business plan, 1.3. In this point it's suggested that the ministry wants to "enhance the capacity of the Prosecution Service to align with increasing police resources to prosecute serious and violent crime to the fullest extent." While this is an admirable and needed goal, it seems to me that it's pointless if those charged and convicted with serious crimes like drug offences, violent crime, and especially child exploitation and abuse crime are being handed light sentences due to harsh conditions at the remand centres. I go back to the questions that I asked the hon. minister in this House some weeks ago, in particular 2 to 1 or 3 to 1 sentencing, as happened recently with a convicted heroin dealer. What is the minister going to do to get rid of this practice? I mean, it's a tremendous problem given the conditions at all the remand centres. I don't know what judges can do, but certainly something has to be done. I think it's a serious threat to the public safety of our communities if offenders who commit such serious crimes are coming back into the community much earlier than perhaps they should.

Now, moving on to the next point in the business plan – namely, focusing on the courts – the goal of promoting "a fair and accessible civil and criminal justice system." I think the last time I talked about this business plan, I spent a lot of time focusing on the fact that so much talk is focused on getting tough, having tougher sentencing, even though the evidence provided by criminologists seems to be conclusive that incarceration for the traditional reasons such as rehabilitation and deterrence simply doesn't work.

The current emphasis of the federal government and the Alberta government on increasing mandatory minimum penalties for violent crimes assumes that serious violent crimes are the result of rational calculation, weighing the costs and benefits of the crime: will I get two years or five years or 10 years? As a matter of fact, as criminologists point out, most violent crimes arise out of conflictual and highly stressful situations and often involve a high use of alcohol and/or drugs. There's a recent American survey that was published in the paper just a few days ago that discovered that most people, including criminals, are pretty ignorant about the criminal justice system and what the penalties are for various crimes. So you can make laws tougher and sentences tougher, but if perceptions do not change, then deterrents simply won't work. In my philosophy and approach to crime it's preferable to invest most of our money in crime prevention, dealing with the social determinants of crime rather than more money into prisons, but that doesn't seem to be the way that this country is going.

I am impressed by the business plan of the Department of Justice because of its emphasis on alternative sentencing approaches, more approaches that deal with restorative justice. The hon. minister mentioned a number of examples of mediation programs, mediation programs with families, which is really, really important. I'm just looking at 2.3 of the business plan on page 295: "Develop, evaluate, improve and co-ordinate mediation and other dispute resolution initiatives." I think that's great. If we look at the estimates, 2.2.4 and 2.3.4 on page 332, we notice that Calgary civil mediation and Edmonton civil mediation show a slight increase from last year's forecast. Calgary received a $40,000 increase, and Edmonton received $40,000. Mind you, those budget items are small compared to a lot of the other budget items, and it raises the question of whether there is enough money going into mediation programs.

I had the privilege of meeting a young woman in Lethbridge and discussing the mediation program there that's sponsored through Queen's Bench. I understand that it's a pilot project. Certainly, a program like that saves money in terms of the courts because a lot of people have their problems dealt with through the use of a mediator and never have to get to court. I understand that the mediators are actually paid under contract with the clients, but there needs to be money to cover supervision and also support staff. I can't determine how much of the budget for the Lethbridge court is going to mediation. The hon. minister mentioned regional civil mediation and the tremendous increase there in terms of money, going from $267,000 to $748,000, and I think that's to be applauded because certainly we need to have people out in rural areas helping with mediation.

[Dr. Brown in the chair]

Now, just moving on to the next section, number 3: "Provide access to justice services for Albertans in need." There is a reference on 3.5: "In coordination with Seniors and Community Supports, review all submissions from the public and feedback from the stakeholder focus groups and draft a revised Dependent Adults Act." That's a process that's ongoing right now, I think, but I wonder: what is the involvement and what is the contribution of Alberta Justice to this process? The Dependent Adults Act deals with the important area of care for people whose illness or injury leaves them incapable of making their own decisions. The act covers the role of the public guardian and trustee, and it's extremely important.

I have a case in my riding. It's similar to the Terri Schiavo case in Florida. In this case a young wife suffered a stroke, leaving her in a comatose state and under the care of the public guardian. Her husband, who is many years older, has had many grievances about the way she is being cared for, but he's been frustrated time and time again because he doesn't know how he can have an impact on the situation. There is a lack of mechanisms through which he can report what he considers to be abuse. Whether it is or not, he just doesn't know what to do. He could of course go to court, but he is not a wealthy man. He doesn't have much money. The only way he can challenge the authority of the public guardian seems to be through the courts. But, not having enough money, it doesn't provide an option for him.

This raises a serious issue about the Dependent Adults Act and other acts which are similar, such as the Powers of Attorney Act, the Mental Health Act, the Protection Against Family Violence Act, and Protection for Persons in Care Act. There are inadequate monitoring mechanisms in place to prevent or detect abuse, there are limited mechanisms for reporting abuse, and there are no clear guidelines with real clout for intervention where abuse is suspected. In most provinces appeals can be made to public authorities and there is an investigation and something is done, but here in Alberta the philosophy seems to be that the government should play a limited and minimalist role, leaving everything to the individual to do his or her own investigation and then take it to court and let the judge decide. Everything focuses on the individual making the complaint utilizing his or her own resources, rather than on the public responsibility, the public obligation to care for these people who obviously need our care.

I hope Alberta Justice is going to make a good contribution to revising the Dependent Adults Act and give it more clout, and maybe that'll lead to looking at all the other acts, too, that they would be coming up to a level which I think we need them at in terms of really having teeth so that investigations can really take place.

Let me mention one of those acts again and emphasize it: the Mental Health Act. This is Mental Health Week. I know that there's no mention of the Mental Health Act in the business plans of the Justice department, but really this week is Mental Health Week, and my heart goes out to men and women in our community who struggle with mental illness.

The relationship between crime and mental illness is quite challenging and complex. I have visited a man in prison who is there for a serious offence, who in my view clearly is suffering from mental illness. He has paranoia. He has illusions of grandeur. You only need to talk to him for a little while – I'm no psychiatrist – and you realize what kind of problems he has. But while in prison he has no treatment, and he will be out soon. So how is society protected when such a person comes out of prison without having any treatment for mental illness?

I have another constituent who did not actually harm anyone, but he threatened to do so because he wrote threatening letters. He ended up in Alberta Hospital for a number of years. Now he's living in the community, and he's placed under the burden of appearing on a regular basis for his medication, and he has to appear before a review board on a regular basis. The review board bases its judgment entirely on the advice of his psychiatrists. This young man has no relatives or no advocates who can speak on his behalf. I have read the transcripts of his coming before the review board. He does his best to defend himself, but the medication that he has to take has a debilitating effect on him, and he's not able to pursue a normal life. My heart goes out to him. He doesn't have anybody, a patient advocate, who can be there for him.

So I guess my question is to the Minister of Justice. I really applaud the effort to have so many special prosecutors focusing on things like family violence and the tremendous effort to focus on family violence in this province. That's really, really commendable. Then, all the other things that you mentioned. One could also talk about specialized drug courts, specialized mental health courts. To what extent are prosecutors and lawyers trained to deal with mental health?

Howard Sapers, who is a former MLA in this House and is now the ombudsman for prisoners in Ottawa, his last report stated that at least 15 per cent of inmates in our prisons are suffering from mental illness. I think that more emphasis has to go into this area of dealing with mental illness problems. There are lots of other points that I could raise, and maybe I can come back to them later if I can figure out where all my notes are.

Lastly, I just wanted mention that there's a fatality inquiry. There's a new fatality inquiry report on Kyle Young that's just out, a 96-page report with a whole series of recommendations. I appreciate on the website of the Ministry of Justice a very helpful answering of questions about fatality inquiries, what cases go before the Fatality Review Board, who calls a public fatality inquiry, what happens at a public fatality inquiry, and how one can obtain a report of a fatality inquiry. One question that's not mentioned there which I think is all important is: who follows up on the recommendations of a fatality inquiry?

The fatality inquiry reports go to the Minister of Justice. Is there a process of reporting of compliance with the recommendations? Is there an obligation of departments to report back to the Department of Justice on what they are doing to comply with recommendations? Would Alberta Justice – for example, in the case of the Kyle Young fatality inquiry – be prepared to work with the Solicitor General to make sure that some of those recommendations are carried out? I wasn't sure in terms of the actual department who handles fatality inquiries. Is that in the deputy minister's office? Is that under strategic studies? It's difficult from over here to figure out where everything is happening.

Those are some of the areas that I would like to explore and hear some response about, but in general I'm very pleased. I think that the government is channelling the funds into proper things that really need to be attended to.

One question – I think you alluded to it – in terms of wait times for trial. There are more Crown prosecutors. There are five new judges. Will this actually mean, then, that we can expect a shorter time between being charged and the first inquiry and then between the inquiry and the trial? Is the government planning to adopt some guidelines? Other provinces have adopted specific time guidelines, insisting that those time strictures be followed. It seems that Alberta is not quite willing to go that far, leaving it more open to the discretion of the judges working with the prosecutors and defence lawyers and so on. I wasn't clear exactly what the direction of Alberta Justice is on that.

Those are my questions for the moment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. minister, I've been informed that the score in the game is 2-nothing for Anaheim.

Mr. Stevens: I'm going to fight back the tears to carry on this evening.

Thank you, hon. member, for your comments and your questions. I'll attempt to address many of them orally, but to the extent that I don't, we'll review the transcript and provide written response later, and that will be true of all hon. members who make comment and ask a question this evening.

I think that before I get into the questions per se, the speaking notes that I was provided with for this evening were more extensive than the first 20 minutes, so what I'm going to do is just start by finishing off on that because there is some very good information here that I think that you will appreciate hearing. I left off describing in very general terms ARTAMI.

ARTAMI is one of only two such initiatives in Canada. The other is part of the Ontario Provincial Police service, where there hasn't been a single domestic violence related fatality in cases referred to that unit in the 11 years that it's been operational, so the statistics are fabulous. These efforts demonstrate that intervention can make a real difference in preventing domestic violence fatalities.

Here in Alberta ARTAMI will use a collaborative and co-ordinated team approach, with police, Crown prosecutors, a family law lawyer, and mental health experts working together to add a dimension of threat assessment expertise. ARTAMI will assess threats, manage victim safety, and implement suspect mitigation strategies.

This year ARTAMI will be funded with $300,000 from the Justice budget and $1.7 million from Solicitor General and Public Security. This $2 million will help to better co-ordinate police, legal, mental health, and other experts in assessing threats, managing victim safety, and finding ways to prevent family violence and stalking-related deaths. Mr. Chairman, I'm confident that the new additions to the prosecution service will advance the government's goal of promoting safer communities.

The civil law branch of the ministry provides effective legal and related services to government and other ministries, which aligns with goal 5 in the business plan, and the budget for civil law is almost $25.4 million for this year. Civil lawyers in the department provide the important role of giving advice and representing the government on a wide range of issues. They assist in drafting government public bills, provide advice on matters ranging from legislative policy to the Constitution to aboriginal law. They provide legal services to all government ministries on matters before the courts and tribunals.

Alberta Justice helps to provide for another important service to Albertans, and that is the support for legal aid. This year's budget to support legal aid is $43.2 million, which is an increase from the past year of more than $12 million. The increase in funding will help legal aid address many of the funding pressures it currently faces from increased demand and increased operating costs. Providing a service and access to justice for people who need legal aid is crucial work. Legal aid is not free, not for the client and not for us. With increased case complexity legal aid is getting more costly to provide.

In addition to my ministry's increased funding for legal aid, more federal funding for legal aid is necessary. Justice ministers across the country have requested that the federal government come to the table with substantial new dollars for legal aid.

Mr. Chairman, I'd now like to turn to this year's budget for staff in the Department of Justice. Alberta Justice is a manpower department, employing many highly trained individuals. The services Justice provides are heavily dependent on the knowledge and skills of its staff. The Department of Justice prosecutors, lawyers, trust officers, court staff, and maintenance enforcement program staff are important to the functioning of the justice system. Justice used about 68 per cent of its ministry budget on staffing in 2004-2005. By way of comparison, the percentage of the budget used for manpower in a department like Infrastructure and Transportation is relatively small, at 3.6 per cent for the same year, because the bulk of its money funds building projects. Last year Justice had the third-largest number of staff within government departments. This year it will rely on its 2,506 employees to provide services directly to Albertans. This means that Justice is disproportionately affected by salary increases. In this budget there is a $7.6 million increase from across-the-board salary, benefits, and settlements.

Funding of $22.8 million has also been allocated to address the ministry's capital requirements in the year 2006-2007 budget. The majority of this funding, $18.9 million, will be used to install the technical infrastructure and equipment needed in the Calgary Courts Centre to provide electronic evidence, including video, audio, and computer.

Each courtroom will have one of four levels of technology. All courtrooms will have standard technology, including digital recording, audio amplification, internet connections, and assistive listening devices. In addition to the standard courtroom technology, some courtrooms will be equipped with video conferencing technology. Ten mobile digital presentation technology carts will be shared between the courtrooms. These carts contain a document camera, DVD/VCR player, and video and audio input from the presenter's computer. Finally, some courtrooms, including the large trial and high-security courtrooms, will have a permanent technology cart installed.

By establishing four levels of technology for the courtrooms in Calgary, we'll be meeting the technological needs of court users while minimizing the related costs to taxpayers. Additionally, the courthouse will be wired so that expansion of technology in courtrooms can be accommodated as demand increases.

Other capital investments in the 2006-2007 budget include $800,000 for the maintenance enforcement program to enhance its management information system and to upgrade its telecommunication system, $700,000 to replace the Public Trustee information system, $400,000 for software system redevelopment in the motor vehicle, accidents claims, personal injury claims program, and $200,000 to replace obsolete lab equipment for the medical examiner.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the comments that I wish to make with respect to the budget of Alberta Justice and Attorney General. I must say that I feel very good about the budget this year and some of the important pressures that we will be able to address in a very meaningful fashion.

What I'd like to now do is address some of the questions that the hon. member asked in his comments on the budget. With respect to the fatality inquiry process, the Justice department is responsible for the fatality inquiry process. That is why the reports come to the Ministry of Justice, whereas in fact from a program perspective, I would say that for the most part the Ministry of Justice is not the ministry that is directly impacted by it. So, for example, in the report that was referred to by the hon. member, I believe the Infrastructure and Transportation, the Municipal Affairs, and the Solicitor General departments are all impacted in one way or another by the recommendations. The Ministry of Justice and Attorney General does not follow up with these other ministries to ensure that they follow and implement the recommendations.

I can tell you that as a matter of government policy we do take these matters seriously, and as a general rule, the recommendations are reviewed and followed up on. That is the general rule. If you have specific questions with respect to a particular inquiry and whether or not the recommendations had been followed up, I'd recommend that you address those concerns to the ministry that was responsible for them. I'm reasonably satisfied that you'll find out that they have been responded to or are in the process of being responded to for the most part. Obviously, sometimes it's a matter of resources, and if it's a matter of resources, it may take longer. That is the general approach that we have in government relative to fatality inquiry reports. We do take them very seriously. The whole point of it is to ensure that we as a society learn something about the tragic death that is the subject of the inquiry. If we don't take the recommendations seriously, then we fail as a society in trying to avoid similar deaths going forward.

Questions were asked by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora with respect to the study and work relating to a revised Dependent Adults Act. That is a joint initiative between the Ministry of Justice and the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. There is a study ongoing at this time that is chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, and I believe that later this year there should be a report that is available to my ministry and the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports relative to the recommendations arising out of that.

The Dependent Adults Act is actually an act that is under the responsibility of the minister of seniors. So our involvement in Justice would be to supply support with respect to this because we have some expertise in legislation and whatnot. We are also responsible for the Public Trustee, and there's a Public Trustee component. There may be some other aspect of it that we're responsible for, but in my own estimation, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and her department have a larger interest in the legislation and the recommendations. It's not that we are not involved; we are very much involved, but I consider the lead ministry, in truth, to be the other ministry and not ours.

The Mental Health Act. You're quite right, hon. member, that mental health issues are serious issues in society, serious issues in our justice system. But the Ministry of Justice is responsible for a segment of the justice system. We're responsible for the prosecution. The Solicitor General is responsible for the investigations. The Solicitor General is responsible for the incarceration and what follows, and questions relative to those aspects of it should be put to that department. I understand that the estimates of the Solicitor General will be up tomorrow for consideration.

Mr. Cenaiko: We work in a partnership, Ron.

Mr. Stevens: We do work in a partnership, as the hon. minister has just pointed out to me. We do try to be seamless. We do try to support one another. But the fact of the matter is that in an operational way there are things that are within our responsibility and purview, and we deal with those. Some of the comments that the hon. member has made certainly belong within the justice system, but they aren't necessarily matters for which this minister is responsible.

The hon. member started with comments regarding road safety. There is a cross-ministry initiative between the Solicitor General, the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, and the Minister of Justice relative to the McDermid report. You're quite right. This is a serious matter within Alberta. In fact, we have been meeting relative to this, and there will be some developments that I'm sure you will hear about in the weeks ahead. The role of Justice, apart from being a support role, really comes in the prosecutions relative to highway safety matters and to provide support. Once again, this is an area where much of the upfront work would be done through the other two ministries, with the Ministry of Justice, in large measure, being the prosecutor in the piece.

The Member for Edmonton-Glenora then moved on to talking about remand issues and the 2 for 1 rule. Just for those who are listening, the 2 for 1 rule effectively is that when a sentence is made in a criminal case, the judge will often give credit, 2 for 1, for time spent in remand. For example, if someone spends three months in remand and the sentence would otherwise be two and a half years, the actual sentence is two years. The hon. member says: well, that gives rise to light sentences. In a fashion it does, but I would point out that in Alberta it's typically 2 for 1 that you experience. This is not a condition unique to Alberta. It's across the country. There has been a dramatic growth in the number of people spending time in remand. That has resulted in this particular approach by the courts in giving this credit.

The issue with respect to public safety, however, I would point out rests, in my opinion, more in the parole end of it than it does at the beginning. In other words, someone who gets three months' credit in the example that I gave and who has, in fact, a two-year sentence likely will spend some fraction of that time in jail as a result of the parole rules. While I'm not familiar with those because they are also handled by the Solicitor General, it would be something like 40 per cent of the time would be spent in prison in that type of situation, 60 per cent of the time in the community if, in fact, there are no extenuating circumstances to keep the accused in.

The reality is that the way our system works is that, except in the most heinous of crimes where there are life sentences, people have an opportunity to get out of the prison system as a result of the parole rules which allow for relatively early release. That certainly would be relatively early release in the minds of the public who, candidly, don't understand very well how that part of our justice system works. But I don't think, if one wanted to debate the issue, that the real problem relative to keeping people off the streets is in the upfront sentencing as it relates to the 2 for 1 rule on time in remand; rather it would be more arguably at the other end as a result of the parole rules.

The hon. member mentioned some comments about fair and accessible criminal justice system principles. I think that essentially you were saying, hon. member, that in your estimation it would be preferable to treat the cause of the crime rather than the way that we deal with it, which is to incarcerate. There are a number of reasons to incarcerate. One is retribution; one is denunciation. In my estimation, those are significant and valid reasons for people to be put in jail.

We look at safe communities as one of our strong principles and the perception of our communities to ensure that they remain safe. I would suspect that something like 5 per cent of the population or less are responsible for the crimes that are committed in our society, and 95 per cent of the population truly are law-abiding people who have a perception with respect to how safe our communities are based on how we deal with the prosecution and incarceration of people who ought to in fact be incarcerated.

That is why we have been urging the federal government for some time to change the rules with respect to conditional sentencing. People read the cases on a daily basis in our papers, hear about them in our radio and TV reports, and the conclusion that they often come to is that people who do serious crime don't do serious time because conditional sentencing clicks in and people go home and watch television, albeit under certain conditions, but the fact is that they don't do time. That is more of a problem with the perception of how well the justice system is working.

I know that the hon. member is often interested in what I'm reading, so I'll give you a hint as to a book I think you ought to read because it contains some interesting observations. It's called The Prince of the City. It's a book about Rudy Giuliani. There was some incredible success in New York City in addressing crime on the streets when he was the mayor. For anybody who had been in New York City in the '80s, you know what it was like and how many people were on the streets, how much crime there was, how much graffiti there was, how much garbage there was. Candidly, while New York was still a pretty interesting place, it didn't feel all that safe.

I'll continue later.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening over the last hour with a great deal of attention to the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General related, of course, to the estimates before the House, which I understand the minister has already moved for approval or that he'll be moving for approval later on. I didn't hear him move. [interjection] Right.

I just want to say that while I've been listening to this, I've been asking: are there many questions that remain to be either repeated or that, if they're not asked, I should ask? I won't waste the time of the House in just going over the questions that have been raised. The minister has either already addressed some of them, or he will be addressing them by way of his written response, I presume, if the time runs out.

One observation that caught my attention when the minister was talking about his budget has to do with how much of the ministry's budget really gets spent on staff salaries. It's unusual. It's almost like an educational institution, you know, where most of the budget goes towards paying the salaries. Did you say 67, 70 per cent or so? It's very large. It's very untypical, I suppose, of the ministries in general. That's a very interesting factoid.

In light of that, I want to ask the minister. The increase in the budget for this year is about 11.1 per cent, $35 million. How much of the $35 million will go towards meeting the increases in the salary bill, just specifically? Of course, there are some new hirings, as you mentioned: 21 new prosecutors, some of them very specialized, five judges, support staff, office staff. They're all there, but I'm interested in knowing, given the amount of the budget that's dedicated to paying salaries and benefits for several thousand employees of the department, how much of the $35 million increase will in fact have to be spent on the existing obligation with respect to salaries and benefits.

The other question that I had here. One thing that stood out as I was looking at the numbers here was the very large increase – and justified, I'm sure, but I don't know the exact reasons for it – for legal aid; you know, a 40 per cent increase over last year, about $12 million more than the previous year. Two questions on that. What's this increase for? Is it sort of a response to the unmet demand over previous years? Have we been underfunding this particular item, or have the requirements for qualifying to receive legal aid been relaxed so that there are more people, in fact, who are expected to take advantage of legal aid? What exactly is it?

A third thing. I didn't raise this question last year, but several years ago I remember that there was a great deal of concern on the part of the legal community who provide these legal aid services that remuneration was way too low compared to their counterparts who are in the fee-for-service sector of the legal practice business. Is it also, then, an attempt to enhance the payments for lawyers who provide legal aid services? So there are some of the questions. I'm sure that the minister will have adequate answers for this.

A few other questions here for the minister. I'm sure that the minister is very much involved with the Métis hunting rights issue. I think it's covered under his ministry. There have been some changes to the interim agreement. What are the implications of that with respect to this ministry's responsibilities, I suppose, with respect to enforcement of these agreements? Are there some legislative changes that are anticipated? If so, what will they be?

Will it need an increase in staffing or infrastructure to respond to the MLA committee report if it is implemented?

I'm not entirely sure from my notes, so I want to be very tentative about this. The minister will correct me. I confess that I'm a little bit unsure about the facts here, but I understand that one of the proposed amendments, changes to the hunting rights of the Métis is that they will have to surrender to the government any parts of trophy animals that cannot be consumed, eaten or whatever. What would be required in order to implement this recommendation in terms of increased staffing or other arrangements? Other hunters, of course, non-Métis hunters, won't have to surrender any parts of the animal, but Métis hunters, I understand, will be required to if this change is made. It's a question related to the definition of Métis status. Is the minister going to develop some means of clarifying the issue of who enjoys Métis status in the province and who doesn't, and what different rules will apply to hunting with respect to the Métis and the non-Métis population in the context of this controversy of the changes in the interim agreement?

Can the minister explain a bit about the increased funding that the aboriginal court worker program will receive? Exactly what is this aboriginal court worker program, and what exactly does it entail? What exactly will the increase cover in terms of services or activities, hiring of more staff or other resources, and whatever have you? I understand that the last report on aboriginal justice initiatives I think goes back to 2003, as I recall from the departmental website. Should we expect another review this coming year on aboriginal justice initiatives, and if so, when should one expect it?

I want to move on now to the domestic violence issue. Mr. Chairman, this minister has been quite candid about the sad situation in this province with respect to the very high degree or high rate of family violence. It's clear that when there's violence, there are victims of that violence. When there are victims, they sometimes have to escape abusive situations and seek refuge or protection.

Now, there are facilities, shelters where victims of domestic violence seek some protection. Given that the rate of domestic violence seems to be certainly not abating – I don't know if it increased – I wonder if the minister has some information on the rate of increase and if the situation is in fact becoming worse in spite of the measures that have been in place? If that is the case, has the minister set in motion some review to see why the measures that are in place, that have been in place have not been effective?

The numbers are not with me. I don't know the numbers. I hope the minister will throw some light on whether the measures in place are in fact leading to mitigation and abatement of domestic violence. If the contrary is the case, then is it time, in fact, to undertake some review to seek some more effective means and certainly review the ones that are not working and ask why they're not working and what needs to be done?

I'm not sure if the funding for shelters, women's shelters in particular – although we talk about domestic violence in order to not make the mistake of assuming that the victims are always women. There may be some cases where there are males too, but far more often than not it is women and children who have to use these shelters, and the shelters have been overcrowded. That's the information that has been available to us for many years now. Many women with children have to be turned away, as a matter of fact, from these safe places called women's shelters. I'm not sure if these are funded by the ministry or by some other ministry. Maybe the minister of children and family services does that. So the question is: what is the minister doing or what actions are in the process of being considered in order to reduce the number of people who need to seek shelter in these places? If the minister is not responsible for increasing the spaces in these shelters, at least he can address the question: is he concerned about somehow reducing the numbers who seek these shelters by reducing domestic violence? If so, what is being proposed or considered?

There is an interesting statement on page 291 of the business plan. It's the phrasing of the statement that intrigued me. It says that "in 2004, women living in Alberta were the most likely in Canada to report spousal violence." The word "report" is the one that I'm curious about. We know that spousal violence reporting usually is underreporting. Most people hesitate to report it. Most spouses, particularly women as well as men, I suppose – there would be hesitation to report. The numbers are staggeringly high as they are, but I think they may be underreporting.

Is there any implication in this wording that somehow the reporting in Alberta is the highest and, in effect, the incidence is the highest in Canada? I think they need to be very clear about what we are putting in these official documents. I suspect that what's being said here is that the fact that women are most likely to report violence in this province also means that domestic violence against women is the highest in Alberta. But there is some confusion here in the language. I just want to draw this to the minister's attention, that it's not clear to me what inference to draw from it.

Does the minister work, in fact, in co-operation with his counterpart in the ministry who is responsible for family and women's services to address the issue of shelter beds and their shortage in the province? Is he in a position to take some initiative and, in fact, then work with his colleague on addressing this issue? I don't see the deputy minister here at the moment, so we'll save him this question.

There were one or two other questions that I had. On the identity theft, it's clearly a growing challenge in the province. That's quite clearly recognized in the business plan of the ministry. We know that some of this identity theft has been reported with respect to some drivers' licences, you know, that the registries have issued. In Calgary there was a case. There may be other privatized services that may have made the incidence of identity theft more of a problem than it has been in the past. Certainly, it is a very serious problem, both from the point of security and the ability of other law enforcement authorities outside our own provincial borders to be able to rely on the identity documents that we issue in this province.

What security measures is the ministry taking to make Albertans' identity documentation more secure? Was the incident in Calgary with respect to that private registry a unique case, or does it suggest that there may be a larger problem across the province? Either way, what kind of information do we have based on which we can say either that it is unique and just a one-off thing or, on the other hand, that we need to be far more vigilant and take a closer look at our arrangements with respect to how secure these privatized facilities for providing different kinds of identity documentation are across the province?

Another question. I think Canada has two credit bureaus. One's called Equifax, and the other is called TransUnion, I believe. These two do not, as far as I understand, share information with each other concerning fraud warnings on credit cards. It seems to me that it's rather irrational for the agencies not to do this, unless protection of privacy laws prevent them from doing so. Would the minister like to comment on this? It seems to me that credit card theft and fraud related to this could be handled in a more timely manner perhaps if there were some co-operation across these agencies which deal with credit cards and credit issues.

I was looking at a couple of line items on page 333. I will come back to it later.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

9:20

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. In case I failed to do it at the outset of my remarks this evening, I do wish to move the estimates of the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General. It would indeed be sad if we went through all of this and failed to say those magic words. It gives people an opportunity, in any event, to support the estimates at the end of the evening.

The Chair: As per Standing Order 57(1), I might add, Minister.

Mr. Stevens: Indeed.

Just to end my thought with respect to the book I was referring to, The Prince of the City. The reason I ended up reading that particular book was because of the broken windows approach that was so successful in New York City to reduce crime. There's a reasonable portion of the book that deals with that particular matter. It's a very well-written book. It's got lots of interesting comments regarding the politics of New York City that would be of interest to the hon. member. A theme that runs through it is that it's a city that has traditionally been very liberal in its Democratic government. I use that in the sense of small "l" liberal and big "D" Democratic. So the social programs there have been over the years well supported, indeed perhaps incredibly generous. But there are some comments made ultimately about the morality perhaps getting ahead of the practicality in terms of successfully addressing the issues of societal safety and crime on the streets. I would recommend reading that book. It's a very interesting read. It does deal with a lot of those things.

Now, some comments regarding the questions asked by Edmonton-Strathcona. The situation with respect to legal aid now for some time is that we have been funding at a certain level and that the expenditures of Legal Aid, as funded by government, have been greater than the amount provided on an annual basis. Some time ago – it would be before my time as minister – a lump-sum amount was provided to Legal Aid as a fund which they could draw down to meet annual expenses. That fund has been used now last year and this year, and at the end of last year, as a matter of fact, they were starting to get to the point where there were very few dollars left in that particular surplus fund, if you will.

So what we are doing as a result of the increase here is we are giving them stable annualized dollars in our budget to meet the dollars that they otherwise have had as a result of a drawdown from that special fund I referred to together with the annualized amount. So what we are giving them this year is more or less what they got last year from the province of Alberta to support the legal aid budget. It does not involve an increase in scope of the program.

Actually, in terms of the entire country we provide an excellent program. We, unlike most other provinces, have an aspect of civil legal aid that is simply not available elsewhere. You can talk to the folks at Legal Aid. It's always got challenges. It's the nature of the program. But the fact is that in Alberta we have a relatively good legal aid program compared to other jurisdictions across the country.

One of the issues, of course, is to attract more dollars, and those asks have been made to the federal government, the previous federal government, this federal government. There was hope that there would be an increase in this year's budget. The reality is that the new Conservative government is relatively new, and its priorities were such that they did not have an opportunity to fully canvass the legal aid program in time for this budget. So what they did was they extended the legal aid funding that is provided by the federal government, which essentially goes to criminal law, not civil, for one more year so that there is a year of time that they can review this matter, have consultation with the provinces. I would anticipate that we'll understand a year from now, when the next budget comes down, as to what the position of the federal government will be regarding funding of this particular program.

I think that for your purposes, hon. member, we have just entered into a new five-year contract with the Law Society of Alberta, who is one of the three parties together with the Legal Aid Society of Alberta. That was inked within the last month or so. I think there is stability in funding. There is stability in purpose. There is stability in governance. There is not an issue, at this point in time, regarding remuneration of those who supply the services. There's, of course, always a challenge with respect to meeting the demand that is there, and obviously on the civil side of things there is a great deal more demand in terms of scope than is in fact offered even under our program, which is, as I said, one of the very best in the country. I think you can be reasonably satisfied. If you talk to the folks from Legal Aid, they will say that we're doing quite well here in the province.

On the Métis harvesting. Métis harvesting per se is an issue that is a cross-ministry matter, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and also Sustainable Resource Development. So when you talk about enforcement, that in large measure is Sustainable Resource Development. When you talk about some of the funding issues, that in large measure is Aboriginal Affairs. The legal service is one of the things that I indicated in my opening comments that we do. We provide legal services to other ministries in the government. That is our role here.

There was a Supreme Court case in 2003 called Powley. It was an understanding of that that drives us to where we are. There is a need for renegotiation of the interim agreement. That is very much a legal matter. That is why the ministry of Justice is involved as it is. Of course, we go down that road together with Sustainable Resource Development and Aboriginal Affairs because they continue to have significant interest in the subject matter of the discussion.

The issue with respect to Métis harvesting is that the Powley case said essentially that Métis people can harvest for food. You make reference, hon. member, to trophy hunting. Well, trophy hunting is not for food per se. So the comment was that in order to ensure that people hunt for food, then the trophy part of the animal, to the extent we're talking about a trophy animal, ought not to be kept, and that way what remains is for food. Métis people can, like all Albertans, apply for the permission and right to hunt trophy animals and do that to the extent that they get that permission. So it's not that it's not available. The issue that we're talking about under this Métis harvesting is harvesting for food purposes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona made reference to the court worker program. We, in fact, have just finished a review of that program. That's a very successful, well-regarded program in the justice system in Alberta.

The review was chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort together with colleagues from Lac La Biche-St. Paul and Calgary-Hays. The purpose of the review was essentially to find out what was happening, to determine the satisfaction level of the stakeholders in the system – that would be the users of the program, the courts and others – to see whether or not there was consistency among the various programs in the province. What was appropriate? What wasn't? How could we advance the program? Was there training that we could offer in terms of ensuring that there was consistency from one place to another? Things of that nature.

The court worker program is for aboriginal people. There is funding from the federal government that does go into this particular program. It is a provincial program. It's one that is very much respected both by the people who are the users of the program and the courts, who are the beneficiaries. The court worker people provide information with respect to the justice system. They are resource people in the location who can help people who are interfacing with the justice system who do need some assistance. They typically are not legally trained people. They are not, typically, people who can as a result of their training provide legal services, but they have a wealth of experience, which they can share and which is much appreciated by the courts because you now have a better informed person who is going through the justice system.

That, obviously, is one of the issues that we face in the justice system; that is, the unrepresented or self-represented litigant who doesn't understand the rules but needs some guidance in order to make contact, ask the right questions, perhaps get a lawyer, perhaps get some advice from the duty counsel, and so on. This particular system has just been reviewed. We're just in the process of looking at the report in government. It's going to go through the typical standing policy committee, cabinet, caucus review. I can tell you that it makes some recommendations for enhancement to the program. The budget that we have here would see some additional support being given in the form of management that has a supervisory, educational type of component to ensure that there is enhanced monitoring and enhanced co-ordination, to improve deficiencies as they may exist in various programs, to enhance consistency of approach, to make sure that people are doing what they should be doing. You'll hear more about that, hon. member, as we go through that. I anticipate that that is a report that probably will see the light of day, so you will have an opportunity to read it. Once again, it's going through the process, so I can't speak prematurely. My colleagues, obviously, will have to make that decision.

We'll provide you with the statistics we have regarding domestic violence in the province. I don't have those with me here, but it's appropriate that people know what we know, and I'm happy to provide that to you. Our emphasis on domestic violence arose in 2003 as a result of a conference; I believe it was in Red Deer. So we've had an emphasis on domestic violence in our justice system since that point in time. In Justice what we've been doing is get domestic courts up and running, ensure that they are successful, provide additional resources to them so that they can expand within the community and that we get them expanding throughout the province. That requires people in the communities to support them because it's not just lawyers; it's also the people who provide the support at the back of the courtroom. It is a cross-ministry initiative with other ministries who provide that social support for the victims and also assistance to the accused.

The whole idea of the exercise is to get this matter dealt with earlier so that there is less opportunity for recantation of the complaint by the victim, which is a problem if it lasts too long, to get people into some support systems. The recidivism rate in Calgary in the HomeFront program, which has been, I think, going on the longest of all of them, for people who have gone through the support system is something along the lines of dropping from 36 per cent to something like 5 per cent. So the success of having this program up and operating and people going through it does lead to less repeat offence. That is something that we can do in the justice system.

There's a handbook that was prepared in co-operation with the Solicitor General's department and which is now in the hands of all of the people in the province who deal with this. We have sent it across the country because it's a wonderful resource. People in other jurisdictions are appreciating that we have got a very good piece of work here that they can use in other jurisdictions also to address domestic violence from whatever perspective they happen to see it, whether it be a prosecutor or the police or a social worker.

Identity theft. You're quite right; this is a very serious problem. I had some statistics for you with respect to child pornography. I think it was three cases in 2000. Today: 90 cases. That's very much an Internet-driven matter. Identify theft is very much an Internet-driven matter. Truly, while I don't have the statistics to share with you, my own sense of it is that identity theft may be a far greater issue than even child pornography, and child pornography as an issue is horrendous. I can tell you that Canada as a country has not dealt with this issue. There are other countries, like Great Britain, which have started to deal with it, that have a centralized system. We are looking to other jurisdictions that do this for some guidance.

I can tell you that it's my intention, along with the Solicitor General, to raise this at the next federal/provincial/territorial meeting of Justice and Solicitor General ministries, in October of this year, so that we can start that process of developing a co-ordinated effort. It does have to be co-ordinated. This is very huge. This is very complicated. I remember hearing from some expert about the Internet being used to effectively be a market for the exchange and sale of stolen credit cards. I mean, it's one of those situations where if you're in the know, you know how to log in, and you get to trade these things the way you would comic books. You know, it's hard to believe that that kind of thing exists, but that's the extent to which, I understand, this particular crime has grown. So this is an area where we have to get involved in a coherent way.

Your comments with respect to Equifax and TransUnion, from my perspective, raise the issue of disclosure. In order to be able to address this, you have to be aware that identity theft has occurred. You need to have an obligation on the part of people who are in the position of holding a lot of personal information to tell us rather than to bury the fact that there has been this kind of disclosure. I'm talking about insurance companies, banks, people that have a lot of our personal information, have your credit card, your bank balances, your home address, those kinds of things. If there is a breach, they need to tell us. I think that there needs to be a sharing of that kind of information appropriately among people that we can trust as a general proposition.

I can also tell you there, hon. member, that my department at this point in time is following up on an initiative that the state of California has taken. There's a Senator down there who introduced a bill which essentially does have an obligation on the part of people who hold this kind of information to tell the authorities when there is a breach so that we can follow up on it.

These are early days relative to this particular crime. We have a long way to go. The good news is that we've identified it as an area, but as a country we haven't begun to fight this. It's necessary to start right away if we're going to make some material gains in that area.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I made the comment earlier that incarceration does not fulfill the purposes of rehabilitation and deterrence, and the hon. minister pointed out the importance of the term retribution. Interestingly enough, I don't know why, but I brought with me to the House the Supreme Court decision Her Majesty the Queen versus C.A.M., 1996, in which Justice Lamer actually defends retribution as being the accepted and, indeed, the important principle of sentencing in our criminal law. It's a very interesting statement, perhaps surprising – I don't know – where he defends the idea that, you know, retribution, which is a very old concept going back to the very earliest times, is not vengeance.

In primitive times it was family vengeance, family feuds. The understanding of retribution is that the state will pursue justice on behalf of people who are the victims of crime. Retribution focuses on the moral blameworthiness of a particular offender. It's not denunciation. Denunciation is declaring to the community that what has been done is wrong. Retribution focuses on the moral essence, the blameworthiness of the offence. It's interesting that that is the overwhelming emphasis of criminal justice today.

There's a whole other stream of thinking which is present in western society and also in eastern societies, when you think of all the different religions of the world, and that's the emphasis on reconciliation, on restitution, on what we now would call restorative justice. I think that restorative justice is what's coming in the future in terms of determining the content and the essence and the quality of our justice system. I think it's commendable that the Justice department's focus is also to a great extent on restorative justice with the emphasis on mediation programs, diversionary programs, alternative sentencing. I wish that there was more money going into that, and I'll say the same thing tomorrow when we look at youth justice committees. We need more money into those kinds of efforts because I think that that's what the future is going to bring: more emphasis on restorative justice.

Just another comment along with others on legal aid. The hon. minister is recommending looking at what's happening in the U.S. I'm not sure that that's always good, especially in terms of legal aid. If I understand 3.6 on page 296: "Work with the Legal Aid Society of Alberta to implement a staff counsel pilot project in the adult criminal court in Edmonton." Now, I raised questions before about the movement towards a public defender system. Is this what this is about, the staff counsel pilot project? In other words, the Justice department would be hiring lawyers not just on the prosecution side but also on the defence side to work for legal aid. I think there are a lot of problems with that. The very situation of having the government hiring lawyers to work on both sides of a criminal justice issue I think has problems.

Also, I don't know what kind of consultation the Minister of Justice is having with the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association because reports that I'm getting are that a lot of lawyers in private practice have been taking legal aid cases for years and years and years and would love to continue to do that and fear that they're going to be cut out of that kind of work. I think that there are legitimate concerns around that. I have to really commend so many lawyers who do work for legal aid and do pro bono work. It's just marvellous.

Tomorrow night is the annual meeting of the Edmonton Centre for Equal Justice, which also does tremendous work with people who live in poverty, who do not have the money to even go to legal aid. There are a lot of lawyers who do pro bono work through the Edmonton Centre for Equal Justice, and I think that that's just tremendous, quite commendable.

I have an amendment that I would like to propose, Mr. Chairman, if I could do that now. I have it right here, an original and all the copies.

The Chair: Okay. Give the page an opportunity to distribute them, please.

Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I believe you can proceed.

Dr. B. Miller: I think everybody has it.

The Chair: There are just a few more to distribute, and I'd just like to update the Assembly: I've been informed that Anaheim won the game 3 to 0.

It looks like all the amendments have been distributed. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to move that the estimates for the Standing Policy Committee on Justice and Government Services under reference 1.0.8 of the 2006-07 main estimates of the Department of Justice and Attorney General be reduced by $99,000 so that the expense and equipment/inventory purchases to be voted is $342,337,000.
Can I speak to it?

The Chair: Yes. Please proceed.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Chairman, just to speak briefly to it. I have attended this standing policy committee on justice, and I didn't find it a useful activity on the part of myself. It's held in a room in this building, and you have members of the staff of the Justice department coming in, the minister and deputy minister, and even the press in the room at the back, and I as an MLA am not able to ask questions or participate.

The Chair: Hon. members, the noise level is increasing to the state where it's hard to understand this hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, I can speak louder. I'll use my preacher's voice.

Mr. Snelgrove: Speaking louder doesn't make you smarter.

Dr. B. Miller: It'll get your attention.

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the floor.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is something that has come up over and over again. These standing policy committees are not all-party committees. If we look at the federal government and the tremendous work that all-party committees do, if we look at the select committee on conflicts of interest that is happening now – it's an excellent committee led by an excellent chairperson – it shows what an all-party committee can do working together. I think that I would yearn for this kind of thing to be present in our legislative system, where as an MLA and as a critic for Justice I could participate in such a committee and contribute my great knowledge and understanding to the process of this committee.

So I would recommend that we adopt this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm pleased to rise in support of this amendment, proposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora. If I may call this the Sapers-Dickson memorial amendment in honour of previous colleagues of mine on this side who regularly brought forward a similar amendment. I think the point needs to be made very strongly in this Assembly that what the government chose to do when they established the standing policy committees is that these are internal committees of the Tory caucus, of the government caucus.

They are not legislative committees, they are not open to all members of the Legislative Assembly, and they should not be paid for with legislative funds. These are internal government policy committees, and that's been well admitted and on the record many times by members opposite, no different than if we formed a caucus committee on our side to develop policy. Those lunches and transportation and payment for chairpersons and vehicles that are provided for a chairperson: all of that is covered by this budget. It is, frankly, inappropriate. This is not a legislative committee. I don't think that salary should be paid to the individual from Legislature funds.

If anything, I would argue that this committee is anti-Legislature in that it is moving the debate and the openness and the transparency and accountability of this Assembly out of this Assembly and behind closed doors into a private Tory caucus meeting. That's what this committee is. They have the gall to then come to the taxpayers and say: pay for our dinners, and pay for a salary top-up for our committee chairperson and a car to be provided for them.

That's why we have asked for that amount of money to be reduced from the budget, because it is inappropriate as a Legislative Assembly expenditure. If the government wishes to do this, fine. Then do it internally, pay for it out of your allocated caucus funds, and get on with it. But don't pretend that this has anything to do with a democratic process in Alberta because it doesn't. It's an internal working, and it should be paid for internally by the caucus budget, not by this one.

I've often heard members on the other side say: oh, this is how we develop all the wonderful policy that we give to the people of Alberta, and that's why they should be paying for this budget. Well, actually I'd argue against that. There's no accountability. There are no minutes kept of those meetings. There's no Hansard kept of the meetings. So it's strictly on an hon. member's word that they raised an issue or campaigned for something or tried to convince their government colleagues to adopt a particular policy. We have absolutely no way of knowing that they actually raised that issue and argued for it or indeed what they argued for. We have no idea of being able to ascertain whether they voted for something or against something. Nothing.

There is absolutely no record kept of what goes on in those committees, and most of them are behind closed doors. Occasionally they are open to the public, but again only government members are allowed to participate in the actual working of the committee. As my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora stated, the media and other members of the Assembly, that being members of the opposition, are relegated to sort of sitting on the side. They're not allowed to ask questions. They're not allowed to participate in what's going on.

So we have no accountability for citizens to be able to find out how their MLA actually proceeded with this committee. There's no record of it kept in any way. There's absolutely no transparency for what went on. We don't know what arguments were presented for or against any given policy. For citizens that are trying to find out whether their point of view got represented and they happen to have a government MLA, there is absolutely no way for them to find out what happened there unless their MLA, you know, chooses to tell them: this is what I said, and this is exactly how I said it.

I think it's important that we raise this issue, we put it on the record, we let people like those people that are joining us in the public gallery today know that their taxpayer dollars are being used to fund an internal, private working committee of the Tory caucus. To pretend that this is somehow part of a legislative, democratic process is a perversion of the term, frankly. The government, I believe, has trivialized the importance of this Legislative Assembly through the introduction and continued maintenance of these committees.

I am often, I think, in my role as House leader asked to go and speak to groups of young Albertans who are in here occasionally, Mr. Chairman, as MLA for a Day and the Forum for Young Albertans, for example. Often I'm representing the urban or the opposition point of view. There's a government MLA that's assigned to do this, and there they are happily saying: "Oh, yes. There's this committee, and we argue everything out behind closed doors, and then that's it. We don't have to do anything in the Assembly." Right. Well, exactly.

The people in the gallery have no idea how that decision was reached by government, and very little is said in debate by government members: very unusual to have government members stand in this House and put their individual perspectives on the record in Hansard for all the world to see how they feel about a particular bill. We will get the sponsor of the bill speaking, perhaps one other person, and that's it. The rest of the work is done by the members of the opposition, who are mostly questioning things. So I really find the development of these committees and the continued maintenance of these committees to be a perversion of the democratic process in Alberta, and I do not believe that the funding should come through public sources for it, certainly not treating it as though it were a legislative function because it is most definitively not.

So I would argue in favour of this. I think that if the government wishes to keep those committees operational – and I think there are four or five of them – fine. You are free to do so. But they should be paid for out of the government caucus funds, and they should not be paid for in the manner in which they're being done now. That's what we're proposing with this amendment. I thank you for the opportunity. I urge all members to support the amendment.

Mr. Stevens: Well, I'd like to start, Mr. Chairman, by thanking the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for bringing forward the motion. It does seem to me a compliment that they would like to spend the last 15 minutes of my estimates talking about this matter rather than the policy and money being spent in the budget. As the hon. member has said before, he's very appreciative of the good work that people do in my ministry, and I'm very proud of my colleagues and the work they do in the standing policy committee, which is a committee of cabinet. It is a part of the policy-making process.

Some years ago when I was a private member, I had an opportunity to attend a parliamentary conference in Quebec City. Of course, as you know, Mr. Chairman, those involve private members from across the country. What struck me at that particular meeting was how satisfied the government private members from Alberta were compared to the government private members from other jurisdictions, where, generally, I would describe the attitude as being one of being very much in the dark as to what the government was doing and not having a sense of participation. This is a particular process that our Premier brought in that was successfully part of the city of Calgary governing process, and it remains, too, to this very day as far as establishing policy is concerned. The standing policy committee process now in terms of this Premier's history in politics goes back some 25 years. It's a very successful way of dealing with policy and is to be supported.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on the amendment before the House. I should start by noting that the issue confessions. Consequently, arguments have been made that police should use the investigative tactics that they have been trained for, and the principle of confidentiality and privacy for patients should not be compromised.

Now, it's really interesting that the context of the debate about confidentiality and disclosure, telling the truth, has shifted. I mean, 30 years ago all of the literature around medical ethics was focused on the relationship between the physician and the patient and to what extent the physician should disclose everything that the physician knows to the patient. Should the patient be told the whole truth about their illness, their disease? There was lots of discussion about that in the literature. That's a serious issue. Maybe we can learn from that; I don't know. The primary concern of medicine in that example was the potential benefit or harm in a course of action. I mean, the issue was how much truth, when to tell the truth, how soon, how clearly. The movement through the years in terms of medical ethics has been in the direction of fuller disclosure, that the patient has the right to know the truth, that the patient needs to know everything that the patient wants about their illness. So the whole debate has moved in the direction of greater disclosure.

Now, in this bill we're not dealing with the relationship between physician and patient. We're dealing with the disclosure of information, the truth about a person's situation, his illness or disease, to other parties. It's a very interesting question. I think that this bill tries to steer between the issue of privacy and the right to privacy and the greater good of the public, especially if public safety is at stake. There are some questions. For example, section 5(vi)(r) enables the disclosure of health information for the purpose of "processing payment for health services provided to the individual by a person that is required under a contract to pay for those services for that individual." Does that also involve disclosing of health information without consent to insurers? That would be a question that we might raise.

Bill 31 gives health professionals the discretion to disclose health information without consent to police and prosecutors. What protections are in place for health professionals who choose not to provide confidential health information in response to a request from police if they feel that they shouldn't disclose the truth because of their relationship with the patient? Their primary focus is the health of the patient. It puts the health professional in a difficult situation whether to disclose this information: would that be to the benefit of the patient or not? So I don't know. Those are ethical questions that I think need to be raised and have already been raised in the second reading debate. Perhaps more of those issues can be elaborated on as we move into Committee of the Whole.

On the whole, I think that this bill is well crafted. There seem to be lots of safeguards here in terms of the nature of the information that's to be disclosed, and then there is a procedure, and there's an outline of exactly what the information should be. There's a list; namely, the name of an individual, the date of birth of an individual, the nature of any injury or illness of an individual, et cetera. So I think the safeguards are in place. I think that in general I would support this bill, but it will be interesting to see members raise issues about component parts during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we're at the stage in second reading where 29(2)(a) is available if anyone is interested.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak for the first time to Bill 31, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2006. In my estimation it is a well-constructed piece of legislation on the whole, although there are several sections of it that our caucus finds a bit disconcerting. Perhaps we can seek clarification on a number of these issues and, hopefully, then will be able to forward our tentative support.

The legislation, as the hon. sponsor of this bill said at the very beginning, is to make substantial amendments to the Health Information Act, reflecting changing technology and to better assist in the administration of health care spending in Alberta. Those are all laudable goals, Mr. Speaker, and I would seek to ensure that Bill 31, in fact, does work to assist the administration of health care spending in this province. Certainly, this is a central issue of this spring session regardless of the absence of actual third-way legislation, which seems to have flown away like the winter snows, which I think was a very happy occasion for most Albertans. I think our task now is to get down to the business of reinforcing and building our public health care system and strengthening and modifying it for the coming century, and I will throw myself wholly behind that job.

Looking at Bill 31 specifically here, I believe that many of the changes certainly are innocuous and simply involve updating the legislation to reflect existing policies. For example, changing "ethics committee" to "research ethics board" throughout the language of this legislation I think is appropriate. Many of the amendments are restricting foreign access to Albertans' health information, which I find again quite heartening as long as we are making substantive measures to ensure that and are fighting off the temptation to allow private insurers to operate in this province in any extensive way, which, of course, would preclude any real ability for us to protect health information. Of course, private insurers, just by the nature of their business and the actuarial means by which they come to do business with people, require the very most private information from us and require the trade of that information as well to ensure the functioning of their business. Certainly, again, not seeing any substantive change in that in spring in the legislation in regard to the third way was useful and helpful to all of the people of Alberta.

Protecting against the PATRIOT Act, I think, is probably what some part of this legislation is attempting to do, which is good, and we must make sure we strengthen that. For example, in section 5 the disclosure for the purposes of collecting payment for health services seems to hint at some possibility of private health insurance, and I am putting that out there if that, in fact, is the intent of this amendment in section 5.

Also, the provisions made for the disclosure of private health information if it is for the good of public safety raises the question of what situation or circumstances this legislation might be anticipating. Is the partner legislation Bill 26, the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act? How will disclosure to police services, the ministers of health and justice help the good? How are we going to operate that? It's very thin ice in regard to the practice of protecting the private individual and protecting the public good. So I'd ask the hon. member to perhaps give us more detail regarding such disclosure and interaction with these other public entities. What sort of situation would, in the minister's mind, require disclosure for the sake of public safety?

The amendments in Bill 31 reflecting changes in technology recognize that certain computer databases that log details regarding access to information do not require the recording of two very important pieces of information regarding disclosure that are included in the access to other forms of data keeping other than computers. These two pieces of information are, first of all, to whom the disclosure is made, and number two, the purpose of the disclosure. Both of these details are recorded under other forms of disclosure but not for computer access that uses the ID. Consequently, the access log is less detailed than what is required under current legislation. So I would ask the hon. minister how this shortcoming might be addressed. Or am I barking up the wrong tree? Is this not considered an important detail to you? I think that perhaps it might be considered an important detail to the public.

What other information might be included in the regulation part of this act? What is available for disclosure? Like it indicates in section 10 of the proposed amendments, what might this include, and what potential situation is this loophole meant to anticipate? What information could the minister provide to help us illuminate this section 10?

Finally, how are these amendments meant to address the tracking of drug trends as put forth in the government press release? It seemed to be a rather enigmatic reference in the release in regard to tracking drug trends. Is that for the individual? Is the government perhaps considering putting this information together to consider the tracking of collective trends in the use of pharmaceuticals in the province? Then perhaps I would say that considering the bulk purchasing of pharmaceuticals would be a useful end in collecting such data and, in fact, the enacting of some sort of provincial pharmacare plan in the province of Alberta, which I think would go a long way to addressing any concerns about increased public health costs in the province of Alberta.

I know that in regard to the increase over time, the numbers certainly are very much in dispute and, I would suggest, do not reflect anything outside of the normal growth in relation to our GDP growth and population growth in this province, but we certainly do want to realize the maximum efficiency for our public health care dollars since the backbone of what makes a public health care system strong is the economic efficiency of it. So public buying of pharmaceuticals under some sort of provincial pharmacare plan would go miles, or kilometres I should say, to helping strengthen our public system for these coming years.

I will leave off with that at this point, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we have those specific concerns in regard to this bill, and if they are adequately addressed, I can see no reason why we shouldn't recommend support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise tonight to respond to the bill that's before us, Bill 31, Health Information Amendment Act, 2006. At first look I think it appears to be okay, and I am definitely leaning towards supporting it as well. The issue of health information and who owns it and who can access it and which types of information we collect and for what purposes has been a big topic at many discussions, both formal and informal, which I took part in.

I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre indicated that she will provide qualified support after certain things are addressed and certain questions are answered and with amendments at the right stage of debate. I rise today to just talk about it both as an individual and also as a health practitioner. It is understandably an important issue and is not to be taken lightly. Custodians or keepers of health information, be it physicians, pharmacists, nurses, diagnostic and lab facilities, et cetera, are becoming increasingly aware not only of their responsibilities to guard and properly handle sensitive private health information but also of the risks inherent and the built-in liabilities.

As a pharmacist myself, at some point a couple of years ago our association was demanding clarifications and explanations from Alberta Health and from legal experts in the field in instances where the Health Information Act seemed to be conflicting or competing with privacy legislation. Almost no one wants to be breaking the law intentionally, and equally, Mr. Speaker, no one should be placed in a situation where he or she breached some clause of some act in good faith or in carrying out his or her duties.

One aspect is defining who collects what information, for what purpose, and who he or she can release it to. You know, a simple example, Mr. Speaker, would be whether a mother or a guardian has the right to know if her daughter is on birth control pills, for example. A more serious case is when you get the RCMP requesting someone's complete medication profile. Disclosure is the issue here then. We need to balance the protection of personal information and guarding an individual's privacy with the protection of society or the public and securing our health care system against the threats of misuse or abuse. [interjection] Yes. It's the issue of balance. Absolutely.

Other questions which come to mind include this whole issue of harvesting prescription data and selling it to marketing and drug manufacturing companies as part of their market research. That drives up health care costs, of course, and we're not sure if they're using that type of information in a fashion that is above board and in a way that is useful to the consumer or whether, in fact, that sensitive information is being misused.

Also, we have to be sure that in instances where information as such is being harvested for whatever purpose, all sensitive or identifying information is purged. There was a case in the U.S., I think, in 2001 where a famous company that had a contract with all the drugstores in a certain state, promised the association in that state and promised the individual stores that when they collected that information, they were going to program the software in such a way that it purges or deletes all the identifying information. Needless to say, that did not happen, and it was a big embarrassment for the association that agreed to that contract. It was a big embarrassment for that state government, and the company ended up being fined, and I think they lost their licence for a period of time. So, again, we have to learn from other people's mistakes, and today is a good chance for us to review all those scenarios.

Also, how about patients that are enrolled in research studies? Now, most of the research studies nowadays are double-blinded. Most of the times there are confidentiality agreements that the patient enters into with the research lab or institute or the drug company that's conducting that research. But exactly how are we getting the assurance that we need that all sensitive information, identifying information – patient names, addresses – is being removed from that package? Most companies will tell you that they only need the age, the health status, prior conditions, and all that stuff, and they don't need to know the name of the person, where they live, or any other information. But, again, we seek assurances.

Furthermore, what about the residents in long-term care? They receive medication in their carts. They receive doses sometimes three or four times a day. How do we assure them and their families that their information is being guarded and that no one would know what they're on and what X person is being prescribed for what condition and so on?

Another layer we can add is prison inmates receiving drugs. Their privacy is also something to be protected.

Mr. Speaker, I do not disqualify the need sometimes to share certain pieces of information between practitioners to achieve better medical or pharmaceutical care. Take, for example, a physician in an emergency situation who wants the drug profile on a patient to figure out what that patient was on and for what conditions. In a trauma situation, for example, the patient may be unconscious or unable to speak or understand. Do we wait to receive consent, or do we act immediately? I would say that we act immediately because in a situation like this the person cannot speak for themselves, they cannot make that decision, and saving a life takes precedence.

Conversely, when a patient requests his or her complete profile to take to a specialist or when he or she is switching physicians, the pharmacist is only happy to co-operate since it is the patient himself or herself, or his or her parent or guardian if that patient is a child under 18, that owns that information. That file belongs to the patient. Mr. Speaker, when you yourself go to your druggist, you own that file, and pharmacists do it free of charge as well. On the other hand, some clinics charge a patient to release his or her file to him or her, which raises some questions in people's minds as to the issue of ownership and whether, in fact, this is just a delaying tactic to not release that information or whether, in fact, they look at it as revenue. I definitely think the patient owns his or her file, his or her information, and that health practitioners simply collect, share, and safeguard that information.

As was mentioned before, two of my caucus colleagues, the members for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Gold Bar, both sat on that Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee. It is good to see that some of their good work is being implemented, and I commend the government for bringing it forward. It's also good to see that some of the more contentious or controversial suggestions which my colleagues expressed opposition to were adjusted to preserve or protect individual privacy. Again, this is useful, and I think it's positive.

I'm also thinking, Mr. Speaker, that when pharmacists wanted access to lab results, for example, and were met with some resistance, it was not because of privacy concerns but, rather, unfortunately a few physicians from the old school thinking that they did not want to cede some of that responsibility to someone else, sort of like protecting turf, if you will. It is reassuring, however, that Alberta is now moving toward an integrated, collaborative model of health care delivery with primary care networks and that there will be a need to share or access information more regularly and more closely but, again, with the necessary safeguards and checks. As my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora mentioned, there are safeguards and checks in this piece of legislation, and that's why I'm leaning towards supporting it. Again, qualified support.

Now, again from my experience as a pharmacist and speaking of checks and balances, take, for example, Alberta's Wellnet, now called Alberta Netcare. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that I can actually get in extremely hot water if I access your own health profile without authorization? I have to get your authorization to access your file on Alberta's Wellnet, and I also have to demonstrate a need to do that. I do have access, and I can do it without your permission, and I can actually tell you or tell other people what you're on and for what purpose and, you know, how many times you filled it and when the last time you received it was and all that stuff. But the issue of authorized access and different levels of security and different passwords for different sections of Alberta Wellnet is a very positive development. I only access information on patients that are mine, that are clients of my pharmacy, before I even attempt it.

This system keeps track of who accessed what information when, why, and from where. So I can do it right here in the Chamber from my laptop, or I can do it from my home, or I can do it from my drugstore, or I can do it from Mexico. The system keeps track of who is accessing what, when, from where, which is really positive, and it alleviates some of the concerns that not only pharmacists but physicians and nurses had when Wellnet was being constructed and was being put together.

Bill 31 in general terms extends two basic rights to Albertans. The first is the right of privacy and the protection of confidentiality, which I mentioned, and this is positive. The second one is the right to access their own information in the custody or under the control of custodians, including the right to examine, obtain a copy of, request a correction or amendment to recorded personal health information. That's also in keeping with recognizing that patients now are partners in their own health. So if you're going to empower a person to fully engage in looking after themselves from the health angle, then the least you can do is give them information that is useful to them and that is current and timely.

One more point, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude is the modification in this Bill 31 with regard to disclosing information to law enforcement agencies. It was recommended when the committee was reviewing the Health Information Act to just give a blanket requirement for health professionals to disclose information to law enforcement agencies regardless, that whenever they ask for it, you should just agree and release it. It is reassuring to see that Bill 31 did not go that way and that, in fact, it offered balance by leaving that authority with the custodian. So now the custodian himself or herself has the power to adjudicate or judge whether in this particular case releasing this information is warranted or if it's the proper thing to do. In fact, they can decide to withhold it, and the police have other ways, as in seeking a court order, for example.

This issue was definitely highlighted by both the Edmonton and the Calgary police services. But the recommendation to call for a mandatory disclosure was definitely something that we in the opposition and many Albertans found offensive. Again, it's commendable that this bill is not going that way and that it's leaving this as a responsibility that falls under the purview of the custodian or in many cases the practitioner that looks after those patients.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I am thankful for this opportunity, and I will listen to more debate. Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of things that I would like to discuss with this bill. The hon. member ahead of me has said that the question is: who owns this information? I believe that I own it. It's my information.

So I would like to go back to the very start of how this information even gets into the system in the first place. The buzzword in this province is personal choice. That choice, then, almost automatically takes you away from the system and makes you accountable as opposed to the system. So when the person does make the choice, they are then responsible. The question to me would be: how really informed are they when they make that choice? The choice that I want to make is the fact that I don't allow this information to go into the system in the first place, and I think that that's a personal right. I don't see that there's any manoeuvring room in this particular bill for that specific personal choice.

I think of the primary care networks that are being created. You then become a file with four and five and eight, 10 people having access to that file. It's not as if it necessarily goes into this private, confidential computer system. That is one of the things that bothers me the most with this bill. I really do not see any personal choice in saying, "No, I do not want to share my information with the larger system," and in fact that you could own your file or that it would be then written between you and your doctor or whichever care personnel you're using.

I would just like to have that concern put on the record. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 31, Health Information Amendment Act, 2006. If I recall, this bill was preceded by a special select committee of the last Legislature. The Legislature before this one was created by the elections in 2004. I was a member of that special select committee that was established by this Legislature to review the existing Health Information Act and to make changes in it, which was I think required by the existing piece of legislation, which required that five years after that bill had come into force the whole legislation be reviewed.

So I recall some debate at the time which certainly had to do with the protection of this very, very sensitive personal information related to one's health and the ability of the custodian to disclose it on request from law enforcement authorities or from various agencies of the government. We had come before that committee many groups and individuals concerned about the possibility that the review might lead to relaxation of the conditions attendant upon disclosure of that information.

I remember that the Alberta Medical Association made a very strong representation to the committee at the time and expressed very, very serious reservations and concerns on behalf of its membership of the obligations that an act like this would impose upon them, having to disclose information of their patients to law enforcement agencies or other government agencies under certain defined conditions. Doctors, of course, and their representatives spoke passionately about the confidential nature of the information that's exchanged between them as practitioners and their patients and the fiduciary responsibility and the moral commitment that doctors make to dealing with their patients and the information that they surrender to them about very personal sorts of things about themselves and not to disclose it to third parties. So that was one concern that was expressed.

On the other hand, of course, we heard from representatives of pharmacists, from representatives of pharmaceutical companies. The pharmacists, on one hand, and the pharmaceutical industry, on the other, for different reasons wanted the ability to have access to the information, especially information having to do with the use of certain drugs or the pattern of drug use by us as patients. The concern among the committee members and others that was put before the pharmaceutical industry representative at the time was, of course, about the nature of the commercial interests that the pharmaceutical industry would have in having that information and wanting to promote or to market certain drugs. Was the commercial interest of the pharmaceutical companies the same as the public interest that the changes in the Health Information Act were supposed to serve? So very serious issues were raised and dilemmas presented to this committee.

This bill, I think, needs a very thorough scrutiny of this Legislature before it receives its support and final consent. I would be very concerned if this piece of legislation makes it obligatory for doctors to disclose the information then prevents the doctors from receiving in the first place the very relevant information that they need in order to provide the proper treatment for their patients.

If the patients know that the information that they are giving to their doctors is likely to be disclosed and that doctors have no recourse but to disclose it because they are required by legislation to do so, they may under certain conditions be reluctant, as a matter of fact, to share that information with their own doctors. This patient/doctor relationship adopts a relationship of confidentiality and mutual trust. The doctors see themselves as the trustees of the information in the interest of the person who's providing that information; that is, the patient. So there is a risk in requiring disclosure of patient information by doctors to third parties that either that doctor will have difficulty adducing that information from their patients and, therefore, will err in making appropriate diagnoses and prescribing appropriate treatments subsequent to that or that the doctors might be conflicted by the oaths that they give with respect to respecting that confidentiality, on the one hand, and then breaching that confidentiality because a particular piece of legislation or statute requires them to do so.

So those are some of the sort of principle concerns that were expressed, I think, to the committee. I believe it's two or three years ago. I hope I'm not oversimplifying those. The contents of this bill need to be judged and scrutinized in light of some of these principle considerations, which have to do with our obligation to protect the nature of the doctor/patient relationship that the medical profession considers essential to enhance their ability to provide the best possible care that they can to their patients. What's at stake if diagnostic errors are made because appropriate information is not accessible to doctors is the health of the patients, of course, the health of Albertans, the increased costs to the public health care system because if the diagnosis is wrong, then clearly the resources that the doctor commits to providing a cure or a prescription may be wasteful.

Thirdly, the efficiency of the system in general in terms of providing timely medical service which is appropriate to an Albertan suffering from a certain illness or disease may be compromised, and the cost-effectiveness of the system may also be compromised. So there are important considerations here that I think need to be addressed as we go through this bill, particularly during the next phase of its study, during the clause-by-clause study and the debate during the committee stage.

At this stage I think I just wanted to lay out some of my recollections from my work on that committee. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you might have been on that committee as well. I'm not sure if you were on it, but I think you might have been.

I think the intention of the legislation is made explicit in the news release from the Alberta Health and Wellness ministry. It says that the proposed amendments will do the following: "Allow information disclosure among governments and some third parties for the purposes of paying for services and ensuring accountability." Now, third parties could be insurance companies that provide insurance for some medical services that are presently not covered, but they could also come into the field to cover services that may be delisted in the future. So I have some concern about what these third parties are, what conditions are anticipated under which third parties will have access to this information for purposes of payment for services. It does concern me that this reference to third parties having access to this information for the purposes of payment for services may imply the introduction of private health care in this province. I just want to underline the fact that it's a possibility here and underscore the fact that there's a need to be concerned about what the bill might intend, in fact, to achieve.

There's another: "Allow discretionary disclosures for reasons of public safety and to prevent or report public health system fraud." Now, true, I think we need to make our public health system as fraud-proof as possible. That certainly would be important in order to increase its efficiency, reduce costs, and reduce waste, but again

I think we need to tread carefully with respect to this matter. We need to know what the instance of fraud is, what the possibilities are, what the potential for fraud is, and then take appropriate action if you're convinced that there is a serious problem.

"Allow Alberta Health and Wellness to better track drug trends." I think it's in principle not a bad thing because there are various drugs for the same illness that compete with each other for markets, and it is in the interest of the public health care system of Alberta, if it is to save costs, to be able to track drug trends and to identify drugs which are of equal value in terms of health outcomes but are, in fact, cheaper, and therefore doctors and the medical profession perhaps should be encouraged to prescribe those rather than the more expensive drugs which may be marketed through high-pressure marketing activities by pharmaceutical companies. Fine. Again, I think that as long as this drug tracking is for purposes of controlling drug costs and ensuring that appropriate drug use is made in the system, it's something that is worth our support, but we need to be looking at other implications of it.

Another purpose that's stated here in this release is, "Facilitate greater use of the electronic health record by giving pharmacists and doctors more complete patient drug histories." I think that's a very worthy goal to be achieved if we can achieve efficiencies through this electronic health record and transmission through those records of the appropriate information between and among doctors and perhaps between doctors and pharmacists.

Another purpose: "Protect the privacy of Albertans by ensuring their health and other personal information cannot be automatically disclosed in response to a United States court order under the Patriot Act." I think that is an extremely important concern. This is a concern that came up again and again at the proceedings of the committee. Mr. Work, the Privacy Commissioner, appeared before us, as a matter of fact, and undertook at that time to review, in conjunction with a review being done at the time by the province of B.C., to see what kind of legislative changes we need to make in order to protect the health-related information of Albertans that may be in the hands of insurance companies and others which are subject to the PATRIOT law in the U.S.

So, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity and will sit down and give other members a chance to speak too.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close debate.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I've spoken at some length regarding the contents of Bill 31 at the time that I moved second reading. I will have some further comments to make in response to issues raised by members of the opposition when the bill moves to committee. I would urge all members to support Bill 31 on second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to address the remaining issues and questions that were left outstanding during second reading.

Before I do that, however, I'd like to introduce an amendment being proposed for Bill 14 and ask for its circulation in the House. Perhaps I'll wait until it's circulated.

The Chair: We will call this amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, you may proceed on amendment A1.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Section 2(18)(b)(iv) of Bill 14 contains an amendment to the practice statement of opticians which includes a reference to assessing eye health. The intent of the amendment is to ensure that the college of opticians has the jurisdiction to regulate its members when performing assessments, including sight testing and refractions. This activity is currently undertaken by opticians. While Bill 14 met this objective, the College of Optometrists is concerned that the use of the term "assess eye health" implies a broader range of activities.

The councils of the Alberta College of Optometrists and the Alberta Opticians Association have agreed to a revision that would replace the phrase "assess eye health" with "conduct assessments." The proposed House amendment will continue to meet the original objective, using wording that has been agreed on by both optometrists and opticians. The proposed amendment is intended to reflect the service currently provided by opticians, which is conducting assessments. The amendment does not change the scope of practice.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move the amendment, which states that section 2(18)(b)(iv) is amended in the proposed clause (c.1) by striking out "assess eye health" and substituting "conduct assessments."

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on A1.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have received some correspondence, not truckloads but some, from opticians operating in Edmonton-Centre. They have put the case before me as well that is in fact reflected in this government amendment, so obviously the government heard a good deal about it as well. The issue that was being raised was that it should not expand the scope of practice beyond what was laid out. This does give the impression that it was going to be allowing for prescription services for the opticians to be prescribing, which would be expanding their scope of practice.

Obviously, this is a fairly comfortable fit for everyone that is involved in this particular area, and I have no objections to it. We have not received any stakeholder feedback that would indicate that there is a huge push-back against what is being proposed here. Everyone seems to be willing to accept it, and I am willing to do that as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I, too, have received a fair bit of information regarding this concern of opticians in regard to this one particular section. I do want to acknowledge the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat's capacity to recognize this as well. Undoubtedly the other side was receiving the same sort of message.

This amendment to section 2, sort of changing the language and making it less specific, is certainly welcome from that industry. I had said before in second reading of this bill that, in fact, we had to be very careful about repealing provisions and changing the regulation of the ability for certain professions to carry out certain procedures. I think we have to be sure that we're consulting with the various practitioners of all health care professions before we mess around with it.

Of course, the individual colleges that might dictate pharmacy and medicine and optometry and dentistry and the like all have their own very specific concerns. In fact, I received some correspondence from the massage therapist practitioners speaking specifically on section 25, making sure that they are not excluded from determining their own profession regarding the dissemination of information and application of their craft.

I think that it's important for us to recognize the value of this particular amendment. I, in fact, welcome it, and so do the opticians. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak briefly to the amendment as well. As you know, in years past I spent a good deal of time as an elected official working on the Health Professions Act and so came to know many of these professions almost on a first-name basis, so to speak, and became very, very familiar with some of the issues that are involved. The issue with respect to eye health is a long-standing one that we spent many, many hours on in discussion with the various professionals that are involved in providing services, with the optometrists, the opticians, and the ophthalmologists, or the three Os as they became affectionately known.

I think what needs to be made very clear through this amendment is that the prescribing of lenses continues to be a restricted activity and is not involved in the scope of practice for the opticians. There has been some confusion about whether or not the conducting of assessments as is proposed in this amendment would include prescribing corrective lenses. I'm satisfied in the discussions that I've had with the member as well as the minister that this amendment and the intent of the bill itself is to clarify that the conducting of assessments is a completely different service than the prescribing of lenses, which remains a restricted activity and would not be done by anyone other than those that have the restricted activity within their scope of practice.

With that, I support the amendment before us.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on the amendment.

Ms Pastoor: Yes, Mr. Chair. Just for clarification may I ask a question on this?

The Chair: Yes.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I guess that my question would go to the mover of this amendment. I would like to know if, in fact, the prescribing of prescriptions, then, would still remain with the ophthalmologist. I'm thinking of prescription drugs, drops, et cetera.

Ms Blakeman: Yes.

Ms Pastoor: But not with the opticians?

Ms Blakeman: That's right. It's not expanding this one.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I have my question answered. Thank you to my hon. caucus member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have a couple of concerns and questions for the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat regarding conducting assessments which are referred to in the amendment. What I would like to be informed on is whether or not refractions are part of those assessments and, as the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat had indicated, whether or not those would be used for the purposes of prescription? While I recognize that prescriptions would not be to an outside body or an outside provider, would it be possible to do an assessment and have those lenses prescribed in-house? In other words, would there be some limitation on the choice of the individual if they did have an assessment or a refraction done in the context of the optician's office?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In answer to that question, basically refractions refer to tests that measure the refraction error of the eye. The tests are noninvasive and are not dangerous in any way. The purpose of the test is to gather information. A similar example would be blood pressure testing, which is noninvasive and provides information. Basically, refracting is collecting data. The amendment on conducting assessments was agreed to by the College of Optometrists and the Opticians Association as an alternative to having the words "assess eye health" because they felt that assess eye health was too broad a statement that perhaps could be construed to be out of their scope of practice. So that's why it was changed. They both agreed to that, and that is why the amendment is here.

To answer the other part of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill's question regarding prescriptions, as I mentioned, refracting is collecting data. In fact, the chair of the ophthalmology department at the U of A wrote me a letter, and he clearly supported the practice of opticians doing refractions because adding refractions to the practice statement for opticians does not give them the right to prescribe. It only ensures that those opticians who are currently refracting may be appropriately regulated under the regulations for the college of opticians of Alberta under the Health Professions Act.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A question for the hon. member. You just mentioned that opticians are not allowed to prescribe. I understand that when optometrists write a prescription, that that can be used anywhere. They can take that prescription and use it anywhere, you know, to obtain glasses or contact lenses or whatever. I'm just wondering: if opticians are allowed to do refraction, is that not then used to prescribe or, I guess, to make glasses or to make contact lenses? If it is, then is this not the first jurisdiction in North America to allow opticians to perform a refraction?

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, are we not still speaking to the amendment?

The Chair: Yes. We are on amendment A1.

Mr. Mitzel: Okay. I'll continue on, then, with refractions. Really, refractions are not part of conducting assessments as far as the terminology for the amendment is concerned, but if you wish, I can continue on.

The Chair: As long as your comments are restricted to amendment A1.

Mr. Mitzel: Okay. Well, you mentioned prescriptions. As I mentioned before, opticians can perform refractions, which is gathering information. This information then is sent to optometrists in order to do a prescription. Opticians cannot prescribe.

Ms Blakeman: They collect the information.

Mr. Mitzel: They collect the information. That's correct.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: On Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act as amended, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to now address some of the issues that were raised during second reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre expressed concern about the statute of limitations being increased to two years and that increasing the timelines from six months to two years may not be enough time. I really appreciate the concern. It should be noted, however, that the two-year time limit refers to the time for the commencement of the prosecution.

There was also a concern expressed that the minister is being given the authority to choose who is recognized as a member of a profession. The issue is regulating, not recognizing, professions. Not all professions are regulated. As currently worded, an application to regulate a health profession under the Health Professions Act must be made by an association representing the majority of the practitioners in the profession. To determine that an association represents a majority of persons carrying on that profession in Alberta, it's necessary to identify the members or practitioners of the profession currently practising. This includes identifying the members of the association making the application and other practitioners who are not members. This is extremely limiting. Also, it is often only when legislation is being developed that basic requirements for entering into the profession are clearly defined. Thus, before a decision is taken to regulate the profession, it may not be clear whether an individual will ultimately qualify as a member of the profession.

The amendment would give the minister a broader discretion to initiate investigations where appropriate. With the amendment any professional association representing practitioners of the profession could apply to the minister to have a health profession regulated. The minister must then decide whether it's in the public's interest to proceed with the application. The association making the application simply initiates the process. It does not necessarily define the scope of the investigation, nor will the association making the application necessarily become the regulatory body for the profession. It's important to emphasize that the minister is not being given the authority to choose who is regulated or recognized. That decision rests ultimately with the Legislature. Professional self-governance is not a right but a privilege which is delegated to professions only when the public interest is served by doing so and the advantages clearly outweigh the disadvantages.

There was a concern about the Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners being left out and whether there would be consideration of a lower level of training or varied levels of training so that they could still be regulated. The first issue that has to be considered is if this profession should be regulated. An investigation to determine whether a profession should be regulated under the Health Professions Act would not leave any association or group of practitioners who want to be heard left out of the investigation process. In conducting an investigation the Health Professions Advisory Board would be expected to ascertain the qualifications and the minimum standards of competence that are required for a person applying to practise their profession. When a decision is made to regulate a profession, the intent is not to take away a practitioner's ability to accept referrals or to charge for the provision of massage services, rather it's to ensure the practitioners who do so meet acceptable standards.

Any regulatory initiative would have to address the concerns of current practitioners who do not meet the requirements for registration once these have been determined. Having different levels within the profession is certainly one option. Other options include grandfathering and allowing for upgrading programs or opportunities to challenge the requirements. The amendment to the act will allow the minister to initiate the process to determine if the regulation is appropriate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said that for the last 22 years the province has required that an application for regulation by health professions must be made by an organization that represents the majority of the persons carrying on that profession. In point of fact, that's not the case. Before the Health Professions Act, the Health Disciplines Act generally permitted an association representing a health profession to apply under the act to have a health discipline designated. The only time the Health Disciplines Act required that the association represent a majority of practitioners was if the application concerned a profession that was already regulated. This ensured that if a profession was regulated by another statute, the government would only consider bringing the profession under the Health Disciplines Act if the majority of the members of the profession agreed. The provision addressed a concern that a disgruntled minority within a profession or perhaps a minister would initiate an investigation and force a profession that was already regulated under the Health Disciplines Act.

There was mention of the health policy framework. The Health Professions Act, not the bill being debated today, is mentioned in the framework. The act was passed in 1999 and came into force in 2001. The amendments before us have risen from issues experienced by the professions and the government in administering the act since it came into force.

In regard to the professional regulations that are under development, the regulations for chiropractors, dental hygienists, opticians, respiratory therapists, occupational therapists, and pharmacists are being finalized. The process, however, takes time as final drafting issues still need to be resolved. Once a draft is finalized, it must be approved by a council of the college before it is submitted for final approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Specifying a date when a professional regulation may be ready is not realistic. Nonetheless, it's anticipated that these regulations will be forwarded for approval this spring.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder raised a concern about using the term "specialist" in an injudicious manner. The addition of this authority will permit the regulatory bodies for each profession to restrict the use of the title "specialist" by their members. This authority will provide a level of protection to the public. If a member of a profession specializes in an area of practice – for example, a physical therapist who is a sports medicine specialist – and wants to advertise to the public as such, that member may be required to meet the criteria set by the council of their college.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View said that there was a need for every profession to have a separation between their licensing body and their professional interest body. The Health Professions Act does not require absolute separation between regulatory and union functions. With respect to fee negotiation and other economic activities, the act mandates a functional separation but not an absolute physical separation.

Further to the minister's comments regarding consultation transparency, the amendment to section 25 of the Health Professions Act simply enables the minister to initiate the process to determine whether or not it is appropriate to regulate a health profession. Within that process, organizations that represent the practitioners of the profession in question and other professions will have an opportunity to participate in the Health Professions Advisory Board process.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. These are my comments, and I ask the committee for consideration of Bill 14.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. Thank you for the explanation from the sponsoring member. I am going to go back to a couple of areas that I raised concerns on.

For the most part, he did answer my question or address my concerns, but the area that is continuing to cause the most acrimony or conflict is the section in this bill which appears as section (4), which is amending section 25 of the original bill. Specifically, that's the one that is taking out the provision that an application would "be made by an organization that represents the majority." That's being deleted, and essentially it's now being left to the discretion of the minister. "If the minister is satisfied that this is in the public interest," they can proceed, which frankly I think is a good amendment to be bringing in. We have some long-running, acrimonious difficulties with some professions that have either subsections or have developed sort of additional arms of their particular kind of practice, and the majority rule just doesn't work. The minister does need the flexibility, and I recognize that. As I said, I'm supportive for the most part.

However, the concern that I brought forward was around addressing that concern that manifests itself most distinctly in the massage therapist example, which is that you have a group of people who are not going to meet that standard. That's not to say that individuals may not progress beyond that and take additional training, but that level of health service provision is never going to meet the standard that's being set because the standard is one involving scope of practice for health professionals.

Essentially, massage therapists I think don't claim to represent themselves as health professionals, but they are offering a service that many people find contributes to their health and well-being. The issue here is that if they are not recognized officially in some way, they in fact would lose the ability to be charging for their services and being able to seek reimbursement through private insurance plans that detail, of course, that this has to be recognized in some way or that a doctor has given a prescription for the person to go ahead and do this.

I'm still looking for some kind of concrete accommodation here.

What I heard from the sponsoring member is: "Well, there are different ways of dealing with this. You could try this, or you could try this, or you could try that." What I'm looking for from the sponsoring member is confirmation that it's expected that the ministry will work with this particular group and any others in similar situations. I'm not aware of who those might be. I'm talking specifically about the massage therapists because they will have to fit to a different standard. I fail to see why we can't have a secondary standard put in place here that is a subsection that recognizes that the services provided can be recognized as helpful, with health meaning, but they don't meet the higher standard.

I think I gave an example before of when I was in British Columbia and had an injury that was causing me a great deal of pain. It was limiting mobility. I went in and I said, "This is what I need." They said: "Oh, yes, you need a registered massage therapist who has health training. They have three years' worth and X number of hours of supervised training. That's who you need because it's of a medical level." There was an arrangement made for me to hook up with that person the next day. The only thing they could offer me on the first day was, literally, a massage therapist who does a nice relaxing massage, which wasn't incredibly helpful to what I was seeking. But they recognize in B.C. that there are differing levels of it. I'm seeking assurance here that the department will proceed and work with the massage therapists immediately so that they don't get cut off. If this bill passes, that's essentially what would happen to them. Without assurance that work will be done to accommodate them, I raise serious objections. I guess that is what I'm saying.

Overall on that amending section I think it's a good idea, but here's the catch. This is the holdback. It may be the one and only exception, but it might be indicative of some other areas although I'm hard-pressed to think of what those might be. I'm looking for, rather than just a "well, this could happen or that could happen," an actual commitment that there will be an approach and a working relationship established between the massage therapists and department officials to in fact work towards some kind of accommodation. I don't want to leave these people out in the cold, in other words.

The one other section that was problematic for me – and I didn't hear the member address it – is the one around the complaints. Okay. That's coming up as section (7) in the bill on page 4, which is amending in the original bill section 54(1), which is striking out that a person may give a written, signed complaint to the complaints director regarding blah, blah, blah. That was being struck out, so it wasn't requiring a written complaint any more.

Then it went on to another section, in fact, section (8) in the amending bill, section 56 in the original bill, that's saying that, well, it could be done on oral information. I really believe that if you are making a complaint about somebody, if it's serious enough to start an investigation, then the information should not be oral or anonymous.

Now, if there were reasons of expediency or imminent danger or life-threatening or something, well, then let's put that in the act, but none of that is flowing from the amendment that I'm seeing here. I think what's important here is that we maintain the ability of someone, literally, to cross-examine their accuser, which is what our court system is based on. If I'm going to say, "You done me wrong, and you violated some particular provision," you've got the right to say: "Okay. You say that. You identify who you are." I get to question you about where that came from. We don't deal with stuff based on anonymous phone calls or, you know, a message left on an answering machine or even an unsigned note slipped under the door. You can't do that here. You've got to know who you're talking about and what the contextual circumstances are. On that basis, you could be going ahead and dealing with a complaint that's coming from someone who was, frankly, medically delusional or paranoid.

So I think we have to protect here, and either I didn't hear the explanation or the member didn't address it. That's the other area of concern that I have here. I was looking for something to be done to assure me that we would not end up in that situation, where this could be done anonymously or just on an oral basis. I think it is fairly serious when you start to get into complaints around professions and regulated professions.

Those continue to be my areas. I will look forward to hearing what the member has to say, and based on that, I will consider whether I will be supporting the passage of this bill in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My remarks will be short as I stand simply to voice a concern that has been presented to me. I've had constituents raise questions about refractions being performed by opticians who, I am told, do not have the training to detect possible eye health risks such as eye diseases. The question presented to me was whether or not there is any danger of compromising eye health through refraction examination by opticians. I wonder if the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat can clarify this for me.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll clarify this first question, then get back over to the other questions. I might say thanks to the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Performing refractions refer to tests that measure the refractive error of the eye, and the tests are really noninvasive. This brings up the issue that you mentioned about whether there's a health risk or not. They're not dangerous in any way. The purpose of these tests is to gather information, and as I mentioned previously, a similar example would be blood pressure testing, which is also noninvasive and provides information. It's collecting data, and really that's what it is. I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

Back to the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre regarding the massage therapists. As I mentioned in my remarks on the previous question, there is an option there for perhaps grandfathering or for allowing for upgrading programs or whatever. But besides that, I think the amendment refers to the initial application received by an organization. This is an organization seeking to become a regulated profession. That's really what this amendment speaks to. It's been difficult in practice to know whether a group represents a majority.

The amendment allows, I believe, for greater flexibility. I know that the member asked about whether there would be assurances that there would be different levels of training that would be regulated. This amendment allows for more flexibility to let this happen and for any of these referrals of applications to the Health Professions Advisory Board, the body responsible for undertaking the investigations of the applications for regulation. I think there's flexibility in the amendment to allow that to happen. To state emphatically that it's going to happen: I don't believe that's what the amendment was for. It's to allow the flexibility to be able to do this.

On the other point that you had, with regard to section 54(1), you spoke to the complaints. Really, 54(1) has been changed and substituted to say that "a person who makes a complaint to a complaints director regarding a regulated member or a former member must do so in writing and must sign the written complaint." It also goes on in section 56 – this has been amended though – to clarify that a complaints director will have the flexibility to accept a verbal complaint should a circumstance arise. So what it's doing, really, is giving the complaints director or the minister the flexibility to address this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, will promise to be brief on this Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. I have general comments and then one specific comment at the end.

My general comment is with regard to something I talked about earlier when we were discussing Bill 31, Health Information Amendment Act, 2006. It's that angle of working collaboratively and looking at the patient from a holistic standpoint: one patient, multiple-disease state or multiple afflictions, many practitioners looking after that one person. However, it's the model that is currently being proposed in Alberta, which is the working together model and practitioners co-operating and sharing information.

I do not disqualify, of course, that there are situations where we need regulations. We need professional conduct guidelines, codes of ethics, competency assessments, requirements for continuing education, and discussions or decisions made on membership fees for belonging to a certain professional body, like a college or an association, for example. I mentioned that, you know, some of those concerns are general, and they don't really pertain to one profession or the other. You can apply the same argument to any number of professions, and it equally holds.

How about if we talk about professional fees charged for various services rendered? Physiotherapists, for example, a while back raised concerns with respect to the fees they can charge and the number of visits a patient is entitled to have; for example, after a motor vehicle accident. Many of the concerns were basically stemming from what they perceived to be lack of consultation. They were not involved in the decision-making, and they feel that the decision was basically arrived at by insurance companies sort of lobbying to go a certain way. They don't feel that they can deliver a good enough service or a professional, quality service for the fees that they can now collect. Many of them have let staff go. Many of them have reduced their hours of operation and things like that. So the issue of consultation, the issue of, you know, what is deemed appropriate, what is deemed fair from a compensation standpoint . . .

Ms Blakeman: Why do we allow an insurance company to set the rate?

Mr. Elsalhy: Why do we allow an insurance company to set the rate, which sometimes might appear to be lobbying from big business to do something that is not necessarily in the best interest of the patient? You can look at it from a conflict of interest standpoint as well because insurance companies should really just provide what is necessary because they collect hefty amounts of money, and when it's time for them to furnish a service or cover it, then they look for ways not to.

Take pharmacy, as another example, and the difficulties pharmacists face when negotiating fees with Alberta Blue Cross either annually or every number of years. You know, Mr. Chair, it is not known to me and to many professionals and many Albertans whether, in fact, Blue Cross receives any sort of direction from the government or whether they operate at arm's length. Sometimes it is convenient to say that they're independent and that they run their own affairs, but then at other times they are portrayed to be an extension of the government and that it's the Alberta provincial insurance agency or, you know, state insurance.

I can go on, Mr. Chair, but the point really is that government, third-party payers, and front-line providers, no matter which profession you're talking about and which service is being provided, should sit down together in good faith to discuss the issues, determine the fees, determine what's provided for, what's covered and what's not. Potentially, you can even expand it to include members of the public because the trend now is to include members of the public on various committees and various boards. So why not involve them in the negotiation process whenever a profession is dealing with the government or with a third-party payer to arrive at those fees?

Now, the specific point that I referenced earlier was definitely mentioned before and was touched on by the hon. sponsor of the bill – and I thank him – and also by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. It's with regard to the Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners. I, too, received a communication from them. It was really pleading with myself and members of this Assembly to try to intervene on their behalf because they feel that they were left out, that they were not adequately and thoroughly consulted. In fact, in their own words, they say that they knew about this amendment simply by chance.

One of their arguments, which I find strong, is that the consultation paper which was sent out was sent out to groups that are deemed to be health profession regulatory boards, but they think – and I agree – that the discussion should have involved people who are on volunteer boards. So not the regulated associations but the volunteer professional organizations. The other thing they object to – and I kind of agree – is that the amendment was deemed to be minor and that it was only like sort of housekeeping or a little cleaning, but we feel that it really does involve a big scope, and it's not anything minor.

We discussed section 25(2)(a), which talks about organizations making an application when they are representing a majority of those members. The Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners and myself to some extent are concerned that maybe in the future, because now we're allowing minority organizations to apply, we might be dividing professional bodies into competing or quarreling factions. You know, a certain group of practitioners might apply to the one agency because their policies are favourable. Another group might apply to that other one because their professional standards are higher. Then you might have situations where you get disparity in the level of quality of service and also in the fees charged. You will notice that things will become not even or not fair across the board.

So with that, Mr. Chair, I thank you for this opportunity to put my concerns on the record, and I invite further discussion.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much for those remarks from the hon. member. A lot of the remarks that the hon. member made really concerned the professions and the practitioners co-operating, but the bill really speaks not to that they're allowed to charge but whether there's an opportunity to have them officially recognized so that they can be regulated. I agree with the member that certainly they should get together and work out proper payment schedules that fit the needs that are there. I've heard the same remarks from practitioners and from other residents in my constituency regarding the inability to receive the amount of service that's required in order to be able to get whatever condition they have corrected.

I think the other item that you mentioned was with regard to the massage therapists, and you're right. As I mentioned, they certainly feel that they have been left out, and I've also received those same letters. Really, I guess this is where the bill is hopefully set up so that with the flexibility there will be an opportunity for the minister to be able to address whether any one of those different groups should be or should not be regulated, whether they should be organized as a profession. This goes back to the comment that the Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned about perhaps different levels of training. So I think the flexibility is there. I'd certainly hope it is.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know I sort of touched on this during the speech on the amendment, but I guess I would just like to ask if the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is aware of the letter from the Alberta Association of Optometrists dated May 1, 2006, which says that optometry is not willing to live with opticians performing refractions. Again, I'm wondering if the hon. member is willing to add the word "supervised" somewhere in this Committee of the Whole stage, if he could add the word "supervised," saying that the opticians must be supervised by optometrists in order to make sure that the right job is being done here. So it's just a question, I guess, to the hon. member, and I'm wondering if he's seen this letter and what his response is to it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I have seen the letter. I've gone through it, and I've spoken to the executive director of the College of Optometrists, and I've spoken to the executive director of the association of opticians also. The point is that when we tried to get consensus between both those organizations, we could not get that consensus, and that's why that was not put in there.

I think I can harken back perhaps to an incident some years ago when optometrists were given the authority to provide medicine, to provide drugs. Now, the college of ophthalmologists protested very, very strongly with regard to this. The same type of discussion and concerns and differences were raised then as are raised now with the opticians and the optometrists. That whole thing has become a nonissue for the ophthalmologists and the optometrists, and they're working together. It's our hope that this same thing will happen with the opticians and the optometrists.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. I think that in the last go-round the sponsoring member got closer to what I was looking for, which was some sort of lifting beyond what was actually on the page here. Essentially, we're creating a situation with this amending act that didn't exist before, and it has implications for a group of people who were able to get references through the health care system and charge for their services. With the passage of this, they will no longer be able to do that. I was looking for assurance from the sponsoring member that there were other ways for the group to go at it, that the ministry was willing to do it, and I've now heard that from him.

I'll be going back to the Association of Massage Therapists and Wholistic Practitioners and advising that they get in touch with the department and start to work with the minister to see if they can get a secondary level of standards put in place that would address what they need to do from a public health point of view, for example. So the possibilities are there, I have the assurance, it's in Hansard, that's what I was seeking, and I'm happy to go forward with the act at this point.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 14, Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 14 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 25 Securities Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity this evening to speak to Bill 25, Securities Amendment Act, 2006, again. I appreciate the comments made earlier this month by the hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I'm pleased that they both recognize the importance of the legislation. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford indicated that he generally supports the legislation, most especially the provisions enhancing investor protection. There are two House amendments to Bill 25. I will get to them momentarily.

First, I'd like to respond to comments raised by the hon. members during debate in second reading two weeks ago. Both members talked about the idea of a single securities regulator for Canada. Certainly, this is not surprising. You know, the mention of it, of course, was even in the last amendment that we brought in a year ago. The question was brought up then, and we had some debate with respect to it. The answer now, Mr. Chairman, is no different, really, than it was then. The provinces and territories may one day decide to go down the road toward a single securities regulator for Canada, across the country, but we don't really know when that will happen, and we can't predict the future. At this point all of the provinces are not prepared to do that.

Regardless, I think that what we need to focus on now are the steps in this legislation. They're steps that must be taken whether or not we end up with a single regulator. Whether Canada's capital markets are eventually regulated by a single authority or not, we're out competing on a global scale, and these amendments are necessary. If we're to remain competitive, we need to harmonize securities regulation across the country and broaden the passport system implemented last year.

Part of harmonizing Alberta's securities regulatory regime with other Canadian jurisdictions involves repealing some provisions of Alberta's existing Securities Act. Those provisions would then be placed into national rules. I'm aware that both members were wary of this during second reading debate. However, national rules, or national instruments as they are called, are subject to a public consultation process. Canadians and, of course, Albertans will still be able to review the proposed regulations and provide their input.

Mr. Chairman, previously the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford praised the investor protection aspects of Bill 25 but said that he wanted to see more in the way of enforcement. Certainly, enforcement and investor protection are key priorities in the ongoing work between Alberta and its partners in security reform, but I would remind the hon. member of some of the improvements to enforcement that we added to the Securities Act last year. Briefly, the changes included a broader and more powerful prohibition against making untrue or misleading statements, prohibiting manipulative transactions and trade activities that artificially inflate the market, adding a prohibition against front-running, adding a new obstruction of justice prohibition dealing with activities that hinder or interfere with reviews and investigations, and expanding the insider trading prohibition.

Mr. Chairman, that's in addition to giving the Alberta Securities Commission and Alberta courts new enforcement powers and increasing the maximum administrative penalty available to the commission to $1 million. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford expressed some concern earlier at the amount of the penalty, however, but I must say that it's in line with other large jurisdictions in Canada, including Ontario.

Now, I realize that the hon. members had some other concerns, but let me remind them that this is part of a much larger, ongoing process. Canada leads the Council of Ministers of Securities Regulation and is working diligently with the other provinces and territories to improve the securities regulatory system in Alberta and across Canada. Investor protection, which is closely linked to enforcement, is a fundamental objective of the work the provinces and territories are doing under the memorandum of understanding that was signed in September 2004.

Mr. Chairman, I hope these comments are helpful in clarifying the issues before the Assembly.

I would ask to have the amendments we are proposing distributed.

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Mr. Knight: Thank you.

The Chair: We'll just wait a moment until they're distributed.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Amendments to Bill 25, Securities Amendment Act, 2006, are as follows. Section 3 is struck out and the following is substituted: sections 7 and 7.1 are repealed; section 36 is amended by striking out "and" at the end of proposed section 180(1)(d) and substituting "or".

Mr. Chairman, to speak just briefly to the amendments that we're proposing, the first amendment is the provision on deemed insiders of an income trust and, along with other detailed insider reporting requirements, is being repealed so that it can be placed in national rules.

Section 36 of the Securities Amendment Act, which amends 180(1)(d) in the Securities Act, will be changed by replacing the word "and" with the word "or" at the end of the section. What that does is make it consistent with the structure of section 35 in the Securities Amendment Act.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A1.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In regard to this amendment could I have some clarification, please? I don't see this amendment as signed by either the hon. member or Parliamentary Counsel. Is it just the original that was to be signed or the entire House that was to receive a signed copy? Could you clarify that for me, please?

The Chair: Hon. member, if you look up in the top left-hand corner, it's initialled. It's a government amendment, and that's apparently acceptable. Peter Pagano.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Now, at this time I have a question for the hon. member, and it isn't specific to this amendment but to the remarks that he made leading up to the introduction of this amendment. Perhaps I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague until this amendment is dealt with, and I will direct my questions at that time to the hon. member.

Thank you.

The Chair: Anyone else wish to speak to the amendment? Are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now, on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a question for the hon. member in regard to the administrative penalty. The hon. member, in his remarks about 10 minutes ago if I heard him correctly – and if he could clarify this, I would be grateful – indicated that there was an increase in the administrative penalty. This was in regard to the commission. There was to be an increase in the administrative penalty to a figure of not more than $1 million for “each contravention or failure to comply. Now, section 199 presently reads, as I understand it, and I'm quoting here, Mr. Chairman, “The commission may order the person or company to pay an administrative penalty of not more than $1 000 000 for each contravention or failure to comply.” Could the hon. member please clarify what exactly he's referring to when he indicates to the House that there was to be an increase in this administrative penalty?

Thank you.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, if I might. The part that would've been perhaps misunderstood was that what I did say was, “I would remind the hon. member of some of the improvements to enforcement that we added to the Securities Act last year.” That was one of the amendments that we made last year. So what you're reading there is exactly right: it was a million dollars. That's already been done. We're not doing that in this particular amendment. It was an amendment that was done in the last Securities Act amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that clarification from the hon. member.

Now, in regard to the commission and the fact that there was a substantial increase in Alberta Securities Commission fees in the hon. Minister of Finance's recent budget. I believe it was an average of about 8 per cent. I don't have the fiscal plan with me here. An hon. colleague borrowed it and has yet to return it. Could you confirm that the increase in fees to the Alberta Securities Commission is going to be used to pay for this increased enforcement as a result of this bill?

Thank you.

Mr. Knight: I would have to reply to the question, I think, by advising the member that I will get an answer for the question because I honestly couldn't say that the fees are directed specifically to enforcement. If that's the question, then I'm afraid that I'm unable to answer that question at this time.

Mrs. McClellan: The fees that are collected are entirely for the operation of the commission. The commission is not funded by the Alberta government at all. It is funded by industry. We can inquire as to whether they designate certain fees to certain parts of the operation, but I would suspect that it contributes to the overall operation of the commission.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 25 here in committee. I feel that this is an important bill as it affects the operations of the securities market and a basic tool of the economy. I'm glad to see that we're debating it at some length here and, indeed, staying until after midnight to proceed with this because there are literally untold billions of dollars at stake in how we handle these debates and the rules we put in place.

As I think all members here will know, the Securities Commission in Alberta has been the subject of a lot of controversy in the last 12 to 18 months. As many people will also know, I have defended the notion of a local, provincially-based securities regulator, the Alberta Securities Commission, in contrast to many others in this country who support a single, national regulator. There are arguments on both sides.

My reason for supporting an Alberta-based provincial securities regulator is that they do allow some adaptation to local circumstances. They are more easily accessible to a local investment group, and indeed as we know, in Alberta in general and particularly in Calgary there's an extremely vigorous public investment community. For them to have direct access to a securities commission is important. For that securities commission to be harmonized with other securities commissions in Canada, as Bill 25 is doing, I think is a step in the right direction.

However, I am concerned – and I just wanted to get this on the record, Mr. Chairman – that at some point the credibility of the Alberta Securities Commission becomes so tarnished that I begin to wonder whether I ought not to change my position and consider supporting a national regulator. I haven't done that, but I have considered it, and I would do it with great reluctance. I need to be blunt: the only reason that I would do it is that the leadership provided by this government on the Securities Commission has been so weak and poor that the record of the Alberta Securities Commission is now really tarnished in Canada and, indeed, in some other international markets. I won't belabour the issue given the late hour, although there are members here who were asking me for details.

Bill 25, I think, is a complicated bill. I'm not an expert in the details of securities regulation, but I'm going to assume that it's well crafted in pretty well every detail, although we have seen a couple of government amendments. Whenever that happens, it does make me wonder what other things might have been missed in drafting a bill. I'll assume that this bill is well intended and now, with the government amendments in place, is well crafted and will move forward with harmonizing Alberta's securities regulations with the rest of the country.

I am concerned that it's too late for that and that the forces moving towards a national securities regulator have now gained so much momentum because of the failures, frankly, of governments like this government to vigorously clean house in the Securities Commission, that in the longer term this entire bill may be overwhelmed by larger national forces.

It's a step in the right direction, but my real concern is that it's too little too late. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a couple of comments. I appreciate the support and the interest in the Securities Commission as an important part of our economy. I would reference the hon. member to my colleague's comments when he spoke to questions on second reading on this. Something that we have said consistently is that all of the work that we are doing in the passport system, which all provinces have signed onto in Canada with the exception of Ontario, does lead to a very positive end if it is decided at some point that there should be a common regulator. As I was reading the budget information from the federal government, there is a section in there – I'm sure that everybody is just gripped by reading this stuff – focusing on priorities, turning a new leaf on this, and they do talk about a common regulator.

What work we've done over the past two years is to ensure that we move to harmonization across Canada in an orderly fashion. In discussions with securities ministers on this, including Ontario, who has been involved in these even though they're not a signatory, and in discussions with the committee who provided the report, it was very accepted that all of the work that we have done is extremely beneficial down the road. None of it is wasted. It's recognized that if you were going to move to a common regulator or a national regulator, it would indeed take years to get all of the complexity of these securities regulators into place. So I want to reassure the hon. member that the work we're doing on this bill is important. All Legislatures in Canada with the exception of Ontario are doing this very thing. We have agreed on these amendments as a group of provinces, and we all agree that it's in the best interests of securities regulation, whether it's enforcement but mostly in harmonization so that we do have commonality.

There are, indeed, some concerns from some provinces that are very valid – they may not be our concerns – in moving to a common regulator. We're trying to understand their concerns, and we're trying to work with them to see if we can overcome those concerns so that we can further the harmonization of securities rules across the country.

I just wanted to assure the hon. member that the work we do on this is not wasted. It's important, whether we stay with the passport system, which may be, or whether we move to a common regulator at some point. I can assure you that Alberta's interest is in providing the best securities commission for our capital markets in this province.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 25, Securities Amendment Act, 2006. Like many Albertans I'm very concerned that the Alberta Securities Commission operates in a fair and perceived to be fair manner. Some of the events of last year, some of the reports that we've seen in the media, and some of the godawful things we've heard in some of the executive suites of the Securities Commission have appalled many Albertans and have brought the whole system into disrepute.

Now, looking at this, it looks to harmonize, of course, and as the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, has stated quite clearly, that is good for a qualified sense of agreement, I think, but we must be careful.

I have some questions. Part 1 on page 6 of the three-column document says:

Add a new provision following section 33 to permit the Executive Director to make permanent cease trade orders without a hearing against a reporting issuer for a failure to file continuous disclosure documents within the prescribed period or when an issuer agrees that its financial statements have not been prepared in accordance with . . . Generally Accepted Accounting Procedures.

Now, the question is: how can investors be confident that the executive director will enforce against his or this government's friends?

An additional concern is in part 5. The proposed amendment is to "repeal section 76 and replace with harmonized and modernized provisions that will permit the Executive Director to impose terms and conditions on a registration at his discretion based on Ontario section 26(2)." That's page 7 in the three-column document. We're again concerned about the executive director's discretionary powers, and I would ask that that be commented on to give us some real hope that this is going to be all above board.

Another question is in part 15, sections 184 to 192. That's page 19 in the three-column document. I wonder if you could please explain this section. Who will appoint the independent committee to oversee the activities of a mutual fund or a nonredeemable investment fund? How can investors be confident that their mutual fund company is not interfering with the company's own independent review committee?

These are a number of questions. I'll pause now. I may have some more at a later time here, but that's something to look at, and I would appreciate, you know, a comment on these items.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to go back, if I could, to the amendment that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky introduced. I didn't get up and speak to it, and we allowed it to go through, but I'm wondering if I could get some clarification because it really does put us at a bit of a disadvantage when an amendment comes forward that is striking a further section, but there's no reference in the amendment to what that section was.

In this particular amendment that the House recently passed, we changed the amending Bill 25, section 3, which read to strike section 7 in the current legislation, and we have now struck section 7 and section 7.1. I understand that the explanation that's offered in the bill on 7.1 is not required to be there according to legislation, but certainly we didn't have an opportunity to check what 7.1 was that we are now also striking. I'm wondering if you could offer an explanation as to what was in that section that has now been struck as well.

Mr. Knight: To answer the hon. member's question, Mr. Chairman, under section 3, section 7 is repealed in the act that we're dealing with here. Section 7.1 actually follows onto that. Section 7 is “deemed to be an insider of a mutual fund,” and section 7.1 deals with “deemed to be an insider of an income trust.” So it’s the same; it just follows on. The one issue deals with mutual funds, and 7.1 deals with income trusts.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you for that explanation. Perhaps I missed it earlier when you introduced the amendment, but is there some new provision in the regulation, then, that’s going to cover those off, or are they just deemed not to be necessary any longer?

Mr. Knight: If I might, Mr. Chairman, all this will do is put both the mutual fund insiders and income trust insiders – you know, it was a housekeeping thing that was obviously overlooked – into national instruments, the regulation around who is deemed to be an insider. That’s all it’s doing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess my main concern with the whole act, then, is that it’s become painfully obvious that what we need to do is not just look for some piecemeal harmonization of the Securities Commission with the other securities across the country but, in fact, move to a national securities system as we’ve been pushing here for quite a number of months and through the last session. It seems obvious that there is an appetite for this in the financial community here in Alberta, and the majority of provinces are interested as well. Now, we could say that Alberta is the second, perhaps, biggest economy in the whole country and, certainly, very influential at this juncture. So I think that if we were to be the advocates of a national security exchange, probably that would tip the balance in favour of actually putting this together.

Mr. Chairman, my recommendation, then, in general and specifically on each part of this bill is that perhaps we can take it back to the salvage yard and take some small pieces that would otherwise form the bones or the beginnings of a national security exchange commission, and that’s, in fact, the way that we should be proceeding here in this House.

When we’re dealing with billions of dollars flowing through the stock exchanges and with Alberta’s economy moving so dramatically forward as it is, it’s just so important for us to provide that regulatory stability here from this Chamber and from a security commission that can be counted on as well. Really, considering the situation and the circumstances that have followed in the preceding months, I think we would be sending a very positive signal to the market that we, in fact, want to move national. When you’re looking for advantage for Alberta by introducing this idea and being sort of the leader in this, I think we would gain a lot of advantage and influence in defining the terms of what that national security commission is going look like.

So you sometimes have to seize opportunity when it presents itself. Timing is everything. I believe that we would be best served by, in fact, moving to a national securities commission, and we should take leadership in the formation of that. Really, this Bill 25 would be better served if we were kind of taking it to the scrap yard and moving it to build this national harmonization. There are lots of little bits here that could help that, but the ultimate definition of that harmonization would be to have a national securities commission.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, the debate goes on with respect to a national regulator. Certainly, we’ve had members opposite indicate support for a national regulator and some that indicate displeasure in a national regulator. The displeasure in the national regulator, I guess, seems to be driven by the fact that they would like to have an Alberta securities regulator, but the mismanagement of the securities system in Alberta is so terrible that we are going to force somebody – I’m not sure who – to come into the province and take over the securities regulation and do it for us under a national securities regulator.

That might come to pass. I mentioned before that I really don’t have any way to predict the future. However, I do know what we’re doing today, and I know that there is not an appetite in the country at this point in time to have a national securities regulator. Ontario would like to do it if we do it under Ontario’s terms. In Alberta we’re not prepared to do that. We have an extremely robust securities trading market in the province of Alberta, the second largest in the country. If the records – and I don’t have them, unfortunately – were before us, I think you would see that there hasn’t been a marked decrease in the volume of trades in Alberta’s marketplace with an Alberta securities regulator or even under circumstances where it appeared as though the Securities Commission was under attack and had a tarnished reputation.

So, Mr. Chairman, I’ll just close with that. Everything that we’re doing here would be necessary to be done whether or not we move towards a national securities regulator. If it comes down the road one day, we will be much more prepared by having these amendments in place, having our securities regulator in line with the passport system and the systems across Canada, and we can knit the whole thing together much easier.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just another comment. There has been an awful lot of talk this evening about a national securities regulator or a common regulator. In preparation for debate on this bill the Official Opposition caucus consulted with a securities lawyer. I think I mentioned the other night that I wish I was one. My mother tried to push me that way, and I resisted. Silly me.

An Hon. Member: But now you’re an MLA.

Mr. R. Miller: But now I’m an MLA, which is almost like being a securities lawyer, tonight at least.

So we certainly consulted with a securities lawyer. We consulted with the Investment Dealers Association and also with a nationally renowned investor advocate, Mr. Chairman. The one comment that I want to make is this. I understand that both the Finance minister and the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky have commented on this issue a number of times tonight, about the fact that the work that has been done so far will not be wasted no matter what happens eventually, and I appreciate that.

The concern from the investors advocate is that we not allow this to be considered to be the last word on harmonization. I haven’t heard a lot of talk about it, but I’m going to assume that both the minister and the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky understand that there’s a lot of work yet to be done, that if, in fact, we don’t end up with a common regulator or a national regulator, the job isn’t finished and there is still a lot of work to be done in order to harmonize securities laws across the country, province to province. That was certainly a concern that was expressed by the investor advocate, and I think it's important that that be noted in the debate tonight.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: I'd like to respond very briefly to that. There is a work plan for this, and this is an orderly plan, and you see this happening in each province. All the provinces, with the exception of Ontario, support the passport system. All of the work from the amendments in this bill move that system forward one more step. It would be an expectation that there would be further amendments in the next session of the Legislature to continue to move that work forward.

I wish I had been thinking; I would have had more up-to-date figures on how the work on the move to harmonization has been effective to this point. I will endeavour by third reading to give you an update on the number of filings, et cetera, that we've had under the new system. It appears that it is working quite well, and companies are utilizing that. There is a big advantage to being able to file in one province and not have to do the re-filing in each of the others. I will endeavour to have those up-to-date numbers for that at third reading.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Well, I guess that in the spirit of co-operation and looking for something to salvage from here, I was just looking through the proposed amendments that have been brought forward here with Bill 25. You know, some of the reforms certainly seem to make sense, and they do pave the way for harmonization, that could result in the beginnings of the framework for a national securities commission.

Some of these, for example, that catch my eye, that I think are most promising, I suppose: this section on interim orders, which is to harmonize powers to cease trades across jurisdictions as well as the procedures for issuing and revoking cease trade orders, certainly seems to be eminently sensible. The section in part 5 which is talking about registration for the executive director and the section, again in part 5, regarding suspension, cancellation, and restrictions: these are just some of the examples of, sort of, the start of how we could in fact take the lead and send a positive message to Ontario, in particular, that we are open to some negotiation on creating a national securities commission. My understanding of why Ontario has been somewhat recalcitrant in being able to accept this concept is just because so many of the other provincial securities trading centres have been so sort of maverick and unstable in their behaviour over the years. You know, I'm not just talking about Alberta. In B.C. we know just how infamous the market was there for quite a number of years, and they have applied a series of reforms there as well.

I guess Ontario has been kind of sitting back because they are the largest, but you know that we are closing in on the Ontario securities market in terms of trading volume. The strength of our energy market would in fact allow us to provide a leadership role. If we sent out an indication that we are willing to play, so to speak, I do believe that we could not just be asking, as the hon. member suggested, for external forces to come in and take over our Alberta market. I'm suggesting quite the contrary, Mr. Chairman. I'm suggesting that we take the lead, strike the iron while it's hot, and in fact we would find ourselves in a leadership position on the national stage. So, far from bringing Ontario people to come in and try to take over, I'm suggesting quite the opposite, that we use our leverage as the second strongest market in the country and with the greatest rate of growth of any securities trading system in the whole country and take the lead and sort of retool Bill 25 as a gateway to establishing a national securities commission.

I know that people are quietly and not so quietly saying this, especially in Calgary, where a lot of trading is happening, that they would prefer to see it. It would provide the stability that they need in such a market, and it would as well send a positive message out to not just the Canadian market but the world securities market that Alberta is open for business, has put some of its indiscretions behind it, and is ready to go.

Certainly, I don't think that we've seen a change in the volume of trade as a result of some of these indiscretions in the past, but that's just because we know that so many of these corporations that are trading on our markets are pretty much guaranteed investments. We know that the energy sector is going great guns, and with all of these subsidiary corporations and businesses that are associated with that, we can pretty much know that there is going to be growth there. So it's almost as if the Alberta Securities Commission grew in spite of itself over these past few months. The overriding heat and buoyancy of our markets has carried us through, but that won't always carry us through by any means. People do look at these small markets as more speculative, and that's why we can solidify the reputation of these markets by having a national securities commission.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I offer anyone to give me some suggestion in that regard. Thanks.

Bill 35
Fuel Tax Act

[Adjourned debate April 27: Mrs. McClellan]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act, 2006, in second reading. I'd like to begin by thanking the Finance minister for once again providing staff in our offices with a very thorough briefing on this bill and for providing the three-column documents. As we know, not all ministers provide all critics with the three-column document. Some won't even let us see it, others will let us see it but not take a copy, and this minister is very kind in allowing us to retain a copy of that three-column document. It does certainly make for better debate and more informed debate and, as I've said previously, I would like to believe ultimately better legislation for Albertans. Really, isn't that what it's all about?

Several comments about Bill 35, which I understand is basically a complete rewrite of the Fuel Tax Act as it currently sits. According to the government's briefing it is necessary to streamline and simplify the manner in which the government collects fuel tax in its various forms and from the various stakeholders involved. I can't remember the exact number, but I believe it was some 40-odd different contracts that are currently in place with various groups and agencies to collect fuel tax. The way it was explained to us in the briefing, Mr. Speaker, every time there's a change made, it involves changing all 40 contracts as opposed to just one. The intention, as it was explained to us, of the streamlining that's taking place in this act would be that, in fact, if there's a change, then only the legislation would have to be changed as opposed to 40-odd contracts.

So I suppose that from an efficiency point of view that would make good sense although I must say, Mr. Speaker, that when I see something like that, it causes me to ponder and wonder if perhaps the government hasn't had some difficulty in collecting the fuel tax under the current regime. Again, maybe that's why it's being changed, and maybe that's a good thing. But I would be curious to know if in fact that was the case and, if so, what the effect of that might have been on the Finance department in terms of lost revenue and ultimately, of course, money that may have been lost to the taxpayers. So that would be one of the questions that I would look for some comment on.

Now, the minister will know that last week or two weeks ago we had a group in from the Propane Gas Association. One of the things that they're certainly lobbying the opposition parties for – and I know that they're lobbying the government for it as well – is either a reduction or a removal of the fuel tax on propane-powered vehicles, Mr. Speaker. Right now I think they pay 6.5 cents tax per litre on auto propane, which is less, admittedly, than the fuel tax on gasoline, which is 9 cents per litre. But I think that given the comments that the government has made over the last several years about promoting alternative fuels – and certainly they promote ethanol-powered vehicles and natural gas powered vehicles by not having any fuel tax on those fuels that are used for motor vehicles. [interjection] My colleague from Edmonton-Manning is suggesting that we should treat Alberta drivers using propane to power their vehicles the same way as B.C. does, and I think that that's the submission that was made by the association when they presented to the government and to opposition parties.

As I said, in terms of promoting alternate fuel usage, there would be a good argument for doing that. Propane is recognized as being one of the cleanest burning fuels. There was a time in the mid-80s, Mr. Speaker, when there were a number of rebate programs available for propane conversion. I can't recall the exact numbers at this moment, but I think that something like 300,000 vehicles in Alberta were running on propane. Today we're down to somewhere in the area of 60,000. What that means, of course, is that propane has virtually fallen off the radar in terms of usage in automobiles. The reason, quite frankly, is that it just costs too much money to convert, and with the fuel tax on there we don't give a break that might actually make a difference in terms of encouraging people to explore that as an alternate fuel. I would submit that it might be time to consider giving a little bit of a tax break to users of propane as an auto fuel.

Now, I mentioned earlier this evening to the minister the idea of perhaps giving an even greater break to farmers on their diesel credits, Mr. Speaker, and the minister cautioned me that I should be careful when I suggest that because farmers aren't the only ones who use diesel. Certainly, she's right. The trucking industry and others, I'm sure, probably the oil and gas sector, and there would be many others who use diesel. But let's face it: there's no question that the agricultural community is struggling in this province and has been for a number of years now. I had a farmer friend tell me that he sold some wheat a couple of weeks ago at the same price that it sold for in 1958.

Mr. Backs: How long has it been since farmers got a break on their fuel?

Mr. R. Miller: My colleague from Edmonton-Manning is asking: when was the last time farmers got a break on their fuel? Well, I do know that the current discount of 6 cents per litre on diesel fuel went into effect on February 25, 1994. What that means is we haven't adjusted the rate for farmers in 12 years. There's no question, Mr. Speaker, that in 12 years there has been a substantial change in input costs for farmers.

I'm just looking at some information that I pulled off the government's own website. This is the Agriculture, Food and Rural Development website. I think, Mr. Speaker, it's very important that I acknowledge that because in great big letters on the website it says: "Note to Users: The contents of this document may not be used or reproduced without properly accrediting the Statistics and Data Development Unit, Economics and Competitiveness Division, AAFRD." Since I'm using it in my comments tonight, I believe I have now credited that particular division.

Mr. Speaker, when I look at the input cost for diesel fuel on the farm, this current graph goes to January of '05. At that time the farm price for diesel fuel was about 50 cents per litre, and if we look to the end of March of '06, it's currently about 65 cents per litre. So just in that period of a little over a year the price to the farmer has gone up 15 cents per litre, and there is no recognition in this act of that fact by giving farmers any more of a break.

Now, I have another graph here that also came from the agriculture website. It shows an even more dramatic increase in input costs for farmers, Mr. Speaker. While I'm looking for it, I'll just mention that a similar situation exists for farmers when we talk about propane on the farm or if we talk about natural gas. Now, there's one that is quite startling. Just in the last year alone – and unfortunately Hansard wouldn't likely reproduce the graph – it shows a relatively flat line from January '05 to July '05, and then it skyrockets to more than double the price. Certainly, we know that this is a big issue for farmers, likewise with electricity and purple gasoline.

Purple gasoline: this is an interesting one. I mentioned earlier that the minister accommodated us by providing staff for a good briefing. One of the things I learned from that briefing is that it's not really purple gasoline anymore, Mr. Speaker. I did not know that. I think we all grew up referring to purple gasoline, and indeed the agriculture website today, the graph I pulled down, talks about purple gasoline, but apparently it is red. So there is something that if you didn't know before, you know now. It's Liberal red gas and, apparently, properly referred to as marked gas.

Mr. Backs: Like the Calgary Flames colour, though that's burnt out.

Mr. R. Miller: My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Manning just mentioned the Calgary Flames, and unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there will not be a battle of Alberta this year. That really is unfortunate. It really is. I'm not sure if that's relevant to the Fuel Tax Act, and if I don't move on, I'm likely to be called on a point of order, so I think I'll move on.

Mr. Speaker, I was looking for some information going back a little bit further, and I found it here. Diesel fuel on the farm, if you go back to 2002: 36 cents per litre. So that would be less than half the price that they're paying on the farm today. Again, no extra recognition for the agricultural community in this bill of the fact that their input costs have more than doubled, yet the discount that they get on diesel is exactly the same. Purple gas: 51.9 cents per litre in 2002. Of course, we know that it's an awful lot more than that now. Propane: 30.71 cents per litre in 2002. And on it goes. Boy, natural gas: $4.48. I think that the last number on the graph showed it a whole lot more than that.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I think that when we look at the agricultural community in particular, I do believe that there is some measure that could have been taken. It wouldn't really cost an awful lot of money to extend a little more of a benefit to the agricultural community. According to the Alberta Finance website, currently the various programs providing farm fuel benefits are only costing $120 million in total to the government. [interjections] I hear some hon. members over there – and I'm going to assume that they're urban members and not rural members – commenting that it's a lot of bread, and it is a lot of bread.

Here's another example. I think it was the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill who suggested that it's a lot of bread. Check the price of a loaf of bread today, and go back and check the price of a loaf of bread in 1970. You know what? It's not that much different. It really isn't. So you have to feel for the farmers because they're certainly not benefiting from the increased costs. Certainly, their input costs in terms of fuel – the fuel tax is not benefiting them nearly as much as it perhaps should.

Now, I have several more comments, but really it would be more along the lines of breaking it down into sections, page by page, and I think that I will save those comments, Mr. Speaker, for when we get to committee stage. I do plan on introducing at least a couple of amendments, perhaps more.

I guess the other thing that I could talk about briefly – it has been discussed in the past, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asking to speak, so perhaps he's going to mention it again. In the past at least the Official Opposition critic has called for some sort of a gas tax rebate to consumers when gasoline gets above a certain price, Mr. Speaker, and I think that the number that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has called for is 4 cents per litre when oil gets above $35 a barrel, I believe it is. We know that right now the gasoline tax that's collected is 9 cents per litre, and the Alberta government to its credit has finally made some accommodation for municipalities. They return 5 cents per litre to the municipalities. In the past when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has suggested this tax cut when oil prices get high, the minister has said: well, the municipalities aren't going to be very happy about that suggestion. I think that perhaps the minister wasn't fully understanding that the suggestion wasn't that the municipalities suffer but, rather, that the government, because they collect higher taxes from the oil fields – they collect royalties from the oil field, although certainly there are those who would argue that the royalty structure needs to be reviewed and that perhaps we should be collecting more. There are many who argue that. The intimation would be that when things are going that well, the government could afford to forgo 4 cents per litre to the consumer. It would be the government that would be forgoing that, not the municipalities. There was never any intention on the part of the Official Opposition to suggest that the municipalities should be doing without their 5 cents per litre. That was never suggested, and if the minister understood it that way, then hopefully that will provide some clarification for her.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the remainder of my comments I think I will save for the committee stage when I bring my amendments.

Oh, one other thing. I almost forgot. It was in the news today, and I thought this was quite interesting. As of today all provinces east of Ontario are now regulating gasoline retail prices. I'm not suggesting necessarily that Alberta should be regulating gasoline prices at the pump, but the fact that it's happening everywhere east of Ontario certainly says something. If there are a number of governments in eastern Canada that feel that the consumers need some added protection from their government from potential gouging by oil companies and retailers, then that says something. I think that we should at least be paying attention to the fact that half of the provinces in this country have taken that step. As I say, I'm not suggesting that we have to go there yet, but I would hope that we're monitoring, as my colleague from Edmonton-McClung suggests, because we all know that this government claims to be very good at monitoring. They do a lot of monitoring, and this might be an area that they would like to monitor as well. I would think that given the current world situation with oil and the uncertainty involved, this is one area that might merit some monitoring.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and cede the floor to somebody else. I look forward to having the opportunity to speak to this bill in committee and at that time also having the opportunity to bring forward some amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to rise and participate in this stage of debate on Bill 35 dealing with the fuel tax. I promise to be brief. I just wanted to follow up on what my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford mentioned in his talk on fuel tax and the different fuels that we can use in this province. We all know that looking for alternate fuels is the way of the future. He mentioned propane as a cleaner fossil fuel, and then we all know about hydrogen cells and solar and all that stuff for cleaner sources of energy.

Now, he mentioned something that is very current in terms of provinces east of Ontario legislating retail gas prices, and I noticed something else that is also very current as of today, actually as of yesterday since now it's Thursday, officially. So that was yesterday, Wednesday, Mr. Speaker. There was a poll conducted in the U.S. which indicated that most Americans blame the Republicans for soaring gas prices. Now, is this because of their foreign policy, perhaps, or decisions at home? I don't know. President Bush's popularity is measured at around 33 per cent nowadays, but when people were asked just in terms of gas prices, people gave him only a 17 per cent approval rating.

Now, it would be very interesting, Mr. Speaker, if people in Alberta were surveyed to see what their reaction is to the current gas prices at the pump and whether this Progressive Conservative government has done enough to alleviate that concern. People say that this is a producing province and that they find it puzzling and troubling that they're paying so much at the pump. They can't really understand it, and they're frustrated, and they're confused.

The poll that was conducted in the U.S. during the period of April 28 to 30 also asked people which party they thought would see to it that gas prices become lower. Forty-seven per cent of Americans picked the Democratic Party compared to only 20 per cent for the Republicans. Again, how would Albertans react to such a question here if they were asked, especially in light of the Alberta Liberals' repeated calls to lower the gasoline tax?

I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is going to definitely speak to this as it was his suggestion, that he repeats every year and, apparently, gets the same answer from the government every year. He definitely recommended that we cut the gasoline tax from 9 cents per litre to 5 cents per litre, and he indicated in his calculation that this would only be done whenever gas prices exceed $36 U.S. per barrel. About two or three weeks ago we measured this to be at least a $260 million savings for Alberta motorists. The government's own fiscal plan for 2006-2009 shows that for every $1 increase in the price of a barrel of oil, the Alberta government itself reaps $123 million in extra revenue.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar and as the members of the opposition keep saying, it is time for the government to start sharing some of that money and putting it back into the pockets of Alberta drivers. The average Albertan uses about 2,400 litres of gas every year. That means that if prices at the pump reach, you know, $1.30 or $1.40, as is forecasted, a typical driver under our plan would save in excess of $120 a year. Now, to some that might not be a significant sum of money, but to others it is a lot of money.

The angle about the municipalities not getting their tax stream to help them look after roads and other infrastructure requirements – we think that by lowering it, it's the government that is sharing some of that resource. Municipalities will not be adversely affected because they still get that 5 cents per litre that is going their way.

Now, further to this, with regard to regulating gas prices at the pump in Canada, I can also mention something that happened Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, in the U.S. as well. When President Bush was made aware of his approval rating, he summoned the House, both Democrats and Republicans, and he asked them to pass a bill that would see criminal penalties and huge fines of up to $150 million for energy companies caught price gouging. What are we doing in this province to monitor the oil companies and make sure that they're not price gouging in this province? You know, some hon. member is saying that this is federal. Yes, but this provincial government keeps talking about autonomy and decision-making and that we should protect the consumers in this province, so maybe we should look at this as a provincial solution.

They'll also charge penalties and have prison terms for retailers that are price gouging, so I think it's time for us to potentially consider something of this nature in this province. It is noteworthy to mention that it received a lot of support from both sides in that House, in Congress, where it passed with 389 for and 34 against. So that was definitely a solid vote to consider price gouging as a criminal offence and to have hefty fines and prison terms for people caught doing it. I definitely advocate such a measure because market forces dictate how prices go to some extent, but there could be an angle of greed as well or some other reason why we're paying so much at the pumps.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, and I thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available now and after every speaker from this point on. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. How does the hon. member explain the question of supply and demand with respect to gasoline prices? It seems to me that the oil companies charge what the market will bear for the gasoline. If there's a shortage, the price goes up. If demand exceeds supply, the price rises, and vice versa. So if we lower the tax, it doesn't in any way change the supply and demand equation. The oil companies are able to command the same price for the gasoline as before you lowered the price. The question is who gets the money, whether the government gets less and the oil companies get more or vice versa.

So, you know, this is a question that I don't understand. The Liberal Party has put forward the idea of reducing the taxes and seems to believe that this will bring down the price of gas. If the price of gas is actually determined by supply and demand, then that will not happen. It will simply reduce the government's take and increase the take of the oil companies. I wonder if the hon. member can explain that economic theory to me.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually thought that myself. It is a fair question, I must say, and the hon. member mentioned . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has the floor.

Mr. Elsalhy: The hon. member mentioned the theory that companies charge what they can get. I think that to some extent that might be true, but it's the angle of monitoring prices and determining what is fair and what is not. If they're caught charging the same amount after we've reduced the tax because they can get away with it, then that's where we can say, "No, this is not accurate. This is not correct. It's not good for the consumers." We would hold them to account and say: "You were supposed to reduce your prices at the pump by 4 cents a litre. You have not done it. You've in fact put the money in your own pockets and denied it from going on to the consumers." There would be repercussions and consequences. Maybe if they're caught once and they're penalized, they might not do it again.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a follow-up question. It sounds to me like the Liberal Party, then, is proposing that they would control gasoline prices. If that's the case, why don't they just order the oil companies to lower the prices by 4 cents?

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, it seems like the NDP are advocating some scenario like what happened in Bolivia, for example, where the government took over the oil companies and the refineries and . . .

Mr. Mason: How did you get that?

An Hon. Member: Sounds like it to me.

Mr. Elsalhy: That's what it sounds like, Mr. Speaker.

However, under a Liberal government prices for all commodities will be periodically reviewed to make sure that those prices are fair to the consumers. We want companies to continue to make profit and to make decent profits to be able to pay corporate taxes and so on; however, it's the consumer protection angle. So, you know, whether in fact we would dictate that they lower their prices at the source or whether we would monitor it at the pump and then take action accordingly would be something that we would be definitely willing to consider.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the bill, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this evening on Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act. Now, Bill 35 rewrites the fuel tax. The government claims that we need a smoother administration. Certainly, I wonder whenever I go through the public accounts documents and I see the line items for various agencies across the province who are collecting the tax. I see an amount given back by the government for any number of reasons. One has to wonder just exactly how this fuel tax is being collected and the administration of various fuel tax exemptions.

Now, certainly this bill, I think, should be supported, but when we look at the Alberta Fuel Tax Act and the fact that there are direct taxes on consumers for the purchase of not only gas at the pumps but also unmarked fuel – and this unmarked fuel includes gasoline, diesel, and propane. I'm wondering if the New Democratic party has ever burned unmarked fuel.

Rev. Abbott: I highly doubt it.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar highly doubts it, and I'm with him. You know, I have this vision of the New Democrats in their van, and they're running around with a four- or five-foot green garden hose, a three-quarter inch diameter one. That would be the extent of their concern with reducing the price of fuel for consumers.

Certainly, I think that whenever we look at the price that many consumers are paying, whether they're small business owners or whether they're individuals going back and forth to work or families with their busy schedules taking their children to soccer, to other activities, whether it be a dance class or music lessons, whether we like it or not, the majority of us in this province drive and drive our families from place to place. I don't think we should feel guilty about that. The distance between our cities is great. If you go from High Level to Medicine Hat, it's going to take you a fair amount of driving time to get there, a very long day. We need to have affordable fuel prices.

That's why I think it would be very good if at this time our provincial government realized this. For the benefit of all members, the current tax rate on a litre of gasoline, for instance, Mr. Speaker, is 9 cents. One of the ways we could help consumers is by reducing the provincial government's take on the tax that we're charging currently on gasoline. Now it's 9 cents. We could reduce that by 4 cents.

I think the government has been wise in providing some dedicated revenue from the gasoline tax for municipalities to fix their bridges, their roads, and their streets. I don't think it would be wise to change the rules for the leaders of our various municipal governments. They have budgeted, they have planned on getting that money. Let's make sure they do get it.

We could reduce the price of gasoline by 4 cents a litre at the pump. Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is worried that, well, the greedy oil companies will just move in and take that 4 cents and add that to their already substantial profits. I don't think that will happen because I, for one, have confidence in the free-market system. For instance, if one gas company is to move in and decide they're going to take that 4 cents, the second retailer will say: I can sell more gasoline. That's how the free market works. So I'm not at all concerned that if we were to go ahead with this tax cut, the greedy corporations would just start lining their pockets. I have a lot more faith in the market than that.

Now, when we look at the royalties that we are getting at the wellhead from crude oil production and the substantial increase in royalties, we can afford to reduce gasoline taxes. Perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is so isolated from the real world because he's like the rest of us in this Assembly, Madam Speaker, with our gas cards; we forget.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize your point of order.

Point of Order

Incorrect Reference to a Constituency

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I would just ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to identify my constituency correctly. It's Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: I apologize to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for that oversight.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, we in this Assembly with our gas cards, sometimes we can forget, because we don't pay for all of our fill-ups, just what exactly consumers face when they fill up their vehicles. It's 60, 70 bucks. In some cases it's higher than that. I would urge all members of this Assembly to consider a gasoline tax cut at this time. It is a good idea.

When we look at the federal budget that was just presented to Canadians yesterday – when the current Prime Minister was in opposition, well, there were going to be some significant cuts not only to the GST but to gasoline because I think that at that time the hon. Leader of the Opposition, who is now the Prime Minister, realized just how gas prices affect Canadians. It's a big country, as the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar reminded us. Distances are vast. Our transportation costs are high. I think that in light of that we can make a real difference here.

If gasoline was roughly selling for, let's say, a dollar a litre, that four cents a litre would be 4 per cent saving. Anyone who was operating their business would notice that saving at the end of the month if they had a small modest fleet of vehicles in their business. It would certainly work for them.

If we can't afford a tax cut in our gasoline prices at this time, Madam Speaker, I don't know when we'll ever be able to afford it. This has been an idea that the former Member for Edmonton-Rutherford presented not only to our caucus but to the entire province. Mr. Wickman recognized the cost of gasoline and how it could put a dent in one's wallet, so to speak. He was the first person to come up with this good, sound policy. While we enjoy high royalties in this province, let's share, again, those resources with the citizens. Now, how much would this cost the treasury? Two hundred million dollars a year, maybe a little bit more than that. I think we can afford it.

One other benefit, Madam Speaker, to this reduction in gasoline prices would be that it would help reduce energy inflation in this province. I would again remind all hon. members that if you went to a store, if you got it, a truck brought it. Trucks. Well, they may burn gasoline. They may burn diesel. They may even burn propane. Who's to say? I think that if their fuel costs were reduced, we certainly wouldn't stop it, but we would reduce or alleviate energy inflation, and we could help out the price currently at the pump. I would urge the hon. Minister of Finance to consider this. Certainly, I was pleased to learn – at least, I was left with the impression, Madam Speaker – that the hon. minister was considering this as a tax cut.

When we look at Bill 35, Fuel Tax Act, and we go through it in detail, we should remember the other programs. But before I go there, it's not that long ago, Madam Speaker, that we reduced the taxes on railway and aviation fuel. Now, we have at this time a program – and this the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood would certainly be aware of – that I can't understand why we need at this point. There's a program in place to give resource companies a break on their fuel costs for activities that are conducted off-road. My question to the government would be: if we can afford this at this time, let's also consider consumers. Many resource companies get a modest break, a wee break on their fuel costs for their activities off-road that are powered, I guess, by an internal combustion engine. If we can provide those tax cuts and from what we've done in the past, I would urge this government again to consider a tax cut on gasoline. The price at a dollar a litre is high enough to encourage conservation.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, there are those that say: oh, well, let's have gasoline at $1.20, even $1.25, even $1.30, even $1.50 because the higher the price, the more we will encourage conservation. Well, I maintain that we are encouraging conservation already. If gasoline is at 80 cents or 85 cents or 90 cents a litre at the pump, that price is high enough to change consumer habits. One only has to stop at the first set of lights one would encounter after leaving this Legislative Assembly and count the cars. There are a lot of four-cylinder cars there, new ones.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if he believes that there are enough corporations that operate internationally to extract, refine, and distribute oil and gas products, gasoline, to constitute a free market and whether or not he's aware of examples in which the prices were set by means other than the free market. I just wonder if the hon. member can justify his remark that the free market operates with respect to international oil and gas companies and how many there are and how many it would take to have an effective free market.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that question from the hon. member. Whenever you look at the international oil industry, one has to realize that Alberta is one of the very few places where private-held corporations can invest. Now, when you look at the countries in the Middle East, they're Crown-owned oil companies. We look at Venezuela. Bolivia was mentioned. Bolivia has a lot of gas interests. We look at the Soviet Union.

An Hon. Member: No such country, my friend.

Mr. MacDonald: Russia. I stand corrected.

So you have all these different countries, so many countries in the Middle East, where the state controls oil and gas production and marketing. I would much prefer the system that we have in Alberta than the system that, for instance, existed in Iraq, where you get a vinegar jug and you go to the edge of a pipeline and you hope you get yourself a gallon of gasoline. If we have a market where we have competitive retail – and I think we have a competitive market – it will work. It will work. I don't want to see state-owned enterprises involved in oil and gas exploration and development and the refining industry. I think what we have here, whenever we compare it to other places where it's state owned, is working much, much better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a comment really. There were once what they called the Seven Sisters, which were seven major international oil companies based mostly in the United States but also in Holland and in Britain. That's now down to four. No serious economist or analyst of the oil industry believes that there's a free market with respect to oil and gas. You know, I think that it's pretty clear that if taxes were reduced on gasoline, the same price would remain at the pump. I would just suggest that the argument that cutting taxes on gasoline would somehow bring down the price because of some free-market mechanism is a fantasy and very ill-advised public policy. If we want the oil companies to make a higher profit than they already are, then why don't we just say so? But that's not the position of the NDP.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't help it if the NDP are jealous of our policy, which is to reduce gasoline taxes. Certainly, whenever you talk to people in the city, the overwhelming majority want to see gas taxes cut so that they have more money in their pocket at the end of the week. I can't, again, help but think that the hon. member is just jealous.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise with interest to make some comments on Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act. This bill is wide ranging in its scope, and a lot of its individual components are overdue, certainly. I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Finance for bringing this forward. I guess much of this reform that the amendment does bring forward has to do with making it possible to streamline the 40 some-odd separate regulations in places where the fuel tax is applied here in the province of Alberta, and certainly that would be laudable if we are able to adjust and to account for each of those 40-some places in a more reasonable sort of way.

I was curious to hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that he was given a three-column document in regard to a briefing on Bill 35 because I would certainly appreciate seeing that as well. Certainly, while we have our own vast research capacity, we have analyzed and looked at this bill at least to some degree. I guess the scope of this bill is quite wide. It's really not just an amendment but a complete rewrite of the whole thing.

One thing that I would like to comment on, though, first of all is that I would like to ask the minister if we could have an accounting of perhaps revenue collection from the old act because I would suspect that, you know, because of the cumbersome nature of the old Bill 35, we were in fact not having a full accounting of taxes that were meant to be collected. I would be curious to perhaps see an analysis of where we were losing revenue and what sort of revenue we might have lost from the previous act so that we can make sure we tighten up Bill 35 in the best possible way and ensure that we're collecting the revenues that are due to the provincial government.

It's important to have these different tax structures in place serving the economy in the best possible way, Mr. Speaker. The price of fuel for each individual part of our economy is becoming an increasing expense of doing business, be it from agriculture to industry to looking for more oil and gas throughout the province. So it's important that we regulate how that expense is going to impact that industry and ensure the continued viability of these various industries.

The first one, the most important one, of course, is the subsidies to farm fuels to ensure that the proportion of the fuels that are being used for agriculture is not exceeding the viability of the overall budget for any given farm operation. I know that the price of fuel has put tremendous strain on farm operations in these past couple of years, and while we do have a subsidy program in place, I think that we need to perhaps revisit some of these prices. Certainly, for example, the price of diesel fuel more than doubling in the last couple of years has really put serious strain on the ability of farmers to operate at all, not even to turn a profit by any means. Many farms run on a continuous loss basis, and I think that it's incumbent upon us to realize that our agriculture sector is an essential industry in the most basic way, that we have to have a diverse and vibrant agricultural sector to ensure the long-term survival of the province.

If it does cost us from other sectors to properly subsidize the fuel consumption of farm operations, then so be it. I think that a proper investigation of the whole economy and budget of any given farm is absolutely essential for us because we're losing farm operations every year. Especially, smaller family farm operations are in serious jeopardy in this province and are giving way to larger corporate operations which are far less secure in terms of our long-term food viability. I think that the Fuel Tax Act, Bill 35, really comes back to that: to revisit and ensure that we can adjust the rates in a quick and equitable way to meet the needs of farmers across the province.

Other forms of fuel tax are a very important part of the long-term budget of the province but also a way by which we can send a message, I suppose, to consumers that the cost of running their vehicles and whatnot is not just the considerable personal cost that they put into the gas tank every week or maintenance of their car but the price of the infrastructure of roads and highways and servicing and safety and policing and all of those very important services that we provide here through the province of Alberta. So the fuel tax serves to help pay for those things. It is an important source of income, and it's important that we maintain a reasonable level of taxation on fuel.

I think that every time the price of fuel goes up in a significant way, certainly we have to react as a provincial government, but we don't have to react in a knee-jerk sort of fashion. You know, we've created a society where a single internal combustion vehicle is important, but it's also something that deserves taxation. If we are not realizing a reasonable tax from single vehicle operations, then in fact we're probably doing a disservice to the sort of long-term planning and functioning of the province. We want to encourage alternative transportation systems in this province, Mr. Speaker, and by collecting a fuel tax we have a means by which we can guide our transportation sector into other ways of moving people around. In fact, our provincial portion of the fuel tax on individuals is certainly significant, but it's not by any means the largest part of the overall gasoline price at the pump.

I think that people are often confused, and in fact the pie chart that they put on the gas pump is designed to deliberately deceive consumers because it gives this false impression that taxes take up by far the largest piece of the oil pie. [interjection] Yeah, you were fooled by it as well. But, in fact, if you look at it, they have the price of oil in there as that very largest chunk, and that's the same company that pumped it out of the ground and then refined it and made it into gasoline as well. So they take their pound of flesh from that portion of it as well.

To suggest that the poor oil companies are only getting that tiny, tiny little sliver that you see on that very deceptive pie chart on the gasoline pump is entirely wrong. It's one hundred per cent deceptive, and to play into that sort of thing by suggesting we take some small provincial gas tax cut to alleviate the price at the pump for consumers here in Alberta when the price goes up is absolutely ridiculous. I mean, there are many, many other ways by which we could alleviate that cost to consumers here in the province of Alberta, but to suggest looking at those few pennies that the Alberta government collects is absolutely ridiculous.

You look at the proportion of the overall price of a litre of gasoline and see how the curve is going quite steep, but the price of the tax stays the same, so it becomes irrelevant to suggest that that would have any serious effect on the overall budget of someone's monthly expense of driving a car. It just slips into obscurity or into irrelevance as the price of gasoline goes up and up and up. So that's another criticism of the idea of changing the provincial fuel tax besides the fact, of course, that the gasoline companies will simply absorb and slide into that space and charge many pennies more for their gasoline. Just wait until the 1 per cent GST reduction comes in and watch how retailers will simply jack their price up by at least 1 per cent to fill in that gap. That's exactly what will happen.

So, anyway, back to the other portions of this Bill 35. My reading of it is that there are a couple of sections here where I would perhaps suggest an amendment, but otherwise just the fact that the ministry has gone through and identified all of these places is cause for optimism because at least we can now see where those revenues should be coming from, and hopefully we can collect them in a more scrupulous sort of way.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will pause to allow someone else to make comment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I have a number of questions for the hon. member. The first one is: what does the member consider a reasonable tax on gasoline? Name the number.

Mr. Eggen: Well, I believe that the tax structure that we have provincially is working quite well; thank you very much. It's not an onerous portion of the overall price per litre, and in fact it serves a number of very important purposes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it allows us to pay for at least some small portion of the very large, expensive infrastructure that it takes to have our single vehicle internal combustion sort of transportation system that we use here in the province. Really, it's heavily subsidized anyway in regard to that because of the overall price when we think of the tremendous expenses that we put into roads, the money we put into roads, not to mention the cost to the environment. As I look across our major cities, Edmonton and Calgary, there is a pall of air pollution that is increasing every year, and I would think that that is part of the cost as well of this reliance on gasoline.

I think that we need to have that structure of taxation in place to be able to develop other alternative transportation systems. I think that we're in a situation now where we have to start to make investments in other forms of mass transport, with buses in the cities, increased LRT systems, and whatnot, so we need a means by which we can provide revenue to make that transition from a single vehicle transportation system in our large urban centres. So the price that we're charging on the provincial side is perfectly reasonable.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, were you rising under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hinman: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Hinman: I just wondered, because he's the Environment critic, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has seen any studies or reports that would show what level of taxation, if it came in, we would have with biodiesel and ethanol and other products in the province that would help us transform to cleaner fuels. You know, he's talked about these other modes of transportation. Perhaps he's had some reports and could inform us at what point we could switch over and use cleaner fuels.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. That's an excellent comment. We can provide taxes on gasoline, but we can also provide breaks and subsidies on other fuels. There's always a formula, the tipping point, where it becomes more economical for individuals to use different sorts of fuel in their vehicles. The transition from single vehicle transportation, of course, is going to be very gradual, and we have to recognize that we're going to have these vehicles for a long time. To increase the percentage of ethanol, say, into the fuels that go into those single vehicle automobiles would be certainly less invasive on the environment.

That's where we can start to talk about tax differentials – right? – when it becomes financially acceptable for someone to make that transition or to even go to the other pump where perhaps it's an ethanol blend or, as we saw before, when it was economical to use propane and make the conversion. This is where the government here can provide the incentives, but to suggest a regressive sort of backing away of the very reasonable fuel tax that we do charge here on gasoline is regressive and doesn't look to the future at all. In fact, what it does do is it just sort of leaves us in a holding pattern and not moving ahead on other forms of fuel.

So the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner has a very good point. There is always a way, a formula by which you can reach that tipping point and make it financial. Once it becomes affordable, then biogas and ethanol and other forms of fuel or even hydrogen in some circumstances can become economical. It is all a question of supply and demand.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you have four seconds.

Mr. Mason: Yes, I do.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're all talking about Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act. I think we're all in agreement in some way, shape, or form that there needs to be some sort of basic provisions for the consumer here. It should in fact be some sort of fuel tax act. As to what, that's yet to be determined.

Speaking for my family, there are four of us in the household that drive. We go to the pumps, and I'll tell you – you know what? – that you end up having a conversation when you're pumping the gas, and time after time people feel that they're being screwed at the pumps. They feel that the average Albertan is at the mercy of those that are running the, I guess, whole monopoly, whether it be Shell, whether it be Texaco, whether it be Mohawk, whether it be Petro-Canada. The consumer is the one that pays. They say time and time again that they can't understand why we here in Alberta are paying such high prices when it's our gasoline that we're buying, in fact.

Mr. Magnus: Sure they understand.

Mr. Bonko: I don't know if they understand. No, I don't know if they understand. I don't understand. It doesn't seem right. [interjections] Well, that's it. Perfect.

You know what? They're consumers, and they pay a big price for their insurance, yet they're paying a price for maintaining their vehicles. It's a costly endeavour just to be able to drive. They say: "Okay. Prices are going up again. I'm going to take the bus." But you know what? Buses aren't cheap anymore because again it's a ripple effect. It seems like every time gas goes up, everything else goes up. They talk about produce going up. They talk about fruit and vegetables going up. Everything seems to go up because of gas.

Now, I'm having a hard time justifying everything else going up, but that's what they're saying. Everything seems to be going up. Perhaps it's because they have to transport the goods and services that they're going to pass along.

An Hon. Member: Airline tickets.

Mr. Bonko: That's right. Also mentioned is airline services and tickets going up as well. Well, the aviation fuel is a whole other thing, but I'll get to that one.

Like I said, when we are talking to people at the pumps, people are finding it pretty outrageous. You know, even just regular gas is now at $1.09, and then you go to mid-grade, which is at $1.13, and you go to premium, which is about $1.20. I'm having a hard time even coming up with the fact that they can justify paying that. It jumps in leaps and bounds, maybe 5 to 6 cents on the first jump, but it takes so long to come down. There's just no actual justification as to that. Why does it in a single night go up, you know, 8 to 10 cents, and it takes three to five to eight weeks to come down?

Miraculously, every long weekend or a holiday when people are looking at travelling the province, going to see loved ones, see parents, prices always go up. Is it a coincidence? I don't think so. They know that the consumers are going to be driving the highways. Consumers are going to be getting in their cars, taking a vacation, going out, leaving the cities, getting away from it, and they're going to be gouging us. It's just a phenomenon that happens. I'm sure there's a day they call each other along the gas bar strips and figure out, you know: what's a good price to charge people? But people continue to pay it. It's supply and demand.

People in rural areas, especially the rural MLAs or the people that are working out of town, maybe get a discount with regard to their employers paying a portion of it, but the average person doesn't get a break on it. The people here within the Legislature do get a break on it, but no one else gets a break. [interjection] Yeah, there is someone snoring in the House here. It's unfortunate that we're all not on our toes here listening to the debate. It could be the member from Rocky Mountain House. Isn't it Rocky Mountain House? Rocky Mountain House. Yeah, that's where the snoring is coming from, then, perhaps.

Anyways, getting back to the gas piece here, I think I said that we're all in agreement that something needs to be done. It's just a matter of exactly what. It probably would be great, you know, with the Smart cars. That would be another thing, but that doesn't altogether prove to be very viable when wintertime comes. You get stuck in the middle of the thing, and you're hoping for good Samaritans who can afford to drive to be able to push you out.

Mr. Eggen: They're easy to push.

Mr. Bonko: Exactly. They're easy to push out, but it's the fact that you've got to be pushed out.

So, you know, here we are stuck with the solution here, and people are complaining.

Speaker's Ruling Relevance

The Deputy Speaker: I've been listing to the debate for most of the evening, and we're hearing about the cost of commodities of all different sorts. I'm looking through the bill, and the bill is the Fuel Tax Act. In second reading we talk about the principles of the bill, and I haven't heard a whole lot of discussion around the Fuel Tax Act. Perhaps if all the members read the bill first, they could focus their comments actually on the bill.

Please proceed, but focus your comments from this point forward on the bill.

Thank you.

Mr. Bonko: Well, I think I did mention the fuel tax at least once or twice there, Mr. Speaker. But if that's the will of the Speaker, then I guess I could in fact open up the guide, as you say, and continue with it as briefly as I can on occasion.

Mr. Bonko: Again, going back to the price of gas, Mr. Speaker, and all the tax on that gas – some are saying that it's a federal deal. Some are saying that it should be the provincial responsibility to ensure that at least the consumers, the people of the province are shielded. I know that in other provinces they have put forth some sort of legislation that the big monopolies have to justify the price going up. They have to make sure that they can in fact justify it. People are talking about supply and demand, and I can understand that portion of it as well. But, again, if we have a hurricane down in the south and some of the refineries are knocked off, that still doesn't account for how you can have even perhaps a 25 per cent increase.

Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down and perhaps wait to have some more enlightening debate, and I can get up and speak as well then.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I'm assuming under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hinman: No. I was just hoping to speak on the bill for a minute.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar under 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. Three years ago we had urged the government to conduct an inquiry into gasoline pricing in the province. We had asked the Premier to initiate a public inquiry into this matter. If the hon. member has suspicions about the free market, do you think that if we had an inquiry into gasoline pricing and the market structure in this province, the hon. member would be more confident in the marketing system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for raising that point. I think that would be a hell of an idea. [interjections] A heck of an idea. The sound does echo differently from here to over there.

I would have more confidence and I think consumers would have more confidence if, in fact, their government took interest and took the proactive approach to ensure that the pricing is fair and equitable and can be justified. But for the fact that it isn't right now and we have made no inquiries as such, people are still left wondering as to the question: is it fair? Is it equitable? The government isn't saying anything.

People are talking all the time. I'm sure MLAs on an ongoing basis continue to get calls at their office. I know I have, even if it's just from rural people calling and complaining, those that have the hobby farms out there, about the tax and about the gas itself, that it's just unreasonable, and again from the city people as well saying: "You know what? This gas is just too darned expensive." So, yes, I think an inquiry from the government would most justify my curiosity and settle my concerns with that.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no one else, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on the fuel tax bill.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to get up and to speak to Bill 35, Fuel Tax Act, at this early hour of the day and to hopefully clarify a few things and the concern.

I guess I want to refer back once again to the Fort McMurray area and the incentives that the government has put in place in order to bring industry in there to develop the tar sands and wanting to move on with that. But we have a definite problem in our cities with the consumption of gas and diesel and the fuel things. To go back to the saying that Ronald Reagan always liked best: tax more what you want less of and less what you want more of. I'm just going from page 11 on the rate of the tax.

11(1) The tax required to be paid pursuant to this Act shall be paid at the following rates:

- (a) with respect to gasoline, diesel and other prescribed fuels, $0.09 per litre;
- (b) with respect to aviation fuel and locomotive fuel, $0.015 per litre;
- (c) with respect to liquefied petroleum gas, $0.065 per litre.

That's the one area, I guess, where I have the greatest concern. We have a production of approximately 10 billion litres of propane or liquid gas here in the province, and we export 80 per cent of that. It just seems: why would we want to export one of the cleanest fuels that we could use here? It's an easy gas to move around the province. It's much better than our natural gas, which takes high pressures of 3,000 psi in order to get very much in there, yet we've put in such a disincentive here to use up the liquid petroleum that we have here in the province.

I just would like to see more incentives, that we would use a product that we have here and have the ability to use in the cities and different areas. It's just an excellent product. It just seemed wrong to put such a high tax on it and to make it prohibitive to make the conversion over to this. We would like to use the cleanest fuels possible. We have an opportunity to do it. It's just disappointing to see, like I say, such a prohibitive tax put on the propane fuel.

The propane people came here last week to lobby the government, and I was disappointed to hear their response: "Well, you know where we're at. Why haven't you been here?" I was astounded to hear that. We make globe-trotting trips to try and find out new technology or go to France to supposedly find out how to deal with cancer research and all over, yet with our own production here in the province we don't have the initiative to get out and to look and promote our own products. I think we should be looking in our own backyards.

On the other side of the coin, in talking to the canola growers, they would like to see production of ethanol and biodiesel and those areas there. We need to look at some sort of incentive in order to bring these clean fuels to use here in Alberta. I believe that we could be innovative in different areas. The companies that want to put up refineries in those areas for the tar sands get good tax breaks, yet again we don't see anything in here to bring the initiative or the investment into the biodiesel or the methanol production. It would be good to be a little bit innovative and to look at those other industries and the cleaner fuels.

You know, taxes are a very driving element. It always amazes me how many people buy or sell different things, farmers especially, trying to get around to save some money, to change their inventory in other areas. It's the same with the taxes on the fuel. We could and should do better. I would urge this government to look at those fuels that are what we consider greener fuels and to reduce the taxes and to put incentives in there so that we could have more of that here in the province and could be leading the country in that area.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 26
Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. member for Edmonton-North Hill. No. Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: You know, it's bad enough, Mr. Chairman, that the Flames lost tonight. Now you're calling me an Edmontonian.

Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to rise and address issues regarding Bill 26 that were brought up during second reading. The Member for Edmonton-Centre said that the bill had good intentions, and I'd certainly agree with that. She did ask, however, about statistical need for the bill and how many times in a year we do have emergency workers who believe they've been placed in this position. In Alberta the numbers are likely to be small, probably less than 10 a year. However, the act was broadened so that good Samaritans could also make application under the act in addition to the police, firefighters, paramedics, corrections officers, and special constables, who are the key drivers of this legislation.

The member also asked about the effectiveness of the bill. The objective of Bill 26 is to minimize the impacts of being exposed to bodily fluids while carrying out duties as a police officer, firefighter, or paramedic or as a result of providing emergency assistance to someone. The faster information can be obtained about a source individual, the more effective it will be. However, the rights of the source individual cannot be overlooked, and I think that this bill strikes a very good balance between the time it takes to get an order and the protection of the source individual against an unreasonable invasion of privacy.

First responders believe this legislation will provide peace of mind for themselves and their families. They face tremendous stress when exposed to the bodily fluids of other individuals. The legislation will assist them in making decisions regarding postexposure prophylaxis for communicable diseases such as hepatitis and HIV. If this legislation provides peace of mind to even one police officer or firefighter, Mr. Chair, it will have been effective.

It's likely that most applicants will have to start on prophylactic medications once the extent of the exposure is determined. However, once test results from the source are available, they may be able to stop their medications.

Regarding the issue of false negatives, the bill does not negate the necessity for appropriate medical care following an exposure. There are protocols for assessment and care following exposure to blood-borne pathogens that will still continue as well as normal clinical practical guidelines.

In addition, an application for an order under this bill had to be made with a physician form, and a physician education program and properly designed physician form will further enable physicians to make the appropriate decisions regarding the need for treatment.

The member also asked: how many people refuse a blood test when they're asked to give it? It's unclear at this point how often the courts will be asked to supply an order when people refuse to voluntarily provide a sample. We don't have specific statistics. However, we believe that having the ability to get the court order will make individuals more likely to provide samples voluntarily.

A question was raised as to whether there are less invasive alternatives to use for the same circumstances. Bill 26 has been drafted to enable the use of the least invasive method of testing. With the new process in place for a possible communicable disease database search we may be able to ascertain accurate disease status on some source individuals without a bodily sample. Since this legislation is not limited to blood samples as medical knowledge and testing procedures improve over time, there will be flexibility with respect to the types of samples required. This will allow for the possibility of less invasive testing.

I'd ask members for their support of Bill 26, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, and thank you for the answers to the questions that were put on the record during second reading of Bill 26, the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act. Having heard that, I'm happy enough to support this bill in Committee of the Whole and don't anticipate bringing forward any amendments to it.

I was pleased to see that it was coming into line with the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. In second reading I had raised the four tests that were set out by the Privacy Commissioner of Canada. The member has answered some of those tests, which were around how much of an issue this is and the issues about the invasion of privacy and the less invasive alternatives. I've gone through section by section and analyzed that. I think there have been a number of processes put in place here to make sure that the rights are being protected, that we're doing the best we can to look after our first responders, our emergency personnel, and balancing that with an individual's right to privacy and not to be subjected unduly to tests.

I like seeing the amount of detail that I'm seeing in this bill. You know, you look at section 3, application for testing order. It outlines the circumstances for when an individual can apply for a testing order, what's required to be in the order to submit the application, identifying the circumstances in which the individual came into contact with the source individual, accompanied by a physician's report. I mean, all the detail is there, and that's what I would expect to see.

You know, section 7 is going over the physician's report. There's an application for a testing order that's accompanied by a physician's report confirming that there was a legitimate risk of exposure. There's a reason to be doing all of this, in other words. It sets out time limits when this should happen.

I think there's been a lot of work done on this bill since it first appeared as the Blood Samples Act in 2004, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. This is a huge improvement, and a lot of my concerns have been addressed. I always think we've got to be very careful about this and be very careful to balance, but I'm happy enough with the work I've seen the member do.

I'm willing to support it in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to speak on Bill 26, Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act. I would like at this time to express my thanks to the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for his work on this legislation. Certainly, I think that this is a major rewrite of the Blood Samples Act of 2004. It proposes a new legal framework for requiring individuals to submit a blood sample. For instance, it allows police officers, firefighters, paramedics, peace officers, and good Samaritans who are exposed to bodily fluids, whether it be by biting, spitting, bleeding, et cetera, to apply for an order for information from the Provincial Court of Alberta. An order for information would allow for a search of the reportable disease databases and, if required, a mandatory blood sample. I see nothing the matter with this.

In conclusion, I would again like to be on the record stating that I appreciate the work that the hon. member has put into this, and I will be very happy to support the hon. member in his work on this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chair, as I participate in debate on Bill 26, Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act, at this stage of debate. Again I promise to be brief in light of the hour.

I didn't have a chance to talk to this bill in the earlier stages, so I just wanted to put some of my comments and thoughts on the record. I would start by noting that the hon. sponsor of the bill has done a good job, and I thank him for bringing this forward. This bill already has the support of police, firefighters, correctional workers, and emergency workers. It is definitely intended to support workers in high-risk jobs who face real danger on a regular basis.

There are currently two instances where bodily samples can be taken without consent, Mr. Chair. The first one is testing for alcohol when there are reasonable grounds to suspect impaired driving, and the second is taking DNA samples related to prosecution for serious crimes. Now, both of these instances are under the Criminal Code of Canada, and they both require that there be reasonable grounds to suspect criminal wrongdoing.

I have some minor concerns with this bill with regard to testing, for example, in that a test can yield a negative result, as was mentioned before, yet we don't know for sure that this person is not a carrier or is not ill with a certain disease. As such, emergency workers and good Samaritans alike will be asked to take precautionary measures, or prophylactic drug cocktails, to avoid contracting the same disease or bug.

Now, from a privacy standpoint the former Privacy Commissioner of Canada has outlined four basic tests to be met. I know that the hon. sponsor has already spoken to some of them, but I'll just repeat them on the record. Test number one is: is this bill necessary? If I'm asking this question, I guess my question would be: what led to the introduction of this act? What circumstances dictated that this Assembly discuss this topic? How prevalent are the cases where communicable diseases are transferred from source individuals to new victims who originally did not carry or have those diseases? You can talk about emergency workers or good Samaritans performing CPR or rescues or first aid.

The second test is whether this bill is effective, and I think it is going to definitely elicit some positive results.

Test number three: how much of an invasion of privacy might there be? The hon. sponsor talked about people who refuse a blood test, for example. We need to maybe keep some statistics on how many people willingly agree and how many people need convincing and how many people are adamantly opposed to it and would not budge and would not yield.

Then test number four: are there less evasive alternatives? We know that there are new technologies now that are not as invasive, things like, you know, breath tests or ultraviolet cross-skin scanners that are being used now with some success and so on and so forth.

My next concern is whether, in fact, passing this bill might inadvertently lead to, you know, instances where we actually create or spread fear or panic. For example, if what we're dealing with is something of the scope and magnitude of things like SARS or avian flu or HIV or AIDS or Ebola, these are bad bugs or bad viruses or bad diseases, and if there's reason to believe that a certain infection is widespread or is spreading, then there might be hysteria or mass panic. So, again, maybe safeguards as to how the public is going to be informed and when and where those tests would be required.

My next point would be pertaining to the privacy of the collected data and the integrity and security of the communicable diseases database. It's being left for regulations. The definition of communicable disease and also the database and how it is managed is left in regulations for the minister in charge to look at. So we need to get some assurances that the information is going to be guarded and is only going to be used for the purposes stated. This is definitely a fine line that we're walking here to balance privacy and safety.

My next point would be with respect to the dignity and respect that are afforded to the source individual, the person that we're asking to test. They need to be treated with dignity and ultimate respect. It's maybe stressful enough to ask them to undertake a blood test. Then, you know, we need to tell them that we're doing it for their well-being and that of society at large. So dignity and respect are important.

I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked about some section-by-section and line-by-line analysis, but I wanted to focus on section 13 with respect to the results of the analysis and how the sample results are going to be utilized. The medical officer of health must "provide a copy of the results to the applicant's physician and to the source individual's physician," so the source and the target, and inform the applicant and the source that their physicians have also received the results. So not only give them the information; tell them that they have it and that "the results of an analysis are not admissible as evidence in any criminal or civil proceeding."

Section 16 talks about confidentiality, and I briefly touched on that. Again it's that issue of privacy.

Section 19 talks about the offence and penalty. It says that contravening this act would make the person liable for a fine of not more than $2,000 for the first offence and not more than $5,000 for subsequent offences. Now, I just need clarification as to what would constitute a contravention of the act or a breach of the act. Is it the person refusing to give a blood sample, or is it maybe the person at the other end refusing to take a blood sample? So just a definition of what would be deemed a contravention of the act would be most useful and most appreciated.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity to speak.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 26, Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I don't have an awful lot to say. I've made most of the comments that I wanted to on Bill 33, although I could always change my mind. I made the comments that I thought were particularly relevant during second reading, although I would like to reiterate that while this bill does provide a modicum of tax relief, particularly for low-income earners, which is always a good thing, the Official Opposition caucus still believes that we should be eliminating the health care premium tax. Another one that I'm particularly passionate about is the 3 per cent insurance tax, which I believe most Albertans aren't even aware they pay.

I do have a question on section 4, Mr. Chairman, in this amendment act as we discuss it today. Section 4 talks about increasing the base salary for spousal and eligible dependent tax credits from $12,900 to $14,899, yet on page 136 of the 2006-2007 fiscal plan it states that "we will also increase the basic, spousal and eligible dependant amounts by an additional $100, raising the amounts to $14,899 for 2006, up from $14,523." So the question I have is: why is the legislation presently using $12,900 instead of the $14,523 that is referred to in the fiscal plan? I'm assuming that that has to do with the indexing that has taken place since that part of the bill was last amended, but I don't know that for a fact. I'm wondering if the Minister of Finance might be able to clarify that for me.

I guess the only other question I have is a relatively minor one as well. Section 7 of the amending bill refers to the 2006 taxation year, and I believe it either cites in the bill or I saw it elsewhere that that, of course, would start on July 1 of this year, 2006. I'm wondering what impact that might have on the government's fiscal year since, of course, that doesn't coincide with the taxation year. We're actually in the 2006-2007 fiscal year for the government right now. I'm sure that this is probably a bit of a conundrum for the government any time because their fiscal year doesn't match up entirely with the taxation year. That was a question I had, just curious what the impact on the government's fiscal plan might be with making that change.

Those were the only questions I had at the committee stage, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to receiving a response from the Minister of Finance, and I will take my seat and allow somebody else to ask their questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

An Hon. Member: Calder.

The Chair: Oh, Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. We have some latitude in our geographic associations here at this hour. It seems like the south end of Edmonton and the north end of Calgary are joining, and the west and the north are moving.

Anyway, I'm happy to make some comments on Bill 33, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act. I don't think I've had an opportunity to speak on this before. I guess the overall criticism that I would put forward is that it doesn't seem to be a significant tax saving in a very progressive sort of way; in other words, allowing greater tax savings to be realized by persons and families who would most need it. You know, that's a fundamental problem with our whole tax regime, Mr. Chairman, in this province. We've gone away from using a progressive system to administer or levy our tax system.

A progressive tax system is really the fundamental basis of a sound, democratic system because, of course, without being able to adjust for different income levels, then you are creating vast inequities between different levels of income. Most of the democratic world, in fact, uses a progressive tax system, and we do use it when we need to here, when we realize it. Unfortunately, it creates serious problems. Whenever we talk about personal income tax amendments or changes, what have you, that fundamental problem exists. What we have with this current amendment is certainly an adjustment, but it's not a significant one in terms of the amount of monies that people are realizing in savings.

I think that at this point we need to look at some individual sections of the bill here. I guess my first place in the bill would be over on page 4. This is adding the clause regarding the $400 prosperity cheque sent out in the fall. It says:

In the case of an individual who is an eligible individual in respect of one or more qualified dependants but is not eligible in respect of himself or herself to a rebate under this Division, $400 for each qualified dependant.

This allows for all children born in Alberta as of the cut-off date to qualify for the prosperity cheque despite their parents not having paid taxes in Alberta that year. I think this is probably a reasonable means by which to capture as many people as possible, so I commend it for that.

As well, just looking here, it says that Albertans are settling for a hike in the basic personal tax exemption from $14,523 to $14,899. The hike amounts to only, really, a $10 savings on top of the $25 break gained from inflation indexing. So, Mr. Chairman, that only adds up to 35 bucks, right? You know, giving us a $35 tax savings, considering the $265 million, say, corporate tax break that we saw in this same budget, really points to the sort of skewed priorities, I think, that the government has. You know, we came up with sort of this ad hoc $400 prosperity cheque, but really if you want to build savings or pass on savings to each individual, the best way to do it is through the taxation system. It gives you a framework. It gives you accountability. It hopefully allows for you to make adjustments according to a person's income. It can be something that people can count on. It provides a lasting framework over time.

That's where we need to go if we are going to in fact try to make adjustments for inflation or give people some equity back from windfall energy revenues or what have you or even to help people with their energy bills as well. Through the tax system is a way by which we can do that. It certainly does make more sense. So, please, when we are looking to do the same next year because we know that there will be windfall revenues in our budget, I would ask that we look to reforming our personal income tax system and then use that system as the framework by which we pass on savings to every Albertan in the most equitable way possible.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 33, Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 33 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Health Information Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have this opportunity to address the questions about Bill 31 that were raised during second reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had asked whether the sections about the registration number for health service providers are reflective of the review committee's recommendation 13. I can confirm that this is directly related to the Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee recommendation 13.

Regarding the PATRIOT Act, let me make a couple of points. The following sections address the concerns of the PATRIOT Act: section 3, section 5(i) and (ii), and section 17(a), (b), and (c). Those particular amendments are intended to protect the privacy of Albertans by ensuring that their health information cannot be automatically disclosed in response to a U.S. court subpoena, warrant, or order.

Currently under the Health Information Act health information may be disclosed on the authority of a court, which is not specifically defined. This legislation would now define the court as being a court that has jurisdiction in the province of Alberta. Without limiting the definition to Alberta, of course, individuals and companies that may be subject to a U.S. jurisdiction, such as parent companies of Canadian operations, may have to disclose health information to comply with the law under which they are incorporated.

Changing from an ethics committee to a research ethics board is directly related to the review committee's recommendation 39, which reads, "The term 'ethics committee' should be changed to 'research ethics board'." Research as defined in the Health Information Act includes "academic, applied or scientific health-related research that necessitates the use of individually identifying diagnostic, treatment and care information or individually identifying registration information, or both."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had asked about other governments being able to access health information. The committee recommendation is reflected in section 5(i) of the amendment act, which enables other provincial and territorial governments to obtain information about health services which they fund and which have been provided to the persons under their jurisdiction. This would enable the various provincial and territorial jurisdictions to use the information and also to develop appropriate policies and to plan and manage their health system.

The hon. member also posed questions regarding the registration information to complete warrants, the removal of provision 35(1)(j), and the addition of section 37.3. The addition of section 37.3 is intended to address committee recommendation 31. This amendment would enable custodians to exercise discretion in disclosing a limited amount of health information to police and prosecutors for reasons of public safety. These specified data elements may enable the police to obtain a subpoena, warrant, or order issued or made by a court to access additional health information.

With the amended provision a custodian could respond to a request from the police service, and they could initiate contact with the police if they felt that that was required. The amendment enables the disclosure of health service provider information for public safety as this is a piece of information that the police may require in order to obtain a subpoena or a warrant or an order. These provisions would replace what is currently section 35(1)(j).

The amendment in section 5(r) regarding payment is intended to enable the disclosure of limited health information without consent to third parties for payment purposes. An example is to enable third-party insurers to adjudicate the payment of health services or products without referring to the individual for consent. So this does not refer to a guardian as they would not be under a contract.

The member also posed a question about the removal of what is currently section 35(4)(b)(ii), which speaks to the information being disclosed by a custodian to a health professional body. The current wording in the Health Information Act is not consistent with the wording in the Health Professions Act. This causes a conflict for the custodian who is disclosing the information to a professional body. So by removing the section requiring destruction of the information at the earliest opportunity, the intention is to harmonize these two pieces of legislation and to rely on the records retention provision in the Health Professions Act. That retention period is now 10 years.

The hon. member also asked about committee recommendation 34. The addition of sections 37.1 and 37.2 is intended to address this recommendation.

The scope of the Health Information Act is primarily the publicly funded health sector. Custodians include fee-for-service providers. The Health Information Act does not apply to providers who offer privately funded health services. The new section addresses disclosure provisions only. They have no impact on the ability of custodians to collect or demand additional health service provider information.

Section 8 does indeed relate directly to the committee recommendation 43, which reads:

The requirement to note every disclosure of individually identifiable health information without consent should be retained and amended to not require notation of the purpose of the disclosure when the disclosure is made electronically through a system with automated audit capability.

In other words, there is an audit trail there left by the electronic sending.

Mr. Chairman, these are my comments. Before I proceed, I would like to introduce an amendment being proposed for Bill 31 and ask for its circulation in the House.

The Chair: We'll wait a moment till they're distributed. We will label this amendment A1.

Okay. Hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, you may proceed.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment now being circulated in the House references section 2(b)(ii) of the bill, which proposes to add a registration number to the list of data elements that are included in the definition of health services provider information in the act.

Now, in a recent order the Privacy Commissioner ruled that since the term "registration number" was not specifically identified in the act, it was not health information, so the intention of the department was to add the registration number to the list of health services provider data elements in an effort to be consistent with the inclusion of the licence number and to align with the principles of the Health Information Act.

While the department considered this somewhat of a housekeeping amendment, concerns have since been raised that it may have had some unanticipated impacts for third parties. One such third party has appealed the decision of the Privacy Commissioner with respect to the collection of health information, and that decision is currently undergoing judicial review. The department is proposing to monitor that court proceeding and re-examine the issue as required. I would like to point out to hon. members that it was not the physicians who asked for this amendment.

The Chair: Does anyone wish to speak to the amendment?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I'll adjourn debate on the amendment.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My pleasure to rise tonight and speak to Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006, in committee stage.

I want to start out by making some comments regarding debate in second reading and a reference from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the leader of the third party, who noted that I was offering my qualified support for a corporate tax cut and made some comment about the fact that the Alberta Liberals want everything for everybody. I will admit that we're not like the NDs, and we don't necessarily believe that big government is good and big business is bad. We're not even necessarily like the Conservatives, who believe the opposite. They would tend to believe that big business is good and big government is bad, or at least they used to believe that big government is bad. More recently, of course, with the addition of ministries like Restructuring and Government Efficiency and an associate minister of transportation, I'm beginning to wonder if maybe they don't believe in both big business and big government at the same time.

Ms Blakeman: Well, they don't walk the talk.

Mr. R. Miller: That would be the case: they do not necessarily walk the talk.

When we look at Bill 34, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, in the committee stage . . .

The Chair: Members, if we could keep the background conversations down, it would be appreciated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Not really an awful lot of concerns regarding the legislation per se, but I would like to point out a couple of them. In section 2, which is identified as accommodating federal legislative changes, I'm wondering if the Finance minister might be able to elaborate on the reimbursement of the Crown charges. This is something that comes out of page 1 of Bill 34. Also, again I'm wondering if the minister might be able to provide an example of when section 12.1(1) would apply.

Then in the three-column documents, Mr. Chairman, that were provided to us when the minister's staff gave a briefing, on page 1 of that document they refer to the fact that Alberta is not paralleling the federal transition process. My question would just be: why was it deemed not necessary in that particular case to parallel the federal transition process?

Now, section 4, Mr. Chairman, is the section where we actually identify that the cut is to be to 10 per cent from 11.5, which it is currently. I'm curious to know why the minister chose to make that cut this year. We all know that that's a cut that has been promised for some time now. I think it goes back about five years. Every year the business community, especially the small-business community, has been asking the minister and, in fact, lobbying the government and lobbying the opposition for that cut to finally take place. Every year the minister says, "Well, you know, it's one of many tax cuts that are under consideration" and that they always consider tax cuts and that they're always willing to look at tax cuts. But year after year it's been put off and put off and put off. Finally, this year we see it come forward.

The question is: why this year? In particular, I'm wondering whether the government committee that she referred to last fall that would be reviewing the tax regime in fact finally did recommend that the cuts should go ahead this year, Mr. Chairman, and if so, if that was the case, if she would be willing to table that committee's report in the Legislature and let all Albertans see the recommendation.

Section 7(1) refers to mutual trusts. Since in an earlier bill that was dealing with securities, Mr. Chairman, we actually struck a section that dealt with income trusts and it was indicated that it was being folded in with mutual trusts and that the two were being treated similarly, I'm wondering if that's the same case with this section 7(1).

Section 10 allows the minister to waive penalties or interest owing, Mr. Chairman. I'm wondering if, in fact, the minister or the ministry has ever actually used that power under the act and, if so, if the minister might be willing to make available to this Assembly an itemized list of when that power has been utilized, once again so that all Albertans would have the opportunity to see which corporations have been granted that exemption or granted that waiving of their penalties and interest owing.

Ms Blakeman: Special status.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, you know, Mr. Chairman, the Member for Edmonton-Centre is suggesting that perhaps some corporations in Alberta might be given special status from this government. I'm certainly not saying that that is the case, but I think it would be fair to say that there are a number of Albertans who would suggest that it might be the case. If it isn't, then there would be no reason to withhold that information from Albertans. If it is, then all the more reason why I should be asking the question, I suppose.

Ms Blakeman: Well, it's certainly not transparent.

Mr. R. Miller: It would speak to transparency and openness, suggests my colleague for Edmonton-Centre, and I think that that's a fair comment. There's been a lot of talk, Mr. Chairman, in this Assembly this week about the issues of openness and transparency. I've said many times that anything we can do to assure Albertans that their government is operating in an open and transparent manner, that would be a good thing. In fact, I believe we had a draft report distributed to MLAs this week on the Conflicts of Interest Act

Review Committee. I know that it was discussed in this Assembly last night, and there was discussion about the fact that we are finally dragging this Assembly into the 21st century in terms of a little more openness and transparency. As I said, that's a good thing. Certainly, if we could do likewise with the Corporate Tax Amendment Act, we would all be better served for that.

Section 13, Mr. Chairman, clarifies the definition of insurance companies to ensure that they are paying the insurance tax. Now, I think I mentioned in debate earlier tonight that any time the government changes a section like this to ensure that somebody is paying a tax, it would cause me to question whether or not, in fact, somebody hasn't been paying a tax. Therefore, I wonder whether or not the Finance ministry has perhaps been allowing revenue to slip through their hands and at what cost to the Alberta taxpayer, at what cost to the finances of this province. So that's certainly a question I would have, and I'm wondering if at some point the minister might like to comment on that. If, in fact, that is the case, once again I'm wondering if maybe the minister would provide in writing an estimate of the amount of money that may not have been collected from insurance companies as a result of the legislative wording the way it is now and the prompting of this change in the wording of the legislation before us today.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, section 14. I'm wondering if the minister might identify for us why section 106(1.01) is being substituted.

Those would be my questions for this evening, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to a response from the minister either tonight or at least hopefully before this bill gets to third reading. That would help me to determine once and for all whether or not I'm going to continue my qualified support for this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: I am very interested in speaking to Bill 34 this morning, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006. The robust economy that we are enjoying in Alberta is due in no small part to the activities of our many fine businesses that operate in the province, and we certainly wish them well. We have no problem. In fact, we encourage the business activity that does go on in the province. We have seen unprecedented growth and development of so many sectors of our economy in the last 10 years. It's quite remarkable. Alberta has shone as a business centre for not just Canada but across North America. That is a positive thing. It affects most people in a positive way in this province.

Considering that, Mr. Chairman, and considering the boom that we are experiencing at this point in time and the robust activity in our economy, I think that by the most conservative estimates of economists then, it's certainly not the time that you continue with corporate tax cuts. It runs exactly opposite to best practices in regard to managing a boom. I find it remarkable that this agenda continues on. What we do need to do is manage our taxation system according to how the economy is performing. If the economy takes a downturn, then that's when you give the tax cuts to businesses. We certainly recognize the value of that and encourage it to happen.

But this is not the time when you have a downturn in the economy. It's quite the opposite. So it's as though you're using a tool that you have at your means and firing it off at exactly the time that you don't want to use it. It paints the government into a corner to do so, and it is, quite frankly, irresponsible to do so at this point in time. We certainly don't preclude the possibility of using tax cuts in a measured sort of way according to how the economy is performing.

So I just really wonder why this agenda moves on. There have to be ulterior motives in mind. I think of a whole range of reasons why the government would continue with more tax cuts in the midst of a very large boom cycle in our economy. It seems irresponsible because, in fact, you can overheat an economy. This is a widely observed phenomenon economically. That's why on a federal level governments manipulate the interest rates up and down, to manage an economy, to make sure that it's not overheating. So while we don't have that means at our disposal here in the province, we certainly do have the capacity to tweak our taxation system.

You know, cutting the corporate tax rate is unwise for a number of reasons. First of all, it ignores the fact that Alberta's budget is well above its tax base capacity. We are already depending far too much on oil revenue alone. So to further undercut our stable sources of income, that is taxation, is unwise, to say the least, and potentially disastrous, and I'm not just making this up.

The Chair: Hon. members, I know that everyone is anxious to get on the speakers list, but the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has the floor. I'd be happy to recognize everybody else as soon as he's done.

Mr. Eggen: No worries. I certainly have a lot to say on this, and I'm not going to stop. You know, why are we running this Legislature in the middle of the night? It's because we have a government that's undemocratic. You want to make decisions in the middle of the night and pass things through as if we're smugglers or something like that when, in fact, we can do this in the light of day. There's nothing wrong with running this Legislature during normal hours as opposed to in the middle of the night. I find it absurd that you people sit around and don't listen to what's going on, want to jam things through, and then somehow complain about it afterwards. It's ridiculous, it's undemocratic, and I really don't see the value in it. I think the public has a right to know that that's the sort of thing that goes on here, and I don't think that we're making wise decisions in the middle of the night.

I will continue with something that all of you should know, the Conservatives and the Liberals both, and that is the unwise choice of making corporate tax cuts in the middle of an economic boom.

Mr. Cenaiko: What's in that water?

Mr. Eggen: I wish I had something in the water, definitely.

You know, in fact, the government's own budget document states that with no general sales tax, payroll taxes or capital tax, Alberta's tax base is relatively narrow compared to other jurisdictions. While this is a benefit to Albertans, it also comes with some risks. A broader range of taxes means more stable revenues spread out over a wider area.

With relatively fewer . . . sources, predictable funding for key public services is at more risk in the event of an economic slow-down. Consequently, it is inadvisable to eliminate or to dedicate more taxes.

This is right from the document from your own government, page 134, Alberta's Tax Advantage.

Yet eliminating or reducing corporate taxes is precisely what the government is doing. Further lowering already extremely low taxes while at the same time declaring that because it is so dangerous, they find it inadvisable to dedicate more taxes. In other words, no more tax-based funding for core programs because there are no taxes to fund them with. So we find the irony in doing this. Certainly, during the time of an unprecedented economic boom the whole concept seems irresponsible at best.

Over five years this government has reduced business taxes by 4 per cent. This may seem like a small percentage, but that innocuous amount totals over $265 million in lost revenue this year alone. In the 2004 budget:

Cuts to corporate income taxes started in 2001, and will save Alberta corporations about $435 million in taxes this year. These savings are on top of the savings from cuts to other corporate taxes, such as the elimination of the financial institutions capital tax and the drop in the railway fuel tax.

In the last two years alone, then, the cuts from 12.5 to 10 per cent will have taken more than $700 million out of government revenue. That $700 million would have paid for three times the amount urged to increase and improve on seniors' and long-term care throughout this province, which was only $250 million. That $700 million alone – and remember that's just from two years, not in the whole five years of cuts in the regime that has been set out – would pay for more than twice the amount of all the new schools that are being looked for by the Calgary board of education.

You know, I find it absurd that this is would even be brought forward when what we're doing here is not only changing the corporate tax rate but over time changing the capacity for the government to even govern. So that's why I find it equally disconcerting, and perhaps, I guess, it tells us more about the Liberal opposition than I knew from before. When you are deciding to reduce that tax base past the level where a government can effectively govern and provide the services that are mandated from that government, then I would suggest that that's an irresponsible approach to governance. In fact, you can't have everything. You can't have it all ways. I expect it from the Conservatives. I was very disappointed to hear it from the Liberals. At the end of the day is it up to the New Democrat opposition to be the conservative voice of reason in these issues? Well, I suppose so. I just wish there was more of us.

Secondly, to lower our already low corporate tax rates in order to attract larger corporations who face growing pressures to compete not only here in Canada but on a global basis – this comes from the budget speech – risks establishing a race to the bottom, I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, in terms of corporate tax rates throughout not only Canada but U.S. and Central America as well. We cannot afford to become the Third World labour tax equivalent of North America in order to attract investment, much less when we already have some of the more nefarious laws in regard to labour in the whole country.

It's a difficult situation. I know that we have to compete with other jurisdictions, but you know the competition does not have to be a race to the bottom. There is a recognition that a stable sort of social structure, social programs, as well as a fair wage initiative in certain areas does attract businesses too. It attracts the sorts of businesses that perhaps Alberta is in a position to want to have more than others. So a corporate tax cut just on its own is not necessarily the way to catch the biggest fish. The biggest fish can be caught, as well, through presenting a balanced social fabric that is somehow conducive to raising families and to creating stability. This is something that corporations look forward to as well.

According to the 2006 budget documents the government's own internal review of its tax policy found that "we are competitive within North America in attracting investment and skilled workers," which is great.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah.

So let's find that level and stay there. Attempting to demonstrate that our government must be proactive in lowering corporate tax rates, the budget documents also reference recently proposed tax cuts in Germany, which would lower the rates there from 25 to 19 per cent, still twice the rate that we have here in this province. The only province with a lower general business tax rate is Quebec, with 9.9 per cent. This places us second in Canada with the lowest business tax rates, with our closest tax neighbour, B.C., weighing in at about 12 per cent.

The government's insistence that only by lowering income tax rates will we continue to attract investment and, therefore, skilled workers I think is at best problematic. It threatens to create something of what you call a catch-22. A cut to 10 per cent won't help with the labour and real estate shortages plaguing the province. "The knee-jerk reaction is that a cut in corporate income tax rate will just accentuate the obvious flow of investment that's already well under way towards Alberta, but at the same time businesses might be dissuaded by some of the bottlenecks that [in fact] are arising." This is from an economist at BMO Nesbitt Burns Inc. and from the National Post, which is certainly a conservative paper, at best.

You can in fact impede the progress of your economic growth by allowing it to be overheated and not to be regulating it in a reasonable sort of way. We're not suggesting that we dive into the economy so much that we are somehow interfering with its logical progress, but we are suggesting that we do use the means at our disposal, which is a reasonable tax rate, a reasonable corporate tax rate as well as a personal tax rate that will in fact bring in stable revenues for the government as well as have these different sectors pay their due, and the economy will chug along just fine.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 34 went through second reading on April 24, and I would just like to address a few of the points that were raised at that time. This tax rate reduction will save Alberta business some $265 million in 2006-07. I'd just like to reiterate that helping Alberta business is helping Albertans. While Alberta's economy is strong now, cutting the corporate income tax rate will benefit the province and its residents for years to come. The lower corporate income tax rate builds a strong foundation for tomorrow's economic growth and job creation so that Albertans will have more jobs, stronger communities, and a better quality of life.

There was also a member that questioned why the tax cut was proposed this year. As I previously mentioned, the government undertook an internal review of the province's tax system to assess whether our tax system remains competitive and fair and encourages economic growth. This review identified, Mr. Chairman, that the general corporate income tax rate is a priority for tax cuts. In 2001 the government promised to take action on reducing corporate taxes. We initiated the process when we reduced our general corporate tax rate from 15.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent between 2001 and 2004. At the same time, the small business rate was cut in half, to 3 per cent, and the small business income threshold was doubled to $400,000. This bill's proposed cut, to a 10 per cent proposed general corporate income tax, will be another very positive action to help us maintain the competitive advantage of Alberta businesses. The low-rate, broad-based tax environment is a hallmark of this province. Our tax system is simple and transparent, resulting in lower administrative and compliance costs for taxpayers and improved accountability for Albertans.

Just to respond to another point raised by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the companies claiming the insurance reserve, this change will ensure that any companies claiming this reserve will also now be subject to an insurance premiums tax. That's reflected under section 86.

I would encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise in committee to talk about Bill 34, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006. I rise also to raise concerns about continuing corporate tax cuts and, with my colleague from Edmonton-Calder, have serious concerns, particularly at this time. It is totally inconsistent with principles of sustainable economic policy to be contributing to an already overheated economy in this province.

We've seen unprecedented profits in the industrial sector, particularly the oil and gas sector. The primary industry to benefit from this tax will be the oil industry. It fails to stimulate the diversity that we need in our economy and continues to promote the oil and gas sector over others and to benefit them when already huge profits are being made. We're having tremendous demands, tremendous problems in getting the labour to deal with some of the other important issues in our province because that industry is sucking up everything.

We already have the lowest or very close to the lowest corporate tax in the country, certainly well below most of the other provinces. We are creating an imbalance in Canada. We are already dealing with significant federal tax deductions with this latest budget. We are indeed going to benefit businesses to the tune of $265 million by this 1 and a half per cent reduction in corporate tax, but where could this $265 million be invested? In human and environmental protection, surely. This would go a long way to removing the health care premium for Albertans, which is a regressive tax that is penalizing our most vulnerable population and making health care less accessible. We are not funding persons with developmental disabilities adequately. There's a tremendous strain now among caregivers and among those who are the most vulnerable in our society. Indeed, we may stimulate more jobs, we may stimulate more business, particularly in the oil and gas sector, but what about our other responsibilities to Albertans and the significantly larger investment that's needed for protecting our environment for the future?

So I, on balance, have very strong feelings about this 1 and a half per cent reduction in corporate tax and feel that any responsible economic management would see that this is not appropriate at this time, and I certainly will not be supporting this bill along with others in the House. I'll leave my comments at that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 34, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 34 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and
Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start by answering some of the questions from second reading, and I'd like to take this opportunity to begin by addressing comments previously raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, most of which were related to the second amendment, dealing with contaminated sites.

In response to comments on why management of contaminated sites is allowed in the bill, well, these amendments will facilitate cleanup and redevelopment of brownfield sites by incorporating flexible risk management options for protecting health and environment. Cleanup is the option that is promoted above all else through remediation certificates under the EPEA. But when the cost of cleanup becomes prohibitively expensive, there are other, more flexible options that will provide the same level of health protection and allow beneficial reuse of the site, especially for sites that have an active potential for redevelopment, such as Hub Oil. Sometimes risk management alternatives bring revitalization to a community when the alternatives are brownfields.

With regard to the hon. member's concerns about who has the liability for contamination on lands that are transferred to municipalities, I'd like to clarify that the initial persons responsible will remain responsible for cleanup of the contamination and will continue to be pursued using all the enforcement tools in the act. AENV is committed to ensuring that the polluter pays. The amendment simply ensures clarity that a municipality that receives land is not considered one of the parties that is held responsible.

Alberta Environment is developing new regulations specifically addressing the issuance of remediation certificates. The hon. member had concerns as to how inspectors will make consistent decisions on when to issue a remediation certificate and who will be issuing the certificate. The regulation will stipulate the remediation standards that must be met and the information that must be submitted with the application for a certificate. The department is also working with professional organizations to support the use of professionals to sign off on the application, indicating that all requirements have been met.

These measures taken together ensure that very clear rules are in place. We have the additional assurance that professionals review the application. This regulation is being drafted with input from the Contaminated Sites Stakeholders Advisory Committee. The department maintains the authority to issue reclamation and remediation certificates and documents. The department does want to expand the role of professionals such as agronomists and engineers in conducting the work and reviewing the applications. The minister would consult with stakeholders before implementing any expansion of this role to actually issuing the certificate on behalf of the department.

Finally, to address the hon. member's concern on conflicts of interest with partners, the selection of partners will include reviews of conflict of interest. Alberta Environment will develop agreements with partners so that they are clear on accountabilities, responsibilities, duties, and reporting requirements.

I'd like to move on to address some concerns made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. A question of conflicts of interest was also raised, and I believe I've addressed this issue in my points to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The hon.

member also asked for a comment on the need for a public registry of all delegation, transfers of powers, and access to supporting documentation. Well, any system envisioned under the partnership approach is one of shared governance that includes publicly open and transparent processes as well as clearly defined roles and responsibilities of all parties involved. These are our standard operating practices, and it's not necessary to be put into the act.

With regard to the hon. member's question on financial security for reclamation, the Auditor General has asked AENV to ensure that it is collecting the full amount of financial security required by the act and its regulations. The department has been keeping the Auditor General's office informed of its progress in addressing that recommendation. Progressive reclamation reduces the liability that must be covered by reclamation security, and thus the combination of a tool to incent quicker reclamation that reduces the need for security and the work by the department to address the recommendations of the Auditor General is complementary.

The hon. member also spoke on the topic of emissions thresholds. Emissions thresholds are set in regulations or standards that are developed with input from stakeholders. For example, the emissions threshold for SO₂ and NO₂ were developed with input from the Clean Air Strategic Alliance and have been set at: nitrogen oxides to be reduced in half by 2005, from 140,000 tonnes per year to 60,000 tonnes per year, and sulphur dioxides to be reduced by two-thirds by 2005, from 180,000 tonnes to 65,000 tonnes per year.

Alberta Environment sets emissions thresholds in consultation with stakeholders. Even if Alberta Environment entered into some form of partnership delivery, the minister would remain accountable for the development and implementation of the thresholds.

The emissions trading regulation came into effect February 22 of this year. The amendment follows the consensus recommendations of the Clean Air Strategic Alliance and has the support of industry, municipalities, NGOs, which include Pembina, the Environmental Law Centre, and government. The regulation is available to all Albertans through the Queen's Printer website.

In response to the hon. member's question as to why it is an offence to not report historical contamination, the department will continue to work on implementing the Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee recommendations. As we work to implement these recommendations, there will be a detailed review of all of the offence provisions in the act and an update of them in a co-ordinated manner. The offence provisions for the duty to report will be included in an upcoming amendment.

In response to the hon. member's question as to who is responsible for contamination from companies that are no longer in business, the definition of person responsible is quite broad, so there may be other parties that can be required to remediate the sites. The Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee has also recommended a formal process to determine who is responsible for cleanups for companies that go out of business or become defunct. The department will continue to work on implementing this recommendation.

Finally, the hon. member asked why a certain reference to the protection of human health was replaced with "adverse effect." Human health and environmental protection are of paramount concern. The definition of adverse effect in the act includes human health, the environment, and safety or property. Thus, the amendment provides the same protection but allows a broader range of options to return such sites in our communities to productive uses.

I'd like to address the comments recently made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. In supporting the hon. member's suggestion for committed consultation on the documents that are incorporated into regulations as they're developed, the minister continues Alberta Environment's long-standing commitment to Albertans to consult with affected stakeholders in developing such documents. I'd also like to clarify that people can obtain copies of these documents that are incorporated into regulations such as the codes of practice through the Queen's Printer. Others such as the department standards are available directly through the department website or through links to other websites.

In regard to the hon. member's comment on the need for public accountability of delegated powers, I believe this question is similar to the one I responded to from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The hon. member also asked why the AENV is partially implementing the recommendations of the Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee. I'd like to clarify that the department reviewed the full suite of recommendations and is working on implementing the recommendations in an efficient manner. The approach is consistent with the department's focus on continuous improvement and streamlining of its acts and regulations. The department is committed to continuing work on the remaining recommendations.

I believe I responded to the hon. member's concern over the use of the term "adverse effect" as opposed to "maximum protection to human life, health and the environment" in my comments to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Finally, the hon. member asked why the amendment does not allow the director to issue an order if an adverse effect may imminently occur. The department is implementing the recommendations of the Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee in this amendment. The department will continue to develop policy to clarify the definition of adverse effect so that industry and the public clearly understand that contaminated sites, irrespective of when they were created, must be remediated.

I'd like to move on to the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The hon. member shared concerns on emission limits for the electrical sector and the fact that they're based on intensity rate. We understand the nature of the concerns associated with intensity targets for greenhouse gas emissions, but the approach for the electricity project framework for NO₂ and SO₂ – this trading system directly connects emission limits to current and planned generation. As such, they reflect a consensus approach for absolute reductions identified through the multistakeholder CASA process, which involved industry and environmental organizations. Again, based on current expectations these limits will result in a 30 per cent to 50 per cent absolute reduction in NO₂ and SO₂ by 2025, which is much below the 2003 levels. Again, this was supported by the stakeholders. There's further support by a five-year multistakeholder review to ensure limits are appropriate and on track to achieve the desired reductions.

I believe I've addressed the hon. member's question on who has liability for municipalities. I've also addressed the member's concerns in reporting historical contamination, and I've addressed the hon. member's concerns regarding consistent decisions from our inspectors for remediation certificates.

I'd like to move on to the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Comments from the hon. member regarding contaminated sites have been addressed in the answer to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. The hon. member's comments regarding polluter pays are certainly appropriate as these amendments do not change the duty or responsibility of the polluter to remediate the contaminated sites on any sites, even older sites. To quote our minister, perfect protection of Alberta's environment remains a cornerstone of Alberta Environment.

On the comments and concerns of the Member for Calgary-

Varsity about the impaired ability of industry to provide protection because of insufficient funds, I believe those have been answered in my answers to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. [interjections]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has the floor.

Mr. Mitzel: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder had some specific questions regarding the public's access to information. I'd like to clarify that the minister is very much in favour of getting information into the hands of Albertans so that they can make well-informed decisions about how their lives, their work, and their communities affect the environment. The current act requires the minister to issue an order to describe the type of information to release and then amend the regulation to describe how the information can be released.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to respond to questions. I trust my responses have helped to reinforce the enabling amendments for the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act that have been brought forward in Bill 29. I look forward to your support.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and make comments on Bill 29, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006. I had the privilege of meeting with the hon. member earlier and talking about some of the concerns that underpin our commitment in Alberta to strengthen legislation, not weaken it. The concerns that I have are that, in a few cases only, this bill is actually weakening our protection of the environment and our holding accountable of industry for contaminated sites.

As the hon. member indicated, the contaminated sites advisory group had significant input into the recommendations but had very little input into the final drafting of this bill. One has to wonder if the oil and gas industry didn't have a lot more influence on the drafting of these recommendations because this alleviates some of the accountability of the oil and gas industry in some of its contaminated sites. It should be of concern to all hon. members. We do not want to let industry off the hook in terms of older, long-standing contaminated sites and who ends up paying for it if it ever gets cleaned up or simply postponed from year to year and decade to decade, as has been the case.

With that in mind, I wanted to make three amendments that would, I think, help to strengthen this bill. I would like to circulate the first. I'll read it out after it's been circulated, Mr. Chairman. It relates to section 14.

The Chair: Do you want to perhaps read it out, hon. member, and then we'll know which one?

Dr. Swann: Yes: (a), in clause (c) in the proposed section 117(3) by striking out "or inspector" after "acceptable to the Director"; (b), in clause (e) in the proposed section 117(4) again by striking out "or inspector" after "conditions the Director"; and (c), in clause (f) in the proposed section 117(5)(a) by striking out "or inspector" after "the Director". The purpose of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, as discussed earlier with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, is to ensure that the standard is maintained and the guidelines are fundamentally set by the director and that these guidelines cannot be modified by an inspector. They have to be at least met by minimum standards set by the director, and then if the inspector has further standards to require remediation and reclamation, those indeed could be additional to but must be additional to the minimum standards set by the director.

The Chair: We'll refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Dr. Swann: Thank you.

The Chair: As soon as it's distributed, we'll proceed.
Okay, hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Chairman, I welcome comment, and particularly from the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. The purpose of this, again, is to ensure that it's the director that sets the terms of the reclamation rather than the director or an inspector, giving far too much leeway, it seems to me, to inspectors, who may have variable training, variable experience, and variable pressures upon them. It's clear to me that the pressures could be significant in the field, companies who stand to lose a significant amount of money. In doing the job up to standard, they are required to bring land back to equivalent use, and there are many different ways in which that equivalent land use might be interpreted in the field.

It's very clear to those of us on the environmental protection side that we need to have a very clear, strong, minimum set of guidelines established by the director and that we cannot have any individual judgment at the local inspector level about what those standards should be.

The Chair: Anyone else wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm speaking in favour of this amendment. It's actually very similar to something that I was considering as well. It just gives us a great deal more clarity and ability to pick a person in a position of responsibility. I believe that we want to ensure that the minister is in fact having the best advice forwarded to his office, and I believe that this amendment would help to do so. That's all.

Thanks.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise on a second amendment to Bill 29, Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006. I'm recommending that it be amended by adding the following after section 4:

- 17.1 The Minister must maintain a register which is publicly accessible in which is recorded every
- (a) delegation of a power or duty under section 17(1),
 - (b) transfer of the administration of a provision of this Act under section 18, and
 - (c) designation of a person as a Director under section 25(1).

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A2. As soon as it's distributed, we can proceed.

If the hon. member would like to proceed, please do so.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is recommended in order to protect the government from accusations of political appointments. In fact, it's changing the former section, which would require the minister to appoint inspectors or directors that fall within the government purview and are already on staff. This new bill would allow the government to appoint someone outside government to do an inspection or to do a deliberation around reclamation and conditions for reclamation.

3:30

This may raise questions about political appointments as opposed to internal staff with merit around the required responsibilities to assess reclamation. From the point of view of public trust, if this is going to go ahead, a protective mechanism for government would simply be to include that this be made public as opposed to an internal decision, that can be seen to be politically motivated or biased. The amendment attempts to create a stronger sense of public trust and openness about these appointments and that they are truly in the interests of the environment and reclamation and protection as opposed to other interests that might be interpreted.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I am anxious to leap to my feet to encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to support amendment A2 to Bill 29 at this time. Certainly, I would like to thank the hon. member for introducing this amendment.

When we have a look at this, Mr. Chairman, we see that

- 17.1 The Minister must maintain a register which is publicly accessible in which is recorded every
- (a) delegation of a power or duty under section 17(1),
 - (b) transfer of the administration of a provision of this Act under section 18, and
 - (c) designation of a person as a Director under section 25(1).

I'm certain, after having a look at this, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View must have looked at some of the audits and the recommendations from last year's Auditor General's report, had a look at Bill 29, and decided that this legislation certainly needed an improvement to it to reflect, again, some of the audits and recommendations from the AG's last annual report.

Now, if we have a look at the existing section 17, Mr. Chairman, and that is an amendment to section 146 of the EPEA, we're talking about reclamation here. There is a concern about the potential scope of progressive reclamation. This reclamation may be applicable in certain long-term, large-scale situations such as large oil sands operations. This application, as I understand it, may not be nearly as suitable for upstream oil and gas operations and other conventional operations.

There are questions always, Mr. Chairman, and amendment A2, I think, would certainly go in the right direction about answering these questions. The questions are surrounding the environmental liability that is going to be left behind for future generations in Fort McMurray at the sites of the tar sands, or synthetic crude production facilities, whichever name the House prefers. We have to ensure that there isn't a significant environmental liability left for future generations. This amendment, I think, is an attempt to ensure that we know what's going on there.

Let's have a look at the Auditor General's report. What the Auditor General talks about here, on page 177, is: "financial security for land disturbances. The Ministry has made unsatisfactory progress determining whether it has sufficient security to ensure reclamation of oil sands and coal mines." This is the Department of Environment, and that's why I think all hon. members should thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

If we go a little further, to page 180 of the Auditor General's report, whether it's on the contaminated sites information system, the fact that satisfactory progress has been made, or we're comparing this to recommendation 31, which indicates that "the Ministry of Environment implement a system for obtaining sufficient financial security to ensure parties complete the conservation and reclamation activity that the Ministry regulates," well, that's where this registry would certainly come into play.

Now, let's have a look at some of the background information that has been provided. Two years earlier, in the Auditor General's 2002-2003 annual report, recommendation 12, page 103, recommended that "the Ministry of Environment implement an integrated information system to track contaminated sites in Alberta." Hopefully, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View will have an opportunity to satisfy this House that the register, which is going to be accessible to the public, will meet that. Certainly, we know that the ministry, according to this audit and recommendation from the Auditor General, "has a variety of business needs for contaminated site information [and] without a complete, accurate, integrated information system, the Ministry can only summarize or report the status of contaminated site files with considerable manual effort," and that "the system . . . should identify the location and characteristics" at each contaminated site, including any "monitoring, recovery, or other actions."

Now, when we look at the financial security for land disturbances, I think we need to have a look at the background here, Mr. Chairman, and see how this works with amendment A2 and what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is trying to accomplish with this amendment. What is to be recorded, and what is to be made available to the public in this register? Will the financial security to cover the cost of a reclamation and who the operator is be in this register? If the operator is unable to complete a reclamation activity, will that information be available publicly? Will there be any money left over?

When we talk, Mr. Chairman, about the oil sands, there are many people that argue that perhaps there should be a bit of a royalty set aside for cleanup. I don't agree with that. I think that that should come from another source. That should be part of the cost of operation, setting aside sufficient funds. Now, how will this amendment satisfy that? I don't know, and perhaps the Member for Calgary-Mountain View can help me with that. But when a site is reclaimed, or if the operator fails to meet his obligations, as is noted in the Auditor General's report, the registry is there. The registry will work for that, I'm certain. I see the hon. member nodding in agreement, and I'm pleased with that.

Now, we can go back a little further, and I'm surprised at what an ongoing issue this is. Certainly, there are hon. members on the other side of the House that don't want to talk about this Progressive Conservative government's activities going back 20 and 25 years. I'm just talking here about 1998-1999.

In the Auditor General's 1998-1999 annual report on Environment it was first identified that security may be inadequate and the process for obtaining it applied inconsistently. Now, even back then the Auditor General is encouraging the department to consider a measure similar to what is being discussed here with amendment A2 to Bill 29. That is the whole idea of a register and what information would be provided.

Now, if we look at the 2000-2001 annual report, the Auditor General again recommended that the ministry deal with the risks of inadequate security. The Auditor General noted that there were some large land-disturbing industries, oil sands and coal mines, that were not providing security at full cost of reclamation and that there was no model in place to determine what a sufficient amount of security other than full cost might be.

It's fine for the Auditor General to repeat this concern going back eight years. I don't know if or when the Auditor General's report was considered not only in the drafting of Bill 29 but, specifically, what information the Member for Calgary-Mountain View had at his disposal, but there must be evidence that this proposal will be beneficial. Sufficient information has to be provided. The nature and the extent of the activity has to be in the register, the difficulty of the reclamation or their conservation project, and also the standards. The hon. member discussed this earlier about the reclamation standards. When we look at landfills and hazardous waste and recyclable operators, this could also apply to some of their needs.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all hon. members to consider amendment A2. This isn't a matter of tinkering with the bill. This is a genuine, sincere effort to improve it. I think that in light of the Auditor General's observations and recommendations going back to 1998, we should consider this and consider it for the reasons that I have hopefully explained very reasonably to all hon. members.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to an hon. colleague in regard to amendment A2. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I move that we adjourn debate with respect to this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee report bills 33, 34, and 26 and progress with respect to bills 29 and 31.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 26, Bill 33, and Bill 34. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 31 and Bill 29. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Speaker's Ruling
Cameras in the Chamber

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the Deputy Government House Leader, it has been brought to my attention this evening that there has been the use of cameras in this Assembly. I'd like to bring to everyone's attention that this is clearly an infraction of what's acceptable conduct in this Assembly. I have no way of knowing for sure, but I want to make sure that everyone's memory is refreshed on this matter, and I trust that it won't take place anymore.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always good to have our memories refreshed on the rules of the House.

I think that we've put in a full day today, and I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 officially tomorrow in legislative time or, for those who use the regular calendar, 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 3:49 a.m. on Thursday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 4, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/05/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks as legislators for the rich diversity of our 100 years of history and culture. We welcome the many opportunities during this centennial year of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and dedicate ourselves to both the present and the future as we join in the service of Alberta and Canada. Amen.

Please be seated.

[The Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Governor General]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play Concerto in D by Georg Philipp Telemann. The timeless splendour and beauty of this baroque music is a fitting prelude to the entrance of Her Excellency the Governor General into the Alberta Legislature. The band is under the direction of Captain Brian Greenwood, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor General awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General of Canada.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General of Canada, Michaëlle Jean, CC, CMM, COM, CD, and His Excellency Jean-Daniel Lafond, CC, their party, and the Premier entered the Chamber. Her Excellency took her place upon the throne]

The Speaker: I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of the royal anthem, God Save The Queen. Please participate.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us:
God save The Queen!

1:40

The Speaker: Please be seated.

On behalf of all members and all Albertans I would like to welcome Your Excellencies to this province and to this legislative Chamber. Your Excellency is the first Governor General of Canada to address this Assembly in this room. You do us a rare and signal honour. [applause]

Your Excellencies, hon. members, and ladies and gentlemen, in 1964 these words were said by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Queen of Canada:

The ways of democracy depend upon the conscious support of all citizens. The function of constitutional monarchy is to personify the democratic state, to sanction legitimate authority, to assure the legality of means and guarantee the execution of the public will.

Your Excellency's presence here today reminds us of this and of the pre-eminent role the Crown plays in the life of this country. Her Majesty's words speak to the bedrock foundation that supports our people and the public institutions that serve our provinces, territories, and the nation.

It is fitting and appropriate that Your Excellency sits on this day in the Chamber beneath the flags of the provinces and territories. They are a unique expression of the loyalty and allegiance that members of this Assembly feel to Canada, just as you represent the human dimension of all that this nation is. Welcome, sincerely, to both of you.

It is now my honour to invite the hon. the Premier of Alberta to extend his greetings.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your Excellencies, Members of the Legislative Assembly, I do want to extend a very warm and sincere Alberta welcome to Their Excellencies on behalf of all members of the Legislature. As the Speaker pointed out, this is the very first time that we've had the honour and the privilege of hearing from a Governor General in this Chamber, and we're looking forward with great anticipation to your remarks today. Welcome, once again.

Thank you. [applause]

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Premier.

I would now invite Her Excellency the Right Honourable Michaëlle Jean, Governor General of Canada, to address the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Address to the Legislative Assembly by Her Excellency the Right Honourable Michaëlle Jean

Her Excellency: Premier, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Legislative Assembly, distinguished guests, chers amis. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I feel truly privileged to be here today. It is a great pleasure for my husband, Jean-Daniel Lafond, and me and also for our daughter, Marie-Éden, to begin here in Edmonton our first official visit to Alberta. We may be a bit early for the wild roses, but I would say that the warmth of your hospitality is like the embrace of your Alberta chinooks.

You know, last night Jean-Daniel and I enjoyed an outstanding jazz concert at Canada's oldest jazz club, the internationally renowned Yardbird Suite. This morning Jean-Daniel shared some meaningful time with francophone community leaders and students at the Campus Saint-Jean of the University of Alberta.

Also this morning I was deeply moved and terribly pleased to have spent some time with some of Canada's wounded soldiers and their families at CFB Edmonton to learn more about the Military Family Resource Centre and the challenges facing military families on a daily basis. Of course, my thoughts are with the family and friends of Corporal Randy Payne, who gathered yesterday in Wainwright, Alberta, for a memorial service, as well as the family of Bombardier Myles Mansell, whose funeral was held yesterday in Victoria. On Sunday my thoughts will be with Lieutenant Bill Turner and his family and friends as they celebrate his life at a memorial service in Edmonton. [applause]

I can say that, clearly, it is not only Alberta's breathtaking scenery and great economic prosperity that is attracting new citizens here. This province has long been seen as a mecca of opportunity. For over a century hard-working and independently minded people have been coming here to make a better life for themselves and their families.

Je sais, par exemple, que dès les années 1700 les voyageurs canadiens-français y sont venus pour la traite des fourrures après un long et périlleux voyage. Je sais qu'en épousant des femmes crie et en établissant des communautés métisses, ils ont commencé une longue tradition de diversité linguistique et culturelle, qui persiste jusqu'à nos jours. Et puis la ruée vers l'or et la construction du chemin de fer ont donné lieu à la vague d'immigration suivante. Puis après la découverte du pétrole en 1947 votre population a doublé.

[Translation] French-Canadian voyageurs made the long and arduous trek to your lands in search of fur during the 1700s. By marrying Cree women and establishing Métis communities, they began a long tradition of linguistic and cultural diversity that persists today. The gold rush and construction of the railway represented the next wave of migration. And then, following the 1947 discovery of oil, your population doubled. [As submitted]

Poursuivant leurs rêves, chaque nouvelle génération de pionniers entrepreneurs a enrichi l'Alberta. Il vous a fallu – c'est impressionnant – à peine 100 ans pour atteindre un niveau de prospérité qui fait l'envie aujourd'hui du pays.

In pursuing their dreams, each new generation of ambitious pioneers has enriched Alberta itself, and in just 100 years you have together achieved a level of prosperity that is the envy of the country.

Who would have predicted a century ago the thriving communities of this province? Did observers in 1905 envision a rich economy based on agriculture, energy, tourism, and of course world-famous Alberta beef? I had some for lunch today. It was just delicious.

They say that journalists write the first version of history, and it's interesting to review what they had to say a century ago on the occasion of your entry into Canada. I was very interested to learn that the Globe, for one, was suitably impressed by Alberta. Reporting on the events and ceremonies of September 1905, its representative observed, "An easterner cannot come west without learning that here they never do things by halves." Similarly, Montreal's French language daily, La Presse, reported, "With its immense natural resources, its intelligent and active population, one can predict that the new province is called to play a significant role in Canada's future."

The pioneer spirit of independence and resourcefulness in this province is legendary, yet your deserved reputation for fierce individualism and economic self-reliance belie another lesser known aspect of Alberta's character: your people are among the most generous of Canadians. Eighty-five per cent of you make financial contributions to charitable and nonprofit organizations. Combined with those who volunteer their time, 94 per cent of your citizens believe in giving back.

So Alberta's tremendous prosperity affords you the opportunity to make the most of this attitude of sharing. Surely a prime benefit to be derived from such communal wealth is the ability it gives us to ensure that no one is left behind and that each among us has a voice.

The health and prosperity of every society is compromised by the people within it who suffer from poverty, who are disadvantaged by birth, who fight against discrimination of all kinds.

Vous savez, je me suis engagée à me servir de mon poste de Gouverneur Générale pour attirer l'attention justement sur la nécessité de briser les solitudes. C'est-à-dire, il faut entendre par solitude les multiples différences qui continuent de nous séparer: celles qu'imposent la géographie et l'âge, le sexe et l'origine culturelle, la langue et la religion, la pauvreté et l'ignorance.

Mais je crois qu'en oeuvrant ensemble, nous pourrions éliminer les barrières qui empêchent, par exemple, les autochtones d'atteindre leur potentiel et d'apporter leur contribution à la société. En reconnaissant aussi la force qui naît de la diversité linguistique et culturelle, nous pourrions enrichir notre société tout entière. Et en collaborant, nous pourrions trouver des solutions valables à l'aliénation sociale qui conduit certains jeunes à l'isolement et au désespoir.

I have pledged to use my office to focus attention on breaking down solitudes, the myriad of differences that continue to separate us, those imposed by geography and age, by gender and ethnicity, by language and religion, by poverty and ignorance.

I think that by working together, we can eliminate the barriers that prevent, for example, aboriginal people from reaching their potential and contributing to society. I also think that by recognizing the strength that comes from linguistic and cultural diversity, we can enrich our entire society. And by collaborating, we can find meaningful solutions to the social alienation that drives some young people to isolation and despair.

The marginalization of any human being is a loss to us all, and nothing in our affluent society is more disgraceful than our failure to nurture and support those who are most vulnerable. I also believe that children and youth represent not only our future, but they are our present. We have a profound duty to them not only to pass on a better world but also to ensure that they have the capacity to embrace it and each other with respect and responsibility.

This, too, is part of our collective dream and an achievement that has eluded many societies. Close to realizing it in so many ways, we cannot afford to take it for granted or to assume that it is someone else's task. I think every one of us, with every action we take and every attitude we express, has really an opportunity to foster respect, to promote dialogue, to nurture co-operation to ensure that all citizens have the opportunity to fully participate in building our society.

It is especially fitting to reflect on the importance of these values here in this Chamber that was home to the first female legislators in the British Empire. Between them Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams exemplified such values. They really championed initiatives and supported legislation to help widows, to help immigrants, to help people with disabilities, to help soldiers and their families.

Here in this House, at a time of unprecedented prosperity in your province, I think you have a golden opportunity to continue this tradition. Your capacity to make a difference in the lives of others through your actions and through your decisions is limitless.

So I want to say that I look forward to hearing of your plans and to continuing the conversation we start this week. It will be but the first chapter in our ongoing dialogue. I know that you and the people of Alberta you represent have important matters to discuss, and I think you have very inspiring stories to share and, I must say, valuable lessons to teach me.

So I am here. We are here to listen.

Thank you very much. Merci beaucoup. [applause]

The Speaker: Les mots de Votre Excellence ont retenu l'esprit et la promesse de la province de l'Alberta. [Translation] Your Excellency's words have captured the spirit and the promise of the province of Alberta. [As submitted]

Your Excellencies, this House would ask that you carry with you as our Queen's representative our good and heartfelt wishes for success in all that you endeavour to do across this great nation.

To conclude our ceremony today, I would invite Mr. Paul Lorieau, who is in the Speaker's gallery, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all here to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Excellencies, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

head:

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am just delighted today that we have been joined by some guests in the public gallery. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jo Whitford, who is here with 27 members of the Minerva senior studies program from Grant MacEwan in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. This is a very active group. They host a wonderful seniors' tea during Seniors' Week in the beginning of June. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first person that I would like to introduce is my wife, Karin Olson. She's here for the ceremony today, and I'm just introducing her on the spur of the moment. She doesn't know I'm doing this. I'd ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of this House.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Ron and Lynda Jonson. Ron and Lynda are tireless advocates for senior issues and for improving conditions in Alberta long-term care facilities. Lynda is a former registered nurse, and Ron is a former engineer. Living in Hinton, together they helped form the group Seniors I Care. They're here today to share their concerns regarding the government's recent announcement on long-term care policy. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is an honour today to stand and introduce to you and through you an outstanding group of students from Glenwood. They are 14 grade 9 students. I'd just like to point out at this time that this school is a blended school. There are members of the Blood band that join them, and together they learn, they play, and they have a friendship. It's great to see that community and how together they're stronger. I'd ask them and their principal, Kelly Thomas, and his wife, Kathy, and Mrs. Deb Johnson and her husband, Kevin, if they'd all please stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of distinguished guests from the Senate of Canada who are here this afternoon, no doubt to listen to the speech and comments made by Her Excellency the Governor General. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. The first one is no stranger to this Assembly. The former leader of the Liberal opposition, Senator Grant Mitchell, is in attendance today. Also, from the city of Edmonton, a Senator that's done a fine job for a number of years, representing our province in Ottawa, Senator Tommy Banks. Finally, also representing Alberta and doing a fine job, Senator Claudette Tardif.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very quickly I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 47 parents and students from home school learning in Okotoks. I would ask them to please rise and quickly receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two aboriginal leaders who are seated in the members' gallery: Alden Armstrong, who is the president of the MSGC, and Audrey Poitras, who is the president of the Métis Nation of Alberta. I'd ask that they stand and receive a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have this opportunity to introduce to the members of the Assembly a person that is no stranger to this Assembly, the first lady Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta, the Hon. Helen Hunley. Of course, she resides in the town of Rocky Mountain House. I would ask the members to give her the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 30 parent helpers, teachers, and students all from my hometown, Coronation, the greatest place on earth to be. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Dan Kinakin, and parent helpers Mark Zimmer, Joyce Webster, Jackie Rodvang, Lori Eno, Greg Schroeder, Angie Whiteford, Barb Smith, Rowena Swahn, and George Nichols. I'd ask them to rise – they're in the public gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure on this special occasion to introduce to you and through you two guests today: my sister, Ms Andrea Rogers, and a special friend, Mr. Maurice Locker. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a volunteer par excellence, a community leader in north Edmonton. Marg Day, could you please rise and be welcomed by the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly David Kostyk. David Kostyk is a member from Glengarry, now a person within Edmonton-Decore constituency, and resides within my riding. He is a tireless volunteer, recognized for his efforts for community involvement as well as cultural diversity. I'd like David to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of very outstanding and distinguished Albertans, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. They have been meeting yesterday, today, and tomorrow. They travel around the province gathering information and making recommendations to the minister of seniors. They are Mr. Jim Acton, from Edmonton; Diane Caleffi, from Calgary; Jean Dreger, from Calgary; Clyde Elford, from Calgary; Dr. Bill Forbes, of Edmonton; Leonard Olson, I think from High Prairie; Dawn Parent, of Lacombe; Maureen Hemingway Schloss, from Edmonton; Janet Tomalty, from Barrhead; Dr. David Belcher, from Drayton Valley; and Dr. Brad Hagen, from Lethbridge. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Office in Washington

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our million dollar man in Washington is living up to his price tag. Reports of lavish hosting expenses, numerous return trips to Alberta, and an extravagant $8,000 a month apartment have many Albertans shaking their heads over the hypocrisy of this action from a former minister of this government who once celebrated layoffs and government cuts. My questions are to the Minister of Intergovernmental and International Relations. Given that most of the hosting expenses racked up by Murray Smith were for wining and dining visiting Tory MLAs from Alberta, can this minister explain what purpose is being served by wooing members of this government?

2:10

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the United States is Alberta's largest trading partner. There are $65 billion worth of exports that go from Alberta into the United States. It's quite clear that it is important for us to have a good trading relationship with people in Washington. The number of occasions that Mr. Smith has not only hosted members of government from here in Washington – he has also hosted a number of people in Washington and has often facilitated a meeting of the two. The result is that we have built relationships with decision-makers, policy-makers in Washington, DC. Since our office has opened, the government of Alberta, the province of Alberta has had an unprecedented amount of media coverage in Washington. That media coverage is well known. The border has been opened to Alberta beef. There have been more ministers' meetings in Washington than have ever been held before. So the cost is well justified considering that we have a $65 billion trade relationship.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I get a straighter answer to this question. Can the minister confirm that Murray Smith is not receiving any personal compensation for speaking engagements he attends in Alberta on the taxpayers' dime?

Mr. Mar: I'm not aware of that at all, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member has some advice on this matter, then he should table it in the House, and we'll proceed on that basis, but to simply go on the basis of innuendo is not appropriate and not becoming of this member.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell this Assembly what checks and balances are put on Murray Smith's expenses while he is in Washington? For example, does his credit card have a spending limit?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, all of the expenses that are incurred as a result of the conduct of his work over there are in accordance with the normal government policy associated with individuals who would serve in the capacity that he serves in, and I can assure you and assure Albertans and members of this House that the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations goes through the same auditing process by Alberta's Auditor General. As we speak, there are people from the Auditor General's department in our department, right now, and they will be there until the 18th of this month. If something arises as a result of the normal course of auditing and the Auditor General has recommendations to make thereafter, we will certainly entertain them and proceed on accepting his recommendations.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Biofuels Industry

Dr. Taft: Future economic opportunity in the form of biofuels is literally out there growing in fields, but this government is once again simply too tired to harvest the economic benefits of this emerging industry. Once again, this government is a follower in a quest for renewable energy. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that Agriculture Canada said that mandating an 8 per cent ethanol content in all fuels would alleviate this country's farm income crisis, will this minister urge his government to mandate ethanol content in all fuels sold in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, thanks to the hon. member for the question because it gives me a chance to talk a little bit about what we're doing in biofuels in Alberta. We have initiated a strategy for biofuels that is probably leading the country in terms of developing a sustainable biofuels industry for our province that isn't going to be sustained based on government grants. It's not going to be sustained based on handouts; it's going to be based on good economics and sound financial sense.

I can say that on my recent trips into Europe with the WTO I was also able to talk to some of the European agricultural ministers about biofuels and where they're headed with their industry, how that reflects upon the biodiesel impact that we might have in Canada in our oilseeds industry, which is a critical component of the grains and oilseed sector. In addition to that, we were able to look at some new technologies on the ethanol production. I think that it would be premature of us to jump in to some old technologies when new technologies are coming to the forefront which are more efficient; they're more economical.

Mr. Speaker, we're looking at pilot projects where we might tie biofuels with biodigesters to ethanol production, which gives us not only an environmental enhancement but also fuel efficiency and feasibility.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like dithering to me.

To the same minister: will the minister of agriculture provide any incentives for farmers to develop biodiesel production facilities and convert farm machinery to take advantage of the wide range of benefits from this type of fuel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again a good question because we are doing those things. We are actually sitting down, talking to the Minister of the Environment federally, who handles this file, as opposed to the minister of agriculture. We're working in consultation with the federal Department of the Environment and the federal department of agriculture. The federal minister and I have talked about his commitment politically to creating a mandatory blend across Canada, which makes a lot more sense than individual provinces having a patchwork across the country. That's what we're advocating because that makes sense.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More dithering.

Again to the same minister: will the minister provide biofuel incentives to make renewable energy from animal wastes a reality in places like Red Deer county?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the hon. member doesn't do research before he asks questions. Alberta is a leader in the dry manure biodigestion field. If he would care to drive a little bit outside the outskirts of Edmonton, he would find North America's first biodigester of dry manure matter at Highland Feeders, just north of Vegreville. We helped put that project on the map.

If the hon. member would also do further research and perhaps talk to that county, he would also understand that I've met with them several times. We are working with them and our federal counterparts to maybe see that project come to fruition, hopefully, in the near future.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Tools for Skilled Tradespeople

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Safe, quality tools cost big bucks for tradesmen. For example, field mechanics need pricey laptops for diagnostics; their trucks when fully rigged can cost over a hundred grand. For many trades it's not a simple tool kit anymore. It is urgent in order to keep, attract, and train tradespeople in Alberta that this government provide more than the small amounts allowed in the federal government's budget. To the Minister of Finance: will the minister commit to having this government proclaim within two months the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act of 2001, now five years in waiting, so that tradesmen and apprentices can plan their tool purchases for this tax year?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we discussed this a couple of days ago in the House. The federal government has since come down with their budget. One of the things that we attempt to do on a very regular basis, in fact all of the time, is ensure that we follow and change our tax policy when the federal government enters into these areas. Our legislation certainly focuses on apprenticeship, and that's important. What I will commit to the hon. member is that we will be reviewing the federal initiative. We will be entertaining, I would expect, changes to our tax legislation to ensure that people who are in those areas have the most advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Finance: is the Finance ministry examining any other tax measures to keep tradesmen in Alberta, such as a travel tax break for work trips to Fort McMurray?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I invite the hon. member and all of the members opposite to sit in the Legislature – I think it's a week yesterday – on the 10th when we will have an opportunity for two hours to entertain questions on Alberta's tax policy. It will take about that long to talk about the tax advantages that tradesmen, individuals, businesses, corporations have in this province. I want to make sure that everyone is aware of all of the tax changes that we made in this budget, which have been received very positively by Albertans, by business and individuals.

I would also remind the hon. member that I've been very straightforward in my discussions on tax policy. We initiated an internal tax review last year. We implemented a number of tax changes. Now, first, we ensured that lower and middle-income persons receive the benefit. You would recall the employment tax benefit, and you would recall that in this budget that becomes indexed beginning this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the minister of human resources on quality, safe tools. What has the minister done to ensure that his safety inspectors check that the tools and equipment brought in by temporary foreign contractors to our oil sands are up to Alberta safety standards?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, we're fortunate in Alberta to have such a strong economy, a booming economy because of a good government. You know, any person that works or comes to Alberta has to follow the employment standards, and they're the highest in North America.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Continuing Care Standards

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's more than a year since the Premier promised Albertans that this government would implement every one of the Auditor General's recommendations regarding long-term care in this province, yet today seniors' advocate Lynda Jonson told reporters that little has changed, and in fact the situation may have gotten worse. Yesterday's announcement about new standards are so vague, enforcement is so weak, and funding falls so far short of what the government's own MLA committee said was necessary that the government has completely failed to keep its promise to the people of Alberta and to the seniors of Alberta. My first question is to the minister of seniors. Given that the government's own MLA committee on long-term care said that $250 million of additional funding would be required to raise standards to the level that was necessary under the Auditor General's report, why is the government only providing an additional $42 million? Why could the government give the horse-racing industry $63 million but seniors only $42 million?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to address that question regarding funding for the budget for continuing care, which is administered through two departments, through the Ministry of Health and Wellness and through my department. The $42 million that the member is referring to, of course, is for the accommodation side, which is within my department. The funding that was put in place with third-quarter funding as well as the current budget over the past three months combined has been approximately $140 million between the two departments. That was referred to in the estimates by both the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself. It's significant. It's a hundred million dollars more than what the member has mentioned.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. And $150 million less than what's needed.

My second question is to the minister as well. The changes proposed in yesterday's announcement to inspections simply replace a toothless inspection committee with another toothless inspection committee. When will the government commit to having independent, professional, unannounced inspections of our long-term care facilities? Enough of these silly committees.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is clearly one of the recommendations from the MLA task force, and that is exactly where we're moving toward: unannounced inspections. That will come through with the legislation and regulations that are required. The very first step and the most important was implementing the standards. That did occur yesterday. There's an immediacy to that. Yes, there will be unannounced inspections as we follow through with the monitoring, the enforcement, the concerns resolution process. That's all within the next step.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We also learned that relatives of individuals who are in the Hinton long-term care facility are on 24-hour rotation providing care to their loved ones. Given that situation, how can the minister tell people that they need to keep waiting and waiting? They've waited long enough. People are very, very badly cared for in many of our facilities. When will the minister do something about it?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, people are well cared for in our facilities, and I can tell you this: we very much want to continue to have families involved in the care of their loved ones in facilities. I'm not certain of the particular situation that you're discussing, but I do know my own family and friends' families and people that I've had an opportunity to dialogue with, you know, over a number of years, especially as an acute-care nurse for 20 years. Families become very involved in the care of their loved ones that are, well, in long-term care especially. Yes, families will rotate on a 24-hour basis when they're involved in care. I hope, actually, that families continue to be involved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Significant new responsibilities have been downloaded onto continuing care facilities and the nine regional health authorities, who have been given an entire year to implement a patchwork of separate policies and processes. It appears that this new continuing care system offers very little consumer protection to Albertans and allows the government to avoid accountability. My questions are to the minister of health. Why did this government choose to define nursing services like bathing, personal hygiene, and toileting as personal care services rather than essential health care services? Is it because residents are going to have to pay for them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me clarify that there is no intent to have persons pay for those care services. What is intended is that there's a personal care plan for every single resident in any kind of continuing care or care plan where people are receiving publicly funded health care services, and that is more important. For example, you could implement cross-ministry or across Alberta Health and Wellness a standard of three or four baths per week, and if you do that, you're going to severely compromise somebody whose skin is paper thin and who is unable to absorb that. So perhaps the most effective way is to say that the personal care plan must, in agreement with either the person being cared for or their families or their other caregivers not currently paid for by the government of Alberta – are given the kind of care that is most appropriate for them.

Mr. Speaker, in the last two series of questions what I think was missed in my response yesterday to this Assembly was the fact that in the last few months the Health Quality Council has been given the status and the authority to assess through its matrix of quality the quality of care delivery in any kind of facility that exists in Alberta that is publicly funded as a health care facility. We look forward to their participation.

Ms Pastoor: Given that dependent seniors are being reclassified into assisted living settings, in which they're responsible for more costs, what protections are in place to prevent price-gouging in these settings, private and public?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the very first comment should be that people who are assessed to move into another type of facility, such as assisted living facilities, are not assessed to be punitive but, rather, to provide services that are more appropriate to the kinds of support they need. Regional health authorities have belabored the fact with me that people who exist in long-term care facilities frequently just exist. They don't live in the kind of wonderful, interactive fashion that they could in an assisted living facility. Yes, with assisted living there are other kinds of costs that are described and prescribed. In fact, where somebody is unable to afford costs that are part of their menu, then there is an accommodation that can be made in consultation with the regional health authority.

Ms Pastoor: Will the minister guarantee that the cost to the facilities of meeting the new standards will not be off-loaded onto the residents?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to be able to guarantee that, but I'm trying to avoid the word "guarantee" and simply say that the funding that is in Health and Wellness's budget is intended to in fact facilitate the delivery of those care standards with no intent to provide any additional cost to residents. That is certainly not part of the plan.

Mr. Speaker, you know, just once it would be lovely to give a response that people actually listened to.

Métis Hunting Rights

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Justice released the excellent report of the MLA Committee on Métis Harvesting, under the chairmanship of the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The report makes some important recommendations to change the regime under which Métis harvesting is conducted in Alberta. Press reports indicate, however, that one of the Métis associations is not receptive to negotiating some of the proposed changes. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Will the minister assure wildlife managers, conservationists, aboriginals, and hunters and fishers in the province of Alberta that the recommendations of the Métis harvesting report will be reflected in government policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly would agree with the hon. member that it was an excellent report that the MLA committee came out with, and I'd like to acknowledge his participation on that committee in producing the excellent report.

The position of the government is reflected in the report, and candidly we acknowledge that the Métis people have a right to harvest fish and wildlife for food. A number of issues were raised in that particular report. We have indicated that it's important that we as government revisit the interim harvesting agreements that were entered into in 2004 and that we will be doing it in the context of the recommendations.

We intend to proceed on the basis of negotiation in good faith, and I see no reason at this point in time to deflect from that particular objective on the basis of some editorial or newspaper articles. I believe, on the basis of what I know, that the Métis people have a good reason to ensure that the rights that they have are appropriately and properly reflected in the agreement, and that is how we are going to proceed.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister outline to the House a time frame for implementing those recommendations into law?

Mr. Stevens: Well, the recommendations, Mr. Speaker, are going to be implemented, on the basis of what I have indicated, in a new agreement with the Métis people, so that is where the recommendations will be implemented in due course.

Dr. Brown: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: can the minister advise the House how his department and his enforcement staff will manage Métis harvesting of sensitive species like bighorn sheep and grizzly bears in the interval between now and when a new agreement is reached?

Mr. Coumts: Well, Mr. Speaker, our role in this interim agreement is to continue to manage and monitor and enforce hunting and trapping and fishing regulations in the province under the terms of the interim agreement. We've identified, through the systems we have in place and the registration system we have in place, those sensitive species that the hon. member talked about, that harvesting by Métis is relatively a small percentage of the total harvest of those species.

The renegotiation process that was outlined certainly tells us that if anything is further required in terms of monitoring and managing, we will have the systems in place to do that, and we will continue to do the work that fish and wildlife officers and the department have set up to do to manage this interim agreement or another agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Regulatory Review

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Wednesday, April 12, when questioned about the government's red tape regulatory review, the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency stated in this House that his employees "would take some extra time from their jobs they're doing to work on this, and we will be going ahead and getting some regulatory review done." I cannot imagine that there is too much on this ministry's plate so that it cannot fully tackle this important initiative. "Some" is simply not good enough. To the hon. minister: can the minister tell us how much of a regulatory review his department will be able to complete in their extra time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. member across that it's a very, very important initiative. I want you to know that we're moving along very well with it. We have an MLA task force chaired by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View and the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and the hon. Member for Calgary-West. They've been meeting diligently with some industry folks from different sectors of our economy. They've been meeting with businesspeople. They've been meeting with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They're compiling a lot of things, and they're moving forward with reviewing some of the regulations. I'm sure we'll find some streamlining, and you'll find that you'll be very happy with the results.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the hon. minister tell us what important Restructuring and Government Efficiency initiatives will be put on hold, delayed, cancelled, shelved, or otherwise interrupted as staff take some extra time to conduct a regulatory review?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, there'll be nothing put on hold. We're going to move ahead with everything we can.

Mr. Elsalhy: My second supplemental to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the minister was turned down for funding for a proper regulatory review, can he tell us what other proposed departmental projects were turned down for funding by the Treasury Board?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think the Treasury Board did a very good job with what they had to work with. They had to make their priorities. We will work around our priorities, and we will get things done, what needs to be done for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Climate Change

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Professor Dave Sauchyn from the University of Regina made a startling announcement at an environment conference held here in Edmonton. According to Mr. Sauchyn in the next 45 years the semi-arid climate around Medicine Hat today will spread north, extending as far as my constituency of Red Deer-North. Mr. Sauchyn went on to say, "No matter what action is taken to prevent further change, Albertans will have to . . . adapt to a [new] climate." I'm not so sure that that's a bad thing. With a longer growing season I'd love to be able to grow beefsteak tomatoes and juicy apricots. My question is to the Minister of Environment. In light of this information what is the government doing to ensure that we can adapt to climate change?

The Speaker: Well, hold on a second here. If I understand this correctly, the hon. member wants to know if the Minister of Environment can foresee the future. This is what this question is all about. Give it your best shot, Mr. Minister, but we're dealing with government policy here.

Mr. Boutilier: I can see a future for all of these members in here. I'll share with you later what that is, Mr. Speaker.

But I want to say this: I think yesterday's comments by the professor are a validation. As quoted by this independent professor from the University of Regina, there is no other province in Canada that is dealing with the issue of adaptation, adapting to the environment, like the province of Alberta has. That's part of our climate change plan. I think that even more so understanding how we adapt to change in a climate has always been and always will be our plan because truly our plan has separated us from every other province in Canada. I can honestly say to all members and all Albertans that we are taking action on this important topic in securing our future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My only supplemental, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the government can't act alone, what can Albertans do to ensure that they are protected from the effects of climate change?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, part of our climate change strategy deals with renewables. It deals with technology, which I presented in Buenos Aires at a COP 10 conference. Also, did you know that this province is the first province in Canada to ever have a Ministry of Environment? Did you know that this province was the first province in Canada to have a Climate Change Central? Did you know that this province was the first province in Canada in terms of having a climate change law, unlike any other province, including even the federal government? Albertans care deeply about the environment, and that's why this province just simply doesn't talk about things; we take action. The validation by the professor is exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

2:40 Southeast Edmonton Ring Road

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency borders on the southeast portion of the ring road. A number of my constituents are concerned that there has been inadequate consultation, a lack of child safety initiatives, and no real sound barriers. My question is to the Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, capital planning. Why has this government failed to provide adequate consultation for Edmonton-Ellerslie residents who are directly affected by this development?

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I'd like a little clarification after on the question, but I do think you have to realize that we've got a great news story to tell. Part of it is that in the next three years we're going to be doing a huge number of projects, mainly southeast, Henday road, the southwest, the north ring road. We've got something like 51 school projects, we're going to add 10,000 student places, and the number of highways in the province will exceed 1,000 kilometres, 300 of them brand new.

Mr. Agnihotri: That was not my question anyway. My question was on consultation.

To the same minister: given that the road is less than 100 feet away from some houses in that area, why hasn't the government implemented a child safety strategy?

Mr. McFarland: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do believe that there have been many, many community involvement projects, projects such as the Anthony Henday, that have a lot of years of planning, have had many, many different community groups involved in the planning. If you have a specific one in mind, I'd be pleased to follow it up with the member.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: given the close proximity of the ring road to Edmonton-Ellerslie residents, why isn't the government building real sound barriers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Sound barriers, to my understanding, are something that we have looked at, continue to look at. In the case of the particulars, again if you have a particular location, I'd be more than pleased to follow it up with the department on your behalf.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It looks like Alberta's man in Washington is living a bit high on the hog at taxpayers' expense these days: $8,000 a month to rent an apartment near Embassy Row, taxpayer-funded monthly flights back and forth to Calgary, and a $30,000 bonus on top of an already generous $233,000 pay package. To the minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations: why is it that when former Tory politicians get patronage appointments to represent this province in foreign lands, they always seem to end up living a lifestyle more akin to Donald Trump than regular working people?

Mr. Mar: If one were to ask the people at KPMG or at Mercer, who do the types of surveys of the cost of doing business in various cities throughout the world, what you'll find is that Washington is a very expensive place to live. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the cost of housing our senior embassy officials with the federal government ranges between $8,800 and $11,000 a month for accommodations. My understanding of this is that the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation reviewed all of the different options available for the housing of Mr. Smith. This was found to be the most cost-effective one.

With respect to other expenses, like taxis, which has been raised by the media and by hon. members in this House in the media, the reality is that parking is between $6 and $9 for half an hour. It's a common way of doing business. For the first several months that Mr. Smith was down in Washington, he didn't have a vehicle, so he was taking the metro and he was taking taxis.

Mr. Speaker, it may seem like an extravagance to this hon. member, but it is not. It is a normal cost of doing business. It is a normal way of conducting business in a place like Washington, DC.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, certainly it seems like extravagance in accordance with regular people, working people in this province.

I'd ask the minister if he couldn't ask our Washington representative to at least try to find some digs in a different category, a little less fancy than the $8,000 a month that he's charging taxpayers to rent the current apartment that he has.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think, like the Amazing Karnak, I answered the hon. member's question before I even heard it. I answered it in my first response. I indicated that my understanding and my briefing is that the department of infrastructure looked at all of the various options. This was the most cost-effective one that was available to us.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, on top of all these perks of office – a $233,000 salary, an $8,000 a month apartment, and regular flights back home – why does our high-living man in Washington also get paid a $30,000 hardship bonus?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there is no hardship associated with living in Washington, and there is no hardship pay associated with it either. What was reported, in fact, was a $15,000 allowance that is consistent with federal government policies to note that the cost of living in various postings in the world costs more, so $15,000 in accordance with the federal guidelines is what Mr. Smith was paid. Now, as the exchange rate for the Canadian dollar goes up, the amount of that allowance will go down. But there is nothing out of the ordinary for the allowance that has been given to Mr. Smith. It is in accordance with federal guidelines.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Water Use by Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Pembina Institute just released a report calling for a moratorium on water licences for the oil sands projects and reductions in how much water is used by the oil and gas industry. This morning I heard the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers on the radio talking about water use for the oil sands. My question is to the Minister of Environment. What is the government doing to make sure that industry doesn't use water to excess?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, our Water for Life strategy, of course, is optimizing the use of water. In fact, each and every one of us in here – and I ask you, sincerely, for a moment in terms of water usage. Even the smallest effort – and think about this – like in the morning, when you wake up, turning off your tap when you're brushing your teeth will make a difference in water usage. Do you do that, or do you allow the tap to continue to run? I want to say that at one point I used to let the tap run, but I no longer do it because I'm taking personal responsibility. I'm also looking for responsibility from industry and from all sectors and all industries, not just oil and gas but also agriculture. I want to just end by saying that the optimization of water usage and the conservation of water into the future will no longer be a luxury. It will be a fact and an Alberta law that we are executing through the Water for Life strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since the Pembina report also specifically calls for the government to put a price on fresh water to provide companies with an incentive to maximize efficiency and to seek opportunities to eliminate and reduce water use, my question again to the same minister: are there plans to start charging the oil and gas industry for the water they are using?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, everything has a price. Does water have a price? Unequivocally so. In fact, I would ask you this. If you were in a desert and you had a choice of a barrel of oil and a barrel of water, what is it you would take, and what has value? It's pretty obvious to me what we would be taking. [interjections] Sometimes when you ask rhetorical questions, the answers are very obvious, but I didn't really require a response.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, our oil field injection policy is a policy that we have implemented. It requires industry to seek alternative sources such as saline water and CO₂, which are other important alternatives to in fact using fresh water. That is also part of our Water for Life strategy.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, my final supplemental, again to the Minister of Environment: what is the minister's response to the comments of the Pembina Institute, who is calling for a moratorium on development, and the oil and gas industry, that insists that it's already reducing water use?

Mr. Boutilier: I expect industry to continue to reduce water use. In fact, I expect all Albertans – individuals, industry, and all sectors – to continue to be more efficient in their conservation of water, but I think that to simply say a moratorium does not mean that we are stopping thinking. We are moving forward, executing our Water for Life strategy. It is our goal to have a 30 per cent improvement in water usage by the year 2015. It's a noble goal. We're on track to achieve that objective based on actions that everyone is taking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Sale of Surplus Edmonton Ring Road Land

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Progressive Conservative government's ring road land scandal is certainly a political skeleton that is no longer buried. Land purchased by the government on behalf of taxpayers continues to be sold off at well below real estate market prices. In 2001 MacEwan West Developments paid over $40,000 per acre to a private landowner. They paid market value. This government, however, continues to sell surplus land for a great deal less than market value. In 2002 a 147-acre parcel was sold to the Royal Development Corporation by this government for one-quarter of what the taxpayers paid for the property in 1981. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. Given that taxpayers forked over $22,000 per acre for land by the ring road in 1981 and the market set the price for land in that area at $40,000 per acre in 2001, why did the government sell this land a year later, in 2002, for only $5,700 per acre?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the saga continues day after day, but he obviously has not really got an interest in why these things happen, or else he would have given me the information yesterday, and I could have had the answer for this particular one today. But the pattern has to be that he does this in the House, so then I have to get the information. I've got the information from the sale he asked about yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I'll go back just a little bit. With the Sheckter offers to sell, the situation was different. Often in these cases the offer to sell is a different condition. In the particular one that the member asked about yesterday, the individual that was selling it wanted to sell the whole quarter section, the whole thing, so we bought the whole thing. In the Sheckter deals he didn't want to sell the whole parcel, so there is that difference.

The fact is that in 1985 we paid $11,916 per acre. Today the member talks about 1981. Well, I can tell the member right off the bat that in 1981 the price of comparable land was higher than it was in 1985. However, in 1985 we bought this land. In 1992, after we had taken out what we needed, we were selling on the open market the rest of the property, 49-some acres. The appraised value was $8,000. We listed it on the market at that price through multiple listings, and it didn't sell.

So in 1995 another independent, accredited, licensed appraiser did an appraisal, and he came up with $5,500 an acre. This was in 1995. Once again it was listed as a multilisting. It was listed at $570,000, Mr. Speaker, and the fact is that it wouldn't sell at that price. There was an offer from one of the real estate agents that in fact they would pay $5,280 an acre, and we accepted the offer. That's the story from yesterday.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the member is really that . . .

The Speaker: I appreciate this exchange, but before too long I'm going to have to make a ruling on this that we're going to have to be dealing with these things under Written Questions or Motions for Returns. I don't understand the urgency of debating something from 1981 to 1994, and I've given a lot of leeway on this.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, proceed with your next question.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that taxpayers lost $2.3 million on this bad deal alone, who in this Progressive Conservative government authorized this sale to the Royal Development Corporation in 2002 and why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the guidance. I want to go one step further. If, in fact, this member believes that the taxpayer lost that kind of money, I would ask him to please take it to the Auditor General and have the Auditor General investigate so that we can quit this nonsense in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that land further west of the ring road was sold the previous year, 2001, again by a private owner, for $40,000 per acre to a local land developer, who in the government appraised this land and let it go for only $5,700 per acre? Who did that appraisal?

Mr. Lund: The answer is the same as the last one: take it to the Auditor General. I can go through and on Monday have the hon. member ask me the question again, and I'll have all of the answers, but he doesn't seem to accept that. So take it to the Auditor General. Will you do that? I doubt it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Avian Flu

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are relieved to be coming to the end of a not too severe flu season. There are now concerns voiced about a possible avian flu epidemic coming to Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Because avian flu could be brought to Alberta by waterfowl, will your department be involved in monitoring for this disease in wild birds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Alberta certainly has worked very closely with our federal government on a national surveillance program. Migratory birds are under the auspices of the federal government, but each province is responsible for examining the need for their own surveillance program within their own jurisdictions. So it's really important that in terms of wild birds, we continue to concentrate our efforts on the fall bird migration as this follows the breeding season, when North American and Asian birds use the same areas. My department continues to work on this surveillance program and takes a proactive approach to make sure that we continue to monitor our birds.

In terms of this summer, which is what the question was about, in terms of crows and magpies that may be found on the side of the road, it's really important that as we're checking for West Nile virus, if we find indications of avian bird flu in this, we will also report them to the department of health and to the appropriate authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. My second question is to the minister of health. Though the possibility of an avian flu pandemic seems to be more and more unlikely, what measures are being taken to prepare Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to have an opportunity to clarify that avian influenza by itself is not a condition or a disease or an influenza that normally attacks humans. However, the disease has become particularly strong lately. H5N1 has had a very significant effect on people who handle poultry. The World Health Organization reports that as of the end of April there have been 202 cases and over 113 deaths. So we are monitoring with not only our department but other departments. We are working with a lot of due diligence to make sure that we are prepared. The program that we've had since 2003 has been updated. Perhaps most significantly, at the world health congress that I attended last month, it was noted that about 35 per cent of health care providers were ready in the case of a pandemic. When they asked the same sampling of people – some 1,500 – how many had in fact prepared their families, only 9 per cent had. There's a message to all of us to look after ourselves and to make sure that we manage the flu and influenza well.

Ms DeLong: No further supplementals. Thank you.

head: 3:00 Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon members, today the Legislative Assembly made history with the invitation to the Governor General, the first time in our 101 years. That is our historical vignette of the day. We actually made it.

Education Support Staff

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in celebration of Education Week, 2006. I have spent a career in education and worked in education across the province, and while I have worked as a teacher and an administrator, I have always believed that I have worked my whole life as an educator.

This leads me to the topic of my statement today: the unsung heroes of the education system. While people often see and appreciate the hard work and professionalism provided by our teachers, the education system is the product of a wide range of people working together in pursuit of educating our future citizens. Any one of my colleagues who has visited a school will see right away the efficient and friendly administrative support staff, custodians, cafeteria workers, teacher assistants, and many parent and community volunteers who are a vital part of the operation of every school.

Outside the school, bus drivers, traffic patrollers, and lunchtime supervision staff all play a vital role in getting children into the classroom safely. As classrooms in society become increasingly complex, the business of educating our children no longer involves one profession but also guidance and personal counsellors, school librarians, nutritionists, and contributions from other specialists. System governance is also vital, and we need to recognize the work of school trustees, who give of their time as democratically elected governors of the education system. All of these people are part of keeping a modern public education system running and meeting the needs of today's children.

In closing, I feel that it is necessary to say that education support staff are feeling the impacts of shortsighted cutbacks, and the school system will suffer from their loss. I remember a time when a school custodian stopped to tie the shoe of a kindergarten child. It was then that my heart truly realized the value of all educational support staff across this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you have a petition?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition sponsored by the Friends of Medicare. This particular group of petitions has 6,388 signatures. It calls on the government to abandon its plans to implement the third way health reforms, which they sort of did and for the Assembly to defeat any legislation that would allow the expansion of private hospitals or insurance or allow doctors to work both in the private and public system, and opposes any action by the government of Alberta to contravene the Canada Health Act.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday, May 8, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 16 through 24.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday, May 8, I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 27 through 32.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Official Opposition House Leader to the Speaker objecting to the request to waive Standing Order 8(5)(c) for Bill 208 without bringing that request to the House for unanimous consent to do so. I have provided copies to the Government House Leader and the House leader of the third party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last evening myself and several colleagues from the Official Opposition had the opportunity to attend Edmonton Catholic schools' 17th annual Celebration of the Arts. The theme of last night's gala was Children Are God's Creation, and featured were 630 performers from 18 different schools. I'm pleased this afternoon to be able to table the appropriate number of copies of the program from that wonderful event.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. If I could ask the Government House Leader to share with us the projected government business for the week commencing May 8. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd be pleased to provide that information. On Monday, May 8, in the afternoon, of course, is private members' business. We'll deal with written questions and motions for returns, as I indicated earlier, and under Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole will deal with bills 207 and 208. On Monday evening private member's Motion 510 and government bills and orders, second reading on bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, and Pr. 3, Committee of the Whole on bills 29, 35, and 20, and as per the Order Paper if we have great success in moving along.

Committee of the Whole will be bills 31, 29, and 20.

On Thursday afternoon there will be the introduction of the main estimates appropriation bill. We'll have third reading on bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, and Pr. 3. We will deal with bills 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 21, 24, 27, and 30, and if we make great progress, any other business on the Order Paper.

head: 3:10 Main Estimates 2006-07

Solicitor General and Public Security

The Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present an overview of the Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security estimates and the 2006-2009 business plan.

Before I start, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to introduce staff from my ministry who are here with us today: Eric McGhan, Deputy Solicitor General and Deputy Minister of Public Security; Brian Skeet, assistant deputy minister and director of law enforcement; Neil Warner, acting assistant deputy minister for correctional services; Jim Bauer, executive director, senior financial officer; Al Sauve, director of Legislature security; and my assistant, Peter Davis. They're all in the members' gallery to observe this afternoon's presentation.

Mr. Chairman, over the next 10 minutes I'll present to you highlights of the services and supports that the Solicitor General and Public Security provides to Albertans. Following my presentation I'd be happy to answer any questions that remain, but should we run out of time, I'd be pleased to provide responses in writing to relevant questions.

Mr. Chairman, in developing our business plan and financial plan, we were guided by our core values of honesty, integrity, respect, ethics, commitment, compassion, and courage. These values are the bedrock embodied in our vision to ensure that Albertans have safe and secure communities in which to live, work, and raise their families. Each and every day we strive to achieve this vision by providing Albertans with a variety of supports and services.

The four goals that lead the programs identified in the business plan are: one, provide leadership in policing and services that promote safe communities in Alberta; two, provide secure and cost-effective custody, community supervision, and rehabilitation of offenders; three, to ensure the safety of Albertans by providing comprehensive provincial security services and crisis management; and four, provide services and programs to support victims of crime.

Mr. Chairman, to help achieve these important goals, the Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security budget for this year is $450 million, an increase of $37 million over last year's comparable forecast. Of the total budget $230 million goes to policing services, organized and serious crime response, and crime prevention programs; $155 million is spent on remand and correctional centres, offender supervision in the community, and rehabilitative opportunities for offenders; $26 million goes to security services; and $16 million is spent on victims' programs and services. This is a significant investment to improve the quality of life in our communities.

When you examine the services we provide to Albertans, it's clear that this ministry is closely tied to one of the government of Alberta's strategic business plan priorities, which is to make Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. A safe and secure community is where people want to live, work, and raise their families.

With the additional $37 million in the budget this year we will increase policing resources. The provincial policing programs will increase by nearly $12 million to over $155 million. This increase includes $6.2 million to hire up to 80 additional RCMP front-line officers. This follows the 130 RCMP officers added in Budget 2005 to help fight crime in rural communities, bringing the overall Alberta complement of RCMP officers to just under 1,400.

Mr. Chairman, $4.6 million is added for traffic enforcement positions, or sheriffs, as part of the province's traffic safety plan and $1.7 million for the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative, also known as ARTAMI. This cross-ministry program will better co-ordinate police, legal, mental health, and other experts to assess threats, manage victim safety, and find ways to prevent family violence homicides in partnership with the Attorney General and Minister of Justice.

Mr. Chairman, funding to combat organized crime will rise to $18 million, a 26 per cent jump. It includes $2 million to establish a 20-member surveillance team that will work with the integrated response to organized crime unit to provide strategic support to crack down on organized and serious crime.

Another $1.7 million will go to the integrated child exploitation unit to help catch online predators that use the Internet to sexually exploit and victimize children. Resources for the ICE unit are particularly important at this time. The events of this past March, after arrests were made during an international child porn investigation, demonstrate the need for enhanced resources in this field of work. As you may recall, a major break in the case came in January when Edmonton police arrested a local website administrator.

Finally, the ministry will also continue to work with the province's Crystal Meth Task Force to rid our communities of the scourge of this highly addictive and deadly drug.

We all know that organized crime, drug production, and child pornography are not exclusive to urban communities. Our growing economy is attracting a large number of hard-working people to the province, but it's also a draw to those who want to take advantage of our prosperity. Criminals follow the money. As such, the tentacles of organized crime and gangs are spreading right across our province. We've heard the call from municipalities for additional resources and have answered. Policing assistance to municipalities will increase to $48 million, or 4.8 per cent. Of that, $1.6 million will go to municipal policing grants to keep pace with the province's rapidly rising population. However, as we provide additional resources to fight organized and serious crime throughout Alberta, we cannot ignore the fact that gang members are also operating and networking behind bars. The increase in the number of investigations by police is leading to more gang members in jail, and the gang members are continuing to run their operations from inside. Jail might remove them from the street, but it doesn't hamper their activities.

To address this growing problem, I'm proud to tell you that we are the first provincial jurisdiction in Canada to create a correctional services intelligence unit. The CSIU will formalize the process of gathering and sharing intelligence information on known and suspected gang members in our correctional facilities, who they associate with and their activities while in custody. This is vital information for police, Mr. Chairman, because when these gang members are back on the street and committing crimes, police will have a clearer picture of the new ties gang members have made during their time in custody. The $850,000 investment in the CSIU will also allow us to close the intelligence gap between corrections and law enforcement and help the police track gang members when they return to the street.

As we increase policing resources to fight crime, Mr. Chairman, we realize that this will cause additional pressure on our remand and correctional facilities. Overcrowding has become a serious issue at the Edmonton Remand Centre as remand populations continue to rise. We don't control the intake of people sent to the remand centre. We have to deal as best we can with the people sent to us by the courts. We don't have the option of closing the door and putting up a no vacancy sign. At present there are plans to build a new remand centre in the future, and our department has identified a new remand centre in Edmonton as a capital priority.

In addition to budget and resource increases, there are other key initiatives that our department has undertaken. They include but are not limited to the sheriff and RCMP highway safety pilot project. This pilot project focuses on enhancing the safety of Albertans and partners sheriffs with RCMP officers to perform traffic controls on highway 21 in Strathcona county and highway 63 at Fort McMurray and Boyle. This project will be evaluated in the near future on our ability to enhance enforcement while allowing RCMP officers to focus on more serious criminal matters.

Mr. Chairman, public security and corrections, however, are just two facets of my department's responsibilities. We will continue to ensure that victims of crime are treated with dignity and respect and that they promptly receive information, assistance, and financial benefits. The report of the Alberta victims of crime consultation set up a 10-year vision for the development of programs and services for victims of crime. Our ministry has completed 13 of the report's recommendations, and we continue to work towards implementing those that remain. This past March we launched a campaign to increase awareness among victims of crime so they will know what programs exist and how and where to access them. The campaign encourages victims to report crime to police and then call their local victim assistance program.

Mr. Chairman, to assist police and Crown prosecutors to investigate and prosecute family violence cases, our department coreleased a domestic violence handbook last November. The handbook, created in partnership with Alberta Justice, is another resource to combat family violence. Guidelines for developing a domestic violence protocol for police services were also distributed for use with the handbook.

To support greater victim involvement and offender accountability in the justice system, we encourage communities to develop initiatives that deter crime. Our department earmarked $350,000 in grant money to 16 groups involved in local restorative justice programs. Restorative justice programs are used as an alternative or supplement to any sentence such as house arrest, probation, or a jail term. As part of our crime prevention strategy Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security participated in the first province-wide Fraud Awareness Month campaign this past March. Partnering with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and the Alberta office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, the campaign informed Albertans how to protect themselves from becoming victims of fraud. This campaign was so successful that we plan on expanding it as a cross-ministry initiative with other departments in the future.

Mr. Chairman, our department continues to work collaboratively with other ministries, aboriginal communities, and other stakeholders to address the complex root causes of aboriginal peoples involved with the justice system. The ministry's aboriginal justice initiatives unit works with our program areas, other ministries and agencies in the development of community-based strategies that promote safety and security in aboriginal communities. In 2006 we will contribute $11 million towards aboriginal justice initiatives, including youth justice committees, programs and services for aboriginal victims, cultural programs in provincial corrections centres, and community corrections programs.

We are sensitive to the unique needs of our aboriginal citizens. As such, we support policing in aboriginal communities. Community tripartite policing agreements are already in place in four other First Nation communities in Alberta. These agreements send a clear message to the citizens of First Nations that the government will continue to crack down on violent crime and gang activity plaguing their communities. The RCMP, the government of Alberta, the government of Canada, and the communities of Hobbema agreed in principle to a community tripartite policing agreement that will boost the RCMP's presence to 32 officers in their community. Hobbema has become a recruiting ground for gangs. The additional officers will also act as mentors and role models for Hobbema youth to help them stay out of gangs.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the mission of Solicitor General and Public Security is to serve Albertans by ensuring safe and secure communities through effective policing, security in correctional services, and when crime is committed to assist those victims of crime. The overview I presented demonstrates that we have clearly met this expectation.

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my presentation. I'd be happy to address any questions that members may have, and should we run out of time, as I mentioned earlier, I'd be pleased to provide responses in writing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to commend the Solicitor General and the department for all of their work in preparing these business plans and estimates, and especially I would like to commend all the public servants who work in the department and who work so hard. I have to also honour the hard-working police in this province and the special constables, who every day risk their lives even to protect the public and provide safe communities, and also the guards in our correctional institutes, who every day also put themselves at risk and do a fantastic job, sometimes in the face of deteriorating conditions, especially in the remand centres, yet they still work very, very hard and do a great job.

In my summary of the figures in the estimates overall the estimate for 2006-07 is $434 million, up from last year's forecast of $399 million. Funding for provincial policing increases by $11.8 million, or 8.2 per cent, to $155.4 million in 2006-07. This will allow for the hiring of 80 additional RCMP officers and more peace officers for highway traffic enforcement. Funding to combat organized crime is increasing to $18 million from last year's $14.2 million, an increase of almost $4 million, or 23 per cent. This extra funding will allow for a 20-member surveillance team working closely with the RCMP and municipal police services to provide strategic support to fight organized crime. As well, some extra funding will be dedicated to the IROC team, integrated response to organized crime team, and for the new Crystal Meth Task Force. Municipal policing is increased by 4.8 per cent to $48 million, up from last year's $45.5 million. That's not much of an increase. I guess it keeps pace with population growth and so on.

In terms of the business plans I just want to comment in my introduction here about goal 1 on pages 342 to 343 under Core Businesses, Goals, Strategies and Performance Measures. Goal one: "provide leadership in policing and services that promote safe communities." In going through the strategies, Mr. Chairman, it's very interesting that there are 18 listed strategies here, and I'm very impressed by the number of strategies that focus on crime prevention. I think that so many of my questions in question period and comments last year to the Solicitor General and also to the Minister of Justice were how there's such a total imbalance between the amount of money focused on building prisons and keeping people in prison as compared to the focus on crime prevention.

I'm very encouraged by the fact that at least nine items out of 18 on this page are focused on crime prevention. For example, 1.2, "a plan to target First Nations gang violence"; 1.7, "the development of effective community justice initiatives that address local crime concerns"; 1.8, addressing strategies concerning sexual exploitation of children; 1.9, "youth leadership development . . . in Aboriginal communities"; 1.10, working to "reduce Aboriginal youth suicide," which is extremely important; 1.11, the youth justice committee program, which the hon. minister referred to, which I think is extremely important, and that's a part of the whole emphasis on restorative justice. Maybe I'll come back to this later because I'm not sure how much money the hon. minister referred to in terms of support to youth justice committees. I didn't quite hear the numbers. I had a visit with a person in Fort McMurray who is chairing the youth justice committee there, and there's a great need for extra resources, especially financial resources, for youth justice committees throughout the province. Strategy 1.12, focusing on response to family violence; 1.13, addressing bullying; 1.15, dealing with crystal meth. All of these are efforts to prevent crime, efforts in the community to bring about greater awareness, greater education, and to try to get local communities involved in trying to prevent crime in the first place.

I'm reminded of the new chief of police in Edmonton, Mike Boyd, when he says – and he uses a wonderful illustration – that the path of crime is like a stream, and when the police come in and when prisons are involved, that's too far downstream; we have to move upstream and make a greater effort to prevent crime from ever happening in the first place. All of these efforts that are listed here, half the page, are devoted to preventing crime. I commend the Solicitor General. I don't know if this is a difference in strategy and tone in the business plan, but I think it's moving in the right direction. I think that all Albertans would be enthusiastic and want to be involved in a lot of the programs that are listed here.

Before leaving this page, I want to look especially at 1.18 in the business plan, which is about the McDermid report. I started off my remarks yesterday in dealing with the Department of Justice with the McDermid report, and it applies equally to the work of the Solicitor General. This was a very important report focusing on traffic safety, Saving Lives on Alberta's Roads: Report and Recommendations for a Traffic Collision Fatality and Injury Reduction Strategy, 2004. There are many, many recommendations in here that apply to the Solicitor General.

Just to lift up some of the conclusions. After a lot of study and working with stakeholders and looking at all kinds of information, some of the conclusions are quite startling. Under enforcement various police departments, in reporting to Mr. McDermid and carrying out this study, mentioned how insufficient the resources are in being able to carry out proper traffic safety in this province and how sometimes when traffic safety is considered in terms of priority, it's moved to the bottom of the agenda for many police forces. Now, that's very troubling. Why? Police have for so long had that as an important part of their task and their job. When there is reallocation of money and organization and downsizings, it seems that traffic safety gets to the bottom. Even within various detachments there do not seem to be targeted budgets just focused on the importance of traffic enforcement.

I think that's quite troubling, and I wondered if the Solicitor General would comment about that. It seems to me that that's going in the wrong direction when you consider how many lives are lost on our highways every year. Far more lives are lost from traffic collisions than from homicides. So not to channel money and to be really focused on the struggle, the fight to establish safer highways in this province is a tremendously important point.

Recommendation 7 in the McDermid report is especially, I think, directed to the Solicitor General's department because it deals with the use of new technology in improving the monitoring of safety on our highways. Much has been made about photo radar. I think that Mr. McDermid really emphasized the importance of photo radar on our highways. All kinds of other technology devices, some of which I'm not sure I understand, he lists:

- Expanded use of breath alcohol ignition interlock devices
- Use of roadside cameras
- In-car video technology . . .
- Tachographs (on board devices used to record distance travelled, speed, rpms, stops, [and so on])
- Vehicle data recorders.

A lot of interesting technological suggestions. I'm not sure how many of those have been utilized for policing in Alberta.

At the end of this recommendation 7 he makes this startling statement. Well, I know that it's not startling, but it's an important statement. "There must be no reduction in the number of police officers presently assigned to the highway patrols." Then he says, "That recommendation has not been endorsed by the provincial government."

Mr. Backs: That is startling, isn't it?

Dr. B. Miller: That's startling. Well, I don't know what the provincial government is waiting for.

Now there's a complicating factor here, and that is the issue of special constables and peace officers. Is the answer to the McDermid report, the response: "Okay; we're not going to increase the number of police officers doing highway traffic safety; we're going to have peace officers doing more of that work"? That's not the response that Mr. McDermid was looking for. I have great respect for peace officers, special constables, but as a matter of fact they don't have the same level of training as police officers. I think that when you look at highway 63, there were not that many RCMP officers doing highway traffic safety. Now we have special constables doing it. We have to still be convinced – I know the pilot project is continuing now – that this is a better way of doing highway traffic safety than having more police officers.

When I was in Fort McMurray, I learned that there actually are only two RCMP officers – one does highway 63 north of Fort McMurray; one does highway 63 south – but with the special constables the one RCMP officer was doing a lot of administration to oversee the special constables. You know, what is the net gain here?

We've raised all kinds of questions before about the danger on highway 63 and all of our highways when cars are stopped. Will special constables be able to handle that? Do they have the proper training? We've asked questions about why the Solicitor General is moving ahead, pouring money into even increasing special constables, peace officers, to do traffic safety in Alberta before the pilot project is completed. I haven't actually received a good response on that issue. My understanding is that this pilot project is ending in June, and then there should be evaluation of the whole thing and then recommendations about how to move in the future. Has the Solicitor General already decided, before the pilot project is over, what direction he is going to go in?

I think the McDermid report still remains to be responded to in some of the specifics and in terms of an overall plan. The McDermid report pointed out that there doesn't seem to be a centralized plan for traffic safety in this province. It's too piecemeal. A whole lot of departments are involved with it. There needs to be, of course, interdepartmental working out in terms of committees and so on. But I haven't heard it ever presented: exactly what is the centralized overarching plan for traffic safety in this province? Are we going to actually put money into this so that we can stop the carnage on our highways? It's an absolutely important issue.

Now, moving on to one of the issues that continues to concern me and Albertans because it's so often in the press. People are asking continually about the conditions of our correctional centres, specifically the remand centres. The remand centre in Calgary was built in 1993 to hold 361 prisoners. Now it holds more than 500. In Edmonton the remand centre was built in 1979 to hold 332 prisoners. Now it holds more than 700.

If we look at some of the court cases concerning offenders, heroin dealers in this province, we find that many of them have been in other remand centres in Red Deer, Grande Prairie, and the conditions of these remand centres are just terrible. I don't know what kind of adjectives need to be used. I've used the term Third World conditions. Overcrowding: that's the biggest issue, I suppose, with double bunking and sometimes triple bunking when a mat is just thrown in the middle for a third guy to sleep in a cell. Cells are very small, poorly ventilated. Some of those who are accused or in a remand centre awaiting trial sometimes spend 23 hours in their cells.

There are issues around cleanliness, with filthy mattresses, not enough opportunities to actually wash themselves. There are complaints about food and, of course, lack of medical services. Even a fatality inquiry has surfaced that issue with Jody Umpherville, who didn't get the proper medical attention, and she died while being in custody. The recommendation was that there be more medical services, even that a medical officer responsible for the Edmonton Remand Centre would be available.

There are questions about religious rights being violated, vegetarians not being able to have vegetarian meals, and Buddhists not being able to have opportunities to engage in their particular religious activities.

Now, a lot of the evidence comes from court cases, so I'm not referring to newspaper articles or just things that you might pick up from ex-cons, who always are willing to talk about their experience in the remand centres, although I must admit that in one article when someone was asked about being in a remand centre, he said:

I don't want to do no remand time, man . . . That's torture, man. Like, I wouldn't wish it on my worst enemy to do time there, okay? I can't handle it psychologically. I will kill myself in there, man . . . Try sitting in a cell 23 hours every day . . . I'd rather do 20 years in the pen than do five months in the remand centre.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there's a real problem with this. I don't know whether it's the intention of the Solicitor General – I don't think it is – that the conditions will be so bad that it would be a deterrence in terms of committing crime. It would be awful to even consider that that might be the case.

Something has to happen here. I mean, this issue will continue to be an issue before this government. [interjections] You know, it's a human rights issue. It's a human rights issue. When people commit crime, they never think about what the conditions are going to be like in a prison. They never think about what kind of time, whether they're going to serve two years or five years or 10 years.

All those studies from criminologists indicate that when people commit crimes, they don't calculate in their minds: well, if I commit this crime, am I going to end up in the remand centre? They don't think that way. Most crime is committed within a conflictual situation where there's a lot of emotion, a lot of passion, and they don't think. In fact, surveys indicate that no one thinks about prison life in advance. Even people who are repeat criminals, when they're asked about criminal sentences, don't seem to know, so it's wrong to even think that prisons are a method of deterring crime.

Now, we have to look at the whole issue of remand centres from the point of view of our responsibility in terms of upholding human rights.

I've only just begun, but I guess my time is up.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, I think we have all afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I may have missed in my opening remarks that I was actually moving the estimates for the Solicitor General and Public Security. Okay? Just to make sure that that's on the record and whatever. We're going to get them voted on later.

Some very interesting comments were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. He's been a critic on this ministry for the last 17 months, and we do work together on a number of areas and may have some differences but obviously are both concerned about the policing and corrections and victims in the province.

I do want to respond to some of the concerns that he raised, and I'll close with the comments regarding the remand centre. He did mention – and we may talk about it a little later – restorative justice programs that we provide in the province that are very important, I believe, and are a very critical area regarding providing programs and providing alternatives to sentences whether it's young offenders being placed in correctional facilities versus providing them with other programs in the community. We do provide $350,000 for restorative justice programs as well through initiative grants. These are very important and critical in the community. That was one of the questions the hon. member raised.

He did go through a number of the goals, and I just want to comment on some of those areas. He made mention of strategy 1.2, where we talk about “partnership with other levels of government,” which is critical, especially at this time with the federal budget coming out yesterday. Looking at our partnership with the federal government regarding various initiatives, obviously with new RCMP officers, federal positions though they may be, they will still be an added component of policing within the province of Alberta.

We are very sensitive to the unique needs of our aboriginal citizens, as I mentioned in our opening remarks, and as such we support policing in aboriginal communities through either community tripartite agreements or self-administered police services. The tripartite agreements are a great example of community policing where government, police, and the community work together to fulfill their vision of safety and security for First Nations residents. The department has signed community tripartite agreements for six First Nations communities to provide effective and culturally sensitive policing. It's been a real opportunity for me to learn and understand more of the culture, having been able to attend two of those signing ceremonies. It's been a great honour for me to have been there to work with the RCMP and with the First Nations communities.

So our department, again, supports five self-administered First Nations police services throughout Alberta as well as any other municipal service, again looking at what the needs are in those First Nations communities. What do they want to see? What type of service level do they want, and how would it better reflect their needs in their communities?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora mentioned strategy 1.7, “Work in partnership with police and other justice practitioners, Aboriginal communities.” Again, Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security is committed to organizations, police services, communities, First Nations, and Métis settlements in administering sustainable crime prevention programs and restorative justice processes. As I mentioned, we provide $350,000 for restorative justice programs in Alberta, and we provide opportunities for victims and offenders to communicate their thoughts and their feelings. This approach helps victims to heal and makes offenders directly accountable to those that they have harmed or hurt. The ministry currently supports four First Nations crime prevention coordinator positions, and these positions are responsible for developing and administering a wide range of crime prevention programs in 15 member First Nations communities.

Strategy 1.8, together with law enforcement agencies and other government departments to further strategies to address sexual exploitation of children. Again, we are currently addressing this problem through several means. Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security co-chairs a cross-ministry working committee under the Alberta children and youth initiative. The working committee has developed a strategic plan which outlines four key areas of action: education and awareness, prevention and protection, enforcement, and research and training. We will vigorously fight the exploitation of children through the use of increased funding provided in Budget 2006.

Budget 2006 provided $1.7 million to the integrated child exploitation unit to help catch online predators that use the Internet to sexually exploit and victimize children. Overall, provincial policing funding in '06-07 will increase by nearly $12 million, or 8.2 per cent, to over $155 million. The government of Alberta will launch a media campaign this month to raise awareness of sexual exploitation of children and youth through the Internet.

Strategy 1.9: “Support youth leadership development programming in Aboriginal communities.” Aboriginal people continue to be significantly represented both as victims and offenders in the justice system, not just in Alberta but in every province throughout Canada. As part of our preventative approach to addressing root causes of crime, Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security is committed to supporting youth leadership development programming in aboriginal communities, including programs such as the Alberta future leader's program and aboriginal summer cultural camps.

Part of our support towards youth leadership includes a $50,000 grant to the Hobbema cadet corps to help pay for the uniforms that they wear. I can tell you, having been there just a month or so ago, that their cadet corps has now increased to almost 400 children in the Hobbema community. It's a tremendous program provided by RCMP members who are volunteering their time to assist kids, to keep kids busy, and to keep them in this program, which is half scout program and half army cadet program. They've mixed the two together. It provides them with a lot of fun and a lot of activities that they can partake in after school, in the evenings, and on weekends. It keeps them busy and keeps them excited with opportunities to have fun with their friends, and it builds their self-confidence and self-esteem. They can say no to drugs, and they can say no to gang activity.

The hon. member brought up as well strategy 1.10, working with stakeholders to reduce aboriginal youth suicide. Alberta Solicitor General and Public Security participates in the cross-ministry aboriginal youth suicide prevention strategy, an initiative that was established as part of the Alberta child and youth initiative. In '05-06 an AYSPPS working group identified and provided assistance to three pilot sites to address the root causes of suicide among aboriginal youth. Each pilot site will be involved in the strategy for a three-year period.

The next point I'll move to, Madam Chair: “Through the provision of financial grants and with the support of department staff encourage the involvement of interested communities in the administration of justice programs such as the Youth Justice Committee Program.” Alberta has 121 youth justice committees throughout Alberta, established under the Young Offenders Act and now the Youth Criminal Justice Act. The youth justice committees deal mainly with first- and second-time offenders involved in a minor, nonviolent crime and offer an alternative to placing them in the formal court process, bringing these offenders face to face with their victims and other members of the community. Through this process young people are held directly accountable to their victims and the community. They come together and agree on the appropriate means of restitution. Youth justice committees are an outstanding example of what can be accomplished when a community shows faith in its youth and works to ensure that they are well prepared to become the leaders of the future.

Strategy 1.12: "Work in partnership with other departments . . . to implement an integrated province-wide response to family violence," a very critical area. Reducing family violence continues to be a high priority for the Alberta government. We want to ensure that all of our initiatives are sustained over the long term. Our Family Violence Police Advisory Committee, in operation since 1990, takes an active role in policy and program development with a strong focus on police intervention and increasing public awareness. We have a large number of cross-ministry initiatives with Alberta Justice and Children's Services.

To deal with the prevention of family violence, including the training of police officers and victim advocates, the Domestic Violence Handbook for Police and Crown Prosecutors was released last November by myself and the hon. Minister of Justice along with guidelines to develop a domestic violence protocol for all police services across the province. The 160-page Domestic Violence Handbook for Police and Crown Prosecutors provides information on investigative procedures, prosecutions, victims and abusers, risk factors, and safety planning.

Madam Chairman, the next area is 1.13, working to raise awareness and develop appropriate strategies to address bullying. Again, another issue that we have been working on. We participate on that cross-ministry working committee to implement the recommendations that arose from the Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying. In 2005 an awareness campaign focused on children aged 3 to 11. In 2006 a campaign will be launched to target 12 to 20-year-olds. In 2007 attention will focus on raising awareness of adults and their role in preventing and discouraging bullying behaviour among children and modelling positive behaviour. Solicitor General and Public Security will provide a bullying prevention program at the Edmonton and Calgary youth detention centres and other youth correctional centres to work with offenders who have a history of bullying behaviour. The bullying prevention program is expected to be implemented by September 2006.

Madam Chairman, I would like to just add a few more remarks before I let the hon. member ask me some more questions. Strategy 1.15 talks about combating the production, distribution, and use of crystal meth and other illicit drugs in Alberta's communities. I will go into some detail, I'm sure, further on throughout the afternoon. Really, this is indeed a huge issue and a huge area that we have to move forward on. We have provided the Crystal Meth Task Force, which, Madam Chair, you are a member of. A tremendous – tremendous – opportunity for Albertans now to provide information to the task force while the task force consults with the community. Our presentation to the task force, I think, was an opportunity to provide a strategic plan in place to combat what I just mentioned: the production, distribution, use, and clandestine labs throughout Alberta, not just in our major centres but throughout Alberta.

I'm looking forward to the recommendations that will be coming forward to government from the task force. Obviously, we'll work hand in hand with the task force recommendations and the ministries that will all be involved in combating the issues related to illegal drugs. We are prepared in our ministry to continue the work that we're doing already in the education and prevention areas and the areas regarding intelligence and enforcement but, as well, in the areas that we have to regarding treatment and healing, including offenders that are in our correction centres. That is our responsibility, and we take it very seriously.

Madam Chair, the hon. member spoke at length on 1.18, the traffic safety plan, retired Assistant Commissioner Don McDermid's report, Saving Lives on Alberta's Roads. It is a very comprehensive report, and I think it was very well done. Obviously, Assistant Commissioner McDermid had a tremendous amount of experience in policing in Alberta and throughout Canada. A well-respected police officer throughout Canada. Two of the recommendations really strictly deal with our area. The recommendations fall in line with the Ministry of Transportation and Infrastructure, but I'll talk briefly on the two that we are moving forward on at this point in time.

We are committed to work with government, police, and community stakeholders to improve traffic safety in Alberta. The traffic safety plan was developed in response to the McDermid report, which will provide a structure to approach traffic safety in our province to make roads safer, to reduce fatalities, to reduce serious injury collisions, and to reduce collisions in general.

We are killing 400 people on our roads every year. We have to educate, and we have to enforce that legislation to ensure that we can save lives and to ensure that people become aware that driving is a privilege, right across Canada and in Alberta as well. It is not a right. Therefore, I'm sure that we want to work with the recommendations that are coming from the report, but the recommendations didn't say police officers. They said that they needed officers that would be working in that traffic enforcement area.

What we have looked at are other projects and other opportunities throughout the United States and Canada and what, in fact, we've been doing in Alberta for some 25 to 30 years with special constables, that have been working in municipalities throughout Alberta. We've expanded that program to tie ourselves in with the sheriff's offices from every other province throughout Canada and the three territories. All have sheriffs. We restructured and renamed our provincial protection officers to sheriffs to align ourselves with other provinces. Obviously, when our sheriff's office phones the B.C. sheriff's office, now they know who they're talking to, whereas before they didn't have a clue who a provincial protection officer was. So the term itself was to provide a better communication plan and a better working partnership amongst all of the sheriffs throughout Canada.

We've expanded the model. We've expanded the model and the scope of their practice so that they can in fact do traffic investigation and traffic enforcement. The Peace Officer Act, Bill 16, which is going through the Assembly, will again provide them with the opportunity to do more, provide them with the opportunity to continue to look at other opportunities, whether it's traffic enforcement, whether it's bylaw enforcement for the community in which they are employed, or whether it's working hand in hand with the RCMP on a number of issues that maybe have to be worked on in their community, whether it's a community problem-solving issue or a member of the public's issue dealing with the provincial legislation or bylaws.

So we looked at the sheriff program, Madam Chair, and we wanted to develop something that would be able to provide additional officers out on our highways. We want to look at those highways that are most dangerous in Alberta. For the pilot project we've started on highway 21 and highway 63 as those have been noted as very dangerous highways through the number of accidents that have occurred or the number of collisions and fatalities that have occurred in those two areas. As we advance this new role for sheriffs, we have seconded an officer from the Calgary police service to do an evaluation of the last three and a half, four months of the pilot project as well as for the next month coming to look at how the relationship is working. So he's working with the RCMP, he's working with the sheriffs, he's working with our department staff, and he's working with staff in Infrastructure and Transportation as well to look at the whole plan, evaluate it, and look at a model for the future. When we talk about where these officers may be placed, we want to ensure that we're looking at targeted highways.

I'll continue on that as we move forward through the afternoon.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and join the debate on the motion that the Solicitor General belatedly put before the House, to debate and approve the budget for his department. I want to thank him for his work and particularly want to compliment the staff of the department, hardworking staff, who did a huge amount of work to get things ready for us to look at.

Certainly, people who work in provincial policing, whether they're municipal police forces and officers or whether they are RCMP officers or peace officers, correctional services personnel, people who look after the detainees and people incarcerated in our remand centre facilities, all of these people deserve our thanks and commendation. This is risky work. It's not easy work to do. It's dealing with people who have problems, people who have committed crimes or may have committed crimes, who may have mental disorders, personality disorders, violent tempers, all of that stuff. So it's tough work, and it certainly deserves our appreciation and recognition of the contribution that they make to make our communities safe and our lives easier.

That said, I will try to not repeat what has already been asked in terms of questions or observations that were made. I hope to limit my questions to matters that, perhaps, may not have been raised or raised in a specific way. In general, I do want to express my satisfaction and pleasure, actually, at the minister's emphasis on restorative justice as an important means of dealing particularly with youth who may err and commit actions which are deemed criminal, and the role that the youth justice committees play in the process of rehabilitating and putting those young people back on the path to behaviour and conduct that is right and proper. I had many years ago the privilege of serving on an all-party committee which came up with the recommendations for restorative justice as a model, particularly for young offenders. So I'm pleased that that has become an integral part of the policies of this government.

The third matter that I want to just raise is the relationship, not so much just the relationship but the plight of the members of the aboriginal community vis-à-vis police, incidence of crime, apprehension, incarceration. I've been looking through the business plan, and there are references here and there, but there isn't sort of an attempt to single out this as a challenge that we need to do some creative and innovative work on. This is something that I find missing. Maybe it's just an oversight on my part because I didn't look on the right pages, but I'd like the Solicitor General to perhaps expand on what's provided in the budget and in the business plan to tackle this very, very serious problem.

I know and we know in the House that while the aboriginal population is growing at a rate that's much faster perhaps than for the nonaboriginal population in the province, it still remains at about 6 to 7 per cent of the total population of the province. Yet in terms of our incarceration rates and their presence in our provincial jails and apprehension rates, they represent close to perhaps 35 to 40 per cent of the cases, a sort of shocking overrepresentation. On the one hand, we could say that that shows the success of our law enforcement authorities to apprehend people who, in fact, commit crime, but on the other hand, we've got to look at the social side of it.

The overrepresentation of a particular group of our provincial population at the scale at which it takes place with respect to the aboriginal population is a matter that should be of grave concern to us, and I'm sure that it is to the Solicitor General. I want to ask him what specific measures are proposed and reflected in the budget which draw attention to special attempts being made to make a dent in the numbers and the frightening statistics that we deal with year after year after year, with no major change having taken place. What is there that the Solicitor General proposes to do on that front by way of the budget and the business plan? Could he give us the most updated numbers on that in terms of the percentage of Albertans that are incarcerated in our jails and the crime rates? If he can give us some indication because I think that it's important for the House to have an up-to-date picture in terms of exact numbers. If he has them now, fine; if not, possibly later. This is information would be very helpful. Again, I don't find it in the documents that I have before me. I'm sure if I look hard enough, I'll find it somewhere in government documents, but certainly in the ones that I'm looking at now for the purpose of this debate, they're not readily available to me.

The next point I want to raise in general is on a matter of policy – that's what I'm using this debate as an opportunity for – on the community policing model. We have many of our urban communities growing, not just Edmonton and Calgary now. There's Red Deer. There's Fort McMurray. There's Grande Prairie. There's Lethbridge. There's Medicine Hat, so on and so forth. The business plan does very appropriately focus on prevention as much as on apprehension, prevention of crime and making communities safe through prevention. We know that particularly in large urban centres community policing is known to be the most effective way of doing that prevention.

I wonder if the Solicitor General will make some comments with respect to line items in the budget under Public Security; I think it's program support and policing programs. Will he highlight the resources that are being dedicated or directed towards increasing community policing and using it as a model that's more appropriate for prevention and enhancement of community safety? We know that in Edmonton some of the community policing services have been rolled back, and some community police stations have been closed. Norwood is an example of one. Where is the money going to for municipal policing, for example, in the budget? What kind of increases are there in order for urban municipal authorities or the police to move in that direction? I find, again, not much that I can see that I can identify as dedicated sources and funds that will help move with some effectiveness in the direction of community policing.

The next question has to do with private security firms and their use in situations where employers employ these services during strikes for policing pickets, keeping peace between people who want to go in and those who are on the picket. Certainly the practice of the use of private security forces and firms supplying those forces is being adopted by a variety of employers. I'm assuming that overall it's the responsibility of the Solicitor General to make sure regarding this deployment and employment of these private security police forces, peace officers I suppose one would call them, that they are properly trained, that they in fact observe and respect the laws and rules that the Solicitor General's department is responsible for enforcing in the province. There have been problems. During the Telus strike it was brought to our attention that the firm supplying private security there, or people who were doing it on its behalf, certainly were not the most appropriately trained people. Therefore, there were lots of situations where unnecessary potential for violence was enhanced because these poorly trained security forces were the ones who were handling rather sensitive and difficult relations between different groups of employees, some on the picket line and outside and some who wanted to go in.

Those are my general policy-related questions, and I hope the minister will be able to relate my concerns to the way in which the budget and the business plan address these policy issues.

A few questions from page 394 of the departmental budget estimates. I notice that on crime prevention, while there is a great deal of commitment expressed in terms of the business plan – and rightly so. Minister, you have my support in this and the support of the House that that's the right direction to go. Yet I see that under policing programs, I think line 2.2.1, there's a minuscule, infinitesimally small increase in the budget to support crime prevention. This may be a particular kind of item, but I hope the minister will respond to this. I was concerned about not seeing more resources being channelled towards crime prevention in this item.

The policing assistance to municipalities. Again, a very, very small increase, about 4 per cent or less, I guess. I'm just making some general, sort of mental calculations here. Certainly, the urban municipal scene we know is growing very, very fast in terms of the size of the population. Calgary is growing very fast. We know that Fort Mac is just simply exploding. The population in this city is growing very fast. The same is the case with Grande Prairie and Red Deer, as far as I know, and many other municipalities.

The challenge with this, with the increase in population, with the more transient population being part of these communities does create much more serious challenges for policing, yet the resources that are being now committed to manage these increases don't seem to match the scale of the growth in the size of the challenge. So maybe the minister will take a minute or two to throw some light on this.

The last point, Mr. Chairman, that I want to make. I wonder how much time I have? [interjection] Five minutes. Okay. Good.

I know a serious concern to the Solicitor General and to all of us in this Assembly is the domestic violence issue. There are parts of the business plan that give me the, sort of, assurance that there is a focus on dealing with this issue. What I am concerned about is the escape from the domestic violence that requires the families, women with children in particular, to have to move out to escape serious harm under those conditions of domestic violence and move to women's shelters.

Women's shelters in this province have been extremely overcrowded, and my briefing notes tell me that last year alone there were over 8,000 women and/or their children who had to be turned away from the women's shelters because of a shortage of beds and space. It's an extremely serious matter. It's, again, a problem that doesn't seem to be declining in the province. If anything, Alberta has, unfortunately, the distinction of being one of the most violent provincial communities across the country, yet we haven't been able to provide even a temporary respite for families that need shelter space in order to escape those violent situations in the family.

So I would ask the minister to comment on where in the budget is an increase in funds to ensure that we have taken note of the desperate situation of shortage of beds in women's shelters and that those spaces will be increased because there is money in the budget. That's a big issue here, and I think we need to certainly take steps to mitigate the problem of these women's shelter space shortages.

Last point. The police college that the minister is proposing to establish in Alberta: where are we at with respect to that? I am hearing that the minister is considering some sort of P3, private/public partnership, on it. It concerns me greatly. I'd like to hear from the minister what his plans are and whether this budget in particular is indicative of some of the steps forward that the minister is taking in this regard. The P3 issue is a complex one both in terms of costs and in terms of quality of training. So I'd like the minister to perhaps visit this issue as part of this debate as well.

I keep on saying that this is my last point. I still have one more. I guess I have a minute or two to use. The point has been made before by a member who rose before me to comment on the budget. It's the increasing use of peace officers to replace more rigorously trained police officers to enforce law and provide safety in our communities. Given the very different training schedules that are used for these two groups, the police officers versus peace officers, it concerns me a great deal that these people, because of their very limited training . . .

The bell has rung. I guess I made my point, so I'll sit down, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A lot of questions there that I'll try to get through here in the next 20 minutes. I did want to finish answering the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora just briefly, and then I'll move into answering of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's questions.

We talked about the sheriffs program. This may answer, as well, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's concern regarding the use of peace officers. All we've done in the last 16 months is highlight the utilization of those peace officer skills that have already been working in Alberta, but nobody ever thought about them. Nobody knew that they were there. I mean, we had the provincial protection officers, 300 of them or so, in this ministry for years and years and years and years, probably 20 years now. All we did was change the name, and it's like we started something new, but we haven't. It's just a matter that now we did change their name.

We are providing them with new training, and we are providing them with opportunities for advancing their skills and their scope of practice, but it is really a practice that's been in place. Special constables have been working in the community of Rocky Mountain House and in Camrose and in Strathcona county for 20 to 30 years. They've been there, so this isn't something new that we just invented, where they just started working. They have been out there in the community.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora talked about the pilot project, though, and I did want to complete my comments regarding where we will be placing them. We are examining, through the data that we have, collision data that Infrastructure and Transportation has right now, where the major collisions have occurred, the fatalities and serious injury accidents, throughout the province. Those are the areas where we want to ensure that we can provide education and enforcement utilizing those sheriff positions.

Yes, we could have hired more RCMP officers. The problem is that the RCMP costs are very high. They are $158,000. That's last year's costs. Those are going up to $163,000 per RCMP officer. This is right across Canada. Now, of course, we only pay 70 per cent of that, but that again is still a substantial amount of money.

The officers that we are using are sheriffs. They are peace officers. They are trained to have the skills that we want them to have. In this case it's the ability to enforce provincial legislation – not criminal legislation, provincial legislation – whether it's the Traffic Safety Act and, obviously, commercial vehicles on our highways, the Liquor and Gaming Act, or one of the other acts that obviously our partners in SRD and Community Development through the parks and fish and wildlife officers can enforce. Those are the types of acts and the legislation that they will be covering in the future as we move forward.

The whole idea behind this – and I think we're all in agreement in this Assembly – is that we want to see a reduction in the deaths, the number of fatalities, and serious injuries that are occurring in this province. I believe the numbers are roughly 400 fatalities, but about 12,000 serious injuries occur each year on our highways, and we have to make drivers more responsible. We have to educate drivers to slow down and/or ensure that they do follow the rules of the road.

I think I've answered all the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and I'll move to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I want to thank both members for their kind remarks regarding corrections officers, the value of these officers and of our police officers throughout the province as well as the sheriffs that we have that are government employees. As I mentioned earlier in my comments, our department holds the values of honesty and integrity, respect, ethics, commitment, compassion, and courage for all of our employees. This isn't just for police officers. These are for our employees in this ministry, all 2,300 of them, and those are the values I want to instill in our employees. They're there to respect each other but, as well, respect the public and those that they serve. That's their role while being employees of the Solicitor General and Public Security.

I do want to thank you for your nice comments, your kind comments regarding the hard work they do with their jobs every day, whether it's in a corrections facility or whether it's transporting prisoners or whether it's our police officers that are working throughout Alberta, from Rainbow Lake to Coutts.

The hon. member talked about the remand centre, some of the issues related to the remand centre, and I just wanted to talk to him briefly regarding the remand centre. Obviously, that is our top priority for a capital project. We are continuing to move forward with that as being a top priority for us. We have to do a lot of work, and obviously we have to take this before Treasury Board, but it is a top priority for us.

We also, in the meantime, have to ensure that we have the space that's available for our remanded offenders as well as our sentenced offenders. That's why we're working with the federal government to develop a contract with Corrections Canada to utilize additional space in Grande Cache for sentenced offenders, who would be transferred from the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre to Grande Cache, thus allowing us the utilization of space at Fort Saskatchewan for a remand centre.

Obviously, again, though, as the hon. member has mentioned, we have to be very aware of those issues where we have to segregate some of these offenders. Whether it's because they're gang members or whether it's a sexual assault or sexual offence that they are alleged to have committed, we have to segregate those individuals. They can't be left out in the open. Those are issues that we have to deal with every day. So it's not always having three individuals in a room. Sometimes it's one in a room because we're trying to protect them from the rest of the population in there. That does on occasion mean that we do have to put three people in a room.

I've eaten the food, and it's been very good. I'll take the hon. members for lunch one day, and we'll go try it. It's not bad. In fact, we do have a new contractor, and apparently, from comments that I've heard from inmates, the food is even better than it was before. So that's a good thing. We're moving forward in that direction.

One of the areas we talked about again was the remand centre, and what we're looking at. We are making adjustments to how we're providing that service now. Obviously, we're moving forward with our capital plan as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona spoke briefly on restorative justice programs and the importance of those programs in our communities. As I mentioned earlier, we provide about $350,000 per year regarding restorative justice grants to various communities throughout the province. The ministry continues to support and assist all communities that express an interest in establishing youth justice committees.

Currently there are 121 communities throughout Alberta that have sanctioned youth justice committees. The majority of the committees are involved in administering the extrajudicial sanctions program for first- and second-time offenders who have committed minor offences. Some of the youth justice committees provide sentencing advice to the local youth court judge. Our department supports the youth justice committees through annual grants, provincial, regional, and local training opportunities, ongoing case management liaison, office space and supplies, and volunteer recognition. Each committee is assigned a liaison probation officer who provides training and ongoing case management advice in that community where this youth justice committee is.

There are approximately 1,400 volunteers throughout Alberta that are involved in addressing youth crime in their communities. It's a tremendous program. It's working very well. It provides youth with alternatives to being incarcerated, and it provides youth with alternatives to a lifestyle that they may have enjoyed but now understand is wrong, that they committed a criminal act. So we are working on it. It's a very important project for us. Restorative justice or youth justice committees are extremely important in our Ministry of Solicitor General and Public Security.

The member mentioned the issues related to the aboriginal community. It is a very serious issue related to the small aboriginal population we have in the province of Alberta, the percentage that are involved in criminal activity and/or who are offenders in our corrections facilities. I've got some statistics here that you asked for. While aboriginal people represent 7 per cent of Alberta's population – and this was in '04-05 – they represented approximately 30 per cent of adult in-house correctional centre counts and approximately 38 per cent of young offender in-house correctional centre counts. These statistics are similar elsewhere in Canada, but these are extremely high numbers.

The average number of aboriginal offenders in custody has not increased while the average number of aboriginal youth in custody has decreased over the past several years despite a significant increase in the population of aboriginal people in our province. Despite these encouraging statistics, incarceration and victimization rates among aboriginal people continue to be a concern. Our department continues to work collaboratively with other ministries, aboriginal communities, and other stakeholders on front-end measures that seek to address the complex root causes of community-based strategies that promote safe communities.

We continue to support initiatives such as the youth justice committees, which we just spoke about, but in aboriginal communities: programs and services geared to the needs of aboriginal victims, First Nations police services, crime prevention and restorative justice initiatives, and community corrections agreements with aboriginal service providers. In 2006-07, in this year's budget, the ministry will contribute approximately $11 million towards aboriginal justice initiatives. That's $11 million, and these are extremely important programs. We do have facilities and treatment programs for them throughout the province. So, again, a very, very important program and a very good question that the hon. member asked.

Regarding community policing models and the closing of a community policing centre, that's a very good question, but the issue is that although I do wish I had a say in providing more leadership within our police services, I don't really. I can't. I'm not their chief. We do look at those issues regarding what are best practice models, look at new models of service delivery for policing, but those are decisions that are made by the chief and his executive team, those determinations of what level, what style of policing it is. Is it a zone model style that is involved through the community, or is it a team model that might be utilized? Those are operational issues that I can't get involved in. I'd like to get involved in them, hon. member, but I can't because, of course, they have a chief that has been selected by their municipality and their mayor and council. But we do provide them with funding, and we do provide them with some opportunities to be involved in provincial programs such as our organized crime strategy.

You mentioned policing assistance to municipalities. There was an increase of $2.1 million to municipalities. This was a new grant base that we came out with last year. Those communities under 5,000 receive free policing provided by the province. Those communities between 5,000 and 20,000 were provided with a $200,000 grant, a basic grant, and then a per capita of $8 in their community. Those with a population of 20,000 to 100,000 received a $100,000 grant and a larger per capita grant, $14 per capita, to assist them with their policing costs. Calgary and Edmonton received a straight $16 per capita.

Now, I'm sure you're well aware of the concerns when the mayor of Edmonton and the mayor of Calgary said that all they got was roughly $15 million and $11 million and that they need more money for policing. Let me reassure you that Alberta is the only province where municipalities are allowed to keep their fine revenue. Every other province, every other municipality throughout this country provides the fine revenue back to the government. In Vancouver, a similar size to Calgary and Edmonton, Vancouver city itself, for their tickets that they write, the funding goes to the province. The province then writes a cheque for, oh, about half of that back to the municipal police service and says: here's your grant. That's how it works. So we are so much further ahead in this province, and our municipalities are so much further ahead. It really provides our municipalities with a stronger model for providing policing in those municipalities.

When Calgary says that they didn't get funding, we gave them $15 million. They received about $30 million in fine revenue that we didn't claw back. They received another $5 million roughly for organized crime strategies that we have worked on with our integrated model of policing. Those are funds that they bill us for because we are actually paying for those officers in those various areas. Then Calgary also received $6.5 million from Infrastructure and Transportation regarding the infrastructure of police buildings. They didn't talk about those. When you add all those up, we're looking at about $55 million or so. So they didn't just get $15 million when you look at it. The big picture is that they received about $55 million.

Obviously, we're doing the same for Edmonton. We're going to get information for the mayor of Edmonton and all seven municipal police services to ensure that we can look at their programs down the road, but I do want to make them aware that they are by far better off in this province than in any other city throughout Canada.

On page 394 you listed line item 2.2.1, crime prevention. I just want to make some comments. You mentioned that it's really only an $18,000 increase, and you're right. It isn't a great deal of additional money towards crime prevention. But I want to let you know that we do work closely with other levels of government. We have a close tie with the police services' crime prevention units, a very close partnership with them. We also have worked closely with nonprofit organizations regarding crime prevention in our communities. The urban and rural municipalities and, of course, first nations and Métis settlements, obviously, foster locally administered crime prevention programs, community safety, and restorative justice programs. We provide grant funding for them for a number of crime prevention programs.

The principles of crime prevention and restorative justice are supported as a necessary and viable adjunct to law enforcement and other criminal justice processes. Promoting grassroots crime prevention and restorative justice programs ensures that communities have opportunities to participate in the justice process and are empowered to address local crime concerns. Funding is directed to community-based crime prevention grants, $600,000; restorative justice programs, as I mentioned earlier, $350,000; as well as specific crime prevention contracts amounting to over $500,000 in the areas of aboriginal crime prevention programs, provincial crime prevention service agreements, and public awareness activities such as Alberta Crime Prevention Week, which is going to be coming up here shortly, Restorative Justice Week, Fraud Awareness Month, which we began two months ago, and of course a number of crime prevention conferences that are held throughout the province.

The next question from hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona talked about domestic violence, and again both the hon. members mentioned this. This is a very, very serious issue throughout Alberta, and we as a government have not taken this issue lightly. We've worked alongside the Minister of Justice in developing a number of programs, as I mentioned earlier – and I won't repeat myself – regarding that domestic violence handbook for police officers and Crown prosecutors.

Addressing family violence is about a change in attitude and a shift in thinking, which has been occurring since family violence policing initiatives began in 1990. We continue to train police and other stakeholders in this regard. Because of this training, the incidence of family violence will continue to rise because people are becoming more and more aware of the fact that family violence is a crime. Through the family violence initiatives we continue to emphasize the criminal nature of family violence, the effects on children, and the consequences for the perpetrators of this type of violence. In Budget 2006 we've added an additional $1.7 million, which has been allocated for ARTAMI, the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West-Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to thank the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security for his passion. I've got a few questions I'd like to ask him. The first one is on his goal 1, providing "leadership in policing and services that promote safe communities." I want to thank him again for his staff that he allowed to come out to my area on the 28th of March and the 19th of April because we held two workshops in our community to get everybody involved from Edson, Hinton, Jasper, and Grande Cache because we've had a rash of different break-ins, petty theft, vandalism. We had some help from the Justice department from the aspect of the court systems. So what I'm really looking at today is, first of all, to thank him very much for the policing money under 5,000. It has certainly helped things in my region, especially for two of my communities.

One issue on one of the communities that it's already helping is the aspect of the national parks, especially in the summertime. We're just wondering if they've got some rotating RCMP. In the national parks it's always nice if we can have somebody dressed up in the red serge so we can take pictures and promote our province. I'm just wondering if there are some aspects there.

I guess that on police funding I was just wondering as I looked through on your department. Especially on page 394 I was looking at line 2.2.2. As I went through, with your 2004-05 you had $120,546,000. Then as I jump to 2005-06, you had $143,601,000. So we looked at about a $23,055,000 increase. Conversely, when I move into the aspect of 2006-07 with $155,429,000, we only had an increase of $11,828,000. On that provincial policing program, you know, the different aspects on crime, as you've talked previously with the other questioners, I was just wondering: what's entailed in that part? Conversely, I look at the policing assistance to the municipalities and that, where we get the lesser funding, which is 2.2.4, where in 2004-05 we had $42,245,000. Then we moved up to 2005-06, where we had $45,544,000, where we had an increase of $3,299,000. Then we move into 2006-07. What we're looking at: we jumped up to $47,726,000, but we only had an increase of $2,182,000.

I guess my point is that when we look at these increases, when we have our population in our province increasing, I'm just wondering what type of factor you are you using for these increases. I just feel that we need more of that, and I guess that relates back to what I was talking about with the workshop we had on the two dates in West Yellowhead. We're finding where a lot of costs are incurring. We had one car dealership in 2004. They had over $20,000 worth of damage in their car lot, and they were only able to collect $3,200. So, you know, you look at: those costs are backed up onto consumers.

I guess the other thing is that with the petty theft and the break-ins we're finding a lot of that relating to the drug trade and especially to crystal meth. So I'm just wondering what we're doing on that in trying to move that along so we can work with the people.

Then, the vandalism is getting to be rather expensive and hurting a lot of the communities. A lot of it, you know, I just don't understand. In the community of Edson somebody set the soccer change room and confectionary on fire. Thank goodness it was just the roof on that that burnt off. The rest of it was a block building. But it's costing money, and it's costing a lot of strife in the community because they don't see anything. Then, of course, we get damage to our schools and that. I'm just wondering how we're working on that. I guess the bottom line, what I was talking about when I had these workshops – and we're working with your department to move along on that – is that what communities want and are looking at is trying to take back their communities from this type of action, and they're wanting to have safer communities. I'm just wondering how we're working on that so that we can try and help these communities.

Then I guess that when I look at your goal 4, where you talk about the aspect of providing "services and programs to support victims of crime," we have some crime watch people there, and they're saying that they're not really getting the notification now, especially on the rural crime watch. I'm just wondering what kind of a setup we've got now. Have we sort of let that fall by the wayside?

You look at certain areas. You take highway 16. It's a main artery, but when you get back into the backcountry, where we've got a lot of oil and gas and forestry industry, I mean, even on one road which is an LOC we've got over 4,000 vehicles a day. In some of our communities, like Grande Cache, their population is around 4,000. They've got anywhere from 2,500 to 3,000 people in bush camps around the community. So we're getting a lot of stress there, a lot of stress on the officers too. I can appreciate that you've got a budget to work with. I've worked with the communities. I mean, the town of Grande Cache: we tried to get an extra officer there, but according to your makeup it wasn't allowed. So the municipality worked on it to get an enhanced policeman in the community.

I'm just wondering: what are we doing to work with the communities, especially on your goal 4, to work on the aspect of supporting different programs and to curtail a lot of this?

Once again I want to thank your people for coming out to my riding and working with us. We're making sure that we're going to move this program along. We're also looking at the aspect of possibly setting up a crime unit scenario for West Yellowhead rather than doing it individually with the communities so that we can look at the aspect of trying to curtail these, getting more people in the communities, might even possibly set up or entice different people to sort of have a crime watch block, and we can work with the RCMP because we're all part of the community.

So if you could give me some insight on those, I'd certainly appreciate it. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to cover off two final points that I have here from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and I'll then move to the questions the hon. Member for West Yellowhead raised.

Before I ran out of time, we were talking about domestic violence and the real issues related to domestic violence. I just wanted to add, and I mentioned to the hon. members, that in this year's budget, 2006, we added $1.7 million for the Alberta relationship threat assessment and management initiative – ARTAMI are the initials – which will better co-ordinate the police, legal, mental health, and other experts to assess threats, manage victim safety, and find ways to prevent domestic homicides.

Our department facilitates and chairs the Family Violence Police Advisory Committee. This committee works closely with Alberta Justice to develop and disseminate domestic violence, police, and Crown protocols. Members also collaborate on police-based training sessions throughout Alberta. A unique aspect of this Solicitor General and Public Security led training is that it is collaborative in nature. Participants come from all backgrounds to learn about family violence not only from the perspective of criminal justice practitioners but also from those who work in women's shelters, with children affected by family violence, or those who provide counselling intervention to offenders. The Family Violence Police Advisory Committee has also worked closely with Children's Services to develop criteria for clear police guidelines in domestic violence cases. The police guidelines have been developed and distributed.

As I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, these are very critical issues. These are very critical programs to our ministry. One other area when we talk about domestic violence or family violence is that of what we are doing as well with relation to Alberta's victims and victims of crime. To respond to several of the recommendations in the report of the Alberta victims of crime consultation, a revised organizational structure is being implemented by the victim services branch. A grants administration manager, training officer, and an aboriginal programs and isolated communities co-ordinator have been hired by our department. A community and specialized programs co-ordinator and a standards and evaluation co-ordinator will be hired in the near future.

A concept will be developed during this year, '06-07, to provide funding to pay travel expenses for victims to attend trials, observe sentencings, and/or read victim impact statements allowed in court. A victim services awareness campaign was launched on March 6 of this year. The campaign consisted of three radio announcements, which aired on stations across Alberta until April 7, 2006. Advertisements have been posted in restaurants and bars in several communities and in Calgary and Edmonton transit vehicles, and a series of posters have been forwarded to victim assistance programs for posting throughout their communities. Since the awareness program was launched, there has been a 152 per cent increase in the number of hits to the victims' programs section of the Solicitor General and Public Security website.

Consultations with stakeholder groups will continue this year to develop a victims of crime protocol. So, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about family violence, we want to start with, again, education and prevention in the home, but we also want to ensure that our officers are trained and they have the ability to do a proper investigation and/or ensure the safety of the victim, ensuring that we can well recognize the level of threat that may be in the home that she's living in and ensuring her protection. If she is a victim of an assault or a victim of a crime, we want to as well be able to provide her with support services from the community as well as financial support if it's required.

The police training centre. I'll be very brief. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona questioned the model, and we are moving forward as well with the police and peace officer training centre. We are continuing to do more work within government but as well looking at the training issues of our other departments, like SRD, the fish and wildlife officers, the training needs that they have; the Community Development parks officers and the training needs that they have; inspection services officers for Transportation; and a whole host of others, Gaming for example. In Government Services there are officers there as well. Obviously, there are training needs for all of our government staff that are peace officers as well as those 400 to 450 police officers that would get trained.

We're moving forward just in building the package that we have to take forward to the government. As we move forward, though, we are also looking at other opportunities. We hope to announce the site location. We are studying the 30 submissions that have come in to the government to look at for the site of a centre. So we're hoping to do that in the next short while.

The hon. member mentioned: are we looking at a P3? Again, yes, there are always opportunities that we should be analyzing, any opportunities, whether it's government funding or whether it's a P3 model. I think we have to ask those questions on any major project that we look at doing. But, as well, looking at the location, not all provincial government projects have to be done in Edmonton and Calgary. We want to ensure that we're looking at those opportunities, especially in light of our new rural development strategy, that the minister of agriculture is moving forward with.

I think I answered all of my questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and I'd like to now address the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. He raised some points at the beginning regarding goal 1, I believe it was, and providing "leadership in policing and services that promote safe communities." I think he talked about it again at the end regarding crime prevention and enhancing policing programs throughout his constituency but, really, Alberta in general.

For the police to be effective, there needs to be public confidence in law enforcement. Our goal is to set up and ensure that fair and objective processes are in place regarding looking at various programs as well as working in partnerships between municipalities and the RCMP, for example, to look at what is required in their community. The elected officials in the community as well as residents in the community have a huge and tremendous say in what level of policing they want, what the services are that are being provided, if they want to expand it. Those are some of the areas that, yes, we have to look at.

Crime is moving from our urban centres to those smaller centres, and as our province grows and as even our smaller communities grow, crime is ever present in all of these little areas. Whether it's petty thefts and break-ins, obviously the root causes are drugs and alcohol addiction, and I don't think that's going to change. We do have a plan in place in our presentation to the Crystal Meth Task Force. It is a very strategic plan, utilizing specialized officers that would be strategically located throughout the province that would have a tremendous impact not just in our urban areas, where they may be located, but as well in our rural areas to ensure that we can cover every area of this province via our regional bases, ensuring that if there were issues in Hinton or Edson or Grande Cache, we don't have to wait for officers to come out of Edmonton or Calgary to respond to issues in Grande Cache or Grande Prairie.

So those are what we're looking at. This is a tremendous project. I'm very excited about it. We're waiting for the recommendations, obviously, to come from the task force, but we've done a lot of work with the task force, and we'll continue to do so. It gave us an opportunity, though, as well to look and examine what programs we are providing presently. It really gave us an opportunity to look at: what are we providing through our ministry and through the Minister of Education's ministry? What are we providing regarding prevention programs in our schools? What are we providing regarding education programs for kids at community centres? This was a real opportunity for us to relook at what we were doing.

As well, if this is the end result, if we want to dismantle and disrupt organized crime, if we want to eliminate the majority of drugs in our community – that is a difficult task, but that's our goal – how are we going to do it? This is how we have to strategize. So everything from education and prevention was looked at and measured. Issues related to intelligence and enforcement and investigations were looked at as well as, again, as I mentioned, the healing and treatment side of the issues related to drugs such as crystal meth, crack cocaine, obviously heroin. Those are the issues that we're dealing with, and we want to ensure that we can address them in the future. So we are moving forward in that area.

Related to smaller communities and the petty thefts and break-ins, again, as I mentioned, these are some of the areas that we will be focusing on in the future. We want to ensure as well, though, that we have a close relationship with the RCMP in looking at their model of policing. We've seen 200 front-line RCMP officers added to the streets in rural Alberta in those communities less than 5,000. [interjection] Maybe a few too many is what I'm hearing.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to say that we want to ensure that our communities are safe and secure. We want to ensure that the ability to investigate criminal activity and arrest those that are responsible is there and that we have the resources there to do that job. We want to ensure that individuals, whether they're seniors or young kids, can walk through their neighbourhood at night and not feel afraid that someone may attack them. It's that sense of fear that is there, and we want to try to dispel that sense of fear and make them feel that they are safe and secure in the community that they live in.

So we are looking at the number of officers and the number of sheriff's officers. Now there's an opportunity for us to look at the level of police officers that we need in the province as well as the level of traffic enforcement that we need in the province. We want to look at that formula and then determine how many officers or RCMP we will need next year. Where would they be located? In what parts of the province? So those are some of those areas. We're finding that in northern Alberta the crime rate and the criminal caseload is higher. Probably about roughly from the Wetaskiwin parallel going north the statistics appear that they are busier communities in the northern half of the province than in the southern half.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead mentioned rotating RCMP in our national parks, and it's a very good comment. That's something that we'll have to talk to the RCMP about and having RCMP officers in red serge so they could be, obviously, taking pictures with tourists. They are icons for tourism throughout Canada. Obviously, in Alberta with the mountains in the background I don't think you can get a much better picture unless you and I were in it. I did want to just mention, though, that that's something that we'll look at. If additional officers are required in the summer, there is an enhancement program that we do provide to municipalities to have additional RCMP officers in their communities. So that's one of those things that we can look at in the future.

Mr. Chairman, I think I've answered all of the hon. member's questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll try to be very brief because I guess there's not that much time left. I commend the minister and his department. It's one of the most important departments in government, you know, for ensuring that we have safe streets and that we have the sense of safety on the part of our seniors and the children and in all the ways that we can just be able to walk around our streets. I see that some of the performance factors are not as high as we would like to see in that area.

But I'd just like to look quickly at correctional officers and safety. The safety of our correctional officers is a primary concern. They need the best equipment to protect themselves. In the estimates, page 395, line item 3.2.1, adult remand and correctional centres, under Voted Equipment/Inventory Purchases there's only an allocation of $150,000, which is the same as last year. Is this small allocation enough to provide the best equipment to correctional officers in order to protect themselves? Do they have the best protective vests available? Can the minister tell us what kind of protective vests the guards at the remand centres wear? Is the body armour issued to these officers capable of withstanding all types of knives or stabbing weapons? Do they all have trauma plates? Can the minister tell us if officers in the remand centres have the best equipment possible to provide for their safety?

What about the safety issue regarding the overcrowding? This creates an unsafe working condition for staff at the remand centres. What is the minister doing to fix this and enhance the safety of remand guards? We've heard from the officers themselves that the number of assaults in these facilities is growing as the population increases. Guards are threatened with serious harm every shift, yet there's no move made to address the conditions that lead to this. Gang members should be separated and isolated. Violent criminals should not be housed with nonviolent criminals. What is the minister doing to address these issues?

I'll just have a quick point on the police academy. Now, I understand that there are, you know, 30-some submissions or something like that left, and there are two that I think are very strong. There's one from Edmonton, and there's one from Drumheller. They're both very strong, and they both have correctional facilities right near them. They both have good lands. When will the minister be choosing between those two?

I'll just defer to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. He just has one or two more questions.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to respond to and answer the questions that the hon. member raised. Regarding the safety of corrections officers' vests and the amount that's listed in here, yes, those are the dollars that are listed for the vests. In fact, there's a media release going out; I think it went out today. In fact, we're going to be showing the new vests that the corrections officers will have; that's tomorrow at 1 o'clock at the remand centre, I believe. We just received them. They are state-of-the-art vests, so to speak. I'm very proud to have received these for our officers.

This is an issue regarding health and safety. This is an issue of protection of our officers who are working with some of the most dangerous offenders and potential criminals, so we want to ensure their safety. I'm very proud of each of those officers and the work that they do. Again, their safety is my concern, and that was one of the first things that I asked my staff to look at when I was first appointed to this position. It has taken some time. There were some issues with previous vests, but I can assure you that the vests that have been selected now are second to none. They are of the latest quality of stab-resistant material to protect officers. Really, it is an opportunity to look at that whole safety issue that you speak of there.

Safety concerns regarding the number of remand offenders that are in there: obviously, that is a concern for us as well. We are looking at addressing those problems by moving some of them out, moving them to the Fort Saskatchewan facility and, as I mentioned earlier, the opportunity to move sentenced offenders to the Grande Cache facility once a contract can be reached with the federal government, with the federal Corrections Canada. So we're working on that.

I heed your comments regarding the police training centre. As I mentioned, we are going through all 30 submissions. We want to develop a short list, obviously look at some site locations in the future. That is moving forward as we go.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $434,123,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Solicitor General and Public Security: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $434,123,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report of the budget estimates and business plan of the Department of Solicitor General and Public Security?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Hon. members, before I call on the Deputy Premier, I would like to remind everyone to clear off their desks because the Forum for Young Albertans will be meeting in here on the weekend, and it would be very helpful.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's been a week of good progress in work in the Legislature. It's been a very special week having Her Excellency here in the Assembly this afternoon. I would move that we call it 5:30 and that the House reconvene on Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 5:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce Brent Seib, Yaser Shawar, Eman Oliver, and David Lam. Brent is the manager at Westmount Scotiabank and is also a proud supporter of a number of local charities. Over the Christmas season Brent attended the ATCO and Edmonton Sun Christmas Charity Auction. He bid and won a fantastic lunch of sandwiches – correct? – for four with me, which we enjoyed this afternoon. Now, I'm told that the auction raised close to $230,000 in donations, which was shared among Edmonton Catholic Social Services, the Christmas Bureau of Edmonton, the capital region United Way, and the Stollery children's foundation. Each of these charities does important work in Edmonton and its surrounding communities, so I'm proud to be able to support them by having lunch with these four community-minded Albertans. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in offering them the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my father, Dr. Fred Cenaiko, who is seated in your gallery. My father immigrated from Poland in 1926. He started his education in Canada, leaving home at 14 years of age to finish grade 12, and later began medical school at the University of Alberta here in Edmonton. On completion he began his medical practice in Wakaw, Saskatchewan, in 1955.

For over 50 years and now at the age of 80 my father has served his community as a family physician in Wakaw with a remarkable commitment based on strong personal integrity and professional ethics. He started satellite clinics around Wakaw, including one on the One Arrow reserve near Batoche. As a member of the Christian Medical & Dental Associations' missions he travelled to Central America yearly for 30 years, providing both medical and dental assistance to thousands of nationals who could not afford health services whatsoever. My father is also a recognized practitioner in alternative modalities of treatment for chronic pain, and he has people coming from across Canada to see him. His motto is: education is the key to success. He feels that education plays a strong role in giving people the power and potential to do great things with their lives.

Mr. Speaker, my father has received the Saskatchewan Order of Merit, the Ukrainian nation builders award from the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, and has been nominated for the Order of Canada. Dr. Cenaiko has been a role model and mentor for many in his field and his community and plays a lead role in my life.

My brother Lloyd is president of the Humanitarian Aid Response Teams, HART, which provides programs and medical support to children in Ukraine. He's accompanying my father today.

The hon. Premier and Mrs. Klein and the hon. Minister of Education had the opportunity to attend a ribbon-cutting ceremony in Ukraine for a children's playground centre and one of numerous orphanages there.

I'd ask my father and my brother Lloyd to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly seven members of the civil service in Sustainable Resource Development. These members are all part of our strategic forestry initiative division in Sustainable Resource Development, and they're responsible for the very important softwood lumber and the value-added portions of our ministry. They're seated in the members' gallery, and as I repeat their names, I'm going to ask them to rise and be recognized by the Assembly as they go about learning more about what happens in the Assembly. The first one is Mr. Pat Guidera, followed by Mrs. Gloria Hossinger, Mrs. Sandra Candeias, Ms Donna Fregren, Mr. Siegfried Bahde, Mr. Paul Short, and Mr. Gordon Giles. I'd ask the Assembly to please give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure for me this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 27 of Alberta's brightest and finest and sharpest young minds. They happen to come from the Avonmore elementary school in my riding, and they are here accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Jill Atkins Cyr, and parents helpers Karen Loveridge and Connie Demchuk. I had the pleasure of meeting with them a few moments ago, and I can attest to their brilliance. I would ask all of the students from Avonmore elementary to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members here. Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of four individuals who are with us today to help commemorate May as Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. This is the organization that has presented us with the beautiful red carnations on our desks this afternoon, and that's to bring awareness to the concerns of those with multiple sclerosis and their families and their caregivers. I'm pleased to introduce from the Alberta division of the MS Society of Canada Neil Pierce, president; Garry Wheeler, vice-president; Darrel Gregory, director of communications; and Alison Hagan, director of development. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to introduce a class from a school in my constituency which has some specific significance to at least one member of this Legislature and to a former member of the Legislature. It's the Webber Academy, the grade 5 class. They are accompanied today by Ms Janice Chan, Mr. Daniel Mondaca, Mrs. Tanya Ferguson, and Mrs. Janet Adamson, their teachers. I believe they're located in both galleries, and I'd ask them to stand and be recognized by this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to recognize today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very, very special guest, special to me in that she was actually involved in all three of the election campaigns that I ran in, and I would say that she played a very important role in getting me elected three times. That is my granddaughter, who is part of the Webber Academy class. I didn't spot which side she's sitting on, but I would ask Mackenzie Symons, my granddaughter, to stand and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and all members of the Assembly 66 students from St. John Bosco school in my constituency. Now, they're just starting to study government, so they look with anticipation to figure out exactly how things work here. They've got teachers here: Mr. McNeely, Mrs. Adolf, and Ms Giampa; parent helpers Mrs. Pelletier, Mr. Johnston, and Ms Chimenti. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents of mine from Calgary-Currie: Keith Purdy and Rick Kennedy. On August 20 last year, a fine, warm summer's day, I had the honour of attending their wedding, a civil ceremony performed by an Alberta marriage commissioner that took place one month after federal legislation allowing same-sex marriage was given royal assent. Rick and Keith are fast approaching their first official anniversary but, in fact, have been together as a couple now for 16 years. They tell me that that's the longest relationship in either of their families, which suggests to me that love and commitment to make a marriage work are more important than whether the couple is gay or straight. They're seated in the visitors' gallery, and I would ask Keith and Rick to stand now and receive what I hope will be the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Charan Khehra and his wife, Surender Khehra. Just this past Friday the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers awarded Charan the lifetime achievement award in recognition of his contribution to his community, to Alberta, and to Canada. Charan has an excellent record of public service since coming to this country, including 12 years with the Alberta department of labour as a senior economist and policy analyst and then as a staff member with the NDP opposition caucus. Charan serves on a number of community and other public advisory boards. Surender is also a former government of Alberta employee and is actively involved in the community as well. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would now invite them to rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce a special guest in the members' gallery, Ryan Portman, who is a friend and an active and caring member of the Calgary community, a grade 10 student. He's visiting here today to find out what an MLA does in the Legislature. Let's give him our warm welcome to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we've seen so far today, we are very fortunate in this House to introduce some truly inspirational Albertans. It's my honour now to recognize a couple of people that I would fit into that category for sure. One is a legend in municipal and provincial and national politics. Many of you know her. I say that she's a legend; she's also a young lady. She's worked with the likes of Diane Ablonczy, Tony Clement, Scott Brison, Jon Lord, Moe Amery, Mark Hlady, and David Heyman. You know her as Kim Linkletter. She's a volunteer extraordinaire with a few groups, like the Calgary Round-Up Band, Girl Guides, Heritage Park, St. Albert the Great Parish, school parent councils, and a number of local PC associations, including Calgary-Lougheed. Without Kim I wouldn't be here. I guess that I should be thanking you, shouldn't I, Kim? Joining Kim is her lovely daughter Virginia, who I'm sure at the end of the day will have a resumé twice as long. Please help me welcome two inspirational Albertans, Kim and Virginia Linkletter.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a relatively new addition to the staff at the Official Opposition caucus. Earl Woods has been tasked with the enviable job of taking thoughts and ideas of MLAs and putting them into words that match prose and, hopefully, catch the imagination of the citizens of this province. I would ask Earl to please stand at this time in the public gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Issues in Fort Chipewyan

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There is rapidly growing evidence supporting a possible major medical outbreak in northern Alberta. The town of Fort Chipewyan is reporting extremely high rates of cancers and other serious illnesses among its small population. Medical experts, town officials, residents, First Nation leaders, and scientific advisers all agree that the provincial government needs to act now to determine the causes of this outbreak. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that a report was issued in 1999 detailing concerns over the high rates of leukemia, lymphomas, lupus, and autoimmune diseases, why after a year and a half on the job is the minister just now learning about this study and its recommendations?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not just learning about it. As a matter of fact, about six weeks ago on CBC I gave a comment on this very thing. It was profiled at that time. There was the discovery of yet another case of cancer. Actually, for several years now industry, the Northern Lights health region, Health Canada, Environment officials, and Alberta Health and Wellness have been co-operating in doing their due diligence on the kinds of issues that might emerge to identify cancer. It is not conclusive. Everything we know thus far is not conclusive, in fact, that these cases, while tragic and unfortunate, have been caused by any environmental factor.

I can say that the group met most recently on April 25 of this year and reviewed some of the data which may be of significance. We're waiting for them to go through the process of the kind of work you do when you're following up on both the etiology and what the understanding is of the progression.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the minister's comments can the minister tell the House if she knows of any other factors besides the oil sands developments in the Fort Chip area that may be causing the high rates of cancer and other diseases in that region?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that are being focused on; for example, questions by the NRBS and the group's focus on priorities such as pollution prevention, hormone problems in fish, water flows and quality, contaminants, nutrients, safe drinking water, and enhanced environmental monitoring. Two human health-related initiatives are also in place during the review to ensure that there is safety of drinking water.

Mr. Speaker, we have urged that people not panic on this or, in fact, inflame what is a very proper and appropriate scientific investigation. It will be thorough to the degree that all of those partners bring their own expertise on board, and I trust that we will get conclusions that will lead us to find solutions.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that this government and this minister made cutbacks to aboriginal health strategies in their latest budget, how can First Nations people be assured that proper long-term strategies are being implemented to protect them from possible negative health problems?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will resist talking about the number of people who questioned me on the health budget as it relates to grants to aboriginal people. My recollection is that approximately 25 per cent of the grants specifically targeted to aboriginal programs throughout Alberta – and those are grants, not the normal day-to-day funding that goes through the regional health authorities. There was a proportionately small reduction in grant programs, recognizing that the grants that were in place in those circumstances were grants where, quite properly, the federal government should cover those costs. They were not significant in terms of anything that I could identify that would impact upon any kind of support that's provided for aboriginal people in northern Alberta. Quite the contrary. These kinds of grants, of which I would be pleased to table a list, supplement other programs and supports that are throughout Alberta.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Nutrition Programs

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One must question this government's priorities when they spend nearly a million dollars a year on luxury vehicles for cabinet ministers while neglecting thousands of Alberta schoolchildren who go to school hungry every day. Ask these ministers to give up their $40,000 government cars, and I bet that they'd make quite a fuss. Ask them to provide funding for school nutrition programs, and they vote it down. Apparently, getting cabinet ministers to work in luxury vehicles is the job of the province, where feeding hungry children falls solely on the backs of impoverished families. My first question is to the Minister of Education. Given that this minister has repeatedly accepted government cars, including, for example, a Buick LeSabre Limited Edition, why is it the government's direct responsibility to provide this minister with a fancy car when it isn't the government's direct responsibility to provide a school nutrition program for hungry children in Alberta?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, you know, you have an option to either accept a government vehicle or take a kilometrage rate. I'm quite sure that the opposition leader takes a kilometrage rate, and if he does, I'd ask him to admit that he does. Perhaps he'd be willing to give his up. The thing is that when I evaluated that from my particular perspective, I found it to be less expensive to the taxpayer for me to actually accept a government car, so that's the decision that I made.

With respect to school nutrition programs I have answered that question in this House at least three or four times. I'd be happy to answer it again because a lot of people, obviously, including the Liberal opposition, don't yet know that we have approximately 70 per cent of our school boards today who do offer some type of a nutritional program. Some have hot lunch programs, others have breakfast programs, and so on. They do it to accommodate local needs, and they do it in partnership with local community agencies, which were referenced earlier in Hansards from previous occasions.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Premier. How does this Premier justify government policies that provide high-salaried deputy ministers with a dedicated $40,000-a-year car allowance when it doesn't provide 2 cents of dedicated funding for school nutrition programs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Education pointed out, school boards are provided with a budget, and it's entirely up to the school boards as to whether they wish to spend that money on hot lunch programs or on other issues that they consider to be priorities. I would remind the hon. member that school boards are elected, just as he is elected. A certain amount of money is provided to school boards, and it's entirely up to them as to whether they wish to provide hot lunch or hot breakfast programs.

Mr. Speaker, relative to vehicles the hon. minister explained that there is an option of having a vehicle or taking mileage. I'm sure that the hon. Leader of the Opposition, if he doesn't have a vehicle, takes mileage or kilometrage, which is very significant. I can recall that an opposition member – and it was the NDs who were in opposition at that time – criticized me, of course, as Minister of Environment for taking a plane up to I believe it was Bonnyville from Calgary. But he didn't mention that he drove up there and charged the government – I forget – about 27 cents a kilometre all the way to Bonnyville and back, which amounted to quite a bit.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the minister of learning: will this minister do the right thing and give up his dedicated $40,000-a-year car allowance until this government can provide dedicated funding for school nutrition programs? Do the right thing, Gene.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to correct myself. It's not 70 per cent; it's actually 77 per cent. It's actually 77 per cent of our school boards who offer school meal programs ranging from daily to perhaps weekly to something else, and they do it in partnership with very proud corporate volunteer organizations to ensure that those children who are in need receive it. Furthermore, if there are children who are in need above and beyond that, we do have a number of other government programs that they might wish to access. I'd ask the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to just briefly augment the other part of the question.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two things will be getting bigger next year: class size and the standardized testing office. Decades of centralization have expanded the central administration office in the Department of Education. This department now has more than double the staff of British Columbia's Department of Education for a comparable number of students and is getting bigger. My question to the Minister of Education: why is the third year of the Alberta Commission on Learning recommendation 14, the class size initiative, being cut when the standardized testing office is expanding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, there is quite a large non sequiter there, but let me address it in any event. The Learning Commission, when it brought in its recommendations, said: here are the targets that we would like you to achieve on a jurisdiction-wide basis over a period of five years. We attempted to do that much quicker. We tried to do it in three years. We had benchmarks set along the way. After the two-year period is concluded, which is this coming June, we know that we will have seen class size averages on a jurisdiction-wide basis reduced to within or to have bettered the targets set at the two-year benchmark in all grade levels except kindergarten to grade 3.

What we've done in this third year is targeted the monies in the class size initiative to do two things: first of all, to retain the 1,688 brand new teachers that have been added to the system over the past two years; and secondly, to target the monies where they are needed most, and that is in the kindergarten to grade 3 level because that is where our class sizes are not yet at the level of 17 on a jurisdictional average-wide basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister considered decentralizing education by reducing the number of staff in his central office and flowing these dollars through to the local jurisdictions that need it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, as I recall – and this may be before the hon. member's time in the House – there were a number of comments made with respect to supporting the Learning Commission document. In fact, we have responded with support for almost 90-some of those recommendations, and that has meant – guess what? – adding some additional staff to help accomplish them at the central office. There are a number of outstanding programs that are requiring additional expertise within my ministry, and we have added the staff to arrive at the best practices from around the world, from other parts of Canada, and so on to ensure that those programs are provided to keep Alberta in the position of being able to say: we have the best education system in Canada, and we're working very aggressively to have one of the best, if not the best, in all of the world.

2:00

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How does the minister justify increasing the number of staff in the standardized testing office by five members to a total of 696 staff when school boards are forced to cut teachers?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any school boards that are being forced to cut teachers. I think what's important to remember here is that we are in what we call the preliminary budgeting period. The actual budgets for school boards will be turned in to me and my ministry, as per previous years, on or before June 30. In fact, up until the end of May school boards don't even know, for example, how many teachers will be retiring because teachers aren't required to let their school boards know until the end of May. Now, that in itself will have quite a large impact, and there are other similar factors to be worked in. They have also just received their jurisdictional profile numbers, and they are all getting an increase. I don't think there's a single school board out there that isn't sharing in the $5.3 billion that this government is providing to educate kindergarten to grade 12 students this coming year.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Donations to Political Parties

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's an old saying that he who pays the piper calls the tune. The 2005 annual financial statements filed at the chief electoral office show the unhealthy reliance of both the provincial Conservative and Liberal parties on corporate donations: 73 per cent of PC Party contributions came from corporations and almost half of Liberal Party contributions. By contrast, over 99 per cent of Alberta NDP contributions last year came from individual Albertans. My question is to the Deputy Premier. Why does this government refuse to follow the lead of their federal cousins as well as the governments in provinces like Quebec and Manitoba and amend our laws here in Alberta to get big money out of Alberta politics by restricting donations to individual Albertans only?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not surprised at the numbers that the hon. member has put forward, but I would suggest that it has far more to do with policy than it does with anything else. It's well known that this government supports free enterprise, that this government's policies are to keep taxes low to leave more money in Albertans' pockets. I would not dare to speak for the Liberal opposition, but I think it's also well known what the NDs' philosophy is in those areas. So I'll stand for free enterprise, for more money in Albertans' pockets, and that will be the basis that I recommend policy in this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, can the minister then explain why the government is cutting corporations' taxes by 15 per cent in an overheated economy and at the same time cutting important programs for aboriginal children and aboriginal health and so on if not because they've received such massive donations from the corporate sector?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a stretch. That's a real stretch. Good, sound economics would suggest that lowering taxes on all levels is good for the economy. There isn't an economist that I have heard from or read that doesn't suggest that lowering taxes both on the business side and a personal side makes a stronger economy.

In the early 1990s, when this province was struggling with debt, our Premier made a statement and, in fact, a commitment to Albertans, suggested that if we followed these policies, we would reap the benefits down the road. Mr. Speaker, the benefits are here today. Those corporations are the very people who are investing in this economy, that are ensuring that Albertans have jobs, including our aboriginal peoples.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's too bad the disabled and the poor can't make donations to the Conservative Party because maybe they would get some attention from this government.

Given that this government's Ottawa cousins are tightening the existing rules on federal party leadership contest donations, why is the Conservative government refusing to regulate leadership contests of registered political parties, thereby avoiding the mistake of allowing the Premier's chair to be bought by the highest bidder?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak to this, having gone through a leadership contest. Even the NDs can buy a membership, $5, and they can cast a vote, and the Liberals can buy a membership and cast a vote. Many of them did, and many of them probably will, NDs and Liberals alike, and cast a vote as they did in the last leadership campaign, as they did en masse in the last leadership campaign.

So it's not at my beck and call; it's at the beck and call of the people of this province. By the way, this is the only party with a democratic process to select a leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Support for First Nations

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many First Nations are expressing disappointment and calling the new federal government's budget announcement a major step backwards. Their concerns relate to the government's decision to scrap the $5 billion Kelowna accord aimed at improving the lives of aboriginal people. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Knowing that this budget is a far cry from the $5 billion committed in the Kelowna accord, how does the federal budget benefit aboriginal Albertans?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we were very disappointed as well that there was absolutely no mention in the budget about the Kelowna accord. There was a lot of time, a lot of work, a lot of effort that went into that accord to make sure that we were dealing with the gaps in the aboriginal community.

Mr. Speaker, although this budget doesn't address all the targets that we had talked about, there are some examples of some good things that I think can result: as an example, $450 million for improving water and, of course, the other one is on-reserve housing, educational outcomes, and $300 million to address immediate off-reserve housing, which is a huge issue, and I think that's what some of the people in the urban areas are seeing; $2.2 billion to address the residential schools; $150 million to improve . . .*

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. Are the numbers the hon. minister is giving applicable to Alberta?

Ms Calahasen: Yes.

The Speaker: All of them? Two point two billion of this, and $400 million for Alberta?

Ms Calahasen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I'll just tell you how.

The Speaker: No. We'll go on to the next question.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental to the same minister: given that aboriginal people are migrating to urban centres at an increasing rate, are there any dollars in the federal budget to address this transition?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, just so that people will understand what we're dealing with, the aboriginal community, as you know, is migrating into the cities in massive amounts. As an example, in Edmonton alone there is a population of 40,000 presently; that was the 2001 census. As a matter of fact, in Calgary it is 22,000 people who have migrated into the cities.

When we're talking about urban population, we're dealing with a lot of issues, and I'm very, very proud to hear that we are dealing with off-reserve housing, which has been one of the concerns from the cities, and, secondly, Mr. Speaker, the outcomes for aboriginal women, the children, and, of course, the families that deal with education. As you know, when they migrate into the cities, they deal with the educational component. So, Mr. Speaker, these details, unfortunately, are not fleshed out yet, and as we all know, the devil is in the details.

Mr. Lindsay: My second supplemental to the same minister: knowing the limited amount of money in the budget for aboriginal people, what are you doing to advocate on their behalf?

*See p. 1347, right col., para. 7

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm really proud to be able to talk about it. First of all, I met with the minister of Indian and northern affairs Canada. We discussed the priorities that the First Nations have had, and he's had meetings with the First Nations. I think what we have to do is continue to work with the minister of INAC but also with my government, which has been very key in dealing with a number of issues. I think we need to continue to collaborate with the federal minister, with the First Nations to be able to deal with these things. I will carefully scrutinize the process that will be utilized in determining what the next steps will be in the whole budget process.

The Speaker: The hon. minister will be able to continue her discussion in response to the Speaker Wednesday afternoon when their estimates are designated.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Auditor General's report on long-term care indicated that basic standards were not current and that systems to monitor the compliance with standards were not adequate. The continuing care standards released last week were more like suggestions to the regional health authorities than the strong, enforceable standards recommended by the Auditor General and certainly desired by many Albertans. They are too general and too fragmented to protect the health and safety of residents in continuing care facilities. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister explain why she delegated responsibility for monitoring compliance with health standards to the regional health authorities rather than establishing a provincial independent continuing care commissioner as the Liberal opposition has suggested?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For any reader that understands the meaning of "shall," there are many places in the standards that say that the "regional health authority shall," and it's a very definite requirement about what they should do. But beyond that, on the back two pages of the standards, there's a section on the Health Quality Council role. Recently we've worked with the Health Quality Council to place them on the same parallel in authority for quality decision-making and quality monitoring as a regional health authority, and the Health Quality Council has a role and responsibility in making sure that quality is delivered. So within the context of the standards and with an understanding of the new role of the Health Quality Council, it's not only the regional health authority that will be delivering quality but the responsibility of the Health Quality Council to not only assure that health quality is maintained for continuing care but will be in conversations with the regions on those issues.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I believe those councils should be above the regional health authorities.

Why does the minister find it acceptable for continuing care residents to receive different levels of care depending on which region they live in?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the attempt within the standards is to acknowledge that there are different mixes of populations and different kinds of care provided. There are even different ranges of facilities, from assisted living or places where people receive partial care because of the kinds of acuity they have. So it would be very difficult to respond as the ministry wanting them to receive different care, but we have different kinds of care facilities. As to the quality of care, you should receive the type and quality of care that you need based on the assessment of your personal care needs and the plan that is developed with the long-term care resident and their family. So I would say that if you're a long-term care resident with a particular acuity in one region, you should receive the same type of care, the same intensity, and the same scope of treatment in another region.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I agree, but I don't think it's happening. Why is the minister making continuing care staff, residents, and their families wait another year before legislating continuing care standards that would be provincial?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we recognize that the capacity of some authorities may not be up to the same capacity as others, so we've asked for implementation of certain standards, in particular those that are surrounding patient safety, immediately. Many of them are ready to do that. Some are finding and facing staffing issues, staffing mix issues, where we aren't able to get the required number of staff. But there is good news on the horizon. Recently in Palliser, for example, 30 new staff were retained to support quality long-term care, and we'll continue to develop a workforce strategy that enables them all to be to this standard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Criminal Sentencing Changes

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the federal government introduced two bills that will change the Criminal Code and make for tougher sentences for criminals. Apparently one would impose mandatory minimum sentences for various gun-related crimes while the other would eliminate conditional sentences like house arrest for serious crimes. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister tell us how the proposed change to sentences for gun crimes will affect Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the Attorneys General and Solicitors General met in Whitehorse and at that time, among other things, discussed the gun crimes that were occurring across the country, particularly at that time in the Toronto area. Here in Alberta we do not have the same extent of gun crimes, but it is a serious issue. There is a particular connection between guns and organized crime, particularly the drug trade, so I can tell you that the initiative of the federal government in bringing mandatory minimums with respect to certain gun crimes that are related, particularly, with other crimes is a very good move. It will ensure that conditional sentencing is not available in those particular crimes, and it means that people who today are not doing time in jail as a result of similar circumstances will in fact, once this law becomes a law of Canada, be doing time in jail.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. What effect will the proposed legislation on eliminating the option of conditional sentences for serious crimes have here in Alberta?

Mr. Stevens: Well, this is another matter that was discussed last fall at the federal/provincial/territorial meeting. In fact, Alberta has been leading the way for the last five years in asking the federal government to get serious with respect to serious crimes and ensuring that conditional sentencing is not available in those areas. Conditional sentencing is quite appropriate in minor crimes but not in serious crimes. I can tell you that as of last fall every provincial justice minister, every territorial justice minister was agreed that the federal government needed to do something. So, once again, this is a very good move. It will ensure that people who do serious crime will do some serious time now whereas today there is a very good chance that they go home and watch colour television, albeit under certain restrictions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Solicitor General. Given that our correctional institutions and remand centres are reportedly already over capacity, where will all these additional prisoners be housed?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. About 10 days ago I had the opportunity to meet with the Hon. Stockwell Day, Minister of Public Safety for Canada, and these were some of the issues that we discussed. There is a commitment – and there was a commitment in this last week's budget – from the federal government regarding providing resources as well as financial support for institutions in the capacity that they have right now. The offenders that the hon. member and the Minister of Justice spoke about are looking at serious crimes that have a mandatory minimum of possibly five years or more. Obviously, those are federal sentences. Those inmates would be placed in federal institutions, not provincial institutions, and there is a commitment from them for funding for additional space if required in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Home-care Funding

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recruiting for caregivers in home-care programs has pitted individuals in the self-managed care programs against larger facilities and institutions which provide home care. There is a critical shortage of home-care workers, which is further exacerbated because these low-paid caregivers have to pay their own fuel costs to travel from location to location. Current funding models do not address these issues. My questions are to the minister of health. Given that people with progressive disabilities require 24-hour home care and the current funding model only provides for 10 hours, what does the government expect them to do for the other 14 hours?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, relative to the very specific supports for people in transportation, there may not be in place in every circumstance sufficient capacity in the regions. That's something that we'll have to check, and we'll see exactly how they intend to spend the money.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Assembly of something I mentioned during Committee of Supply last week. Since March 15 of last year this government has put $83 million more into long-term and continuing care for the quality delivery of care. It has nothing to do with the amount of money that we have added through the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports' budget. It is purely to increase the amount of money for caregivers. It is to ensure that there are safe lifting policies in places. It's to ensure that regional health authorities have sufficient dollars to expand on the level of care and commitment to those with continuing care needs.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd be very happy to look into the very specific item about the mileage relative to the home-care delivery personnel and investigate it as the member sees fit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what is the government's plan to increase the total number of trained home-care workers and staff through school spaces and foreign qualifications? What arrangements has she made with her colleagues?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have an aggressive workforce plan that we will be delivering in the next few weeks with the opportunity to be fully conversant on all portions of it, but I should indicate that we have 8,800 aides in Alberta that will all be fully trained in skills as of March 31, 2008. We are working to make sure that they are enhanced in their skills and that the proper people that have the proper type of learning are in place to look after people in either home-care situations or in continuing care residences.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the minister's investigations on the fuel cost issue are satisfactory, will the minister commit to new funding models which do include a fuel cost or mileage arrangement for home-care workers whether they're individuals working for self-managed care programs or working in institutions and travelling from institution to institution?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for delivery has rested with the regional health authority. The very specific nature of this inquiry is such that I would feel much more comfortable getting the accurate information and tabling a response in the House not only to the accuracy of what is being provided for continuing care support but following up with a response that would assure the hon. member about our intentions relative to any expanded program if that's even within the feasibility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Police and Peace Officer Training Centre

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in the fall the Alberta Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security issued a request for a proposal to build a centralized training centre for police and peace officers. Thirty communities submitted, I understand, some very excellent proposals to the department. In February they were asked to wait until May to find out who had the successful bid. My questions to the minister are: when will these communities find out who has the successful bid?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member mentioned, our department is looking at developing a single-site facility to improve the quality of training by setting a training centre which would have superior standards of training not just for police but, as well, for peace officers. We received 30 tremendous proposals with 42 land options from those communities. Our department has been reviewing them, and we'll continue to study them, and then we will be making the decision of a short list coming out in the near future. There is a lot of work to do. These are very large proposals, and there is a lot of work involved in looking at each of them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that there is no funding for the training centre provided in this year's budget, what are your plans to move forward with the development of this training centre?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, that's a very good question, Mr. Speaker, and it's a very important question. As we move forward in looking at the development of a site and/or of a centre of this nature, being one of the only two provinces left in Canada that do not have one, obviously the importance is there. How do we look at the future model for funding it? We want to work with not just government but look at opportunities regarding a private/public partnership in securing the facility but, as well, looking at the opportunity for the rural development strategy and building some of these opportunities for rural development, not just for major urban centres.

Mr. Marz: Given that the minister is looking for P3s, is he expecting the communities to resubmit proposals including P3s?

Mr. Cenaiko: No, Mr. Speaker. As we move through this process, site visits will occur with those centres. Obviously, the proposals that have come forward and have been examined and studied: there will be site visits that will be required by department staff to actually go to look at the site, look at the land. As well, it will provide an opportunity for better understanding of what may be required due to the geographic land situation. As I mentioned earlier, a P3 model would come from the private/public sector, not necessarily from a municipality although tied into the municipality because of the public nature of the facility as well as the opportunity for the public to partially utilize some of the facility itself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Sale of Surplus Crown Land in Edmonton

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Progressive Conservative government continues to sell surplus land around the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads for a wide range of prices. The prices start as low as pennies per acre, and taxpayers are not getting the maximum return on some of these deals. We must examine more closely some of these deals from the 2003 Alberta Gazette. My first question is to the minister of infrastructure. In January 2003 why did the Walton International Group Inc. pay on average $18,000 per acre for land in Edmonton when MacEwan West Developments and other developers paid close to $50,000 per acre for surplus government land also sold in the city of Edmonton?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, since he didn't have the courtesy to give me any forewarning, I do not have the deal. If he's doing like he did on Thursday, he mixes up apples and oranges again, taking sales from a certain year in a hot area versus another year in an area that isn't a hot market. As a matter of fact, one of the parcels he talked about last Thursday wasn't even serviced, so how on earth could it have anywhere near the value of another parcel? And I don't imagine that he went to the Auditor General like I asked him to on Thursday. I don't imagine that he did that, because he knows very well that nothing wrong has happened.

However, let me correct a few of the things. He was correct that we did pay $22,000, slightly more, per acre on a parcel of land in 1981. Remember: 1981 was the highest value, and we're probably now just starting to exceed it, so for anything that he says about sales in 2001 and those kinds of things, of course it's cheaper – of course – because the land values are. As far as selling for pennies, he's obviously referring to the Sheckter deal, and I would like him to stand up in this House and show the House where, in fact, we sold land for so-called pennies an acre. It's not true.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. infrastructure minister is in charge of the Alberta Gazette, so I would encourage him to read the Alberta Gazette for the year 2003. It's not my job to read his documents.

Speaker's Ruling Urgency of Questions

The Speaker: Okay. Stop now. I've just about had enough of this. We have motions for returns and written questions on the Order Paper. This is now 2006, and we're going back into history. There's been an election since the last time as well. There's not one precedent that says: why don't we ask questions about the great railway debate and scandal of 1911? That would be just as appropriate. Find a specific question that's current today, and we'll move on.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. In March of 2003 why did Walton International Group Inc. pay on average $15,000 per acre when South Terwillegar Developments Ltd. paid on average $46,000 per acre for surplus government land that was sold by this government, by this department, in the city of Edmonton? We're talking about 2003.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, continuing on from Thursday. Of course, he hasn't given me any – I could have had all of the answers here today if he would have. We sell hundreds of parcels of land a year, hundreds of them, and for that member to think that he can ask me a question on any specific day on a specific site without giving me any previous notice that he's going to do it, I don't have the ability, nor does he, to even begin.

Now, once again I suspect that we're going to find that he's mixing apples and oranges. But going back to Thursday, the fact is that on the parcel that he referred to that we sold, we did have two appraisals done on it by licensed appraisers, people that know, and we even got more for the land than the appraisers said.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: who in this government signed the deals to sell these properties to Walton International Group Inc. for about 30 per cent of the sale price per acre that the government got for other properties sold at the same time in the city of Edmonton? Who signed that deal?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that tomorrow, when I have all the answers for the questions that he asked today, the member will stand up and say that he's sorry that he is painting a picture that we, in fact, are selling land at a huge loss and that somebody in my department is allowing this to happen and signing it off. I hope that he will stand up and apologize for that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton public is one of a growing number of school boards across the province facing crippling budget deficits. In Edmonton public's case they are projecting a deficit of $7 million at the end of the school year. Last week I tabled a memo from Edmonton public's superintendent. The memo informed trustees that a significant portion of the projected deficit is because Alberta Education reneged on a commitment to fully fund the kindergarten to grade 3 class size target by 2006-2007. My question is to the Minister of Education. Why did Alberta Education renege on a December 2004 commitment to provide $4.2 million to Edmonton public in 2006-07 and instead provide only $1.9 million to achieve K to 3 class size targets?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier this afternoon some statistical facts with respect to the Learning Commission's recommendation as it affects and impacts class sizes, and I indicated at the time, I believe, that at the two-year benchmark, which will be concluded here on or about June 30, we'll know that all school jurisdictions will have met or will have bettered the guideline, the benchmark, that was set for the two-year period in all grade levels other than kindergarten to grade 3. Clearly, what we're trying to do now is work with the school boards and address the kindergarten to grade 3 group level, which is where we need additional dollars for reducing class sizes by hiring more teachers, and we are going to be doing that.

I think that by the time this year ends, we will have provided in excess of $200 million for the class size reduction initiative, and that's a considerable amount of money in a very short period of time. We reduced the window from five years to three years. We found that there were some problems with that, so we're extending it and giving the boards a little more flexibility and a little more time to meet that final age grouping in terms of class sizes.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister again. This was a commitment by the Department of Education in 2004. It's not only Edmonton; it has affected school boards right across the province. My question is: why did the minister and why did the government renege on this promise made back in 2004?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, education continues to be a very important and evolving feature of both our society and of our government's undertakings, obviously, but when you see that a problem has not been addressed, you want to rush in and help address the problem where it exists. The problem exists in the kindergarten to grade 3 level. I don't know how I can make that any more clear.

Secondly, let's remember that for all of the new teachers that have been hired in September of '04 and all of the new additional teachers that were hired in September of '05, those new teachers are provided for in the budget. We are providing money for their salaries, for their pensions, and so on. On top of that, we're providing a significant amount of brand new monies to hire yet more teachers, probably up to 200 new teachers, in the coming September school year.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that school boards are facing deficits right across this province. For Edmonton it meant the $2.3 million they were promised and didn't get. Other school boards are in the same situation. I ask the minister this: why did this happen when there were problems for these boards?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton public school board budget for basic education, not including infrastructure, should be going up from about $560.5 million for the '05-06 fiscal government year to about $577 million, and that is in spite of a flatline in terms of student enrolment growth. In fact, Edmonton public's student growth may be in the negative position. We'll know very soon. We should also remember that we are only going through now what we call the preliminary budgeting phase. Final budgets will be provided to us by the end of June, which is the standard requirement, and at that point we'll see where things stand.

Right now it is quite premature, I would offer, to be speculating on whether or not schools will be in deficit positions. I would be prepared to look at that again by the end of June and give further comment. When a school board is faced with a deficit position, all they have to do is write me a letter, explain why they're in that deficit position, explain how they plan to get out of that deficit position. I will sit down with my senior officials and review their case and make a decision on whether we will accept their deficit elimination plan if, unfortunately, they are in that position.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development wishes to supplement an answer given earlier in the question period.

Ms Calahasen: I do, Mr. Speaker. I know that I answered a question which I wasn't really listening to when you asked, so what I want to do is be able to give you the correct information. The budget numbers cited are actually not specific to Alberta. We don't know what the amounts will be, as I indicated in my supplementary. I apologize for not giving that correct information.*

The Speaker: The interjection of the chair came about because the chair does not believe that the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has within her administrative requirements or competence knowledge of the federal budget, and that was the reason why.

Now, the rules also say that if a minister chooses to supplement, the person who raised the question gets to ask a supplementary. In this case the person was me, but I'm not going to do it.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a historical vignette today. Hon. members all know that Alberta's longest serving MLA is Gordon Edward Taylor, who was first elected to the Alberta Legislature on March 21, 1940, and he served to March 14, 1979. That was a total of 38 years, 11 months, and three weeks. But then there's the question of who Alberta's shortest serving member was, and there are actually three ways of defining this.

*See p. 1343, right col., para. 5

In one way Alberta's shortest serving member is William Morrison. He was elected as a Social Credit MLA in the constituency of Okotoks-High River in the general election held August 22, 1935. He resigned on October 7, 1935, to allow William Aberhart to run in a by-election held November 4, 1935. Aberhart was elected by acclamation. Morrison's length of service was 46 days.

On July 19, 1921, Percival Baker, a United Farmers of Alberta member for the constituency of Ponoka died. He had been elected in the general election held the previous day, July 18, 1921. Mr. Baker was a member who, unfortunately, was hit in the head by a tree when he was stumping trees several weeks before the election that was held on July 18. He was elected on July 18, was moved from the hospital in Ponoka to the Royal Alexandra hospital in Edmonton, and he died the following day. Mr. Baker's service was less than one day, but he was never sworn in as an MLA. In the by-election held December 9, 1921, J.E. Brownlee was elected by acclamation, and you have heard me make mention of Mr. Brownlee before.

The shortest term of office between election and defeat is another category, and that shortest term of office between election and defeat is held by Don MacDonald, a Liberal elected in a by-election in the constituency of Three Hills on October 26, 1992, following the resignation of Connie Osterman. MacDonald received 46.3 per cent of the vote. In the general election held on June 15, 1993, in the now named constituency Three Hills-Airdrie, the current Member for Airdrie-Chestermere won the seat with 51.2 per cent of the vote. MacDonald received 34.2 per cent of that vote, and his term was seven months, 20 days.

The second shortest term of office between election and defeat is held by Alberta's first elected separatist, Gordon Kesler. Kesler won a by-election held February 17, 1982, in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury caused by the resignation of incumbent Robert C. Clark. He represented the Western Canada Concept and received 42.2 per cent of the vote. In the general election held on November 2, 1982, Kesler ran in another riding, the riding of Highwood, and finished second with 17.9 per cent of the vote. Harry Alger, a Progressive Conservative, won that with 69.9 per cent of the vote. Kesler's term was less than nine months.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It brings me pleasure to introduce two groups of guests to you and through you to the Assembly. The first is a group of young Edmontonians. Mr. Tyler Harris is a young entrepreneur who has started a travel company here in Edmonton. Along with him is Meghan Humpkey, who is originally from Wetaskiwin but has moved here to work for the last six months before she begins her studies in Edmonton. Also we have Haley Kramer, who is taking some time between travels to Mexico and Europe but will be beginning her studies at Grant MacEwan College this fall. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, with us today is Mr. Chuck Temraz. Mr. Chuck Temraz originates from Lebanon but is a constituent of mine. Mr. Temraz is quite renowned in his community as he is the first ever to translate the works of Plato and other philosophers from the English language into the Arabic language. His books have now been donated to libraries throughout Alberta and are used as text and reference materials throughout the Middle East. I'll ask Mr. Temraz to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ellen Parker and Reka Serfozo. Reka Serfozo worked in Canada World Youth for the past four years as a project supervisor and program officer supporting international youth exchanges in eastern Europe, Asia, and Africa. Ellen is a community activist, global educator, and former federal candidate for the New Democrats in Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I would ask them both to rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Liberation of the Netherlands

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to mark the anniversary of the end of the military occupation and oppression of a nation and the start of an international friendship which has lasted 60 years. On May 10, 1940, Nazi forces crossed the border in an invasion which began five years of occupation of the Netherlands and the oppression of the Dutch people.

Mr. Speaker, my parents had already immigrated to the province by the time war broke out in Europe for the second time. However, many members of my extended family were subjected to Nazi rule during the occupation of the Netherlands. While the Dutch resistance waged a continuous and mostly peaceful campaign to resist being assimilated by the occupiers, they were by themselves unable to convince the Nazis to leave Holland. They needed assistance. This assistance was provided in the form of the First Canadian Army. The strength of this army varied from anywhere between 200,000 to over 400,000 troops when adding the British, Polish, American, Belgian, and Dutch fighting men to the roughly 150,000 Canadian soldiers. While the size of the army varied, their resolve and determination never wavered and was never questioned.

May 5 marked the 61st anniversary of the liberation of the Netherlands by the Allied forces. This was the culmination of a nine-month campaign to free Holland from Nazi occupation. The battles to free the Netherlands were difficult in the extreme, complicated by the nature of the geography of the area. The Allied troops were forced to battle through wet and boggy conditions of the lowlands and the tenacity of their opponent. However, the First Canadian Army stayed the course, and after securing a truce in late April, which allowed food relief to be brought in to a starving populace, the Allied army accepted the unconditional surrender of the occupying force on May 5, 1945.

Friendship between our two countries was cemented that day, a friendship which has been forged in the fire of the battlefield and tempered with the jubilation of victory. This friendship is still strong today, evidenced by the gifts of tulips which are sent to our nation's capital from the Dutch people. I would ask all hon. members to join me in recognizing the sacrifices which were made and the bonds that were formed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Fire Tragedy Averted

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes you don't know when you will be called upon to act quickly and think on your feet. Monday of last week something truly incredible happened not too far away from our Legislature. I was walking to an event with my legislative assistant, who is also more affectionately known as my shadow, when a car pulled up, billowing steam and smoke. Now, we all assumed that the engine was overheating and that the lady in the car would call a tow truck and get the problem sorted out. Luckily for her my leg. assistant noticed the flames spitting out of the undercarriage of the vehicle. He quickly, without a moment of hesitation, ran over to the van and opened the door to ensure that the driver got out of the vehicle in a safe manner and distanced herself from the car. Moments later the van's engine burst into flames and began whipping up the windshield. Two of our colleagues, the hon. Member for Peace River and the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, secured a fire extinguisher and tried unsuccessfully to extinguish the fire. Meanwhile, my leg. assistant called the Edmonton fire department, and they arrived within a timely four-minute response to the emergency call and extinguished the flames that were now threatening the surrounding area.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes you must be prepared to react quickly to a situation. You never know when you will have to act. Thanks to the actions of these three people and the Edmonton fire department this situation was resolved without any injury to the lady or the bystanders in the vicinity. I suggest that all members of this House should commend those kinds of actions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The saying goes, "A rising tide raises all boats." There's a reason why it remains a saying. Sayings, while they usually contain a grain of truth, often cannot be substantiated by the facts. The fact is that the rising tide in this province is raising some boats and swamping others.

In Calgary last Thursday I attended the groundbreaking for 13 affordable housing units to be built on part of the site of the old Highlander Hotel in an initiative put together by the Calgary Community Land Trust Society, Habitat for Humanity, the family of the late Leo and Goldie Sheftel, owners of the Highlander and for whom the complex, Sheftel court, will be named, and Home Depot, which occupies the rest of the old hotel site. The city of Calgary has played a lead role in bringing everyone together to make this affordable housing project possible, but it's like dropping a pebble into the ocean: the ripples are washed away by the rising tide.

A year ago the average resale house price in Calgary was about $260,000; today it's $340,000. That and the steady inflow of newcomers is quickly tightening up the supply of rental housing as well. After six years in which the vacancy rate was in the 5 to 6 per cent range, a range that holds the line on rents, in the last six months the vacancy rate has dropped to 1.6 per cent, and rents have climbed anywhere from 3 to 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, half the homeless people in Calgary have full-time jobs. Every night of the week homeless families bed down in a church basement somewhere in Calgary through the Inn from the Cold program. I know of no city in Canada with as many people as committed and as innovative in their many approaches to solving the homelessness crisis as Calgary has. But what Calgary doesn't have and cannot do on its own, not with all the imagination and goodwill its people possess, is create enough affordable housing, and as rents go up, there's even less to go around.

Portable housing allowances and rent supplements would be a start, but the province needs to step up to the plate now with a land-use strategy, a budget to build affordable housing, and a program to focus on getting this shameful problem solved. It's unthinkable that a province this wealthy would not make affordable housing for all its residents an absolute priority.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

God's Masterpiece School Play

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the mark of a great performance when the actors on stage are so powerful that they help the audience to completely share in their joy and their sorrow. When the men and women in an audience are wiping away tears and when they are laughing together in joy, they are transcended from their daily life for one brief moment and are part of the greater drama being enacted on stage. You may have experienced this kind of elation in a great performance at the Jubilee Auditorium or the Shaw Festival in New York or even in Stratford-upon-Avon.

However, Mr. Speaker, the outstanding performance that I am speaking of is the work of the grade 4 and grade 5 students of St. Martin de Porres elementary school in Red Deer. St. Martin is a fine arts school that teaches skills that help each child to develop their full potential in the arts. Although you might think that I'm partial because this is a school in Red Deer and has my granddaughter in the kindergarten class, I can sincerely and unequivocally say that I was totally immersed in the performance entitled God's Masterpiece. These children performed so well that I had to continually remind myself that the young actors that I was watching were only nine and 10 years old and not even in junior high yet.

God's Masterpiece is a two-act play that tells the story of the passion and death of Jesus Christ. The teachers and staff of St. Martin worked very hard and many long hours to coach each child, to produce the great costumes and stage sets, and to hold a silent auction and reception to help pay for the costs of this excellent performance.

Mr. Speaker, my sincerest congratulations go out to the producers of God's Masterpiece, teacher Justin Flunder and principal Patricia MacRae-Pasula, to the staff that dedicated many hours to work with the children, to the parents that helped to organize the reception and silent auction, and to the entire cast of incredible students who played their roles so magnificently. The death and resurrection of the Lord may indeed be God's masterpiece, but as I watched these very young children rise to a level of performance that far exceeded the normal age and maturity levels of grades 4 and 5 students, I watched them perform with their hearts and souls, and I saw that each child was truly one of God's great masterpieces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon in recognition of MS Awareness Month. Since the 1970s the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada has marked the month of May as MS Awareness Month. This campaign offers the opportunity for MS Society volunteers and staff to complete public awareness and fundraising activities nationally and locally.

The MS carnation campaign is one such event. The carnation campaign has traditionally been an important component of the MS Society's spring fundraising season. This campaign offers Canadians the opportunity to raise funds for MS research and services by purchasing carnations from volunteers in their local communities. Since its inception in 1975 the MS carnation campaign has been highly successful, providing more than $30 million for multiple sclerosis research and services for Canadians with MS.

Mr. Speaker, MS is an unpredictable and often disabling disease of the central nervous system. MS can cause loss of balance, impaired speech, extreme fatigue, double vision, and paralysis. It's a disease that affects people of all ages. Canada has one of the highest MS rates in the world, and each day three more Canadians are diagnosed with MS. The cause of MS is not yet known, and there is no cure, but there is hope. Purchasing a carnation during the MS carnation campaign could help the MS Society come one step closer to finding the cure for multiple sclerosis.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sale of Surplus Crown Lands

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a historical vignette today even if some of the history on the purchase prices for the ring road lands around Edmonton and Calgary is yet to be written. Alberta taxpayers have lost millions of dollars due to this Progressive Conservative government's mismanagement of the purchase and subsequent sale of surplus ring road land in Edmonton and Calgary. By spinning the facts, making excuses, and pointing the finger at others, the government continues to try and suppress the truth.

Documents show that this Progressive Conservative government has given away and continues to give away prime residential land at fire-sale prices. Some parcels were sold at well below the market value, while other parcels were given away for pennies per acre. Just last week the minister failed to provide an explanation for a land sale in 2002 that cost taxpayers $2.3 million in losses. In another case, several PC Party faithful were able to make a huge profit by flipping land to the government, which paid more than 15 times what their political supporters had paid for the land. A great deal for the Tories, a horrible deal for taxpayers. Still no answers are given.

The minister responsible for land sales tries to deflect the issue. However, it was not this government or this opposition that dragged the late Mr. Shekter's name through the mud. It was not the Official Opposition. It was this government's own bank, the Alberta Treasury Branches, that alleges in the statement of claim that the late Mr. Shekter was somehow involved in the payment of $70,000 in secret commissions to arrange loans between the Treasury Branches and other parties. Now, it wasn't the opposition that said that. It was your own government bank.

There remain so many questions that this government must answer. I don't know if the Auditor General can do it, as the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation states, but perhaps we're going to give him the job. Maybe we should.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, you rose?

Ms DeLong: I was rising on a point of order.

The Speaker: Well, we'll deal with the point of order at the conclusion.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from 318 Albertans. They

1. urge the government of Alberta to abandon its plans to implement "the Third Way" health care reforms, which will undermine public Medicare;
2. defeat legislation allowing expansion of private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta and permitting doctors to work in both the private and public system, which will drain key resources from the public health care system . . .
4. vote against plans that would force Albertans to pay for private health care insurance for services that should be covered by medicare.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am presenting petitions on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. There are several sets here, but there's a total of 1,481 signatures on petitions to urge the government to abandon its plans on the third way, not allow for expansion of private, for-profit hospitals, oppose any action contravening the Canada Health Act, and not allow private payment for health care services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition to the Assembly from citizens of Alberta who are requesting the Legislature to increase funding "in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels . . . be increased."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to file a petition from 23 staff and students from St. Joe's school in my riding. Essentially, they're asking for concerted government action to address the reported rise in teen smoking in Alberta. They have solutions. The first one is a tobacco tax increase; second, legislation to control tobacco sales and marketing legislation; thirdly, to make all workplaces completely smoke-free.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to table a petition from 42 Albertans from Edmonton, Stony Plain, Spruce Grove, and St. Albert dealing with the third way and urging us to abandon any plans to privatize health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a petition against the third way from 28 residents in Edmonton.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I intend to move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the immediate jeopardy of seniors and other continuing care residents due to the government's failure to fund and implement adequate care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 I'd like to give notice that I will be rising at the appropriate time to move that the ordinary business of the Assembly be adjourned to discuss an urgent matter; namely, the failure of the government to take the policy or budgetary steps required to identify the causes and reduce the extraordinary incidence of a variety of health problems, including cancers, among the residents of Fort Chipewyan and area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just so that all members are aware of this, we have two Standing Order 30 applications, we have notice from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to rise on a point of order, and the House wishes to advise that there is going to be another point of order that will come after the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow's point of order.

Hon. members, the chair received a letter from the Official Opposition House Leader on May 3 concerning early consideration of Bill 208 at the Committee of the Whole stage. The Opposition House Leader tabled the letter in the Assembly last Thursday, May 4, as per an invitation from the chair. The Opposition House Leader was also to convey a copy of that letter to other House leaders in the House, and there is nodding there saying that that was done. That letter is recorded as Sessional Paper 476/2006. The request from the Member for Foothills-Rocky View for the early consideration of Bill 208 at the Committee of the Whole stage was tabled by the chair in this Assembly last Wednesday, May 3, and it's recorded as Sessional Paper 469/2006.

Usually a letter from a member to the Speaker is responded to with a letter. However, in this case the chair finds the issue to be so important to members that the chair invites this to be treated as a point of order this afternoon. I repeat: sessional papers 476/2006 and 469/2006, all recorded and delivered last week.

So we will deal with that matter after we deal with the point of order from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, then we will deal with the Standing Order 30 application of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and then the Standing Order 30 application of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Bill 40

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to request leave to introduce Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2006, for first reading.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 40 is simple enabling legislation. This amendment will allow us to implement a new tuition fee policy this fall as promised. The amendment does not contain the policy itself, so I wanted to be clear on that. The new tuition fee policy will flow out of the A Learning Alberta review, which is due and expected very, very soon. The proposed amendment will allow for revisions to the current tuition fee regulation so that new guidelines can be implemented for tuition fee increases among all postsecondary institutions governed by the policy in time for the fall of 2007.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

Bill 41

Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, to request leave to introduce Bill 41, the Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill will establish a primary repository and claims system for the unclaimed or abandoned personal property of Albertans consistent with recommendations by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. It will also establish a clear process for managing and resolving issues relating to property that vests in the Crown when a corporation is dissolved.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that I table letters, but I have quite an accumulation, so I'll dispose of them all in one shot. One is from Mr. Dennis Loughlin. He advises us that there is a proliferated use of foreign licences and that an increased number of Albertans are driving now under foreign licences.

Another one, Mr. Speaker, is from Larry Marcotte, and he's writing relevant to the standards of subsidized housing in our province.

Another one, Mr. Speaker, is from Mr. J.B. Struthers, and he indicates that the Alberta government's decision to have only one licence plate on a vehicle as opposed to two has resulted in a higher cost of law enforcement.

Another one, Mr. Speaker, is from Mr. Marlowe, who is providing us with a summary of minutes from the most recent annual general meeting of Seniors United Now.

Mr. Speaker, another one is written by Ms Deanne Friesen, who is raising some objections relevant to the most recent PDD budget.

The last one, Mr. Speaker, is written by Ms Maria Marrazzo, who is raising some concerns relevant to long-term care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Minister of Energy, do you have some something to table?

Mr. Melchin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table six copies of responses to questions asked by hon. members during the Committee of Supply debate of 2006-07 for the estimates of the Ministry of Energy.

The Speaker: I saw a great number of hands. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a series of tablings today, and I'll be quick. These documents are in regard to questions I asked last Thursday in the Assembly. The first one is the map of the Edmonton transportation and utility corridor.

The second one is a letter dated May 4 in regard to the Report of the Auditor General on Alberta Social Housing Corporation – Land Sale Systems. This is land sales in Fort McMurray. It's directed to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

The third document is the Alberta Government Services land titles office. This is the transfer of land agreement for the Royal Development Corporation's purchase of land in and around the ring road in Edmonton, and this is the land title certificate from that transfer of sale.

This is a document to support my private member's statement today, and it's dated December 10, 1979. It's an interoffice memo, and it's in regard to the purchase of land in the Edmonton greenbelt.

My next tabling is the Alberta Gazette, part 1, from March 31, 2003, indicating the land sold and the purchase price that we talked about in question period earlier.

My last tabling is from the January 31, 2003, Alberta Gazette, part 1. It's also about the sale or disposition of land by the department of infrastructure, and it is regarding my question today earlier.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate copies of five of the many letters I've received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens. These letters voice concerns surrounding continued funding by the province for child care under Alberta's five-point investment plan. The letters I'm tabling today are from David Hwang, Tracy Lee, Robin and Jennifer Clee, Ivonnie Joy Abes, and Wendy Patton and Rob Lutzer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. The first is an individual letter from Derek Jassman of Calgary, writing to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. He is a live-in caregiver for an individual. He's writing in response to the minister's request to keep sending her letters. The points he's raising are that the residential funding of the man who hires him has been cut by 1.9 per cent this year, and the new support home model coming into effect will likely further erode that funding. He makes the point that the supports that he provides on a daily basis are continually being devalued and undermined by decisions made by the government.

The second is similar letters written by individuals regarding funding of adults with developmental disabilities. The funding is not meeting the staff wage increases and making it difficult to hire and retain those staff. These similar letters are sent by Rhonda Fuhr, Robert Webb, Judith Da Silva, Jeff Shuman, Julie Sinner, Carol Rutherford, Tracy O'Reilly, Caroline Berezowski, Erin Buhr, and Anca Daroban.*

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of seven of the letters that I've received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens pressing for continued funding by the province for child care under Alberta's five-point investment plan. They're from Maryn and Claudio Milazzo, Sharlene Claerhout and Ken Boyko, Sebastian and Ellen Maurice, Roberto and Michelle Benzan, Carole and Kevin Broger, Kathleen Fraser and Stacey Radley, and Tracey and John Woo.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of letters to table today. The first is a letter from Ruth Adria, who's with the Elder Advocates of Alberta Society. She's trying to find out definitive information in regard to the process of assessing the care needs of residents in long-term care. She wants to know what instrument is used by the resident care manager to determine residents' care classification levels and how much nursing care time is required for each level.

Next I have a letter from Dick and Susan Burgman, who are parents of a developmentally disabled daughter. They are concerned that despite a massive surplus in the province's budget, a segment of the population is being targeted by shortages in PDD funding.

I also have a letter from Alan Braithwaite. Mr. Braithwaite is a recipient of PDD funding who is concerned that funding shortages will leave him unable to perform his volunteer work at the Food Bank.

Next is a letter from Melody Slobozian, who is saddened that she has to write in support of people with developmental disabilities. She believes that adequate funding should be provided to help such individuals move forward in their lives.

I also have copies of a letter from Colleen Ross. She's worried that her PDD-funded worker will not be able to help her with banking, cooking, shopping, paperwork, and other important activities.

Next is a letter from Marilyn Ogilvie, who is also worried about shortages to PDD funding. She notes that this will cause serious suffering for many people and make it difficult for them to undertake daily activities.

Similarly, I have a letter from Penny Dana-Vogt. She says that any shortages in PDD funding would severely curtail the progress she has been making.

Sandra DeCecco is also concerned about shortages, and she has written a letter, which I am tabling, expressing those concerns.

Next I have a letter from Joyce Lanz, who is the mother of a disabled son whose programs and quality of life are in jeopardy from the shortages in PDD funding.

Two more, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from Stephanie Alexander. Her brother Scot receives PDD funding and will have a diminished quality of life due to shortages in PDD budgets.

Finally, I have a letter from Jeanne Stuart. She is an 84-year-old volunteer at the Food Bank. She notes that many of the disabled people who also volunteer there have a worker to assist. With PDD funding shortfalls the Food Bank may lose those important volunteers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four documents to table today. The first is a news release from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees dated May 4, 2006. In the release the AUPE president notes that the standards announced last week contain “serious flaws.” The key to quality care is sufficient funding to hire appropriate levels of staff.

My second document is a letter from Paul Armstrong of Calgary. Mr. Armstrong is strongly opposed to Bill 208. He feels that the passage will nullify human rights and draw us back to the days of “gay bashing, wife bashing and keeping everyone uneducated and close-minded.”

My third document is an open letter from the Youth Coalition of Canada. They, too, are concerned about Bill 208. They argue that the bill would “allow for hate and prejudice to be protected under the guise of freedom of religion.”

Finally, my last letter is from Canadian Youth for Choice, who are also, not surprisingly, opposed to the passage of Bill 208. The CYC envisions a country with “a universalized standard for sexual and reproductive rights where young people have access to the services and information” that they need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four documents to table today. The first one is a letter that was received in my constituency office last week. It's by Ms Cinnamon Suyal of Edmonton. Ms Suyal expresses grave concerns about Bill 208. She says that it would “protect people's right to discriminate,” and she adds that “there is more than enough discrimination in Alberta at present.”

My second document is from a constituent of Edmonton-Strathcona, Dr. Garrett Epp. Dr. Epp is a professor and chair of the English and film studies department at the University of Alberta. He also expresses a great deal of disapproval of Bill 208. He says, “I am appalled by the very idea of Bill 208.” He says that it should be withdrawn immediately because it's “both misguided and offensive, and an embarrassment to the people of Alberta.”

The third document, Mr. Speaker, is an open letter from Connie Kaldor, James Keelaghan, Mike Robinson, John Russell, and Ian Tyson. These five individuals are urging the government to proceed with announcing the Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kòp park as an integrated wildland and provincial park.

The last document, Mr. Speaker, that I have for tabling today is a news release from the Canadian Union of Public Employees dated May 1, 2006. The release is entitled Federal Budget Won't Help Parents. The CUPE Alberta president notes in the release that “parents need access to child care that is affordable and high quality,” that “the Harper program of handing out a few bucks [a day] won't create a single space anywhere in Canada.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first one is a handwritten letter dated March 30, 2006, with respect to Alberta's health care system from L. Schmode of Red Deer, who blames the Premier and the ruling Conservatives for what ails our system and declares that he no longer supports the Tories.

My second tabling is a copy of a letter sent to the Minister of Health and Wellness dated April 18, 2006, from Ms Rita Calhoun and copied to the Premier, myself, and my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark in which she draws attention to the situation with respect to hospital beds and emergency room overcrowding and the ridiculously long wait times to receive emergency attention or the rushed misdiagnosis in some cases.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings. This afternoon I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence that I received from Dana Stebner, Shaun O'Brien, Leisa Minter, and Lana Zips outlining their significant concerns regarding the lack of sustainable and adequate funding for PDD service providers and those in their care.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a series of 10 petition letters regarding funding for adults with developmental disabilities. The letters are from Carrie Lewis, Chad Webb, Nicole Moncrieff, Colleen Lisitza, Rolette Sudeyko, Brian Reid, Jeanine Schuller, Stephanie Lee, James Johnson, and Mary Binwag*.

My last set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of seven of the many letters I have received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens. These letters voice concerns surrounding continued funding by the province for child care under Alberta's five-point investment plan. The letters I am tabling today come from Zhiwei Shen and Huafeng Li, Margaret Chan and Peter Boyce, Jennifer Speer and Corin Hopkin, Dawn Hoggett, Ralph Kroll and Suzy Moutinho, Saga H., and Jodie Hayden.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, do you have tablings?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a constituent by the name of Gordon Inglis, who writes to express his deep concerns about Bill 208, which is before the House today. He indicates that “a basic feature of a democracy is that minority groups are protected from tyranny by the majority,” and he warns that “history has its lessons.” He's worried that this may be a step toward tyranny.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday evening last myself and a number of members of this Assembly attended the annual general meeting of Edmonton Airports. I'm pleased today to table the appropriate number of copies of their annual report, in which they indicate a very successful year, with a number of new flights added and all passenger records having been broken.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, do you have tablings?

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings here today. I'm tabling a letter from a Lethbridge-East constituent, Eleanor Orser, in which she expresses her displeasure about promises broken to local school boards for third-year funding pertaining to class sizes and that assistants are being cut in kindergartens, where classes are sometimes 20 to 1.

Also, I am tabling 10 petition letters regarding funding for adults with developmental disabilities. Funding must at least meet inflation demands, and it's crucial for the continued progress of these individuals. These letters are signed by Tobias Jeserich, Donna Morneau, Karen Webb, Celena Veltkamp, T. Campeau, D. Allen, Marilyn Borchers, Kristina Mackenzie, Erin Wotherspoon, and Melanie Ellert.

I have 10 further letters regarding funding for adults with developmental disabilities. Proper funding is imperative for proper staffing to ensure a continuity of service and that the care is provided. These letters are signed by Hailey Cramm, Jerilee Jorgensen, S. Hansen, Aref Yosef Abdelhai, Crystal Abbott, R. Robertson, Alice Lau-Kilo, Jynel Christ, Lyndsey Niddrie, and Chelsey Scott.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling nine letters regarding funding for adults with developmental disabilities. These letters are from Susan Swipney*, Valerie Proudfoot, Trueman Macdonald, Danielle van Loenen, Cecelia Johnston, Kim Johnson, G. Gabrielle, Lonnie Tanner, and Erin Stevens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three separate tablings. The first one is from a constituent. It's tabling the Lake Wabamun Derailment: Fate and Persistence of the Spilled Oil, a summary on behalf of my constituent David Doull, who also has property along Wabamun.

The second tabling is from constituents George and Doreen Fedoruk, a letter that states that they wrote the health minister regarding the wonderful care and experience that they encountered while being treated in our current health care system and their strong opposition to the two-tiered health care system.

My third and final tabling is from constituent Sheila Hogan regarding the proposed third-way health care framework and her opposition to the two-tiered system as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, did I miss anyone?

That being the case, I'm also going to table with the House today a chart of private members' public bills requests for early consideration from 1997 to 2006. I'm also going to have the pages circulate a copy to all members as it may become pertinent in the discussion of a matter that we'll be dealing with a few minutes from now.

Okay. We now will proceed with, first of all, a point of order from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Due to overriding scheduling concerns I'm going to withdraw my point of order today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Then we'll deal with a situation that the chair alluded to a little earlier. Just to repeat, the chair did receive a letter from the Official Opposition House Leader on May 3 concerning early consideration of Bill 208 at the Committee of the Whole stage. The Opposition House Leader, as per the request of the Speaker, tabled the letter in the Assembly last Thursday, May 4, and also provided copies to various House leaders. This document is recorded as sessional paper 476/2006. The letter arose out of a request from the Member for Foothills-Rocky View for early consideration of Bill 208 at Committee of the Whole stage, that was tabled by the chair on Wednesday, May 3, and is recorded as sessional paper 469/2006.

I repeat again that I indicated that usually letters to the chair are responded to by the chair directly to the letter writer. However, in this case, because it does deal with a matter of private members' business, the chair found the issue to be significant and would ask that it be treated as a point of order and so alerted the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

If she wishes to participate, please proceed. If not, the chair is prepared to give a ruling on this matter.

Point of Order Private Members' Public Bills

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to bring oral arguments on this particular issue. The Speaker has already outlined the sequence of events, and I won't repeat it. I do note that Standing Order 8(5)(c) sets out that private members' public bills which have passed second reading return to the Assembly for consideration within eight days. That's the rule as it stands. I note that the request letter for early consideration brought forward by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View did not give a reason for the request for early consideration, did not refer to the Standing Orders that it wished to waive, and directed the request directly to the Speaker.

Now, early consideration of Bill 208 in Committee of the Whole would preclude or delay debate on Bill 210, a bill on fixed election dates, sponsored by the Leader of the Official Opposition, which is next in line in the order. As the chair mentioned, this was challenged by me as the opposition House leader. I requested a ruling by the Speaker and asked that the issue of early consideration of private members' public bills be brought to the House by way of a request for unanimous consent to proceed.

I believe there are three issues at play here. One is timing. The second is equality of private members and their business. Finally, the Standing Orders and their position in this House.

On the argument of timing, Mr. Speaker, if we look at the Speaker's ruling from December 1, 2003, which appears in Hansard at page 1968, that dealt with a request to hear early consideration of a private member's public bill. The Speaker refers to this situation only happening in the "dying days of a session." To my determination this request for early consideration has happened exclusively in fall sessions as failure to pass a bill would determine that it died on the Order Paper as at December 31, which is what causes the urgency for the private member. So private members who have a bill which has passed second and they believe there's a level of support for it have tried to get their bills debated and passed before the end of the fall session, which has necessitated the waiving of 8(5)(c) and/or 8(5)(d).

Mr. Speaker, this is the spring session, not the fall session. December 31 is a long way off before anything dies on any Order Paper. There has been no formal indication to this House from the government that there would not be a fall sitting. In recent memory there has always been a fall sitting, including the one in December of 1997, which is regarded somewhat specially as the fall sitting focused exclusively on the debate on Canadian unity. But there was a Routine that was held every day. Question period was held. It was a full sitting. I note that the Government House Leader of the day sought unanimous consent from the members of the Assembly to set aside certain Standing Orders for the duration of that fall sitting.

Mr. Speaker, on the issue of timing, we're in the spring sitting of the Second Session of the 26th Legislature; therefore, any argument that the Member for Foothills-Rocky View's Bill 208 would die on the Order Paper if not given early consideration, I argue, is unsubstantiated.

3:30

The issue of equality of private members and private members' business. Thus far all private members, and that's including all members of the opposition parties, the independent members, and members of government caucus not holding cabinet posts, have been subject equally to the same rules and processes. This has been noted repeatedly by the Speaker; for example, March 22, 2004, page 617 of Hansard.

My request in the spring of 2005 when we were looking at new Standing Orders and OQP rotation on March 8, 2005, Hansard pages 90 to 91, to exclude government members from asking questions in QP as they had a different status and different access to ministers than did members of the opposition failed for exactly this argument. The Speaker upheld the equality of all private members. No one kind of private members' business trumps or is superior to any other kind of private members' business.

Arguments were made at one time when a large number of written questions and motions for returns were taking up most or all of private members' day. There was an argument that a limit should be placed on one kind of private members' business to allow for a different kind of private members' business to proceed. That argument failed. Only with unanimous consent of the Assembly was the contemplation of one kind of business adjourned to allow for debate on a different kind of private members' business, and that reference is March 22, 2004.

Finally, the Standing Orders. These are the rules by which we govern ourselves and how we understand the business to proceed. Although we often share certain similarities of processes with others, each Standing Order is unique to their particular jurisdiction and develops along those lines. Our Standing Orders set out the timing of when a private member's bill has passed second, when they then come forward to debate in Committee of the Whole, and further in third.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that there are consequences for allowing every request for early consideration. Not every request can be accommodated without some check in place. Otherwise, if every request gets approval to move ahead, we've created chaos, and I think that it makes a mockery of the process to establish the order in the first place.

There's a second argument that the current practice of writing to the Speaker to get early consideration flies in the face of the specific and thorough process of establishing the order of private members' public bills and, further to that, the detailed process which must be followed to switch the order of members in private members' public bills. I'm referring to Standing Order 68.1. Why would we bother laying out such a specific process on how to establish the order and then how to switch the order of members if all one needs to do is ask the Speaker to allow someone to queue-jump over another member, using early consideration of bills at a particular stage? It has the consequence of one member getting their bill past all stages while another member does not get their bill on the floor.

In this case Bill 208 would have received debate in both second and committee before Bill 210, the next bill in line and the bill sponsored by the Leader of the Official Opposition on fixed election dates, gets any debate. It makes Bill 208 more important than Bill 210.

We would like to see Bill 210 get some second reading debate today in part because there's a symposium for democratic renewal coming at the end of the week and a postponement would mean that the content of the bill and the debate could not be considered as any part of the discussion at the symposium.

I note Marleau and Montpetit, page 911, where members wish their business to move position. This is talking about an elaborate federal switching scheme. I note that where they wish their business to move position, a process is outlined for the Speaker to follow. Importantly, it requires that the Speaker may only do so with the permission of all members involved and all those who would be affected. I think that's a very important point.

In Alberta the precedent seems to be that simply by virtue of the request being made, the exception is granted. It's unclear who is giving the permission. It appears to be the Speaker, but I argue that it should be the House. The formal process is set out in the Standing Orders, and therefore any waiving or exceptions or modifications of the Standing Orders should be permitted by members of this Assembly. They are our Standing Orders.

The current Speaker and former Speakers have noted the anomaly of this particular request for early consideration and have requested House leaders and others to propose changes to the process. One example appears in Hansard, December 1, 2003, on page 1968.

There are other examples that I can think of where exceptions to Standing Orders come to the House for unanimous consent to proceed. For example, a very common one almost every day is reverting to Introduction of Guests. That's waiving Standing Order 7(1), where the order of the business is set out. That activity takes place at a certain time. The consent allows it to happen at a different time. Second example: where the Speaker seeks the guidance and agreement of the House in allowing the leader of the third party to respond to ministerial statements. A third one: the House's agreement to allow a temporary change, for example, shortening the division bells in second or third, which is Standing Order 32(2). Even recently, on April 26, 2006, page 1087, a member of this House asked permission to extend his speaking time, waiving the Standing Order for speaking time.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that Bill 208 does not meet the test of timing in that we are still in spring session. The urgency to see the bill through all stages quickly does not apply as we still anticipate that there's time in the fall session. There is no valid reason for one private member's public bill to queue-jump over another private member's public bill, all private members being equal, a principle that has been underlined repeatedly by this Speaker. Waiving the Standing Orders does, in every other case I could find, require the matter to be brought before the Assembly and permission to proceed sought from the members through unanimous consent. I would ask that the request for early consideration of Bill 208, sponsored by the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, receive the same treatment and be brought to the floor for unanimous consent to proceed for early consideration of Committee of the Whole.

Thank you very much for allowing me to present those oral arguments. I look forward to the Speaker's ruling.

The Speaker: Are there other participants? The hon. third party House leader.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not take a great deal of time. It seems to me that this is a very dangerous precedent. I believe that the only direction is found in Standing Order 9, I think, which states that private members' public bills shall be taken up in order of precedence in order to maintain some certainty. That can mean almost anything.

It seems to me, though, that as private members we're all supposed to be treated absolutely equally here. There's a random draw that goes in. Obviously, we were the big losers this year, but it's fair. It's a random draw. It doesn't matter who comes up for it, whether it's government or opposition to debate those bills. It seems now that this, to me, is a form of getting around this particular bill because, obviously, early consideration is only going to happen when the government members decide that it's going to happen because they have the numbers.

It's not going to happen – I think back to one from the Member for Lethbridge-East, a very important bill, that couldn't pass second reading. So it's very hard to pass second reading. In other words, I'm saying that there'll be two types of private members' bills: those that are on the government's side, if the government wants them to proceed, and the rest of us will never have them proceed.

I suggest that early consideration like this is unfair because it's only going to be a government member that's going to be able to do this, Mr. Speaker. Here's an important bill coming up from the Leader of the Opposition that should be debated here today. By the fact that the government seems to think that they have the numbers and they can jump the queue, this one would not be debated. Whether there'll be a fall session or not, we're not sure.

I suggest that this whole early consideration could be a fairly serious loophole in terms of the purpose of private members' bills. Perhaps it wasn't meant to be that way, but I think it's becoming that way. So, Mr. Speaker, I really would suggest that you rule and take a look at this because it does have major implications. What's to say, then, that they couldn't get early consideration over almost every bill if there were some opposition bills coming along that they didn't want? I suggest that that would defeat the whole purpose of private members' days. Private members are private members; our bills should all be treated equally. I would suggest that by being able to jump the queue like this, they're not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Other participants? There's nobody from the government? Government House Leader? Deputy Government House Leader?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, the last speaker then.

3:40

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I promise to be very brief. The two speakers ahead of me actually mentioned most of those arguments. I just wanted to quote from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, 371(3), that says:

The successive stages of bills are Orders of the Day since the House at each stage makes an Order and appoints a date for the consideration of the next stage, and without such Order, the bill cannot be further advanced.

The issue here today, as was mentioned, is not whether the bill appears on the Order Paper for continuance or consideration in the House on a subsequent date. The question is whether a favour is extended to advance a certain bill at the expense of others when no valid reasoning or strong arguments were made to allow it to be expedited or aggressively forwarded. Now, if this is a decision to be made on an exception to the operating rules of this Assembly, by which we all operate and to which we all adhere, I would argue and urge that this then would become a matter to be decided by the Assembly as a whole, and by that I advocate that unanimous consent be sought.

Also, in Beauchesne 18(1) it says:

Within the ambit of its own rules, the House itself may proceed as it chooses; it is a common practice for the House to ignore its own rules by unanimous consent. Thus, bills may be passed through all their stages in one day, or the House may decide to alter its normal order of business or its adjournment hour as it sees fit.

Then 18(2) says:

The House is perfectly able to give consent to set aside its Standing Orders and to give its unanimous consent to waive procedural requirements and precedents concerning notice and things of that sort.

So the members of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, can certainly come to a decision whether or not they are prepared to suspend, interrupt, or amend the regular and agreed upon order of business.

I humbly submit that should this matter receive any degree of attention from the Speaker, the question be put as a motion by the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View requesting unanimous consent from everyone in this Assembly. I noted with interest the list of private members' public bills requesting early consideration, that was circulated earlier, for the years 1997 to 2006. I couldn't help but notice that all of them were from private government members. So I couldn't help but think: what would the situation be if this request or this proposal was made by an opposition member? It was mentioned that we all enter into a random draw for private bills and private motions. I don't think that the hon. sponsor of Bill 208 presented such a formidable argument as to the urgency or weight of his request against others that are being discussed here.

With that, I'll take my chair, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is no precedent for this outside of this House. This process that we have here in the province of Alberta dealing with private members' bills is found nowhere else in any parliament that follows the British parliamentary system of government. When the Standing Orders of this House were revised in 1993, the most major significant revisions going back to 1905, there were 85-plus revisions.

One of the Standing Order changes had to do with private members' bills. The assumption made by the hon. members at that time, as I recall, was a unanimous decision of the House. I had the privilege of being the Government House Leader who dealt with the Opposition House Leader—his name was Grant Mitchell—and came up with a package, and everybody agreed to them. The purpose was to actually give some meat to private members' bills.

Let me go on. I want to be very clear that this subject of private members' business is treated very, very seriously, but I also want to make sure that all members know the rules as it is something that affects each and every private member. First, I'd like to start with a review of the rules.

Standing Order 8(5)(c) does not say, as the Opposition House Leader suggests in her letter, that a private member's public bill can come up for consideration no earlier than eight sitting days after it receives second reading.

In fact, it is quite the opposite. The section states that "a public Bill other than a Government Bill shall be called in Committee of the Whole within eight sitting days of the day the Bill receives second reading." Accordingly, the bill may be called in committee earlier than eight sitting days after it receives second reading. This distinction is important because the Opposition House Leader suggests in her May 3 letter that the Member for Foothills-Rocky View is asking to waive Standing Order 8(5)(c). He is doing no such thing, and there is no such request in his letter of May 3. His letter asks for early consideration of the bill at committee stage, which, as the chair will explain, is in accordance with the procedure that has been followed.

The Speaker's role in determining the order of business for private members' bills stems from Standing Order 9(1), which states that "all items standing on the Order Paper, except Government Bills and Orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the Order Paper." The issue for the chair is to determine how to interpret "precedence assigned to each."

Members should know that this issue precedes this Speaker. In his February 11, 1997, ruling Speaker Schumacher outlined a procedure whereby members could request early consideration of their bills. The ruling is found at page 16 of the Journals for that date. As the chair believes this is such an important issue, he will repeat part of that ruling.

3. If a Member wants his or her Bill to be considered before the due date, then that Member must make a written request to the Speaker prior to the opening of the House the day before the Member wants the Bill to be considered. For example, if a Member wants a Bill to be considered on a Wednesday . . .

Remember that at the time the ruling was given, private members' business was considered on Tuesdays and Thursdays. That's the reason for: if a member wants a bill to be considered on a Wednesday.

... the letter must be received by the Speaker before the opening of the House on Tuesday on which day the Chair will table the letter;

4. When a Member requests that his or her Bill be considered before its due date, the Bill will be called after debate has concluded on the Private Members' Public Bill that is then before the House or Committee of the Whole assuming that no other Bills have reached their due dates.

Hon. members, this is the procedure by which this Assembly has operated for almost 10 years. There is nothing new here. It's been in existence for 10 years.

We've done some research, and I've had some research conducted on this subject, and we've found that since this 1997 ruling there have been 32 requests for early consideration, not including the one from the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, and I've provided a copy of all of those. Nor does the list contain the request by the Member for Red Deer-North on April 14, 2005, to have her Bill 202 considered at committee stage and third reading stage. The absence of Bill 202 from the list is because the hon. member was requesting that the Assembly consider Bill 202 on a Thursday rather than during the time allotted for private members' public bills on Mondays. To have it considered on a Thursday required unanimous consent, which was granted for both stages.

This chair has commented on this system for considering private members' public bills previously. For instance, on December 1, 2003, at page 1968 of Hansard for that day, this chair noted that there were requests for early consideration of bills that might work a hardship on the member who was sponsoring Bill 209 at second reading. The chair noted the procedure for early consideration but stated:

In an effort to ensure that the system is fair and equitable to all members, the chair would welcome suggestions by members and their House leaders over the winter on this issue of early consideration of private members' public bills so that a procedural policy could be put in place for the spring 2004 session, one that would be very clear at the initiation of the session.

It's May – what? – today. No recommendations have since been received, and no changes were suggested to the chair despite the chair's invitation. So the chair today would like to renew the invitation.

In keeping with the established practice, the order of business for private members' public bills today will be Bill 207 in committee as it has reached its due date, followed by Bill 208 in committee pursuant to the sponsor's May 3 request, followed by second reading debate on Bill 210. The chair hopes that this clarifies matters and will look forward to receiving unanimous recommendations from the House leaders with respect to this matter so that we might go forward.

head: 3:50 Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on a Standing Order 30 application.

Continuing Care

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising pursuant to Standing Order 30 to request an emergency debate. The motion I submitted to your office this morning reads as follows:

In accordance with Standing Order 30 be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, that the government's refusal to fully fund and implement the recommendations made by the Auditor General in his May 2005 report on long-term care and the November 2005 report of the MLA task force puts seniors and other continuing care residents in jeopardy.

I'll be brief in my arguments regarding the motion. First, under Standing Order 30(7) debate "must relate to a genuine emergency." Mr. Speaker, I think that for the countless residents of continuing care centres there is no question that there is an emergency. I'm sure that all the members here have heard the story of 81-year-old Bill Mason this weekend. Mr. Mason's family was dismayed to find that his bandaged feet had apparently been rotting due to complications from diabetes. This is just the latest in a series of allegations of poor treatment in long-term care and continuing care facilities in Alberta. Of course, it is too soon to say who is at fault in this instance, but the point remains that many Albertans are suffering because appropriate standards have not been introduced.

I challenge members in this Assembly to stand and tell us that such suffering is not an emergency. Explain to us why we should sit idly by while these people's health deteriorates. I think their families would also be interested in hearing why this government would like to continue dragging its feet on this issue. In terms of urgency, Mr. Speaker, I would remind members that tomorrow is the one-year anniversary of the release of the Auditor General's special report on this matter – one year – and one year for many of these people in a very vulnerable situation is a lifetime.

At the time of the release there were many crocodile tears shed and many promises that the situation would be immediately remedied, that relief would be offered. The Minister of Health and Wellness even speculated at the time that $250 million would be needed to implement the recommendations, and she would immediately begin to work at getting those funds and proper standards in place. Almost a year for standards that have already been condemned by seniors' advocates and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees is simply not good enough. We cannot wait another day to discuss this matter and hold both the Minister of Health and Wellness and the minister for seniors accountable. As an Assembly we need to debate steps that can be taken immediately.

I would like to point out that the other conditions for allowing a debate in this matter as they are laid out in Standing Order 30(7) have also been met. I have spoken to (a), that the matter must be "a genuine emergency," and I think we can agree that relieving ongoing suffering is an issue of immediate concern. In (b) it says that not more than one motion shall be dealt with on a particular day. I know that there have been a couple of other motions, at least one other today, but none of them have been dealt with yet. In (c) it notes that only one matter may be dealt with on the same motion. I think that this condition has clearly been met. We want to discuss standards for continuing care. It's very simple. In (d) it urges that the motion should not revive a previous discussion of such a motion. I don't believe such a motion has been brought before the House in this matter in this session, Mr. Speaker.

Further, we haven't had and are not likely to have any other opportunity to thoroughly discuss this matter. The proposed standards were quietly announced last week. There was an Auditor General's report last year, as I mentioned, and an MLA task force report earlier this year, but this is the first time we have been able to discuss specific proposals from the government. In fact, I would point out that debate on the two relevant ministries' budget estimates, which would have been an excellent time to discuss this, has already passed.

Now, the ministers knew that we would be debating estimates, and they knew that these standards are urgently important. The point is that we finally have concrete standards, insufficient though they are, but no piece of legislation and no budget to debate. I cannot see any other way to deal with this matter than for you to rule in favour of the motion's urgency and put the question to the Assembly as to whether we ought to hold the debate. Mr. Speaker, a year from now is not good enough. A year for some of these people in very vulnerable situations is their lifetime, and I would suggest that for that reason this is an emergency.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 30 provisions the chair can allow certain participants. Could I have some idea as to how many hon. members would like to participate under Standing Order 30? Well, I think we're going to have to perhaps limit it to two from each grouping, then, if that's the case.

Opposition House Leader, proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to support my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in his Standing Order 30 motion. He has laid out the arguments about urgent importance, which appears as Beauchesne 387 and, I would also add, Marleau and Montpetit 584, which is requiring urgent consideration. I think that in this instance it is an emergency because the health and safety of seniors continues to be in peril. Just Friday there was another allegation of neglect at another Edmonton continuing care facility. So this is not on hold by any means.

The standards that were released by the government on May 3 have no monitoring or compliance provisions in them that are enforceable at this point, so they offer no immediate solution to and are inadequate to protect the seniors that we have in care. According to what the government laid out at the time, there is no legislation coming forward on this particular issue that might give some weight to that monitoring and enforcement of compliance until a year from now, in 2007.

This session is coming to an end sometime in the next few weeks or a month or so. I do not see any bills on the Order Paper or any notice of bills that could address this issue. We do not appear to have any other opportunity for immediate resolution. The motions other than government motions deadline passed a couple of weeks before we started this spring session, so the ability of private members to bring a motion forward on this subject has passed.

This particular issue around the standards has come up since we came into session. The issue is indeed within the administrative competence of government. It is not currently before the courts in the form in which we are debating it at the moment. There is no other reasonable opportunity for debate. Questions in question period are not giving us the length of time and the depth of discussion to pursue it. We believe, following on Beauchesne 388, that it is pressing enough that the public interest will suffer if it is not addressed, and because of the recurring episodes the requirement under Beauchesne 389 of a genuine emergency – we believe that test has been met.

This, I would argue, is not a chronic condition. It is a resolvable one. So the cautions that are found in Marleau and Montpetit 585 I believe do not pertain specifically to this issue.

I appreciate the opportunity to add those arguments in support of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's Standing Order 30 application. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, we're dealing with arguments under Standing Order 30 dealing with urgency, not the subject.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to that urgency, about this motion pursuant to Standing Order 30 that was brought forward this afternoon because I do believe, too, that it's an important issue. We are making progress and I'd like you to know that. I don't believe that this is an urgent matter that requires the adjournment of our ordinary Assembly business.

As you know as well, Mr. Speaker, I've spoken in the Assembly before about the number of facilities that we have in long-term care. There are 200 continuing care facilities, around 400 supportive living facilities, including lodges and designated assisted living facilities, and when you consider the entire continuing care system, it provides care and support to around 100,000 Albertans.

It was just this past Wednesday that we took a significant step forward, I believe, by implementing new standards for health and accommodation services in continuing care. Given that announcement last week and the significant new funding that has been invested within the past three months, Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned that this motion suggests that there's a crisis in the continuing care system that is not being addressed, and that clearly is not the case.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that we've mentioned before the dollars. That's very much what this motion is about: funding and the implementation of these standards that we just announced on Wednesday. Both ministries, Health and Wellness and my ministry, committed $36 million originally, and that's significant funding. Also, in estimates we've brought forward an amount of funding which was another $72 million added to that, funding which is in place to address this motion that's before you, and we have appropriations coming forward once again.

To talk about these standards, the implementation of the standards we have for the accommodation side in our area . . .

The Speaker: With all due respect, please. The debate this afternoon is about the urgency; it's not the subject. The subject could be anything. The question now is: why should we abrogate the Routine for the rest of the afternoon to discuss this matter? The subject could be anything. We're on Standing Order 30.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the subject could be anything, but I guess that it's just near and dear to my heart, and I know that we have met what this Standing Order 30 is about regarding the funding and the standards. We've met the funding, and we have implemented the standards. The standards that were implemented in my ministry will cover entirely the whole system of care.

The Speaker: I indicated that there would be three. Would there be additional members who would like to participate? Three. Is that enough then? I'm going to give fairness here.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on the Standing Order 30. This is not the subject of this. It's the urgency of the matter.

Mr. Prins: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to address this motion. I believe also that an emergency debate on continuing care is not necessary today.

The hon. member from Calgary and myself co-chaired the task force last year. We dealt with a number of these issues. Many issues came up, but one of them was staffing. There was always the concern that there was not enough staff in these facilities, and one of our recommendations was to immediately increase the level of staffing. This has been done. In February Health and Wellness dedicated over $15 million to health authorities to reach 3.4 hours of personal care per day, so this is being dealt with. This year's budget saw much more money allocated to increase hours as well as to increase numbers of therapy and activity program staff. All in all, Mr. Speaker, care hours for continuing care residents have increased by 20 per cent since 2004, so there is much work being done.

Training was also an issue that was raised by Albertans as the task force did its work. Health care aides provide a large amount of the care to residents, and it is essential that they not only have the compassion but the technical training needed to help ensure a high quality of care for residents. So the hon. minister has informed me that her department . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. That's the speech you would give if, in fact, the House agreed to have the debate. We're still dealing with the question: should we have the debate? Anybody else want to deal with that matter?

Okay. Last speaker then.

Mr. Mason: Fair enough, Mr. Speaker. I wish to address the question of the urgency of this debate, and it's connected, I'm afraid, with what the government has done or, rather, what the government has not done. The government did promise a year ago to implement all of the standards recommended by the Auditor General, who took a very thorough and careful look at this question and came forward with what we thought were very, very adequate recommendations. The government's announcements, even the ones recently as they approach the one-year anniversary, have fallen short of what the Auditor General has called for.

The Speaker: Again, with all due respect, please. It's the same argument that I have addressed to the previous two speakers. We're dealing with the urgency, setting aside the time this afternoon. The issue, as I repeat, can be anything. Okay? So don't even mention the issue.

Mr. Mason: Okay. I promise.

Mr. Speaker, the urgency relates to the conditions under which people are living right now which may affect their health and their very life. That is why it is urgent. That is why the failure to implement, for example, the specific unannounced, outside, independent investigation by people qualified to do so of nursing homes and other long-term care facilities is extremely urgent. If it doesn't happen, we don't know whether or not the conditions have changed, and if we don't know that, people may die. In fact, there are cases where people have died because they have not been properly cared for in our institutions. Therefore, it is of the utmost urgency that we debate this question. Had the government fully implemented all of the recommendations of the Auditor General, I do not believe it would be urgent, but they didn't, so it is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you very much. It is not the subject that's the urgency. The urgency is whether or not there's another opportunity in the House to discuss the matter. That's what the urgency is, not the subject. The subject can be anything. Does this House have another opportunity to raise any matter associated with the subject at hand? If, in fact, there was agreement that there was no other opportunity, then a decision would be made, and the whole agenda would in essence be done away with.

I'm going to repeat again that the relevant parliamentary authorities on the topic of emergency debates are Beauchesne's, paragraphs 387 to 398 – I'm sure all speakers who participated had Beauchesne in front of them – and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, pages 587, 589. The chair has reviewed these references closely in considering this request for leave and must emphasize to all members that to meet the requirements for urgency – again I repeat – there must not be another opportunity for the members of the Assembly to discuss the matter. To be very specific, again, paragraph 390 in Beauchesne's, and page 589 in House of Commons Procedure and Practice.

Just a few days ago in this Assembly the chair ruled a request for an emergency debate out of order and at the time noted for all members that although the estimates of the relevant department had already been voted upon, there appeared another opportunity for debate when the appropriation bill for the budgets for all ministries and departments would come before the House for consideration. That same principle applies today with respect to this application. The chair has no idea, no knowing how long this session is going to go on. The chair has no idea, no knowing many bills will be forthcoming or not forthcoming. The chair does know that no budget can be approved without appropriation bills. The chair has scheduled his schedule to mid-July in anticipation that there are going to be one or two more question periods and one or two more other things.

I don't want to detract at all from the importance of the issue. Please. That's not the question at stake here, and I repeat it again and again and again because 83 members all have their own important issues. The question about urgency has to do with opportunity for members to discuss the matter, not the subject. Sorry. The request for leave is not in order.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in making his statement quoted something from Standing Orders. He basically said that Standing Order 30(7)(b) says that "not more than one . . . motion may be proceeded with on the same day" in anticipation that no other subject could be discussed. The fact of the matter is that to this point in time no motion has been proceeded with as of yet.

head: 4:10 Request for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to proceed with her motion.

Health Issues in Fort Chipewyan

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Urgency. I have put forward a motion, which has been circulated, that under Standing Order 30 we adjourn the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly to discuss an important matter, which is the failure of the government to take the policy or budgetary steps required to identify the causes and reduce the extraordinary incidence of a variety of health problems, including cancers, among the residents of Fort Chipewyan and area.

There is certainly a question under the public interest provisions that appear in Beauchesne 388 in support of adjourning this business to talk about this. What we have here is a medical examiner in a community who is noting that residents are experiencing a very high disease rate, and there are a number of illnesses that have been diagnosed in this particular quite small community, 1,200 people. Now, there was a report released in 1999 recommending more monitoring, but there's been very little action taken on that. The minister today, in speaking in response to a question from the Leader of the Official Opposition on this issue, had noted that her actions since 1999 had been speaking to CBC in a radio interview on this particular subject.

We do have Dr. O'Connor, who is the medical officer in that community, requesting an investigation by Health Canada, and no response has been received, Mr. Speaker. None of the cancer funding that was announced this year was targeted toward that particular issue. These issues are why it's urgent and why it's of public interest. Nothing else has fallen into place to protect people.

We've had a cut in the aboriginal health strategies. The minister said that really this was federal funding, and we weren't going to prop it up anymore. The point of the matter is that funding was withdrawn from a community that was suffering some severe health problems.

We have tried to get to the bottom of this question in question period, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it was our number one question today, which tells you the importance at which we place it. But a 45-second exchange is, frankly, not enough to delve into the issues that are before us.

I note that the debate on the Department of Health and Wellness and on Environment have both taken place, and the opportunity for us to bring this issue forward in another venue such as motions other than government motions or private members' public bills: those deadlines have both passed for us. We have tried through question period to get resolution, unsatisfactorily. Those options for us to pursue this matter have passed or were not able to be successful.

I agree with the Speaker that there is no end in sight for the session, and there may well be other opportunities but not through any of the forums that I have examined. The written questions and motions for returns deadlines at this point, if submitted, would not be coming forward to the floor for another three weeks, given the timing of that particular process. That puts us three weeks off, and we have people with cancer being diagnosed almost on a weekly basis.

I argue that according to Beauchesne 387 it does require urgent consideration given these substantial health issues. It is within the administrative competence of this government. They do provide funding. They're certainly responsible for water quality and other associated issues with this issue; therefore, it is within their administrative competence. The issue is not before the courts at the moment, Mr. Speaker. As I've argued, no other reasonable opportunity for a debate.

It, I think, could be argued under Beauchesne 389 as a genuine emergency, but also argued under Marleau and Montpetit 585 that it is "immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation." Further under M and M 585 I don't believe that this could be put in the same category as a chronic issue such as a constitutional matter, which is one of the definers that is given to us in M and M.

With that, I believe that we have met the test on urgency and opportunity to find other ways to debate this particular issue. We are seeing immense concern in the community around a lack of opportunity to take substantive steps to address this. I ask that the Speaker find in favour of our Standing Order 30 application.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak to the issue of urgency, as you have so often reminded us in this House, and not to the issue. I say that because to summon urgency that would otherwise require the House to adjourn all other business before it would suggest that there is no other opportunity in the foreseeable future to address this issue, and that's simply not the case. I can confirm to the House that we are not expecting the House to adjourn today, nor are we expecting the House to adjourn tomorrow, nor are we expecting the House to adjourn, for that matter, any time this week and, perhaps, not even next week. Who knows? We don't know. But it's not going to be in the next few days for sure. That having been said, there will be additional opportunities forthcoming very quickly on the two main points that this Standing Order 30 suggests: one dealing with policy and the other dealing with budgetary steps.

Now, on the issue of policy there will be presumably several question periods. Opposition and other members may wish to use that opportunity to ask the appropriate minister what the policies are and what steps are in motion. For example, today the hon. minister of health did indicate in response to the question that many things are happening, including, Mr. Speaker, the fact that Alberta Health and Wellness in collaboration with representatives from Health Canada, the Alberta Cancer Board, First Nations, and other stakeholders is already investigating these claims that cancer and other disease rates may be higher in the Fort Chipewyan area as compared with other parts of the province. So it's not as if nothing is being done, and I'd like the House to have some comfort on that.

Secondly, with respect to urgency as it applies to the budgetary aspect, there will be, of course, an appropriation bill brought in as soon as the budget estimates are concluded later this week, and I would suggest that probably that appropriation bill will come in sometime next week, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, it will go through all three proper stages, including the Committee of the Whole stage, and there will be ample opportunity to address both the budgetary aspect as it relates to the Health and Wellness department or to any other department of government and also some of the policies that back that up. So there will be those opportunities. There's also private members' statement time at which point other points could be raised.

So I would submit that there are at least those additional opportunities during which time this issue can well be brought up and can be appropriately brought up and responded to and addressed by the government. On that basis, I would ask that the chair consider those points as it rules on whether or not this does constitute urgency or not.

The Speaker: The chair will hear one additional argument, though, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I would be interested in speaking strictly to the urgency of this matter. I think that we have a situation where it's a combination of the circumstances weighing in with a factor of the timeliness of this. Considering how cancer and some of these very rare diseases develop and how they come from contact to fruition, combined somehow with the limited time that we have to specifically deal with this circumstance, compels me to suggest that my hon. colleague's motion that the failure of the government to take policy or budgetary steps to identify the causes to reduce the extraordinary incidence of a variety of health problems in the Fort Chip area would suggest that we do in fact have some reasonable grounds for urgent debate.

The two areas that I would like to cite and provide some illumination in regard to this specific matter first come from Beauchesne's 387. Beauchesne's 387 specifically deals with the lack of any other opportunity to deal with a specific circumstance. My research and understanding of what lies before us, even if we are in fact booking into July for this spring session, is the fact that the most relevant ministries' budgets have been debated and passed already, Health being one and Environment being the other. As well, the idea or the concept that the hon. House leader opposite brought forward that we could perhaps deal with this in question period – it seems to me that the question period format that we have is more for very specific issues and for later consideration, while urgent issues can otherwise pass by with great speed.

As I said, the other factor that we have here is the contact and the development of these various diseases, which is an ongoing issue. Certainly, I note that John O'Connor, the medical examiner for Fort Chipewyan, was suggesting that some of these diseases that he was identifying as relatively regular occurrences up there were things that he would not expect to see as a physician more than once in his entire lifetime. So seeing four or five or six of these in a population of 1,200 or less, at least compels us, I think, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that there is an extraordinary circumstance going on there. If I use the case of asbestosis as an example, you don't see any visible effects of that particular carcinogenic contact until 30 years after the contact. So if we're starting to see a flowering or a blooming or a blossoming of these various fatal cancers, then I should expect that, you know, that in itself constitutes an emergency to some degree.

The other circumstances for opportunities that we have here in this House to deal with this include written questions, but my understanding of the written questions system, as we use it here, is that we have the deadline and then the time that expires between that time. I could see us not being able to really deal with this effectively for at least three weeks, perhaps a month, which again would put us into sometime where it would be less clear if we were still sitting here.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the other circumstance that I would bring up in no uncertain terms is Beauchesne 389, which does speak about a genuine emergency. Again, I would suggest that people dying in a concentrated form around cancer cases would in fact constitute a genuine emergency that we could deal with almost immediately. Considering that Bill 1 was our flagship bill that we brought forward here this spring, I think we have a circumstance here that is tragic but also provides a lot of scientific opportunity, and I think that we must act upon it immediately.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you very much.

Nobody mentioned – I have no idea why. When I look at the Order Paper, Votes and Proceedings – this is actually a pretty good document. We have this process on Thursdays where the Opposition House Leader stands up and is given the right to ask a question of the Government House Leader as to what the agenda will be for the next week. This whole subject is about urgency and opportunity or lack thereof to participate in something. I look on page 8 of Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, May 4; Wednesday, May 10, main estimates, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Now, as far as I understand, Fort Chipewyan is in northern Alberta, and most – not all – of the people who live there are aboriginal. It seems to me that if we were to approve today to deal with this special motion, we'd have one hour and five minutes. This estimate on Wednesday was designated by the Official Opposition. That's another privilege given to look ahead. You can spend two whole hours on this subject matter.

So once again we go back to the urgency and the opportunity, and that's only one of the opportunities. Other opportunities have been mentioned. Again, I am not minimizing the subject matter, and please don't anybody interpret that because that's not what the rules are. Sometimes when you're a referee, you have to, you know, take it from the big guys too. In this case the chair is not going to put the question because he does not believe the request for leave is in order.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, proper notice having been given on Thursday, May 4, I am pleased to now move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

[Motion carried]

Alberta Sport Plan

Q16. Mr. R. Miller moved on behalf of Mr. Agnihotri that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, 2003-2004, and 2004-2005 what measures has the Ministry of Community Development taken to meet the funding challenges associated with supporting provincial sports and recreational programs as detailed by the Alberta Sport Plan Task Force in their report A New Century for Amateur Sport: From Participation to Excellence?

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is very clearly a very important issue for the Alberta sport and recreation community. They're very concerned that to this point the government has not implemented – and they're worried may not implement at all – the Alberta sport plan recommendations. They've been waiting patiently now for a few years. They really do, it would be my submission, deserve an answer to this question.

We continue to hear from members opposite how health care costs are unmanageable in this province, and if that were true and they really wanted to put their money where their mouth is, what better way than to do even more? I'm not going to suggest that the Health and Wellness minister is doing nothing to promote health and wellness. In fact, she participated in a five-kilometre walk yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that supported the Kids Help Phone. So, certainly, I think we have an example of a minister who is walking the talk, but as a government I would submit that there's a lot more that they could be doing in terms of supporting health and wellness in the area of sport and recreation.

Now, the last thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister prior to the current minister had assured Albertans that the Alberta sport plan was in fact on its way. As I say, Albertans in general and particularly those involved in the sport and recreation community are still waiting for a more concrete answer. They are wondering, in fact, when they will see action on this issue.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the answer from the minister on Written Question 16.

The Speaker: Maybe we should hear what the government wants to do with the question first. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Community Development I'd like to speak to Written Question 16. It asks what measures the Ministry of Community Development has taken to meet the funding challenges associated with supporting provincial sports and recreation programs as detailed by the Alberta Sport Plan Task Force report. It asks for information for each of the years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, 2003-2004, and 2004-2005. I will say now that this government has worked hard to make sport and recreation funding a priority. We're aware of its social, health, and economic benefits and do as much as we can to support Albertans who want to be active and involved in sports as well as the associations that provide programs in all of our communities.

So why the sport plan? It's as a result of three factors. The federal government developed a Canadian sport policy. It was felt that a provincial policy should complement it. Alberta's last sport plan was developed in the 1980s. It was time to renew it, and the sport community was looking for a vision of where sport was going in the future and requested that a revised plan be developed. These factors led to the creation of the nine-member Alberta Sport Plan Task Force supported by an advisory committee in 2000. The task force drafted a document that identified new strategies for sport development in the province. Their document, A New Century for Amateur Sport: From Participation to Excellence, is commonly referred to as the Alberta sport plan.

We're recognized in Alberta as world leaders in many different ways. The Minister of Community Development wants Alberta to be recognized as a world leader in sport and recreation. He wants Alberta to be the healthiest and most active population. The Alberta sport plan is one piece to the puzzle that will allow all of this to happen.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to accept Written Question 16, which will detail what action the Ministry of Community Development has taken since 2001-2002 to address the needs of Alberta's sport and recreation community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was prepared to argue vigorously to have the government accept this, and I'm very pleased to hear that they have because we do seem to have a dilemma around our support and funding for amateur sports in this province. As the previous critic for Community Development and the current critic for Health and Wellness, in which I see these things all start to come together, I'm recognizing that the government needs to take a substantial role here.

When we look at the report – and it appears in the Legislature Library here; anyone can get a copy because I just did – it has a detailed sports plan which includes things like the benefits of sport, linking the current experience with identified areas of emphasis, and then goes through those areas of emphasis for things like participation, excellence, leadership and volunteer development, sport marketing and communications, business, facilities, funding, ethics in sport, safe environment, research and development, et cetera, and then again gives a number of actions that they are suggesting.

Part of our frustration here is that although the government keeps saying that it wants Albertans to be more active and there has been a mandated but, again, unsupported direction for educational institutions to be providing 30 hours of physical activity a month, we're not seeing that support permeate through the rest of our society, so anyone not a child, for example.

It's of continual frustration to me to hear the Minister of Health and Wellness talk about considering tax exemptions or tax receipts to individuals who might buy a membership from a commercial gym and that this would somehow be tax receiptable. There are actions that she could be taking that would be of benefit to the many, many organizations that operate at the grassroots, things like extending the same tax status for property tax exemptions from the educational property tax as is currently extended to multicultural groups and artistic groups, for example. That exemption has not been extended to sports groups, so there is an easy way to help them get more accessible to people and to help more people. If they were able to access that particular status, that reduces some of their costs, and they in turn will offer their services to the public for less money, making them more accessible.

A second way – and the Minister of Gaming could address this, probably. I believe there is still a prohibition on amateur adult sports and recreation groups from accessing casino income or the opportunity to get a casino licence and operate a casino and, I think, also for adult sports and recreation groups to access bingos. So, again, another way of them being able to offset their costs which is not currently available to them.

I know that the ministry is very interested, and I hope they're interested in what's being put forward here, but I am frustrated by the long-term lack of action in this area. I've been watching it since 1997. We're nine and a half years down the road now, and I have not seen a substantial difference.

I'm glad that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie brought this forward. I'm very pleased to see the government accept it, and I look forward to seeing what those concrete actions are that the government is taking.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to see that this was in fact accepted. I just wanted to make a brief comment in regard to how we might be able to look at the integration of the Ministry of Community Development pursuant to specific provincial sports and recreational programs that are encouraged by the provincial government through the Alberta Sport Plan Task Force and look for a means by which we can encourage healthy activity and realize the benefits of healthy activity through other ministries.

In fact, this should be and would be good news that would come from this question. If it's not, then I would suggest that that's exactly what we should be looking for in regard to the increase in physical activity of Albertans and then all Canadians and the savings, in fact, that we will achieve as a result through our health care system through reduced health concerns later in life and, as well, through proper socialization of our young people so that they might enjoy a healthier mental state and be less prone to psychological or psychiatric problems in the future as well. My understanding is, in fact, that a 10 per cent increase federally across the country was estimated to save at least $5 billion in health costs back in, probably, about eight years ago. This just gives us a small indication of the benefits that could be derived from a serious commitment to community development, specifically to focus on provincial sports and recreational programs.

It's no mistake, Mr. Speaker, that in certain countries or jurisdictions that have made a serious commitment to their sports programs, not only do you see an increase in health overall of the population, but you also see a greater success rate in the competitive level of sports. When I look to, say, Australia, as an example, where the Australians have put in a very serious commitment to all levels of both competitive and noncompetitive sporting, you see the overall health of this country, perhaps save for skin cancer, increasing tremendously as well as their medal total in various Olympic Games increasing considerably. So you see an overall direct correspondence between the amount of money being invested in sports and the health of your population.

There are economic benefits to be had as well, certainly, by having an increased focus on sport. We have, perhaps, an extension of facilities, outdoor and indoor, that can be developed in this province, which attracts tourism. It attracts spending as well. The more we get people out and interacting with each other, I would suggest that we create a stronger social fabric as well, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the government has already accepted this question.

Mr. Mason: Yes, I appreciate that.

The Speaker: Okay. Well, good enthusiasm.

Mr. Mason: I'm well aware of that, and I want to begin by expressing my sincere gratitude to the government for doing this. They aren't all bad, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes they do do the right thing and surprise us, and I must say I'm surprised. But there are a number of things about this that I think are very important.

The written question had the effect of getting me to take a look at the report that's referenced in the question. The Ministry of Community Development has established an Alberta Sport Plan Task Force, and they produced the report A New Century for Amateur Sport: From Participation to Excellence. It's very interesting.

Mr. Speaker, when the government does respond to this, there are a number of areas that I would hope they would deal with. First of all is the strong relationship that exists between physical activity and individual health. This is from the report. The report cites the Mills report of the Standing Committee on Canadian Heritage, Sport in Canada: Everybody's Business, from 1998. It says that a 10 per cent increase in the physical activity level of Canadians would save an estimated $5 billion in health care costs.

Now, I know that the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Premier have repeatedly talked about the sustainability of our health care arrangements in this province and the ability to continue to pay increasing costs, and here we have a report that says that a 10 per cent increase in physical activity would save $5 billion in health care costs. Mr. Speaker, we can only speculate about what Alberta's share of that $5 billion in savings would be, but we know that it would be very substantial, in the order of hundreds of millions of dollars. This would completely undercut the argument for an increasing the level of privatization in our health care system.

It talks a little bit about the importance of physical activity in deterring smoking. People who are physically active are less likely to engage in smoking. People benefit in many, many ways, so I would hope that the government would deal with some of these things.

The Mazankowski report, which we are very, very critical of, as members may realize, has also some good things in it, including the reform of staying healthy. The Mazankowski report proposes to contribute to the health of Albertans by providing a strong commitment to education, setting clear health objectives and targets, providing better information to Albertans, and taking steps to encourage Albertans to stay healthy.

One of the suggested actions of the Alberta Future Summit under the direction of Health and Wellness was to market and promote the benefits of recreation and wellness. I'd like to know in the government's answer specifically what they've chosen to do about that – the reports go back to 2001-2002 – to reintroduce the daily physical or recreational activities in the school curriculum. Maybe the hon. Minister of Education can assist in that.

Active living strategies. This is one that I'm very interested in, Mr. Speaker, and would very much like to hear back from the government on. It says, "maintain and upgrade aging recreational infrastructure." We know that the government has provided additional funding of a billion dollars in the capital region, in Calgary, and for the rest of the province, and I would like to know how much of that is going to be allocated by municipalities to maintaining and upgrading the aging recreational infrastructure.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that I have in my own constituency and in the ward that I represented at one time on Edmonton city council a number of recreational facilities, some of which are rather outdated and old and are not being properly maintained. They desperately need additional resources, and I'd be very curious about how that is going to affect my constituents but also around the province.

I certainly want to encourage the government to deal with some of those issues. It's important as we begin to refund the infrastructure that has been left unattended for a number of years while the government pursued its financial goals of eliminating the debt and the deficit, thereby transferring some of the cost into our infrastructure. It's a bit like not changing the oil in your car because you're trying to pay off a loan, and you may in fact have higher costs down the road as a result. So how that has affected the issue is something that we need to take a look at.

Mr. Speaker, finally, there are significant economic benefits that are associated with hosting sporting events. Edmonton has traditionally been an excellent host system whether it's for the Universiade or for the Commonwealth Games. I was able to attend a number of events related to both of those. Those are certainly important and valuable things, and I hope that the government is willing and able to provide enough information on these areas, Mr. Speaker, when they do bring forward their report.

Once again, I'd like to commend the government for actually saying that they are going to answer this question. It's a delightful surprise as far as I'm concerned, and I hope that the government will continue in this vein for many years to come or until the next election, whichever comes first.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: So I take it that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona wants to participate too.

Dr. Pannu: Very much so, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Dr. Pannu: I do appreciate the opportunity. While I'm delighted that the government has certainly indicated its willingness to address this question seriously and, I hope, soon, I do want to however speak here as someone who is a senior. Often, to justify the introduction of the third way, to privatize, and to attain sustainability, the Premier or the minister of health and other members on the government side of the House have been trying to scare Albertans into believing that since the number of seniors in our population is going to grow dramatically, it will be impossible for us to support the seniors because they'll be the major users of our health care system. Now I've been . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Before someone rises on a point of relevance, I would like to point out to the hon. member that we're dealing with Written Question 16, which has to do with sport and the Alberta sport plan, so if you can tie this in to seniors and everything else, this would be really helpful.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate your direction. Every time you advise me, I very seriously follow that. I was coming to the very point that you were making.

What I'm saying is that the availability of recreational facilities, encouragement to seniors to take part in sports, to remain healthy, to remain active: these things are very closely connected. The health care expenditures go up if we get sick more often, and as we become senior – and I've been in that position now, Mr. Speaker, for about eight years, I'm afraid, so I know that from year to year the challenges to remain healthy grow. I do take part in recreational sports, from biking to walking to swimming occasionally, and take part in some other sports. The key to making sure that our health care expenditures remain sustainable is going to be increasingly the ability of seniors to remain healthy for the longest possible time in their senior years.

What better way to both limit expenditures on our health and to increase the quality of health for the very people who have built this province through their sweat and toil over the last century that we've been celebrating? We've been celebrating the achievements of this province thanks to the work the people who are now in their senior years do.

I take this opportunity to participate in this debate on this question because I know that the government needs to be reminded that there's a great opportunity in investing in recreational facilities and in supports, facilities that will be available to all Albertans but, in particular, focusing on both encouraging seniors, whose numbers are growing in our population, to engage in these activities and to provide communities the facilities and the infrastructure that will make available these facilities closer to where seniors live.

I want to close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that my wife and I had the opportunity to fly to Singapore a few years ago. In the morning we were on a bus going back to the airport, and on the way what was quite amazing to see was how many inhabitants of the city were out early in the morning, about 6 o'clock, in group sports activities, exercising, most of them seniors. No wonder.

There are ways within the public health care system to control costs as well as to guarantee to our seniors a far better quality of life than we presently do. So answers to this question, that I'm sure the minister will very kindly provide, do raise additional questions, in fact many questions, that we need to pay attention to and take every opportunity to find ways in which we can control costs for health care on one hand but at the same time also improve the quality of life of seniors, who will make up, I think, in the next 20 years about 25 per cent of our population. I also hear about the pension crises that are going to arise because fewer people are going to be working and paying taxes. How do you control all these things unless you in a very positive way, in a very active way, create facilities and opportunities for people to remain healthy so that unnecessary expenditures with respect to health and other problems that arise as we move into senior years are avoided and problems prevented?

So, Mr. Speaker, I again want to thank the government for its readiness to accept this written question, but there are many implications of raising this issue here, and I recommend to the government to look closely at how it can create these facilities for seniors so they remain healthy and don't in fact become a burden on our health care system and are not seen to be a burden on the health care system but, rather, remain active, productive citizens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview hasn't participated yet on this?

Mr. Martin: No.

The Speaker: Well, please proceed.

Mr. Martin: Well, I'd feel out of it if I didn't contribute, Mr. Speaker. I'll look at the other end: being much younger. I'll talk about my experience as a school trustee dealing with a very important issue, and that is child obesity. If we want to talk about seniors providing a lot of problems to the health care system, if we don't get kids active, we have a very serious problem. We know that. There have been many articles written about what's happening.

I know that the government tried to react. I guess that I'd like to see some more co-operation with the Ministry of Community Development and the Department of Education because if we're going to change things, I think it has got to be done at that level. It's important that we deal with the provincial sports and recreational programs, but it's also just as important to get kids participating at the elementary school level and even earlier and all the way through their school, Mr. Speaker. I think we see the rates going up for child obesity to 17 per cent in some cases.

When I was a trustee, I brought in a motion about this very thing, that we begin to take a look at it. It has to do with a lot of different problems, Mr. Speaker. It has to deal with the food that kids are eating. In some cases to have money for schools, we had vending machines that were pop and all the wrong food. I think we're finally moving in that direction. We have a problem, I suppose, with the modern technology of computers and video games and the rest of it. We have a lot of reasons why people are not participating.

What was scary to me is that they said that some of the kids in elementary school were developing middle-age diseases already at that level. Hypertension, high cholesterol: these things were occurring at that level with a lot of kids. Imagine the misery for them and their families if they die young, but imagine the cost to the health care system down the way if we don't begin to deal with these problems.

It's almost a new experience when they accept a question or a motion for a return, and we always celebrate when they do, Mr. Speaker. I guess that in doing this, they are putting money in and looking at funding challenges, supporting provincial sports and recreational programs. That's one of the things that I would wonder about with both ministers. The move towards more physical education in the schools has created some curriculum problems, but I think it's a necessity. We have to start early there. I'm wondering if some of that money from Community Development could also be worked together within the schools, Mr. Speaker, because one department does this, another department does that, another department does this. A lot of the programs that we saw – nutrition: we had nurses in the schools in the city centre project; that made sense. That was from the department of health. The Department of Children's Services had people working in the city centre project.

The more that we could work together in departments and begin at the very early levels in our schools, the better our population will be and the healthier our population will be. We have to recognize that some people are calling it a crisis. If we don't begin to deal with this, we're going to have some kids – as I say, the phys ed move is a good one, Mr. Speaker, but to think that it's enough just to have good sports teams: it's not. We have to do a much better job at that level.

I guess that, in retrospect, I'd be asking the Minister of Education if there is some co-operation with the Ministry of Community Development in terms of these sorts of programs so that they could be helpful in some of their budgets in dealing at the school level with what is a serious problem. I think the minister would agree.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's nice that the government has accepted this. We'll look forward to their answers. Again, I stress that we'd be looking for that co-operation at the lower level. We'll have the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona worry about the seniors, and I'll worry about the group that's closer to my age group.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to close the debate.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been whispered around the House this afternoon that there may be a filibuster taking place. I have a confession to make. I, actually, had been asked to use my entire five minutes in closing so that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar might be able to collect his thoughts in preparation for written questions 17, 18, and 19; however, given the number of speakers on Written Question 16, I see that he is, in fact, ready. So I'm not going to take any time to close the debate. I will not participate in the filibuster. Rather, I would like to thank the government for agreeing in the affirmative to Written Question 16 and look forward to the following questions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, the only matter now to be resolved is whether or not the House will give approval for the answer to be given under Written Question 16.

[Written Question 16 carried]

Royalty Review Consultations

Q17. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What groups or individuals did the Ministry of Energy consult with in its latest royalty review?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Written Question 17. Now, I would at this point remind all hon. members that this is a very important written question because without resource revenue or royalty revenue there would be very little money to provide any sort of financial support for Alberta sport – not only Alberta sport, but seniors, for health, for education, for various government initiatives. So when we talk about royalty reviews and the royalty rates, we have to give this matter a great deal of discussion.

I'm very pleased to learn that the Minister of Energy has conducted a royalty review. Now, this is only the latest royalty review. There hasn't been any significant change in the amount of the royalties or the percentage of royalties collected going back to 1992. I'm very pleased to see that the government has initiated this royalty review, but who, exactly, was consulted? We know the structure of the royalty formula. It certainly affects everybody in the oil patch. We've got different royalties for new gas, for old gas, for third-tier oil, for new oil, old oil. In fact, we also have many royalty holidays, Mr. Speaker, through royalty reduction programs.

I'm looking at the Minister of Energy's annual report. This is going back a couple of years, but at that time there were five oil and four gas royalty reduction programs. Now, I think it's even gone up since then, and there is an additional royalty program. "These programs reduce Crown royalties to encourage industry to produce from wells which otherwise would not be economically productive." Certainly with 70-plus dollar oil – we have also natural gas prices in excess of $6 American per gigajoule – there are market prices that will encourage operators to keep each and every well in production. For those that are not in production, certainly those high market prices are a significant incentive to squeeze every barrel of oil out of the formation and recover every gigajoule or cubic metre of natural gas that we can.

Now, I was as surprised as anyone to recognize and learn – I was astonished to learn that the actual amount when we look at the total royalty production as a percentage is going down. Our revenue share, the Crown's revenue share, was 23 per cent in 1996. It fluctuates. In 1999 it was 21 per cent. In 2001 it was 24 per cent. In 2003 it was also 24 per cent. This information is provided by Ross Smith Energy.

Mr. Speaker, was Ross Smith Energy included in this latest royalty review? Now we find out for the year that we are discussing in budget estimates that this government is collecting 19 per cent of the total revenue share. It's gone down. The market prices have gone up, but the actual percentage that this government is collecting is less, significantly less.

If Ross Smith Energy was not consulted in this royalty review, then who was? Certainly, the natural resources of this province belong to all Albertans. They have a right to know who is responsible for ensuring that Albertans are getting their fair share of the royalties. I know that the government receives advice from many, many different individuals or forecasters. We only have to look at the economic outlook from this year's fiscal plan and we see that the Alberta Department of Energy also surveys on a confidential basis, and I hope that if this written question is rejected, this is not why, Mr. Speaker, because this information is received on a confidential basis. The government through the Department of Energy receives surveys and private forecasts from the following forecasters: PIRA; another outfit called PEL; Petral; Purvin & Gertz; Groppe Long & Littel; CGES; and Wood MacKenzie. These are some of the groups.

I was surprised to learn now that the government has made a significant change in the forecasts of natural gas prices. It would be interesting to know if this was a result of this latest royalty review because I read – and this is again in the fiscal plan – in footnote (a):

The natural gas price is the US price of natural gas at Henry Hub Louisiana, as this is the benchmark for natural gas prices in the rest of North America. Since many consultants do not forecast the Alberta Reference Price, which is used in the Alberta Budget and is the basis for Alberta natural gas royalty calculations, the table has been changed this year to the US Henry Hub price of natural gas. The Alberta Government forecast in the table above is also the US Henry Hub price.

If we're going to have forecasts with the Henry hub price, was this as a result of the latest royalty review, the consultations that have gone on? There are some people who point out that the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers' information is the basis of our royalties. What say did they have in this royalty review? What say did the smaller producers have in this? They would perhaps be the ones that would be affected the most by any changes that we would make.

We have to make sure, Mr. Speaker, that when we conduct a royalty review, we consult everyone. We also should consult the citizens that own 81 per cent of the resource. That's the Crown's share of land where we can get royalties from. We also get royalties from freehold. The citizens who own this resource should be consulted. They should be consulted to see if we want to put more money in the heritage savings trust fund, if we want to put more money into public education, into public health care, what exactly we want to do with this money. Many people are concerned about the royalties that the province is currently collecting and would be very interested in this review.

Now, I'm very disappointed to tell the House that this government is very secretive when the issue of royalties comes up. An accountable government, an open and transparent government would share the information with the owners of the resources. I thought during budget debates earlier that I was going to receive a great deal of information on the royalty structure from the Department of Energy. But every day, Mr. Speaker, I go to my Legislative Assembly mailbox. I'm waiting there. I get mail on a lot of issues, but unfortunately I'm getting nothing to date from the minister on that royalty review.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Now, just to be sure. The chair has paid very close attention to the remarks of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but did he actually move the question? The chair will assume that he did, but careful reading may be required.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'm not certain if there was a movement of the question either.

That said, the question. We had one similar to it in question 5. There's an assumption that there is a date of a start and stop of the latest royalty review. I mentioned it then, mentioned it's ongoing. Our department is continually looking at information from around the world. There isn't a "latest royalty review." I'm not certain even how to reference or what to provide given that it's not an event. We're continually looking at our programs, continually looking at information that comes at us, be it from people here or around the world. On that basis – I'm not certain how to confine it – we don't accept this written question.

We did say, though, that we do at times get reports, analyses done from around other places that comment on our royalty structures, and we will make copies. As I said in our debate on our estimates, we will make copies of some of those royalty assessment documents available to all members. We're going through some of that right now, and those documents will be provided in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wonder if I could clarify: did the minister actually accept the question?

The Speaker: It was rejected.

Mr. Mason: It was rejected. Okay. Well, that's better, Mr. Speaker. The universe is now sort of more the way I'm used to it.

The Speaker: Normal.

Mr. Mason: Yeah, normal. I feel better oriented now, Mr. Speaker, to my appropriate role, and I thank the minister for that.

But I'm very disappointed in the government, Mr. Speaker, very disappointed that this government would reject a question which I think is clear. It's clear that the minister has pulled out in this "latest . . . review" as a reason to reject the question when, in fact, whether that's in the question or not, it's a very relevant question. I would really like to know what groups the government does consult with when it sets these appallingly low royalty rates for the people of Alberta's own natural gas and our own petroleum resources.

The royalty rates in this province were set years ago for $15 a barrel of oil. What's the price of oil today, Mr. Speaker? It's well over $50. It goes up to almost $70. I don't think we're going to see the other side of $50 a barrel for quite some time. The people of Alberta are receiving a pittance of their resources.

Other jurisdictions in world that have oil – and I'm not talking about countries that are very, very different in many ways from Canada, but I'm talking about countries that are developed countries, that have a high standard of living, that have high levels of education, investment in social structures, in social programs, health care systems, and so on. If you look at similar types of countries, not necessarily similar types of oil industries but similar types of countries – I'll give just two examples. One is Alaska, which is, as the Premier would say, not a country; it's a state. Also Norway. You compare the royalty rates that they receive on their oil and gas. It's much higher. It's much higher, and the result is that there is more money that has been set aside for the people of Alaska and the people of Norway that they can invest in their people. The fact that we have very high surpluses, Mr. Speaker, should not blind us to the fact that the increases in prices for oil and natural gas have flowed primarily to the companies that extract them and not to the people of this province.

So I think that it's high time that we reviewed the royalty structure for our nonrenewable natural resources. Mr. Speaker, I think we need to really reassess how we view these resources. They are not a source of extra revenue so that we can bring our taxes way down. They belong to not just this generation of Albertans, but they belong to every future generation as well, not just our grandchildren but beyond our grandchildren. So we must deal with them, in my view, in a way that the vast majority of the value of those resources is retained in this province and retained for the benefit of the generations to come in this province.

The government is not doing that. They're taking far less than they could or should from these nonrenewable resources as they are being extracted, and even of that they're spending perhaps far more than they need to or than they should or than would otherwise be seen as prudent. So I think that's a very important factor.

Royalties. I want to maybe talk a little bit about the scale. Royalties from synthetic crude have reached a record of $1.2 billion, Mr. Speaker, and the total nonrenewable resource revenue is expected to hit over $11 billion in the year 2006-07 according to our 2006 budget. Now, these are staggering, staggering amounts, but it really speaks to the fact that the majority of the value of these resources is slipping through our fingers. So when the government consults with, how they consult with them, when that occurs, and what the consultation is, in my view, is of tremendous public interest. It's of interest far beyond this Assembly. It's of interest to every citizen, and it will be of interest to future generations as they look back on the decisions we make today. So for the minister to reject the question because he quibbles with the line "latest royalty review" in here is just not good enough.

What groups or individuals is the Ministry of Energy consulting with on an ongoing basis? If this is an ongoing thing and not periodic reviews, that's fine, but the minister has neatly avoided answering the question, which is of fundamental importance. The government claims to be one of the most open governments in the world, in the universe if you listen to some ministers during question period, but the fact of the matter is that it is one of the most opaque. They're not transparent. They're not even translucent. They are opaque. You know, we've seen some legislation that's being considered by this House right now that will make them even more opaque. Trying to find out what's going on, how decisions are made which affect billions of dollars of revenue that belongs to the people of this province is of very, very fundamental importance, and for the minister to reject this question is just insulting the people of this province and their children and their grandchildren, who care about the future of this province. These issues are of fundamental importance.

I'd love to know who they're talking to, Mr. Speaker, and I'd love to be able to compare that list of companies that may be on that list with the people who benefit from low royalty rates in this province. I'd even like to compare it to the contribution list for the Conservative Party in the last couple of elections. There may be a correlation. I don't know, and we won't know unless the government is prepared to bring this forward and answer the questions.

So I hope that in some of the subsequent questions that come up today or next Monday the government will be more forthcoming and more transparent. It would be nice to see just a little bit of light coming through the government instead of just a solid, opaque lens, that the government prefers.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I will yield my place and see if there are other speakers. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to rise and respond to the minister's rejection of Written Question 17, which I thought was an excellent question. All they had to do was replace the word "latest" with "ongoing," according to his own words.

The point that I would like to bring up is the fact that this is something that's very much in discussion with Albertans across the province. They don't understand it, and although the minister might be very well versed and perhaps the government is very well versed in why our royalty rates are where they are, Albertans that talk to me aren't. There's very much discussion out there that we're being ripped off, and I go around and I explain to many of my constituents that a lot of our wells in Alberta are not like the ones in Norway. They're not like the ones in Alaska. They don't produce a hundred thousand barrels a day, and the cost of drilling those is being offset with a low royalty so that it is economical for them to go forward. But I think that there wouldn't be a better opportunity than to accept a question like this to explain to Albertans why our royalty rates are where they are and to have a good briefing from this government that the people of Alberta could understand and see those things.

The other point that the hon. members have brought up is the fact that oil is not $15 a barrel. It's not $50 a barrel. It's $70 a barrel. Perhaps we need to look at a new way, with inflation and the way the world is going, to accommodate royalties when we see such an escalation.

I use the example of wind farms. Currently a wind farm might need to generate a hundred thousands dollars' worth of electricity a year at 7 cents a kilowatt, but if the price of electricity was to go to 14 cents in a few more years, then in fact that would be producing $200,000 worth of royalties for the electric company. The land-owner might double from 3 per cent at $3,000 to $6,000 a year. The companies are earning, then, at that point $180,000 or $188,000 in a year, and they could easily be doubling the rates. It could very much be on a stepped or an escalating program as the prices rise.

So I'm disappointed that the minister didn't accept this question, and I hope that they'll reconsider it and just publish something for people to realize what the ongoing royalty reviews are, who they're talking with and explain what we do here in Alberta in a plain and simple brochure or on the Alberta Energy website so that all Albertans can see that it's crystal clear and understandable, so that we can compare apples to apples, not comparing a five barrel a day well to a 100,000 barrel a day well in Alaska and saying that we're being ripped off, because people don't understand those things.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise with some unhappiness as to why the minister is choosing to not answer this question. I know for a fact that it's been mentioned before that the Ministry of Energy is in fact undergoing a review on royalty rates, and my understanding is that we were expecting to hear some information in that regard perhaps as early as July. So we know and he knows what we're talking about here in regard to this ongoing royalty review.

What we need at this juncture, Mr. Speaker, is some degree of transparency in regard to this review because it involves information that is very relevant to each and every Albertan in this province. We are talking about setting a rate for oil and gas. In fact, I would venture to say that we should be setting a rate for other sources of energy, even coal, which is otherwise owned by each of us. So the price that we're putting on these products is a direct correspondence to the amount that each Albertan would be getting under ideal circumstances.

By choosing to have this review process under some degree of secrecy or at least some lack of transparency makes it immediately suspicious to all of us as to what sort of deal is being cut behind our backs for something that we otherwise all own together. We know that our royalty rates are out of step with almost any other measure of royalty rates across North America, this hemisphere, and around the world. I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that at least part of the sort of mad rush that we have to exploit our energy resources is at least in part due to the fact that we're charging such a cheap price for our royalty rates that it's like some kind of fire sale. Energy companies know that the rates have to go up, so let's try to get as much as we can before they start charging a price that is actually in keeping with world rates. So we're creating a problem in regard to an uncontrolled economy just because we are being somehow stubborn in setting a rate that's more in keeping with the world price of oil and gas.

You know, we can use any yardstick that we might want to determine, to suggest, or to confirm that, in fact, the price is a fire-sale price at this juncture. By no means am I suggesting that we don't expect energy companies to make a fair profit for their endeavours. It's very central to our economy that energy companies are doing well, and we encourage them to do so. However, to suggest that we do not take adequate funds from those activities – and it's not a tax, but rather it is a price based on the portion of the product that we otherwise all own together as Albertans. So to not set a decent price does all of us a disservice. The process of setting that price has to be something that is in the public realm.

I know from a number of different sources that different energy companies are expecting that price to go up, but every day that we delay on setting a royalty price which is in keeping with world standards, we lose considerably, Mr. Speaker. That's why I've brought forward on a number of occasions a windfall royalty regime based on progressive measures looking at: as the price goes up, then so, too, in a very modest and reasonable way does the royalty rate go up, a windfall royalty rate increase. This is something that would be able to accommodate for the vagaries of prices in the world energy markets, which we know are very volatile, but also would be able to then account for these windfall rates where we can take a small portion of it and put it back into our economy.

We're increasingly, unfortunately, more and more reliant on those nonrenewable resource revenues to run this province. That's a different topic, and I will stay otherwise on topic, but the fact is that we are reducing our other taxation rates to the point where we really are dependent upon these nonrenewable resource rates. As that revenue passes out the window, Mr. Speaker – I would suggest that we let it fly out the window every day that we're not charging a proper royalty rate – that's money that we're not ever going to get back to run this province the way that it should be run in an equal and reasonable way, ensuring social services for all people, ensuring that we maintain a certain level of infrastructure. It's an equation of diminishing returns, so that's why we want to see this information in the most prescient way possible. Who's setting those levels, and when and where are they going in terms of royalty rates? It's absolutely essential for all of us, and I would expect nothing less.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will not be long, but I do want to echo the comments of the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who indicated that there is a great deal of confusion amongst the people of this province when it comes to royalty rates and how they're collected and the lack or at least the perceived lack of openness and accountability from the government. So very much so am I disappointed in the minister's response this afternoon.

Ms Blakeman: What about the lack of transparency?

Mr. R. Miller: My colleague from Edmonton-Centre suggests a lack of transparency, and I guess that's what I was really suggesting.

Mr. Speaker, everywhere I go in this province, I'm constantly met by people asking the question as to whether or not we are in fact getting a fair return on our natural resources. The question really is: how do we know? In what I would consider to be a fair and reasonable attempt by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to find out whether or not we are getting that fair and reasonable return on our resources, we have another effort by the government to withhold information or shield information from the public of this province and thereby not allow us to in fact find out whether or not the regime that we're currently operating under is returning the revenue to this province that we would deserve for it, and in the case of this latest review, which is really what this question is about, who did we talk to and how were the decisions reached in terms of the most recent review of those royalty rates?

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member and members, the House stands adjourned until 8 this evening.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 8, 2006

8:00 p.m.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Electricity Supply

510. Mr. Rogers moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to improve the delivery of stable and reliable electricity to meet the demands of advanced manufacturing throughout the province, specifically in areas such as the Nisku industrial business park and the Leduc Business Park, by increasing investment in transmission and associated infrastructure.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise this evening to open the debate on Motion 510. Since the foundation of this great province, our citizens have exhibited leadership, passion, and an entrepreneurial spirit. The ambitions of Albertans have always been unmatched, and our subsequent accomplishments have been undeniable.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has always been on the leading edge of governance, particularly in the realm of the economy. In Alberta the government has created a framework of policies that allows business to thrive throughout the province without interfering with those businesses or subsidizing them with taxpayers' dollars. Instead, Alberta has created an environment that is very conducive to economic prosperity. We have built up our education system to provide a skilled workforce. We have maintained a strong commitment to innovation, and we continue to govern with the lowest overall tax load of all our provincial brethren and without the aid of a retail sales tax, one of a handful of such jurisdictions in North America.

Where others focus on problems, Albertans envision solutions. When others see a challenge, Albertans consider it an opportunity. Our current economic climate, including our strong manufacturing sector, combined with our robust electricity-generation capacity, has given us the tools to capitalize on yet another one of these opportunities. Mr. Speaker, with the direction of Motion 510 we can use the strengths I've just described to facilitate the growth of advanced manufacturing centres across our province.

What we as legislators of this province need to do is simple. We need to create a regulatory framework that is conducive to providing these industries with the electricity transmission they require to be competitive and successful. The reliability of supply that these advanced manufacturers need is what I like to refer to as high-end power. This is not your regular, run-of-the-mill power supply and line that runs to your or my house or garage. We're talking about steps above that. The equipment these industries use is very vulnerable to any disruptions in service or even voltage spikes. When production is under way and this occurs, it is costly and puts manufacturers at risk, but the risk is avoidable with certain transmission facilities and associated infrastructure.

While this province has taken and continues to take the appropriate steps to ensure that all Albertans have a strong supply of reliable electricity, in the case of these companies we need to push the envelope. We need to dare to dream. After all, isn't that what Alberta is all about? Advanced manufacturing centres have the potential to be the future of this province's economy. It is our duty to continue with the Alberta spirit and be brave and bold, making this a vision of reality. This province has experienced growth in the area of advanced manufacturing, and we can take it to a higher level.

This type of investment, Mr. Speaker, has benefits in itself, such as the creation of very high-paying jobs for our citizens. It also creates a classic ripple effect for other sectors of our economy. Due to the nature of advanced manufacturing and the goods that they produce, these companies act as a supply chain for other industries, providing various other economic sectors, including agriculture, construction, and the oil field, with needed equipment and parts. This makes these businesses extremely important players in the overall scheme of Alberta's success. They are vital to the future growth and diversification of the Alberta economy.

One specific example of the necessity of these advanced manufacturers is their role in specialty manufacturing for oil sands development and other energy sector operations using advanced computerized systems, lasers, and other cutting-edge technology. These manufacturers, Mr. Speaker, such as Vanoil Equipment, which has an operation in my constituency, turn unique materials such as special alloys into one-of-a-kind parts that are essential in many sectors of manufacturing and the oil field. These processes and these companies are a major part of the reason why the unconventional resource of the oil sands deposits are becoming more and more conventional every day. Extraction and refining techniques are constantly evolving, and industries in the advanced manufacturing sector make these concepts possible by providing the pieces that are necessary to build a successful operation.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that undertakings such as the oil sands are expanding and will continue to provide an economic spark for this province well into the future. We can take full advantage of this spark by ensuring that we produce the goods and services to support these operations right here in Alberta. It is possible to import all kinds of equipment from around the globe given our transportation capabilities and the global marketplace, but why would we not take advantage of our enviable position and make these products right here at home? We should encourage this type of business to set up in our province because companies like Fiberex Glass Corporation, located in Leduc, provide our economy with a phenomenal array of opportunities for spinoff manufacturing, high-paying jobs, and very significant local property taxes as well as purchasing many supplies from local businesses. How can we really determine the cycle of economic and social strength that is started by investment on such a grand scale?

Mr. Speaker, Fiberex is one of the largest independent glass fibre manufacturers in North America, and their state-of-the-art manufacturing facility represents a $40 million investment. It employs an average of 150 people with wages starting at $15 an hour and up. The spinoffs that this sort of company creates are extensive to the surrounding community and those they serve with their unique products.

It is important to recognize, however, that despite the numerous benefits of these advanced manufacturers, this motion is not urging this government to be in the business of being in business and is not intended to be a means of providing a subsidy to these companies. These companies are not seeking subsidies. What we need to do as legislators is to open the door to possibilities for our citizens and for the economy by creating a reputable regulatory framework and economic environment that allows these industries to continually take root and prosper.

As the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, Mr. Speaker, it is clear to me that the electricity infrastructure for the Leduc and Nisku business parks is extremely important. But this motion is not just about Leduc and Nisku; it is about the province of Alberta. If we can create a template for establishing an advanced level of electricity transmission to support one centre like this, this framework can then be used for other areas and sectors of the economy.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is not about creating opportunity for my constituency; it is about enhancing the Alberta advantage. With enhanced electricity transmission centres across Alberta we can create advanced manufacturing hubs that will give us yet another reason to be proud that we reside here and continue to diversify the economy of this province to sustain our prosperity long beyond declining resource revenues.

When I look at this province, Mr. Speaker, I see a booming and diversifying economy with unbridled potential. With actions from this Assembly, including Motion 510, we can realize that potential and make Alberta stronger for years to come. It is my hope that successful passage of this motion will lead to a revamped regulatory framework that will allow the power industry to provide this level of reliability to meet the needs of advanced manufacturing and be able to recoup their investment through a rate structure that recognizes this valuable service.

Mr. Speaker, I would move this motion and invite all my colleagues of this House to join with me in supporting this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I speak in support of Motion 510 by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon because it attempts to address one of the many failings of deregulated electricity. When we go back to about 1995, the idea of deregulation was being passed around, thought about. Unfortunately, neither former Minister Steve West nor Minister Murray Smith defined just what a deregulated market would look like. As a result, the hoped-for competition that would end up by driving down electricity prices never materialized. Instead, what happened was two failed electricity auction bids because there were very few bidders. The first one raised approximately a billion dollars, as did the second one.

What happened with that process is that we the Alberta taxpayers lost a regulated service, a dependable service, a very inexpensive service, in fact the least expensive service in western Canada and, for that matter, throughout most of Canada. What happened was that not only did we lose approximately $5 billion of government-owned and -regulated assets, which were sold off for the paltry sum and failed bids of $2 billion, but the government at that time in their so-called – and I put it in quotes – wisdom decided to dip into general revenue and take another $2 billion to $3 billion out and combine that.

That, basically, was used in the period leading up to the 2001 election to buy a lot of votes. Any Albertan over 18 received two sets of rebates – one on electricity and one on gas, and that did wonderful things for the Conservative members running in that particular election because it softened the blow of deregulated electricity and temporarily gave people faith that the government would come to their rescue on a regular basis because that was what was promised leading up to the 2001 election. The government realized that there would be a period of questionable electricity costs, which, of course, continue today, and they devised this rather convoluted rebate system.

What we find now is that that system has cost Albertans dearly: billions of dollars. I mentioned before, when we were talking about intergovernmental relations, how on top, basically, of the $5 billion we lost and then the bits of billions we got back in the form of one-time energy rebates, we were also stuck for a billion and a half in terms of transmission lines. Normally, up until that point the costs for the transmission lines were shared between industry and the public. Thanks to our former Energy minister, Murray Smith, we Albertans were stuck for the entire cost of the transmission lines.

However, in speaking in support of Motion 510, what it deals with is one very important portion, and that's the reliability of the system. The Alberta Electric System Operator, AESO, is responsible for the safe, reliable – that's the key word, and I'm pleased that the government admitted that this current system is not reliable and therefore needs repair – and economic operation and planning of Alberta's power system. The AESO also facilitates Alberta's hourly wholesale electricity market and is accountable for the overall co-ordination of provincial load settlement. Back in the blackout/brownout days of 2001 we were very dependent on electricity being imported from B.C. Of course, that electricity was considerably more expensive than the coal-fired generated electricity that we had in Alberta, but when it came online, that was the price for which electricity was sold. It gave organizations in Alberta – Enmax and EPCOR – a chance to regain some of their lost investments.

Under section 34 of the Electric Utilities Act the Independent System Operator, ISO, is mandated to determine the need for an expansion or enhancement of the capability of the transmission system to meet the needs of market participants. Once that need has been identified, the ISO must prepare and submit to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, EUB, a needs identification document for approval.

Going back to 2001, there are a number of companies, particularly in the steel business, who were in some cases forced to leave the province due to the escalating cost of electricity. For those who stayed behind and tried to adjust to the rampant rise in prices, they found themselves operating on midnight shifts because it was during midnight to 6 when residential use wasn't as high; therefore, there was more availability and, as a result, cheaper prices available. That shift work was basically a band-aid to try and solve the economic problems.

If the EUB approves the needs identification document, issues involving the economics, routing, and environmental concerns are dealt with through a subsequent transmission facility owner, TFO, application for a specific project to deal with the identified needs filed under the Hydro and Electric Energy Act.

The wording of the motion, as I indicated before, acknowledges that electricity reliability is lacking, affecting all Albertans and more specifically those within the advanced manufacturing sector. The industry is especially hurt by a lack of reliable electricity service due to the nature of their operations. In short, improving the reliability of electricity service in Alberta is a positive step that will benefit all consumers.

This motion targets a specific group of stakeholders who are especially harmed by unreliable service. The Official Opposition has recently acted as an advocate for the Leduc-Nisku industrial business community, where unreliable electricity service has threatened the financial viability of several businesses and continues to threaten further economic investment in advanced manufacturing facilities in this province. We desperately need diversification, and, as the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon mentioned, in order to have that kind of diversification, we have to be able to offer manufacturers a reliable source of energy.

Ideally, the Official Opposition would like to see the whole problem addressed, and we believe that can only be done by getting rid of deregulation and buying back the assets that we so foolishly sold for minimum prices. However, this motion does address the reliability and, as such, that's important.

One of the most damaging effects of deregulation has been the lack of accountability that is inherent within a deregulated system. Instead of having one body or organization that is responsible for ensuring that Albertans receive affordable, reliable service, accountability has been fragmented among various bodies, organizations whose bottom line is profit. We all, obviously, are hoping to profit, but with the expense which Albertans have already paid in terms of setting up the system, we should be recouping some of that investment. Those responsible for serving Albertans are now less concerned about customer service and affordable prices and more interested with increasing their shareholders' profits. If you're one of the shareholders, great; if you're an average Albertan, you get the shaft end of the mine.

I will sit at this point. I know that my hon. associates will wish to discuss other areas, but in general the Liberal caucus supports this motion, and we thank the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for having brought it forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and join debate on Motion 510, sponsored by the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing this motion forward because it gives this Assembly the opportunity to discuss electric supply and demand in this province. Looking around Alberta, it's difficult not to see the signs of economic boom. High oil and gas prices are driving a growing economy, and this sector is making ripples across the entire economy.

Alberta is well known for having a strong energy sector, but this province is also home to a nascent and specialized manufacturing industry. Much of the equipment used for energy exploration and development across the globe is not only developed using the expertise of Albertans, but it is also manufactured here in the province. This type of economic diversification is necessary for our province to grow and become less susceptible to volatile commodity prices.

It is exceptionally important that the infrastructure is in place to ensure that companies which are branching off from traditional Alberta industries are able to function in our province. This infrastructure covers a wide range of different areas, some of which come to mind easily and some which don't. The government needs to ensure that there are schools and technical institutes to be able to supply the skilled labour which is necessary to operate and manage advanced machining and production processes. Companies need roads to bring raw materials into the manufactured sites and then transport the goods to market. While we're on the subject of input materials, it's necessary for companies to be able to access the electrical energy which they need to drive the systems and the machines which make up the manufacturing process.

The policy of electrical deregulation which the government of Alberta adopted opened up the generation side of the electrical market. It's because of deregulation that Albertans enjoy a more than adequate amount of electricity to support their needs. Since 1998 Alberta's generation capacity has grown by 40 per cent – 40 per cent, Mr. Speaker. Why is it important? Alberta is growing not only in terms of industrial capacity but also in terms of people. By bringing additional generation online, Alberta has staved off the possibility of blackouts, brownouts, and rolling brownouts, which are happening more and more often in North America.

I'm fairly certain everyone in this Chamber remembers the blackout which struck eastern Canada and the United States. Generation is at maximum capacity in that part of North America. There's not enough electricity being generated to meet the demands being placed on the system. When this happens, shortages are bound to occur because there's simply not enough electricity to go around.

Mr. Speaker, multiple jurisdictions are encountering the same problem: there's not enough generation to meet demand. The troubling thing is that power generation plants don't show up overnight. They take time to plan and construct, so jurisdictions encountering generation shortages will not be able to solve this problem overnight. They will have to deal with it for quite some time until they can find a solution.

Luckily, we're not faced with that situation here in Alberta. We have a bit of a different obstacle to overcome, and that's transmission, Mr. Speaker. The government is examining the issue of transmission through the MLA Advisory Committee on Transmission. Their mandate is to ensure that the province's electrical transmission infrastructure expands at a rate which is commensurate with the economic and population boom which Alberta is experiencing. This committee is working with Alberta's Independent System Operator, communities, regulators, and the electrical industry to encourage investment into Alberta's transmission infrastructure. It is expected that this committee will return to the Minister of Energy with their recommendations by the end of this year, and this information will be invaluable in making decisions regarding electricity transmission in Alberta.

The wording of Motion 510 is such that it supports the goals of the MLA Advisory Committee on Transmission. I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing it forward because it gives us an opportunity to discuss this specific and important issue within the larger concern of infrastructure which supports electrical transmission.

I support Motion 510, and I urge all members of the House to do so as well. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion 510 is reasonable as far as it goes. Clearly, the MLA from that area knows that there are problems, and he is bringing this forward to deal for his constituents, and I appreciate that. But I'd like to go back and suggest that we're trying to play catch-up here.

When we moved to a deregulated market, we were not supposed to have any of these problems. Consumers would be better off. The generation capacity would be there forever for Albertans. We would not have any problems at all. Well, Mr. Speaker, that was the triumph of ideology over common sense. We've had nothing but problems since we brought deregulation in. No matter what excuse the government wants to give, consumers are paying higher prices to the point that the government before the election, I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity mentioned, had to hand rebates out because it was becoming a political issue. Taxpayers' dollars. That was the first part of deregulation.

Now we have – and this is not new. It's perhaps new in the Leduc area, but I recall conversations with businesses in Lethbridge and around the province saying precisely the same thing, that some of them may have left. Because we have all our eggs even more in one basket with the energy industry, they seem to rule the roost. That's the reason that we're having, I believe, the generation problems that we have, Mr. Speaker. So now we have major companies in the Leduc-Nisku area saying that they're going to leave the province.

I take it that they are serious about it. The Official Opposition leader introduced them here in the House; they're obviously here for a reason, to tell us that they're pretty serious about it. I'm told that they put a $45 million plant expansion on hold due to persistent power failures. I'm told that they've got offers in Winnipeg and eastern Canada, that they're serious if something doesn't happen next year. I'm told that the whole Leduc chamber of commerce is very upset about it.

It's probably not the corridor where we start looking at shipping power down to the United States. I hope that's not the answer. But it seems to me that there's a point, Mr. Speaker, where the government should say: look, we've made a major mistake here, and deregulation is not working. It's not working for anybody. Perhaps it's working for some of the power companies that are making money on it. It's certainly not working for the consumers, it's not working for the taxpayers because we have to pay rebates, and it's clearly not working for some of these, what I'd call, medium-sized industries that are complaining.

Probably people would say: well, it would be too much to turn the clock around and move toward a regulated market again. The other provinces that have either public power or regulated power aren't running into these same problems, Mr. Speaker. Now, I admit that we have an overheated economy here because all of our eggs are in the energy basket and we're pushing ahead and pushing ahead, and that certainly has a bearing on it.

How do we, I mean, as far as it goes, urge the government to increase a supply of "stable and reliable electricity"? Well, at one time we were told that the consumers were promised that when deregulation was brought in, transmission costs, new lines, et cetera would be paid for by industry. Well, we know that that's not going to happen, and I doubt that these types of businesses that are medium-sized could afford to do it. Only the energy industry is the one that, perhaps, could afford it, and they're not going to do it.

So it seems to me that I certainly have no objection to keeping these advanced manufacturing industries in the Leduc area. I think that's a necessity if we want to have any semblance of an economy that's not totally reliant on fossil fuels, Mr. Speaker.

It seems to me that the problem is that after years of proving that deregulation is not working – as I said, it was a triumph of ideology over common sense – why don't we back off and start to put that money back? We have money rolling in. We have surpluses. At least it would be some sort of investment to move back towards regulation. I don't think you'd see anybody crying, certainly not the consumers that you talk to. Certainly, businesses like this wouldn't be crying, Mr. Speaker. As I say, we seem to be driven more by ideology in terms of deregulation or the fact that perhaps we can't admit that a mistake was made. This is years later, after deregulation, and nobody is happy, so there should be a message here to the government.

Now, as I say, Mr. Speaker, in terms of how you do this, you take in Motion 510: to increase the supply of stable and reliable electricity to meet the demands of advanced manufacturing throughout the province. I think you have to get control of who's running the regulations again. As I said, when we had a regulated market, we could perhaps do something. I don't know how you do it if you don't have that regulated market. It becomes very difficult. I expect that that's part of the problem, why they've been so long in dealing with this particular problem and why we're having the energy shortages and the rest of it.

I mean, I'm certainly not going to vote against Motion 510. I think it's important that we look at what's happening there, but I think, ultimately, the answer – and I think I'm echoing somewhat what the Member for Calgary-Varsity said – is that we have to turn this clock around and start to do what works. What worked for many, many years in this province was a regulated market. What are working well in other provinces in some cases are regulated markets and public power. I know that we're not going to go there, Mr. Speaker. We had a chance back in 1948, but it was not to be. But something should trigger in this government the reality that it's time to take a different look at this whole approach.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise this evening and join the debate on Motion 510, transmission and associated infrastructure. I think that the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon should be congratulated for bringing forward a very interesting proposal, that gives us a unique opportunity to add greatly to Alberta's economic potential.

We have the most favourable business climate in the country, Mr. Speaker. Alberta-based companies are on the cutting edge of technology and development, and our current prosperity is constantly driving further innovation. As our economy grows stronger, it attracts more and more businesses and spurs increased economic development, which in turn provides more opportunities for Albertans. Our province is home to a vibrant and ever-expanding manufacturing industry, an industry whose success is directly tied to the overall well-being of our economy as a whole. They produce the goods and products that are so vital to the operation of other industries. When they prosper, we all prosper.

These companies produce a wide variety of products, but they all have one thing in common: their operations are dependent on a reliable source of electricity. The energy needs of these companies are diverse. Some require large amounts of power. Some require a further enhancement of reliability in the supply of power. It is in the best interests of all Albertans to give these companies every opportunity to develop better transmission infrastructure to ensure that their needs are met, regardless of what these needs may be. With Motion 510, Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity to do exactly that.

Alberta's electricity generation situation is unique. We've come from a situation of potential shortfall to one of sufficiency and even abundance. Our generation capacity has increased substantially over the last few years, and now we have the opportunity to encourage our manufacturing industry to benefit from this situation. As a result of our policies we have surplus power.

With our support of Motion 510 we can also improve the situation further by empowering Alberta's manufacturing industry to make the best use of this beneficial situation. We have the potential. We simply have to encourage the adaptation of this potential to the needs of manufacturing companies. This motion proposes that this be accomplished by establishing a regulatory framework that would recognize and make allowances for the unique electrical needs of manufacturing businesses throughout the province. This is an idea of great merit and one that fits with the practices that have made our province so successful. It is not encouraging subsidies. It is not providing handouts. It is encouraging Alberta's businesses by enabling them to do what they do best. It encourages giving our companies free rein to develop and bankroll their own unique electrical needs by providing a framework in which they can work.

I also see the potential to extend this idea to other businesses outside the manufacturing sector. In the constituency that I'm honoured to represent, Dunvegan-Central Peace, we have a strong agricultural industry and an industry which often relies upon a reliable power supply to sustain its operations. One such example, Mr. Speaker, would be the operations of our forage-drying industry, something which is very vital to the success of their harvest. The people who operate such machinery emphasize the importance of an uninterrupted power supply. If the power goes out when their drums are very hot, it can cause not only a halt in operation but great damage to their equipment as well.

This isn't any different, Mr. Speaker, than a machine shop operating a delicate CNC machine or sensitive computer equipment. Even though a forage-drying operation is not manufacturing anything, it is vital to the ongoing success of our province's economy. It is equally as important as manufacturing, especially to rural and northern areas of this province. This is why I'm pleased to offer my support to Motion 510. Not only is it a good, solid idea with the potential to increase the capabilities in productivity of Alberta's manufacturing industry; it also has the potential to serve as a template with applications in a lot of other areas as well.

In short, I see this as a great first step. We need to fully encourage the development and utilization of the power generation capacity that our policies have made available. We need to carry on the tradition of enabling the economic momentum that has made Alberta the best place in the world to live and work. With our support of Motion 510 we have a great opportunity to do exactly that, and as such, I'm pleased to offer my support. I also encourage all my other colleagues to join me in doing so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Minister of Energy.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to speak to Motion 510, electrical reliability, whose goal is to achieve greater consistency and reliability of electricity production through increased government investment in transmission and associated infrastructure. Whenever I think about electricity, I think about our need to diversify and to move towards more renewables.

I know that this isn't specifically addressed here, but it's an opportunity to talk about our responsibility globally and nationally to reduce our impact on the environment and reduce our climate-change contributions. I think, obviously, the importance of reliable, sustainable electricity is on everyone's minds, and if we don't take care of the planet, if we don't take care of the very source of all of our energy, it's clearly not going to achieve the long-term result that we all want, which is reliable and affordable electricity production.

Ideally, the Official Opposition would like to see the problem of reliability fixed through removing this deregulation, which has been so problematic, so costly, and hasn't served the interests of the people of Alberta. I understand that this will not do that; however, it will address some important problems around consistency and reliability, and I think that is something that we want to support.

Lack of accountability has been a significant problem in the deregulated system because there are so many bodies now to be held accountable when there are problems in the electricity system, and these bodies all have their own profits to try to take. Those responsible for serving Albertans are now less concerned about customer service and affordable prices and more interested in their shareholders and their profits.

However, Mr. Speaker, this is a positive motion, and I think the Official Opposition supports this in general. It addresses a vital issue for our future: our productivity, our consistency as a world competitor. We have vital resources internal to Alberta that absolutely rely on dependable, reliable electricity. Without it, I think we're going to see significant problems in our manufacturing sector. We need to ensure that the basic necessities for all Albertans are going to be there. This is a vital public interest that, again, like health care, like education, should be available to all regardless of their ability to pay. In my view and in our view, it should be a public utility, and it should be protected as the vital resource that it is.

Resolving the problem is a critical one, and I think this is going to take us a step closer to that. I would like to see more economic diversification associated with it and renewables associated with it. We have some innovative experiments. It's now time to level the playing field and allow them to be more competitive with the fossil-fuel-generated electricity in this province. The government clearly does need to take some responsibility for this and for, I hope, getting a handle on the whole accountability question in the province.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit and continue listening to the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to stand and support this motion as put forward by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon. Transmission is at the heart and core, really, of ensuring that we get reliable electricity delivered to our homes. It's fundamental, and I'd say that we have a great need in this province to get in front of the tremendous growth that's happening and build those highways to deliver that electricity from the generation plants to our homes and businesses.

There have been a number of lines already approved by the Alberta Electric System Operator. One is a 500 kV line between Edmonton and Calgary, the tremendous growth in that corridor. Another is in the southwest leg. There are two or three others in longer term planning that have to go ahead. We need to get support. No one likes some of these power lines and the substations right in their backyards. We appreciate that there are great impacts upon the public, especially those landowners that are directly impacted by them. Yet it is critical that those things be supported by the public if we want to count on reliable delivery and receipt of electricity in our homes.

One of the things that's confusing even in the discussion here is that there has been a lot of discussion about deregulation. Actually, this piece doesn't have anything to do with deregulation. Transmission always has been regulated and continues to be regulated. In fact, the motion specifically talks about: "to meet the demands . . . by increasing investment in transmission and associated infrastructure." Those pieces always have been directly regulated. The responsibility to ensure that the public good is served in that aspect hasn't changed in the past or even in today's structure. So discussions about deregulation, while interesting, don't relate to this motion at all.

With the particular needs – one I know that the hon. member is bringing forward, and rightly so, is a concern on behalf of his constituents. There are some very specific, unique requirements of at least one business, if not more, in the area. Fortunately, there has been quite a bit of progress made there, too, by approving a substation that needs to respond to that. That should be put in later this year. There's also, then, one of the companies in particular that has some very unique, specific electricity needs, not the requirement of the standard that most electricity users have. So those costs, the particular needs of one company, while regulated, wouldn't be fair to be paid by everyone, by all ratepayers.

That is the standard, that general requirements of transmission and building that system are paid by all ratepayers. When there's a peculiar need over and above the standard, those are paid by the individual companies. That is the challenge in this case, too. That company – yes, there are solutions for it, and, yes, they needed that substation in place, so those are some of the first steps. That will also provide this individual company the ability to address their unique requirements but at a cost to them since they are the ones that have these peculiar requirements over and above any standard need of delivery of the system. So that's what's happened in the case of our regulated model. All through the years there's a general requirement that's built in and paid for by all ratepayers, and then sometimes there are specific requirements by individual companies over and above those general requirements that are paid specifically by that company so that the average ratepayer doesn't have to pay for their unique needs.

But I fully support in this case this motion. We need to be in front working with these companies to ensure that there's long-term prosperity, that there's an avenue for them, that they can reliably predict getting electricity, that they can also anticipate their specific needs being addressed both by the general requirements put in by the system and by them also addressing it and upgrading their infrastructure for their particular needs. So I applaud the member for bringing this motion forward, and we will actively support that even from the Department of Energy's perspective.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that hits me about this – and I'm speaking in support of this motion – is the importance of having a reliable electrical supply. What concerns me in terms of this is the necessity, in my opinion, to have a plan. I'm specifically speaking about the St. Albert-Sturgeon-Westlock-Athabasca area, that whole area where we're going to have the new upgraders coming in. I think it behooves the government to take this good approach and look at a plan for other areas in the province that are going to be developed and need good, reliable electrical supply.

My position on this is that I support it, but I hope that when we're looking at things that are developing in again what we call the St. Albert-Morinville-Barrhead-Athabasca corridor, this whole aspect, this particular area of having reliable supply for commercial, industrial, residential is looked at and that we have this done ahead of time rather than have problems develop and after the fact have to look after it.

So those are just my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very, very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to join the debate on Motion 510. This is a very important motion. We've had some discussion tonight purportedly in support of the motion which was really talking about a deregulation and other aspects relative to energy. The fact of the matter is that we have had significant increases in the generation capacity for electrical energy in this province. There's been significant improvement in the supply, but where we do have a problem, the problem that needs to be addressed for industry in this province, is the stable and reliable delivery of that electricity.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon has indicated with respect to a particular industry, and that's one that's very close to home for me as a neighbouring constituency. In fact, the people that own that particular company live in my constituency.

So I just wanted to make some comments in support of the fact that we have done a number of really good things in this province, one of them is the policy which has allowed for the cogeneration of electricity, the biogeneration of electricity, the wind generation of electricity; in fact, many different methodologies of getting electrical generation on the market to the point now where we are the envy of North America in terms of electrical energy supply, but there are some issues that we need to deal with, and one of the fundamental issues that needs to be dealt with is to ensure that that electrical energy can get to industrial users and residential users in a stable and reliable way. That means that we need to have a regulatory framework which is flexible and which can adapt to changing circumstances, make sure that all of the regulatory processes and procedures we need to safeguard the consumer are there but also make sure that the people who wish to build reliable delivery mechanisms, transmission networks can do it, can recover their costs, can receive a return on investment for doing that, and can do it on a timely basis. That, Mr. Speaker, is what's missing in the process now.

I was very delighted to hear the Minister of Energy indicate that the Department of Energy is on that particular piece because as we move forward in this province with a very strong economy, with people who are willing to invest in this province to create new jobs for Albertans, to create new opportunities for Albertans, it's fundamental that we have a supply of energy, a supply of electrical energy. We've got that supply. Now we need to get it to the place where it's to be utilized, and that's what this motion addresses, and I am very strongly in support of it.

8:50

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Does the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon wish to close?

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a phenomenal economy today in this province, and I think it behooves us to do everything in our power to strengthen and diversify our economy so that future generations will continue to enjoy a standard of living comparable or even better than we enjoy today.

Mr. Speaker, the direction provided in this motion will continue to encourage visionary investors like the owners of Vanoil, Fiberex, and many others to think outside the box and continue to grow the Alberta economy, create quality jobs, and make a reasonable return on their investment.

Mr. Speaker, this is the Alberta advantage. I'd like to thank all members who spoke on this motion and encourage your support. Thank you very much.

Private Bills
Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1
Burns Memorial Trust Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very, very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to move Bill Pr. 1, the Burns Memorial Trust Amendment Act, 2006.

Some of you may know that Senator Patrick Burns was a proud Albertan, and he is an incredible role model for us all. He was one of the Big Four who founded the Calgary Stampede. Mr. Burns was chairman of the Burns Company Ltd. and president of various Burns businesses. These are just a few of the reasons why he was inducted into the Canadian Business Hall of Fame.

He became a Senator in 1931 and died in Calgary in 1937. Senator Patrick Burns school in Calgary was named in his honour in 1961, and just last month while on horseback just southwest of my riding of Calgary-Lougheed I was honoured to ride past the mountain that proudly bears his name. Truly, Senator Burns was an amazing individual.

But there's more, Mr. Speaker. Under his will Senator Burns established a charitable trust, later codified under the Burns Memorial Trust Act. The act was originally enacted in 1956 and was amended in 1981 and 2001. The trustee of the Burns memorial trust since inception is the Royal Trust Corporation of Canada. The investments held by the trust are currently valued at approximately $45 million. The trustee distributes certain investment returns earned on the assets of the Burns memorial trust to five charities, which include the Governing Council of the Salvation Army in Canada, the Sisters of Charity of Providence of Calgary, the Burns memorial fund for children, the Burns memorial police fund, and the Burns memorial fire fund. The income from the trust property is distributed equally in quarterly instalments among the beneficiary organizations. Annual trust distributions have been approximately $1,800,000.

In 2001 the act was amended to permit amongst other things the trustee to have the authority to invest the assets of the Burns memorial trust according to prudent investor standards and in accordance with a total return investment policy. The act was also amended to deal with the payments to the beneficiaries. Section 8 of the act provided that the trustee would distribute an annual amount "determined in accordance with the regulations dealing with the disbursement quotas for private foundations in the Income Tax Act (Canada), in equal portions to the Beneficiaries."

The disbursement quota is an amount calculated under the Income Tax Act of Canada in order to ensure that most of a registered charity's funds are used for charitable purposes; however, this disbursement quota amount is a minimum only, and charities are able to spend more of their income on their charitable activities as they desire. The disbursement quota for a private foundation is very generally the sum of 80 per cent of the receipted donations in the preceding year, a hundred per cent of the gifts received from other registered charities in the preceding year, plus 3.5 per cent of the aggregate value of the investment assets valued at certain times in the prior two years. The actual formula is much more complex.

In any case, as the Burns memorial trust has not receipted any donations nor received gifts from other registered charities, the disbursement quota under the Income Tax Act of Canada for the Burns memorial trust is calculated as 3.5 per cent of the aggregate value for its investment assets. At the time of the amendment to section 8 of the act the disbursement quota was calculated on the basis of 4.5 per cent of the aggregate value of investment assets. The rate was reduced in federal budget amendments to the Income Tax Act to 3.5 per cent, effective for taxation years commencing after March 22, 2004. So, as a result, the disbursement quota for 2005 was 4.5 per cent of the investment assets but was reduced in 2005 to 3.5 per cent of the value of investment assets.

The final financial impact of the reduction of the rate used in calculating the disbursement quota from 4.5 per cent to 3.5 per cent has been to reduce the annual payments to the beneficiaries from approximately $1,820,000 per year to $1,420,000. Each beneficiary who previously received $364,000 per year for their charitable activities now receives $284,000 per year.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the trustee of the Burns memorial trust and the beneficiaries wish to amend the act to simply allow the trustee the discretion to pay the beneficiaries an annual amount that may be in excess of the minimum disbursement quota rather than an inflexible fixed percentage of 3.5 per cent. The trustee and the beneficiaries would like the act to provide discretion to the trustee to pay out annual amounts in excess of the disbursement quota if, indeed, it is deemed appropriate.

The proposed amendment to section 8 of the act would require the trustee to determine annually the amount to be paid to the beneficiaries provided that that amount shall not be less than the disbursement quota amount. This will give the trustee the flexibility to meet the funding needs of the beneficiary charities while ensuring the preservation of the value of capital of the Burns memorial trust. Indeed, this is good-news legislation, Mr. Speaker, and it is with both humility and pride that I sponsor this initiative.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, the Burns Memorial Trust Amendment Act, 2006.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The Liberal caucus is in complete support of Bill Pr. 1. In Alberta we're extremely fortunate that we have so many philanthropists who, having made their fame and fortune in Alberta, have given back through their estates. Three names come to mind right off the bat for the University of Calgary, and those are Haskayne, Markin, and Rozsa. Recently, this past Thursday in Calgary, the Member for Calgary-Currie and myself were also made aware of the Sheftel legacy. Alberta philanthropists have big hearts and big wallets, and we very much appreciate their legacies.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Does the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed wish to close?

Mr. Rodney: I'm closed.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 2

Mary Immaculate Hospital of Mundare Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, Mary Immaculate Hospital of Mundare Act.

Mary Immaculate hospital of Mundare was incorporated under chapter 106 of the Statutes of Alberta in 1962. Bill Pr. 2 takes care of the modernization of the corporate structure for the governance of this hospital. I encourage all members to support second reading of Pr. 2.

9:00

Mr. Chase: I am pleased to again rise and provide our Liberal caucus support for Bill Pr. 2, the Mary Immaculate Hospital of Mundare Act. Well done.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Red Deer-North wish to close?

Mrs. Jablonski: Close, Mr. Speaker, and move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 3
Edmonton Community Foundation
Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured tonight to rise on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to move second reading of Bill Pr. 3, the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006.

The aim of this bill is to allow the foundation to modernize its governance mechanisms, make changes to its method of appointing board members, seek clarification regarding the power of the foundation's board to indemnify its officials and to buy liability insurance. The committee has recommended that Bill Pr. 3 proceed with amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chase: As the representative of the Liberal caucus I am pleased to recognize the three home runs that the government has hit in consecutive fashion tonight: Bill Pr. 1, Bill Pr. 2, and now over the fence again with Bill Pr. 3, the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to briefly comment on the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006. This act, of course, helps to modernize the structure of the community foundation. But it would be remiss if I, as a member representing a constituency in Edmonton, didn't take the opportunity to put on the record what good work the Edmonton Community Foundation does in this city in terms of being a place where people can make donations to a foundation, a foundation which then manages those trust funds, those endowment funds, and turns those funds into good works in the community to support so many of the efforts which make this community a great place to live and to work.

So to Mr. Martin Garber-Conrad, who is the new executive director – I guess not new anymore: he's been in there for a year or so now – and the many people who work with the Edmonton Community Foundation I think we owe a debt of gratitude for the work that they're doing. This act will help them with their efforts by helping to modernize their organization.

I just wanted to put those comments on the record. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. mover wish to close?

Mr. Oberle: Call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and
Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: We are currently considering amendment A2. Does anyone wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: I have spoken once already, Mr. Chairman, but I could refresh on that issue if you wish.

The Chair: We're in committee, so you can speak again.

Dr. Swann: Well, amendment A2 on Bill 29 is really, in essence, an attempt to ensure that while this amendment would allow the government and specifically the director to delegate inspection of sites for reclamation purposes, it's a change from the past, in which internal employees of Alberta Environment would be taking that role. This would now allow the director to appoint outside people and organizations to do inspections and follow through on approvals and reclamation certificates. Our concern, again, is that this not be in any way construed as a conflict of interest and that there be no bias in the reclamation of sites and that, indeed, by making such appointments public, we could all live with it because we would be able to hold accountable those individuals and organizations that are carrying out the role under the director. So this amendment simply asks that the identification of outsiders be made public for the purposes of accountability.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat on amendment A2.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With regard to the need for a public registry, I'd like to thank the hon. member for suggesting this. I understand what the hon. member is intending with this proposed amendment; however, the ministry doesn't feel that a public registry is needed.

The minister is committed to a system of shared governance that includes publicly open and transparent processes as well as clearly identified roles and responsibilities for partners. Alberta Environment will continue to be transparent in selecting and working with partners. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the department sees an ever-increasing role of Albertans in all walks of life to help protect the environment, such as agrologists and environmental engineers. I can assure you that at the end of the day accounting for these systems of shared governance will remain with the minister.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the ministry doesn't feel that it is necessary to have this amendment.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I think a recurring theme that we'll be hearing tonight is transparency and accountability. What has happened over the years is that the government has been so busy counting up the shekels that it has received from oil and gas wealth. They've only looked at the credit side of the account. They haven't looked at the debit side, and the debit side is in the hundreds of unreclaimed wells throughout this province.

What amendment A2 speaks to is the fact that there should be no suggestion or no hint of any conflict of interest, where companies that originally left the sites unreclaimed have gone through a series of transitions and company buyouts and amalgamations and so on, and we may get to the point where through political appointees some of the negligent individuals and companies that originally left the wells in their unreclaimed state now have the benefit of not only deriving the resources from those wells but assisting in the cleanup. The taxpayer gets stuck twice: once in that the job wasn't done properly the first time, and then through a political appointment process which is not transparent, the companies benefit for a second time.

If this government truly believes in transparency and accountability, a public registry is an absolute necessity to ensure public faith, government accountability, and transparency.

I speak in favour of amendment A2 and would urge the government to support A2. It puts into place true accountability. It takes the responsibility out of the government's hands and gives it back to the public, that, in truth, should be the ones running this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on amendment A2.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 29, as I mentioned in second reading, has some good aspects to it, but there were some problematic areas as I recollect. This was one of them, that I alluded to in second reading, the fact that it may be reasonable to report and have this, but we need the public registry. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, the oversight – in other words: who is the minister delegating authority to? In most cases perhaps it's somebody that it should be. We all use the name of Dr. Schindler or somebody like that. Nobody has any objections to that. That seems to make common sense. But there would be this feeling if there wasn't a public registry that: who else is the minister delegating authority to? Is it people within the industry?

I would almost see this as a friendly amendment if the government is interested in the transparency. I think others talked about it in terms of the law. I know that the Environmental Law Centre has contacted the Minister of Environment's office to discuss its own concerns, and this was a major concern that they had. They were suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that we at least have this public registry, that could be fairly clear in terms of who the minister has delegated authority to.

It seems to me that this simple amendment would go some way in doing that, and I would hope that the government, having had time to think about this – and it's not just coming from the opposition. As I say, it's coming from people that have some knowledge in this area, the Environmental Law Centre. With a public registry the minister could still do the same things, but it would be open and transparent and there would be some recognition about why they have delegated this authority to certain people.

Mr. Chairman, we had a similar amendment, but this one certainly would do the same as the amendment that we had, and I would support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The fifth amendment really allows Alberta Environment to partner with a wide range of organizations and individuals in order to deliver our environmental protection mandate. The amendment specifically broadens the list of candidates to which the minister may delegate work, and this supports place-based approaches to environmental management. As with all partnerships the ministry will ensure accountability frameworks are in place. I think perhaps it's a bit of a stretch to assume that the oil or gas industry would be one of those partners.

The current legislation restricts Environment's ability to let other government agencies, communities, and qualified Albertans manage their environment. With this amendment they can partner with local organizations, which are better positioned to understand the needs of their community and their environment. Alberta Environment will develop agreements with partners so that they are clear on accountabilities, responsibilities, duties, and reporting requirements. Any system envisioned under this approach is one of shared governance that includes publicly open and transparent processes as well as clearly defined roles and responsibilities of those involved.

Mr. Chairman, the speaker does not believe that specific legislative provisions are required to assure the public. At the end of the day the accountability of these systems of shared governance will remain with the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. That may well be the case. But, again, how would having a public registry detract from that? It seems to me that that would enhance the process, precisely what the member was talking about.

All we're saying is that the minister still would have that authority, Mr. Chairman, but there would be a public registry so that we'd know who he has designated that authority to. It would in no way stop the hon. minister from doing precisely what the member is talking about. It's just in a public registry.

I wonder: why the reluctance? I guess that I'd ask the member if he's had discussion with the minister's office about this in view of the fact that a very influential group such as the Environmental Law Centre has recommended that, and if there was some discussion, why that was rejected. I don't think it detracts from the minister being able to do exactly the things that the member is talking about. It just makes the process open and above board.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would just like to ask the hon. mover of the bill if he has within his information the exact number of orphaned well sites and if these orphaned well sites – the number of them and the location of them and a map accompanying as part of that location – are posted on a government site either under Energy or Environment so that Albertans could have a sense of the complexity and size of the number of orphaned well sites. I think that if Albertans were aware of just how many there were and their location, they might want to become more involved in the approval process. I think that anything we can do to involve and include the public in meaningful decision-making, the better we are.

If the hon. mover can enlighten the House as to those questions – how many orphaned well sites do we have, and are they posted on a government web site either through Energy or Environment and his opinion on whether this would improve public involvement in future approvals – I would be very pleased to hear his responses.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Well, quite frankly, even though the orphaned wells and orphaned well sites are very important, those are really upstream activities, and these amendments here deal with downstream activities. I do not have the information on that because that's not pertinent to the bill at this time.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a third amendment to recommend, and I'm thankful if you could circulate that. The essence of amendment A3, I suppose, is that we strike out the new section (a) under 112(1) and sustain the old section (a), which would not permit contaminated sites to simply be managed. They would be required to continue in the original commitment to "repair, remedy and confine the effects of the substance," and "remove or otherwise dispose of the substance." It is not in the interests of people and the environment, both health and environmental impact, to accept the notion that we would simply manage risk by covering over such contaminated sites and install test wells around the contaminated sites to monitor forever the potential for migration of an ongoing unremediated, unreclaimed site.

So the purpose of this amendment is to return to the original commitment to reclaim and remediate soil and return it to equivalent use. I am open to further discussion on that amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, we will call this amendment A3. While it's being distributed, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: 9:20 Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Katrina MacNeil and Kyle Langelaar in the Speaker's gallery. Katrina just finished her first year at UBC Okanagan where she is pursuing a bachelor of arts degree in political science. She's particularly interested in the political and humanitarian issues in South America. As well, today is the day that she turns 20 years old.

Kyle is visiting from our neighbour prairie province, Saskatchewan. He is a chicken farmer as well as an employee at a Saskatoon hotel. He hopes to attend university in January to study hospitality. They are both accomplished students and travelers, and most of all, Katrina is the sister and Kyle is the best friend of one of our LAO pages, Desirée MacNeil.

An Hon. Member: You didn't get them to stand.

Mr. Martin: Oh. I didn't get you to stand. Are you back there? Please stand.

Bill 29
Environmental Protection and
Enhancement Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Does everyone have a copy of amendment A3?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A3.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm speaking in favour of A3. There is a tremendous difference between not only the definitions of manage versus reclaim but the realities. Manage can simply say that you've put a fence around the area, a bit of barbed wire with a sign: danger; unreclaimed site. That could be considered management versus what I believe is necessary, and that's total reclamation.

We have so many spots, environmental blights, and potential problems throughout this province because we haven't done the cleanup as we went along. Our desire to get there faster has meant that we've left a number of sites behind, and what this A3 is suggesting is that we go back to the original wording, which was considerably stronger. It said that we've got to reclaim these sites.

We debated last spring about empowering companies to go back onto the sites and reclaim the sites that were left in an unsatisfactory condition to begin with. It seems to me that the original wording of this bill, particularly section 112(1), had that intent. It wasn't enough just to simply manage, which is a very loose term, but we had to remediate, reclaim the site as close to its original condition as it was possible without any environmental hazards associated with it. The amendment is very clear.

The government in its wisdom wrote a much tougher section originally, and to take away that requirement to reclaim or remediate is basically giving a licence to avoid proper management and proper drilling in the first place because if companies are only going to be charged with managing as opposed to cleanup, there is no motivation for them to do things right in the first place.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that the previous bill – this is the one with a much stronger section 112, and I think this is what the hon. member is driving at. He wants Section 112 amended "by renumbering it as section 112(1)" and adding the following. It seems to me that we're going backwards in this particular part of it.

As I said earlier on, there are some good parts to this bill, but where previously section 112 read "take all reasonable measures to . . . remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment," that seems to me a fairly strong statement. Now in the proposed amendment section 112 would read: "remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to prevent an adverse effect or further adverse effect." It seems to me that that's a watering down. If we're remediating, we're managing, and we're removing. That's not nearly as strong as a statement as "to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment." What could be more important than to do that? An environment bill. Why are we reducing it?

An Hon. Member: To save money.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, I expect it is to save money, but "remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of," in an environment bill. I'd say to the hon. member – it's again been that discussion with the minister – why would we take a strong statement and weaken it? Is it because it's money? Is it because we're not going to go after these companies or what? I like the statement that was there in 112.

We recognize, of course, that there's a wide variety of techniques and technologies. We could have perhaps put that in, but it seems to me that the ultimate goal of any environment bill, an act, should be the maximum protection of human life, health, and the environment.

I would ask the member why we are doing this. Why are we watering down this particular section? Without being cynical about it, is it because the companies have told us that they want to do this, and they can get away with more? If we have a stronger statement, is that a problem for them? I just don't understand why we'd water this down at this particular time, so I'd ask the member if he could perhaps tell us why we're doing that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really appreciate the hon. member's comments on the matter regarding their suggestion that there's a need for the department to require more remediation and less risk management.

I would like to clarify that cleanup is the preferred option that is promoted above all else under the EPEA. Cleanup applies to the majority of sites in Alberta that have contamination, but when the cost to clean up becomes prohibitively expensive, there are other more flexible options that will provide the same level of health protection and allow beneficial reuse of the site. I believe this is especially important for sites that have an active potential for redevelopment in urban and suburban areas, such as Hub Oil.

In many cases risk management alternatives bring revitalization to our communities more quickly and avoid lands being left as brownfields where further development is prevented by inflexible rules. If any monitoring notes any type of adverse effect or change, the company is obligated to report it and to clean it up. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment clarifies that even if the site has been closed, the company has a duty and an obligation to mitigate and to clean it up. Prohibitively expensive sites are exceptional cases, as the one I mentioned, and risk management will only be used if the site that is contaminated is well contained.

Mr. Chairman, an amendment as proposed wouldn't really serve the greater interests of appropriate environmental protection and future land use.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I guess what I'd like to know is what the definition of remediation is, then, and management because if it's a site like Hub Oil, for instance – I believe the hon. member referred to that – and it is prohibitively expensive to clean up, perhaps a worthwhile use of that land, that brownfield site, would be, quite literally then, to turn it into a green field; in other words, green space, a park, some place where people would not be prepared to stay there long enough that anything under the ground seeping through would cause them any hazard to their health. Perhaps. I don't know, and perhaps the member will explain it to me as he defines remediation or management. You know, remediation or management where the cost of cleanup is prohibitively expensive is not good enough if you plan to plunk a building down on top of it, you know, whether that's a building that people are going to be in for part of the day working or whether that's a building where people are going to live, a house.

9:30

Hub Oil was mentioned as an example, and of course Hub Oil was located in Calgary. We have another famous example from Calgary of precisely the way not to do environmental cleanups, and it's called Lynnwood Ridge. Years ago, decades ago, that was an active refinery site. The oil company decommissioned the refinery, certainly did some cleanup at the time, and then – correct me if I'm wrong, but I think we were in the midst of another boom at the time – because there was a shortage of housing in Calgary, there was pressure to develop that refinery site for residential housing. Of course, that's exactly what happened until – what would it be now: three or four years? – suddenly it turned out that noxious, toxic, poisonous fumes were leaching up from under the soil into people's basements. Heavy metals were leaching up. Although now well secured and the property reasonably well preserved and cared for by the oil company, which does still bear responsibility for the cleanup after long and protracted negotiations with Alberta Environment, Lynnwood Ridge is, in fact, a virtual ghost town. The company had to buy out most of the residents, and now we have an abandoned neighbourhood.

Now, yes, maybe this time the cleanup will be done properly. I don't know. But it doesn't change the fact that an awful lot of houses were built on a site that wasn't properly cleaned up to begin with, and an awful lot of people's lives and financial situations and possibly their health were jeopardized. We'll find that part out in the years to come, I suppose. I think that was a textbook case of how not to remediate or manage a contaminated brownfield site.

So, yes, I would like a definition from the hon. member as to what "remediate" and "manage" would mean if we leave Bill 29 as it reads, if we don't pass the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Of course, the amendment by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is in effect an amendment to an amending bill, an amending piece of legislation. Amendments are supposed to improve legislation, not weaken it, not water it down. If we do not pass the amendment proposed by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, then essentially we're leaving the cleanup of the most cost-prohibitive contaminated sites – and it follows logically that the most cost-prohibitive contaminated sites are, therefore, the most difficult to clean up in most cases – to our children, their children, their children's children, and we are washing our hands of it and saying: we really can't be bothered. That's not good enough for me, Mr. Chairman. I'll be voting in favour of this amendment.

Thank you.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Remediation is total cleanup. Management would be monitored – and I repeat, monitored – containment. I think that we're only assuming that buildings would be built there again knowing that the site is there, and I think greenfields are more preferred than brownfields.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The original section 112 is very much along the Liberal long-term view of things. What has happened with this bill speaks to immediate gratification versus long-term results.

The hon. mover of the bill suggested that risk management is the way to go because costs become prohibitively expensive. I would say to the mover of this bill: what could be more expensive than a series of environmental land mines spread throughout the province? What is the cost to future generations of leaving these sites unreclaimed? What is the cost to the environment, to animals wild and domesticated, and to people who live in the surrounding areas? So when we're talking cost and we're weighing the two sides, the profit and the debits, surely we have to take into account the long-term effects of leaving these sites simply managed but unreclaimed.

We spoke earlier in debate about having companies responsible for creating a reclamation pool, and the hon. Minister of Environment initially proposed this and then drew it back.

Dr. Swann: A cleanup fund.

Mr. Chase: A cleanup fund. It seems to me that what we're doing again is taking away the responsibilities of the companies to do it right the first time, knowing that management will be their only requirement, as opposed to total reclamation.

I would say that we have to start looking into the future and recognizing the costs of simply managing risk as opposed to dealing with it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you. Well, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, the intent of this amendment is to ensure that industry remains responsible for old sites where contamination causing an adverse effect is discovered and becomes apparent. Quite frankly, also, any closed sites that continue to have an adverse effect will be reported and managed appropriately, as I mentioned before.

This amendment supports the recommendations of the Contaminated Sites Stakeholder Advisory Committee and significant stakeholder input. The two-year consultation process with stakeholders included industry associations, nongovernment organizations, Alberta Environment, Municipal Affairs, the Farmers' Advocate, Finance, Energy, the Energy and Utilities Board, the Canadian Bankers Association, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, it's of some interest to me that the Minister of Environment has arrived in the House, and I think it would be an opportunity for him to comment on this amendment also. I hope that he will take the opportunity to speak to this amendment.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat talks about flexible options, risk management, allowing more prompt use of the site, and a company being responsible for cleanup. Well, what message does this send, Mr. Chairman, if we are allowing industry off the hook? If they don't actually have to remediate, if they don't actually have to clean up because it's too expensive, what message does that send to industry? The more you pollute, the less you pay: is that the message we want to send to industry? Is that the legacy we want to leave to our children? Surely not.

When the hon. member speaks for members of the contaminated sites advisory group saying that they support this, I beg to differ. I know a number of the members on that advisory group that reject this categorically.

This does not serve the future. This does not serve the environment. This does not serve public health. It is a travesty, allowing industry to get away with our future and our children's future. It's saying: we won't expect you to pay for the cleanup if it's too expensive for you, so the longer you leave it and the more you pollute, the less you'll have to pay. Does that make sense for our future? No, it doesn't.

We will not support this, and we will vigorously oppose this denial of our environment on the basis of industry interests.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

9:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thanks, Mr. Chair. In answer I just have to repeat that if any monitoring notes any type of adverse effect or change, the company is obligated to report it and to clean it up. This amendment also clarifies that even if the site has been closed, the company has a duty and obligation to mitigate and clean it up.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the company has an obligation to reclaim it or to deal with migrating pollution, is that a hundred years from now? Is that 200 years from now? Is the company still going to be around to do the cleanup? Who is responsible for a site a hundred years from now? This doesn't make sense to postpone and fail to do the proper diligence in terms of identifying a spill and cleaning up the spill, which is what you have enacted under EPEA, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. You're again saying that you will postpone this forever. This is not stewardship.

The Chair: I was going to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, so perhaps I'll do that now, and the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat can address the answers after that.

Mr. Taylor: That's okay. I'll pass.

The Chair: Okay. Does the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat wish to respond now?

Mr. Mitzel: All I can say to that, really, is that there are very few sites that are prohibitively too expensive to clean up. In that case, as I mentioned before, those sites would be contained, managed, monitored. As I mentioned, the definition of managed was monitoring containment on that. If there was any change, then there would have to be cleanup for that change. That's all I was talking about.

The hon. member mentioned something about a hundred years or further. We can only speculate how long it's going to take to manage that. We're talking about cleaning up sites. For the majority of sites in Alberta we're talking about immediate cleanup. On management we're talking about very few. I think two sites were mentioned. Perhaps there are a couple more, but two sites were mentioned tonight when we were talking. Those are managed. Those are contained, managed, and monitored.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again: contained, managed, monitored. Give us a specific example, and tell us how they would be contained, how they would be managed, how they would be monitored, how they are being contained, managed, monitored. Is this ongoing now, or are we, you know, trying to create a scenario here that allows us to build a nuclear reactor in the oil sands and then dispose of the nuclear waste and not have to worry about its 10,000 year half-life? What's going on here?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the member – and I don't know where the Minister of Environment is now.

Mr. Boutilier: I'm right in front of you.

Mr. Martin: Oh. That's where we need you, over there, so we can get some answers.

The point that we're making here, why it is so worrisome to me, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: when we use words like "remediate, manage, remove," those are often what we call weasel words. They don't mean much. When we take away from section 112 what was very clear, that we want "to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment," and we move it in to what I call sort of these weasel words that nobody understands particularly what they are in a major environment act, that's what's creating the problems, I think, over here.

It looks like, again, it's a watering down of what we had before in a particular bill. I for the life of me still don't understand what these words mean: remediate, manage, remove. I mean, you understand the dilemma that people are facing here when we take out, as I say, a very strong statement and we put in those sorts of words.

This is in an environment act, Mr. Chairman, that should mean something. If I'm a company and it says "to effect maximum protection to human life, health and the environment," that really gives a statement, and then we move to "manage, remove, or otherwise" – I think it's a watering down. I think that's what the problem is on this side. We don't see the need for it. The member says, probably correctly, that there are a few sites that he's aware of. But why are we doing this in this particular act? I think that's what we're trying to get to the bottom of, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to have a better explanation than we've had so far.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Chairman, at the cost of repeating myself, I think that the remediation is going to happen with nearly all the sites that are contaminated or found contaminated, and the industry has an obligation to report them and clean them up. As far as an example for the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, the Hub Oil site does have monitoring wells on it. These are monitored and checked, and if there's any change to any degree of the contamination or movement, then that will certainly be noted and will be rectified, will be adjusted to make sure that it remains contained.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Industry as a whole historically, with some notable exceptions like Nexon, has not been responsible to date nor has the Alberta government, or we wouldn't have had so many sites orphaned throughout the province. What is the incentive for industry in the future to be rigorous or do due diligence if they simply are required to monitor? Neither the Energy and Utilities Board nor Alberta Environment has the manpower now to properly monitor. Approvals are flying out the door, particularly with coal-bed methane, and we're just compounding a problem rather than resolving it. Part of the approval process should be that before you're allowed to proceed, any historical, unreclaimed sites must first be cleaned up. That would provide industry with the incentive to do it right at least the second time around if they didn't do it the first time around before they're allowed to drill further. Demonstrate your environmental responsibility before you pursue the economic advantage.

Mr. Mitzel: I think that I'm finding that any answers I would give now will just be repetitious. Mr. Chair, if it's all right with the House, I'd like to call the question on this.

Dr. Swann: By this logic, Mr. Chairman, the oil sands should be managed; it shouldn't be cleaned up. By this logic it is going to be so expensive to clean up those tailings ponds and the big gaps in the earth's surface that they should clearly not be properly reclaimed and remediated. By this logic we should leave those things with monitoring wells all around them and not expect the industry to pay the multibillion dollars of cleanup costs. This clearly flies in the face of rationality. This leaves a tremendous damaged legacy to our children. It means that the public will be paying for cleanup a hundred years from now when that business is no longer functioning, when it's gone bankrupt or gone into some other business.

Mr. Chairman, this is a travesty. This cannot be accepted by the House. The amendment is simply suggesting we go back to the original wording, which says that we will guarantee protection of health and safety of the environment, and we will return the land to equivalent use. It is requiring of industry what we said we would require of them. They must return the land to equivalent use. Why are you letting them off the hook? They know the risks they're taking. Why are you letting them off the hook? They know the risk they are taking. They have millions of dollars. If they don't want to take the risk of contaminating the land, then they shouldn't be in that business. Why are we letting them off the hook, Mr. Chairman?

I would appreciate the Environment minister speaking to this. He's going to have to deal with it in the future.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, of course we recognize that there's a wide variety of techniques and technologies resulting in both immediate and progressive reclamation of polluted sites. But, at the very minimum what you could have done if you wanted to talk about "remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of," if that means something to anybody, why couldn't we have kept in there the most important part of it, require "maximum protection to human life, health and environment," and then you could have put in "remediate, manage, remove or otherwise dispose of the substance in such a manner as to prevent an adverse effect or further adverse effect."

Read this way, Mr. Chairman, the amendment would have actually strengthened the remediation responsibilities rather than water them down. The fact that we pulled out the most important part of the bill leads us to be very concerned about it. I know that the member is trying, but we still have not had an explanation why we would take out that part of it that's the most important part of the act and say: now we put in some other words that don't mean much in themselves. If they're going to manage, remove, or otherwise dispose of it, it should be to effect maximum protection to human life, health, and environment. Then we could probably live with it. If you take out the most important part of it, it makes no sense.

I know that the member is frustrated, but there has still not been given a logical answer why we took out the part of this bill that really carried the teeth to it. It's what an environment bill should be about. If an environment bill is not about effecting maximum protection to human life, health, and the environment, I don't know what an environment bill is all about. So this is the problem that we face, and again, Mr. Chairman, we have not had the explanation of why we want to do this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask the Minister of Environment what he means when he says that he'll use every fibre of his being to protect the environment for our future, for our children's future. This is clearly a step back from that. We want to protect the environment. We want the polluter to pay. I think we want the polluter to pay. I think we know that the industries take on that risk when they assume the liabilities associated with their work. The industries say they are prepared to deal with their cleanup costs. They have said that. I am simply looking for some accountability. It's only going to come from one ministry and one minister, and it's going to demand from these industries that they do just what they committed to do, and that is to return the site to equivalent use, not let them off the hook.

This is an invitation to pollute because we are saying within this amendment that if it's too expensive for you, we won't make you clean it up. If it's too expensive, we'll just have you cover it and monitor it into perpetuity. I would ask the minister to speak to that. What does it mean to use every fibre of your being to protect health, safety, and the future of the planet?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thanks very much. First of all, ladies and gentlemen, members, I want to say that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has answered the questions. The member has in a very forthright way met with the members across the way to provide them with answers to their questions. He's been doing that day in and day out, and what I continue to hear on the other opposite side is a bunch of rhetoric that you know is toothless and absolutely bottomless in what you're saying.

You know that this hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has done very diligent work working with you. Furthermore, I have never heard so much balderdash tonight from the member across the way and what you were saying. You know it's not true. You know that the merits of what you're saying is a bunch of rhetoric. Ultimately, everyone on this side, and I assumed every member on that side, actually does care about the environment. But what I hear tonight is rhetoric. You know and I know that you're not interested in helping the environment. You're in here trying to make some political points. And you know what? I'm a public servant as Minister of Environment that is here to protect the environment, and I will protect the land, the air, and the water like we have been doing. It is the law, it will continue to be the law, and what we have in front of us tonight is even strengthening the law in terms of the Alberta Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I cite Standing Order 23, sections (h), (i), and (j): "makes allegations against another member; imputes false or unavowed motives to another member; uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," which we have just seen.

Mr. Chairman, if there is one thing that my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View cannot be accused of it's of not caring about the environment. He has also been accused of telling an untruth here, and I don't think that that can be substantiated. I think that certainly imputes false or unavowed motives to another member, and is certainly abusive and insulting language in my book. I'll leave it at that.

The Chair: Anyone else wish to speak on the point of order? The citation in 23(h), (i), and (j), I believe it was, making allegations – did you wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Boutilier: Did someone speak already?

The Chair: There was a point of order 23(h), (i), and (j), which is: "makes allegations against another member; imputes false or unavowed motives to another member; uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I totally disagree. When I talk about political rhetoric, that I've heard it here, that's exactly what I heard, so I stand by what I said.

The Chair: The term "rhetoric" has been used in this House several times and never been considered as abusive or insulting, and I've heard it from all sides of the House. The false or unavowed motives: I'm not sure what specific comments you're relating to. If you could help me out with that, I would be appreciative.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Specifically, that the minister accused my colleague of saying things that were not true.

An Hon. Member: What's your point?

Mr. Taylor: You want another point of order?

Furthermore, although I concede your point about rhetoric, I don't know whether balderdash is on the list of unparliamentary language or not. In terms of explaining rhetoric, he went on to say that the member does not care about the environment or words to that effect, and I think the minister himself knows that that is not true.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. The comments that were made from the other side were about "travesty." The implication and the intimation that was being made was as if the hon. member does not care about the environment, that this is a bad day, that it is ultimately something that is not true in terms of what we're trying to do. I am not aware that the word "balderdash" is unparliamentary. If it is, I will withdraw it, but I stand by the context of what I have said here tonight in terms of this side, in fact, supporting environmental principles.

The Chair: Obviously, the comments that were made, I will say, did create disorder because we have seen the results of that at this point. The minister has stated that he withdrew certain comments.

Mr. Boutilier: No, no, Mr. Chairman. I'm not withdrawing balderdash. If it's unparliamentary I will, but balderdash I will not withdraw.

The Chair: What did you withdraw?

Mr. Boutilier: I'm not withdrawing anything. I'm saying that if balderdash is considered unparliamentary, I'll withdraw it, but in my understanding of what I understand about balderdash when I heard it on Fred Flintstone and The Flintstones, it is a parliamentary word.

The Chair: Hon. members, obviously, under 23(j) if nothing else the comments that were made by the minister obviously did create disorder in the House, but if we could accept that and carry on from this point, would that be acceptable? There's a point of order on 23(j) for creating disorder. So let's proceed with the debate.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: Thank you. If current government members vote against this amendment, which is to basically restore the original government intention, then they show Albertans that they are willing to compromise the environment for the sake of immediate economic gratification rather than a sustainable smart growth, protected environment. To the Minister of Environment: how can the Environment minister, with only a half per cent of the budget, carry through with the heavy responsibility of environmental protection?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have one question, a relatively quick question, I think, for the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. He's indicated in debate on this particular amendment that there are perhaps only one or two sites in the province that we're discussing when it comes to managing as opposed to full reclamation.

I'm curious as to whether or not he's aware of a site in Edmonton on the corner of 105th Street and Whyte Avenue, which is the location of a former service station and is obviously prime real estate, sitting on Whyte Avenue, surrounded by commercial operations, one of the hot spots in the city, as it were, in terms of commercial activity, yet this site has now sat empty for in excess of 10 years waiting for somebody to reclaim it. In the meantime I believe it's being monitored, although I'm not sure. I'm not even entirely sure whether or not it falls under this piece of legislation. Perhaps it falls under the Municipal Government Act. But it certainly would be another example of a site that just seems to sit there, waiting for somebody to decide they're going to be responsible for it. Clearly, the government isn't willing to put the money forward to look after it. I understand that there are questions over who should be responsible because the land changed ownership several times over the years before the service station operation finally ceased operating.

I think it's at least, then, the third example of exactly what we're talking about here, on a much smaller scale than perhaps some of the other ones but a very visible example in that it is, as I suggested, located in a prime location in a major commercial district, which has literally thousands if not tens of thousands of people walking in the vicinity every day of the year. So it's very relevant to this particular amendment, and I'd be curious to know whether or not the member has any comments in relation to that specific location.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, in fact, I'm well aware of that particular site, and that was one of the reasons why this amendment is here. The Minister of Environment has spoken to the mayor about this, and this amendment will help that site. This site is privately owned. It's owned by Imperial Oil. It is being monitored and contained. As I said, this amendment will help with the remediation, being able to put this site back into commercial use. That's exactly why this amendment is here.

The Chair: Anyone else on amendment A3? Ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Chair's Ruling
Divisions in Committees of the Whole House

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, Standing Order 32(2.1) states that "when a division is called in Committee of the Whole or Committee of Supply, a member may request unanimous consent to waive suborder (2) to shorten the 10 minute interval between division bells." It's been customary in the past to ask for the motion prior to because we've got members' offices that are farther away than 10 minutes. So although the Standing Orders can be interpreted to accept the request by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, that's the reason I didn't accept it at the time. But I would accept a motion, and I'll recognize the hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this particular point now.

Debate Continued

Mr. Stevens: Well, thanks, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we do in fact reduce the time between division bells to two minutes for the balance of this evening.

The Chair: Would that be two minutes between the bells?

Mr. Stevens: That would be two minutes between the bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Chair: From this point this evening in committee the time between the bells will be two minutes.

Okay. Are you ready for the question on Bill 29?

Bill 35 Fuel Tax Act

The Chair: The next bill for consideration is Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak again to Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act. I appreciate many of the comments that were made at second reading by hon. members, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

For the most part the debate revolved around the taxes that the province collects on the fuel, and I would have to say that this is not really one of the reasons why this legislation was introduced. In fact, it does not deal with that particular aspect of the fuel tax. The fact is that Alberta's gasoline tax is the lowest of all provinces at 9 cents per litre, and it hasn't increased over the last 14 years. So the rising fuel prices that were alluded to in debate on second reading are not affected in any way by this bill, and Alberta certainly doesn't receive any additional revenue when the pump prices go higher. The tax remains the same per litre.

As I mentioned in second reading, this bill would replace the existing Fuel Tax Act, which is outdated. It no longer reflects how the tax is actually collected. So the bill is technical in nature. It doesn't change the fuels that are taxed. It doesn't change the tax rates, nor does it change tax policy in any substantive way. So while the matter of the amount of the fuel tax was of some interest to members, obviously, it is not the subject of the act.

I would like to address a couple of particular issues that came up at second reading. One was relating to the difference in the collection process and the amounts that would result. It's important to remember that the process of collecting fuel tax in Alberta is the same as it has been for a number of years. This process has never been legislated, and currently the government of Alberta uses collector agreements to collect fuel taxes. There are over 30 of these for the gasoline and fuel tax. These are agreements with ultimate remitters who remit the tax to the government of Alberta. It's necessary to have a contract with each of those remitters. This is not a very efficient process, obviously, because every time there's a reorganization of a corporation or any time there are changes to the collection process, these agreements have to be changed and renegotiated. So this bill will set out a collection framework clearly and make the process legislatively mandated.

At second reading I mentioned that the bill provides for a multistage direct tax. That is a tax where the highest person in the supply and distribution chain will collect the tax and remit it to the Crown, and then every person in the chain would pay the tax but recover the tax from the next person down the chain. So it is the end consumer of the fuel that ultimately pays the fuel tax. Having the highest person in the chain collect and remit the tax, obviously, is the most efficient way for industry and consumers to fulfill their tax obligations. It's also the most efficient way for the government to collect the tax.

The amount of tax collected will not change with this bill. The legislation will not see more tax dollars flow to the province, but it will see an improved method of administering and collecting the fuel taxes. The bill provides a taxation framework, including who pays the tax, the tax rates, how the tax is collected, when the tax is to be paid, and the assessment, collection, and enforcement provisions. However, the administrative details for eligibility for refunds, rebates, exemption, registration, reporting, record keeping, et cetera are provided through regulations. By providing the details in the regulations, it also allows for flexibility to deal with changing industry practices. The regulations are currently being developed, and they will work in harmony with the bill.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I hope these comments are helpful in clarifying the issues before the Assembly.

Thank you.

10:30

The Chair: Is there anyone else who wishes to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for his explanation this evening and clarification as we begin debate of Bill 35, Fuel Tax Act, in Committee of the Whole. The first question I would have for the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill as we go through this bill section by section is page 8 of the bill. It talks about the international fuel tax agreement. I'm wondering if we can have a little more detail on that agreement, in particular why Alberta is a member of the international fuel tax agreement. What would be the advantages and disadvantages of membership, and why isn't Alaska a member? As near as I can understand, Alaska is not a member of this particular consortium. Given that both Alberta and Alaska are energy-producing jurisdictions, is there something, perhaps, that we might be able to learn from Alaska; as an example, the fact that they manage to set aside 25 per cent of their natural resource revenues into a savings fund?

The next one, Mr. Chairman, on page 9, section 6, talks about the tax payable on liquefied petroleum gas. At this point I do have an amendment that I would like to introduce in relation to section 6. I have those ready for distribution now, so if it's all right, I'll just wait a minute for that amendment to be passed around to the members.

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

You may proceed, hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that I'm introducing this evening would strike section 6 from the Fuel Tax Act. That is the section that, as I referenced earlier, deals with the tax payable on liquid petroleum gas when it's used as a motor fuel. Currently that amount charged is 6.5 cents per litre.

I was attempting today, in preparation for tonight's debate, to get more accurate figures than what I have. Unfortunately, I was unable to get a response back from Alberta Finance in time for tonight's debate, but as near as I can understand, the fuel tax on propane at this point generates about $6 million in tax revenue to the province on an annual basis. Approximately $1.8 million of that amount is rebated annually to distributors for having made sales of liquefied petroleum gas that are for uses other than motor vehicle fuel and, thereby, would be exempt from the tax. Mr. Chairman, the first point of this amendment is that it's a relatively small amount of tax that is collected each year, not a significant amount, really, in terms of the overall income of the province. That's important to note when we look at the reasons why I'm moving this particular amendment.

The fact of the matter is this: propane, or liquid petroleum gas, is one of the cleanest burning fuels that we have available to us. I think it's imperative upon us in this day and age to look at clean-burning fuel alternatives whenever possible. I know that this government and, particularly, the Premier talked an awful lot about coal as a clean fuel alternative. Despite the assurances of the Premier as far as I'm aware, Mr. Chairman, the Premier has yet to find a way to operate motor vehicles on coal. As a result of that, I think it's appropriate that we look at other alternatives to gasoline, and certainly propane is one that has been used effectively over the years. It has a long history, actually, of being used in an efficient manner to operate motor vehicles.

I referenced in second reading that the Propane Gas Association of Canada had been in a couple of weeks previous to speak to both government members and opposition members on the merits of propane. Coming out of the information that they shared with us that day is the fact that if you go back to 1992, there were approximately 220,000 vehicles in Canada that were operated on LGP. Due to a number of factors, partially because the various government incentive programs to switch vehicles to propane have been moved away, partially because taxes have increased on propane, and partially because there, quite frankly, just wasn't an awful lot of take-up from the manufacturers of motor vehicles to present propane fuel as an option, since that time we're down to only approximately 60,000 vehicles using liquid gas propane across the country. The Propane Gas Association of Canada informs me that about 15 per cent of those, or approximately 9,000 vehicles, would be operating in Alberta.

Clearly, we've gone backwards instead of forwards in terms of promoting the use of propane as a viable alternate fuel for motor vehicles, and the fact that we collect 6.5 cents per litre on that fuel certainly doesn't help that situation any but, in fact, would indicate to me that it would be a deterrent to promoting that.

Now, the other thing that I noted with some interest, Mr. Chairman, is that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in one of their surveys of their membership recently asked the question: should fuel taxes be reduced to control rising energy prices? Not surprisingly, small businesses and medium-sized businesses in this country were overwhelmingly in support of taking such a move. In Canada country-wide the results showed that 74 per cent of small- and medium-sized enterprises would favour such a move, and certainly in Alberta the number was even higher at 80 per cent. Now, that particular survey was not propane specific, of course, but was looking at all motor vehicle fuels.

Here is an example, clearly, that it is a factor in terms of decision-making when it comes to small business. Again, most of the vehicle conversions that were done to propane were done by fleet services, not necessarily individuals, but small, medium, and in some cases large corporations were moving their fleets over to propane.

So, again, if we can do anything to encourage them to consider doing so again in the future, I think that would be worthwhile. Clearly, 6.5 cents per litre is an example of one way we might encourage them to do so.

The other thing to point out, too, is that by removing the 6.5 cent per litre tax on propane as an auto fuel, it actually gives an even bigger benefit to the consumer at the propane pump because, of course, the federal GST is tacked on top of the price. The 7 per cent GST currently collected by the federal government is tacked on top of the 6.5 cents per litre that the provincial government collects. So if you remove that 6.5 cents per litre tax on auto propane, then you're removing the 7 per cent GST that is collected on that as well. Again, an even further incentive for business and individuals to consider converting their vehicles to propane.

So I think I've outlined, Mr. Chairman, some of the benefits of considering making this move. I'm not so sure that there is a lot of downside to making this move. As I suggested, the amount of tax collected by the province is not big in terms of the overall income of the province. In fact, if it's only 9,000 vehicles in Alberta currently that are using propane as an auto fuel, one has to wonder what the regulatory burden is to the province in terms of collecting that and whether or not the number of civil servants involved in collecting the tax and the amount of time and effort that goes into collecting that $4 million are even justifiable. I don't know what that cost would be, but I suspect that it's a relatively high cost based on the relatively small amount of revenue that is generated from it.

Certainly, another point, Mr. Chairman, would be the regulatory burden on the distributors that have to collect this tax, and then, it would appear, according to the numbers that I've been able to get today, approximately a third of what's collected is rebated, which means there's an awful lot of time and effort spent on the part of small- and medium-sized businesses doing the paperwork to get that rebate. It was suggested to me today by the folks at the Propane Gas Association of Canada that they believe there is an even higher percentage of propane that is sold for uses other than as a motor fuel, but the tax is not rebated because many of the small distributors, in particular, find the task of completing the rebate application too onerous. Rather than taking the time and the effort to do the application for the rebate, they just let it go because it's more time and effort and, ultimately, more expense to their business than it's worth to collect it back.

So I think, again, that if reducing the regulatory burden to small businesses is, in fact, something that this government believes in, as they've certainly indicated it is – and in fact the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency has even struck a committee to look at that – I would hope that one of the issues that they'll be looking at is the cost to propane distributors to collect this tax and then fill out the various paperwork that would be required for them to collect a rebate on the amount of propane that they sell that is not, in fact, sold as a motor fuel.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will look forward to hearing others speak to this amendment, and I would certainly encourage the government to do the right thing and adopt this as a measure to encourage the use of a cleaner burning fuel, a more environmentally friendly fuel, and certainly something that will help small business along the way.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's commendable objectives in suggesting that the tax on liquefied petroleum gas would be eliminated. It is a very clean-burning fuel, and for that reason it does have some advantages environmentally. But to speak against the motion, I would say that there are certainly some limits to the utility of LPG with respect to a number of factors. Safety is certainly a factor. There are many parking structures and other building structures to which LPG vehicles are not allowed access. From an engineering standpoint there are certainly problems with respect to the fact that this pressurized gas has to be accommodated, usually in the trunks of passenger vehicles.

I would also say that there is probably some difficulty with respect to supply. There would not be, in my view and to my understanding, adequate supplies of LPG to fuel all of the vehicles that we have. So to the extent that there were some LPG vehicles that were driving around without paying tax while the other ones with liquid fuel were paying tax, I think that it would create an imbalance in terms of competitiveness of both the producers of the fuel and the ultimate consumers. If they were doing it on a commercial basis, certainly.

Lastly, I would say that if there was an elimination of the LPG fuel tax, there would certainly be a resulting loss of revenue to the government, and it would have to be made up, presumably, in some other way. So I would speak against the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I speak in favour of the amendment. Both our provincial government and the former federal government, while they disagreed on the Kyoto protocol, did agree on the importance of cutting down on greenhouse gases and emissions. Both the federal government and the provincial government saw the value in providing incentives for furnace retrofitting, for example, which was good for fuel efficiency and environmental support. A neighbour of mine invented a device called the Furnace Buddy. He sought government approval for this. It demonstrated cost-efficiency and required very little installation.

I see this propane in the same light. That $6 million collected would be an investment in clean air, and it's necessary for the government to provide some type of incentive in order for individuals to afford the cost of retrofitting their vehicle. Without some kind of a carrot or incentive individuals aren't likely to take this step, and $6 million is a very small price to pay in terms of our environment's future.

The savings. We've been speaking a lot tonight in terms of long-term savings, and the money that would be saved in terms of our environment would well be worth that investment price.

Also, the hon. mover of the bill talked about the availability of fuel, and particularly in Alberta availability of propane is not a problem. A lot of agricultural vehicles going back into the '80s and so on used propane as an alternative because it was less expensive. In order to encourage that cheaper fuel and the availability of it, particularly for agricultural use, this is one way of achieving it. Farmers are having a hard enough time operating, and any incentive that we can have not only to regular vehicle users, fleet vehicles, and so on but also taking into account the agricultural benefits of reduced fuels, would go a long way to helping out.

That is why I speak in favour of using the money that we collect, turning it around, and investing in a clean-burning fuel that will have future ramifications and positive outcomes as of the present.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of points in response to comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. He asked about the safety of propane. In fact, according to the Propane Gas Association of Canada, propane is much safer than most people believe. Just a couple of examples: only 6 per cent of incidents involving the transport of propane result in a fire. I think there's a common misconception out there that if anything happens to a vehicle that's transporting propane, there's going to be some sort of a major catastrophe. Some of this, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, is born out of some very high-profile incidents that have taken place over the years, but they're very, very few in number and statistically virtually insignificant. The risk of getting killed by propane is the same as the risk of being hit by a crashing airplane as you walk down the street. There are many more facts provided by the Propane Gas Association, but I think it's safe to say that the elevated risk is a perception much more than it is the reality.

The other thing that I'd like to address is that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill talked about the creation of an imbalance if we allow users of liquid propane as a motor fuel to be exempted from fuel tax. In fact, Mr. Chairman, all that I'm asking for with this amendment is to treat propane exactly the same way as we now currently treat both ethanol and natural gas. Both of those fuels are completely exempted from the collection of fuel tax, and all we're saying is: "Here's another example of another clean-burning fuel. Why not give the users of propane the same benefit that we currently give to the users of natural gas and ethanol as motor vehicle fuels?"

So in terms of creating an imbalance, certainly there would be an imbalance in comparison to gasoline. In fact, there already is, as the hon. member already knows, because we collect 6.5 cents per litre as opposed to 9 cents per litre on gasoline. So the imbalance exists now, and it exists to an even greater extent with natural gas and ethanol. All that we're asking with this amendment is to treat users of propane exactly the same as we currently treat the users of those other two alternate fuels.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the bill.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments and more questions than anything else. Maybe I misunderstood the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. In a quick perusal of the bill – I admit that I haven't gone through it top to bottom – my understanding was that the bill would move somewhat in the opposite direction. I wonder if I heard him right on where it's taking this legislation. I think we would all admit that it's outdated the way it's collected. Did he say that we would be putting this into regulation? In a quick look at it, I thought that we were actually doing something a little differently than we do usually, that we were putting much of this into legislation rather than cumbersome regulation and individual contracts. Maybe I misheard the member, and I'd like him just to comment on that if he could.

Mr. Chairman, there are just a few questions, though, that I'd like to follow up on. One is section 10. It deals with the duty of the vendor to pass on the benefits of tax exemption and the farm fuel distribution allowance to the consumer. Well, obviously, that makes sense, and we absolutely agree that this ought to be included in the legislation. Any benefit to which a consumer is entitled ought, rightly, to be given to him or her.

However, section 10 specifies that if the vendor is found to not be passing on the savings, so to speak, the vendor must “pay to the Crown an amount equal to the benefit the vendor was required to pass on to the consumer.” I wonder how that works because there’s no mention made of the payment to the consumer. I would take it that the money should be going to the consumer rather than to the Crown. I wonder how that works. Realizing that it might be difficult to track down the consumer or consumers in question in order to repay them the benefits they are owed, this raises a question of how the Crown might track whether or not such savings are, in fact, being passed on. Would the member, if he could, explain how this might be tracked and if it is advisable and possible to reimburse the consumer the same amount payable to the Crown. This might also serve as more of a deterrent for those vendors who would otherwise simply pay their dues should they be caught. In other words, I’m wondering how foolproof it is.

This raises another question about deterrents as several sections – I think it’s sections 18, 19, 20; pages 15 to 18 – of the proposed bill specify that should the vendor sell tax-exempt fuel to a consumer who does not qualify or sell reduced-price fuel to someone who does not qualify, that the vendor and consumer are jointly and severally liable to pay the Crown two things: the tax on the true value of the fuel and the difference amounting to the true value of the fuel. Additionally, sections 56 to 61 provide for penalties over and above the repayment of proper tax and benefits.

I wonder, though. In most cases there’s an appeal procedure. As the member, being a lawyer, knows, there’s usually a provision for appeal. I guess the question I’m asking is: are there such provisions and regulations to allow for that leeway? Simply as a matter for clarification, we’re trying to find out how prevalent fuel tax fraud is in our province, the reason we’re doing it. Is this a big business? Is that why we’ve come to this in this bill? Is there any idea about how much of this is going on?

Mr. Chairman, I think most of Bill 35 makes sense, but if the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill could answer just a few of those questions, it would be appreciated.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m not sure that I have a full answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview regarding the obligation of the vendor under section 10, but obviously the sanctions that are there are serious sanctions, and I think that’s the way that the provision is enforced.

Just with respect to the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford regarding the international fuel tax agreement, I might be able to very quickly explain my understanding of that fuel tax agreement. He mentioned the exemption of Hawaii and Alaska from that agreement. The international fuel tax agreement is a rather complicated agreement which is meant to distribute the revenue from fuel taxes to the provinces in which the fuel is consumed. So, for example, if a trucker is based in the province of Alberta, then that trucker would only file the fuel tax forms and remissions within the province of Alberta. They would remit only in Alberta, and then Alberta would distribute the tax pro rata according to where the fuel was expended. For example, if it was a carrier based in the city of Edmonton and they made a run down to California to the vegetable produce territory, each of the states in which they travelled would get a proportion of that fuel tax. If they had the fuel purchased in one province or one state, it would then be distributed pro rata.

So they do calculations based upon where the fuel is actually consumed by the trucker. It’s just an administrative way to do it. Why is Alaska not included in it? I can only infer that because of the huge distances involved most of the fuel that’s purchased in Alaska is also consumed in Alaska or perhaps in the Yukon or the adjacent territories. Hawaii, obviously there aren’t any trucks passing across the border there, so that explains it. In a nutshell that’s my understanding of it. It’s just a way to distribute the fuel tax pro rata according to where it’s burned.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for further muddling my understanding of the international fuel tax agreement although I guess I understand a bit more about it. I am curious, though, whether or not there would be penalties for exiting that agreement, if you know that or not, and what restrictions or barriers there might be for withdrawing from that agreement if we were ever to choose to do so.

We discussed a little bit earlier tonight the fact that Alberta’s fuel tax is collected at a lower rate than anywhere else in the country and, particularly, lower than our neighbouring provinces. Based on the way you just outlined that agreement, I’m not so sure that the agreement is favourable for those provinces. It sounds to me like truckers might well choose to remit in Alberta and then have that tax at a lower rate redistributed as opposed to remitting in other provinces, and I’m not sure that I understood that fully. Perhaps you can clarify it for me because the way you described it, I’m not so sure that other provinces will be very happy with us.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, if I could just briefly. My understanding is that the way that the tax is remitted is according to the tax regime in each of the jurisdictions in which the fuel is actually expended. As to the consequences of withdrawal from the agreement, it would mean that Alberta truckers would be forced to file and remit in each of the states or provinces in which they were carrying. So there are certainly some great advantages to the administrative simplicity for any truckers in Alberta.

As to the issue of Alberta’s taxes being lower, that is quite correct. I would suppose that that’s part of the Alberta advantage, and if we could encourage truckers to be based here – and many large trucking firms are based here in Alberta, including Canadian Freightways, Mullen Trucking, Trimac, and some other large trucking firms – that would certainly be one of the advantages, that they can file the tax, as I said, only once here in Alberta and then remit only in Alberta as well. So I think there are great advantages, and there’s a huge disincentive for us to pull out of that international agreement.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m wondering as well about section 13, which refers to a special account. It says:

The Minister may require a direct remitter to deposit the amount of tax to be remitted to the Minister into an account in the name of the Minister or an account in trust for the Minister at a financial institution specified by the Minister.

I’m wondering if the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill can enlighten me as to how many of these special accounts exist. Is it just one? Are we talking many? Tens or perhaps a hundred or more? Where do they show up in Alberta Finance's fiscal plan? Because I've looked and I couldn't find any reference to those accounts in the fiscal plan.

The Chair: The hon. member? Anyone else? Are you ready for the question on Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act? Obviously not.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A couple more questions – and I sense some impatience on the other side, but I think these are important questions to ask. As you know, committee is the time to ask these questions section by section, line by line.

The Chair: Yes. I recognize that, hon. member, but when the opportunity arises, the chair expects you to rise quickly.

Mr. R. Miller: I had risen, Mr. Chairman. I had.

As I say, it's appropriate that we ask these questions now because once we get to third reading, of course, then we're talking the effects of the bill, and we don't have an opportunity to examine the bill piece by piece, as it were.

I'd like to clarify with the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill page 16 of this new Fuel Tax Act, where it talks about the prohibited sale. What it says exactly under 18(5) is that it talks about a consumer buying marked fuel. Now, you'll remember that we talked the other night about what we call purple gas. It's no longer purple gas. It's actually currently red gas. So we refer to it as marked fuel. It talks about: a consumer buying "marked fuel for farming operations in Alberta at the reduced price shall not sell that marked fuel to another consumer for a purpose or use other than farming operations in Alberta." So I'm taking from that that one farmer can sell to another farmer marked fuel and do so legally.

I'm not sure about the implications as far as pricing and whether or not he could sell it for a different price than what he purchased it for and whether or not there may be some tax implications there or whatever and why another farmer might wish to buy it at a different price. I suppose there would be situations where, given a fluctuation in price, maybe one farmer could sell it at a greater price than he purchased it for, yet that might still be less than the current price given the volatility in the market today. I don't know, but I'm curious about that.

Also, under the duty of vendor section on page 11, Mr. Chairman, I'm curious how many vendors there are in Alberta and whether or not the Auditor General has examined the processes that are described in this new Fuel Tax Act to ensure that vendors have appropriate tax systems in place. Again, I'm not sure that the member would have this information available at his fingertips tonight, but perhaps we might be able to get this in advance of third reading. That question would be: how many times in the year 2004-2005 had a vendor actually contravened the Fuel Tax Act? How many times was this an issue that caused concern to make sure that it's described in this new bill as we see it here tonight?

The Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on Bill 35, the Fuel Tax Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 35 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 20
Freedom of Information and
Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: We are considering amendment A2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I said before, I brought in this amendment that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, be amended by striking out section 4. Now, this is one of the really bad parts of this particular legislation. This section exempts ministers' briefing notes and backgrounders from FOIP.

You know, what's frustrating about this, Mr. Chairman, is that we stand in the House and we ask for information. There are two ways you can try to get information. One is that you can pay the money and go through FOIP and try to get that information. It's very hard to do it. It's time consuming. It takes a long time, as we noticed, asking to deal with some of the health FOIP. The deadlines come and go, and there seems to be no penalty for it. But that's one way to do it.

The second way to do it, Mr. Chairman, is to bring through written questions or motions for returns here in the Legislature. Well, almost inevitably, if it's any information other than something that the government wants to give out because it may make them look good, we're turned down. Usually they say that it's for third-party reasons or whatever reason. Now we're tightening up FOIP. It was difficult enough before. Now we're tightening it up more. One of the worst parts of it is that it exempts ministerial briefing notes and backgrounders.

This was so serious that Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner, Mr. Work, commented on this particular section, and he certainly was concerned. He didn't seem to be concerned by many of the others. His press release on March 8, 2006, says that the Commissioner, however, cannot support a proposal to exclude Briefing Books from application of the Act. "This has never been an issue for this Office in the past. This amendment could be a very significant exemption to disclosure. We already have a section of the Act which quite clearly establishes the ability to withhold advice given by officials and this particular amendment is not necessary." Now, Mr. Chairman, this is coming from Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner, and he's saying that this is unnecessary.

You know, briefing notes are precisely that, briefing notes. There are two sections. They have to do with new ministers and what they're going to say and the briefing notes that eventually come. Surely, when the ministers speak in the Assembly, they're saying some of those things that came from those briefing notes. Again, like Mr. Work I cannot understand why we need to go in this direction.

Being ever helpful, which we are on this side, we attempt to improve the legislation, Mr. Chairman, and that's why in this particular amendment we've asked that we just strike this out. If we struck out section 4, we'd be doing precisely what Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner has suggested. If we're not going to do that, I would certainly like somebody in government to explain why we're going so far with this particular amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment was handed out I think a week ago, on Monday, so I know that all members have rushed out and looked at it and are now convinced of the error of their ways. I'm sure that the government is doing the right thing and, being the transparent, open government that they are, will now see that they agree with the opposition and the Privacy Commissioner and will support this particular amendment by striking out section 4. So I'd at least like to hear from the government: if they're not going to do it, why not?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North on amendment A2.

Mrs. Jablonski: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Referring to the amendment and to section 4, this part of the amendment act will only limit the right of access to briefings provided to the minister when he or she assumes a portfolio and when he or she is preparing for a session of the Legislative Assembly. So those are the only two places that they'll limit access to their briefing notes.

The FOIP Act was never intended to cover records relating to the workings of the Legislature. Nevertheless, after five years these records become fully subject to the act. The five-year time period was chosen because it restricts records prepared for a legislative session only for the life of the Legislature. So, once again, it only refers to the briefing notes provided to the minister when he or she assumes a portfolio or when they're preparing for a session, and in five years they will be available.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would reject this amendment.

Mr. Chase: The purpose of the amendment was, as the mover pointed out, to create greater transparency and accountability. When we seek to bury information for an extended period of time, it works against the whole notion of transparency and accountability. If the information with regard to briefing notes and so on is perceived as dangerous to the government, then that information should never have been considered in the first place if it has that damaging potential. So in the interests of transparency and accountability I would suggest that any information be available within a reasonable amount of time so that it can be appropriately discussed and debated rather than buried. Therefore, I speak in favour of the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very brief. I rise to speak in support of the amendment that stands in my name. Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act with its current features, the bill that's before the House, will make it much more difficult to have access to information that must be available to all members of this House and, indeed, to interested parties outside and through the media. What this bill will do will not only make it more difficult to have access to that information. That's in the public good. Remember that all these bills are supposed to serve public purpose and public good, and to put information out of reach by way of this section I think offends the very spirit of this legislation.

This legislation is about making sure that legitimate access to information is available to all in this province, not only the ministers. Ministers' briefing notes, in particular, I think are critical pieces of information, which, if available to members of this House, can help them understand the reasons behind why the departments are taking the position they are taking. Then they can be questioned on it. They can be held accountable on it. They can be challenged on those issues. But the very information on which the policy is based and on which the minister's rationale for his or her piece of legislation may be based will be denied to people who should have legitimate access to it. It talks about members of this House. It talks about the media. It talks about other parties that may be affected by it.

What we are trying to do by way of introducing this amendment is to in fact strike at the worst part of this bill. I hope that the House will agree with this amendment. If we do that, in fact, strike out section 4, that will improve the bill, and if the bill is an improved piece of legislation, it certainly will be in the public interest to vote for this amendment. So I encourage all members of this House to support this amendment and vote for it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Briefly, Mr. Chairman, the information that the opposition or others may want can be asked for specifically, but the issue that I see in this particular matter is someone who says: I want the briefing book of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for the province for this particular session. I want the list of contents, and I want everything that's in the list of contents. It's not specific to issues; it's specific to a particular type of document.

From where I sit, what's important is that if you have a particular issue and you want information with respect to a particular issue, you ask for the information relative to the issue rather than just simply saying: I want the playbook for the Denver Broncos. You don't know what's in the playbook, but you want the playbook. Well, if you want to be specific, be specific. You can ask the specific question, and you are going to get the information that you're entitled to, but you don't get to cast a broad net that is not specific to the information by saying: we want the playbook. That is essentially what I see this particular matter in large measure addressing.

11:20

From my perspective if somebody has a legitimate interest in specific information relating to a specific issue, that is most appropriate. It's not appropriate to simply say: give me what happens to be in a particular binder that has been provided to a particular minister in preparation for that new minister taking over a ministry that they have not been responsible for before and dealing with issues that happen to come up at this particular point in time. If we have other information that's available, of course you're going to be entitled to it as a result of access under the act, but you're not going to be able to get access to it by a generic, nonspecific request.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the hon. Minister of Justice, that does not appear to be what the bill says, and if the bill is to be interpreted as the hon. minister indicates, then perhaps the bill should read that way. The bill as proposed says:

- (4) The right of access does not extend
 - (a) to a record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in respect of assuming responsibility for a ministry, or
 - (b) to a record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in preparation for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly.

It goes on through subsections (5), (6), and (7) as well, and subsection (8). It puts long timelines on the exceptions, the exemptions to those rights of access not extending five years or more in the case of a member of the Executive Council and 15 years or more in the case of a record relating to an audit by the chief internal auditor of Alberta. Perhaps I should read that.

(7) The right of access to a record does not extend to a record relating to an audit by the Chief Internal Auditor of Alberta that is in the custody of the Chief Internal Auditor of Alberta or any person under the administration [et cetera, et cetera]

Now, the hon. minister has the initials QC after his name as a lawyer of some repute. I am a mere journalist from my past life. He has a better understanding of the law than I do, perhaps. I have to say that that sounds very much to me as though it does cover specific requests for a particular record. It seems to say that the right of access to a particular record does not extend to a particular record relating to an audit by the chief internal auditor, et cetera, et cetera, or the right of access does not extend to a particular record created solely for the purpose of briefing a member of the Executive Council in preparation for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly. Under subsection (4)(b) I would think that a particular record created solely for the purpose of briefing a minister in preparation for the sitting of the Legislative Assembly may in fact be germane to a topic or an issue that we are pursuing.

So I'll invite the minister to give me a crash course in the law here, but my interpretation of the words on the paper as they read now, unamended, certainly suggest to me that we very much need the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's amendment to pass.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister said that all we'd need to do is ask, that basically if there's a specific thing we request, just ask. Well, we've been asking, you know: motions for returns, written questions, blah blah blah, and very specific, but there's always an excuse not to give it to us if they don't want to. It's the third party this or the third party that or whatever reason at that particular time. So it's not quite as simple as the minister says. Again, the Member for Calgary-Currie is absolutely right. When the ministers stand up in the Legislature in question period or estimates or whatever, surely some of the briefing notes and some of the things that they're doing may have a bearing on that. The public has a right to know that. It's transparent. It's government.

The point that I would make is that it's not only us, that the top person in this area, the Privacy Commissioner, has made it very clear. He says that this amendment could be a very significant exception to disclosure. He's concerned about it, and that's somebody, I think, that the government and all of us should take into consideration. When he comes out that clearly on this particular section that I'm talking about, I think we should take a look at it. In a five-year period that could be a different government. That's ancient history by then, you know what I'm saying. Is that deliberate? It's another government, so they can't take the blame.

We have not been given, Mr. Chairman, a reason why this should be excluded. I think that even if you don't want to listen to the opposition, it seems to me that we should be listening to the commissioner that's in charge of this. He sees this as a severe problem. His news release of March 8, 2006: I would at least hope that the minister or the member have looked at that and taken that into consideration.

There's got to be a better reason than what's been given. If it was as simple as just asking, we wouldn't be paying money through FOIP to get this information, right? We'd just come here and ask the minister, and he'd tell us anything we wanted to know no matter what we wanted to know. But it's not that simple, and the minister knows that. So along with the Privacy Commissioner we think that this is a backward step. For a government saying that they want to be transparent and open, we're certainly not finding that in Motions for Returns and Written Questions, and now we're seeing this sort of blocking back in terms of the FOIP. This particular one, Bill 20, section 4, is one of the most odious.

I think the government should take a look at this particular amendment. The member said that she would not support it. So you're saying that you would not support what the Privacy Commissioner is saying about it. That's basically what you're telling us in the Legislature, that you're not going to take the Privacy Commissioner's word that this is a serious exception to disclosure. That's sad if we can't take the legislative officer, the top person here at least in this amendment, and say: well, maybe he's got a point. He's the one that administers this. Why would he be saying this if he didn't think it was important?

So I'm sorry. Again, I'm not going to hold my breath here, but I think this is a very big step backwards, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. It's important for the minister to realize – and I believe he does – that the opposition does not make frivolous FOIP information requests, because we want both Albertans and the government to take us seriously. There's the second concern that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview pointed out, that generic, broad-based FOIP requests would be so cost prohibitive as to be not worth considering.

Back in the spring of last year I made a very specific request. I wanted to find out the maintenance report on the court elevators, the shafts of which Kyle Young found himself at the bottom. It was a very specific request. The government had the information, and in the interests of clarification and finding out whether it was simply a machinery fault or the fault of overexuberance on the part of the court security officers, that information would have been of benefit. Through the judicial process we learned that this elevator was short one of its pins, but the testimony of experts suggested that it would have taken a very strong push against this elevator door for it to come off its hinge and for the young gentleman to be killed as a result of the fall.

We're looking for information that the government has already collected. We're looking for very specific information, and we believe that it's in the public's best interest to have that information revealed. It's not a matter of frivolity; it's a matter of clarity and transparency.

Thank you.

11:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Very, very brief, Mr. Chairman. I know that it's getting late in the evening. I just want to make one point. Section 4 has lots of odious subsections to it. The most important one here that we are dealing with by way of this amendment is . . .

The Chair: We're speaking on amendment A2, not on the bill.

Dr. Pannu: Yes. To the amendment, yes.

Section 4 exempts ministerial briefing notes, and that's the point. I just wanted to draw the attention of the House to the fact that in Ottawa the sponsorship scandal would not have become a scandal perhaps as big as it did and have led to public inquiries and all of that had these kinds of materials been exempted according to federal law, if they had not been accessible to the opposition parties in the House of Commons. So what's in the briefing notes of the ministers is of consequence with respect to public interest. It is of consequence with respect to the conduct of a government in power. It is of great consequence with respect to the decisions that the minister might make. There's something to be learned from the experience of the sponsorship scandal and how that scandal needed to be aired to make the information on it public. There had to be access to the kinds of materials that are being exempted now by Bill 20, particularly section 4 of Bill 20.

That's another reason why we are asking the government to seriously consider striking this section from the bill: so that the right of the public to the kind of critical information that I've just referred to with respect to what happened in Ottawa is available here. It will serve the interest of transparency. It will certainly keep the government honest regardless of which government is in power. If those two goals are to be served by making this information available and access to it available in legitimate ways, then that should be what should be a goal of any piece of legislation. But this section in Bill 20 seems to defeat that very purpose, and that's why we have introduced this amendment and are asking the House to vote for it.

Thank you.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports it is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a very special guest who has joined us today in the Assembly. Although originally from Manitoba, Mr. Mike Kaluzniak has spent his adult life in Alberta, but he has never had the opportunity to visit the Legislature until today. What makes this particular visit so special is that Mr. Kaluzniak is 100 years of age. Now, given that we are currently celebrating the 100th anniversary of our Assembly's first sitting, I think that his timing is outstanding.

He's still an active member of our community. He told the staff of the St. Michael's Millennium Pavilion, where he currently lives, that he wanted to visit us here at the Legislature so that he could finally see how things work in the provincial government, so he's watching us closely. I'm pleased that he's going to get that opportunity today, and I'd like to introduce him and his guests. Along with Mr. Kaluzniak are his sons Marvin and John Kaluzniak; Stan Fisher, president and CEO of the St. Michael's Health Group; Christine Peterenko, director of the St. Michael's Health Group; and Irene Miskiw, manager of the Millennium Pavilion. Mr. Speaker, they are all seated in your gallery, and I ask them to please rise so they can receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the hardworking members of the Northern Alberta Development Council who are meeting in Edmonton today. Joining us in the Speaker's gallery are Carmen Ewing, of Girouxville; Helen Henderson, of High Prairie; Mike Mihaly, of High Level; Michael Ouellette, of Grande Prairie; Williard Strebchuck, of Whitecourt; Maurice Rivard, of Bonnyville; and Harvey Yoder, of Lac La Biche. They are also accompanied by staff members from the Peace River office. Seated in the members' gallery are the executive director, Dan Dibbelt, Allen Geary, Kim Persaud, Jan Mazurik, Roxanne Heinen, and Jack Kramer. These individuals are to be commended for their dedication to the advancement of northern development through regional initiatives and partnerships with the private sector and community-based organizations. They are seated in both galleries this afternoon, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you 38 of the very brightest young minds we have in Alberta, all of whom are attending Jackson Heights school in my constituency. They are accompanied today by teachers and group leaders Mrs. Celia Correlje, Mrs. Pam Schenk with parent helpers as well, Mrs. Marina Doyle and Mrs. Emily Sieusahai. I would ask that they now rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hate to argue with the hon. Minister of Education, but everyone knows that the brightest young minds come from Trochu Valley high school. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly today 18 very enthusiastic students from Trochu Valley high. They've already had their picture taken, and they've had the opportunity to meet the Minister of Education. They're accompanied today by Mr. Bill Cunningham, teacher, and Mrs. Brenda Hoppins and Mrs. Diane Doerksen. They're all seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. We all here owe our success to any number of other people who have helped us out along the way. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two people who've helped me out. They happen to be two of my sisters, one of whom is visiting from Ottawa. They are seated in the public gallery, and their names are Sylvia Gazsi-Gill and Valerie Warke. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: They are obviously much younger sisters.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured and pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the wonderful volunteers that are here today from the Northgate Lions seniors' centre, which is really the best seniors' centre in all of Canada, I'm sure. It's centred in Edmonton-Manning, of course, and it has facilities ranging from a new seniors' fitness centre just special to seniors, lapidary, woodworking, art, weaving, and many, many other fine, fine facilities. It's the volunteers that make it work. They're here with their guide today, Mr. Ian Mathieson. I welcome them, and I ask you all to welcome them to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly my father, Bob Mason, and my stepmom, Kay Guthrie. My dad is a retired electrical engineer and small business owner. He was a founding member of the Reform Party of Canada, and he likes Preston Manning. But he likes me better, and he's now a member of the Alberta NDP. My stepmom, Kay, is retired after a long career with CKUA. She is a writer and very active in the arts community. Both are very active. They attend the Fringe and the Folk Festival every year, and they've travelled in the last few years in Africa, South America, and India. This year both of them celebrated their 80th birthdays, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that my dad and Kay now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Roy Skoreyko. Roy recently won the Norm McLeod award from the Alberta Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board for his work with them. Roy is very concerned about the lack of funding for disabled people in Alberta and the cutbacks in services that PDD boards are now facing. I would ask that Roy now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to acknowledge three people from my constituency that are up in your gallery. They're with the Municipal District of Rocky View Council and are here to meet with a couple of ministers on some very important issues. As you know, Rocky View is one of the fastest growing areas in the whole province, and unfortunately the municipal district has to deal with all of the pressures from all the urban constituencies around it. I'd like to congratulate them on the work that they do and ask that they please rise. Lois is our deputy reeve, and she's accompanied by two other members of our council.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Courtney Luimes. Courtney will be working in the Calgary-Glenmore constituency office this summer as part of the STEP program. Courtney has just completed her fourth year of a five-year, two-degree program at the University of Calgary. She's working towards a bachelor of commerce and a bachelor of arts degree, majoring in marketing and political science. She's also, in her free time, the president of the University of Calgary Campus Conservative Association. Courtney is here in the members' gallery, and I'd ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my greatest supporters, both in my professional life and in my personal life. I would like to introduce my mother-in-law, the best mother-in-law in the world, Clara Jonsson, and her husband, Bob Grant. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to stand and introduce two very capable new members of my staff to the Assembly. It's the first time that they've had a chance to be able to come to the Assembly and observe these proceedings. The first is Avery Trimble. She's been with us for a few months now and has joined us from our deputy minister's office. The second, Sheena McKinstry, joined us just last week. I'd ask them if they'd both stand. Please join us to offer them the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's former chief of staff Rod Love seems to make his living selling access to the Premier's office. FOIPed documents show that Love has moved freely from government contract to government contract, providing inside information through high-priced verbal advice. It's a money-making scheme at the taxpayers' expense. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that Rod Love is doing little more in these contracts than selling inside access to the Premier's office?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, to set the record straight – straight, absolutely straight – Rod Love hasn't had access to my office, and he doesn't use his consulting business to gain access to my office. He was my chief of staff, yes, absolutely. But his contracts with various government departments or health authorities are entirely up to the ministries or the health authority involved. It has absolutely nothing to do with my office. It has had nothing to do with my office.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: does the Premier recognize that Rod Love is peddling inside information obtained while serving as the Premier's chief of staff?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea what information he is providing to the various ministries or authorities, whether it's information he gained while in my office, which is very little, by the way – usually the opposition tells me what's going on – or whether he's providing other information. I have no idea, nor do I make it my business.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier assure this House that Rod Love is not sharing confidential government information with clients, such as PC leadership candidate Jim Dinning?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. I didn't even know that he was working for Jim Dinning. [interjection] I didn't. They can moan and groan all they want. Relative to the leadership campaign my policy is hands off, and I don't give a tinker's hoot who he works for.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Lobbyist Registry

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. High-paid contracts to people like Rod Love and Kelley Charlebois are merely symptoms of a much deeper problem. This government's sense of entitlement is so pervasive that it's no longer capable of even identifying a conflict of interest: the Premier is fielding job offers while in office; a Tory Party VP sits on the government's Internal Audit Committee; chairs of government committees use their positions to sell PC Party memberships; ex-MLAs get plum appointments. It goes on and on. To the Premier: why does the Premier insist that Albertans don't have a right to know who's lobbying this government by his refusal to create a lobbyist registry?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to set the record straight: again, I have no problems – I have no problems – with a lobbyist registry. I have said that for every upside there is a downside, and I want to make sure that when the Legislature considers a lobbyist registry, they consider the downside and they clearly identify those who are lobbyists and those who are not lobbyists. Now, I've raised the question: if a person who represents a school board or a university or a municipality is asking the government for money, are they lobbyists? I want to make sure that I know that the rules are clear.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the Premier's former chief of staff Rod Love signed on to a juicy contract with the Calgary health region very shortly after leaving his position with the Premier's office, will the Premier commit to extending the legislative Conflicts of Interest Act to senior public officials?

Mr. Klein: I don't know if I have the power to do that. I understand that a report on conflict of interest guidelines by the all-party committee that examined this issue will be coming to the Legislature, and I suspect that it will be fully debated in these Chambers.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the federal Conservatives are proposing a five-year cooling-off period for ministers, will the Premier commit to extending the mandatory cooling-off period to a minimum of one year for Alberta's cabinet ministers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have told the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that I don't give a tinker's hoot whether it's 10 or 15 or 20 or 30 years. I'm leaving. I've said that all I want is to have time to do what I want to do and time to golf and fish. Big deal.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Tuition Fee Policy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After more than a decade of policy failure, during which one failed tuition policy gives way to another, each one off-loading more and more costs onto students and their families, the new Minister of Advanced Education and this government are trying now a different approach: make the changes from now on behind closed doors, cloaked in cabinet secrecy, rather than on the floor of the House. To the Premier: if the Premier is so confident that he can clean up the mess and deliver the most affordable, entrepreneurial, and innovative tuition policy in the nation, why won't he do it in full public view right here, in this House?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education is responsible for bringing forward legislation. I understand that Bill 40, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, will be before this legislative Chamber for debate, so I think it's premature for the hon. member to ask any questions. Plus, he can in an open, public, transparent fashion debate the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Advanced Education: is it true that his ministry has been telling student leaders that they either go along with this flawed Bill 40 or forget about getting a better tuition policy?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing I want to tell students is that the sky is not falling. I'm not aware of any such comments. I think that with your guidance I can speak to part of the act because it is on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Well, hon. minister, please. We will have second reading of this particular bill coming up, so let's not debate the bill in question period. Deal with policy issues.

The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: will the minister commit to a joint meeting with me and student representatives before this flawed Bill 40 receives second reading? By the way, his predecessor says that he doesn't even need to bring in legislation in order to change tuition policy.

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, there was so much noise that I could not hear the question. Could you repeat it?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Rod Love Consulting Inc.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The culture of entitlement surrounding this government is deeply entrenched. The Premier's former chief of staff Mr. Love has got himself another juicy contract with another government agency. The Calgary health authority is now paying Mr. Love $350 an hour for heaven knows what. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. It's very simple. What exactly did the Calgary health authority get for their contract with Mr. Love at $350 an hour?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that's a question for the health authority. Today when I saw the report, it's very obvious that the health authority sets policy and has financial policies and implications and accountability examined by the Auditor General. So I would suggest that the hon. member approach the Calgary health authority and ask the question.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, is the minister suggesting that she does not have ministerial authority for what the Calgary health authority does? Is it not part of her responsibility as Minister of Health and Wellness? Yes or no?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the accountability of the government obviously is very clearly defined. Regional health authorities have the role and responsibility of engaging contracts as they see fit. They manage those contracts. They're accountable for those contracts both financially and from a substance perspective. We have very clearly delineated lines of authority in this regard.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the minister can duck and weave, but she can't avoid the fact that Mr. Love is getting money for nothing and his perks for free. Now, will the minister please tell this House what exactly Rod Love did for the money he got from her agency.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am quite convinced that if the Calgary health authority has a contract with a provider of service, like I-3, Mr. Love's consulting contract, or any other contract, they are getting value for money. They are intelligent people. They make decisions. They will no doubt be able to answer that question. The first notice I have of it is the newspaper report today, that these things have been revealed, and no doubt the Calgary health authority will share what they wish or can to both the member opposite and, certainly, subsequently to the Auditor General and to the ministry if it's appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Royal Alberta Museum Acquisition

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Monday the Royal Alberta Museum purchased a number of aboriginal items up for auction. The American Indian Movement has previously expressed concerns about the potential sale of these items and would like them reappropriated. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Could he please explain why the museum chose to purchase these items and what they will mean to Albertans and our aboriginal communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Alberta Museum was able to acquire 29 of the 39 historic First Nations and Métis cultural artifacts that were put up for auction. These artifacts, collected by the ninth Earl of Southesk, have exceptional historical significance. These are items from the Canadian Plains from the mid-1800s, and more than a third of these objects are of Alberta origin. The collection was auctioned off piece by piece, which put it at risk of being sold to individual collectors, never to be seen again by the public.

I had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to sit in at the telephone auction, and I can assure you that the bidding was fast and furious. The purchase is an incredible opportunity to preserve some very important parts of our history for generations of Albertans to study, admire, and enjoy. Museum staff were very knowledgeable of each item's history, and visitors to our museums will now be able to see historic items that originated here over 145 years ago.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is also to the Minister of Community Development. How was the museum able to make this purchase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The museum worked with a number of partners to secure funding. The government of Alberta committed $500,000 through the museum, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, and the federal government generously dedicated $600,000 toward the sale.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. How has the Alberta aboriginal community responded to the museum's purchase of these items?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, most of the aboriginal community are ecstatic about this purchase because securing these items is connecting them to their past.

I commend the museum staff for all the hard work that they did in making sure that they secured First Nations and Métis support. As a matter of fact, they received letters of support from people such as Charles Weaselhead, who is the chief of the Kainai nation, from retired Senator Thelma Chalifoux, the File Hills Qu'Appelle First Nations Tribal Council, Prince Albert Tribal Council, and of course Treaty 7 Management Corporation. A lot of people across Canada from the aboriginal community were very interested in this collection.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Contaminated Sites Cleanup

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta may have paid off its financial debt, but it is taking on a huge environmental debt in hundreds of contaminated sites. Albertans should be outraged. Instead of following the law requiring "maximum protection to human life, health and the environment," the minister wants to change the law to "manage" the risk posed by these contaminated sites. This means that we will now cover up contamination, and our children will be forced to deal with future problems. To the minister: can the minister explain how removing the responsibility of industry to properly clean and remediate a site is in the interests of the environment, health, and future generations?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, we spoke about this very topic last night till almost midnight in this Assembly under Bill 29, but it allows me the opportunity to say that the preamble is entirely vacuous when it comes to what was being allocated. Number one, did you know that we are the only province in Canada where we allocated almost $60 million for contaminated sites? In fact, we did a risk assessment, and that risk assessment of managing those contaminated sites, I might add, in terms of working with Albertans, has worked extremely well.

So in terms of the words that it is – if I repeat the words – a tragedy what is happening, nothing could be further from the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

2:00

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate how allowing industry to transfer contaminated land as a gift to municipalities is in the best interests of the environment and future generations?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that in this province it is the law, and the law says that the polluter will pay. We, representing the people of Alberta, will hold anyone involved with any type of contamination or pollution to that law. That's what we're doing today; that's what we're doing tomorrow and well into the future in protecting future generations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate: when a company defaults on cleanup costs, how often has this department gone after company officers individually as is indicated in the legislation?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure all of the members in this Assembly: the law says that the polluter pays. Let me say it simply: we will continue to go after anyone who is breaking the law to the full extent of the law both in spirit and in letter.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Employment Opportunities for Foreign Students

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has become a global player in the economy. Relative to the U.S.A., Australia, and other provinces we are behind in promoting and recruiting foreign students to study in Alberta. Many successful jurisdictions see international students bringing to them economic benefits, fast-track human resource development, as well as good international relations, and they make it their beneficial public policy. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Advanced Education. Given that foreign students in provinces such as Manitoba and British Columbia can find jobs off campus and work outside their study hours, when will foreign students in Alberta be allowed to do so, and what procedure do they have to follow?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much. The hon. member is right. Foreign students are important to us in this province. We jointly announced with the federal government late last month that international students in Alberta would now be allowed to work off campus. We are currently working with postsecondary institutions throughout the province to try and implement this as soon as possible, by June 1. I'm happy to report that presently we have a number of institutions that are up and running: the Alberta College of Art and Design, Lethbridge Community College, Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, Portage College, Red Deer College, Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, and the University of Lethbridge. So you can see that we're coming up to speed fairly quickly. In terms of the process, hon. member, international students interested in working off campus can apply to the federal government for a work permit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My supplemental question is to the same hon. minister. Given that foreign students at our publicly funded institutions are allowed to work off campus, and it is unfair that foreign students at our private institutions are not allowed to do so, Minister, what are you going to do to rectify this unfairness?

The Speaker: The hon. minister if he heard the question.

Mr. Herard: Yes, I did hear it, Mr. Speaker. He's absolutely right. As it currently stands, none of our international students at Alberta's seven private institutions are able to participate in this program because, I guess, the former federal government did not understand how important those institutions are to the province of Alberta. In my opinion these seven institutions play an important role in the postsecondary system and provide good-quality education to Albertans. I'm going to cut to the chase and tell you that I plan to review this process and program and do whatever is necessary to ensure that international students studying at private institutions become eligible and participate the same way as everybody else.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who is responsible for workforce matters in Alberta. Given that the lack of workers has become a crisis for many small Alberta businesses, particularly employers in the service sector, what is the procedure for them to recruit foreign students at our Alberta educational institutions to work for their businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Of course, one option for employers who would like to recruit foreign students is to contact offices at postsecondary institutions that provide services and support for international students. Employers may also want to place ads on job boards, et cetera. In addition to that, we have 59 labour market information centres across Alberta that provide all forms of services. We're spending close to $300 million, in fact, to provide those supports. Keep in mind, again, that Alberta students would be given priority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems to have lost the trust of Albertans concerned with education. With only 2 or 3 per cent increases, school districts, teachers, and parents are finding out that the education dollars are simply not flowing through to their local schools. This surplus budget will put students in bigger classes and send teachers looking for work. Can the Minister of Education tell this House how many teachers will lose their jobs next year in Edmonton, Rocky Mountain House, Lethbridge, just to name a few of the many boards facing tough decisions this year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't anticipate that any teachers would be losing their jobs. What I might anticipate is that there might be some teachers who are retiring, perhaps leaving some vacancies in their wake. Let's remember that within the envelope of $5.3 billion we have provided additional funding in the amount of approximately 3 per cent for one category of educational needs and 2 per cent for another category. Every school board of the 62 should be receiving some sort of an increase in that respect. Specific to the class size reduction initiative, in our third year we anticipate hiring somewhere between 150 and 200 more teachers over and above the 33,000 or 34,000 or whatever it is that we have in the system right now. So that's pretty good news.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Education tell us how many support staff, teacher aides, will lose their jobs next year in Edmonton, Rocky Mountain House, and Lethbridge, just to name a few of the many boards facing tough decisions to cut support staff?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I would hope and I would anticipate that there wouldn't be any of those kinds of job losses. It's interesting to have the questions coming forward now, when they are clearly at least six or seven weeks premature. We will get the final budgets submitted on or about June 30 of this year.

We'll take a serious look at what those budgetary needs are. We will know better what their enrolment projections were as the budget was being developed over the last few months in comparison with what the actual enrolments will be, where the trends and where the shifts and so on exist, and then we'll go from there in developing the final budget for September.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister did not keep his promises, can the minister tell us why he didn't provide adequate time to allow districts to plan ahead for these impending cuts?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm not sure that I should even dignify the question with an answer; it's so absurd. I don't know what sort of promises the member is referring to or what sort of cuts he seems to be referring to. We've explained very clearly for the last couple of days, at least for the last couple of days, that there is going to be a funding increase in education. I've also explained, I hope very clearly, that these are preliminary budget targets that are being talked about right now. The final budgets from the school boards will arrive in about six or seven weeks. We will carefully review those. That's the standard procedure. Then, based on how the shifts have occurred, we will make the appropriate adjustments with those school boards so that come September we are in a position of assurance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Gasoline Prices

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday I filled up my car with gasoline at $1.06 a litre in Calgary. That same afternoon I was in Toronto, where I filled up my rental car with gasoline at 96 cents a litre. My wife asked me why Albertans pay more for gasoline, considering that we produce it right here in our backyard, and I promised to ask that question of the minister. So my first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is there so much volatility in the price of gasoline, and in particular, why do Albertans have to pay more than those in Ontario?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're glad for the comparison shopping that your family is doing around the country and for the information provided to the Legislature.

That said, you know, on average over the year Albertans do actually still pay the lowest prices in the country, including in those areas which you said. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Melchin: I suspect that it's the lowest prices in the universe. I stand corrected.

With that said, there are a lot of factors that go into why in any one day you'll have different prices, sometimes within the city, city to city within Alberta, and clearly province to province. There are a lot of factors such as inventory of supply, seasonal variations. In fact, they will purchase an inventory of their fuels at different times, bought at different terms and conditions. There are retail marketing practices that come into this. They sometimes are promoting an area. There are cross kinds of promotions from the stores that also are selling some of their other merchandise.

The inference is that the only oil that comes is from Alberta. Clearly, Alberta is the largest producer of oil in Canada, but when you go to Ontario, for example, they also import a lot of oil from offshore and from other countries of the world. So we're not comparing even the same sources of oil and purchased at the same price, same times: those factors. They all contribute to why one area in Toronto could be more and/or less than an area in Alberta on any one day.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the Minister of Government Services. Given that a number of provinces in Canada regulate gasoline prices, is the minister considering regulating gasoline prices, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it was some time ago, a couple of years ago, when the province did have a look at the legislation that other provinces were using. In fact, it was proven then by comparison that Alberta had the lowest prices across this great nation. This ministry has no intent of bringing in price controls. The free market must prevail.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to tell you even more. You know, yesterday in Onoway at the UFA the price was 99.5. My assistant in the office, Colleen, gassed up in St. Albert: $1.04. Colleen from the office gassed up at Safeway: 96.5 using her discount. I think there's great market competition in this area. Maybe it's just in northern Alberta. I can't tell you that for sure, but we see lots of competition in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Department of Gaming Grant Program

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General recommended in his most recent report that the Gaming ministry develop clear guidelines for assessing the mysterious other initiatives program, an $11 million pool of lottery money whose distribution is entirely at the discretion of the Gaming minister. During the Gaming department estimates the minister was asked on at least three occasions if he would comply with the Auditor General's recommendations, but each time he skirted the issue. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. Will the minister act on the Auditor General's recommendations and produce clear, published guidelines for the other initiatives program?

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, actually, we have addressed the Auditor's comments. I'm before Committee of Supply tomorrow, and I would think that the Auditor at that point will express his satisfaction with the steps that we've taken concerning the other initiatives account.

Mr. Tougas: I guess that was an answer, but is that a yes or a no? Are you going to comply with what the Auditor General said? It's a yes or no question.

Mr. Graydon: I believe the answer was that we already have.

Mr. Tougas: Well, when you come up with your guidelines, are you going to allow the general public to enjoy the benefits of this program, or is it going to be entirely an MLA-driven process as it is right now?

Mr. Graydon: Actually, I'm before Public Accounts tomorrow morning. I'm sorry. I said Committee of Supply. That was a couple weeks ago, when I answered this same question several times. But before Public Accounts tomorrow we'll find out the rules around other initiatives. I think it's a perfect title for that category of grant because it is other initiatives that don't fit into standard CFEP or CIP boxes, if you will. A good example is an arena that burned down in the community of Viking a while ago. The community did have insurance, but there wasn't enough insurance to cover the cost to rebuild that facility. It's an extremely important recreational facility in that community. What a perfect place to get a grant, from the other initiatives fund.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, this Conservative government wants to make future decisions on tuition behind the closed doors of the cabinet room, far removed from the public scrutiny of this Legislature. The very lame excuse, justification, so called, for this draconian move is because a certain Tory leadership contest makes a fall Legislature session inconvenient for this government. None of the stakeholders of the postsecondary system favour letting cabinet make tuition policy behind closed doors. To the Minister of Advanced Education: given that students fought long and hard to ensure that a tuition policy was entrenched in legislation, how can the minister justify removing this protection through a last-minute change introduced in the dying days of this spring session?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will try and answer the question without talking about the bill itself. The policy is not in the bill, so maybe I can talk about the policy. But to ensure accountability and transparency, I think that hon. members should know that government departments must always show, when amending regulations, that they have consulted with the affected stakeholders as part of the compliance process. So there's always a consultation that takes place when amendments to regulations are contemplated, and I plan to consult with our students with respect to this regulation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that students are saying that they've never been consulted by this minister up to this point on this issue, how can the minister justify the government sneaking this change through without consultation at a time of year when most students are working out there, trying to make money to pay for their next year's tuition fees?

Mr. Herard: Well, Mr. Speaker, what's the date today? I think I've been the minister now for a month and three days and a few hours, but I do know that there's been a consultation process that's been ongoing for 16 months in which all of these students have been participating at all stages, and I can tell them that they're going to be very happy with the tuition policy.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the last question to the same minister: why should this Legislative Assembly give the Tory government a blank cheque to impose whatever tuition fee formula it deems convenient behind the closed doors of the cabinet?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, by moving the tuition policy from the act into regulation, we are increasing the flexibility to adjust the tuition policy to meet the changes that students need. So instead of trying to show that the sky is falling, why don't you look at this as continuous improvement?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Anticrime Volunteer Groups

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Guardian Angels is a nonprofit group that uses unarmed volunteers to try to catch criminals in the act to deter street crime. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Since the Guardian Angels have visited our city and Calgary, has the minister consulted with them, and do we have any other local groups that do similar types of work in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Guardian Angels were established in 1979 in the United States, and they now have 60 chapters in six different countries around the world. They're a not-for-profit organization, and they do attempt to act as the eyes and ears in the community for the police. However, they do intervene in very dangerous situations, putting themselves and the public at risk, and this is highlighted by the fact that six Guardian Angels have been killed since 1981 in acts of their volunteerism within the Guardian Angels. As well, 36 individuals have been seriously injured within the Guardian Angels organization.

2:20

There's no requirement for such a group to have a relationship with a police service; however, we're concerned that whether, in fact, the Calgary or the Edmonton police service want those community groups to be involved in the community or they set up chapters here, the fact is that a relationship has to be built between the local police service and the Guardian Angels. This is all about crime prevention. It's about being vigilant, not a vigilante.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since those groups are arriving here as a result of public dissatisfaction with street crime, can the minister see any productive role for those groups to cooperate with police and, indeed, curb crime?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, as the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security it's ultimately my role to ensure the safety and security of all Albertans. That's a priority, the safety of Albertans. In this case we want to look at the issue related to what their goal and their business is. I have reservations about supporting an organization that places volunteers or citizens in harm's way. This is the concern that I have about community involvement with the police.

We have a number of programs that are available in the community right now through crime prevention units here in Edmonton and throughout Alberta that are related to working with the police, working with the communities. Some are Block Watch, Neighbourhood Watch, Rural Crime Watch. We have radio watch programs in both Edmonton and Calgary. These are volunteers that work with the police. They sit down and look at various targets, various areas of concern that the police may have within an industrial area or a residential area. So it's well organized and well orchestrated between those community volunteers and the police. We want to maintain that partnership, maintain that relationship. Obviously, the Guardian Angels is something new that we're going to have to look at.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Secondary Suites

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the government released its final report from the MLA Review Committee on Secondary Suites. Although overdue, it's better late than never. The use of secondary suites is a primary tool for creating affordable housing solutions and helping some homeowners generate a little income on the side. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given the red-hot housing market throughout this province, be it rental or home ownership, and especially in cities like Calgary, Edmonton, and, more profoundly, Fort McMurray, how will this ministry work with municipalities to encourage the development and utilization of secondary suites?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple issues to keep in mind with respect to secondary suites. Municipal Affairs through building codes is responsible for the actual construction codes, and that's what this report deals with. The municipalities, on the other hand, are responsible for zoning and land classification. So it's really a two-step approach that will have to take place on this.

First of all, we'll have to make some final decisions on whether or not the recommendations from the committee should be implemented into our building code. Once that's done, the municipalities will have to decide how they're going to incorporate this new classification of building into their structure of land planning and R2 versus R1 or whether it becomes R1 and a half. So we'll work with municipalities on that issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will this government provide assistance to individuals who want to develop secondary suites as a solution to offer affordable housing and to combat homelessness? Will there be any incentive for them to do that?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's not within the purview of my ministry. We don't provide grants of any kind to individuals. I can say that the purpose of this report, though, was to remove some of the cost-prohibitive barriers from establishing secondary suites, and I think the report has done a very good job of doing just that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the new standards compel existing homeowners to update or upgrade their existing secondary suites, will there be any assistance from the government to recover some of that cost?

Mr. Renner: Same answer, Mr. Speaker. My department is not involved in granting to individuals, but I must say that the present building code does not recognize basement suites, the traditional basement suites. The building code really talks about a duplex, and the requirements for a duplex are really very restrictive. What we are hoping to establish by the implementation of this report are somewhat reduced requirements on the part of the homeowner so that we can in fact legitimize a number of secondary suites that are on the market right now and hopefully encourage some new ones in some new developments in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Drivers' Licence Photos

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Court of Queen's Bench ruled yesterday that members of Hutterite colonies in Alberta will not have to have photos on their drivers' licences. My question is for the Minister of Government Services. What are your department and yourself going to be doing about this decision?

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, yes, that's right. In fact, the Court of Queen's Bench did put out a ruling yesterday, and I had discussions with our department on this. Photos are a very, very important part of our driver's licence here in Alberta, and we see that as an integral part of the security and of the identification of all Albertans. I understand that this issue may be still in the courts. There may be an opportunity sometime for appeal, but I can tell you that this is a serious matter. I'm going to have some discussions with other ministers on this, and I can tell you that we will ensure that the proper identifications are on our drivers' licences. I can tell you again that we will ensure that all Albertans have the ability to use their drivers' licences as a form of identification as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Justice. Has your department made any decisions regarding this matter?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we found out late yesterday about this particular decision, so the decision itself is still being reviewed. I agree with the hon. Minister of Government Services that it's absolutely essential that we have photos on our drivers' licences and that we maintain that. So I'm sure that the Ministry of Justice will be working with the hon. minister's department to ensure that that continues and in the meantime reviewing the matter as it relates to a potential appeal.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental will be to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. As well, the same question: has your department been dealing with this, and what are they going to be doing about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, we just learned about this at about 10 o'clock this morning, so I haven't had a chance to discuss it with the department. I would have to reiterate, as the other ministers have indicated, that this is very, very important to us, that there be that identification. As a matter of fact, there was a lot of discussion about whether, in fact, the Alberta driver's licence may be a vehicle that could be used as far as the border crossing is concerned. There is that confidence with the facial identification on the driver's licence that it could be very, very secure. So we'll be discussing an appeal with the other ministers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Government Liabilities

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are for the Minister of Finance. Could the minister please advise this House and all Albertans how much the total Alberta government's liabilities have risen in the last budget year?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry; I don't quite understand the question. I see the hon. member is looking at his writing to see if he does.

I would say this. I have estimates here tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. We'll have a full two hours, and I certainly look forward to discussing our very positive revenues in this province. I'll discuss any potential or maybe liabilities that the hon. member maybe alluded to, and, Mr. Speaker, I would just suggest that we take advantage of that time and have a real good, thorough discussion on this issue.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the answer is $3 billion.* It's contained on page 43 of the fiscal plan, and I'm happy to table this later this afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. member, why would you ask a question if you knew the answer?

What's your second question, with no preamble?

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the question is: given that the government's liabilities have grown by nearly $3 billion in the last year, can the minister please provide us with the nature of the increasing liabilities?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure he'll find that in the fiscal plan as well.

I come back to my earlier point. He did not in his first question talk about whether it was in unfunded pension liabilities. He didn't talk about where it might be, whether it was the perceived liabilities in capital. So, I mean, this is a rather broad question to come up with and to take the good time of this House in question period. So unless he has the answer on another page in this very thorough fiscal update we presented to the House some four weeks ago, I suggest that we have a real good discussion on this and any other matter in the purview of Finance tomorrow night beginning at 8 o'clock.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They present a very simple graph, so I ask a very simple question: why in this time of unprecedented revenue is this government allowing Alberta taxpayers to be exposed to such an increase in liabilities? It's up $3 billion in a year. Why?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times in this House, there isn't a government in North America that enjoys the fiscal position of this government. So if we want to have a discussion on liabilities – funded, unfunded; perceived, not perceived – I suggest that we have that discussion. Maybe we can have a little economics 101, a little business administration whatever, and a little general accounting principles discussion tomorrow night, and he might understand it a lot better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Royalty Rates

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Petro-Canada announced a 75 per cent jump in their first-quarter earnings, with a net revenue of $486 million in the first few months of this year. In those same months we've suffered price jumps for gasoline and all forms of home utilities. Meanwhile, this government has been satisfied with an outdated royalty regime and a lengthy royalty review process that does nothing to capture the profit padding of the already thick pockets of the energy industry. My first question is to the Deputy Premier. How much revenue will Albertans have to forgo before this government will institute a windfall royalty regime that best measures the royalty rates as captured around the world?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the question on developing royalty rates is more aptly put to the Minister of Energy, who, in fact, has that responsibility. Our responsibility is to take that rate information and transform it into our revenue picture, so I would invite the Minister of Energy to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, please.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Environment minister. Given that the price of gasoline is putting pressure on green transportation such as public transit, when will this minister develop a program to direct windfall oil revenues directly to green transportation initiatives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I attended the COP 10 conference down in Buenos Aires and then in Montreal just recently. I think it's very obvious in my discussions with the Minister of Innovation and Science, the Minister of Energy, and also the Minister of Finance that one of the many options we are contemplating is: what are we doing to incent and to encourage behaviour and helping in terms of environmental practices? I think that is not unreasonable. I think rewarding industry for technology investment and helping them in making a better environment is far better than a federal Liberal scheme of saying: go buy a carbon credit in another country, and let the money leave Canada. So we're taking those kinds of very proactive measures.

I might add that we're the only province in Canada with a climate change law. We are not just talking; we are taking action as has been reported in the front pages of newspapers by independent professors of universities that are not traditionally friendly to this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally to the Energy minister: if a small but spunky country like Equador has the guts to stand up to multinational oil companies on behalf of its citizens, why won't this minister fight for Albertans and institute a modest but practical windfall oil revenue initiative?

*See p. 1458, right col., para. 6

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I find it not surprising at all to hear once again from the opposition party that their formula is to make this an unattractive place to which to attract investment. Go to Ecuador. He just mentioned Ecuador. If that's the example, the model that he wished to use, I'm here to say that I was at the World Petroleum Congress back last fall, and if you look around the countries of the world that have a better opportunity than we have – and I'd like to know where – if you look around the countries of the world that actually are attracting as much investment as we can, that are driving as much opportunity for Albertans in jobs, in profits, in royalties, and in taxes, our province is doing better. But I guess they continually want to have a high, high, high percentage of a small, small piece of pie. That's their formula.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we had 92 questions and answers in a 50-minute question period, which is really quite significant.

I'll deal with members' statements in a moment or two, but first of all we have a little bit of history to deal with.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Ninety-seven by-elections have been held in Alberta since the first general election of 1905. In our first 50 years 66 by-elections were held, with the first on April 12, 1906. This by-election was necessitated by the resignation of Leverett G. DeVeber, a Liberal who had been elected in Lethbridge in the general election of 1905. DeVeber had been appointed to the Canadian Senate. W.C. Simmons, a Liberal, is Alberta's first MLA to have been elected in a by-election.

Until 1926 members were required to run for re-election before accepting appointment to cabinet. From 1909 to 1926 15 by-elections were held for this purpose, and in nine of these instances the member was returned by acclamation.

In Alberta's second 50 years we have had 31 by-elections, with the most recent by-election held on April 8, 2002. The incumbent MLA, Butch Fischer, had resigned, and the current Member for Battle River-Wainwright was elected in the then-named constituency of Wainwright as a Progressive Conservative. The current Legislative Assembly has seven members who were elected to this Assembly via by-elections.

While I indicated earlier that we have had 97 by-elections, the number of different MLAs elected is 95. Two different members were elected on two different occasions in by-elections. On June 29, 1910, C.R. Mitchell, a Liberal, was elected in Medicine Hat as a result of the resignation of incumbent W.T. Finlay. Mitchell lost his seat in the general election held April 17, 1913, to Nelson Spencer, a Conservative. George Lane, the Liberal incumbent in Bow Valley, then resigned his seat, and Mitchell ran in the by-election held June 12, 1913, and won by acclamation.

Don Getty returned to the Alberta Legislature via a by-election held on December 11, 1985, after being elected Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and Premier in the fall of 1985. Getty had been elected originally in 1967 in the constituency of Strathcona West. He was re-elected in 1971 and 1975 in Edmonton-Whitemud. He did not contest the election of 1979. Premier Getty was re-elected in 1986 but then suffered personal loss in the general election of 1989 to Liberal Percy Wickman in Edmonton-Whitemud. Brian Downey, the Progressive Conservative incumbent, resigned his seat in Stettler, and Don Getty was re-elected in that seat by way of a by-election held on May 9, 1989.

By way of summation Alberta experienced 66 by-elections in its first 50 years and 31 in its second 50 years; 95 different members were elected in these 97 by-elections, with two members being elected twice in by-elections. There are currently seven members in this Assembly elected in by-elections. The first member to provide me the correct order of the seven will receive a grand prize announced tomorrow.

Members' Statements

Search and Rescue Volunteers

Mr. Snelgrove: Today I rise to recognize that May 6 was Alberta Search and Rescue Day and to talk to you about the importance of search and rescue volunteers in the province. Alberta's search and rescue membership is a hundred per cent volunteer driven, and it relies on the support of the community to make its service delivery possible. Across the province each year hundreds of volunteer Albertans put their lives at risk to help work with search and rescue teams. Last year about 1,200 volunteers gave their time to respond to more than 250 search and rescue incidents that occurred in Alberta.

The flooding last June emphasized the important roles all members of our emergency response teams play during crisis. Search and rescue volunteers from 15 search and rescue organizations assisted Alberta's municipalities during the flooding to coordinate a community response.

On August 14 it will be one year since when search and rescue teams were called to assist in the rescue of my constituent and friend Keith Martin, who fell into the waters of Muriel Lake, a rescue which ultimately turned into a search operation. Let me tell you: never in my life have I experienced first-hand the persistence and intensity of the volunteers and other search and rescue personnel, volunteers who for almost two weeks literally lined the shores of the lake to find this man.

Within my constituency since 1959 the town of Vermilion has been home to the Alberta fire training school, a training centre that has brought expertise and a global audience, a school which has set the standard for firefighting instruction, attracting students from across the continent and from around the world.

This past Saturday, May 6, was Alberta Search and Rescue Day. The day was established in 2000 to highlight search and rescue activities in the province and to recognize the contribution of volunteers. I am pleased to acknowledge those who are dedicated to this vital work.

Alberta communities provide search and rescue response of more than 100,000 hours of volunteers dedicated each year to emergency response, training, and education of delivery programs and program funding. Today I commend these exceptional personnel for their efforts, for their commitment to saving others, and for the risk to their own lives in doing so. To all of you across this great province, thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

National Nursing Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in recognition of Nursing Week, which is celebrated across Canada and around the world from May 8 to May 14. This year the theme is Nursing: Promoting Healthy Choices for Healthy Living. This theme reflects the essential role that nurses play as promoters of health and wellness. This role is so important in our health care system. Nurses are capable of treating patients in a time of need, and as the old saying goes, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Nurses know a lot about good health and as front-line workers are in the best position to pass this information on to citizens. One very good example of this is the work that nurses do in the Alberta government's Health Link call centre, where Albertans are able to call in for extremely valuable health information 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Many nurses are also very active in helping governments to develop information and awareness materials.

It is very important for us to take the time to appreciate all the hard work and dedication that nurses put in to all aspects of our society. For this reason, I ask all Albertans to go out of their way this week to thank a nurse for the job they do every day both in the areas of healing and prevention.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Compulsory Drug and Alcohol Treatment for Youth

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along with our hon. health minister and the co-chair of the Crystal Meth Task Force, Dr. Colleen Klein, I was honoured to open the Capital health Stronger Together conference last Thursday. AADAC was well represented that day, and staff members had been working hard every day to prepare for new addictions services for youth under the new Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act, or PCHAD, coming into effect July 1.

This act provides an additional avenue of support together with the AADAC range of services currently offered to parents and guardians whose children are abusing alcohol or other drugs, including crystal meth, in a way that severely endangers them or others and who resist or are not seeking voluntary help for their severe addiction.

The considerable press coverage recently from AADAC's announcement of this new legislation was very positive. AADAC announced the locations of the protective safe houses, the program structure, and the number of beds being established in support of PCHAD. There will be 20 beds dedicated to the program in Calgary, Red Deer, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, and Picture Butte. To further support youth and families and to support the expansion of services, 24 additional staff members will be hired throughout the province. AADAC will also be adding another 24 voluntary detox and residential beds later this year in both northern and southern Alberta to ensure access to follow-up services.

In closing, I'd like to thank the hon. members for their support of AADAC and encourage them and their constituents to access further information on aadac.com.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Alberta Forest Week

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May 7 to May 13 is Alberta Forest Week, a time for Albertans to recognize and celebrate the importance of forests and forestry to this province. We have a lot to be thankful for, including in my constituency of West Yellowhead, which looks to forests as the building block for our communities. In my constituency, as in many others in Alberta, forests are a significant contributor to the high standard of living we enjoy today. These forests provide us with recreational playgrounds, clean water, clean air, and habitat for a rich abundance of fish and wildlife, and they attract investment and employment in the forest products manufacturing industry, an industry that is the third largest in Alberta.

When Albertans first started to celebrate the values represented by our forests in the 1920s, this special time was known as Forest Fire Prevention Week. Today this special week celebrates more than the fine work done by Sustainable Resource Development to protect our forests from fires. Today it's about recognizing how our trees and forests are an integral part of life in Alberta and how we have a responsibility to be good stewards of our forests in order to ensure that our forests are sustained and continue to benefit all Albertans. So it's especially appropriate that the theme of this year's Alberta Forest Week is Stewardship: It Starts with You.

Mr. Speaker, this week there are events throughout the province to celebrate our forests and the benefits all Albertans derive from them. I hope that everybody else contributes and understands that the forests are the future for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Proportion of First Nations Persons in Jails

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in the Solicitor General's budget debate the minister informed this House that despite making up only 7 per cent of Alberta's population, aboriginal people make up 30 per cent of adult in-house correctional centre counts and approximately 38 per cent of young offender in-house correctional centre counts. As legislators we are compelled to ask some very difficult questions about this very serious state of affairs. There is obviously some sort of discrimination at work here. Even if it is not the intention of government policy to create a gross overrepresentation of aboriginals as inmates in our provincial correctional facilities, the consequences are here for all to see.

In his presentation to Manitoba's 1999 Aboriginal Justice Implementation Commission, Chief Louis Stevenson, then of the Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs, said, "It is these substandard living conditions, unfair and unequal opportunities, unequal education, chronic high unemployment, and inadequate housing which generates the frustration and anger that leads to offences and criminal activity." The recent talk federally and from members of this government about getting tough on crime and building more prisons illustrates a wrong-headed approach to this problem. As legislators we have to face a choice: focus our efforts on building a just society, or ignore the problems and continue to build a potential powder keg. Opening and filling more jails is hardly a way to deal with this problem.

The NDP is committed to fighting for justice for First Nations peoples in this province. This includes pushing to equitably settle unresolved land claims, such as those brought forward by the Lubicon Cree. We also want to work with aboriginal communities to create and implement economic development strategies, including targets for aboriginal employment in construction, resource development, and the public sector. The government approach has not worked. We need proper management to ensure that aboriginal people are not overrepresented in correctional facilities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Saturday evening I had the privilege of attending the 2006 excellence in teaching awards banquet, where 23 teachers were presented with awards. I was particularly pleased by the fact that 13 teachers from my constituency of Edmonton-Glenora were finalists, and three teachers from Edmonton-Glenora won this prestigious award.

I want to take a moment to congratulate all the winners and especially congratulate those from my constituency. First is Lorel Marie Trumier from St. Vincent elementary school, who has provided tremendous leadership in shaping a stimulating learning environment at St. Vincent.

I wish to also congratulate two winning teachers from Ross Sheppard high school. Deborah Stirrett is an outstanding chemistry teacher, making an incredible impact on student achievement in chemistry, supporting the curriculum in science 10 and also science 20 and 30 programs. Scott Bezubiak, the department head of athletics at Ross Sheppard, is a very creative and dedicated teacher, preparing innovative curriculum resources for teachers both at Shep and other high schools. I must also congratulate the principal at Ross Sheppard, Jennifer Lawley, for the fact that seven teachers from her school were finalists and two were winners of these excellence in teaching awards.

These great teachers have achieved a very high level of excellence and deserve our praise and our gratitude despite aging buildings, despite overcrowded classrooms, despite school board deficits, despite dwindling resources such as teachers aides, and despite the failure of this government to adequately fund education in this province.

My wife was an elementary school teacher, who was also highly valued by her students and colleagues, but she retired after 15 years of teaching in part because doing her job had become more difficult each year. There were simply not enough resources or support, and teachers were and still are required to take on a wide range of time-consuming and exhausting tasks not directly related to teaching, such as administration and fundraising.

I'm worried about our educational system. I'm especially worried that we may lose outstanding, creative teachers whose patience might just run out. What we need is a greater infusion of both money and vision from this government. If it does not happen soon, we will no longer be able to boast about Alberta's educational system. We will gradually slip behind, and it will be a great tragedy for this province and especially for our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I would like to congratulate the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. Thirty seconds were left in the time frame, used up by everybody else, but that was good work today.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Bill 39
Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 39, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

The following nine acts will be amended: Oil and Gas Conservation Act, Oil Sands Conservation Act, Coal Conservation Act, Petroleum Marketing Act, Mines and Minerals Act, Gas Resources Preservation Act, Natural Gas Price Administration Act, National Gas Pricing Agreement Act, and the Gas Utilities Act. These amendments will ensure that Albertans' benefits from resources are optimized and will enable both industry and government to continue to operate efficiently and effectively.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 39, being the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, be moved onto our Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition was talking about the $40,000 vehicle that the Minister of Education was driving. That fact is that that is a $20,000 vehicle. The fact is that people who don't have a government vehicle have the ability to charge mileage. The fact is that for people that do have vehicles, it's not a freebie completely. The fact is that there is an annual charge for the vehicle for income tax purposes. When you calculate it all out, in Alberta the vehicles are not costing more than the mileage would cost. As a matter of fact, every province and the federal government provide cars, and in two provinces, Ontario and Quebec, they provide chauffeurs along with the cars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings this afternoon. These tablings are in regard to questions that I have been asking for almost the entire session in regard to the ring road developments in Calgary and in Edmonton. The first one is a memorandum dated February 9, 1982, from Alberta Environment.

The second tabling I have is a presentation to the Metropolitan Affairs Cabinet Committee, and it's regarding the ring road.

The third document I have is a memorandum from Alberta Executive Council dated November 21, 1984, and it is also in regard to the ring road development area land purchases.

My last tabling this afternoon is also a memorandum from Alberta Environment, dated January 7, 1981, and it is concerning the Edmonton and Calgary restricted development area for the ring roads.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only one tabling this afternoon. I'm pleased to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of a document produced by Mr. Maurice Fritze of Edmonton expressing his concerns about Bill 208, which is currently before this House. He reminds all Albertans that there is a parallel between Bill 208 and the Jim Crow laws. "Jim Crow laws were a number of laws enacted mostly in the Southern United States in the latter half of the 19th and early half of the 20th centuries that restricted most of the new privileges that had been granted to African-Americans after the Civil War."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Varsity – Calgary-Varsity. Sorry.

Mr. Chase: Thank you for that very important correction, Mr. Speaker.

I have four sets of tablings. The first tabling is the program celebrating the 40th anniversary of ACTRA, at which Harry Freedman, Bonnie LeMay, Sandra Redmond, Roland "Roli" Nincheri, Joyce Doolittle, and John Scott were recognized with life memberships.

The second tabling is the Calgary Community Land Trust's North Hill launch program, which was a beneficiary of the estate of Leo and Goldie Sheffel, providing the land upon which Habitat for Humanity will soon be building homes.

My third tabling is the Calgary program of the Mayor's Luncheon for Business & the Arts, at which both artists and patrons were recognized. A challenge was issued to Conservative leadership candidates to make funding for the arts a key commitment of their party.

My fourth and final tabling is the promotional postcard of the Cerebral Palsy Association, which is celebrating 30 years in Alberta and which held its 20th anniversary cerebral palsy bikeathon on April 30 in Red Deer; on May 7, last Sunday, in Calgary; and will hold its event this Sunday, May 13, in Edmonton. This is, incidentally, cerebral palsy week.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a document. It's a media release by the president of the students' union of the University of Alberta. It's entitled Bill 40 Clouds Future on Tuition: Students Demand the Bill be Rescinded. It adds: "We were never consulted about this. If the Minister had bothered to ask, he would know that we are categorically opposed to the de-legislation of the tuition policy."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity of going to the kickoff for Visit the Country. It's an Edmonton countryside agricultural experience magazine that's encouraging people to go to the country, to discover the farms, ranches, and rural life. I've got the appropriate number of copies.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Justice and Attorney General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act, the Law Society of Alberta annual report 2005.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Ducharme, Minister of Community Development, a copy of a petition signed by 11 Cold Lake residents urging the government to introduce measures to effectively curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking in Alberta.

head: 3:00 Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Restructuring and Government Efficiency

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to move the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency business plan for 2006-2009 and our budget estimates for 2006-2007.

By now I hope that all of you have a better idea of what Restructuring and Government Efficiency is about, and let me say that I've certainly appreciated all of your support over the last year, the first full year of operation for Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

This afternoon I would like to give you a brief overview of some of our accomplishments to date, my vision for the future of this ministry, and of course the budget numbers. Over the next few minutes I hope to answer most of your questions and tell you about my vision for this ministry, which includes government operating as one single entity for Albertans. I hope that you each have a copy of our business plan and budget, and I would like to take you through what I consider to be the highlights.

Before I get to that, however, I'd like to introduce some folks in the gallery. They have been working very hard developing our plans for the coming years. I'm pleased to mention that a number of Restructuring and Government Efficiency staff are here for an opportunity to learn about what goes on in Committee of Supply. They all work hard to keep the ministry running smoothly, and I'm glad they could join us today to watch the proceedings. I'd also like to point out some members from my executive. There's Paul Pellis, my deputy minister; Cheryl Arseneau, his executive assistant; Cathryn Landreth, assistant deputy minister of business services; Brian Fischer, assistant deputy minister of financial services – so if you don't like this business plan, he may be in trouble – David Bass, assistant deputy minister of technology services; Jeremy Fritsche, communications director; and Jason Ennis, my executive assistant, that most of you know. If you'd all stand, I'm sure that we'd show you a welcome here today.

At this time last year I talked about how we were just getting our feet wet, and truly we were. We have undergone significant change within our own operations since that time. We've tried to improve the services that we provide to our ministry partners, and we have initiated work important to Albertans. That, I believe, was the Premier's vision: to improve and simplify the operation of government and for all ministries to focus on the work that they are intended to do.

I've said it before: my department and its valuable work is not necessarily the sexiest ministry going. However, our work creates efficiency across ministries, and that means a better way of doing things across government. Over the last year I hope we've made it clear that the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency is cutting a clear path toward doing things better. To that end, we recognize the need for organizational change within our own ministry. That's why I have a new executive in place. They along with the 1,100-plus staff they represent are the backbone of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. This is a great team, and the combined expertise is already paying great dividends for government and, ultimately, for Albertans.

If I could throw a little title on Restructuring and Government Efficiency's budget and our plans as we go forward, it would simply be: a better way of doing things. What better place to start than with regulatory reform, a highlight for '06-07, one that I hope will reduce complexity and regulations and processes for Albertans and for those who conduct business in this province. I will say that the MLA Regulatory Review Steering Committee, led by the MLA for Foothills-Rocky View, has a big task ahead of it, but the group is enthusiastic, and I know that this government will give those members the support they need.

As far as funding regulatory reform, I want to stress that this is an important initiative to this government and, in particular, to my ministry. It's part of our business plan, and it is part of the mandate of our ministry. We have some good employees in our department who will be dedicating their talents and time to this initiative. Their task will not be easy, but at the end of the day my goal is quite simple: to lessen the impact of regulations on Albertans. I believe that the number of rules and regulations that a government has on its books isn't all that important. What's key here is that the rules, regardless of how many there are, don't unnecessarily burden a business or stand in the way of Albertans getting on with their priorities. It's about harmonization and making it easier for our citizens to interact with their government, and it's about keeping Albertans publicly informed.

Another key project for my ministry is our ICT service co-ordination initiative, which is well under way. This is a project that will create a private/public partnership between government and leading ICT service providers, resulting in cost efficiencies and improved services. We all know that the costs of maintaining and upgrading computer systems continue to go up in both the private and public sectors. In fact, the government's ICT costs are going up by more than 10 per cent a year. When we have more than 25,000 computers and servers and printers, that equates to big bucks. If we're spending millions of dollars on IT, let's make sure that it's money well spent. This is about controlling these costs and getting the biggest bang for the taxpayer's dollar.

It is important for members to know that we are not reinventing the wheel here. Research tells us that many organizations have in recent years revisited their service delivery models and have used consolidation and corporate alignment to improve the value of their ICT investments. For the government of Alberta that means that departments work with each other and not within their own silos. This initiative is about recognizing that each ministry has common ICT needs, and there are opportunities for us to leverage those needs while helping to facilitate specialized requirements.

To that end, I want to publicly acknowledge and thank the ministries that have joined Restructuring and Government Efficiency on this initiative and are providing important insight as we proceed. We know that there is potential for operational efficiency and savings if we adopt a strategic, more aggressive cross-government approach to standards and shared infrastructure. We've made considerable progress to date. We recently reached a significant milestone by completing the industry/ministry consultation process, and like with regulatory reform, I look forward to giving you updates as we progress.

Keeping with IT for a minute, privacy matters over the last couple of years have certainly heightened the importance of ensuring that information kept by government is secure. First and foremost, I want to stress that protecting Alberta's personal information is a priority for this government and, certainly, for Restructuring and Government Efficiency. My department is responsible for protecting people's privacy in two important ways: first, when it comes to accessing government services electronically; second, ensuring that necessary information stored on our equipment is secure from those who should not be accessing it. I'm pleased to say that Alberta is one of the few governments to have IT staff devoted to this cause.

In fact, there are several key projects under way that will help ensure the protection of personal information for Albertans. Protecting people's private information is a cross-ministry initiative led by Government Services and Restructuring and Government Efficiency. The purpose is to develop principles and policies to further protect personal information. The Alberta secure access service was created to enhance the protection of personal information while online with government. It's designed to provide additional security for new online applications and the personal and confidential information that Albertans submit.

Educating our employees is important too. Restructuring and Government Efficiency has established a government-wide information security awareness program. It covers everything from selecting an effective password to protecting your computer from viruses. Since launching this program in November, our security awareness e-course has been accessed by government users over 11,000 times. Survey results show that this program is a highly effective tool, with satisfaction rates in the 90 per cent range. We continue to move forward to ensure privacy by designing software that protects personal information.

While my department concerns itself primarily with online or internal ICT security, Government Services also plays an important role, particularly as it relates to identity theft and authentication. I look forward to working with the hon. minister on those issues.

We've also seen a new addition to our ministry. As of April 1 Restructuring and Government Efficiency is proud to be the new home of the Queen's Printer, formerly part of the Public Affairs Bureau. Switching ministries is never easy, I'm sure, but for these dozen employees we're sure trying our best to make them feel right at home. The publishing, distribution, and information services provided by the Queen's Printer are a good fit because they are all well aligned with the shared services function we already offer, and we're happy to have them. Their $1.9 million budget is reflected in your budget documents.

Mr. Chairman, whether it's Valleyview in the constituency of Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Mountain View in the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner, or even Spruce View in my riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, these are just a few of the hundreds of Alberta communities that now have access to high-speed Internet thanks to SuperNet. I am proud to say that thanks to SuperNet remote parts of Alberta are now a keystroke away from the rest of the world. This is important because SuperNet and the first mile are critical to the future success of rural Alberta. With the SuperNet build completed, our goal now is to promote the power of this incredible infrastructure. Hardly a day goes by without an article of some sort about the advantages of SuperNet for our schools, our hospitals, our libraries, and our government offices, and now rural businesses and residences are jumping on board, tapping into the system and realizing the benefits of downloads and other services that are virtually immediate.

In addition to these major projects on the go, along with dozens if not hundreds of smaller projects, it might be fair to say that shared services are still the backbone of this ministry. The vast majority of our ministry's 1,100 employees help deliver shared services across government.

I have some numbers that I think you'll find quite amazing. We handle about 25,000 training registrations and deliver over 800 cross-government training courses annually to public servants, who improve the efficiency and quality of service to Albertans as a result. We manage over 26,000 telephone land lines and 7,000 cellular phones. Annually Restructuring and Government Efficiency ensures that over 22 million pieces of mail are delivered in a timely manner, and over 39 million documents are printed. We process over 375,000 invoices annually, ensuring that vendors receive payments in a timely manner.

Restructuring and Government Efficiency supports over 26,000 government computers. Since 2004 we have donated over 7,000 computers to the computers for schools program. In fact, last fiscal year surplus sales either sold or donated over 106,000 items, with a value of almost $5 million.

Despite this activity, you'll note that the budget for delivering shared services to other ministries has gone down slightly over the last year, from $211 million to $204 million. There are two main reasons for this. We are finding efficiencies where possible without affecting the quality of services, and we're simply providing these services in-house rather than billing back to the ministries.

I think the shared service model is working well along with the billing methods, but as is the case with everything that we do, I'm more than happy to explore, as I suggested off the top, a better way of doing things. Restructuring and Government Efficiency is geared to make government work more smoothly by providing these day-to-day shared services, and they will always be considered a priority for the entire organization.

As you might have guessed from all those shared services numbers, Restructuring and Government Efficiency continues to work closely with all government ministries to assist in streamlining new and existing programs and services. Since the formation of Restructuring and Government Efficiency a year and a half ago we've taken part in a number of cross-government efforts that produced many positive results. In fact, it's safe to say that Restructuring and Government Efficiency is actively engaged, working on a number of initiatives that are going to impact the government and Albertans.

For example, Restructuring and Government Efficiency is supporting the provincial plan for a possible pandemic by assisting in the planning efforts, everything from vaccine production and distribution to keeping Albertans up to date. We're working with the Solicitor General in a cross-ministry initiative to create an Alberta police and public safety radio communications system. This wireless network will improve communications for public safety responses and allow for a variety of organizations and enforcement agencies to communicate with each other on a regular and an emergency basis. We're developing and implementing new standardized ID cards for all government employees to enhance security.

With Alberta Justice and Infrastructure and Transportation, Restructuring and Government Efficiency is developing an abandoned vehicle disposal program. This program will work with police and towing and storage operators to deal with the 11,000 vehicles abandoned on our highways each year. Restructuring and Government Efficiency is partnering with Health and Wellness and Education to make sure that an effective cross-ministry video conferencing standard is in place that uses the SuperNet.

With that, let's take a look at the budget numbers. Starting on page 355 of the estimates, the 2006-2007 budget for this ministry is $255 million, similar to, but even a little less than, last year. Allow me to break that down into our core budget programs. The cost of running the ministry is about $7.3 million. This includes the corporate management budget for things like finance, internal IT costs, human resources and communications, and it also includes my office and the deputy minister's office. I'd like to point out that this cost is $1.7 million less than it was in '04-05. This is because we've streamlined processes, re-engineered services, and become more efficient internally.

We've allocated $6.7 million to business innovation. This is where we identify and deliver innovative change opportunities to improve delivery services to Albertans, pay for the operating costs of SuperNet, and conduct the regulatory review initiative.

Also, $32 million is planned for cross-ministry initiatives such as the focus on privacy, as I mentioned earlier, and the development and implementation of IT standards. It also covers the continued operation of the government's corporate, financial, human resource, and procurement systems.

The largest part of our budget is set aside for providing shared services in the areas of administration, finance, human resource employee services, and IT and network services. Of this $204 million budget, $31 million is for amortization of the ministry's capital assets, including SuperNet.

3:20

As a point of interest, over $103 million of our budget is charged back to ministries for services we provide. If you're keeping track, that leaves about $152 million of the $255 million total budget which pays the portion of shared services that we provide in-house. We are really demonstrating leadership in delivering shared services by standardizing processes, meeting and exceeding service expectations, and looking at options where we don't have to charge ministries for all the services we deliver.

Those, in a nutshell, are the budget numbers. Overall we'll be operating on a voted budget of $255 million, of which $103 million is charged back to ministries for services that they require.

Thank you for your interest in Restructuring and Government Efficiency. You know, just to prove efficiencies here, I'm sure that we could just call the question now since I explained my ministry so well, and we would save all this time and effort. Really, I'm sure that it takes a little while to get through to across the House there, so we may as well let you have some time now to ask some questions, and I'll try to answer them for you.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you had a good try, but we do have more than two hours allocated for this business.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed my extreme pleasure to rise and participate in this debate on this budget estimate, personally as a citizen and as an elected official but also on behalf of my hon. colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition, who is officially the critic for Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

I must start by thanking the hon. minister for his introduction and also to acknowledge and say hello and appreciate his most able staff. Whether or not we approve of this ministry's purpose or its reason for existence, we must also acknowledge that the staff make things happen, and they're the reason why things click the way they do. So I just wanted to get that out of the way in the beginning.

Capturing some of what the hon. minister spoke about, I must say that when it comes to Service Alberta, as a service we definitely rely upon it, and we use it increasingly every day. For most of the constituents who walk into the constituency office and ask questions or have concerns, I must confess that the first place I look is Service Alberta, and 80 per cent of the time I can find an answer fairly quickly. If not, it has the usefulness to actually direct me in the right direction to look for that answer elsewhere. So I find it very useful, and I think it's money well spent.

This ministry has acquired certain services or certain responsibilities from other departments that existed before it did, and in trying to put it together, it now appears that the ministry is busier than it used to be a year ago.

We mentioned SuperNet. We all know that in September or October of 2005 there was the announcement that bragged about the SuperNet having been completed. We know that the SuperNet is a very useful program and a very useful development. I have certain little questions with respect to the SuperNet. Did it really in fact arrive at or reach the 429 communities that were identified in the announcement? We know now that 16 per cent of those, or 37 of those 429, were only connected via wireless links. That's not the fibre-optic connection that was basically agreed upon or that people were under the impression they were getting. So I need to ask the hon. minister if that is in fact allowed in the contract or whether this is an area where a suboptimal service was provided. We need to know if this was agreed upon in the contract and there's no breach, or whether this was agreed upon after and it was allowed to happen, or whether everything is where it's supposed to be and how it's supposed to be.

With that, I also ask: why wireless when everybody you talk to tells you that wireless is less secure and less reliable than an actual physical fibre-optic link? For example, here in the Legislature we do not use wireless Internet even in our own offices, whether on site at the Legislature or at the Legislature Annex. We don't allow wireless because of its vulnerability and the threats that it might be exposed to. If we don't allow it here, why are certain communities being asked to rely on a wireless link that is not reliable in performance and that might be susceptible to breaches and penetration?

Also, Axia in their agreement with the government promised guaranteed speeds and network performance, or committed access rates. They call them CARs. How is the ministry and how is the hon. minister's department monitoring that those committed access rates are in fact being delivered at those rates and consistently? We need to assure Albertans that they are getting what they are paying for.

Also, I must say that I was really extremely pleased when I wrote an e-mail to the hon. minister's staff asking for a list of the completed sites, the sites which were connected to the Internet, the 4,200 sites which were announced in September. Between themselves they took a day or so to ask him if it was all right to share it with an opposition member, and he replied that, yes, it was all right, that they have nothing to hide, so give it to the hon. member. I really appreciated this, and I felt very good that an hon. minister of that calibre is willing to share this information. Again, it's public information: 4,200 sites were connected; 4,200 sites appear on a list that is printed and shared with everybody who asks for it. However, I noted that in the agreement which we FOIPed earlier, under schedule G 6,304 locations were identified as potential targets for connectivity. So it went down from 6,304 to 4,200, and I need to know from the hon. minister where this discrepancy came from or, you know, why it exists.

On the issue of the SuperNet as well, I have two distinct concerns that were raised with the opposition. For example, we have spoken to some students in rural Alberta who say that the SuperNet has actually arrived at their campus, at their college or institution, but it is not shared with the student body. For example, you might not have SuperNet access in the student lounge or everywhere on campus, but you definitely have it for faculty and you have it for the support staff. These students said: you know, if it's right there, why not allow access even if it's restricted? They don't need to access all of the information that the dean of that school or the library staff have access to, but utilizing the high-speed connection there would at least be a cost saving for them, and it would allow them to conduct their research more efficiently. So that's one question.

The other question is with respect to costs. I can quote, for example, a library in one town in rural Alberta which declined the invitation to hook up onto the SuperNet. They said: "We don't need it. We're going to actually get our high-speed Internet from the municipality." They told us that they were actually paying $1,000 per year for high-speed Internet versus a cost of about $1,800 had they been on the SuperNet. How can we demonstrate that the SuperNet is actually cost-efficient for everybody who are asking to be on it? So that's that.

The minister also spoke about the plan to update or issue ID cards for all government employees. I'm thinking aloud here. Is this going to be something similar to the new Alberta driver's licence? Is it going to be as secure? If so, are we also going to use the Canadian Bank Note Company to provide us with those? Whether or not we're going to go that route, I need to get some indication of a cost estimate.

Security, of course, is on everybody's minds, and I totally agree that government employees' ID has to be secure. It has to be trusted. It has to be reliable. But what cost are we looking at? Is this cost going to be phased over a number of years, or is it going to be like a one-time lump sum? How is it going to be updated?

The minister also mentioned efficiency. He referred to it as operational efficiency, which means that the ministry is investigating ways to improve services: delivery of services for the public, efficiency in terms of partners that the government utilizes, and so on. What steps are being taken to actually assess and determine areas of potential efficiencies? I'm not just talking about the top-down approach, where people are told what to do and how to think. I'm also thinking about a bottom-up approach, encouraging staff and ministry employees and people in government to each look within their area of competency and within their responsibility to identify efficiencies that are not being realized fully and to potentially report back to the minister and staff, saying: this is an area we think needs attention. Then the ministry can actually compile all those local or microinvestigations into a bigger scheme.

What indicators or criteria does this minister use to test if government is, in fact, becoming more efficient? I am particularly referring to a conversation that happened in Public Accounts, where the minister hinted or admitted that the indicators were unrealistic and that they were sometimes subjective. So will there be indicators that are, in his opinion, realistic for this fiscal year or for the one coming after?

The minister also spoke about the regulatory reform angle, or the red tape review. We definitely support conducting a full and thorough red tape review. The burden of red tape is basically greatest on small business. If you're using the terminology or nomenclature of the business world, it's the SMEs, the small to medium enterprises, not the larger or more established firms. So the small businesses, independent most of the time, are the ones that actually bear the burden of the red tape and the difficulties it poses. What are we doing to try to focus our review on the small to medium businesses rather than going across the board, where, in fact, larger businesses, with their established status – and they have their armies of lawyers and accountants – are the ones that don't mind it?

In terms of efficiencies and studying whether this government is efficient or not, I mentioned the SuperNet. I need to also cover something that is personally interesting and troubling at the same time. By that I mean the ambulance service. Last year and to some extent earlier this year the question arose of who should be responsible for an ambulance service. Is it the municipality where it's hosted, or is it the government centrally? I would urge the minister to actually look at this from an efficiency standpoint and study it. Look at other models, look at other jurisdictions and determine whether, in fact, there should be one system that is implemented across the board or whether we would go with several models for several communities.

Another thing which I can't help but ask – and I asked it in Public Accounts, and the minister has promised to look into it – is about the newly created ministry of the Associate Minister of Infrastructure, and then we put capital planning in brackets. How efficient is this? How efficient will it be a year from now, especially after staff is added, resources are included, equipment is bought, and all that stuff? We need a sort of before-and-after study to compare what things were and how they were conducted before that ministry was created and then after because, of course, the size of government and the size of cabinet is worrisome, and we need to ascertain that we're getting value for the taxpayers' dollars.

Some financial points, Mr. Chairman. Line 1.0.2, dealing with the deputy minister's office, that budget is increasing by $80,000. What can we show for it basically? How is this money going to be utilized, and what are the deliverables, the end results which we can tell taxpayers are the result of this increased expenditure?

Line 4.0.3 on page 359 talks about inventory purchases of $3.8 million for information technology and network services. I need more clarification as to what the $3.8 million is going to cover and what things we are paying for.

On page 360 there is no capital investment in this year's budget. I know that the minister has talked about extending the SuperNet, making sure that everybody has access to it and can utilize it. In the business plan it talks about promoting the potential of government. There is no capital expense. I'm not necessarily arguing that there should be, but I'm just saying, you know: should people in businesses waiting for the Internet through the Alberta SuperNet assume that no capital investments this year means that no improvements are expected this fiscal year? Are we telling them to wait a year, basically? That is the question here.

The Auditor General highlighted the fact that the ministry did not have performance measures, or if they did, then they weren't satisfactory. The Auditor General recommended that the ministry "clearly define" its performance measures and targets and "develop systems" to monitor those performance measures and targets. We know that the government has accepted it, but what exactly has been put in place already, and what is going to be put in place within this year or within sort of the foreseeable future? If there are performance measures in place now, are they going to be funded through this budget, or where is the funding coming from?

Moving on – and I promise to be brief because I know that my hon. colleagues after me want to rise and participate – the link to the government of Alberta strategic business plan. One of them is goal 8, "Alberta will have financially stable, open and accountable government." It talks about "prioritization of opportunities to streamline, restructure and gain efficiencies for the business of government" and "sharing corporate information and communications technology and administrative systems and processes." This is all great, and there is no quarrel here, but where does that fit with the open and accountable government part of that goal? It doesn't talk about it, and I'm interested in finding out from the hon. minister how his ministry is going to promote openness and transparency.

The other goal which is listed, goal 14: "Alberta will have supportive and sustainable infrastructure that promotes growth and enhances quality of life." SuperNet is the one that is highlighted here, again with the 429 communities, but if people are not being able to access that or if, in fact, some of those Internet service providers are offering inferior service or they're experiencing delays, then is there a role for the government, for this ministry to intervene and to accelerate connection?

Also, the minister spoke about protecting people's private information, which is a noble and laudable goal, and I truly support him on that. Then he mentioned, you know, information that is either hosted or housed on government computers or information that is accessible from outside sources. I know that the government has many partnerships with software developers. I note the hon. minister's trip to the U.S., where he met with Microsoft, and we know that IBM is another partner and so on. How are we ascertaining that the software that we buy is not itself infested with spyware, for example, or harvesting code that might maliciously access and transmit information to third parties without our knowledge?

The PATRIOT Act comes to mind, Mr. Chairman, where software developers at one point were told that if their firm is targeted, they would have to relinquish control over their code and allow the agency in charge, like the FBI or the CIA for example, to tamper with that code to allow it to harvest information. So however many staff that the minister mentioned that actually sit there and monitor, you know, threats and hack attacks and attempts, how much of that effort is dedicated towards making sure that the software that we buy is secure enough?

Also, the minister in his submission mentioned invoices being paid electronically. I'm looking at page 319 of the business plan for 2006-09, and it says that in last year's actual 960,000 invoices were paid online. This is amazing. This is very positive because now we're allowing people to be at home, for example, sitting at their keyboards and paying government bills, you know, taking care of their business from home.

Mr. Ouellette: I don't know whether to thank you for all those questions or what because you were so all over the map that I don't know if I can follow you. I'm not sure, from some of your last questions, that you haven't watched quite too many TV shows about hackers and whatever you were talking about there.

Mr. Lund: Well, commit that you will answer any questions, any that are relevant to the discussions.

Mr. Ouellette: Oh, no. I will answer his questions.

Anyway, I'll try to go back to the beginning, 20 minutes ago. One thing I will talk about a little bit is SuperNet. I mean, it's one of the very best rural economic development initiatives this government has ever come up with. I will say that for that contract that you're talking about, when you go back to schedule G and the 6,304 connections and all that stuff, you have to remember that the SuperNet contract – what we had planned on doing was connecting 429 communities, and in those 429 communities we were going to connect every government office, every school, every hospital, and every library. What was added after that were the municipal offices if they applied for a grant, and they could apply for grants with Municipal Affairs to get that covered.

It was a movement in progress, all while we were paying $193 million to get connected what we wanted connected. We weren't going to pay any more or any less, and we haven't. That's what our contract was: $193 million. It turned out that there were only 4,200 connections, but that went up and down as schools were built and some weren't built. All of those are connected today.

You were asking about different connections within a school. That really has nothing to do with us supplying the infrastructure of the SuperNet. That probably should've been asked of the Education minister on whether they control that. I'm guessing that it's the school boards that completely control that. We put the infrastructure there. The school board now pays us even though Education gives them a budget to do that.

I've got to beg to differ with you on the security of wireless. Yes, in our contracts wireless was allowed. There were areas we knew we would never get fibre connected to. It was just way, way too expensive to go do one spot out of the way. But with today's technology they tell me that they can secure wireless as good as they can secure whether a hacker can come into your computer that's going down the SuperNet or not. I mean, as long as there are crooks, you're going to always find – you would almost think that crooks should be not quite as bright as the guys coming up. You'd think: if they were that bright, why wouldn't they go make their money legally instead of being crooked? But it seems to work out that the crooks are always finding a better mousetrap to be able to get you, so that's why we have to have so many people behind them working on that.

You were also asking about the budget going into SuperNet. There was never any more budget planned for SuperNet. We were to do that main infrastructure – and that was our policy – and let private enterprise develop the last mile. I've started calling it the first mile because of how important it is to small business and businesses and homes in rural Alberta. That is developing very, very quickly. We've got well over 50 Internet service providers right now. We've got over 135 communities connected; people can actually get onto the SuperNet.

There are new technologies out there working with satellite, and I've been talking to a couple of different companies on that. They won't necessarily connect to SuperNet immediately. They will go out and from satellite do the high-speed connections, and when they get enough people in an area signed up that it pays them to put in a wireless wired into the SuperNet – let's say 30 customers or whatever – then they'll transfer those customers onto their wireless connection, which will bring their speed up and bring their costs down.

You were also saying: how do we monitor it? I will have to actually get someone from my department to contact you on how they actually monitor it. I know that Axia SuperNet has a broader, wider band than anything else out there right now, and they can give you just about any speed you want. The nice thing about this is that the really high-speed stuff used to be only reasonably priced within the cities. Axia tells me that they will supply a full megabit, which is probably more than you would get on your coaxial at home unless you upgrade it, for, like, $50 a month.

When you talk about libraries that say to you – and I have municipalities telling me the same thing. You've got to remember that their train of thought hasn't been geared yet to what the capabilities of that SuperNet connection are. They don't know yet what applications they want to run on it, but they could run all kinds of applications on that SuperNet access that they can't run on their Shaw Cable or whatever they're getting their old high-speed Internet on. Maybe all they've got now is high-speed Internet. Maybe they think that that's all they need, and maybe it is, but if they did a little broader thinking and thought of different applications they could use, they could build that small-town library into a lot bigger business for them to make their library actually survive. That's where they make up that difference in cost, going from $1,000 to $1,800. So a lot of it is that they just don't realize yet, because they haven't been educated, the application capabilities that they have by using the SuperNet connection rather than using the other connection.

You had mentioned a little bit about ambulances. I have to say that I think that we have just an excellent health minister in this province, who works very, very hard at making sure that all aspects of health care are looked after. She has an ambulance advisory task force out there right now reviewing what the ambulance situation is, so I think I'll let the questions about ambulances come to our wonderful health minister another day.

You talked about what we were doing with standardized ID cards. The cards will enhance security all across government with greater control around the request tracking and retrieval of the ID cards. The card format will be consistent. Everyone's will be the same now, so they'll be a lot harder to forge. The new standardized ID card is expected to be launched in June of '06, with the rollout and distribution process to last several months. Ministries in phase 1 of the rollout include us, of course, PAO, IIR, Children's Services, Human Resources and Employment, Seniors and Community Supports, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Ministries in phase 2 of the rollout will be approximately a month later. That's when Education, Infrastructure, and I and S will come on board.

Initially, the card will be for identification purposes only. So that's all they'll be used for: identification. The next stages of the card are expected to include electronic authentication and secure building access, and that will all get rolled into that same card. Whatever the cost of that card it is all within the budget that we have. We don't have to go out and get any more financing or anything for that card.

You were asking about a little bit of an increase in the deputy minister's department. As you know, a while ago I think it was probably you guys that raised a lot of kerfuffle about the big raises that the deputies got. Well, we had to put extra money in those budgets to cover those deputies' salaries. Most of that $80,000 was used up in increases in staff in the deputy minister's office.

You were saying – and I'm not very quick at going through my book – that there was no capital. I don't know where it is exactly in front of me, but we do have $4.5 million in capital in there somewhere. Now, that isn't for SuperNet. A lot of that is to upgrade our data centres. As you know, we have a data centre in Edmonton and a data centre in Calgary, and all of our government stuff runs on those data centres. We've actually had test cases with them. If there's an emergency, if anything happens, if a pandemic happens or anything like that, we have to make sure that our data stays up and running and that Health can get at their files. Everybody's got to be able to operate. We've tested where we've shut down Edmonton and transferred everything to Calgary to make sure that it would work, and it does, but we need quite a bit of that money. Actually that's an increase in our budget. We only had $3 million in there last year for capital, and we went to $4.5 million. Most of that was for upgrades for the data centres.

I hope I got just about everything. I'm not sure if there was more that you had given me, but if there is more, if you'll send me a note on it, I'll try and get the answers to you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will not go into as many questions mainly because I don't know much more about technology than he does. I could ask a bunch of questions, and neither one of us would know what the answers were. So I'll talk in broader terms about this particular ministry.

You know, nothing to do with the minister, but I've always found it a bit of an oxymoron that when this department was created, we added another bureaucracy to a government to become more efficient. I've never sort of understood the logic of that, Mr. Chairman. I mean, this department has been set up since 2004. I'm sure there's some good work. I know that the minister likes to talk about the SuperNet, but I want to talk broader about government.

I was sort of interested in the performance measures in the 2004-2005 annual report. The minister, if nothing else, is honest. By their own evaluation they are inefficiently pursuing efficiency. Well, that was an interesting way to put things, Mr. Chairman. I believe that it was Benjamin Franklin who once said that “the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over and expecting different results.” So I’m not sure what the difference is there.

Before I get into more general things, I want to talk about P3s. In their business plans they’re talking about exploring opportunities for private partnerships, better known as P3s. Now, it’s no secret in this Legislature how I feel about the record of P3s. They’ve been dismal, basically, where they’ve been tried. We’re touted to that Henday is going to be a great success. I still think that that’s not the case. I think that it has cost more than it should, but that’s another debate that the minister of infrastructure and I will hold time and time again. We’re not sure what the ring road will bring yet because it’s just in the preliminary stage.

I guess the major question that I have, then, is: what is the role of this minister and this department in this whole P3 debate? Is this the department that’s doing some work and looking into P3s? I mean, Nova Scotia is the obvious example, where a Conservative government got rid of them after a Liberal government brought it in. You know, it seems to be Infrastructure that’s pursuing this more, but there was some talk before about Education pursuing this and others. I guess I’d just like a general comment about the minister’s and his department’s role there.

I did look at, Mr. Chairman, the ministry’s website. The SuperNet is touted. We all think that it’s a great idea, albeit that it came in late and slightly over budget, but nobody would argue that it’s especially important for rural Alberta. One might argue that it was in a different department at one time, and it would have been done. But I notice on the website under its frequently asked questions that there are two categories: Alberta SuperNet questions – well, fair enough; we all want to hear about the SuperNet – and then there are general questions. This is what is sort of interesting. The former under general questions brings up another window with detailed information about the services provided or accessed through the province-wide SuperNet, while the latter, general questions, answers only two questions, one answering why surplus items for sale don’t have pictures with them more often and the other about how to register your company to purchase surplus items.

Now, I mean, those are probably interesting questions for some people, but for a restructuring department and going by the minister, the important work that the ministry is doing and what they’re about, you’d think that they would on the website have more than that. I suppose that’s important, but it’s not earth-shaking to most people. Most Albertans are not really going to know much about this particular department, so I guess that what the people would come to when they look at that website is that the sole purpose for this ministry was the SuperNet. I suppose the obvious next question would be: now that the SuperNet’s working and well, according to the minister, will this ministry be dissolved then? I’m sure that somebody else can do the surplus and the rest of it. I mean, either the website needs to be upgraded or we need to make some other more drastic measures. I will certainly be talking about the latter, Mr. Chairman.

This is where I want to come to sort of the philosophy of government, if I may. This is the major item that I want to discuss, Mr. Chairman. When this government came in under the leadership of Premier Klein, the deficit fighting, Premier Klein admittedly brought forward by the . . .

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin: Premier Klein: that’s his title, isn’t it?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, this is the third time now you’re repeating. You know the tradition of this House. We refer to colleagues by their constituencies.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I always greatly appreciate the help, especially from the Minister of Advanced Education.

But, Mr. Chairman, the point that I make is that at the time the previous government had something like 27 cabinet posts. We in opposition were saying that was too big and cumbersome. It was a big government, and at that time the new government under the new Premier agreed with that. You may recall that at that particular time – I believe that some members were here, not many, but some were here – the first cabinet actually had 19 members. Now I see us, even recently, up to 25.

The point that I make is that with a restructuring department surely the message should be that we start at the very top, the number of ministries, in terms of if we want efficiency and restructuring. The more ministries that you have, the more complicated government gets and, I would argue, the less services that get out to the people that need them.

I would say to the minister that maybe there are other ministries that he would be welcome to take over. But I guess I would ask the purpose of this ministry because the SuperNet is completed. It’s done. I expect that if we’re serious about government restructuring and efficiency, this is the type of ministry that would want to work themselves out of business. That would be the ultimate goal, it would seem to me, in this particular ministry.

Bureaucracies have a way, as we know, of creating work and finding reasons to justify why they’re there. I know that questions were raised, and I know that when we added cabinet ministers just recently, this particular minister has no control over that. But the reality is that government at the top level is getting bigger. If you’re trying to send a message that we want to be more efficient, that becomes very hard when you send it down to the level when it’s going bigger at the top.

So I look at the ministry’s three main functions on page 358 of the budget estimates, and I suggest that this ministry could easily be divided amongst other more appropriate ministries. Business innovation could be done by Economic Development. Government efficiency should be done by the Executive Council office. Service excellence, which includes a procurement faction, should be done by Infrastructure and Transportation, for which, I would point out, an associate minister was just appointed, and IT and network services could easily be done by Innovation and Science.

This is not directed to any particular minister. I’m talking about the bureaucracy here, Mr. Chairman. I would point out what it could mean if we could save $255 million through dissolution of this department. Just to give you a few examples: $255 million would allow schools to hire 1,700 new teachers or could allow full implementation of the MLA review committee’s recommendations for continuing care and still leave enough money to double Alberta’s Water for Life strategy funding; or $255 million would replace the dropped federal funding for child care or pay for a quarter of the infrastructure that Fort McMurray desperately needs, including water treatment plants and housing developments; $255 million would nearly double Alberta Environment’s pitifully small budget, which might just give that ministry a fighting chance at doing something more important.

The point is that that’s a lot of money. When we’re dealing with taxpayers’ money, it’s priorities. I guess that I question the priorities of adding more bureaucracies, especially at the top level, and more and more departments, how that is really serving Albertans.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I don’t want to suggest for a second that some useful work has not been done in this particular department.

I'm sure it has. But I stress that it seems to me that the purpose of a department with the name Restructuring and Government Efficiency should be to work themselves out of business. I'm suggesting that perhaps now is the most useful time to do that because, as I say, the longer a bureaucracy is there, the harder it is to maintain, the more it looks for busywork, the more it looks for opportunities to justify keeping itself there.

So being ever helpful that I am – and I know that the minister greatly appreciates my help – I would like to bring in an amendment, Mr. Chairman. I'll read it and then give you time to get around to it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you have enough copies for distribution?

Mr. Martin: Yes. I'm going to hand them out.

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead. Hon. member, please send the original copy to the desk.

Mr. Martin: It's coming, Mr. Chairman. Shall I proceed or wait?

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Mr. Martin: What this particular amendment does – and we've checked through the Parliamentary Counsel and tried to find out how we can legally do it, Mr. Chairman. I'll just read it:

Move that the estimates for the minister's office under reference 1.0.1 of the 2006-07 main estimates of the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency be reduced by $379,000 so that the expense and equipment/inventory purchases to be voted is $254,760,000.

The purpose is simply to take a message, again I want to stress, not towards a particular minister but to the government. This is a way for us to say that we do not need this extra department in government, Mr. Chairman. If we're serious about government expenses and priorities and the rest of it, then this particular department should go ahead and work itself out of business.

We're asking the Conservatives to fall back to their old days when there were 19 cabinet ministers. This would be a start.

Ms Blakeman: Seventeen ministers.

Mr. Martin: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre says that it was 17. I was out by that time. She was here, so I'll take her word on it, Mr. Chairman. But we certainly should be moving in that direction, and this is an attempt to do it.

So thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have an amendment on the floor as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1. Would anyone like to participate in a debate on this amendment? Hon. minister, did you want to participate?

4:10

Mr. Ouellette: I would just like to have the question. Let's just vote it out of here and be done with it.

Mr. Hinman: That's what I love about this government. It's so efficient. I believe Churchill said that democracy was never meant to be efficient, so we'll continue if I have a few minutes.

I appreciate this amendment coming forward. He stole a lot of my thunder on what efficiency is, but I very much am in favour of this amendment. We need to look at reducing the size of this government, and I'll talk later on some of those things. But I'm in favour of this amendment, in reducing it. Therefore, we will still have the budget for the expense and the equipment, but we could eliminate the ministry. That would be more efficient, and I'll give further reasons why later. I'd like to speak in favour of this and appreciate the NDP going against their normal idea of expanding – bigger government is better government – then going for a smaller, more efficient Conservative government.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, did you want to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Chase: I'm strictly seeking clarification from the mover of the amendment as to where the $379,000 figure came from so that I can appreciate that reduction in the overall expenditure.

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody else wish to participate in the amendment?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Chairman, I kind of find it funny in a way. They're saying that 1.0.1 is the minister's office, and I don't really have a problem with that, that he wants to get rid of me. But I do really wonder. Actually, if you remember, in the speech from the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung just a little earlier he said how important a whole pile of the things were that this ministry was doing. I've also been questioned in the House a number of times on: we didn't get enough money to be able to do regulatory review properly. Now they're trying to say that we got too much money.

Do you want us to stop paying everyone's paycheques? Do you want us to stop paying the bills of the government? Do you want us to stop doing all the procurement, the buying we do? Should we stop delivering the mail? You can say, "Get rid of all these bureaucrats" all you want, but we need all those bureaucrats to do all of those jobs. Whether they're in my ministry or someone else's, they will be there.

We'll vote on that. There's no sense having a debate back and forth across the floor. I should be talking to the chairman, being that we are so polite on this side of the House.

An Hon. Member: Somebody who cares.

Mr. Ouellette: Someone who cares and actually knows the difference between good and bad and right and wrong.

Anyway, I honestly believe that it's a very poor amendment, and I think we should just vote it out of here.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the amendment? Are you ready for the vote on the amendment? Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, do you want to participate in the debate on the amendment?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. I appreciate the fact that I had an opportunity to talk to the hon. mover of the amendment. Basically, what he is pointing out is that this whole department is an unnecessary expenditure. I support that notion. He is doing it symbolically and figuratively by basically removing the beast's head. I would like to see the whole beast taken out.

Mr. VanderBurg: I would like to speak against the amendment, Mr. Chairman. Clearly, this department has done a lot of good things within their government ministry and within many others. I know that under this ministry there are about 25,000 training registrations that deliver over 800 cross-government training courses annually to public servants, who improve the efficiency and quality of services to all Albertans. To all Albertans. Let's remember that. They manage over 26,000 telephone land lines and 7,000 cellphones. Someone has to do that work. I don't know who's going to do the work. This department also ensures that over 22 million pieces of mail are delivered in a timely manner and over 39 million documents are printed. Who's going to do the work? These people do great work, and we should recognize the work that they do for each and every one of us.

I'll tell you, this ministry also processes 375,000 invoices, allowing our vendors to receive payments in a timely manner. That's pretty amazing, that they can handle that. They support 26,000 government computers. My gosh. I don't know. I have trouble managing one. How about you, Mr. Chair? Twenty-six thousand government computers: that's a lot.

Not only that, but they've ensured that when it comes time that we have surplus computers, over 7,000 of those computers were donated to school programs. I thank the minister for doing that and his staff for ensuring that those computers weren't just thrown in a heap and gone to the recycle pile, that they're reused. In fact, the surplus sales that this department has taken care of or donated: I think there were over 100,000 items with a value of almost $5 million. That's a lot of good work that this department does.

You'll note that the budget for delivering shared services to other ministries has gone down slightly over the last year, and I heard the minister talk about this. You know, it's gone down from $211 million to $204 million. That's pretty amazing, Mr. Chair, that in this day and age we can get that great service, and the price goes down. I betcha that doesn't happen across the way.

So I'm going to vote against this, Mr. Chairman. At this time I want to say to the minister and to the staff that as Government Services minister, as a new minister, we appreciate the work that you do each and every day, and we appreciate the dedication and commitment you have to your minister as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As we go through Committee of Supply year after year, we have amendments come forward. Normally, those amendments seem to be aimed at standing policy committees. This one is not, but the usual amendment that comes forward tries to eliminate a mechanism by which the people, through their elected representatives, can have input into the policy process of government. And the excuse for trying to do that is to say: well, not all members of the Legislature get to participate, and therefore it's not appropriate to have that committee. It usually says that the Legislature's funds should not be used in that way. Of course, the appropriate answer is that it's not Legislature funds; it's government funds, it's developing government policy, and it's involving private members of the Legislature, indeed, on the government side of the House in developing that policy.

This amendment is a slightly different tack on the same thing. It's trying to suggest that we should take away the elected participation, the elected oversight of important government and public policy functions by removing a minister, by removing the minister's office from the equation. The only way one could justify that type of an amendment would be to say that it's more important to have bureaucratic oversight of government and public policy functions than it is to have elected oversight, and that surely cannot be what the hon. member wants to accomplish.

Now, no insult intended, of course, to the bureaucratic oversight. You need to have a good bureaucracy to carry out public policy, and you need to have good senior civil servants to bring forward all the policy options for decision. But surely in this House the hon.

member would not suggest that we should take away the elected oversight, the representatives of the people, in the policy development process and the governance process. This amendment proposes to do exactly that and therefore, Mr. Chairman, cannot be supported.

Mr. Martin: I'm pleased that my amendment got so much action over on the other side, Mr. Chairman. The purpose is simply this: the Legislature controls the purse strings. [A cellphone rang] Tell them I'll call them later.

The Legislature controls the purse strings, and this is estimates, and if the Legislature voted here today – again, I'm not going to hold my breath – that this should happen, it would happen. It's not taking the rights away from anybody. This is the budgetary estimates, plain and simple, and the Legislature supposedly controls the purse strings. The budget has to be passed here. That's the reality of the Legislature. That's all we're asking. We're trying to send a message that government's got too big, too bureaucratic. We're asking the government to take a look at a department that should be working itself out of business. If all of a sudden the government here in the Legislature voted to do this, the Legislature has the power to do that. So I don't really understand the argument from the former House leader, but I'm sure he'll take the time to explain it to me at another time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, did you want to still speak on the amendment?

Mr. Ouellette: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I agree a hundred per cent with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I don't know how they can go about looking at a government estimate and just pull out 1.0.1, which is actually just the minister's office. So at one point he's saying that, you know, we can't have all this bureaucratic control – we've got to get rid of bureaucrats; we've got to get a smaller government – yet at the next moment he's saying: well, we're just getting rid of the minister's office, but the rest of the budget will pass.

So I guess that I should tell him again how much work our department has done and what we have done and what's important to this government. I'm just going to tell you some of the efficiencies that we do and what we have done. We've done huge volume purchases of computer equipment and have saved tons of dough for government through enterprise agreements across the government of Alberta for software licensing and technology. We've reduced the cost of maintenance of Microsoft products for the government by $500,000 a year. Just by optimizing our cellphone plans across government, we've saved $970,000 a year. We negotiated a new procurement card for over 4,500 government users, with an estimated savings of $1.8 million a year. It goes on and on and on, yet you don't even recognize anything we do. So I don't know if it's really important to carry on debating with you or not.

The Deputy Chair: Does any other member wish to participate in the debate on the amendment before us? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Martin: I'll be very brief. Just on the point that the minister made: it's a wonder how they ever got all those things done that they talked about when they had 17 cabinet ministers. Mr. Chairman, the point of the figures: it's what we could do. If I had my way, I would say that the whole department goes, and it would be moved into other departments. This is what we can do legally through Parliamentary Counsel. To the hon. minister, that was advice that we were given.

Mr. Chase: Just simply if we could call the question so we can continue with the debate and discussion.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, I'm listening to this debate, and I have to wade in if only briefly. I haven't heard the hon. member who moved this amendment come forward with a single coherent policy idea about how that ministry should be restructured or reduced other than frivolously pulling a number which includes the minister's office out of the air, really the legislative equivalent of the government suggesting that maybe we should reduce or eliminate the funding for opposition leaders. It makes no sense. It adds no useful weight to this debate that we're having. I, for one, wouldn't mind getting back to discussing the business plan, which is something of interest. We are wasting the precious time that we have this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody else wish to participate in the debate on the amendment before us?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We're ready for the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back to the estimates. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciated the opportunity in Public Accounts this past Wednesday to speak directly with the minister. That has allowed me to cut down on the series of questions I will be asking today.

The Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, or as we lovingly refer to it, RAGE for short, was formed from a combination of Government Services and Innovation and Science. Were these ministry staff reduced accordingly, or is this just another government make-work project? This is a question I had asked seriously this last Wednesday, but I was unable to get an answer. With more ministers here possibly they can indicate to what extent their two departments were reduced.

This ministry became ministry 24. When our current Premier became leader of the Conservative Party, he stated that he was opposed to big government, yet under his reign ministries have increased from 17 to 24. Of course, the obvious rhetorical question is: is this efficient?

The primary justification or cause célèbre of this ministry has been the SuperNet and creating economic efficiencies by bulk buying. I do not deny that these two things have occurred, but my question is: was it necessary to create a separate ministry to achieve these two goals?

If a new ministry was absolutely necessary, the ministry I would have preferred to have seen created would have been the ministry of arts and culture as this is an area that is currently undervalued in this province.

While the Auditor General noted satisfactory performance for most areas of this ministry, an area where Restructuring, or RAGE, fell sadly short was in the area of performance measures. On page 284 of the Auditor General's report he makes recommendation 37, and he notes that he's again making this recommendation.

We again recommend that the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency:

- clearly define its performance measures and targets, and
- develop systems to monitor and report results.

The Auditor General goes on to relate past history of the department in his recommendations. Then he suggests:

Criteria: the standards we used for our audit

The Ministry should:

1. clearly define its performance measures and targets and link them to the core businesses and goals of the Ministry.
2. have adequate control systems to ensure that performance information is reliable.
3. report performance results in relation to the business plan.

The Auditor General indicates:

The Ministry made unsatisfactory progress improving its performance measurement systems. The Ministry did not clearly define the performance measures and methodologies for six measures included in the draft Ministry's 2004-2005 Annual Report. The Ministry is also still developing the systems to monitor and report results for one of these measures.

Now, the Auditor General, without going into the whole business, has indicated that as the methodology for the performance measures noted above was not clearly defined, this review process did not identify the problems with the data for these measures. As a result, these measures required restatement in the draft Annual Report and the results for three measures were zero.

My concern very briefly, without going further into the Auditor General's report, is that this ministry – what I find troubling is that if this ministry has experienced difficulty setting and evaluating its own performance measures, how can it then evaluate the efficiency of the 23 other ministries? This is very troubling. As a school-teacher I had my students set objectives, and part of the setting of objectives was evaluating how they would know that these objectives had been realized.

Another concern I have is that this government is notorious for contracting out work to external consultants/friends who frequently only provide lip service or oral advice. I would hope that this ministry would have the internal efficiency. What I'm suggesting is that instead of expensive outsourcing, should this ministry dedicated to improving efficiency not contain within its own staff the qualified individuals necessary to provide the information internally if the ministries, the other 23, for some unexplainable reason lack their own expertise? We have thousands and thousands of people employed by the government. It always causes me concern that we have to keep outsourcing. What are we paying the individuals within our system for if they don't have sufficient experience?

Another concern I have is interministry communication. I would like to think that this ministry was something that you sort of attached to the other ministries and that by that attachment the evaluations and improvements of efficiency would be readily noted, but to me the ministry itself is still trying to internally develop its own efficiencies.

[Mr. Lindsay in the chair]

My experience in the field while operating Cataract Creek on the southeast border of K Country was that there was a lack of communication between Sustainable Resources and the parks and protected areas. For example, conflicting information was supplied during the fire in the Crownsnest Pass in 2003 as to fire bans, backcountry access, et cetera. The communication problem was further complicated by forestry during the process of fighting the fire using the same frequency as parks used to contact conservation officers. I'm wondering: is it within the expectation or role of your department to try to improve interdepartmental communications efficiency? I would hope that somehow you could get the departments talking to each other, thus improving their own internal efficiency and the output of their departments.

During Public Accounts last week I asked what role, if any, you had with parks and protected areas online registering, which has been an ongoing problem for campers. Does your department advise other ministries with regard to improving their electronic communications efficiency? I see your department as being responsible for the SuperNet, and the SuperNet is the king of electronic efficiencies, so I'm hoping that you can use your ability with the SuperNet to improve internal and external communications.

Is there a plan to improve the quality and security of Alberta health cards? You were talking about an identity card. Last year we noted that there were over 5 million cards in circulation for an Alberta population of approximately 3 million. I'm just wondering: instead of a separate ID card is it possible to potentially just do this as a health card, or at least could we improve the status of our current health card so that it is less likely to be abused and could be reliably produced as a qualified piece of identity?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, just quickly on those cards. I don't think I need to go through the whole gamut on our employee cards, is what I'm talking here, again. On our health cards, actually, the hon. Minister of Government Services is working on that situation. I mean, we wouldn't want our identification cards for the Alberta government to be used as everybody's health card.

I think maybe I will talk a little bit and answer your question. I mean, I've answered this question for you in Public Accounts. I've got to come clean. You know, the Auditor General said that we did a very poor job on our performance measures. I agree that we have done a poor job on our performance measures, but over the past year Restructuring and Government Efficiency has done significant work on improving performance measures and associated performance measurement tracking and recording systems.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

We could not have realized this great progress without the assistance and support of the office of the Auditor General. At the request of the ministry a preliminary evaluation of Restructuring and Government Efficiency's '06-09 performance measures was completed by the office of the Auditor General in November of '05. As a result of this review, we have ensured that the new measures are in compliance with the office of the Auditor General's policies and recommendations and that critical success factors were identified and translated into meaningful performance measures and targets. The new measures are directly aligned to core businesses and, at the same time, accurately reflect key targets or milestones that Restructuring and Government Efficiency will accomplish over the next three fiscal years.

As part of Restructuring and Government Efficiency's commitment to continue to strengthen its performance measurement work, an internal quarterly reporting system was established and implemented within the ministry in 2005. This system allows for monitoring progress on performance measures and ensuring that quarterly results presented are consistent with the stated methodology.

Another thing that I want to mention. As much as we've talked about SuperNet here and everything else, I still mustn't be explaining it just right or something. Really, the SuperNet is just a highway. All it is is an infrastructure. It's a highway that information travels over, but you still need an Internet service provider. You still need all the other applications to put on that highway, but that's all we built. So to say, "Should we be doing the online registering for parks?" it's not in our purview.

I guess that comes back to saying that I didn't bring up the name of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I think we have a good staff, I think our staff does great work, and I think we've accomplished a lot in the year and a half that we've been here. However many numbers of ministries there are, that's strictly what the Premier wants and what the Premier believes he needs to do a great job for this province of Alberta, and we have a Premier that's done an unbelievable job in this province for the last 13 years or however long it has been. Over those years you would've realized that if he wouldn't have been doing such a good job, we wouldn't have such an abundance of people on this side of the House making the decisions that have to be made to do a good job for Albertans in this province.

To answer your P3 question, I'm not looking at P3s anywhere, but if you want to look at a really successful P3 and look at a P3 that didn't go over budget, that stayed on budget of what the government expected to pay, just look at SuperNet. There was a very, very successful P3.

Anyway, I'll get back to telling you that I didn't pick the name for the ministry or exactly what the ministry does, but I will say that we did some very, very good work within this ministry. We have found efficiencies, and we'll still look for efficiencies.

You know, one of the biggest things this ministry has come a long way on is shared services. Shared services is a strong efficiency, a way of the future. Other provinces are looking at it. The federal government has looked at it. B.C. and Ontario have incorporated shared services. They're looking at our lead because we're so far ahead of them on the good job that we're doing getting rid of redundancy and getting rid of silos and getting everyone working together. Do you know that it goes a lot further than just within our government? It covers all of the governments of Alberta. Because of things we've done, municipal governments are falling in line and doing it.

As you know, there is only one taxpayer. So if we can save, if systems of our procurement and stuff are taken up by Edmonton and Calgary and Red Deer and other places and we save them millions of dollars, we're saving Albertans millions of dollars, and that's what we're here for. We're here and all of you people are here for the same thing: to make life better for all Albertans.

I'm sure that when you decided to run for politics, even though you picked – well, no, you didn't. Because of the way your mind works, you're in the right party. But when you decided to run for politics, I'm sure that you decided to run because you wanted to do the best you could for the constituents and the communities in the areas you represent. That's what every single one of us in this House is here to do, and that's what I think of every day when I have meetings with my officials, when we're looking at finding efficiencies and making life better for Albertans. That's what I think about every time we have meetings with them and say: "What can we do better? How can we make it easier for Albertans to access or interact with government on things they need? How can we make businesses thrive better in Alberta?" And it just goes on and on and on. I'm sure, hon. members over there, that you understand that much of what we're doing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I must compliment the minister. I do appreciate his passion and the enthusiasm that he displays for his new portfolio, but I have to question the whole purpose of it then. I have to ask the question after our amendment and the debate: are you telling me that all of these people that were performing these good services didn't exist before this ministry? They could go back to where they came from. I think it was more efficient. That amendment had nothing to do with eliminating those people; it was putting them back where they were.

Your comment that you just made about the SuperNet and the P3. Was that contract even signed for any late penalties? There are many, many communities that waited an extra year for those things. I don't think it was a booming success. Some communities actually went ahead and hooked up because the promise and the delivery never came through on time, and therefore they went to it. So I think you need to do a little checking on how great that contract was and the service that came forward.

There are many areas that I want to cover. You've got two portfolios, it seems like, restructuring and efficiency. Both of them I have to question. I hope that we can get some more answers on what we've really done to restructure because it seems like all we've really done is thrown another cook into the kitchen. Now the question is: well, who's the head cook? What is going to be efficient? What are we going to do? I don't see it as an advancement but more of a problematic system on who really has the authority to say: "Is this going to be restructured? This isn't efficient." It just seems like all we've done is added a new level of bureaucracy inside this government that doesn't serve the interest of the people or the best dollar being spent for our taxes collected, I guess.

One of the areas I wanted to touch on in hoping to look at being more efficient – there are two things that you've talked about. One is the identification cards. I'm just wondering how much this ministry has participated with Health, the federal government, and also possibly with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on the fact that we're having to deal with our closest neighbour by having proper ID to cross the border. It just seems like it would be more efficient if we were to look at that. The passport is very expensive and short-lived. Could we not be efficient and bring all of this together into one, a new ID card here in Alberta, good quality ones, that would have your health care number on it, that would have identification on it, that would be something to meet and talk with the U.S. officials to get through, and that would work as a second part along with your driver's licence? We're looking at efficiencies. That's very much what we're after here, and we're suffering.

I wonder if the minister was involved at all in the $10 million that was spent on trying to identify all the Albertans to get out our prosperity cheques. It just seemed like that was a lot of money that was spent to make up a single list that has come and gone.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brought up the problem with the health card. I'm not sure if his numbers, 5 million health cards for 3 million Albertans, were accurate. That's even worse than what I remembered. This is an area that we have to get a handle on, and I hope that you would step in and help the minister of health in coming up with an efficient and workable health care card. As I say, let's put these all together into one.

You've talked about the procurement and the savings that have happened with cellphones, software, paper, and all those areas, and that's good to see. We want to do that, but I still have to question whether we need a whole ministry or whether that couldn't have gone back to Government Services, where it was in the first place. It just seems, like I say, that we're just throwing another cook in there, and we're spoiling the brew in getting things done.

Another question, I guess, if you're doing the evaluation and the restructuring of government. Obviously, it seems that the idea of this government is that you're being more efficient. Do you need 60 ministers before we reach top efficiency, where everybody over there is overlooking and seeing that everything is getting done correctly? I'd like to know where you see the efficiency and what number we're going for – 30, 36? – before we're going to be efficient and be able to serve Albertans. It just seems like this proliferation of government and government services is never-ending and will expand for every new dollar of revenue that we get in.

The SuperNet, going back to that. I'm sorry for jumping back and forth. I'm like you: I've been writing notes as the discussion has gone on and forward. The SuperNet – and I'm hoping that you can change this for the communities where they're still struggling – has been very much handled like it has with many of the water co-ops in the province. They've said, "Okay, we're going to put this co-op in," yet they put a list in there on who is going to get it. I'm speaking about the municipal buildings, the library, the hospital, and those areas. There isn't even a thought, it seems like, on how that hub is going to be hooked up to help all Albertans.

I very much agree with the minister that the SuperNet is a super highway, and it's a great thing that all Albertans should have access to. You talked about that first mile/last mile, and I agree with you, but it seems like we built the highway, and we've gone out of our way to do it only to find out that there's a river there and we don't have a bridge to get across to the people on the other side. What was efficient about that? We need to figure out that last mile, and there should be more thought into that.

I wonder also if part of the problem is that we're lacking, Mr. Chairman, is that we need a minister of common sense. It seems like we've got so many things happening that we're losing the common sense on what the purpose is and what we're trying to do to be efficient here in the province. As I mentioned earlier on the amendment that was brought forward, is the purpose and the goal of this government to look after the people from cradle to grave, or are we here to help people to help themselves? It seems like the continual growth in this government and in the number of ministers that we have is truly frustrating to the people of Alberta, and I have to question and ask: are we looking at eliminating any of these ministries as we get efficient and bring them together?

The biggest question of all, I guess, is: does this minister have it in his mandate to go in to the other ministers, whether that's Health, Innovation and Science, Environment, wherever, to look at and evaluate their offices and say, "This isn't being efficient; this isn't being done"? It seems like the name isn't being included in the mandate of what they really should be doing, and it's just wrong. We need to be able to be more efficient. We need to restructure to a stronger, more equitable structure for the people across Alberta. I would hope that the minister would be looking at these areas and figuring out ways that we can utilize the tax dollars much more efficiently for Albertans. We should be able to do it.

The $250 million – and I believe it's $380,000 for the minister's office. It would perhaps be much better if we were to reduce many of these different government positions and just have a per capita dividend to the various levels of government. They would be efficient in seeing where those dollars needed to be allocated, whether it's their library, whether it's their golf course, whether it's their health facility in their town that the government doesn't want to fund – there are just many areas – or perhaps even build a larger gymnasium in their various towns and communities across the province. We've got $250 million going to government in restructuring, a hundred million dollars going to a rural initiative. There are just many areas where I have to question the efficiency of these things, and I'm looking forward to the minister's response.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Chairman, I guess maybe there are people that just never ever, ever listen to anything because it doesn't matter how many times you tell them something; they ask the same question over, or they come back with a completely different – I mean, there was nothing relevant that he's talked about to do with this ministry.

He's heard a number of times in this House – a number of times in this House – that I don't have the purview to go into other ministries. We work along beside them. We work in collaboration with them. We have experts in the procurement field, some of the only ones across Canada that are certified procurement people, that will help all the other ministries. That's why I just tried to tell you a minute ago that restructuring may be in my name, and it was there maybe to restructure all the stuff that was put into my ministry. We did restructure that. I think we've done a great job at that. I have staff that are moving along. We've made our management team a lot smaller.

It amazes me that the hon. Member for Taber-Cardston-Warner tries to say that the Alliance Party is a right-wing side. You listen to him talk, and he's so far left that it's unbelievable. Then you listen to him say, "Oh, how efficient can it be to put a hundred million dollars into rural Alberta?" He represents rural Albertans? Is that what he wants? Would all his constituents say: make sure you don't get any money for rural Alberta, for Cardston-Taber-Warner, because that's inefficient.

Mr. Hinman: You're going on a rage.

Mr. Ouellette: I have to act like you guys call me. What the heck. I want to be a star now just like the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Anyway, I will say that there's really not anything else I can talk to you about because it was all irrelevant, what you talked about, because it was nothing to do with my ministry other than the SuperNet. Really, you don't understand the SuperNet either. I've answered a million questions on that, and now you're late for dinner. You don't want to stick around and listen to the answers anyway, so we'll talk to you later.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, that last reference about people's presence or absence is not called for.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the chance to discuss the business plan for the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency, and I'll try to be respectful in the hopes that the minister won't yell at me in his answer.

I think we've seen some good progress from this ministry so far, Mr. Chairman, but I also see that there's a lot of work ahead. I'd like to focus some questions on the SuperNet. SuperNet is one of those projects where we've seen some initial success. Before the SuperNet we had lots of Albertans who were out of the information loop, as it were, in terms of high-speed connectivity. They were living, in effect, like information outsiders in their own province. Now we're live on SuperNet, and I see that it is at least starting to make a difference. A number of ISPs came on board to make that happen. But I also know that there are a couple of hundred communities in Alberta where there is no ISP. I'm wondering what the ministry is doing to make sure that those Albertans get access as well. So one of my questions is: what is the ministry doing to get more ISPs signed up or to encourage existing ones to widen their net, so to speak?

I'm also interested in SuperNet's internal function as a government network. I don't think this aspect has been given very much attention.

I'm most interested in the schools. Having a connection is one thing, but is this a practical and useful network for them? I understand that video conferencing has actually been a bit of a problem with the schools. The schools have the connections, but I'd like to know whether they can actually use it to video conference, or do they get tripped up because they are on different systems that don't talk to each other? It's not just a question of access; it's about compatibility. I'm wondering what the ministry is doing to ensure that schools can video conference with each other, not just in small regional pockets but across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ouellette: Actually, the SuperNet with schools has probably worked better so far than anywhere. Long before it was completed, there were two different areas that actually used the SuperNet on a pilot project. One was up in Fort Vermilion, and I had never been up to see that one or what they were doing. They had a fairly closed system there working on that one. I went and saw the one that was going on in Red Deer. I was there one day, actually, in Rocky Mountain House when they were teaching a class from Red Deer. This was a class of 30 or 25 kids. The teacher was in Red Deer. They had their Smart board. It was unbelievable. There was great decorum in the classroom. They could see everything that was going on in the Red Deer classroom, and the teacher could see all of the people in the classroom in Rocky Mountain House.

I understand that today we've had calls from a number of people. I went and spoke at a conference in Calgary, and there were a number of different school boards that came up and told me how great it was and how some of their rural schools would probably be saved now because they could offer more subjects without having a teacher on staff for that smaller rural school. So as far as schools I think that they will be one of the biggest beneficiaries of the SuperNet.

You were asking about ISPs. As you know, there are 27 major cities classed as our base network, which Bell manages and operates, and there are 402 extended-area network communities that have been contracted to Axia to supply. But things were happening so fast once we got the connection up. There are only so many ISPs that can come on stream at a time that they have time to put on there. Right now they're getting more and more start-up companies, ma-and-pa operations. Some of the bigger companies are moving into Alberta, actually, to take advantage of the SuperNet because now they have something that they can go out and compete on and expand the size of their business.

We never, ever as a government had in our policy to actually do that last mile. Our policy is to build the SuperNet. It was a great vision by Dr. Taylor, who was minister at the time, and our Innovation and Science minister carried it on. I mean, it was a great, great vision. The vision was that we would connect these 429 communities, get the connections out to the schools and the hospitals and the libraries, and the rest of it would go on its own. If we'd seen that it wasn't going to develop fast enough, that that last mile didn't work, our plan was to build in strategies. We will still do that. We will build in strategies. We'll do whatever we have to do, but I believe that that last mile is developing very, very quickly.

We also have, which I haven't talked about yet, a requirement in our contract that six months after the SuperNet was complete, Bell would become a supplier of last resort. Our six months was up in April. So now Bell is working on that supplier of last resort situation. I know that our department has been negotiating with them on what different types of connections they use.

Another thing. We don't want to use government involvement to compete with any of these new companies that started up, with any of the private companies that are out there. So if Bell does supply as a supplier of last resort, and let's say that they have five or six customers that they're supplying, if one of the other ISPs moves into the area, Bell will give those customers up to that person. We're not going to allow them to compete against the private ISPs.

So right now we believe that the ISPs are developing at a good rate. As I said earlier, with the wireless technology that we had a year ago and with the type of technology that we had with satellite a year or so ago, I'm not so sure that we could have even reached every portion of Alberta. We thought we'd reach 86 or 87 per cent. Now we're thinking that at some point in time 100 per cent of Alberta will probably be able to be achieved. No matter where you're from or where you're located, somebody will supply a connection to you. It may be satellite; it may be whatever. The objective was to get all of the people in Alberta connected. That was the initiative and why the government went out there.

Every conference I've been to and no matter where I've been – when I was at the Microsoft conference in Washington, there were some people from the Brazilian school board there that were talking about how connected they were, that they were having virtual schools in Brazil. When I talked to the Microsoft people, they said: "You have to remember one thing. They may have that, but the quality, compared to what we have on the SuperNet, isn't anywhere near what we have." I think they taught something like 280,000 students over virtual learning.

So our big challenge – and that's a global challenge; it's right across Canada and in the U.S.: rural communities are depopulating, and urban ones are populating. It's a big challenge. I mean, if you lose a school, you're not going to get people moving to that community. In fact, people will move out of the community because they need that school. It's things like the SuperNet and stuff that will keep that school.

Did I get all your questions covered?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the work to bring these estimates to us and the minister's words that the goal is to create efficiencies across ministries and that regulatory reform is a highlight for '06-07. I also appreciate that you have an MLA steering committee to examine regulations and reform and lessen the impact of regulations on Albertans. Rules, hopefully, then won't unnecessarily burden Albertans.

I do see that there has been progress, but I think that there's much that needs to be done. As the name of the ministry implies, core business 2 is government efficiency. What steps are taken to actually assess and determine areas of potential efficiency? What criteria or indicators does this ministry use to test if the government is in fact being efficient? I don't know what you do to actually determine efficiency.

I also want to say – and I know that I'm running out of time. We've heard a lot about the SuperNet. I want to of course also echo concerns about the lack of total connection yet. You've explained how that's all going, and I appreciate that, but please remember that technology may be wonderful, but it doesn't work without outstanding teachers making the effort to create good learning opportunities. Technology is just a tool for that.

I also wanted to ask why there are no capital investments in this year's budget. When you're talking about expanding that Internet service provision in rural areas, won't this require further capital investment? Should people and businesses waiting for Internet service in their community assume that no capital investment means no improvement to their service? I understand that you just explained this thing about Bell now, but I still have a question about the fact that we're not doing as well as you had hoped.

The other thing I wanted to ask is in regard to interdepartmental communication efficiency. As Children's Services critic I'm often talking with families, foster parents who often tell me that the paperwork is burdensome. The accreditation process that the department is working on is improving, but I still think that there are ways it could be simplified. It is burdensome for many of our daycare owners. Also, many of my families have children that require help or support from Children's Services, Health, PDD, and Education, and often these families find it discouraging and frustrating. Even as an MLA I sometimes find it confusing and frustrating because we have to go to all of these different departments. What is your role in helping create efficiency in that regard? Do you have a role in that? Is it included in your ministry? I see the interdepartmental communication efficiency as a concern, as mentioned by my colleague from Calgary-Varsity.

I think that's all the questions I'll ask for now. I won't repeat other questions.

Mr. Ouellette: I guess one answer to the question of do I have a role in all those other ministries is really no. But with that I want to add that as our regulatory review gets going – and this was always our plan – part of that and how I always explain regulatory review is that we want to make things better, whether it's for an individual Albertan or whether it's for businesses, and we want to make things easier on how they access government when they need to. And that's what you're talking about. Sometimes it's tough for certain types of constituents to access. Whether it's Children's Services, whether it's an AISH problem, whether it's a seniors' problem, whether it's a mental health problem, lots of these things happen to be in three or four different ministries to fix the one problem the person has. What we're trying to say is that our regulatory review plans on working on that as we get more into it. If it takes three ministries to do something or to permit something or to okay something, let's get those three ministries to let one of them be a lead and give them the criteria they need so that they only need an approval from one person to make things easier for government and make it easier for the Albertans that need that help from government. That's what we're going to try to work on, those particular items.

You know, I didn't write your questions down, and we're pretty well out of time, I think, but I will get you an answer to those questions. My mind's kind of swimming around here from the amount I've had all day and everywhere we went, so rather than just talk out that last minute or half a minute we have, I will actually respond to you in writing on those questions if that's okay with you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are just a couple of items that I wanted to talk on. It's my understanding that Restructuring and Government Efficiency provides common businesses and shared services that help all other ministries deliver effective and efficient programs and services to all Albertans. Some of what I know to be true is that Restructuring and Government Efficiency provides many tools and services to the provincial ministries and their agencies; for example, processing of invoices, pay and benefits, procurement, purchasing of goods and services, developing contract standards, sorting and delivering mail, printing and copying documents, providing technical support for computers, telephones and faxes, managing records, surplus sales, and building and fleet management. Can the minister expound on any of these other shared services that his department does for the rest of the government of Alberta?

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $255,139,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's been an electrifying afternoon of outstanding debate and informational exchanges, and we've all learned enormously from that experience today. On that note I would move that the committee now rise and report the estimates of the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Restructuring and Government Efficiency: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $255,139,000.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of an amendment considered by Committee of Supply on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 9, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/05/09

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Economic Development

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to move the estimates for the Ministry of Economic Development.

I don't think there's a person in the Assembly this evening that wouldn't be happier if the Member for Lethbridge-West, the Minister of Economic Development, could be here presenting his own estimates, and that certainly includes me. But between the first Acting Minister of Economic Development, who is the minister of agriculture, and myself we're pleased to do this on behalf of our colleague and happy to report that he's doing well and moving along after some of his health issues during the last few weeks.

There are several staff members with us this evening, and I'm just going to introduce a couple of them as opposed to all of them. We're fortunate tonight to be joined by Shelby MacLeod, the executive assistant to the Minister of Economic Development. The deputy minister, Rory Campbell, is with us as well as some others.

I am pleased to present the business plan for Alberta Economic Development and ask for your support for the next year of departmental activity. The business plan spells it out in detail, but in a nutshell the staff of the department bring together the people and information to create opportunity. Staff of Alberta Economic Development include economists, who know every nuance of trade data; marketers, who help you see that Alberta is the best place to visit and do business; policy analysts, who can tell you about cost competitiveness across the continent; engineers looking for ways to help industry create a competitive advantage; and trade officers, who help businesses to access international markets. They have a variety of jobs. They work in 11 regional offices across the province, headquarter offices in Edmonton and Calgary, and nine international offices around the world. Travel Alberta also has staff in Calgary, Ottawa, the U.S., and beyond.

These people share a vision. That vision is that Alberta is the best place to live, work, and do business. Their clients range from a millionaire investor in Europe to a Montana housewife planning a family holiday to a Medicine Hat graduate starting a business to a Manchester welder thinking about coming to work in Canada. In every case: people, information, and opportunity. The department helps investors understand that Alberta is not just a safe place to work and to park their money but a thriving place to grow it.

When a German investor was looking for ways to produce a new product for Europe, we were ready. Staff matched the German investor with an Alberta company, and the result is a food processing facility that can meet the European Union's strict food standards.

Last year the department hosted a tourism investment symposium, the first of its kind in the country. Communities had a chance to present their opportunities, the parcel of land zoned and ready to be a five-star resort or the pristine lakefront just waiting for campground facilities. This coming October a web component and even more promotional activity will make the symposium even bigger.

There are lots of opportunities to build, but Alberta already has a lot to see and do. Travel Alberta's goal is to encourage Albertans to see more of their province, encourage our neighbours to head down the highway, and encourage people from around the world to come and explore. With the implementation of the new tourism levy, Travel Alberta has significant new resources for marketing initiatives. Some other longer term projects are starting to see results.

This year Travel Alberta worked with industry partners to bring two new charter flights from Japan to Edmonton; 640 people came to see the northern lights. They visited Edmonton, then travelled north for nature's outdoor light show. In all, Japanese visitors accounted for 100,000 overnight visits last year, up from the year before and expected to grow this year.

In the coming years negotiations for China to grant approved destination status to Canada will proceed. This will open up a large new market, and we would want to be ready. The work has already begun. Travel agents are doing their research, and information products are being developed, all with an eye to attracting visitors as soon as the borders open.

In Germany a successful promotional campaign targeting women will continue with radio and television programming and the cleverwoman.de website. Cowboys in New York helped attract media attention for the province. They also helped attract potential visitors because the cowboys were in town. They were in New York for a travel trade show.

Closer to home Alberta Economic Development is working with more than 60 communities in southeastern Alberta to develop and market the Canadian badlands as this province's next must-see destination. An expanding website, new self-guided touring routes, and printed material will attract people to the communities, parks, and historic sites throughout this region east of highway 2, stretching from Stettler to the Montana border. New visitor information centres and displays in Walsh and Canmore will encourage our visitors to explore the Canadian badlands and beyond.

A new partnership with the federal government will also support people looking to build new tourism products. Alberta Economic Development partnered with Western Economic Diversification to fund a DVD presentation on the proposed Pipestone dinosaur museum in Grande Prairie, in the Grande Prairie-Wapiti constituency I might add. This computer-generated tour of a proposed facility will be presented at the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington and later used for fundraising for this new tourist attraction.

In Alberta's labour market priority people are workers: people to work in hotels and restaurants, people in the trades, people to manage projects, just about everybody. Economists expect an additional 400,000 jobs in Alberta in the years ahead with almost 300,000 people to fill them. Government is working to close that gap with a three-pronged response. The first step is to train Albertans, ensure that people graduate from school with the skills they need to do and get a job.

The second step is to ensure that Albertans who are underrepresented in the labour force – people with disabilities, young people, aboriginal people – get the chance to work.

Finally, the third step is to recruit workers to the province from beyond our borders. The department is taking the lead with this third step. The department administers a pilot program called the provincial nominee program. Employers identify skilled workers from other countries, and the province helps expedite the immigration process. More than 970 workers have come to Alberta through this program since its inception in 2002: an instructor at Vermilion's firefighting school, health care professionals in both urban and rural communities, sausage makers, specialist engineers, and more. The department is improving the program and plans to bring another 500 workers and their families to the province this year. Many of these workers start out as temporary foreign workers and want to become permanent residents of our province, but 500 is a long way from the number of people needed.

The department facilitated industry and government involvement in a series of job fairs in Europe. There are nearly 3,600 jobs available from Alberta employers who participated in job fairs in the U.K. last month. Employers attended 25 seminars about recruiting foreign workers last year, and at each one they identified openings. We need to communicate with people who are thinking about moving to Canada and encourage them to choose Alberta over Toronto, Montreal, or Vancouver.

That said, we will work closely with other departments to ensure that Albertans have the first chance at employment opportunities. Alberta has a strong workforce, but we need even more people to ensure continued economic growth. In nearly every sector of the economy what business needs is people. We're helping find them. As I said, Alberta Economic Development brings together people and information to create opportunity.

That's where the second element, information, comes in. AED is working with Alberta Energy and 19 energy companies to develop a conceptual business case for an integrated upgrader, refinery, and petrochemical plant in the province. The purpose was not for government to build the complex; it was to demonstrate the potential benefits of an integrated complex to process bitumen. Government believes that it's the right thing to do: Albertans making the most of their natural resources. We can sell $1.30 polyethylene rather than 58-cent ethylene or 30-cent ethane or a few cents' worth of natural gas. That value-added activity creates jobs and income for Albertans. Alberta Economic Development is helping to make the case. Refining in Alberta is not just the right thing to do; it's a profitable thing to do.

Information also takes the form of identifying contracting opportunities. By compiling and sharing information about large and extra-large construction projects on the go, we help companies identify opportunities for work. We track the progress of more than $133 billion in projects, which means that real estate agents, architects, builders, bankers, and plumbers can better understand their competitive position. Training providers can access demand for their graduates.

We can also help identify exporting opportunities. The heavy oil Alberta project is a great example of government and industry working together and collaboratively for the benefit of Alberta companies. The Canadian Heavy Oil Association is working closely with Alberta Economic Development, Alberta Energy, and the Alberta Energy Research Institute to market Alberta's heavy oil and oil sands expertise to the rest of the world.

Alberta companies have figured out ways to minimize the environmental footprint of development, how to use steam to make frozen bitumen come up a tube, how to drill in a crooked line, how to move sludge along a pipeline, and more. Other parts of the world face these problems, and we have the solutions to sell.

The heavy oil Alberta project is creating the first comprehensive guidebook and directory to promote Alberta's heavy oil technologies in the global marketplace. At more than 200 pages it features profiles on Alberta's heavy oil experience and homegrown technologies. It also includes a directory of nearly 2,000 industry players, including explorers and producers, processors and distributors, service and supply companies, industry associations, academic and research institutions, and nongovernmental organizations. The directory will be distributed internationally.

Because of the heavy oil Alberta project, the Canadian Heavy Oil Association will partner with Alberta Economic Development for the first time at the Global Petroleum Show in Calgary this June. The GPS, Global Petroleum Show, is the world's largest oil and gas event.

Members of the Canadian Heavy Oil Association will be working with Alberta Economic Development to provide technical support and advice, to matchmake Alberta and international companies, including a panel session focusing on Alberta's heavy oil innovations and related opportunities in select international markets.

In November of 2006 Alberta Economic Development and the China National Petroleum Company will cohost the first-ever world heavy oil conference in Beijing, China. Senior industry representatives from the major heavy oil producing regions in the world will participate in the event. This event will include a business conference and technical seminars, networking events, and an exhibition. Nearly 100 domestic and international industry exhibitors will showcase the latest in heavy oil-specific technologies, products, and services. This event will be a unique opportunity for Alberta companies to promote and demonstrate their expertise to the world.

In this day and age, of course, information includes the Internet. The Alberta-Canada.com website promotes Alberta to the world. In 1999, when the site was first launched, 47 per cent of the visits were international visits. Last fiscal year the Internet site set a milestone with nearly 1.2 million visits, and of this total 70.5 per cent were international visits.

Information is also the starting point for planning vacations. People can click, call, or come in to get information about all there is to see and do in our wonderful province of Alberta. At the 1-800-Alberta call centre counsellors help people go further, stay longer, and try new things. Over the year ahead they will answer more inquiries and be open longer hours. On the Internet, travelalberta.com and its family of websites received 3 and a half million visits in 2005. That's a 60 per cent increase over 2004. In the months ahead Travel Alberta is looking to expand the information it provides in languages other than English to further encourage international visitors.

The busiest information centre in the province, in Canmore, will be upgraded with kiosks, Internet stations, and interpretive displays. Information can make holidays better, and it helps make business better. For example, it can make operations more efficient. Farr Canada manufactures and distributes hydraulic power tongs used in drilling on land and on off-shore rigs. They were working full tilt in Edmonton. They knew that there were more opportunities, but they weren't able to meet them. Staff from Alberta Economic Development's lean manufacturing unit helped them take a look at their operation.

Some pieces were travelling too far from warehouse to assembly, taking too much time and too much space. Equipment was not set up to encourage flow from one stage to another. The result: better organization freed up 4,000 square feet from warehousing and 4,800 square feet from work in progress. Now, the painting and heat treating can be done on site. Company reps say that the facility is cleaner and better organized, and staff morale is higher. Their next step: higher production from the same amount of space. It's an exciting journey for an Alberta company, and it began with information about lean manufacturing techniques. Information can also help make for better decisions. As I said, Alberta Economic Development brings together people and information to create opportunity.

What about the third element, opportunity? I think the whole world considers Fort McMurray a synonym for opportunity, but there's more, a lot more. Growth from the oil sands is creating growth in Calgary and Edmonton. The TD Bank estimates that 60 per cent of the economic activity from the oil patch is outside Alberta. Alberta is much more than energy. The challenge is to ensure that we can use our strength and energy to create opportunity in other sectors.

For government, opportunities begin with agreements to work together. In May Alberta Economic Development is signing an agreement with the Northwest Territories Department of Industry, Tourism and Investment. We will look at opportunities that benefit both areas and look for ways to enhance trade and regional development.

Sometimes opportunity is a chance for industries to work together to solve their problems. For New Brunswick metal fabricators opportunity is a chance to partner with Alberta companies who are already at full capacity. For east-central Alberta businesses opportunity is a chance to move from neighbour to business partner. Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake is part of the community. It could also be an economic driver for that community. Economic Development staff are working with base staff and the local business community to identify local procurement opportunities. Maybe it's sandwiches for training exercises. Maybe it's contracts to fix equipment. We don't know yet, but we do know that there's an opportunity, and we are looking at it.

In the film sector opportunity looks like the landscapes portrayed in the film Brokeback Mountain or the buzz about Alberta created when Brad Pitt visited the Royal Tyrrell Museum. With the profile generated by movies Alberta has an opportunity to market its locations for both production and tourism. Opportunity looks like Kananaskis Country or Fort Macleod, which see more visitors now because people want to go where the movies were made. Opportunity looks like the old blue pickup truck used as a movie prop, which an enterprising Pincher Creek youth recently sold on eBay for about $70,000. Pitt's latest film, The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford, was filmed in a number of communities last summer. It will be released shortly, and we have a plan to improve tourism through the awareness of Alberta.

Opportunity looks like a fancy, high-definition television because the Alberta Film Commission partnered with NAIT and SAIT and the federal government to provide industry training in what will be an American standard next year. The production world is changing, and Alberta crews are ready. More funding to the Alberta film development program is helping to ensure an even stronger industry in the future. The program was transferred to Economic Development from Community Development on April 1, and that budget is to increase by 10 per cent to $14.8 million.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, unfortunately the 20 minutes allocated to you have now elapsed, but you will have an opportunity to go back to your text.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say, first off, that on behalf of the Alberta Liberal caucus, we do wish the Minister of Economic Development, the Member for Lethbridge-West, a healthy and speedy recovery, and we look forward to his presence back on the bench.

Having said that, I appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak to the Ministry of Economic Development. On page 118 of the business plan, under Link to the Government of Alberta Strategic Business Plan, the first goal states: "Alberta will have a diversified and prosperous economy." I think that's great. However, the Official Opposition does have a concern with this particular approach to diversifying the economy: the lack of planning for diversification in Alberta's economy and spending the current resource revenue. Simply put, we're in a boom time, and this government is doing very little to protect us from bust.

First of all, this Conservative government lacks a plan and vision to diversify Alberta's economy, particularly investing in the high-tech sector. Indeed, Albertans only need to watch the news to see that Alberta's high-tech sector is struggling. Back in April the chief executive officer in Calgary-based software developer Urban Dispatch publicly commented: it's distressing. He talks about how we are falling behind the have-not provinces when it comes to venture capital investment in the technology sector, and he goes on to say that companies are out there with products complementary to the energy industry, and they can't even get funding. He goes on to conclude: I don't have any evidence that the province is adhering to a philosophy of diversification; there is a lot of lip service paid, but it's almost like the previous oil bust never happened. His comments are concerning.

However, relying on one source for analysis of a struggling high-technology sector would not be prudent. As a result, the Official Opposition looked at a report on Alberta's technology sector published in a prestigious account of Ernst & Young. This report says that it found that 38 per cent of technology CEOs said that rising oil prices would have a negative impact on their sector and the solution was to leave Alberta. Ernst & Young's technology practice executive director stated that oil and gas is just too good right now and that people would rather spend money on drilling a hole than investing in a technology company; it makes some sense; if you look at where oil and gas prices are right now, you've got a pretty good, safe return on that investment, but technology is a higher risk play. So the chances of people investing in it are less, obviously.

Clearly, challenges face the high-tech sector, and this government is not capable of meeting them. Take, for example, the Minister of Innovation and Science's recent remarks on this problem. He's quoted as saying: you know, you have to look at this problem over a period of time, and there isn't just a single initiative that's going to suddenly be the breakthrough; it has to be a consistent, long-term approach, and we want to make sure that there is a good policy in place that lets companies establish themselves; the impetus has to come from them, but yes, there has to be some advantage to being there. Clearly, this government is lost since the government cannot develop a plan that diversifies Alberta's economy beyond oil and gas.

Perhaps the minister has heard some of the Liberal ideas that we would have to diversify the economy, specifically a couple of pre-election points, like implementing a 10 per cent provincial tax credit for eligible expenditures in scientific research and experimental development; implementing a 30 per cent provincial tax credit for investing in qualified early-stage, Alberta-based technology companies; as well as creating a $150 million Alberta technology venture fund, funded jointly by industry, universities, and government to generate a venture capital industry in Alberta – it would not invest in individual businesses; rather, it would invest in several venture capital firms, who would then invest in business opportunities – fourthly, creating a provincial technology program to harmonize technology commercialization programs across the province; and introduce a stronger film and television tax credit for Alberta-owned and -controlled production companies that are credited to Alberta expenditures.

Some of the specific questions that I'd have with regard to these high-tech companies – it appears to be getting worse, but if this government is actually serious about unleashing innovation, why doesn't it provide tax incentives for companies to invest in research and development? Technology start-ups are leaving Alberta for other jurisdictions which have friendlier research and development tax regimes and more access to venture capital. Why is this government allowing Alberta to fall behind other jurisdictions? We talk about becoming competitive, but we're still, you know, lagging behind when we talk about research and development. What activity steps is the ministry taking to increase access to venture capital in Alberta, and what plans are in the works currently? Does the ministry keep statistics on how many start-up firms leave Alberta for other jurisdictions with better access to venture capital? Do we monitor? Do we track as to how many leave and how many we attract?

On page 120, I believe chart 2, it shows that Alberta's innovation performance is far below the average of its global competitors. This is even more reason for the government to adapt the Alberta Liberals' economic development policies to be able to maintain and ensure that we attract more world-renowned companies.

I'm going to switch and talk about resource revenue, then, if I might. The provincial government is also failing to diversify Alberta's economy with regard to its bungling of the resource revenue well. As mentioned earlier, the boom we're in – it is just about obvious, you know, that there's nothing from the government that's going to protect us. They're not doing anything to shield us, perhaps, from a bust that may eventually be down the road.

There's no better time to invest in tomorrow than today. Unfortunately, instead of using Alberta's energy resources to diversify our economy, the government is spending it. For instance, in this Legislative Assembly the Conservative government will increase the amount of resource revenue for the annual spending to about $5.3 billion from $3.5 billion in 2004.

In short, not only is Alberta's economy reliant on the energy sector, but Alberta's social services are becoming reliant on the oil and gas production as well. If the prices of oil and gas drop, so will Alberta's economy and social programs, and that's quite unacceptable. Consequently, the government is failing to provide a sustainable, long-term plan for Albertans.

Some specific questions that might come out of that would be: what is the government doing to ensure that failing to save the annual portion of the resource revenues for future generations – you can talk about the investment in the heritage fund where you put a billion dollars in, but we realize that there is still a billion dollars being removed as well, so the net gain is absolutely zero. What is the government's plan for the economy when, potentially, oil and gas prices return to normal levels? Coal and forestry: are those the only options that we've got?

Why hasn't the government adopted the Liberal strategy for the surplus policy to protect Alberta's economy from the ups and downs. The policy, to refresh the minister's mind, is known as the Alberta legacy act. It would create permanent wealth out of the fleeting resource revenues by investing future surpluses in postsecondary education, the heritage savings trust fund, the restoration of the crumbling infrastructure, and the arts, culture, and humanities. Our policy would also commit 35 per cent of the future budget surpluses to an endowment fund for advanced education, uncapped and no strings attached. This plan would set innovation free as opposed to trying to tie up postsecondary more firmly to the apron strings of the government of the day currently.

Thirty-five per cent of the future surpluses would be streamed into the heritage savings trust fund to grow it rather than to simply satisfy it with day-to-day interest. We're going to make sure that it's prevented from eroding, similar to that of Norway and Alaska, whose funds far exceed Alberta's. Twenty-five per cent would be put into the capital account to address the backlog of infrastructure projects in this province. We talk about being debt free; we're certainly not debt free with the amount of infrastructure debt that we do have. Five per cent would be invested in an endowment fund to support the contribution to the arts, humanities, and make Alberta society. If the minister would ponder these points and perhaps implement them, I think we'd be much better off when we do that part of it.

Let's talk about the role of sports and recreation as economic drivers as well. We just saw the benefits when we had the Olympics in Calgary many, many years ago, and then we had the track and field events here as well, one issue that's clearly not adequately addressed in any business plan that pertains to the quality of life. On one hand, Alberta's future has a strong economy. There's no denying that. On the other hand, if Alberta doesn't strive to be a great place to live, we're not going to be able to attract those great people to this great place.

For example, when the Official Opposition travelled to McMurray not long ago, one of a number of problems was the quality of life that people have. There aren't enough hockey rinks or arenas up there or parks. As a consequence, a number of new Albertans are asking difficult questions. Do I live in Alberta, continue to struggle in McMurray and maintain a solid family life – I mean, the high cost of living, lack of recreational services – or do I pack up, give up this way of life here, and move to the south or maybe back to where I came from in eastern Canada? Who knows? But a lot of these people are certainly questioning that: make the money now and leave for a better way of life. These are some of the real challenges facing the Alberta economy: the workers and quality of life. Unfortunately, the Department of Economic Development I don't think understands that particular concept.

In Edmonton, Red Deer, and Calgary we have vibrant cities, so much so in particular that the young talent want to live in Alberta and call it home. Studies show that young, talented knowledge workers are driving today's high-tech economy. They want to work in jurisdictions that are rich and diverse with a quality of life and a quality of place. What is the ministry doing to improve some of Alberta's quality of place to attract and retain young, knowledgeable workers? How is the ministry working with other ministries to ensure that such a goal is maybe even successful with cross-ministry initiatives?

Young workers want and value a strong, diverse economy with an arts scene as well as ample opportunities for sports and recreation. How is the ministry working with Community Development in order to be able to support Alberta's arts and recreation sector? If the minister hasn't contemplated that, why not acknowledge the strong role that arts and culture do play? Let's support them as the economic drivers that they are. As in the example of Edmonton: very strong within the arts and cultural scene, very much reliant and looked upon as a leader in Alberta for doing that.

Let's go on to film here for a minute. The minister talked about trying to improve some of the film industries with some of the recent successes that we've had. On page 124 it says that Economic Development "markets Alberta as an attractive destination for . . . film production." Well, we've seen some successes in the area with the recently released film Brokeback Mountain, and previous to that would be something like Unforgiven with Clint Eastwood. I mean, Alberta is definitely an attractive destination: the scenery, the mountains. But the Economic Development spokesman admits that in terms of funding Alberta film, Alberta will remain in the middle of the pack, which is unfortunate.

Interestingly, as mentioned earlier in my comments regarding this government's failure to properly diversify the economy, well-known film industry representative and stunt co-ordinator John Scott recently stated: "We've got to get our [Alberta] government to wake up and realize [that the film] business is something great we have to offer. This province has more than just gas and oil." He goes on to say: "While there's 30 pictures shooting in Vancouver at a time, we have maybe one or two in Alberta" at best. Times have to change here.

What is the ministry doing to attract other high-cost movies and use some of the local talent and expertise that is here and waiting to be involved? What is the ministry doing specific to Alberta's film industry to move it from the middle of the pack to an international leader? Why doesn't the ministry introduce stronger film and TV tax incentives? Why are there no performance measures related to film and television production in Alberta in the ministry's business plan; for example, the number of film and TV productions or the total dollar investment in film and television in Alberta, the total economic spinoffs from TV and/or film?

I don't know if we've ever had an idea as to how much money or revenue is generated by having a film shot in Alberta such as the last one, you know, on Jesse James, the one that's going to be coming out in the fall, or Brokeback Mountain, Unforgiven. What is the economic spinoff? Do we have an actual idea as to what the benefit is to the local economy? Could the minister provide myself with a chart showing, perhaps, how much film production in Alberta has increased or decreased over the last 15 years compared to that of British Columbia and other provinces that are big into the movie scene as well?

We'll talk about, perhaps, some of the Auditor General's recommendations. He's made no specific ones for Economic Development. However, he did point out that "the Deputy Minister of Executive Council [should] update Alberta public sector governance principles and guidance so that they are consistent with current good practices for recruiting, evaluating and training directors." What specific steps is Alberta Economic Development taking to ensure that its directors are thoroughly recruited and trained? Obviously, there would be benefit there to ensure that they are thoroughly trained, but I'm just making that particular point.

We can talk about trips because we're always promoting Alberta and Albertans' ways to not only the local Canadian market but the market abroad and internationally. On pages 117 and 118 of the business plan the ministry markets Alberta as an attractive destination for investment in trade. How does the ministry measure how successful national or international trade missions are? What are the benchmarks? How do we gauge how much we've spent and how much we're returning with regard to that particular trip? Does the ministry measure the increase in trade after a mission? At what level of increased trade does the minister consider these trade missions a success? A 5 per cent increase? A 10 per cent increase? Does the minister perform a cost-benefit analysis on the trip and amount of people going? Just some specifics.

I will go on to tourism. I've already touched on it, so I'd like to touch on it again. On page 129 of the business plan performance measure 8.a indicates that the total tourism revenue in 2004 was around $5 billion. Now, that's huge. That's one of the leading industries here within Alberta. I think that's magnificent. I believe that at one point they did actually have a tourism ministry, but it was combined, obviously, here. How does this compare to levels years before? Obviously, we've had some scares with some of the economy, but I believe some of the specifics have been addressed. We're starting to see a drive coming back.

Again, it would be interesting to know: exactly how does it compare to years previous? Over 10 or 15 years how much has tourism grown in Alberta, and specifically what are the hot spots that we're continuing to market and profile? Could the minister provide ourselves with a comparison to other provinces, such as perhaps Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia, as to how they're doing with regard to tourism? How are the dollars measured, and are they up or down in comparable years? How do we stand with regard to those regions, to other areas?

Let's talk about some government issues directly related to budget on Economic Development. On page 122, line 1.0.2., the deputy minister's office is increasing from approximately $383,000 to $469,000. I'm not sure what the reasoning is for the increase here, but I'd certainly like to see an answer to that. I'm sure that all Albertans would. Considering that the mission of the Alberta government is to remain transparent and accountable to all Albertans, this should be pretty easy to come across.

Page 122, line 2.0.3. Export development is seeing an increase of approximately 11.3 per cent from the previous year. Can the minister provide more specific details as to that significant line item? What is the reasoning behind it? Specifically, where will the money be going to and what will it be addressing? What tangible results can Albertans expect from the increase? How will the success of this increase be measured?

Page 122, investment and industry development, line 2.0.5. Last year the budget for investment and industry development increased by about 25 per cent from the 2004-2005. This year the line item is increasing another 23 per cent. How exactly is this increase in funding to be used? In terms of funding for industry development, what industry gets the most support from government? How do we budget for industry development, help Alberta's film and television industry or our high-tech industries?

I'll just do a sideline because I see a card here on my desk to remind me to mention a specific point. It was Visit the Country and its various services and entrepreneurs out there. One in particular, Pottery by Heather, has to in fact import her clay for her pottery from California. I mean, there's an abundance here in Alberta, and I mentioned that. She said: "Absolutely. But you know what? It's more expensive. Considering that we have to bring it in from California, the difference in the dollar, the shipping and handling, it's still cheaper than being able to buy it through Medicine Hat or down in Lethbridge or southern Alberta, where there's an abundance of clay." Now, I find that quite sad that we can't even supply local people here with our own product because we're not competitive. That should be interesting as well.

Getting back to regional development here, line 2.0.7. This line item is increasing from $4.6 million in 2004-2005 to about $8.2 million in 2006-2007. Now, that's nearly doubling in two years. The obvious question is: exactly how is the increase in funding going to be used? How will the money be distributed to the various constituencies?

Still on page 122, on travel . . . [Mr. Bonko's speaking time expired]

8:40

Mr. Graydon: I'll just finish with my notes before I move on to the comments that have just been made by the member across the floor there. I'll repeat the last paragraph that I was reading because it was a very important one, which says that more funding to the Alberta film development program is helping to ensure an even stronger industry in the future. The program transferred to Economic Development from Community Development on April 1 and had its budget increased by 10 per cent to $14.8 million.

In other sectors the government helps create opportunities by taking a strategic look at Alberta's competitive advantages and finds a way to build on those advantages. Securing tomorrow's prosperity is a policy, the economic pillar of the government's 20-year plan. Alberta has identified a number of strong sectors which have the capacity to expand even further. By focusing on those sectors, we can help ensure that the economy grows in ways that create jobs and wealth for Albertans. Our future prosperity and economic diversity depend on our ability to move up the value chain towards products and services that have greater value for customers around the globe.

The energy sector drives our prosperity. To make all Alberta prosperous, we need to grow other sectors in step: agrifood, building products, information and communications technology, biotechnology, environmental technologies, and tourism. There's a good example of this in Innisfail. Johns Manville is a leading manufacturer/marketer of building products, operating manufacturing plants in Europe, Asia, and North America, including a facility in Innisfail. The Innisfail fibreglass insulation plant recently expanded operations because of Alberta's infrastructure, tax regime, link to key markets, and strong economy.

We recognize that everyone sees the strength of Alberta's economy today. The challenge is to ensure that we keep the economy strong tomorrow. That takes good people, good information, and lots of opportunity. Voting the $102 million to support Alberta Economic Development will help meet that challenge.

To get on to some of the comments that were just made, we will have the staff respond in writing to questions about the estimates of the Department of Alberta Economic Development. But in his speech there I heard questions that would more appropriately be addressed to the Minister of Innovation and Science, the Minister of Advanced Education, the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, the Minister of Community Development, the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and the Minister of Finance, so we won't be answering those questions. I'm a little disappointed that I didn't hear any questions directed to the Minister of Gaming, but we'll overlook that oversight that he has made, and maybe he'll . . .

Mr. Bonko: I'm trying to get to everybody.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I feel left out.

Mr. Graydon: You do too? I'm sorry, Mr. Education Minister.

Near the end of your comments there you did get specific about some questions on the estimates of Economic Development, and I assure you that you will get the answers to those questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with a great deal of interest to make some comments on the budget for the Ministry of Economic Development here this evening. First, I would like to say that both on a personal level and on behalf of the New Democrat caucus we wish a very speedy and healthy recovery for the Minister of Economic Development. On a personal note, from the time that I came to this House, the Minister of Economic Development and Member for Lethbridge-West has always been the most courteous and interesting and vivacious member amongst the government. I look forward to having him back here in the House so that I can debate him and joke with him and otherwise carry on, so let's hope that he comes back soon and that he is successful in his treatments.

The ministry that we're dealing with here this evening is interesting. The hon. member standing in this evening points out a very good point that, in fact, Economic Development does cross many boundaries of other ministries that we have. When we're looking for the synergy that is possible through Economic Development, then certainly we can touch upon many other specific ministries and highlight them and perhaps use the Economic Development ministry as a way to speed up certain processes.

At the end of the day Economic Development is designed to help diversify our economy here in the province of Alberta, to help facilitate industry to make informed decisions about investment in our province, to increase growth and competitiveness, exports, increase development in regions.

Certainly, all ministries might be involved and, in fact, have a vested interest in what goes on in Economic Development, and my comments will indeed move across several of these ministries in terms of looking for constructive ways to diversify our economy here in the province of Alberta.

So I just want to make some brief comments, first of all in regard to the numbers. I was very pleased to see that there was an increase of over $6 million, or 14.6 per cent, to the tourism funding part of this budget, which is great. I was certainly pushing hard for this last year. Tourism is one of those very pure sort of dollars that we can work toward bringing into the province. People bring it in, and you really do make the greatest return in profit if you have an established industry. Indeed, we do, but the potential for expansion is tremendous, tourism being the single greatest growth industry in the world today.

The funding for the Alberta film development program increased by 10 per cent last year, and again I applaud the ministry for choosing to focus on that sector of our economy. It seems as though we've had a number of successes in regard to the film industry, and certainly we do need to continue to move down that path.

The main issues that I want to just touch on this evening, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this budget are, number one, economic diversification; number two, balancing economic development with environmental protection; number three, the Alberta film and tourism industry; and, finally, an issue of fiscal responsibility.

I would like to begin, then, this evening speaking about diversification. Perhaps it's the result of a booming economy focused on a very few commodities, but in fact over the last dozen years or so our economy here in the province of Alberta has become less diverse and more focused on single sources or a very few, a handful of sources of economic activity. So while we're enjoying, perhaps, an unprecedented boom—I think that we're exceeding the numbers that we might have seen in the '70s or from even the postwar era by comparison—we find ourselves painted into a corner to some extent, Mr. Chairman, in regard to where our sources of income are coming from now and where they're coming from in the future.

I noticed with some interest that our Canadian dollar has been moving in very close step with our commodity windfall here in the province of Alberta. We've exceeded the 90-cent mark as a Canadian national currency, and commentators for a number of months now have been calling this a petrocurrency. I find this amusing in a way, but I also find it a bit a disconcerting because, of course, what happens when the currency rises very quickly is that many of the secondary, value-added, industrial parts of our economy, in fact, have a good deal greater difficulty exporting and attracting investment from outside of the province or even the country because the product becomes more expensive because of the rising Canadian dollar. So looking for economic diversification in the long-term, I'm a bit concerned that Economic Development has only chosen a few small areas to focus on. Certainly, we have tremendous wealth and innovation and research capacity in regard to developing heavy oil projects and oil sands and the natural gas industry that we do have. We have a long history and a wealth of experience in those areas.

Of course, what I'm pushing towards and looking to is diversifying our economy in regards to nonhydrocarbon-based energy production. There is a tremendous opportunity, when different technologies become affordable, to bring them online and to bring them into production. This is where the private sector will be less likely to move at this juncture because, of course, there's so much money to be made on oil and gas. So my analogy of perhaps thinking of Dawson City during the gold rush two centuries ago in the 1890s in the Yukon, I think, would be a fair analogy to make because, of course, people travelled thousands of miles to the Yukon to the gold rush, and they weren't there to necessarily wash dishes or make soap or fry eggs or what have you. Everybody was there to make their fortune in gold. We have a similar situation here now, where the money goes where the greatest return is to be had, and that's in the oil and gas sector.

I guess I'm suggesting that it's incumbent upon the government, which is this House and the government across the way, at this point to make choices about diversification ahead of where the market is going because, of course, if we put all of our eggs in one basket, then the future is less stable for our economy into the far-reaching future. There are a number of alternative technologies that are financially viable at this time, but they need that investment to get them started.

For example, just a simple act of investing in people's homes to make them more energy efficient is a remarkably good idea and has the potential to carry us over the inevitable downturn in the economy that follows a boom because, of course, when you're making capital investment in people's homes and in industries and in physical plants to retrofit these facilities to make them more energy efficient, you're employing a wide range of trades and skills that otherwise might be lying fallow in the times of an economic downturn. If we can start to do this and set up this process now through the next five, 10, or even 20 years, we will establish an ongoing industry which will carry us through and provide stability for trades, provide actual capital increase in value in people's homes and in businesses, and most importantly we will be heading down the road of conservation, which is the number one way by which to achieve energy security and prosperity in the near- and long-term future, not just here in Alberta but around the world.

Sometimes we get caught up in the glamour, perhaps, of certain high technologies. I don't want to somehow minimize the value of high technology and research because it certainly does a lot for humankind, but the implementation of certain practical technologies can serve us well and economically, and generally I think that is what I'm trying to suggest that we do focus on. Look at the development of the efficiency and the affordability of photovoltaic cells, the solar panels that we've seen around. They've been around for many, many years, but now suddenly they've become very affordable, and they've also become much more efficient than ever before. So for us to perhaps focus Economic Development on solar energy in this province, of which there's no shortage, perhaps save for the last couple of days, would be very wise to be making an investment in that economic development for the future.

The same with wind energy. We have made some strides in regard to wind energy in this province, but we seem to have hit a bit of a ceiling. It seems to be a very artificial ceiling, and the ceiling is being sort of presented there as just a prime target for economic development initiatives to break through. I would suggest, Mr.

Chairman, that in regard to actually building the physical turbines that we use to develop a field of wind turbines, to actually build the structures here in the province would be a wonderful investment – most of them come from Europe otherwise now – and also encouraging a grid network that can move the wind energy in a more reasonable way throughout different parts of the province where it's windiest, I suppose, allowing us to increase our capacity to in fact rely on wind energy. Once we build those things, once we invest economically in those sorts of structures, then they're there for a long time, and we realize the profits for a very long time as well, similar to investments that different provinces made in the hydro parts of producing electricity in eastern Canada.

So there's a whole range of ways by which we could encourage economic development in a very reasonable way, I suppose. I would encourage that we do in fact do that in the near- and middle- and long-term future here in the province.

My next set of comments, I guess, in regard to both film and tourism is a concern that I have – and I know that it's just something that we're on the cusp of now, but I can see a greater problem in the immediate future – and that is the rapid environmental degradation of certain areas in our province. When we look at them, they're sort of irreversible and lead to the province, or certain areas, being less attractive to tourist development.

Let's use for the purposes of an example the eastern slopes of our Rockies. While it's certainly some of the most spectacular scenery in the world, Mr. Chairman, I think that there's so much activity in regards to the oil and gas industry and forestry and different types of economic development in these areas that we have to stop and think: what we would want the eastern slopes to look like in the next 20 or 30 years? We know that that's a prime place for tourist development, and it's a prime place for the film industry to sell the province. Whenever you see the promotional activity or certain films that are very successful – people are talking about these cowboy films, but I remember back a few years ago, 20 years ago or so, you know, there was a large Japanese film interest, again, in the eastern slopes of the Rockies. They were making these epic Japanese films there because of the unbelievable beauty that we see on the eastern slopes.

Are we planning to ensure that the future integrity of these places is going to remain so that we can sell it as a tourist attraction and as a film destination, or are we going to compromise that through the, sort of, degradation of these places through energy extraction and forestry? We have to just be careful about that. I'm certainly not saying that it has entirely happened already, but it's a balance that we have to be aware of.

Talking about diversity, I know that we've spent a fair bit of money and effort in regard to high technology, but what I'm seeing from a number of different high-tech sectors is that it seems to be an industry that is in jeopardy. There are some specific complaints coming from different sectors saying that while energy companies seem to have the ear of the government, the different start-up companies in terms of biotechnology and nanotechnology and electronics are having a hard time.

My concern, Mr. Chairman, is that these industries are very mobile. Cities or certain parts of the world that set up a critical mass of these sorts of things are usually more likely to be able to nurture and develop these industries along. So it's very important that we invest now in our capacity to produce not only research and tax support for high-tech companies but also to produce a culture of learning that will produce these scientists and entrepreneurs homegrown here in the province. Because, of course, if they are homegrown, they're much more likely to stay in the province of Alberta rather than move to other world global centres of biotech or such things like that. It is incumbent upon us in the short term to give tax incentives and tax breaks to high-technology companies so that they can maintain what they have built over the last few years, but then in the long term to invest heavily in our postsecondary institutions and allow for pure research so that we are producing these talents homegrown, where they're more likely to stay. I think that's important.

Just on that same note of building sort of a critical mass for people to be attracted to stay in our urban centres, I think it's important in terms of economic development to encourage specifically development of our arts communities. I know you'll say that it's outside of your ministry, but we can use economic development to target something we want to grow very quickly – right? – sort of like fast-tracking a certain concept through the budget process. I think our arts community is just crying out across the province for proper investment and funding so that we create a world-class arts scene. That is part of creating that critical mass that makes a city into a great city, a world city, and makes other communities into places that are more likely to attract and keep immigrants in our province.

We have no shortage of people coming here to work, but it's so often this short-term, make a quick buck in Alberta's oil patch kind of phenomenon that we're seeing again. While, certainly, there's nothing wrong with that – we need to have lots of workers coming here – we also need immigrants that are going to stay. The shortage of workers that we have in the province is critical, and I would suggest that it's partly critical because Economic Development needs to focus more on people not just coming to work for a few months but people who are going to stay here for a long time, you know, perhaps the rest of their lives, and raise a family.

It is, I think, incumbent upon Economic Development to do this, working with immigration, working in liaison with the feds to create a circumstance by which people are not just being brought in here. I guess the most crass example of that is this temporary foreign worker thing, which seems to be the antithesis of any real economic development because you are bringing these people in for a very short period of time to build a certain structure, let's say. But, you know, in regard to building a larger social fabric that we can be proud of and otherwise populating the province, because we do need people in a raw sort of way, it seems to be going completely against that. So I do have a problem with that.

Thanks a lot for the opportunity to make some comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise and participate in the estimates of Alberta Economic Development. Political democracy without economic democracy is a myth. This is all we are talking about if we don't have economic development. We talk about democracy in some other aspects. I mean, that's not as important as the development in Alberta first.

I have a few questions from the business plan. Page 122: Travel Alberta Secretariat, line 3.0.1, is increasing by 47 per cent. Can the minister provide some more details for this significant budgetary increase? What are the reasons behind it? Where specifically will the money go, and what tangible result can Albertans expect to see from this increase? How will the success of this increase be measured?

Page 122, the same page, line 3.0.4: the in-Alberta/regional marketing budget is up 99 per cent from two years ago. Can the minister comment on this increase? If the increase pertains to the hotel levy, is this increased spending from the 1 per cent hotel tax now being collected by the industry?

The next page, 123, line 4.0.5: the budget for emerging opportunities is down 23 per cent from last year. What is the cause for this decrease, and what kinds of industries or businesses will the decrease affect on this one? Shouldn't the Ministry of Economic Development be seeking emerging opportunities, not turning away from them? This decrease is disappointing and exhibits a lack of economic leadership in this government's plan.

Mr. Chairman, I met delegates from my constituency the other day. They asked me lots of questions, mainly about diversifying the economy. We all know that this government doesn't have a surplus policy and that they are spending money like drunken sailors. Without a policy, I mean, what can we tell our children and grandchildren about the royalties we've received in the last 14 years? This is a big question, and I haven't heard anything from the government so far. If they have a plan, I would love to see it and pass it on to my constituents. They are worried. They keep on asking this question, and I have seen many articles in the papers about this one.

Next I move to the film industry and tourism. Alberta is a beautiful place. I mean, we have the Rocky Mountains, beautiful scenery and lakes. How come other provinces like B.C. and Ontario get more business? I know that a couple of film industries, Bollywood or Hollywood – I think two years ago the Minister of Education and the Premier visited the film industry in India. Most of the producers there are interested in making movies in Alberta, but they don't get incentives.

Are you guys listening? [interjection] Okay. Thank you.

Lots of producers in India and China are interested in making movies here, but they are attracted to Toronto or Vancouver because their provincial governments give them incentives to make movies or documentaries. I just want to ask the minister responsible what strategies they are making to encourage more producers for film industries or more tourists, to attract them to Alberta. This is a big industry, and we should not be totally dependent on our resources. Resources will last, say, maybe for 25 years. First of all, we should, you know, have long-term, sustainable policies on how we can diversify the economy and how we can plan for the future film industry or future tourist attractions for generations to come.

The next one I want to ask about is skill shortages. I saw it in the business plan, the goals and strategies of this department. I've heard of the PNP program. Could the minister give us some details of what progress has so far been made on the provincial nominee program and what other training programs we have for the future to increase skilled labour in Alberta? We should not be totally dependent on bringing some people from foreign countries. We still have lots of skills maybe outside of Alberta, and we should approach them. If they are attracted to Alberta somehow, at least we could reduce the rate of unemployment in Canada as a whole. We should concentrate on a training program in Alberta. This is very important for our children because time is running out, and we still have skill shortages, and it's not good news. I mean, we can make development on the economic side.

Now I'll move to international policy development. I have heard that some ministers travel outside Alberta, and they try their best to increase exports from Alberta. I want to know how much progress so far has been made for exports from Alberta in goods and services. It's very important for Alberta development. This business plan has the goals but not specifically the details of what so far has been done in this sector.

Investment in Alberta is another issue. I would like to know how much effort and how much progress has been made to attract some more investment to Alberta from other provinces in Canada as well as from other countries so far.

I know that some other speakers covered lots of other areas. On the small-business side of economic development, I think that this sector suffered a lot in the last 10 or 12 years. I had the opportunity to meet some people with small businesses, and they are still waiting for some initiative by this government so that they can recover the losses they had in the last 10 to 12 years during recession times, and they are suffering.

I want to mention two industries. The first one is the fibreglass industry. A couple of days ago the Leader of the Official Opposition mentioned this in the Chamber. He raised the question about that industry. They are losing millions of dollars because of a lack of supply of electricity. I mean, if we have the proper policy, if we have a task force looking after individual industries, I think, if we have efficient government, they should right away look into that matter and solve the problem so that they could recover their losses which they have suffered so far. This question has been raised and the media covered it all over Alberta. It's a very serious thing. If we have to develop the industries, we should look into it and help them as much as we can.

The next industry I want to talk about is the Alberta book publishing industry. I raised this question I think last session. I think that the former Minister of Community Development and now the Education minister knows that. This is the policy. I mean, I met with them last Friday. This industry has been struggling for the last eight years. "Alberta book publishers face an increasing economic disadvantage when competing with publishers in other provinces, due to higher levels of support received from other provincial governments, notably in British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec" because they give them incentives. Alberta is the only province – you know, this industry is the pillar in the arts sector.

Mr. Backs: They're crying for a level playing field.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yeah.

They consist of artists. Now they have a plan: for three years a pilot program. They are only asking for $15 million in three years' time if this formula works. After this three years they can right away increase output by 10 per cent. It's not bad. I mean, they are creating about 700 jobs, and very importantly it's the arts sector. The arts sector is already suffering for funds. They don't get enough funds, nor sufficient incentives. Lots of Alberta-based book publishing companies are forced to sell their business to the east, Ontario companies, due to the lack of provincial arts funding. This is very serious. We can afford that. They have the right plan.

I think a couple of days ago I discussed with the new Minister of Community Development. I will sit down with him and discuss this program. I think that if we help the industry like this, it will be beneficial not only for this reason, but it is beneficial for Alberta. When I asked this question of the Finance minister, she agreed that they have accomplished great things in Alberta. So if this industry has accomplished and they are creating revenue and they are creating some jobs, $15 million for a three-year plan is not a bad idea. According to them, if they increased business 10 per cent the first year, after three years they will increase another 20 per cent. I mean, it's a good plan, and we should make some effort to help this industry. This is the plan. I'm going to show it to the Minister of Community Development.

The second reason, according to the book publisher, is that they didn't get a grant from the Alberta government for a long, long time.

They had to shut down the business. Then they moved because it always happens that the big fish eat the small fish. This is what happened with this industry. Some of them are definitely moving if the government doesn't support them. I want to see that industry stay in Alberta: the writers, authors. If we can afford it, we should keep everything Alberta makes. Not all books should come from Ontario or B.C. Why can't we keep them in this, our own province? They sacrificed during recession time, they struggled, and they are doing reasonably well.

Now, the fibreglass company, as I mentioned, is losing business because of the lack of supply of electricity. I mean, it's a small thing. Why doesn't the government consider their urgency and help them to progress in their business? What we need is an industry like this. There are a number of other industries who are struggling.

What we need is a long-term, sustainable policy for the future development of Alberta. Unfortunately, I haven't seen any surplus policy so far. The Liberals have their own surplus policy. Some of my colleagues have already mentioned many times that the government must have a surplus policy. They should have a savings policy. I'm glad that the government has been able to save $1 billion for the heritage savings trust plan, which is good news, but . . .

Mr. R. Miller: But they took a billion out at the same time.

Mr. Agnihotri: A billion out, yeah.

Still, suppose that we received $130 billion in royalties over the last 12 or 13 years. If we had a good plan, if we had a long-term plan, instead of giving $400 cheques to the public, we could have given them a thousand dollars every year. But through the lack of government policies, it is not for us. I mean, it is the Alberta taxpayer losing it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the 20 minutes allocated has now run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the budget estimates for Economic Development this evening. Certainly, I would like to echo comments that previous members of this House have made for the minister, and we can only wish him a speedy recovery in his illness and look forward to seeing him back in the Assembly and back active with his ministerial duties. We can only wish him the very best.

Now, I listened with interest to the hon. Minister of Gaming in his discussions and descriptions earlier in the debate. I can't help but bring this up, Mr. Chairman. The hon. minister was talking about Economic Development. Certainly, it caught my eye in this morning's paper, where there was an acquisition of property by Shell around, I think, the Seal area in the Peace River district. Shell plans to develop significant bitumen production facilities in that area of the province. In previous Economic Development debates we were talking about this and what the government was going to do.

I think the government should be commended for the twinning of the majority of the highway between Edmonton and Grande Prairie. I think that when you look at the Grande Prairie region, the Peace River district, and you compare it to the booming economy in Fort McMurray and the fact that now the road from Edmonton to Grande Prairie is twinned with the exception of a stretch around Mayerthorpe and also a stretch the other side of Valleyview that goes through the Sturgeon Lake First Nation, that has, in my view, been a significant economic contributor to the Peace River region.

What else is this government going to do to promote the economic development of the bitumen resources that are located around the Peace River district? I'm sure that there are plans. The previous Minister of Economic Development certainly nodded his head and thought it was a good idea to diversify some of our synthetic crude production, our bitumen production, from the Fort McMurray region further west. If the minister could give us an update on that, I would be grateful.

Also, you know, the previous Minister of Economic Development, Mr. Mark Norris, could use this road himself now if it was built to travel from the Peace River district across to Fort McMurray selling PC memberships for the leadership race. That road hopefully is in the planning stages, hon. minister, the road from Fort McMurray west across to the Peace River district. I don't know whether it would dip south to pick up the Wabasca community or whether it would go just straight across, but I think it's time that we looked at building an all-weather road from Fort McMurray straight west across to the Peace River district. I wonder if we could get an update on that proposal to see if it's in the planning stages.

Also, I think it would be to our economic advantage to consider constructing a road from the city of Edmonton across to Nordegg and maybe even go as far as the Saskatchewan River crossing. If the Minister of Economic Development or the department is considering any of this, I would be grateful to be updated at this time.

Now, certainly when we look at this budget and we go through the fiscal plan, there are some areas that we can improve. One only has to look at page 97 in the economic outlook, the Alberta farm product price index. We look at the percentage of changes that are going on there, Mr. Chairman. This is a chart that is titled Border Reopens to Cattle But Crops Struggle. That is certainly the truth. If we look at crops, there has been a significant decline of 22 per cent, and that's only in the year 2005.

9:30

Now, the U.S. border, Mr. Chairman, reopened to Canadian live cattle under the age of 30 months last July, allowing Alberta to export over 200,000 live cattle to the United States in the rest of the calendar year. Livestock prices have improved since the opening of the border but were down 10 per cent for 2005, the fourth consecutive annual decline. The previous year was 4 per cent, the year previous to that was 8 per cent, and in 2002 it was 5 per cent.

[Mr. Webber in the chair]

For the second year in a row poor harvesting weather affected the quality of crops in some parts of the province, raising inventory levels from two years of high crop production combined with reduced crop quality and a world oversupply of grain, causing prices to fall 22 per cent in 2005. So we certainly had some work to do to turn around our Alberta farm product price index. I would like to know what initiatives in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development the Minister of Economic Development is taking to reverse this rather dismal economic trend.

Also, Mr. Chairman, whenever we look at the economic outlook in the fiscal plan – if we look at page 99, we see Alberta – The Destination of Choice. Certainly, other hon. members have talked about this. It is worth noting one of the strategies that is discussed in the business plan for Economic Development – again, this is on page 119 – the significant opportunities and challenges that lie ahead. Well, one of the challenges is providing skilled workers. Now, that's a significant challenge, and this narrow-focused, narrow-minded idea of importing temporary foreign workers is wrong. It is poorly thought out, and I think it is just pandering to some special interest groups that are isolated even within the production of synthetic crude oil.

If we look at Alberta – The Destination of Choice, the net interprovincial migration to Alberta, we can go back 10 years if we wanted to, but when you look at the migration into this province and compare 1998 to what is occurring now, it is down significantly. In 1998 there were close to 45,000 people who came from other parts of Canada to Alberta. But we look even at last year. As reported in this chart, there were 16,615 Canadians moving to Alberta, so that's a significant reduction. I would like an explanation from the department as to why this has happened.

We are creating more and more jobs in this province, and you would think there would be more and more Canadians interested in settling down here to raise their families, but that doesn't look like it's occurring, certainly not like it was in 1998, 1999, even through to 2001. So what are we doing to increase migration from other parts of Canada to Alberta to meet our manpower needs, and why are we allowing the recruitment and the retention of temporary foreign workers? I use that word "retention" rather lightly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a lot to cover here in the time that I have, and I want to spend some time on travel expenses because that's noteworthy. I may run out of time, so I think we'll get right to that.

I had a look, Mr. Chairman, through the Alberta Gazette at part of the last fiscal year for Economic Development. This is for amounts for hosting expenses over $600. I would like to know what plans the department has for this budget year because as we look through this Alberta Gazette, Economic Development, certainly, was a very gracious host around the world and in this province. Now, we can travel through from Chicago, Illinois, to Tokyo to Seoul, South Korea. We can go back to Edmonton, Alberta, and it never seems to end with this department. I realize that we have to play the host on occasion and we have to meet with trade delegations and we have to meet with other foreign dignitaries and show them around the province and market our province and its people and its manufactured products – I'm not saying that – but what kind of control have we got on this?

Now, we look at the Korea/Alberta reception. Our "Premier spoke to Korean guests (government and business) on Alberta opportunities. To increase the awareness of Alberta to potential Korean investors." This dinner was over $5,000.

We had another dinner here. This one was, I believe, in June 2004. The "Canadian Chamber of Commerce Annual Surf-and-Turf Gala Dinner (provided Alberta Beef for the dinner)." That's fine, I guess. At the height of the BSE crisis that was maybe a good thing to do.

We have another function here, this one in Mexico City. I must have missed something here because it looks like it's "Aboriginal Leaders' Roundtable on Tourism." That must be from the next line item.

Let's go on to China, and this is "Inbound European Union Organics Mission Luncheon and Dinner," $1,500.

Here's one: a "British All Party Parliamentary Rail Group Reception." An all-party committee from Britain on railroads: well, that's novel. This was a $3,300 hit to the taxpayers.

Here's another one in Economic Development, Mr. Chairman, for $1,400, and it says: "Strategic Tourism Marketing Council (STMC) Meeting."

We have another one, a dinner to provide 40 delegates attending the Canadian Tourism Commission Research Committee meeting. That was for a round figure of $1,600.

The "Canadian Chamber of Commerce Thanksgiving Gala

Dinner,” networking opportunities for Canadian and Mexican business leaders, $1,100.

Here’s another one, “to provide an opportunity for Japanese businessmen and media to meet with the Alberta delegation to obtain further information on oil sands opportunities” – I wonder if they have ever heard of the Internet there – 2,700 bucks for this.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Now, there are a lot here, and there are a lot of them in Mexico. Here’s another one: “Incoming Mexican Buyers Mission Dinner . . . to introduce Mexican buyers and guests to Alberta’s industry contacts with the purpose of facilitating trade and increasing awareness of the potential in the Mexican market,” $941.

An Hon. Member: So you think that’s good or bad?

Mr. MacDonald: I would like details on this, hon. minister, before I could determine whether it was good or bad. Perhaps that’s a mission for the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

The “Opportunity for Undersecretary of Mexico, Juan Elivira Quesada, to meet with Alberta organizations” cost us $800. Another lunch or a dinner with this gentleman around the same time cost $700.

The “Alberta Catalogue Show”: we spent 1,500 bucks there.

The “Alberta Visitor Information Providers Conference” in Shanghai, China: I believe this cost us roughly 2,500 bucks.

Now, this is one that I would like an explanation on, and I would like to know in this budget year if we’re going to continue this practice: the “Alberta Korea Office Clients . . . Appreciation Night.” The purpose of this reception was to thank Alberta’s key Korean clients and to provide an opportunity for Korean business organizations to meet with those who have established business relations with Alberta companies so as to encourage more South Korean investment in Alberta as well as increase Alberta trade into Korea.

This cost 6,500 bucks, and I bet the Koreans appreciated the taxpayers picking up this tab. I wonder if the minister could comment on whether appreciation nights like this are going to continue in this fiscal year.

The “Minister’s Mission to Germany.” Germany is a vital trading partner, there’s no doubt. This was a $2,700 meeting.

Now, the “Minister’s Mission to the United Kingdom”: that was a $9,000 tab.

I read about this in the New York Times: the “Hydrocarbon Upgrading Workshop” that happened in London, England. We spent 3,100 bucks there at a function, and then there was a follow-up meeting in Calgary. We’re a little closer to home. We spent $1,000 less. We spent $2,100.

The “Canadian Oil and Gas Business Development Mission to Mexico,” the annual 2005 trade show in Veracruz – is that by the ocean? – $2,500 for that.

Another one, now, that I hope isn’t repeated, Mr. Chairman, in this fiscal year, but in February of 2005 at Veracruz, again in Mexico, the “Alberta Canada Maple Leaf Bakery Networking Reception.” The purpose of this $4,000 bill was “to increase awareness of Alberta bakery capabilities, which would lead to increased sales in Japan.” Is that possible, that we would be having a function in Mexico to increase sales of baked goods to Japan? I’m finding that a little hard to believe, and I’m wondering if the computer didn’t mess it up somehow, printing off the Alberta Gazette. I don’t see the value of this. I really don’t. I’m sorry.

Now, the “Alberta Catalogue Show & Canola Seminar,” which occurred in one of China’s major cities, Guangzhou, $3,300. Here’s another one in the same city for $1,100.

It goes on and on and on. There are a couple of more pages of this, and my time is going to run out here.

But Travel Alberta, these outlook workshops, what kind of value are we getting for that? Are we seeing an increase in tourism here?

Mr. Graydon: Are they pork chops or workshops?

Mr. MacDonald: They’re workshops. But the ultimate objective of the workshop should be to enhance tourism opportunities because the whole thing started off in the city here, in the capital city, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council meeting. If you add up all these catered functions or whatever, it’s a significant amount of money.

Then we took the show on the road, and we went to China. That cost us $3,500 at a meeting of tourism industry operators. I would like to know who went on that, and did we send any representatives from the ski industry, the downhill ski industry in particular? Since the American dollar has increased in value, I understand that there are a lot less American skiing in the national parks. What are we doing to create another market?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I, too, would like to add my voice to those expressing their good wishes to the Minister of Economic Development. We hope he continues to do well in his recovery and look forward to seeing him back in the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Chairman, on to the estimates as they are in front of us tonight. One of the frustrations that we in opposition often have is the difficulty in getting answers to our questions. Last week in this House when we had the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations speaking to his estimates, I asked him some questions on some information that came right out of that department’s fiscal plan. His answer was that those questions were really more relevant to the Ministry of Economic Development. I found that to be interesting given that they came out of his book, but nevertheless I did commit that I would ask those questions again tonight.

It has come to my attention that a lot of preliminary work has been done on the feasibility of establishing a trade office in the Middle East. As I mentioned, I was going through the annual report from the IIR ministry for the year ’04-05, and they have a result analysis in there on initiatives in the Asia/Pacific region, including China and Korea; initiatives in Europe, both in Germany and the Ukraine; and international governance offices in China, South Africa, Russia, and Mexico. But, Mr. Chairman, there was no reference to offices in the Middle East or North Africa.

That did cause me to wonder whether or not, in fact, we might not be missing some opportunities in the Middle East given the fact that Alberta is certainly recognized as a world leader in the oil and gas sector, in particular, but also in other areas. Given the amount of oil and gas activity that takes place in the Middle East and given the current world political climate in terms of the favourable manner in which Canada is looked upon as opposed to the United States by some of the countries in the Middle East, I thought that it was an appropriate question to ask.

So the specific questions that I asked last week and would like to ask again today – and I understand that the Minister of Gaming is standing in tonight for the Minister of Economic Development and wouldn't necessarily have the answers to these questions at the ready, but I'm hoping that some of the staff that are up in the members' gallery tonight will be able to provide some written answers to some of these questions for me in the days ahead, preferably before the end of what would appear to be a soon-to-be-ending spring session, Mr. Chairman.

The particular questions, then, would be as follows. I would like to ask this minister or the ministry what exactly they are doing to actively pursue economic opportunities in the Middle East, particularly trade relations with Alberta's oil and gas sector. Also, when was the last time that the Alberta government ran an economic trade mission to the Middle East? The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was just running through the list of visits to several countries. I'm not recollecting that he mentioned a trip to the Middle East.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I didn't. I didn't get that far.

Mr. R. Miller: I'm curious: when was the last time that we did that? Perhaps, if the member had not run out of time, we may have had the answer right there.

I'm also looking for an answer as to whether or not there is currently a plan in place to open a trade office in the Middle East. My understanding is that, in fact, the agriculture minister in the past has spoken out in favour of such an idea, not necessarily in favour for the Department of Economic Development. So I'm a little bit curious as to what might be happening there. So those are a few questions.

Then further to that, as I was doing some research on this, I noted that – well, I mentioned already the energy sector, but certainly agriculture I've just touched on. I do believe that there are other opportunities in terms of forestry, education and training, research and technology, communications, tourism – the minister talked about that – strategic alliances, and joint venture projects. Most of these countries in this area of the Middle East and North Africa import anywhere up to 90 per cent of their products and equipment, including labour, engineering, and other services. Several of those countries, in fact, are proceeding with privatization and market liberalization and diversification of their manufacturing sectors. Again, it's simply a question of whether or not we should perhaps be looking at spending some time, energy, and maybe even some dollars promoting further economic development and trade with that part of the world as opposed to concentrating on only some of the other countries that have been mentioned both in my comments tonight and by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

So I will leave that with the minister and the staff upstairs and would look forward very much, as I suggested, to receiving some response to that in the coming days so that we can have that in front of us before we deal with the appropriation bill in its entirety.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to build on some of the comments about questions from the Alberta Gazette from January 14, 2006, regarding some of the expenses noted by the Economic Development ministry. For the function of the "International Business Roundtable," which was a forum to provide information on Alberta Economic Development's strategies to the consular corps – now, they're a good bunch of fellows in Alberta – and that looks to be the consular corps in Edmonton. That was $2,191. I just wondered what sort of information was being provided to the consular corps and what sort of expenses were brought forward in that.

Another event was a function in Munich, Germany. It was "Tourism Services Spring . . . Training" for 2005 to provide some counsellor training, I guess. The amount of that was $2,630.80. I just wondered: which were the people being trained, and what was the type of training that was provided? If we could get some detail on that.

Another is the "Tourism Services Regional . . . Training" for 2005, and that one went up for $3,507.16 in Jasper. That looked like a nice one. I'd just like to see what that was all about: how many attendees, and what was the nature of the training that was provided? What was the purpose of this?

Another function was the monies given to the "Canadian Chamber of Commerce Annual Gala." The purpose of this was slated to be the opportunity to identify business and other things with Mexican decision-makers, and $4,843.26 was supplied for that. I just wondered why so much money was given for that particular area.

Mexico seems to be a popular site sometimes. There's a function in Mexico City for the presentation "to market Alberta as a film location." $8,211.94. That looks like a nice event, and I just wondered if we could have some details on what was brought forward in that particular meeting. What was the rationale behind having that?

Now, there is the "Travel Alberta Team Conference." The reason for this was to develop working relationships between various aspects of the government that deal with travel, and $4,621.33 was spent on that. That's an interesting one. Why was this brought forward? It sounds like a good party. It lasted for two days in Red Deer.

Another was the reception in Alberta's Japan office that cost $6,358.85 to the Alberta taxpayer. It was to "mark two significant milestones in Alberta-Japan relations." The 35th anniversary that it's been there, I guess. Spent some bucks on it. Good party.

Another dinner, for incoming buyers from Portland, Oregon, on September 22, 2005, where $1,152.27 was spent to "capitalize on business opportunities." Well, that sounds like something pretty capital. I just wondered what that one was all about.

I'd like to mention a few things on some of the aspects of economic growth, which is really a core factor in the whole scope of economic development. One of the great things about economic growth, of course, is the access to capital. Many people in Alberta think that the access to capital is something that is really easy here, certainly in the oil and gas industry. We've had tremendous access to capital for the conventional oil and gas industry, as has been especially opened up in the oil sands in the last couple of years with $60, $70 oil and also with the original royalty structure that came in in the mid-90s in the federal/provincial agreement that encouraged the growth of the oil sands.

I remember that for a long time Syncrude Canada had a point looking at their North mine which was called Chrétien point. The federal and the provincial governments worked closely on establishing that, and I think that Anne McLellan was very instrumental in bringing that one forward. We've seen a lot of investment monies. Oil sands trusts have made the area of oil sands investment something of an investment salesman's dream. Capital has certainly been flowing into this important area of our economy. But we continue to be a difficult market for venture capital investment for areas other than oil and gas and related petrochemical ventures. We need to establish some way to encourage new venture capital.

One way that has seen some success in other provinces over many years is the labour-sponsored venture capital funds. The beauty of these funds is that they provide capital for beginning ventures and also provide a tax break at the same time. I spoke some time ago with a nutraceutical entrepreneur who is set up in the mid-west U.S. because of the availability of venture capital in the mid-west states. If I look at chart 2 on page 120 of the business plan, venture capital as an innovation indicator is so far down that it is almost not on the chart. We also look at R and D intensity on that chart, which is also way below average, and certainly private-sector R and D intensity in Alberta is way below average and is something of a concern. If we were to factor out that R and D intensity on oil and gas, it would become – well, it is a matter of huge concern.

Talking about the nutraceutical entrepreneur, now, this guy is from Edmonton. He still remains a proud Albertan, lives in Alberta, and says that he would have located in Alberta if he would have had access to a fund, and he specifically named the labour-sponsored venture capital funds. It is sad that Alberta is one of the few areas that does not provide this tax break and does not move to grow a pool of venture capital in this way, that will grow business outside of the booming oil and gas areas.

We have to look to the future. This government has little or no interest in providing tax breaks for a lot of the workers and tradesmen building our province, building the major projects, working on the pipelines, working on the oil and gas, making some big bucks and paying the full tax rates, as they are right now. It would be nice to give them a tax break. They still are providing huge dollars in their taxes to the Alberta treasury. It would be nice to see if they could provide a little bit of venture capital for new businesses. They have moved to do so in a number of areas in the past in other provinces, and I think that it's incumbent upon this government to begin to look at that.

Another area, of course, is the development of our labour force. I see that the Economic Development department has looked to try and encourage . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Economic Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $102,864,000

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the Committee of Supply now rise and report the estimates of the Ministry of Economic Development and beg leave to sit again at another time.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Economic Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $102,864,000.

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill Pr. 1

Burns Memorial Trust Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: I'd like to call the question, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 2

Mary Immaculate Hospital of Mundare Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw on behalf of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North I move that Bill Pr. 2 be amended. I think that has been circulated throughout the House.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member has moved an amendment, which we shall refer to as amendment A1. I believe the amendment has been circulated, and it is also being circulated as we speak. Does anybody wish to participate in the debate on the amendment that's before the floor?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 2 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 3
Edmonton Community Foundation
Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege for me to rise tonight on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to initiate discussion on Private Bill Pr. 3, the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act. To open the discussion, I would like to table an amendment that I believe has been circulated already.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, there is an amendment on the floor, which I believe has been circulated. Are there any comments, or does anybody wish to participate on the amendment that's before the floor? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you. Just very briefly, I'm wondering if the mover of the amendment might be able to share with us the reasons for the amendment rather than just presenting the amendment because, Mr. Chairman, you will be aware that not all members of this Assembly sit on the Private Bills Committee. In fact, some of us haven't had an opportunity to review the bills. I'm assuming that there's a logical reason for this, but I wouldn't mind a very brief explanation, if possible, as to the reason why this amendment has been brought forward.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, thank you, and thank you to the hon. member. I don't myself sit on the Private Bills Committee. My understanding of this amendment is that these are housekeeping items that arose as a result of the debates and the presentations in the Private Bills Committee. They were agreed to by the committee and by the Edmonton Community Foundation Act. I would remind the hon. member that this act only applies to that community foundation. It is not a public application.

Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody wish to participate in the debate on the bill as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to make some very brief comments on the excellent presentation we had in regard to the Edmonton Community Foundation coming forward to present this private bill and the very good work that they do in our community. It's a remarkable foundation, and if there's any way by which we can ensure the smooth functioning and funding of this foundation through this Legislature, I would certainly be always in absolute favour.

The Edmonton Community Foundation administers a total of almost 400 separate charitable funds that extend not just through Edmonton but throughout the province. They do innumerable good works for people in need and various philanthropic projects that make our city a better place. For example, I believe that just in the last year or so they've had the establishment of 30 new funds. So you can see that it's a very dynamic group, and I'm proud to have it as part of the city of Edmonton.

10:10

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: I just would like to thank the hon. member for his comments and then call the question.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 3 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 36
Securities Transfer Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act, 2006. There are a number of House amendments that I'll address shortly, but first I'd like to say that I appreciate the comments made last week by the hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Judging from what they said, I believe that they've done some research on this and understand the significance of this legislation. I would like to respond to their concerns and perhaps clarify some of the matters that were raised.

I have to confess, though, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford did have me a bit puzzled by some of the comments because, of course, he does understand – and we agree – that it's taken an awful long time for this bill to come forward. But later there are suggestions that we wait for Ontario to adopt the Securities Transfer Act and observe their experience, and of course Ontario is in the throes of doing that. Our finding is that there are housekeeping items and amendments that they have to get along with in order to have the thing harmonized across the country.

I'm hoping that it'll help if I explain how this particular legislation came to be. It should be noted that the Securities Transfer Act project first originated in Alberta in 1993. The Alberta Law Reform Institute published a report on the transfers of investment securities, and the current version of the Securities Transfer Act is essentially a product recommended in a 1993 Alberta Law Reform Institute report. The Uniform Law Conference of Canada undertook this project in 1993 based on the report published by the Alberta Law Reform Institute. In 1998, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Securities Administrators Uniform Securities Transfer Act Task Force was struck. The transfer act was developed by the task force as a joint project with the Uniform Law Conference of Canada.

The Alberta government's Legislative Counsel worked closely with the task force, with some input from British Columbia and Ontario legislative counsels over the period from 1999 until 2002. During this period a number of consultative drafts were prepared and circulated to stakeholders, and in 2003-2004 the task force published successive drafts of the Uniform Securities Transfer Act together with extensive explanatory material as part of a major public consultation process.

During that process the USTA received strong and favourable support. Stakeholders, including securities and financial industry representatives and lawyers, urged prompt uniform implementation of the USTA. Mr. David Dodge, governor of the Bank of Canada, remarked that provincial and territorial legislatures need to make the Uniform Securities Transfer Act a priority. Such an act would provide a sounder legal basis for the holding and transfer of rights in securities that are held in book-entry form, and would replace the current patchwork of legal rules in this area.

Raymond Protti, president and CEO of the Canadian Bankers Association, remarked that we believe that the USTA initiative should be a priority of governments across Canada, and that the prompt passage of the legislation is important to the global competitiveness of Canada's capital markets.

In 2004 the Uniform Law Conference of Canada approved the English version of the USTA, and in June 2005 the USTA was reviewed by an interprovincial working group of government representatives with a mandate to review the drafting of the STA to maximize uniformity across the country. On December 1, 2005, the Securities Transfer Act was introduced in the Ontario Legislature, and other provinces, including British Columbia, plan to introduce a securities transfer act in 2006.

The hon. member is correct. It has taken a number of years to get to this point. However, the provisions of the Securities Transfer Act are complex. The Securities Transfer Act represents an important example of interprovincial co-operation in responding to the needs of Canada's capital markets. The process has been long because of the complexity of the subject and the fact that there is no precedent for uniform law of this type in Canada. As I indicated in first and second readings of the bill, stakeholders have expressed strong support for prompt, uniform implementation of securities transfer legislation in Canada, and the Securities Transfer Act provides for that.

During discussion at second reading the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford raised a concern about enforcement of securities regulation. I also note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview suggested that Alberta should work instead on a national securities regulator. These are certainly issues worth discussing, Mr. Chairman, but they're actually not relevant to this particular bill. Maybe it would help if I attempted to make it clear that the Securities Transfer Act is not securities regulatory law but commercial law governing the transfer of securities and interest in investment property. The Securities Transfer Act merely adds a modern legal foundation to support existing commercial practices.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also asked how much the Securities Transfer Act might save in administrative costs, and he noted that during second reading in the Ontario Legislature Minister Phillips remarked that the industry has estimated that implementation of the Ontario Securities Transfer Act, Bill 41, could save the securities industry approximately $100 million to $140 million. The figure cited by Minister Phillips is based on findings from a 2002 Cap Gemini Ernst & Young report commissioned by the Canadian Capital Markets Association. That study estimated the benefits associated with straight-through processing for securities transactions. The estimated benefits are for the entire Canadian securities industry.

Straight-through processing, Mr. Chairman, is the general term used to describe the elimination of manual or duplicative steps in the process of settling securities transactions. Basically, it's the efficient use of computer-based technology enabling the entire settlement process to be conducted electronically. Straight-through processing does not only reduce costs; it also reduces the number of risks inherent in the settlement process. The enactment of the Securities Transfer Act is a precondition to achieving straight-through processing. Many components of straight-through processing require a clear legal foundation for the indirect holding system, which is provided for in the Securities Transfer Act.

Mr. Chairman, I noted earlier that there are a number of House amendments being proposed for Bill 36. I wonder if I could have them circulated as I complete my remarks.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you're making reference to some amendments, but we do not have them at the table. Do you have them in your possession?

Mr. Knight: I have one copy.

The Deputy Chair: Is it an original copy?

Mr. Knight: It is not. It's a draft.

The Deputy Chair: Well, we need to have the original in order for us to proceed. Would you maybe like to adjourn and then come back to the subject?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, could I adjourn debate? We'll have this matter attended to.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall proceed with the next item before us, and when we resolve this issue of the amendment, we may be able to come back to it.

10:20

Bill 20
Freedom of Information and
Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise tonight to participate again in the debate on Bill 20, which seeks to amend Alberta's freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation. Some members might recall that I have mentioned in this House time and time again that this bill packages something that is really good with something that is really bad. It's almost a 50-50 split. Of note, both the Liberal opposition and the ND opposition amendments to try to make this bill an easier pill to swallow have so far not met with success.

However, tonight I wanted to start by talking about section 7 in this bill, which amends section 55 of the original act by renumbering it as 55(1) and by adding the following as sub (2). It reads:

- (2) The processing of a request under section 7(1) or 36(1) ceases when the head of a public body has made a request under subsection (1) and
- (a) if the Commissioner authorizes the head of the public body to disregard the request, does not resume;
 - (b) if the Commissioner does not authorize the head of the public body to disregard the request, does not resume until the Commissioner advises the head of the public body of the Commissioner's decision.

Now, it is no secret that applications for freedom of information requests are already lengthy and drawn out, and they basically take longer than what is stipulated in the current provisions. Rarely have we received a request within the stated timeline, and many reasons are quoted or given and many excuses. Sometimes there's a request for clarification. Sometimes it's a negotiation over the extravagant fees. Sometimes it might be a procedural requirement. Delays, stalls, whatever. We remember the very famous debate that people were having with respect to the government aircraft flight logs and whether, in fact, it was artificially delayed till after the November '04 election or whether that was just an inadvertent procedural backlog that kept it from being released. It still remains to be seen.

In essence, FOIP requests are now being reviewed. The people administering them or looking after them are usually first thinking about how to deny the request or how to delay it rather than, really, looking for ways to grant the request and sharing the information or releasing it. So it is already drawn out, and we don't need to stop the clock or make it any longer.

What this amendment seeks to do is to basically stop that clock, and nothing progresses until after the commissioner deems it to be worthy of release, and then the clock resumes. So it's not really counting the number of days, weeks, or even months sometimes that a decision of this nature is required to take.

With these brief comments, Mr. Chairman, it would be my honour to introduce an amendment which is basically calling on the Assembly and the esteemed members in this House to strike out section 7. In so doing, what we are trying to accomplish is to make it more palatable and to basically tell people that we have amended bad legislation to allow the good part of it to go forward. So give us the amendment; we'll give you the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have an amendment being proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. This is amendment A3.

Does anyone wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise this evening to voice my support for this amendment labelled A3 from the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. He's moving that Bill 20 is to be amended to strike out section 7 in its entirety, and I certainly do agree with this.

In my time here in the Legislature I've witnessed quite a variety of frustrations in being able to get information in a timely manner. This one particular section of Bill 20 really does interfere with that timeliness. It's curious because I guess what often happens with bills is that if there is some less than savoury section that wants to be passed through, then somehow they attach it to some other pieces that seem more savoury or more acceptable. So this bill is kind of a patchwork of things that needed to be done and then specific sections that really do put roadblocks in the way of not only the opposition doing its job but the media and individuals accessing information as well.

You know, when we pause to think of what we do put out the most in this Legislative Assembly, it's all about information. For us to debate in a transparent and open manner: that's what the design of this particular room is for. It's the information that we're trying to clarify and make serve best the public interest. So by putting roadblocks in the way of information, certainly we are protecting the privacy of individuals, but we have to balance that with the freedom of information that's necessary for people to make intelligent decisions about the governance of this province.

Specifically, this section 7 of Bill 20 is really causing a great deal of interference in the ability for us to access information in a reasonable way. For example, we've been looking through questions and through FOIP requests for information concerning how the government is making decisions on the Public Affairs Bureau, and this is perhaps one of the great black holes of information, Mr. Chairman, in terms of the choices that are being made. I can recall a question that we looked at specifically in terms of the Public Affairs Bureau review committee from last year, where we asked for submissions received by the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau review committee from last year to this year, and we were rejected on this straightaway. You know, the idea that this information would somehow lie fallow and out of the reach of the public, the opposition, the media, and even historians as well for such a long period of time I find to be, well, very troubling.

I was speaking to a colleague of mine who is an historian and is working on his doctorate and looking at the history of health care specifically. When I brought forward to him that this section of Bill 20 was going to perhaps exclude information from its full disclosure for a period of up to 15 years, he was absolutely flabbergasted. While I thought that perhaps this section of the bill was something that existed only under the dome, in fact his comments made me realize that there are a whole range of people and professions who analyze information that are also going to be affected, Mr. Chairman, by this same information.

The timely manner by which we are able to analyze history helps us to move forward in a general way to make intelligent decisions about the future too, so for us to seal away information for such a long period of time really flies in the face of our alleged commitment to higher education and to research and pure research.

That leads me to my next comment, which is that this section 7, in fact, impedes the fair progress of democracy because, of course, you can only make sound decisions and have participation of the public in a reasonable way if there is the information put forward for them to make their decisions on. So if we are narrowing the scope of those decisions, then the very composition of democracy, which is for people to make evaluations and then to have individual choice, is severely limited and can be manipulated.

Certainly, that doesn't preclude the idea that democracy should be in any way curtailed on the basis of knowledge or information, but we're not doing democracy any service by building this sort of a freezer of information by not allowing the free dissemination of information through FOIP requests in this part of Bill 20.

I do find it to be somewhat difficult, and certainly the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has done us a service to point out that this in particular is causing us some difficulty and requires revision – really extraction in this case, and it's a very specific surgical extraction. It does not interfere with the integrity of the larger bill, which has some merit. Rather, it's just a nice sharp incision that's going to help us to carry forward and give out information in a reasonable and timely sort of way.

It's interesting because if we look across the country, Mr.

Chairman, there is general agreement that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act that we have here in Alberta is among the most restrictive in the country to begin with, so for us to move past that rather dubious benchmark to a whole new league of secrecy is hardly the way to put up a good front. You know, when you look at things like section 7 and see how it curtails our access to freedom, eventually these sorts of things get out as a larger problem of governance that might cast a negative view of the province in terms of a place to do economic activity. If we are having some sort of favouritism, let's say, of a certain industry or of a certain company working in the province of Alberta and the government is somehow party or privy to that information but nobody gets to hear about it, then perhaps new businesses are less likely to consider investing in the province because they think: well, you know, there's this black hole that exists in terms of freedom of information.

It begs the question, Mr. Chairman: what are they hiding then? Maybe there is nothing, but maybe there is something. You know, this is part of a culture of openness that people expect in this day and age, in 2006, and international investors do certainly look at the viability of a government, the democratic functioning of a government as part of the criteria that they use to choose to make investments in the future. So as we look past our reliance on a hydrocarbon-based economy and our reliance on resource revenue and we're looking to diversify the economy, as we've been talking about earlier this evening, pieces like Bill 20 with section 7 in fact do send out the wrong signal.

I'm glad that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung did give us this opportunity to strike out section 7. As we go through and comb through Bill 20, there are a couple of other pieces that did stand out for me that also need some fine-tuning or tweaking or, in this case, a surgical removal.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would defer to some other fine minds here to speak on the merits of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder was referring to me in his last statement there, and I was listening to his comments with interest. I think it would be helpful to sort of go back and take a look at what section 7 is all about because I'm not sure that the hon. member's comments were wholly relevant to what is happening here. But, you know, that of course is a matter of debate, and I appreciate that.

In any event, amendment A3, that we have before us, is to strike out section 7 to Bill 20, which is amending the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. In this particular case, section 7, which purports by this amendment A3 to be struck, is a purely administrative amendment. It's one which would allow the 30-day processing timeline for a FOIP request to stop while the commissioner makes a decision on whether or not it is appropriate to disregard a FOIP request. Before a public body can disregard a FOIP request, it must seek permission from the commissioner. These requests are rare, but they do occur. In the 2004-2005 period there were six such requests, and there were 10 in total in all of the previous three years. The decision to take away an individual's right to make a request is a serious one, and as such the commissioner consults with the FOIP applicant. Since the commissioner's consultation takes time, typically a decision comes after the legislated 30-day response time has expired.

The problem that this particular amendment in section 7 is dealing with is to ensure that the problem of complying with one provision of the act doesn't cause the public body to breach another provision, hence the comment that it is purely administrative.

In any event, those points clarify what section 7 is all about, and I would urge the House to defeat amendment A3.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate this evening on amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. Certainly, the entire bill, in my opinion, should be discarded by this Legislative Assembly. This is nothing more than the protection of the government from their own skeletons act. This is further increasing the government's ability to hide behind a wall of secrecy, not a veil of secrecy but in this case after 35 years a wall, and a thick wall at that.

The hon. Minister of Justice states, "Oh, no, this is purely administrative; there's nothing to worry about here," but I would like to hear, before we vote on this amendment, just exactly what the Privacy Commissioner thinks of this entire legislation. As the former FOIP critic from this side of the House I'm recalling that it was routine for the Privacy Commissioner to comment on legislation and certainly on issues surrounding privacy. I had not heard from the commissioner. I certainly would like to hear directly from the commissioner, perhaps in a letter from his office to all hon. members of this Assembly, exactly not only what he thinks of this bill but this section, the section that the hon. member would like to eliminate and eliminate with good reason.

Now, there are enough ways in the current legislation, unfortunately, for this government to get their way with a FOIP request. It has gotten so bad, Mr. Chairman, that sometimes I initiate FOIP requests and I just simply give up. I give up because I know that there are so many loopholes for the government to use to deny me access to information. Even when I'm willing to pay the high fees, the information doesn't come in a timely fashion. The government, I'm sad to say and very disappointed to say, has breached this act by not meeting time frames or deadlines.

When we look at A3 and we look at the role of the commissioner, the commissioner is really a ref. In this case with section 7 the referee came and occasionally does blow the whistle. But with this, play could possibly never resume, and I don't think that's right, and I don't think it's necessary.

I think that we should hear from the commissioner. I can't understand why on this legislation the commissioner is silent. I don't know what exactly that silence means. Perhaps the man agrees with this legislation. I certainly hope not. Whenever we look at this amendment, Mr. Chairman, and we look at FOIP laws in this province, we look at the principles and objectives of this act originally in 1994. It was supposed to be the flagship of an open and transparent government. It was the flagship act, but that is so far from the truth.

Now, freedom of information legislation is not new anymore to Alberta, but in the 12 years that we've had this legislation, there have been significant changes. I think that one of the benchmarks for access to information law in this province was the adjudicated matter that was heard by Justice T.F. McMahon going back to 2002. This was between the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Alberta Justice, and, of course, the Globe and Mail and Alberta Justice. The Globe and Mail had some very fine lawyers involved in this file, and there was significant discussion on what should and should not be released in the matter of Stockwell Day and his legal bills. Now, the taxpayers paid the legal bills, and Mr. Day has gone on to Ottawa. Mr. Justice McMahon writes, "Access to information legislation is a means by which people get that information from sometimes reluctant government hands."

This is what we have to consider with amendment A3. This is another means by an old, tired government that is now starting to display paranoia as well whenever you bring this before the Legislative Assembly. This bill should not even come before the Assembly because this entire bill is wrong. What the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung is doing is a repair job. It's a repair job, but it's not adequate.

Now, we have to remember what this access to information legislation is for, and we have to pay heed to the comments from Justice McMahon. Now, Justice McMahon goes on to say – and, all hon. members, if you would listen to this and consider supporting A3, I would be very grateful – that the second principle that has been used by this government is that the user should pay. Justice McMahon questions whether this principle that the user should pay is in the spirit of the access to information law. He goes on to say: in any event, it begs the question who the real user is.

As well, this act expressly provides for several exceptions to that principle, and here we are with another loophole for this government to use by going to the commissioner and asking for a halt to the proceedings, and if not a halt to the proceedings, well, we'll stop the clock on this for a little while.

Now, I sat on the parliamentary committee that had a look at this legislation, and there didn't seem to be any problems at that time. Section 7 didn't seem to be necessary at that time, so why are we doing this at this time if for no other reason than to allow this government to hide its skeletons? The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is shaking his head, but this government has a lot of skeletons. There's no doubt about that. The former Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation talked about them.

An Hon. Member: Maybe he had them, but I don't have any.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. minister is saying that maybe the former minister had some skeletons, but he doesn't.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hope that the debate before us pertains to the amendment that's before us.

Mr. MacDonald: It certainly does, Mr. Chairman, because what this amendment is going to do is at least help not only the opposition but other interested parties find the skeletons that the former Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation was talking about just recently. It wasn't skeleton; it was skeletons. There were more than one. If we close all these loopholes in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, how are we to do our jobs? If the taxpayers have any interest in pursuing a file or a matter with this government and they apply to access to information, well, this is one more way for this government to stop the flow of information. If this government didn't have anything to hide – if they didn't have anything to hide – they would stand up and support the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung's amendment.

We can go on at length, but the first thing that should be of consideration in any FOIP law is the public interest, and the public interest is being disregarded. I was going to say something a lot stronger than that, but it's certainly disregarded. It's disregarded by a government that doesn't have the public interest in mind; they have their own interest in mind. Their own interest is keeping those skeletons that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks talked about from the public. I can't believe that we would go to this extent to give the commissioner at this time this sort of extraordinary authority. I don't think we need to do that, and I think the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation secretly agrees with me. I really do, and I think he's going to support this amendment. I'm beginning to feel like he finally gets it.

Now, when we look at the public interest – and I think we're going to have to quote another leadership hopeful in this. This is going back to early January 2001, and this is from the former Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the former Minister of Advanced Education, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, and he states this: "We are releasing this information in keeping with this government's policy of openness and accountability." The hon. member is talking about the release of some of the information, the select release of details of the Goddard versus Day settlement and the costs associated with that.

We've got to remember, Mr. Chairman, that the government's policy of openness and accountability will be completely ignored if we vote against amendment A3. It'll be completely ignored. It will be completely forgotten. I hope that the hon. member is not going to be ignored and forgotten in the leadership race. But this is what's going to happen if we don't support amendment A3 to sever this or surgically remove it, legislatively remove it as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder said. The public interest is not being met unless we vote in favour of amendment A3.

With that, I have a lot to say about this bill. Specifically to this amendment, would the commissioner have stopped my FOIP request on Enron? Would the commissioner have stopped my request? I never saw the light of day on anything on the power purchase arrangements. The information that we eventually did get in the Goddard versus Stockwell Day case we had to get through a judicial review. If this section was to remain, how would a judicial review affect it? I hope not. Perhaps the hon. Member for Red Deer-North could ask that and participate in the debate, and we could find out just what this would mean exactly with a judicial review. I'm certain that an applicant could go and receive or request a judicial review into this matter. If the commissioner authorizes the head of a public body to disregard the request and it does not resume, where does the applicant go? Hopefully to a judicial review.

Now, certainly if we look at the details that we got on Enron, if we look at the details we got on the power purchase arrangements – and these are only two – we see exactly the implications of this. We only have to read the newspaper today to see where one of the power purchase arrangements was sold for megabucks. EPCOR had purchased the one out in Battle River, and then they turned around and sold it for a significant profit. After using that electricity generation right for five years, they sold it for megabucks.

We find out also through a FOIP request that this government made a secret deal with AltaGas on Enron's power purchase arrangement out at Lake Wabamun, sold it at a fire-sale price. This was a secret deal – the minister is nodding his head – made in cabinet.

Mr. Stevens: You know about everything.

Mr. MacDonald: I know about it through freedom of information. That's how I know about it.

There was interest in the deal, but AltaGas got their hands on the generation rights for, at that time, 16 years for Sundance B power plant for $220 million. I read in the paper today where this sale was concluded, and I thought: again, again. It's just like the ring road lands. This government is selling property and a public interest for well below market costs. Now, the AltaGas purchase of the generation rights was done completely in secret. If it had been an open process, how much more would another party have been willing to pay for that right to the electricity for the next 16 years at Sundance? How much more? We don't know. We'll never know.

Why was this deal facilitated so quickly? In October of 2001, when Enron was going down the tubes in the States, why was this deal done so quickly by this government? We'll never know.

We get some of the details through FOIP, and these are very embarrassing details. Unless, Mr. Chairman, we support this amendment A3 from the hon. member, those secret arrangements that this government makes will continue and there will be less and less information provided to the citizens – less and less information – and it's wrong. I think the hon. members across the way know it's wrong, but they're more interested in hiding the skeletons or making sure that the closet door doesn't open and the skeletons get out than they are of living up to the words from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who said, in conclusion – and I'm going to repeat this for all hon. members, and this is an esteemed member of the government caucus – “We are releasing this information in keeping with this government's policy of openness” and transparency. Those days are done unless we start improving this very bad bill by supporting amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it's really important that we set the record straight because after having listened to all that drivel, you'd almost think that somehow the government had control of the freedom of information commissioner. It's the commissioner that stops the clock, nobody else. It's the commissioner that does it. If that has any way of holding back information – I'm shocked to think that the member would think that, in fact, the government or the head of a public body could control the commissioner. It's the commissioner that stops the clock and starts the clock. That's what happens.

As far as hiding any information, not at all. What happens today, Mr. Chairman, is that when one of these comes before the commissioner and the commissioner is examining it, whether it's frivolous and vexatious and/or if it doesn't fit, the clock keeps on going. It could be maybe two weeks for the commissioner to make a decision. The clock is running. If the commissioner determines that it needs to proceed, then the time is getting very short. What usually happens in that case is that there's an extension requested of the commissioner. The extension is granted as a rule, in fact, depending on the amount of material that has to go through to answer the request. Maybe there doesn't need to be.

Mr. Chairman, there's another issue here. If the public body has to go through the whole exercise while the clock is running but not knowing whether at the end of the day the information that is being requested will be released under the order of the commissioner, the fact is that the staff are still doing this work. Since this act was implemented, it has cost the government over $59 million to administer – $59 million. We have collected about $536,000 in fees. Of course, they constantly complain about the fees, and they want it done for free. Well, Mr. Chairman, is it fair that we take tax dollars, hard-earned dollars, so that they can go on a fishing trip? I think not, Mr. Chairman.

So I would urge the members of the Assembly to vote this amendment down because, in fact, we do not control the commissioner. All this does is allow the commissioner to stop the clock.

11:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again and speak in support of amendment A3, proposed by the Member for Edmonton-McClung, that “Bill 20, Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, be amended by striking out section 7.” The processing time for FOIP requests is already very lengthy and drawn out. Rarely have we received a request within the stated timeline due to various reasons; for example, requests for clarification, negotiation over the fees, procedural requirements, et cetera.

I'll give you an example. I had a chance to get some information from FOIP a couple of months ago. It cost about $45. It was for wonderful people in my riding, the Allen Gray Continuing Care Centre. They asked me to find a copy of a contract made between the Capital health authority and the Allen Gray Continuing Care Centre. It took me a couple of months. We paid the money, and after two or three months what we received was five- or six-year-old statements. We asked them to give us the latest information about the contract, and after spending time and paying money, what we received were useless papers.

I know a couple of cases where the people tried to complain to the commissioner. Those cases have been there for years, and still they haven't any answer from the commissioner. I don't know. I really commend my colleague who proposed this amendment. If we carry on with something like whatever was in the data, this will be a bad bill. The people are already suffering from the FOIP system at the moment. There are so many people – I'll give you an example. They get the consultancy fee, like you mentioned, if it's less than $100,000, just even $5 less than $100,000, and they don't even need the paperwork. In my view it's corruption. How can we fix that if we don't get the proper details? We need the full information from this government, and this government failed to provide us with the full information.

This is the only way. If we get the FOIP, if we get the full details, then we can at least fight for the people who are fighting in the commission for a long, long time. In short, this change will result in even greater wait times for FOIP requests. The Official Opposition requests that this particular clause, therefore, be struck from this bill, and I request other members to support this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The Hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to speak to amendment A3 to Bill 20. I'm in favour of this amendment, and I just want to be short as well on this. One of the major problems and the dilemma here is the absence of information to the public. This is a public body, and if they're not accountable to the public and they can't have access to those things, it's very difficult to hold those people accountable and to know that they're really working in the best interests of whichever board they're on when, in fact, they can and will hide different things.

We have what we call in camera. They can participate in camera and then come out, and they have to give their decisions. It's very difficult, and we're having a problem in Alberta and in most democratic countries with the fact that the people are disengaged from government. They say that there's no point in being involved, that there's no difference that we can make. The reason why I feel they feel that way is because there is no power in the people to stop what is going on. They don't know what's happening. Many times the bills are passed or a decision is made, whether it's a seniors' home, a school board, or somewhere else, and because of this hidden information and the hidden agenda, they're not able to know what is going on.

It is critical. If we're going to remain a free society, we have to be an open society. We can't have secret deals being made behind closed doors and information being hidden on why they're really doing something. It's very upsetting to the public, and it just isn't in their best interests.

I hope that everybody's had enough time to think about this amendment. Maybe we'll have some more good comments to realize that this is a good amendment and that it is in the public interest that we strike section 7 and allow freedom of information to be accessed and be provided to the public in general. We need to remove many barriers because we've lost sight of what we're really trying to protect here, and that is private individuals from harm. So I hope that this House will accept this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm speaking in favour of amendment A3, which would strike out section 7. I find it disturbing, in fact, that the government, as secret as it already is, would in fact want to become more secret. The Speech from the Throne, I'll remind everyone, talked about Alberta wanting to become more transparent and accountable to all Albertans so they can have the answers to the questions that they asked. Clearly, when you're looking at this FOIP, again another amendment to it, this is quite the opposite. In fact, it becomes more clouded, more secretive.

The Member for Rocky Mountain House talked about: why should the public pay for the opposition to go on fishing expeditions to search for information? Well, I think that part of the opposition's job is to in fact filter out some of the corruption or some of the skeletons that are being used, you know, to find fault with the government. That is the opposition's job. We're not going fishing on the taxpayers' dollars like the Premier up to his lodge. We're fishing on behalf of Albertans for real information.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I'm talking about section 7, and I'll read it again just to familiarize everyone, including myself.

The processing of a request under section 7 . . . ceases when the head of a public body has made a request under subsection (1) and
(a) if the Commissioner authorizes the head of the public body to disregard the request, does not resume.

Now, the minister already spoke against this. He said that it's very unlikely that a commissioner would in fact tell the head of a public body to disregard a request. Well, you know, we've had several examples of perhaps delaying them. You don't have to address them quite in a timely fashion; you can get to them, but it's just a matter of when. Is it one year, one month, two years, two months, or even up to 15 years, as this bill proposes? I mean, 15 years to hide information from the public is, I think, a little bit ridiculous. At this point in time, basically, that could be four governments. At what point does the public have a right and deserve to know?

Again, these people who are elected are to represent the communities that they are elected in, and by not standing up to more secrecy in government, I don't think that you're doing your job for your community, that elected you to represent all Albertans, all opinions. However small a majority voted for you, it's in their best interest to ensure that, in fact, accountability and transparency continue to remain. With this section that we're trying to strike out, section 7, we would certainly not have that.

It's not housekeeping. The minister talked about it being administrative or housekeeping. Well, if that is in fact the case, if it's just administrative and housekeeping, then we wouldn't have a problem all unanimously agreeing to this particular piece, but I'm seeing that that is not going to be the case. They, in fact, do want this particular piece because, again, it remains in the best interests of the government to keep the public at bay. Of course, we realize that knowledge is power, and with that power you'll realize what exactly is going on here in this government.

That's one of the reasons why they didn't want to offer free library cards to everybody. That, in fact, would empower more people to have knowledge, to realize what's going on in government. They didn't want regular people, the people who couldn't afford to have a library card, to be able to have access and freedom of information because that's exactly what this bill prohibits: freedom of information. It was a denial of information. It was a two-pronged approach. They said to the public when it was first introduced, "This is for the protection of your information," but on the other prong, "It's for our secrecy and our protection because, in fact, we don't need everyone knowing our business." Some have given it another acronym beside freedom of information and privacy protection. I won't go there, I guess.

It does raise the concern about how much the public will tolerate before the backlash happens. I think we found out with regard to the third way, the approach to meddle with our health care system. The public were not going to stand for that particular piece. They came out. There were petitions. Thousands, tens of thousands petitioned.

Ms Evans: They did not.

Mr. Bonko: I've tabled over a thousand petition signatures in this House, and I know that other members did as well, so I think that we can add them up. There have been over 10,000 signatures, so I beg to differ on that then.

Again, the public needs to in fact get more engaged as to what exactly is happening with the government. A lot of people said that perhaps less and less people are voting because, in fact, it doesn't make a difference: "My one vote won't make a difference. My one vote won't ensure that changes do take place." Democratic reforms need to take place if we're going to have an effective government for all Albertans. Again, if you continue to put in processes that make it more restrictive, such as this particular FOIP, then we're never all going to be on the same page.

We talk about fixed election dates. We talk about everything for democratic renewal, except when we talk about that, we don't find it when we talk about FOIP. The freedom that everyone talks about, the transparency, the accountability are certainly not here when you have prohibitive bills, secretive bills such as this particular one. If the commissioner is a referee, then the public is put in the penalty box for however long he decides, but the government continues to skate with the puck. I'm saying that just because it's hockey season right now.

Right now I will say that I humbly seek unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 32(2) whereby if a division is triggered tonight, it will only take two minutes rather than the usual 10.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member for Edmonton-Calder, did you want to speak on the amendment again?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Chairman, upon reflection of this amendment A3, one thing that I did want to bring forward is that when we're looking at what the fundamental principles are of the privacy act in the first place, I just wanted to point out that, in fact, section 7 does not support some of the five fundamental principles that we have to the whole idea of FOIP.

For example, the first principle of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is to “allow any person a right of access to the records in the custody or under the control of a public body subject [only] to limited and specific exceptions.” Section 7, which we’re seeking to strike out allows some disregard of this and, in fact, strengthens and widens the scope of these limited and specific exceptions, so I find it to somehow block that first fundamental principle. It’s a contravention of that first fundamental principle, so that’s why I’m urging each and every one of the members here tonight to accept amendment A3.

The second fundamental principle of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is “to control the manner in which a public body may collect personal information from individual” Albertans, to control the use by the public body of that information, and “to control the disclosure by a public body of [such] information.” This second fundamental principle, Mr. Chair, in fact, is not seriously contravened by section 7, although if the commissioner does not authorize the head of the public body to disregard the request, does not resume until the commissioner advises the head of the public body of the commissioner’s decision, I would suggest that, at least, this does muddy the waters in regard to the second fundamental principle, so I do have some small problem with that.

The third fundamental principle of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act allows individuals to have the right to access information about themselves held by a public body. Section 7, with the commissioner authorizing of head of a public body to disregard a request, I believe is in fact causing some limitation on this third fundamental principle, so I do find that to be somewhat troubling. There are other sections as well that certainly do affect the third fundamental principle even more, to a much larger extent than this one.

The fifth fundamental principle of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act is to “provide for independent reviews of decisions made by public bodies under this [legislation] and the resolution of complaints.” This section 7, talking about the choice of a commissioner and how that takes place, could somehow, at least, weaken that fifth principle of the act.

Together, really, the best thing to do with section 7 is to simply eliminate it. I don’t think that it will in any way weaken the other elements of this bill that do have some merit, and in the spirit of compromise I would hope that everyone might support this amendment labelled A3.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: I just wanted to make reference to the hon. minister who talked about the commissioner, that the clock is ticking. But the one thing that I think he’s failed to mention is that the commissioner is bound by the legislation that this House is passing, so by passing this instead of striking section 7, we’re actually giving the commissioner the authority to continue to hide information from the public. It’s just one other point. I think it’s critical to realize that, yes, the commissioner might be looking at these things, but it is the legislation that we’re passing here, and the commissioner would probably be acting to protect the public body rather than the public interest. It is a concern, so once more I’d say that I hope that people will think hard on this and that this will be accepted by this House.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I would like to participate in the debate again on amendment A3. Now, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation informed the House that since this legislation was enacted in 1994, it has cost this government over $59 million to administer and that there was so little collected back in fees. I feel that half of that collected probably came from the Official Opposition, but I can’t accept that administrative fee of $59 million. I think there’s no way that it cost this government that much. It may have cost them that much in legal fees to hide and prevent the public from getting that information. Certainly, we know that they will go to any length and any expense to prevent citizens from getting access to their own information. We always have to look at the fees, and this government is using the fees as a barrier to citizens receiving the information. Now, certainly they will say, “Okay; we can have a waiver,” or “You can go to the commissioner and you can get a waiver.” That never happens for us.

Now, the whole issue of fees. There shouldn’t be any fees. We should take this bill and remember the word “freedom” that’s in it, freedom of information and protection of privacy.

Rev. Abbott: It has the root word of “free.”

Mr. MacDonald: And the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is absolutely right. The root word in there is “free.” The information should be made available free to the citizens. There shouldn’t be any costs involved in this at all.

Again, I just have to point out to all hon. members that if there is a $59 million cost to this legislation, to this government, show us. Show us. Provide documentation of that. I can’t accept that number. It is extraordinary. I just can’t accept that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I promise to be brief. I realize that it’s getting a little late.

Now, one comment, and it was briefly touched upon by my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner. The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation said that it’s really not us making the decision, that it’s basically the Privacy Commissioner making the decision, and that we’re not doing anything to change that. In that particular regard, I actually beg to differ. What we’re doing here is extending his or her ability to sit on their hands and not give a decision or not render a verdict, if you like, with respect to a particular FOIP request. As my colleague from Edmonton-Decore mentioned, it could take two months to two years or maybe even longer. The clock has totally stopped, and there is no recourse.

Whether, in fact, someone could do a judicial review to try to address this concern is a different story. I would have to say that requests for information that are examined to be disregarded or, you know, brought before the commissioner to say, “Can we please not honour that request” are not rare. As a matter of fact, it is becoming more the norm now that bodies that host information that members of the public or members of the opposition or members of the media, to that extent, ask for are going to the Privacy Commissioner saying, “Can we please disregard this? Is there a way we can not honour this?” and so on and so forth.

The overarching purpose of access to information legislation is to facilitate democracy. It’s basically to honour the requests because those who have nothing to hide hide nothing.

This particular amendment in section 7 is a stall tactic in my opinion. You can probably expand and extrapolate to a situation like the hon. Minister of Education, for example, always saying that it's not his immediate responsibility; it's that of the school boards. We argue that the hon. minister and his department have to fully empower the school boards so that they, in turn, can make decisions and can make funding allocations that are adequate and that are reasonable. The school boards come back and say, "We don't have adequate funding, and we don't have the resources necessary," and they're faced with situations where they're forced to lay off staff or, you know, close schools or increase class sizes, or they might not be able to offer necessary programs like school lunches and so on. So is it the minister who's at fault or is it the school board or is it a mixture of both? That is the question. Similarly, is it the commissioner or is the public body trying to disregard the request or is it both? So between the two of them we need to definitely limit the ability of any one person or any agency or any organization to not honour a request and not to honour it in a timely fashion.

Citizens deserve access to information and more so in a timely fashion. They need to know whether their request is moving forward or whether it is going to be disregarded or denied, and they need to know as soon as possible. If we're talking an extension from a month to two months, like 30 days to 60, I can live with that, but if we're saying from 30 days to indefinite, to open ended, then I find it a hard pill to swallow. It's not only politicians and not only, you know, media where, in fact, those requests are looked upon by the government as a nuisance or as a waste of time. It is not a waste of time.

We talked about the fees, and we talked about how restrictive and exaggerated those fees are. I would hate to think that the government is looking at fees as a revenue stream. For example, when they charge for photocopying and they charge you something like 25 or 30 cents a page, in fact they could simply e-mail it, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore was saying. You know, do it for free and save a tree. You're not wasting time, and you're not wasting anybody's money or resources, and it's environmentally friendly. Do it for free. Or if the government absolutely has to print it on paper, let's take that CD or that disk and go to a place like Staples Business Depot, and they do it there for 4 to 5 cents. So why look at it as a revenue stream?

I am not optimistic – and that's really bad – because I know what the government is going to do. I'm hoping that when we trigger the division, some of the hon. members across the way are going to speak their minds and are going to tell the House what their conscience dictates.

An Hon. Member: And they should.

Mr. Elsalhy: And they should because this amendment is a useful amendment to try to fix something that is broken, and it's basically saving the patient without having to amputate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 36 Securities Transfer Act (continued)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I really do appreciate the assistance of the chair with respect to an earlier difficulty I had on producing some documents, which were, in fact, the amendments that I would now like to move. I would like to move amendments to Bill 36, Securities Transfer Act, that are distributed in the House.

Mr. Chairman, I noted earlier that these amendments were coming forward. Stakeholders have clearly indicated that uniformity is one of the most important objectives of this type of legislation, and the amendments are necessary to maximize the uniformity. There are six House amendments required to Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act, to ensure uniformity among the common law provinces. None of these amendments reflect any change in the objectives or purpose of Bill 36. The amendments reflect ongoing efforts by interprovincial working groups that developed the Securities Transfer Act to clarify the meaning and operation of the provisions.

It should be noted that the interprovincial working group continued to work to ensure such uniformity even after the introduction of the Securities Transfer Act in Ontario on December 1, 2005. It should also be noted that Ontario is expected to make a number of amendments to their bill to ensure that it will be uniform with Bill 36 and a similar bill anticipated shortly in British Columbia.

These amendments reflect revised wording developed in consultation with members of the interprovincial working group. The first two amendments, Mr. Chairman, amend section 44. Subsection (2) is amended by adding "other than the conflict of law rules" after "the law." The wording in subsection (5) is revised. The third amends section 57(2) by adding "against the issuer" after "enforceable."

The last three amendments deal with changes that are required to the Personal Property Security Act. As you would recall, Mr. Chairman, implementation of the Securities Transfer Act required consequential changes to other provincial acts, including the Personal Property Security Act. So the fourth amendment amends section 108(6) by revising the wording in proposed section 7.1(4)(a). This change improves clarity by making the provision accord with a parallel provision in the Securities Transfer Act, section 45(2)(a). The fifth amends section 108(7) by replacing “8(1) is” with “8(1) and (2) are.” The final amendment amends section 108(17) in the proposed section 24.1(2) by removing “A” and replacing it with “Subject to section 19, a.” These last two amendments are required to make the provisions uniform between the British Columbia and Alberta acts. The personal property security acts in British Columbia and Alberta are very similar; Ontario’s is somewhat different.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, this legislation recognizes and supports current business practices and codifies them in a uniform statute. It will then enable further improvements to the system and a further reduction of risk and cost, which benefits everyone.

I hope that these comments are helpful in clarifying the issues before the Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Listening to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky discuss the word “is” versus the word “are” reminded me of a certain politician in front of a grand jury explaining that his answer would depend on what the definition of the word “is” is.

In all seriousness, as it relates to these very important amendments to this very important piece of legislation, I would, first of all, like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for inviting me to his office this afternoon and taking the time to explain these amendments to me in person. I found that to be most helpful. It doesn’t preclude a couple of questions, however, and I would like to run through those if I could. The first one, as the Member from Grande Prairie-Smoky outlined, is to add the wording “other than the conflict of law rules” after the words “the law.” I’m wondering if there’s any possibility of having some clarification for what exactly “conflict of law rules” means. I’m not a securities lawyer – I’ve mentioned that a couple of times as we have gone through debate on this bill – but it’s interesting because I look at that, and I don’t fully understand the meaning of “conflict of law rules.” So that would be the first question on that particular one.

Now, the next part, where we talk about changing to the jurisdiction instead of “the law” – that’s section 44(5)(c), (d), and (e) – the question I have there, I suppose, is if the concern was to identify jurisdictions as opposed to the laws of those jurisdictions, is it the laws that are different in the various jurisdictions, or is it the enforcement of the laws that is different in the jurisdictions, and is that the reason for wanting that clarification? I’m not sure if the member will have that answer or not, but that was the question that came to my mind.

I think it speaks, actually, to a comment that the member made in his remarks earlier this evening, when he pointed out that in second reading I had discussed the fact that I was a little surprised that it had taken us this long to get to this point with these amendments. I’ve met with briefing staff from the ministry and with the lawyer who spent about eight years of his life working on this, so I understand the complications involved, and I understand the details. Frankly, I’m glad that I didn’t have to devote that much of my life to this bill; nevertheless, I was a little surprised that it took us this long to get here.

The Member from Grande Prairie-Smoky commented on the fact that having said that, I also alluded to a reference that was made in the Ontario Legislature when they were debating their similar bill, and I wondered whether or not we should perhaps wait and see the results and the ramifications of how that bill works out before we proceeded with ours. I think the fact that we have already six amendments in front of this House before the bill has been passed, amendments that are coming from the government side, perhaps speaks exactly to my concern there; that is, that if there are loopholes in legislation that we’re mirroring in other provinces, it would almost appear to me as if we’re just going to go down the same path and mirror the loopholes or the mistakes that other provinces are making as well.

In fact, when I visited with the hon. member this afternoon, one of the things we discussed is that some of these amendments are coming from the Ontario policy writers as they were doing French translation. It turned out that some of the translation just doesn’t make sense in French, quite frankly, so these changes had to be made here in order that when the bill is translated into French, it will make sense in another language. I guess that that was really what I was speaking to the other night when I talked about whether or not we should be waiting and seeing the ramifications of that bill in Ontario because now we’re just simply making the same mistakes that Ontario presumably would have made as well.

Further to that point, then, on the one hand I suppose it’s good that we make these amendments here and now as opposed to not seeing them for perhaps another year in this House. That would mean we would have a piece of legislation on the books that would have some flaws. I’m going to guess that they’re not serious flaws but, nevertheless, flaws just the same, so it’s good that we catch them now. It does I suppose cause one to wonder how many other glitches like that might be in the legislation even if we pass these six amendments. That begs the question for me of: what steps would the government be planning to take to protect investors from the results of us not catching other mistakes like this that are in the legislation as it’s currently written? If there are six here that almost got past us and were caught either here in Alberta by the policy writers or in Ontario by their policy writers, what are the chances that there may be others in here that we’ve not picked up on yet, and what might the ramifications of that be to investors in Alberta and to the Alberta taxpayer, ultimately, if it’s found that somehow, perhaps, the ministry might be liable for not having caught those?

The one that refers to section C, 108(6)(a), is one of the three that is amending as a consequence the Personal Property Security Act. I guess my question there was simply – again, we’re talking about jurisdictions – whether or not we can have confidence that Albertans investing in other jurisdictions would be protected. I know that that is part of what we’re trying to achieve by all of this. I’m going to assume that by making this amendment, that will do that.

Now, another concern that I have – and I mentioned it to the hon. member this afternoon. It’s certainly not that I’m putting blame on him, but it does cause me concern. We’ve seen it a couple of times in this House recently. We saw it earlier this evening when we were dealing with the private bills. In the actual bill, Bill 36, the Securities Transfer Act, we have sections that are describing the policy that’s being made, and then on the opposite page it describes what’s being changed or what’s being amended. I think it’s always a good thing when the legislation that’s being amended is listed in the bill that’s published.

In the case of myself, I have access to the original bill. It’s much easier for me to source out that information. But for Albertans that are looking for this information, particularly today when we have a situation where amendments are coming forward, and they're trying to reference what that might mean, it causes me some concern any time we're amending something that's not actually published along with the bill. If I were an investor out there, you know – and believe it or not, there are investors out there that follow quite carefully the words that we speak in this House – and I were looking at these amendments tonight, well, first of all I'm not even sure that the amendments would show up on the Internet if they were looking for them. But if they did, they wouldn't necessarily have ready access to the sections that are being amended. So that always causes me some concern.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a point of order.

Point of Order Amendments to Bills

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate your indulgence. I have been listening with interest to the hon. member and certainly to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky in regard to this government amendment to Bill 36. I cite 13(2) and also Beauchesne 697(3), "An amendment should relate to a specific clause in a bill and not to two or more clauses."

This amendment has been described in debate as mere housekeeping, and I have not heard from the hon. member guiding Bill 36 through the Legislative Assembly the reason why all these amendments from different sections of the proposed legislation are included in one amendment. An explanation to these changes should be incorporated into his justification for this being one amendment and not divided into six amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the point of order? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To address the issues from our hon. members opposite, initially I do have to indicate the conflict of law rules, and that particular phrase is one of the phrases under question here in at least two of the amendments that are before us. In Bill 36 itself, with the conflict of law rules that are being discussed in this particular case, to get a proper legal definition of that phrase, I would have to resort to legal counsel. I would certainly do that and give the member the information at the first opportunity.

The question around: why would we not wait to see how well the Uniform Securities Transfer Act, that's been introduced in Ontario, works?

11:50

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we have a point of order on the floor. Are you speaking to the point of order?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I was going to get to the point of order, but perhaps I'm straying here, and I should address it first. Thank you.

To deal with the point of order, the question has been asked: why is this one amendment and not initially five? In fact, there could be as many as six. Mr. Chairman, the amendments are brought together in this particular case because there is no intent in any of this to change either the subject of the amending bill or any of the content other than housekeeping wording, and that would be the support I would have for including these amendments in a single amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the point of order?

Hon. members, first, at the outset the citation was from a wrong perspective. Nonetheless, I think that the issue is valid.

Hon. members, you have been around in this Assembly for a very, very long time. This is not the first time that we've had amendments that encompass more than one section of the bill. We have done that. However, if there is any hesitation, there is no difficulty in having a separate vote on every section. So until such point in time we shall deal with this as amendment A1. When we come to the vote, if there is any hesitation and if there is a desire to break it down into five or six votes, the chair will have no problem doing so. As a general practice we have done this, and from both sides of the House amendments have come forward that include more than one section.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, you may proceed with your remarks.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I believe that I was finishing up on the amendment that deals with section 108(6). We were talking about the amendments that are being made consequentially to the Personal Property Security Act, and I mentioned the fact that hopefully Albertans will be protected if, in fact, they're investing in other jurisdictions.

Moving to the next one, section 8(1) and 8(2), where subsection (2) is not printed in the bill. I was commenting on the fact that it causes me concern any time that we don't have that information printed in the bill. My concern was for people outside of this Assembly who may not necessarily have access readily to information that we in this Assembly have.

Then moving to section 108(17), this is actually the last of the six amendments that are being discussed. The particular amendment here pertains to security interest in investment property, Mr. Chairman. What we're doing is referring to section 19, which isn't printed in the bill as it's before the House today either. So, again, the same comment in terms of not having all of the information readily visible for people outside of this Assembly, but because it refers particularly to security interest in investment property, I'd just like to point out that in the past we have had some questions and some concerns around undivided interests in land.

Both B.C. and Saskatchewan, actually, for some reason seem to take a harder line with companies that sell undivided interests in land, yet Alberta seems to have been somewhat more lax in that regard. It gets back to my concern that I've expressed previously about whether or not, in fact, we have adequate enforcement. So this is a section that I would be watching closely, assuming that these amendments are passed, as we have an opportunity to monitor the ramifications of this bill once it's passed.

Those were the comments that I had to make to the amendment specifically, and I'll cede the floor to anybody else who may wish to comment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the amendment?

Are you ready for the vote? Hon. members, is it okay, then, to have a vote on the entire amendment as amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Any further debate on the bill itself? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly

I wanted to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for the clarifications that he offered in his opening remarks this evening as we led off debate of this bill in committee, particularly the question around the regulatory savings, the clarification as to the potentially $140 million being across the country as opposed to specific to Ontario. I've already addressed the reasons why I talked about perhaps waiting to see how things worked out in Ontario as opposed to proceeding with the bill right away.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'm prepared to support this bill as amended, and I thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for his co-operation today and as this bill has moved through the House. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 36 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 37
Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer)
Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 37, Miscellaneous (Provincial Treasurer) Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I'd like to address a couple of the issues that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford raised.

Bill 37 is a housekeeping act that will allow changes in legislation with references to the "Provincial Treasurer" to be replaced with "Minister of Finance" or "Minister responsible." There's nothing out of the ordinary in that. It's updating legislation that needs to be updated to align approximately 80 acts with current titles and responsibilities of the Minister of Finance and program ministers.

In second reading the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford seemed to be of the understanding that finance and revenue became one ministry in 2001 and questioned the length of time it has taken to make these changes. I'd just like to clarify that they were reorganized in November of 2004, and the length of time that it has taken to make these amendments has not to my knowledge affected how any financial transactions were handled.

He also asked why we were making amendments to the existing Fuel Tax Act when a new one is currently before the Legislature and will likely be passed. While it's true that the new Fuel Tax Act will likely be passed, I think the hon. member would have also made a comment about the process if the government had made the assumption that any legislation would be passed without going through the proper process. All changes were grouped in Bill 37 for ease of review and implementation, and it simplified the legislative process.

There was also a reference to the legislation referring to AGT.

This will come forward as Bill 43, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, which now appears on the Order Paper.

Bill 37 is clearly housekeeping, Mr. Chairman. I hope these comments are helpful in clarifying the issues which have been raised to date.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for his clarification this evening. I don't see any particular point, given the late hour, to reiterating the comments that I made in second reading. I'm quite happy with the explanation that was offered this evening and am prepared to support this bill. As the minister says, it is simply a housekeeping bill. Although some have encouraged me to ask for an individual vote on each of the 80 acts that are being amended, I'm certainly not going to do that tonight.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I support this bill and look forward to hopefully going home pretty soon. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess I just want to make the short point that we seem to have a lot of housecleaning bills that go through, and it takes up a fair amount of time. I don't want to do that late in the evening.

Mr. Bonko: This is still early.

Mr. Hinman: Okay. We'll go then.

I don't believe I was around when they changed it from the Provincial Treasurer to the Minister of Finance, so the question has to be asked: why do we change ministers and the names of ministers so often? It just seems like an enormous amount of extra work that's being put into things. Provincial Treasurer served us for many years. I still have people calling and asking: why do we write the cheques now to the Minister of Finance when it was the Provincial Treasurer for, you know, I believe the last hundred years maybe? It just seems like too often we do things without good reason. I just want to get on the record that perhaps we don't need to be changing the ministers or portfolios and everything every time because we end up doing an enormous amount of so-called housecleaning when we had things in order.

Earlier today we were talking to the – boy, I'm going to have to get to remember this long handle because the short one is so much easier – Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. I don't see the efficiency in doing this, and I don't see the efficiency that we had by breaking up other ministries to form the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

With that, I'm disappointed that we have to pass such amendments but understand the necessity now because of what we've done in the past. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 37 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 38

Livestock Identification and Commerce Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act. As stated previously in the House, this legislation is the consolidation and revision of three other acts. It's updating and modernizing legislation so that it can adequately regulate the day-to-day commercial transactions of the livestock industry. The intent of the proposed legislation is to facilitate fair commerce, protect personal property, and promote the integrity of marketing within the livestock industry.

I wish to take a minute to bring the House's attention to the extensive industry involvement in developing this bill. It's a product of many, many, many hours of deliberation, several discussion papers, numerous workshops with stakeholders, extensive feedback from the industry, and fine-tuning to achieve an agreement, Mr. Chairman. In fact, it took more than 30 months of consultation to ensure that the goals of all sectors of the livestock industry were fully considered and accommodated where possible.

Livestock industry participants are generally known for their independent spirit and strong will to succeed. I applaud them for their perseverance in assisting us to develop this bill, and I thank them for their compromises as they respected the goals of other associations also involved in livestock identification and commerce. I know that they are proud of this product because I've been receiving phone calls from the industry asking me if I need any help to make this bill move through the House.

I'd like to now address the comments and questions that a few hon. members raised during second reading of the bill. To begin, I would like to thank the hon. members for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Calgary-Varsity, and Cardston-Taber-Warner for their questions and support of Bill 38.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had a question about how this bill will impact the family farm. It is a complex set of provisions. As you can see from the part titles in the bill, the legislation addresses brands, livestock transactions, transportation, livestock inspection, dealing in livestock and livestock products, and an assurance fund system. All producers can draw upon these modernized provisions. Small-scale producers in particular will appreciate the effort to make the legislation easier to understand.

Going through the sections, we can see where small-scale producers or operators of these smaller operations will be impacted in a very positive way. Again, Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to use the term "family farm" because the majority of the farms in Alberta are family farms whether they are incorporated or not. Small and large operations will benefit from the changes that we're making and the consolidation of these acts. I could speak at length about the positive impacts, but briefly I can assure the member opposite that Bill 38 will have a positive impact on the small operations as well as the large operations.

The hon. member asked about the impact on producers of organic products. Bill 38 addresses sales transactions and does not differentiate between organic and nonorganic.

He also questioned if the proposed section 81, which relates to the time limit for prosecution, provides sufficient time. In response, the standard two-year period prescribed in Bill 38 aligns with the current provision in the Brand Act and increases the one-year period in the current Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act. We're bringing them all up to the same standard, which is the standard of two years.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also requested clarification on the Livestock Patrons Claims Review Tribunal. Of note, this is not a new tribunal that Bill 38 creates; it exists today. The members of the tribunal are appointed in accordance with section 25 of the Livestock Patrons Claims Review Tribunal regulation pursuant to the Livestock and Livestock Products Act. In accordance with the regulation, the tribunal is composed of the following members: one member appointed by the Alberta Auction Markets Association, one member appointed by the Alberta Beef Producers, one member appointed by the Alberta Cattle Feeders Association, one member appointed by the Feeder Associations of Alberta, one member appointed by the Alberta Livestock Dealers and Order Buyers Association, one member appointed by the Western Stock Growers' Association, and members appointed by other designated associations.

The member requested an example of a delegated authority under the act in respect to carrying out a power, duty, or function under the act. As explained in the news release for Bill 38, Alberta's livestock identification system is administered by Livestock Identification Services Ltd. It is a not-for-profit company established in 1998 as the delegated authority for livestock identification legislation. It is accountable to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and is governed by a board of directors comprising industry representatives from various Alberta cattle and horse associations. Of note to all members, section 90 of Bill 38 requires the annual report of a delegated authority to be a statutory tableting.

Finally, the member questioned the provisions related to poultry that are detailed at section 100 of Bill 38. These provisions relate to the current Livestock and Livestock Products Act, which is consequentially amended by Bill 38, where currently a regulation addressing poultry exists under the Livestock and Livestock Products Act. This regulation will continue as it does today. Bill 38 does not impact the current regulatory provisions relating to poultry.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar when he explained to all members that the act deals in industry and is not related to BSE, food safety, or the environment. This statement addresses the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's questions regarding BSE, chronic wasting disease, and bovine tuberculosis. Livestock diseases are addressed in the Livestock Diseases Act and not in Bill 38. Bill 38 deals with the inspection process as it relates to determining ownership, not health of the animal. Neither does Bill 38 deal with recommendations relating to the CAIS program.

To the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I appreciated your recognition of the use of modern forms of identification beyond the historic method of branding. Bill 38 broadens the types of identifiers that can be used to identify livestock to include identification devices used under other industry programs such as the Canadian Cattle Identification Agency tags. The member opposite questioned the application of a number brand on the opposite side of the animal from the side to which they apply the registered brand. I believe that he is referring to an age brand as defined in section 3(2)(a). Bill 38 standardizes this practice for producers.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I've responded to all of the relevant questions raised during second reading. I would like to thank all the hon. members for their support and questions related to this bill and urge all members of the Assembly to stand with the livestock industry, who have put so much effort into this bill, and give Bill 38 their full support.

Thank you, hon. members.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate those answers from the hon. minister, but certainly when we were discussing this bill in second reading, the hon. minister left the impression in this House that this side was unwilling to meet with him. That's not correct. I have enough to do without trying to keep up to the hon. minister's international travel schedule, and whenever meetings are set up and then they're postponed, there's absolutely nothing I can do about that. Those meetings are set up and postponed because of the department and the minister's travel arrangements, not mine.

Now, we have to recognize the importance of this bill. Again, Mr. Chairman, we have to look at the budget for this year and recognize that overall Alberta's farm cash receipts were down 1.7 per cent in 2005, a decline in crop receipts of 11 per cent and program payments of 22 per cent. However, this was outweighed by the improvement in livestock receipts of 12 per cent. When we look at the border reopening to cattle, we have to recognize – and we said this earlier in the Assembly this evening – that much has to be done. Certainly, Bill 38, when you look at it, at first glance you would think that this is an ideal piece of legislation when we think that the province is toughening cattle sale rules.

Now, we asked, and certainly the minister has informed the House that there was an extensive consultation process and a review of this legislation completed before the final draft was made. We have the bill introduced in the Assembly, and now, of course, we're at committee.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at Bill 38, we see many key changes. One of the key changes is that bills of sale have been standardized and now have mandatory content while still allowing sellers and dealers of cattle and horses to customize the forms to meet the needs of each market. When we look at the security interest in the lien declaration section of the new act, it makes it mandatory that sellers disclose any other owner or part owner of their animals. Now, as I understand it, multiple owners of an animal became quite an issue when Bonnett feeders of Ponoka, Alberta, was placed under bankruptcy protection. Again, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, both banks and producers claimed to have ownership, title, or stakes, whatever you want to call it, in the feedlot animals while not knowing that the other parties also claimed ownership.

This gets me to this point in this debate on Bill 38, and that's the consultation process. I understand from correspondence, certainly, that the banks have been meeting with members of the department. In fact, late in February the Canadian Bankers Association met with the Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in regard to Bill 38. I don't know what stage the legislation was at. Perhaps the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar can also comment on this. Perhaps it's not in his constituency, but I have seen the sign in my travels through rural Alberta, which are quite extensive these days because a lot of people are getting more and more and more uncomfortable with the direction that this government is going in. I saw a handmade sign. I didn't get that close to it. It wasn't much more than three-eighths press-board, but it was a four by eight sheet, and it had CIBC written on it. The letters were vertical, and in smaller print was: can impound beef cattle. I'm sure that's not the sort of image that the Canadian Bankers Association have in mind when they deal with rural Albertans. We have to be cognizant and we also have to be respectful of their view.

I think that the Canadian Bankers Association makes some very good points here, which hopefully will be considered. The Canadian Bankers Association has expressed an objection to section 18, and this is the statutory bar to conversion. Section 18(3) extends protection to agents of the seller. Section 18, which is new, the statutory bar to conversion, protects cattle buyers by limiting the ability of creditors to collect from the current owner. An example of that would be paying twice for the cattle. In a typical cattle sale, of course, cattle are trucked to a large packer, who purchases sometimes 40 truckloads of cattle per day. Payment is due within two days, so the buyer is typically unable to check the liens. I could be corrected on this. I think we're making a separate arrangement for the big packers. [interjection] They don't have seven days to square up? It is two days?

Mr. Horner: It's all the same.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. It's all the same. I appreciate that from the hon. minister.

If we were to compare this to the buying and selling of a used car, the buyer checks for liens before purchase. This can't be done with cattle as there is no mechanism to search cattle by serial number or VIN number. I think the minister is working on that very diligently, and there will be. There is in some cases but not in all cases.

The cattle industry, as we know, relies extensively on lending and borrowing. The Canadian Bankers Association's concerns: the lending institutions currently have the ability to collect monies owed by the seller from the future owner of the cattle. Lending institutions will lose this ability in Bill 38. This change may allow auction marts to not take the task of evaluating the risk as seriously as maybe they should. The agent for a seller or a buyer, such as an auction mart, is well positioned to evaluate title or security interests in cattle. For example, they can get to know their regular clients and in some cases only search or assess security risks from unknown clients.

Now, banks have not used their ability – and I can imagine that they would have a significant number of resources at their disposal – to sue future owners of cattle for lost funds. However, the banks, I think, are correct when they argue that the ability to sue provides a safety valve which keeps buyers and agents conducting due diligence in checking for security interests. These changes will have two effects, Mr. Chairman. First, these changes could effectively stop farmers from getting credit for livestock as banks will not be able to collect on their collateral. This will impact small producers significantly. Also, this will increase the cost of borrowing for farmers as it increases the risk associated with lending money to farmers and to ranchers.

The minister is shaking his head. He can get on the record and explain his position.

The bankers are proposing two solutions. The first is that the bankers propose repealing section 18(3) and substituting a section which requires auction marts to perform due diligence in checking for security interests. Two, when an auction mart is the financier of cattle, the auction mart and seller should be considered associated or not at arm's length. I would remind the hon. minister to have a look at section 1, the definitions. As such, the statutory bar to conversion would not apply.

Now, the statutory bar to conversion, Mr. Chairman, provides protection to buyers who purchase large numbers of cattle, mainly the big three meat-packing plants. They argue, as I understand it, that they need this protection because it is not feasible to check every animal. Again, we're making rules here and laws that may be in the interests of the big packers, but are they necessarily in the interests of the smaller producers?

I think that the minister should consider this from the Canadian Bankers Association for this reason and this reason alone: 90 per cent of the cattle traded in Alberta, as I understand it, are bought with some kind of a loan. I think we should consider the merit of the argument from the Canadian Bankers Association. Again, how does the minister plan to resolve the legitimate concerns of the Canadian Bankers Association? Does the minister have any intentions at this time to amend the bill to include these concerns and these suggestions? Again, if the consultation process was so thorough, as we're led to believe, why weren't these concerns addressed prior to bringing Bill 38 to the Legislative Assembly?

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I certainly would like to announce that I expect an answer from the minister before we proceed any further with this legislation at this time, before it moves from committee to third reading. I think we need to toughen the cattle sale rules. But whose interests are being served here and why?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few more details that I guess I want to go over on Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act. I appreciate the minister and those people that have worked, as he says, for years to try and bring three bills into one and the efficiency of it. Yet we still seem to have some questions in areas: what we're going to bring together and the identification and the importance of that. Especially with the outbreak of BSE and the requirement around the world to identify livestock, I think that we've definitely made some major moves in the right direction. It will benefit the producers of Alberta in the long term as we're able to track the animals and to identify problems if they do arise in whatever area it comes under.

When you turn to page 56 in Bill 38, it's talking about the regulation of prescribed livestock and prescribed livestock products. It's going on there, referring to the poultry industry, but under regulation 1(1)(d) it says here that the minister may make regulations "respecting the production, grading, packing, shipping, transporting, advertising and sale of honey that is produced in Alberta for sale in Alberta." Talking about the commerce, one of the problems that seems to have arisen out of BSE and those areas – and I know, as he says, that we just have so many acts under the minister of agriculture that it's confusing and hard to keep track of all of them, yet we've thrown in, like I say, the production of honey there.

I guess my question is in regard to farm gate sales. It seems like it's still being a major problem in that for many agricultural products, even though the producer is the closest to the animal and knows what's going on – and I feel like the safest sale often is at a farm gate – that commerce act is being prohibited in many areas.

On page 55, section 99, just to read some of the different areas that still need to come together:

The Minister may, by giving notice in writing to the licensee, cancel a licence if the Minister is satisfied that the licensee has contravened or permitted the contravention of any provision of this Act, the Wildlife Act, the Meat Inspection Act, the Meat Inspection Act (Canada), the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act . . . which is what's being revised in here,

. . . the Livestock and Livestock Products Act, the Livestock Diseases Act, the Animal Protection Act or any regulations under any of those Acts.

So while we're going through the housecleaning and trying to put these things together, I guess I would continue to urge the government to try and simplify and bring more things under one act and to make it more understandable to producers. If we're to follow, I guess, the lead in Europe, we find that there are many small farms that are popping up with organic, natural production in those areas and wanting to get more into the commerce of those products. I would hope that we'll see further reduction and that the government will look at – well, I guess I've got to go back because I always want to use that acronym, and it's been prohibited – Restructuring and Government Efficiency, that we need to be able to allow the production and the selling of farm products and allow these small producers to get their little glitch in the market and not go through so many rules and regulations at the farm gates.

But I appreciate the intent of this bill. It still seems like it's long and hard to handle, but hopefully we can continue to reduce it and the Department of Restructuring and Government Efficiency will be able to reduce the amount of red tape, which is one of its goals. We look forward to seeing more improvements on that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 38 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Hon. Government House Leader, do I hear that we need to go to Bill 20?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm not aware of anyone's wishes to go to Bill 20 right now, in response to your question, hon. chair.

Nonetheless, I would like to propose that the Committee of the Whole now rise and report bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, Pr. 3, 36, 37, and 38 and progress on Bill 20 and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

12:30

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill Pr. 1, Bill 37, Bill 38. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill Pr. 2, Bill Pr. 3, Bill 36. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it has been a very, I'd say, engaging evening. There was the odd insouciant moment, but on the basis of the progress made, I would suggest and move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. today.

[Motion carried; at 12:32 a.m. on Wednesday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 10, 2006 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 06/05/10
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce six individuals from my Calgary office. Now, these individuals help make my life at work a lot easier and safer. They are Rich Jones, Lea Roberts, Joyce Austin, Jack Davies, Cal Lawinger, and Jim Law. Rich runs the Calgary office. Joyce and Lea keep everything on track and me on time, which is no small feat, and they always seem to do it with a big smile. Jack and Cal provide me with the best level of security possible, and Jim tries to keep me from getting myself in trouble with the media, which would work better if I were better about taking his advice. I've been fortunate to have all these people with me for a number of years. I think some of them have been around longer, when my hair was a different colour. I want to thank them for everything they do. The dedication they bring to their jobs helps me do mine, and I'm so pleased they could be with us today. I would ask all members of the Legislative Assembly to join me in giving them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to introduce through you to the Assembly various members of your staff who have been instrumental in the development of a project called Virtual Visit to the Alberta Legislature, which I was so thankful to have you join me at launching this morning in our Legislature rotunda. These individuals are Dr. David McNeil, our clerk of the Legislative Assembly; Rhonda Sorensen, communications co-ordinator and chair for LAO and the Virtual Visit committee – Rhonda will receive an extraspecial round of applause because it's also her birthday; Kerri Button, head of visitor services; Colleen Cameron, visitor services administrator; Tim Francis, our tour guide; Val Footz, manager of library operations; and Makoto Ohki, web and application analyst.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take a moment to introduce certain members of my staff from Alberta Education who were deeply involved in the development of this important learning tool, which, as most members here would know, will allow people around the world to do a virtual visit of our Legislature building in all its beauty. My members of staff include Louise Bentley, director of online development; David Bryce, conceptual design co-ordinator and vital project lead, along with his wife, Charlene, and two daughters Chantelle and Brittany; Kaye Steward, our project co-ordinator; and Karl Muller, instructional design consultant.

Joining them today is another instrumental player in the project of the Virtual Visit, and that is Ryan Anderson, the public relations manager for Fuel Industries. All of these good folks are in your gallery or elsewhere. I would ask members of your staff who were involved and members of my staff to now please rise and receive our deepest thanks and our sincere gratitude for their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three of the 1,914 very professional Sustainable Resource Development staff that work in this province. First of all is Dave Ferrier. He is the provincial compliance adviser with our fish and wildlife division. He has been both with the fish and wildlife department of our department as well as a park ranger in the southern parts of our province.

Our second guest is Todd Letwin, and he is the head of the provincial compliance and enforcement programs in our lands division. I am proud to say that Todd has worked in the area of public land management for over 15 years, so he brings a lot of experience.

Our third and final guest is Kimberly Lougheed-Kain, a facilitator in field logistics in our fish and wildlife division. It's important to note, Mr. Speaker, that Kim is also the daughter of a very honourable and respected member of our caucus, of this government, the Member for Strathcona.

Our guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly members of my Aboriginal Youth Advisory Committee. This committee shares youth issues and perspectives with myself and, in fact, participated in planning initiatives with other ministries. This group advises me as the minister dealing with aboriginal youth issues, but they also provide a very unique perspective to make sure we address some of the concerns. They are the fastest growing population in Canada. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they stand as I name them: Myron Wolf Child, from the Blood First Nation; Danielle Cardinal, from Elizabeth Métis settlement; Amanda L'Hirondelle, of Métis Nation of Alberta; Terra Haugen, from the Métis Nation of Alberta; Fernando Didzena, from Dene Tha' of Assumption. Accompanying them today are from my staff Cynthia Dunningan, Nicole Hetu, and Gilman Cardinal. I'd ask that this Assembly give them a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe that my group is in the gallery this afternoon, but with your indulgence I would like to introduce them into Hansard so that everyone knows that the 46 visitors from the Sturgeon Heights school in my constituency in St. Albert were in the Legislature today and touring through, accompanied by teachers and parent helpers Mrs. Cindy Hamilton, Mrs. Tracy Ayotte, Mrs. Trish Lema, Mrs. Elaine Schafers, and Mr. Perry Kozma. I did have the opportunity to speak with these students, and they are some of Alberta's bright lights for our future.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly students from a terrific school in my constituency, the school of Sherwood. There are 34 visitors, including three adults, Miss Mellick, Mr. Samchuck, and their teacher's assistant, Ms Connelly. I believe they're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm reception of all MLAs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 28 visitors from the Blackie school in my constituency.

An Hon. Member: Blackie.

Mr. Groeneveld: You bet: Blackie. I would like to say, as most do, that these are 18 of the best and brightest students. However, although they are an extremely bright bunch of students, they are also a rambunctious crew, which one would expect from grade 6 students. That's just what makes them great. Along with their teacher, Margaret Speelman, who has come here for four or five years now, I would like to introduce the parents: Lil Gillanders, Maggie Hooper, Shelley Randle, Vince Miller, Kari Eggi, Dave Kormos, Cheryl Brown, Ed Palmer, and a name I can pronounce, Glen Groeneveld, my nephew. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure today that I introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the Member for Banff-Cochrane's rent-a-family. Her better half, Byron, son Josh, daughter Ashley are here to celebrate her special day, and at this time I would like them to stand in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of all of us.

The Speaker: If the hon. members did not get the subtle hint from the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, today is happy birthday for the hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members my son Mark Prins. He's graduating tomorrow from the University of Calgary Faculty of Medicine. He has been the recipient of many scholarships, including the rural physicians action plan scholarship for the last couple of years. He'll be moving from Calgary into a residency program, training for a family medicine practice, intending to practise somewhere in a small town, rural Alberta community. With him are my wife, Pauline, and my daughter Julia Vanderveen. I'd like him to stand in the public gallery and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My honour today to introduce eight leaders from Calgary working with the vital issues of persons with developmental disabilities. They are frustrated and discouraged by the lack of support for dignified living and care for persons with disabilities, and they would like to see adequate funding they can count on. They are Bruce Howell, from outreach services, human resources, Calgary Scope Society; Ryan Geake, Calgary Scope Society; Judy Coe, with the Southern Alberta Community Living Association from Lethbridge; Shelley Murdoch, Calgary Scope Society; Tammy Winder, south region; Rhonda Phillips, Calgary Scope Society; and Sandy White, Calgary Scope Society; organized by Colleen Huston, from the Disability Action Hall in Calgary. Could they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise today and introduce through you to the other members of the Assembly, because I know you've met them already, 48 students and their teachers and parent helpers from Earl Grey school in my constituency of Calgary-Currie, which, I should also mention, is the alma mater of former Premier Peter Lougheed. They were here to assist you in unveiling and kicking off the Virtual Visit exhibit, and among them was student Jan Lisiecki, who, of course, we've had introduced to this House before as the winner of the What Democracy Means to Me essay contest. He spoke again today at the kick-off celebrations, the launch, of the Virtual Visit tour, and it is a spectacular essay.

With the students are teachers Donna Kovatch, Richard Bridges, and Jennifer Powell – these are grade 5 and grade 6 students and their teachers – assistant principal Tim Shoults, principal Judy Hehr, parent helpers Wendy Dick, Kathy Ogilvy, Elisa Iozzo, Jan Pugh, Sol Wright, and also Jan's mom, Anita Lisiecki. I'd have them rise – I think most of them are in the members' gallery; some may be in the public gallery as well – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure this afternoon to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of the very most important people in my life. They are tasked with the difficult job of making sure that I am on schedule, go where I'm supposed to go, say what I'm supposed to say when I get there, don't get in trouble with the media, and somewhere around all of that, they are also tasked with representing the constituents of Edmonton-Rutherford through my constituency office. I would like to introduce Stacey Wickman. Yes, she is the daughter-in-law of my mentor and the former member of this Assembly, Percy Wickman, and she is my constituency manager. With her today is Caitlin Scruggs, who is my STEP student, my summer student, this year. I would ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of the Home-based Learning Society of Alberta, HLSA. It is a nonprofit society which provides information and support to families that have children learning at home and in the community. I met with these three representatives earlier today together with my colleague from St. Albert, and we appreciate their time and effort. The first person, who is an Edmonton-McClung constituent and the one who co-ordinated this gathering of homeschoolers, is Louisa Lawson. She is joined by Joseph Mann, the president of HLSA, and Wendy Sauvé, who is their government relations officer. These three who are here now and about 50 more people who are going to join us in the public gallery in about 15 minutes are all opposed to the proposed standardized testing provisions in the latest draft of the Alberta home education regulation. This delegation comes from approximately 18 or 19 families from in and around Edmonton, and not all of them are members of the HLSA. I would now ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Contracting Policies

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A small look into government contracting policies reveals a big problem with the way this government hands out taxpayer dollars. Contracts are awarded without proper tendering, and little to no work seems to be required for consultants to cash their cheques. However, this government feels that this is normal conduct for everyday business. My questions are to the Premier. Given that this government shrugs off Rod Love's verbal advice contracts as the regular course of business, can the Premier provide the Assembly with other examples where contracts were given out for verbal advice and there was no documentation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in the preamble the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition says "shrugs off." That is wrong. I don't shrug off anything. I don't pay particular attention to those contracts that are led by agencies of the government. Now, if it involves my office and there is a contract let, then I certainly wouldn't shrug anything off. I would pay very special attention to it.

In the case of Rod Love I understand that what the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition alludes to is a contract with the Calgary regional health authority. Now, that authority is appointed by the government, and it's a hands-off, self-governing body that is entirely independent. They hire, like the other eight health regions, who they want to hire and put on contract.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier: will the Premier commit to directing his ministers to find similar contracts for verbal advice and table them in the Legislature as soon as next week if possible?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to . . .

Dr. Taft: Don't shrug it off.

Mr. Klein: I'm not shrugging anything off.

My ministers are very talented and smart individuals, very talented and very smart individuals who are quite capable of hiring who they want or firing who they want, and I quite frankly don't involve myself unless something is so untoward and so wrong that it requires my attention. Otherwise, I will let these very smart and talented people decide for themselves, unlike the Leader of the Opposition, who wants control, control, control.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, let's try the Minister of Finance. Maybe we'll get different – given that the Minister of Finance has in fact recently changed the way her department hands out government contracts, will she recommend that other departments and regional health authorities take similar actions to avoid contracts like those given out to Rod Love and Kelley Charlebois?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that all departments have reviewed their contracting policy and all of them have implemented a policy that would withstand scrutiny. Of course, a lot of those changes were made on the good advice of our Auditor General, whose advice we take seriously and follow very carefully.

At this point in time the RHAs, as the Premier has indicated, are an independent authority. They are funded by us. They present a business plan and a budget to the minister of health, which she approves. I would say that over 80 per cent of our RHAs – the minister of health could give you the exact number – in fact are audited by the Auditor General. I think that there are three exceptions, and they are audited by a recognized auditor. If there are any issues in those areas, I am sure that the Auditor General would bring them to our attention.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Automobile Insurance Rate Board Expenditures

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In May of last year members of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board and a few top Department of Finance officials dined at a posh Edmonton restaurant. An access to information request shows only a credit card receipt for $914 and absolutely no breakdown of expenses. My questions are for the Minister of Finance. Given that the average price of an entrée at this restaurant was $27, can the minister please tell all Albertans how it was possible for 12 people to spend over $900?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the Automobile Insurance Rate Board is a delegated authority of the province of Alberta. If there is a question on a meal expenditure, which I expect was a meeting and a meal, certainly I'll undertake to the hon. member to raise it with the chair of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to guess that Albertans are going to find the bill for this meal hard to swallow.

Can the minister please tell us how much of the $914 was spent on alcohol?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know. I wouldn't have any insight into that. I would undertake, as I did in my earlier answer to the hon. member, to raise this issue with the Automobile Insurance Rate Board chair. Perhaps he will provide some insight. There is certainly a hosting policy in all of these areas that I am responsible for. If there's a concern that they have not stayed within that hosting policy, I've indicated that I'll raise it with the chair.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is for the Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency. Can the minister please tell us anything at all about the efficiency of meetings conducted in restaurants while the participants are consuming alcohol?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whatsoever what kind of meetings he's talking about, whether somebody's consuming alcohol or not consuming alcohol. I believe that if you were hosting a group from out of province or whatever and they wanted a glass of wine with their meal, I don't think that anybody would mind that whatsoever.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Hospital Bed Capacity

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal opposition has received charts from emergency room physicians in the Capital health region showing that at 8 a.m. on May 3 there were only two medical beds available in the entire health region of a million people and 71 people, having cleared emergency rooms, waiting for beds. A study released yesterday by the Canadian Agency for Drugs and Technologies in Health confirms that emergency room overcrowding is reaching critical levels. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that emergency rooms are operating at full capacity, what plans does the minister have in place to deal with an emergency like a bus crash or a flu outbreak or a catastrophe due to weather?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, first of all, since 2003 we have had in place a plan for catastrophes, like a pandemic plan, like plans that would help us initiate a protocol and backup supports. In fact, there are even interprovincial plans that have been supportive since the time of SARS, when on a daily basis communication was held with all of the ministers of health and their senior staff across the country. Fortunately, this week I will attend yet another federal/provincial/territorial meeting on pandemic planning. So in terms of major catastrophic events that impact the health system, I believe that we are more advanced simply because the Canadian government recognized that Alberta should be the one that would be presenting relative to cross-ministry approaches to planning. So while we review with significant concern limited bed capacity in regions, I can assure Albertans and the hon. member opposite that we've done a lot of work to make sure that in catastrophic situations we are indeed ready.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, back to the same minister: if there are only two beds available at a given time in the entire region, how does the minister expect to be dealing with some sort of catastrophic health emergency? There are only two beds available.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Gerry Predy has been the medical officer of health in the Capital region, and he has organized and orchestrated a number of meetings with other providers in the regions. Throughout Alberta there is a very strong and significant network. Obviously, other facilities outside the Capital health region are available.

I'd say one more thing. Mr. Speaker, $1.4 billion: that was the expenditure assigned last year to make sure that we were building the bed capacity to make sure that in the future we would not have the same kind of opportunity that we face today. We're faced with that opportunity today because of a heated economy that is generating a lot of people in this province, that is gathering an intense number of people in Edmonton and the Capital region. That rapid growth has necessitated an even more rapid expansion of some of our facilities.

Mr. Speaker, may I make the point that it's not like we're not trying here.

The Speaker: We have a time factor too.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the increasing acuity of people using emergency rooms means that the primary care centres are not an option, what choices do these patients have?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have identified, as the hon. member is aware, 19 additional primary care centres there. Acuity, as described, could mean anything from the flu season, the kinds of things that had more intense pressure this year, and also looking at other community-based facilities to offer other kinds of supports. There is certainly a plan to use the region for those regions that have additional pressure. That regional expansion has seen day surgeries done in Westlock, in Barrhead, in other outlying communities, in Lamont, in Fort Saskatchewan.

Ultimately, I'm confident that the peaks and valleys that we are experiencing today will level out and that there is, indeed, a good, managed system and that they are making the best of what sometimes is a very tight situation.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Anticrime Volunteer Groups

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, a U.S.-based group called the Guardian Angels wants to set up shop in Edmonton and Calgary. This group is widely known for its vigilante approach. Their confrontational approaches put citizens at risk, and many responsible municipal and police leaders have opposed the establishment of Guardian Angel chapters in their city. To the Solicitor General: why is this minister in his public statements seeming to endorse the attempts of the Guardian Angels to set up shop in Edmonton and Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not endorsing this group as a whole. I am endorsing the fact that every member of the public has a responsibility to be vigilant, not vigilante.

2:00

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about crime prevention programs such as Block Watch and apartment watch and radio watch, these are all programs where the police service liaises with community organizations and volunteer groups. If the Guardian Angels enter into an agreement with the Calgary Police Service or the Edmonton Police Service, I would think that there could be a relationship there, and it may be a possibility for them to work in that community. But those, again, are discussions that have to take place at the community level.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why hasn't this minister been vigilant in ensuring that there's adequate funding for our police services, including up to 500 officers, which the NDP opposition has been proposing? Why hasn't this minister been vigilant in ensuring that we have enough police resources so that we don't need the Guardian Angels and their vigilante tactics?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the budget for policing in the province, including the provincial funding that's provided, is about $700 million a year for municipal policing and the RCMP throughout Alberta. We've provided 200 front-line officers to policing in the last two years alone.

Mr. Eggen: That's from attrition.

Mr. Cenaiko: That's in addition to attrition and not counting the positions we looked at in our organized crime strategies, in ICE, the integrated child exploitation positions. So we've added a number, and we're going to continue to look at those numbers. Again, we've added a component of sheriffs that are going to be working on our highways, which will be able to replace RCMP officer positions and allow them to do criminal investigations, respond to emergencies, and let sheriffs do traffic enforcement. So there are a number of initiatives. We want to look at new models of policing service delivery throughout Alberta so that we can effectively use our police officers to the best advantage possible.

Mr. Mason: To the same minister: given that the lack of provincial funding forced the closure of the duplex run by Crossroads street outreach housing for street-involved youth and given that there's a shortage of low-income housing, that there's a shortage of funding for drug rehabilitation, that there's a shortage for all kinds of things that could help prevent crime, what has this minister done to be vigilant in terms of making sure that municipalities have the tools and the financing that they need to prevent crime from starting in the first place?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, the hon. member mentions a number of issues that are related to policing. On the social issues we have a number of ministries within this government that are providing funds to agencies, to organizations to provide for those. As the Premier has mentioned over and over and over, we're there to provide them with a hand up and not a handout.

In policing, Mr. Speaker, crime prevention programs are in place. We do provide the city of Edmonton with over $12 million, not counting the $27 million they get to keep from their fine revenue, not counting the millions of dollars they get from our ministry of infrastructure regarding infrastructure funding for police buildings. So, obviously, we're talking not the $11 million or $12 million that goes in a grant cheque but, really, an opportunity for the municipality of Edmonton to look at somewhere around $40 million. In Calgary it's around $57 million, not the $15 million cheque. When you add all of those components into it, these municipalities in Alberta get the highest award from any provincial government anywhere in this nation. So we have really outdone ourselves in Alberta, but we will continue to pursue new models of policing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Freedom of Choice

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning we were treated again to hear the winning essays on democracy. Master Lisiecki was grateful to wake each day with the freedom to choose who he wants to be. Mr. Warring was proud to have fought for our democracy and our freedom to speak our mind and worship as we please. However, there are many religious leaders and churches and citizens who no longer feel that they have their freedoms of conscience, religion, and belief protected due to recent changes in federal legislation. My questions today are to the Premier. Will he restore the balance back to our democracy by passing legislation that protects religious organizations and leaders from prosecution or sanctions over their beliefs and being forced by law to go against their conscience?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain as to whether we have legislation in place, but certainly the principle has been long established, that there is freedom of speech and freedom of religious expression. I believe that legislation exists within the human rights legislation to protect all ministers of the cloth and others who wish to express their religious beliefs.

Mr. Hinman: I hope the Premier's beliefs are correct.

Again to the Premier, who has stated that he is not comfortable to perform certain legal marriages: will he sponsor legislation protecting religious leaders and marriage commissioners to choose to solemnize only those marriages which do not contradict their own religion and conscience?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that matter is up to the Legislature if they ever get around to it. There is a bill before the Legislature, a private member's bill, Bill 208, that speaks to this issue. If the hon. leader of the fourth party is interested in my personal opinion, I believe that there should be protection for marriage commissioners to not perform weddings if it violates their moral or their religious principles.

Mr. Hinman: That's why we're asking for a government bill instead of a private bill.

To the Premier again: will this government pass legislation that allows elected school boards, who represent their districts, the flexibility to choose which relationships are to be promoted or supported by the curriculum within their jurisdiction?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter for school boards and the Minister of Education, so I'll have him respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in fact, the Alberta School Act does have provisions already in it. We do teach on a mandatory basis courses in human sexuality from grade 4 through grade 9. In grades 10, 11, and 12, of course, the popular CALM course is taught, which is career and life management skills. However, there's also a provision there which says very clearly that if parents have any reservations or concerns or whatever, they can ask for their child to be exempted from those classes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Climate Change

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is Canada's top greenhouse gas emitter, and its emissions aren't going to wait while the federal government decides if it will support or oppose the Kyoto protocol. My only question to the Minister of Environment: how is this delayed decision affecting Alberta's action on reducing greenhouse gas emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta – and I say to all of this Assembly, to all of us that actually represent our citizens, over 3 million – one thing about all of our citizens is that they don't just talk; they act. That's exactly what we are doing on climate change: we are acting. Not only that, I'm proud to say that Canada under not only the federal Liberal government but now the Conservative government is following the made-in-Alberta solution because we don't want to see money leave Canada to go to buy a hot air credit that says that you can pay to pollute. What we believe in and want to see is concrete action.

In fact, today the Minister of Energy and I were at the Shell plant at Scotford. Shell is a typical company for the actions they are taking in forward thinking relative to adapting to and managing climate change. Today it was very interesting, when they announced, of course, this new high-tech LSD, low sulphur diesel.

An Hon. Member: LSD?

Mr. Boutilier: This is LSD, and it's not the illegal drug. It is the actual technology that is being used to make a difference right here in Alberta. We continue to move forward. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans expect no less of their government. We'll continue not to talk but to act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Home Education

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems to have lost the trust of yet another group of Albertans concerned about education. This government offers home-schooling as an option for educating some of our students, but parents from the home-schooling community are concerned that the program may no longer be administered fairly. Some home-schoolers do not study the regular curriculum or do only parts of it. To the Minister of Education: given that standardized testing is designed to assess students who study a standardized curriculum and given that home-schooled children do in fact work with teachers in their homes who act as facilitators to monitor development and guide progress, why is the minister now asking these students to write a test on something that they do not study?

2:10

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the member to get better researchers on his staff because I'm not doing anything of the sort. In fact, what we have done is that the home ed regulation as it exists today has been extended through to the end of July. In the meantime, very shortly I hope to present that very community that he's asking about with what the new regulation will look like. Until we finish that process and I've had a chance to discuss it with them yet again – I've already met with them probably half a dozen times or so – I won't be commenting any much further.

Specific to the issue of standardized testing, Mr. Speaker, it typically occurs at the grade 3, 6, 9 levels. In fact, according to the rights and privileges accorded to home educators and home-educating students, they have the option to write it or not write it, as they wish.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifty of these people are in the gallery today. Will the minister commit to meeting with them in the near future then?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to meet with them. I attended their annual conference – I think it was last year – in Red Deer. We had a wonderful visit with them, and we did about a 40-minute question-and-answer period. I've met with their representatives. I've corresponded with them through e-mails and letters and phone calls and what have you dozens and dozens of times. We've had about four or five or six formal meetings with the home education community representatives. There are various groups there.

The essential thing to remember here is that home-educating parents do have the constitutional right to work with their children in their homes if they wish provided certain conditions and so on are met. We intend to continue to allow them, for the most part, as far as I'm aware anyway, to do the very same thing in the future.

Mr. Elsalhy: My last question, Mr. Speaker: can the minister explain the flip-flop between the previous Minister of Education's position and the current position that's held by the minister today?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any flip-flop whatsoever. It's quite customary to review regulations approximately every five years or so, and that's what we're in the process of doing now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Legislative Assembly Virtual Visit Project

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, a very exciting event occurred today in the Legislature rotunda. I'm referring to the official launch of a new online project called the Virtual Visit, which uses the Internet to literally invite the world into our wonderful Alberta Legislature Building. I understand that this project is the first of its kind anywhere in the world.

Before I ask my questions, I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Education for making this project possible. [interjections] I just read it, Mr. Speaker.

My questions are to the Minister of Education. How will this Virtual Visit online learning resource be utilized by our school system?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, one of the most valuable aspects of the Virtual Visit project is that it will allow students throughout the province, regardless of where they live, to pay a virtual visit to the Legislature without leaving their classroom. We know that this is a beautiful province, but it is also very, very distant in terms of the travel time required between places, and not every school group is allowed the opportunity to come to this beautiful building. Earlier today some school groups were introduced, and we were grateful to have them here, but not every child is afforded that particular opportunity. Therefore, the short answer is that the Virtual Visit project will allow all students that particular opportunity. It will also allow teachers to use the Virtual Visit project as a valuable learning and teaching tool in their classrooms and for students in their homes, too, if they wish.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder: could the minister enlighten us if this project will have an impact on the school curriculum, and how? [interjections]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, there's a great amount of congruency between the Virtual Visit project and our Alberta school curriculum. I think members of the opposition who are moaning and groaning about this project should realize that this is a first for Alberta, and it's a first in the world. We should be proud of it. You shouldn't be heckling this one, opposition members.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the congruency is really manifested in the fact that this Legislature contains a lot of history, a lot of important history, be it the Famous Five individuals or be it former Premiers or Lieutenant Governors or MLAs in general or Speakers and so on. So there's a great congruency there with the curriculum, and there's also a fit even with the local history as well as with math and statistics and election results and so on. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally and apparently mercifully, my final question to the minister: could he inform us of any future plans for this project?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, well, that's a much better response. Thank you. One day you will realize how important this project is, which I realize that you're not realizing today, opposition members, because you may be part of that history. In the future we hope to have these doors opened up to the Virtual Visit, and the camera will actually take students in between our desks, and they will see where members such as some hon. members today sit.

Electricity Regulation

Mr. MacDonald: In April the Minister of Energy met with Kellan Fluckiger, the department's electricity business unit leader. It was a very important meeting for the minister. He wanted to be on his best behaviour when his real boss showed up in his office. This meeting was to discuss the government's latest blueprint on electricity deregulation, which is named role and mandate refinements for Alberta electric industry. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is the government recommending that the Independent System Operator have the authority to approve their own expenses without any further review from the EUB?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a wonderful day to be able to meet with the many, many, many capable, talented, energetic, loyal employees of the Department of Energy. Kellan Fluckiger is one of them. We have numerous meetings. This certainly wasn't the first time this topic was ever introduced. The department is always engaging in consultations with the public about how we can improve the systems that we have in place. In this case we were reviewing the roles and mandates of the Energy and Utilities Board, the Alberta Electric System Operator, and the Market Surveillance Administrator just to make sure that among the bodies there is appropriate governance. So in this case it was just to make sure that in looking at the Alberta Electric System Operator, we have got the appropriate structure and governance with respect to their budgets, their allocation of costs, the approvals, all of those good things.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why is this government allowing Mr. Kellan Fluckiger to continue to undermine the regulatory authority of the EUB?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, that wouldn't be the case at all. In fact, if you talk to the Energy and Utilities Board and the Alberta Electric System Operator, they've been very much jointly co-operating and working on these issues so that there's no overlap and duplication among the two boards. Really, the intent of this is so that we're not missing something between the boards and that we're also not duplicating the efforts amongst the two boards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Energy: why are electricity generators writing the rules for the Market Surveillance Administrator in this latest attempt to force more costs onto the power bills of Alberta consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, once again, the Market Surveillance Administrator has been very proactive in working to ensure, as their role is, that the public is protected and enforcement is there in case any irregularities or any problems do occur that would be unwarranted. So they do act as a great enforcement agency on behalf of all Albertans, to protect them. That said, we always are open to consulting with industry and the public at large, so we will always encourage that we get the best feedback on how to make sure that this is a very strong regulatory structure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Postsecondary Education in Public Health

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the universities of Alberta, Calgary, and Lethbridge signed a memorandum of agreement to align their efforts in advancing public health in Alberta. This collaborative agreement follows the announcement last month of the University of Alberta School of Public Health, Canada's first stand-alone facility dedicated to public health. My first question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Could the minister outline how her department plans to support this initiative, and would that include any financial support?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it was an exciting morning this morning with health care providers and educators packed into a room at the university, at the Telus building, with Calgary president Harvey Weingarten seated beside me, and in Lethbridge with president Bill Cade. The Lethbridge campus was linked in one virtual celebration of the first ever in Canada School of Public Health. The remarkable part about this is that instead of one place, three places across Alberta will be delivering better supports for public health.

What we will do as the Department of Health and Wellness through our officials in the public health division is look at practicum experiences, look at ways that we can support practical research. I spoke about two months ago to one of the organizers of this project, Dr. David Low in Calgary, and while there were no identified dollars for this initiative at this time, it's understood that the collaboration between the campuses, between the government departments that could participate will ultimately see a number of dollars presented to us. There was an estimate that the University of Alberta may be in need of some $20 million to support some of their programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the Minister of Advanced Education. Why is this important work being shared among three universities rather than having it concentrated at one university where it could become a public health care centre of excellence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, let me say that it's a great day for postsecondary education and wellness in the province of Alberta. In many cases it does make sense to have a university specialize and become a centre of excellence. We have many examples of that. For example, the University of Lethbridge and water. They specialize in that.

But public health is a very broad and complex issue that involves many disciplines, so it makes sense to share that vast field amongst our institutions. Plus, each university currently specializes in a particular area, and it's important to link those together. For example, the new Alberta School of Public Health at the University of Alberta offers highly specialized education and training to Albertans pursuing careers in this field and to those already working in this field, but the Markin institute at the University of Calgary designs, implements, and evaluates solutions at the population level to prevent health problems, and the University of Lethbridge, Mr. Speaker – this is very important – has Canada's only baccalaureate program in addictions counselling.

The Speaker: Everything's important. I have 18 members wanting to raise questions.

The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this announcement help attract the much-needed new researchers that we need in Alberta?

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, I think I'll need more than 45 seconds for this one. I can get excited about this one. Not only is this the first in Canada, but in this province we know how to attract the brightest and the best people to come to this province to do research and bring with them the postgrads that follow them around in order to study from these masters. I'm going to be working with the minister of health and the Minister of Innovation and Science and see if we can't duplicate the success of iCORE that brought in 23 new chairs for the ICT industry. Let's see if we can do it for wellness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Wind Power Generation

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bias of this government towards coal generation is well known. In fact, the return of Old King Coal was a major theme in this spring's throne speech. That's why I guess it should come as no surprise that the regulator agency that controls generators to the provincial power grid has recently moved to cap wind power generation in this province. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Why are senior officials in the Department of Energy working hand in glove with the Alberta Electric System Operator to impose an artificially low cap of 900 megawatts on renewable, zero emission wind power generation in this province?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we're delighted that the hon. member is also supportive of wind generation and the alternative. Our department is clearly supportive of that. This province has more wind generation than any other province in the country. [interjections] I haven't yet polled the whole universe, but I certainly can say that I speak for the country when I say that it has the most wind power thus far. That said, for all the wind that he would like, we're prepared to let him take this power under one condition: if he only wants wind, then he only gets electricity when the wind is blowing.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that the AESO is not proposing to cap generation from power plants burning coal and natural gas, why is the minister standing idly by while the AESO uses its regulatory authority to impose an unnecessary cap on wind power generation? Lots of other jurisdictions have a much higher cap.

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, like I said, we can have all the wind we want – we could go to a hundred per cent wind – and if the wind is not blowing, there would be no electricity in this building as we speak. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor. The chair is very attentive to his answer.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. With respect to this, some of the jurisdictions – and I might use Quebec in particular – are actually going out and actively trying to bring on a lot more wind, in fact a very substantial amount of wind power. But they have a very great quantity of hydro. If you've got a large quantity of hydro, it's easy to ramp up the need for new electricity coming on if you've got hydro against wind. Whereas Alberta is very more constrained in the quantity of hydro that we have. You've got to balance the kinds of sources of electricity so that it's reliable, predictably delivered when we want it. Every time we go to that light switch, we can count on the power.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that other jurisdictions like the United Kingdom, Denmark, and Quebec, as the hon. minister mentioned, are finding that 15 or more per cent of their electricity load can be met by wind power without affecting system reliability, why is this government allowing the AESO to restrict wind power generation to less than 10 per cent of Alberta's electricity load when certainly it could be approaching double that?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, AESO, first off, said that they wanted to manage above a certain amount. They didn't say that there was a cap they couldn't go beyond. They said that if you're going to add a great supply of wind, you have to appropriately manage. How does that factor into the other reliable sources of electricity so that it can come when wind isn't blowing? Now, if they want to blow a lot more, I guess we'll have more reliable wind power.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Highway Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1995-96 the government of Alberta privatized Alberta's highway maintenance contracts. At that time the cost of Alberta highway maintenance was approximately $72 million. This year the government is expecting to pay $234 million in highway maintenance, a 224 per cent increase. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: given that four of seven highway maintenance contracts will expire in July 2006, what assurance can the minister provide this House that the bidding competition process will be transparently accountable rather than sole sourced?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there is a process for bidding of contracts, and I will certainly take that question under advisement for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I guess I'll have to go to the Deputy Premier again. Given that the Auditor General found that the government has failed to properly account for the real costs of highway maintenance, compounded by constant complaints regarding the deterioration of our highways, are Albertans getting value from these contracts?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again I'll be happy to get some detail for the hon. member from the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, but I remind all hon. members of the tremendous growth that has occurred in this province in the last very short years, and for anyone who travels outside of this city on our rural roads outside any of our centres, you know that the traffic has increased in a tremendous way. I was on highway 21 last evening, a very, very busy road. That's a good sign. That means that things are happening in this province.

Are we getting good value? The minister questions that through his contracts and through the process at the end of the contract of ensuring that the work has been done. As I say, you'll get a detailed answer from the minister.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I very much appreciate the Deputy Premier researching that information and having it sent to me.

Given that former Treasurer Steve West indicated that highway maintenance privatization would save Alberta taxpayers millions but, instead, has dramatically increased costs with reduced quality, why is this government continuing down the privatization road?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, you have to compare apples and apples, not apples and oranges, which we usually do. One, we have an increased number of highways. Every year the age of those highways changes, and so do the rehab requirements. The traffic patterns change. The size of equipment has changed. For many of our highways the base was built 25 years ago. So to expect that you could actually have a lower maintenance cost today in Alberta's economy is impossible. Are we getting good value? That is something that the minister ensures in the contracting process. There is an expectation of value, and at the end of that contract that is reviewed; I know that for a fact. The satisfaction must be there, or the companies are called back to redo or complete the job. Again, more detail coming from the minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Orkney Water Co-operative

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Orkney water co-op consists of nine farmers who drilled two community or co-operative wells, which were piped to their farms as well as to an old school which has been used as a community centre since it closed as a school many years ago. This co-op was operated successfully for many years until recently when they were told by environmental officials that they had to have a qualified water technician on staff to test their water daily and will be treated the same as a hamlet. This will drive their costs up significantly. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister assure me that the Orkney water co-op is being treated exactly the same as the numerous communal farms that are located throughout the province?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, ensuring safe, secure drinking water to all Albertans: yes, I can assure the hon. member of that. In the particular example Alberta Environment, of course, is looking for some very practical solutions for keeping costs down, but as you can appreciate, any time there's a communal hall where not just necessarily the farmers from the area that you talk about but the general public come to an area where, in fact, they would go in expecting clean, safe drinking water, we have to ensure that. It's my understanding that that's happening as we speak. We want to minimize it. We're trying to take very practical, common-sense approaches to ensure safe drinking water. At the same time, when someone comes to visit someone, they will also be assured in that visit that they have safe drinking water as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that other communal farms also have a church or a school building that also doubles as a community centre for such occasions as weddings, funerals, and Christmas concerts that have invited guests from the public there, can you tell me what the difference is between these community centres and the Orkney community centre?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is any difference. Ultimately, the fact is that we want to achieve safe drinking water. I can say that from my former ministry I am very familiar with the financial obstacles that smaller communities face. Safe drinking water is an expectation of all Albertans. From a big city like Calgary or Edmonton to a small rural community we want to ensure safe drinking water.

I also am not suggesting that the best solution for these farmers is just simply a whole additional expense. I think we can find creative ways of getting safe drinking water without the bureaucracy of instilling unnecessary costs, and I can assure the hon. member that we will not instill any unnecessary costs in ensuring that safe drinking water.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you. Again to the same minister: so when can the Orkney water co-op be advised that they will be treated the same as every other organization of similar circumstances such as these other communal farms?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, our Water for Life strategy is a fine example of ensuring safe drinking water. I also want to say: did you know that over 600,000 Albertans rely on water from private wells? Of course, as much as they have managed those private wells on their own, which are unregistered, we still have a responsibility to ensure their safe drinking water.

Mr. Speaker, I can honestly say that we are working very closely with the hon. member. I appreciate also his advance notice of this important issue to try to alleviate in a creative but responsible way safe, secure drinking water for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wild Rose Foundation Granting Process

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While attending a fundraiser in my constituency to build a school for Sudan this past weekend, I was shocked to hear the Tory MLA for Calgary-East boldly declare that the Wild Rose Foundation would match all monies raised that evening. Despite the fact that the group had not yet applied for a Wild Rose grant, the member's promise implied that he had direct control over the granting process. This raises serious questions about the policy of this government and the impartiality of the Wild Rose Foundation granting process. To the Minister of Community Development: is it the policy of this government to allow Tory MLAs to use the Wild Rose Foundation as their own political fund for garnering support?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any improper action taking place by the board members of the Wild Rose Foundation, so I find that a very big discredit that we're accusing those people and the good work they do on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's about the MLA for Calgary-East.

To the minister again: given that the Member for Calgary-East has already made the monetary promise and the group believed him, will the minister be requiring the Wild Rose Foundation to honour his commitment?

Mr. Ducharme: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any such request. All requests that go to the Wild Rose Foundation are vetted by good Albertans that sit on there as members, and they review all of these depending on their merit. I'm not aware of any MLA involvement from the time that I've served in this Chamber that they'd dictate to the board who shall receive any funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Community Development: what consequences, if any, will the Member for Calgary-East face as a result of this bypassing of the formal process for acquiring a Wild Rose grant? I'll provide the information to the minister.

Speaker's Ruling Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View almost seems, from the perception of the Speaker, to be making an accusation against another member of this House. There is a policy and there is a procedure in the Standing Orders to deal with this. So we're going to leave this matter. The hon. Member for Calgary-East will be advised that these questions were raised in the House. The hon. Member for Calgary-East may choose to take certain actions under the Standing Orders with respect to this, and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View will also be given an opportunity, and we'll see where it all goes.

Before we deal with Members' Statements, I'm going to invite the hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Finance to supplement a question from the question period yesterday. I believe the question that the hon. member was responding to was originated by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, so under our procedures the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will have an opportunity to raise an additional question.

Government Liabilities

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, this is in regard to a question that was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford yesterday. The quote from Hansard is: "The government's liabilities have grown by nearly $3 billion in the last year." He cited information on page 43 of the fiscal plan. In fact, total government liabilities are forecast to have declined from March 31, '05-06, by $760 million. That's a forecast. The final numbers will be available in June as part of our government's final business plan. There is a forecast increase – and again it's a forecast – to March 31, '07, which is about $500 million.

As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, it was unclear from the member's three questions whether he was referring to pension liabilities or other things. In fact, this forecast that I'm speaking to is as a result of lending through Crown agencies, Agriculture Financial Services and Alberta corporate finance.

It appears that the hon. member has misread the fiscal financial assets line, which in fact shows an increase of nearly $3 billion in assets rather than liabilities. So I thought it was important, Mr. Speaker, that we have it on the record. Certainly, the hon. member and I can have a further discussion on this, but I would suggest that he has misread the fiscal financial statements.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It would appear to me that there is some discrepancy between the minister's understanding of my questions and the way they were meant. Since I'm allowed a question, I guess my question for the minister would be this: how would the minister explain the discrepancy, then, between the graph that is in this year's fiscal plan versus the graph that is in last year's fiscal plan, which does in fact show an increase of $3 billion in the province's total liability? That was the question yesterday.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that he's misreading the financial statements. I would be happy to sit down with the hon. member and review them. I've had the staff at the office of budget management, which I can assure you are pretty diligent and learned people, go over this thoroughly to ensure that, in fact, we did have an increase in assets of $3 billion rather than an increase of liabilities. So we can have that conversation. As I indicated yesterday, we'll have two hours tonight to discuss it as well as generally accepted accounting principles, which is how our financial statements are presented.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll call upon six hon. members today to participate in Members' Statements, but first of all the historical vignette for the day. Twice in the same week it deals with the making of history rather than dealing with history.

Citizens' access to the Legislature Building and citizens' understanding of the building and the institution of democracy that it houses has taken decades to develop. Alberta did not start producing its own Hansard until 1972, making Alberta one of the last provinces in Canada to do so. Alberta, however, was one of the first jurisdictions in the country to have permanent television broadcasts, with the first of its proceedings televised on March 15, 1972. In 1998 a searchable Hansard was provided daily on the Internet, and in 2003 gavel-to-gavel audio broadcasts were added to the Assembly website, followed in 2004 by streamed video of Oral Question Period.

On July 1, 1998, unique in Canada and for the first time in the history of Alberta opportunity was accorded to citizens to walk onto the floor of this Chamber. We now have numerous student parliaments, upwards of eight, a School at the Legislature five days a week, and some 176,000 visitors annually come to this building, where they're met by talented and professional tour guides who make them feel very comfortable.

While we are pleased with the many people who do visit and can visit this building, many were unable to visit the Legislature Building until now. Today, as you've already heard, we've unveiled the most innovative access visitor tool found anywhere in the world. The Virtual Visit: Step Inside the Alberta Legislature website is another major educational first for Alberta. To the knowledge of many, no other online tour provides the same immersive, 3-D experience that Alberta's tour does.

This project, Virtual Visit: Step Inside the Alberta Legislature, provides a realistic three-dimensional environment in cyberspace that replicates the layout, scale, lighting, and finishes of the Alberta Legislature. Students and citizens anywhere in the world can access the website and experience a virtual tour of this building that allows them to look around and move as if in the real world.

As Speaker I would very much like to extend deepest appreciation to Alberta Education, the previous minister, and the current minister for believing in a project that had humble beginnings several years ago. Virtual Visit: Step Inside the Alberta Legislature was fully funded as an Alberta Education centennial project, and gifted people in Alberta Education worked hand in hand with gifted people in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to erect a groundbreaking education visitors' tool that is the first of its kind. Deepest appreciation is also extended to the private sector firm Fuel Industries for outstanding work on this project.

Access is at www.virtualvisit.learnalberta.ca.

Today's tour is the first step. With the support of the members of this Assembly we hope to add more educational activities as well as enhanced interactive features with Members of this Legislative Assembly in the future. As of today anyone anywhere in the world can visit the Alberta Legislature Building right now as we speak.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Biodiesel Fuel

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the opportunity to take the lead in renewable fuels and be the green transportation and energy leader across Canada. By leveraging off the agriculture and petroleum industries, we can revitalize rural Alberta and improve the environment for all Canadians.

Alberta farmers have much to gain from a strong canola-based biodiesel industry. A renewable fuel standard of 5 per cent would require roughly 2.87 million tonnes of oilseed. Last year Alberta farmers harvested approximately 3.6 million tonnes. Alberta farmers with high-quality soil, leading canola yields, and proximity to Canada's petroleum production and distribution sectors for downstream blending would be well positioned to provide the primary feedstock for a strong domestic biodiesel industry.

Stringent standards must be supported. Canola is considered to be the best biodiesel feedstock for cold weather use.

Mr. Speaker, biodiesel widespread use will benefit the health of all Albertans. It will lower air pollutants like sulphur, carbon monoxide, unburned hydrocarbon, and particulate matter. With a 5 per cent standard we will reduce CO₂ emissions by 3.3 megatonnes per year. Each litre of biodiesel reduces carbon dioxide by approximately 78 per cent compared with normal diesel.

Mr. Speaker, a renewable field industry will develop a more sustainable rural economy, deliver health care benefits from improved air quality, and lower harmful greenhouse gases.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Big Valley Jamboree

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over a decade the Big Valley Jamboree of Camrose has been one of the largest country music festivals in Canada. It's also been one of the most highly regarded. In two out of the past five years the Big Valley Jamboree has been recognized as the country music event of the year by the Canadian Country Music Association.

However, you don't need to see industry awards to know that this event is very highly regarded. The success of the Big Valley Jamboree is very apparent when you see the more than 85,000 people who attend this weekend each year that it's held. For four days in August a new village springs up around the Camrose Exhibition Grounds, covering a 400-acre area.

The jamboree has something for everyone, including a trade fair, cattle penning, and songwriting workshops. There are family-specific events and campsites as well as events and camping venues which are more geared towards adults.

The artists who perform at Big Valley have always been as diverse as the crowds which attend this festival, and this year is no different. This year the main stage will play host to headliners such as Gretchen Wilson, Montgomery Gentry, Mel Tillis, and Alberta's own Terri Clark among many other excellent performers.

As with so many other large events the success of the Big Valley Jamboree is largely dependent on the hundreds of volunteers who work so diligently to ensure that the festival goes and performers alike enjoy this great music weekend.

On behalf of the constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose I would like to invite all members of this Legislature and all Albertans to experience the Big Valley Jamboree this August 3 to 6 in Camrose.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Salute to Second World War Veterans

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, last Monday marked the 61st anniversary of Victory in Europe, or VE, Day. It's an appropriate time to recognize the contributions of all of our veterans.

Approximately 1.1 million Canadians and Newfoundlanders served in the armed forces during the Second World War, including 600,000 in the Canadian army, 106,000 in the Royal Canadian Navy, and over 200,000 in the Royal Canadian Air Force, of which my father, Pilot Officer Allan Brown, was one.

Often overlooked was the important involvement and contributions of Canadian women in the war effort. During World War II more than 45,000 Canadian women served in the military services. The women's division of the Royal Canadian Air Force was authorized in July 1941 and by 1945 had enlisted 17,000 women.

In August of 1941 the establishment of the Canadian Women's Army Corps was announced, and training bases were established in Ste.-Anne-de-Bellevue, Quebec; Kitchener, Ontario; and here in Vermilion, Alberta. More than 21,000 women served in the corps during the Second World War.

The Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service, or Wrens, began recruiting in 1942 and announced 7,126 recruits by the end of the Second World War. One of those Wrens serving on the west coast of Canada was my mother, Irene Shaw, of Midnapore, Alberta, of whom I'm especially proud.

In addition, hundreds of thousands of women left the home to run farms or businesses or to take up tools or trades and work, which supported the Canadian war machine, freeing others to enlist on the front lines.

Mr. Speaker, I know that all hon. members join with me in saluting and giving thanks for all those Canadian men and women who served their country so well in time of war.

Lethbridge Centennial

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the great pleasure of attending the official centennial ceremonies for the incorporation of Lethbridge, a grand and wonderful city. A number of dignitaries celebrated with us. They represented our twin and friendship cities from Japan, China, Montana, and Quebec. Lethbridge's own Alberta Senator Joyce Fairbairn also attended. We were entertained by the St. Patrick's fine arts school choir, the Okinawa children's choir, and the internationally recognized aboriginal hoop dancer J.J. First Charger.

The range of people and the variety of languages showed off the diversity of our outstanding city. Lethbridge welcomes newcomers from almost every country in the world. The special relationships with the Chinese and Japanese communities was highlighted in the ceremony, as was the special relationship that Lethbridge has with the aboriginal people who live in and near our city.

Mr. Speaker, Mayor Tarleck made a special announcement that our city's tax-supported debt has been retired due to the vision of the mayors and councils from 1989 onward. Former Mayor David Carpenter was on hand for the special presentation of the cancelled debentures.

The centennial theme of Rediscover Lethbridge is a call to rediscover the history of Lethbridge and its citizens. Lethbridge's history is a strong one, built on coal mining, agriculture, and a knowledge-based economy.

Lethbridge also boasts the newly reopened Galt Museum, which promises to be a pre-eminent museum in Alberta. I would like to recognize Legacy Ridge housing development, a first in Canada, which celebrates Lethbridge's historical women by naming all of the streets in their honour.

I encourage all members of this House to follow highway 2 south to the magnificent coulees of Lethbridge, where people smile and say good morning and you can park downtown for a quarter. The Mayor of Lethbridge, Bob Tarleck, has graciously provided Lethbridge centennial pins for all of the members.

I was honoured to have been a part of the centennial events, and I am sure that Clint Dunford, the MLA from Lethbridge-West, would echo my sentiments if he were able to be with us today. Lethbridge is a rare jewel in the Alberta crown.

The Speaker: Are you happy now?

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you.

The Speaker: You went beyond the time. You mentioned a member by name. But because it's a happy occasion, a 100th anniversary, and you gave everybody a pin, maybe forgiveness is in the air.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Northgate Lions Senior Citizens' Recreation Centre

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Edmonton Northgate Lions seniors' centre is truly the best seniors' centre in all of Canada. It is not only because of the wonderful facilities that have been built up through countless hours of fundraising and tireless volunteer work; it is not only the support from communities and all the citizens of northeast Edmonton; it is mainly because there are so many great people involved as volunteers, as staff, and as active participants in the programs created and provided.

The Northgate Lions Choralaires are justly famous for their wonderfully choreographed, performed, and sung choral music productions, and they're fun. The talented instructors and group leaders in programs that range from lapidary, weaving, fine woodworking, or all sorts of painting and art and many, many other areas challenge and involve the many participants. They're interesting and they're fun.

The food is scrumptious, and it is the camaraderie in the restaurant that is always great. Some of the best snooker and pool players in town ply their skills in the poolroom. It's good fun.

Begun as a project by the Edmonton Northgate Lions Club and first constructed in 1978, the Lions have continued with their generous volunteer support for the facility as it has grown. Thank you, Lions.

The community services department of the city of Edmonton maintains the operation of the centre in collaboration with the Northgate Senior Citizens Association. This incredible seniors' organization provided over 50,000 volunteer hours to the centre and the community in 2005. Over 400 volunteers give their time freely to help with the many projects and programs. These many volunteers have also raised millions of dollars to further expand and improve the centre.

The exceptional staff, the great volunteers from the Northgate Senior Citizens Association, and Edmonton Northgate Lions must all be congratulated for their contribution. Northgate Lions seniors' centre is a tremendous contributor to the communities of northeast Edmonton and, indeed, all of Alberta. This tremendous seniors' centre is a model for all of Canada to aspire to, and it's fun.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Evans Consoles

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about an Alberta company that plays an important role in the world-famous space program. We all know of the fantastic space shuttle launching flights and the amazing human achievements in the orbiting space station.

The space shuttle vehicle has over 2 and a half million parts, and each shuttle orbiter weighs approximately 78 tonnes. The three space shuttle main engines generate about 37 million horsepower and release the equivalent of about 23 of the largest hydroelectric dams. The solid rocket booster produces an equivalent of more than 15 million horsepower, roughly about 64,000 Corvette cars. In seven seconds the 2,000-tonne shuttle goes from a standing start to a travelling speed of 150 kilometres an hour. To monitor and control such an operation requires unimaginable efforts of human minds and equipment.

Mr. Speaker, early this month a company called Evans Consoles in Calgary became the first ever Canadian company to win the much-coveted aerospace supplier award from NASA's United Space Alliance. I had the great pleasure to join in the celebration with the executives from the NASA space program presenting the award to Evans Consoles.

Evans Consoles company received the exclusive space flight awareness supplier award for its longstanding partnership and most recently for the turnkey design, manufacture, and installation of custom consoles for the new firing room No. 4 at the Kennedy Space Centre. From this very room NASA will be launching all remaining space shuttle missions.

I would like to ask all members to join me in congratulating Evans Consoles on this fantastic award.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition signed by the students and staff from the J.T. Foster school of Nanton, who petition the Legislative Assembly to "urge the Government of Alberta to introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the substantial increase in teenage smoking."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the same kind of petition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table two petitions in the House today, one with 94 signatures and one with 95. Both petitions ask that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation allowing parents the authority to place their children into mandatory drug treatment and to fund urgently required youth drug treatment centres."

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Associate Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation I would like to table a petition from 15 Albertans from Lethbridge and Coaldale asking the government to "introduce effective and immediate measures to curtail the . . . increase in teenage smoking."

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first tabling is copies of a letter that we discussed in Committee of the Whole last night regarding Bill 38, the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act. This letter is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development from the Canadian Bankers Association.

My two other tablings are documents in reference to my questions earlier today in question period. The first is a letter. The original is signed by Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, and it's dated April 28, 2006. It's regarding the roles and mandates of implementing agencies, the Electric Utilities Act Advisory Committee members.

This last tabling is the roles and mandates refinements for Alberta electricity industry implementing agencies. I would ask all hon. members to have a look at this before we get on with the debate on Bill 39, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, which was introduced in this Assembly yesterday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of a campaign that was launched yesterday by Public Interest Alberta entitled Alberta's Seniors Deserve Better: It's time to take action! There's quite a thorough booklet of information and charts and facts here, and there's also a tear-off postcard on the back which people are expected to fill out and send back to our very own minister responsible for Seniors and Community Development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to table a copy of a letter that was shared with me by an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Kathie Landry, dated March 23 which she sent to the EMS department and the two ward 1 councillors detailing how long she had to wait for an ambulance and how the situation happens almost daily now that the emergency rooms are overbooked. She shared some pictures of her injuries with us, and although they might not be too clear, I promised to table them nevertheless.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to table the appropriate number of copies of the program from this afternoon's Salvation Army annual luncheon, which several members of this Assembly attended. The Minister of Municipal Affairs brought greetings on behalf of the province, and the guest speaker was Major Cedric Hills from London, England, who is the international emergency services co-ordinator. He shared with us some stories from some of the recent work that the emergency disaster services branch has completed, including working with Hurricane Katrina victims in 2005, the southern Alberta floods in 2005, the 2004 tsunami, of course, wildfires that ravaged Alberta and B.C. in 2002, and in 2001 following the terrorist attack in New York. I'm happy to have been there and happy to table these on behalf of the Salvation Army.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today 10 letters that I've received from concerned staff and citizens requesting that the government keep their promises and provide additional funding for long-term care and seniors facilities to improve living conditions and staffing conditions. These letters are signed by Raminder Gill, Carlene Lewis, A.M. Rennie, Marilyn Slemko, Mary Pasula, S.M. and N.L. Tomlinson, E. Hope Pennock, Denise Ryan, Herta Duncan, and James New.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, it's my pleasure to move Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development's business plan for '06-09 and our budget estimates for '06-07.

I can hardly believe that this is Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development's sixth business plan, and I've worked on all of them. Imagine that. I'm really old.

Before I begin, however, Mr. Chairman, I would like to recognize departmental staff who were instrumental in assisting me to complete this budget and make every attempt to make sure that I walk the straight and narrow. I ask that they stand as I introduce them: my deputy minister, Shelley Ewart-Johnson; assistant deputy minister Neil Reddekopp; assistant deputy minister Donavon Young; executive directors John McDonough and Bill Werry; senior financial officer Lorne Harvey – I share him with IIR – directors Jason Gariepy and Gerry Kushlyk; and of course, our NADC executive director, Dan Dibbelt. I think he's there somewhere. As well, the chair of NADC has been a really fantastic individual to help us along as we develop this budget. He will be speaking on NADC's activities. I'll be asking him to do that.

I'm going to use a different approach this afternoon to provide as much time for members to ask questions if we can. Is that okay with you? Okay. If that's okay, I'll do that. I will do this by quickly highlighting achievements and reviewing the estimates and, of course, indicating why you should support the new funding in the two key areas. I will also list our strategic priorities and what we'd like to achieve.

While we are a small department, we consider ourselves to be a strategic and influential ministry with major responsibilities. We focus on policy development, not program delivery. We co-ordinate and facilitate cross-ministry policies within government, the strategies, initiatives on how to work more effectively with aboriginal governments and communities. The 2006-2007 estimates reflect our mandate to enhance aboriginal well-being and self-reliance. This population is one of the youngest and fastest growing in the province. It focuses our efforts to advance the economic and social development of Northern Alberta, the largest region in the province with over 150 communities and 60 per cent of the province's land mass yet only 10 per cent of the population. We do all this through partnerships with aboriginal people, communities, organizations, the private sector, and all levels of government.

I'd like to share our major achievements since the last estimates. Consultation received approximately $5 million in funding last year. During that time we approved the government of Alberta's First Nations consultation policy on land management and resource development, a first across the country. We have 15 First Nations communities and organizations that have established a one-window approach to manage resource development. Through the First Nations consultation capacity funding program we are enhancing their capacity to participate in consultation. This includes assistance in dealing with proposals and training people to manage consultation initiatives.

Traditional use studies. These are studies which are significant for First Nations, and of course what they do is map sites of cultural, spiritual, and historical significance by using a combination of documentary records and traditional knowledge of the elders of those communities. We've been very successful gathering and preserving traditional use information. As an example, 29 studies are under way involving 39 aboriginal communities. We also have 16 data-sharing agreements that have been signed with 24 aboriginal communities, and numerous traditional sites – grave sites, ceremonial areas – have been shared with government and placed under some form of protective designation. We've established positive relations with First Nations and demonstrated good faith on behalf of the Alberta Crown.

The other part is the First Nations economic participation initiative. It was designed to increase economic expertise in First Nations so they are job ready or prepared for industry partnerships. There are a growing number of First Nation leaders who recognize that economic development offers the best opportunity to enhance quality of life and self-sufficiency. They were part of the development consultation because we need to make sure that First Nations and industry are part of that.

Also, I want to say a special thank you to my Industry Advisory Committee – they have provided me with guidance as we move through this process – and, of course, the elders aboriginal advisory committee, who have also provided us with guidance as we move in this direction.

FNEPI was provided with $2.75 million last year, including funds to our partnering ministries of Human Resources and Employment and Economic Development. As an example, 11 industry-driven partnerships have been established with First Nations in areas as diverse as oil and gas, pulp and paper, health, and environment with First Nations communities because these communities were prepared to take advantage of the economic activities surrounding their area.

On the northern development part of my portfolio, Mr. Chairman, relationships and partnerships with stakeholders in Alberta and beyond are another initiative that we take seriously. We have the responsibility of realizing the MOU, or the memorandum of understanding, with the Northwest Territories that focuses on training and employment, economic development, such as the Mackenzie pipeline, tourism, transportation, and land management. We've had a lot of results, and we look forward to moving more initiatives forward with the Territories.

We are also participants on the Alberta-Alaska Bilateral Council, which advances co-operation in energy, aboriginal issues, and, of course, labour and training. We recently travelled to Alaska to determine specific projects, how we can achieve the outcomes and determine structure.

The northern development ministers' forum is a vital part of our northern involvement. We undertake joint projects on social, economic, and fiscal issues that are important to the north. We currently lead two projects. One is developing a northern awareness strategy, and the second one is development of a communications plan.

Alberta is vice-chair for North America on the Northern Forum, which is an international organization comprised of eight northern countries – the U.S., China, Iceland, Finland, Japan, Korea, Russia, and Canada – that are dedicated to improving the lives of northern peoples. We have also been involved with the Northern Forum for many, many years, and we're blessed to be able to make sure that we carry that specific initiative forward.

If you recall, last time I was talking about the northern development strategy. We are reassessing developing that strategy for a number of reasons. One, the rural development strategy has been now accepted by government. What we want to do is make sure that we don't duplicate our efforts but, rather, to be able to pull together all that information on how, then, northerners can take advantage of what's happening in the rural development strategy. We prefer to do that rather than build something new just for the sake of building something new. While opportunities are great, we are working on northern priorities such as improving transportation, increasing skills development, raising economic diversification, and improving access to health and education services.

Now, talking about our estimates – and I know that this is where you want to go – our 2006-2007 budget is $44 million, up approximately $5 million from the '05-06 forecast. We are proposing an increase of $3.3 million, with three additional FTEs to expand and accelerate traditional use studies across the province over three years with all 47 First Nations. We need this increase because past funding was based on two assumptions. The first assumption was that the cost of TUS would be split between the government of Alberta and industry, but the courts have since established that TUS is the Crown's responsibility. Second, with current funding it would take 10 years or more to complete TUS for all Alberta First Nations. Gathering and preserving traditional use information, in our view, is at the very heart of meaningful consultation. TUS is a critical planning tool that assists industry and government in avoiding or at least reducing the impacts of development upon aboriginal and treaty rights.

Just as an example, Alexis Nakota First Nation and Millar Western Forest Products have an MOU to ensure that traditional information is considered in the forestry planning process along with the economic activities that are being explored.

We're proposing an increase of $1.5 million, with an additional two FTEs, to support industry-based partnerships through the First Nations economic partnerships initiative. This initiative responds to a call by First Nations and industry, as I indicated in my earlier comment, to develop strategic economic partnerships and to make sure that the First Nations would be ready with their expertise within their own nations. It promotes greater collaboration and supports the development of First Nations economic development capacity at the regional and community level. Of course, this is another important tool when we're dealing with what we call self-reliance for aboriginal people.

As an example, being a small size, Kapawe'no First Nation must be innovative with its economic development approaches. A health centre has expressed interest in collaborating with the community to establish a holistic health centre that would provide services to High Prairie, Slave Lake, and the Peace River region. So those are examples of very small areas that are beginning to see what the possibilities are as long as they're able to develop their people so that they have the expertise to do that.

The total amount for Métis settlements legislative requirements and governance efforts is $14.1 million: $10 million is statutory funding provided to the Métis Settlements General Council as part of the Métis Settlements Accord Implementation Act, and $4.1 million is provided to Métis settlements through the matching grants replacement agreement. This leaves approximately $29.9 million for all departmental initiatives, including what we call aboriginal affairs, if you look in the budget, of $26.8 million, which includes operations of First Nations and Métis relations, land and resource issues, and of course strategic services. NADC, which my colleague will talk about: $2.1 million. Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal: $1 million.

In 2005-2006 the department had 90 full-time employees, of which 68 are in my department, 15 with NADC, and another seven assigned to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. With the additional five full-time employees that we're requesting for this year, it would bring the total to 95.

Our strategic priorities in the 2006-2009 business plan continue to identify those priorities which we want to pursue. Of course, we want to make sure that consultation becomes a strong tenet of our budget, and it's self-explanatory from what I was able to explain. Building aboriginal self-sufficiency is something that we all think that we should do, but we don't quite know how to do it, so naturally we're working with the First Nations to see how we can do that. Of course, for the Métis, helping Métis settlements to prepare for the end of the statutory funding in 2007.

First Nations and Métis economic participation is something that we hear continuously, and we are making every attempt to ensure that we are involved with them.

Northern development, of course, is pretty self-explanatory. Through cross-ministry partnerships within government we want to make sure that we enhance the quality of life of aboriginal people in areas such as education, health, and employment issues.

Another core focus of the department is northern development. At this time, especially with the Northern Alberta Development Council's activities, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the chair of the NADC, be able to give an outline of the council's activities.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It indeed gives me great pleasure to give you a presentation about the Northern Alberta Development Council. The need for the council, I would suggest, is probably greater now than it ever has been. While the opportunities are great in northern Alberta, the challenges that northern Albertans face have also increased and very much need to be addressed.

We have what I would consider inadequate transportation and infrastructure in comparison to the amount of activity that we're having and the increase in that activity that takes place particularly in the industrial areas.

We have a relatively small and sparse population. Doing business in a sparse population costs more. Doing business where the distances are so much further also provides its challenges.

We need to increase the skill levels of our population. We need to utilize the population and the contributions of all members of our population.

The challenges of being a resource-based economy are very much ones, I would say, of accessibility and the ability to access those resources. We need to work with our partners to support and further encourage value-added diversification in our regions. There is no question at this time that the oil and gas industry is the driving force of the northern economy. We need to do more to sustain our economy not only when the oil and gas prices are high but also keeping in mind when the prices fall or when they deplete. When those resources deplete, we need to be able to sustain not only the north but also all of Alberta.

NADC's role in helping to chart the course of the north will be increasingly vital as the region becomes more important economically to the province. Mr. Chairman, NADC is working to increase skill development. Together with Advanced Education we do provide bursaries to approximately 250 Alberta students in a wide range of programs. These students then return and live in northern communities.

The NADC strongly believes in developing northern transportation corridors, including air, road, and rail. Air is extremely important to us as for some of our isolated communities it's the only link to the outside world. It gives us an opportunity also in making sure that we have contact with our health authorities or our health services in the larger centres. When we look at roads, as I said before, the distance between our communities, the distance between our populated areas is so vast, and we need that connection. I want to also say that the rail is critical in order to enable us to deliver our product to market. The north east-west connector is required to link Alberta to Saskatchewan and British Columbia and, ultimately, coastal waters for the movement of northern products to markets.

With continued support for the NADC and its initiatives, NADC can help northern communities develop their economic base and increase their economic contribution to the Alberta advantage. Increasing the economic base of northern Alberta increases the economic base for all of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, I very much enjoyed working with the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, and I look forward to continuing to work in supporting northern Alberta. Thank you so much.

Ms Calahasen: Just a comment. I just wanted to say that I look forward to . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, your time has elapsed.

Ms Calahasen: Oh, is it up? Okay. I'll look forward to answering any questions. That's what I was going to say.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to begin debate on the aboriginal affairs budget. If I may, I'd like to divide my time into two or three smaller blocks if that's acceptable so that I can get some answers from the minister.

Once again I see a fairly substantial increase in the aboriginal affairs budget this year. In fact, back in I think it was '04-05, the aboriginal affairs budget was just about $16 million. Now we're looking at a budget of $24 million. That's gone up almost $9 million. I'm not saying that this is an altogether bad thing. I think that we should be spending a substantial amount of money on our aboriginal people and Métis people. But, again, it's awfully difficult to tell from a budget report if we're actually getting value for our money.

Now, I'm having sort of a case of déjà vu here, Mr. Chairman. Last year when we were doing the budget debate, I had exactly the same problem. We had a line that said aboriginal affairs and one large amount of money: a single line, aboriginal affairs, $22,292 million. That was the extent of the information. This year we have exactly the same situation: aboriginal affairs, $24,624,000.

You know, Mr. Chairman, when I look through the rest of the budget document, I can't really find any other department that dismisses 70 per cent of its budget in one line. It makes it very difficult to accurately debate what's in the budget, and I think it's important that we do bring up some of the items that are contained in it.

I would like to refer back to a letter that the minister wrote to me last year when I asked her to outline what was in the budget and to expand on a few of these things in her first set of answers to me. In last year's budget the aboriginal affairs total included aboriginal initiatives worth $5.7 million; strategic services, $1.7 million; aboriginal land and legal issues, $2.5 million; aboriginal consultation, $6.8 million; Métis settlements ombudsman, $450,000; Métis settlements land registry, $222,000. I would like the minister to take a little bit of time and tell us if these are roughly the same numbers for this year or if they're substantially different or if we're seeing the same things being funded.

I'm particularly interested in the aboriginal consultation, which the minister mentioned before. I believe last year we were looking at – I think she said that it was $5 million. I was under the impression that it was predominantly for – sorry; what was the name of the document? – the aboriginal consultation policy, and I think most of the money went into that. That document is now almost a year old, a year old on May 16, I think, and I'd just like to know if the funding for that is finished or if we are going to see more of that. So if you can update us on the status of that document, particularly what the reaction was from the aboriginal community if you have any sort of surveys or research that has been done to see what they thought of it.

As I recall – and I have it right here in front of me – it was a rather thin document. It was all of six pages. In my discussions with aboriginal leaders it was sort of shrugged off and not considered to be really a particularly important document, and they had some serious concerns about it.

I'm glad to see so much money is going into traditional use studies. Again, these are things that we've heard are very important to the aboriginal community, and I hope that you're going to continue with this. I understand a large part, as you said, of the budget increase is because of the traditional use studies. Again, this would have been a lot easier if I had known about this ahead of time. So if I could ask if in future budget documents the minister would please break down the department the way she did in the letter that she sent to me last year, a more itemized listing so that we can have a little bit better debate and a better idea of where all the money is going. As I said, we had an awful lot of money wrapped up in one line. If I could get a commitment from the minister to next year include more information in the budget. I don't know if that was a yes or a no look on her face. It's kind of hard to tell. I don't know if she's trying to hide anything from me; I kind of doubt it. But it is very difficult to do this without enough information.

I'd just like to summarize a few of the things that I would like you to answer in your first set of answers, please. I'd just like to confirm if the aboriginal consultation is carrying on or whether that document is finished, if you would confirm that you will improve the documentation or the line items in the budget so that we have a little bit more to go on, and on the consultation process what the status is right now and the reaction from the aboriginal community to the consultation process.

I think that I gave you a fair amount to answer there. I would like to give you a few minutes to answer and then come back with some more questions if I may.

3:30

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I know that's always a question: where has the money gone? That's always an issue. I'll just give you a breakdown as to what's happened. In 2006-07 budget summaries, of course, it's $26.776 million. Minister's office is at $380,000. Corporate Services is $1.772 million, which includes budgets for the deputy minister, communications, information technology, and, of course, financial services. Strategic services receives $3.695 million, which includes such things as federal/provincial relations, cross-ministry initiatives, and urban aboriginal initiatives.

The other part that we put money into, of $9.924 million, is First Nations and Métis relations. First Nations economic partnerships initiative is included in there, and that's what I was explaining, getting First Nations ready for what they sometimes call job-ready or partnership-ready. Of course, First Nations relations, and that's dealing with issues such as described earlier in my speech, and Métis relations.

The next area is land and resource issues of $11.005 million. That deals with consultation and traditional land-use studies, land negotiations, whatever negotiations we do have ongoing. Of course, that's to remove barriers to on-reserve economic development.

Mr. Chairman, the other part is on consultation. You wanted to know: what is the status of that? The consultation, as you know, was approved by cabinet on May 16, 2005. It's been a year and some months since we've put that into play. This actually brought together what we call a cross-ministry team comprised of six departments, and of course we're the lead in that respect. We have Environment, we have Energy, we have Sustainable Resource Development, we've got Justice, and we've got Community Development as the cross-ministry initiative because, no matter what happens, these different ministries are all impacted on any issue relative to First Nations. So we want to make sure that they're at the table. They've been excellent. Our ministers have been excellent. For our ministry it has just been incredible working with some of the areas.

Of course, one of the areas that we've been working on is on status with First Nations and industry in sort of advisory groups. We've developed what we call a framework document for the operational guidelines. We are actually in the process of doing that. That's with First Nations as well as with industry. We're not there yet, but we're getting close. We did develop an interim strategy for us to use for this year so that everybody knew what needed to be done and what could be done and how we should interact with each other. We did do that this year until we were finished the guidelines.

We hope that that framework will be done by spring 2006 and operational guidelines, of course, by August of 2006. We're pretty close, but we're not there yet. I was hoping that we'd be able to get that done, but we haven't yet.

We have what we call a tripartite approach as well. In this we embarked on a tripartite approach where representatives from First Nations, industry, and government have formally met together to discuss target dates, and of course the deliverables of that specific area. We have just begun, and it's clear to everyone who was at the table that consultation will be ongoing – it's not just once, but it's ongoing – and that we continue even after completion of the guidelines. So everybody knows that it's going to be ongoing and that we have to continue to do that.

We have a quarterly newsletter, and I think you've received that. I've sent that to you before. The cross-ministry working group has also published a quarterly newsletter. We call it, I think it was, fast facts, and it's intended to communicate progress and key dates to all parties. Of course, the department website houses updates and information on the framework as well as on the guidelines. So if you look on your www.gov.ab.ca and click on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Alberta, you will see my beautiful face there, but not only that – I thought everybody was not awake here – you will also see that we've got a listing of activities and that is updated on a regular basis so that we can ensure that we have information updated for the people.

What have we accomplished to date? That's always a big question because everybody says: well, you spend so much money on aboriginal people, so what in the world have you accomplished? As a result, you know, we always look and say: what are our deliverables here? What is it that we need to do to make sure that we do this? I know that everybody says: well, we're supportive of aboriginal issues, but we want to see something happen. Right? It's never trying to make sure that the First Nations are going to be prepared to do a number of things on their own as well.

Let me just give you an idea. We participated in developing the guidelines, as I said. The First Nations used this funding program to engage with the government on the development of the consultation guidelines because we need to make sure that they have the capacity to do that. That's a very important thing. The government of Alberta's First Nations consultation policy that was approved certainly provides us with the ability to be able to move the money into that area. We have a project plan in place and a target date, as I indicated, for the guidelines. Of course, there's always a growing ability and willingness of First Nations to participate in this consultation process.

On that note, you indicate that you had spoken to a few aboriginal groups or First Nations leaders. I'm not exactly sure. I would say that the majority, if not all, Treaty 6, 7, and 8 have all participated in our consultation guideline development as well as in the policy. In the beginning they weren't sure whether or not they wanted to be involved in a policy, but as they began to see what it could produce and how they can become engaged and how they can engage industry so that they can begin to see the benefits, we saw that the First Nations were willing to come on board and work with us in good faith. As a result, we have made sure that we are working with them to ensure that what we are going to bring forward is going to be applicable to all that do anything on resource development.

The consultation offices. I'll just give you an example: the First Nations consultation offices. We have 15 First Nations, six tribal councils or regional organizations, one treaty organization, and three nonstatus communities that have established a one-window consultation office to deal with resource development. I remember at one point in time when you talked to me, you told me that one of the problems was: who is it that's in charge when you go to the community? Well, that has been the issue when we're dealing with First Nations as well. So what we have done with the consultation is to make sure that there is going to be a one-window approach so that when industry goes – and industry have often said: who is it that we get in touch with? – into that area, they'll be able to know who they can contact and how they can get that information to the people as to what they are intending to do and how they can be involved.

We also have the Woodland Cree First Nation community consultation office. That's also a one-window approach. We have the Loon River First Nation and, of course, Lesser Slave Lake Indian Regional Council. As my colleague the NADC chair indicated, northern Alberta is where most of the activity is occurring, and as a result, the First Nations in those areas are also wanting to be part of the economic scene. So this is basically trying to pull it all together and make sure that they are. They are Albertans too.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you. I still didn't get an answer to the change in the way you're going to do your budgeting, which I would appreciate. Just say yes or no. If you don't want to do it, I'd like to know why you wouldn't like to do it. As I said, I think the public needs to have some idea. I know that not too many people look through budget documents, but it would be a very valuable tool for myself or for anybody else who wants to look through these documents. If you could commit to changing that for next year so that it's more in line with other budget documents that we have here.

Secondly, regarding consultation. I did ask if you know whether you've done any surveys, a postconsultation document and see what the aboriginal community thinks of it and if you have anything that you can show us or tell us about.

On to a couple of other items. The Métis settlements legislation, I believe, expires in '07, I think that's correct, the $10 million a year payment. I'd just like to quote something from the business plan. On page 62 it says: "While the Settlements have made significant progress towards greater self-reliance, consideration of strategies to continue that progress is required." Can you put that into some form of English that makes a little bit more sense? Does that mean that this is not working well; it's working well? Do you anticipate at the end of 2007 that we're going to have to renew the agreement? What can you tell us about that?

While still on the topic of the business plan there's a bit of an anomaly in the 2005 business plan to this year that I'd like you to address. The 2005 business plan on page 118 under core business 1, goal 2, line 2.a was: Métis settlements self-generated revenue from industrial taxation, user fees and levies. There was a target of $4.09 million for '05-06 and further goals going up to '08. I can't find that line anywhere in the business document for this year. I'm wondering if it has been dropped, if it was inadvertently dropped, if it's placed somewhere else. It seems like it's an interesting piece of information. I don't know whether it means that they're working more towards generating their own revenue or exactly what it means. Can you tell us what it meant in the first place, and why it has disappeared from this year's document?

On to another slightly larger topic: the Kelowna accord. I know that the Kelowna accord is not in your budget, and it was a federal government responsibility. It was still a very substantial agreement, $5.5 billion. It took several years to cobble this together. Then the new Conservative government came in, your Conservative cousins – I've been looking for a chance to say that for about a year now, and there it is – your Ottawa cousins pulled the plug on it. Apparently, they're going to substitute it with their own plan worth substantially less money than we have right now.

I wonder if the minister agreed with the cancellation of the Kelowna accord and if there's anything that the minister is looking at to sort of fill in the gaps which the cancellation of the accord has left. I mean, we had a major agreement here that was going to impact on aboriginal lives for some time. Is there anything that you see as the aboriginal affairs minister that you can move in to fill the void? Or if you actually agreed with the cancellation of the accord? I believe your exact wording was that it was sad. But, you know, is sad enough? I would like to hear a little bit of your opinion on the Kelowna accord and what you can do as an aboriginal affairs minister.

I have more questions than that, but I'd be happy to just hear your answers now and then get back to you a little bit later on. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, you asked quite a lot of questions there, so what I'll do is attempt to answer as many as I can. What I'll do is, first of all, thank you. I will commit to making sure that we have a breakdown in the budget because I think it's very easy, you know. I mean, it's not a huge task. It's just very small, so I guess that's what we were doing. I will make sure that we do that next year. We'll continue to do whatever we can.

Yes, settlements. You gave me a whole series of questions. Métis settlements, those seven, are we going to renew the agreement, the self-generated targets? Okay. Is it dropped? Well, let me talk about the Métis settlements. What we've done is that we actually did a process called a transition assessment and planning process, it's called TAPP. What we wanted to do is to make sure that we reviewed the progress toward the goal of self-reliance and to develop recommendations which would contribute to ongoing progress towards self-reliance, which was something that the Métis also wanted to see happen. Because that agreement was over and the statutory funding will end in '07, we wanted to make sure that we engaged the settlements. In the last few years since I've been minister, I've been talking to the settlements to tell them that we have to start planning. We have to put together what it is that the requirement will be because we don't know what the requirement will be.

When you were asking about that information on the self-generated target dollars, that was one of the reasons why we had that in there: to be able to determine how far they had come. But because of the way that it was worded, it was something that we wanted to redo again and see where we're at. As a result, we removed that one, and then we'll be putting another one in to be able to identify what we need to do for that. That's working with the settlements; it's not something that we want to do unilaterally. We want to make sure that we have something that we can use as a target, a measurable outcome, so we will continue to work with the settlements on that.

What we wanted to do on the whole issue is develop that process so that we can see where they want to go, what it is that they're going to need. It's like municipalities. You know, they're always knowing that there's going to be a portion of dollars that will probably always come from government. We want to see where that gap is, and we want to be able to work with the settlements to see where it is that we need to go. We're still working on that, and we'll continue to work with the settlements on that issue.

As you know, establishing a governance structure as well as providing land for Métis people is a first across Canada, and it's the only one across Canada. The Métis settlements certainly want to make sure that they continue to salvage that and do whatever needs to be done. We've done a lot of data collection, of course, on many of these issues, and even though we've made significant progress towards that goal of the legislation, the fulfillment of the goals has not yet been achieved, so we want to be able to go towards that.

We made amendments to the Metis Settlements Act, if you recall. It was my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake who was involved in that, and those amendments were to make sure that we did changing in the decision-making process, the elections, and the ability of Métis settlements to enact new policies so that they could contribute toward the goal of self-reliance.

As I indicated, the Premier signed recently, actually just this last year – was it just last year? He signed that agreement on how we can explore ways of being able to see how we can work together to achieve the goal of self-sufficiency and work towards some sort of an agreement.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hard work that the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development has done to prepare this budget and the work of her ministry management and staff as well. Certainly, it's a very straightforward document. I appreciate having the role of a constructive critic to go through it. It's very easy to follow, and I appreciate the efforts that went into it.

The Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is a very wide-ranging ministry, and like many of our other ministries in this government it really touches on other important ministries and areas of concern. As the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul pointed out, we often look north to the wealth that we are enjoying in this province, yet I think the reciprocal investment in northern Alberta for development of social services and infrastructure and all of the various human and natural needs that we administer here in this province is sometimes not even close to being commensurate with the wealth that we take out of that area.

I believe that this particular ministry has as its mandate, above all, to ensure that we are giving in equal amounts to what we take from the north. The people that live in northern Alberta and the wonderful resources that we have in northern Alberta deserve nothing less. It's a place where our future lies in many ways for the province, and we have to make sure that we manage that in the most judicious way possible.

The budget for this year for Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is $5 million more than last year. This is, of course, $3.3 million to assist in the acceleration of the traditional use studies, which are meant to assist First Nations to map sites of historical, cultural, and spiritual significance. Completion of this TUS is a key component of the government's consultation initiative. This is very directly linked to resource development and land management because, of course, we have to recognize the cultural and spiritual significance of different places before we can develop different regions of the north in a responsible manner. This is an important initiative, and I certainly am fully supportive of it.

Other parts of the budget look to assist the ongoing development of accountable self-administering, self-regulating, and self-reliant Métis settlement organizations, again a very, very important component of the budget of this ministry. There certainly are areas of concern I have in regard to how this ministry assists this goal, although, at least in principle, on paper we do have laudable intentions in regard to the Métis settlements throughout northern Alberta, and for that I am grateful. This is a very vibrant and important part of our overall cultural fabric in this province, and in fact we can benefit, all of us, from the existence and the flourishing of these settlements, I believe, and we need to do everything we can to invest in their future.

Aboriginal Affairs' budget is also meant to be promoting social and economic development. It's meant to be collaborating with other ministries to work on specific problem areas. There are areas of concern, and certainly I will be speaking on a couple of those areas here this afternoon.

Finally, looking for the goal of self-reliance for aboriginal people throughout the province: I think that that again is certainly a laudable goal on paper, although sometimes I'm wondering what, in fact, we are doing in reality to forward that notion.

Perhaps I'll start with that last goal there, Mr. Chairman, to make my comments on specific areas of the budget: improving the quality of life for aboriginal people with the goal of self-reliance. Of course, most aboriginal people in this province are self-reliant. It's important to recognize that. Part of, I guess, the integrity of an individual is to know that they have the freedom and the latitude to make decisions about their future and about their own economic future. Most aboriginal people are in that position. We need to defend and strengthen that position so that they can stay that way. Often there is this very broad misconception that there is money being poured into aboriginal initiatives without anything coming out the other end. We as a Legislature look for efficiencies in the public expenditure of monies, but certainly it's important to recognize that, in fact, aboriginal people are self-reliant and are independent and have the freedom to make those choices, economic choices especially, so we have to work based on that premise.

Anyway, that being said, on the improvement of quality of life for aboriginal people, I have a number of questions to direct to the minister. She can answer them at her freedom, whatever she wants to do, in writing or here this afternoon.

The first one is that I want to ask the minister what she is doing about this issue I brought up yesterday in my private member's statement, which is the very large overrepresentation of aboriginal people in corrections facilities. The minister during the budget for the Solicitor General said that our population of aboriginals in Alberta is about 7 per cent or so. Actually, I would say perhaps a little bit higher. However, he said that aboriginal people make up 30 per cent of the adult in-house correctional centre counts and approximately 38 per cent of the young offender in-house correctional centre counts. This is an issue that, as I spoke about yesterday briefly, reflects very poorly on what we have been doing here as a province and as a society to address poverty issues, to address sort of addiction issues, and to address the migration of aboriginal people from the rural areas into the city.

This is a very large social phenomenon that we will be seeing over the next many, many years, people moving from the rural areas to the cities, to Edmonton and Calgary and other centres. We must be sure that we are allowing a smooth transition for people to do so. We're not going to turn the clock back on this migration of people but, rather, to make sure that there are programs available, housing available, and schools that are appropriate to meet the needs of people moving in from the rural areas. So this is one concern that I have, and certainly there are many others in regard to why we have such a high prison population of aboriginal descent in this province.

I think that this is a good starting place for us to focus our energies in this ministry, and that's why I'm asking: what specific budget initiatives do we expect to see to tackle this problem? As I said yesterday in my member's statement, we have an opportunity now to build structures to defuse the situation. If we allow things to continue the same way, we're contributing to what I would say is a powder keg of social problems in this province that will spill over to affect all of us. Certainly, for such a high percentage of aboriginals to be in the correctional centres is a very debilitating thing for families and for the individuals themselves who find themselves in the cycle of a prison system, and we need to do something more.

Another question I would like to ask the minister, if possible, please, is: what new funding program support is being offered to native friendship centres? These centres have been doing yeoman's work, a very effective use of public monies to create cultural centres for aboriginal and Métis people in the cities and towns around the province. I have at least two of these facilities in my own constituency. They are wonderfully vibrant centres of pride and a place to teach culture and diversity and acceptance. I know that they're always riding on the edge in terms of financing, and I would like to encourage more support being directed towards native friendship centres, and I'm asking the minister what she has up her very fine sleeve in that regard.

The third question in regard to quality of life that I have to ask this afternoon is: how is the minister co-ordinating efforts with the Minister of Community Development to prepare education and other sorts of campaigns to combat discrimination and prejudice against First Nations peoples? It's like talking about the elephant in the room, Mr. Chairman, when I speak of the high prison population of aboriginal people, and certainly it is in no small part due to a lingering racist sort of feeling in our community toward aboriginal people. It's a battle that is not easy to fight, but it's absolutely essential to fight, to break down these barriers through education and contact so that we're not perpetuating this disease of prejudice against a certain group of people here in the province. Investing in campaigns to combat this is absolutely essential, and I would ask what we might be able to do, not just with the Community Development minister but also with the Department of Education in this regard. I think it's important.

I am glad to see that certainly there is a focus on the Métis settlements in the budget, and I just wanted to comment on that briefly as well.

Another issue that I'd like to speak about just very briefly is the Métis interim harvesting agreement. I guess what I would be asking for, Mr. Chairman, is what the minister is proposing to do to attempt to build a lasting agreement that is going to work for all stakeholders – in this case, really, all Albertans – in regard to what sort of Métis harvesting agreement we can come up with on a more permanent basis.

We saw quite a reversal of the position of the interim agreement. I certainly do have sympathy with the minister in regard to how it was necessary to have some sort of thing in place. In the wake of the Powley agreements we had to act on something and sort of feel the issue out to some degree. I know that there is a huge frustration in regard to really knowing what sort of harvesting, what sort of hunting and fishing activity is going on in the rural areas, especially in the north, since this is such a vast place and is really impossible to monitor in any real way.

The best conservation system that we have, just like any law that we create in our society, is for people to buy into that law and to internalize it in their own behaviours. Right? When I drive my car or do things in the public realm, it's not the fear of the police that's monitoring my behaviour. Rather, it's an acceptance of a set of rules or regulations that you see are going to be for the safety, for the welfare of yourself and your family and everybody else. So the same thing with whatever agreement we do come up with in regard to hunting and fishing and harvesting of natural resources in general in the north: it has to be something that people will buy into and internalize and monitor themselves on.

If I do have one criticism of the interim harvesting agreement, it's that it gave this feeling amongst the other hunting and fishing population that perhaps someone was gaining an unfair advantage, so maybe it was easy for them to not comply with the law as well. When you create the situation where people perceive that something is unfair, then they will say: well, the laws aren't working anyway, so why should I follow them? So this is a very, very dangerous thing to play with. I'm actually glad that there was some push back and that we had the MLA task force on this to perhaps be a moderating influence on the whole discussion.

Now, here we are. We need to create something that's going to last. We need to create something that people will buy into, and ultimately it has to include the conservation of the resources that we're finding under dispute in the first place because, of course, Mr. Chair, if we have a situation where our wildlife populations and fish populations are being depleted not just through hunting but through the loss of habitat of these wildlife populations, then of course it's a moot point to discuss who gets to harvest what if there's nothing left to hunt or to fish. So that has to be a factor as well.

So I certainly welcome the discussion and would be happy to contribute to the discussion, to a solution and would like to see what specific elements of this budget the minister has to put in place a dialogue for interested parties to come to some long-term resolution in regard to the Métis harvesting controversy.

One more issue that I did want to bring up is the whole issue of labour, encouraging labour force initiatives amongst the aboriginal population in the north. Of course, the unemployment rate in different places is wildly out of step with the rest of the province, and it's absolutely essential that we continue to hammer away at this. Some people feel as though we're not seeing much improvement, so what's the point? You know, part of the reason that people are moving into the urban areas, this migration from the rural areas, is that people do want something better for themselves and for their families. So, obviously, if the will is there, we have to step up then and encourage that with some programs that are appropriate to the situation that we have at hand.

I do see some marginal increases in the employment rates for aboriginal people in the north, and that's great, but certainly there is a very large population there that is not being employed. We want to reverse that to meet the needs that we have, the labour shortage that we have here across the province but also to break the cycle of poverty, especially for the young people in the north.

So with that, I will leave off, Mr. Chairman, and I look forward to comments from the minister. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to thank you for recognizing the fact that there was a lot of work that went into this budget. My departmental staff certainly play a major role and want to make sure that they address the issues that I think we are all interested in, which is to help improve the lives of aboriginal people, not the fact that we want to do it but that we want to be able to work with the First Nations and the Métis communities. I think that for too long there have been people who wanted to change things, but they wanted to change them for their own reasons rather than for the aboriginal people. So I thank you for that.

Also, I'm glad to see that you are supporting the traditional land-use studies. They are a very important part for aboriginal people. Any kind of historical, traditional sites that they have participated in, it is really important for them that they be mapped. I know that they've been working really hard to make sure that their elders will give them the direction. As well, in many instances there are children that are being asked to be involved. What it has done is that it has increased the knowledge within the community of not only the medicinal sites but also the cultural sites and all the other kind of historical sites that we do have. So I think that it has opened up a lot of education that needed to be done and the interaction between the elders and the youth. So I think that's a very, very important component, and I'm glad that you're supporting that. So I appreciate those comments.

Now, in terms of some of the other areas that you have requested information on, I'll start out with a number of other places here that I think I really need to deal with. You were talking about the overrepresentation in the correctional facilities. The overrepresentation of the aboriginal people in the corrections system is sometimes a result of what happened in early childhood and in many instances the education. People don't have enough education to be able to deal with the challenges in life.

What we as a government have been working on and working in co-operation with the Minister of Education is the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit policy. That policy identifies different strategies for working with a community to see how we can improve the outcome of children who are going to school so that we don't see the high dropout rates that have occurred in the past. So we see that there are many liaison officers that have been hired. There are many other strategies that are being utilized by different school divisions and boards that want to see things happen. So we see that now really coming forward. I am a very strong proponent of making sure that we do implement those recommendations that have been made, as well, by the Commission on Learning. As you will recall, there were, I think, about 15 recommendations on aboriginal learning. On that you will see that they were trying to address the very concerns that you're talking about which lead in many instances to people being involved in the justice area.

So those are some of the places that we've been trying to work on; that is, prevention as well as child welfare. The Children's Services minister has really worked on some of the early intervention and many of those other areas. Certainly, we've been involved with Children's Services in cross-ministry initiatives as well as youth programs that would be able to address some of those concerns. We have also worked with communities to make sure that we look at job skills and training so that for the training and the job skills that they lack we can start to work with Advanced Education and Human Resources and Employment to ensure that we work together.

In my speech I spoke about cross-ministry initiatives. We are involved with various ministries on anything to do with aboriginal issues. I indicated that we're not a program-delivery ministry. We're very strategic. We try to make sure that we advise the Minister of Children's Services, advise the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, advise many of the other ministries to make sure that they understand what aboriginal issues are all about and in some cases northern issues as well. So what we do is make sure that we continue to work with the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice to see how we can have more understanding of aboriginal culture, make sure that they understand that maybe we need to look at ways of working together to ensure that we don't see that overrepresentation.

Hopefully, we can address what I call systemic issues of residential schools. That's another area that we have to deal with. I'm very pleased to see that the federal government is going to honour that agreement that had been made. I'm very proud of the fact that that will happen because there are people still stuck in that area, and we need to move them on. So I think it's important to be able to address that.

The second issue. You talked about the migration of aboriginal people into the cities. We have worked with a number of communities, and we have what we call the urban aboriginal strategy. The urban aboriginal strategy, basically, addresses urban needs so that we can look at a co-ordinated and comprehensive approach on the part of governments and the aboriginal community and other stakeholders who are interested. Calgary, Edmonton, and Lethbridge are urban communities that belong to the urban aboriginal strategy, and the federal government provides significant financial resources to develop and implement community-based processes and strategies. In other communities, like Red Deer and Grande Prairie, my staff at the department is working with interested parties to develop strategies on issues and needs specific to aboriginal people in those communities.

We also work with the AUMA, Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, as well as the AAMD and C, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, to improve relationships between aboriginal communities and these organizations. It is true that the people are migrating into the cities. What are we doing to see what we can do? I have to commend the AUMA and AAMD and C for pulling together what they call an urban aboriginal group committee to see what can be done to address the issues. They have made recommendations as well. The First Nations have also approached us to see what they can do to help us along as they're going through. They do have offices in the cities that try to deal with the people who have migrated to the urban centres.

When you're talking about the friendship centres, I always credit friendship centres for being able to be the transition point. I certainly used friendship centres when I first moved to the city. I am a very strong supporter of friendship centres because I think they do so much work, such as yeoman's work on dealing with the transitional concerns of the aboriginal community. It's almost the first place where people go to because there's nowhere else to go. So they have prepared some really fantastic work and done some really fantastic work.

I want to talk about the friendship centres because I really am a very strong believer that we have to provide them with more funds. I really do. We will do whatever we can. I gave them some advice as to how we can begin to work so that they can garner support from us as we go through with our budget. Certainly, we'll be requesting you guys as MLAs to help as well so that you can also support that information and so they can spread the word as to what they've been doing. Even though they've done some really great things, not everybody knows that they have. What I did with them was ask them to do business plans, so they can share those with the people, and then I provided dollars for somebody to go help them with their business plans. They've worked some really fantastic business plans, and I know that they'll continue to do so. We do give $24,000 annually to 20 community friendship centres. The majority of their funds come from the federal government, as you know. But the way that they've been looking at funding, I didn't have enough money to be able to spread for them to get more money. I was able to glean about $100,000 in additional funding, so what we did then was that we asked them to provide us with some ideas as to what they wanted to do in addition to what they've been doing.

What we found was that the funding that they requested – and I'll just give you a listing of those. The Red Deer Native Friendship Centre received $20,000 to establish its community liaison function. High Prairie Native Friendship Centre asked for $20,000 to provide youth programs. Alberta Native Friendship Centre Association asked for $25,000 to assist in project management training to individual friendship centre personnel. The friendship centre in Peace River, Nistawoyou Association Friendship Centre, received $9,994 to assist with a spiritual and health gathering. They deal with everything. It's not just a transition, but it's health; it's everything. Sik-Ooh-Kotoki Friendship Society in Lethbridge to assist with youth initiatives received $25,000.

So whenever I was able to get more money or find money somewhere, we were able to provide it to the friendship centres so that they can continue the good work that they've been doing.

They had a great loss recently, the association itself. Their executive director passed away recently. He is going to be a great loss, and that's something that I know they're going to have to deal with.

You also wanted to know what we are doing with quality of life, community development to combat discrimination. Well, that's a big one when we're talking about discrimination. When I was first here, for many years I certainly know what it felt like to be treated differently. As a result, understanding those kinds of things, what we want to do is make sure that we deal with as many of the groups as possible. Community Development, as you know, has the mandate to work on that specifically.

We have some people who have been dealing with that issue in different ways. I'll give you an example. If you recall, there have been some really negative articles, you know, about being an aboriginal person. The aboriginal community itself has taken control of that. They said: "We want to be able to do it. We don't need somebody to talk on our behalf." They've taken that on themselves and decided to address anything that's overt, to be able to deal with it head-on, and I have really appreciated their work in doing that. That tells me that we have gained a lot of respect for ourselves.

The Chair: Hon. members, the noise level is getting too loud in here. Would you please keep the conversations down?

Hon. minister, please proceed.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

As a result, what I see is that they want to be able to take control of that, and they want to be able to address that, and they've been doing it. We'll be there to support them as they need us, but as you know, as a nation gets stronger, they begin to deal with those issues themselves. So I see that as really strong, and I want to commend them on that.

You also talked about the aboriginal labour issue. Aboriginal people actually participating in Alberta's economy have historically higher unemployment rates compared to all other Albertans, but it was really nice to see that the off-reserve aboriginal participation rate in March 2006 was 69.3 per cent, an increase of 3.7 per cent from March 2005. I was happy to see that we were starting to record that kind of information, mostly because when we know what's not going on, we know how we have to address it because then it gives us some ability to be able to know what we should do.

As a result of the higher than normal participation rate of aboriginal people in the labour force, what we started to look at was: how can we work with the aboriginal community? As a result, the Minister of Advanced Education started to work on apprenticeship possibilities. As you know, the number of aboriginal apprentices in Alberta recently reached 1,126, an increase of 888 apprentices in less than four years. That is something that needs to be spoken about, and we have to be able to talk about how good this is because what we see now is not the only fact. The aboriginal community is getting educated. They're also getting the training and the skills to be able to take advantage of what's happening here so that we can begin to see that high unemployment rate drop, just the way it has with other Albertans. So we want to continue to do that.

Off-reserve aboriginal-specific data for Alberta indicated, actually, a few changes, and I want to just talk about the unemployment rates over the past year if I can. The total Alberta in March '05 was 3.5 per cent. March '06 was 3.3 per cent. The change was minus .2 per cent. The total Alberta aboriginal was 12.4 per cent in March '05. In '06 it was 7.5 per cent. The change was minus 4.9 per cent. As an example, Métis was 9.4 per cent in '05. In March '06 it was 6.4 per cent. The change is minus 3 per cent. So when you look at all that, it tells you a lot of items which I think a lot of people don't even recognize.

Now, there was another area that you wanted to talk about. During the past year, actually, April '05 to April '06, aboriginal employment increased by 6,000 new jobs in Alberta. That's significant. That's significant. It's a lot of work, but I know that the aboriginal community is ready to take that on.

Let me now talk about the Métis harvesting. You wanted to know what we are doing with that. Actually, we've accepted the MLA committee. We knew we were breaking new ground when we did the first agreement. It was an interim agreement, and we wanted to make sure that we could deal with the issues so that it didn't create chaos on the land. What we did was that we requested the Métis community to come and work with us. If we hadn't, there were other areas that they could have continued to work on such as private land. They could have gone and hunted on private land without any kind of rules. So what we did was that we asked them to come and work with us, and they did. They took us at our word. We signed the interim agreement until we could find out what was going to be going on.

There were a lot of people who didn't quite understand the interim agreements. There were a lot of people who kind of read more into them than what was there. There was a lot of fearmongering that occurred. There were a lot of areas that, I think, people kind of wondered about, you know. Of course, as a government the suggestion the standing policy committee made was that we have an MLA committee, and we did. There were three MLAs that led that task force, and as a result they made recommendations. Those recommendations were then taken in, and we will be working towards some sort of a – we don't know what the agreement will look like. It's a changing landscape. Even as we're talking here, there are court cases that are coming forward. As a result, we want to make sure that whatever agreement we have will accommodate those kinds of things.

What else is there that you wanted to know? I think that was it for now. Whatever I missed, I will give you in writing.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to thank the minister and her department for their presentation. It's a very, very important department, that probably doesn't have the budget it should have when we look at the importance of aboriginal affairs in the next decade and beyond in Alberta. The linking of aboriginal affairs with northern development, I think, is apt, and there are many issues where aboriginal development is linked with northern development although there are issues in the south as well.

I will begin to talk about some general areas and give a lot of questions on both northern development and aboriginal affairs and some of the ways they do link. First, I'll look at the importance, I think, of positive role models and whether or not the department could do something to improve the highlighting of positive role models for our burgeoning and growing aboriginal population. Edmonton will be the biggest aboriginal city in the country very soon.

I salute the work of the government, individuals, industry, and such. There's a growing number of lawyers, nurses, teachers, tradesmen, entrepreneurs, business leaders, union leaders that are from the aboriginal population, people I've worked with. For example, Dave Tuccaro of Neegan Development, an excellent role model; Doug Golosky of Golosky Trucking and Clearwater Welding; and Mickey Demers: all aboriginal entrepreneurs that have worked to do well in many areas in the north and have developed our economy and trained many aboriginals themselves. Another would be Darrell LaBoucan, the head of the ironworkers' union. There are many. Of course, the minister herself and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: great role models to many in northern Alberta and Alberta as a whole. The government has a clear role in encouraging prosperity and self-reliance, and ensuring that these positive role models are maybe put forward a bit more into our media, into our public viewpoint would be good.

There are a number of issues, and I'll get into particulars. One is actually going back to the Northern Alberta Development Council report of 2003-2004, page 17. I don't see it really addressed completely, and that's the issue in many communities of health and social services per-capita funding and the effect of transient workers. What is being done? This is clearly a cross-ministry initiative. It clearly affects the north and, actually, clearly affects many aboriginal communities as well, especially in the Fort McMurray area but also in Grande Prairie, High Level, and other areas.

Another important issue – it's been touched on – is the training. In the youth apprenticeship learning opportunities program the pilot communities for this program were Lac La Biche, Wabasca, and High Prairie. The increase in apprentices generally in our native population has been welcomed and good. I think a thousand is not bad, but I think realistically it could be 10,000. There are in Canada over 200,000 young unemployed aboriginals, yet we seem to be wanting to import temporary foreign workers. Some of the people that I have talked to that have been the most vociferous, the most angry about the temporary foreign worker agreement for the oil sands have been aboriginals from northern Alberta.

The MOU with the Northwest Territories on training, employment, and transportation. I'd like to hear how the development of that has been in terms of looking at developing young workers for the upcoming pipeline work. Actually, there's quite a shortage of pipeline workers developing right now, and for the people who know the area that the pipelines are projected to go through or are going through, there are some good on-the-job training projects possible there right now.

Northern development. Aboriginal development in the north is very much linked with the development of infrastructure and transportation. I'd just like to hear about the developments. Any possibilities for the road from Peavine to McLennan, which may affect the proposed upgrader in the McLennan area? The road from Wabasca to the heights of land near Suncor, commonly known as Supertest Hill. That would link up the Bigstone Cree – I know that there's one prominent member in this Assembly – and that would link up the many thousands of people in Wabasca-Desmarais and also through the Slave Lake area and the back lakes right to the oil sands where most of the work is being done. Also the road from Fort McMurray to Fort Chipewyan. I've been up on that ice road I think three or four times to a historical community, the oldest community, arguably, in Alberta, Fort Chip.

A couple of related things on transportation which would affect commerce and links with the N.W.T. would be the Hythe-Dawson Creek rail link. What is happening? Also the enhancement of the Mackenzie Northern Railway to the N.W.T. Actually, the Hythe-Dawson one is to B.C.

Now, tourism is something of great potential, I think, for northern Alberta. I don't see too much comment here or too much monies actually being directed to specific aboriginal tourism. I know that there's been some success with the love tours from Japan. The love tours: the aurora borealis, the northern lights, were once shining quite often over Japan, and it seemed to be a good time to conceive a child. Now the aboriginal communities north of Fort McMurray and Fort McMurray itself are setting up tours to see the northern lights, and some people have called these love tours. There's great potential for the whole of northern Alberta for these love tours because of the great displays of aurora borealis, of northern lights, in the north. I think that's something to look at in terms of linking up our aboriginal communities with Japan and other areas.

Another area of tourism development I think is in the adventure tour area. There are tremendously interesting areas in the back lakes and in the sand dunes blowing off Lake Athabasca, little-known sand dunes, fields of sand dunes that look like the Sahara and stretch on for 60, 70, 80 miles. Lake Athabasca, the reed beds of Wood Buffalo, the tremendous natural wonders that are little seen and little developed and hold great potential.

Another area is the traditional land-use studies. This is a question from page 28 of the annual report. I see that data management is somehow included in that, and I don't understand why data management. I wonder how much of the money being apportioned for traditional use studies – I couldn't see that exactly – is actually going to data management. That would be page 28 of the 2004 annual report.

There are many areas regarding the Fort McMurray area. But, first, I'll just touch on the federal urban aboriginal strategy, that the minister mentioned. It's now going on in Calgary, Edmonton, and Lethbridge and looking to be a good initiative for the urban centres. The minister did mention that the ministry itself is doing some work in Red Deer and Grande Prairie. Will there be work with the federal government to extend the urban aboriginal strategy into the other urban areas, especially into Fort McMurray and area, the municipality of Wood Buffalo, and other urban areas of Alberta?

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

I was particularly disappointed with the outcome of the Kelowna accord. I think that that should have been brought through. That agreement should not have been broken, that commitment to aboriginal people across Canada. I think that Alberta may have to step in in Alberta to fill the gap in some places that people were expecting to have come forward from that.

Another issue in northern development. This is the regional issues working group in Fort McMurray, especially the transportation portion of that particular group. That's very important for the Fort McMurray area. We've seen that regional issues working group come down here last year after the issue of the problems of infrastructure in the municipality of Wood Buffalo area, the Fort McMurray area, came to the forefront in the media. You know, they've spoken about the road north of Fort McMurray, that we haven't seen come forward in a meaningful way. I think Fort McMurray residents were first told that that was to be completed past Syncrude in 2004.

It's a matter of safety. There have been many deaths on that highway, and many people are concerned. It's the road to Fort MacKay. It's an area that I think has to somehow be looked at very quickly. I don't know if the regional issues working group is doing that or if perhaps they're actually funded in enough of a manner to look at the transportation needs as well as they should. Certainly, highway 63 became an issue that was a high priority, and it's very important, as the minister of human resources just banged a desk to accentuate. It's very important for both development and for the way that people get to Fort McMurray and the north when they go to work and when they travel to go to their home communities.

The other areas in the regional issues working group. Page 67 of the business plan, on the Northern Alberta Development Council, said that the bursary return rate was 78 per cent. I know that that bursary has been in place for many, many years. I know people that have taken advantage of that. It's been for good use to bring people back to the north. But 78 per cent seems to be a pretty low return rate in many ways. Why is that so low? Why are people not being encouraged to make good on their commitment? If they are not making good on the commitment, is the government getting those bursaries back, or to what percentage is the government getting those bursaries back? Why is the return rate almost three-quarters? It's forecast to get even worse, to go from 78 per cent to 76 per cent.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Going back to the youth apprenticeship and the need for the training of aboriginals and the potential for it, I have seen many, many great tradesmen developed in the last 10 years. Indeed, there are many good mechanics, ironworkers. The Mohawks, for example, in eastern Canada are famous for their skyscraper work and lack of fear, almost, the ability to work – [interjection] There you go – in a way that is both productive and gets the job done. They've developed a reputation whereby they are an employee of first choice.

Certainly, a lot of mechanics and crane operators have developed their entrepreneurial skills by becoming tradesmen first. I mentioned Dave Tuccaro, the president of Neegan Development and other companies, winner of many awards for entrepreneurship. He started as a crane operator, a unionized crane operator as a matter of fact.

There are others. I mentioned as well Doug Golosky. I believe he was an ironworker. He employs many, many ironworkers now himself and pipefitters, equipment operators, and others and developed one of the bigger mining contracting operators or purveyors of heavy equipment operators in Fort McMurray and the oil sands area.

You know, these are tremendous role models, and I think that they should be looked to and also utilized sometimes in helping to train, getting self-reliance, getting entrepreneurs coming forward in the aboriginal community, getting people who are taking the lead in social services, in our unions, in our government and other areas. They're all so important to develop these populations and to ensure that they are seen to be the leaders in our society and to gain the full fruits of our economy.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Calahasen: Sure. There were a lot of questions there, so if I don't answer them all, I'll commit to answering them in written form. Let me just sort of highlight some of the areas that you addressed, Edmonton-Manning. The linkage between aboriginal affairs and northern development is important. I agree. I think whatever happens in aboriginal affairs affects north, whatever happens north affects aboriginal people. The majority of people who live in northern Alberta – well, we don't know; maybe there's a little change now – are aboriginal people. So that's, I think, definitely a good link.

You talked about aboriginal role models. I think that's a really good idea. I mean, I'll just list some of the things we've been doing. Maybe if we haven't hit somewhere where you think there are some possibilities, I'd really like to hear what your suggestions would be because I really like that idea of positive role models and how we can make sure that we highlight them. Let me just give you an idea as to what we've been doing, you know, for role models. We do support the Esquao Awards. It's on Friday, and I think you're going to be there in your fine form. No? Oh, boy. That's not good. But, basically, we do that, and that's promoting role models, female role models. I think that's a really fantastic program, and the awards are really highly regarded by the aboriginal community.

We promote aboriginal partnerships, and of course no matter what happens, whether it's job shadowing or whatever it is, we have tried to encourage that with industry so that people can see that they can do these kinds of things as well. We do National Aboriginal Day. We support the culture and the historical component so that we can sort of let people know and be aware of what the situation is on National Aboriginal Day. It extends to a week, actually.

My staff have been really good in making sure that they are part of whatever happens. They just give of themselves, and in most cases they volunteer. So they've been really excellent role models themselves because I have, in fact, qualified aboriginal employees in my department, and they are looked upon as people who can lead the way in many instances. So I'm really proud of the fact that they've been able to do those kinds of things. Those are examples of areas where we have been involved in the aboriginal role model type of scenario.

The other one, of course, is that we support government publication on aboriginal role models, and that's done through Community Development. We certainly support the minister and his ministry. Just as an example, the chamber of commerce does a really great thing on business awards. They do it for aboriginal organizations, and they do it for aboriginal youth awards that they have just to highlight the fact that aboriginal people are getting involved in the economic scene. There's also the Chamber of Resources. In their awards they recognize successful aboriginal partnerships. I think that Dave got the award in the last little while. My department certainly supports all these initiatives. As I said, they give a lot of their time. It's not part of their job, but they do. So I commend them on what they have been able to do.

Now, you have a number of other issues. On NADC I might want my colleague to get up and do a little speech on some of these areas that you have requested. I'll touch on some, but I think that he would be in a better position to talk about the bursary, you know, the rate. The return rate has actually increased from 74 per cent to 78 per cent. He might want to expand on the bursary and what's been happening. It's a fantastic bursary. As a northerner I have been involved with that bursary, and if it wasn't for that bursary, many northerners would not have been able to be as successful as we are today. I think that that bursary needs to also be provided with a lot of support, so whatever support you can give.

The other part I'll talk about, though, is the temporary work group that you were talking about. We work in a lot of areas on the labour force. I'll just give you an example. Not only is it that we work on making sure that the education – as I indicated earlier to our other colleague, we're trying to work with the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit policy and implement that to increase the high school rates or even up to grade 9 if we can. But if we can keep them to grade 9, then they'll go to grade 12. So we're doing everything that we can to make sure that that occurs.

The other part, of course, is what we call the youth apprenticeship projects, which are key to making sure that they know that there are different streams that they can go into. Of course, the Alberta aboriginal apprenticeship program, which is a very important component, as I indicated earlier: an increase of 888 apprentices in less than four years. That is an incredible amount. Advanced Education and Human Resources have been involved in that. They've really worked in a number of areas.

Let me just talk about that because I think it's important for you to know. In Alberta we have an aboriginal population of approximately 6.7 per cent out of 3 million people. Even if we were to train all the people that are of aboriginal descent, we couldn't keep up with the labour needs. But it's important to note that we need to make sure that we train our own first and we make those opportunities available to our own first. I strongly believe that that's what needs to happen, and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment has made sure that we continue to do that. We want to ensure that they have those opportunities available to them, but they have to be ready to take those opportunities, for that availability.

In order for us to be able to do that, as I indicated, the educational stream has to be done, but we also have to make sure that we look at how we can help them along. I know that the bursary system is one way. We have a lot of different programs that we could utilize to ensure that we have an ability to move those people who are ready to go into those areas and be primed to be able to do that. That's why when you look at my budget, you will see in there not only the capacity issue but the First Nations economic participation initiative. You will see that we're making sure that they're ready for it. We say pre-employment skills in many instances or preskilled areas. We want to make sure that they're ready for whatever comes their way and they can access that. So we want to make sure that we train our own first, that we're prepared for that.

There is a labour strategy that's going ahead through Human Resources and Employment, and we're involved in that to ensure that we have an aboriginal labour force strategy within that strategy so that we can see some activity there.

You also asked about the MOU in the Northwest Territories. I was tasked to bring that to life, and what we did was pick strategic areas. What we wanted to make sure of: what is it that's really coming down the pike that aboriginal people can take advantage of as well as northerners? So then we specifically picked training. We picked education. We picked transportation issues. Of course, we wanted to make sure that we would look at tourism and ensure that we are all together in terms of what we wanted to do. The Mackenzie pipeline was the huge issue on the economic side. We wanted to see how Alberta could be primed before that pipeline came down. Of course, Alberta Energy is responsible for anything to do with a pipeline, but what we do is try to make sure that all the areas that we need to cover are covered.

You were talking about northern roads. I know that my colleague will talk about this. The northern road strategy has been in place for a while. As a matter of fact, I think it was in 1995 at the northwestern Premier's meeting. The northwestern first ministers had what they called the northwestern road concept. If you look at that road concept, you will see that the road strategy definitely mirrors somewhat what was being recommended.

You spoke about the Wabasca-Fort McMurray connection. We call that the east-west connector. There have been a lot of people who have wanted to be involved in that. Many of the MDs have really pushed to see this happen, and we have thanked them because I think it's really important. It's actually in the MD of Opportunity, so the MD of Opportunity has now come forward and said: "Now we're ready to take this on because it's within our area. What can we do to get the partners together?" That's basically what we're doing with that. There have been no dollars identified. There have been studies done, and we're just trying to find out what is the best way for us to accomplish that road. We're still pursuing all avenues. The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is certainly outside to see what can be done.

You also discussed the Peavine-McLennan connection. As you know, the Bluesky upgrader, hopefully, is going to be going in there, and we're making sure that we try to make that connection happen. The community has been the driving force behind that, and we have supported it a hundred per cent. We'll continue to do that.

You also made mention that there are no dollars for aboriginal tourism. We are not a program deliverer. We don't do that. What we do is encourage the various ministries to deal with these issues.

I just want to talk about this because it's really key to tourism. The Minister of Economic Development, when we spoke, agreed to make sure that we would meet with First Nations and Métis leaders. We did that. We talked about tourism: what should we be doing, and how should we be advancing aboriginal tourism? The minister listened to all their comments. They made recommendations. One of the recommendations was to establish an aboriginal tourism council, which he has done, and we worked with him to be able to see that realized and make sure that the aboriginal product is going to be dealt with.

One of the biggest concerns always when we're dealing with aboriginal tourism or any products is that the aboriginal people have to be involved. So what we did as Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is commit to make sure that we would have the connection to the aboriginal community. Of course, the aboriginal community says: we want to be involved with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. That's basically where we want to go. So when you look at those areas, we don't deliver services. What we do is talk about strategy; we talk about priorities.

You asked about the federal urban aboriginal strategy: will there be an ability to talk about other cities coming on board? Well, we're looking forward to adding more, but that will depend on the federal government as well. We have to work together. We were very blessed to be able to do that with Lethbridge, to add them on, and we'll continue to work on that. Fort McMurray is certainly one of the areas, and Grande Prairie, as you know, is another area that's really growing at a rapid rate. I think they're pretty well prime to be able to do that. We'll just continue to work on that.

You talked about the Kelowna accord. Let me just talk about that. Just as you indicated – and First Nations and the Métis community and the Inuit also indicated this – we were disappointed that it wasn't mentioned in the budget. We are always concerned about the fact when we're dealing with probably the most marginal group of people. So what the First Nations and the Métis and all the aboriginal community tell us is that they do not want the federal government to renege on their responsibility as well. They don't want us to take on responsibilities that they feel are the federal government's. Of course, we want to make sure that we address some of their concerns because they are Albertans too.

So, as a result, we have actually put a lot of money in lots of different areas. Housing is one, the remote housing. The Minister – I'm sure you saw her budget the other day – spoke about some of the affordable housing projects. So when we look at those, those are the kinds of areas that we have been making sure we're involved in, and of course on the consultation and a number of other areas, whether it's a human resource strategy, to make sure that there is an aboriginal strategy; you know, all those areas. So we've been involved as much as we can from the Alberta perspective, but we also want to honour what the First Nations have told us, that the federal government have a fiduciary responsibility.

Bursary. I know that my colleague may want to speak a few minutes on some of these areas. He's very knowledgeable.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: I just wanted to know if we could revert to Introduction of Guests, but he's stayed here long enough now that he's not a guest.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I've just got a couple of items I want to ask the hon. minister. If you refer to the aspect of your goal 3, what I'm wondering about is – when you go to your budget, I'm looking at line 3.0.1. As we're moving forward, you realize that we have lots of pressures in the north, and the big thing is transportation. We had a very great conference in High Level last month. I'm just wondering how we are going to keep this going from the point of view that we're looking only at $785,000 to try and get things moving in the north. You know, that's our last frontier, and we have to make sure that we move forward on that, that we have the interconnectors. A lot of the roads need to be upgraded, and I'm just wondering what your department is doing on that so that we can work with the different communities.

The other thing I'm looking at is the Métis settlements governance, 4.0.1. I notice that we've moved down on that aspect too, and I'm just wondering where we're going on that. Is there a sunset clause on that?

Then if you could explain the aspect of 1.0.3 on the aboriginal affairs side. We're looking at $4,879,000, and I just sort of want a bit more explanation on that. I'm sure that that's covered under goal 1: "Lead the management of significant Aboriginal issues requiring coordinated strategic response and partnerships."

5:00

The other thing is – I know your department doesn't look at this – remote housing. I want to thank the hon. minister and the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment for working on this with the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports because we're able to get some dollars and cents for the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation out of Grande Cache. As you realize, they were displaced from Jasper national park. They're working very well in the Grande Cache area with the different partnerships, but the housing is a big aspect. I'm just wondering how we're going to co-ordinate so that we can move forward on that aspect.

I guess that the other one is, as you realize, the nature in which we have the land deal with them. We have co-operatives and enterprises, and I'm just wondering how we can get some more autonomy there so that we can move ahead and do some more studying from the land issue so that we can have some outline plans, possibly using the hamlet status so that we can work with the MD of Greenview too.

If you could enlighten me on those, I'd greatly appreciate it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just want to address a couple of the issues and the challenges that we do face in northern Alberta. As probably everybody knows, we have spent and paid a lot of attention to the need for professionals, especially in health care, whether it be doctors or whether it be nurses or physiotherapists. I suppose one of our greatest needs is the health care system, professionals in the health care system. But don't isolate it to that one category because we need individuals, we need professionals in all aspects, and the challenge is because of the isolation that is in northern Alberta.

That is why it is so necessary to have the bursaries that we do have in place right now. The bursary rate has improved from the 1974 level to 78 per cent. Of course, there's a lot of room for improvement, and we can't argue that. But we need to continue to strive to develop a bursary system, one that is going to encourage people not only to come to northern Alberta but especially to come back to northern Alberta. If an individual was born in northern Alberta, they are more likely to come back and stay. We need to look at those individuals and encourage them to come back.

Mr. Chairman, I do want to talk about the roads as well, if I can. It is as important as communication when we talk about the roads. When we look at central Alberta and we look at the cities, I say that those roads are the lifelines for individuals not only to get around but to be able to communicate. In northern Alberta, as I mentioned before, the distance that we are challenged with makes it very difficult. We need to focus on major arteries. We need to focus on roads that will encompass energy or gas and oil to deal with the challenges we have of moving product.

Mr. Chairman, when we talk about Alberta and we talk about the northern Alberta development that takes place, we need to look more in depth at adding value. We need to add value to our products in Alberta but, I would say, especially in northern Alberta. We have our forest products. When we look at forest products and we look at adding value, we need to develop our pressboard plants and not only develop them to the stage where we have pressboard plants and ship them to other provinces or to other countries to further add value, but I think we need to do it here.

When we look at agriculture, there is no way that Alberta can survive on the sale of raw products. We need to develop and add value. We cannot compete against South America. We can't compete with Australia in a market where the cost of production is so much higher.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that in order to accomplish some of those goals, we definitely need to continue and enhance our bursary system. It is working very well. I believe that we need to try to add funds into that direction, look at different initiatives, and look at different incentives to bring youth back into northern Alberta. It is very important when we look at northern Alberta communities.

I want to use an example of some of the municipalities right now that are looking at trying to encourage administrators to come back into their communities. They are looking at ways of working with Children's Services and having the Youth Advisory Panel make presentations to municipal councils on how we can encourage youth to come back into rural Alberta. It is a key to our existence. We will never be able to survive if we continue to try to centralize our services and our delivery of services. We need the youth to come back not only for the energy and the gas employment opportunities but for all opportunities.

Mr. Chairman, again, I want to say that the bursary program has worked and is doing a tremendous job. As I said before, I would hope that we could enhance that part of our investment. I just want to thank you for the opportunity to stand up and, you know, explain a little bit about the bursaries and the importance of them.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'd just like to address a couple of comments to the minister, and they're observations that I've made in southern Alberta. One of the things that the hon. member with northern development spoke about were bursaries and also daycare. To me, I see that as a huge issue because I really believe that – particularly with what I see around my area in Lethbridge. I do see many of the young native women obviously having their children much earlier than the average. Their further education is very, very difficult because they don't have proper daycare. When I say proper daycare, although you've said that you don't deliver programs, I think what I would like to see is some kind of a co-ordinated ability for the elder women in our community to be able to create a cultural daycare, so to speak, for some of these young children, to free up the younger teenage moms and even the young 20s moms to be able to go back to school because we are missing out on a huge potential with our native women.

I would just like to share those observations. You can make a comment or otherwise; I'd just like to share that observation.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Chairman, I know that I've just got a few minutes. First of all, I'd like to say thank you to everyone who asked questions. If I didn't address your concerns, we'll certainly put it in writing so that you have the information before you. I've appreciated the recommendations that have come, but I also would like to see some other suggestions like the role model issue. I don't know if we've addressed all that. But if you have any ideas, please let me know.

The Member for West Yellowhead has huge concerns when it comes to his AWN and certainly pushed for housing.

So, Mr. Chairman, I want to say thank you again to everyone.

Mr. Backs: Just to mention some role models that were great leaders, I think, in this Assembly. Many members would agree. Peter Lougheed was a member of Métis extraction who was a great leader in this Assembly; Nick Taylor, the Leader of the Opposition, was also a Métis leader; and, you know, other good role models in our Assembly. There are many, actually, that have excelled in here.

There are a couple of items. I would just perhaps request a written answer on that bursary, you know, some of the specifics to my question. I won't go through them again.

The nontrades area is something I didn't touch on. That's something that was perhaps highlighted in a newspaper article today, I believe it was, in the Edmonton Journal, about the lack of equipment operators, buggy skimmers, Cat skimmers, and such.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $34,003,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, for the following department.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $34,003,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Acting Government House Leader.

Mrs. McClellan: That scares me when you say that.

Mr. Speaker, I think it was a good afternoon of work. I would move that we call it 5:30 and the House adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening, when it would commence in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 10, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2006/05/10

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2006-07

Finance

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to present the Ministry of Finance's estimates for 2006-07, and I'm sure it's a pleasure for everyone to know that this is actually the last department in estimates. It's been an interesting and I think productive and useful exercise.

I have some staff in the gallery. As always, we have a little trouble seeing up there with the light behind them, but I believe Brian Manning, my deputy minister, is there. Bonnie Lovelace is there. Bonnie is the senior financial officer. Nancy Cuelenaere is there. She's the person we phone late at night when we can't find something. She's our acting controller. Darwin Bozek from financial services is there. Marie Iwanow is our new communications director. Maureen Osadchuk from my office I think is no stranger to any of you.

Mr. Chairman, as Minister of Finance I was proud, on behalf of my colleagues in government, to present Alberta's 13th consecutive balanced budget. It is a budget, we believe, that addresses current needs while leveraging today's very strong fiscal standing to help prosperity for future Albertans. We have a lot to be proud of in this province. Our accumulated debt has been eliminated. We still maintain the highest credit rating of any province in Canada, and we have the lowest overall tax load in Canada.

This budget does build on Alberta's tax advantage. There are measures in this budget that will help us maintain our competitive position and enhance the fairness of the tax system. Albertans have already saved $1.5 billion from cuts to personal income taxes between 1999 and 2001. That is a significant number. That includes, of course, implementing the introduction of the 10 per cent single rate.

These savings have been protected year after year by indexing our tax system to inflation. I think that's very important. Albertans will save an additional $77 million in 2006 as a result of the continued indexation of the provincial income tax system, along with an extra $100 increase to basic spousal and eligible dependants tax credits. As well, another very important program, the Alberta family employment tax credit, which benefits low- and middle-income working families, will be fully indexed to inflation beginning July 1, 2006.

Mr. Chairman, along with the enhancements to the personal income tax system, these changes mean a typical working family with two children can effectively earn up to $37,000 before paying any provincial income taxes. Another 140,000 low-income Albertans are also benefiting from changes to health premium insurance subsidies that were introduced in April of this year. The income threshold to qualify for subsidies was raised by $5,000, saving Albertans about another $30 million this year.

We've heard some criticism about our reduction of the corporate tax rate. I'm not sure that anyone in this House at this point would suggest that that was a wrong move, but it's important to put on the record why we feel it's important to continue our target of an 8 per cent corporate tax rate. We were able to move it to 10 per cent this year. What that does is recognize that Alberta and Alberta companies compete in a global economy. It's not just simply a domestic economy anymore. This will save our businesses about $265 million this year – $265 million, because there have been a lot of other numbers cast around – and it will help us in our world-wide competitive position. What may be more important, it sets a foundation for tomorrow's economic growth and job creation. Of course, just to finish the tax section, Alberta has no general sales tax, no capital tax, and no payroll tax.

Maintaining a competitive tax regime isn't the only way that we're helping Alberta's future prosperity. We're also making very significant contributions to savings. Budget 2006 allocates another $1 billion from the estimated surplus into the heritage fund plus another $242 million for inflation-proofing. That's on top of $1 billion that was deposited as of third quarter and $345 million of inflation-proofing last year. We've also been able to add $750 million to the advanced education endowment fund in the 2005-06 fiscal year. We'll also be adding an additional $150 million to the medical research endowment fund. I think that fund speaks for itself, and everyone would agree that that has been an amazing investment.

The Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund is being established this year with a $500 million deposit. Proceeds from that fund will go to support the fight against cancer, and as I said in our budget speech, this will be in collaboration with other countries, with other provinces, and maybe, just maybe, we'll find a cure for some of the cancers that our citizens will face.

I want to just do a very quick overview of our ministry key roles, just to remind all of us. There are a number of key areas and functions. They include the office of budget and management; pensions, insurance, and financial institutions; treasury management; and ministry support services. The ministry also includes, of course, the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation, Alberta Treasury Branches Financial, Alberta Securities Commission, Alberta Insurance Council, the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation, and their subsidiaries.

Alberta Finance's vision is "financial leadership that strengthens Alberta." We believe this budget speaks to that. Our mission is to "provide corporate financial services and manage the province's financial affairs and policies in the interests of [all] Albertans."

Our business plan, I'll just touch on very briefly, has five high-level strategic priorities. These include Alberta's fiscal framework, Alberta's tax advantage, investment management, securities regulation, and pension plan governance. In addition to those priorities, of course, Finance will continue to do the day-to-day managing of the province's finances.

We have three core business goals that support our strategic priorities. The first is fiscal planning and financial management. Our goals are to have "a financially strong, sustainable and accountable government"; to have "a fair and competitive provincial tax system"; and to administer revenue programs "fairly, efficiently and effectively."

Our second core business is investment, treasury, and risk management. Our goals there are to soundly manage financial assets and liabilities for current and future generations of Albertans and, of course, to demonstrate effective leadership in risk management.

Our third core business is financial sector and pensions. Our goals there are to effectively regulate private-sector pensions, insurance, and financial products and services; to ensure that Albertans and local authorities have accessible financial services; to ensure that the securities regulatory system is effective and efficient; and to ensure that public-sector pension plans in Alberta are sustainable.

Mr. Chairman, that's a quick overview of our priorities and goals for 2006-07, and now I would just touch on a very few highlights from our budget estimates. Our ministry revenue is estimated at $12 billion, an increase from the forecast of $11 billion for 2005-06. Investment income for 2006-07 is $305 million lower than the '05-06 forecast. That is because public equity returns are expected to return to longer term averages which are lower than the projected returns for '05-06 and the effective rising interest rates on fixed income returns. Internal government transfers are $68 million lower than the '05-06 forecast because of a reduction in the surplus available for transfer from the lottery fund. That is a result of increased funding to ministries in support of various public initiatives. Personal and corporate taxes are estimated to be $1 billion more in '06-07. This is partially offset by the reduced corporate income taxes as a result of lowering the rate. In addition, revenue from premiums, fees, and licences is estimated to be $4.2 million higher, and net income from our commercial operations is projected to be $22 million higher.

The ministry's program expense is estimated to be $690 million. This is an increase of about $84 million from the '05-06 forecast, and I would like to take just a moment to explain those increases to you. This provides additional funding for the access to the future endowment, a $23 million transfer. You would all understand that those transfers from that fund and others I'll mention come out of Finance's budget. Access to the future endowment, a $23 million transfer. Transfer to Health from the cancer prevention legacy fund, about $25 million. Research funded by the medical research and science and engineering research funds, $15 million.

Now, the department's spending in Alberta investment management is another part of that, and that is to improve operation capacity, capabilities, and quality assurance, additional private investment capacity, and we are growing and we have to face relocation to address some space requirements.

I want to also just take a couple of minutes to highlight a few other areas in our estimates that I think you will find of interest. Our capital investment for '06-07 is estimated at $6 million. Of that, $3.9 million is for the department for the administration of revenue and rebate programs, management of investments, and network infrastructure. Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation accounts for $1.3 million to undertake various strategic and operating initiatives and, maybe most importantly, to replace computer equipment.

The number of full-time equivalents is always of interest to members, and we do expect our ministry's full-time equivalents to increase by 48. Thirty-one of those are within the department, including 29 FTEs in Alberta investment management to sustain current investment operations, to meet private investing obligations, and to improve operation capacity, capability, and quality assurance. The remainder are increases for the Alberta Insurance Council, the Alberta Local Authorities Pension Plan Corporation, the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation, and the Alberta Securities Commission.

Mr. Chairman, this is a really quick overview of Alberta Finance's business plan and budget estimates for 2006-07. I look forward to hearing comments and questions and answering as many of your questions tonight as possible. However, as in the past if we don't have the time to get all of the answers to you tonight or if I don't have the answer, I will commit to getting back to all members in writing before our budget is passed. They heard that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and participate in the estimates for the Department of Finance. I would like to thank the minister for her opening comments and particularly for her comment at the end of this evening's dissertation, where she asked her staff upstairs to have answers to us before the budget is passed. That's definitely a bit of a commitment on her part and on their part, and I appreciate that very much. The minister has always been good to her word in the past, and I appreciate that as well.

I would like to begin by acknowledging my staff who is present here tonight. Dave Kincade is in the public gallery, and I share him with four other opposition MLAs, so you can imagine how hard he works. He was here until well after midnight last night helping prepare me for this evening's debate.

So I'm going to start off, Mr. Chairman, and rather than editorializing a lot, which I am sometimes prone to do, I'm going to try to ask specific questions either to the fiscal plan as it relates directly to the Department of Finance and in some cases more broad questions as they relate to the government's fiscal plans in general, similar to the comments that the minister made a few minutes ago.

I have to start off talking about the overall government liabilities, which is a conversation that began yesterday during question period and continued a little bit today during question period. The minister accepted that we would discuss it tonight, and I think it's important that we get that out of the way. My questions yesterday were regarding the government's total liabilities as represented on page 43 of this year's fiscal plan tables. What I'm looking at there particularly is where it says: total liabilities, $18.420 billion. In the same book last year on page 39, fiscal plan tables, the number was $15.610 billion. Specifically, that is what I was speaking to in questions yesterday and today. It's an increase of nearly $3 billion in total showing in this year's balance sheet summary as opposed to last year's balance sheet summary.

My questions yesterday were if the minister could explain why that number is nearly $3 billion higher than it was a year before and why we're exposing Alberta taxpayers to nearly $3 billion more in total liabilities given the current economic boom that we're experiencing. Whether it's accounting 101 that the minister was going to share with me or accounting 505, I don't really care, but I know what my eyes see. My eyes see a nearly $3 billion increase in that line item year-to-year, so that was the question as it related to that in particular.

The other thing I want to point out is not a secret. The minister has acknowledged it in the past, but I'm not sure that most Albertans understand. The minister talks about the net assets of the government, and I will acknowledge that the number is a pretty healthy-looking number, but we must always bear in mind that even in their own subnotes they remind us that the net assets do not include – in fact, under the Fiscal Responsibility Act they explicitly exclude – pension obligations. In this case that amount is $5.621 billion for this year, the majority of which is the unfunded teachers' pension liability. I've mentioned in this House before that that liability will cost us somewhere in the neighbourhood of $30 billion to $32 billion over the lifetime of the agreement if we don't address it now. So it's not quite as rosy a picture as the graph would represent.

Now, moving on to a specific question. On page 59 of the fiscal plan there's a reference under loan guarantees to Canadian Western Bank. That one in particular caught my eye, and believe me, I'm a big fan of Canadian Western Bank. I bank there. I've banked there for years and years and years – in fact, long before they were Canadian Western Bank, when it was North West Trust – so this is no slight on Canadian Western Bank that I'm raising this issue. But I am curious. It shows $2 million as a forecast for a loan guarantee for Canadian Western Bank, and then under the estimated liability a negative $1 million, so I'm assuming that means a total loan guarantee for Canadian Western Bank of $1 million, and I'm curious as to why that is there. What is the loan for? Why is the provincial government issuing a loan guarantee in the first place? I think it speaks once again to the question of whether or not the government is, in fact, out of the business of being in business, particularly since we all know that the Alberta government is the sole shareholder of Alberta Treasury Branches, so we have a major investment in banking to begin with. I would like some explanation as to that.

Also, while I'm talking about the business of being in business, I noted that Order in Council 163/2006 this year approved the incorporation of not more than 40 provincial corporations under the administration of the Minister of Finance. I'm wondering if I could have some explanation as to what those corporations would be and why we need them.

Now, on to the issue of resource revenue, and I won't spend much time here because I spoke to it earlier in the spring session. We see once again where the government is allowing themselves to use $5.3 billion of nonrenewable resource revenue as opposed to $4.75 billion. Year after year we see this amendment to the Fiscal Responsibility Act where they allow themselves to use ever more of that nonrenewable resource revenue, and it always causes me concern – in fact, a great deal of concern, perhaps more concern than almost anything else in the budget – because we all know that that revenue is not going to be there forever. Everybody in this House and, I'm going to guess, by now most Albertans have heard me rail on about that. I really do believe it's important. I believe not only should we have a solid surface plan, as the Alberta Liberals currently have, but it is time for a nonrenewable resource revenue savings plan as I have advocated and many others have over the last year and a half or so.

While we are looking at that, I do want to just touch on the rebate cheques, which have been mentioned in the past. Although it wasn't my first choice of a way to deal with surplus revenue, certainly there were some Albertans that desperately needed that money. I found it interesting, however. The other day we had School at the Leg., that I spoke to, and I asked all of the kids how they spent their money, and but for a very few they purchased video games. I was disappointed to hear that. I really was because I had hoped that a few might have invested the money a little more wisely. A few went on trips with the family, that sort of thing, and a couple actually had put it into investment savings, education savings plans, and so forth. But, unfortunately, as I was afraid, I'm thinking there will not be much of a legacy left from that particular program.

The minister acknowledged the other night when I was speaking to her in reference to some of the letters I've received as finance critic that, in fact, there were some cheques that went astray, particularly in Ontario where CRA, who had been hired to administer the program, had incorrectly entered some postal codes, so some Ontario residents were receiving cheques. I'm curious how many Ontario residents actually received that cheque and what the total cost to Alberta taxpayers was for that and whether or not there's any effort being made to recover some of that money.

The minister talked about taxes, and I'm just going to touch on this really briefly. I know that I'm going to run out of time this evening, and I'm disappointed about that, but there are certainly a couple of points I'd like to make about taxes, both personal and corporate. Once again, way too much paper. I'm going to move on, and I'll find that.

In reference to taxes, then: certainly, the health care premium tax, which I've talked about, again, many times in the past, wondering why we can't eliminate that. I'm well on the record for that, so I don't have to spend much time there. In particular, though, as far as personal income tax versus corporate income tax, she mentioned the $265 million cut for corporate income tax this year. When I add up the basic spousal and eligible dependent tax credit of $77 million and the $30 million in health care premium subsidy threshold improvements, it's $107 million, so I see a 40 per cent difference in terms of tax cuts to corporations versus tax cuts to individuals. I've talked before about being a small business person, and I appreciate tax cuts for business. My question really is: I'm curious as to why we're giving more of a break to businesses than we are to individuals.

Now, also in terms of the amount of revenue that's being raised by tax, there seems, again, to be a bit of an inequity in terms of not only the amount of revenue that's being raised but also the forecast for the future in terms of what's going to be raised in the future when it comes to personal income tax versus corporate income tax. Again, I think that should be causing some concern for Albertans given that, certainly, corporations are doing very well in this province right now, yet we're collecting about 2.5 times more in terms of percentage of income tax from personal income tax than we are from corporate income tax. I'm concerned about the inequity of that again, that perhaps individuals are bearing more of the brunt than they should be as opposed to corporations.

A couple of specific taxes I want to talk about. There was a notice on the Alberta Finance website recently about the fuel tax and the taxability of kerosene. Apparently it has been noted that tax collectors have been incorrectly selling kerosene without collecting the tax. I'm wondering how much tax is estimated to have slipped through our hands, whether or not the voluntary disclosure that is expected of those tax collectors is going to recover the amount that we think we've lost, and what steps are being taken to ensure that it's not happening with other hydrocarbon fuels?

We have a bill before us in the House right now which is the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act. In that there are two things that caught my eye. One is an amendment to the Elections Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act where related corporations apparently currently have a loophole that allows them to go beyond the $1,000 total tax credit. So there are amendments being made here. Once again my question would be if the minister and her staff could identify for me how much tax has managed to slip through Alberta Finance's grasp by not having corrected that loophole sooner.

Then, likewise, there's an amendment being made to the Insurance Act. Apparently, some insurance companies were avoiding paying their insurance tax. This amendment is clarifying the way companies are defined by the Alberta Insurance Act to make sure that, in fact, that 3 per cent tax is collected. Again my question would be: how much tax has slipped through our hands over that period of time?

There's also a question about the special broker tax. I have to admit that I don't understand an awful lot about this special broker tax, but if I go to page 203 of the estimates, the numbers in terms of what we've collected in the past and expect to collect in the future on the special broker tax jump around a fair amount. Budgeted last year was $750,000. The forecast is that we're actually going to collect $1.75 million, and that's also the estimate for this year.

I'm curious about that because I've had some correspondence from a person who has done some work with Alberta Finance. I will table the correspondence either this evening or tomorrow. I'm going to guess, however, that the minister is probably aware of it. This person is concerned that millions of dollars may be slipping through our hands because, again, of some loopholes in that special broker tax and the way it's collected and administered. So I'm curious about that. I'm wondering if maybe some steps may have been taken already to correct that, and maybe that's why the number jumped from $750,000 to $1.75 million. I don't know, but that is the question that I had in my mind.

Income trusts. I just want to go there quickly. Certainly, it's recognized by the Alberta government. In fact, in a document on their website called the Alberta Tax Advantage, they refer to the fact that Alberta may be losing an awful lot of money on income trusts. I think the number was about $400 million per year. It indicates on the Finance department website that as part of the ongoing review of the tax system this issue is being examined. I'm curious to know where that's at now, whether or not there's going to be some action on income trusts.

While I'm mentioning it, I noted that the B.C. Securities Commission is warning their investors in British Columbia to do their due diligence, to be very careful with the homework when it comes to investing in income trusts. The alert cautions people to review carefully their current investments because in fact they may unknowingly or unwittingly be invested in income trusts right now. I didn't see a similar caution on the Alberta securities website. So I'm curious as to whether or not we should be at least cautioning people in Alberta about that, making sure that they're aware of the risk that they may be exposed to unknowingly.

We had an exchange in the House today about a particular restaurant bill that was submitted and paid last year as it related to the automobile insurance review board. But I think that those questions, although they were very specific to one meeting, did speak to a broader issue, and the minister referred to a hosting policy. I think that was in reference to my questions about the purchase of alcohol. I'm wondering if I might have access to that hosting policy so that when we're looking at these sorts of expenses in the future, we'll have a better understanding as to exactly what the hosting policy is.

I'm also curious to know whether or not the policy is or was that a credit card receipt only is good enough when an expense for hosting is claimed. That's all we got back from the access to information request that was sent in. There may have been more information although it wasn't indicated in the response from freedom of information that anything was excluded in relation to a breakdown of expenses. I'm curious whether or not it's department policy that a credit card slip is good enough. If that is still the case, then I would certainly suggest that we should be amending that policy so that all Albertans would have an opportunity to know exactly what they're spending money on when it comes to those sorts of hosting expenses.

I'd just like to mention that the Edmonton Oilers are apparently ahead 1-nothing. Both the minister and I are anxiously waiting to receive news, and I just had that passed to me.

Now, the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. The minister mentioned the billion dollars that's going in this year plus the billion dollars that was put in from last year's money. I could spend the rest of my time tonight talking about the heritage savings trust fund. But what I will say is that right now the Fiscal Responsibility Act mandates that the return on investment less the management fees and less the inflation proofing has to be put into general revenue. I would strongly suggest that we should change that piece of legislation so that the return on investment minus those costs can stay in the heritage savings trust fund, where it belongs.

I'd like to mention investing in tobacco. I've asked questions in this Legislature before. I actually have a motion on the Order Paper, Motion 608, that would mandate that we divest ourselves of investment in tobacco companies. We specifically excluded investment in tobacco companies in the government's Bill 1 this year, the cancer act that the minister was referring to. Unfortunately, with my motion being 608 and the session winding down – I think we're at Motion 510 right now – clearly this is not going to be dealt with in the House this year. But it's important, I think, in today's climate that we recognize that investing in tobacco companies, although it may return a profit, is certainly not ethical anymore. I think it would be prudent for us to divest ourselves of those investments.

Very quickly I'd like to touch on the payday loan companies. There has been some talk from the federal government that they may actually allow the provinces to regulate payday loan companies. Right now they're actually limited at 60 per cent interest, which I find incredibly high, but I've read some reports that at times on very short loans these companies are charging up to 50,000 per cent interest, which is incredible. So I'm curious whether or not there's been any action taken on this matter by the provincial government, whether or not we're preparing for that eventuality. It certainly looks like it's going to go ahead, and I'm wondering where we're at with that.

I look forward to some answers either this evening or later. Hopefully, I'll have another chance to get up and ask more questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Yeah. I'm going to really quickly try and whip through some of these. I really appreciate the hon. member and the manner that he's raised these issues tonight. Rather than long dissertations we've actually got some really good questions here, and I hope I can provide some really good answers back.

On the heritage savings trust fund. You're right: it was legislated that the dollars would go back to general revenue and, of course, also legislated that when we were debt free, we would begin to inflation-proof it. Until that legislation is changed – and it may be at some future point – of course, we are investing dollars into the fund, which are about equal to leaving the money in the fund. To me, that was incredibly important, and we've talked about that. I want to see that fund grow. I want to see it as a revenue stream for future years when it may be needed.

On tobacco companies. We did have this conversation, and we had the question at one point. I believe I checked on how much investment there was in tobacco companies, and I believe the numbers – and my staff will probably be shaking their heads violently either up and down or back and forth – are about one-quarter of 1 per cent of the investments, so not significant. I don't think it would be difficult to say that you wouldn't have a direct investment in a tobacco fund. But you know that there are funds that are – I've been searching for the right word; I've lost it out of my head – a conglomerate of businesses where you might have a small portion of that that might be a tobacco company. But the point made on direct investments into tobacco companies, I accept that recommendation, and we'll certainly raise it with our investment management group.

Hosting policy. You know, we talked about this in the House. I suppose that $75 a person is not a high cost for an entire meal at a rather upscale restaurant. I don't eat those very often. Many of us in this House probably don't. At times you're compelled to. Most of my receipts are from Dairy Queen, Joey's Only, and the pizza places. Actually, in many ways I prefer their food. But I have a personal policy in that if there is wine used at a meal that I'm hosting, I pay for that separately. I don't drink it myself, but I don't object to anyone else having a drink of wine with their meal. In fact, physicians will tell you that a glass of red wine is probably good for you; it's not good for me if I want to keep my driver's licence. I haven't learned the difference between a glass and a pail, so besides the headache not drinking it at all is a good thing for me.

I'll get you the information on the special brokers' tax. I suspect that your assumption is the correct one. I didn't have time while I was trying to make notes to look that particular page up.

Income trusts. I have nothing really new to report to you except to say that it is a part of our overall tax review. You're right on the estimate. It was our number that it could be as much as $400 million there.

As to whether we put anything in on a caution, I don't think so. I think that perhaps my staff will help me there. That might be more in a consumer line than our role, but they'll tell me.

On the tax slippage I can tell you that there's not a lot. You know, it's not impossible, but as soon as this is found, it's rectified, and tax is collected as much as you can from companies that may have missed paying.

Kerosene. I don't have the answer; I'll get it for you. But I think we only collected about $5 million in total on propane, so I would suggest that kerosene would be a much smaller part of the sales. So the slippage there would be less, but of course you don't want any. If you have a tax and it is to be collected, it should be collected in the manner in which it was put in place.

Health premium. We'll continue to discuss that. I think you agree that the move we made this year to take another 140,000 Albertans off of that roll was a good move. I will just take some exception to the comparison between the corporate tax and the personal tax because while our personal tax saved about $107 million this year, we have saved Albertans $1.5 billion over a period of from '99 to this year because we implemented those changes first. The same with small business: we reached our target on small business first. I have heard from some small business owners that they would like us to consider revisiting that again and look at either increasing the threshold, which we raised to $400,000, or another part of the per cent or a percentage drop. Certainly, we said that we accepted their entreaties on that, and we would look at that as part of our overall tax review.

On the cheques astray: not many. I don't have the final figures. I'm sure one of my staff probably does. Canada Revenue Agency made every attempt to have those cheques returned, and I think they'll probably be quite successful. I do want to reiterate: it was a wise thing to use Canada Revenue Agency to deliver those cheques. We don't have a database that is as complete as theirs. I have said that that entire exercise will cost us under $10 million. If anybody can administer a program of $1.3 billion to $1.4 billion for $10 million, I think we'd be overjoyed if all of our administration costs were that low. We have found Canada Revenue Agency in this case very good agents to work with. They've been very accommodating with people who have been missed, have worked with them to get their '04 tax return filed if they happened to be a spouse or someone who didn't. If they were persons who had children and hadn't registered for the child benefit because they didn't qualify, they've been very accommodating with those folks.

I think we've been able to address most of the concerns people had. The toughest one in that one were the people who had lived in the province who left at the wrong time or, indeed, who came back at the wrong time. You have to set a date. September 1 was our date. That was our centennial date, if you wish, and we had to set a date. You have to set a time. The hardest one was to correspond or talk with those folks on the phone who just missed that deadline or date, but as I pointed out to them: when you decide to do this, you have to choose some dates. You have to put some parameters around the program. The Auditor General will be watching very closely to make sure that we stuck to those parameters.

On the increase in revenue: we do have a surplus plan. I think that using some of those revenues in savings, in the heritage fund, in our various endowments is a good way to save. I'm in support of saving more, but I'm also conscious every day in this Legislature of asks from the House – sometimes all sides, most times one side – for more money for health, for more money for education, for more money for seniors, for more money for continuing care. What we really do is try to strike a balance to ensure that we continue to have the best health delivery system, the best education system, the best system for caring for our people who are vulnerable. I have some confidence in that because I happen to have had the responsibility of being the minister responsible for seniors, and I know that many of the programs that we have in this province are not available to people in other provinces at all. I speak of AISH for one, a program that's very good but not available. So it's a balance.

As our economy grows, as our population grows, we will attract more people. We certainly find seniors coming to this province in record numbers. Our net migration of all people is still positive. We still continue to attract a large number of seniors from other provinces. There's a reason for that. We're pleased and proud that they choose Alberta to be their home, some of them because they've followed their children that have come here to work, some of them because they just see the benefits of what's available for seniors in this province.

The other point I want to make is on the personal tax side. I would just remind all members that our personal exemption is double anywhere else in Canada, including the federal government, and I remind all members that on the tax side, if we taxed at the same level as the province next to us, which is British Columbia, we would collect an additional $7.2 billion in taxes. That's $7.2 billion that Albertans have that citizens in other provinces don't have. I think it's positive, and it's good for our people.

On the creation of corporations the simple explanation is that through our investment management division they set up those corporations for managing investments. So if you watch the OCs, which I'm sure that you do, you will see periodically where we remove a number of those companies. They're holding companies for investment, and when we're finished with that particular investment, we pass an OC to end that company. So that's really what that is.

Canadian Western Bank. Nobody really told me, but I'm going to make what might be an educated guess. Ag Financial Services: sometimes the syndication on loans for our small businesses will take last position. Maybe that's where it is. It's a small amount. But to our small businesses, particularly our value-added businesses, financing is sometimes difficult. We're very happy in the agricultural sector, which is one of our largest manufacturing sectors, to be able to work with our companies and syndicate or broker a loan utilizing other banks with it. I'm sure that somebody in my department will give you the absolute on that.

Overall government liabilities. We addressed that earlier today. I don't have the last year's figures, but if I look at the columns on page 43, I see a 2005 actual on liabilities of $18.687 billion. I see a forecast for '06 of $17.927 billion, and I see an estimate for '07 of $18.420 billion. Those are the figures I'm looking at. I don't know where – the $15.610 billion might have been an estimate of something somewhere, or it might have been a calculation, but we will continue to have that discussion, and I'm sure we'll be able to sort that out.

That's as far as I'm going to go there. I appreciate all of the questions, and for anything I've missed I'll be sure to get the answer to you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: I guess there's a benefit to being here early.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister and the answers that she has given so far and for the details that we received in the financial statement. There is no question that Alberta is the place to be. When you look at page 63 of the fiscal plan, it's very encouraging to see our provincial tax rates there compared to the rest of Canada. That's very encouraging, but the question always is: are we doing the best that we can do?

I just want to turn to page 65, first, on the historical fiscal summary, and go over a few things there. On line 2, corporate income tax, it shows that it's levelling off. I believe that in 2005 it's about $2.6 billion, and it goes down to approximately $2.18 billion by 2008. This province, if my memory serves me right, promised a corporate tax reduced to 8 per cent. We haven't reached that yet, though we've attracted many corporate headquarters and things here to the province, and I'm wondering if that drop is because there are future plans to drop it another 1 per cent per year.

[Mr. Danyluk in the chair]

I guess I'm somewhat curious because, normally, when taxes are dropped, you see an increase. As we see in personal revenue tax, we've been lowering it, and you've raised the basic exemption, yet it's continuing to rise, which is encouraging, showing good economy and prosperity. But it's not showing up in the corporate income tax. That raises some curiosity for me there on why you feel it's going in that direction.

Another question. On line 7, other own-source revenue: I'm not quite sure I understand exactly what that is. Trying to link that with previous pages, it seems like they don't quite add up. If the minister could expound on that a little bit, I would appreciate what exactly is entailed on that line.

Turning to page 62, Alberta being the place to be and the benefits that are there and the surplus that we're having, I ask the questions on behalf of Albertans: why are our premiums, fees, and licensing charges all going up? It just seems like we should be able to hold it where we're at or even reduce it in some areas; for example, provincial camping and those areas where Albertans truly can go out and enjoy what the province has to offer and want to stay at home. Yet we're edging those up and looking at further increases next year. I'd encourage the government to reconsider that on behalf of Albertans so that we could enjoy our home province and not see an increase in fees, especially at this time of fiscal surpluses.

On page 61, full-time equivalents. This is a question that I've asked before, and the Premier continues to keep saying many times during question period that we have 22,000, but on page 61 it shows that we've got 26,800. We're looking at 27,000. I guess my question is on the accuracy, making sure that this is the accurate one, and perhaps understanding that a little bit better.

Page 60, the allocation of lottery fund revenue. Something that's been brought up many times and I think will continue to be debated is that we see under Gaming that the biggest allocation goes to horse racing and the breeding renewal grant program. I believe I've asked once, and I didn't get the answers on the actual revenue generated from horse racing and what percentage is going back to horse racing. It just seems lopsided that horse racing, a fairly small industry, is getting such a huge percentage when many of our municipalities and charities and other things really rely on the community facility enhancement program and community initiative program, which together is just barely $68 million, almost equalling the entire horse racing and breeding program. I just wonder, you know, in having to set priorities, you've mentioned it in here many times before, including this evening, that it's a tough balance. Everybody is wanting more money. I'm curious about what the actual gross revenue is from that because the Minister of Gaming always says: that's just a percentage going back. If you could enlighten us on that, I would appreciate it.

I also was curious about the Canadian Western Bank, and because it's been brought up, I won't worry about repeating that. That was something of a benefit for us to understand that.

The question that I have at this time is on the overall spending. I don't have the page number written down here. Of a $32 billion budget, in a short period you've got the revenue going down to $30 billion, if my memory serves me right.

Mrs. McClellan: What page?

Mr. Hinman: I can't find it. I don't have it written in my notes. I apologize. I've got to go from memory now.

I believe that we're looking at a $1 billion to $2 billion loss in revenue, that you forecasted two or three years down the road, yet our spending has already surpassed. Maybe that's going back to page 65, line 10, for a total revenue of $30 billion, which is already less than our current spending. That raises a great deal of concern that we're already past a sustainable budget when by 2008 we're down to $30 billion in revenue.

One of the questions that I guess I have – on page 64 you have an excellent chart showing the changes in prices and, you know, how it affects the dollar, the natural gas prices, or the exchange rates going up and down. But when I look at the production above that, it shows that production levels really aren't going off and that we're able to sustain those production levels. So I guess I'm concerned. What are we trying to show there? You know, is it: let's not show that we have too much money so that we can restrain the budget? Yet we're spending an enormous amount in the projections. So I worry a lot about that.

It brings up a question. When I look on page 64 at the bitumen production, we're going from 1.2 to 1.4 to 1.5. With that increase and the price holding there, I'm wondering if this government has a schedule or an estimate on when that royalty relief that those big corporations are receiving to pay for their infrastructure is coming due. When will that kick into the budget? Is it after 2008, 2010? We've heard a lot about that, and I'm just wondering if you have some estimates. Because of the increased price and the royalty that they're getting back, are we going to have a crossover there? Perhaps you could share that with us. That would be helpful.

Just an aside, I guess. With the dollar value and your chart on page 64, I'm wondering if you have any estimates – I've been told that in health care there's a huge cost in U.S. dollars for equipment and things that we're bringing in and drugs and whatnot. With the dollar rising, would that offset and show a significant reduction in our health care expenses? I've had many people from the Calgary health authority and other areas indicate to me that we should be seeing some balancing there between the two. If you could share something on that, that would also be helpful.

A question – and I can't remember where I picked it out, so I apologize; it's mentioned in a few places – about alternative financing. I'm wondering if that's just P3s or whether the government has some other programs that they're looking at. My question in regard to that is: when we look at these P3s, and I guess I kind of look at P3s going back to some of our history, whether that's the magnesium plant that the government got into or Swan Hills – it seems like there was another one, but I can't remember now; I didn't write it in here – we've learned that we get hooked for that anyways. I guess that Gainers is one that shows up in here, where we still have a debt that we're paying for, and it's been so many years. I was shocked to see that still coming forward. [interjection] Yes. He still smiles at us, thanking us.

With such a great rating, that you mentioned earlier, the triple-A rating, do we really do better? Do the studies show that rather than just going out and tendering it and having it done as opposed to a P3 where those people have to look at their expenses and overall, if they're borrowing money to put that in place – what's there? Are they at prime plus 2? Are they a double-A, a single-A rating? Are we really benefiting the province with the great triple-A rating that we have and the surplus that we have in entering into P3s? It's just, I guess, a question that many people have asked me. You know, if we have the money, why would we be going to second or third sources if in fact we can pay it and we're not having to pay any interest? It does cost them more. They're borrowing. They don't have the good rating. It's another area where curiosity definitely intrigues me.

I want to turn now to page 44, on the revenue again. One of the specific questions that I have is – we've had a tremendous sale on lands and, you know, a $3.4 billion forecast for this year on land leases and those areas, and then our income goes down significantly, almost to a third in three years. I guess that I was wondering on those leases: how long term are those? Are we looking at a five-year lease? How do you estimate that and realize that it's dropping that much? Is there the potential like the crude oil and everything else that it's going to stay the same and that income could continue if the market stays where it is? Or are we definitely in a thing where this was the year where we put up a huge amount of our leases, and they were bid, and now we're not going to have any income for five years? If you could tell us a little bit on, you know, what percentage. Do we have 10 per cent a year coming up and they just rotate through smoothly? Or is this cyclical and coming and going and there is no chance of an increased, I guess, revenue coming in from land sales like we've had this current year?

On page 59 one of the things that caught my eye is the Agriculture Financial Services Act. We're going down from $35 million to $30 million. In such a tough time for agriculture it raises my curiosity on why loans would be going down so much, what the forecast is. The loan guarantees are being reduced there. I'm just kind of wondering if you could explain that bit of phenomena for us.

I guess just a few things that I'd like to ask and repeat once again. What are the plans for reducing corporate income tax? Are you planning on fulfilling the promise of reducing it to 8 per cent? What is the schedule? It just seems that in such a time we really need to look at and address legislation on what to do with the surplus.

It just seems wrong. When we have such a tremendous amount of money coming in – and both you and the Premier have mentioned that it's much harder to govern with so much money than it was without money – perhaps the best way to reduce that money and to not look like we're so flush with it is to have legislation rather than policy on what we're going to do with that surplus. Currently it just seems like there's a policy, and policy is very easy to change; whereas, we grabbed the bull by the horns, we passed legislation, and we said that all surplus was going to go to pay off the debt, and it served us very well to do that. It just seems like the right thing to do to pass legislation now on what we're going to do with that surplus.

We can have good budgets. We can look at, you know, infrastructure, health, education, all of those things, and put in a good budget. Let's stick to that budget, and then when we do have a surplus – and I do once again want to thank the government for always being conservative. I see nothing wrong with pitching it in low and coming out smiling, especially if we have the discipline on what we're going to do with that surplus. To me that's very much up for debate. But it just seems like we should be putting 50 per cent of this surplus into savings and perhaps 50 per cent going back to the taxpayers. You know, like I say, I'm open for the debate wherever you want to go on that, but if, in fact, that was the law, then we wouldn't have all of this tussling over who's going to get it. We've got this extra money, and it just seems like it causes us a lot of grief, as it does with most families when all of a sudden they have a windfall. Everybody all of a sudden is your best friend, and everybody has these special needs, and we've got to have it. So I think legislation would be in the interest of Albertans.

The things that I want to point out and one that I brought up the other day: the propane tax of $5 million that you referred to earlier tonight. Propane is one of the green powers. It's clean. Why don't we reduce that? We produce 10 billion litres of propane in the province, and we only use 2 billion, 20 per cent of our production. It just seems like that's an area where we could put the incentive in and remove that tax off propane, which I believe used to be back in the '80s or '70s. If we could utilize that, what it would do to benefit Alberta and the pollution that we have. So I would encourage the minister to look into propane and see if there's a way that we could increase the incentives.

Once again, the number one concern is to eliminate health care premiums. That would be a great benefit. You've taken a step. Everyone appreciates reductions, but we could reduce government size. You'd have full-time employees that you could utilize elsewhere by eliminating that whole area. We continue to encourage you to do that. Yes, we have the highest basic tax exemption, but we could continue to raise that and benefit those people, perhaps, to the low-income cutoff level of $20,000. I'm not sure how much. If you could tell us what percentage of that $5.8 billion we'd lose by raising it another $5,000, I'd appreciate that.

To look at when we have the surplus to actually refund – you've mentioned that Canada Revenue did a great job of distributing that, but do we not have our Alberta tax? We're being charged at 10 per cent. It just seems like the logical thing: when there's a surplus, that means that we've overtaxed. We've got a windfall. To me it seems like the first place it should be going back is to those people who have paid tax if we're not going to put it into savings. We could do that on a refund on the personal tax. We collected $5.8 billion. You have the numbers. You could've given $1.4 billion back, you know, 25 per cent refund back on our personal tax or, on the same point, on our property tax.

Every town, municipal government is definitely struggling. We see the inflation there more than anywhere, trying to keep up with infrastructure, the roads in those areas. I'd encourage the government to look at refunding property taxes. I also would like to encourage the government to look at perhaps increasing the per capita payment to the different municipal governments so that they could look after more things on their own. These surplus revenues: if there was to be a per capita dividend of, for example, the $400 that was given out this last year, if that went to municipal governments. There are many of those that still have debts that they're having to address. It just would be great if, in fact, they could receive that money and that they could be out of debt and not have to look at increased property taxes.

To close, there's no question, I guess, that we've started many funds. I've forgotten what page those are on now, but we've got the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering, Farm Credit Stability Act, scholarship act, and the Financial Administration Act. We've got many of those that have been created and the one that has been mentioned twice here already, but we still have that liability for the teachers' pension fund plus two others. I've got my notes all messed up here now so I can't remember which other pension funds they were but, basically, amounting to $4.8 billion, if my memory serves me right. Why do we not start a fund and at least put this surplus in there? If it takes us four years, one year, or 10 years to deal with the teachers, let's put it in there now and have a trust fund.

Thank you very much.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, again, another great series of questions, Mr. Chairman. In the interests of making sure that other members can get in and make their comments, I'm going to try and rattle off a few of them pretty quickly. On the whole issue of education property tax – I'm sure that's what you're talking about – I'm sure that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would want to speak to this, but I will just quickly remind you that there is an exercise occurring. The minister is leading with the AUMA, AAMD and C to establish roles, responsibilities, and relationships. Once that exercise is done, I think we'll all clearly understand whose role it is, whose responsibility it is to pay, and maybe the more important discussions around there are the building of relationships because it is the same taxpayer.

We did reduce our mill rate by 7 per cent. As you've read in the papers recently, this was much appreciated by cities, I'm sure by all municipalities. Some of them will use that room; some of them will allow savings to taxpayers.

On the Alberta tax, a 10 per cent flat rate, you have choices when you make tax changes. Raising the personal exemption is one way to do it. It's a way that we can do it that we can assure the sustainability of it. Remember that we index that, and remember that in Alberta it is double what it is for any province in Canada, including the federal government.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

So you have a personal tax advantage there. I'll be honest. I favour increasing that exemption. I think you're absolutely right: if we don't need the tax dollars, we shouldn't collect them. They should stay with people. But the one thing I want to make sure of is that when we make a tax reduction, it isn't at the expense of funding important programs like health, education, support to seniors and those who are vulnerable. We depend on those revenues on a sustainability basis.

While we're enjoying high revenues now, I have been here when those revenues weren't there, and I had to be a part of making some very painful decisions on reductions. It was not easy. Our entire civil service, our entire medical, teaching, universities: all of those people took rollbacks, which were not something that we would want. In fact, the people in this House did too at that time. Better that you ensure that you could fund these things on a sustainable basis out into the future so that you do not have to face that.

So we're careful when we make our tax reductions, but you will not have to convince me to continue to do that as long as we can sustain it. It's proven that if you leave more money in people's pockets, Albertans will generate the economic growth here. That is well demonstrated.

Should we legislate surplus? Perhaps at some point that would be a good thing to do, but I would suggest that at this point, when we have just come off of debt elimination, it was important in this past year that we invest in infrastructure. So to tie your hands with those infrastructure pressures there might not be the wisest thing; however, as it turns out, when you look at saving, giving back, and investment in capital, we almost came to that point in the end of how much we saved through endowments, the heritage fund and how much we put into capital and then how much we gave back. It's not that off. So maybe there is a point we could do that.

Propane tax. Certainly, I'll look at that. As part of the tax review I know that my staff have done that. You make a good point on it being a green fuel.

Health care and the rising dollar. Most people know that in my other life I'm a farm person, and we happen to buy equipment that is manufactured in the U.S., and most of the parts that we buy are manufactured there. We can never understand how long it takes for that change in the dollar to show an advantage in the lowering of the cost of machinery and parts. I expect it's the same in medical equipment and drugs. It seems to go really fast one way and not quite so fast the other. I would expect that there should be some change there because certainly we're hearing that manufacturing businesses in this country are feeling it, so we would hope there would be some balancing. But we'll do some investigation on that.

P3s. We really have one P3, and it's a darn good deal. If you could enter into another one of a similar nature, I would expect that most people would recommend it. While it may seem that it costs you a little bit more at the outset, the fact that you can have a warranty and maintenance on a road for 30 years and get it in under the time frame, which is incredibly important in this city, where we're seeing such, such growth, and have those access and ring roads is important and the same with Calgary.

But remember that all of those are examined. There are no automatics there. We have an external committee that gives us advice on those, gives advice to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation as well as Treasury Board, and that is a method of alternative financing that we will continue to look at as an option but only if there's an advantage to us to do it. Although we have a triple-A credit rating – and, yes, if we were borrowing, which we're not in a position of needing, we would borrow at a favourable rate – it may make the better sense in the long run to do a P3 if you're getting things like maintenance, warranty, and coming in a year or two earlier certainly doesn't hurt.

The provincial tax rate. You asked about the corporate tax rate on page 65. Remember that we started at 15.5 and we're down to 10 per cent. Yes, we are going to 8 per cent, but that's not what those figures show. It's not an automatic. When you reduce the rate, you would expect that it would take two to three years for the economic advantage to start to show the benefit back. It may be sooner in this economy, but as always we're prudent and conservative in our estimates.

The premiums, licences, and fees going up. That's a difficult one in some ways, but we really consider that that is a cost of doing business. That's really what it's to cover. We've heard a lot about our campgrounds needing refurbishing, upgrading. Our campground rates are pretty reasonable. In fact, for persons who don't have a lot of disposable income, there are a great number of absolutely free camping facilities in this province. So it's a balance. They need it to keep those campgrounds in good shape, to make sure that they're good places for people to visit. But our rule here is that your premiums, your licences, and your fees cover the cost of doing business.

FTEs. I spoke to hours. I'll check on what you asked on the numbers that are quoted to make sure that we're quoting from the same thing. I will give you that information at another point.

Horse racing. It's not going to help to explain this because this isn't a rational discussion. The rational discussion is simply this. The Minister of Gaming got up in this House one day and answered this question as best as I've ever heard anyone do it. If you don't put a quarter in a slot machine, if you don't lay one wager at a racetrack, they will generate nothing. So what Horse Racing Alberta gets is what they earn. I think you understand that.

However, you did ask a question on how much of that goes to the fund. I checked the figures with the good minister rather than having him get up and do it. He said I could, so we'll see how I do. Fifty-one per cent goes to Horse Racing Alberta, 15 per cent to the operator, and the balance to the lottery fund. So you can just do the math. You asked what the total was. I didn't have time to do it. I will after I sit down. But that is it.

I do want to mind everyone that 8,000 people are employed in that industry. I invite people to go over there, which isn't very far, to Northlands Park, and go to the backstretch. I especially invite the member who has this in his constituency. I do. I'd be honoured to go with you. I think that if you had the opportunity to go to that backstretch to talk to some of the people there who have gainful employment, who are so proud of the jobs that they have there – and these are people that wouldn't necessarily have a job anywhere else. The self-esteem, the pride, and the joy that these people have in working with a beautiful animal like a horse to me is worth it right there.

But beyond that, the financial contribution to this province is significant. It's a part of the proud history of this province. Alberta has the most horses per capita, if you wish, of any province in Canada. The horse industry has been a very proud part of the Alberta history, not just in racing but saddle. You need the complete industry. You really do.

Spruce Meadows. Who can measure the value of Spruce Meadows to Alberta and to Canada? The number one facility, above Aachen now. The number one facility in the world. Attracts people from everywhere who come for the beauty of show jumping and dressage to some point, but the international contacts that are made there and the emphasis on international is incredible.

The pleasure of horses. The stables that are just down the road here give so many people a lot of joy. I used to bring my grandkids to the zoo for a little while. You know, they live on a farm, and they'd come and go ride the horses at Valley Zoo. I said: what's wrong with this?

The horse industry in its entirety is so important to this province, and I think we all had a little thrill when Brother Derek was racing at Santa Anita and won and a little sadness when he raced in the derby last Saturday and came in fourth, but still some pride that an Alberta owner had a horse of that quality.

So if you have time some time, go over, especially on Alberta days, special races that are for Alberta-bred horses only, and just look at what this industry does do for the province. If everything that we were involved in had the type of return this one does, it would be quite great.

Royalty relief in the oil sands. I think the larger part of the return will start to come in in '08 and upward. We'll get that information absolute for you from the Minister of Energy because I'm going off of memory. Uh-oh, I'm getting a letter on the horse, I think. Maybe not. We're starting to get revenue of some significance now, but that, of course, changes when the capital investment is paid. It seems to me that it starts in a more major way in '08, and then maybe '11 is the next larger part when this comes off.

Production restraint land sales. Land sales are a function of the market, and we have a lot of land. We're not selling it all, even though those were very high sales. But I think it's a function of the marketplace today that encouraged people to make those investments. I will ask the Minister of Energy to give you the absolute, but when they buy a lease, they have to develop it in a certain time frame or it reverts. I don't remember exactly whether it's five years or what it is. That's just a little bit outside of my bailiwick.

I know that you had a few other things, but I know that there are others that want to get into the conversation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister leaving me some time to get in on this discussion. I'm going to, I think, just want to talk about some broad policy ideas, throw out maybe some of my ideas and ask the minister in sort of a broad sense what her thinking is with respect to some of these ideas.
