Certainly, Mr. Chairman, this interim supply budget is an example of a government that needs to spend a little bit more time on long-term planning. Now, last week I believe I compared this government to what I considered a hockey team where everybody wants to be the captain. The current captain is slowing down a bit, not on the power play as often as he used to be. He certainly still scores, but the 50-goal seasons are past. There are a couple of people, some of them playing on the same line, some of them I would consider good right-wingers, some of them more to the centre, and some of them to the left with their spending habits, you know, but they all have their eye on the C, on the captaincy. I think that may be one of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, why we are seeing this obvious lack of attention to detail in budget planning. This is why we are having this discussion, this debate, this afternoon on the interim supply estimates for fiscal year 2006-07.

The team needs an allowance. They certainly do. But how much? The minister's reasons earlier in debate certainly were valid. I think it is good that the overall department is essentially going to be looked after. Now, whether one-sixth of the budget is enough for the year for the department itself, that's hard to say, but certainly we can't say no when we look at the infrastructure deficit that has occurred in this province because of long-term planning.

I said in the Assembly here before, Mr. Chairman, that we only have to go 400 metres east of here to see the rusting rebar poking through the concrete from the bridge over the North Saskatchewan River. There is significant pressure to have not only that bridge but other bridges repaired. We need to get on with a lot of things. Other parts of the country may look with envy at the budget surplus, but we need to continue to build this province through the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I would just like to address a couple of the points that were brought up by the hon. member. First of all, I thank the hon. member for alluding to the amount that we pay our civil servants. I, too, concur that we are in a very hot economy. My deputy minister, for example, is a structural bridge engineer, and structural bridge engineers are very highly sought after in the private sector. Therefore, we do have to ensure that they are compensated well enough so that we can take their full attributes within the government system.

A couple of other comments I would make though. I know that it's probably for no reason other than that the hon. member has never been in the government, but we actually start our process in about June or July of the year prior to the budget. I start my business planning process in June where we go through complete discussions with the department about the business plan. That starts in June and moves through to July and August. We do not necessarily receive our final dollar amounts until later on in October, November.

The whole budget process is a lot more than simply receiving a dollar amount from Treasury Board. It does take a lot of planning; it takes a lot of time. Quite simply, it's usually around an eight- or nine-month process. Then ultimately what has to happen – and I'm sure the Finance minister can speak for herself – is that it has to be printed. It has to be made sure that there are no mistakes.

The hon. member was talking about the interim supply. Quite simply, Mr. Chair, if the budget were announced – and it's my understanding that the budget has been announced for the end of March – and if the opposition were to simply say, "We agree with the budget, and we don't need to debate it," so that we can get it in by April 1 and get it done, then the hon. member is absolutely correct: we wouldn't have to do interim supply. We could simply say: yes, thank you very much, and thank you for recognizing our very comprehensive budgeting process. It would simply be passed, and we would be able to get on with business. But this side believes in full democracy, and we're going to debate the bill. We're going to take a look at each specific department, which is going to take around 24 or 25 days, a day for each department or a session for each department. That is the reason, quite simply, why we need the interim supply. As the hon. member correctly stated, we have to keep on building the infrastructure. We have to keep on with what is happening in Alberta.

The only other comment that I would make is about the issue of the 25 per cent cost increase. Over the past nine or 10 years the construction costs have been averaging around 3 or 4 per cent. All of a sudden last year it went up 25 per cent, and that was for a combination of reasons. What you saw – and I apologize for the allusion – was a perfect storm coming together. You had a shortage of labour, and the labour prices were going up significantly. You had a shortage of steel, and the steel prices were going up as well. The third thing which happened is that we actually ran out of cement in this province, and the shortage of cement actually also led to the increase in costs. So you had this whole vortex of three or four different things that all hit at once, which led to this inflationary pressure of 25 per cent. That is something that was in both the public sector as well as the private sector, and those numbers are certainly recognized.

The hon. member made another interesting comment about the price of steel. I, too, have seen that the price of steel may well be coming down. This was not expected by our industry; it was not expected by us. There are so many factors that deal with what is happening in China and what is happening with the steel manufacturers of the world that it was very difficult to perceive. It's difficult to perceive that this is going to be a long-term trend and we'll actually get back down to the prices that we were paying four or five years ago. Or is it simply a downturn because economies around the world have become so overheated that they have bought the steel, and simply they are not buying more right now? So it's very difficult to establish what exactly the reason and rationale are.

I have heard rumours that the country of China last year utilized roughly 200,000 metric tonnes of steel and that, in fact, that may rise to 400,000 metric tonnes. I don't know if that is true or not. The issue is that it's a supply-and-demand market, and my understanding is that the supply of steel in the world has actually increased to the point where we are seeing a bit of a decline in price. As I stated earlier, Mr. Chair, I don't know if this is going to continue. I don't know if we're going to continue to see this.

What I will suggest, though, and what our industry counterparts are telling us is that the 25 per cent is not going to be the norm. We're not going to be seeing 25 per cent inflationary pressures over the next year. As a matter of fact, we're in the process of budgeting around 6 per cent, so we hope that we are over. We hope that it will be under that, but we are budgeting for a 6 per cent inflationary trend.

Mr. Chair, the hon. member has hit exactly what the issues are. We're asking for this money simply to keep our department running for the next two months as well as for the grants to other organizations such as municipalities. That's why we're asking for the dollars. For us to lose two months in April and May would be absolutely catastrophic for the road building industry as well as the infrastructure construction industry in Alberta. Therefore, we do have to continue. We do need the interim supply. I thank the member for his comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think we all admit that we have in this province right now an infrastructure deficit, but I think the blame, frankly, has to go back to when we got preoccupied. To me there are three sorts of deficits you always have to balance off in government: the social deficit, and we're talking about the human services; the bottom-line deficit, which we got preoccupied with in the '93, '94, '95 period; and of course the infrastructure deficit. There has to be a balance there. I would suggest that we lost that balance and concentrated only on one area at that time.

The problem that that created – and I think the minister would agree – is that now we are facing a massive infrastructure deficit, so we're playing catch-up. Unfortunately, when you do that, the catch-up becomes more expensive because now we're into the boom economy. The minister alluded to it. We're into the boom – shortages of labour, steel, and cement, I think, are things that he talked about – but certainly when you're in a boom, the costs go up. We know that.

It would have been much better to have at least balanced that off during the times early on in the '90s. Some of these needed infrastructure projects would have come in much lower at that time.

There's no doubt about that. So now we're playing catch-up, and it's a matter of how much you can do in any given year. That's where we're at. I would hope that in the future we would recognize that we can't put all the eggs in the one basket.

It's had an impact on health care and education, and I'd think that a previous Minister of Education would recognize that. So, hopefully, we've learned from that situation that there has to be a balance.

I want to just follow up with P3s though. The minister is an ardent advocate of P3s, even though I think that even he would admit that the history has not been very promising. In Nova Scotia a Conservative government got rid of them after a Liberal government brought them in. In Britain they've been a disaster. We've even had some experiences here with the Calgary courthouse and so forth.

I want to go to what I was trying to get at in question period about Anthony Henday. The figures that we have now come to the 25 per cent. Admittedly, when the P3 was announced on the 22nd – the reason I'm reviewing this is because I think it has implications for the Calgary ring road and any other P3s we may look at – it was $300 million for the 11-kilometre stretch of road connecting highways 2 and 14. Now, 16 months later the cost is $493 million, a 60 per cent increase. I know that the minister said – and it's correct – that there were changes that occurred in there. As I understand it: two additional bridges, additional kilometres, six lanes instead of four lanes, maintenance, and so forth.

I guess the only question I would have there is that if the people in his department thought that $300 million was the cost, are we getting the Cadillac version or not? I think that's an important point, but I'm more interested in the later figures. On January 27, 2005, you'll recall, the government news release said that it would have cost up to – up to; that was an interesting way to put it: up to – $497 million to build the southeast ring road using conventional public financing. They said that the P3 was only $4 million less costly compared to the original government claim of a $30 million savings. So $493 million. As I recollect it, the drift of that particular release was: boy, we're going to save $4 million because it could have cost us up to $497 million.

Then we had that internal report around here – the public-sector comparator was an internal government document, and the minister is aware of it – that showed that the southeast ring road would have cost between $452 million and $497 million using conventional financing. In other words, instead of costing $4 million less as a P3, the project was just as likely to cost $41 million more. Now, that was not on the original release. So you see the skepticism starting here, Mr. Minister.

Then on May 19, as I recollect, the day after the Legislature closed down, we got the actual public-sector comparator done by PricewaterhouseCoopers. They told the government that building the road using public financing could cost as little as $422.3 million or as much as $487.3 million. So you see the scepticism. That's very different than the conventional spin that it would cost $497 million. All that's lower when we get the results of the public-sector comparator.

I know that the minister says – and I'll come to some of the questions on the Calgary ring road – that it's not a debt if you're paying $32 million a year. Well, I understand the old saying: when it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it is a duck. It's still money coming out of funding for the government in the 30 years hence. We'd be paying $32 million on that Henday project over that period of time. So in actual result that's about a billion dollars that we're going to be paying over a 30-year period. Now, I know that it's convenient because it's not going to be put on the government books as a debt, but the fact is that we'll have to pay that every year for 30 years.

You know, I don't tend to be a structural engineer, but it does seem like a lot to build 11 kilometres and maintain 25 kilometres of road. I contrast that, Mr. Chair, with the 14-kilometre southwest portion of the ring road which will open in 2006, and that cost $245 million using public financing. Now, admittedly, the southwest portion won't be built to the same level as this portion, but I think there's some comparison there. It doesn't include crossing of the North Saskatchewan River and three major ravine crossings, and that was done for the $245 million. Then, of course, we know that on December 5 there was a report in the Edmonton Journal about some problem with the bridges, some changes to the bridges. I know that the minister will say that that's going to be covered, but that is worrisome when that starts to happen right at the beginning of the project.

That's my point, Mr. Chair: it's hard to get a handle in terms of these P3s. I've learned, having worked in the private sector, to respect their expertise. I don't think they're going to P3s because they want to do a favour for the taxpayers of Alberta, that they're going to do it for less somehow. The profit motive is there.

I'd just like to go, then, very quickly, Mr. Chair, into the more recent announcement flowing from that about the Calgary ring road. I have here the news release, and it has questions and answers. One question is: "Why is a P3 being considered for this project?" Partly it says: "The project's scope and lack of environmental and geotechnical issues are other factors that favour the P3 process." Now, nobody knows what that means particularly. It probably means that it's easier to build. That's what I would think.

Dr. Oberg: It means that it's flat land.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Easier to build. Right. We wouldn't want the private sector to have to do anything that's more difficult.

"What are the advantages of using a P3?" "One is the project could be built and in service two years earlier." Second, it "would be completely free-flow" and so forth. What I don't understand about that is: if we put out a bid and said that this is what we want and this is the time frame that we want, as we do in most other areas, why couldn't you bid that and then build the conventional way? Just put that as part of the bid system. It's been done before. I don't see why a P3 necessarily – if you put the same criteria there, why can't you do it in the conventional way? – somehow you can do earlier. If the companies want to bid on it and you have a certain time frame, that's the way it should be.

The other – and I know I got the answer in question period today about the project cost – is: "Government will not release cost estimates until proposals are submitted to ensure a fair, competitive bidding." Well, this is a new way of doing it.

I'd sure like to know what sort of cost we're looking at ahead of time rather than a month before. We may have, then, three hand-picked groups bidding on it, but that's very different than even the previous P3s that were advocated. I think one of the reasons we could see for the Calgary courthouse and the rest of it is because we had some idea ahead of time. I really question that process. I think that to be more transparent is always important, that we should see that public-sector comparator ahead of time.

Then, I'll come back to just this last. I've said it before. "Isn't a P3 just another term for debt? No. The government is simply paying for the project over a 30-year period rather than all at once. The Alberta government would not start making annual payments until after construction is completed. These would be budgeted as operating expenses over the 30 year period." The point is that we're still paying out of the taxpayers' pockets there, Mr. Chairman. Just to call that not a debt – maybe it's not a debt on your books, and that's probably what looks good, especially when you're going for the leadership, you know, but it is a debt that we'll have to pay over that period of time.

We have to look at those projects. The Henday is a billion-dollar project because it's a 30-year project. I really stress that I think the private-sector people that get into these P3s know what they're doing and they're going to make a lot of money on it. I still have never seen the advantage yet. I say, with all due respect to the minister, that with the figures we got from Henday and the differences that I've talked about, it leads to some skepticism. I think we have to do better to lay it out so we can begin to understand the Calgary ring road. Certainly, it needs to be done, but I've never seen a case yet where P3s are the best way.

Let me just conclude there. I just have one other question. We're getting a lot of ache about it from all over – and I know he is – about roads and because of the infrastructure deficit. The one is highways 63 and 28. I mean, this is a road that I think has special circumstances because of the tar sands, and that seems to be our main thrust of our economic development. I think we should be speeding it up. Now, I know we've announced some. I guess I'm trying to get a handle for people on how soon we could see the twinning between those two roads. What's the time frame now, the latest time frame? I've heard various estimates. Certainly, it's being pushed by people in Fort McMurray for sure, that they would like this moved as quickly as possible because there's going to be a lot of traffic on there.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I assume that you will give me the same leeway to talk about things that are not in my interim supply that you just gave the hon. member to talk about when it comes to P3s.

Mr. Martin: It's in the department.

Dr. Oberg: Actually, in all fairness it is not part of the interim supply because the P3 has not been finalized in Calgary; therefore, it is not included in this budgetary item, but I will still talk about it.

Mr. Chair, a couple of things. The hon. member had talked about the potential of the boom and the paying off of the deficit and debt. Absolutely, paying off the deficit and debt was the thing that we were elected for as government in this province. It was the thing that people wanted us to do in this province. It did result in, though, some capital projects being put on the back burner. Subsequently, with the paying off of the deficit and the debt, we were able to start doing a lot of the projects that were out there. I think every hon. member in the Legislature has seen what projects are being done out there right now.

One of the things that we did not anticipate, though – and I challenge anyone in this Assembly to say that they anticipated it – was the huge amount of growth in the oil sands that took place over the last four to five years. The number of projects that have been announced, up to $130 billion, realistically was beyond the grasp of anyone within the last 10 years. This is something that came out of the blue. It's a great news story. It's wonderful. It's a very positive thing for the province of Alberta, but it's not something that was anticipated five or six years ago, Mr. Chair. We are working hard to recover. We are working hard to get the infrastructure and the transportation projects that are desperately needed in this province.

The other issue, and one of the things that you really have to remember, is that construction on infrastructure is about 7 to 8 per cent of what is happening in the province as a whole. As a government we do not control the prices. It is the private sector and the huge private-sector projects that are out there that actually control the prices. Unfortunately, we have to follow along because we have to compete with these prices as well.

The hon. member went on about the cost of the Anthony Henday, and I will give him an example. He was wondering about the massive cost of $493 million. The city of Edmonton is looking at doing an interchange on highway 2 and 23rd Avenue. As the hon. member may or may not know, the price of that interchange is now up very close to $140 million for one interchange on highway 2 and 23rd Avenue. It's absolutely massive what has happened to the amounts of these projects. It's $120 million to $140 million, so it's very huge. It's very significant. When you take into consideration that on the 20 or so kilometres of lane on the Anthony Henday we have 24 bridges that are in place on that road at $493 million, it puts it into context, Mr. Chair. Obviously, it's a lot of money; $493 million is a lot of money.

The other issue that occurred when it came to the P3 and the Anthony Henday – and this ties into the P3 in the Calgary project – is quite simply that the public-sector comparator, the $300 million, was put out before the scope of the project was actually finalized. It was put out about a year to two years before, and it was purely an estimation at that time of what the costs would be to build that road. It was an estimation. What then occurred over the next 14 to 16 months, in which case the private companies went out and actually put in the bids, is that we upgraded the scope of the project. We upgraded the potential for appreciation in the project, and we built that in. The public-sector comparator states that we typically build in a 10 per cent contingency, and that 10 per cent contingency would be on top of the roughly $478 million, $475 million public-sector comparator.

We're not going to make that mistake this time, Mr. Chair. We're going to come forward at exactly the same time in exactly the same market conditions as what the private sector is going to do, and we're going to compare the bids. When you enter into a P3 – and I don't want to leave the impression here that we are philosophically or ideologically driven by a P3. Quite simply, if it is a good deal, we will do it; if it is not a good deal, we won't do it. We don't have blinders on that say that a P3 is the only way we're going to do it. We are conventionally financing many more projects than we are doing as the P3s. So I think that is a significant issue.

There's one other response that I think people really have to think about, and that is: when we conventionally finance, it is the private sector that builds the roads. It is the private sector that builds in profit into that particular contract as well. There is profit in the private sector when they build our roads, when we get the tenders in for our roads. On a P3 one of the advantages that we have quite simply is that the risk assumption is all on the private sector. For example, if a bridge collapses – hopefully, it would never collapse, but if there is something wrong with the bridge, in the next 30 years it is the responsibility of that consortium to ensure that it's fixed. They have the liability if something happens to that road over the next 30 years.

In a conventional financing method we typically get a guarantee of one to two years. The hon. member prior to this talked about the roughness in the road on highway 2 under the interchange. Well, because we conventionally financed it, we have a year to two years of a guarantee. If this was on a P3 project, for 30 years they would have to take that accordion type of road out of there and they would have to fix it properly.

There's also the reference made to the girders. Yeah, the girders were not to our specifications. What they actually were was higher. They had actually put in higher specification girders. Our people picked it up and subsequently looked at it and gave them the opportunity to prove that they were higher, and yes, indeed, they actually were a higher specification. The rationale for that was because the contractors felt that it would lead to less maintenance down the road if they built it to a higher quality than what our specifications and standards actually were. We tend to see that on P3s as well.

The other issue: highway 63. Again, this is a very good example because with highway 63 I am having to take money out of my budget. I'm potentially having to reprofile it. Hopefully, I won't. Hopefully, the Finance minister will have mercy on me and not make me reprofile it. Ultimately, I may have to reprofile it. The key is that I have to do all of these things because I have to come up with the money in the three or four years. I have to come up with the cash dollars in three or four years to ensure that that road gets done. It is a very high priority for the citizens of Alberta, not just the citizens of Fort McMurray, so I am attempting to do it in whatever fashion I can. If it was a P3 – and it's not a P3 for some specific reasons – then I would be paying for that over 30 years, and I would not have to come up with all of that money. I would not have to reprofile it all at once.

The other issue – and I'll use the Anthony Henday as an example – is that because we're paying for that over 30 years, because the $500 million is spaced out over the 30 years, it gives me the ability to deal with the rest of the infrastructure deficit that is occurring in Alberta. Quite simply, if I had to take $500 million and pay that cash up front, which is a conventional form of financing, we would not be able to do it. We have felt, and I certainly feel and I certainly agree, that the P3 proposal, the risk assumption, the maintenance, the higher standards: all of this is a very positive way to do it. But I do not have blinders on. That's why we're doing a public-sector comparator. That's why we're looking at the process. That's why we're looking at the bids. We will determine if it is indeed a good deal for the taxpayers of Alberta.

Just for your information as well, this is exactly what the Auditor General stated when he looked at our budget. He said that P3s have to be considered, that they should be considered, that the process should be so that it's a real public-sector comparator so that the public-sector comparator comes out at the same time that the bids are open. So we are quite simply following the process and the recommendations of the Auditor General.

The hon. member makes an excellent point when it comes to what happened in Nova Scotia, and one of the things that I am attempting to ensure is that that absolutely will not happen here. We have seen what occurred in Nova Scotia. We have seen what befell some of the P3s before, and we're attempting to go around that. But, again, if it is not in line with our public-sector comparator, quite simply, we will conventionally finance it. It will take longer because I will not be able to take X number of dollars out of my budget and simply build that road. It's going to take a longer time. It may not be a road that is completely finished, with all the interchanges, because we will be scrimping and saving and potentially using that interchange money somewhere else.

I don't think anyone here, especially those members who are from Calgary, wants another road such as the Stoney Trail NW, where there are going to be some lights. We want it free-flowing; we want to keep the traffic moving. For anyone who has been in Calgary in the last while, you know what it's like not to have free-flowing traffic on the Deerfoot Trail, where in essence, in many ways you're sitting there for a period of time, 15 minutes to half an hour to three-quarters of an hour, in absolute gridlock.

An Hon. Member: A slow-moving parking lot.

Dr. Oberg: Yeah, a slow-moving parking lot. Absolutely.

So it's imperative for the citizens of Calgary that we get that road done as quickly, as quickly as possible, and that's what we're endeavouring to do with this.

Just in my final comment I would ask the hon. members, when they're driving to and fro on highway 2, to take a look at the huge amount of progress that has been done on the Anthony Henday because of the winter. We may well be significantly ahead of schedule when it comes to opening that road because of this winter. The roadway, the overpasses are looking absolutely excellent, and I think it's going to be a great deal.

Lastly, the other key component to this is that I can tell you and I can tell this Assembly when that road is going to be done. That road will be done in October of 2007 because, quite simply, if it is not, on November 1, 2007, there will be a million dollar penalty. On December 1, 2007, there will be a million dollar penalty. And so on and so on.

So I believe it is a good deal, and I believe it's something that we need to continue on, but we will take a very close look and ensure that it is in the range with the public-sector comparator, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to combine a couple of different departments here, if I could, and direct my questions to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation because I know that he has also today graciously agreed to answer questions as he can on the interim estimates for Advanced Education. So if I can kill two birds with one stone and ask a couple of questions in both of those areas.

I see that we're looking at $1,040,000,000 for Infrastructure and Transportation to get us through the next two months and somewhere less, $362 million, for Advanced Education to get us through from the beginning of April to the end of May. As always, because the document that we're provided with, of course, the 2006-2007 Interim Supply Estimates, is just a series of line items in a budget, I'm always curious as to what we're actually spending the money on, cognizant of the fact that as the Finance minister said in the House the other day, this is not a straightforward one-sixth of the budget for each department, that there are certain expenditures that have to be undertaken at this time that cover you off for year-end and so on and so forth. How much of this in both departments really constitutes this sort of once-per-year expenditures, and how much is ongoing funding to keep the lights on and the employees paid and so on and so forth for the next two months?

The numbers, of course, are huge, and they do cover one-sixth of the operating fiscal year for both departments. Infrastructure and Transportation, obviously, is a special case these days because we are trying to address the considerable infrastructure deficit that has been built up in this province over the last 13 years, an infrastructure deficit caused in part by the government's decision to make paying off the debt the priority. I know that the government feels that that was the direction it was given from the people of Alberta. Nevertheless, we ended up with the mortgage paid off on a house with a leaky roof.

Of course, part of the infrastructure deficit has been exasperated, or exacerbated – exasperated if you're stuck in traffic on the Deerfoot – by the fact that we've had so much economic growth and so much population growth in this province over the last dozen years. I wonder if the minister on behalf of both departments could give me an indication with each budget here, with each interim estimate: how much is for the kinds of once-per-year expenditures that the Finance minister was talking about in the house earlier this week, and how much is for ongoing expenses?

Then I'd like a sense of why it is that we can't bring those numbers more in line with the fiscal year. I mean, budget day is going to be, as the Finance minister announced I think yesterday, Wednesday, March 22. Yes, there is a set period of time to debate the budget. Nevertheless, we're not far off the beginning of the next fiscal year, I would think, before we've completed debate on the budget. The question that always nags at my mind – and maybe I should be directing this to the Finance minister as well – is why it is that her department can't get an earlier start on the budget and have it ready in time for us to debate and vote on, carry through the process, and have it in place with or without amendments in time for the beginning of the new fiscal year.

Back to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation for a moment, if I can, I wonder if within the context of the $362 million in interim supply estimates for Advanced Education he can tell me if any of that money and, if so, how much of it is going towards actual infrastructure issues within the Ministry of Advanced Education. According to the throne speech I think that there were 47 capital projects in Advanced Education planned or under way. I'd like some sense of what those are and how those are proceeding.

I think I'll leave it at that because I know that the minister wants to respond; perhaps the Finance minister does too. I know that we have other speakers, and time is always of the essence.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Very briefly, I'll reiterate. The hon. member may not have heard what I initially said about Infrastructure and Transportation and the initial breakdown. In essence, there is $400 million which is for the municipal partnership grants. So $400 million out of this slightly over $1 billion is grants that go out at the beginning of the year. These are not grants that are prorated on a monthly basis. They're grants that go out specifically at the beginning of the year. There's another $25 million there for capital and accommodation projects. These are, in essence, leases and lease upgrades that we are on the hook for, that we have to follow through with. There's no way around that.

Mr. Chair, the other $400 million on the operating side is for the running of the department. It's for wages. It's for salaries. It's for equipment. It's for all the things that it takes to keep my department running.

You have to recognize that for my particular department these are probably the busiest two months of the year. April and May are probably the busiest two months purely because it's the start of the construction season, and we are working very hard on that. There's $207.4 million, Mr. Chair, that is there for capital projects. This is quite simply paying for the work that is being done.

So that is what is included in my departmental estimates.

On the Advanced Education side there is roughly $344 million in operating expenses. If I may, I'll just break it down for you here. The ministry support services is around $3.4 million; the program delivery support is about $6.6 million. These first two are actually staffing. Program delivery and ministry support are staffing, so in essence these are salaries paid to people for those two months.

There's assistance to the postsecondary institutions. These are the grants that go to the institutions so that they can pay their staff and so that they can do the things that they do, and that's $266 million. In direct response to the hon. member's question, there's 45 and a half million dollars for the infrastructure capital for postsecondary institutions.

There's also another $17.7 million for support to postsecondary learners. What that is is student loans as well as scholarships and bursaries. There are scholarships and bursaries that are determined and paid out during that time frame. There's also another $17.4 million that is nonbudgetary disbursements, and this has to do with the student loan component of it. These are nonbudgetary disbursements that must go out to students. These are for people that are receiving their student loan payments. The apprenticeship delivery: 4 and a half million dollars.

Again, as I say, that is simply paying the wages of the people that are there and paying the wages of the department.

So, Mr. Chair, I feel that although I am reading what the hon. Minister of Advanced Education – I do have a slight bit of knowledge of what occurs in Advanced Education, and I really have absolutely no problems with this. We have to keep our advanced education institutions running. We have to keep the learning system running. Quite simply, if we went for two months before we received the budget and shut down, it would be catastrophic indeed. I know that it is not the intent of the hon. opposition to shut down the postsecondary system.

So that's the breakdown. I'd be more than happy to answer any other questions on it, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. A series of questions. I asked earlier in the House as to where our infrastructure debt or deficit stood, and the minister responded, I believe, that it was somewhere around $7.2 billion or $7.4 billion. So it's an extremely large deficit. At one point the minister suggested what I was a little bit concerned about, trading one sort of debt for another, and that was the possibility of borrowing to eliminate this current deficit. Like the minister I very much wanted to see this deficit removed, but since that initial thought I'm just wondering if he could share other solutions in terms of a year-by-year payoff, a percentage of the surplus or whatever, that may have come up.

The minister is well aware that I see P3s as a gamble, and I think he does in a sense as well. We're basically gambling with P3s that our short-term gain, the money we save up front in cost overruns, will not be cancelled by the long-term pain of 30 years of fluctuating interest rates that we have no control over. My feeling is that we should be paying for things with the money we currently have and not putting our future, our children and grandchildren, further into debt.

I would like to get an update, if it's possible, on how we're coming along with the Tsuu T'ina land acquisitions. I'm wondering specifically: will we ever know – or when will we know, not will we ever. I hope we'll know at a defined time. When will we know how much we're paying provincially for land acquisition for the Tsuu T'ina land to run the ring road through?

There's been a lot of discussion held at the city of Calgary, which is where it should happen because this is going to be impacting the city, as to whether we should have two entrances to the reserve via Southland Drive and 90th Avenue. My understanding is that the last time this was discussed, there was going to be, at least at this point, the possibility of a single access via 90th. The people of the communities were concerned about a double access. I know Alderman Erskine did his best in terms of sending out a series of surveys and holding a number of public meetings about these concerns. I hope that that gets resolved.

I agree very much with planners from both the province and the city that in order to be able to decide on future routes, we have to acquire the land now. There's no doubt about that. The city would completely be frozen if we didn't have the land for those alternatives. Again, this sort of relates because a little further down that road to the north is the Tsuu T'ina Nation, and they have a large say.

I'm very concerned as the critic not only for Infrastructure and Transportation but in my role as the critic for parks and protected areas. I'm hoping that the details for the crossing of the Elbow River will be forthcoming. I've talked about the wonderful bridge we have across the Bow on that particular stretch of the ring road. I've indicated that from a passage of animals, birds, people, et cetera, and from a noise level, I'd rather have the noise sort of above and beyond than concentrated. I've also indicated that for movements I don't want a low bridge which impedes the transition of animals and humans within the Weaselhead park wildlife conservation area. So if you have any details, Mr. Minister, with regard to the bridge and its construction, that would be very much appreciated. I know that there are a number of people in Calgary who are concerned about the preserving of that wildlife area.

The other part. Possibly the minister will discuss this. It seems that the Premier does not want the surplus dollars to be debated in this House. In his belief the surplus, for whatever reason, is solely the responsibility of the government to decide how it should be expended. The government has talked about a three-part plan. Please, Minister of Finance or minister of infrastructure, correct me if I'm wrong, but it seemed to me that the gist of that plan was that one-third of it was supposed to go into savings. What has happened is that we put $1 billion in, and then we took $2 billion out, so I'm not clear about how the surplus can go to resolving the infrastructure problem.

Again, possibly I misinterpreted, but I thought the second third of the whole would be to pay down infrastructure. My understanding is that approximately $2.2 billion or thereabouts would be put into paying down the infrastructure debt or financing future infrastructure projects. Then the third, that I have the most degree of difficulty with – and I'm sure there are members opposite who have difficulty as well – is that there seems to be the third which the Premier has granted to himself as whatever he sees fit. Last year, in his wisdom, he saw fit to go with $1.4 billion in terms of $400 one-time rebates.

An area that I praise him for seeing fit – I just would like to have been a part of the discussion – is the $1 billion in terms of supporting cancer. The last I heard was that that $1 billion is now a half billion, and I'm not sure how that billion translates directly into infrastructure support; for example, the Tom Baker cancer institute and whether it's going to be relocated, added to, or just what the possibilities are.

The Liberals have put out and stuck to recommending a plan for the surplus which would see 35 per cent of all future surpluses put into a postsecondary endowment fund so that we would have steady funding in addition to general revenue. We also recommended the idea of 25 per cent into infrastructure projects, and ideally there is the balance between paying down our current infrastructure debt and allowing for future growth. I tend to be, in this case, somewhat fiscally conservative because I would like to see that infrastructure debt dealt with, but I'm very aware of the demand for a whole variety of areas: the 60,000 new spaces at the postsecondary by 2020; the 15,000 by 2008. Obviously, if we're going to create those spaces, which are great investments, we have to balance the paying off of the infrastructure debt and the creating of the new spaces. This is extremely important.

Calgary is without 40 schools in its suburban areas, and the flawed formula is causing inner-city schools and programs to be closed, but there's no payoff in the sense that very few new schools are sprouting up in suburban areas. So I have concern about paying for those schools and, again, balancing the debt and the need for the new growth.

We have recommended that 35 per cent of all future surpluses be saved, and that's a pretty clear statement. Basically, whatever our surplus is from here on into the future, one-third of it would be saved. It wouldn't be an in-out process. It would stay in. Endowment funds would be created.

Lastly, because we have a concern and, unfortunately, we have no ministry for arts and culture, we would see 5 per cent of all future surpluses expended for arts and culture. Our idea is to build up a $500 million endowment fund, which would support a variety of activities: dance, theatre, enticing individuals to expend their money on filming in this province. What it would do is provide a set amount of money that people could depend upon. All they would have to do is look at their portions of general revenue and then top it up by the amount in the endowment funds that would be set. As soon as we had a surplus figure, you'd know that these groups were able to participate in this endowment fund.

I look forward to whatever answers the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation can provide. A lot of this money is hopefully going to be expended in the Calgary area. As well, we're having the problems with the water treatment plants. I know it's a balance act, and I very much appreciate that you and your caucus are making hard decisions. How do you pay down the deficit? How do you maintain the growth?

Thank you. I look forward to your answers.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Minister of Finance, did you want to supplement answers?

Mrs. McClellan: Can I just clarify – the hon. member may not have heard my comments at supplementary estimates – on two points only? On the unbudgeted surplus, hon. members, please do not say that these are not debated by the Legislature. They are. No money is expended until it is passed through this Legislature. This is, in fact, a fact. In fact, a fact. I have been quite quiet about correcting this, but I won't be in the future. The fact is that while you may say that we are going to put out $1.3 billion in health projects in a quarter, which nobody, I think, would deny were needed, particularly the MLAs in Calgary as I think four hospitals were affected by that announcement, and they know they need the space, and they want them done. But, in fact, until that supplementary estimate came into this House and was approved by this House, those dollars did not flow. Frankly, if the House turned it down, the project would not go. I want to make that clear.

So please understand that while we may make a decision on a project's recommendation . . .

Mr. MacDonald: What about the prosperity bonus?

Mrs. McClellan: That was in the House. In fact, I had to amend the act. The member is asking about the prosperity bonus, as he called it. If you were in the House, you were part of the debate where I amended the act so that it could be tax free. That's the other one that needs to be corrected.

So all I ask is that we get the facts right and that we use them in the right manner. I try to be straightforward. I try to give you the answers. When I go out and about, which I do, and I'm told that these things are being said, I say: well, they must have misunderstood. You know what? I'm not going to say that anymore because we're having the conversation. These are the facts.

You can criticize the fact that we may make a decision to recommend that the Foothills hospital, the Rockyview hospital, the Peter Lougheed hospital, and the Children's hospital or whatever other institution gets X number of dollars of funding between budget cycles, but until that supplementary estimate is debated in this Legislature and passed, that, in fact, does not happen. As I say – let me make it clear – if this House decided not to approve that estimate, that project would not proceed. So I want to make that clear.

The other one that I wanted to just clarify for the hon. member is on the heritage fund and the $1 billion investment and why we just take the money out. I did explain at the time that it was necessary because it would require a change in the legislation, and we wanted to put those dollars in the fund. We have the option of making an amendment to that legislation and not flowing the funds. The difficulty that I have with doing that at this point is that we count on that some 1 billion dollars of revenue from the fund for programming spending. If you didn't have that money in a year, if your surpluses were not there, I would have to find $1.2 billion or $1.1 billion or $950 million, whatever it was in that particular year of the investment, out of program. Well, Health, Education, and Advanced Education take well over 60 per cent of our budget. You know where you'd have to go because the small departments simply don't have it.

So until we can be sure that we have a reliable revenue stream to satisfy our program expenditures that have to occur for needed services, I would be somewhat reluctant to make that change yet. I am not reluctant to put the billion dollars of monies that are surplus to our needs into that heritage fund. That stays as a permanent part of the fund, and we will realize the investment off that fund. Those dollars, again, can be used for well-needed projects.

I'm open to the idea, but it's a little like health premiums and education property taxes. You have to replace the money. You know, you just simply do. And that's a tough question to answer. We want sustainability. I've been here when we had to reduce budgets. It is not a pleasant experience. It is not easy to ask our public service, as we did, to take a 5 per cent reduction, to have to lay off valued employees in all of those services. So we want to make sure that we can sustain those needed expenditures. I look forward to that debate in the budget as to how we could spend those dollars better. I'm always looking for ways to do that. But I did want to make that comment.

We did not make a definitive decision on surpluses as to a percentage. I've said that while there's a fair amount of value in looking at a third/a third/a third – maybe that's the right number. Maybe it's 20-40-40. Maybe it's 25-50-25. I don't know. We can debate that. But for the past year, because of the infrastructure needs that we had with the capital requirements with the heavy growth we're experiencing, we did not want to tie ourselves to that, understanding that there were some very high capital needs out there that had to be looked at. But we did make the commitment that the unbudgeted surplus, or the monies that are surplus to our ongoing operating needs, would be spent in three ways: smart spending – that's what we consider capital investment, as an example; giving back – that can be a rebate cheque, it could be a tax reduction, it could be a number of ways that you give back to the citizens; and, of course, endowments and savings.

I'm very proud of the fact that this year we've been able to put $750 million into our access to the future endowment – that's great; I'll be even more thrilled when that's fully funded – that we were able to add funding to our tremendously successful Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research to raise that, to add dollars to our scholarship fund and, of course, to the ingenuity fund or the science and engineering fund. So those are great investments. I look forward to our being able to add to those and fully fund them in the future.

I just wanted to clarify those two points for the hon. member because I think he asked the questions with an actual interest in knowing the answers. So thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. First, just to very quickly deal with some of the questions that were just raised. The land for the Tsuu T'ina, the cost of land: our appraiser will be in somewhere between April 15 and May 15, somewhere in that time frame. The advantage that we've had in dealing with the Tsuu T'ina is that we were able to agree actually on one appraiser, which has shortened up the time frame quite considerably because typically what occurred in the past is that we would pick an appraiser, the Tsuu T'ina would pick an appraiser, and then there would be a third appraiser who would take those two appraisals and decide which one is actually correct. We were able to agree on the same appraiser, so we hope to have that between April 15 and May 15. There were some delays in doing that, in getting the actual assessed value and the assessed amount, but I met with the chief last week and I understand that everything is under control on that now.

We are working as fast as we can on the Tsuu T'ina. We're attempting to get all of the details in place. There still are some details that are outstanding, but we're fully confident that everything is moving forward as opposed to moving back. One of the big kickers in all of this, though, is that whatever we do, whatever we decide on does have to be taken to the federal government because any time you get a change in the reserve land, it has to be taken to the federal government. It does have to have their approval. It has to have full environmental impacts as well. So all of these things have to occur prior to this project moving ahead.

But I can stand here today and say that I'm very confident that we will get this done. I'm very confident that this will be seen through to its conclusion, and I have nothing but praise for what the members of the Tsuu T'ina band have done. They have been excellent to deal with, and I have absolutely no issues with how things are being done. We're working together as fast as we can to get this in place, and we hope to have it done very, very soon.

However, as I stated, it still is very much in the federal government's hands as to what does or does not occur, but I'm very confident that if Tsuu T'ina and if myself and the government of Alberta go forward to the federal government, they won't say no. Failing that, I've just heard that the Prime Minister is actually from Calgary, and I don't really think that he would want all the people from Calgary writing him a letter stating that they did not want this ring road. So it certainly, I believe, is going to go full tilt and should be there.

The hon. member also asked about the bridge. I don't have the exact structural details of the bridge, but we are very cognizant of the Weaselhead, and we're doing everything we can to ensure that the Weaselhead is protected. We will be having full environmental impact studies over that area to ensure that there is no or at least very, very minimal environmental impact. Any time you have a freeway going through an area, realistically there is going to be some environmental impact. We wanted to keep to a managed environmental impact, and we want to ensure that it is done for the betterment of the citizens of Calgary.

The other comments that the hon. member made were about P3s, and I really believe that much of the comments – you can probably read in Hansard – were to deal with my comments prior to this.

So with that, I would sit down. Madam Chair, I understand that I am also doing the estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness, so with your concurrence, I would start there, if that's okay with the opposition.

The Acting Chair: I'm sorry, but I also still have Edmonton-Gold Bar on my list. Would the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar like to speak on this before we move on?

Mr. MacDonald: Madam Chairperson, no. If the hon. member, in light of the time, would like to get started, that's fine.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I'll be very quick. I just wanted to have a small conversation. We've all heard how you're juggling the money, but I happen to come from outside of the magic corridor of Calgary-Edmonton and the other magic city of Fort McMurray, and I'm worried about highway 3. I'm not sure that putting passing lanes is the answer, and I'm just hoping that you haven't juggled money out of that project, which probably isn't good to begin with – it really needs to be twinned – to help the other part of the province. Yeah, we seem to be out of that loop, and I want to make sure that we stay in it.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. Madam Chair, I just want to assure the hon. member that Lethbridge is always in our hearts in this government, especially considering that the newest city in Alberta, Brooks, is very close to Lethbridge as well. So it's always in our thoughts, it's always on our minds, and it's always in our hearts.

In saying that, though, Madam Chair, there are a couple of things that are very interesting on highway 3. The hon. member is absolutely right: we're going to be putting in roughly 24 kilometres of passing lanes, which is going to alleviate the problem. It is not going to solve the problem.

There are several issues when it comes to highway 3. First and foremost, when it comes to the actual transportation down highway 3, the biggest bottleneck is in the Crowsnest Pass. That's why we're concentrating on doing that first and foremost in Crowsnest Pass, to get a satisfactory route through the Crowsnest Pass. There have been a lot of representations made to us about the south side of the valley and how that is not – I stress: is not – a route that we should be undertaking because of the watershed and all sorts of other issues. So we're currently doing the engineering on going through widening the existing road, making it four lanes, trying to get the speed limit up to around 80 kilometres. Because of the location of the road I don't believe that we can get it up to 100, 110, 130 kilometres. I think, quite simply, that it would take too many houses if we were to do that, and there is not a wide enough valley; there's not room enough to do that with the road.

The second area that needs to be addressed on highway 3 is actually the bypass around Fort Macleod. I think that for the people who live in Fort Macleod, this is a critical issue because Fort Macleod is one of the few communities in Alberta that has actually seen a decline in its population. Subsequently, one of the issues that has been brought to my attention is that people are not planning businesses there because they are afraid that the traffic is all going to route around, and they want to see ultimately where that routing will take place and when that routing will take place. So I feel that this is certainly a priority as well.

Travelling east, there are significant other priorities on highway 3 also. Probably the next biggest one is right around Medicine Hat. What we have around Medicine Hat is highway 3 that kind of weaves around the airport, which limits the length of runway of the airport in Medicine Hat. It also causes a great deal of consternation because all the traffic that goes through highway 3, which, by the way, is our number one route for transportation to the west coast, now goes right through Medicine Hat as opposed to a bypass. So we're currently looking at how we can bypass Medicine Hat. This is with the direct concurrence of the mayor and the MLAs with respect to Medicine Hat, and everyone is in favour of this.

So those tend to be our priorities on highway 3. As the hon. member, I'm hoping, can tell, we have actually spent a fair amount of time on designing highway 3, and it is not out of our thoughts. It is a very important, critical transportation corridor and part of the supply chain. The route out to Vancouver is an essential component for businesses in Alberta.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. If I might have a supplemental. You didn't give me a time frame on that. I realize that a lot of work has been done on it.

The other thing: is not the land already gazetted for the Canamex highway? How does that affect around Fort Macleod? I believe that land is already gazetted.

The Acting Chair: Time.

Dr. Oberg: If I may, Madam Chair. The land is gazetted. We know where it is. But what is happening in Fort Macleod is: quite simply, they want to know when it is going to occur. What I'm attempting to do is move up these projects. I gave you the priorities of how I see the projects unfolding on highway 3, and I think there's a fair amount of rationale for that. There's no point in making a good trade corridor and then have it bottleneck in the Crowsnest Pass.

So that tends to be the direction we're going. It is contingent on budgetary constraints. The budget will be occurring within the next couple of weeks, and we'll be able to talk more about it at that time. But these are certainly our high priorities in the government of Alberta and, I'm sure, with all citizens of Alberta, especially those citizens in the southern part of the province, although because of the incredible importance of the supply chain, it should be of incredible importance to everyone in Alberta.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Seeing no other speakers, does the committee wish to vote on the estimates for Infrastructure and Transportation before we proceed to the estimates on Health and Wellness? Seeing no one standing, I will go ahead then.

Infrastructure and Transportation

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$832,400,000
Capital Investment	$207,800,000

The Acting Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

So we'll now turn it over to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation on Health and Wellness estimates.

Dr. Oberg: If I may just add a point of clarification: it was my understanding that we had also done the Advanced Education estimates.

The Acting Chair: So we need to vote on those? Okay.

Advanced Education

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$344,700,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$17,400,000

The Acting Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Health and Wellness

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's my pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness to present the estimates for interim supply.

Madam Chairman, what you have before you is just a huge amount of dollars. It's $2.2917 billion – and I said billion – that we're dealing with today. This is roughly 39 per cent of all the total interim supply estimates that are before us today. This is very similar to my department, the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. It's quite simply to keep the departments going, to keep the physicians being paid, to keep the regional health authorities being paid, to keep the health authorities as well as the Health and Wellness staff being paid, to keep the drug supplies being given out to patients.

Madam Chair, I would be more than happy to take any questions from the hon. members. Any questions that I cannot answer, I will certainly pass on to the Minister of Health and Wellness. But this is a very critical issue. I don't think anyone – anyone – in this Assembly would want to see the Department of Health and Wellness not have any money for two months, and therefore I would urge all of us to pass this in a very expeditious fashion.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise on interim supply estimates for 2006-07 in relation to Health. I appreciate that this is the number one concern of Albertans and that it's important that there be no glitch, no holdup in the ongoing functioning of a very complex system, for which we are accountable.

I would like to ask a few questions around where we are spending the dollars and how well we are spending the dollars, again with specific focus on new technology, on how well we're assessing the importance of new technology, and whether it's appropriately used.

I've heard stories among my colleagues where, for example, full body MRI scans are being given at office parties as a gift or at an auction sale. It's clear to me that in some areas our technology is not being used appropriately, and while there may be relatively few risks associated with the use of MRIs, there are certainly those that are constrained in their appropriate use by not being able to access the private MRI system. If we have that kind of promotion of an MRI scan, and indeed some of the inappropriate private use of MRIs just because people can afford to pay it, it suggests to me, then, that we are not serving Albertans in terms of setting standards and ensuring that the technology, first of all, is needed and then, secondly, is used only in appropriate settings. I know that we have the technology assessment program, and I just wonder whether there is sufficient medical evidence and oversight to allow us to make good, long-term decisions about the new technology.

We're also concerned on this side about the continued lack of investment of our health budget in prevention. We continue to spend over 95 per cent of our dollars in health care in identifying and treating disease and injury. I was gratified to see some of the new investment in mental health, and hopefully this can be directed at some of the determinants of mental health, at the preventive side of mental health, especially our disadvantaged population, and the increased risk of addictions, of mental health problems, and how much we could by early intervention in childhood and family issues reduce the demands on the health care system. That continues to be an issue that will plague the ongoing increases in health care budgets if we fail to invest appropriately in prevention and keep it under 5 per cent of most health authorities' budgets, as it is today.

It's also clear that the public are expressing a commitment to publicly funded health care. We are deluged by phone calls and letters on this side about the proposed privatization option that will suck resources and staffing, suck physicians out of rural areas, potentially, into more lucrative practices in the cities. People are very concerned about this, and if government members are not hearing these same messages, I hope they're actively soliciting feedback from constituents who are concerned about the importance of uniform access and the clear direction for medically necessary services that we're all looking for.

Those are the essence of my concerns, Madam Chairman, and I'll wait to see if there are some offered answers.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. It's not very often that I actually get to answer these questions, so I will take some delight in answering these today.

Madam Chair, the hon. member has a very good point when he talks about assessing new technologies. One of the huge costs in health care right now and right today is new technology. Much of it, in all fairness to the people who have brought forward technology, is of dubious benefit. It may well have some benefit, but it is not necessarily the be-all and end-all, and I will use MRIs as an example.

What we have to keep remembering and have to keep focusing on is that the MRI is a diagnostic tool. It is simply a diagnostic tool. Those of us who actually used to diagnose things by putting hands on patients and listening to them are aghast when there are so many MRIs that are ordered today. However, medicine must move on, and technology must move on, but I certainly hope that the art of medicine also continues to move on and also continues to be a viable focus.

The key point here, though, when we talk about new technologies and when we talk about – and I believe the hon. member used the term – medical evidence and oversight, is that that is the college of physicians' role and responsibility. It is not for anyone in this Legislative Assembly, it is not for anyone in the bureaucracy of health care to determine whether or not a medical procedure is a viable procedure. It is up to the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the medical fraternity to determine if, indeed, it is a viable procedure.

Subsequently the college – for example, on total body MRI scans, as was brought up – certainly has the ability to say that that is not a medically safe procedure and to cause charges to be brought against a particular physician who advocates for that. They have chosen not to. I am not specifically up on the research on total body MRIs, but there is a body of evidence that is showing that the risk of a total body MRI and the potential of finding something that is wrong, such as a cancer, may or may not weigh each other out, may or may not count each other out. I think that in the next five to 10 to 15 to 20 years you may well see a complete change in philosophy when it comes to things like total body MRIs, but I'm only speaking today with respect to that.

Lack of investment in prevention: what we do have to remember is that 5 to 10 per cent of the budget is being spent on prevention today, and it's a huge amount of dollars. Mental health work: a lot of that work is in prevention. A lot of the community health services are in prevention. Wouldn't it be a wonderful world if we didn't have any disease at all, if it was all preventable? Absolutely. There's no question about that, but we do have to treat acute cases. When someone comes in with a broken arm, we can't simply say: well, sorry; you should have prevented it. It has to be fixed. It has to be set. It has to have the procedures done on it. So we do have to be realistic when it comes to health care. We can't simply say that all diseases could have been prevented because, in all fairness and honesty, many of them could not have been prevented, could not have been identified, and subsequently their course changed.

The other comment that I will make is very simply with respect to the physicians in rural areas. I am probably the most qualified person in this Assembly to talk about physicians in rural areas, for reasons that shall remain anonymous. I will simply say that when it comes to the potential for privatization, the potential for a different payment system, those physicians that are in rural Alberta make significantly more money than those physicians in urban Alberta. I think that that is something that you have to remember and recognize and the difference is very, very significant.

The issue when it comes down to physicians in the rural areas is not a monetary issue; it is a lifestyle issue. Because you're on call a significant amount of time, because you're on call for large amounts of time, that tends to be what the issue is. It is not a remuneration issue.

Madam Chair, with that, I believe I've answered the majority of questions that have been put forward by the hon. member, and I'd be pleased to answer more.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and make a few observations on the interim supply estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness. I have a few questions that I would like to ask the minister of infrastructure, who happens to be, luckily for us today, also a physician.

Madam Chair, the comments made here on the use and abuse of technology: it's an important issue. Technology, new technologies – you know, that just because they're there, therefore they should be used – I think is an important issue when we are talking about controlling costs and preventing harm from the excessive use, unnecessary use of some of the diagnostic technologies. I think both seem to suggest that we need to pay more attention than we may have to this point to the very question of the appropriate use of medical technologies both in diagnostic practices that prevail across the province and in some other ways.

So I think it's a very good point. I think we need to pay more attention. My sense is – and I heard the minister of infrastructure also suggesting that – that there is money to be saved without causing any inconvenience or damage to the health of our patients that come to our medical institutions that provide service. I want to add my voice to that concern that's expressed across the foyer here on that issue, and I think we need to pay attention to it.

I notice here, Madam Chair, that this year's supplementary estimates for expense and equipment/inventory purchases are $2,291,700,000. Last year the amount was $2,044,200,000. There's a difference of about $250 million here; $250 million more is being asked this year. I wonder if the minister will have something to say on that to explain what this difference reflects, what the increase is about, where these particular $250 million may be expected to go or are projected to go.

On the other hand, I also notice that under capital investment there's a slight decrease of $2 million in what's being asked for this year – that is, the coming fiscal year, 2007 – compared to the fiscal year 2005-2006. So there are some variations here from last year. I think that they simply tickle my curiosity, and I'm sure Albertans would like to perhaps know why are there variations between last year and the coming year.

I understand that these supplementary estimates are meant to tide us over the next two months, the month of April and the month of May. We have been debating interim supply estimates for the current year.

Dr. Oberg: Those were supplementary estimates.

Dr. Pannu: Yes, supplementary estimates. You'll notice that there has been quite a bit of discrepancy between the budgeted estimates and then the supplementaries that are asked for. I'm curious to know how close these interim estimates are to what we'll actually need to spend over the next two months. Are they wildly off base or likely to be off base, or have we learned something from previous years, doing the same work, and has the government developed a more precise way of estimating what it's asking for?

Once I've heard answers to my questions and I'm satisfied that we are targeting to become more precise in how we budget, what we ask for as part of interim estimates – and supplementary estimates, I'd suggest – then I'll be happy to make up my mind to vote for them or not.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. First of all, I would just like to agree with the hon. member when it comes to technology. Technology is one of the highest cost items that we have in medicine today, and there really does need to be an adequate evaluation of the cost-effectiveness of some of these procedures. It's very difficult to do, but there does need to be a push in that direction. I had already reminisced about the art of medicine. It's probably long gone from my body at this particular point in time, but I have reminisced about that. Technology is something that we have to be constantly aware of, and we have to be constantly vigilant to ensure that the technology is actually an improvement and is improving the health of Albertans as opposed to just technology for technology's sake. I think the hon. member is absolutely correct in that.

When it comes to the $250 million increase over this time last year, that represents a roughly 8 to 10 per cent increase in the cost, which is what we're seeing in health care today, an 8 to 10 per cent increase in both utilization and the cost of such items as drugs, technology, procedures. That's why the $250 million is there over last year. It's the natural growth in the amount that we're paying. There are a little bit of dollars built in there just on the outside chance that something did not go through properly by the end of May, in case there is some needed and it isn't getting there right away. This is not the type of system that we can simply stop for a day and say: okay, we're not going to have any health care in Alberta for one day. There is a little bit of leeway built into that, but in general what it is is the inflationary pressures, the access pressures, the amount of pressures from the increased utilization of the health care system that has occurred over the past year.

Capital investment, that $5.4 million, simply means that in this next two months there are fewer capital dollars that have been utilized, that have needed to be utilized. My assumption on this is that this has to do with a lot of the planning procedures that are taking place. There are a lot of hospitals that are under construction, that are starting, and this $5.4 million is, quite simply, the amount of planning dollars that are going forward on that. The smaller amounts, the equipment purchases, would be included in the $2.2 billion.

I hope that has answered the hon. member's questions and that that satisfies him.

Dr. Pannu: Madam Chair, may I follow up with a question?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I apologize for forgetting to ask a question. I thought I'd better ask it while we still have it.

You had mentioned drugs, and we know that drugs are the most worrisome driver of costs within the health care system. You talked about a 10 per cent increase anticipated. Drugs are a very, very important part of the increase in costs, a really serious driver. Is there anything reflected here which would suggest that drug costs are being targeted as an item where we need to seek ways to reduce those costs?

I went to a pharmacist to get a prescription filled a couple of weeks ago, and I was pleasantly surprised. This wasn't covered by Blue Cross, you know, that we all have. I was told last year when I was getting this prescription filled that it was a standard drug, you know, under patent. Now, this time I went there, and automatically the pharmacist told me that I will get the generic form of it. I said: I'm delighted; we've been trying to tell the government to do the same.

Is there anything built in here to suggest that the government, in fact, is now asking hospitals, for example, or health authorities to look at the use of generic drugs where the health outcomes are similar, if not identical, as compared with the more expensive patented drugs? That certainly is, I think, an issue on which Albertans would like to hear from us, hear from the government as to what action they're proposing to take. I wonder if some of those considerations are built in in these interim estimates. If not, why not?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Madam Chairman. First of all, in the interim supply estimates it's almost impossible to build in a decrease in costs for drugs. In a two-month time frame you are not going to see that decrease in the medications. To decrease the amount of expenditures on drugs is going to have to be a longer term process.

What the hon. member was talking about, quite simply, is that when a patent protection comes off a drug, it subsequently goes to generic. We do have mandatory generic substitution in Alberta. The drug that you're talking about – and I don't know which drug it is – typically has I believe a 20-year patent. Recognizing that it takes an average of 13 years for a drug to get into the actual pharmacies, before it is brought to market, there's an average of seven years. What I think happened with the hon. member and why his drug was changed is that a generic did come on the market because the patent had expired, so that's why. But there is generic substitution. The hospitals look very much at the generics, and they utilize generics where they are applicable.

I will take it one step further at my own risk and peril and say that I think it's something that has to be looked at. There are a huge number of very similar drugs that are coming on the market, and when they are put on the formulary, there's not necessarily another drug taken off. It is an issue that we do have to look at. The price of drugs is something that we have to be very cognizant of and vigilant in.

The unfortunate part or fortunate, depending on where you're at, is that a lot of the new drugs that come on are very, very expensive, but a lot of the new drugs that come on are very, very good as well, and they do have a very beneficial effect on the health outcomes of Albertans, so we have to be careful. I think the bottom line in what I'm saying is that we have to be extremely cognizant, we have to be extremely vigilant, and we have to make sure that the drugs are performing to what they are said to perform and that they do have a place in our formulary.

That's the long answer. The short answer is: no, there is no specific indication in these two months. I know that the hon. minister is doing her utmost to keep drug costs down, but that is not something that can be done in a two-month time period. It has to be done in a full-year budget or even more than a one-year budget.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Madam Chairperson. When we look at this interim supply budget for Health and Wellness, we see that there is in excess of $2 billion requested. We see expense and equipment/inventory purchases, a much smaller amount for capital investment. When the hon. minister indicates that this is necessary to keep our public health care system operating, everyone is certainly cognizant of that and supports that. But this is an opportunity to discuss not only this portion of the Health and Wellness budget but what is yet to be allocated. We know the budget process that has been dealt with in the past. We know that sometimes the regional health authorities' individual budgets, specifically Calgary and Edmonton, those huge urban health authorities, are much larger

There is a lot of money spent on providing public health care. I would certainly urge this government to stick to delivering health care to the citizens of this province through the public model, the single-payer user system. I can't imagine how much of this budget is going to be spent on public relations. We know some of the elaborate public relations plans that this government has implemented at taxpayers' expense, of course, in convincing citizens that they need the choice of where to go to acquire needed health services.

Now, it was put to me the other day that these choices will be dependent upon the size of your wallet. I would agree with that. There is no need to go this way. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Leader of the Opposition, advised and tried to convince this government of the folly of more private health care delivery. The hon. member was right in advising this government of their folly with electricity deregulation and reminded the Premier about when Albertans were told that, oh, they need choice when they purchase electricity. Choice is what they wanted. Well, the choice that Albertans have been left with as a result of that government policy is: "Which bill should I pay first? My high electricity bill or my high natural gas bill?" That was the choice they were left with. The same will apply if this government goes through with implementing their private health care scheme. The people will certainly have choice all right, but it will be: which medical bill do we pay first?

Now, if we're to proceed with this, we're going to have some doctors who in the forenoon will be working in their private clinic, and in the afternoon they'll be going to the public system. We heard earlier about the scarcity of qualified doctors, the difficulty in recruiting them. This idea that you can work in the forenoon in a private clinic and in the afternoon in the public hospital is not to the benefit of the public health care system nor the people who rely on it.

The people who also rely on our public health care system are members of the business community. I can't understand why the Calgary Chamber of Commerce is so anxious to see privatization of our health care system. The single-payer user system is an economic advantage for all economic sectors, whether it's manufacturing, whether it's the service industry, or whether it's people who are involved in heavy industrial . . .

The Acting Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(1), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration of estimates, I would invite the Deputy Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the interim supply votes that were taken this afternoon and request leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mrs. Ady in the chair]

Mr. Shariff: Madam Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions and reports as follows. The following resolutions relating to the 2006-2007 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund have been approved.

Infrastructure and Transportation: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $832,400,000; capital investment, $207,800,000.

Advanced Education: expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $344,700,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $17,400,000.

Madam Speaker, the Committee of Supply also reports progress on Health and Wellness and requests leave to sit again.

Madam Speaker, I wish to table a list of those resolutions voted upon by the Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening, at which time I would ask that we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:17 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 8, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/03/08

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Mr. Taylor: I wonder if we might revert to introductions, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am delighted today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of committed daycare owners and managers and parents who are here because they are concerned about the word that we're hearing that Prime Minister Harper is going to cancel the national daycare agreement. These people are here to be recognized, to tell us that we need to support them in doing probably one of the most important job there is. So if I could have them all stand to receive the warm traditional welcome, that would be wonderful.

The Deputy Chair: For the information of those people seated in the galleries, this is committee stage. It is a little more informal compared to the regular proceedings during Assembly. So you will see people taking off their jackets and moving around. It only happens during committee stage.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2006-07
General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to speak on the Health estimates? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with some interest to speak on the interim estimates for Health. I think that we all are aware of the high numbers that we're dealing with in terms of our health care budget, but I have to say that I find it difficult to talk about the detailing regarding these huge sums that we're expected to approve. I think the detail is insufficient, particularly in light of government's proposed third-way amendments to the health care act, and I would suggest to all members of this House and to all assembled here: how can we responsibly debate the spending of such huge sums in light of the lack of detailing regarding the actual allocation of these sums, their place in the overall budget, and how this third-way legislation will play into all of the spending?

The government has their Healthy U program, and they boast of children's health as being a top priority. How can that be the case when there is, I and my own party and others as well would say, a consistent disregard for the care of children in this province? The issue of child care is not resolved. Our weak labour laws target children rather than protect them. What good are the healthy eating programs when children are at risk in other areas of their lives? So I find it difficult, Mr. Chairman, to look at these interim budget numbers without having some specific information as to where the direction of our public health care system is going here in the province of Alberta.

It seems clear to me that there is some nefarious activity going on in regard to the future of health care, and my feeling and many others' across the province is that we're out to sell health care to the highest bidder in this province, Mr. Chairman. I find that difficult to stomach, quite frankly, and I think that most Albertans will come to believe the same thing. So I am rising to speak in protest of speaking on the detail of this budget given the otherwise devious activities that seem to be undermining it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I want to just simply remind the hon. member that we are in interim supply. What we are asking for in a number of these departments are dollars to carry these departments for two months, 60 days, maybe 61 days, until the main budget is passed. This is normal procedure. In fact, even if we had hoped that the budget would be passed by March 31, we would probably ask for supply in the event that it was delayed.

Now, the health budget has been in the neighbourhood of $9 billion, and we are asking for $2.2917 billion, which is a fraction of that budget. I know the hon. member, and I know that he wants the people who are working in this field to be paid. I think he understands that many of our payments to the regional health authorities are made at the beginning of the month so that they can ensure that they can carry out their expenditures at the end of the month. I will also remind the hon. member, because I believe he was here when I made mention yesterday, that the budget will be introduced in the House on March 22. That is the time when we will have the opportunity to get into the detail on all of the questions that he might have.

So I just wanted to remind members again that this is interim supply. It is a short period of supply. Sometimes we have found it necessary to ask for 90 days of supply. We are confident with our timing that 60 days will manage this and that we can carry on the important business of health, of educating children, of looking after children through our Children's Services budgets, and caring for the environment, making sure that our infrastructure projects that are so important, many of them in the health area, can proceed. Therefore, we ask the House to pass an interim supply budget to make sure that the business of this province isn't interrupted.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise to speak on the interim supply estimates as we look forward to again speaking on supply estimates that are needed to kind of supply what I think is almost a paycheque-to-paycheque style of government. It is not normal in many other provinces, in many other jurisdictions, in many other countries to not have a budget that we deal with on a year-to-year basis. Most of the budget is in fact put in the budget so that we're not actually looking at bringing things forward from time to time that weren't debated. We would be looking at what we would be doing over a year. Many families work that way. Many businesses work that way, and it is a good way. Why do we have a budget if we're not going to stick with it and we're not going to be dealing with these matters?

I think that some of the things that were brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Calder were very well put on the need to have in the health care budget. I look at one line here and I look at billions, and it doesn't tell us much. How do we debate this? How do we speak to this? I would ask the minister who is standing in for the Health and Wellness minister to tell us how much is actually being put forward in this particular supplementary estimate for the social determinants of health.

The social determinants of health were raised by the health minister last year and were very clearly brought forward as something that would bring down the costs of our health care system and make it more efficient and make it something that would better deal with the health of our people here in Alberta and essentially and especially the health of our children. If we're not looking to providing the best sort of pay and to attract the best people by keeping them well paid and giving them the best of benefits, many of them that have worked for many years dealing with our greatest resource, our children – I think that that is so important to look for: how we develop and move forward in our society.

A few specific questions, I suppose, on Health and Wellness. I'm just asking if we can have some sense of what new major equipment in terms of MRIs and other similar equipment have been put in the Fort McMurray area and what type of equipment we might expect in some of the burgeoning communities that are so busy from our very, very strong energy sector right now. We see, of course, that the community of Stettler is very busy. We see that Edson and Hinton are just going crazy. We see Grande Prairie. Many, many of our communities right now have incredible problems in attracting proper health care personnel.

What are we doing to put in place training for new health care personnel that will be dealing with the problems of the greying population, the baby boomers, moving quickly through our population. Health care personnel have been a problem for many, many years, ever since the cuts of the 1990s scared off so many people in the health care sector from Alberta.

Those are just a few of the things that I think are important to look at in this global figure. I hope that when we look at the budget that the hon. Minister of Finance mentioned is coming very soon, on March 22, we will see a budget that will deal with matters that will cover us and give us a sense of how the government is going to be moving forward for the entire year.

Just a point on the Minister of Finance's riding. The city of Drumheller would be a fine site for the police academy, second only, of course, to the fine riding of Edmonton-Manning. Both of them have correctional facilities, which would provide a good mix and match for the police academy.

In any case, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Just to respond very briefly to the hon. member, unfortunately a lot of these questions were actually answered this afternoon. However, I will reiterate what was stated this afternoon. First of all, there is an interim supply for $2.2917 billion, which will account for the two months of April and May, when it comes to the department of health. Quite simply, what these dollars do is ensure that physicians get paid, that nurses get paid, that all the health care practitioners get paid, that the RHAs get paid, that the department of health gets paid.

Mr. Chairman, to vote against this bill would in essence shut down the department of health. It would be shutting down the health care industry as we know it for those two months, and everyone in this Assembly fully recognizes and realizes that if those dollars were not there, if the health care system was shut down for one day, it would be quite a travesty to the people of Alberta.

I recognize that there are issues when it comes to health care in general. Those issues will be debated on the floor of the Legislature during question period. They will be debated on the floor of the Legislature during the upcoming budget. Quite simply, interim supply is a way to continue the running of government past the April 1 deadline, which is the end of the fiscal year. A question that I was asked earlier today as well was: "Well, why didn't you plan for it? Why didn't you plan for the upcoming budget?" I reiterated to the people that in my particular department – and I'm sure it's the same in the department of health – we actually start planning for the budget in June and July of the previous year in order to make sure that the business plan and the budget are in place.

I'm quite confident that the Minister of Health and Wellness is going to be bringing forward a budget that will do all of the things that are needed for health care in Alberta. Unfortunately, this is not that budget. This is a budget that, quite simply, bridges the gap between April 1, when we run out of legislated money in the government of Alberta, and the end of May. Hopefully, the budget will be passed before that time. I reiterate what I said this afternoon: if the opposition is concerned about that, the budget is being introduced on March 22, and they can quite simply say that we will vote on the whole budget, on the whole estimates before April 1. Fortunately, this side of the House does not agree with that and feels that it should be debated, so that is what is going to be occurring. This is, quite simply, a way that we can continue to fund the Department of Health and Wellness for the next two months.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just two months but, I mean, if we estimated that over the course of a year, that would be up to $24 billion. So obviously this is just a shortfall of the funding that they didn't anticipate, if I could just use that in terms of the whole-year base. Maybe that's a stretch, so I'll give the minister a base that one.

We talk about $2 billion – I believe it's $2,291,700,000 – and the terms of reference here are expenses, equipment, and inventory purchases. I do believe that the minister has included in that expenses including "salaries, supplies, grants, amortization of capital assets" while also included under those are "appliances; display cases; furnishings; . . . office equipment; shelving; and storage containers." Would that be right to assume, that some of those purchases are being made under that as well?

Going down, consumable inventories for the departments of Transportation and Sustainable Resource Development are also under (ii) as well as vehicles. I'm not sure about that. It also includes part of the capital assets as part of its inventory that "consists of immovable capital assets, equipment required for their construction," equipment for installation. You know, these are all very needed, I'm assuming, with regard to being able to do the day-to-day operations for Capital health and its region, the one it serves, but it just kind of begs the question: how much of this is actually necessary to operate over the next two months? I mean, we're talking about $2 billion, almost $3 billion. That's not chump change, as the Premier would say; that's a lot of money. We talk about being able to balance and project our spending from year to year in a fiscal year, and we're just two months, 60 days, shy of that, but we're asking for $2 billion.

You wonder why we're spiralling out of control with health care spending. We don't have a budget that we stick to with regard to the House here. I think that if we actually stuck to the budget, adhered to it, we wouldn't be out of control. When we talk about some of the terms of reference that I've mentioned, I mean, it begs the question: are absolutely all these necessary? We talk about the inventory or some of the purchases. I'm not regarding the salaries and the cost to keep the physicians and the front-line people there in line and doing their day-to-day operations. That there's no question about. But when we talk about the vehicles and the other things there, it does ask the question: is that absolutely necessary on top of the already erroneous amount that health care costs, which is upwards of $9 billion? An additional $2 billion to talk about furnishings and that: it does ask a question there. How much is health care out of spending because of some of these things, and are we actually able to rein in control, or are we just letting it get out of control further to allow for the debate for the third way?

I'll just sit down and perhaps the minister for infrastructure can enlighten me on some of this.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I must correct the hon. member. There are only 12 months in the year, and this is two months of the 12 months. The two months are worth $2 billion, so one year is not $24 billion.

The other comment that I'll make is that $2.291 billion is not almost $3 billion; $2.291 billion is considerably closer to $2 billion than it is to $3 billion. I would suggest that the hon. member does not take poetic liberties with $750 million as that is a lot of money, and it's a lot of taxpayers' money that is to be concerned about.

The other issue is that the hon. member has to recognize that at the front page of the estimates it deals with all of the departments. When they are talking about furniture, when they are talking about everything in the departments, it is all of the departments. Included in this estimate is $5.4 million for capital investiture, which are things like computers. It's necessary equipment. It's also planning for new hospitals which is included in this. So $5.4 million in capital funding is what is included in these two months' estimates. There is $2.291 billion that is included for the two months' running of the health care system.

What the hon. member also has to realize is that many of these grants are actually front ended, so they are paid out in the first two months, which is the reason why it is not extrapolated: six times $2.291 billion, Mr. Chair. The $5.4 million, though, I will reiterate and I'll emphasize that that is very important money that is needed for such issues as planning for the hospitals that are going to treat the sick and injured in Alberta.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to respond to something that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation brought up a couple of times ago in his response, I think, to the Member for Edmonton-Manning. His suggestion that there is some kind of will in this House or in any part of this House, I think most specifically on the opposition benches, to vote against this and deprive thousands of people of their livelihoods, their salaries, and tens of thousands of patients in this province of medical care is perhaps the most ridiculous thing that I have ever heard.

Talk about trying to play the sympathy card in this whole routine. This is not what the point is about. Of course we are going to vote, and even if we all on the opposition side of the Legislature voted against the interim supply bill, we are more than outnumbered by the government members. Of course this bill is going to pass, and of course people are going to be paid, and of course people who are in hospital who are sick are going to be looked after. Of course people are going to be able to continue their university and college education and their K to 12 education and everything else that goes on. That is not in question, Mr. Chairman.

The point of the matter and the point that we are arguing on this side of the House – and I refer to the minister's own comments about his own department that planning for the budget starts in June for next April – is simply this: if you can't deliver a budget in time to give it the full debate that the minister himself believes it should have and vote it, with or without amendments, in time for the start of a fiscal year, which happens April 1, year in and year out – it's not like this thing comes up and gets you by surprise – then maybe you should start the process at the end of May or mid-May or whatever it takes. We're talking here about nearly $6 billion in interim supply to keep the government of the province of Alberta and all the people who depend in any way on that going for up to 60 days because you guys can't get your act together. Now, come on. You've been the government for 35 years. You ought to know how to do a budget by now.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for that provocation that was brought forward. If the hon. member would care to read the Blues, and I would quote: I would suggest that the opposition would not be voting against this bill as it would mean that physicians would not be paid, that nurses would not be paid. I would suggest that they would not be voting against this bill, I believe is the exact wording.

The other issue. I've sat in this House now for going on 13, 14 years, and in each case they question the ability that we have of budgeting. They question the amount of time that we take for budgeting. What we do is a very thorough budgeting process that does take time, Mr. Chair. It sounds like a commercial, but we are not going to put a budget in before its time. It's extremely important. This is taxpayers' money we are dealing with. We have to be sure this money is put to the best use, that it's put to the absolute best use for Albertans. Quite simply, I'm offended by what the hon. member just said.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, have to indicate that receiving the bill without first tabling the budget and the lack of details within the bill creates some difficulty for me in understanding what is happening.

I would like to ask some questions or point out some things with Children's Services. I can see an amount there, and it's huge, and it says expense and equipment/inventory purchases. What I'm wondering about: what is happening with the youth shelter review committee? We had that in place for the fall, I believe, and there are definitely needs indicated across this province for youth shelters. I'm talking specifically about Grande Prairie. There's a housing crunch there, and it's creating huge issues for youth looking for room and board and/or transitional housing. We talk about the need to get more students to complete high school, and yet we've got these youth without a place to live, without a place to stay. They're not getting their basic needs met. I need to ask: what is happening with that youth shelter review committee? What are the plans for it? Are there any actions planned, and when are they going to start?

It's interesting how the children's advocate office annual reports and the CFSA annual reports echo each other in that they both say that they're not doing a good enough job of looking after kids in terms of advocacy and mentorship. That's another concern I have. What are we doing to help fund programs to give the advocacy and mentoring that youth need to help them make good decisions?

The funding crunch still exists with shelters. There's no sustainable, predictable core funding. A tremendous amount of energy has to go into fundraising rather than the programs to benefit the youth. We need to look at giving them core, predictable funding that they can count on year after year so that they're not worrying about not being able to pay their staff.

The other question, of course, on the minds of many these days related to Children's Services is daycare. It's a huge concern at this time. This government approved a five-point plan in the agreement with the federal government. It was a positive step, and it's now in jeopardy. There is a staffing crisis.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to kind of interject here. We are dealing with the health estimates, so I presume that you are leading to some health summary.

Mrs. Mather: I'm getting there.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Go ahead.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. So it's a positive step, that plan. As we look at daycares, one of the most important things in terms of health is wellness and prevention, and daycares, the qualified staff, the accreditation process that's going to assure us that we have qualified staff, will help that.

Again, looking at the health situation, I'm saying that health is more than just hospitals. The best way to build an effective and affordable health system is to build a healthier society. One of the things that I'm talking about is that we need to look at youth. We need to provide the basic needs for those teenagers. We also need to look at our young children, the preschool kids and the after school kids, in terms of their health and their well-being, the social skills as well as the health.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise again. I was taken aback a little bit by the response of the minister on some of the health questions earlier in terms of budgeting and especially in his response to the Member for Calgary-Currie, you know, the question of the time of budgeting and the 13 years that he's been in here and the 13 years he's been with this government. Still this government hasn't got it right and hasn't been able to get it together to be able to have one budget for the year. Why is it that we should be in a position to have to vote money for paycheques right now, with two months left in the year? Why is it that we should be in a position to have to vote for keeping our hospitals going, for keeping our schools going, for having paycheques for people? I mean, it really gets to me to be hearing that from our government in this time.

What is it that we have one line – one line – here? The detail here is not amazing. I mean, we have one line with $2,291,700,000, and in the next line we have $5,400,000 in Health and Wellness. That is the extent of the detail that's given to the people of Alberta to debate this. That is almost beyond reason and is almost beyond responsibility. In fact, it is, I believe, irresponsible to just give us this type of information and to be able to be dealing with this to try and to argue on this in any way that would be democratic, would be dealing with responsibility to the people of Alberta, the children of Alberta, and the future.

I thank you for that, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the 2006-2007 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the Department of Health and Wellness for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$2,291,700,000
Capital Investment	$5,400,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Next we have the Department of Justice. [interjection]

Mr. Stevens: What would you like?

Mr. Flaherty: Go ahead with Education.

Mr. Stevens: You want Education? I can do that.

Education

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Stevens: Let it not be said that the opposition don't have influence. They asked for Education, and they're going to get it. Just so we're clear, I am rising on behalf of the Minister of Education to provide some comment with respect to that aspect of the interim estimate.

Alberta Education has requested interim supply vote funding of $637.4 million and interim supply from lottery initiatives of $21.5 million to ensure that education service providers continue to receive monthly grant payments to pay their teachers and other operating costs.

The interim funding equals approximately two months of operations for our schools and programs. The $637.4 million can be broken down as follows: interim supply by vote of $636,800,000 in operating expense, interim supply by vote of $590,000 in equipment and inventory purchases. The $21.5 million in the interim supply for lottery initiatives can be broken down as follows: learning television, $384,000; transportation subsidy, $10,134,000; high-speed network, $1,334,000; school facilities, $9,667,000.

Mr. Chairman, to ensure that our schools and programs remain open, I request that the interim supply by vote for the Alberta Education ministry of $637.4 million and interim supply for lottery initiatives of $21.5 million be approved.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for St. Albert, did you want to speak?

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Is it a problem if I ask the good minister if I could get a copy of the document he used? I wish I'd have had that this afternoon.

The Deputy Chair: You certainly can ask him if he wants to send one to you or to the House. He may do so, but he's not obliged.

Mr. Flaherty: It would be wonderful. Thank you. I appreciate that. It's a pleasure to do this, Mr. Chair, because when I was the regional director of Edmonton, we did a lot of training about how to do budgets. If Dr. Gerry Laing was watching tonight, he'd say that I'm breaking every rule that he taught me by talking about something that's not broken down and being able to defend and rationalize.

Anyway, let me try and go through this. I've taken a look at this particular amount of money that was suggested. I think the amount of money here is $637,400,000 for expenses and equipment/inventory. I hope there are some salaries in there for daycare workers as well that work in schools, but I'm not sure about that. Maybe the minister could help me with that.

Let me just talk a little bit about dreaming about education and what I think should be in the budget. I know it's not here, but I'll dream a little bit and talk about that tonight. One of the things that I guess I've been highly critical of the Minister of Education about is that I think he seems to have trouble making decisions. I believe that we've got to start looking at education with what I call a ready, aim, fire approach. If I may look at the Alberta Commission on Learning as an example. We've reviewed it to death, and the minister has toured around the province, talked to parents, talked to school boards and teachers.

I noticed today that Mr. Ray Speaker is coming to talk to us here next week. He used to be my former boss. One thing about Ray Speaker that I admired was that he did tour, he did talk, but he acted. I guess that's the one problem I'm having with this whole business with the commission: it's taking so long to get things done. For example, we were talking about salaries. I can't believe – and I'm hoping the teachers of this province will rebel soon – that they aren't yelling and screaming, although I'm trying to get out to them with a package to talk to them about provincial bargaining. If I was a teacher teaching today, I would literally be trying to burn the doors down to get in to see the Minister of Education. He might tell them to shut up, but I don't think they'd listen to him.

The other thing that really, really bothers me a lot is the whole business of the role of the principal. My goodness, the role of the principal has been so important – we have an example of a fine principal sitting down to my left here – to making this school system work well. We still haven't got this document from this government, the Clarke report. We cannot get it to find out what they want to do with the role of the principal. Well, let me tell you this: you're playing with fire if you don't deal with that very, very soon because it's a critical issue.

Now, I had the honour of also mentioning – and I was criticized by some of my colleagues about this. They said: "You're too hard on the minister, you know. We want consultation. We want consultation about health. We want consultation about education." Well, I hope I'm not being too hard on the minister because I've tried to say to the Minister of Education: why is he going out touring around and consulting when he's probably not going to act on what he hears? Why is he doing this when all he has to do is look at the report given to him by the school trustees, about eight criteria to stop and help kids that are dropping out of school? He doesn't have to tour around. He's got all the solutions right there. All he has to do is get busy and find out how we can take that and plant it through all schools in Alberta. Save the airline; it could be used for other purposes. So I think that's very significant. I hope you people tell him about that because he's going to hear a lot more about that in the coming weeks.

Anyway, let me just tell you about this dream of this budget that I hope we're going to have, Mr. Chair. First of all, I had the honour and pleasure of going to see about hungry kids in Alberta. I was invited by my MLA colleague Mr. Hugh MacDonald to visit this thing in Edmonton-Gold Bar and tour the city-centre schools, and I found out something that shocked me. I saw children that were sleeping on the floor. Their parents are lost. They don't know where they are. Some of them come home in the evening; some don't. They are suffering from a multitude of indicators of poor health. This is happening just down the street from the Legislature here.

I'd also like to talk about the excellent staff and volunteers that are working hard in this whole business of the hot lunch program. I think Alberta is one of the two provinces that provided no funding for the school lunch program. Now, I'm hoping that the new budget talks about that – and I'm sure it will – because there's no funding for school nutrition programs in this province. All provinces other than Manitoba and Alberta provide support to Breakfast for Learning to provide nutritional programs.

Once again, we have a government. I believe they're trying hard, but they're not innovative, and they don't see how this is important for children. I think it's very significant that the chairman of the Protestant school board was asked a question by I think it was Dr. Taft. He asked the chairman, who is, by the way, an expert in nutrition: "What about kids not having proper meals in schools? Can they learn?" She said: no; there's a great deal of difficulty. Not only the poor kids. There are a lot of well-to-do kids, even in St. Albert, going to school without eating properly. That's why I think we should look at this junk food thing more carefully.

Anyway, I'm suggesting to this government – and I hope it's brought out in the budget – that there are a hundred thousand hungry kids that go to school every day in this province, and we have to do something about it. To do absolutely nothing really, really bothered me. Do you know that it would cost $2 a kid to go and put this program in place?

Now, let me just talk a little bit about – Dr. Oberg was up. Maybe he'll want to comment and take a slap at me on this one.

Chair's Ruling Referring to a Member by Name

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we have an age-old tradition here to refer to our fellow colleagues by their constituency. This is I think the third time that I'm hearing a member's name. Now, once it may have been a physician whose name may just be the same as the Leader of the Official Opposition. I just want to caution you that that's a tradition. That's something we respect in this Assembly. So if you are referring to a fellow colleague, refer to them by name of constituency.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate your help. If I've offended anybody, I apologize, but it's close to March 17, and I'm getting excited.

Mr. Flaherty: Now, we got away from my wonderful talk here, Mr. Chair, but I'll try and get back to it.

The next thing I want to talk about in this potentially good budget that's coming up is the whole business of infrastructure; for example, Calgary Catholic board. What a wonderful board that is. A wonderful board. I hope some of you will go down there and meet them. They're really terrific. They received 12 new portables this year, and they needed 108, Mike. The one thing that's very poorly planned is the fact that many of these portables don't fit. They don't work in the system they have. They believe in portables, but your new ones don't work. So God help us. We need help down there. Let's hope that they get some help from the new budget.

So the whole question here, Mr. Chair, is schools. Schools need funding for everything inside the school. While some districts have received funding for buildings and portables, they haven't received funding for all the materials inside the classroom such as class wares, labs, books, tables, chairs, pens, and pencils. Let me tell you, Mr. Chair and your colleagues, if I can, that one of the wonderful things that you should see at Vital Grandin in St. Albert is that a child, because of a Vanguard 2 computer, is able to speak to her aide because of the need for that. Now, the problem with the funding for special ed is that it wasn't there for her to get this machine. Thank goodness that a large grocery chain supplied that. I had the honour of meeting this girl about two weeks ago, and she's now speaking to us through the computer. I'd like to bring her in the House some day to let you people see it. It's marvellous.

Mrs. McClellan: I have one in Cessford school.

Mr. Flaherty: Wonderful. Well I think it's to be commended that you did. That child has opened up her whole personality because of that.

So we're talking about infrastructure. Let me just talk about transportation. Transportation, as you know, in the Calgary Catholic school board is a very difficult one. In fact, I think we had a statistic here that 20,000 students in the city of Calgary – I believe that's correct – travel by bus. The size of the population of Airdrie every day, so it's quite the thing. But funding is required in Calgary for community schools. They want community schools where kids can walk to and from school and feel safe. There's a massive transportation issue in the city of Calgary. While there have been some wonderful one-off arrangements with the department, the permanent source of funding for transportation has not been reviewed in 15 years. I think it's important that districts are now having to make up extra funds for transportation because there isn't such a concept as community schools.

Well, I've got a couple of little things here, Mr. Chair, and I'll sit down. Full-day kindergarten. You know, I just don't get it; I'm sorry. As an educator I don't get it. You know why? I'm talking about the situation out at Mayerthorpe with the man that carried out the particular thing that happened out there, which was tragic. Let me tell you that what I believe we need in our schools from K to 3 are good diagnostic tools to help us pick out kids that are going to have problems.

I want to thank you, hon. member from the Okotoks area, for the wonderful ability for my grandson to have screening because he had an eye/hand co-ordination problem. I'm happy to say that he's in grade 1 at one of your wonderful schools there, and he has actually overcome his problem because they did his screening. They implemented a program to help him, and that kid is going to be successful in school. I can bring an expert – right at the U of A is one of the best educators in all of Canada; I can't tell you his name because I'll get fired here tonight – and he will tell you that we need to change what we're doing in the elementary schools because many of our kids are falling through the cracks. We need to start doing remedial programming and get a career education stream and revamp our system. That's what he's saying, and he's very knowledgeable. I wish I could bring him. If you'd let me bring him, I will. I constantly wonder why the government doesn't get that whole business on screening and diagnostic testing. I don't get it. I really don't get it. I hope to bring that up to the minister again.

Now, you have been good with your funding framework. I think it was excellent what you did five years ago, but you've got to relook at that whole thing, quite frankly, because many of the boards in this province, rural and urban, are saying that they don't have enough money to operate. So make no mistake: I am going to continue to talk about better funding for schools as long as I am still sitting in this seat. I intend to be here for a few years yet, so be ready because I think we're going to have to have some money for that. We need to have a look at the whole question of the framework of funding and make sure that we also look at the whole business of plant operation and maintenance to make sure it's keeping up with inflation. I was pleased that you did that with the busing last year in transportation, but I think that whole area needs to be looked at.

I'll stop, Mr. Chair. I want to thank you for your help tonight in getting through this. I want you also to know, all you Calgarians and southern Alberta people, that the Oilers got a new goalie today. He's not as old as me, but he's good. Calgary, beware because you're going to be in trouble when we play you next Thursday. I hope I'm not on duty.

God bless. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and, you know, I thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for giving us some detail on the Education numbers.

Some Hon. Members: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Backs: Thanks to the member to my right here for saying that it's the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Thank you.

It's good to see that some of this is broken down. But I wonder, in seeing that it is broken down, why we see $10,400,000 coming out of the lottery fund for transportation and why that could not be coming out of the general budget.

I ask, you know, for maybe a little bit more detail on a matter that came up in the House here just some days ago. It must be an ongoing cost, and that's the trucking of water to the Ellerslie school, which has not had water put into it for 20 years and is a matter of great concern to my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Some of these areas in terms of, you know, $636 million for operating expenses: again, that's a lot of money with not a lot of detail.

To build on some of the things that my colleague for St. Albert spoke to on education streaming and how that is being funded, I would hope that there is something of that in this, but I doubt it very much. The reality of much of our education system and how we are streaming many of our kids is clear in how we are ending up with so, so many high school dropouts. As I said in my response to the Speech from the Throne just yesterday, why is it that the government is just now thinking about asking kids why so many are dropping out? Why is it that we have so high a rate of high school dropouts? Why is there not some sense of dealing with relevance, some sense of dealing with providing things that are providing interest to the kids, and indeed providing them with meaningful employment in terms of things that they can get into?

We don't have a vocational high school in Edmonton any more. We have taken away the name composite from many of our high schools because they don't really have the equipment to justify realistic levels of vocational training, yet we hear demands and demands and demands to bring in temporary foreign workers because we're not training vocational labour; we're not training trades; we're not training technicians; we're not training people to do the jobs that are so necessary in a modern economy.

The problems in our education system are clear that way. Even coming out of our high schools with all the dropouts, even with the graduates the average age of entry for an apprentice is 25 years old. Why is that? Why is it that when they even get into their apprenticeships in the first two years most of them are gone? There are 45,000 people in apprenticeships right now in our province, and that's a good thing. It's a good thing that more are being encouraged, and we're seeing some movement in that area. But, on the other hand, why are most of them dropping out in the first two years and most of them finding that they're being used as cheap labour and not getting the proper supervision from a journeyman, not getting the proper training, not even getting the proper training that they'd had before in school to get into doing this? A lot of them are just being used as labourers, laid off shortly thereafter because they were cheap labour, and then they're gone.

We've seen some moves to establish new trades, which is good: establishing things for the traditional oil patch, the traditional oil industry. New trades of things we used to call toolpush and such are now out there. That has even jumped those numbers up somewhat in terms of the graduates, which skews the figure, really, because those people are being given that because they have experience. It skews the numbers of graduates, which are actually smaller.

Why do we have no sense of trying to bring some training forward for so many children in our system? They are, indeed, our future. Why are we bringing in, you know, potentially thousands and thousands of temporary foreign workers when we have still one of the highest youth unemployment rates in the country, when even in Canada we have, I think, 1,800,000 kids in the 18 to 25 year age group that are out of work? There's something wrong there. There's something very wrong there.

We need to somehow stream better in our high school system, need to make things relevant, to make things important for those that want to get into a trade. An emphasis on academics is good. The Fraser Institute has really pushed this idea that we should have, you know, these high marks in academics and focus just on these few areas. They rate the schools this way, and we have ratings of the schools in that way in order to do that. But I think it's worked against the realistic sense of how we will educate our children properly in terms of what they can do to have a successful career.

I'd recommend to any parent that they ask their child to take a career in a trade first and then move into a university degree. Anyone that I know that has done that has been very successful, and they will do well. Indeed, many of the leaders of business in our province started as tradespeople, and they became very successful through the work patterns that they learned, through the things that they learned. Many of them went on to get a degree later on. Some of them didn't. Some of them just were very successful in being a tradesperson and going into business.

Many of our aboriginal business leaders have actually been very successful in their endeavours. I could name a couple. Golosky Trucking: the person that started that was actually an ironworker, and he got his trade, and he's built up a business which has hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of employees and does very well in training aboriginals and bringing them through the system.

Another in Fort McMurray is Neegan Developments. Dave Tuccaro is a crane operator, an operating engineer, and very successful and has been the recipient of many Canada-wide awards and done that through learning, initially, his trade. Yet we have very little, almost nothing, in our education system.

One question is: is there anything in these monies to try and change that emphasis? Is there any change in the emphasis on trying to get some monies for teachers who also have a trades ticket in order to train kids in these areas? You know, they may be more costly. We may need to bring something in. I've talked to award winning schools that would like to get more things, but there doesn't seem to be enough money for equipment or not enough money for expenses to actually train people in the many areas.

We hear that the registered apprenticeship system is just not working in almost all the trades because of the fact that there's not enough equipment. It just works in a few, some mechanical, a few of the others, but in most of them there is not anything that we can actually bring people through for most of the trades. Many of the businesses that I've talked to will not use that system because they get castoffs from the teachers who don't want those kids in their system, in their school because they bring down their marks and make it look bad for them when they're trying to get higher in their ratings, so to speak.

I think there are major issues in spending here that really aren't shown in these numbers, but I sure would like to have a few answers on some of the questions that I've asked.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to talk to education funding also. I have a few concerns, some that I share with my colleagues that have spoken before me.

One, though, that I haven't heard mentioned is joint use agreements. This is a great concern in my constituency, and I think it is across the province. There are community teams, groups, and clubs that need space, and often the schools have the space, but the schools can't afford the extra custodial time or maintenance that would be required for the extra hours of use, and neither can the clubs or the teams or the groups. I know that there is some effort apparently going on to resolve this, but I really feel strongly that schools can be the heart of the community, and they need to be supported. They help involve students in positive activities and help them make healthy, wise decisions in terms of their lifestyles. So this is an area where I certainly would like to see an injection of funds. Of course, there's no detail here, so I don't know if that's included, but I would like it to be considered.

When I'm talking about schools being the heart of the community, I think that one of the things that we can do that would solidify the support for many of our young people is to bring in social workers and other services into the school so that there's a seamless integrating of services between school and outside agencies. I think that should be a primary focus. We need to be working together. We need to know what each agency is capable of. There are wonderful programs out there, but often schools aren't aware of what the resources are. If we could have someone in the school to kind of coordinate and solidify and create that seamless movement, that would be a real plus.

The other thing that is a huge problem is that we do not have trained counsellors the way we had at one time. At this point most schools do not have counselling. If they do, they might have .1. That is just not adequate. We need to have counselling at all levels. This is something that can contribute to diagnosis, to screening, as my colleague from St. Albert mentioned, but it's also a vehicle to help keep students from falling through the cracks. So I really would like to see more money put into counselling services for schools of all levels.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Manning indicated, we have a real concern about the fact that the vocational aspects of schools have disappeared. We know that technology means we're moving towards fewer workers in the area of manual labour. What we need for the information age are well-trained people. We have a drastic shortage of skilled blue-collar workers: mechanics who work with computer chips in vehicles, electricians, plumbers, chefs, beauty culture workers. The list goes on and on. We seem to be catering to the top 10 per cent of the schools' population, believing that academics is the way to go, but we need to be looking at the differences that students bring. We have the whole continuum. We need to be helping students at every point on that continuum be successful.

Our workforce in the next 10 years will need to be skilled in all areas, particularly technology, and I think that this is another area where we need to be injecting money. The RAP program is a wonderful program. I certainly support it. I saw students who were successful with that in the high school where I was.

Another concern that I have is that we still do have class sizes of 34. There are a number of them here in Edmonton. We need to look at why that is happening.

Another thing is that teachers are frustrated because there are curriculum changes. New textbooks are required – for example, in social and French now in the elementary schools – but the province is not providing the money for those changes. The 30 minutes of phys ed daily is a good idea, but schools don't have the resources to do this. Then, of course, mandating second language learning: there isn't the staff to do that. We have to have trained teachers in order to implement this.

As we look at our high school completion rates, there are so many factors involved. As I say, we need to go back to early childhood education. We need to invest dollars there, into child care, to help support these children in getting the very best and getting their basic needs at that level, where they will learn many things, including social skills.

I think that's all I need to say tonight. Thank you.

The Chair: After considering the 2006-07 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund for the Department of Education for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $637,400,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Justice and Attorney General

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this evening to make a few brief remarks regarding the interim supply requirements for Alberta Justice for 2006-2007. I think it's fair to say that, as in other ministries, what we're looking for is two months' expenditures to carry on business as has been approved as a result of debate in this House on the budget of 2005-2006.

I'd ask members to refer to the section beginning on page 7 of the interim supply schedule, where some information with respect to this matter is found. The requirements for Alberta Justice total approximately $81.5 million. That is, of course, required to support the ongoing commitments of Alberta Justice until the budget 2006-2007 is tabled and passed in this Legislature. Of that, $77.1 million is for Alberta Justice operating expenditures and $4.4 million is for equipment/inventory and expenditures. The interim supply, of course, will allow Alberta Justice to continue to meet its mission to protect the rights of citizens and advance the goals of society.

Alberta Justice is a core ministry. It provides essential services to ensure safe communities, access to justice, respect for law, understanding of and confidence in the justice system, and of course it also provides a legal foundation for social cohesion and economic prosperity. I know, Mr. Chairman, that the members opposite are very supportive of a well-running and a good-functioning justice system and will be more than supportive of what we are asking for this evening.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few brief comments and questions in regard to the interim financing for Justice. I'm just curious to know if these interim expenditures are indicative of an overall increase in Justice spending for the upcoming budget year. Given the recent discharge of a firearm by a provincial protection officer, how urgent does this Peace Officer Act become? Given the need to establish consistent training for peace officers, can we expect to see the recommendations that came out of the special constable review come into force, such as those calling for co-ordination of services and training between peace and police officers? Is there interim funding that's being allocated for this specific initiative?

If the estimates that we're hearing here today are indicative of increased spending in Justice, we're certainly supportive as the New Democrat caucus of such an increase for police and peace officer supports in conjunction with the Solicitor General, for more Crown attorneys and other Justice personnel. However, I was wondering if we can expect more funding to be made available to address the root causes of the activities that go on involving the Justice department – for example, domestic violence – and to work in more close association in providing adequate child care, equal access to education, and things like that. I suppose we address violence in the courts, which is very much necessary, but we would like to see specific funding perhaps targeting how we can reduce the visits to the courts by individuals in our society.

We certainly are supportive of the Justice estimates, and we look forward to some clarification and some interesting initiatives in the new budget year. Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Just a brief reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I appreciate the support from the hon. member and from the ND opposition party. The throne speech obviously indicated that there will be in this upcoming budget some new initiatives with respect to Justice in terms of more prosecutors, more judges, more staff in the justice system to address the challenges that we have there, and that's all going to be good news. The throne speech also referenced an initiative which we have jointly with the Solicitor General, called ARTAMI, which will be addressing a problem that we have in Alberta and which is throughout Canada, but certainly we have it here in the province; that is, domestic violence and stalking. So we have some very, very exciting initiatives.

However, the matter that is before us tonight is an interim supply matter. The interim supply matter deals with business as usual, if you will. In other words, we have an approved budget for the Ministry of Justice. We will be carrying on, expending money over the course of the months of April and May based on this interim supply, as we are today. There will be no new expenditures associated with this approval this evening, hon. member. What it will be is business as usual, as previously approved and debated on in this Assembly.

The Chair: After considering the 2006-07 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and the lottery fund for the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases $81,600,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Gaming

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My request this evening comes in two parts. The first part is $38,400,000 for the Gaming budget itself, primarily required to continue to support the community-based programs of CFEP, the community facility enhancement program, and CIP, the community initiatives program. That amount will allow us to continue providing grants under those two programs to eligible not-for-profits, who make application throughout the province, and the programs will continue uninterrupted into the next year.

The other amount, which is a larger amount, is $328,200,000, and that is for disbursement of funds from the Alberta lottery fund. The lottery fund provides money to other departments and other programs. For example, one that you'd be familiar with is AADAC. We want to make sure that we have the money in that budget so that they can continue to do their good work on treatment and education, helping people with problems with alcohol, drugs, and gambling. So we certainly want to continue the funding to AADAC. Other funding that we want to continue would be funding which is provided from the lottery fund to Community Development for such good programs as the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, the Wild Rose Foundation, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission.

We in this Assembly are all familiar with the good programs that are funded through the Alberta lottery fund, and this interim supply estimate is to allow us to continue funding those programs so that they continue uninterrupted until our budget is approved. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have some very brief comments in regards to the interim budget for Gaming. Regarding the AGLC's recent announcement that new resources will be made available for problem gamblers in regard to their treatment and focusing on their problem, I'd like to note that we applaud the government's initiative to provide easier access to information on responsible gambling. However, we do also want to note that we question the sincerity of such efforts given that these information centres will be placed inside the casinos and in the very casinos that fund basic programming for our province. The argument may be made that problem gamblers are to be found in casinos; therefore, it makes the most sense to have the information there. But I guess it would not be indicative of a greater concern; for example, perhaps if video lottery machines were banned as well, if regulations banned bank machines within a certain distance of VLTs, or if casinos were issued severely restricted liquor licences. These are all things that we would like to see considered in the next budget year, Mr. Chairman.

The dependence of our budget in so many areas on gambling is of grave concern to many people in our province and to myself personally very much so. The dependence, as well, of many charities and groups on the profits made from gambling, which hurts so many people here in this province, I find difficult to balance in my mind. If we were to stop underestimating other sources of revenues and budget accordingly, I believe that we would not have to be so dependent on various gambling institutions and machines like VLTs in particular. I think that we would serve the public interest better to look to restrict our dependence on such earnings in the future.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: I never want to miss the opportunity to give the member some good news. He mentioned a couple of things in here. I want to use every opportunity I have to spread good news. He talked about the distance between an ATM, a cash machine if you will, and VLTs and slot machines. We have recently implemented a distance requirement in there. No longer can you be sitting at your VLT and reach over and take some cash out of the ATM machine. There is now a distance requirement, and outlets are complying with that requirement. So it will take a concentrated effort to get up from your machine and go and access funds. It will break your pattern of thought, hopefully, and not make it quite so easy to get cash to continue gambling.

The second initiative that was recently announced, which I think is another good-news initiative that should be mentioned, is that we have a program called the Alberta server intervention program. It's mandatory training for people who are involved in the alcohol business as a waiter, waitress, management, or even working in a retail liquor store. It's mandatory training that staff must take for the responsible handling of liquor products. It is a requirement also that volunteers and members of not-for-profit groups take that training over the next few years. We've recently waived the fee so that not-for-profit groups, your neighbourhood Legion or Kinsmen club, that want to get their members trained in the responsible serving and sale of alcoholic beverages can now take that training free of charge on the Internet. It's about a five-hour course. You can break it up over many, many days if you want, but the total time required is five hours, and it is free of charge to nonprofits.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the 2006-2007 interim supply estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the Department of Gaming, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Agreed to:
Expense	$38,400,000
Lottery Fund Payments	$328,200,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Which department would you want to take next?

A general question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't have any specific questions on anything specific that is left in the interim supply, but I'm going to try one more time with a general question directed at the Finance minister.

Mrs. McClellan: I'm ready.

Mr. Taylor: She says she's ready, Mr. Chair.

An Hon. Member: She was born that way.

Mr. Taylor: She was born that way.

It covers the process. It's a question about process, quite simply. It refers back to some comments that I made earlier this evening and some comments that I made this afternoon about the fact that budget day is two weeks from today, March 22. We do need and want and treasure a set amount of time to debate the budget. In fact, I'm sure that everybody on the opposition benches would like it if we could debate the budget longer than we do. So we're certainly not talking about shortening the period of debate on the budget. But this is an annual process, and as the minister of infrastructure said earlier on, people in his department start working on next year's budget in about June of this year.

If the budget can be brought in on March 22, when the fiscal year starts April 1 every year, as complex as the process may be, as much care as your fellow ministers and their most excellent public servants in each one of their departments take to craft good budgets, in fact they do, why can't the process, then, be started two weeks, four weeks earlier every year so that the budget is ready to be presented to this House in a timely fashion so that we can debate it in a full and proper manner, vote on it, and have it in place ready to take effect by or before April 1? It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that's a reasonable request to make of the Finance minister and the government. So I wonder if I could get a response to that, please.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I'd be pleased to respond. It is about timing. I can tell you that nothing would make me happier than to be able to bring in the budget in a time frame that would have it concluded well before the end of the year. It really is about process, and it's a little bit, I think, about tradition as well: you bring in the throne speech, you have a reasonable time to debate that, and the budget follows. There is no advantage to me as Finance minister or to any minister here in delaying the budget. It doesn't change the numbers. It doesn't change the amount of money you have to spend. It doesn't really even shorten up the time you have to debate it.

So I take this as advice rather than calling it an admonition. We've talked about it before. I had certainly hoped that we would have this budget in somewhat earlier than we did this year. I'm not going to make excuses. I will remind everyone that we have a very complex system of reporting because at the time we bring our budget, we bring a fiscal update, an economic update, a complete set of government business plans, and all of the good accompanying information. I have a wonderful staff at Finance that prepare this. I think that we can safely say that we've not had an error in our budget, and that's diligence and so on. I think that with our House leaders we can talk about earlier. [interjection] Yeah, as the Government House Leader was saying, really it's the development of the policy that takes the time.

Even with that, the minister of infrastructure is entirely right. We will begin the next budget process in June, as we did this year. Can we tighten up the timeline? Should the House go in earlier? Those are things that we all have to have a discussion on. Frankly, I don't find January an exciting month, and I've never been able to take a holiday since I joined this group, so I haven't found any advantage there.

I just want you to know that from a Finance minister's perspective the ideal would be exactly that. The other ideal would be that you never had any in-year spending. It's a Treasurer's dream.

I heard somebody say that their families, you know, wouldn't operate this way. Well, good on you because I can tell that I've never been able to plan for 12 months that my washing machine wasn't going to break down or that the transmission wasn't going to go out of the car or that one of my kids wouldn't need some equipment for something I didn't know they were going to get into that wasn't in my budget. I've always tried to have some money that I didn't have allocated that would cover some of those things, so I admire the person who said that their family would never operate needing unanticipated in-year spending.

As I say, I don't take issue with the member's question. It would be the ideal. Can we work towards that? I'll make a commitment to the House that we try. We've got a lot of work to do, a lot of policy to make sure that we have right. As I say, we take a great deal of pride in this province in putting forward budget documents that are accurate, that don't have errors, and that give a complete picture, sometimes I think so complete that they're so big that nobody will read them, a very complete picture of what our intention is for the year.

So I thank you for your comments. I understand entirely where you're coming from. You know, Mr. Chairman, it would be refreshing to have a debate that didn't centre around: I don't have any detail for these numbers.

Thank you.

Third Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would move Bill 19 for third reading.

I would just say that I appreciated hearing many of the thoughtful comments, and insightful comments in many cases, in the discussion of this bill. I certainly felt that the comments that were made were meant to be helpful and constructive, and I've made notes. I hope that the members who have made those comments see their thoughts reflected in the future.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to close debate?

Mrs. McClellan: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure we'll get support for the motion that I'm about to make, and that is that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:40 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 9, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have two groups of guests that I would like to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly. They're all outstanding representatives of Alberta's public service, and of course they're all working in Alberta Municipal Affairs. I would like to first of all introduce a group of employees from Alberta Municipal Affairs that are touring the Legislature, having an opportunity to see the political side of life as they deal with the practical side of life in their day-to-day operations. I would like to introduce to you 11 individuals. They are Kristine Jonah, Brenda Putz, Jay Merchant, Sarah Severyn, Mandi Carroll, Mike Haugen, Dave Wheeler, Jeff Bazinet, Michelle Austin, Nicolle Germain, and Brad Kopp. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Speaker, Municipal Affairs has a program that I'm very proud of and works extremely well. It's a mentorship program where new employees have an opportunity to get a lay of the land from some of the more experienced folks that are within our department. Today I would like to introduce to you two representatives of that mentorship program. They are Elysia Johnson, who is an administrative assistant with the planning and co-ordination union, and her mentor, Kari-Ann Kuperis, who is a public affairs officer in our communications branch. I would ask that they rise and receive the recognition of the House as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to do today. It is my pleasure to rise on behalf of my colleague the MLA for Stony Plain to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two of his constituents who are visiting with us today. The first is Karen Snethun. She is the mother of Carter Snethun, who recently won a Great Kids award in the Stony Plain region. With her is Deanna Sanche, who is visiting the Assembly to observe the process of our Assembly. Deanna is very interested in the work that our pages do and has expressed a desire to try that one day. I would ask our guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction to you and through you to all members of the House is to introduce to you Christine Barker and Sam Ludmer, who are residents of St. Albert. Christine and Sam are visiting the Legislature Building today and are joined by three of their guests, Hy Ludmer and Brad Stowell, visiting from the United States, and Aaron Ludmer, visiting from Ottawa. I'd also like to add that Christine and Sam are getting married this weekend. Congratulations to them. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. David Benoit, his wife, Sylvie, and children Joseph, Catherine, and Patrick. The Benois are here today to learn about Alberta's legislative process. I'm certain that they are very familiar with the federal system as their uncle is the recently re-elected Member of Parliament for Vegreville-Wainwright, Mr. Leon Benoit. The Benois are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce a school group that I have in the members' gallery. It's not very often that I get a school group up. In fact, this group comes up every year. They're the Trinity Christian school, and they had a tough time getting here today. They slipped and slid over those roads and made it anyway to better show their kids how government works. The parents with them are too numerous to mention, so I'll just mention the teachers. It's Mr. George Graffunder, Miss Kim Schellenberg, and Mr. Clement McLachlan. If I could ask them to rise, we can give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of children from the Edison school north of Okotoks. The grade 6 class is accompanied by their teachers Mr. Joseph Smith and Mr. Blair Maciura along with parent helpers Mrs. Lynn Perkins, Mr. Rick Festa, Mrs. Lana Smith, Mrs. Shelley Rizzo, Mrs. Baby Hornaday, and Mrs. Sabrina Birrell. I'm sure these people, along with Cindy's people, slithered their way up here in less than ideal conditions, and I'm certainly happy to have them here. I suspect that they're back in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often I get guests up here, but I was pleasantly surprised twice today. Over the lunch hour a former constituent approached me and is visiting today. She will be introduced later on. It was great to see her.

I also have two friends from Olds that work for accredited supports, an organization that provides excellent services to persons with disabilities in my community. I believe they are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask Linda Maxwell and Verlie Weiss to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 14 members of the board of the Family and Community Support Services

Association of Alberta. They are in Edmonton-Meadowlark tomorrow attending a board meeting. I would like to welcome them. They're here to watch question period today, led by president Joe Ceci. They asked not to be identified because they're all very modest civil servants. If they could just rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to welcome a group to our Legislature and to introduce to you and through you to the members and the officers of this Assembly a group from one of the best and greatest multicultural schools in our province, the John Barnett school in Edmonton-Manning, accompanied by teachers Mr. Barry French, and Mrs. Pat Robinson and parents Mrs. Denise Hugman and Mrs. Carol Lycan. Please rise and have the warm welcome of the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Karla Kincade. Karla is here visiting her brother David, who is a valued member of the Liberal caucus staff, and of course she's visiting my constituency of Edmonton-Centre. After spending five years in New Zealand, she's just moved back to Canada and will be residing in Kelowna, B.C. She is finishing her masters in medical physics at the University of Canterbury in Christchurch, New Zealand. I would ask her to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: 1:40 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Income Support Class Action Settlement

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years this government ignored its own laws by denying the most vulnerable Albertans what they were entitled to: fair treatment according to the law with respect to their payments under AISH, social assistance, and widows' pensions. Now this government is trying to sweep the issue under the rug by claiming they didn't know, quietly agreeing to huge out-of-court settlements, and by blaming the so-called errors on staff. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister admit that this lawsuit was not the result of 20 years of bureaucratic errors but resulted from a policy directive carried on with the minister's knowledge and support?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before in this House, it is very unfortunate that people with so many needs were caught in this particular situation. As you're aware, this issue goes back to 1979. That involved two other premiers and no doubt a number of cabinet ministers and no doubt a number of staff in those various departments. I believe that the staff at the time followed the policies that were in place at least as close as possible depending again, of course, on the type of information they received from the clients, and sometimes that's where there are some differences.

Again, I'd just like to say that it's unfortunate this happened. I believe the agreement has been settled now to the satisfaction of the clients, and the process is to proceed with the payments that are owed to certain people.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, we'll all agree that it was unfortunate. Again to the same minister: did the minister take this multimillion dollar class-action settlement to members of the provincial cabinet, Treasury Board, or Premier's office before it was made public?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker. Any issue as sensitive as this always goes through the whole process to ensure that it is dealt with appropriately. Maybe the Justice minister may want to also supplement my answer on this.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is actually to the minister of seniors. Did this minister take this multimillion dollar class-action settlement to members of the provincial cabinet, Treasury Board, or Premier's office before it was made public?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to respond to this issue because it is a serious one. We have acted upon it as you know. As my colleague here mentioned to you as well, it did go through the appropriate processes. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition would like to hear further about that, I'd refer that question to the Minister of Justice.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The process behind this class-action lawsuit remains something of a mystery. The fact is that this government appeared to try to hide this lawsuit before the last election. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister deny that instructions have been given to staff in his department to destroy documentation relating to the lawsuit and its settlement?

Mr. Cardinal: I don't believe, Mr. Speaker, that such an action would have been taken. We do have valuable staff, well-qualified staff, and they're very sincere. They try to deal with the clientele as effectively as possible. No, I don't believe a directive of that nature would ever be given to anyone.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. My next question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Premier. Given that the Premier has denied any knowledge of the settlement of the class-action lawsuit before it was in the newspapers, can the Premier deny he had any knowledge of the lawsuit when it was launched in the fall of 2004 prior to the last election? Did he know about it then?

Mr. Klein: No, I don't believe so. The only knowledge I had of a lawsuit as it pertained to AISH, or maybe it was seniors – I don't know. There was a class-action lawsuit launched some time ago relative to one of those issues. Relative to that specific lawsuit, maybe I had some knowledge; maybe I didn't. I don't know. To answer the question – and I don't know if it was asked – it did go to cabinet, and it did go to Treasury Board.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Then my final question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that this issue went to cabinet and the Treasury Board, will the minister table the list of meetings and attendance records for Treasury Board meetings in which the class-action lawsuit was discussed?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, if I could see any benefit to the clients who are being dealt with in this situation, it would be one consideration, but I see absolutely no benefit in providing what are dealt with as confidential meeting minutes. The Premier has clearly stated that this matter was before Treasury Board. I will confirm that. I see absolutely no benefit to the clients, if that's what the hon. member is trying to deal with, in having that information.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the section on allowing doctors to work in both systems, the government's Alberta's New Health Policy Framework: Questions and Answers document indicates that "we're looking at many scenarios." It also says: "Private insurance is one, but only one, of the options we're looking at. We're also looking at what other ways there are to publicly insure Albertans." My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Exactly what other scenarios is the government considering for doctors working in both systems?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the most important scenario is to make sure that if doctors work in both systems, they must ensure and we must ensure that we do not impair the capacity of the public system to provide a strong public system of care. That's one of the most important things that we would look at.

We would look, Mr. Speaker, obviously, at the situation in the community, the kinds of capacity that the community had, and what sorts of criteria would be developed in consultation. We spoke last night with the AMA and with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the other colleges that would be charged with providing health care for the professionals that would be a part of any type of private establishment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the meeting that was held with various representatives, the AMA, et cetera, last night was behind closed doors and you're not providing any information here, how is the public supposed to be able to judge your framework when you won't give them any details at all?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was really only one group of the four last night that requested to have a private conversation. The Health Sciences Association of Alberta, Bow Valley College, and Mount Royal College had open conversations. The conversations that are private are always at the request of the group that is coming to present. We recognize that they may reserve comments until later. We have committed to get them additional information and continue the dialogue.

It's my intention throughout this process to continue to consult, to continue to listen to people, and when we have more benchmarks or more established guidelines based on our interaction with the consultations, we will provide them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: well, Madam Minister, will any of these other options or other scenarios or whatever else is discussed behind these closed doors – will any of these details be presented to the Alberta public before the legislation comes before this Assembly?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, although I cannot provide exact timing of what we would do in release of the consultation issues that came forward or some of our options, it's my full intent to provide as much as possible to the public, to be absolutely transparent about why we would make any decision, why we would table legislation with any provision to do anything. I think almost every member of this House would agree that when this government does table legislation, it provides rationale for all of those particular approaches. Right now our job is to listen, and that's what I intend to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Health Care Spending

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since day one of the spring sitting the Premier has been doing his best Chicken Little imitation, saying that the sky is falling and raising the spectre of health spending soon consuming the entire provincial budget. But when you look at the government's actual books right through to this year's third-quarter update, you'll find that health care spending is at the same 34 per cent of total program spending as it was five years ago. Health spending is going up at exactly the same rate as other areas of government spending, and there is no evidence that other priorities are being crowded out. My question is to the Premier. Why doesn't the Premier stop distorting the facts about health spending and, instead, adopt innovative ideas like a pharmaceutical savings agency that would keep a lid on the biggest health care cost driver, prescription drugs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, that is a good suggestion, and we're going to work on that. As I mentioned in the Legislature earlier, we would like to do it on a national scale, but it involves the co-operation of the federal government and all the ministers of health and all the Premiers. That's not to say that we can't do it provincially, and we're going to work on that. That's not to say that we can't do it in conjunction with, say, British Columbia because they've proven to be very co-operative with Alberta, and they're interested in those kinds of things. So we can do that.

It goes beyond that, Mr. Speaker. They concentrate on pharmaceuticals. They don't want to mention bedpans, swabs, uniforms, gowns, bedding, you know, just a multitude of supplies that could be co-ordinated and purchased on a provincial basis. But for every upside there is a downside, and one of the downsides is that it may offend some of the unions that are active in some of the regional health authorities, and it may offend the NDs. Those are the kinds of things we can look at in terms of bringing down costs.

Relative to "the sky is falling," I would suggest that the NDs are the ones who are spurring on the notion that the sky is falling.

Mr. Martin: I don't remember asking about bedpans and gowns and bedding.

Mr. Speaker, given that government spending in all sorts of areas is running ahead of inflation due to unbudgeted billions being added every year, why does the Premier want only health spending growth to be kept at the rate of inflation when all other costs are running above?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry that I didn't answer this question, but it's a question that more appropriately is put to the Minister of Finance, and I'll ask her to respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the facts really do show that in the last five years health spending has increased at a rate that we don't believe can be sustained over the long term. We note that other provinces are making the effort to contain their health spending in about the same manner with inflation, growth. We're striving for those numbers because we know that Alberta has the best health delivery system in Canada, the best programs in Canada, and centres of excellence that are not matched anywhere in Canada. In fact, we provide many very important programs to citizens across Canada, such as pediatric heart transplants. So this government is determined that our health system will not be put in jeopardy because we don't look at the fiscal reality that's facing us.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, one could only hope that they would look at the fiscal reality of all the other government spending that's out of control rather than just scaring.

My question to the Premier is: why doesn't the Premier admit that the real agenda behind his Chicken Little routine is to frighten Albertans into accepting what they have consistently said that they oppose; namely, the Conservatives' privatized, two-tier health scheme? That's what it's all about.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the controversial and the confrontational nature of the comments – i.e., the Chicken Little attitude and the sky is falling kind of situation – I would remind the hon. member that it's not this government and it's not the Minister of Health and Wellness that's organizing and orchestrating protests on the steps of the Legislature. It is the NDs.

I would like to commend our hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. As one MLA put it, she came across as a queen on television, whereas the person sponsored by the NDs came across not so well because he was incoherent and he was yelling and he was screaming. It might be good for television. I don't know. But I'll tell you that the Minister of Health and Wellness was calm, cool, and collected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Education Property Tax

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. The Manitoba government announced recently that it is eliminating its portion of their education property tax. The president of the AUMA, Bob Hawkesworth, is again renewing his call for Alberta to do the same. My question to the minister: will the minister follow Manitoba's lead and eliminate the province's portion of the education property tax?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, things are not always as they appear to be. While it's true that Manitoba has recently eliminated the province's portion of the education property tax, what is not clear at first blush when looking at this is the fact that the system in Manitoba is significantly different than here in Alberta. I'm sure you remember when several years ago in Alberta the province changed the way that education was funded and began to collect education property tax in all municipalities throughout the province and then to distribute those funds equitably to school boards.

Manitoba has historically had three sources of funding for their education: general revenue, like Alberta; education property tax, like Alberta; but a significant portion, in fact 42 per cent, of all costs of financing education in Manitoba still comes through the local school boards requisitioning locally for those education property taxes. Those remain in place, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister tell the House why Alberta can't simply get out of the education property tax once and for all?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's something that I've been quite vocal in advocating ever since I became Minister of Municipal Affairs. Someday I would like to have the opportunity for that to in fact take place in this province, but we've got a long way to go before we get there. It's about a 1 and a half billion dollar problem to deal with, and that's not just a one-time problem. That's 1 and a half billion dollars this year and every year thereafter. It's not as simple as in the case of Manitoba, where it was a relatively small amount, less than 10 per cent of the problem that we would be dealing with here.

So we're working with municipalities. We're trying to find alternatives so that someday we may be able to make some reasonable choices and begin to eliminate that education property tax and allow municipalities to have some access to at least part of it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: have there been any discussions with our municipal partners to examine the province getting out of the education property tax, to eventually free up some of the tax room for municipalities?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced members of the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability. That council, in fact, spent the afternoon meeting upstairs, talking about these very issues. We're talking about exploring alternative sources of revenue for municipalities, but more importantly we're talking about clearly establishing the roles and responsibilities that municipalities have.

I have consistently made it clear to municipalities that the province is not going to discuss new and alternative sources of funding for municipalities until we have a consensus on what the role and the responsibilities of municipalities are and how much it should cost. Once we know how much it should cost, then we can begin to discuss where the money is going to come from, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the concerns that the Auditor General addressed in his 2004-2005 annual report, the Minister of Energy continues to insist lamely that the current royalty structure is efficient, effective, and fair. The minister sees no need to improve a system that has seen the citizens' share of the royalty wealth decline significantly since 2001. In fact, the minister has a copy of a study which states: we should be charging more for our royalties. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How much of an increase in royalty rates does that study recommend?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'm not certain which study supposedly I have a copy of. There are so many studies that I do have copies of lots of studies. I'm not certain which one he is specifically referring to; therefore, I don't know.

What I do want to say is that we do act and continue to work to improve the structures we have. All of our regulations, our standards, our royalty structures, those suggestions by the Auditor General: we do act upon them to ensure that Albertans do receive their fair share and that things are appropriately managed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that your department handed out more than $100 million of Albertans' money in 2005 to, quote, financially assist the oil and gas industry, end of quote, will the minister now tell the House how that money was spent and why?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I suspect he's referring to the Alberta royalty tax credits in particular on this one; that one was put in. It's an adjustment of royalties already paid. We've collected close to $12 billion in royalties alone this year. It was a hundred million dollars. So we still have collected a tremendous amount of royalties from all those companies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of health: how many health care professionals could your department hire with a hundred million dollars? Isn't it true that you could hire up to a thousand needed health care professionals?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are many different types of health care professionals, and I would just defer to the Premier if he wishes to provide a response.

Mr. Klein: No.

I wish to just ask for a point of clarification. Could I maybe have the hon. member advise the House who he's quoting? He said "quote, unquote" relative to the hundred million dollars. I don't know who he's quoting.

The Speaker: We can deal with this as a point of order.

Mr. Klein: No. I don't want to raise a point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

School Lunchtime Supervision Fees

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many students in my constituency need to be bused to neighbouring communities in order to attend school. At noon hour they cannot walk home, nor is there enough time for them to be bused home to have their lunch. At the same time, these students are not allowed to stay on school property and eat their own lunches unless they pay $20 per month per student for a supervision fee. These fees add up in a hurry in a multichild family. To the Minister of Education: why do these parents have to pay a special fee just to have their children eat their own lunch at school?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously, each locally elected school board has the right and the responsibility to make whatever policies they are willing to make. The short answer is that the School Act allows that to be done. But I suspect that school fees that are charged for things like lunchtime supervision are charged to pay those people who are qualified or in some cases perhaps certified to look after the students who will be eating those lunches. There have been a number of situations over the past several years where some children, for example with special needs, have required special types of supervision, and the school board is sensitive to that. I think the local school principals would be as well. So they're trying to ensure that there is proper supervision there.

So the short answer is that the School Act allows it. Not every school board does it, and not every school within a school board charges the fees either. But they go to offset a variety of things, not just personnel. There are clean-up fees, Mr. Speaker. There are games that they buy and provide for students. So those monies get used in a variety of ways.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, since these fees pose a financial hardship for many families and many school boards and principals don't care to deal with this issue, where should these parents turn to to resolve this problem?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, obviously, one of the best and most effective things to do is for the parents to talk to their locally elected school trustee. That's a good place to start. They could certainly talk with their school principal even ahead of that. There are parent school councils that deal with these kinds of issues. They can examine all of the different policies. [interjections] Shall I continue?

The Speaker: Please. You have the floor.

Mr. Zwozdesky: I'm sorry. There are interjections from the other side. This is a very serious and important issue.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, they could talk with the superintendents in their area. So there are a variety of ways that they can go about doing this because the policy does vary from board to board, and it also varies from school to school. So those would be some ideas that they might wish to undertake.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, would the minister's department consider exempting from this fee students who don't have schools in their neighbourhoods and have no other options?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know that we would jump to the quick and do that. I think that we have very capable school trustees, who have obviously been entrusted by the public's vote to look after these kinds of issues. I think it should first be dealt with there. I think that the school boards, during the meetings that I've had with them and based on the information that I've received from others, are doing a very good job of that at the moment. So if we leave it at the local level, perhaps they can sort this out. The important thing here, I think, is to ensure that we're not necessarily denying any access to some of those privileges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Calgary Children's Hospital

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The famous line from the movie Cool Hand Luke summarizes this sad government's attitude towards Albertans: "What we have here is a failure to communicate." This fearful government attempts to insulate itself from its perceived affliction of public accountability by hiding behind closed caucus castle doors, surrounded by an impenetrable FOIP-filled moat. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Would the minister please clarify whether the Children's hospital in the Calgary-Varsity constituency will be operating at full capacity or in a series of phased-in stages when it opens this fall?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted in one sense that the hon. member has given me the opportunity to respond because initially when I spoke to the media about this issue, I was under the impression that it was going to be at capacity, that it was going to be fully open. My understanding is that there will be additional capacity released at a later time, later than the initial opening date, and I haven't yet received the detailed plans from Calgary health region relative to exactly what they intend to do.

But, Mr. Speaker, if the inference of the question is that somehow this government is at fault because there haven't been resources provided – and that was an acknowledgement that was relayed to me the other day – I don't think it's even fair to adjudicate that before the budget comes out and before the amounts of money are disbursed to the regional health authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the dollars currently committed to hospital bricks and mortar be quickly followed by predictable, ongoing, base operational funding?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, clearly in our capital plan we have dollars allocated for a variety of projects in Calgary. We approved over $665 million for new projects in Calgary just last summer. I think the hon. member would be fully recognizing that. During the release of the dollars – those are done in accordance with the plans provided by the health authority, planning for staff allocation and resources, the functional planning that goes into it, and through the phases of study completion those dollars are released.

Now, obviously, there is staff training and other plans to execute and, Mr. Speaker, I'm very confident that in due course we'll receive those from the authority.

An Hon. Member: It's a beautiful hospital.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. And, yes, it is a beautiful hospital.

Given that the bed-per-patient ratio for Calgary and Edmonton is the lowest of all North American cities, when will Alberta's cities' ratio rise to at least the 1.9 North American average?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that when we review the bed ratio lists, we also have to look at the other service elements and capacity provided in communities. We have a tremendous number of outpatient clinics. The primary care networks that have been instituted by my predecessor are growing by leaps and bounds. We intend to have 18 more on stream this year, and the kind of capacity we are building into services in neighbourhoods is a good part of how we are addressing outpatient needs, mental health needs. The work that's being done on chronic disease management, for example, in the questioner's city I think will satisfy residents there that they are getting very good care.

Alternative Energy Project in Okotoks

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, last year the government's innovation program approved funding for a leading-edge alternative energy project in the town of Okotoks, that will use solar energy collection and storage for heating in a new 52-home neighbourhood. This project was accepted to the innovation program because it was sponsored by Climate Change Central and Alberta Environment. There was a lot of excitement when it was announced, but the project has experienced delays due to the flooding last year and other cost overruns. My constituents are concerned that the project will be in jeopardy without additional funding. The federal government has committed to provide additional funds if there is matching funding from Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Can the minister tell the House whether the innovation program will provide the necessary additional funding to ensure that this program can be accepted?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, as the member has indicated, this project came to us from Climate Change Central. In addition to their involvement, Natural Resources Canada was a partner, ATCO Gas, as well as the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. As he has indicated, this is one of the unique projects that we have funded through our innovation program to look at some alternative energy uses.

The member has brought to our attention the fact that there were some severe weather events that have affected the infrastructure building of this particular closed-loop system that we have to look at. Mr. Speaker, I would let the member know that as we have our discussion with the other partners, I would be prepared to reconvene the review panel to see if further participation is warranted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. As the minister responsible for disaster relief, will you follow up on the flood claim and expedite that claim payment as quickly as you can?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the severe weather events of this past summer were devastating in many parts of Alberta. We have in place, in fact, a disaster recovery program to assist individuals and small businesses and municipalities in dealing with recovering the uninsurable portion of losses for essential items. I understand that an application from this project has recently been submitted to my department. We're in the process of reviewing that application, and I can assure the member that should the losses qualify for compensation out of our program, I would certainly be supportive of paying appropriate levels of compensation up to the limits of the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to try them all. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Environment. As this is a leading-edge technology not only in Alberta but all of Canada, as the sponsor of this project will the minister commit that his ministry will provide the funding to ensure that this project proceeds?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, Climate Change Central, for all Albertans to know, is the only kind of private/public partnership in all of Canada. There's no other province in Canada that has such a program. Its sole intent is to leverage dollars, and that's what we've done in this particular case, and it is quite a remarkable environmental initiative. We're, I understand, meeting again tomorrow with Science and Technology. Certainly, we will continue to leverage dollars in terms of securing to make sure that this project is a success. I want to say that I know that the Member for Calgary-Montrose, who sits on Climate Change Central with me, is committed to also working towards making this become a reality.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Trial within a Reasonable Time

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 11(b), guarantees to any person charged with an offence that they have the right to be tried "within a reasonable time." This is a fundamental right upon which our justice system operates. However, judges have commented that they are reluctant to revoke bail because of the undue wait times spent languishing in correctional facilities like the remand centre, forcing defendants to live with the sword of Damocles hanging over their heads for months if not years. My questions are for the Minister of Justice. What will the minister do to shorten unreasonable wait times for trial, or is it government policy to do nothing and, in effect, sentence the accused before they have a trial?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a very important point. He is quite right that a speedy trial is an important part of the justice system in Canada, and it's an important part of the justice system in Alberta. The criminal courts for the most part are found in provincial court, and I can tell the hon. member that we've been doing a lot in that regard. I can use Calgary for an example. The time to trial has gone down each of the last three years and at this particular point in time is the lowest it's been for some considerable time. We have put additional resources into that court, for example, in terms of two additional portable courtrooms, additional judges, additional staff to go along with that. In fact, the lead time will likely be reduced again when the Calgary Courts Centre will be completed next year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I'm glad he raised the issue of resources. Will the minister immediately take steps to add more Crown prosecutors and especially more provincial judges to ensure that justice is administered fairly in Alberta?

Mr. Stevens: I think, Mr. Speaker, it's important to understand that the issue of resources is an issue across Canada, and it's certainly an issue here. Alberta is doing very well on a comparative basis – that is, compared to other jurisdictions – in wait time. Having said all of that, the throne speech indicated that we, in fact, would be looking at putting additional judges, additional prosecutors, and additional staff into our courts, and I can tell you that that's our intention. Of course, we'll be debating that later. The hon. Solicitor General last year put additional police officers into the field to do their job, and part of the result of that, of course, is that there will be additional charges that need to be dealt with in our courts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that other jurisdictions in Canada and internationally have set timelines for the completion of cases from arrest to preliminary inquiry to trial, will the minister commit to implementing timelines for the determination of cases in Alberta?

Mr. Stevens: Effectively, we have timelines that are followed. Some 10 years ago the Supreme Court of Canada in a case ruled that if an accused did not have a timely trial, then the charges would be stayed or dismissed. In fact, as a result of that case, in one other jurisdiction there were a number of dismissals. I believe that that case had a timeline of something in the order of six months. The timelines in Calgary, for example, at this point in time are somewhere in the vicinity of 20, 21 weeks, so we're well within that. We monitor that on a regular basis. We have no intention of doing anything other than addressing that in a positive way. Effectively, as a result of the Supreme Court case, for the past 10 years we've paid very, very close attention to it. As I've indicated previously, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is doing very well relative to other jurisdictions in Canada.

Rural Physician Recruitment

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of a charm offensive from the Health and Wellness minister, the time has come for the truth offensive to begin. Two days ago Dr. Brent Piepgrass, vice-president of medical services for the Peace Country health region, spoke the truth about the negative impact that the Conservatives' privatized, two-tier health scheme will have on rural physician recruitment. Dr. Piepgrass called the third-way proposals frightening and morally questionable. I will table the relevant document at the appropriate time this afternoon. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister provide her personal assurance that courageous physicians like Dr. Brent Piepgrass will not only not face any kind of disciplinary action but will in fact have her full support to continue to speak out about the impact of third-way proposals on residents of their health regions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have invited every Albertan to come forward and provide us their views either by accessing the Internet, by getting the material from their library or their MLA, and we will give them all due consideration.

In the case of health care professionals that contradict the government or have alternative points of view, there has never been any intent to have anything but the most open and transparent process. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the question is in order, but I would just challenge the member opposite to define any time when this member, either as a minister of the Crown or in any other position, has taken an offensive position to someone who's spoken in criticism of government policy or the member herself.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll hold the minister to her word on that one.

What does it say about the government's third-way proposals when outstanding physicians responsible for recruiting rural doctors are calling them frightening and morally questionable?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, initially there are comments that have been made by people – and they may hold to those views throughout the process – that have been in opposition, but there are also comments, equivalently warm and enthusiastic, about trying some new approaches to make sure that we do things in different ways to improve health care. We're trying to improve access, we're working towards sustainability, we're going to gather in all of these opinions and impressions, and then we're going to deal with them accordingly. I would remind the hon. member that in an effort to make sure that we attract doctors and international medical graduates to Alberta, this week we released $3 million to assist in residency placements for almost 14 positions, with the very strong view that many of them will ultimately practise in rural Alberta and support the needs of rural Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the minister choosing to side with the Premier, who wants his rich golfing buddies to be able to queue-jump ahead of the rest of us, rather than siding with physicians like Dr. Piegras who believe it's morally questionable for those with money to get better or faster access to medically necessary services?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the health policy framework that this government has provided to Albertans gives all Albertans an opportunity to comment. It gives us a chance to reflect on those comments, to define legislation that will be in accordance with what we believe is the appropriate strategy to undertake for accessibility and sustainability. Until such time as we table those responses, I think the remarks are purely conjecture.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Gun Registration

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recently elected federal Conservatives have promised to scrap the Liberals' billion dollar boondoggle gun registry. The majority of Albertans and the Conservative government of this province have long opposed this wasteful and unfair harassment of law-abiding firearm owners. My question is to the Minister of Justice. In light of the anticipated repeal of the federal gun registry, would you consider instructing Crown attorneys in Alberta to cease enforcing those sections of the Criminal Code that deal with the gun registry?

Mr. Stevens: That, Mr. Speaker, is a very good question. In fact, Alberta's position with respect to prosecution under the Firearms Act has been very clear since the get-go. The provincial Crown prosecutors have very clear instructions, and perhaps it's worth while just to outline what those are so that everybody knows. Alberta Justice will not prosecute any charges under the federal Firearms Act. If police services need assistance in reviewing the charges, then they are to seek those services from Justice Canada.

Alberta Justice will not prosecute firearms owners under the Criminal Code if possessing an unregistered firearm is their only offence. Alberta Justice will prosecute registry charges that are laid along with other Criminal Code offences, such as the accused being unlicensed or the firearm being used in the commission of a crime. Lastly, Alberta Justice will prosecute, as we always have, firearms offences under the Criminal Code that negatively impact community safety.

Dr. Morton: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that that's a very enlightened policy.

The repeal of the federal firearm registry is anticipated but has not yet occurred, so my question is: would the minister consider communicating to his new federal counterpart in Ottawa that as far as Alberta is concerned, the sooner the better?

Mr. Stevens: Well, that is indeed a very good observation, and I say that because I've already done it, but I do thank the hon. member for the suggestion.

Just briefly, the background with respect to this, Mr. Speaker, is this. Alberta Justice is responsible for ensuring that we contribute to the largest extent toward safe communities. We believe that our resources must be used wisely in that regard, and candidly we believe that the registration of long guns does not contribute in any sense whatsoever to safe communities. The federal government is spending large numbers of dollars on this particular program, and they can be diverted to better purposes.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

New Home Construction

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All my questions are to the Minister of Government Services. Given the current housing boom and the rush to produce a quick product, what is this government doing to ensure that new homeowners have a quality product?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there is a bit of a problem out in the industry currently where some people are having difficulty with contractors. There are a number of things that people can do to help the situation themselves, things like having an agreement before construction begins. There's the ability to have a holdback until the deficiencies are addressed, and of course there's the ability to take out home insurance that would cover some of these situations. Certainly, it's not a desirable thing that is happening in some cases, but I would urge people to investigate how they can protect themselves prior to getting into the agreement.

Mr. Bonko: Given that in the past the government approved pine shakes, how can new homeowners be assured that contractors aren't cutting corners in order to boost their bottom line?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, of course, when you're entering into the agreement, you can specify certain things that have to be done and certain materials that have to be used. You can do that before the project ever begins.

Mr. Bonko: What is this government doing to ensure that home inspectors are actually qualified to do home inspections?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, and I thank the member for asking it because there is a very great need for these types of people.

There is a national organization with people in Alberta that are members. What we are currently doing is that we have asked those people to come together and present to us a mechanism where we could certify them and license them so that, in fact, when someone hires a home inspector, they know that they are getting an individual that is qualified because, Mr. Speaker, when you look at the qualifications that are necessary for a home inspector, it's very substantial. They've got to understand all of the codes: the building code, the electrical, the plumbing, the whole issue. They've got to be able to understand cement work; they've got to be able to understand structures; they've got to be able to look at and test the roof and tell you whether it's in good shape; then, on top of that, many of them are even qualified to look at appliances. I've seen the check sheet that they use, and there are some 400 items on there. You can imagine that a person that would be qualified to do that inspection is going to have to be well-trained, and they're going to have to have been in the business for a fair length of time.

Thanks for your question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today in the question period there were 77 questions and answers in a 50-minute time frame. That's pretty good.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Our reflection on the history of Alberta today deals with elections and election periods. Since the 1979 election in Alberta the election period in our province has been 28 days. Fourteen days after that issue of the writ have been nomination days, and 14 days after nomination day has been polling day. This has not always been the case.

The shortest election period, 23 to 27 days, was in effect for the elections of 1909, 1913, 1917, and 1921. For elections held between 1924 and 1955 the election period was between 30 and 40 days. For elections starting in 1959 and ending in 1975 the election period was between 39 and 49 days. For these latter elections: 1959, 1963, 1967, 1971, and 1975, nomination day was 25 to 35 days after the date of the writ, and polling day was 14 days after nomination day. Currently it's 28 days.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first member to participate.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Colin David Price

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this opportunity to thank the sponsors of the Great Kids award ceremony that took place on March 5 and recognize a great young man from Whitecourt-St. Anne.

West Edmonton Mall, Fantasyland Hotel, IBM Canada, TransCanada, and the government of Alberta all deserve high praise for their part in honouring 16 special Albertans that have displayed leadership, generosity, and the strong spirit that makes our province so great.

Premier and Mrs. Klein and the Minister of Children's Services joined members at a ceremony that recognized Great Kids from our constituencies. We listened to biographies of these young Albertans that revealed how great they really are, and I want to share with you all a brief glimpse of my great kid, Colin Price from Sangudo.

When Colin's brother was diagnosed with cancer, the life of his family was immediately turned upside down, but this quiet, brave 12-year-old was generous with his love and support while completely putting his needs on hold to stand by his brother's side. Colin never complained when the family made numerous trips between their home and Edmonton and spent many days and nights in the hospital. He helped keep the routine as normal as possible but, most importantly, Mr. Speaker, could always be trusted to improve his brother's mood.

Colin became an incredible source of strength and stability to his family during this extremely difficult time in which there were, obviously, many bad days. Colin has continued to develop a remarkable maturity since his brother lost his battle with cancer. Faced with such hardship, Colin's courage, strength, and love continue to shine. Many, many people in my constituency and throughout the province for that matter, Mr. Speaker, have shared happiness and heartbreak with the Price family. I'm sure that they join me now in congratulating Colin Price on his so strongly deserved recognition as someone who makes our province so great.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Edmonton Urban Aboriginal Initiative

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday I had the pleasure of attending the formal public release of the latest stage of the Edmonton urban aboriginal initiative. This report, which I tabled in the Legislature on Monday, paints a timely portrait of urban aboriginal life in Edmonton. From July to December 2005 the first part of the process included a wide-ranging community dialogue with a cross-section of the aboriginal community, engaging more than 1,800 people. They held talking circles, open house information sessions, and a major gathering of community leaders, who provided input on issues, concerns, and opportunities facing the Edmonton urban aboriginal community.

Most significant, perhaps, was the use of the Your City, Your Voice workbook and survey. More than 500 of these workbooks were returned, and the comments contained in the workbooks can be found in the appendices of the report. I would recommend that anyone interested in gaining an understanding of the urban aboriginal experience in Edmonton should obtain a copy of this report.

Statistically, the report reveals that Edmonton has the second largest aboriginal community in Canada as of 2001, with 30,365 aboriginal residents and double that number within a two-hour travel radius of the city. It is a fast-growing population as well, growing at a rate of two and a half times the city's population growth. Aboriginals represent 4.6 per cent of the city's population, but there are only a few Edmonton neighbourhoods where the aboriginal population exceeds 10 per cent, including some in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Unfortunately, this young and fast-growing population is troubled. In many neighbourhoods more than 50 per cent of the population lives in poverty. The poverty rate is one and a quarter times higher than Alberta's aboriginal average and two and a half times higher than that of all Edmontonians. Sadly, the majority of those surveys did not find Edmonton to be a welcoming city.

This report is not the end of the process. As elder Vic Letendre said in the report, "The City has welcomed the Native people in. Now it is going to be up to them to pick up the torch and go." This is the most ambitious and wide-ranging urban aboriginal initiative ever undertaken in Canada. I commend all of the partners, the Edmonton urban aboriginal initiative, the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund, the Edmonton Aboriginal Urban Affairs Committee, Western Economic Diversification, the Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development department, and particularly the city of Edmonton, for moving forward with this much-needed initiative. The future of urban aboriginals looks a little brighter today thanks to their efforts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Giselle Kutrowski Elyse Merriman

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday as we commemorated International Women's Day, our hon. Minister of Community Development quoted a great Chinese leader who said, "Women hold up half the sky." I would suggest that sometimes women hold up more than half the sky.

Yesterday in Red Deer the Soroptimist International of Central Alberta, a volunteer organization for business and professional women whose mission is to improve the lives of women and children, presented two cash awards to two young women who do more than their share of holding up the sky. These young women, who juggle full-time school with family duties and part-time jobs and still contribute to their community, are an inspiration to all women.

The 2006 women's opportunity cash award was presented to Giselle Kutrowski, a single mother who is taking her social work diploma at Red Deer College. As she cares for her small children, works hard to meet their needs, and studies for long hours in order to improve her economic situation, Giselle makes herself available for those who seek her help.

The Violet Richardson award was given to Elyse Merriman for her dedication and hard work in her volunteer job at the Red Deer regional hospital. While attending high school full-time, Elyse has clocked in over 290 hours of volunteer work at the hospital since 2003. Her dedication as a volunteer is also an inspiration to others.

Mr. Speaker, the Soroptimist International of Central Alberta join with 95,000 Soroptimists around the world to contribute time and financial support to community-based projects benefiting women and girls. I ask members of this House to join me in congratulating Giselle Kutrowski and Elyse Merriman on receiving their awards and to thank the members of the Soroptimist International of Central Alberta for their work in improving the lives of women and girls in local communities and around the world.

The Speaker: Should the Assembly also congratulate the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for receiving a woman of the year award this week? [applause]

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Israeli Water Treatment Technology

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and acknowledge the beginning of a new era of innovation and co-operation in the field of waste water treatment. Recently four prominent scientists from Israel, Hileel Lerman, Yohanan Montagne, Yosef Ron, and Erez Abou paid a visit to Drayton Valley. The town of Drayton Valley, MP Rob Merrifield, and myself had the pleasure of meeting with this distinguished group to discuss an issue important to all Albertans.

These four scientists, who are with the Mofet B'Yehuda Technology and Business Incubator research centre in Israel, toured the town's water treatment plant and made a presentation to town council. The focus of this presentation was a new water treatment system that has been developed in Israel, a system that uses innovative new technology and has the potential to be more cost effective and environmentally sound than current processes – clean water before and after its use.

Mr. Speaker, following this first step, enthusiasm toward and interest in this new technology is high in Drayton Valley. Should it be considered feasible to apply these new Israeli concepts, Alberta could once again be in a position to lead the country in innovation. This sort of forward thinking is the reason our province continues to remain at the forefront of technological and social development. New technology and ideas aimed at making our world a better place shouldn't be confined by international borders, and these recent events in Drayton Valley have affirmed the spirit of co-operation and vision that continues to make Alberta the best place in the world to live.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage my colleagues to join me in extending my most sincere thanks to our new friends from Israel, who were instrumental in developing this technology, as well as to town councillor Gary Carter and to all those whose hard work facilitated this fresh and exciting exchange of ideas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Enron Activities in Alberta

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to commend the authorities in the United States of America who are willing to stand up and speak up and defend their citizens against corporate fraud and greed. Today, as we speak, U.S. courts are prosecuting former Enron executives for ripping off energy consumers for millions upon millions of dollars.

Some of the accused were involved in the deregulation of Alberta's electricity market. The relationship that existed between this provincial government and Enron and its affiliates is very troubling. In August 2001 the Minister of Energy stated that he looked forward to: working with Enron on the continued development of a competitive electric industry in Alberta. End of quote. In fact, the minister allowed Enron's lawyers to write amendments to provincial regulations in a manner that best suited Enron's needs.

Even though Enron has been exposed as a corporate fraud that manipulated the electricity market to steal millions of dollars, this provincial government still remains silent. After being in power for so long this Progressive Conservative government has forgotten the difference between right and wrong. It is wrong not to investigate Enron's market manipulations in Alberta. It would be right to stand up for this province's energy consumers and seek justice. It was wrong to allow Enron to design Alberta's electricity market to suit their needs. It would have been right to design a market that benefited Alberta consumers.

Enron and its affiliates donated thousands of dollars to this Progressive Conservative government while deregulation was imposed on Albertans. Years later, with Enron executives facing justice in American courts, this government still remains silent. A political donation should never – never – serve as a down payment for government inaction. Albertans deserve better. It's now; it's time for a full, independent public inquiry into Enron's activities in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Energy minister bends to oil patch pressure and lets royalty revenues slide, it's just the same as if he spent that money. Millions of dollars in lost royalty revenue leave this province every month, and it's high time that this government stepped in and stopped the bleeding. In the 2004-05 report the Auditor General once again was critical of how the Department of Energy and the EUB monitor production levels for oil and gas and natural gas. We're not even meeting the very modest benchmarks that this government has set for royalty collection, and the method of accounting for royalties is faulty at best. Albertans will be stuck with the cleanup of this government's gold rush mentality towards resource development. The companies are making billions of dollars off the extraction of our resources, and we'll end up paying for the environmental cleanup.

The Environment minister had a good idea earlier this week. It's actually an idea the New Democrats have been promoting for some time, which is to add an environmental levy to the existing royalty structure. Such a levy could be used for research initiatives and for the efforts to expand green transportation and other measures to counter the harsh impact of the oil and gas industry. All it took was one phone call from – guess who? – the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers for the minister then to back down. We hope we can see more of that later, perhaps.

Lost energy royalty revenue is the problem from which so many other troubles flow. Health care, education, and infrastructure struggle to keep pace with the growth because our royalty structure bleeds money. Consumer utility bills are too high because the energy companies don't pay their fair share. Whose province is this anyway? These resources are not meant to be consumed all at once and at fire-sale prices to boot.

A modest adjustment in royalty rates makes good business sense, and it's the right thing to do.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a petition with 150 signatures on it. The petition urges the government Alberta to “eliminate private clinics and private delivery in the health care system, and develop a comprehensive plan to strengthen and extend Medicare.” This brings the total number of signatures on this one to 538.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday a motion will be made that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 2.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday a motion will be made that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Bill 21

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to request leave to introduce Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act.

This act replaces and updates current legislation and, along with its forthcoming regulations, will provide the AISH program with increased flexibility to better respond to the needs of Albertans with disabilities. The new legislation continues our efforts to renew the program by updating the language, streamlining processes, and improving income recording procedures for clients.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 22, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

2:50

Election (Fixed Election Dates) Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Riverview, Leader of the Official Opposition, I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 210, the Election (Fixed Election Dates) Amendment Act, 2006.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is self-explanatory, and I hope it receives its due attention.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table in the Assembly today five copies of the 2004-2005 annual report for the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research, otherwise known as the Alberta ingenuity fund. Just a couple of the things that are highlighted are the prion research centre, the centre for water research, as well as how it uses industry associates to assist industry in applied research. A copy of this report has been forwarded to all MLAs directly from Alberta Ingenuity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I referred to a document during my questions earlier today, and I would like to table that document and the requisite number of copies of it. It's titled Alberta's New Health Policy Framework: Questions and Answers, February 28, 2006.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of five of the many letters that I have received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing concern about the cancellation of the national daycare program. Letters I am tabling today are from Sarah Bulfone, Kamla Singh, Cheryl Dixon, Shandale Walker, and Danette and Lee Gordon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a news release issued by the leader of the NDP and a graph which illustrates a point I was making in question period today. It shows that despite a dire projection by the Mazankowski report of health care spending eating up half our budget, actual spending has stayed essentially the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to table five copies of the many letters received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I'm tabling today are from Sandra Phelan, Lesley Truman, Melanie Toth, Tina Peeters, and Christina Pegoraro.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to table a number of copies of five of the many letters we've received expressing concern about the cancellation of the national daycare program. These letters are from Tammy Porsnuk, Tammy Kynock, Yvonne Oshanyk, Doug Birch, and Vicky Arlidge.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from a constituent of mine, Ms Heather Gordon, who questions the Premier's hurry to implement his third-way changes. She states her objection to a two-tier health care system and her concern about the lack of real consultation with Albertans.

The second, Mr. Speaker, is on behalf of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods: five of the many letters that she received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. Today I'm tabling them from Peggy Rehaume, Trudy Dickerson, Margaret Riordon, Kate Lowther, Lauren Crane.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of the document which contains Dr. Brent Piegrass's observations. Dr.

Piegrass is the vice-president of medical services with the Peace Country health region.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a number of letters voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. They are from Jessica McKinlay, Juanita Roy, Jan Stewart,* Sammi Huber, Barbara Ritson, and Susan Iwaskow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of five letters received from concerned parents, daycare owners, staff, and other citizens voicing concerns over the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters are from Heather Hollands, Tiffany Phelan, Rosemarie Brown, Bobby-Lee Wingo, and Russell Greenhalgh.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. I have the appropriate number of copies of five of the many letters I have received from concerned parents, daycare owners, staff, and other concerned citizens voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I'm tabling today are from Gail Hadfield, Connie Johnson, P. Littlejohn, C. Callihoo, Donna P.

The second tabling is from my constituent Mr. James Sexsmith, who is a veteran and retired, living on a very low income. He's concerned about free parking at hospitals for veterans and seniors like himself. He wants to know where the monies collected from the hospitals go, where it is spent. He's asking for a complete investigation on this matter and a report to the public through the media.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today, the first being an e-mail letter from a constituent of mine, Evelyn Abbott, who is writing with her concerns about health care. She admonishes that "once you get mixed up with Insurance companies and NAFTA – well you know the rest."

The second letter is also from a family in my constituency: Dave Haynes, Dianne Harke, and Nicolas Haynes. They indicate, again, grave concern about the proposed changes to health care. They say, "While we strongly support innovation in health care, we are unconditionally opposed to anything that undermines the principals of the Canada Health Act."

Mr. Speaker, a further five letters regarding the cancellation of the national daycare program, and these letters are from Alison Ortwein, Rhonda Arlidge, Jennifer Kelley, Debbie Callihoo, and Rosanne Callihoo.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Public Health Act: the Public Health Appeal Board annual report 2005.

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(5) could I ask the Government House Leader to share with us projected government business for the week commencing Monday, the 13th of March.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to outline the projected government business for the week of March 13 to 16, 2006. Starting with Monday, March 13, 2006, of course, is private members' business in the afternoon and in the first hour of the evening, between 8 and 9. Government business begins at 9 with the second reading on bills 22, 1, and 2, and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, March 14, in the afternoon we have Government Motion 11, dealing with Ray Speaker and his address to the Assembly on March 15, 2006, and second readings on bills 18, 20, and 21. That evening, commencing at 8, we have Committee of the Whole on bills 22, 1, 2, 3, 9, and 17, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, March 15, in the afternoon commencing at 1:30 it's worth noting that prior to calling Routine and Orders of the Day there will be the 100th anniversary Alberta Legislative Assembly commemorative celebrations, with the daily Routine commencing at 2. Government business will start around 3:15 in the afternoon with third reading on bills 22, 1, 2, 3, 9, and 17. The Government House Leader, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) and the Speaker's memo dated March 8, 2006, will at 4:30 p.m. move that the House adjourn until 1:30 p.m. March 16, 2006, to accommodate the dinner for the 100th anniversary of the Assembly that evening. As such, with the anticipated success of the motion that evening there will be no evening sitting to accommodate the dinner for the 100th anniversary of the first sitting of the Legislature.

On Thursday, March 16, 2006, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders there will be second and third readings as per consultation with the opposition and as per the Order Paper.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call Orders of the Day, just an information update. I appreciate the co-operation of the members of the Assembly with respect to the events next Wednesday. All hon. members will receive a memo from me – it was signed earlier today – which includes all of the people who are registered for the 100th anniversary dinner next Wednesday as well. There are some 400-plus people, including nearly 130 former members and, in addition to those, some 16 or 17 widows or widowers of former members who are coming as well. The information will be there for all members to basically feel comfortable with recognizing people from the past if names are forgotten and the like. I very much appreciate that co-operation as well. So everything will go very, very well.

You will also get a copy of the agenda for the evening. There will be a refreshment period from 5:30 to 6:30, and then we'll begin at 6:30. Actually, there will be very, very few speeches, but there will be some very interesting little mementos that all members will receive for their contribution to the history of Alberta.

Second Reading

Architects Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, 2006.

I would like to acknowledge the significant contribution of the Alberta Association of Architects. This organization ensures that its membership is competent to practise architecture in Alberta and thus serves the public interest.

The Architects Act was just amended in March of 2004 to provide an up-to-date definition for the restricted architectural practice of interior design and allow licensed interior designers to formally become members of the Alberta Association of Architects.

The Architects Amendment Act is needed to enable the Alberta Association of Architects to require its member architects and licensed interior designers to demonstrate continuing competence in their professions. By so doing, they will maintain their membership with the association. These amendments would include licensed interior designers within the definition of an authorized entity, allowing these individuals to be governed by all of the pertinent provisions of the act, clarify that licensed interior designers and their employees can engage in the practice of interior design, and allow licensed interior designers full voting rights to elect architects and interior designers to the association's council. These amendments would also ensure that up-to-date regulations and bylaws can be developed for licensed interior designers and that licensed interior designers are registered in the same manner as architects.

Mr. Speaker, this act will help to clarify and strengthen the architect profession by allowing the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of licensed interior designers and enforce the requirement for mandatory continuing competence in their profession.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, proposes changes that would allow the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of licensed interior designers and enforce the requirement for compulsory continuing competency in their profession. This bill clarifies that licensed interior designers and their employees can engage in the practice of interior design, and it allows them full voting rights to elect architects and interior designers to the association's council. If passed, the changes will also ensure that up-to-date regulations and bylaws can be developed for licensed interior designers and that they are registered in the same manner as architects. It will professionalize more so the practice of interior design. Licensed interior designers are practising within the realm of architecture when dealing with interiors of buildings over 5,000 square feet.

The stakeholders that we from the Official Opposition have consulted on this issue, Mr. Speaker, support the change. The changes help improve the practice of professional interior design, and this profession improves the quality of life for all Albertans.

The work that licensed interior designers are doing does fall within the scope of the practice of architects. The Alberta Association of Architects is the regulatory body responsible for registering and licensing all architects and licensed interior designers legally entitled to practise the scope of architecture or licensed interior design in the province of Alberta. The AAA, Alberta Association of Architects, or the association, is a self-governing professional association charged under the Architects Act with the registration of architects and the licensing of licensed interior designers and with the regulation of the practice of architecture in the province of Alberta. The association regulates the practice of architecture in the protection of the public and the administration of the profession.

An interior designer can give advice on preparing designs, plans, detailed drawings, specifications, or graphic representations respecting the interior finishes in a building, either fixed or loose furnishings, equipment, fixtures for use in a building, or partitioning in a building that is used to subdivide a floor area. They can administer construction contracts, inspect work, assess the performance of work and the quality of materials related to the work described above.

We have consulted the very capable Naomi Minja, the executive director of the Alberta Association of Architects. They've been fully involved in the consultations and, I understand, support the changes to the act. As well, the Interior Designers of Alberta were consulted and do support this act.

Licensed interior designers are the people that help make many of our major buildings beautiful and also functional. All of these public spaces that we enjoy are helped along in our enjoyment of them by professional interior designers. They select the appropriate materials that have the right flammability rating, are durable enough to stand the test of time, and are also pleasing to the eye. How high should a handrail be? What type of flooring should be installed? The drapes and all the many other types of facility furnishings and whatever that will be used are recommended to us and supplied to our buildings and structures by professional interior designers.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition supports this piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to indicate our support for Bill 11, and we thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for bringing it forward. It has sort of an awkward name, though: Bill 11. I hope that doesn't give us some ominous precursor to things later this spring.

The bill, as we see it, certainly helps to clarify and structure things in regard to allowing the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of interior designers and to enforce the requirement for compulsory competency, which always has to be good. We know that it's very important for us to allow the professional associations to govern themselves. This certainly extends the responsibility that we have here through the Legislature, so that's a good thing. The Alberta Association of Architects certainly is in favour of these amendments, and from my understanding they said that it would help them to enforce their requirements for licensing and membership and things such as that.

The amendments clarify roles and responsibilities, which has to be a good thing too, and seem to bring things into sort of a sense of order in the Architects Act, which otherwise heretofore seemed to have, to quote from someone in the AAA, a rather haphazard past. These newly spelled out requirements and regulations are analogous to those defined in the act for architects, and the amendments appear to be neither discriminatory nor cosmetic, which is good.

Licensed interior designers find themselves for the first time fully included in this act instead of tacked on as an afterthought. I'm sure that they are looking forward to functioning under this act as equal partners and on the level of architects across the province. Given that the Alberta Association of Architects supports this substantive inclusion, I think that the rest of Bill 11, then, is sort of housekeeping, to have all of that fall into place.

We're happy to be in support of this Bill 11 without any amendments, and we look forward to seeing what comes next. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow to close debate.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seeing the support that we're receiving from the opposition parties, I would like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, one of the fast-growing crimes in the province is mortgage fraud, and to that end we set up a committee that had representation from the Solicitor General's department, the Attorney General, Finance, of course from my department, the Edmonton city police, the RCMP, financial institutions, and the Law Society. They made a number of recommendations, and we believe this amendment to the Land Titles Act will in fact help accomplish some of the things that they've talked about.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The first and most important thing that this act does is allow the registrar to question when someone comes to the counter or someone brings forward a land title. The current situation is that if all the i's are dotted and all the t's are crossed, the registrar doesn't have a choice but to register it. Under these amendments the registrar will have the ability to actually question, even to the point of the identity of the individuals that have signed the documents. We believe that that way there will be the ability to probably find out if, in fact, there's something wrong with the document. Of course, there are probably still going to be some cases that will get by because even though the registrar will have the ability to do this, we have to be careful that we don't hold up the process unduly. Under this act we will also be making sure that if the registrar doesn't register immediately and does more investigations, the assurance fund isn't going to be liable under every situation. So that's really the most important part of it.

Also, we are defining the purpose of the land titles registry. This is a request from the FOIP office because they're having some difficulty at times determining whether, in fact, release of information that's on the title is in keeping with the purpose of government collecting that information and filing it. There are, as well, a number of other, minor amendments that really could be called housekeeping, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I will be moving second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to rise as the Official Opposition critic for Government Services to participate in the debate during second reading of Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006. It's also noteworthy to mention that I'm really considering this bill in conjunction with its sister bill, Bill 13, which is the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006, as they're both attempting to deal with the same problem, mortgage fraud, each within its own sphere.

Before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the hon. minister for having agreed to meet with me ahead of time, before the legislative session started. I appreciated his time and his admin staff's time when they met with me and my researcher to go through the changes that were being proposed. I sincerely appreciate this. It allows us to conduct a dialogue professionally and intelligently.

Now, mortgage fraud, Mr. Speaker, is real and scary. It is a lucrative crime. We all know that crime doesn't pay. That's the way we were brought up, and that's the way we were taught. But until these criminals are caught, they're really making a ton of money fairly painlessly and quite quickly. Their return on investment, if we can call it an investment, is really quite high and quick. It appears to be the in crime, definitely one of the crimes of today. Crooks are getting craftier and more sophisticated, more creative and high tech. With that, the damage and loss are magnified manyfold. They lure unsuspecting victims and prey on people's basic dream and, one would argue, their right to own a home.

We're not talking about petty theft or a little kid stealing a chocolate bar. We're examining crimes which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and have the potential to ruin lives and destroy families. Mortgage fraud can also drive up the cost of home ownership for genuine, honest, and hard-working people hoping to either own their first home or move from one home to the next. Insurance rates or registration fees or things like that may actually soar and may become another hurdle that homeowners have to overcome.

Now, we all know how active our economy is. This booming and bullish economy has led to a correspondingly scorching hot housing market with significant increases in sales, a widespread building frenzy, and an increase in the average sale price for sold properties. Land titles staff apparently processed more than 1 million land title registrations in the year 2004-2005. One million transactions.

Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006, tries to deal with this issue. I'm willing to support this bill as it doesn't really appear to be contentious at all. It's quite useful and timely. In fact, its main aim is really simple: to clean up and update some of the language which is used in the old act to make it consistent with the current situation and the current practices. For example, I noticed that all references to inspectors and assistant inspectors have been removed under this amendment as those positions are now obsolete and no longer used. So we're making it conform to the current practice, which is good.

It allows the deputy registrar to function just like the registrar himself or herself and not only when the registrar is ill, away, or absent or when the position is vacant. So, really, we're empowering the deputy registrar to undertake more responsibility and to evolve in his role and his mandate to become equal to and a replacement for the actual registrar. It allows the registrar, in essence, to delegate to his or her deputy, and they can both do the same work together. Nothing bad there.

The second goal of this amendment is to bring the registrar of land titles into the battle against mortgage fraud and to afford him or her more power to help combat this growing problem. This bill also allows the registrar to refuse to register an instrument when fraud or an improper transaction is suspected. I think that this is good, of course, but the question here will be: is this going to be subjective? What kind of training and special skills are we going to offer to our land titles staff to be able to detect if something appears fishy or something is not kosher or appropriate?

Will they have a certain protocol to follow, a manual to refer to, or a list of things to watch for? We don't want it to be left to their judgment entirely, and then one genuine transaction is denied while one criminal transaction goes through and is not stopped. Will they have the required training and continuing education as the crimes evolve and as the criminals, as I mentioned, get craftier and change their ways? Will these officers receive additional training as time goes?

Also, will they be required to report questionable transactions to police or law enforcement, or will they just refuse to register that instrument right there and then, and that's the end of the story? I would hope that if they intervene and if they intercept something or stop it, they would have good record keeping and maybe save a log with all the pertinent information and offer this to law enforcement for them to be able to track the magnitude of this growing problem, for them to be able to maybe look for similarities in how the crime is committed, or for them to be able to thwart additional crimes in the future because now they have trends or patterns that they can refer to in their investigations.

Mortgage fraud, as I mentioned, is a growing problem. I can actually spend 10 minutes, at least, talking about examples of mortgage fraud, but I'll leave this for a later date. It's noteworthy to mention that the Real Estate Council of Alberta, or RECA, has put out a bulletin on mortgage fraud. I would refer all the hon. colleagues in this House and people who might be listening on the Internet or reviewing Hansard later to visit their website and try to go through these recommendations and pieces of information because it really allows them to understand how these crooks commit these crimes. I would refer everybody to their website: www.reca.ab.ca. Their bulletin was actually produced in April of 2004. It talks about things like straw buyers, flipping property, low down payments, and so on, and it alerts people to the red flags that they should be watching for.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, this is relatively useful. It doesn't appear to be contentious, and again I thank the minister for having given me the opportunity to discuss it ahead of time. I welcome further comments. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has further to say.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and debate Bill 12, Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006. It's a very interesting debate for me because my background is as a real estate agent. I've been doing this job for a long time, especially the land title experience. Some problems facing the land title sometimes cause difficulties for buyers as well as sellers.

According to the data in this bill, the first objective of this bill is to clean up and update some of the language within the act that is no longer used or no longer up to date. The impact is very clear. The bill wants to give additional responsibilities or more duties to the registrar. This is a noncontentious bill with no apparent negative impacts. Further, the bill incorporates the registrar into the battle against mortgage fraud in Alberta, which is a positive thing.

We need some caution on this particular bill. It needs some amendments, I think, because when you pay $7 or $10 for one particular land title, sometimes you get very little information. People expect a full property archive report in the land title. Suppose you buy a car. You are entitled to know the last four or five owners of the car: who bought it, when they bought it, the sale price, and condition. I used to live in England. We used to get the full history of some products, especially cars. When you are buying property or land, maybe a house, it's a huge amount involved, and I think it's very important that we get the full property archive report when we get the land title.

The land title history is operated and maintained by Alberta Government Services, and it is the responsibility of the government. We should look at it very carefully. I know that RECA is doing a good job, but still, as I said before, we should have a commissioner who would look into this matter very carefully. In other states some laws are different. The assumption of a mortgage: in other states it's not possible, but in Alberta the people assume somebody else's mortgage. Then they flip the property, and they make lots of money. We don't see those changes in the land title report.

Another complaint I hear from some people on the land titles is that sometimes it takes more time. In rush time sometimes the people get the land title report in 10, 15 days. Maybe sometimes it takes more than two weeks. When some buyers and maybe some sellers write an offer for the property, the possession date takes three months. After three months it takes two weeks for the land title, so it's close to four months. The market value sometimes goes up, and the buyers and the sellers sometimes make settlements under the table. That's happening in Alberta. This, in other words, is fraud, and it shouldn't happen. If we have a vigilance department who can look into this, this will not be beneficial for the buyer but good for sellers and good for the citizens in Alberta.

Another thing I want to mention here is that when we pay some amount of money to the registrar for a land title, they don't highlight some properties bought and sold by the government. In some states it's compulsory if government is involved in the property. I mean, maybe it's discriminatory, but it's up to you. If the transaction is done by the government, it should be highlighted. It should be highlighted. People should know that this property is bought or sold by the government, as with other properties. Property archives should be there, even five, six times flip-flopped, especially if it's government involvement. It should be highlighted, the mortgage information especially.

Suppose the mortgage is refinanced a few times. I mean, it happens in Alberta. Some lenders are playing foul games. They buy one property. If one lender turned down the mortgage, then they go to the other lenders and get the mortgage. After financing from one place, they go to the other place. There are lots of problems in this one as well. I think we must consider some grey areas in this particular issue before we pass this legislation.

We need to educate buyers and sellers both. I mean, some people are innocent, and they buy the property. They don't go to a licensed realtor. They just find a for-sale property, and if they're asking even 20 per cent more in price and the seller says, "Okay, I'll take $10,000 less than the asking price," they think: oh, my God, it's cheaper. But they don't realize because they don't ask the people who are experts in the field, and they pay more for that. Afterwards, when they find out that they bought the property for 25 or 20 per cent more than the actual value of the property, then they repent that.

That's why I'm suggesting that we should suggest to RECA or maybe make the legislation so that there should be some sort of awareness. I mean, we should educate the people, especially on buying a property. Some people don't even inspect the property. I don't know. Some inspectors have the licences, but they charge $200, $300, $400 for a small house. When they write reports, it could be in five years, could be in four years, and some innocent people don't understand those things. It's very important to educate the new buyer, the first-time buyer. First-time buyers always suffer because they don't have the full knowledge about the whole thing. If they are leasing the property or they are buying a house or buying land, the problem is there. They don't understand sometimes.

So we need somebody to guide them. I know that they don't contact the licensed realtor because they think: oh, they have to charge some commission. Just to save some commission, they contact some person who doesn't have the knowledge. In a case like this, the only way, I think, is to educate the people on how they can, you know, save some money. I think that saving money is more important than anything else.

The provincial committee, with representation from the government, is also important. I think the minister already indicated that they are concerned. RECA is involved. They are doing a good job.

Other than that, I don't think there's any problem with this bill. I believe this is a good bill. I'm willing to voice my support for this bill as it appears to be primarily aimed at cleaning up or updating the language. I'm very happy with this bill. It's good to see that we are making the needed changes in the land titles in response to the problems we are facing associated with mortgage fraud in Alberta.

That's all I have to say. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak this afternoon on Bill 12, the Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006. I'd like to thank the hon. minister and representative from Rocky Mountain House for bringing this forward. I believe that there are a number of issues here within the bill that were wanting attention. As far as I know, we as the New Democrats will give it tentative support. I guess I just wanted to go through a couple of the places where we don't necessarily find contention, but perhaps we can look for future clarification just to make sure that we know what you are trying to do here.

These amendments, I believe – correct me if I'm wrong – are sort of required in response to a recommendation made by the Advisory Committee on Mortgage Fraud in its final report, issued last year in November. The language in this proposed bill seems to be changing to reflect existing positions. There are no longer any inspectors or assistant inspectors. Rather, there's only the registrar and deputy registrars.

Therefore, most of the changes are of that sort of nature, which is fine: adding some regulations here, I see, to permit the registrar to refuse a registry when fraud is suspected, which certainly has to be welcomed by most of the real estate community, I believe, and by the public as well, and adding regulations permitting investigation of the registrar for suspicious dealings and to access personal information, which again is perhaps necessary considering the magnitude of purchasing a home for most everyone. It's the biggest purchase that they make, so we want to make sure that there's adequate protection in place to reduce the incidence of fraud.

Alberta is the mortgage fraud capital of Canada, unfortunately. We have more fraudulent incidents in Alberta than in any other place. Certainly, it's a reflection of the hot market and movement of property throughout the province, which I guess is a good thing in some ways, but we have to be here to stand on guard, to regulate on the other hand, I suppose.

The amendment as proposed here raises several additional questions, and I believe, in my mind, that it raises more questions than perhaps are addressed in the bill. Just a couple of places to watch for, and we can continue the debate when we meet in the other level of debate here.

Section 13, for example, of the proposed amendment is stipulating that proof of identification may be required in order to register rather than leaving it up to the discretion of the registrar. As to who or what group may need to produce identity, in the interest of transparency we would suggest that perhaps that could read that proof of identification must be required, period. I mean, who's to say why someone would have to be excluded from that? I think that it's just easier to use a one-size-fits-all for that particular section.

Another example of a section that might require some adjustment or at least clarification is in section 14 on page 4, which gives the registrar the right to refuse registration if fraud is suspected. While of course we can support the right to do so – in fact, we support that to reduce the incidence of fraud – as far as I can see, there's no provision made for appeals by the individual to be refused. Perhaps I'm missing something. Nor are there provisions for the registrar to report suspected fraud. Perhaps if I could get some clarification on that so that we can just have that out in the open: perhaps referring it to another level of inspection or the police, I guess, if necessary.

Also, if the stated purpose of the amendments is to give the government another tool to prevent and detect fraud in its registries, how does the hon. minister, then, perceive these proposed amendments given that fraud is still ongoing in our privatized registries in general? I would suggest that a tightening up of the privatized registries and the problems we see associated with that might be working in concert with this bill to protect citizens because, of course, we always have to be vigilant. We have seen individual cases of privatized registries not following the rules, so perhaps that would be a nice one-two punch to reduce real estate fraud in the province and to better serve and protect the public, which is our job otherwise.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wish to speak under 29(2)(a)? Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask a few more questions. Why couldn't RECA or the provincial government stop assumption of the mortgage in Alberta when some other provinces don't have this? There was a rumour last year that they are going to stop assumptions of the mortgage because of a few frauds in Alberta. Why did we let it go that far? Can you answer this particular question: why are we still waiting?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is to ask a question of the previous speaker or to make a comment. Anyone else?

Mr. Eggen: I can respond, certainly. That's a great question. As a real estate owner, not a real estate dealer, I would be curious to know about that actually. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie brings a wealth of experience in the real estate trade to the House, to the Legislature, and I appreciate his comments. It's refreshing.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services to close debate.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just be brief. I'm going to address some of the concerns even though normally we just deal with the principle of the bill at this point, and I want to take this opportunity to thank the Liberals and the NDP for their support on this bill.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung talked about the training of staff. Yes, that is a very important component. As a matter of fact, currently we spend a considerable amount of time when someone comes in and becomes an employee in the land titles office. As they move up, in order to have the final sign-off, it takes them a considerable amount of time to get there. Of course, any time that we find or the registrar would suspect something and is pretty sure that there's something suspicious, the police would be called in. That's all part of the investigation the way we would work it.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about releasing a lot of information. Mr. Speaker, one of the amendments in here is to add the purpose of the land titles: why you have land titles and the registrar, the registry of them. The purpose, then, will help the commissioner dictate what kind of information can be released off those titles. It's not totally in our hands, but certainly we're hoping that with these amendments it'll clarify it somewhat.

He also mentioned the number of sales and mortgages rolled over and those sorts of things. That's exactly the kinds of things that the staff will be trained to look at and will be able to start asking questions because they get really suspicious if a property has been rolled over, say, four times in a year. There could be – not necessarily, but there could be – something going on. That's the type of thing that they would identify and would start asking a lot of questions and would start backing it up to see if the people that signed the documents are who they say they are. They would be getting all that identity.

The mortgages as they are rolled is another area that the registrar will be looking at. It's quite amazing, these people that are in the business of defrauding the public in the mortgage area and in land, the various schemes that they have. Now, when we talk about the training of staff, we have to also remember that the people that are committing these crimes – their techniques are changing. So we have to keep up with that. We have to keep recognizing that, you know, there's something different here today than there was yesterday. Those are the kinds of things that they'll be dealing with.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder was wondering about the appeals. No, there isn't an appeal. What will happen, of course: if a registrar is holding up an instrument, then in fact the opportunity will be there for the individual that's trying to register it to clarify and justify everything that's before the registrar. If it turns out that, in fact, the registrar refuses, then of course it'll go over to court. That would be the appeal.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would call the question on second reading of this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Bill 10

Engineering, Geological and Geophysical
Professions Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 10, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2006.

I would like to acknowledge the contribution the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, more commonly known as APEGGA, has made to the development of this legislation. The association has worked closely with the staff of Human Resources and Employment. The membership of APEGGA strongly supports the provisions contained in this bill. Also in support are other professional regulatory organizations, including the Alberta Association of Architects, the Alberta Institute of Agrologists, the College of Alberta Professional Foresters, and the College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists.

Mr. Speaker, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act governs the practices of engineering, geology, and geophysicists in Alberta and requires that people who wish to practise as engineers, geologists, and geophysicists belong to APEGGA. The legislation also grants these individuals the right to vote for and become members of APEGGA's governing council and to vote on all proposed bylaws and regulations put forward by APEGGA.

In 2002 the legislation was amended to include the registered professional technologists, or RPTs, in engineering as APEGGA members. In 2003 RPTs in geology and geophysics also became members of APEGGA through the creation of a new regulation. None of the RPTs, however, were granted full voting rights or council membership rights in the association. Bill 10 would allow RPTs in engineering to have the same rights as APEGGA's current professional members, the right to vote on and to be elected to the governing council and to vote on bylaws and regulations.

Similar changes to the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act regulations are also proposed to give RPTs in geology and geophysics the same rights. As it stands, Bill 10 makes it mandatory for at least one RPT to be a member on APEGGA's council. However, mandatory council membership was not part of the amendment submission presented by APEGGA to the Alberta government. To rectify this matter, a House amendment will be introduced during Committee of the Whole reading of Bill 10 to delete the reference to mandatory council membership for RPTs. In other words, RPTs may, as opposed to shall, sit on APEGGA's council. The House amendment will in no way hinder RPTs' ability to vote or be a candidate for APEGGA's council.

Mr. Speaker, this act will help clarify and strengthen the engineering profession by allowing RPTs to vote on and become members of APEGGA's council and also vote on new and amended APEGGA regulations and bylaws. Bill 10 guarantees that all views of all APEGGA members will be heard. This will ensure that the association continues to serve the public interest and maintain the high standards of safety and excellence Albertans have come to expect.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

I'd like to adjourn debate.

Bill 15
International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the second reading of Bill 15, the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act. Bill 15 is implementing legislation that will help move Canada toward becoming part of an international registry for large, mobile equipment such as passenger aircraft.

Mr. Speaker, in 2005 the Canadian federal government signed two international agreements: the first, the convention on international interests and mobile equipment, also known as the Cape Town convention, and then the protocol on aircraft equipment. Eight countries, including the United States and Ireland, have ratified the convention and protocol. Canada and 24 other countries have signed the convention and protocol but haven't yet ratified them.

Mr. Speaker, these two international agreements touch on an area of provincial jurisdiction: interests in personal property. We've been assured that Canada will not ratify them until a critical mass of provinces – Ontario, Quebec, B.C., and Alberta – have indicated their support. Ontario and Nova Scotia have already passed but not yet proclaimed legislation. Quebec and B.C. haven't yet indicated their plans for implementing legislation. However, it is likely that Canadian ratification of the convention and protocol will take place 12 to 18 months from now.

In general, Mr. Speaker, these two international agreements establish a system for the registration of international interests in aircraft equipment. It'll be much like the way the registry keeps track of information on your truck or car. The registry for aircraft equipment, such as engines and airframes, will be based in Ireland. As we all know, when you buy a car through a bank, the bank searches the registry to find out if there are any liens on the car or if it has been used as security for another loan. Airlines also use banks and other financial institutions to finance the purchase of large passenger aircraft. Those institutions need access to the same kind of up-to-date, reliable information about the aircraft to protect their financial interests.

Currently an international registry does not exist to keep track of such important information. With an international registry in place banks will have more confidence about the security of their loans, and as a result they've already indicated that they'd be able to lower their lending rates and save the airlines some money. Now, aircraft are expensive, and even a small reduction could mean savings of hundreds of thousands of dollars on a purchase. Our hope, of course, Mr. Speaker, is that some of these savings would be passed on to consumers. Without Alberta implementing legislation to help establish this registry, firms located in our province, such as WestJet, would be left out, wouldn't be able to participate, and they would not be able to take advantage of the anticipated lower lending rate.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that Bill 15 does not amend Alberta's Personal Property Security Act. The international agreements are flexible. They allow jurisdictions to make choices regarding their implementation to take into account existing domestic laws and procedures. The new registry on aircraft equipment will have no effect on how provincial registries currently operate and collect information on Alberta's cars, trucks, and homes. The legislation allows Alberta to exercise its jurisdiction in an area where the federal government has reached an international agreement, and it will give Alberta businesses access to lower financing costs when purchasing new equipment.

For these reasons I encourage all members to support second reading of Bill 15, the International Interests in Mobile Aircraft Equipment Act.

I also move to adjourn debate on this bill. Thank you.

Bill 1
Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

[Adjourned debate March 2: Mr. Dunford]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in support of this bill. The Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act I think is a very important bill and deals with something that has touched on every member of this Assembly in some way and on many of our families. To establish this fund, to establish some of these matters addresses each of the three pillars of many of the things that the Alberta Cancer Board has been looking for and wants to have in its strategy, and those three are prevention, early detection, and research.

Some of the many problems we see in cancer are shown in the statistics for Alberta and the Northwest Territories. In Alberta an estimated 13,200 new cases of cancer will be expected in 2005, 6,800 for men and 6,400 for women, and 5,500 deaths from cancer. For prostate cancer among men it remains the most frequently occurring cancer in Alberta, and in 2005 an estimated 2,200 men will be diagnosed with this and 400 will die. Breast cancer is incredibly difficult for many women, and it's the most frequently occurring cancer for them. An estimated 1,950 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer, and 430 will die from it. Lung cancer, the most preventable of all human cancers, continues to be the leading cause of cancer death in Alberta for both men and women. In 2005 an estimated 1,660 people, 850 men and 810 women, will be diagnosed with lung cancer, and 1,410 people will die from it. Colorectal cancer is the third most common cancer in Alberta for both men and women, although both incidence and mortality rates have declined steadily over the last decade and a half. In 2005 an estimated 1,560 people will be diagnosed with it, and 600 people will die.

The above findings were drawn by the Canadian Cancer Society from the Canadian Cancer Statistics 2005 booklet. These are shocking numbers. I hope and pray that the numbers will be decreased through this important initiative and that what we see through a co-ordinated approach and an increased amount of funding and an increased amount of focus on this issue will be important in reducing these tragic deaths.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to participate in second reading in the discussion on Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, as sponsored by the hon. Premier. Of course, you know that when an opposition member rises, you get people from across the way with their ears perking up and they circle their wagons and they think that we're going to attack them and criticize them. They expect the worst most of the time, but today I am pleased to disappoint them because I am standing in support of this bill. Actually, one would argue that it's really long overdue.

This bill is useful. It has positive outcomes or favourable impacts. It establishes the new cancer legacy fund, which is about half a billion dollars, $500 million, which I think would yield about $25 million annually. It's good because this way you have a steady stream of something that is forecastable, something that is relatively guaranteed, relatively secure, that keeps coming every year. I think this is better than ad hoc decisions or grants or, you know, one-off prosperity dividends or payouts. This is good because now people in the field can rely on $25 million, or more if revenues increase, coming their way every year. I think that's positive.

It also intends to encourage national, international partnerships with the private sector in screening and research, and this is useful of course. I'm going to talk about the issue of screening in about a minute here.

The third clear impact or positive outcome would be funding and establishing a virtual institute, a cancer research institute, which will increase capacity for researchers in this province to collaborate on research and development projects. It offers additional leverage for attracting outside grants because sometimes you go to the federal government or you go to venture capital people or whatever the source is, and they say: "Okay. We will match whatever you can muster, whatever you can come up with." So we're opening doors now to places like the Canadian Institutes of Health Research or other agencies that would match whatever funds we can come up with here provincially.

In terms of a background, the Alberta Cancer Board has been pressing for a significant commitment by this province and by this government to expand its capacity and resources to deal with cancer in terms of not only treatment but also detection and prevention. In addition to the legacy fund, the board has submitted some capital requests to the government, to the treasury, of some $350 million for expansion to the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton and is in the early stages of preparing a proposal for a similar one for Calgary to expand cancer-related capacity, which is going to be worth $500 million to $600 million in that city alone. This is a good first step, but the government should be expecting that more demands are going to follow.

Now, I said in the beginning that I wholeheartedly support investing in cancer research in all disciplines, be it early diagnosis and detection, like I mentioned, or be it medication and pharmaceutical care protocols or surgery or restorative surgery. In fact, on the issue of early detection and diagnosis you know, Mr. Speaker, of my experience in the health care field. As a pharmacist I not only see patients afflicted with the various forms of cancer – and we all know how devastating and destructive and terrible a disease it is – but I also see and talk to their family members and their spouses. People are usually very comfortable with their pharmacist, and they share things with you that sometimes they don't share with their physician even. One of the themes that I can detect now is that people are concerned about misdiagnosis, or not having a correct diagnosis made at the beginning. Sometimes they blame it on how busy the specialists are or maybe because there aren't enough specialists and so on.

If you don't detect it early enough or if you detect it but you diagnose it the wrong way, then it adds to the negative impact of that disease. If you catch it early enough and if you detect it the right way and you prescribe the right medication or the right surgical procedure, then your chances of survival are really higher. Scanning techniques have improved. I really have to emphasize that I'm not criticizing the advances that were made over the past 10 years or so. We definitely came a long way, and we have a lot more to offer. We have a lot more to improve upon. The population is aging, and the rate of morbidity or multiple diseases is increasing, and the challenge is still here. So I hope that one of the things that this fund is trying to address is in the area of early and accurate diagnosis and detection.

Also, Mr. Speaker, what about the underlying causes of cancer? It is good to be able to finally attack or tackle the problem of cancer. It's definitely a growing concern. But what about the causes that might actually cause people to come down with cancer? One of the risk factors is going to be family history. Maybe there is nothing much we can do if somebody has a gene that predisposes them to coming down with a certain form of cancer, be it colorectal or prostate or breast cancer or whatever.

My grandmother herself came down with a very rare form of cancer, oral cancer, which basically affected her jaw and her tongue and her teeth. She actually had to undergo surgery, and they removed about two-thirds of her lower jaw and about one-third of her upper jaw. She was really devastated by it because from that point on she actually had to eat all her food preblended, almost like Gerber for kids. It was really, really awful. They couldn't tell her where she got it from. She did not have a family history. She did not have all the other determinants of cancer. They said that maybe, possibly, because she was a headmistress or a principal of a school, she drank too much coffee. They couldn't tell. That was about 26 years ago, and I think that today they should be able to do a better job with all the scanning routines and all the techniques that they use in our health centres.

Back to the underlying causes. I always quote the saying about an ounce of prevention versus the pound of treatment. This is where I'm going, Mr. Speaker: to try to alleviate or to prevent the causes that contribute to cancer. Certain things are not stoppable, but certain things are. Questions come to mind. What specific prevention initiatives is this money going to support? What are we going to do to educate our public? What things should we ask them to avoid? What things should we ask them to look for?

Also, if we're going to invest hundreds of millions of dollars – and I'm saying that this is a first step; we might have it next year or the year after – what are we going to do for environmental risk factors? Two examples in very recent history: within this last year we had the Wabamun train derailment and a spill. I know that they did contain it. Maybe they didn't contain it fast enough. At least is there going to be an agency or a board that's going to look at these risk factors and re-evaluate, test the water, do environmental impact assessments over a period of time to make sure that the water really did go back to its former quality? We also heard about the water being contaminated by coal-bed methane fracturing. People are claiming that they can actually, literally, ignite their tap water. They can't bathe in it; they're getting some terrible skin rashes from it. They can't make their farm animals drink it, and they can't drink it themselves, so now they're relying on water being trucked in. These are just examples of natural or artificially occurring toxins that could be averted, that could be avoided.

The issue that is on everybody's mind: are the province and the government going to strengthen our smoking legislation? Smoking is definitely one of the main causes of lung cancer. It has been proven. It's in the scientific wisdom. People know that smoking, with all the tar and all the garbage that is in cigarettes, causes lung cancer. So are we going to strengthen smoking legislation?

I'll go back to my experience as a pharmacist, Mr. Speaker, and I'll tell you about something that I was personally involved in. I ran for the College of Pharmacists board six or seven years ago, and I hoped to become one of the councillors because I had an idea. I wanted to remove tobacco products from pharmacies. Some pharmacies are relying on tobacco sales not as a revenue-generating stream but as a traffic maker. If all the independent or small stores stop selling tobacco, the bigger stores like Safeway and Shoppers and Superstore are still selling them. Because of their huge size the government and its bylaws tell you that you don't need to separate that section of your store from the rest of it.

I ran on the idea that I would present a motion to ban tobacco sales from all drugstores regardless of size. I came in fourth. We were five people running, and I came fourth, 27 votes away from the first-place winner. It's noteworthy to mention that the first three were hospital pharmacists. People in the hospital pharmacy industry voted for their own because they didn't know me, but they liked the idea. I'm hoping that one of these days, now that I'm a member of this esteemed House, we can actually discuss the feasibility of removing tobacco products from all drugstores regardless of size.

Evidence shows that cancer in a majority of cases is also caused by social reasons or causes such as poverty or malnutrition or things like that. This is a growing concern for myself and my caucus colleagues because regardless of the wealth and all this money that the government is bringing in and that people are relatively better off than before, the gap between the really rich and the really poor is widening. So I think our middle class to some extent is being pulled, polarized. The rich are getting richer, which is not necessarily bad, but the poor are getting poorer, and this is something I take issue with.

Also, treating cancer involves palliative care, or terminal care. It's an important issue because these people are in the last period of their lives. What are we doing? What are we hoping to accomplish with this bill to try to afford them the dignity and the pain-free status to ease them in their last days in this world? Palliative care is important; 27 to 45 per cent of all cancer-related costs pertain to palliative care. So it's a growing expenditure, but it's also something that we have to be aware of. As people get older and as medical treatment gets better, more and more people would require palliative care because we're diagnosing them right – or so one hopes – and we're going to look after them.

You know, people are living into their 80s and 90s now with comorbidities, which means they have multiple diseases, and we are definitely going to spend more on looking after them in their last days. So palliative care: it opens up the discussion on things like long-term care as well and continuing care. It all fits together. We shouldn't really look at these policies as piecemeal or, you know: I'm today talking about cancer; I can't talk about long-term care. They all fit together.

An Hon. Member: It's silos.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Leave the silos away and look at the bigger picture because, you know, it's one person and it's one taxpayer that we're looking after. You can't really split them and say: oh, I'll look after his health and I'll look after his education and I'll look after his social needs and I'll look after his legal rights and so on. It's one person. You look at it from a holistic approach.

Also, other than just pouring money or investing into this fund, what is the government going to do to increase training, graduation, and retention of qualified health professionals? You would hope that people that are graduating – and you've heard the statistic that the admission quota is going way up and that people are finding it extremely difficult to go into medicine, pharmacy, dentistry, physical rehab, and so on. What are we doing to promote more open . . . [Mr. Elsalhy's speaking time expired]

Ah, well. Okay. There are more chances, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I know that the member was sort of cut off mid-thought on the issues that he was pursuing, and I'm wondering if he can just complete the last section that he was talking about.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, hon. member, Standing Order 29(2)(a) has been used for that reason before, so the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I promise to be brief. I was just talking about training and recruitment. We all know that admission quotas have become restrictive. People are not seeking those professional programs because of the length or the amount of money that they have to fork out to be in them. It's costly and it's long. Medicine, for example: seven, eight, nine years to become a physician. The more specialized you want to be, the longer it takes. People are shying away from becoming specialists and only graduating as family physicians because there's a quick buck to be made, and that's it.

The other thing, too, is – and I can tell you this from my experience as well – that half of every graduating class from the University of Alberta's pharmacy department goes to the U.S. Why do they go to the U.S.? They get offered better wages. Sometimes you hear stories about them hiring their spouses and offering them relocation bonuses. They give them a house and so on. What are we doing here to be competitive in that job market? We all know that we have a job shortage.

You know, you talk about importation of temporary foreign workers: what are we doing for our international medical graduates? People are coming from overseas, and they're really qualified. I know that the Minister of Health yesterday or the day before issued a press release talking about some 14 residency spots for international medical graduates, which means that if they share them, we can possibly get 28 of those international graduates through per year, and basically we're getting 28 more physicians every year, which is great.

But what are we doing to maybe encourage people to go in now, and what are we doing to encourage our government to retain them within this province? Maybe we should pardon some of their student debt. If people are graduating with heavy student debts, we can pardon some of it.

An Hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, I still have three minutes, I think. I'll come back to it in committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, five minutes is allowed under Standing Order 29(2)(a), so you still have three minutes.

Mr. Elsalhy: I appreciate it. Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else in the remaining time under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd like to rise and discuss Bill 1 briefly. It's kind of hard to argue against an all-out attack on cancer. There are not going to be too many people in this room right now or hardly anyone in Alberta who hasn't been touched by cancer in some way.

I remember that last week when we were here, I heard from the Minister of Economic Development about his current battle with cancer, and it was a very interesting and inspiring story. I recall a few years ago in my own family I had a call from my dad telling us that one of my nephews had leukemia. His name is Ryan. When you hear something like that, there's a feeling in the pit of your stomach that just makes you sick to think that someone this young – he was probably 13 at the time – would have a disease as potentially horrific as this. He and his family went through just a hellish time fighting this disease – a lot of hospital stays, medication, all sorts of terrible stuff – but it worked, I'm happy to say.

Thanks to the cancer research funds over the years and the people in the cancer community in Edmonton he's a big, strong 18-year-old today, and that's a real success story. I think that with this bill there may be a lot more of these success stories in the future. It certainly would be wonderful if sometime – you know, right now there's something called, I think, the Edmonton protocol for diabetes. Maybe some day in the future there will be an Alberta protocol that will solve some sort of horrendous cancer, maybe prostate cancer or something along those lines, and maybe it will all start right here with this commitment of $500 million to start a real solid battle against cancer.

In that regard, yes, I certainly have to give credit to the government for reaching for the stars. I mean, we've been kind of waiting for this government to do something big with all the petrodollars that have been coming in. Battling the deficit is not exactly something that's going to gladden the heart. It's a good thing; congratulations, it's done. This is a better thing. This is something that could make a difference in the lives of people for years to come and around the world, and I certainly hope that it can succeed. I have to give credit to the government for finally showing some vision.

It's an ambitious goal; that's for sure. We're looking at reducing the incidence of cancer by 35 per cent by 2025 and reducing the mortality from cancer by 50 per cent by 2025. Big goals. I don't know exactly how they found these goals, and how they're going to measure them is another question altogether, but I assume that they've got some sort of plan in place to keep an eye on this.

Mr. Speaker, we have all sort of done our part for cancer research, some in big ways. This is the biggest way, and we've all had our small ways. I know there are a bunch of opposition MLAs who went on a little Cops for Cancer Battle in the Saddle a few weeks ago. We raised over a thousand dollars. I think the members for Edmonton-McClung and Edmonton-Manning – I was sick that day, but I organized it – and Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Decore were all there. We did our part and raised about a thousand dollars.

Mrs. McClellan: They were sick after they did it.

Mr. Tougas: I'm being heckled; I can't believe this. I'm saying nice things; I'm being heckled.

An Hon. Member: In a good way.

Mr. Tougas: Okay. I'll accept that. I'll accept the applause.

I do have to say, though, that there's a little bit of irony in this government launching a battle against cancer in that they have – well, a little over a year ago we had a stronger tobacco law, that was watered down. Tobacco, as we all know, is one of the leading causes of cancer. We had a chance right there to really do something about it, but the government held back. We really should have fought harder for that thing. It just doesn't make a lot of sense that today we'll be launching a big offensive against cancer, yet we have ways that we could be stopping it earlier.

We're talking about things like coal-bed methane. We don't know the impact of this. We have water that's potentially tainted – we don't know – yet we're still going full speed ahead with this. So there is more than just a little bit of irony in this sort of thing, Mr. Speaker.

But, as I said, I'll be brief. I would just like to put in a plug, though, for the city of Edmonton. I know they're talking about – what was that called again? – a virtual cancer research centre. If it's going to go anywhere, I'd just like to say that it belongs here in the city of Edmonton at the University of Alberta. Just before other cities start making moves on it, this is where it belongs because the real seat of higher education is right here in the city of Edmonton. [interjections] I can hear some complaining from some Calgarians here. Let's be fair here.

An Hon. Member: What about the rural folks?

Mr. Tougas: Rural people are staying strangely quiet right now.

So I would like to just mention that Edmonton is probably where this sort of thing belongs. I hope the government doesn't worry too much about trying to spread this out between Edmonton and Calgary. The real goal is cancer prevention and a cure for cancer, and we shouldn't worry quite so much about making sure that Calgary gets a bit of it and Edmonton gets a bit of it. If that's going to cost us administrative dollars, I hope this isn't the type of thing that we have to really worry about.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I said that I'd be brief, and I'm a man of my word. Again, I'm supportive of this legislation. It'll be interesting to see, when it finally comes to pass, what it looks like, and we'll be keeping a close eye on it. Again I commend the government for committing this kind of money to it. I hope that some day in the future we'll look back on this day and say that we've done a great thing here.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone on the bill?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a very few comments, and I certainly want to add my appreciation to the opposition members that have supported this bill. As has been said by a number of the speakers, there are very few of us that can say that we haven't been touched by this at some point in our lives, whether it was a family, friend, or acquaintances. Too often it's a very difficult disease to manage, and families and friends are affected as deeply as the person fighting the disease, and sometimes it's harder for them.

I want to add one other commendation, and that's to the Cancer Board members. They're a dedicated group of individuals that have really dedicated their time and their efforts, really, on a volunteer basis to fight this disease. There have been a number of people serve on that board over the years. But it's really their plan, working with the minister of health, and their belief that if we make these types of investments, if we concentrate in the areas that this bill outlines, we actually can reduce the numbers of incidences of cancer. Obviously, that will be wonderful for all of us.

I want to also just mention that I'm not sure that we're all aware of the tremendous research that does occur in this province today in the area of cancer. I'm very proud that we have dedicated cancer research funds over the years to ensure that we could attract those very great researchers, those fine people who work in that area.

I want to mention the dedication and hard work of Dr. Turc. He has been a stalwart with that organization. He's an amazing man. I would venture to say that he could have gone anywhere and has been approached, I am sure and in fact know, many times to leave the province and go somewhere else. But his dedication to the people of this province, to what he believes we can do here – I'm as pleased for him and people like Dr. Tony Fields, again one of the leading people in this area, recognized world-wide, that have chosen to stay in Alberta and fight the fight here. So I think we're very fortunate in this province to have those types of people, and you could add many to that list. That type of dedication and that kind of support and that kind of interest make it tremendously easy for all of us in this Legislature to support this bill and the goals that are set out in it.

I want to thank all members for their support for this. I want to wish the researchers and the physicians and the caregivers that work in this area well in their goals of bringing down the incidence of cancer in a very, very significant way. I think this formalizes what we all believe in and, most of all, shows the dedicated people in the field that we're behind them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the bill.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not go on long on Bill 1. It's a bill that would be hard to oppose, to say the least. Certainly, we in the NDP will support the thrust of the bill, but I do have some questions and some concerns as we go along. I'm glad that the Minister of Finance is here for at least one of the questions that I will be putting out at some point.

I guess that the point about the bill is that $500 million, we hope, over the long run will have some impact. I know that the figures that the Premier quoted were pretty ambitious in terms of cutbacks. Certainly, this is one time when we all hope that the Premier is right, that we can do this with this endowment fund. We don't need to go into all of this. I think everyone in this House has known people that have died of cancer. I would point out that one of my colleagues, that many of you would remember, Gordon Wright, the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona, went through a painful time when he was here in the Legislature, and many of you would remember that. We've all had somebody close to us, I think, taken by this awful, awful disease.

The point that I would want to make, then: if we're going to take this disease on seriously, we have to come back to the smoking bylaw. I would suggest that the government at least knew that they made a mistake when we were going to have special smoking areas here and not for the rest of the public. Within a day they at least solved that problem, but it sent out not a very good message to the people. Of course, we know that smoking is one of the major causes certainly of lung cancer. There are many others, but certainly smoking is one of them. I think that if we're doing a fund like this and doing it for research to try to deal with cancer, perhaps we should come back to the Member for Calgary-West, I believe it is, and look for a province-wide ban.

Maybe we can see that as part of the legacy in the next Legislature. It seems to me that it would be quite appropriate, as we're putting in $500 million here, to begin to look at that. It certainly creates some problems for people, but if we're serious about cancer, I think that's the first step that we should take, and perhaps we can look forward to that in the very near future. Of course, then we can get into a debate – I won't bother here because I think it's been said – about the problems with methane and, coal related, whether there is such a thing as clean coal. Those are all potentially cancerous too, and that's another debate to be held.

A message becomes important. This is the question I have for the Minister of Finance. It's my understanding that the Cancer Board prepares yearly budgets for the administration of monies, but this particular investment would be controlled by the Minister of Finance, if I'm understanding it correctly. I think there's a key point here. I believe that the Cancer Board has what they call ethical investments. Certainly, an obvious one that they would not invest in would be tobacco, for example. Ethical funds are in all sorts of areas: liquor, people with bad environmental records, but certainly tobacco. I would hope, then, that with this particular fund, at least, the minister would follow the guidelines of the Cancer Board in any investments that they might make. I think that that's an important message. If all of a sudden we're setting up a board here and we're allowed to invest in tobacco companies or other companies that actually could cause cancer, Mr. Speaker, it would not be sending a good message for the endowment fund. I'm not sure that she can answer it here, but I would hope that they would take a look at that and that this particular fund at least would follow the guidelines set out by the Cancer Board. I think that's a very important part of it.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that this money is going in to try to deal with this disease. From our perspective in the NDP opposition we'll certainly wholeheartedly support the bill as it stands.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available again.

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on second reading?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

Bill 2 Drug-endangered Children Act

[Adjourned debate March 2: Mr. Tougas]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark still has 13 minutes left.

Mr. Tougas: No. I think I'm done with this matter, Mr. Speaker. I'm fine.

The Deputy Speaker: Then I'd recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that I have the opportunity to put some of my concerns about this bill on the record, and I'll go through these. I have to say that the previous members of my caucus have spoken in favour of this bill, and some people are very supportive. I understand that and I respect it, but I have some cautions around this bill, and I see some similarities to other things that have happened in the past that I want to put on the record because I think that it's important to do that.

Let me distinguish where my concerns lie, especially in light of the last bill that we just passed through second reading, which was the cancer legacy bill. One of the points that I was raising around that is that we have to be much more alive to the environmental triggers or catalysts or causes of cancer than we have been. Aside from making healthier societies overall so that we're just healthier people with better habits and better nutrition and all of those things, we also have to be alive to what's in the environment around us that can also be problematic and likely does contribute to a higher rate of cancer through our lives.

I want to be clear here that when we're talking about meth labs, I don't have a problem with what's being proposed here. I think that it's perfectly appropriate to link an environmental concern for children and their long-term health to the waste that is generated when you have a meth lab. I'm sorry; there's nothing that I can say that's positive about a meth lab.

I'm noting that for every kilogram of methamphetamine product that's produced, there are 5 to 7 kilograms of waste produced, and that just lies around. It is toxic. There is no legal or legitimate means of getting rid of it, and someone that is running a meth lab is making no attempt to do that. It's not as though they're hauling it out to a compost in the back and containing it in one place. So I have great concerns about children that are in the area of this kind of waste, and I view it as toxic waste. Meth labs are also producing particularly inflammable gas, which of course presents a huge fire and burn danger to children. Also things like air contamination, chemical burns, and chemicals being absorbed into teddy bears and clothing and crib bedding and all kinds of things – that's just a really bad idea.

When I first looked at this bill, I really struggled with it, and I'm still struggling with it. I honestly don't know whether or not I'm going to support this as it moves through. Here's where my concerns lie. This is another state intervention into the home, and I note with interest that this government is particularly reluctant to have intervention into a number of other areas – they shy away from it; it's part of their philosophy – and those are things like environmental protection or laws about restricting business, for example. There are certain areas where this government just will not go, yet I've noticed over the years that there's a willingness, almost an eagerness for the state, in this case the provincial government, to intervene into people's homes. This causes me great concern. We need to be very, very cautious when we start to do this, particularly when we start to take families apart.

Now, I know that there are good social workers out there that work very hard on behalf of the government, and there are agencies that contract with the government to do much of the same work, and they have the children's best interests at heart. I know that they are trying to make sure that they are protecting children, but we've also come to an understanding that in removing kids from the home, you really need to try and work in the best interest of that kid and try and keep that family intact. My concern here is that I don't see a real commitment to try to remove a kid from a dangerous situation but leave them with some kind of family.

Here's the scenario that I'm not comfortable with. Intervention into a home: a kid is yanked out of their room. However terrible that room might be, it's still their space. It's still their bed. It's still their blankie. They're removed from that, from their toys, from the dish they use, from their sippy cup, from everything that is familiar to them, and they are placed not with another family member but with a completely unknown family. I really struggle with that. I don't know how that's really to the benefit of the child.

Remember, I'm not talking about removing them from a dangerous, toxic situation like a meth lab. But the other situations that are anticipated in this bill are things like grow ops, and I'm not seeing a really clear definition of that. So this could be a situation where there are a certain number of marijuana plants in the basement, for example, which people could argue and probably do that it's being grown for their own consumption. There's a more lenient societal attitude towards that right now.

It's also covering trafficking. Trafficking is a difficult one to deal with and has been a bit of a moving target over the years as well because how much product you have in your home for your own personal use, especially if you're speaking about various marijuana-derived products, has moved quite a bit over the years. There's quite a bit of open talk now about decriminalizing it entirely.

You may well have a family that in all other respects contributes to their community, participate on the parent advisory council at school, coach the soccer team, are involved in their community. They may well attend a faith community on a regular basis and be involved with a certain kind of marijuana product, and their kids could be yanked out of their homes. I'm struggling with how that is going to be of benefit to that kid. I see the intention of this bill, but I question the government's eagerness to intervene into the family with such an aggressive tactic. What we're getting from this is more administration. We're getting more legal rigamarole, for want of a better word, a whole other legal process that we get involved with here that the courts now have to deal with and possibly process, plus the Children's Services administration and placement and the foster family administration. We add in a whole other layer here.

I'm thinking: well, where have I seen this before? You know where it was? It was the PCHIP bill, or what's commonly called the PCHIP bill. At the time I argued that we didn't need that bill, that we had the legal resources through the Police Act and through the then acts that covered child welfare to do what that act did. I still maintain that that act was window dressing. We could do everything we needed to do with the existing law, so why did we need another law that, again, was fairly interventionist into someone's life? I saw that bill go through with no resources attached to it, and in fact there was a real struggle for the first couple of years because girls were picked up and there really wasn't anyplace to go that was actually immediately accessible and ready for them.

I'm seeing this same sort of thing being anticipated here. There's definitely a concern about exposing children to illegal activity, particularly where it's involving toxic substances and illegal substances. Let's face it; this is illegal, right? But I don't see why we can't work with the existing laws that we have in place and the existing processes that we have in place. This to me has that same veneer of window dressing, of grandstanding, if anything.

If the point of this bill, as someone said when they introduced it, was to make sure that the definition of abuse of children included having them in an environment like that, where it's toxic and illegal, then why don't we add that definition into the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, which is where all the other definitions of abuse of children are? We've already got an act that does that. Why are we establishing a whole other act to do something when you already have one that does that? So I still question: why? What are we gaining that's of benefit with this additional act? It's interventionist in a very aggressive way. We could do this by adding to the definition of abuse in the existing legislation.

This bill doesn't come with resources. Now, we've got a budget coming on March 22, but I haven't heard any indication in the discussion so far. This did not come forward as a money bill. There are no resources attached to this. Once again we could have basically a whole administrative level that is now added onto the burden of everything else that these various groups I've described are trying to carry with no resources added to it. What's that about? What's the point of that, Mr. Speaker, when we have the laws already there?

You see why I'm starting to think that this is a little bit of grandstanding, a little bit too much, a little bit extra so that the government's name is on it and they appear to be doing something. But they have all the other vehicles available to them to do that already. My point is: just do it. If this is really important, then just do it and put the resources behind it so that they're there. Put the resources so that we don't have child welfare workers that are working with caseloads of 400 children, you know, where they've got enough time to be detecting this and working with it specifically.

One of the statistics that was used when the bill was introduced was that about 30 per cent of meth labs have kids living in the vicinity, in that environment. My question is: what does that translate into? How many Alberta children are in that situation? The government must have the numbers. I'd be interested in knowing how many Alberta children were in that. That 30 per cent: is that 30 per cent of all the meth labs in Canada, of all the meth labs that are known about in North America, or of all the meth labs in Alberta? How many is that? How many children are we talking about here? Are we creating a law to intervene in the lives of 30 children, 300 children, 3,000 children? What's the magnitude of this problem? Again, this relates back to: are we putting extra legislation in here when we could use means that are already at our disposal?

My other concern is that there's nothing in this bill that does anything to stop the root causes. Yes, children will be removed from their homes. Yes, families will be reprimanded or subjected to the full course of the law that's anticipated in the bill. Does it do anything to stop it from happening tomorrow other than the threat of punishment, other than that stick of corrections, that big stick that the government can wield? I don't see that. We're here tomorrow; now we can hit people with a stick. But there's nothing to stop people. There's no disincentive or incentive for them to not be in the same situation.

It's a way of reacting after the fact that I see this government continually doing. I have to say again and again and again: you know, if you don't deal with the social determinants of health, you are going to be standing here five years, 10 years, and 20 years from now with exactly the same problems only more of them. All you did was have a big stick to hit the people that you caught. It doesn't do anything to help all the rest of the families that you never catch up with or you don't locate or who don't come up through the system somehow. It does nothing to address all of those people.

Those are the concerns that I have over this bill. It does look like window dressing to me. I think it's a good intention, but if that's what we wanted to do, then let's open up the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, the existing legislation, and add that definition of abuse in there and go through the existing act. I don't see why we are creating a whole other act to do this. Again, it's like a trophy. You know, you can show it around to people and say: "Look, aren't we doing something important here? Aren't we really concerned?" But I go: did we do anything to really give people an incentive or an opportunity to move out of a criminal lifestyle? Is there assistance for employment? Have we done something? If we're going to talk about the kids, then have we done something specific for the kids? Have we looked at hot lunch programs wherever they're needed in the province? No. So it does nothing to really help those kids but a big stick.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to reiterate much of what the Member for Edmonton-Centre has said. I've talked to some child welfare lawyers, and a number of them have said that we can already do this. We can already do this. These are the people dealing with the situation. Social workers have told me that we can already do this. You know, the House leader often says that we don't need to just be passing laws for the sake of passing laws, that there has to be a purpose, because we could be overly governed. I would hope that at some point the minister will tell us why she really feels that this need is there. Certainly, many in her department that I've talked to do not believe that. They believe that it was there before.

I mean, I'm like the Member for Edmonton-Centre: I'm not sure whether I should support it or not. The goal is good, the goal of getting children out of abusive situations if there are grow ops and all sorts of bad things happening. But that's the point: they already can do that.

I do worry about it being a little intrusive too – and I think the Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about it – in the sense that an indoor cannabis grow operation is not adequately defined. There may be some members in this House that at some point could have been in trouble, you know, if this bill had been there. I'm not mentioning any names, of course, but they're probably all sitting over on the other side. The point I'm making is that when you get laws like this, that are undefined, it could lead to the possibility of abuse.

Now, again, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre says – and she's absolutely correct – nobody wants kids around abusive situations. The abuse that this bill is trying to prevent is often there. If you're in a grow op and there are druggies around and/or crystal meth and the rest of it, of course that's a serious situation, and we should get those children out of there immediately. The point that I'm trying to make, though, is that I'm told that we can do that already, that it happens all the time. The House leader often says: well, we don't just pass laws for the sake of having laws. I'm wondering, then, why we're doing this.

Of course, there's also the fact – and I'm reiterating the good speech from the Member for Edmonton-Centre – that we've got to deal with the root causes of some of these situations too. This is not going to solve all the problems of those kids overnight.

I worry about two things: one, I don't believe that there's an adequate definition of what this means; and secondly, if we already have a law where they're doing this – and they're doing it every day, that I'm aware of, in these situations – are we passing a law because now it's exciting to say that we're dealing with crystal meth and we're dealing with grow ops and the rest of it? Is this because it looks good in terms of what we're attempting to do here in the Legislature? I think we should ask this question because the Conservative government House leader says that we don't pass laws for the sake of passing laws. I'm wondering if we are in fact doing this.

Again: how do you oppose a bill where kids are in danger? That's the dilemma that you have with these bills even though this bill may not add anything at all to what's already happening, Mr. Speaker. So I hope the minister at some point will give us a better rationale as to why she thinks this bill is necessary.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, Hon. Minister of Children's Services, do you wish to close debate?

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll be pleased to address the concerns of some of the opposition questions in Committee of the Whole.

I'd like to move second reading of the Drug-endangered Children Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Bill 6

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. Stevens]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General still has 12 minutes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm delighted to have the opportunity to talk about one of my – I can't say that it's my favourite area, but it's certainly an area that I've developed a lot of expertise in over the years. It's the maintenance enforcement program. For all the criticism that I've directed towards the government over the nine years that I've been here, I have to say that there has been continued movement forward in improving this program. To me, that's a very good sign.

This is an area that is of absolute, integral importance to children in this province. For whatever reason, we have a lot of families that don't stay together. I don't know why, and I don't want to get into that. What my concern is directed towards is that we have a deal that if you are the parent of a child and you are not living in that family unit, there is a responsibility to contribute towards the child. It's not about the other parent. It's not about the parents. This is about the children. This is about making sure that the money that's necessary for those kids gets to them. We've got a pretty good program, and we continue to improve it, as I said. I think this is another step forward.

You know, it's one of those situations where every time you think you've figured out how to plug all the loopholes that people manage to find, then there are a few more that pop open, and you've got to figure out a way to plug those as well. People that don't want to pay for the maintenance of their children are pretty creative and pretty stubborn and pretty chronic in not following the law. It's important that we keep the program alive, kind of a living program that continues to adjust as it needs to.

There are a couple of things that are being anticipated here. I think the main one that the minister spoke of was what are called LIRA, which is the locked-in retirement account. There are probably a lot of them because for the most part they're accounts where if you had a government pension and you left, you were able to take that pension part with you, but it goes into this locked-in account, and you can't withdraw from it until you reach, I think, over 50 years of age. You can't draw from it at all. It's locked in there. What we had was, you know, a need for that money to be accessed on behalf of some children, and the way the law was written, we couldn't get at it until the individual, the parent, the debtor in this case, turned 50. Our own laws were working against our ability to access money for children, so part of this act is to address that particular issue.

I saw a statistic the other day that I thought: oh, that's a flow-through from some good legislation that was put in place. You know what it was? It was the number of older women who were in dire poverty, and I think it might have been specific to divorce, from years ago, decades ago, compared to now. I said: "Okay. What that's about is the change that was achieved where spouses were able to access pensions as part of divorce proceedings and share pensions, you know, for the time that was accrued when the couple was together." The other spouse would be able to access that. I thought: "There it is. There is what we were trying to achieve with that." We have fewer women that are now seniors that are in absolute, bone-numbing poverty. I thought: "That's why you do this stuff. That's why you try and set that in motion." So I'm hoping that this is the same kind of thing.

A couple of other small things are being addressed: the money that is achieved through flexibility in dealing with debtors who are evading the maintenance enforcement program. As I said: boy, they can be creative. I will never understand that. I will never understand why a parent would go to such lengths to avoid paying maintenance for their child. I just won't get it. I mean, people quit their jobs. They move away. They hide their assets under friends' names. It's appalling behaviour, and I just can't understand why you would do that to your own offspring, but people do it a lot, and they're creative about it.

So there are a couple of very positive movements that have been made here. Better flexibility. That's around setting times for financial examinations to a later date so that the debtors don't have to worry about reprisals because of scheduling conflicts. You know, once you get somebody that is actually willing to work along with this, even if they have deliberately withheld payments in the past, if you've actually got them to the point where they're willing to recognize their debt and try and resolve the problem, you don't want to place additional barriers in their way. You've got to kind of coax them along once you've got them on your side. This is making that a bit more possible. It's to make the process less confrontational for the debtors and for the debtors to avoid possible jail time because they've missed a default hearing process.

There's also a section that's dealing with creditors getting all the current money owing to them before maintenance enforcement applies the funds to outstanding penalties and fines owed to maintenance enforcement because of delinquent payments. Now for a long time we actually didn't. There were no interest and fines charged. Those are more recent developments, but I'm glad to see that it's now being organized so that the creditor who needs the money, the custodial parent, is going to get their chunk of money for the kids before MEP takes their fine and penalty money. I think that's perfectly appropriate because, again, the point of this is to direct that money towards the children.

Some people, lots of people, actually most people can manage to go into a family break-apart situation and with a bit of help figure it out for themselves for the most part. It doesn't have to be that acrimonious. You don't have to get that confrontational about it. Lots of folks do get an arrangement between themselves about how it's all going to work, and how much money it is. If the families are satisfied with that, and it's supporting the children, good on them. But there has been a need to be able to have that kind of registered somewhere.

What we had before was that if it was your own arrangement, then it was outside of the MEP program, and we won't get involved with it. Lots of times there are a few little bumps along the way, but it's outside the program, so nobody can help. Ultimately, what we were trying to do here was actually help the kids. So what's being proposed here is that it's going to bring these maintenance agreements, these sort of ad hoc ones developed by the families, into line with provisions in the Family Law Act, and it encourages the families to use these agreements as an alternative before going to court. It's providing MEP staff to take care of things like assisting in the filing of the agreements in the Court of Queen's Bench and servicing notice of the filings. They don't need to have representation to make their own agreements enforceable, and they can be assisted by the MEP staff in all the processes of filing. I'm thinking that this is going to allow for more settlements to be done outside of the court system. Again, a good thing.

The more we can get people to figure out how to manage their own lives and resolve conflict without getting confrontational, the better. We live in a society where confrontation is not polite, and we don't like to do it, but when we're in a conflict with someone, we want to turn it all over to the courts and have a judge make the decision for us. Hopefully, we believe we're right and they're wrong, and the judge is going to make them pay. That just clogs up our courts. It also absolves us from the responsibility of trying to work stuff out ourselves. So we have increasing numbers of mediators trained now and available through non-profits: Catholic Social Services. Some of them are available through the justice system in certain instances. There's a mediation and arbitration society that you can get in touch with. It's a very reasonably priced way of working your way through this, and I strongly encourage people to do that.

The last thing that's being dealt with in the act is financial examinations. Oh, I think I talked about that. It's allowing the director of MEP to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for an order of alternate arrangements for the examination of a debtor. That was the one where they don't have to worry that they're going to have the full weight of the court come down on them if they miss their default hearing. I've already talked about that one.

I congratulate the program and all the staff that work in it and the minister for continuing to improve this program and move it along. It's darn hard to do because, really, it's a collection agency. Maintenance enforcement is a very specialized collection agency, which is not what you would usually expect to find inside government. So you're looking for highly specialized people that can do this job, get the money, extract the money, and at the same time they are representatives of the government, and they need to work with people in a way that is sensitive and respectful. Anybody that has ever dealt with a collection agency knows that usually collection agents are not respectful. So it's a tough line to walk. We all get complaints about maintenance enforcement from people that think that they should have gotten more or that it should have been done in a different way.

For a while I think we got into a place where once we found a noncustodial parent who owed money, it was like: "Yay, we got a live one. Let's turn him upside down and shake him until all the change falls out of their pocket." I mean, we just whaled on the live ones that we actually got in our clutches, and that caused some very bad feelings out there. I think that there have been adjustments made, and the program is trying very hard to be respectful to both sides of this. We just all need to be grown-ups about this and move on and deal with what's being proposed.

Back from my very earliest days in this Chamber when I challenged the then Justice minister and Attorney General to do something to move the maintenance enforcement program of the day on to a new level, he took that challenge and established a maintenance enforcement review, which was chaired by the then Member for Calgary-Lougheed. There was an amending act that came in, and I think we've amended that twice more since then, so my congratulations.

The other thing that the program has done is learn to keep the numbers better because the numbers quite disguised what was actually happening and how successful we were at collecting files that were outstanding. At one point it basically just recorded any activity in accounts. You could have paid a buck, and it would have showed you as active, but the fact that you owed $80,000 wasn't showing up. That's $80,000 that belonged to a child, that should have been there to send a child to camp or to pay for their hockey school or their school fees or a bathing suit or food. That's what we have to remember about this program.

I'm proud of my involvement with this program. I intend on remaining vigilant that we continue to move it forward. I'm pleased to see the changes that have been instituted with this amending act, and I'm very willing to support it. I'm not the critic of the act; I just jumped in here because I have such a long and passionate involvement with the program.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak in second reading. I urge everyone to support this bill and pass it on. Thank you.

At this point, I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 6.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn the House until 1:30 next Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:14 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Monday, March 13, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as Members of the Legislative Assembly. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, today we'll be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and I would invite all hon. members and all participants in the galleries to join in in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai le privilège de présenter en votre nom à vous et à l'Assemblée des invités spéciaux venus de la communauté francophone. Ils sont assis dans votre galerie et étaient ici ce matin lors de la cérémonie en reconnaissance des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, une célébration annuelle de l'histoire et de la culture françaises et la Journée internationale de la Francophonie, qui aura lieu le 20 mars.

Je suis heureux de vous présenter en premier lieu les membres de l'exécutif de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta. L'association, connue sous l'acronyme ACFA, a son secrétariat provincial à Edmonton, chapeaute plusieurs autres organisations, don't douze bureaux régionaux à travers la province. L'année 2006 est une année marquante pour l'ACFA alors qu'elle célèbre son 80e anniversaire.

Parmi nous aujourd'hui sont M. Jean Johnson, président, M. Jean-Louis Dentinger, conseiller, et les accompagnants pour cette journée spéciale à la Législature sont les membres de mon équipe au Secrétariat francophone, M. Denis Tardif, directeur général, et Mlle Cindie LeBlanc, directrice adjointe. J'aimerais qu'ils se lèvent et soient reconnus. Je vous invite à vous joindre à moi pour leur souhaiter une bienvenue chaleureuse.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to the Assembly a number of guests from the francophone community. They are seated in your gallery and are special guests who attended the morning celebrations in the rotunda to mark the beginning of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a two-week celebration of French culture and history, and International Francophonie Day, coming up on the 20th of March.

I am pleased to first introduce executive members of the French Canadian Association of Alberta. The association, commonly known as the ACFA, is the provincial umbrella organization representing all francophones, with a provincial secretariat in Edmonton and 12 regional chapters across the province. The year 2006 represents an important milestone for the association as it celebrates its 80th anniversary.

Present today are its president, Mr. Jean Johnson, and councillor Mr. Jean-Louis Dentinger. I would ask them to stand up and be recognized by the Assembly.

Joining them on this special day at the Legislature are members of my staff at the Francophone Secretariat, Mr. Denis Tardif, executive director, and Ms Cindie LeBlanc, assistant director. I would like them to stand and be recognized.

I would invite the members of the Assembly to join me in extending them a warm welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, today is Commonwealth Day. We celebrate the ties that bind us with over one-quarter of the world's population that live in Commonwealth countries. In the Speaker's gallery are three of the founding members of the Royal Commonwealth Society's Edmonton branch, which was founded in 2004. I'm happy to report as well that the Edmonton branch has undertaken to cosponsor and assist in the promotion of our annual Alberta Commonwealth Parliamentary Association student essay competition. An information sheet on the good work that the Royal Commonwealth Society does is on each member's desk. I now invite Colin Reichle, the branch's chair; Dr. Dugan, vice-chair; and Charles Hunt, the treasurer, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Hon. members, my vignette of the day will be about the two chairs on the dais. In the Speaker's gallery are craftsmen who built the chair on the right. They're Chad Hoflin, a former Infrastructure and Transportation employee; Dennis McDonald, a former Infrastructure and Transportation employee; Patricia Souliere, an apprentice carpenter with the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation; and Amie Scott, an apprentice painter with the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation. Robert van Essen, a former Infrastructure and Transportation employee who also worked on the project that I will describe later, could not be with us today. I'd invite all hon. members to extend to them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in the members' gallery are two of Alberta's outstanding postsecondary leaders. Sharon Carry, president and CEO of Bow Valley College in Calgary, is a true visionary and a passionate advocate for the role of learning in securing the future of our province. Sharon has been president of Bow Valley College since 1997 and has successfully led the transformation of the college into one of Alberta's leading postsecondary institutions. Value for money, there is no better source of education.

Séamus O'Shea, vice-president academic at the University of Lethbridge, is also in the gallery. Séamus has been with the University of Lethbridge since 1977 and is a professor in the department of chemistry and biochemistry. He has served as vice-president academic since 1991 and has been active in the implementation of information technology for academic and administrative purposes. You may recall that Séamus O'Shea is also the chair of Alberta's iCORE, informatics circle of research excellence.

Mr. Speaker, I met with both Sharon and Séamus today to discuss the creation of a common student application system. These are the two leaders of the process, and it's exciting to see where the initiative is going. It's very complex. It will take a little while to get up and running, but the talent and enthusiasm and leadership behind that project could be in no better hands. I'd ask the two to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 24 grade 6 students from Boyle school, and they are accompanied by their parents and teachers. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm fortunate to have a guest here today. This young fellow is a student at the University of Alberta studying political science, and then he hopes to go on to a law degree. Kurtis Streeper worked in my constituency office last summer, and I'm hoping to welcome him back to the same position again this year, where he can do his excellent job of serving the constituents of Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I'd ask Kurtis Streeper to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 31 students and teachers from Meadowlark elementary school, led by their teacher Lu Zhang. The parents are Jessica Tang, Liz Leung, Angela Kwan, and Sylvia Lo. Would they please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 76 grade 6 students from Albert Lacombe school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Joe Esposito, Mrs. Elaine Whittaker, Mrs. Paddi Brown, and Mrs. Donna Ernst, who is a teacher assistant, and parents Mrs. Laura Kabat and Mr. Nick Tassone. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 42 students from Prince Charles elementary school. Along with them are two teachers, Ms Alicia Cardinal and Mrs. Clementine Spence; two student teachers, Ms Sylvia Hui and Mr. Nick Larkin; two teachers' assistants, Ms Sinclair and Mrs. Gelasco; and a parent, Mrs. Laurie Callihoo. They'll actually be here at 2:00 this afternoon, but can we give them a round of applause anyway.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and to the House Zoe Todd. Zoe is a graduate of the University of Alberta and plans on pursuing a degree in medical anthropology as an extra. Zoe is currently a volunteer with the Seminar on the United Nations and International Affairs. Zoe has been a wonderful addition to my constituency office staff and is assisting us with community outreach. I trust that she is sitting in the public gallery. I will now ask her to please rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and the members of the Assembly two active women in the Edmonton community. Docia Lysne is an active NDP volunteer over a number of years and also serves on the board of directors for Planned Parenthood. She serves as a mentor for the Edmonton institute for women. Marion DeShield is a former leader of the national black women's coalition and is a senior citizen volunteer with the seniors' centre here in Edmonton. My guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Calgary Funding Needs

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mayor of Calgary has been trying since before Christmas to get in to see the Finance minister to discuss her upcoming Alberta budget. Now, I don't know how the minister expects to learn Calgary's needs otherwise since there are few people alive who can remember the last time the Calgary Conservative caucus went to bat for their hometown. To the minister: why is she refusing to consult with the mayor of Calgary until two days after she brings down the budget?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have not refused to meet with the mayor of Calgary at all, and I am disappointed that this hon. member chooses to continue this discussion, which is really without a great deal of foundation. Let me just set the record straight. I received a letter from the mayor of Calgary on December 15 wanting to talk about some municipal taxation issues. I responded to the mayor immediately and asked because of the budget meetings we were encountering then, remember, the 15th of December, if he would meet with 23 MLAs from Calgary, or thereabouts, and share their concerns – they could meet in a group – and, most appropriately, could he meet with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I did not receive a response to that letter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary to the Premier: could the Premier at least meet with the mayor between now and budget day if the Minister of Finance continues to refuse to do so?

Mr. Klein: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker and this hon. member, that I have met with the mayor of Calgary on numerous occasions, and depending on what he wants to speak to me about, I'd be very happy to meet with him, but I can't go into details of the budget with the mayor or with members of the opposition or members of the media or anyone else for that matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier can listen to the other party.

Given the refusal of the Finance minister to meet with the mayor and the failure of the Education minister to meet with the Calgary school board chair in advance of the budget about the budget, why is the Premier allowing his ministers to take the citizens of Calgary for granted?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Provincial Treasurer respond in detail, but both the Calgary mayor and the chair of the Calgary school board are criticizing the province for what they claim is a lack of funding to the city. Both claim the government is ignoring the needs of Alberta's largest city, a unicity. I would like to remind both individuals and the hon. member that over the past year this government has invested more than $4.14 billion – billion – for roads, schools, hospitals, and many other priorities in the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Corporate Donation to Olds College

Mr. Taylor: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The moral of the story of the Pied Piper is that he who pays the piper calls the tune. EnCana Corporation has given Olds College over a million dollars to fund, among other things, an expanded land sciences program with a curriculum developed by the oil industry. To the Minister of Advanced Education: sure, we want our sons and daughters to be employable when they graduate, but what steps is he taking to protect the academic autonomy of Olds College here?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that that's a very nasty slur on a very fine institution. Olds College has served Alberta and Albertans, particularly in the agriculture and home economics area and now in land sciences and horticulture, for many, many years and does a fine job of doing that. It provides an excellent educational opportunity for students.

The hon. member knows, or at least should know, that every new program that comes forward has to go through the quality Alberta council, which ensures that it's of the highest quality standards and that it's an appropriate program for students. Any new program offered by Olds College will go through that process. The hon. member knows that, and he should actually withdraw that kind of a slur against one of Alberta's fine public education institutions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: given the comments last Tuesday in Camrose by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat regarding the Land Agents Licensing Act that, quote, industry is in control of the act, is the minister at all concerned that this new arrangement inappropriately places this program at the beck and call of the industry?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on what another member might have said when I wasn't there, but I can assure the House of this: Olds College offers land management programs and is expanding those programs. They're of excellent quality, and it's very important that they do so. As this government embarks on a land-use strategy to mirror the air-quality strategy that we have, the clean-air strategy, and the Water for Life strategy, a land-use strategy that is being developed by this province as part of our 20-year strategic plan, having knowledgeable people and knowledgeable programs in that area is of very, very high importance. Olds College is actually leading the way in that area with quality programs which are not industry controlled but are controlled through the college itself through a community-governed organization, a board-governed organization with independence and the requirement that all programs be approved through the quality Alberta council. It couldn't be a higher standard than that.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, will the minister commit to urging the college to consult with landowners, with the Alberta Surface Rights Federation, the Alberta grazing lease association, and other such organizations on this new curriculum, or does that only come with million dollar donations?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, good corporate citizenship and good individual citizenship are the backbone of this province. Individuals and members of the community and corporate citizens in this province should be encouraged to contribute to advancing the education in this province. They should not be slurred. They should not be run down. They should not be denigrated for being good corporate citizens. Donating money does not give control, not in this province for public education, not in this province for political purposes. Giving money is good corporate citizenship. It helps enhance the learning opportunities for students. The quality of the program is strictly in the hands of the institution itself, its board governance, and subject to the quality Alberta control council. This member knows that and should understand that and should not be besmirching the reputation of a fine public institution and good corporate citizens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Reform

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An article by the Minister of Health and Wellness appeared in a Calgary newspaper over the weekend in a weak attempt to explain the third way. This article did not provide any of the details that Albertans have been demanding. It was vague, uninformative, and now there are only 17 days left in the consultation. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the Alberta Medical Association, which represents 97 per cent of Alberta's physicians, wants more details about the proposed reforms, will the minister clearly define which hospitals and medical services would be privately insured?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, first of all, just on the subject of private insurance, that is not the subject of the consultation on the health policy framework. I met last week with the membership, the executive of the Alberta Medical Association. They did raise a number of issues. They indicated to me that they would be raising these points at their meeting this weekend. My understanding is that this weekend they dealt with care guarantees and a request for having more detailed information. They were positive about many of the points in the health policy framework. Relative to certain particular points relative to workforce and the role of doctors in any other altered system, they asked for more detail, and in due course we will provide that.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: given that the AMA is only now being consulted, can the minister explain why Alberta's doctors weren't involved in the drafting of such significant policy changes?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the College of Physicians and Surgeons and members of the Alberta Medical Association have talked and had an ongoing dialogue with Health and Wellness as we normally would. I know that's happened with my predecessors; it's happened with myself. Relative to many of the proposals that are in that particular policy framework, we have talked to them. There has been dialogue about the specifics that they're asking for now. There's obviously more dialogue to occur. But prior to even tabling the health policy framework, in general terms we had a discussion with members of the Alberta Medical Association, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and several other providers. We provided some early indication of the types of things we were looking at.

Ms Blakeman: Well, they're still looking for detail.

Again to the same minister: given that Alberta's doctors weren't consulted on this, evidence from the Health Symposium was ignored, and Albertans have had very little opportunity for input, can the minister explain who is driving these health reforms?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think if you're a person on the waiting list for a hip, if you're a person on the waiting list for knees, if you are persons waiting for cataract surgery, if you are people that have waited a long time for surgery, you're asking us to make some changes and look at options.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker: I would say that Canadians are recognizing that we have to change. We may not all agree on what the changes are, but it's very clear that in order to provide timely care and the proper access for individuals as well as something that continues to make it possible not only in the foreseeable future but years beyond to sustain the health care service delivery system, it's up to all of us to look. Universally across this nation, I believe, at least across Canada we are looking at other ways of doing things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Rural health care has been on life support in Alberta for years now. Now the government plans to pull the plug completely. Dr. Brent Piepgrass, the vice-president of medical services with the Peace Country health region, describes the impact of the third way as frightening. To the Premier: why is the government threatening rural Alberta health care by pursuing policies that Dr. Piepgrass says will only lead to a further drain of doctors from rural areas to large cities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I haven't spoken to the doctor in question. This is the opinion of one individual. I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness will speak to him if he wants to speak to her and provide his opinions and, hopefully, his options and his suggestions to make the system better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: why is this government failing small towns like Manning in Alberta by proposing for-profit medicine that will make it almost impossible for those towns to retain their local doctors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond in detail, but the challenge of attracting doctors to rural areas is a constant problem notwithstanding the fact that we have a rural MD strategy. This isn't an issue just here in Alberta. It's an issue in ND Saskatchewan and ND Manitoba as well because doctors across North America are moving to urban centres. Despite that, Alberta's rural physician action plan has helped, I think very significantly, maintain the ratio of doctors to patients in rural Alberta over the last five years. In fact, I'm told that since 2004 the number of doctors in rural Alberta has actually increased by about 3 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why is his government refusing to have open, public, and transparent hearings if not just to hide the disastrous consequences of its third-way privatization scheme on rural health care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, not only can the minister speak about the challenge of attracting doctors to rural areas; she can speak in detail about the public consultation process. I'll have her respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are working extensively and exhaustively, the colleagues and myself, on speaking with people in rural Alberta and in urban Alberta. I've had consultations this morning. I had consultations Saturday. We will be providing the list of people that we've consulted with. We're getting a lot of letters and e-mails, and we're responding to those. People have had meetings, and frequently they request a private audience. They want to talk in private about health care, but we are very willing to meet in open settings with them as well. I'd have to say that the response to those meetings has been very positive. We've had, obviously, several here in Edmonton, and in the latter part of the month we'll be in Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. We'll be in Hinton this Saturday and in Calgary on Saturday as well to divide our time between two places, to hit the very specific concerns from very specific communities.

Mr. Speaker, we're very willing and open to listening. I want to just say thank you to the MLAs who've undertaken private and public discussions with their residents about health care. They are also adding to the information that we're bringing forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Gangs and Organized Crime

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week my constituents were confronted with the latest carnage that has resulted from a gang war in Calgary. This latest homicide and retaliation unfortunately both occurred in my constituency and seemed to be directly related to two gang-related homicides last summer. My question is to the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Could the minister inform the House and my constituents as to the actions that our government and his department are taking to combat organized crime in Calgary and across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These incidents once again highlight the nature of the violence among gangs and organized crime within our province and, coming with this, obviously, the tragedy that follows these incidents for the families whose sons are deceased. The police are doing their job in looking at the investigations and the resources that they have. These are highly intensive investigations that take more resources than most other investigations due to the seriousness, due to the danger that surrounds them. But intelligence-led investigations – for example, the situation in Calgary – are really based on the intelligence information they get from the policing community as well as from the public. Chief Jack Beaton and myself on Friday appealed to the public for members to provide that information to the police service, to phone Crime Stoppers if they have any information regarding gang activity in their communities or in their neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, our department utilizes Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta; IROC, the integrated response to organized crime; as well as the new ICE team that was deployed this year, the integrated child exploitation unit; regarding organized crime throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could the minister inform the House as to what the performance measures are that his ministry is using to ensure that the money targeted against organized crime through IROC is being effectively spent?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, IROC has a mandate to use a variety of enforcement strategies and partnerships to dismantle and disrupt organized crime throughout the province through their police services, being the RCMP in Edmonton and Calgary. As well, we provide funding for officers in Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, as well as Camrose. I can't release specific performance results regarding their investigations, obviously, due to the fact that they have ongoing investigations at this very time. I can assure the hon. member that the outcome of IROC investigations is made public through the media releases upon the effective arrests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could the minister inform the House as to what successes IROC has had in ensuring that law-abiding Albertans are being kept safe from these violent crimes?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, these are very highly intensive, resourced investigative bodies, or IROC is. Obviously, it takes a large number of officers to work on these investigations due to the seriousness, whether it's surveillance, whether it's intelligence probes, or whether it's the investigative capabilities themselves, of each of these investigations.

I'll give you three very quick examples, Mr. Speaker, that occurred this past year, just within the last seven months. Project Intrigue was an IROC investigation with the RCMP and the integrated proceeds of crime where they, in fact, seized $4.25 million worth of ecstasy, drugs, body armour, and semi-automatic weapons. Project Ikon was another example. In September four men and one woman were arrested with $450,000 worth of drugs and weapons. Project Infiltrate: in December of this past year, a $30 million mortgage fraud in and around the Edmonton area, including Camrose; 118 properties; six properties in Camrose as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Treasury Board Meeting Attendance Records

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's shameful that this government refuses to be accountable, hiding behind some of the worst FOIP legislation in the country. Alberta's Privacy Commissioner recently said that the government needs to adopt a culture of openness. Last week one example of this culture of secrecy was when the Official Opposition was asked to pay $174,000 for documents related to the income support and AISH class-action lawsuit, and don't tell me this is for photocopying costs. To the Minister of Government Services: if the minister believes in the importance of open, accountable government, why does he support changes to the FOIP policy which will increase government secrecy and limit access to information?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has for a number of years had a very open and accountable system. The member refers to some charges. Well, let the facts be known that, in fact, since this legislation was passed, it has cost the Alberta government some $56 million. How much have we collected in fees? Five hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. Elsalhy: This question is to the Deputy Premier. Given the outrageous cost of FOIP requests, will the minister save taxpayers' money by tabling attendance records for the Treasury Board meetings at which the lawsuit and the settlement were discussed? Nothing confidential, just the attendance records.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't normally know who is asking for the FOIP information, but the hon. member has admitted it. The opposition has requested, obviously, information regarding the collection of overpayment and compensation for underpayments to individuals on AISH. Right?

Now, Mr. Speaker, our officials, good-thinking public service employees with no crosses to bear, no political allegiances, estimate that it will cost $326,000 to comply with the opposition's request. So the request that was received by the FOIP commissioner was very broad and would require a significant $326,000 worth of staff time and office resources to search for the records, prepare, and copy them all for the Liberal opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier then. Okay. Don't give us the entire FOIP request. Just tell us who was at those meetings.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm told that a total of 200,000 pages would have to be prepared, so we feel that the estimate relative to the fee being charged is fair given the immense scope of this project. I'll have the hon. Provincial Treasurer respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, just briefly. No, I will not give the attendance records of a Treasury Board meeting. I am the chairman of Treasury Board, and it's well documented. There is also a list of people who belong to Treasury Board, and those are the people that are present at Treasury Board meetings.

Common Student Application Process

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, with the high standards required for access to postsecondary institutions in Alberta, students often have to apply a number of times to several institutions in order to gain admission. This leads to inefficiencies and wastes of time and money both for the students and the institutions. It's been almost a year since the common application process was proposed in the Access to the Future Act. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Why is it taking so long for a common application process to be instituted in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is complicated, but it's important. It's important work that is being done. As the hon. member indicated, the Access to the Future Act did provide for the development of a common application system, but we have in this province publicly governed, board-governed institutions. They're independent institutions, so it takes a great deal of work and collaboration to bring them together to work on a system of this nature.

Now, we're very fortunate, of course, in having good leadership in that system, and I introduced earlier today Sharon Carry of Bow Valley College and Séamus O'Shea of the University of Lethbridge. I was able to meet with them about the work that they're doing. They've brought together a committee of all the universities and public colleges in this province. The representatives of those colleges meet on a weekly basis. As I understand it, they have an independent consultant working with them looking at what the potential barriers to success are, what the issues that need to be addressed are. They've made a huge commitment to meet this goal.

The common application system will be in place, hopefully, on a pilot basis by next year and fully implemented by 2008 if all goes well. I must say that it's one thing for me as Minister of Advanced Education or for this House through the Access to the Future Act to say that this is a very important project. It's quite another thing to get the colleges and institutions working together, as they have been collaboratively over the past year, to develop a very strong system for the benefit of learners in Alberta.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister assure Alberta students that the single point of entry will be available to benefit all Alberta students, including those applying from rural areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, that is one of the huge benefits of having a common application system. All of us who've had children know how difficult it is to not only get the information you need but to send the applications to various numbers of institutions, pay the fees, and do that. The common application system will allow any student from anywhere in the province and, for that matter, students outside the province to access all of our public education system through one point of access, hopefully through one application fee. That system will be able to draw from other elements of our system in terms of getting, for example, transcripts attached to the student finance system, so it will be a very robust and complex system but will give every Albertan, regardless of where they live, access to all of our public postsecondary institutions.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise whether any money has been allocated to move this process forward? How much is it going to cost to get it up and running?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed. The postsecondary application system is an important building block in creating an innovative and seamless process. It has been done elsewhere but not together, as we're proposing here. Ontario has a college application system. What we're talking about is putting all of the public postsecondary institutions on the same system. We've invested a million dollars in it this year. We're looking forward to a proposal from the group that's putting it forward in terms of how much it will take to complete the process and to ensure that the process is built so that we can add functions to it on an ongoing basis. So we've invested a million dollars this year, and the budget over next year will come forward at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Home Building Contractors

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When buying a home in Alberta, it's buyer beware. All my questions are to the Minister of Government Services. Last week the minister admitted that there are people having difficulty with home contractors. Can he elaborate on what these problems are?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, if that was asked on our side of the House, it would be called a puffball. But the fact is that some of the problems – for example, finding a contractor is a big problem. The issue, as well, is that we've seen reports where there's a disagreement between the contractor and the individual who is having the work done.

One of the things I would highly recommend before someone starts a renovation or the building of a new home is to be very specific in a contract as to what exactly is covered, what kinds of materials you are using. Any time you ask for any change in the contract, make sure that it's documented, whether it be the contractor that's asking for a change or the individual that is having the renovation or the new structure built.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister suggesting that people contract with lawyers to read over the fine print because they're first-time homeowners? Is that what he's suggesting?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, no, I'm not suggesting that. Having gone through this personally – and I'm not a builder – the fact is that if you sit down and talk with the contractor, you can work these things out. There is some legislation in place that deals with the signing of contracts and what a contract means. For example, you have up to 10 days after a contract is signed to exit the contract at no charge. The fact is that during that time frame if a person wants to talk to some other folks that are familiar with contracts, they're able to do it. It doesn't necessarily have to be a lawyer.

Mr. Bonko: Given that the Alberta Home Builders' Association states that "not all contractors play by the same rules," why is this ministry passing on the problems to the consumers instead of solving them?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a case of not doing anything. We have through the licensing process, for example, many of the trades having to be licensed. They have to have gone through apprenticeship. There are those kinds of things that we put in place. But government cannot hold the hand of everyone all the time, under all circumstances. That just can't be done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself met with Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituents to discuss health reforms. All of the groups we met with identified abuses of the health system by unwarranted visits to family physicians. Most requested the implementation of user fees in order to reduce this abuse even if it contravenes one of the principles of the Canada Health Act. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the implementing of user fees being requested elsewhere in the province as you go through the consultation process?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have had a number of people petition that we should be looking at something like this in order to avoid the potential for abuse. We are not looking at user fees at this time. We are not contemplating that, nor am I aware of any place in Canada where that takes place. But I will cite that some people are very frustrated by long waiting times in emergency, for example, or by people that they feel go repeatedly to doctors' offices, perhaps without cause, their neighbours. Those are the kinds of things that people bring forward because they do want us to have an efficient system, and they want us to as much as possible reduce the opportunity to have to wait in the system by responsible attitudes. I think the part of our policy that talks about putting patients first, discussing the self-empowerment rather than self-entitlement is a good watchword for this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the fee-for-service agreement with our family physicians only allows for the diagnosis and/or treatment of one ailment per visit, therefore requiring subsequent appointments for extra ailments, will the new health proposals address this very expensive form of health delivery service?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in our health policy framework document, policy 3, talking about new compensation models, we look at the compensation by team rather than a fee-for-service model that could lead itself to that. It is not dictated or it's not required that a physician would only look at one particular service to a patient, but many choose to do so relative to their appointment schedules, which we are not responsible for. We are going to as much as possible encourage a way of compensation so that these kinds of things, this needless cost and inconvenience to patients, can be avoided, and we are working with that in mind.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Alberta teens can access health services at no cost without the knowledge of their caregivers and in whatever health facility, be it a doctor's office or an emergency room, will the minister commit to commencing a program to educate Alberta youth on the costs associated with accessing health care services for minor ailments such as colds?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are several things that we have to deal with with all Albertans. For example, the use of advanced nurse practitioners in greater numbers could actually deal with some of the colds and flu-like symptoms that people face. At one point there were nurses in school systems, which actually were visiting nurses, that undertook that kind of service. What we are looking at are programs built on the same kind of theory as our Do Bugs Need Drugs?, where we teach elementary children that you don't always need to have a drug in order to solve a problem. We will expand that both through teaching and sensitivity to what actually takes place in doctors' offices and the very real opportunity to get that kind of treatment from another source.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Schoolchildren with Anaphylaxis

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a safety threat in our schools that threatens the lives of about 1 in every 60 schoolchildren. This threat comes to school in brown bags in the form of peanut butter sandwiches and other allergens such as seafood. This was such a threat that the province of Ontario recently developed Sabrina's law, ensuring that children are safe from these hidden risks in school. My question to the Minister of Education: has the minister considered the risk of anaphylactic shock to children in Alberta schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have. We've been gathering data on this for the past little while. The background to this in a nutshell is that a couple of parents did come and talk to me about this – it's a very serious issue – before Christmas, and I undertook in follow-up to that meeting to consult the school boards, who actually develop local policies in this respect, to find out what preventative measures they already have in place. There are a number of things that the school boards do already to try and prevent the circumstance from impacting a child in a negative way, and I'll be working even further with those same school boards and other ones who perhaps don't yet have as sophisticated a policy in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll go right to my third question. The minister has answered the second question. Will the minister commit today to conduct a province-wide consultation with many parents, especially rural parents, of children with these life-threatening allergies, to meet with them and see the problem that they have and do something directly about it?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I will be putting in motion very soon a process through the Alberta School Boards Association to do a consultation piece, and I can ask them to roll that in as well. It's a sensible suggestion, and I'll certainly take it under advisement.

Mr. Flaherty: Then am I understanding that the minister is telling me that we have policies right now across the province? Is that what you're saying, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are policies in place right now amongst all the school boards. To what extent those policies have been fully fleshed out or not I don't have at my fingertips, but I did pursue this issue with a few just to do a dry run, if you will, on what those policies look like.

The policies in some cases include notification at the entrance to the school where they know that they have a child that suffers from anaphylaxis of whatever nature it might be. In other cases I know that parents have taken the responsibility quite directly, and they have consulted with school principals to make sure that the principals are there. In other cases they have a special injection where they can provide a shot of adrenalin to a child who maybe has come down with an allergy symptom or is reacting to something. I just forget the exact name of that particular injection. Nonetheless, those schools that know in advance that children who have this anaphylaxis condition are attending do have those kinds of policies and procedures already in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Physician Input on Health Care Reform

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Medical Association to its credit has, despite considerable political pressure no doubt, declined to support the government's privatized, two-tier health care proposals at its policy meeting last weekend. The AMA president said that it's unfortunate that neither the AMA nor the public has detailed information needed to make informed choices about the proposals. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why does the government continue to keep hidden not only from the general public but even from the province's doctors detailed information on its so-called health care reforms that would allow informed choices to be made?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I suppose it's always a risk, if you release a policy, that you will be confronted with allegations that you are not providing details. The policy framework, all 10 policies, is a broad framework for addressing concerns that have been raised over the last several years in terms of how we structure our system: putting patients first, the discussion about implementing new fee models, the discussion about the role of hospitals, expanding system capacity. All of those other things that we're doing in the context of the health policy framework are but one step of the 13 strategies we announced last July.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's clear, having talked to the Alberta Medical Association representatives last week, that they do want to have some more detail, but it is certainly no attempt to reduce their opportunity to receive it. It's another stage of the process. We will continue to speak to them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Given that the factually challenged minister persists in making incorrect claims about health care spending rising faster than government revenues, how can the province's doctors put any stock in the information they're getting from the government?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really hope that by the time we come forward with a response to both the AMA and Albertans relative to our consultation process the hon. member will see that I'm not factually challenged.

Mr. Eggen: The information in the paper was not correct.

Why won't the minister admit that her don't worry, be happy routine that she's spreading around the province is actually spreading confusion and is no substitute for open, public hearings on her government's radical, two-tier health care proposals?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will take his comments under advisement. I know that many of his comments were less of a question and more of an editorialship on the kinds of consultations we've had. I've been privileged to listen to the views of Albertans. I'll continue to do that to the best of my ability, as will all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Agricultural Research Spending

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many members of this Assembly have pointed out recently, Alberta's grains and oilseed producers and farmers are facing one of their most challenging years ever with input costs rising and commodity prices being kind of low. While this government has been hard at work improving already existing programs like crop insurance and CAIS, there are some groups that insist more immediate help is needed. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. While I was encouraged to see an announcement of nearly $30 million for additional research and development funding, why are we spending this money on research instead of continuing to help primary producers directly?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a good question given that a lot of producers are looking for help immediately, and it's a question that's been addressed in this House several times about the close to half a billion dollars that is available to producers this spring. But coupled with that, when you talk about the hardships that we've had in our entire ag industry over the last three or four years, we came out with a BSE recovery strategy, and we're working on a grains and oilseed recovery strategy. All of those consultations with industry pointed to the fact that we need to also look to the future. When we look to the future, we need to have research and development as a primary focus of that, so we view this $30 million not so much to help our producers out this spring but to help our producers to that next level of generating revenue out of the marketplace as opposed to programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what sorts of projects will be funded through this additional research money?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, primarily the research dollars are going to be going into the grains and oilseed sector through the Alberta crop industry development fund as well as additional funds into the livestock industry development fund as well as some funds that are going to the Agriculture Research and Extension Council of Alberta. It's very important that when we take lab science in agriculture, we have to be able to apply it to the field in an efficient and economical manner. We have a number of applied research groups around the province that are very good at doing that, but they need some help with regard to the capital for the equipment, and they need some help with regard to some of the research projects that are ongoing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: how soon will we see results from this program?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that in terms of the capital allocation that we are putting out to the extension groups, we should see some results of that fairly soon because those are the types of projects where we can put some equipment out on the ground over the course of the next year. But, again, it's extremely important that we are looking to the future. Today producers are enjoying the benefit of some research that was done five, 10, 15 years ago. We anticipate that the research that we're now embarking on will be of benefit to producers five, 10, 15 years from now in addition to the biofuel-type research that we're doing, which may even be sooner than that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

First Nations Input on Health Care Reform

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the assembly of treaty chiefs of Alberta came out in opposition to the third way because they believe further privatization will hurt aboriginal people. My first question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Does the minister agree with the chiefs that further privatization of our health care system is bad for Alberta's aboriginal people?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there was actually an all-chiefs meeting last week, and the all-chiefs came forward with some recommendations which the Minister of Health and Wellness will receive and be able to take into consideration with all the recommendations that they're bringing forward. We have requested that the chiefs – and I've written to all the chiefs in Alberta – make sure that we get their views as to what needs to be done, what the impact will be on any other treaties, and once we receive that information, that information will go straight to the Minister of Health and Wellness so that we can take into consideration their concerns.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: is the minister concerned that the privatization proposals will lure doctors away from northern communities, worsening an already serious shortage?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, in northern Alberta we have an issue relative to retaining and attracting doctors, and the RHAs within our northern regions have been exemplary in terms of making sure that we retain those doctors that we do have. We have the rural physician action plan, which has been working very well, to ensure that the doctors that we have will stay, and I know that the Minister of Health and Wellness has certainly ensured that that rural physician action plan will continue and address the shortages that we do experience in northern Alberta. We have a number of plans in place to be able to help those areas, the municipalities that have been looking at doctors, and make sure that we continue to do that.

On the issue of the First Nations, Mr. Speaker, the First Nations certainly do have a concern when it comes to retaining and attracting doctors. As you know, on the federal level we have agreements with the ministry of health and wellness, and those federal agreements address the concern of doctors on reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. To the minister of health: can the minister tell Alberta's First Nations people why their specific health concerns have not been addressed by the third-way proposal?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad for that question. The third-way proposal, or the policy framework for the third way, is somewhat unique in that it looks at the system in a broad context for health policy delivery, but if you look at the 13 strategies released last July for getting on with better health care, one of the strategies there is a whole strategy featuring support for aboriginal health and for the aboriginal people. There are many initiatives that we're undertaking, not the least of which are advocating on behalf of aboriginal people and the aboriginal policy framework dealing with health and more health and more collaborative approaches between the federal government, who are responsible for ensuring that health is provided, to the local providers and other partnerships we can arrange.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I met with a member of the aboriginal community who asked quite specifically about some of the supports for infectious diseases.

Pediatric Services in Calgary

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, in the midst of all the confusing information floating over the third way, the residents of northeast Calgary for a second time are hearing that the 15-bed pediatric unit at the Peter Lougheed Centre may be closed down. This has caused a great deal of stress and grief among residents of northeast Calgary. My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell my constituents and the residents of northeast Calgary if there is any truth to the allegations that the Calgary health region is contemplating closing pediatric beds at the Peter Lougheed Centre in Calgary?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, one can assure the residents of northeast Calgary that the Peter Lougheed Centre and the 15 beds there play an important role in delivering pediatric care. There is absolutely no truth to the rumour that those beds will be closed, nor are we contemplating that.

Mr. Shariff: Well, I hope that this is an ironclad guarantee that those beds will not be closed. What assurances can the minister give to residents of Calgary as a whole that they will be able to continue to access pediatric services city-wide despite the opening of the new Children's hospital?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that it's clear that Calgary, in its delivery plans, has tried to cite the region's various service deliveries; in fact, not consolidating all of the service delivery for any one particular group demographically or any one particular disease but making sure that various neighbourhoods have access. Referrals come from the Alberta Children's hospital. They come from the emergency department. They are in the case of the Peter Lougheed receiving children from a variety of places, but there are absolutely no plans to change the structure to reduce the opportunity in community centres. In fact, I see quite the opposite: a prevalence and attitude and philosophy of management of the Calgary system that can assure that in regions quite specifically children's services and pediatric services will be delivered throughout the city as the planning and new facilities come on board.

The Speaker: Hon. members, shortly I'll call upon the first of six hon. members to participate today, but before we get to that, our historical vignette of the day.

From Tony Blair to Winston Churchill to Benjamin Disraeli to Lord Palmerston, parliamentarians of the British House of Commons have always had the need to sit while in committee and in the Commons. The chair to my left is an original chair from Westminster. The chair design, done by Augustus Welby Pugin, dates from about 1845 and has remained unaltered to this day. If this chair could talk, it could tell us about all the wars the British people have been in since Crimea, the creation of the British Empire, and developments in the United Kingdom and the world over the past 161 years.

This chair will soon be returned to the British House of Commons. To my right is an identical copy of the original Westminster chair. As an Alberta Legislative Assembly centennial project three dozen Westminster chairs were expertly built by skilled and dedicated craftsmen in the province's Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation. These new chairs are intended to last well over a hundred years, perhaps 161 years. Individually numbered, the chairs will be placed in the three lobbies of this parliament. They will serve as a visible and very practical reminder of our valued connection with the Mother of Parliaments at the Palace of Westminster.

I would like to thank the minister and the outstanding craftsmen for their support of this project. [applause]

In 30 seconds the first of six.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie 2006

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui c'est un plaisir pour moi de présenter à la Chambre une explication d'un événement canadien qui s'appelle Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Neuf millions de francophones se rassemblent à la grandeur du Canada sur une base annuelle pour célébrer Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Cette année Les Rendez-vous ont lieu du 10e au 26e mars. Durant cette période de temps on célèbre les communautés francophones afin de promouvoir la langue et la culture françaises tant par ses activités sociales et ses célébrations que par sa dimension humaine et communautaire.

Les Rendez-vous contribuent à renforcer les liens entre les anglophones et les francophones du Canada et favorisent un plus grand respect entre ces deux communautés. De plus en plus nos municipalités albertaines se joignent aux Rendez-vous en tenant des cérémonies pour reconnaître leur communauté francophone; parmi ces municipalités cette année on compte Red Deer, Lethbridge, Edmonton, et Fort McMurray. Félicitations à ces municipalités.

Comme je le mentionnais lors de la présentation de mes invités spéciaux ce matin à la rotonde de la Législature, le Président de la Chambre était hôte d'une belle célébration dédiée à la reconnaissance de la contribution des francophones à notre province. C'est un geste que la communauté apprécie beaucoup si on en juge par la participation importante de la communauté. Je tiens aussi à remercier mes collègues de l'Assemblée qui ont participé à la célébration.

Cette huitième édition des Rendez-vous revêt une signification spéciale parce que le thème de cette année porte sur les échanges, le dialogue, et le rapprochement entre les communautés francophones et francophiles du pays entier. Alors que l'Alberta recrute de la main-d'œuvre qualifiée de partout à travers le Canada et à travers le monde, ce thème est particulièrement pertinent pour nos communautés francophones, qui accueillent parmi eux un nombre croissant de nouveaux arrivants qui parlent français. Cette diversité vient renforcer notre communauté francophone et nous rend plus dynamique.

Vibrante comme elle l'est, la communauté francophone célèbre sa langue et sa culture tout au cours de l'année par l'entremise de festivals de la chanson, festivals de film, carnivals d'hiver, et j'en passe. J'aimerais profiter de l'occasion pour inviter tous mes collègues à apprendre à connaître la communauté francophone en participant aux événements qui ont lieu dans leur circonscription pendant l'année.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to provide the Assembly with information on a wonderful Canadian event called Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Nine million francophones will get together for the annual Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, which runs this year from March 10 to March 26. During that period of time attention is focused on francophone communities with the idea of promoting French language and culture as much through community and human relations as through social activities and celebrations.

Les Rendez-vous contribute to the reinforcement of links between francophones and anglophones in Canada by fostering greater respect between the two communities. More and more of our municipalities are joining in Les Rendez-vous by holding ceremonies to recognize their francophone communities. Red Deer, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Fort McMurray are some of the municipalities that held flag-raising ceremonies to mark the launch of these celebrations. Congratulations to all of them.

As I alluded to earlier while introducing my special guests, this morning the Speaker of the House hosted a wonderful ceremony in the rotunda to recognize the contributions of the francophone community to our province. Judging by the large attendance, it was very much appreciated by the francophone community. I also want to thank my fellow MLAs who took time off from their busy schedules to stop by.

The eighth edition of these Rendez-vous takes on a special meaning because the theme of this year's event is centred on interaction, dialogue, and connections among francophone and francophile communities across Canada. As Alberta recruits skilled labour from all over Canada and across the world, this is especially relevant for Alberta's francophone communities, who are welcoming among them an increasing number of new Albertans who speak French. This diversity is making our francophone communities stronger and truly dynamic.

Vibrant as they are, francophone communities celebrate their language and culture throughout the year through music and film festivals, winter carnivals, and other celebrations. I would like to take this opportunity to invite all my colleagues to get to know the francophone community and to take in some of these events in their own ridings throughout the year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie 2006

Mr. Chase: Merci, M. le Président. Les francophones ont contribué au développement et à la culture de notre pays pour plus de 400 ans. Les explorateurs, les marchands, et les habitants ont influencé l'histoire de cette région de l'Alberta.

L'été passé ma femme et moi nous nous souvenions de la contribution culturelle des francophones en Alberta. Pendant que nous visitons le Fort d'Edmonton, nous nous sommes arrêtés au marché. J'aimerais les ceintures de plusieurs couleurs que les coureurs des bois ont porté. Ces ceintures avaient une intention utile. Ils ont protégé et supporté le dos des coureurs pendant qu'ils ont porté des ballots lourds de fourrures et leurs grands canots de voyageur à travers les portages. Maintenant ils servent comme un rappel historique décoratif.

La longueur de la ceinture symbolise la longue histoire française dans l'ouest. Les couleurs brillantes représentent les cadeaux riches des arts, de la musique, de la danse, de la langue, et de la culture, qui continuent d'éclairer les environs de l'Alberta. Les filets entrelacés, qui ajoutent la force à la ceinture entière, représentent les contributions des francophones qui ont partagé pour rendre forte cette province.

Aujourd'hui je voudrais reconnaître et remercier les francophones, qui améliorent la qualité de la vie en Alberta en partageant leur culture. Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] French-speaking people have contributed to the development and culture of this country for over 400 years. French explorers, traders, and settlers have influenced the history of the Alberta region.

This past summer my wife and I were again reminded of the cultural contribution of francophones in Alberta. While visiting Fort Edmonton, we stopped at a market where I was admiring the colourful sashes worn by the coureurs de bois. These devices served the very utilitarian purpose of protecting the backs of men as they carried the heavy fur bales and their voyageur canoes across the portages. Now they serve as a decorative historic reminder.

The length of the belt represents the long history of the francophones in the west. The bright colours represent the rich gifts of art, music, language, and culture, which continue to brighten the Alberta landscape. The interwoven threads, which add to the strength of the whole belt/sash, represent the contribution that francophones have shared to make this province strong.

Today I wish to recognize and thank francophones for improving the quality of life in Alberta by sharing their culture. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Common Student Application Process

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in support of the minister's bold new initiative approach in using technology to make it easier for students to apply for postsecondary studies in Alberta. Although still in its developmental phase, the common application process will be designed to help a more user-friendly method of applying for various postsecondary institutions in one easy step.

Once it's fully operational, the advantages to students will be numerous. No matter where they live in the province, it will be extremely beneficial in serving rural and other underrepresented populations who may have social, cultural, and geographical challenges to deal with. This new, easier to use system will create a level playing field for students who have a harder time with the current, more complex processes. It will also help those learners by providing information on a timely basis and act as an electronic clearing house on available program opportunities.

Under the current application system a student who makes an application to, for example, four postsecondary institutions must fill out four separate applications, submit four separate nonrefundable fees. Under the new process that will all change. The Alberta postsecondary application system will eliminate the necessity for students to pay multiple application fees for multiple applications. It will be one point of entry and result in significant potential time and cost savings for students. While students benefit from a more user-friendly method of applying, there are significant benefits on the institutional and government side as well in terms of creating a standardized process that is more efficient and effective.

The development of this one-stop shopping approach for students is a true collaborative partnership between all the key players in the public postsecondary system. It just makes good sense that people responsible for delivering the programs and services and those enrolled at these institutions have their voices heard in the development of the framework. Working side by side with officials from Advanced Ed to identify and address potential issues or concerns that may arise, it ensures that this new application process will be tailor-made to meet the specific needs of learners, institutions, and government.

I think it's a wonderful system, and I compliment the minister on this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mary Anne Jablonski

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Soroptimist Making a Difference for Women award honours women who, through their professional and personal efforts, are making extraordinary differences in the lives of women or girls. This year's recipient is inspiration and encouragement personified, and she joins past honourees around the world such as the late Princess Diana and former Philippines President Corazon Aquino as well as local winners, including Gail Surkan.

Our honouree received a scholarship to attend Brock University in St. Catharines, Ontario, where she studied psychology and political science. She's been married to her husband, Bob Jablonski, for 35 years, and they have three grown children and five grandchildren. Prior to entering politics, she and her husband owned and operated a very successful fibreglass manufacturing company.

Her activism began in 1982, when she along with four other women successfully lobbied the federal government for medical and dental plans for the families of Canadian armed forces and RCMP as well as for the rights of spouses of military members. She's currently serving her third term as MLA for the Red Deer-North constituency and has worked tirelessly to enact changes for the current Protection Against Family Violence Act. This bill has gone to second reading. The hon. member has other bills that have been passed in the Legislature: the Victims of Crime Amendment Act and the Criminal Notoriety Act.

She's perhaps best known for Bill 202, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Act. The bill was passed last year, and through the court system it allows parents to force children into a five-day stay in a drug detox facility so they can get treatment. The legislation has been adopted in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and it's modelled after Bill 202.

In her capacity as MLA she's chaired the Justice and Government Services Standing Policy Committee and the Youth Secretariat and also served as a member of Public Accounts, Members' Services, Health and Community Living, and the Crystal Meth Task Force.

The hon. member is an enthusiastic member of her community, with involvement in various community groups, sporting associations, church boards, the Catholic Women's League, Girl Guides for 20 years, and the chamber of commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I invite hon. colleagues to join me in congratulating central Alberta's newest winner of the Making a Difference for Women award, the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Health Care Reform Consultation in Lac La Biche

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Numerous meetings were held in Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency this past weekend between representatives from many municipalities and communities and the Minister of Health and Wellness.

My constituents raised a number of issues and attributes of our health care system. Overall, they talked about issues relating to doctor recruitment and concerns about waiting times. They asked about having specialty services, like a diabetic clinic. Many talked about the opportunities for doctors to engage in rural communities, to increase their financial incentives. My constituents were concerned about the number of physicians in rural Alberta and felt that many spaces in medical schools should be given to rural Albertans. They felt that students will return to their home communities, and this will help increase the number of doctors in rural Alberta.

Some individuals felt that the improvement of the electronic health record helps rural physicians access information and helps curb misuse or abuse. There was considerable discussion about streamlining referrals and how this can be a better system. Some raised the fact that the increases in private MRIs can speed up waiting lists. They believed that this was a very positive direction.

Other comments raised related to regional psychiatric services and how the announcement of the mental health fund this year helps local support programs. They talked about future directions of our ambulance services and were very happy to hear that the government continued funding this year.

Many concluded that improvements on province-wide drug programs and consolidation of drug expenditures are a good idea. Many felt that local communities were working well together in determining which health services they would provide and serve in a partnership. Constituents further identified many cases where the private system could be good.

The Speaker: On that note, thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Tax Reforms

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With about a week to go before the budget day, there are some tax ideas I would like to address here today. One Alberta advantage could be lower tax rates. During our 100 years sitting in the legislative sessions, we have often debated where to spend money and how to best use public funds. Rarely has this Legislature thought about meaningful tax cuts. It sometimes seems like we forget that the public purse is made from the wallets of the workers.

My point today, Mr. Speaker, is that we should remember that people want us to spend responsibly, and most importantly we need to remember to return this money to help those who are struggling during Alberta's boom. Rather than talking about more programs, I think we can help the people of Alberta by offering tax cuts. Our people are overtaxed. It is time for us to make another step toward offering a global competitive advantage. The time has come to raise our personal exemption and eliminate health care premiums.

By raising the personal exemption to $20,000, we return the money to the pockets of the people. This would give a typical family over $1,000 and a single individual more than $500 back in their pockets. For those on a lower income it would allow them to invest in themselves. Let us allow Albertans to decide how to spend their money. Let us acknowledge that bigger government is not better government. It would be a real prosperity bonus that people can bank on every year.

By raising the exemption and eliminating health care premiums, it would allow families to have over $40,000 which they could protect from the vultures of government. We should be fiscal hawks who defend the taxpayers against a rising tide of taxes and fees, not vultures who feed off the backs of Albertans. We could continue to lead Canada by example in helping people to help themselves.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we go on to the next order of business, yesterday was the five-year anniversary of the election to this Assembly of a number of members, on March 12, 2001. Let's congratulate them.

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the many letters I have received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I am tabling today are from Arthur Schultz, Victoria Morisbak, Sidney Chan, Randy Allarie, Raquel Lara, and Katie Gamble.

My second set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, comes from Calgary-Varsity constituents expressing their concerns regarding the potential closures of Jerry Potts elementary school and the English program at Varsity Acres elementary. These closures are the direct result of the government's failure to adjust the space utilization formula to reflect its reduced class size initiative. The e-mails are from Janice Bauer, Mike Bateman, Joanne Morin, Rita David Shailah, Anne-Marie Polay, and B.D. Aggarwala.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member and to others, remember that this is tablings; this is not Members' Statements.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a copy of a letter that I received on February 16, 2006. It is from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. This letter is in regard to the CAIS program and the overpayments.

Thank you.

Mr. Flaherty: This is five letters, Mr. Speaker, from daycare owners and staff and concerned citizens, specifically Connie Kubinowsky*, R. Padmore*, Greg Gamba*, Tammy Stromberg, and Laura Chutny. I will table these.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More letters voicing concern with the cancellation of the national daycare program. They are from Heather Munholland, Cheryl Millar, Pam Lasuita, Tami Masterson, Leeann Turnbull, and Diane Clark.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is 52 names from the Calgary area petitioning the Alberta Legislature to urge the government of Alberta to "consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

The second tabling is six more names from citizens requesting the protection of the national daycare program, including Tawa

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Montessori Day Care, J. Waldo, Elzbieta Buszka, Jean Keenan, Kelly Hanrahan, and Pat Sharun.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table six letters, with the appropriate copies, from citizens expressing concern about the cancellation of the national daycare program. They are Mrs. Emily and Dr. Christopher Herd, Susan Pointe, A. Graci, Keltie Ferguson, the Polish Bilingual Daycare, and Lorraine Smith.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise also to table six copies of letters that I have received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters are from Vivian Smith, Tanis F. Eaker, Sherry Meyers, Ann Basualdo, Hollie Muskego, and M. Trottier.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is a letter by Nella Callihoo on behalf of eight others in my constituency concerned about the future of health care in Alberta and concerned about the protection of the Canada Health Act.

Also, a letter from Ted Bishop, who is also concerned about the future of health care, especially towards a two-tier system. He lived in New Zealand and has experience to share.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon, the first being a letter from a constituent of Edmonton-Rutherford, Hugh Critchley, who is expressing concerns about the planned third-way changes. He says, "Please stop your 3rd way and improve on the way we now have."

I also have a further six letters regarding the cancellation of the national daycare program. They are from Jeanne Pesklewis, Ishrat Qureshi, Angela McIsaac, Al Ng, Sally Pham, and Mary Badu-Acheampong.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You're okay, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity?

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. Those were all my tablings.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is an e-mail from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Ms Emily Brodeur, who states her concerns with and disapproval of the so-called third way. She believes those who are poor will receive inferior care and argues that our effort should be focused on improving the public health care system rather than privatizing it.

The second one is, again, six of the many letters that the Official Opposition received from citizens concerned about Mr. Harper's cancellation of the national daycare program. They are from Kelly Peloquin, Susan Suh, Pete Hurd, Megan McDougald and Erwin Hunke, Rob Reay, and Nahid Higgins.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two documents to table for myself, and, with your permission, if I may table two documents for my colleague from Edmonton-Calder. My first document is the March 2006 edition of Martha's Monthly. In it this magazine gives several pieces of advice regarding health reform, including that consultation requires actually consulting people and that rich people can get better meals in restaurants but shouldn't get better health care.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a piece from Sarah Boseley dated March 10, 2006. In the piece Boseley describes a growing trend where public hospitals in the U.K. are having to repair damage done during botched hip and knee replacements performed in private clinics.

Now the two documents on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Calder. The first one is a letter from Heather Mackay with the Edmonton Prochoice Coalition. She is very concerned about Bill 204 and warns that if this bill is passed and becomes law, there will be more deaths related to botched abortion and suicide and more suffocated newborns.

The second document is a letter from Canadian Youth for Choice, Mr. Speaker, which is associated with the Canadian Federation for Sexual Health. They are also very concerned about Bill 204. They envision a Canada where sexual reproductive rights are respected for everyone. They also note that young people under 15 years old who partake in high-risk sexual behaviours have a fundamental need for accurate, confidential, and nonprejudicial sexual health information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More letters of concern about the cancellation of the national daycare program: from Barb McCrea, Mellin Ong, Shanthi Thiagarajah, Madelene Collins, and Wendy Gaunt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some more letters from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing their serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters are from Tracy Franks, Amanda Miranda, Mary Asafo-Akowuah, Grace, Lisa Cottrell, and Vera Bluecloud.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll be tabling with the Assembly today a message from Her Majesty the Queen, head of the Commonwealth, entitled Health and Vitality: The Commonwealth Challenge, dated March 13, 2006.

Written Questions

Provincial Protection Officers

Q2. Dr. B. Miller moved that the following question be accepted. What consultations, studies, research, or other information-gathering exercises pertaining to the use of provincial protection officers for traffic safety enforcement on primary highways under the direction of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were conducted by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Public Security prior to the implementation of the pilot project?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very timely request because the pilot project for highway 63 has already been announced. I believe that this is a change in respect to the traditional roles of policing. The RCMP have had the function of policing our highways, and now to turn a portion of that over to special constables represents a change. This question simply is inquiring about the preparation, the kinds of studies that were made that led to the proposal of this project.

My main concern all along has been the issue of safety of the public, because highway 63 is a very busy highway, and also the safety of special constables, who don't have the same training. Their training may be adequate; I don't know. That's, I suppose, what the pilot project is supposed to inquire into.

The question is really what kinds of consultations have been made with the RCMP. It has been their traditional role to police a highway like highway 63. Is this change, this pilot project, something that they really want? How have they been involved in the deliberations?

Also, it would be helpful just for the sake of the public to understand what is happening, what kind of research and what kinds of studies there have been in terms of what other provinces and other states south of the border are doing. Policing is evolving, and in terms of its evolution how is this particular change to have special constables doing highway traffic safety work warranted?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for the comments made. Policing is evolving, and with that we're looking at new methods of service delivery. So on behalf of government I'd be more than happy and prepared to accept Written Question 2 and will respond in writing to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to close the debate.

Dr. B. Miller: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security for his response. I look forward to the results.

[Written Question 2 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. minister, the response will become the property of the House, so the best way would be to table it in the House when the hon. minister has it.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I'd like to do is simply now move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper beyond the one just discussed do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 201

Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman,

be it resolved that when the committee rises and reports, it recommends to the Assembly that consideration of Bill 201, Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006, be deferred until April 3, 2006, or until the first day for consideration of private members' business after that day.

This will allow for due consultation with stakeholders.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before calling the question on the motion by the hon. Member for Calgary-West, the chair would like to provide a brief explanation to all members given that it has been a number of years since this type of motion has come before committee.

This motion if passed will postpone further Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill 201 until April 3, 2006, or until the first day for consideration of private members' business after that date. The chair wants to be clear that this motion is not a hoist, which can only occur at second or third reading and which has the effect of defeating a bill.

There are precedents for this type of motion. Some members may recall that a similar motion was moved by the Member for Calgary-Egmont in 1998 in connection with his private member's bill, Bill 204, Worker's Compensation Amendment Act, 1998, to allow time for further consultation in the preparation of an amendment for Committee of the Whole. This also occurred in 1996 in connection with the member at the time for Edmonton-Beverly-Belmont, who requested that Committee of the Whole consideration of his Bill 203, Family Dispute Resolution Act, be postponed.

This type of motion has emerged as a result of the 1993 changes to the Standing Orders with respect to private members' bills. Given that these bills must proceed on a strict timetable, there is no mechanism by which the bill can get off the treadmill to await the results of a consultative process. This process was clarified in Speaker Schumacher's ruling of February 11, 1997, where he confirmed that only the sponsor of the bill at issue could make this type of motion to accord with the principles of private members' business.

Finally, before putting the question, the chair confirms that this motion falls under Standing Order 18(2) and therefore is not debatable.

[Motion carried]

Mr. Zwozdesky: I would move that the committee rise and report progress at this time.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 201.

The Committee of the Whole has also agreed to the following motion.

Be it resolved that when the committee rises and reports, it recommends to the Assembly that consideration of Bill 201, Human Tissue Gift (Notification Procedure) Amendment Act, 2006, be deferred until April 3, 2006, or until the first day for consideration of private members' business after that date.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table a copy of this resolution for the records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: 3:10 Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 203
Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway)
Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 6: Mr. Stelmach]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to rise and make a few remarks in support of Bill 203, Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Speaker, last year we had an opportunity to celebrate this province's centennial and at that time, of course, reflect on the history of our province and why it is that Alberta has become the great place that it is today. There's no doubt that the railroad and those associated with it played a significant impact on the development of our province, especially during the last 100 years. The railroad allowed settlers to come to this province across the land. It also joined our country from coast to coast, creating a truly united Canada. It allowed the shipping of products outside the province and importation of materials and people to support the thriving economy. As such, it's most important that we preserve this important part of our heritage so that future generations of Albertans and visitors to our province are able to appreciate the impact that the steam locomotive has had on our history.

We're fortunate in Alberta that we have a number of organizations that dedicate themselves in whole or in part to preserving this aspect of our proud history. One such organization is Calgary's Heritage Park, where annually over 400,000 visitors come to see the early days of Alberta brought alive. I know something of Heritage Park, Mr. Speaker, because formerly it was located in Calgary-Glenmore. As of the last election it became part of Calgary-Elbow.

Canada's largest living historical village showcases an impressive collection of over 150 exhibits, thousands of artifacts, and lively interpretive activities. The dedicated staff and volunteers of Heritage Park work very hard to give visitors a realistic look at what life was like in our province's early days. One of the central attractions of the park is its full-size, fully functional steam-powered railroad, which operates three steam locomotives on a one-mile loop of standard gauge track. The engines pull some very interesting pieces of history: a collection of rolling stock and 10 passenger cars, including two fully restored 1885 coach cars, a 1912 CN car, the Bowness summer car, and the famous car 76, which was an executive car that was used on the occasion of the last spike ceremony. Visitors to the park have the opportunity to experience the excitement of riding the rails just as Alberta's pioneers did. History truly comes alive, principally because of Heritage Park's attention to portraying historically accurate exhibits. That's why Bill 203 is a necessary piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker.

As I mentioned earlier, the railway employs three steam locomotives from the 1940s that stop at three historical stations located throughout the park. At one of these stops visitors have the ability to take the ride-the-rail tour. This exhibit allows the visitor to experience first-hand the development of the railroad in Canada. Mr. Speaker, given the importance of historical accuracy in exhibits such as this one, it's important that we ensure that those who have taken the initiative to preserve Alberta's railway heritage are supported.

The goal of Bill 203 is to make sure that our legislation and regulation are appropriate to the intended target. At present, regulations which were designed for main line railroad track are being applied to our heritage railways. Main line railroad track handles a very high volume of traffic and carries trains with all types of cargo. Main line rail track crosses over highways and other public roads, goes over high bridges, and carries trains with a high tonnage at higher velocity.

Heritage railways, as proposed in Bill 203, Mr. Speaker, handle a very different type of train. Heritage railways operate in a historical manner, are travelled less frequently and at lower rates of speed. Additionally, heritage railways travel only on a defined loop of track that sits entirely within the confined space of a historical park.

Mr. Speaker, after looking at public railways and heritage railways it's easy to see that although there are similarities, they are clearly different in application and should therefore be treated accordingly. A historical railroad need not and should not require modern crossing arms and light fixtures, nor should the locomotives be required to have functioning speedometers and modern brakes when functionality dictates that the historical technology works. Speeds are easily judged by elapsed time markings, and old brakes can still be perfectly good brakes. We aren't talking about bullet trains here, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about steam engines puffing away. Requiring needless upgrades imposes unnecessary costs that swallow precious resources, and the overkill seriously impairs the historical accuracy of the exhibit. It's only a matter of common sense that we should be testing against proper objectives and not lumping all examples into the same category. What Bill 203 ultimately will achieve is a recognition that history should not be replaced by modern elements for the sake of needless update.

Public safety is clearly always a primary concern, but this debate is not about public safety. It's about cutting needless red tape by correcting an area of overregulation as it relates to heritage train operations. The facts show that in 42 years Heritage Park has operated its railroad without incident, so applying the same set of standards to both main line public railways and heritage railways does nothing for public safety and needlessly burdens historical societies.

Bill 203 affords us the opportunity to take the time to study and properly develop sensible rules and regulations that fit the unique realities of heritage railways. Mr. Speaker, it's important that we apply fair and appropriate rules that respect these exceptions while maintaining an appropriate standard to ensure public safety.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the members of the Assembly to support Bill 203 as it is truly a very good piece of legislation. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, 2006. As has been mentioned by some of my colleagues, this bill is about creating a framework which will allow for a separate designation of railway under the act. The end goal of this is to allow the railways which would be affected by Bill 203 to work with the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation to develop a set of regulations which are more appropriate for the day-to-day activities which the new heritage railways undertake.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize that this has been mentioned before, but I feel that it cannot be stressed enough. A more appropriate level of regulation does not mean a lower standard of safety. It means maintaining the highest standard of safety while ensuring that the inspection and maintenance requirements are fitting to the operation.

Mr. Speaker, by affording specific railways in our province the designation of heritage, we will be recognizing the role which they play in giving Albertans the experience of riding on a vintage piece of railway equipment. However, a concern has been raised with respect to the use of heritage as a designation. While I think that it is a fitting title for the affected railways, the concern raised is that this designation under the Railway (Alberta) Act could be misconstrued in that it is a formal designation as a provincial historic resource under the Historical Resources Act, which is completely, as we know, a separate process and refers to buildings typically.

Mr. Speaker, the Historical Resources Act, which is administered by the Minister of Community Development, empowers the minister to designate an historical resource as a provincial historic resource or a registered historic resource if the minister feels that such a designation would be in the best interests of Albertans. A site or structure which is a registered historic resource generally has three of the following characteristics. It is most significant to a region or community, it is a good example of an aspect of Alberta's natural or human prehistory or history, and/or it has significant paleontological or archaeological or architectural merit.

An Hon. Member: That's a mouthful.

Mr. Rogers: Yes, that is a mouthful, Mr. Speaker.

The appointment as a provincial historic resource is a more significant designation under the designation program. Provincial historic resources are subject to protection under the act. No person may destroy, disturb, alter, restore, repair, or remove any historic objects from such a resource without written approval from the minister.

In order to be considered for such a designation, structures or sites must be of an outstanding provincial significance, associated with an important aspect of Alberta's natural or human history, or of outstanding paleontological or archaeological or architectural merit, Mr. Speaker. In both circumstances, to be eligible for designation under this program, the resource must be situated on its original location. If it has been moved or if it has been a re-creation of a historic building, it is not eligible to be designated as either a provincial or a registered historic resource under the act.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most interesting parts of this program, in my opinion, is the provision for the fact that an historical resource may be owned privately and would remain private property after the designation. As these sites remain private property, they can be sold or inherited as any other property would be. The only restriction placed upon such a designated site is that the order giving recognition to the site is registered against the certificate of title. This makes prospective buyers aware of the designation and informs them of the requirements under the Historical Resources Act. By making provisions for private ownership, pieces of Alberta history can be maintained and preserved without the provincial government needing to purchase the resource or the site of this building. This type of flexibility would in my opinion give more incentive to private owners to apply to have a property of theirs receive official recognition.

The aforementioned guidelines are just that, Mr. Speaker: guidelines to be used by a person or an organization to make an application to the Ministry of Community Development in order for a structure or site to be given official recognition.

Following this, there is a five-step application procedure, which involves the applicants giving background information on the site and stating the historical significance of the site. This application is then evaluated by the appropriate staff, and a recommendation is made regarding whether or not official recognition should be granted to the site or building in question.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, there exist a number of requirements, specifications, and procedures which need to be followed before official recognition can be granted to a site. By amending the Railway (Alberta) Act to include a new type of train called heritage, none of these steps have to be undertaken. I do not believe that this is the intent, nor will it be the outcome of this legislation to have the affected railways considered as a provincial or registered historic resource. The power to grant this designation falls exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Community Development through the power granted to him under the Historical Resources Act.

The concern which was raised surrounding this issue was and is valid. When implementing legislation, we want to avoid ambiguity and eliminate the potential for misunderstanding. Bill 203 seeks to recognize the role played by the affected railways, but it does not presume to supersede or in any way affect the authority held by the Minister of Community Development to administer and regulate Alberta's historical resources.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 has two objectives. First, the title of heritage more accurately reflects the nature of the railways it impacts than the current designation of amusement. Secondly, by creating another designation which new regulations can be attached to, altering regulations governing these railways will simplify the inspection and regulatory process in the future. It will eliminate the need for each individual railway to apply for exemptions from each regulation which does not necessarily apply to their operation.

In the future, if another two or three railways are characterized as heritage, Mr. Speaker, under the act there will already be a set of tailored regulations in place for this operation to adhere to. This will reduce the possibility of any confusion surrounding the safety and operational regulations which need to be adhered to and will eliminate the need to apply for exemptions from regulations which were not designed for the operations in question. This clarity will serve in good stead both the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation and the operations involved in the years to come.

This legislation is well thought out in its simplicity, ensuring that the department with expertise will be able to work with stakeholders in the development of regulations in the future. Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 203, and I would ask my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber to support this initiative. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to voice my support for Bill 203, the Railway (Alberta) (Heritage Railway) Amendment Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I have in mind a special constituent who has special interests, and I know that others in my constituency and our province have special considerations as well for our treasured railways of Alberta.

Historically, the railways that line the coarse prairie terrain are symbols of resourcefulness and resolve of our forebears, who were dedicated to the advancement of our society. For them and for us today the direction of the future points west. Alberta's pioneers carved the path into the unknown with the ever present dream of a bright, vibrant, prosperous Alberta, and it was this vision, Mr. Speaker, which established the rock-solid foundation that our great province stands proudly atop today.

Vision has consistently proven to be a vital ingredient in providing the distinction between triumph and failure. The vision of our province has always been a marvel, a panoramic view that stretches with immeasurable ambition from the Great Plains right to the Rocky Mountains. However, that vision is of little consequence without the will and perseverance of a people that possessed that vision: optimistic, dedicated men and women who selflessly stamped those steel lines through our province to make that vision of Alberta a reality. The ideals that Albertans hold dear today – strength, persistence, resilience, just to name a few – were forged many years ago by those same individuals. They devoted their lives and personal safety to plant the seed that would enable our province to become Canada's industrial and economic leader.

Mr. Speaker, there's always been debate regarding the necessity of implementing the legislation proposed in Bill 203. It's been suggested that the proposed amendment toward heritage designation seems redundant, clouding for some the intent of what is to be accomplished from the modifications to the bill. I for one believe that Bill 203 will not only broaden the distinction between the assortment of Alberta's railways, but it will also enhance the effectiveness of their regulation and maintenance. Furthermore, it will serve to ensure that the railways that have become such an essential ingredient to our identity as Albertans will be given due recognition to exist as valued memorials to our heritage.

Under current legislation there are three types of railways: industrial, public, and amusement. Now, focusing on the latter, a railway that operates for the singular purpose of providing recreational rides to individuals is generally considered an amusement railway, and as such these particular railways are subject to many of the same requirements and safety regulations of other railway classifications. However, the ways in which these various railways operate are fundamentally different, and it's due to these differences that the management and enforcement of a great deal of regulatory principles have proven to be logistically unsuitable in regard to the historically significant railways involved in Bill 203.

Currently railways identified for amusement purposes, which include railways operating on historic sites, generally receive far less traffic over a given period of time when compared to other types of railway. Even so, they're still subject to the same frequency of inspections and maintenance checks as the main line operators. At this point I'd like to quote a fine constituent of mine, Mr. Don Totten, who is an expert in the field. He says: right now inspectors are using old legislation that does not apply to these machines; heritage equipment in this province is well maintained. And he knows that from a personal and professional standpoint. He says: new legislation is needed if we're going to continue to maintain equipment. An interesting note for members of the Assembly and people in the province: Alberta has the vast majority of steam locomotives in Canada, that is 70 per cent, something that's very important and definitely worth knowing.

Mr. Speaker, to better serve the public in our province, I believe that the resources of time, energy, and funds which are required to sustain such a practice would be more appropriately utilized at the discretion of the operator, and I know that Mr. Totten agrees. This could be accomplished through heritage designation regulations, while continuing to maintain sound and effective safety procedures. Bill 203 would do exactly that. It would ensure that these valuable machines would remain operational through a standardized regulatory process, enhancing the effectiveness of said process in relation to Alberta's railways. This act would help a great deal in enabling the streamlining of regulations for these specific types of railways and save a considerable amount of time and energy that could be devoted to other more suitable causes.

It's important to note, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 203 does not aim to sever the connection between stringent regulation and responsible safe practice. The well-being of passengers on these rail cars along with those who operate them is of paramount importance and most not be underestimated. Bill 203 will ensure that the security measures followed to protect all parties involved is in direct relation to each railway's usage rate. This act will allow operators to focus their attention on exactly what's required to keep each railway as safe as possible.

The educational value of these railways must also closely be considered. They can help our children take a glimpse into the 19th century of Canadian culture, offering insights about our history, demonstrating the raw majestic beauty of our province as well as the physical nature of working-class life on the prairies. This wisdom is projected even further, Mr. Speaker, by way of helping Albertans to truly understand our industrial background, the labour and toil painstakingly devoted over so many decades, elevating our province on the way to becoming the economic superpower that it is today. These steel giants are the figurative reflection of a people who in their day possessed an unwavering desire to improve their quality of life, allowing all who were to follow in their footsteps to proclaim the most beautiful and accomplished province in Canada as their home.

It's been argued, Mr. Speaker, that the aforementioned amendment and the issue of requirements could be placed in the hands of the railway administrator and could be dealt with through administration and policy rather than through legislative change. Although in some cases legislation is critical to ignite the process of change, doing so with purpose and conviction with the intent of administration can become caught in the web of formula and procedure. In addition, under the current situation the operators of heritage-themed railways who wish to become exempt from certain forms of regulation must proceed with an application process that requires the operator to clear a series of hurdles along the way, making the progression towards change slow and tedious. It's our duty as members of this House to provide all Albertans with the most efficient, responsible governance possible. It's in situations where administration becomes delayed or stagnant where legislation must lead the way in providing adequate change in policies.

Mr. Speaker, the case of our provincial railways provides this House with an excellent opportunity to expedite this transformation in management of these invaluable icons of our heritage. It's clear that the four provincial railways in question operate in a very unique manner relative to the public and industrial modes of transport. In order to facilitate a process that will continue in an equitable and proficient fashion, we must be diligent in supporting the legislation brought forth in Bill 203.

I urge all hon. members as leaders and citizens to support this bill, and I urge them to join me in ensuring that these instruments that have stood the test of time will remain operationally sound in the face of overregulation. I urge they join me in pledging that the education of each and every individual who chooses to support these sites, paying homage to Alberta's ideals and traditions, will never cease. Let's respectfully enshrine our treasured railways through the legislation brought forward by this act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Bill 204
Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to move second reading of Bill 204, the Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 will help parents in the increasingly difficult job of protecting and nurturing their children. I'm a parent myself. I have three wonderful children, that mean the world to me. Everything I do as a parent is done with the aim of keeping them safe, happy, and free from the consequences of bad decisions. Parenting is without a doubt the best job in the world, but it's also the most difficult. I try as every parent does to give my kids a positive foundation of wisdom and values that will hopefully shield them from harm and help them make good decisions. I give them my guidance, my support, my prayers, and my input because these things are essential to their development and safety.

Mr. Speaker, as a loving parent I also set limits and boundaries on what is acceptable and what is not. When it is necessary, I enforce these rules. Why do I do these things for my children? Why do I protect them and nurture them? The answer is very simple: because children are often not capable of making important decisions on their own. As a parent, to guarantee the well-being of my children, I must often make decisions for them to protect their best interests. When I am allowed to, that is.

Generally, I feel that the law does a wonderful job in aiding parents. We have in place countless statutes that dictate a minimum age of responsibility for various activities. These allow society as a whole to place and enforce restrictions on the actions of children. For the most part these are reasonable and proper, and I am glad to have them. For example, Mr. Speaker, I don't have to worry about my children buying cigarettes. Of course, I've taught them about the dangers of smoking, but I sleep easier knowing that this extra barrier exists. I can say the same thing about alcohol. The fact that they are not allowed to buy it not only reinforces what I've taught them about drinking; it also provides an extra level of security. Once again I'm glad to have it. Thirteen-year-olds aren't allowed to drive. Is it reasonable that we don't allow a child to pilot a two-tonne vehicle in traffic? I think so. I'm glad that that law sets an age of capacity in this case.

I could elaborate at length about the other things that our children are not allowed to do, like voting or entering into marriage without their parents' permission and, of course, several other things, but I won't. Instead, I'd like to address what they are allowed to do, Mr. Speaker, and why it should shock every parent and why I am addressing this issue with this bill.

There exists in this province and in this country, Mr. Speaker, a system that allows children to make important, life-altering decisions without any involvement from their parents whatsoever. I find it alarming that a child can seek medical treatment of any kind without his or her parents' knowledge. I find it downright frightening that the same child can obtain medical treatment in the same way. How is this possible?

Well, for anyone to obtain medical treatment, they must first give consent. This consent can only be given after all the aspects and consequences of the intended procedure are explained and understood fully by the patient. In short, the consent must be informed. The patient must also have the ability and capacity to understand the consequences of getting or not getting the treatment. Now, these are good principles, and I don't have any problem with them whatsoever when they are applied to adults. What I do have a serious issue with is the notion that a child can be seen to have the same capacity as an adult.

Essentially, Mr. Speaker, if a doctor determines that a minor of any age understands the intended procedure or treatment and its consequences, they can consent to it independently. Is this reasonable? Well, I find it strange that the same young person who has to take a taxi to the doctor because they're not old enough to drive there potentially has the ability to make major health care decisions on their own. Should they really be considered mature enough to do so, especially when they're already considered immature in so many other areas by our society?

A minor that is deemed able to consent to treatment does so under what the common law calls the mature minor doctrine. The maturity, meaning the ability to consent of each child, is assessed on an individual, case-by-case basis by a medical professional, not by a definite and legislated minimum age. This bill seeks to enhance this doctrine by establishing such a minimum age under which a minor cannot make independent medical decisions without the consent of a parent. The concept is not radical. It's not extreme. It's simply an attempt to give parents a measure of involvement in the lives of their children when important decisions are being made.

How will this happen? Well, Bill 204 proposes that any minor aged 15 and under obtain the written permission of at least one parent before they can obtain medical treatment. Now, this is not unreasonable. This bill is not presented with the intention of restricting the rights of anyone or dramatically changing the entire system of medical consent. It's a small change, a simple change, but it is a change that will have a positive effect on children and on parents and families alike.

Now, I realize that 16- and 17-year-olds, especially in today's society, are usually considered to be mature in most cases. They are not included in the scope of the bill because I think the vast majority of people in this age group are mature enough to make health care decisions on their own if they so choose. I also realize that some children are independent due to a variety of reasons. Any child who isn't subject to guardianship under the Family Law Act is also exempt from the provisions of this bill. I'm aware of the unfortunate fact that some children have a bad or unworkable relationship with their parents. This is often not the fault of the children, and I don't think they should be penalized for it. This is why there's also a provision in the bill that allows a minor or a third party on behalf of the minor to appeal a parent's decision. This allows an independent review by the courts of a controversial parental decision and protects the children whose parents aren't acting in their best interests.

Finally, the bill does not apply to any situation that requires immediate medical attention or a medical emergency. The restrictions in the bill are presented with reason, Mr. Speaker, and requiring consent for a child whose life or safety was in immediate danger is the last thing that any reasonable individual would ever want. What the bill does do is provide a measure of clarity to a confusing situation while at the same time protecting a specific vulnerable group of children who desperately need guidance and help in making major life-altering decisions.

In essence, the bill would remove the burden of determining a child's capacity to consent from our medical professionals, and it reassigns this to the child's parents. This is an appropriate change, Mr. Speaker, and an appropriate responsibility for parents to have. Now, some may view this move as a challenge to the capability of our doctors and nurses. It isn't. These people are among the most capable, dedicated, and intelligent members of our society. We trust them with our health and with our lives and justifiably so. This bill simply seeks to recognize that the parents of a child are more intimately aware of their child's abilities and level of understanding.

Parents deal with every aspect of a child's life on a constant basis. They know their child at a level that nobody else can even begin to approach. As such, I believe that they are the best equipped to possess the power to determine a child's capacity. As the people who have raised, nurtured, and been responsible for their children from day one, it's only natural that parents be assigned the ability to make capacity judgments about their children as well. I think it's reasonable to assume that parents will make these decisions with the best interest of their children at heart. If a child wants to obtain a beneficial medical treatment, there will be no problem in obtaining consent from their parents. If they're seeking a treatment that has serious and negative consequences, this bill will give parents the opportunity to voice their concerns and to intervene if necessary. I think it is vital that we extend this right to parents, Mr. Speaker.

If any of the members here today are unsure about the merits of this bill, I guess that I simply ask them to place themselves in the shoes of a parent whose child makes a vital, life-altering medical decision of any kind without their knowledge or permission, a parent that must live with the aftermath of that decision and the knowledge that they were powerless to stop it.

Our children are our future, and as legislators I believe we have a duty to protect them. Those who need this legislation need it desperately. I urge all of the members of this Assembly to join me in offering this bill your support. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this Bill 204, Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act. While there are many issues concerning this bill which we need to raise questions about, right at the outset I think there's a lot of ambiguity around the term "medical treatment." This is a very ambiguous term, medical treatment. It's left undefined. When we consult something like the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, there are many definitions concerning the whole area of health care, and specifically the term "medical services" is used in respect to the services offered by a physician. But what this bill is referring to seems to be not just medical services but a very, very broad, undefined term, medical treatment.

There's a curious reference to, quote, other health care providers. It's physicians, nurses, and other health care providers. Presumably the other health care providers can provide medical treatment, but all this remains undefined. Now, I suppose that is left to the regulations to make those kinds of definitions, but I think the Legislature should not approve a bill blindly without knowing what the scope will be of something that is called "medical treatment."

The most important issue here in respect to medical treatment is that this bill demonstrates, clearly, a disrespect to physicians and undermines the authority of physicians. This bill makes a doctor or a nurse guilty of an offence and subject to a fine of up to $10,000 if they provide medical treatment without getting the consent of a parent. It doesn't matter what the service is, whether it is good or bad, needed or not needed, if the consent is not given, the physician is in the wrong.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I find this to be an insult to our physicians and our nurses in this province. Does the mover of this bill have any evidence to show that physicians and nurses are giving inappropriate medical treatment to minors? I think we need to have that kind of evidence. Otherwise, why would we make this decision to undermine the relationship of minor children and their physicians? Why would we as legislators make doctors and nurses into lawbreakers when they are just exercising their calling to heal a young person? We should not legislate unless we have studies to demonstrate that such a bill would be in the interest of the good of our society; otherwise, such a bill is quite irresponsible.

The second major problem with this bill is the issue of consent. I appreciate the hon. member mentioning the importance of parental involvement. I, too, am a parent, and my two sons are now adults, but to go with them through all the difficult decisions that they make in their lives is, indeed, a challenge. In an ideal world, of course, parents ought to be involved in the welfare of their children. I have no problems with that. But is legislation insisting on parental consent warranted? In insisting that a parent give consent, it restricts the ability of a minor to give consent, and here's where we come up against the tradition of common law.

A minor in this bill is defined as "a person who is 15 years old or younger." That in itself seems to be quite arbitrary. Why 15? I think Quebec fixes the age at 14. Why 15 and not 14, or why not 16 or 17? There is already precedent on this issue, however. For example, the Alberta Court of Appeal in the case C.U. versus McGonigle in 2003 stated that the parental right to determine whether or not a minor child will receive medical treatment terminates when the child achieves a sufficient understanding and intelligence to provide an informed consent.

So that is the law as it is now. A mature minor can give consent to health care. In fact, there's a booklet produced by the Canadian Medical Protective Association which also concurs in this point, saying that as a result of consideration and recommendations by law reform groups as well as the evolution of tort law on consent, the legal concept of the "mature minor" has become widely accepted and firmly entrenched.

So I think that we have real problems with this bill. It wants to change the common law and move it in a completely different direction. Of course, one recognizes that when we're talking about mature minors, as the age of the child lowers and the difficulties of choice increase, it becomes more difficult to show the necessary understanding and intelligence. But surely the right decisions can be made within the relationship of the mature minor and his or her doctor, and we don't need any legislation to kind of impose itself on that relationship.

Now, this bill doesn't actually mention the minor child's capacity to give consent except in the preamble, but the effect of the bill is to deprive the minor child of his or her right to give consent. Is this not to deprive a 15-year-old of a Charter right? I would make the claim, Mr. Speaker, that section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees to every Canadian, irrespective of age, the right to life, liberty, and the protection of the person.

Can we conceive of situations where this right might be compromised? I think we can. For example, what might happen if a young person is brought into a hospital emergency department? The doctor would have to decide if the situation is a medical emergency or not. If it is a medical emergency, then of course he proceeds, but if it is not, then he would have to find the parent or be subject to a fine. I find this really quite awkward.

The line between medical treatment and medical emergency is not defined in this bill. What if a young person is brought to a school nurse or a summer camp counsellor, and they say, "Well, we cannot bandage your cuts and bruises until we contact one of your parents." In fact, there's nothing in this bill to indicate that maybe parents can give someone else the authorization to give consent on their behalf.

Of course, there are many, many more complex situations, and the hon. member didn't mention the most complex situation, and that is the abortion issue. I'm surprised the hon. member didn't bring that up because that seems to be the main issue behind this bill. Well, of course, abortion is extremely complex. I think that in terms of this bill there are complications on both sides. Whether parents consent to an abortion or whether they're against an abortion, there's still a problem, and it's still an intrusion into the relationship between the young person and the doctor who gives advice.

Anyway, if it is the intent of the mover of this bill to limit the number of abortions, if that is what is behind this bill, then depriving a child of his or her rights is simply, from my point of view, bad social policy. I think we must make a distinction between the morality of the act of abortion on the one hand and the construction of social policy on the other hand.

It is not necessary, I think, to argue about the right or the wrong of abortion. That would get us into a huge debate, and probably none of us want to go to in that direction. But even if one accepts that abortion is the destruction of life and is a great and terrible tragedy, as I would, the question that is all important is: what kind of social policy is needed to limit the number of abortions in our society?

For me, it is a societal good that we both enhance women's well-being and minimize the necessity of abortions. I have no interest in promoting an abortion culture. What is important for me is a good social policy, and I don't think this bill is a good social policy. It will actually endanger the lives of many young women who are desperate to have an abortion. It will limit young women from obtaining safe abortions and will have dire consequences for women who do not have parental consent but who are desperate and will seek abortions whether legal or not, with all of the risks of injury and death and also suicide and the suffocation of newborns. I'm talking about minors: 15-year-olds, 14-year-olds.

A good social policy in reducing the number of abortions would place greater emphasis on medical research in the area of contraceptives, would emphasize, of course, education, the need for a good, solid sex education, teaching both boys and girls that they share in the moral responsibility for preventing pregnancy. One could go on and on and outline what would be the ingredients of a powerful social policy.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, this bill has way too many problems. It's too vague and ill defined. It's simply bad social policy, and I recommend its withdrawal or its defeat. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of Bill 204 is to protect the well-being of children and the rights of parents by requiring parental involvement in a young minor's decision to obtain nonemergency medical treatment. Any child aged 15 or under wishing to receive nonemergency treatment would require the written consent of at least one parent or guardian before treatment could take place.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly feel that parents need to be involved in the lives of their children and that they have the right to nurture and protect their children from anything that may cause physical, emotional, or psychological trauma. If, for whatever reason, a child 15 years old or younger must undergo any medical procedure, I believe that it is important for parents or guardians to be there to support children through difficult moments.

You see, Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are more good parents than bad. I believe that children 15 years and younger still need the love, understanding, and support of their parents to thrive and succeed. I believe that all medical procedures for children are traumatic and require the love and support of their parents. I believe that good parents will guide and direct their child in the best interests of the child.

I remember holding my daughter's hand just before and after she had eye surgery and reassuring her that everything would be fine and that the pain was just temporary, and she was 23 years old. I remember holding my son and helping him to cope with a rollerblade accident that damaged his spleen. He was 15 years old. I remember looking for my 12-year-old child in the outpatients' ward at the hospital when he kind of disappeared just before he had to have day surgery, because he was afraid of the unknown.

I remember helping all my children to take their antibiotics on time and to be sure to finish all the pills and to take their daily vitamins. I cannot imagine that any child would be encouraged to go through any medical procedure without the support of a parent. I cannot imagine that after dedicating our lives to protecting and nurturing our children, after teaching them to use bike helmets and kneepads, after taking them out of a room filled with second-hand smoke, after taking them to hockey and swimming and baseball and dance and music lessons, and after showing them that we would always be there for them, they would be encouraged to go through any medical procedure without our support.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential to the physical, mental, and emotional health of any child to have the support of their parents to help them to cope with the aftermath of any crisis, medical or otherwise, and especially for any serious procedure that can have lifelong implications. Bill 204 addresses children 15 years old and younger. The majority of children this age are still under the care of their parents and are the responsibility of their parents or guardians. There are age limits on drinking, smoking, driving, voting, joining the armed forces, and getting married. Doctors and nurses recognize the importance of parental consent because they require written consent now in most procedures before they begin. I even required written consent for senior Girl Guides in order for them to be able to have a Tylenol during camping trips.

The laws that enforce these age limits are not considered to be a denial of a child's rights. The 20th century began with children having virtually no rights and ended with children having a very powerful legal instrument that not only recognizes but protects the rights of the child. This powerful legal instrument is the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. The United Nations convention on the rights of the child is ratified by 191 nations from around the world, including Canada.

Article 5 states that the child has the right to be protected by parents. Article 7 states that it is the right of the child to "be cared for by his or her parents." Article 14 states that a child has the right to have parents or legal guardians "provide direction to the child." The United Nations convention on the rights of the child also states that every child has the right to develop to the fullest; the right to protection from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and the right to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are children who do not have the benefit of parents capable of making a good decision for them for whatever reasons and are in the care of the government. In these cases I believe and expect that the guardians of a child 15 years and younger will make decisions in the best interest of the child and be there to support them and encourage them in whatever is needed.

I know that there will be much debate about the rights of the child who may not receive good parenting and that a child who is loved will have the support of their parents anyway. It is wrong, however, to think that parents and guardians have no business in the health and welfare of their children, especially those just 15 years old and younger. I know this for sure: good parenting is a lifelong commitment, and there are more good parents than bad or mankind would not have survived this long.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out one more time that this bill does not speak to youth older than 15 but only to children 15 years old and younger. A child 15 years old and under still needs the love and support of his or her parents and guardian, and to require them to make mature decisions that will affect them physically, emotionally, or psychologically for the rest of their lives is unconscionable.

Mr. Speaker, I will support this bill, and I ask others to support this bill simply because it is in the best interests of all young children.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest to speak on Bill 204 this afternoon. It's an interesting bill because of its scope and what it tries, I guess, to cover. My difficulty lies in a number of different areas, not the least of which includes just, somehow, in a basic way excluding or prohibiting certain individuals in our society from receiving medical treatment without a certain caveat placed on that treatment. This is a fundamental difficulty that I have in regard to freedom that would preclude most of these other arguments that I will bring forward here this afternoon.

I can tell you that we've had quite a number of constituents from all across Alberta phoning us and sending messages in regard to this bill, both from individuals and community health organizations. Everyone that I have received information from is testifying to the fact that somehow legislating medical treatment – right? – which goes undefined in this proposed bill and, therefore, could be everything from anything to do with sexuality to abortions and sexually transmitted infection treatment, counselling, et cetera – restricting all of these things and more, really anything as far as it seems to be described in the bill, would definitely do more harm than good.

If teen sexual behaviour, specifically abortion, is the target of this bill, there are other much better and less dangerous ways to go about addressing this issue instead of presenting a blanket coverage and really and essentially an exclusion of certain people that might be seeking medical treatment. We do know that we have a very sad and long history of medical treatment laws in regard to, let's say, abortion. Right?

History has shown us how desperate a female can become when she is set on terminating a pregnancy; there are more deaths related to botched abortion and suicide as well as suffocated newborns: that's a quote that I received from the Edmonton Pro-Choice Coalition. The American Medical Association confirms this, in fact stating in a 1992 report that parental consent laws result in an increase in pregnant teen runaways, back alley abortions, and self-induced abortions as well. A host of other reputable medical associations have reached the same conclusions, including the American Association of Pediatric Surgeons and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

If infanticide, suicide, late-term abortions, botched homemade abortions are a result of such legislation, I must say that I would rather see children receiving some professional medical care when terminating a pregnancy than reading about things in perhaps an uninformed way or receiving treatment that otherwise can put risk to their lives.

Currently abortion is available to young women after a thorough assessment by a professional social worker; it is the social worker's professional duty to ensure that the young woman has not been coerced into having an abortion and that she is competent enough to consent to the procedure; she is given a chance to explore her feelings and receive information about fetal development and the details of the procedure itself: that's again from the Edmonton Pro-Choice Coalition.

Under the proposed legislation it appears that the social worker who counsels the young woman and makes an appointment for her would be otherwise guilty of an offence and fined $10,000 just for making available health information that each individual in our society has a right to have.

For making the argument that abortions are used as birth control, statistics show differently, showing a steady decline in abortion rates over the last 30 years. Even if this was not the case, such an argument assumes that all teenage pregnancies are in fact terminated on a whim by irresponsible young women who failed to take proper precautions. Social workers can testify to the number of teens who then find themselves unexpectedly pregnant after engaging in what they thought was safe sex. This also does a disservice to young women who, upon careful consideration, may terminate pregnancies after concluding that they're not responsible to raise children at that point in time.

Incidentally, less than 1 per cent of all abortions are in fact had by young women under the age of 15. Such numbers beg the question why legislation is needed to make the lives of maybe, assuming we have 3.2 million people in this province, 30 individuals more difficult, especially when we consider that teens are 24 times more likely to die from childbirth than from an abortion performed in the first trimester.

If abortion is the issue, then let's take other steps to provide our youth, whether at risk or not, with information about risk reduction where sexuality is concerned. At stake here is not simply informed access to abortions but treatment for sexually transmitted infections, birth control, other abuse, and prostitution related health problems. The solution is information, education, care, and options, not restrictions and regulations.

Let's not forget that there is an unfortunate culture of abuse in our society that also contributes to sexual problems amongst children. There is a consensus in North America that single teens who find themselves in an unwanted pregnancy should seek support of empathetic, caring, and knowledgeable adults. Ideally, this should be their parents. Absolutely. Parental involvement laws make such notification and/or consent of one or both parents mandatory. Unfortunately, not all teens live in such a supportive home environment. Some are in dysfunctional families where the news of their pregnancy could precipitate emotional abuse, physical abuse, or ejection from the home. This is information that we received from the women's issues group from the United States.

According to the recent figures from Planned Parenthood, close to 85 per cent of teens coming in for services of any sort come accompanied by a parent. It is the reason of the remaining 15 per cent for not bringing a parent that we should focus our attention on rather than forcing them to. The Alan Guttmacher Institute found that the vast majority of young women in fact involved their parents in an abortion decision. A group that successfully overturned a consent law stated that the statute operates only on young women who do not consult their parents with the news of pregnancy because the family is unsupportive, in crisis, dysfunctional, or abusive . . . For these young women, the statute tests the already difficult relationship between parent and child, undermining the very goals it purports to promote.

We certainly do not contest that parents have a legitimate interest in and responsibility for the well-being of the children, be that mental, spiritual, and physical; however, the sad facts are that while in most cases parents are caring individuals who take their responsibilities very seriously, many are not as well. One in four females, one in six males have been the victim of sexual exploitation as a child, and now statistics show that 85 per cent of abuse victims are of a family member or a close family friend. Additionally, 20 per cent of the substantiated sexual child abuse is consummated sex, unfortunately. As uncomfortable as we are facing this horrifying fact, pregnancies and STDs do result from incestuous and abusive relationships.

Therefore, the issue remains that in too many cases parents are involved in child abuse. In such a case to whom is the child meant to turn? We cannot force children in these situations to legally confront their abusers, but we can provide them with medical services that do not require the consent from those same abusers. On average children tell 10 adults of an abuse before someone believes them. Let's help them to get that 10th person by allowing access to a medical professional who may be a nonjudgmental authority figure that they will feel comfortable telling and getting assistance from as well.

It's interesting that we have discussions of children's rights and, specifically, the United Nations convention on the rights of the child, which I don't know if this Legislature recognizes or not. I think maybe they don't for some reason. Anyway, there are some articles that are very important from that document that I think need to be brought up in regards to this particular bill, and I will do . . . [Mr. Eggen's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 204, Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act. I believe the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has brought forth a piece of legislation which, if passed, would positively affect Albertans in many ways. This bill will ensure that any minor aged 15 and under wishing to procure nonemergency medical treatment is required to obtain written consent of at least one parent before the treatment could take place.

It's clear that the reason for the bill and the thought behind Bill 204 is the protection of children. Protecting our children is a concept that is not foreign to any of us. It's a natural and constant force that drives us to safeguard the vulnerable future generations of our society. This concept of ensuring the safety of our youth is also not foreign to the legislation that is in place today in Alberta and throughout the country.

For example, I believe this bill can be compared to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, which was enacted in February 1999. This Alberta legislation, which is commonly known by its acronym PCHIP, was the first of its kind in Canada. The purpose of this legislation is to protect children involved in prostitution by enabling social services and/or police to apprehend and secure them in a safe environment.

Part of that PCHIP act is the establishment of programs which are designed to assist children in ending their association with prostitution. These community support programs are an important provision of this legislation, but in order for the child to become involved in them, a voluntary services agreement must be reached. Under the definitions of the act a child is a person under the age of 18 years, and if the child is 16 or 17 years old, they can access support services without parental or guardian permission. If, on the other hand, the child is under the age of 16 years, a voluntary service agreement can only be entered into with the child if a guardian also consents. Through this measure parents and caregivers are also encouraged to be involved in the programs.

Upon reflection, many pertinent examples where age is a stipulation for participation exist. Perhaps you yourself are thinking of some of the other things right now, and the reason you are able to do so is because such legislation is quite commonplace. Principles such as these have been passed to protect our children from activities which have the potential to pose them harm, many of which they are often unable to see or manage themselves.

I've yet to hear any weighted arguments in favour of abolishing such laws, and I do not foresee any arising in the future. These ideas are not controversial, they are not criticized, they are not protested, and they are instead widely accepted and even praised. That's because such legislation is in the best interest of our children and, essentially, all of society. These concepts are helpful to us, they are a necessity in society, and they are important to all of us. Bill 204 is simply an addition to the list promoting these same values and concerns that we hold so dear.

It's logical to have medical procedures in the same class as community support programs administered under PCHIP because they, too, pose a threat to the well-being of children. Personal medical procedures, including cosmetic alterations, which are often viewed by minors as they watch some of the television shows, are very popular to get involved in themselves to make themselves more popular amongst their peers. They're often very difficult and sometimes impossible to reverse if they have them done without parental opportunity to consult with them and let them know about the long-term and even the short-term implications of those types of procedures.

The complications in both the long and the short term involved with some of these undertakings are often quite serious. There can also be damage done that goes far beyond the surface. The emotional scarring that can result from these physical procedures is extreme as well. Traumatization of this nature can lead to a lifetime of negative thoughts, feelings, and acts. Our children may not fully consider all the long-term ramifications of the physical, emotional, or even spiritual impacts that these nonemergency medical procedures may have on them.

For those in the adolescent years such consequences are sometimes ignored, dismissed, or minimized. Often the appropriate weight is not given because such things seem to be part of the distant future when the reason for the treatment may be impacting them right now. Having all gone through the trials and tribulations of adolescence, I think we can all relate to the feelings of our children as they experience the same things at this age. However, we also know with the wisdom of age that this stage is not permanent. Braces will come off, skin blemishes will clear up, the right girl or guy will find you, and none of these dilemmas require surgery to solve. As some of you may have experienced, logic of this nature is not understood by some of our children. Comments from us in this regard are often countered by replies such as, "You don't understand," or my personal favourite: "How would you know what it's like? You're too old to remember."

When our children have the option of deciding matters such as the need for nonemergency medical treatment without our knowledge, there is a chance, no matter how hard we try as parents, that the concerns of today will dominate their decision, and the realities of their entire lifetime will be trumped by their perceived immediate needs. It is essential that there is a guaranteed and appropriate check in this scheme of short-term thinking. We can take a step towards creating one here today for the parents of Alberta by supporting Bill 204. It's important to note that through the passing of this legislation and the creation of such a check, we will not be unduly limiting the rights of anyone involved. If this was the purpose of 204, I personally wouldn't support it myself as I believe strongly in human dignity and liberties. I would certainly not be supporting it if that was the case.

Human rights are, of course, one of the fundamental institutions upon which this country was built. They are important in more ways than I can express at this point in time. However, it is also important for us to recognize that Bill 204 is not unduly infringing upon these rights. This bill is not trying to prevent treatment, just add awareness, something every parent cherishes and every family needs. By having parents more fully involved in the lives of children, we will help create stronger family ties.

Bill 204 promotes active parenting by increasing the degree to which parents are involved in the personal medical decision their child is making. Once this dialogue is opened in these instances, it creates an atmosphere of trust that is conducive to discussion and consultation in other areas. If through the passage of the legislation we can open up the lines of communication between parents and their children, should we not all feel obliged to do so? Such action could produce a multitude of positive effects in the families of our province and, consequently, the whole of society.

The health of the family goes well beyond the home. It creates a cascading effect in the lives of our children, wielding positive forces in terms of self-esteem, education, and friendships. A positive family environment today goes well beyond tomorrow. Momentum of this kind is carried not for months or days but for generations as the cycle of well-being is passed on.

For the safety of our children, for the strength of our families, and for the well-being of our society I would ask all members to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 204, Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act, gives us the opportunity to consider what we mean by independence, self-direction, informed choice, life competencies, and other aspects that are foundational to a free and democratic society. We need to look at the quantitative limits such as age, IQ, and performance standards we use to determine these competencies, measures that are themselves limited yet that we cannot escape in a changing and imperfect society.

In traditional Jewish and Islamic thought a child became an adult legally at the age of 12 years, but this was not an overnight leap from infancy to adulthood. Those societies provided many supports: apprenticeship, religious tutoring, mentoring, and monitoring of growth to maturity. In western societies we set a later age, 21, when one could vote, leave home, get married, and enter other contracts without parental consent. Under Protestant influence in the North American west the right of passage was not a bar mitzvah but often became the first legal trip to a bar.

There were some anomalies to this age of adulthood. One could be drafted into military service at a younger age, years before he could vote on national issues such as conscription, and he could be sentenced as an adult in criminal court for crimes such as murder when we still had capital punishment. Then there was the age of sexual consent. It was realized that there was a discrepancy between biology and the law and that it was unrealistic even in the most puritan times to prohibit sexual activity before age 21. So the law acknowledged that one could engage in sexual activity but could not commit to another in marriage without parental consent until the legal age of adulthood. Recognition of these anomalies led to a gradual lowering of age: first to 19 for voting in Alberta, which was accompanied by the government setting up of a ministry of youth, then to age 18 and, in some cases and jurisdictions, to 16.

There was another factor contributing to this down-pull of the time that one came of legal age. This was the 1950s and the discovery of adolescence as a market. The word "teenager" became big then, and fashions, movies, and music were crafted to capture youth as a separate culture. With money to spend, whether parental allowance or their own earnings, and marketers ready to part them from that money, another parting took place: the opportunities for interaction with elders and adult mentors. This happened not mainly because youth wished to cut these ties but because marketers wished to be free of other influences that might interfere with their sales pitch to the new target audience.

In the 1960s the gulf between the generations became deeper, and scientific and medical developments provided youth with contraception, abortion, and other options that had not been available to their parents. In the last decade there's been a retreat to the mentality of: everyone for himself or herself. Generations and generations are talking, sometimes indirectly, and trying to understand each other. Perhaps this comes out of the ecological crisis as we realize that we must hang together and support each other on Earth. It is not surprising that this trend first became apparent among our First Nations, who have a greater sense of connection to the earth. In that culture the word "elder" carried respect and did not have the negative connotation of old fogey or outdated, that it had acquired in the mainstream.

About this time the words "mentor" and "mentoring" came to prominence in our own culture. It is from this perspective of mentoring that I speak against Bill 204. I would prefer to see the opportunity for youth to consult with others of experience and complementary perspectives so that they can make wise and informed choices that they can live with even though that process for decision-making may not include a parent. Sometimes, as in this bill, the advisory person will be the parent or legal guardian. Other times it may have to be a teacher, counsellor, coach, aunt, uncle, wise grandparent, or family friend. Ultimately, I'd like to see the range of mentors expanded to allow for alternate or surrogate advisers when parents are unavailable, unable, or unwilling to provide this kind of presence and support. I understand that this situation is more common than many of us realize. I've certainly experienced it in my work as a high school administrator.

We all need such advisers we can turn to whatever our age. We are not providing this for seniors in the form of surrogate or substitute decision-makers to help them in dealing with changes in their lives. It is not simply in dealing with those who have an apparent limitation of age or youth or medical or mental need that require such back-up. To see others only in this light puts us in a position of unspeakable arrogance. We all need each other. For every position of strength or skill there is a corresponding downside. For every vision or viewpoint there is a blind spot.

I do not support Bill 204 because, first, we need a clear definition of medical treatment. Are we including headaches with broken bones, allergic reactions, abortions? What is the scope?

Some children do not have a healthy relationship with parents. Some parents have abdicated that responsibility either because they are unwilling or unable to fulfill the role. These children need advice and assistance from someone else, someone they can trust. Perhaps it is a doctor. Legislation must recognize all children, even those without the protection of parents or other guardians.

I have concern about the erosion of the trust relationship that can exist between patient and physician. Children may not go to a doctor when they need to if parents have to be involved. That is, they may not get the help they need. I'm concerned also that this bill will make doctors and nurses lawbreakers for assisting a child.

The bill, which appears reasonable at first, will have dire effect on the health of young women seeking abortion. This will affect young women from every single community in Alberta. No matter what we think about abortions, they do happen. About 30 to 50 women aged 15 years and younger each year seek abortions in Edmonton. These are women from all over northern Alberta. Indeed, many women come with a parent to have an abortion, but for those who do not have parental support, there will be horrible consequences if they feel that they cannot go to a doctor.

Currently abortion is available to young women after a thorough assessment by a professional social worker. It is a social worker's professional duty to ensure that the young woman has not been coerced into having an abortion and that she's competent enough to consent to the procedure. She's given a chance to explore her feelings and receive information about fetal development, the details of the procedure itself, and the aftercare. This legislation can erode the rights of Alberta women to safe and fully funded abortion. It's a wolf in sheep's clothing and will have terrible consequences for some young Alberta women. History has shown us how desperate a woman can become when she's set on terminating a pregnancy. There will be more deaths related to botched abortions and suicide as well as suffocated newborns. This is a reality. It's unfortunate.

Although as a parent I support this bill because I am a responsible parent and I believe that its intent is to protect children and promote good parenting, the bill suggests something that is complex and needs further consideration and amendment in order to be good social policy. It is not comprehensive, and I cannot support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to be part of this interesting discussion on Bill 204, the Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act. This is an important bill. It will allow parents to have more involvement in their children's lives and in their decisions to obtain nonemergency medical treatment. As such, parents will be in a better position to assure the overall safety and well-being of their children.

Mr. Speaker, I would not prefer to live in a world in which a child can enter a plastic surgeon's office and request breast augmentation surgery or liposuction or rhinoplasty or any number of other cosmetic surgeries without their parents' knowledge. I believe that children are not mature enough to make life-altering and body-altering decisions solely on their own. In order to better protect their children, parents need to have the right to be consulted when their child has decided to obtain nonemergency medical treatment. Bill 204 will help to achieve this goal. By involving parents in their children's medical treatment, we're giving back to parents the right to monitor and safeguard the well-being of their children.

Today, Mr. Speaker, there's a very serious societal set of pressures that encourage people to look a certain way. Young singers and actors regularly alter their physical appearance through surgery, and our children, obviously, are commonly influenced by these stars. This can sometimes be seen simply in the clothing that they wear. Is it unreasonable, then, to think that these children may also be influenced by the actions of these celebrities to take more serious measures? Well, I don't think so. Our children may be tempted to take these measures to alter their physical appearance just as their favourite star has. How can parents be asked to simply stand back and watch their children as they become chameleons based on what they see in the media and in the popular culture, which changes flavours every day of the week?

In the majority of cases children under the age of 16 are still growing physically and mentally, and as such they may not always possess the necessary maturity to consider the very real future consequences of their actions or appreciate that their bodies may change considerably between the present and when they themselves fully become adults. Now, having witnessed fads come and go over the years, parents are in a better position to consider the long-range benefits and drawbacks of certain treatments as well as what's in their child's best interests. Therefore, they should be the primary individuals consulted when their child is considering nonemergency medical treatment.

What Bill 204 is advocating is the collaboration of determination of capacity to consent with the attending medical professional and the child's parent. Parents are mandated by law to provide the necessity of life for their kids, yet they do not have to be consulted as to whether or not their children obtain these or any other types of treatments. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I don't feel that this makes any sense at all. In order to take care of our children as best we possibly can, as parents we must be made aware of our children's decisions and offer our input to assist in managing their overall health. I can't stress that enough. If parents don't know about something, they can't be of assistance. It's as simple as that.

The system that we currently follow does not allow parents to become involved in their children's treatment to the extent that I feel that they should be. If they were, the criteria for consent for medical treatments would be considered valid, and it would include three distinct steps. The first requirement is that patients must be properly informed by their attending medical professional. Their condition is properly explained, and the recommended treatment is offered, and the effects of having or not having the treatment are delineated. The second requirement for consent to be deemed valid is that the consent must be given voluntarily by the patient. The third requirement is that the patient must have the capacity to consent to that treatment. By capacity I mean that the individual must be able to understand the character and anticipated effects of the treatment.

Any minor meeting these requirements for capacity consent is regarded in the same manner as an adult, as has been referred to in the mature minor doctrine of people who have spoken prior. This is the doctrine that established that children of any age can make rational, informed decisions about their health if they have the capacity to give said consent. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that parents are in a better position to judge what's best for their child's overall health. I would argue that our children need the guidance of their parents when considering medical treatment, and I would go further. After having taught thousands of students over the years in various countries at all levels, I know that our children actually want that guidance from their parents.

Now, in the past when the system of allowing children under the age of 16 to consent to treatment came into practice, it could be argued that it was functional and it was practical at that time. I don't feel, however, that this is the best practice for us in our present day and age, nor do I believe that it will serve us any better in the future. Yes, this may be common law and practice, but I believe that our legislation by its nature simply must evolve to match our evolving society. Legislation should also reflect public interest, and I feel that Bill 204 would do exactly that.

At the present moment our children are dealing with a great number of issues that did not seem so prevalent when we as adults were growing up. From the proliferation of drugs such as methamphetamine, which is showing up in our communities and schools at an alarming rate, to the media's bombardment of their viewers with images of the so-called perfect body and face, things are quite different today. Another thing that's quite different today is the amount of disposable income that our youth possess. Many of our young people have jobs, and since they have minimal expenses, they can presumably use this money for whatever they choose, including cosmetic procedures. Parents should have the ability to participate in the activities of their children. They should also have some measure of input into these activities as such involvement is vital to the role of what it means to be a parent.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204, the Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act, would allow parents to regain some control over their children's health and well-being. Given current societal changes, it is more important now than it ever was before that parents help guide the decisions of their children. Any time an individual is considering medical treatment, the utmost thought and care must be given to that decision, and I simply do not feel that children should have to make these decisions all by themselves. In my opinion, parents are in the best position to advise their children and assist them in considering the long-range benefits and drawbacks of any medical procedure. After that, perhaps the procedure would continue. It would simply continue in a better informed fashion.

Therefore, because of the bill's ability to improve parental involvement in Alberta, I am very happy and honoured and feel obligated to support this bill, and I encourage all members of the Legislature to do the same. Once again I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege that I'm able to rise at this time and speak to Bill 204, and I thank the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for his thought and the desire to bring this bill forward early in this sitting. There's no question that the most important unit in our society is the family. There's also no question that it's the parents who have the greatest interest of the child at heart and would look after them better than anyone else. There have been many excellent points brought out about the importance of parents, about consent, and I'd just like to bring out a few other ideas that we haven't maybe discussed.

What is the purpose of having minors if, in fact, we want to talk about free rights and privileges and not needing parents? Why is it that we have put in regulations that prohibit minors from buying cigarettes, pornographic magazines, alcohol, and entering drinking establishments let alone gambling casinos? Those are minor details compared to that of having surgical procedures and free access to do as they so desire.

There's a reason why they're minors, and that's because under the family unit they're raised and protected and taught by their families. Points have been brought up of the desperate situation that many pregnant teens find themselves in, that they are not able to go and discuss things with their parents and therefore need to bypass them and supposedly go to people that have their best interest at heart when that is the furthest thing from the truth. We know that there are cases of abuse, but that doesn't mean that we shouldn't put in legislation to protect minors in our society. There are some abusive parents out there. We need to deal with them on that level and to be vigilant in going after abusive parents.

There have been many points brought up on the negative side about the desperate situation of pregnant women needing to be able to go and have access to a doctor. I would like to just refer everyone to a book called Forbidden Grief by Dr. Theresa Burke. It's a very eye-opening book. It talks about after an abortion: what happens and the struggles that women go through. I think every woman should be counselled and see both sides before they make such a dramatic decision, especially without the consent of a parent. It just isn't a good emotional or physical situation for them to be in.

In counselling groups of women, she found that there's a very high percentage of those women that participated in an abortion that, when she went back, had gone on to have eating disorders, to be suicidal, have drug addictions and various other abusive situations, all going back and rooted in the fact that these young women had participated in an abortion and weren't informed to realize the long-term effects of it. So it's very important that parents are, in fact, the guardians of our minors in our society. If we want to throw away parental rights, surely our society would fall apart. It would become decadent, and we wouldn't have the social organizations and the laws that we do have and the peace that is here. It would become chaotic and not a great place to live and be a part of a community.

I appreciate the opportunity to stand up and give my full support behind Bill 204. It's something that we need here in the province. We want to protect our children, and the parents are definitely the best situation to protect them. Despite the fact that we have some parents that fail to do that, that isn't the reason to give minors full rights to do as they please.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciate the intent of the mover of the bill, I don't believe this bill can accomplish it. This bill can't roll back time. We can't return to a Leave It to Beaver or a Father Knows Best time period. There is, unfortunately, an ugly reality in Alberta. We have among the highest divorce rates in Canada, almost a 50 per cent rate, and we have definitely among the highest, if not the highest, suicide rates. So the idea that, you know, Father comes home with his lunch pail to Mother, who has been making brownies all day, and the kids all were able to go home for lunch, and Suzy is going to Brownies and Johnny is going to Cubs: that world does not exist for many children.

Having taught for 34 years and having coached for a large amount of that time both within the schools and within the communities, I know that age 15 for some children is a lifetime. I'm not talking about child soldiers in Sudan or children working in Third World sweatshops; I'm talking about the reality that exists within this province.

The government seems to be sending mixed messages. Last year this government approved allowing 12-year-olds to go to work, but it's saying that those same 12-, 13-, 14-, and 15-year-olds aren't old enough to make some key decisions. This government does not take into account the reality that we face on a daily basis that more and more children are seeking a sad sanctuary on the streets because their dysfunctional families have driven them there, not by their choice. This bill does not deal with the dysfunction. It deals with parents as one whole, and therefore it fails to meet the needs of the most vulnerable.

As a teacher I would receive phone calls at my home at night from children whose parents were abusing them, and the slow process of getting that abuse from the reporting period to the actual trial was a terribly painful process. A child had to be physically beaten so that you could see the exterior wounds or a parent practically had to be caught in the act of sexual abuse before the law had sufficient cause to pursue the parent. So this bill just does not address the children who are living on the street, and there is a growing number of them both in Calgary and in Edmonton and, I would assume, in Red Deer and our other cities as well, our new city of Brooks. We can't deny that these street children exist, and forcing them to have the parents' approval before they receive medically necessary intervention just adds to the abuse.

We have people who come from different countries and different religions where young brides are killed because potentially they have dishonoured their family. We have people from countries where it's still the practice for sexual mutilation. In our society we would consider cutting a girl's vagina a form of mutilation, but in other countries that's part of an accepted religious practice.

We need to protect children. Within our province we have a variety of different religions. We've had very controversial cases with the Jehovah's Witness faith about blood transfusions. We had the situation where a father wanted his daughter to have a blood transfusion. Neither she nor the mother wanted that blood transfusion to take place. In the end, basically, it was too late for that blood transfusion, if it would've worked, to have done any good because the young lady, unfortunately, died. We cannot change the reality, so what we have to do as a Legislature is protect children to the best of our abilities.

We have voted in this Parliament, in this Legislature to pass such bills as the crystal meth bill. That bill, unfortunately, went from 90 days of in-house treatment and counselling to basically five days.

Part of the reason that bill failed is that we don't currently have the facilities. We don't pay for the base operational funding for programs like those intervention programs to take place. We've recently gone through a series of stages for the environmental cleanup of crystal meth lab areas, and particularly with the environmental cleanup these are more on the punishment end of things rather than on the preventative end of things.

In Calgary – and I'm sure there are examples here in Edmonton. I believe the girl was 15. She was so afraid of what her parents' reaction would be to the fact that she'd delivered a baby that she put this baby in a green plastic bag. Fortunately for the baby, obviously, and for the young mother who made a mistake, the baby was found, but for every baby that is found and rescued, there are a number of babies who aren't, who end up in trash bins because the children are so afraid to tell their parents. Isn't it sad that embarrassment, a lack of relationship or a lack of understanding or a desire to please the parent takes precedence over life?

This bill with all its intentions cannot turn back the clock. If we're going to help children, then we need beds for them in a variety of programs in all our cities and in our rural areas, which will take them out of these abusive homes, provide them with counselling, provide them with support. We've heard about the bond between physician and patient. How much less is that bond between the role of a parent who is not fulfilling their paternal or maternal obligations and the role of the doctor-patient confidence?

I have seen junior high school students, in my experience over 34 years, going to junior high dances dressed up as pimps, as prostitutes, a variety of costumes. Obviously, they left their parents' door wearing these costumes. In some cases the mothers came up with this combined sort of cute cheerleader aspect or the French maid costume, highly inappropriate for junior high.

But that's the reality: 15 There are a number of 15-year-olds at the junior high level. There are a number of 15-year-olds who have been out on the street already for two years. This bill does not address those needs. This bill cannot turn back the clock. What we need is legislation that addresses the reality of today's Alberta world. This bill does not do it. I speak against it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind that we are in second reading of this bill and speaking to the principle of the bill, I'd just like to actually read into the record the preamble to the bill and then speak to a couple of the issues. The bill says:

Whereas the health, safety and well-being of children and families is of paramount importance to the people of Alberta;
Whereas parents have a legitimate interest in and responsibility for medical treatment provided to their minor children; and
Whereas decisions about a child's capacity to consent to non-emergent medical treatment are more appropriately made by the child's parents, and then the bill goes on to describe what it does. I think that is the essence of the debate of the principle of the bill, and I want to speak to two of the issues there.

One would be the second one where "parents have a legitimate interest in and responsibility for medical treatment . . . to their minor children." That particular clause speaks to the paramountcy of parental rights and responsibility. In one sense, Mr. Speaker, we dealt with that issue during last session with Bill 202, when we discussed the mechanism whereby a parent could forcibly take their minor child into treatment for drug issues. That paramountcy was supported and, in fact, loudly endorsed throughout our country as an appropriate mechanism. So I think that is a very important issue that we are dealing with.

A number of people have made some comments – and they're accurate – that not all parents are good parents, and that does present challenges to this bill. I do want to question one of the arguments that says that this is an intrusion into the relationship between a youth and its doctors, nurses, and social workers. In fact, Mr. Speaker, allowing young people to make decisions without the involvement of their parents is actually an intrusion into the relationship between a parent and their youth.

That leads me to the second issue to deal with, and that's capacity. In Alberta there are a number of criteria that must be met for consent to be valid. One is that the consent must be voluntary, so that implies that consent is given without coercion, without compulsion, and that it's based on factual information. The second element – and I just alluded to it – is that the patient must be properly informed. In other words, medical consent is by definition informed consent. Before medical treatment can be consented to, the attending physician has a duty to disclose any and all possible ramifications that may result from the treatment or lack thereof. Treatment undertaken without informed consent can constitute battery and/or negligence. Mr. Speaker, that is important, but I would also argue that not only is information about the medical system important; there are also a number of other factors whereby a parent can bring to bear things of importance to their own belief system, their own family situation, any number. So informed consent has to be larger than just medical consent, and I think that's really where parental involvement is necessary.

Thirdly, the patient must have the capacity to consent. In other words, we make a determination whether an individual is able to understand the nature and anticipated effects of the proposed treatment and the alternatives to said treatment and is deemed to be competent to give valid consent.

Now, obviously, the bill is somewhat arbitrary in that as soon as you pick an age, it does become an arbitrary decision. Given that some teens at 15 are much more capable than other teens or have the capacity, the truth is that in many of our laws we do pick an arbitrary age because that's the only really effective way you can do it. Clearly, I don't think anybody in this Assembly would argue that a five-year-old has the capacity to make decisions about their medical treatment. So age is arbitrary, but I think it's a reasonable age considering all the circumstances.

The point has been raised that minors may not have confidence in their parents, and that is true. I think that's an issue that all of us as parents have dealt with. There's a certain age with our children. I recall quite distinctly that one of our children in particular insisted at the junior high age that we should not come and watch her play her sports activities. I mean, she might be embarrassed by the fact that we showed up. Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you that I did not take her advice. I showed up for all of her games, and now that she is well into adulthood and has three of my grandchildren, I think she's quite happy, in fact, that we insisted that we would show up and show her support. She was actually, I think, glad that we showed up.

There is the issue of coercion, and certainly this is a valid argument for those on the opposite side of the position I'm taking, that you can't coerce co-operation from your teens. It's a challenge that all parents face. In fact, I'm reminded of a well-known story where a young man took half of the inheritance and left his father to go live in a different country and squander all of his money. The story goes on to say that when he came to his senses, he came back, and his father received him with open arms. I think that's a true picture of the feeling and passion that parents, in this case a father, have that really desperately want the best for their children.

Mr. Speaker, despite reasonable arguments to the contrary – and there are valid reasons to the contrary – on balance for me the paramountcy of parental rights and responsibility trumps those arguments, and I certainly am in support of the principle of this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to rise today to speak to Bill 204, and I compliment the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for bringing it forward. As we've been discussing this afternoon, this bill is to protect the well-being of children and the rights of parents by making parental involvement mandatory in young minors' decisions to obtain nonemergency medical treatments.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm reminded of when I was a teenager. There were six kids in our family, and we were all about a year apart in age, so we were quite a herd. My father had a wonderful way of controlling our behaviour. He had four vehicles, none of which was very nice. In fact, I think we could see the ground through the floorboards on the old family station wagon, but he held the keys.

An Hon. Member: It was a motorcycle.

Mrs. Ady: Oh, it was a motorcycle?

He held the keys to these four vehicles, and every Saturday morning he would get us up early, and depending on how pleased he was with us or not, he would distribute the four sets of keys amongst the six children. You always knew when you were out of favour because you did not get a key. You were digging in your purse for bus fare. I bring that up as a point that keys sometimes are important things, and they were certainly important in our lives at that moment.

When I look at this bill, I look at the keys that we give parents to help them raise their children. We certainly give them the responsibility. In fact, I mentioned earlier that while I was in Australia, an hon. member was bringing forward a bill to make parents have to sign contracts to say that they were in charge of their children and responsible for them. I thought it was a fairly different looking bill but still being brought forward. So we want parents to be responsible. In fact, when things go wrong with kids, we always ask the question: where are the parents? Why aren't the parents involved? Haven't they trained their children? Aren't they checking? Aren't they observing? You know, we give them all those responsibilities, but sometimes we don't give them the keys that they need in order to assist and aid their children when they're trying to raise them and help them turn into responsible adults.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a wonderful family doctor. She's been involved in my life and my children's lives for some 20 – well, my oldest son is 26 now. I would say that we have a high degree of trust in each other. She's been involved in all the different adolescent ailments that my children have had, and I would say that they have a lot of trust in her as well. But does that mean that it's primarily her responsibility to raise my children, or is it mine? I think about that. She's a mother. She has children, and I think she probably would want to have that responsibility not taken from her to be involved in those really important decisions that kids make.

Earlier I heard people talking about cosmetic surgery. I am very concerned today with the way young women are starting to mutilate their bodies in order to try and capture some ideal. We're seeing a huge escalation in those kinds of surgeries. As a parent I think it's important that we be involved with our young people in those decisions. I've heard certain members talk about the fact that there are some ugly realities. There are kids out there who do not have involved parents. I heard the word "divorce" mentioned, which we know is at epidemic proportions in some ways. I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I know of a lot of divorced families where even though divorce has occurred, those parents are still very involved in their children's lives and really doing good things as parents in their lives.

I used to always say to my sons, "You know, if you need a rule, I'll make you a rule. I don't know that your brothers all need to have the same rule because they're not having problems. Just you are, so I'll make you a special rule if you need a rule." They hated that, but it's kind of how I felt about parenting. Most of us are trying really hard to be good parents, albeit imperfect. We make mistakes, and sometimes, like the former hon. member mentioned, our kids go through phases where they don't communicate well with us. I, too, had children that would not walk with me in the mall. They wanted to be, like, five stores behind or five stores ahead. They wanted to be dropped off a block from school. They went through those phases, and fortunately they didn't last overly long.

I would say to you that most parents that I know truly want to be good parents. They're trying their very best, and they need as many keys as possible in order to assist and aid their children as they develop. That's one of the reasons that I am attracted to the principles of this bill. I think it does give those keys to parents.

When I look at a 15-year-old, and I look at what that means in grade 9 – I think we're about at grade 9 at the very most. I have young adult sons right now, and I can tell you that even though they're 26 years old, they are still calling me, and we're still solving problems together, and they're a lot more mature than 15. At 15 on the range of where their intellect stood or their capacity to make great decisions, I don't know if I had great confidence then that they should be making life-altering decisions or even minor ones at that point in their lives. I mean, I just felt like it was a good thing to be involved in.

I recognize that all kids do not have the ability to communicate with their parents and that sometimes only a doctor is there, only a social worker, only a teacher, but I would say to you that most kids still do have parents that do care, and we should give them every key that we can in order for them to carry out that responsibility. You know, we celebrate with our kids, we suffer with our kids, we support our kids, but mostly we love our kids. I think we should protect children and let parents do their job.

So I'd like to support this bill and thank the hon. member for bringing it forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, rise to discuss this bill. Quite simply, I don't want to reiterate a lot of the things that have been said. I don't believe that anyone can go against parents being involved in their young children's lives. I think that for people under 15 it's quite legitimate for parents to be involved, for parents to be concerned with what is happening to their child, and I agree, quite frankly, with the majority of things that have been said.

The only comment that I would suggest – and this is a comment that I made to the sponsor of this bill as the bill was coming forward – is that they really should give a much narrower definition of medical treatment. Medical treatment should be defined as a specific thing. I'll give you an example. If a 14-year-old comes to see a physician for an ear infection, there's no problem with the mother simply dropping them off, the child sitting in the doctor's office waiting to see the physician, and subsequently having treatment rendered to him.

So I do agree with the principles of this bill, and this is something that I have stated to the sponsor of the bill. I believe in the principles. I believe in parental responsibility. I believe in parental advice. I believe in parental knowledge for those children that are under the care and auspices of the parent. However, I do believe as well that the terminology of medical treatment must be clearly defined and must be clearly laid out. I believe the intentions of the hon. sponsor of this bill are extremely good. Therefore, I will be supporting it, but I would hope that in committee there would be a definition given to medical treatment in this bill and that it would be altered as such, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I read the bill very carefully and listened to the comments made on both sides of the aisle very carefully. In the bill the whereas clauses of the bill appear very innocuous, and I don't imagine that anyone in this Chamber could agree on what those particular sections of the bill mean.

When one actually reads the bill and realizes what the bill aims at accomplishing, I think it would be very difficult to argue that this is not about any and all medical procedures. I hear mention of plastic surgeries, for example, being touted as one of the procedures that could be prevented from being done without the consent of a parent. Well, perhaps in some cases, although the cost of those plastic procedures usually in themselves cause them to be prohibitive to young people to be done without the consent of a parent. We're not also talking here about eye surgery.

I may be going out on a limb, but I think we're talking about abortion over here, that the intention of the bill is to regulate children's ability to obtain abortion without the consent of the parent. Now, if that is the case, that may be right or it may be wrong depending on one's personal convictions and the convictions of his or her constituents. However, if that is what we are to debate here in this Chamber, then let's draft a bill that speaks directly to abortions, and then we can debate this bill in a coherent way and know what we're all talking about.

Mr. Speaker, there are several problems with this particular bill. If those, quote, medical procedures, unquote, are not available to the children, what options will the children have if they choose not to disclose the need for such a procedure to their parent? What alternative options will the children have, and how will they self-administer alternate medical procedures to achieve the same goal if, indeed, they are not in a position or choose not to or cannot – because in many cases they cannot – share the need for that medical procedure with their parents? Are we willing to accept the alternatives and accept the repercussions of legislating this bill into being and then accepting the repercussions of kids self-medicating and providing themselves with alternative medical procedures?

Mr. Speaker, the essence of the bill really lies in the relationship between a parent and a child. I imagine that in this Chamber most, if not all, parents have good relationships with their children. As a matter of fact, probably most of our families, if not most of our constituents, have good relationships with our children where our child would come to us and disclose a need for a medical procedure. For us, then, we don't need this bill. Our children will come to us anyhow; they will disclose the need for a medical procedure anyhow. Indeed, if it's a procedure that they need, by virtue of the fact that they're coming to us and asking for it, we'll either grant it or not, and the problem issue is resolved.

Now, this bill will only be addressed for those children who choose not to or who cannot go to their parent or a guardian to obtain permission. If they cannot or will not go to their parent to obtain permission, it doesn't matter how many laws we pass in this House. They still won't do it. Now, by compelling them to do it, what you really are doing is depriving them of their ability to go to their doctor, seek sound medical advice, and obtain whatever treatment or surgical procedure they may require, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the question lies in: do we trust our doctors? Do we trust our doctors in the absence of a parent's consent to provide a child with sound medical treatment or sound medical surgery? Well, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in this Chamber at least all of us ought to because we are the ones who legislate doctors into place. We are the ones who legislate the body that governs doctors' procedures in place, and we are the ones where the buck stops if doctors do something wrong. Now, if we don't trust our doctors to provide our children with sound medical treatment, then I think we should re-examine the whole process by which we put doctors in place and whether they are governed by proper ethics and codes of conduct.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we do trust our doctors. We trust them in our absence to provide our children with the treatment that they do require and that will not render them seeking alternative medical treatments outside of the medical community and putting their lives in hazard.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, lawyer I am not, but again I would venture to say that Charter arguments could very easily be formulated against this bill. I heard the United Nations proclamation of children's rights being quoted. One of the main aspects of the proclamation is to provide children with medical treatment. Well, this bill deprives children of obtaining medical treatment where they are not willing or able to obtain consent from a parent.

As a teacher, as an educator, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you – and I believe I heard the Member from Calgary-Varsity mention that it is not uncommon to have a student come to a teacher and say: "Teacher, I want to talk to you one-on-one. I have something embarrassing I want to tell you, something that I cannot share with anybody else." You'd be surprised how often teachers in our classrooms learn of personal situations that children go through at home or with their family or just personally that parents never are privileged to find out because of the fact that there is that sense of anonymity in their ability to obtain advice.

As such, Mr. Speaker, I am moving that the motion for second reading of Bill 204 be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 204, Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd ask that copies of that amendment be circulated to all, and we'll just wait for a fraction of a second until it is.

Hon. members, we have an amendment on this particular bill before the House generally referred to as a hoist amendment. Those who would like to may participate in this debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to have it registered in Hansard that the reality of hoisting this bill and suggesting that it be discussed six months hence basically kills the bill because six months hence the Legislature is not likely to be open.

I would like to think that when we debate within this House, our debate has meaning, that we speak from the heart, that we lay out our personal beliefs, and to the greatest extent possible we attempt to lay out the realities and the feelings and sentiments of our constituents. If this just simply becomes a platform for marketing our religious or moral beliefs to our constituents, then a large part of the purpose of this Legislature is lost. So I'm hoping that this was not an exercise in discussion and debate but that it was based on the member opposite's belief that this bill did not meet the requirements and, therefore, was basically taken out.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, interestingly enough, we have a Standing Order 25(2), which states: "Except as otherwise provided in this Standing Order, no reply is allowed the mover of an amendment or a superseding motion" with respect to this matter. The hon. member brought to my attention an event that occurred in this House on March 6, 2006, when, in fact, the chair at that time did recognize the mover of the superseding motion. So I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor and permit him to participate with respect to this hoist amendment, and we'll spend some time redoing this in the future.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that, and perhaps we're making a little bit of history this afternoon. Maybe we'll have to change our Standing Orders in the future to reflect what's happening.

On the hoist amendment I want to say that I do sincerely appreciate the debate that has happened in this House this afternoon. This, I feel, is what the Legislature is all about. I'll be honest with you: I learned a lot this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I've seen the contents of this bill, what I'm trying to do, from different sides that I had not heard even amongst discussions within our own caucus. I heard some new viewpoints today, and I would have to say that I was very enlightened about some of the different difficulties with this bill as well as some of the positives, obviously. When you put a bill forward in the House, you tend to see only the positives. You tend to think that it is a bit of a cure-all. When it hits the floor of the Legislature, then there is an opportunity to see what other people think, perhaps to get some outside views through various interest groups and through various cards and letters, et cetera. Certainly, I think the debate has been extremely valuable.

I was a little scared to introduce this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it is a socially conservative bill. It is a pro-life bill. I'm not trying to spread my religion to anybody. I'm trying to do the right thing, I believe, for all Albertans. Many of our laws in this land are based on moral traditions. They're based on the Bible, quite frankly. "Thou shalt not steal." "Thou shalt not kill." A lot of the laws that we have today are based on tradition from the Holy Scripture. Although this bill certainly doesn't go that far, there's no doubt that because of my Christian and religious convictions I felt that this bill was very, very important.

I will also say that there are a lot of social conservatives in Alberta. There are a lot of pro-lifers in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. I have received a lot of cards and letters and e-mails, et cetera, asking for this kind of thing to be done. This bill is not a bill that would end abortion. It's certainly not a bill that would defund abortion. It's simply a bill that would try to get parents involved in a major decision, such as an abortion, but it could also be obtaining contraceptives through a doctor's prescription, or it could be cosmetic surgery, as was mentioned in several speeches here. Quite frankly, it's simply a bill that is trying to get more parents and children communicating with each other.

As I said, there a lot to think about with regard to the hoist motion. Perhaps six months from now there will be some more information that would come to light that would help us to make a better decision on this bill. I know that some of the points that were brought up about the mature minor doctrine – well, that's a doctrine that was established for a 20-year-old back in the early '70s, when the age of majority was 21. A 20-year-old was trying to get some medical treatment without their parents' consent, and they were able to get that. So that's when the mature minor doctrine was established. To say that it should apply to 15-year-olds I think is ludicrous, and that's why I brought this bill forward.

Bill 204 is not a slam on doctors or health professionals. It's simply a strong endorsement of parental rights and responsibilities. As I said, we do this kind of thing: we set age limits with smoking, with cigarette purchasing, with the consumption of alcohol, and with other things. I felt that it was reasonable to try to do it with regard to medical treatment.

There were some speeches that talked about a situation of desperation. That's why I tried to put in a judicial bypass here, that you could go to a social worker or a teacher or a counsellor. You could go to a third party, and you could try to have them advocate on your behalf as an adult in order to receive whatever medical treatment you felt you needed.

I think it's pretty sad that in some of the speeches that were against this bill, you know, some of the points that were brought out were maybe not fair to the bill. But, again, that's the whole value and beauty of debate. There were many people asking for this through e-mails, petitions, letters, and calls.

With regards to the Charter issue, well, the Charter is there to protect individual rights, so all bills are subject to the Charter. I mean, if you feel that the bill isn't coinciding with the Charter, then let it be tested in the courts. That's what the courts are there for. That's what the Charter is there for. We don't assume that something is going to go against the Charter before we know the full implications of it.

Lastly, I guess, just defining medical treatment, Mr. Speaker: that seemed to come up in a few speeches. Sections 3 and 4 clearly define medical treatment as any nonemergency procedure or service that involves medical personnel, not a teacher or a school secretary administering a band-aid. That's just ridiculous to bring up examples like that. It's talking about a medical person doing a medical procedure. That's what the definition is. Again, it's very, very clear in the bill.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'll just tell a little story about my own son. I have a son who is 14 years old, and when he reached a certain age, he was allowed by his school to go uptown and go to 7-Eleven. A note came home, and it said that they have to have the parents' consent in order to allow the child to leave the school grounds and go to 7-Eleven. So we took the note, and we sat down with my son. We had a good chat with him about all the pros and cons of going to 7-Eleven. We talked to him about some of the things that he would face at 7-Eleven, some of the temptations, such as stealing, such as maybe being offered drugs or such other things, maybe the temptation to skip out of school once you got off the school grounds. Anyhow, we had a good, long chat with my son, who is 14, and, lo and behold, we decided to give him permission to leave the school grounds. I thought that was really reasonable.

I think it's unfortunate that in Alberta we don't have to have permission for our 15-year-old or our 14-year-old daughters to go and get an abortion so that we can have the same opportunity to discuss the pros and the cons and the good and the bad of such a decision. That's what this bill was trying to do, but I understand that we need to give it more thought. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that maybe we need to have more debate on this issue.

So, in closing, I do support the hoist motion. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 204 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 13, 2006

Youth Consultation

503. Mr. Danyluk moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government, municipal governments, and community organizations to develop mechanisms to formally consult the youth of Alberta on issues that affect their future.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to discuss Motion 503. It is often said that youth are our future, and I do not believe anybody would disagree with this comment, including myself. Therefore, if youth are our future, we need to listen to their voice so that they may help to shape this future which we talk about. This is what Motion 503 proposes.

I feel that it is important to have ongoing and consistent input from youth in order to have an impact on the true needs and challenges of Alberta youth. We must have a structural change to hear the voice of our youth. This must be ever clear, Mr. Speaker. Youth must be involved at the community level, the municipal level, right up to the provincial level.

Presently what we have is youth forums – and they are held throughout the province – that give input for youth. We also have some networking that takes place between those groups to the Youth Advisory Panel. I sit on the Youth Secretariat for the province of Alberta, and there is the Youth Advisory Panel, which consists of 16 youths from throughout the province, yet we do not have any formal connection between the forums, the networking, the Youth Advisory Panel, and the government.

In this province there are approximately 840,000 children and youth. The voices of these individuals must be heard by us as adults and, more importantly, as legislators. Youth should be viewed as a resource. They have the solutions that we are often searching for. They know better than anyone the issues that affect them, but they also have valuable and insightful opinions on all issues that affect this province. It is time that we listen to their voices on a constant and consistent basis. They have the ability to enhance our province as a whole with their input.

As of yet we really do not have a co-ordinated and constant mechanism for consultation with youth at every level. Some may argue that youth simply lose interest in the process. I believe that in order to keep youth engaged, they must be provided with a system with meaningful input. In giving them such an opportunity, our youth are quite likely to be interested in formal consultation.

One of the best features of this motion is that it in fact does not set how the government, municipal governments, and communities should go about consulting with the youth of Alberta. This allows groups in the community, municipalities, and at a provincial level the space and flexibility to decide on a mechanism that works best for their community. My concern is that the youth of this province be consulted; the method for this consultation is up to the government and community organizations in which they are involved.

Mr. Speaker, we need to consult with the youth of today. The youth of today are the ones who will be running our province. We must have Alberta's youth voice their opinions, concerns, and thoughts on the future direction for this province. As the chair of the Youth Secretariat I have worked with and worked for young Albertans a great deal. It has been my experience that the youth are very bright and very enthusiastic as a whole. They have good ideas, and given the opportunity, they can give valuable inputs on issues that affect their future.

Part of the role of the Youth Secretariat is to identify and work to address the needs of adolescents. The key part in reaching this goal is the Youth Advisory Panel. The advisory panel youths work with the Youth Secretariat to come up with solutions to issues that impact the youth of our province. They come up with new ideas and suggestions that enhance our secretariat as a whole.

Our group is made up of a wide variety of individuals, ones of different experiences and different settings in their community. Therefore, I suggest to you that this group represents a great mixture of youth from our province, and their input is priceless to the government of Alberta and to myself as chair of the Youth Secretariat. With their help we can work to address the challenges of the use and abuse of illegal drugs, such as methamphetamines, by young Albertans. We can work to enhance services for youth and fill the gaps in such services. We can do a lot of great things when youth are involved. The answers they have, Mr. Speaker, are often the solutions we are looking for.

Mr. Speaker, the Youth Secretariat is only one form of youth consultation. There are others within the province that are also listening to the voice of youth. We have the Alberta youth forums, as I stated earlier, the Alberta children's and youth initiative under our youth networks, as I previously mentioned as well. These are only some of the programs at the provincial level.

We also have programs at the municipal level. For instance, there is the City of Edmonton Youth Council, which acts as a voice for those youth in the city. The city of Calgary also has input from city youth. They have the opportunity to voice their opinions on such things as Calgary Transit and to be part of groups such as the mayor's youth council.

Mr. Speaker, we do have some youth input in this province. I believe an enhanced mechanism for consultation would be a good thing for all Albertans. Youth change a great deal from the time they are children until they become adults. They know how to work with new technologies before the majority of adults do, and the technology is changing so rapidly. They seem to be able to keep up with these changes. Youth are adaptable, and they can help us a great deal in many ways, only one of which is the technology.

The reality of the youth of Alberta can be used as a resource to help us realize and attempt to address the challenges that face them as a group and all Albertans in general. We have to make sure we are consulting the youth of this province from a community position up to and including a provincial position. We need to transpose the voice of our youth into a positive direction for youth, which, as a result, would be successful for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to speak on behalf of the importance of the youth in Alberta having a voice.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight we're discussing Motion 503, which wants us, the Members of the Legislative Assembly, to urge the provincial and municipal governments and community organizations to develop mechanisms to formally consult the youth of Alberta on issues that affect their future. Well, let's see here. This motion is from an hon. government backbencher, right? Why didn't the hon. member just discuss this within his own caucus or meet with the Premier one-on-one or talk to the minister or ministers involved?

Actually, let me try to determine who the ministers involved are. I know we have a Minister of Children's Services, so is she the one responsible for provincial policy pertaining to youth? Ontario, for example, has a Minister of Children and Youth Services; Saskatchewan has a Minister of Culture, Youth and Recreation; British Columbia runs youth programs under its Children and Family Development ministry: different names but the same emphasis on young people and their needs.

It doesn't matter what you call the ministry or how big the minister's title is. The issue in question is: what attention is being offered to youth programs, and what effort is devoted to engaging young Albertans? Do we need a law to tell this government it needs to do more? Can we force this government to consult with young people on everything, particularly things and decisions which primarily affect them?

You know, Mr. Speaker, I couldn't help but think about how age plays a role in how things move forward and how various decisions are arrived at. Take, for example, myself as the youngest opposition member in this House and the second youngest overall. I look around this esteemed place and compare myself to some of the older members across the way. I come with energy and ideas, and I'm really interested in dialogue and co-operation, whereas most of the members across are jaded and exhausted.

I take this to a bigger sphere and compare the Liberal Official Opposition caucus to the other caucuses in the House.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Zwozdesky: Under 23(h), (i), and (j) I think there's an attempt to impute some false motives there along to several of our members. I'm sure the member didn't mean it the way it came out, but perhaps he should just revisit that comment about members opposite because he has some members sitting beside him on both sides that are just opposite him, and I don't think they would appreciate that either.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the point of order.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would just appreciate some clarification from the member opposite who raised it: what motive was I trying to impute?

An Hon. Member: Lack of respect.

The Acting Speaker: Well, this is not a kind of question/answer back and forth. A point of order has been raised. He had an opportunity to respond, and I have the task of providing a ruling.

Hon. member, the Deputy Government House Leader rose on a point of order, citing 23(h), (i), and (j). Let's see what 23(h), (i), and (j) say.

A member shall be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member:

- (h) makes allegation against another member;

- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

That one I can see possibly being within the realm of the argument being presented.

Hon. member, I'd just caution you in terms of – you know, the language that you use will incite reaction, and maybe you want to get to your point and continue arguing on the debate that's before us.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this clarification. I in no way intended to offend anyone across the way.

Okay. I can move on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Elsalhy: I'll say, for example, that I can communicate with some members from the other caucus more than I do with others. For example, I can communicate and work with the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who is, by the way, the youngest member in this House and the youngest member of his caucus. He presents, from time to time, useful and attention-worthy suggestions like his soon-to-be-debated idea around allocating our huge provincial surpluses.

Back to my point though. I was saying that the Alberta Liberals are the youngest caucus in this House, and as such we would definitely hope that any discussions, dialogue, or consultations would definitely involve us too. I would be interested in seeing the stats on the average age per caucus. One would even extend this survey to how old and what the average age of candidates was in the last provincial election, in 2004.

Now, should we be expanding this to discuss things like the percentage of female representation as well in each caucus? The Alliance and the NDP have none. The Tories have 14 per cent, and we the Alberta Liberals have 19 per cent. We can all do a lot better.

Some member across argues that this motion is only for youth and that we shouldn't be talking about the age of the members. Fine. How do we define youth, and what age group is captured under this definition? Teachers, health professionals, the legal system all have varying definitions for who's considered a youth.

The intent of the motion is good, of course, and I agree that we should look at ways to engage more young Albertans, but couldn't this have been accomplished by a simple letter or face-to-face dialogue with cabinet, like I mentioned earlier, instead of eating up a spot on this valuable and precious private members' time?

I'm also thinking about the recent stories and news commentaries about how the Progressive Conservative Association is having difficulty attracting young people to their party and how, in particular, those young people are not interested in attending the convention and the leadership review this March 31. It is my observation and belief that fewer and fewer young people still or would find the PC Party appealing and attractive. Quite a few Albertans, many of them young, told me that they can no longer align themselves with the provincial Tories. They are more comfortable aligning themselves and believing in the federal Tory party policies, but they cannot do the same thing here provincially.

We can probably look outside to only a few months ago. We celebrated our provincial centennial, and each of the 83 constituencies had a centennial ambassador. Most of them were retired, and the majority of them were either former candidates in provincial elections or friends of current MLAs or even constituency presidents. We didn't treat the centennial as a look to the future. Why didn't we find 83 outstanding young Albertans to act as centennial ambassadors? Is this province 100 years old, or is it 100 years young?

Another wrinkle is that everybody in this House is apprehensive and uneasy about the proposed two-tier health care changes, or the so-called third way. Shouldn't the consultation process, which is very short, one month only and by invitation only, be extended to include our provincial youth? Is it not their future or an important part of it that we're shaping here? Does the government believe that these young people are not entitled to register their opinion whether or not they want a health care system which is publicly administered, fair, and affordable. It is their future we're deciding here. What happens if the government insists on privatizing health care delivery? Some changes are going to be irrevocable, or they would be very hard to undo. What voice or recourse will these young people have when they graduate and join the workforce and plan to have little families of their own? Would it not be too late then?

On a small scale myself I started a group called the Young McClung, which is a nonpartisan youth group where young constituents between the ages of 15 and 30 gather at a local coffee place once a month and discuss issues. We go to a different coffee place each time, all within my constituency. I serve as their host. I buy them their coffee and donuts. What they do is sit around the table and discuss issues that are either current or pressing or whatever is on their mind. The kids came up with the name Mocha with Mo for that group.

The group is led by a young person who is in her fourth year of university, and I must say that everybody around that table is bright, articulate, opinionated, and enthusiastic. Like me, Mr. Speaker, they still have faith in some politicians and they have hope for a better Alberta. These young men and women meet and talk amongst themselves, sometimes asking me to explain things, or they give me their positions on the various issues, and I enjoy being a listener and taking notes. Like I mentioned, they're very bright and they're very opinionated. They're current, and they're aware of the issues.

Now, there's an example of one MLA going to the young people directly, not through an entry on an Order Paper receiving just under an hour of debate.

Another thing I have done, Mr. Speaker, with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore was go to the students at Queen E school back when we were discussing Bill 202, dealing with the treatment and protection of children abusing drugs, in the First Session of the 26th Legislature. We went to the kids – there was a gym full of high school students, grades 10, 11, and 12 – and we asked them what they thought. They even had fill-in ballots that we gave them and they gave back to us. We listened to the for and the against arguments, and then they filled out a ballot that they deposited anonymously in a box. We tallied the votes. We told them what the result was, and everybody was so pleased and so interested in the process. The principal thanked us, and they said, you know, to do it again.

My colleagues and I are also hoping to do the same this year, this time around when we discuss Bill 204, Parental Consent to Medical Treatment for Minors Act, which received its second reading today. We're hoping to engage students again in at least four high schools in Edmonton and ask them for their opinions. We not only invite them to talk and debate the issue; like I mentioned, we get them to vote and we tally their votes and tell them how it went.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that through our own initiative and because we do mean what we say, members of the Liberal opposition do in fact engage young Albertans regularly and effectively. Young people are our future leaders, as the hon. sponsor of the motion indicated, and they are the ones who will continue to move this province forward.

You notice, Mr. Speaker, that I did not even begin to touch the issue of voter apathy and how young people distance themselves from politics and elections, et cetera. I know that some of my hon. colleagues are going to speak about this in more detail. Like I stated before, the youths of this province should be encouraged to participate also in the democratic process.

Many young people, Mr. Speaker, worked on my campaign. The youngest one was 12. This guy came with his mom, and he offered to do pamphleting. I said, "Well, you know, you're probably not old enough." He goes, "No; give me the map and let me do it."

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the 10 minutes allocated have elapsed.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 503. I have my honours degree in philosophy from the university, and when I took that course, the one thing that I learned was that you always have to define your terms when you're debating any issue. So I have two issues with this motion that I hope we can clarify as the debate goes on, and hopefully at the end the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul can clarify his definition of those terms.

The first is a definition of "youth" in this motion. When most people talk about youth, they conceptualize it as sort of that age of 10 years old – yeah, just knee high to a grasshopper – to 18 years old. But to be honest, though youth fits in that definition, the youth that I think is very important to be discussed in this motion is the age group of 18 to 35. Under 18, formative years and still developing – and I've noticed because I don't go to a community in my constituency without going to see the grade 6 class and discussing with them the politics, the legislative process, municipal, federal, and provincial politics because they take it in the grade 6 curriculum. To be honest, Mr. Speaker, they get excited. They get passionate. They talk about voting, and they really discuss issues.

But, Mr. Speaker, the youth age group that typically is disenfranchised and turned off and doesn't get engaged and doesn't talk about issues is the 18 to 35 age group, the group that is just starting to get out into the real world. They might be dating. They might be married. They might start to have kids. It's not until they get to be 35 that they really get engaged because then they start to pay taxes. It's critically important to get that age group of 18 to 35 engaged, so I hope that the hon. member can clarify if that's the group he's referring to.

I have to disagree with the previous two members who both spoke. Both times they used the phrase that youth are the leaders of tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that's fundamentally wrong because tomorrow never comes. We are always at today, and these youth, 18 to 35, are the leaders of today and need to be engaged as such.

Now, the second issue that I hope the hon. member who brought forward this motion can clarify is the word "consult," consult on issues that affect them, Mr. Speaker, because that's very vague. I'm not sure what that exactly means. What issues particularly affect youth besides maybe young issues? Quite frankly, every single issue that we debate in this Legislature, every single decision that's made at the municipal, provincial, or federal level affects youth because they have to live with the decisions that we make today for the next 20 years. They need to be consulted on the best ways, the greatest ideas on how to deal with seniors' housing issues. If it costs one level of government something, it's going to be paid for by youth.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's always been my experience – and I'm talking about people younger than me – that younger people have the most creative, innovative, flexible ideas that I've ever heard because they don't have so much history and so much past that they repeat themselves, that they do things over and over the same way.

So those are the two issues that I hope the hon. member can clarify.

Now, when it comes to consulting youth, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to emphasize that there are three levels of consulting youth that most everybody goes through. They always start at the first level of consultation, and that's when you invite a group of youth in, whether they're 10 years old or 35 years old, and you ask them what their problems are. Then you say, "Thank you very much," and they leave. You've consulted them, you've heard all their issues, and that's where it stops.

Some groups, some people move on to the second level of engagement of consultation where you invite the youth in. You ask them what their issues are, and you ask them: what are some things we can do to solve them? They tell you, and then you ask them to leave. Then you actually try and implement some of them. You actually try and work on them. That's the second level of engagement.

Very few people reach the third level of engagement, which is so critical, and that's when you invite the youth in, you ask them what their problems are, their challenges are, you ask them what the solutions are, and then you ask them if you can fix it together, Mr. Speaker. When youth are being consulted, they have to be consulted in a meaningful way where they have to come up with the solutions and help implement them as well.

Now, as I mentioned before, I try and do everything in my power to engage youth. I visit every grade 6 class in every community I'm in. I don't leave without offering to come in and talk to the grade 6 class or the grade 10 class, to engage them in the curriculum and try to get them excited about politics. I have also, in partnership with a few other members, some of which are in this Assembly this evening, started to work on a group that for lack of an official name or title now is future leaders. I know that I'm succumbing to my own. They're future leaders or they're present leaders. We haven't picked a name. It's to engage young people from 18 to 35 to become leaders, to get involved in their community, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, looking on the Internet – anybody can do this. If you look up information on young leaders, there's an organization in the United States called 18 to 35, which focuses specifically on educating young people about being future leaders. Just information on how to run a meeting, Robert's Rules of Orders, and how you organize volunteers is critical to forming young leaders. We're hoping to accomplish a lot with this organization when we get up and running.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is an important motion for the mere fact that it talks about community-level engagement, municipal-level engagement, provincial engagement. It doesn't specifically refer to federal engagement, but it carries on. In every municipality that I've been to in the province, I have almost always been the youngest person in the room at every single meeting. I'm not just the youngest politician or legislator in the province of Alberta. It appeared for the longest time that I was the youngest politician in the entire province at any level of government. Since the last municipal election it seems like a lot more young people have gotten engaged.

Now, I'm not criticizing anyone in this House, but just to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I was first elected when I was 29. I was the sixth youngest politician elected in the history of this Legislature. I also would like to point out, though, being the youngest, that I am 20 years, almost to the day, younger than the average age of the MLAs in this House. I am 40 years younger than the two oldest MLAs in this House, and I have to point out that the two oldest MLAs are from other parties, not from our party. This House right now is experiencing one of the highest average ages it has ever had in its history, yet this province has the youngest population on average of any province in Canada.

Mr. Strang: Because they're all making money.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, maybe some of them are making a lot of money. This being in politics isn't exactly a highly profitable business.

Now, it's more critical than ever to engage youth – I'm talking about the 18- to 35-year-old group – to get them involved in the decisions we make today that we're going to have to live with for the next 20 years, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the last item I want to talk about, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to youth is rural development. I've worked for the last four years as an MLA on rural development. We identified that health care, education, community infrastructure, economic development, growth, small business development, not just agriculture but both, youth, seniors, aboriginals, the environment, arts, and culture are all critical elements to successful rural development, but not one of them was more critical than engaging youth. For every four youth that are born in rural Alberta, three of them leave rural Alberta to go to the city and only one comes back. That causes incredible depopulation of rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the most creative, innovative ideas come from young people. Our volunteer base comes from young people. Our energy comes from young people. When those communities lose their young people, they lose their energy, they lost their creativity, and to some extent they could be doomed to die. So when most communities in this province are looking at rural development, they're trying to engage and activate themselves to find solutions to some of their problems, the first thing they are doing is engaging youth in their community. They're trying to get them involved at the municipal level, at the provincial level, on community volunteer organizations. Whether it's getting involved with the Elks or the Legion or on an economic development group, they're trying to get them involved.

Mr. Speaker, we have succession planning for agriculture across this province. That's where people who are 60, 65 years old who are thinking about retiring find ways to help transition the farm to the next generation. There are actually a couple of communities in this province now – and they're leaders in this – that have started to engage young people to find out what sort of businesses they would like to take over or start in town so that they don't have to leave to find something to do, and hopefully they'll come back. They try and get them involved in the community, involved in businesses right away.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say – and I know it's probably going to sound partisan because I'm 33 – I still classify myself as a youth because I've put it up to 35, and when I actually hit 35, I'll keep moving the bar up a bit.

An Hon. Member: You're a baby.

Mr. Griffiths: Yeah, I know. I'm a baby.

Mr. Speaker, this is a critical issue, and I hope everyone supports it.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the youngest youth of the Assembly, but the 10 minutes allocated has run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As one who has had the privilege of working with youth for many years, I realize that youth have changed a lot over the decades, and I identify with the former speaker in asking: what do we mean by youth? There are lots of different definitions, but I need to point out that youth today have roles that aren't normally attributed to them: workers, parents, and taxpayers. Youth are also increasingly independent consumers specifically targeted by corporate marketing.

Youth, I believe, can enrich our political system and our communities, but the fact is that for a variety of reasons they are less active in the formal politics of their communities than older residents. We find that approximately 1 in 4 – that is, 25 per cent – youth voters 18 to 24 voted in the 2000 federal election, whereas approximately 4 in 5 – that is, 80 per cent – of voters over 48 years old voted in the 2000 federal election. Age seems to be a primary determinant of whether one is going to vote. Only 3 per cent of Canadian party members are under age 25. The average is 59 years. So the concern is that the growing trend is that youth will not outgrow their disengagement, driving electoral participation down further.

When we talk about engagement – we use that word a lot, I think – I, too, want to say that I have worked with the youth in my community. I had them helping in my campaign, and we have some good things that are happening. While it may be true that young people are less cynical about politics than our older citizens, research shows that they do feel a profound sense of disconnect from political institutions. Elections Canada research shows that the young people who are active in volunteering in community organizations are to a considerable degree the same ones who will turn out to vote. In other words, civic engagement and voting tend to go together.

In Mill Woods we have a couple of youth groups that are doing quite well. One is called a youth federation; the other one is a youth council. They have different mandates, but the overriding thing that they have in common is the meaningful and sustained involvement of themselves in an activity focusing outside themselves.

Engagement has cognitive, emotional, and behavioural components, that is, the head, heart, and feet. When you're working with youth, you need to engage them. You need to have them participate by being active, by going out and helping people in seniors' homes, or helping in hospitals, or anything that you can find that is meaningful, that they agree is meaningful. You give them the opportunity to actually see the results of their actions then they are more likely to become engaged.

In this bill we're talking about the need for that engagement and participation. If what is taking place in our political institutions is real and offers an opportunity to make a difference, youth will participate. I think the idea of consulting with youth is well and good, but it must be more than tokenism, must be more than the public consultations that ask for opinions and then ignore them, and it must be more than staging the questions to come out with a predetermined conclusion. If political leaders really want to consult with youth, they have to be prepared to be called on the carpet without excuses or evasions and be able to admit when they blew it: the same direct kind of language that youth will use when they talk to each other. Then we have a hope of meaningful consultation. If that type of consultation is the intention of this bill, then it is an act of courage, and I will support it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on this motion. I find this motion to be rather important, even though it's only a motion. It's not a piece of legislation. I think the very fact that we're having this dialogue over here and becoming more conscious of the fact that there is a need out there for engaging our youth in the political process is important within itself. But with one caution: as I listened to some of the previous speakers, I noticed that there was a tendency to politicize this conversation. All of a sudden this has become a Liberal versus Conservative or perhaps NDP versus Liberal conversation. I think that in itself misses the very essence of why the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul has put the motion forward because in my opinion that kind of dialogue is the very reason why youth don't engage in the political process.

I think the youth of today are much more open minded and much less affiliated to very well-defined doctrines and regimes and political parties and are much more likely to be shifting based on personal convictions and on the topic being debated. To try to polarize our youth now between political lines is self-defeatist because that's the way to detract as opposed to attract the youth.

It's not a secret that all political parties within this country are seeking greater input from youth and are seeking larger enrolment and membership of youth, maybe not necessarily in the formal process of purchasing a membership but just sheer engagement in the process and in development of policy. I think every party not only provincially but even federally. We had all major parties federally having drives to get the vote out during the last election on the federal scale, recognizing the fact that we're losing youth's attention. How are we losing it? Because of the politicized debate and the very derogatory and, perhaps, overzealous arguing of topics, and that loses their attention.

Mr. Speaker, we need to engage the youth. If we are to get fresh ideas, if we are to be in touch with a large segment of our voting population, we need to know what their thoughts are; we need to know what their dreams are; we need to know what they like and what they dislike about what we do. And they are a large percentage. If you use the 30 per cent bracket or 35 per cent bracket, we're looking at a large percentage of voters. Imagine if we chose not to engage males in the political process or chose not to engage females in the political process. That would be unthinkable. Yet somehow perhaps not on purpose, perhaps not by design, simply by our conduct we choose not to engage the youth, and I think it's incumbent upon us to engage our youth in the political process. Not in the traditional political process. They don't need to buy memberships, but they need to be involved. They need to read newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, I would argue that we're in a very troublesome situation. If you combine the sales of the Edmonton Sun and the Edmonton Journal and compare them to the population of the readership, less than one-quarter of individuals – and that's allowing for shelf life of a newspaper – read daily news. That means they're disinterested. They, frankly, are not interested in what's going on in the House. They're not interested in the political process. Why? Because, frankly, they don't think it engages them. They don't think it has anything to do with them, and it's almost a fatalistic approach. They feel that they can't influence the process at all.

So I commend the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for thinking of this motion, for bringing it forward, and for at least getting us to reflect on it. If it's only for an hour, perhaps some of this residual conversation will carry on outside of this Chamber and motivate some of us to get the youth involved in the process.

As such, Mr. Speaker, I will support that motion. I think it's a noble one, and it carries a lot of potential. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pleasure to rise and speak to this interesting motion from a relatively young member of this Assembly, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. It was, indeed, very interesting to hear the youngest member of the Assembly speak on the motion and about issues of youth and age and these demographics that we seem to take as unproblematic, as if once you turn 25 or 30, you all of a sudden overnight change.

The motion similarly has the intention of focusing on engaging younger members of our communities, of our province. I presume engaging them in matters of public interest, public policy because this Assembly's responsibility primarily is not with the private lives of individuals, whether they're young or old, but more with their public status as citizens, as members of communities, and the issues that are relevant in terms of public policy to them.

So I think the motion lacks some sort of focus on what exactly it calls on this Assembly to do by way of consultation and exactly whom. It's easy to slice populations in terms of age, but does age really matter all that much when it comes to, for example, issues of war and peace, issues of environmental pollution or environmental health, or the future of our health care system? I think there are many issues, public policy issues, over which distinctions of age blur relative to other variables or other identities that people might have. Whether people are poor or rich might matter more whether they're young or old on a certain issue. Whether people live in rural areas or in urban areas may be yet another matter. Consumption of culture is another issue, you know, what kinds of tastes, lifestyles, people adopt. Age may be more significant, for example, in that regard.

So simply referring to youth without exactly indicating what we are talking about, does raise some of these issues which must be addressed. Questions that are begged by this are, you know: is youth an identity, or is youth just a matter of numerical, sort of, configuration? You're over 25 or 30. I know that in the youth wing of the New Democratic Party, you know, the top age is 25. CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency, has a cut-off age of 30. There are various measures, various positions on when youth ends and the sort of postyouth period starts. So it's not clear exactly what youth is going to be consulted and for what reasons.

The identity of being young is another matter because once people begin to define themselves as belonging to a certain group, in this case being youth, then that matters socially; that matters politically; that matters in terms of policy. So I think these are questions that are germane to the debate on this motion before we proceed to the consultation issue.

A second one on the issue of consultation that worries me a bit: consultation over the last little while has got itself a black eye, if I may use that term. People ask: what does it really mean? Is it getting a few people together behind closed doors and talking with them about matters that you have on your agenda, or is it really public participation in a public forum where youth argue with each other, youth exchange ideas with each other and with others who are not so youthful or young? The whole question of consultation sounds very nice but raises questions about what exactly, if this Legislature voted on this motion and endorsed it, consultation would mean. What form will it take? Will it be open? Will it be transparent? Will it be engaging? Will it ensue into healthy debates about issues of the day, or will it be exercised again in selectively picking people and then sitting with them to interest them in issues that may be on the top of the mind of those who want consultation. For me to enthusiastically support the motion, I would like to have some answers to these questions. What is this group that we are talking about?

There were references to the oldest members of the House being on this side of the House or that side of the House, and I just want to assure those young members of the House that age may not in fact separate us as much as ideas might. It's not so much a matter of years; it's a question of what ideals move you, what ideas you espouse and embrace, what kind of dreams you have about not only your own future and about your own cohort of aging people but about the world in which you hope we'll all walk into in the next few years or the next decades.

To me it is that kind of engagement that we need to invite people to talk about: what kind of world they want, what kind of future they envision, and how they think that they can challenge us all – young and old, poor and rich, rural and urban, highly educated and those who drop out of school – how we can all engage each other in asking those important questions, the questions about our future. Youth is our future, but all of us have a future, and all of us have a stake in that future. Surely, if we can get more young people, men and women, participating in our political system, turning up at election time and at least voting, that would be great.

I think we have to really get everyone to ask the question: how can we get all of those people who at the moment sit outside of the political process engaged, be they young, be they old? Why is it that people don't participate? People don't see their stakes in important issues of the day, whether they're talked about in this Assembly or outside by volunteer organizations, nongovernmental organizations, community groups, or church organizations, whoever they may be. There are important issues, there are important questions to be addressed, and there is a concern that the public sphere seems to be of declining interest to a growing percentage of people, particularly young. If we lose people and their interest in the public sphere, I think the whole future of democracy is at risk. If we inspire each other to engage each other in these core issues and core concerns, I'm sure we'll be able to get the youth involved in it too.

I certainly applaud the member for bringing forward this idea, this opportunity for us to debate, but these are issues that require serious questions about what we are talking about. Are the distinctions and these divisions really as clear cut as sometimes motions such as these assume? I'm afraid my view is that they aren't; therefore, the motion lacks clarity, lacks focus. I hope this kind of discussion will help the member to move forward with a clearer view of what he wants to accomplish with this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Motion 503, youth consultation. I do feel somewhat qualified to speak on the topic. It's, believe it or not, not too long ago that I was actually fitting into that category although, like many members, it's slipping very quickly away.

Motion 503 is an idea whose time has definitely come, and I'm very pleased that we're discussing it here today. Now, that is not to say that this government has not already encouraged the involvement of youth. There are several government initiatives and programs that are aimed specifically at youth and with good reason. As the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul has suggested, the most precious resource in Alberta is not our oil or our wheat; it is our children.

At this point I wonder if it is the will of the fine Members of this Legislative Assembly for me to break into a rousing rendition of Whitney Houston's "I believe that children are our future."

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodney: No? No song? Okay. Well, I'll just give you a cliché then, the cliché being: the leaders of tomorrow. Of course, the Member for Battle River-Wainwright has dealt with this already. I'll just say this: the future success and failure of this province will be their responsibility sooner than we think. The ideas they develop in the next 20 or 30 months, the next 20 or 30 years will be directly tied to the perceptions that they form today. So it's vital that they be involved in every way possible.

When I say involved, Mr. Speaker, I speak in the broadest sense. The possibilities, obviously, are limitless. There aren't too many young things Albertans don't have an interest in or won't have an interest in at some point in the future. Many issues we discuss in the present will have great significance for the citizens of tomorrow, so it makes great sense to get them engaged as soon as possible.

Sometimes when we think of a process of engaging youth, we tend to think of only those who are disadvantaged or those who are in need of help. In other cases, we as adults think that youth should be consulted only about so-called youth issues. Sometimes we feel that youth face specific challenges that are different from those we face as adults. In some cases this may be true; however, many of the decisions that adults make are made with the future interests of children in mind – we talked about it earlier today – so it isn't unreasonable that we make every effort to engage them in a wider range of issues.

There are a lot of perceptions about young people – there always have been – that may prevent them from becoming involved. Sometimes younger folks are seen as apathetic, but after having worked for quite some time now, over a couple of decades, I can tell you that what I've seen is the exact opposite. I know that the great majority of our young people are overflowing with ideas, and what I really like about this motion is that it is not restrictive. This is an important gesture which reinforces the point that we want the input of our young people. Sometimes certain adults can get caught up in the belief that experience is the only prerequisite for wisdom. When that happens, we lose sight of the fact that cynicism can then develop, which may prevent new ideas and perspectives.

Young people often look at things from a different viewpoint. We know that. Sometimes a different viewpoint is exactly what's needed to bring clarity to an issue. If there were never any new ideas, no progress would ever be made. Right now, right across the province young people possess great ideas that are well worth investigation. Motion 503 seeks to strengthen input of youth and increase their involvement in decisions that affect their future. We have a duty to make these decisions in their best interest. To do that, we need their help, not only to brainstorm but to create the action plan and then implement it. Some of us may not be around for that implementation, so indeed it is directly related to them.

Therefore, it stands to reason, Mr. Speaker, that we should facilitate in every way possible the involvement of our youth as we continue to improve our province and give consideration to the ideas of tomorrow today. This motion is a vital step towards that goal, and I'm proud to offer it my support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Youth are obviously critically important to us, and youth issues are equally important to them and to parents and to all of us as a society. I have to tell you that as Minister of Education I have the pleasure of being in touch with youth every single day, and I take that responsibility very seriously. It's for that very reason that in my ministry we are going to be hosting a series of round-tables around the province starting very soon, culminating with a symposium on high school completion rates later this fall; at least that is the plan and that's the target. We want to consult very specifically with youth and for youth about issues that are affecting them.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, we hope to come out with a very thoughtful and thorough game plan that will help us to increase the high school completion rates in the three-year window, which members here would know is where we need the improvements made. We're not doing too badly in the four-year window or the five-year window. We're certainly doing very well when we talk about youth in the 25-year-old range, if we can still refer to those as youth, and the numbers in that age who have completed high school, but that's quite a few years after the normal expected completion date.

I also want to mention quickly that there will be considerable consultation going on with respect to the Premier's Crystal Meth Task Force. This is another serious way that we are consulting with and for youth. It's not restricted to them, obviously, but we will be talking with them a lot. Last year I had engaged my officials in a crystal meth study to find out what the issues were out in the community. In fact, I talked with every single school board when I met with them about this issue, and they, too, are speaking with their youth more actively perhaps now than before.

Finally, in my role as Minister of Community Development over the past few years, before I took on Minister of Education, I can recall our annual Vitalize conference. Vitalize, as people here would know, is a conference for volunteers essentially. This is a conference well past its 20th year, as I recall. There was a specific component every year within that particular conference for youth to meet and to speak, to gather, to chat, share ideas, and typically, if memory serves, we had about 150 to 200, perhaps more, representatives in the youth category. In 2009, of course, we're hosting the international skills competition, which is all about youth as well, and I don't have time to get into that.

However, I do want to applaud the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for having brought this particular issue forward because he's trying to share through his motion that municipal governments and community organizations and all of us have a stake in the future of our youth and in listening to what their issues are and responding accordingly. Therefore, I will be pleased to support this particular motion, which has at its heart a formal consultation mechanism or series of mechanisms at all levels of government to advance the issues that are on the minds of the youth today and how those issues will impact their future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge other members to seriously consider supporting this. Let's give it a chance to work its way through and see what we can do to make things a little better for the youth of Alberta.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all hon. members of this Legislature for their comments and, I guess I'd have to say, for their song.

I do want to make a couple comments. The first one is to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who basically brought forward the concept that age is very relative. From that aspect, saying that age is relative, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona looked at me and suggested that I have some youth, and of course I look at the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, and I suggest that he has youth. But I want to say that who I am trying to address in this motion specifically, or maybe I want to say isolating, are individuals who do not have a legislated opportunity to have input because presently if you have legislated opportunity, you do have some ability to have input. I'm not saying that it should be constrained to that age group, but that's mainly where the focus is.

I would also like to compliment the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, when he talked about the leaders of today. I very much agree that it is not the leaders of the future; it is the leaders of today. But we very much need to give them that opportunity to hear their voices and be the leaders of today.

I want to also stress that I feel it is very necessary to get youth involved. The question that came up is: what type of consultation? As everybody here knows, this is a motion. I believe that consultation, as was stated by one of the hon. members, is possibly the first step. There needs to be an avenue in order to have meaningful and, if I can say to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, transparent and open discussion. I think it's very, very important.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by saying that in order for us to be successful as a province, we need to have input from youth at all levels. I stress again: at all levels. They need to be able to give meaningful input to community organizations, municipal governments, and also to us at the provincial level.

Mr. Speaker, our future is today. We must work harder to hear the voice of Alberta's youth. For this reason, I ask all members to support Motion 503.

Thank you very much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried] head: Consideration of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Johnson moved that a humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Bonko]

The Acting Speaker: Any other speakers?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried]

head: Government Motions
Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

10. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Klein:
Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Address to the Assembly by Mr. Ray Speaker

11. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on March 15, 2006, welcome to the floor of the House a former member, Mr. Ray Speaker, to address this Assembly to mark the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the convening of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on March 15, 1906.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 13
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 13, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, the Real Estate Council of Alberta is responsible for administering the Real Estate Act. These amendments will strengthen the Real Estate Council of Alberta's authority to combat mortgage fraud by adding this statement to their purposes: "to protect against, investigate, detect and suppress mortgage fraud as it relates to the [real estate] industry."

This amendment may appear to be small, but it will do two important things. First, it will clarify that the Real Estate Council of Alberta has the appropriate investigation powers to carry out activities related to combatting mortgage fraud. Second, it will enhance the Real Estate Council of Alberta's ability to share personal information about mortgage fraud perpetrators while respecting the privacy rights of individuals. These amendments are a direct result of the recommendations of the advisory council on mortgage fraud.

In summary, the proposed amendments will go a long way toward ensuring that the government of Alberta tackles mortgage fraud as effectively as possible and that the Real Estate Council of Alberta can play a fuller role in combatting it.

Mr. Speaker, thank you. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 13.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4
Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a modest amount of pleasure to rise and speak about Bill 4, the Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006, in second reading.

I chuckle a little bit at that because, of course, we've just come through an hour of debate on Motion 503, which was all about consulting youth. There was some discussion – I won't call it an argument – back and forth on the floor of this House as to what constitutes youth, who are youth, and when we are no longer youthful. As the Member for Battle River-Wainwright will discover in the fullness of time a few decades hence, middle age doesn't really begin until somewhere between 65 and 75.

In any event, because we were discussing youth and youthfulness and things like that, I was taken back a year or so to my misspent youth, growing up in southern Ontario in the small city of Sarnia in the late '60s, early '70s, when the band Chicago had a hit called Does Anybody Really Know What Time It Is. That song had a certain resonance for those of us who grew up in southwestern Ontario because at that time from I believe the last Sunday in April until the last Sunday in October nobody in Sarnia ever really did know what time it was or could tell by turning on the television because, of course, this was before cable, before satellite, before any of that. We had five channels: one from London, three from Detroit, and one from Windsor.

Now, I guess the rest of the province of Ontario went on daylight time, as did most of Canada with the exception of Saskatchewan. But Windsor and Essex county in Ontario would stay on standard time because at the time the great state of Michigan, in its collective wisdom, elected not to join most of the other states in the United States by going on daylight time. So Michigan state was on standard time. Mr. Speaker, because historically there have been so many Windsorites who have worked in Detroit and so many Detroiters who came across the border every morning to work in Windsor, it seemed to make sense for the people of Windsor and Essex county to stay on the same time as Michigan. There are many people in many other parts of Ontario who have often wondered whether Windsor is really part of Ontario, but perhaps that's beside the case.

Anyway, all our television programs were on – I can't remember now. Were they on an hour earlier or an hour later? They'd be an hour later, I guess, than what it said in the TV Guide. So it was a several-months-long exercise in mathematical gymnastics to figure out, you know, whether the Tonight Show was on tonight or tomorrow. In any event, we all survived except for those chronological purists in the state of Michigan, who were eventually forced by the times, the tides, and other Michiganders to join most of the rest of North America and go on daylight time.

I bring this up for no particular reason other than it's just a bit ironic that we get into these sorts of discussions. I mean, there's no question but that this bill is going to pass, and there's no question but that this bill probably should pass. We're not even first off the mark here in Canada. Ontario, Manitoba, and Quebec have already adopted very similar legislation to move daylight time back, to have it start the second Sunday in March rather than the first Sunday in April, and to extend it to the first Sunday in November from the last Sunday in October. Many reasons are given for this: how happy the kids will be at Halloween because now they'll be able to go out in the daylight. I don't think the kids will be happy about that at all. I think the parents will. I think it takes away a certain amount of the boo factor from Halloween if you actually go out trick or treating, you know, in daylight.

One of my colleagues was going on today in a meeting that we had about how wonderful it will be, you know, for all us sun worshippers because we love the daylight. There was even some reference to the ancient Egyptian sun god Ra. I can only assume Ra was named in ancient Egyptian because, of course, in these days of thinning ozone layer and all the rest of that, if you stay out in the sun, worshipping it too long, you're not so much raw as you are cooked or burned. [interjection] Thank you. Well, you know, it's better than singing. What can I say, Mr. Speaker?

Some are saying that it's absolutely vital that we make this move so that we synchronize Alberta's time with that of our largest trading partner, the United States. Now, I made reference to Michigan a few minutes ago and how for a number of years they withstood the peer pressure from the other 49 states to go on daylight time and ultimately succumbed to that. Our next-door neighbour to the east, Saskatchewan, still doesn't go on daylight time. I don't know if it ever has, but it certainly hasn't in my lifetime. It seems to survive. It perhaps doesn't prosper to the extent that we do here in Alberta, but it does okay. I think that that's a bit of a spurious argument, that we have to change the clocks at precisely the same moment that our American neighbours change the clocks or else the wheels of commerce will grind to a screeching halt here in the province of Alberta.

I mean, we now deal with our largest trading partner across at least four time zones, and we seem to manage that okay. We seem to have worked out the time difference between Calgary and New York, the time difference between Edmonton and Los Angeles, the time difference between Red Deer and Houston. You know, we manage okay, so I don't really think we need to do that. Nevertheless, we will because this is just one of those things that happens.

If you're someone whose children go off to a school where the day starts early, you will have some concerns about this because your children will be walking to school in the dark for part of the year, no question about it. If I could give any kind of advice solicited or otherwise around that, it might be to school boards to take a look in light of what we're proposing to do here, to extend daylight time, at changing the hours of operation of some of the schools so that our small children do not have to walk to school in the dark. That is a very real concern for parents. Otherwise, I can't really see too much problem one way or the other with this. I guess the sun worshippers will be happy.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that I can be talked into supporting this right along with the rest of the House. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to briefly speak to Bill 4, Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006. The member who just concluded his remarks before I rose I think touched on some of the issues that I had in mind, too, the argument that is made in favour of changing daylight saving time. The minister's own comments the other day suddenly focused a great deal on harmonizing daylight timing arrangements with the U.S. in light of the fact that more than 80 per cent of our trade is with that partner and that if these changes are taking place there, they must here as well and that if they don't, then that would somehow affect the efficiency of the flow of goods and services across that very, very long border.

When I start thinking about it, Saskatchewan hasn't really changed its time. It's next door to us to the east. They haven't changed the time during the NDP regimes, during the Liberal regimes, and during the Conservative regimes. So it's obviously not a political issue. It's not an ideological one, so it does remain a question in my mind how Saskatchewan has dealt with the rationale they have for not changing while we are using our rationale to change. I'm not opposed to change, and I support the bill, but certainly it's a question that arose in my mind.

The second question that arose is: if we turn the clocks forward the second Sunday in March – if we'd had this legislation in place for this year, we would have done that yesterday, I think. Given the times of school openings, the other question that did come to mind was: would it add inconvenience, if not add some risk, you know, for children walking to school?

There is an argument made that making this change in daylight saving time would in fact increase safety on the road or on the street for people crossing the street because those of us who are driving in the late afternoon would still be driving in daylight. We'll be able to see people crossing the streets and whatever have you, so it increases safety.

At the other end, early in the day, the issue of the safety of young children going to school certainly did cross my mind. Perhaps that's where the Minister of Education would take note and maybe ask school boards to raise this question at least for discussion and see if there's any merit in adjusting school opening times in view of the change that this bill will bring about with respect to daylight saving time.

There are other good reasons, persuasive reasons, to make this change. Conservation of energy certainly is increasingly on the minds of all of us, certainly most people in the House and outside of the House. Moving the clock, making this four-week adjustment to daylight saving time, increasing that period during which we use daylight saving time I think will certainly help conserve energy, reduce the costs as well as save on the environmental side of the equation, help there. So there are good reasons, economic reasons certainly, environmental conservation reasons, and perhaps safety reasons to move forward with this change.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the support of this member, of the caucus he represents here tonight for Bill 4. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 5 Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. The bill deals with minor amendments to three pieces of legislation: Civil Enforcement Act, Judicature Act, Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act. These amendments came mainly from practical recommendations from legal institutions, the first having to do largely with allowing an enforcement creditor to give notice of his or her claim to the civil enforcement agency that has seized property on behalf of a distressed creditor. The second deals with clarification of the court's discretion to order periodic payments of damages and is presumed to be in the interests of the plaintiff. The third appears to have to do with more modernized recording devices in relation to oral testimony.

On behalf of the party I think it all seems very cogent and valid, and I don't think there'll be any resistance from this side. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did you want to speak?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak on Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006. Most of the amendments that this bill is bringing forward make sense. I was looking through the minister's comments that he made while introducing the bill for second reading on February 28, I think, when he spoke on this, and they are very helpful in providing the reasons why these various changes in the existing statutes are needed. I think that some of the changes are required by changes taking place in other pieces of legislation and for some other interesting reasons.

If I'm not mistaken, one of the four amendments dealing with the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act, for example, reflects really the changes that have taken place in technology, the information technology and the storage and retrieval processes, more or less, I guess, the obsolescence of the position of stenographer, which, I think, according to the existing legislation that's being amended, was an appointee of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Given that the recording technology has changed and practices have changed, the legislation must be changed to bring up to date the statutory definitions of various roles and the manner in which the data dealing with evidence, court proceedings can be best handled. It makes good sense both at the intuitive level but certainly in terms of daily practice and the technical aspects of it, and the arguments related to the technical changes that have taken place I think give a good reason for making the changes that the minister in this act is proposing.

Similarly, the Judicature Act changes. Again, the amendments are minor, as the minister says, and I agree. They have to do with the monetary awards to be paid in installments. I think that to make this provision and make this clarification in the existing legislation would help, certainly, the people who are awarded these monetary awards. It safeguards their interests. One of the amendments provides clarification of the court's discretion to order structured settlements, and I was quite intrigued by what that means and how the modification that's being made will change that process. The guidelines that the new amendments will provide the court to make these structured judgments I think are a very helpful clarification. Since these structured settlements are supposed to be tax free, I think that it does provide the court with some guidance as to how to deal with these structured judgments in the interest of the recipient, or the beneficiary, of these judgments in a way that it certainly saves the monetary value of these assessments.

Mr. Speaker, I read through the minister's own observations carefully and found disagreement with very little there. In light of that, I would say that we are in support of the changes being proposed, and I happily support the bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

9:30 Bill 6 Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 9: Ms Blakeman]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important act. It's not about parents; it's about children. It's about making sure that money that's necessary for the children gets to them. The Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006, is intended to make the situation better for many families.

Maintenance enforcement is a very effective program and helps out a lot of families in Mill Woods that would otherwise go without because their dads choose not to pay their share. Maintenance enforcement works quickly and effectively to ensure that both moms and kids get the maintenance due them. In some cases the penalties maintenance enforcement have in place act as a deterrent to the dads that might think they can get away with not paying. For example, they cannot renew a driver's licence, cannot renew a passport, cannot receive an income tax cheque or a GST cheque or any monies that come from a government level. All levels of government work together on this issue.

We've had a number of successful cases in Mill Woods, and I want to congratulate the program and all the staff that work on it and the minister for continuing to improve this program.

As I look at this bill, the first amendment deals with how payments are applied and helps to ensure that money reaches creditors before maintenance enforcement keeps any funds for penalties and fees. As we consider the Income Tax Act, we know that the first thing you can deduct is related to dependants as dependants are a tax credit. Therefore, if it comes off first from net income, then it should be the first responsibility for real income.

The second amendment addresses financial examinations by maintenance enforcement. This is an amendment to allow the director of the maintenance enforcement program to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for an order of alternative arrangements for the examination of a debtor. The purpose here is to allow for alternative payment arrangements to be made relating to the debtor's ability to pay. This amendment can also result in reduced court times. Some say that accounting is not a science; it's an art. What do we want included in the picture? We must make sure we are not giving artistic licence for those who should be responsible to avoid their responsibilities in the name of bona fide accounting. This amendment is intended to give public accountants on behalf of clients the opportunity to penetrate a bleak picture which is really a smokescreen for apparent losses in obligations, which become an excuse for evading maintenance enforcement payments.

The third amendment deals with maintenance agreements between parties. It allows for the maintenance enforcement program to administer these arrangements and is consistent with similar arrangements in the Family Law Act. This province has created considerable incentives to business. This bill is an opportunity to balance that. The government has given exemptions to encourage people to go ahead with business plans because of the benefits they create for the community. We need equivalent incentives to invest in families. The well-being of families, either together or separated, needs to hold an even greater place in our values. The encouragement to invest in families should be as great as to sink one's assets in a business venture or economic activity. Investment in families is investment in our humanity.

The fourth amendment deals with current rules relating to access to locked-in retirement accounts. The new rules allow for more support for children and address deficiencies in the existing act that do not allow for access to these funds until the debtor is of the age of 50 and chooses to withdraw the funds. The new rules address the problems from the 2004 act to allow for access to these types of locked-in funds. This is a measure to counter the Bermuda or Bahamas syndrome: putting one's investments offshore, where they cannot be touched. In the Bermuda syndrome the party who is trying to evade responsibility uses distance and miles and political boundaries. In the support evasion system the evader used distance and years and regulations to put assets out of reach.

I'd like to congratulate the minister and the individuals who have worked on this Bill 6, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006. I support it as a wonderful step in looking at things that are really important for families.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 6, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006. Let me at the very outset thank the minister – I forgot to do it when I rose the last time and before – for briefing us early on, three or four weeks ago, I think, quite extensively on the amendments to the existing legislation by way of these bills that he is bringing forward. We had a good meeting, where we had the opportunity to be briefed on the nature of the amendments and the reasons for those. The minister was very, very helpful, and the meeting was most productive from our point of view.

Again, I think the amendments that Bill 6 is seeking to make will make the existing arrangements much better. These amendments are intended, as the minister has indicated, to clarify and refine existing sections of the Maintenance Enforcement Act to allow for better client service and access to justice. The four amendments relate to the application of payments, financial examinations, maintenance agreements, and access to certain locked-in retirement savings. These amendments will certainly benefit children and families by getting more money into their hands, the creditors that is. The amendments give families and children access to more money sooner, and these locked-in retirement funds are one good example, that those will be accessible now. Lump-sum payments for medical or child care purposes before arrears or fees are paid is another good element, I think, that these amendments embody. The amendments give the director of the maintenance enforcement program more powers to address default payments and debtors who are in arrears.

It's a very good set of amendments, which improve the already very good maintenance enforcement program, MEP, as the minister uses that acronym in his remarks. This maintenance enforcement program provides a vitally important service to parents around the province, helping to enforce support orders and thus ensure that our children are having their basic needs met. The program offers parents a neutral third party through which to work, which can be so important in the strains of separation or divorce.

Contrary to popular belief many, if not most, of the agreements registered with the program are carried out without any major problems. It's good to know that not all dads are deadbeat dads, and certainly not all late payments are indicative of ill will. However, experience has shown that there are cases where, for whatever reason, support payments are not forthcoming, and it is children who suffer the most. Study after study has shown that a happy childhood consists of much more than having basic needs met. But in the absence of the state being able to guarantee happy memories, the least it can do is ensure that children and their parents, be they single moms or single dads, have recourse to a program that guarantees the money owed them for their needs. This program, MEP, the maintenance enforcement program, does this for over 60,000 children and nearly 100,000 clients. A very large number of Alberta families and children are impacted by this program, most of them in a very positive way.

The program has been around since 1986, and its collection rates are getting better every year. Every year we find better ways to ensure fairness and justice for all parties involved. As the minister said when introducing this bill for second reading, financial examinations alone have led to an additional $900,000 being collected for creditors, and overall collection levels have risen 10 per cent in the past three years alone. These amendments, therefore, are in keeping with these ongoing efforts, which deliver the necessary means and benefits to families and children affected by family breakdowns.

There is perhaps just a small issue of clarification here with two of the amendments. I think the first one has to do with the amendment contained in section 4(11), which was described a few weeks ago by the minister in his introductory remarks. This concerned the director's powers to obtain substitutional service orders allowing for alternate arrangements regarding financial examinations. The minister had described this as allowing "the program to bring debtors who are constantly evading service in for financial examinations." Now, I'm just curious how these substitutional service orders would allow for this to happen. What exactly is the process? What's the substance of this process? The minister, I'm sure, would help clarify this.

Alternate arrangements for examination. You know, I'm reading through what the minister had to say on this issue when he was introducing this bill, that the court can adjourn, I guess, the examination, and then this amendment will dispense with the need to serve notice for the parties examined to return to the court again, so the serving will not have to be done again. The persons can be asked to be in the court more than one day after adjournment. That's probably what it means, but it just needs a little bit more information for me to fully understand what it means and what's involved in this.

Also, I think there's some sort of a reference to how this will improve collection from debtors who consistently avoid meeting with the director. Would the change, in fact, make meeting with the director mandatory, or would it compel the party to meet with the director? How does that work?

In the interests of fairness and assuming that the director will use his discretionary power in the best interests of all involved, this appears to be a well-intentioned amendment, and the program may find it to be of considerable use, but I'm curious to see a review of this in a year or two just to make sure we know how effective this change is in resolving cases of arrears and how stakeholders, creditors and debtors alike, feel about the director's discretionary powers.

One other point perhaps, Mr. Speaker, and then I'll sit down. It again deals with asking for more clarification. I think it would be helpful, certainly for me, to have an explanation of how the registering of agreements both with the MEP and with the courts will proceed if the third amendment proposed here is passed. This concerns section 2 of the amendment, which gives the director of MEP the power to file maintenance order payment agreements with the court on either party's behalf. Again, as the minister argued, it's intended, I presume, to reduce delays and to facilitate or make it easier for both parties to get the agreements filed with the court until someone else on their behalf can do it. Is it not presently the case, and are there any legal implications here in terms of either or both parties finding it not so much inconvenient but unacceptable for some reasons for a third party to be doing this work on their behalf? It's a question of control, really. Would parties involved, parents in particular, feel that they're losing control completely by this amendment if we put this thing out of their hands?

Mr. Speaker, I think I have made a few observations. I was reading through the bill, the minister's comments, and some research that our own staff has done and was quite impressed with the enormity of the activity on this front: how many families are involved, how much money changes hands, and how many times the MEP steps in to resolve matters to the benefit of all parties involved in the matter of maintenance payments when families break down and separate or proceed to seek divorce. With those remarks, I would take my seat.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister for Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by thanking the members for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Edmonton-Strathcona for their words of support tonight and the Member for Edmonton-Centre for her words of support last week relative to the Alberta maintenance enforcement program.

As was noted, the program itself celebrated its 20th anniversary last month. Over that 20 years some $1.8 billion has been collected and distributed to the creditors, largely children, of this province, which is a very good thing. The program itself today is seen as a leader in the area of maintenance enforcement in Canada. This bill will make it a better program.

I very much do appreciate the support and kind words for the people who do yeoman service in this department on a daily basis. It is a highly emotional area, needless to say, for people who are having difficulty collecting the money that is due to them. The volume of communication with the department on a monthly basis is truly enormous, and they do an incredible job addressing that communication. Some people are not happy; that is just the nature of the business. But when you consider the magnitude of their job, it's quite fantastic.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona outlined some questions. I'm happy to respond to those. I will do that in committee. I'll go back to the people who work in this area on a daily basis and perhaps get some more detail so that I can be more thorough in responding to the hon. member at that time.

I would now call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

9:50

Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again tonight to speak this time to Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006, in second reading. In the way of a background I think this amendment was sort of inevitable given certain changes which occurred back in 2002, as the hon. Minister of Justice indicated when he introduced the bill. In 2002 the then Justice minister approved the raising of the limit for small claims in small claims court from $7,500 to $25,000. This, in turn, encouraged or allowed people to pursue legal action in Provincial Court instead of the Court of Queen's Bench, where the process may be more onerous and complicated.

Provincial courts don't require a claimant to have legal representation; that is to say, one does not need a lawyer. One can represent him or herself if they so desire. Also, filing fees or the cost of litigation may be less this way. What this did was allow greater access to the courts and, as such, was really a positive move.

Similarly here for situations involving motor vehicle accidents we are allowing victims to sue in Provincial Court, not just the Court of Queen's Bench. This takes a big load off the Court of Queen's Bench, and it frees up some of its valuable time to deal with more serious cases. We are improving access to justice, and for that I find myself in support of this bill.

Almost all drivers in this province carry liability insurance, but a very few don't. If one of these rogue drivers gets into an accident, and some of them actually get into an accident and then flee the accident scene or are involved in a hit and run, for example, they will not be able to afford the resulting damages. The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act protects the victims of uninsured and unknown drivers, where they can take their claim against the administrator of the motor vehicle accident claim fund, who would then be the nominal defendant. If the claim is successful, funds are distributed from the general revenue fund.

So again I emphasize my support for this bill, but I actually have one simple question. I was reviewing the motor vehicle accident claims program website under the Ministry of Justice, and it really currently states that the person may begin his or her own action without a lawyer. So I was just trying to clarify: does this exist now as it is, or is this happening only after we pass this amendment?

As such, I look forward to seeing it come back in committee and receiving more debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Pannu: I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker, speaking on Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006. At this point in second reading I would like to simply indicate that in principle we agree with the changes that the minister is bringing forward to the existing legislation by way of this bill. In part it's a response to changes that took place in 2002 with respect to the amount of the claims for which one could go to Provincial Court, under the small claims court that is.

I think the minister is perhaps right in focusing on the fact that the changes that they are suggesting, opening the possibility that people could go either to the Provincial Court or to the Queen's court if they so choose, will perhaps lead to reduction in the costs of litigation related to matters related to motor vehicle accident claims in the province. I think the accessibility to the court system and to the system of justice in the province has emerged as a major issue because the costs of going to court have been growing very, very fast. We've been hearing from an increasing number of Albertans about their concerns about how costly it is to pursue redress to matters that concern them when they go to the courts.

So anything that can be done to curtail and contain costs to people who have to go to the court system I think is something that needs to be supported. In fact, we need to redouble our efforts to find ways of reducing costs of litigation and costs of going to court in this province. The transcripts and access to them alone are extremely expensive, and I've heard through my constituency office people complaining about how expensive it is for them to have access to the transcripts of the courts. That's just one small aspect of the overall picture of the costs of going to the courts.

The bill, certainly, is in part intended to reduce the costs or limit those costs by increasing access and encouraging, I suppose, people with claims related to personal injury sustained through motor vehicle accidents to be able to go to provincial courts and represent in that court themselves, their own cases, thereby reducing costs related to legal representation.

As I said, we are in principle in agreement with the intent of the bill, the principle underlying it, and as we move through the debate in the committee, I assume that we will have an opportunity to take a closer look at some of the clauses of the bill. If there's a need for change, there'll be an opportunity then to speak to those.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Once again I appreciate the supportive comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

There was a question with respect to what is currently permitted by way of self-represented litigants in our courts today. The fact is that one may represent themselves in front of every court in this province, whether it be Provincial Court, Queen's Bench, or the Court of Appeal. The point that is made in general is that the Provincial Court is the one that has a more streamlined, less costly, less rule-bound process and, therefore, is the one that is most accessible to self-represented litigants, or people who represent themselves. Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal really have been designed, in terms of process and rules, for people who are represented by people trained in the law, namely lawyers, and really the matter that we have before us is to ensure that this piece of legislation reflects the fact that self-represented parties may bring their action. They do today, but we'd like the law to read so that it reflects the reality, and that's really in large measure what we're talking about here.

I'd call the question, Mr. Speaker.

Trustee Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mr. Stevens]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening on behalf of the Official Opposition and speak to Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006. This bill, I believe, can be appropriately described as a housekeeping bill. It addresses some of the flaws that have been discovered since Bill 26, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2001, was passed by this House. In doing my research today, I was able to discover that that amendment act actually had the support of the Official Opposition, as will this act today.

It would appear to me that the Trustee Amendment Act, 2001, pretty much accomplished what it set out to do in terms of allowing trustees a little more flexibility by removing restrictions that they were facing in terms of how they could invest and allowing the prudent investor rule to take place. Unfortunately, the trustees in many cases were still constrained by the limitations that were not noticed at that time and are now being addressed by the proposed amendment that we're dealing with tonight. So, as I say, it will certainly have the support of the Official Opposition caucus, or at least that's what I'm recommending to my colleagues.

I'm pleased to see that the hon. minister has consulted with the Alberta Law Reform Institute. My understanding is that back in 2001 they were not only supportive of the amending act at that time but actually had been calling for that change for some time. In our consultation with the Alberta Law Reform Institute they're certainly not expressing any concern whatsoever about this amending act and, in fact, are pleased to see it coming forward. So I applaud the minister for having made those efforts in consultation because, unfortunately, that does not always happen. We've had several instances that I'm aware of in the last year and a half since I've been a member of this Assembly where that sort of consultation did not take place, and it's always good to see when it does.

I would briefly like to point out my frustration at times with the cross-ministry co-operation, or lack thereof, that sometimes seems to take place. I'm not sure why that is. It's been described sometimes as turf protecting or empire building or whatever. I'm not sure what happens exactly, but clearly in this case the minister has made an effort to consult with every other ministry where the Trustee Act is mentioned and involved, and for the most part it looks to me as if we're going to make some progress in terms of addressing the inadequacies of Bill 26 from the year 2001.

However, having said that, there are still a number of ministries that are not necessarily coming onside fully, and it leads me to another frustration which I've expressed many times in this House, and that is where we move things from legislation into regulation. There are a number of examples of that, in particular the Cemeteries Act, the Condominium Property Act, and the Funeral Services Act, all falling under the Ministry of Government Services, where they've chosen, at this time at least, not to adopt these changes but rather to consult. That's a good thing: consult with stakeholders before they move away from the legal list.

But then when they do make the changes, the plan is to allow the rules for trustees to be governed in accordance with regulations as opposed to this piece of legislation or another piece of legislation. That always causes concern for me because, as you've heard me express in the past, Mr. Speaker, often regulations are dealt with behind closed doors and out of the eye of the public in terms of debate in this Legislature, and I don't believe that that is a good thing.

Another example of where that's happening is the Dependent Adults Act, again where the decision is being made to stay with the legal list for the time being. We're not sure at this time, once they've decided which way to go with that, whether or not those changes will be enacted in regulation or perhaps brought back to the House in legislation. So that's certainly a concern that I have, and I'm sure we'll have an opportunity to address it a little further when we get to the committee stage.

Overall though, as I said, I do believe that it's a good move to incorporate the prudent investor rule universally across all legislation. This does move us towards that, so I'm pleased to see that.

I'm a little surprised that we've waited five years to address some of the inadequacies that were discovered as a result of the amendments that were made in 2001. Perhaps the minister may address that tonight or at some further stage of debate, but I would have expected that maybe we would have dealt with some of those questions sooner than now. However, as I say, in general I think the idea to adopt these changes across most provincial legislation will give the trustee more options for investment, Mr. Speaker, and allowing that I think is a good thing. The legal list approach was very restrictive and perhaps too conservative, if I can say that without being called on a point of order. I think I just did.

I think ultimately that with these changes that are being proposed in this amendment, all individuals and societies that are affected by the Trustee Act will be better served. With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to offer my support and recommend that of my colleagues to Bill 8 in second reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very brief comments on Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006. The changes made in 2001 to give more flexibility to trustees led to, I guess, introducing the notion of the prudent investor rule to replace restriction on the trustee to invest only in the securities listed in the legal list. My question is about the prudent investor rule and how it works. It certainly provides more flexibility, but how is the practice associated with the investor act? How is it monitored? What happens when prudence is not, in fact, demonstrated by a decision made by the trustee? Is there any monitoring? Are there any penalties? Is there any control when the trustees fail to act prudently?

Reference was made by the minister to "in keeping with modern theories of investment." Yes, I guess that the notion of the prudent investor rule is part of those modern theories of investment, but the legal implementation of those I think are questions that come to mind which need addressing. The minister either today or perhaps in the debate in the committee can return to these questions and address them for my clarification. I just want to know how it works and what happens when it fails to work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate?

Mr. Stevens: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Bill 22

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move second reading of Bill 22, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006.

Just to again indicate that interim supply acts, the appropriation act such as we see here, are not an uncommon practice in the parliamentary system. Today we're celebrating Commonwealth Day, I believe, so I thought I would just reference that. I'm hoping that members here will see the wisdom in supporting this so that government can in fact continue providing necessary funds to hospitals, schools, seniors, and so on come the end of March.

Thank you.

10:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will try to make my comments brief as well.

The hon. minister has referenced that this is not an uncommon procedure in the parliamentary system, and he's correct. It's certainly not an uncommon occurrence in Alberta although I would certainly argue that it's not a necessary occurrence either. I've indicated in the past that I'm more than willing to come down here in late January or early February, and were we to do that as a House, we could have a budget passed in advance of the end of the business year, so it's not that it's necessary or required that we do things in this manner. Nevertheless, this is the way that the government chooses to proceed, and so it goes.

I would like to reiterate my concerns as well that as an opposition, when we're charged with providing constructive criticism to the government, it is difficult to approve what is essentially a blank cheque. I understand and empathize with the various ministers who spoke to this bill when we were in Committee of Supply that the government has to continue to run and that there is a lot of good work that needs to be done and employees that need to be paid and programs that need to be funded, and often they're funded in a front-end-loaded sort of way. I would have no intention of interfering with that funding.

It is difficult to approve a blank cheque which in this case totals nearly 6 and a half billion dollars, Mr. Speaker, with only a one-line or perhaps two-line explanation as to how much money is going to the department and no real explanation whatsoever as to how that money is going to be spent. It requires a bit of a leap of faith not only on the part of opposition parties but on the part of all Albertans that that money is going to be used wisely because we really have no way of knowing until a budget is introduced how that money may be used.

Certainly, I'm hopeful and I know that many Albertans are hopeful that, for example, there would be further funding for long-term care. We know that that's an issue that is close to the hearts of many Albertans. It's been in the media a lot over the last year, and the government took small steps towards funding the recommendations of the long-term care review committee, but clearly there is a lot more funding required and a lot left to be done to make that right. We're hopeful that some of the money that has been requested in interim supply is going to go to those issues early and not make them wait.

I'm hopeful, as an example, that there will be some money in the budget of the Education minister or perhaps the budget of the infrastructure minister to provide running water at Ellerslie school, which is an issue that the Official Opposition has been bringing forward with some fervour, Mr. Speaker. I have no way of knowing whether or not there's going to be a little bit of the $637 million from the interim supply for Education that might address that dire situation, but I'm hopeful that that would be the case.

I'm hopeful that the Finance minister or the Education minister would find it in their hearts and in their minds to take some of the money that has been appropriated in interim supply and begin to address the unfunded teachers' liability, which is a debt that is already at billions of dollars and will cost Alberta taxpayers, all of us in this Assembly and all of us across the province, tens of billions of dollars over the course of the current agreement if we don't choose to address it during a time of unprecedented wealth, when it would be argued that it would be fiscally prudent to do so.

Again, I'm hopeful that some of these things are going to be addressed by the approval of the interim supply, but we have no way of knowing that, and that does cause me concern in that we're asked continually, year after year, to supply 60 days' worth of funding in the order of $6 billion without any real information being provided as to exactly how that money is going to be spent. I suppose we have to put an awful lot of faith, as I said, in the government and the ministers involved that this money is going to be used in a prudent fashion, that Albertans will receive value for the dollars that they entrust to us.

I look forward to the budget next Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, when we'll have some of those questions answered. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my opportunity to speak briefly to interim supply. I would echo some of the comments of my colleague but really need to take a different tack on interim supply in relation specifically to the ministry that I'm most concerned about, that of Environment. I argue that given that this ministry has around 0.5 per cent of the provincial budget yet is dealing with the third most important issue to Albertans, we need to take a serious look at what this means for the future of Alberta and for true planning and implementation of some kind of sustainability in relation to this province.

It's only after 13 years that we are now beginning to get a reasonable approach to a land-use plan. This is the third attempt, and we're all extremely hopeful that this will be an effective framework from which a plan can be made which would guide development, especially resource extraction in this province, in balance with other values that Albertans hold. The present budget and the interim supply identify an extremely limited capacity to do this, Mr. Speaker, so I'm actually arguing the reverse of what in some cases people will be arguing today, that government in this case needs to make a huge injection of funding and make the environment a priority in this province.

We have not the capacity as yet to monitor our groundwater, to do the adequate baseline testing, to even have a database of all the water wells in this province. We're still waiting for groundwater inventory and testing. The recent experiences in the south and east of the province, where landowners are increasingly concerned about dramatic changes in their wells in volume and in quality, suggest that we are catching up, to say the least, with an inadequate staff and inadequate technology to do the job of actually assessing where we are, looking at the possibility of new technologies that could be used both by industry and by Alberta Environment to help us to get a handle on what it is we're doing both on the surface and under the surface and how we're going to ensure a high quality of life for our children.

There are hundreds, perhaps thousands of contaminated sites; if one includes all of the potential oil and gas installations, several hundred thousand now in the province. Each of these poses its own liability: the downstream oil and gas sector, the mom-and-pop gas stations that have become defunct and need to be cleaned up, the refinery sites. There is no existing orphan fund for these. If they're defaulted, they will fall to the public purse. Clearly, Alberta Environment with more resources – and indeed some of this could well come from industry – for a kind of an orphan fund for downstream oil and gas and refinery sites is a really urgent priority in this province.

In relation to climate change, again, we're looking for leadership. A department with such limited funding can do a very limited amount in terms of incentives for energy efficiency, incentives for renewables, and an attempt to create a more level playing field with the dominant fossil fuel dependency that we've developed in this province for our economy. It's very clear that we need leadership on this. In the context of climate change we need a government that would set clear limits for industry and also help them to know clearly what it is that they're expected to achieve in terms of their emissions, now standing first in the country in terms of air emissions.

Those are the main comments I wanted to make in relation to interim supply, Mr. Speaker, and I'll take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will indeed take pleasure in closing debate and thank the members for their comments. I look forward to the House's support.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A good amount of progress tonight and a lot of good comments were made and so on. On that note, I will move that we adjourn for the evening and reconvene tomorrow at 1:30.

[Motion carried; at 10:21 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 14, 2006 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 06/03/14
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am simply delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature a very special guest seated in your gallery. Our new Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, the Hon. Michael Chong, president of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Minister for Sport, representing a constituency in the province of Ontario, paid a very special visit to our province today. We had a very productive meeting with our department and also Community Development. I am pleased to introduce him to our House. He's accompanied today by Anne Scotton and Mary Jane Armstrong. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly Mr. Issam Al Halabi, mayor of the city of Yanta in Lebanon. Mr. Al Halabi has a bachelor of arts degree and has been a teacher for 25 years in Lebanon in a high school, and he has served as mayor in Yanta since 1996, which equals two terms. He has some very special recognitions in his career achievement. He was a special adviser to the Druze leader Mr. Walid Jumblat from 1985 to 2000 and sits on many political and municipal boards in Lebanon. With him today are two of my favourite constituents, Mr. Ziad Aboultaif and Mr. Henry Shtay, who are hosting the mayor in Edmonton. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly two individuals, Mr. Michael Cloutier, who is the president and CEO of AstraZeneca of Canada limited, one of Canada's leading pharmaceutical companies, along with Mr. George Samoil, who is the manager of government relations. They are here to celebrate their investment, a $10 million investment, in Edmonton's NAEJA Pharmaceutical limited in a bid for the next breakthrough in pain medication. I would invite the gentlemen to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 24 grade 6 students from the Neerlandia public Christian school, which is located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Jim Bosma, program assistants Mrs. Shirley Rauscher and Mrs. Laura Kamminga, parent chaperones Mr. Krikke and also Mrs. Mast. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and members of the Assembly 22 keen and bright students from Sifton school. They are accompanied by their teacher Mrs. Wnuk and parent/staff Mrs. McCullum; Mrs. Parenteau, a parent; and Mrs. Narsing, a parent. They're in, I believe, the public gallery. I'd like them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of pleasure today that I introduce to you and to all members of the House a group of very special guests who are seated in the public gallery. They are from the Ashbourne assisted living facility in my constituency, and their names are Mrs. Joyce Bergquist, Mrs. Karin Welch, Mrs. Kathleen MacLean, Mrs. Alfreda Dober, Mrs. Isobel Rutzebeck, and Mr. Herb Philpott. They are led by Ms Sarah Reynolds. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the cordial welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 16 members of the Yellowhead Tribal College together with their teachers, Linda Anderson and Bill Brady. They are studying aboriginal studies, and they're hoping for a good dose of social studies here this afternoon. I'd ask them to rise please and receive a warm welcome from the members.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a privilege today to introduce two esteemed members of the Janssen-Ortho group who are with us. Dr. Penny Albright is the vice-president of government and health economics. She's here from Toronto because last evening at our Alberta Institute of Health Economics she, along with the Rt. Hon. Don Mazankowski, presented the first ever Mazankowski fellowship award to Dr. Jeffrey Johnson for his research. She's accompanied today by Mr. Brent Korte of local government relations of Janssen-Ortho. He's a resident of Spruce Grove. Many of us know him. He's been very active in our community and on behalf of his company for the last 13 years. I would ask if they would please rise and all of our members would please acknowledge their presence with us today.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Social Determinants of Health

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under this government the gap between rich and poor in Alberta has grown wider than in any other province. For example, both Statistics Canada and the TD Bank report that an astonishing 42 per cent of Calgarians over age 15 now live on less than $20,000 a year. Evidence clearly shows that poverty and income disparity play a huge role in poor health. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does this government acknowledge that poverty and income disparity are important factors in contributing to poor health?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, there are many social determinants of health, and among them are, obviously, poverty and income disparity. There are a number of other things that relate to literacy and a whole number of things that we could cite. They are part of it but not necessarily exclusively the predeterminants. Many people with poorer incomes in fact do exceptionally well and are not necessarily unhealthy. So it is one of the things that can affect the person but not necessarily a sole determinant of health.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why is this government pursuing health reforms that include having patients pay out of pocket for better services when those reforms will clearly – clearly – work against the interests of middle and lower income Albertans?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to point out that our Premier has said many times that a person's ability to access health care in Alberta will never be based on their ability to pay. The link that the hon. member is suggesting is that there would not be a capacity for people who need health services to access it when they need it. What we have proposed as policy, which is out there for consultation – I'm listening to Albertans as we speak. We are getting feedback on one of the 10 proposals that talk about choice, talk about access, and talk about that in those circumstances where nonemergent services are necessary for cataracts, for hips, or for knee replacements, there may be an opportunity for people to access those services through private facilities, provided that the public capacity of providing services is not detrimentally affected. That is the premise of that particular policy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister of health acknowledged that literacy as well as poverty and income disparity are factors in health determinants, why hasn't this government done any research into the long-term health benefits of ensuring that impoverished children in Alberta get enough food to eat? Why haven't they studied that?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to research on behalf of the hon. member what kinds of studies have been done. But I would suggest from my time in my previous ministry – and many of the other ministers represented here today are no doubt aware of some of the studies that may have been done either regionally or as local initiatives perhaps. We will look into that bibliography and see what is available to provide the hon. member that data.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Economic Benefits of Health Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is clear that this government views the health system as a business opportunity, where the pursuit of profit should drive the provision of health care, and it appears that this government is prepared to use health care as an economic development tool by marketing medical centres as sleek and state of the art in order to attract wealthy foreign patients. It's easy to imagine these wealthy medical tourists stepping over homeless Albertans on their way to a procedure. My questions are to the minister of health. How can the minister justify putting public money into training health professionals and building facilities that will be used to treat millionaires flying in from another country?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, on page 16 in our framework for health policy we talk about deriving economic benefits from health services and research – it's true – because we recognize that "health care occupies a prominent place in the economic life of Alberta and accounts for roughly one-third of the provincial budget." It goes on further to say that "national and international trade in health technology, drugs and equipment is significant and presents an important opportunity for Alberta industry."

Mr. Speaker, it defines intent and direction, but nowhere does it say anything about sleek buildings and the kinds of references that were made by the hon. member that would appear to in any way undermine what we will provide in health care, the strong public system for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Is the minister creating specialty tour packages to Alberta that include medical treatment?

Mr. Dunford: Actually, I hadn't thought about that. I'll take that under advisement, absolutely.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What steps is the minister going to take to ensure that medical tourists don't push ordinary Albertans to the back of the line?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that when we look at medical tourists, we're quite a way down the line, but let me cite something for you that I think is of significance. Our Cancer Board and Dr. Jean-Michel Turc at the Cancer Board anticipate a number of researchers coming from other countries to learn about some of the wise and very innovative approaches we're taking here on cancer research. Ultimately, we have an opportunity not only in Alberta but in other parts of the world, and certainly if the federal government proceeds with the national cancer strategy, to develop some strategies that can make the globe a smaller place for research and development of technology and better treatments. So the primary purpose would be to develop and expand on our capacity in the health care system to do more in the treatment of patients. If there is a byproduct of that in the number of visitors that we attract, as my hon. colleague has referenced, then we'll take a look at it. But the primary goal of research and development will be to ensure that our patients, patients that are suffering from disease, will be taken care of.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Health Benefit Cost to Employers

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Universal public health care is clearly part of the Alberta advantage, but even now supplemental health benefits for employees have grown to $2,000 to $4,000 per year. Private health care will quadruple that or more. Labour will demand coverage. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What estimates has the government made of payroll costs to employers of its third-way health reforms?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a reasonable question. Under my department, under Alberta Works we have programs that do support people to get back into the workforce. At one time there were no health benefits for any of our caseload, and this good government made changes in the policy, and now we do have coverage. I think we have over 140,000 individuals . . .

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cardinal: Over 140,000 individuals are being subsidized. The good part about that is that these people are not on social assistance. These people are all working and getting the subsidy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That question wasn't about people on assistance.

A second question to the same minister: what estimates has the government made of costs to the public payroll in Alberta of its third-way reforms to public health care?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information here today with me, but I'd be willing to provide it to you, hon. member.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the Minister of Economic Development. Other than for private health providers has the Economic Development department investigated the effect on external investment in Alberta as a result of the increased privatization of health care?

Mr. Dunford: Well, this is one thing that we actually have been looking at. One should think of health as a holistic system. Of course, we've had questions earlier today about the impact of income and that sort of thing on health, but why would there be any reason, when we have such a dynamic health system as we have in Alberta – and as a matter of fact, admitted by the opposition today, it's one of Alberta's advantages. – why wouldn't we try to investigate the possible advantages of all of that?

We've put a SuperNet into place by the way, and while our pharmaceutical companies are here in the audience, I'd ask them to take a look at Alberta. Now, we might not be as advantageous from a manufacturing standpoint, but when you have three million people that have access to a SuperNet, why could we not have clinical studies here in Alberta with its tremendous range, then, of environments, tremendous range of people? Why can't we do that?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I attended a session of the Health Boards Conference and listened to the minister's speech to the delegates there. I spoke with a number of them afterwards, and I have to say that there was widespread concern about the government's proposals and confusion about what the government is actually proposing. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: if the government's own health board members, which they appointed, are concerned and confused, what steps is the government going to take to clarify its proposals and provide clear information to the Marthas and Henrys of this province?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure to be among the health boards and to see almost 26 of the colleagues from all sides of the House visiting and discussing various topics with the health board members. I had the opportunity to address a couple of the policies in our health policy framework and explain the rationale of why we would, in fact, try to embark on other ways to provide access and sustainability.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I think that the document speaks for itself in the policy context of what we want to provide Albertans. We're looking forward to gathering the input from Albertans. At such time that we would be prepared to table a proposal, we will provide the rationale and address more of the comments. In response to different groups like the Alberta Medical Association and others that are raising those questions, we will provide them comments as they come in as well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister yesterday challenged the board members to think outside the box. I want to ask the minister if she's prepared to think outside the box and commit here that if the government can find a way to meet its objectives through improving and innovating strictly within the public system that we now have, she will do that before she heads down the road of more private delivery?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister of health at any time in our government should always be prepared to think outside the box and bring forward creative solutions to renew and improve health. Regardless of what we look at in the changes that might be implicit in new policy, we should keep trying to do the things we've done with the hip and knee replacement and many of the other kinds of innovative approaches that Alberta has become leaders and famous for. We will always work on that context.

What we're also attempting to do is look even further beyond the horizon to see what we can advance that might in fact allow more flexibility and options for Albertans as we proceed along the way and not just be stuck with the status quo without trying to push the envelope on other access proposals that could be available for our consideration.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, will the minister commit to trying to improve the health care system within the public context that now exists before proceeding with privatization? Yes or no.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will always try to proceed with improving the public health care system, but that does not close the door or, in my view, provide a barrier to looking beyond that and looking, like other provinces across this country are doing, to try and find other ways to expand our capacity to deliver strong health to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mandatory Testing for Senior Drivers

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there is a proposal being considered by government to have mandatory testing for drivers when they reach the age of 75. A number of my constituents are upset that government seems to be singling out seniors by requiring them to redo their driving test just because of their age. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Why do you seem to be targeting seniors when there are other drivers out there that are causing more traffic collisions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just say at the outset that these recommendations were brought forward from the McDermid report, which was a report on traffic safety in Alberta. I really must clarify some of the misunderstanding that is out there. We are not talking about a driver's test. We are talking about a medical test. Currently every person who is 75 does need to have a medical test when they hit 75 and then again at 80 and then every two years after that.

Mr. Speaker, what the McDermid report actually suggested is that, starting with 75, the seniors have a medical examination every two years following that. That is one of the recommendations that is going to be debated in this particular report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Why are you only looking at seniors rather than drivers with known medical conditions?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we're not. Quite simply, when a medical doctor relays information that a person has a specific medical condition, each particular condition is subsequently analyzed and determined to have specific medical examinations at certain periods of time. For example, a diabetic has to have a medical examination at a certain period of time. All of these are very consistent with what is occurring now. What I really must stress and stress again, is that we're talking about drivers' examinations, about driver tests. We're simply talking about the medical examinations that are there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. My final supplemental is to the same minister. Will the minister assure this Assembly that there will be some form of consultation before any changes are made?

Dr. Oberg: Yeah, Mr. Speaker, absolutely. One of the things that I've stated about the McDermid report is that there are several recommendations from there that are quite controversial. Quite simply, this is one of the controversial recommendations; there are several others that are in the report. We are planning a full set of consultations in the next couple of months to determine what Albertans think about these particular recommendations, such as photo radar at traffic lights. All of these things were in the actual recommendations. I feel that we should not simply get a report and put it on a shelf, so we must ask Albertans what they feel about these recommendations. Consequently, that's what will be occurring over the next couple months.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Alberta/Montana Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation continues to cost Alberta consumers more and more, and now we find out that there is confusion, more and more confusion, in the Department of Energy over their transmission policy. Now, this department has failed to provide to consumers of this province a cost-benefit analysis detailing the benefit to consumers in this province of increased electricity exports through the Alberta/Montana tie-line. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How much, if anything, will Alberta consumers save on their monthly power bills if the Alberta/Montana tie-line is completed?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the one reason we keep talking about why transmission is so vital is that it is the highway to how we get electricity from any two points. We all want electricity. We need those highways built. The greater interconnectivity we have, the greater reliability we have. If any one line goes down, if any one generator goes down, you have more options, both for import, export and otherwise. So it's too artificial to say that it's a simple calculation. We could save substantial money by having greater reliability.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. That's an expensive highway. Why is this Alberta government allowing increased electricity exports through the Alberta/Montana tie-line when your own department – your own department – states that Alberta will need anywhere between 6,000 and 13,000 megawatts of new electricity coming online in the next 20 years? Where is the benefit to consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, first off, the transmission line for the Alberta/Montana tie-line is a private sector merchant line that's not being borne by or added to the cost to Albertans. It was actually a private sector initiative of their own accord. So it won't be on the backs of Albertans even for that line. However, it is in Albertans' interests to ensure that we have transmission built for our own needs and for our own purposes. We have a tie-line between Alberta/B.C. That has helped us substantively over the years. Having that greater interconnectivity will benefit Albertans to provide a more stable, reliable outcome for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: talking about the interests of Albertans, why is this government putting the interests of electricity exporters before the interests of Alberta consumers?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, it is about and we are developing that policy in the primary and sole interests of Albertans. It is for us to ensure that we have – we already have lower nonhydro electricity costs than anywhere else. We have an excess of generation today. Find other jurisdictions in the country that don't have a tightness of supply. The other jurisdictions do. Even their rates are higher than what we're facing, in particular if you mention Saskatchewan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Digital Library Projects

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the throne speech of 2005 our government stated: to create 15,000 new student spaces in the following three years and support the development of the Alberta digital library as a responsive public institution in the fastest growing area in Calgary. The University of Calgary worked hard in this government direction with four major projects, one of them is the digital library. So these are world-leading initiatives to increase enrolment for about 7,000 students in the next few years. My question today is to the Minister of Advanced Education. Can the minister update the Assembly on the progress of the digital library project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The throne speech last year used as one of the examples of the types of projects which could be supported by the access to the future fund the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library. The Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library is a project which came out of, as the member rightly says, a project at the University of Calgary, a Campus Calgary project, where they were creating a digital library for the Calgary area. Of course, once it's digitized, it's available online and can be available to students right across the province. We took that as an opportunity to expand across the province with a digital library, which will give access to academic resources to students right across this province.

The Alberta Library Board has taken on that project, and Dr. Frits Pannekoek, who's now the president of the University of Athabasca but at that time was at the University of Calgary as their chief librarian, is very actively involved in it. We have business plans coming, and the project is coming along very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: given that the digital library in Calgary is a partnership with many institutions, such as Mount Royal College, Bow Valley College, Alberta College of Art and Design, SAIT, and also the Red Crow College on the Blood reserve, with over a hundred thousand learners, what action does the minister take to help to facilitate such excellent collaboration among our institutions in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are two projects that we should be clear on. One is the Lois Hole Campus Alberta digital library, which was announced in the Speech from the Throne as being supported out of the access to the future fund. Then, building on, the second project is the University of Calgary's digital library project, which they initiated in collaboration with the colleges and the institutions which the hon. member mentioned. We're working on both of those projects. We're working with the Lois Hole

Campus Alberta digital library project to make sure that those digitized resources, both print and three-dimensional resources, are available to students across the province.

One of the interesting things about the Campus Calgary one is the tie-in to Red Crow College. It shows the power of being able to add other institutions, some of which are not even within our jurisdiction, to the process and provide those academic resources more broadly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when do you expect this digital library to start and complete helping modernize our education into the modern age?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the digital library project is well under way. Many of the institutions are already digitizing resources. Many of the institutions have library licensing. The project board has put together a business plan. So that project is well under way.

The hon. member should also be aware that the University of Calgary has as one of their priorities a digital library, and what that is, as distinct from the Campus Alberta digital library, is a building which will house their digital library centre: their digitizing resources, their computer resources as well as their library resources. That project would actually bring in library resources from across the campus and free up space for them. I know that the University of Calgary is eager to proceed with that specific building project as well as participating in the cross-Alberta Campus Alberta digital library project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I first asked this government to deal with the unfunded teachers' pension liability on May 11, 2005. It's almost a year later and still no action. My question is for the Minister of Education. When will this minister get off the fence and finally make a decision about the teachers' unfunded pension liability?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an agreement from 1992-93 the unfunded pension liability is contributed to with a responsibility by government to the tune of two-thirds and teachers to the tune of one-third. So there is an agreement already in place that addresses the unfunded pension liability. From the '92-93 period going forward, the contributions are roughly 50-50. It is a serious issue. I have acknowledged that here, and I've acknowledged it out there. It's a very complicated scenario, and it's not an easy one to work our way through.

Secondly, there are a number of other unfunded pension liabilities that we also have to consider, and it's difficult to do one and not look at the others. So we're trying to look at a variety of issues here.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm concerned, as I'm sure the hon. questioner is, with the impact of the unfunded pension liability on teacher retention and on teacher recruitment, and that's why we've undertaken to try and address this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how much has the unfunded liability grown while Alberta taxpayers have waited nearly a year for this minister to do something?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the current unfunded pension liability for teachers stands at just over $6 billion, if my memory serves correctly. Government assumes responsibility for about $4 billion of it; teachers are responsible for about $2 billion of it. Our contribution, which is built into my budget in Education, at the moment stands at around $140 million or $145 million per year for the unfunded pension portion only. Our total contribution to the teachers' pension, both unfunded and current, is more in the line of over $300 million per year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A curriculum question for the Education minister: at what grade level do Alberta students learn about the effects of compound interest?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, let me see. I learned about it in grade 8. I'd have to look it up and see if that's in the pure math curriculum or the applied math curriculum. Sure enough, it's addressed somewhere, as I recall, in the junior high school years. I'll verify that for the hon. member.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Funding for the University of Calgary

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Advanced Education: is it the Advanced Education department's policy to encourage only one world-class university in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, our government and all Albertans can be proud of the fact that we have four very fine universities in this province. Each one is world class in specific areas. Athabasca University is well renowned around the world as a leading open university. It has international accreditation. It's known in all parts of the world for being one of the world-class open universities. The University of Lethbridge has top-notch water research and will soon be, if it's not now, leading edge in the world. The University of Alberta is a leader in medical research, dentistry, pharmacy, and many other areas. It has a nanotechnology facility. The University of Calgary is a leader in social work, architecture, and many other areas and will soon be a world leader in the new ways of teaching veterinary medicine.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have four great universities. The University of Alberta's new president has said that it should be in the top 20 in the world by 2020. I think that's something that we should aspire to. I think all four universities, in fact all of our public education institutions, should aspire to be world class. Indeed, we want to have a world-class system, and we do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the per-student grant approximately a thousand dollars less for U of C students in spite of there being a more expensive mix of programs at the U of C?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's premise is not correct in that there's a more expensive mix of programs at the U of C. In fact, if you take the grant and divide it by the number of students, you will get the wrong answer. That's what's happened here. If you did that, you would show $1,000 per student more at the U of A than the U of C.

However, what's important is that we don't fund based strictly on the number of students. We fund on a base level funding based on the buildings, based on the number of students in specific programs. In fact, there are a number of different programs with different levels of expenses, and those account for the majority of the difference in the funding levels.

Now, on a periodic basis we do readjust the funding levels to ensure that there's continuing equity. That's done every five years, and we're in the process of doing that now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. Again to the Minister of Advanced Education: would the minister be willing to meet with the Calgary caucus together with representatives of the University of Calgary to resolve this issue?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member is aware, I think, that we have a meeting on Thursday to talk about the discrepancy that she's talking about, that I meet on a regular basis with the presidents of all the institutions, both singly and together, and that I'm always interested in talking about it. She also should be aware that the president of the University of Calgary is on what we call the systems transformation subcommittee that came out of the Learning Alberta forum, so he's ideally positioned at the centre of the discussion about how we deal with the funding formula not just for the universities and colleges but also the funding formula process with respect to affordability for students and the roles and mandates for institutions in the province. The president of the University of Calgary is at the centre of the discussions. I have ongoing discussions with him individually. I'm meeting with the presidents of all the institutions in Calgary later on this month on Campus Calgary, and I'm meeting with Calgary caucus on the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

2:10 New School Construction in Calgary

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The contradiction which exists between the ministry of learning's space utilization formula and its implementation of the Learning Commission's reduced class size initiative is causing older schools to be unnecessarily closed and the very few new schools opened to be built much smaller than their community's student population requires. My questions are to the minister of learning. If class sizes for divisions 1 and 2 are mandated to be under 23 students, why does the current space utilization formula still measure classroom space as being able to accommodate 30-plus students?

Mr. Zwozdesky: I don't recall if that's the exact case or not, just off the top of my head, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell you that the Commission on Learning made some recommendations with respect to class size and indicated that the K to 3 level on a jurisdiction-wide basis should strive for 17 students per classroom. Grades 4, 5, and 6 would be 23; grades 7, 8, and 9 would be 25; and the high school would be, of course, 27. They said that we should try and get to that rate within about five years. Now, we've accelerated that. In fact, for all of the grades from, I think, grade 4 to grade 12 the majority of our school boards by far are already at the recommended guidelines within a two and a half year window of time or they've bettered themselves than what was recommended. So regardless of which formula the hon. member might want to look at, we are making tremendously positive progress toward meeting those expectations.

Mr. Chase: Well, I'm sure Mr. Dirks would be pleased to hear that.

My second question for the Minister of Education: how much longer will the Calgary public and separate school boards, tens of thousands of parents, and their students have to wait for the combined 62 missing community schools, 40 public and 22 separate, to be built?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we've opened or are scheduled to open a number of brand new schools in Calgary even in this year. I can tell you that in Calgary-Foothills we have a new K to 4 school under construction for $6.6 million that will open in October of '06. We have a K to 4 core school, Chaparral elementary in Calgary-Shaw. That will open in October '06. That's $6.1 million. There's a new school called Douglasdale/Glen elementary in Calgary-Hays. That will open in the spring, very shortly, $5.2 million. The list goes on, and that's just on the public side. I have a list on the Catholic side that I could read off as well. So the infrastructure issues are getting addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My last question to the Minister of Education: why should a third of Calgary public students and an even larger proportion of Calgary Catholic students have to ride the bus when for the same amount of money wasted on bus fees several new schools could be built each year?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the issue of transportation ride times is obviously a local issue. Transportation funding is obviously a joint issue between the province and the local school board. When I met with all of these school boards in the fall, in fact, I had put this issue on the agenda. There is a review of our renewed funding framework going on right now. I'll expect those results very soon, and then we'll try and make whatever improvements are necessary there. But the fundamental thing here going forward is to take a closer look at building schools where the population exists, quite obviously, and that will cut down on some of the ride times and on some of the busing costs. On the other hand, we do have a number of good, old schools that are still quite functional.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Social Assistance

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I will table a report from the Winspear fund that makes for sobering and sad reading. In the past year the Winspear fund in Edmonton has assisted 148 individuals and families whose basic needs for food, shelter, and clothing are going unmet due to the inadequacy of government income support programs. Over 60 per cent of this emergency funding went to families with children. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How does the minister justify that in a rich province like Alberta the most vulnerable citizens are having to turn to agencies like the Winspear fund to help them overcome desperate situations?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker, no one should be in that situation in Alberta. I agree with you fully. Our government, of course, is definitely working on programs to provide additional services for those people who are caught in that unfortunate situation. We do help also with daycare assistance and other school supports.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the Winspear fund, along with other agencies, is having to do the government's work. My question is again to the minister. When is the minister going to do something about it so that these people don't continue to fall through the cracks?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask the member to provide the information he has, and I'm willing to sit down and go through the package.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I said that I would table this information.

My final question, then, is to the minister. He does have control. When can the people in Alberta Works expect to receive a long-overdue and substantial – and I stress substantial – increase in their monthly benefit levels?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, this is an area I've been working on for the last six, eight months or so. Of course, it's a matter of time. Soon things will change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Traffic Safety Pilot Project

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security recently announced a six-month pilot project that puts sheriffs on highways 21 and 63 to perform traffic safety patrols with RCMP officers. This project has raised a number of questions about enforcement and safety on Alberta's highways. My questions are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Why is there a need for a traffic safety pilot project on these highways?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation mentioned earlier, the McDermid report had nine recommendations regarding traffic safety in the province, the vision 2010, that we want to look at, reducing somewhat the 25,000 injuries and the 400 deaths per year on Alberta's highways.

Our department is looking at all options, Mr. Speaker, whether the new policing service delivery model regarding how we can enhance our services on these highways as well as ensuring that the police officers who are multiskilled in criminal investigations can remain doing just that: investigating criminal activity and responding to emergencies.

Mr. Speaker, this pilot project allowed us to train 10 sheriffs that have extensive training in both traffic investigation and traffic enforcement. During this pilot project we are stressing these two highways, 21 and 63, regarding the high number of fatalities and collisions that are on those highways. Obviously, there's a need for other highways as well, most recently highway 19 between highways 2 and 21. There were two recent fatalities on that stretch of road, that the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon was speaking to me about.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. You said that these officers are trained in traffic safety. What happens if they come across crimes such as impaired driving or drug infractions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This pilot project is in conjunction with the RCMP. It's an opportunity for both the sheriffs' office and the RCMP to work together and complement each other from that enforcement aspect of the traffic investigation. If, for example, a traffic officer, or sheriff, came upon an impaired driver, he has the authority under the Criminal Code to arrest that individual, but he would then turn that individual over to the RCMP for the criminal investigation regarding that offence.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister again: how and when will we know if this pilot is an effective way to address traffic safety?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, the ultimate goal of the pilot project is obviously to see a reduction in the number of injuries and a reduction in the number of fatalities that we have in the province. If we can save one or two lives even, that's going to show that we can have an impact through education, through enforcement, and through personal contact between an officer and a violator. Obviously, with an increase in enforcement comes a heightened level of awareness and education for drivers, who ultimately have the responsibility to drive safely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Collective Bargaining for Teachers

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards, teachers, and parents continue to wait while children pay the price for the policy gridlock in the Education minister's office. He is keeping important information under wraps and is blaming teachers, boards, and parents, in fact almost anybody, for the inability to get the job done. My question to the Minister of Education: how will boards negotiate contracts with the ATA in May of this year? Is an e-mail your only solution to the problem, sir?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, no one on this side of the House in the government caucus has been blaming anyone. There has been a little bit of blame from the opposition toward some of the teaching profession unfortunately, but I can tell you that as shameful as that is, we on this side value the parents and the teachers and the children who are in our education system. The issue of negotiating is being done at the local level right now. There is a recommendation in the Learning Commission to try and change that and move to a new model, and we have been looking at that and trying to see what the impact of it might be, but there's not exactly unanimity amongst school boards on that proposal either. It's a difficult issue, but it is one that we are continuing to look at and review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the minister blaming his inability to make a decision on a bargaining model for Alberta on disagreements between school boards? Does he feel it is not his job to resolve this very, very important issue?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize this again: nobody is blaming anyone, and no one is blaming anything, other than perhaps the Education critic on the other side. What we have here is a long-standing tradition of local bargaining, which some school boards are willing to part with, some are not willing to part with. But I will be meeting with all the school board chairs on March 24, and this is one of many issues on our agenda at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Principals continue to wonder: are they in or are they out of the ATA? How long will we wait, or does he not feel it is his job to resolve this very important issue? Is it indecisiveness? Can he make a decision?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, if the question is, "Are principals in or are they out?" clearly at the moment they're in. That's a no-brainer. They're in the ATA. The recommendation that the hon. member is referring to was pursued with a study last year. That report came to me a few months ago. We've been looking at it. We've been looking at the impact of it, and it's not quite as simple as I think some people in the opposition try to make this issue sound.

For example, there are a number of principals who also teach. Now, if there were a consideration given to removing principals from the ATA, that would de facto mean that they could no longer teach. So a teacher would have to be hired to come in and take over where that principal left off. There is a financial implication there. There is a teacher supply issue as well that exists there. Of course, there would be some issues pertaining to infrastructure. Yes, it does have some complications to it, but that, too, remains one of those issues that has required some additional review, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Alberta at the Smithsonian

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, in March 2005 the government of Alberta and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington signed an historical agreement for our province to take part in the internationally renowned Folklife Festival in Washington, DC. Not only does this appear to be a great venue to showcase our province, but I understand that the festival is proven to stimulate economic opportunity, boost marketing, tourism, trade, government relations, and public relations. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can the minister please provide an update and advise the Legislative Assembly on where we are in planning for Alberta's participation in this festival?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour that the Smithsonian has honoured this province, Alberta, to take part in the Folklife Festival that will be held in Washington between the dates of June 30 and July 11. What is so exciting is that we are the first ever Canadian jurisdiction to be represented at the Smithsonian. This will give us an opportunity to showcase our culture, our folklife before over a million visitors in Washington mall, another 12 million that will take part looking at various websites and periodicals and tourism journals. The plan is going ahead. We will be making a formal announcement at the end of April in terms of the Smithsonian Institute and Alberta at the Smithsonian, and we're very pleased that we were given this opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the Minister of Community Development. Given that Alberta has 3.3 million people from all different backgrounds, cultures, and workplaces, can the minister tell us how he selected 150 representatives to fully demonstrate our diversity, economy, and way of life to our American neighbours in Washington, DC?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I don't need to remind you or members of this House that this province has an incredibly wide and diverse cultural, occupational, and living history, and no doubt it is a great challenge to find 150 people to represent this. But this is exactly the goal and the goal of the Smithsonian Institution, to present a cross-section of Alberta life on the Washington mall.

There has been a curator from the Smithsonian, Dr. Nancy Groce, who has travelled tens of thousands of kilometres, spent a great deal of time here in Alberta with staff from Alberta Community Development to come to have an understanding about the history and the contemporary identity of Alberta. Through this curatorial process the Smithsonian has actually decided, of course in consultation with officials from Community Development, as to which aspects of Alberta life to include. So, as referred to by my hon. colleague, the minister of intergovernmental affairs, at the end of April we will have an announcement to make with respect to the specific displays, the exhibits, and the artists that will be representing and making up Alberta at the Smithsonian.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can you advise us whether there are other activities planned in Washington to go along with the Folklife Festival to focus additional attention on Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to cover a couple of plans for the Smithsonian. One, of course, is the unveiling of the website, Alberta at the Smithsonian, which will be very important. But most important will be Alberta week at the Smithsonian. This will be some social events and a number of economic forums. We're also pleased that the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton and a number of private-sector companies will be participating the week before. Why it's so important is that the House will rise that particular last week of June, and we'll have all of the decision-makers, the elected representatives, and very senior policy decision-makers visiting Alberta at the Smithsonian that particular week, and we will be able to convey to them how important our Alberta/U.S. relations are.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was a very significant 84 questions and answers in a 50-minute question period.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Our historical vignette today begins with a quote, and I refer you to Alberta Hansard, March 8, 1976. The following words were spoken.

We of the commonwealth of nations are justifiably proud of the system we've inherited: a symbolic head of state in the Crown which continues on forever and is not subject to the whims of parties in power, elected parliaments, appointed judges who then become unassailable by the politicians, courts of appeal, civic rights, and a vast body of law.

These words were given by Roy Alexander Farran, who was born January 2, 1921, in England and spent his youth in India. A major in the British army he retired in 1948. He is probably the most decorated man to have served in the Alberta Legislature. Military honours bestowed upon Mr. Farran include the Croix d'Officier de la Légion d'Honneur, the British Distinguished Service Order, the Military Cross, the French Croix de Guerre, the U.S. Legion of Merit, the Italian gold medal, and the Greek War medal.

Mr. Farran arrived in Alberta post World War II, already an accomplished fiction and nonfiction writer. He arrived here to work with the Calgary Herald and to establish the North Hill News as owner and publisher. He was an alderman for the city of Calgary from 1961 to 1971. He was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in 1971 for Calgary-North Hill as a Progressive Conservative and was re-elected in 1975. Mr. Farran was the Minister of Telephones and Utilities from 1973 to 1975 and Solicitor General from 1975 to 1979. He is the author of seven books, including the classic Winged Dagger: Adventures on Special Service, published by Collins in London in 1948. Roy Farran currently lives in retirement in Calgary, Alberta.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have never had the privilege before of introducing members of my family. This afternoon, quite unexpectedly, my youngest grandson, Ryan, who was the winner, number 1, at his school in a science fair project, and his father, Darren, an enthusiastic golf pro and parent, are present. Darren Evans and Ryan are from Barrie, Ontario. If they would both please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special class that's attending NorQuest College in my constituency. This is an employment program, including job opportunities for building success, and also a transitional vocational program. We have 16 students joining us along with their instructor, Ms Judy Dobbs. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

New Acme Community Centre

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend marked the second anniversary of a devastating fire in the village of Acme, a fire that consumed their community centre, the Acme Memorial Hall, which was built in 1959 and had just undergone numerous renovations. Needless to say, this was quite a shock and a loss to the community.

However, this past weekend also marked the grand opening of a new, modern Acme community centre built on the exact same site as the old one for a cost of $1,850,000. Due to the hard work and determination and perseverance of everyone involved, only $20,000 of that $1,850,000 remains unpaid. Insurance coverage made up just over $1 million, with the remaining $824,000 of the cost being raised through fundraisers, private and corporate donations, and grants, all in two short years. This facility will serve Acme and district as well as central Alberta very well for many years to come.

The people of Acme and district are a shining example of the determination and hard work that's required to overcome adversity and challenges in building a great community and a great province. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in congratulating Acme and the residents of the district on a great job well done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer College Kings Volleyball Team

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to stand in the Legislature of Alberta once again to recognize the continuing dynasty of the Red Deer College Kings volleyball team. For the seventh consecutive year the Red Deer College Kings men's team have been crowned national champions at the Canadian men's volleyball championship in Quebec City. This winning streak gives the College Kings the record for the most consecutive victories in Canada, moving them past their closest competitors, the Limoilou college Titans of Quebec City, who previously held these bragging rights with six consecutive victories.

This was not an easy championship. Coming within a whisker of losing the biggest game of all, the Canadian colleges' men's volleyball final, the Kings battled their worthy opponents from Quebec City, who were outstanding before a hometown crowd that had the house rocking with the beat of drums and noisemakers that never stopped. Using their experience and skill along with the exceptional direction of their dynastic coach, Keith Hansen, the team stepped up at the most critical time to win the championship. The King's captain, Joey Martins, and Graham Hetherington, a third-year player, were both named to the second all-star team.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the Members of this Legislative Assembly to join me in congratulating players Pierre Rocque, Aaron Yasinski, Kris Inglis, Gilles Plouffe, Andrew Reed, Peter (Andy) Shaw, Chaim Schalk, Andrew Tallas, Jason Waddell, Cody Lockhart, Doug Gilbertson, Tim Gourlay, and Joey Martins along with head coach Keith Hansen, assistant coaches Bob Rutz and Adam Roth, athletic therapist Heather Fletcher, student trainer Cole Dziatkewich, and video champ Lee Tipman.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Commonwealth Day

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we recognized Commonwealth Day. The Commonwealth is home to more than 1.8 billion people in 53 countries, rich and poor, small and large, spread across every continent and ocean in the world. The dynamic and vibrant network of partnerships that exists among its people gives the Commonwealth its unique stand in promoting peace, democracy, development, and co-operation.

Development is about people, their quality of life, the choices available to them as they strive to reach their full potential. It's about finding new ways to provide adequate food, shelter, clothing, education, health care, jobs, transport, safe living conditions, good government, and a stable economy. We see many parts of our world in need of critical care and observe that as a partner we share a special responsibility to alleviate poverty and disease and provide access to education and essential health care services in need.

Working in partnership is essential between the nations of this earth, whether they are developed or developing. This is how we build a better, more secure, more sustainable world. Only together can we achieve an open and democratic society. Together we will be able to recognize that we all share a common humanity regardless of who we are and where we come from.

I congratulate all 53 Commonwealth nations on this very special day. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Team Thomas World Junior Curlers

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again it's a pleasure for me to rise and recognize the fact that although my colleague from Red Deer-North has indicated that central Alberta has some good athletes, Alberta's northwest has great athletes. I want to speak about some of them, particularly some of the athletes from the Grande Prairie region, on behalf of myself and my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti and all of our constituents.

Last week I mentioned two world-class events that came to our region, attracting world-class competitors. This time, Mr. Speaker, we applaud four young men from the Grande Prairie Curling Club who are provincial and national junior curling champions. The foursome – skip Charley Thomas, third Geoff Walker, second Rollie Robinson, and lead Kyle Reynolds – is representing Canada at the world junior curling championships in Jeonju, South Korea. I understand that at this point Team Canada has a 4 and 0 record. We not only welcome the world to Alberta's beautiful Peace Country, but we also send world-class athletes to represent Canada around the world. Again, that can-do attitude.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:40 U of A Pandas Women's Hockey Team

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Alberta Pandas hockey team claimed its fifth Canadian Interuniversity Sport women's championship title in seven years with a 2-1 win over the top-seeded Laurier Golden Hawks in Nova Scotia on Sunday evening. The defensive-minded Pandas, the number 2 tournament seed, fell behind early, just as they did in Saturday's semifinal against St. FX, but this time they rebounded quickly and played an almost flawless system after taking the lead midway through the second period.

Goaltender Aaron Sorochan was named the Canada West Freshman of the Year. She finished the conference playoffs with a perfect 4-0-0, Mr. Speaker.

Nineteen-year-old physical education student Tarin Podloski led all scorers at the nationals with five points to pick up the tournament MVP honours after being named a second team all-Canadian last week. Mr. Speaker, Podloski was named a first team conference all-star in the Canada West during the 2005-06 season after finishing second in the league in scoring with 28 points.

Of note, Rachel Sanders picked up her second team sport gold medal of 2005-06 after helping the field hockey Pandas and Coach Carla Somerville to their first national title in team history last fall. The last CIS player to accomplish the feat was Alberta's Nicole Chapdelaine, who won both women's soccer and hockey in 2001-2002.

Congratulations to the Pandas for continuing the University of Alberta winning tradition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Child Care Program

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services recently met with her federal counterpart. I suspect that the federal minister recently heard two very different messages on this issue.

On the one hand, the Premier of Quebec has been strongly advocating for maintaining the agreement reached last year between the federal government and several of the provinces, and no wonder. Quebec's $7-a-day child care system is the envy of parents across the country. That government understands that investing in early childhood development programs and quality public child care gives children an important head start while providing parents more choices when returning to work.

On the other hand, our own minister likely delivered a more ambiguous message. I say this because she has told Albertans that she is philosophically supportive of the Prime Minister's plan to give parents $100 per month as a buy-off for cancelling last year's $5 billion agreement, and that has got Alberta families and child care providers very concerned. Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. As a taxable benefit $100 would leave fewer dollars in parents' pockets than promised. The current $500 per month subsidy for child care spaces, wage increases for child care workers, subsidies for early childhood programs, and programs for kids with disabilities may also be on the chopping block.

The minister must tell Albertans in clear terms what her vision is for child care. She must fight for the dollars won in last year's agreement, must make a categorical public commitment to Alberta parents that they will have affordable access to high-quality, public, nonprofit child care and that she will stand by her five-point plan come hell or high water.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on a petition.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with 177 signatures on it. The petition urges the government of Alberta to "eliminate private clinics and private delivery in the health care system, and develop a comprehensive plan to strengthen and extend Medicare." This brings the total number of these signatures to 715.

Thank you very much.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter from Donald Moreau regarding drivers' licensing for seniors with medical problems.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first that I am pleased to table with the appropriate number of copies is a letter from a constituent, Mr. Fouad Ammar. It states his belief that we should focus on public health care and that private health care is not needed.

The second tabling I have with the appropriate number of copies: six letters that I have received from parents and daycare owners and other citizens voicing concerns about the cancellation of the national daycare program. They are from Liliane Chahmini,* Min Du, N. Cato, Kim Gravel, Paul Broda, and Chris Kubica.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of letters received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. I'm tabling today from J. St. Onge, Mandy Palmer, Lisa Brandingen, Jim Crook, Alicia Drake, Roberta Keichinger.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the proper number of copies of a report of the 2005 disbursements from the Winspear fund. The fund was designed to be one-time emergency funding for people who are working hard to help themselves but whose social circumstances create a need for financial assistance. Between November 2004 and December 2005 this fund helped out 148 people who otherwise wouldn't have received assistance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of letters received from concerned parents, daycare owners and staff, and other concerned citizens voicing the concerns about the cancellation of the national daycare program. There are four letters from Janet Algar, Teresa Frost, Sharron Glimm, Roxanne Campbell and two letters that are signed by someone that writes like a doctor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table six further letters regarding the cancellation of the national daycare program. The writers today include Jen Smith, Anu Heuser, Ken and Patricia Skawronik, Jannele Martin, Angela Webb, and another doctor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise again to table the appropriate number of copies of many letters I've received from concerned parents, daycare owners, citizens with regard to the termination of the national daycare program. These letters came from Nicole Zebinski, April Wellington, Laurie Brandle, T. Pickunyk, Natalie Bragg,* and K. Wack.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling e-mails from a Mr. John Hartley, which were sent to many members of the Assembly. Mr. Hartley wonders why Conservative MLAs are so intent on destroying medicare and notes that opposition parties have supplied solid alternatives. [interjections] He's my kind of guy. There should be open consultation on health reform as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: And that, hon. member, is why this Assembly must deal with this whole question of tabling of e-mails one of these days.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some more letters about the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters are from Steve Allan, Vanessa Botuk,* Melodie Pearson, Rhonda Wendland,* Joanna Cornisson,* Julie Pinney-Reeves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know this question because I now get lots more notes from hon. members about this whole question of tablings. A national daycare program falls under federal jurisdiction, not provincial jurisdiction, and unless some of these things are worded to have an impact in Alberta, I think they should be filed in Ottawa rather than here.

Orders of the Day

head:

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to move on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar Bill 18, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006.

The Speaker: Is the hon. minister proceeding with additional comments?

Mr. Hancock: Not at this time.

The Speaker: Then the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm speaking against Bill 18. This bill isn't about protection; it's about reduction and destruction. It's a feeble attempt to legitimize this government's current laissez-faire attitude through legislation.

To begin with, I'd like to speak about communication, or lack thereof. Last week my researcher, on my behalf, approached the Minister of Community Development requesting a three-column document. The purpose of this request was to get an outline of the intention of the bill. That was not provided. So in an act of desperation and an attempt to follow through with parliamentary procedure, I approached the minister's office at noon today. I was confronted by an individual who obviously went through the Charlebois school of communication in that no documentation was supplied. Of course, the Charlebois school would suggest $800,000 worth of taxpayer money for no written evidence. This seems to be the way communication is received within this ministry.

An Hon. Member: You didn't even get the facts straight. Truly.

The Speaker: Okay, okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has the floor. We're currently in second reading of a bill. Please proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past summer, in an attempt to do my job as critic, I sent out requests to all the parks and protected areas. We had quite a degree of difficulty finding the addresses, the e-mails due to, again, insufficient communication. But through much research on behalf of my researcher we accomplished the task, and in good faith we sent out letters to each and every park, wilderness area, protected, and so on. We asked a very simple question. It was: could you give us, please, your three most important wishes? If you could have these three wishes granted – infrastructure, whatever it might be – what would they be?

Well, these hard-working individuals in the field were effectively silenced by this ministry. They were not allowed to comment. In fact, they were instructed not to comment. I was told that as the lowly critic I would receive this information through the Department of Community Development. That communication has not been forthcoming. When I am about talking to individuals in the field, some of them almost have the need, it appears, to cover over their badges for fear that the information or the questions I might ask might somehow find its way back to the department, and punishment would occur later.

This lack of whistle-blower legislation, the lack of communication applies directly to Bill 18. One of the proposals in this bill is to terminate the Advisory Committee on Wilderness Areas and Ecological Reserves. By so doing, we get to silence another group, and we get to say that everything we do within our own department of community relations is fine. We don't need to seek advice from anyone else because we know it all. The bill removes the advisory committee and, as such, reduces democratic participation. This group of six public members and six government members provided advice to ministers on establishment and withdrawal of wilderness areas, ecological reserves, and the making of regulations. Any advisory committee recommendations were to be placed before the Assembly within 15 days. That was a refreshing form of not only consultation but sharing of the information.

This government will say that the advisory committee is obsolete as it's not currently sitting. This is not an acceptable reason to dismantle the advisory committee. The advisory committee has become obsolete only because this government has chosen not to appoint members, not to appoint a chair, or not to call a meeting. In fact, the last document that we have in the library goes back to 1980.

I guess there's no interest in communication. There's no interest in seeking advice. So to legitimize our lack of communication, we'll just shut down the committee. It hasn't met since 1980. I would like to think that rather than eliminating it, we would renew it.

Now, in terms of parks and protected areas this is a reasonably small expectation in that only slightly over 4 per cent of our land is under provincial protection designation. This ministry can't even manage that amount. In total we have slightly over 500 different forms of parks, wilderness areas, ecological reserves, and so on. Of that approximate 500, only 43 of them have management plans. Of that 43, the majority are very incomplete. How can you protect something that you don't manage?

In addition to the management there is a concern about the ability to manage in the field. Again, when I and other members of our caucus have gone throughout the province and have talked first-hand to conservation officers and park managers, the answer we get is: there aren't enough of us to do the job that we're expected to do. Since 1990 over half of the conservation officers have been removed. There are very few seasonal conservation officers, and there seems to be no career opportunity in the conservation areas for the seasonals to move to full-time employment.

One of the areas that I actually agree with is the idea of increasing the fines. The only problem is: how are you going to catch the crooks when you have very few so-called policemen in the form of conservation officers patrolling large expanses of land to do their job?

Another concern I have has to do with the elimination of buffer zones. To me this is just a matter of legitimizing current practice. Last year I went into great detail, probably painstaking, painful detail, about a specific experience of my own, and that was the Cataract Creek wildlife wilderness area. The buffer zone was effectively mowed down courtesy of Spray Lakes logging, that clear-cut right to the borders of the park. Then, not content to clear-cut, having basically destroyed the perimeter, they passed it on to Bell Pole. Bell Pole was given the permission to drive through the campground, take out the most pristine campsite so that they could build a road up to Mount Burke and to the second set of falls so that they could take whatever other lodgepole pines remained. This is this government's idea of a buffer zone.

In terms of multi-use and multi-abuse, the protected designation at this point is not worth the paper it is printed upon. Industry gets first crack within the majority of parks. They build the first roads. Then the next group to get a crack is forestry. Instead of using the same road to access the area, they have to build their own road. By the time we're through, we've got criss-crossed roads through the park areas. Then we blame wolves for getting after woodland caribou. So we get into our planes, get out the 30-30s, and wipe out the wolves. They're not the problem. It's the access, the cutting up of our wilderness areas that is truly the problem.

Until people and wildlife have a larger say in the presentation of the parks, we're going to have considerable confrontation and conflict. People with ATVs have legitimate requirements, people with snowmobiles have legitimate requirements, but you cannot coexist with hikers, climbers, fishermen. The answer is not simply just to close down the whole area to all the groups affected but to come up with a plan whereby off-road vehicles would have a place to have their fun, which is legitimate for them to do. Snowmobilers would be able to access areas, which hopefully wouldn't be so clear-cut as to not have any esthetic appeal for travelling. The group that I don't have much sympathy for – but I suppose they deserve a space of their own; I wouldn't like to think that it was a government-funded space – is the mud buggies. These are the ones that cut up our creeks and our riverbeds. I don't see them as having any legitimacy within a park and protected wilderness area.

This bill does not protect. This bill does not improve the access for people with disabilities. It does not promote access for people of reduced financial means. The rates for camping in our various parks continue to go up, but the private companies who are doing their best to provide the services are not being supported by this government. This government has its special little areas. The Canmore Nordic Centre: this is our poster to the world. This is our version of what we do in Alberta. As soon as you get off the pavement and you venture into the wilderness parks, you see all around the destruction. Within the parks themselves you see the rotting infrastructure.

Back to the concern about multi-use. I don't have a whole lot of trouble with free-range cattle, but I'd like to see them outside the park for my campers and other Albertans to enjoy, not wandering through because of the fact that this ministry has not maintained the fencelines.

I also have concerns about the sale of public land. This government is very big on selling off its leases. I'd like to see some of this public land turned into park space and protected under a legitimate regulatory body with sufficient numbers of people to see that the regulations were actually carried out.

Alberta is a beautiful province. We've had a series of wonderful movies. But if the helicopter that filmed part of Brokeback Mountain had flown a little to the right or a little to the left or over to the other side, you would have seen the clear-cuts. This past week when we were attending concerns over coal-bed methane throughout the Horseshoe Canyon, we saw a picture of what had happened in New Mexico. We saw blotches, which were the well sites. Well, for Alberta those blotches are the clear-cuts. They should not be allowed to happen, and using pine beetles as an excuse for unrestricted forestry management is not acceptable.

Our wilderness should be what we promote. Unfortunately, that is not the case. I cannot support this bill as it takes away from regulation and legislation rather than strengthening it.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with some interest this afternoon to speak on Bill 18, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006. I think that the title of this bill is indicative of the breadth that it attempts to cover, so I find, perhaps, speaking to the spirit of the overall bill a little more difficult with this one since it seeks to cover just a wide range of issues in regard to parks, natural areas, and various regulations and statutes that govern those areas.

I can say that I have more questions, perhaps, than answers in general with the entirety of Bill 18; however, certainly, there are a number of specific areas that I have concerns with that I will seek clarity from the minister. Hopefully, we can come up with some amicable agreement to some specific areas in this bill. I guess that most of it appears to be reflecting actual policy and just trying to clarify some sections and update them for changes that have taken place either through policy or through the evolution of use of these ecological areas and heritage areas and whatnot.

However, there are some specific sections that I have circled that I would like to bring up here this afternoon. First of all, section 9 of this amendment. My reading of it is that this section deals with programs or measures allowed in areas of ecological importance. Particularly, subsection (b) is somewhat disconcerting, I think, Mr. Speaker, as it states that the minister may allow programs or measures to be carried out with respect to “environmental research and reclamation” whereas the original section said, “for environmental research that does not involve any physical disturbance of a wilderness area, ecological reserve or heritage rangeland.”

I find this to be quite a significant change in the language, and I’m wondering if this is an attempt to somehow change our environmental duty to these protected areas and actually allow developments, perhaps oil and gas, perhaps forestry or others, inside of ecological reserves. Of course, the word “reclamation” intimates that you have made some significant disruption in the first place that requires reclamation. So this would be a section that I have particular difficulty with if it is in fact changing the nature by which we have drawn the special places in the first place to protect them from those various sorts of industrial activities that this could imply.

Another amendment that I saw straightaway refers to the Crown not being obligated to ensure “as far as practicable that the interest” in areas of ecological importance is “withdrawn, cancelled or otherwise terminated as soon as possible.” If the interest, in my mind, is “privately owned minerals in an ecological reserve,” as described in section 10, when this might occur, what environmental impact does this amendment have as well? It sort of implies that you in fact are allowing more intensive incursions into a protected area and giving primacy to the privately owned minerals of that said region as opposed to, perhaps, the importance of the integrity of the ecological areas.

So those are two areas that I see specifically that have jumped out at me that are causing trouble. Once again I say that I can’t speak specifically to the spirit of the bill because, certainly, there are individual sections in here that seem eminently reasonable and logical to me, which, I guess, they should be.

But, say, another couple of pieces here – I do have an overriding feel to this bill. It’s talking about amending heritage rangeland trails, changing it from not allowing motorized vehicles to what in my mind is allowing all-terrain vehicles and snowmobiles. So I’m just wondering if this is a specific intention just for one area or if this is a policy that’s ongoing to allow protected areas and ecological reserves, heritage rangelands to have more motorized vehicle traffic in them. We know that this is a problem in general. I hope that there’s not a policy just to sort of throw up one’s collective hands and let it go just for the sake of the fact that we can’t govern or protect these places due to the insufficient numbers of officers in the field.

I also have a problem with, you know, not protecting buffer zones around protected areas. Without being able to somehow connect special ecological zones together to create wilderness corridors, Mr. Speaker, for wildlife to have a sustained area to operate in, you have this patchwork effect that becomes very evident when you fly at lowish levels across the eastern slopes and all through northern Alberta, where the intact, sort of continuous wilderness has been cut into literally thousands and thousands of pieces due to very intensive seismic and oil and gas and forestry activity over the past 30 years. I think all of us can speak to the dramatic change which has taken place in the continuous wilderness that is inside the borders of Alberta.

It’s very important at this juncture for us to look critically at how much of the overall space in the province of Alberta we are willing to protect and what sort of corridors and spaces there are between these protected areas to allow for the continuous movement of animals and plants and bird life to continue with the sort of intact ecology, evolution, and development of this place that has been the case for thousands of years.

With the speed of development one would expect that our responsibility here in the Legislature is to protect as much as we can while we still can. There’s a point that we’ve, I think, already passed, where we must stand in the way of unchecked development. We certainly have experienced the economic benefits of such development over the past 30 years. But I would say that for the sake of future sustainability, which is a word that we toss around, I think, too lightly in this Chamber sometimes – true sustainability in regard to retaining natural areas will be lost to us forever if we don’t do something now.

There are jurisdictions all around the world which have missed this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to protect intact wilderness areas and the connections between them, and we’ve lost throughout the world great ecological and diverse and unique places. The boreal forest is sort of the next in line to suffer that end, I would say. It’s unfortunate, but certainly we don’t have to have it happen that way. We have it within our ability here in the province of Alberta to protect our natural areas without compromising our economic growth and prosperity that we have enjoyed. I believe that it’s very much within the responsibility of the Minister of Community Development and all of us here in this Legislature to ensure that we leave something intact and substantial for the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes of question and comment and answer.

Mr. Chase: I just wanted to clarify. I believe you were talking about the pathways, Y to Y animal corridors, that would allow animals their free movement. Could you just clarify potentially what accesses have been cut up by the current industry developments?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Well, we’ve seen in the news and over the last few weeks the controversy over the grizzly bear. The reason that we’re losing the grizzly bears so quickly is, first and foremost, habitat loss. The animal itself is reason enough to act on, but the grizzly bear is also an indicator species of the overall ecological health of a larger ecosystem. Where we see the greatest sort of cutting up of intact wilderness areas is along the eastern slopes. Let’s say that the area they studied or tried to study for the grizzlies, between highway 1 and highway 16, where there was a devastating loss of grizzly bear, was also where you have the greatest loss of habitat that has taken place over the last 20 years, in that same area. That is just an indication of where we need to focus this, as you say, Y to Y corridor, a continuous corridor of habitat along the eastern slopes.

Other jurisdictions and the Americans, with their much greater population and different laws, have been much more successful, ironically and unfortunately, in actually developing that continuous corridor of ecological protective zones to the south of us. I think that we need to step up to the plate in that regard.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Others?

Then I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my great pleasure to rise and debate against Bill 18, Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006. The bill makes a number of changes to the administration of specific types of provincial parks, wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands.

It terminates the Advisory Committee on Wilderness Areas and Ecological Reserves and adds a requirement for public consultation before designating wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands. It details specific rules about what activities are allowed in the wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands and removes buffer zones from the act. It increases fines for noncompliance by a factor of 10, and in the case of industrial violations, it links the value of the fine to the financial gain through the contravention.

The impact of this bill is less protection. The general trend is to reduce levels of ecological protection in wilderness areas, ecological reserves, heritage rangelands.

There is less public participation in this bill, Mr. Speaker. The bill also removes the advisory committee and as such reduces democratic participation. This group of six public members and six government members provided advice to the minister on the establishment or withdrawal of wilderness areas, ecological reserves, and the making of regulations. Any advisory committee recommendations were to be placed before the Assembly within 15 days.

Removal of buffer zones: as my colleague mentioned, buffer zones are any area of public land adjoining a wilderness area or an ecological reserve as a controlled buffer zone. Less significant and detailed impacts and outcome changes are detailed in sectional analysis areas.

This bill I am against. I would say this is a good, bad, and ugly bill.

I'll start with the good one. We do support the requirement for public consultation before creating new wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands; however, the advisory committee could work in concert with broader public consultation. We do support higher fines and fines that relate to the amount of revenue gained through the contravention.

The bad part of this bill. I would say that the reason I don't support this is because of buffer zones. Their inclusion in the act has not ensured their use. Buffer zones are more suited to management/planning exercises and could be done through regulation.

The worst part and the reason I don't support this bill is that this bill reduces democratic and legislative participation in regulation and the establishment or withdrawal of wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands.

Our vision for park reform: restart the special places campaign and start the process of designating new areas as parks in underrepresented areas and in unique places. We need to seek balance and ensure that there are proper offsets and protected areas to compensate for industrial areas, such as the oil sands in northeast Alberta. CPAWS has a good plan, and we should consider that one.

We need tougher park legislation. Parks need protection from industrial activities that are still allowed to progress in too many categories. The density of oil wells is higher in parks than in nonpark landscapes.

Planningwise, enshrine the requirement to maintain current park master plans. Too many park master plans are out of date and have no plan at all. We need to introduce a requirement that transactive park master plans are completed every seven years. These are to be approved by the minister and tabled in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Infrastructurewise, embark on a meaningful infrastructure renewal program for all of Alberta's parks. This means renewing basic infrastructure in the regular, run-of-the-mill park across Alberta. This includes picnic tables, fire rings, toilets, hiking trails, et cetera.

Wilderness areas continue to lack any formal legislative purpose or direction. When will they have a formal debate on a vision for wilderness areas? That's a question. How come this bill does not contain a legislated vision for wilderness areas? Do they feel that the allowances for dispositions, the ability to allow other tenures and land uses in ecological reserves, heritage rangelands, and natural areas provides adequate protection to meet each of their legislated mandates? How does the minister believe he can ensure that wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands can be protected for future generations when what happens outside of the park will affect what happens in the park? How will this be addressed without the use of buffer zones? Do they feel that buffer zones are obsolete provisions? It's easy to make a provision obsolete by not following your own policy then justify its removal by saying it's obsolete. It was this government's inattention that made it obsolete.

Mr. Speaker, we are concerned that the government is raising the fines but not increasing patrols or the number of staff. How do you intend to enforce these new fines? Do they feel that this bill will on balance increase protection of parks or will reduce protection? When it comes to the Advisory Committee on Wilderness Areas and Ecological Reserves, this committee requires six park staff to sit on the committee. I doubt that there are six park staff to sit on the committee. I doubt that there are six full-time, nonseasonal employees available to sit at a committee.

Buffer zones are a vital component of managing any protected landscape. We need to think about the greater park because what happens outside the park affects what happens inside the park. Removing buffer zones will reduce the effective size of all wilderness areas and ecological reserves in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Shall I call on the hon. minister to close the debate?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development to close the debate.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir, Bill 18 amends the legislation that governs wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands. Some of the provisions in this act date back to 1971. Over the years we've added new categories of protected areas to the act, and Bill 18 clarifies a number of provisions for the different categories. Bill 18 also updates enforcement, offence, and penalty provisions. It updates definitions, improves wording and clarity to make the act easier to understand and administer. For example, Mr. Speaker, prohibitions against litter and dumping and provisions for dispositions like grazing leases now will be addressed for all protected areas under this act. Overnight camping in an ecological reserve will be prohibited by statute instead of just by practice.

Bill 18 will also repeal the Advisory Committee on Wilderness Areas and Ecological Reserves. This committee has not been active for over 10 years. We now involve, instead, local communities and stakeholders in management planning and development of any policies for these areas.

Bill 18 also repeals the provision for controlled buffer zones. No buffer zones were ever formally proposed or established.

These changes include a substantial increase in the maximum fines for serious violations like those that may cause significant damage or destruction. Instead of a maximum fine of $5,000, individuals can now face fines of up to $100,000. Instead of a maximum fine of $50,000, corporations can be fined up to one-half of a million dollars. Under Bill 18 if a person makes money from an offence, such as cutting trees in a park and selling the timber, the Crown may recover costs for damages and the courts may levy additional penalties for damages.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the thoughtful comments of the hon. members for Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Calder, and I will take into account their good questions and thoughts on this bill.

At this time I call the question on second reading for the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

3:30

Bill 20
Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006

The Speaker: The Hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006.

Bill 20 proposes eight amendments to the FOIP Act, each of which I would like to briefly highlight over the next few minutes. The first amendment clarifies that the FOIP Act does not apply to the published works in a library collection. The FOIP Act was not intended to apply to library books on the shelves of our schools and public libraries. Recently the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner pointed out that this is not clear in the act. This amendment responds to that concern.

The second amendment limits access to ministerial briefing material for five years. Specifically, it provides an exception to the right of access for government records created for briefing a minister who is assuming a new responsibility for a ministry or briefing a minister for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly.

Amendment 3 limits access to records relating to an audit of the chief internal auditor of Alberta for 15 years. This amendment adds a mandatory exception from disclosure for records held by a public body that relate to an internal audit and applies to the records of all audits conducted by the chief internal auditor when those records are in the custody of the auditor and a public body.

Amendment 4 is to further enhance the security of Albertans' personal information. Currently the act allows a public body to disclose personal information to comply with a subpoena, warrant, order of a court, or a rule of court; however, it is not clear which courts this provision refers to. The proposed amendment clarifies that a public body or its service provider may disclose personal information only if ordered to do so by a court with jurisdiction in Alberta or in accordance with a rule of court finding in Alberta. This will make Albertans' personal information less vulnerable to collection by foreign agencies.

The fifth amendment suspends the processing of an access request while the Information and Privacy Commissioner consults with an applicant on whether to allow a public body to disregard a FOIP request. Before a public body can disregard a repetitive, systematic, frivolous, or vexatious FOIP request, it must seek permission from the Privacy Commissioner. The commissioner determines whether the request fits any of these criteria. As the decision to take away an individual's right to make a request is a serious one, the commissioner consults with the FOIP applicant. If approved, the amendment will allow the 30-day processing timeline for a FOIP request to stop while the commissioner makes his decision.

Amendment 6 sets higher penalties for disclosing personal information to a foreign court. Should an individual or corporation disclose personal information pursuant to a subpoena, warrant, or court order when that court does not have jurisdiction in Alberta or pursuant to a court order not binding in Alberta, that person would be guilty of an offence and would be subject to a fine. The proposed fine for corporations could be up to $500,000 to deter such disclosures, and prosecution would have to commence within two years of the offence.

Amendment 7 allows for the deletion of a body from schedule 1 of the FOIP regulation if the body would be subject to the FOIP Act under another part of the definition of a public body or if the body would more appropriately be subject to another act of Alberta or Canada that provides for access to information or protection of privacy or both.

Finally, our last amendment allows a newly created government agency, board, commission, or committee to be subject to the FOIP Act more quickly. This new regulation-making authority gives the minister the ability to bring a public body under the FOIP Act prior to the next amendment of the schedule of public bodies in the FOIP regulation. Without this temporary designation the new body would be subject to the Personal Information Protection Act.

All these amendments will provide more information and access protection and greater information security for Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to respond to Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006, in my capacity as the Official Opposition critic for Government Services, under which the access to information and protection of privacy legislation sits. I have to thank the hon. minister for having agreed to meet with me and for sharing the three-column document with me, which was really useful and helpful. I think I would also thank the hon. sponsor of the bill, the MLA for Red Deer-North. Although she wasn't at the meeting, she's really one of the most active government backbenchers in this House, and I commend her on all her hard work.

We went through the introduction of the hon. sponsor of the bill, and she mentioned the eight amendments, and I wanted to just go through them myself to get my thought process in order here. Talking about the Minister of Government Services having the authority to make regulations, that he or she can move a body onto the schedule, we've talked about regulations being made behind closed doors or, you know, privately, with no review and no scrutiny from the Legislature. This is the discussion that we seem to be having to go through time and time again.

The issue about the subpoenas or court orders and making the Alberta courts paramount: I think this is useful because if the information is housed or collected or stored in this province, then it has to be an Alberta court that actually allows access. So I will touch on this, which is a favourable development. I also liked the idea of increasing penalties for breaches or contraventions of the act. The other thing that I liked was the introduction of minimum penalties and so on. So I guess what I'm saying is that this bill is sort of half good, half bad, in my opinion. I would have much rather seen this bill split into two.

The way I take it is that private members traditionally would introduce a bill that is really pertinent to either their constituents or something that they personally have interest in. So I would have actually liked the hon. sponsor of the bill to sponsor half of it, which is the one dealing with the USA PATRIOT Act and, you know, foreign authorities trying to access information on Albertans and so on, because that is something we all agree with. This is something that I personally asked for in the First Session of the 26th Legislature.

The other half, which is the one that I find myself in disagreement with, should have been perhaps sponsored by the minister. That's the one that I would be inclined to debate more. Instead, they were packaged together, and they were sponsored as one package, which really forces me to either take it all or leave it all. I have mentioned before that there is this approach of poison in honey: you give somebody something to eat, and it tastes good, but what's inside is really bad for you. Sugar-coating rat poison, for example, doesn't change its nature; it's still rat poison. I don't like this one bit.

I mentioned that half of it is good. I agree with it, and I'm going to actually go through the ones that I agree with. I definitely approve of and wholeheartedly support placing restrictions on foreign authorities or companies co-operating with or taking direction from foreign authorities. We are all aware of the provisions of laws like the USA PATRIOT Act, for example. If any agency from the U.S. or from any other jurisdiction needs information on a certain Albertan or wants to gain access to information that pertains to an Albertan or is housed in Alberta, they have to go through the proper channels, and by that I mean an Alberta court. Orders from foreign courts will now mean nothing. This act clarifies this aspect, and I totally support this.

The second part, which I mentioned briefly, is the issue with penalties and maximum fines. Raising maximum fines for individuals and also raising maximum fines for corporations for breaches of the act is definitely a good thing. Everyone has to know that breaking this law or any other law, for that matter, in this province will be dealt with in a corresponding manner with zeal, force, and with timeliness. We take the privacy and the protection of information of Albertans really seriously, and any individual or corporation who is even thinking about contravening the FOIP Act will now think twice.

Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, less than 24 hours from now, we're going to be celebrating 100 years of democracy. But doesn't a true democracy entail some degree of transparency and accountability? What I'm referring to are the bad things in this bill now. I keep saying in this House and outside that if this government has nothing to hide, why is it adding more layers of secrecy to its already thick cloak?

Federally Justice Gomery insisted that more openness and transparency were warranted. Is this province any different? Why are we not adopting his recommendations here as well? Could it be the old attitude that everything is fine and nobody needs to worry and that the government business is none of the opposition's business, that we should not be reviewing it, that there's nothing wrong and, you know, everybody should be happy?

Some definite examples of these questionable amendments, like the hon. member across briefly alluded to, is exempting ministerial briefing notes from access under FOIP. Now, how long are we doing this for? We're doing it for five years. I know that the minister tried to explain this in our meeting by saying that they're documents that are sometimes used to prepare for an upcoming legislative session or for bill ideas or things like that. But, really, why five years? Why not only six months or maybe a year? Why at all? What could anybody tell any minister that this minister may be uncomfortable revealing or sharing with Albertans? This amendment also allows background facts to be severed. Who is this government working for that it doesn't want to share its research on the various issues? Again, why all this secrecy?

The second one, Mr. Speaker, is an observation I made in my short period here over the last 16 months. I have made the observation that staff and employees in certain ministries or perhaps all of them – I am not sure – are becoming increasingly careful about what they say and what they put on paper or in an e-mail in fear that if it were to be FOIPed later, they would be in hot water. So they're really careful about what they say and what they write.

Moving on, this bill has something that is really questionable in the way of exempting the investigations, findings, and reports generated by, given to, or obtained by the chief internal auditor for a period of 15 years – 15 years. Mr. Speaker, this is a terribly long time to be hiding things. Again, the argument here is that the chief internal auditor's role is only advisory or consultative. My rebuttal is that, again, if there's nothing to hide, then this government would look a lot more honest and forthcoming if it did not restrict access to this information. The visual, you know, the public perception of government that everything is bad and all politicians are corrupt and government is up to no good: we have to fix this. We actually have an opportunity to fix this right here, but we choose not to.

Also, the issue around who is the chief internal auditor accountable to. I've made this argument before, and many of my colleagues have as well. It's the classic definition of employer or boss. As an MLA my bosses are the people who elected me and entrusted me to ask questions on their behalf. The chief internal auditor and, for that matter, the entire internal audit committee work for the people of this province, not for the government and not for the minister. Their work is performed to make sure that the interests of the public and the tax dollars in the public purse are protected and dispensed according to best practices and with the utmost accountability. So hiding any type of information, however benign or useless or trivial in the opinion of the minister, really looks bad, especially now when we're trying to convince people that what happened federally is not going to happen here provincially and that we're taking measures to ensure that accountability, transparency, and openness are not only protected but promoted and encouraged by all government departments.

Lastly, before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, is the issue surrounding permission to disregard FOIP requests. I'm starting to envision FOIP administrators at the different public bodies looking for reasons to dismiss an application. So an application is not looked upon as to: how can I help this applicant; how can I release this information? They're now looking at ways to stop it and ways to refuse to release it.

This amendment will now pause or stop the clock as the commissioner studies the request for dismissal and arrives at his or her ruling. Currently the application clock continues to tick along for its 30 days' duration while the commissioner is conducting his or her review or evaluation. This amendment now stops the clock indefinitely, until a decision is made. That could be 30 days, like it is now, or it could be two months, or it could be a year, or it could be longer, maybe two years. Who knows? This is definitely unacceptable, and I would have found it a little easier to swallow,

Mr. Speaker, if they could have recommended that maybe the 30-day period would have been made into six weeks or 45 days or something that is reasonable. But the way it's worded here is really ridiculous.

So the cap. I would have much rather seen this bill split into two. One bill that I would have actually wholeheartedly supported right away, the part about protecting the privacy of Albertans. This is paramount. This is really, utmostly important for myself and for everyone in this House. It would not have received a lot of debate because everybody agrees on the merit and the usefulness and the benefit. The other half, which is the one adding more layers of secrecy, would have been the one that we would have argued against. So if I'm going to vote and it's all or none, I'm going to definitely urge everyone to reject this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Like my hon. member who previously spoke, I appreciate the government's attempt to keep foreign fingers from our privacy documents; however, the majority of this bill, as far as I'm concerned, is basically providing a sufficient length of time to bury the evidence, long enough for the minister to escape public accountability.

George Orwell in his novel Nineteen Eighty-four made the observation that "he who controls the past controls the future." By hiding, burying, FOIPing, what I referred to in last week's question period as an impenetrable FOIP-filled moat, the day-to-day business of this Legislature is prevented from occurring in a smooth, transitory manner. The government uses FOIP as a blunt instrument to basically bash opposition requests. Imagine if we were to actually share and work on information, if we had a level playing field, if our constituents could see us all on policy committees, working together for the common good of the province as a whole instead of this confrontational approach of us and them that Legislatures symbolically have maintained.

FOIP prevents the opposition from carrying out its job. I am not the least bit interested in the number of bottles of either red or white wine that were served at a Wednesday night lobbying function. What I am interested in is such details as flight logs. What I am interested in is detailed expenses of road transportation, number of conservation officers in a particular park, et cetera. This is all information that would be useful in terms of planning and, in a lot of cases, supporting government intentions.

Unfortunately, walls of FOIP are thrown at us on a regular basis. Yesterday, when we were talking about freedom of information, I think the figure came up to something like $300,000 or $174,000 for requests of who attended certain Treasury Board meetings. This type of hiding is the equivalent of: this group of new swimmers gets to wear the life jackets, but the other guys have to wear weights around their ankles. There's no sense of communication, transparency, accountability. It's: we will do our darndest because we're the government to prevent you from carrying out the role that the people have elected you to do, and that's basically requiring the government to be accountable and transparent.

Also, the government tends to pick winners and losers, and they don't seem to pick them in a particularly understandable way. For example, Impark. This outfit has a notorious, thuglike collection agency policy. It called people up at 2 in the morning with its demon dialing system, and it was misinformed; it called the wrong people. Yet outfits that are legitimately trying to improve the quality of life for Albertans, especially amputees – War Amps was initially denied the information that it needed to send out its appeals. I don't know whether key rings were considered potential foreign infiltration concerns, but the War Amps had to go through quite a process to get permission. Likewise, veterans had to go through quite a process to achieve the veterans' licence plates that we all celebrate now.

If the government wants to be not only perceived but valued for their transparency and accountability, all the FOIP costs could be avoided. As I said, I don't need to know the internal workings. I don't need to know what the minister ate when they sat on the jumbo jet heading to Ottawa because our own jet was in the hangar or what they ate in Hinton when they hopped on the government plane, but I do need to know the day-to-day workings to do my job. For example, we put forward a FOIP request to find out the details happening with the young offender who found his way to the bottom of an elevator shaft. All this information the taxpayers have paid for, and it isn't the exclusive right of the government to hide this information in its archive as opposed to sharing it.

What we need is a government that values accountability, transparency, that doesn't get involved in either petty or grand expenses. The simple way to get over the cost of FOIP would be to table the documents. By simply tabling them and providing them, there is no cost associated. Every day no extra cost is associated. Every day we table documents as part of our process. We have called upon the government on numerous occasions to table their information. We've basically been receiving the approach: "It's mine. It's all mine. How dare you ask for this type of information?"

Protect us from our foreign invaders? Secure us from our internal Vichy regime. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with interest to have an opportunity to speak on the bill as brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. I think that Bill 20 has a number of things that I would find meritorious yet some other things that are quite troublesome and really the opposite of the intention of the other part of the bill, so you've got to wonder sometimes how these things might come to fruition.

I think that I would like to speak in general on the bill on these proposed amendments. It seems to be aimed at protecting personal records from being improperly obtained by foreign governments, for which I am very grateful. I think it's a great idea, and it's long overdue. They also seem to speed the process for bringing new government boards and committees under the FOIP Act, which I think is somewhat troublesome. Some other amendments clarify how the act applies to specific categories of records like ministerial binder exemptions – what's that all about? – and addressing a request processing issue identified by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. They propose to allow somehow suspending a request until the Privacy Commissioner determines if the public body can disregard the request.

You know, there are many elements to this bill that would slow the process and the job we're meant to be doing here on both sides of the government, which is to work with the clarity of fact and with the objectivity of the best interests of the people of Alberta in mind. So I do have some serious reservations about this bill, Bill 20, and I would like to perhaps suggest some changes.

In this century more than in any other, Mr. Speaker, information is a very valuable commodity. Following the events in September of 2001 in the United States the American government concluded that the best tool it had at its disposal to fight the so-called war on terror was seemingly innocuous bits of information on everyday things and patterns of behaviour of human beings. When collected and analyzed, it's assumed that these data streams of everyday life will establish clear distinctions and patterns relating to crime. In its attempt to maximize the data and analyze this, the USA PATRIOT Act has given American courts and law enforcement officials greater access to all kinds of data about individuals, including, potentially, Canadian citizens.

The B.C. Privacy Commissioner concluded after some very serious reflection that more stringent measures are needed to be put in place to ensure that a Canadian citizen's personal information remains just that: personal and Canadian. Alberta's own office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner has concurred and just recently released a report about security risks associated with foreign access to Albertans' personal information. The findings stated that "it is important that the Government make a strong and unequivocal assertion of the value it places on the privacy and security of the personal information of Albertans." That's from page 33 of the Privacy Commissioner's report Public-sector Outsourcing and Risks to Privacy.

Mr. Speaker, these proposed amendments may in part seem to address those concerns, which is good, by specifying that only courts or bodies having jurisdiction in Alberta may have access to FOIPable documents, thereby seeming to exclude American courts or companies. While we applaud that apparent commitment to protecting our citizens' personal and private information, there are several what we consider to be quite objectionable sections to these amendments that deserve serious criticism and consideration.

The NDP has had a lot of experience with delayed and stymied quests for information over the years, where it's taken upwards of five months to get access to requested documents rather than the 30-day requirement stated previously. Considering the already great difficulty with which FOIP requests can be successfully made, we wonder how these amendments propose to address access issues in favour of the public because, after all, when we do request information through FOIP, we are doing it in the name of clarifying issues and considerations for the public's best interest. Not serving that, I think, undermines the basic means by which we can cast a constructively critical eye on what the government is doing.

First of all, if we could ask for clarification regarding the proposed inclusion of non-FOIPable material of published works available online, say in public libraries, then why is this an issue? Often this material is already available in the public domain. Self-published works, if they're available at libraries, are catalogued and may be taken out. If they are already available in the public domain, why should they be excluded from a FOIP access if someone should choose to obtain them in that manner? This, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, casts a light on the overall intention of this government to withhold information, and the spirit of not being able to access that information goes against the better judgment of running a good, transparent government.

Secondly, and more importantly, the five-year FOIP exclusion of ministerial briefing materials proposed here is based on the argument that public access to such documents may impair the government's ability to prepare for session, which, Mr. Speaker, I really must say is quite outrageous. The legislative debates based on notes like this are public, and to bar access to them is to invite accusations of secrecy. For a government already plagued by a lack of accountability and transparency, we're rather shocked that such amendments are proposed.

The very spirit of democracy rests on the fact that the government is formed by and for the citizens of Alberta, and therefore the documents, preparatory notes, and discussions must be made public and available to the public, particularly considering that such ministerial briefings do not and should not be considered as revealing the substance of deliberations of Executive Council any more than ministerial comments and debates do in the Legislature. These are two different things, Mr. Speaker. Along these lines, the other part of this, the 15-year exclusion of documents belonging to the chief internal auditor of Alberta is equally unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, we have some serious problems with the second part of this bill, and I think we have to call into question why the two pieces are attached together. In fact, it is important for us to protect the information of our citizens from foreign incursion, but at the same time we're somehow withholding information that our own citizens are entitled to look at and use as part of the deliberation of good government. So I do want to express these reservations that we have at this point in time, and hopefully during the course of this legislative session we can make some corrections.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak in second reading to Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. This is always an interesting experience because, in fact, the intention of FOIP legislation, freedom of information and protection of privacy, was supposed to be about openness and transparency. It was supposed to be about access to government documentation. That's where the idea of it came from, but in the hands of this government and some other governments, I must admit, it's turned into denial of access to information and in some cases has reached a very fine art of denial.

There are a number of things being anticipated here. I went back and asked for a copy of the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee final report from November of 2002. I haven't been able to read through all of it, so I'll be looking forward to participating in the Committee of the Whole discussion here. In my cursory reading of this it looks like what this legislation is doing is absolutely dead opposite from what the committee recommended, but I will take more time to look through that and participate in Committee of the Whole on that specifically.

The idea that this government is open and transparent is, indeed, laughable. I don't do many FOIP requests, Mr. Speaker, mostly because I do regard it as a very long and tedious exercise in futility, but the few times I have done it, I'm struggling to remember if I ever got any information. I know that some of my colleagues have been much more prolific in their applications, and I think the success rate is about 10 per cent, but I'll let them speak to that.

A couple of things are being anticipated here. One of the ones that's really interesting to me is the shutdown of information, making the documents from the chief internal auditor exempt from FOIP requests for a period of 15 years. This gets really interesting. Does this set the stage for the Public Accounts Committee to be refused information from the chief internal auditor as well? What about motions for returns or written questions? Do they end up following that lead, or is the FOIP legislation, in fact, used as a reason for not releasing the same kind of information?

I would've thought that a committee like Public Accounts, which is formed of members of this Assembly, is not restrained, as far as I know, from asking for anything, and they have an expectation that they should receive it. The chief internal auditor is an integral part now of the way that the government manages its own finances, and therefore it comes under the scrutiny of Public Accounts as well.

It's a relatively new creation, and I would have to say that it appears to have hit a stumble. I would venture to say that it's not working well right now and seems to actually be stalled. I'm thinking that they haven't even managed to replace the last chief internal auditor, who was the first internal auditor. I think they haven't even replaced him, so one presumes that whole office is sort of on hiatus.

What we've got here is that the office that was created to really look at how the government was managing its financial documents and audit more closely how the government was handling all of that is now going to set itself apart and not be open to any kind of scrutiny, which really shuts down any kind of scrutiny of the government's finances. That's why I'm asking the question about access to the Public Accounts Committee. Will that be shut down as well, as a corollary or an effect of what's being anticipated in this legislation?

One of the other sections is contemplating allowing a timeline on a FOIP request to be halted. The clock is to stop ticking when the commissioner makes a decision as to whether the request should be rejected or disregarded, so it's on an appeal process in front of the commissioner. This I find amusing because it's already in effect, Mr. Speaker. I'm dealing with that very thing right now.

Back in September we applied to get information that would tell us what evidence the government was using to move forward on its third-way health framework, what they were basing this on, what the cost-benefit analysis was, what studies, what exactly they were basing this whole idea on. We did a FOIP request in September, and you get the usual: okay, you'll get a response within 30 days. I don't have all the exact dates in front of me, but I think it was shy of the first 30 days that they came back to us and said: well, this is a huge request. We said: okay, fine. We narrowed the request right then, so within the first 30 days we presented a narrower request of what we were looking for.

Then they came back with some huge amount of money, which is standard practice now. They don't actually want to be seen saying no to you, but they're going to come back to the opposition and demand, you know, tens and into the hundreds of thousands of dollars to pay for the staff time and the photocopying to actually get the documents, which is the same as saying that you can't have the stuff because that's a huge part of the caucus budget for the opposition and in some cases actually probably exceeds the caucus budget for some of the other opposition parties. In effect, it's another way of refusing a FOIP request without doing it.

This saga continues. We're asked for a huge amount of money. We appeal it, saying that it's in the public interest, and in fact that's granted. The amount of money is reduced by I think 80 per cent. So we come up with a purchase order to pay for the reduced amount. We submit it. Time goes by. Nothing happens. We go back and say, "Where is it?" "Oh, well, we didn't get anything from you." "Well, we submitted a PO to you. This should be progressing." They look around, and they've lost the PO. They can't find it. They insist that we never sent it to them. Well, we can prove that we sent it to them. We recorded it all. We kept copies of faxes and remittal sheets and that sort of thing, so we can prove it. But, no, they can't find it.

We get another PO issued, a second PO. They lose that one too. Then there's a third PO issued. Time has moved on. We've appealed again to try and get the entire amount dismissed on the argument that if you've recognized that it's essentially in the public good and reduced the amount the first time, that argument holds for the whole amount.

We're now several months past this. Remember, we started in September, Mr. Speaker. We're now into the new year, so we're four, five months into this process. We still have nothing, and we've been delayed.

The next trick is that you just keep changing the officers in the department who are responsible for FOIP. We'd go back to them and say: "You're overdue. You're late. You've lost another PO. What's going on?" "Oh, I'm sorry. That person is gone. The new person will have to familiarize themselves with the file." That seems to take, again, another period of time. They lose it. I think some of these different people were responsible for losing some of the POs. I'm not exactly clear on that timeline. But that's what has happened to us. We've been assessed amounts of money. We've paid it. They've lost POs. They've changed FOIP officers. I think we're on the fourth or fifth FOIP officer on this file in six months.

Now we're told that if we want to appeal this again, well, then there would be a halt. The clock would stop ticking, and they would stop accumulating the files that we now have a FOIP order to produce. Do we appeal what's happening to us? If we do, then the clock stops ticking and they stop collecting the documents. Well, we still want to see the documents, so at this point we're having to hold off on that in the hopes that they will continue to collect these documents and finally hand them over. We're now being told June. We started this in September. You're supposed to be getting these documents within 30 days. You're supposed to get a letter within 30 days that tells you whether it's going to be followed through on immediately or if there's some other issue.

I mean, we're not talking 90 days' delay here, Mr. Speaker. If we don't get it in June, it's quite likely we're looking at September, which is a whole year to get something that is perfectly legitimate for us to be asking for. It's already been recognized that it's in the public interest. So this FOIP legislation is not being used to enhance access to government documents. It's being used to restrict and deflect access to public documents, to deny the opposition and the public access to public documents.

I notice the – I think we should name it the Gold Bar and Strathcona memorial section, which recognizes the work that both of those individuals did in raising the issue of the USA PATRIOT Act and the effect that it could have on personal information that was collected by our government and the ability of private U.S. companies that had anything to do with us to have their files looked through by the U.S. government. That's how that whole thing was set up. Indeed, I was here and was able to hear both the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raise that issue repeatedly. Thank goodness that they did because we are seeing the government take some action on that. Congratulations for figuring out that one. [interjection] Yes. I'm being reminded that my colleague from Edmonton-McClung did as well. Timingwise, the members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Gold Bar were raising this in 2003 and 2004, I think.

So a good thing there. When the government does something right, I try and encourage them by saying: you did something right there; keep doing it.

I'm interested in how this is all going to play out, in effect, what is possibly before us in the government's new policy framework on health. What's being anticipated there is moving to private insurance. Well, the private insurance providers that have indicated an interest are all coming out of the U.S. Insurance companies are very adept at collecting vast amounts of information on individuals and using it back and forth with other insurance agencies. What's interesting about that is that we're always asked to release access to that information when we apply for a bank loan, a credit card, any kind of a mortgage.

My own insurance company tried to get me to waive and to release information of all kinds of aspects of my life that they had no business knowing. They gave me a nice sort of little threatening clause in there saying that if I didn't do this, I might perhaps have my insurance cancelled. I said: "Well, fine. Cancel it. I'm not giving you the information." But I suspect that a lot of other people went, "Oh, dear," and ticked off the box and said, "Yes, you can have access to that."

So how is FOIP going to work, then, if we have U.S. health providers and U.S. private insurance companies dealing with our personal health information and that information is now being held by them in the U.S.? How is FOIP going to protect us then? I'll be interested to hear from the sponsor of the bill whether that's been anticipated and what specifically has been put in place to protect us. I don't think this clause, as nice as it is, is going to do it. But let's hear from the sponsor of the bill. I think we're all aware that once we open it up to U.S. health providers and U.S. insurance companies, then we have opened it up according to NAFTA and all bets are off. I think that's more of a concern.

One of the other issues . . .

Oh, Mr. Speaker, I'm so disappointed. This is such an interesting bill.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you anticipated the question.

You were so rudely cut off by the bell. Did you wish to conclude your statements?

The Acting Speaker: Brief remarks.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. What I had wanted to talk about was the assessments that were being levied for people who went through the FOIP process and the discouragement that that's given to not only the public but also to the opposition members.

Finally, I think the members opposite need to be careful what they wish for. I know that they anticipate that they will be in power forever, but they won't be. Do they wish to live under the FOIP restrictions that they are putting in place? I would venture to you, Mr. Speaker, that we will hear very different sounds coming from members on that side if they are subject to these FOIP restrictions that they, in fact, are trying to put into place. It may well serve the purpose of the government members now, but they will not be government forever and possibly not even government for much longer. I think they need to carefully consider whether they wish to work under those same restrictions that they're now putting in place, if I may offer that as a conclusion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise again and debate against Bill 20, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Amendment Act, 2006. This bill aims at achieving eight objectives. Four of the amendments are aimed at further restricting the information that may be available through a FOIP request. Of those four, two may be viewed as positive steps because they will restrict the ability of foreign authorities from accessing private information through warrants. The other two may be viewed as an attempt by the government to keep potentially sensitive material secret. We oppose those two objectives strongly, particularly the one dealing with the ministerial briefings.

One of the objectives is to increase the power of the Minister of Government Services by allowing him or her to make regulations regarding the FOIP Act. The stated purpose of this objective is so that the minister may designate new public bodies, making them accessible through FOIP requests in the interim while the schedule of public bodies is updated, which is complex and time consuming. We support this particular amendment.

One of the objectives is to put in half of the 30-day timeline when a public body requests that the commissioner allows the body to disregard the request. My recommendation is to oppose this objective as the FOIP process is already very time consuming.

One of the objectives is to increase the penalties for unauthorized disclosure of private information by individuals and corporations. We support this objective as there must be real consequences for these offences.

One of the objectives is to allow a public body to be deleted from the schedule of public bodies even if that body receives substantial funding from the government. We strongly oppose this objective.

Mr. Speaker, although there are some positive changes that are being proposed here, overall the impact of this bill would be overwhelmingly negative. Let me talk about the positive impact of this bill. The proposed changes regarding library information and foreign court orders ensure that Albertans' information is not susceptible to foreign authorities. These changes are in response to concerns first raised by the province of British Columbia regarding the impact of the USA PATRIOT Act. The proposed changes regarding more severe penalties are also positive. Having these changes will ensure that individuals and corporations that hold personal information know that violating Alberta's law regarding disclosing personal information will have serious consequences.

The negative impact side of this bill: proposed changes regarding information held by the chief internal auditor and ministerial briefings will have a negative impact. This government is well known to be among the most secretive in Canada.

Mr. Chase: Two awards.

Mr. Agnihotri: Two in a row.

This is another attempt by the Tories to restrict public access to information that the government wants to be secret but that Albertans should be able to access. The proposed changes regarding the deletion of public bodies from the schedule of public bodies also have a very negative impact. For example, if the government provides significant funding for a research institute, that institute should be considered a public body because it will be under the influence of the government. The government would have studies conducted, reports produced, et cetera, through this institute, yet its work would be exempt from FOIP access. Mr. Speaker, this is an attempt by the Tories to further limit the public access to information.

This bill does propose some positive changes. However, the negative outcomes far outweigh the positive; therefore, it is recommended that we oppose this bill. We would want to amend this bill by removing the sections which deal with the chief internal auditor, ministerial briefings, timeline extension, and the deletion of a public body from the schedule of public bodies.

I see no need for the changes there to section 6 of this act. For one thing, the act already limits to a great degree information that is prepared by all four ministers in sections 22 and 24. If the purpose of the changes to section 6 is merely to allow the government to effectively prepare for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly, why the five-year timeline? That's a big question.

The minister has commented that ministerial briefings should be exempt from FOIP access to allow the government to properly prepare for a sitting of the Legislative Assembly. Does the minister not realize that the opposition too must prepare? As the opposition our rule requires that we will be able to hold the government accountable. This bill would seriously limit that ability for us.

The new restrictions relating to the chief internal auditor are very troubling, very troubling. The reality is that the office of the CIA is staffed primarily by deputy ministers and the Tory faithful. Now you want to make it so that CIA investigations into the government activities are hidden from the public for 15 years. How will this result in an accountable government? Another question.

Now I would like to talk about the FOIP fees that are restrictive. My question is: is it revenue or a hurdle to deter or prevent the access? When a FOIP request is processed, sometimes up to half or 60 per cent of the documents returned are blanked out or blacked over or withheld. Are we interested in protecting the privacy of citizens, or is it the prime directive to prevent access to government information? Which is the priority of this government? That's a big question.

Mr. Speaker, now I would like to adjourn this debate. Thank you very much.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and move second reading of Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act, or the AISH Act.

As the chair of the MLA AISH Review Committee and chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, I'm pleased to see this bill come before the House. I'd like to remind the members that in April of 2005 the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill and I released the report on a comprehensive review of this important program. The AISH program provides support for over 34,000 Albertans with a severe disability that impairs their ability to earn a living. This program provides vital income support and health benefits for Albertans in need.

We had an overwhelming response to the program review, Mr. Speaker. We received responses from over 18,000 Albertans, including Albertans with disabilities, their family and friends, and disability organizations. We are very grateful for this input. It helped us to make 11 recommendations, which I'm pleased to say the government moved quickly to implement and which have led to the introduction of this Bill 21.

In April of 2005 we introduced significant improvements to the AISH program. Among these changes was an increase to the maximum living allowance, from $850 to $950 per month, which will increase again to a thousand dollars on April 1. In addition, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports introduced personal income support benefits last October to help clients with extra monthly and one-time expenses like, for example, paying for children's school supplies or travel to medical appointments. Another significant improvement we made was to renew the program, including increasing employment earnings exemptions.

All of these enhancements have been very well received by clients and their families as well as stakeholders in the disability community. Bill 21 promises to continue to improve this program. AISH clients told us that the program wasn't flexible or responsive to their unique needs. While the enhancements made over the last year were very important, legislative changes are necessary to fully move the program forward in the way Albertans have asked for, and that's why I'm pleased to see this bill before this Assembly.

One of the biggest changes Bill 21 offers is flexibility in the reporting of income. Right now clients report their income on a monthly basis, which makes sense for those clients whose income changes regularly through their work or through some kind of investments. However, Mr. Speaker, approximately 85 per cent of AISH clients either have no other source of income than their monthly living allowance or their income does not change more than about 10 per cent from one year to the next. Bill 21 will allow those clients whose income is quite static to report less frequently, possibly as little as one time per year.

Basing reporting frequency on individual client situations will improve program efficiency by making it easier for clients to report changes in their income and reduce the occurrence of overpayments and underpayments. More than ever before, the new legislation will respond to the unique situation faced by AISH clients while at the same time ensure that AISH clients who work or whose income fluctuates during the year can continue to report their income monthly.

As you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, with over 34,000 files occasionally errors in reporting income can result in a client being overpaid or underpaid their AISH benefit. The rewritten act is more flexible in terms of how these errors are corrected. By passing this legislation, we'll be able to make sure that AISH clients first have the opportunity to appeal the overpayment and exhaust that process before a debt is assessed and collection action taken. In the past collection began as soon as an overpayment was identified. With the proposed change, after an appeal panel decision, any client who feels that they have not received due process will still have the opportunity to go to court. The bill also allows for government to consider special circumstances and, if appropriate, exempt the client from repaying the amount that they were overpaid.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, these changes will first of all allow us to respond better to individual situations; secondly, ensure that clients have access to appeals in overpayment situations; and thirdly, bring the legislation up to date and in line with all the positive changes made throughout the past year.

As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities part of my role is to bring forward issues that are important to the disability community. We achieved that, I believe, during the MLA review process, and I'm pleased to continue that today by speaking to this renewed bill.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to speak to Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. I encourage all members of the Legislature to support this important legislation as it continues our commitment to improve AISH. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've reviewed the changes and the work that the MLA review committee did, and there is some really good work here. I want to be able to support this bill; however, I do have some reservations. The numbers that you have quoted of the people that are involved is actually a very, very small percentage of Albertans; however, that number is our most vulnerable. Probably the other group that would be most vulnerable would be the homeless. I believe that these people are so very vulnerable, and therefore our responsibility to look after them I think is very, very great. They exist and they survive. We are lucky because we live and we have many, many choices with how we live our lives and what we can do with our daily living. They don't have many of those choices.

One of the things that I do have reservations about is that with the review guide it said that almost every respondent identified the need to increase the AISH financial benefit. What I would like to have seen there is a serious consideration of having those dollars, the base dollars that people on AISH get, actually be indexed so that when they see that toothpaste, toilet paper, and their utility bills have gone up, they at least have a hope that next year they will get that increase, that will help relieve that fear of what they are going to eat if they have to pay for the utilities.

One of the other comments that was made is that the government has changed the policy to make the practice of not having to go to court legal in terms of people who were having difficulties in either underpayments or overpayments. I believe that it may be legal, but is this really the way that we expect to be governed? I would question the moral and ethical aspects of this practice. The Citizen's Appeal Panel I think is a good first step towards addressing this dilemma, provided that the staff deal with our citizens in a very respectful way.

I believe that sensitivity training could well be applied to some of the people that are in these departments that often deal with these people who have mental problems. Their medication may not be on that day, and many of them do have limited education and sometimes can be very difficult to deal with. In particular, when you have to repeat the same kinds of information over and over again, it does take a certain sensitivity to be able to handle that. I also think that it's not particularly accountable. I think that we have to be very accountable not only with our dollars and with the process but with our behaviours.

One of the other big concerns for me is that many of the significant provisions have been moved to regulation as opposed to actually being legislated. I believe there are many things in here that should be legislated so that there's a comeback. Despite the fact that it may all get lost in FOIP, I believe that there must be that opportunity.

Future changes must be made in an open and accountable manner. I believe that the accountable manner is better easily handled through legislation as opposed to regulations that are often done behind closed doors.

I know that the Premier is always asking for ideas, so I would like to throw out an idea particularly for people that receive AISH payments on a very regular basis. On my utility bill it is very, very clear what I have paid for, how much I owe. I'm on a budget plan. If I'm over or under, it's very clear on every single statement that I get exactly where I stand. The utility companies have a very excellent tracking system to be able to do that. I'm wondering if we couldn't implement some sort of a statement where if a mistake was made, there would be a much better chance of catching that mistake over, say, even a six-month period than letting it drag out, where these people just take the money and may not actually think their way through or have a statement to compare it to to see if they're over or under. If they have the statement from last month and they got a hundred dollars and this month they're getting $200, would that not trigger, perhaps, the question: why is this over? Or if they got a hundred dollars and this month they only got $50, I'm sure it would trigger that question, and they would realize quickly that there is a problem at some point with the money they're receiving.

I've mentioned that I think sensitivity training is essential, particularly for the staff that deal on the telephone or the staff that might help people fill out the actual forms.

Ms Blakeman: The front lines.

Ms Pastoor: Front lines, yes.

I feel that removing the court ability is a common legal defence open to other Albertans in fighting debts or in fighting anything. I believe that by removing that from the AISH recipients, we have now segregated them again into a separate body that doesn't have that fairness of being able to use the court systems.

I'm not clear on the details of what the regulations relating to the following sections of 12(1)(b), (f), (g), (h), (i), and 12(2)(b) actually are. So perhaps I could obtain those before we go into Committee of the Whole.

Some of the sections are not going to be included in the AISH Act but then go into regulations. One in particular is the review. Now, the fact that this was reviewed was because it was legislated. It had to happen in 2004. I feel that at least a time frame should be legislated. I certainly think that it should be done at least every five years, and it should be legislated.

I also feel that the financial administrators should be legislated. I think that there should be behaviours put on the persons, either the administration or perhaps the financial administrators, that would be working to help people who can't do it on their own. It could well be the public guardian that has to look after these people, but I think that it should be legislated. There has to be some way that we can look at it without having to try to fight with FOIP all the time to get exactly, very clearly – so the people actually have something to hang their hats on when they try to fight a system that isn't always as kind as it should be.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister for seniors.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased as well to speak to Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped, AISH, Act, 2006, because it is a very important piece of legislation. I'd like to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Strathcona for sponsoring this bill. As you know, through his responsibility as chairman of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities he has become well known and respected for his interest, his knowledge, and his insight on the needs of Albertans with disabilities, and I appreciate that very much.

As minister responsible for the programs that serve adults with disabilities in our province, I believe that Bill 21 and the forthcoming regulations will continue our government's work to renew the AISH program and make it more responsive to the unique needs of persons with disabilities. When our hon. colleagues from Strathcona, Calgary-Nose Hill, and Calgary-Bow reviewed the AISH program, one of the things they found was that the language, as was mentioned earlier, within the AISH Act and regulations was in great need of being updated. The original AISH Act was written in 1979, when the program first began, and back then it was based on welfare legislation, which was very prescriptive and limiting. As a result, the language and the tone of the existing act do not reflect our renewed direction for the program as we move from an income support focus to a disability support focus.

Bill 21 addresses this renewed direction by modernizing the AISH legislation that was written 27 years ago. This renewed act will also make the AISH program more responsive to the unique needs of persons with disabilities by focusing on their abilities and assisting them in becoming as independent as they possibly can. Mr. Speaker, that is what all of the changes in Bill 21 are about: making the AISH program more responsive and flexible to meet the unique needs of persons with disabilities.

That goal is one of the reasons why in November 2004 the Premier created the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports. For the first time many of the government programs for persons with disabilities were placed under one ministry, and this new ministry structure has given us the opportunity to co-ordinate our programs to support individuals in the best way possible. I know that it is important to persons with disabilities, their friends, and their loved ones. Bill 21 allows us to continue to improve the co-ordination of these programs and services by consolidating legislative provisions related to the AISH program under one ministry.

Mr. Speaker, the updated language and improved program co-ordination outlined in Bill 21 are mirrored by our government's investment in the renewed AISH program. That renewal includes a significant investment in the program to implement the many positive changes we have made over the past year, and that investment was unprecedented in the program's 27-year history. This program is about people, not finances. Government investment has proven to have had a direct impact on the quality of life for individuals. I think it is important to note that AISH clients themselves see this as a true renewal of the program.

As my colleague from Strathcona has noted, Bill 21 will also change the reporting and appeal structure for the AISH program. Making the reporting process for clients more flexible will also cut down on administrative paperwork, which will reduce the number of errors and, in turn, will reduce overpayments and underpayments to AISH clients. That is something that I think everyone here would like to support, Mr. Speaker.

This legislation will reflect our government's commitment to people with disabilities, as I said earlier, by updating the language. It will allow for more flexible reporting and appeals processes and reduce the number of errors that result in overpayments, allow for health benefits to support the high medical costs to people with severe disabilities who are not eligible for AISH because of their income level, and enable third-party payments if it benefits the client and they have consented.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 21 will enable our ministry to carry on with this important work to make real and significant changes to the AISH program. This bill represents the future of the AISH program, and I'm confident it will make a difference in the lives of persons with disabilities in our province.

Before closing, I'd like to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for your thoughtful comments. I want you to know that I was listening very carefully. I will read Hansard. I will try, through the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to have those answers that you are looking for in Committee of the Whole. You had some good ideas. There were two there that I liked that you had presented, so thank you.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'm respectfully going to request the support of all members for this very important bill as I believe it will enrich the lives of our AISH clients. So thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I see this bill as kind of a baby-step solution for a giant problem. I'm pleased that we're heading in a positive direction, but the reality is that when we're finished . . .

An Hon. Member: One-term wonder.

Mr. Chase: We'll see about that.

What's happening here is that we've defined dignity as $12,000 a year plus $400 if the person is sufficiently able to do some work outside their home, and to me that's a pretty limiting definition. I'm concerned that it took so long for this government to recognize how far in the hole these individuals were, and my concern is that this proposed Bill 21 doesn't have an automatic market-basket measure cost-of-living allowance increase. How many more years will it take either until we have a new government or we have a realistic add-on on a yearly basis? These small amounts of increase from $850 to $950 and now up to the whopping sum of $1,000 per month are very quickly eaten, as was previously mentioned, by costs such as rent increases, utility increases.

Basically, it appears that we're giving, but other people surrounding them are taking away. If the government as part of this bill could have some sort of rent control expectation or took into account the selection of where the person was housed to keep landlords from preying upon these most vulnerable of citizens, I would be much more pleased.

I believe that a lot of the action the government took was the direct result of the class-action suit. I know that there are members, including the minister responsible for this area, who have big hearts, and I do appreciate that. It's not a question of, you know, white knights and dark knights. We all have our various sides. But more needs to be done.

The Alberta Association for Community Living, which works with a number of people on AISH, has only received a 4 per cent raise in the last 16 years. People working with PDD, persons with disabilities, had a limited raise last time, I believe in 2002. So it's not only the people who are on AISH that are struggling to make it financially; it's the people who are attempting to support them.

There are little things that we could do that would help in the process. In some cases instead of requiring the PDD clients or the AISH clients with sometimes very major physical disabilities to go downtown to pick up their cheques, we could make it easier. If we're worried about the tracking of the funding, we all have constituency offices, so here's the thought: have the cheques sent to the constituency offices for more convenient pickup by our clientele. [interjections] Well, I'm very concerned about how far AISH recipients have to travel and the impediments. There has to be a better system, a community outreach for getting the money to the people in need.

Something else that would help – and it would be rather inexpensive but, again, it would require some government support and funding – would be to make the AISH recipients' bus pass at the same cost as the seniors' bus pass, which in Calgary was $35 a year as opposed to $35 a month. This would be a small break, but it would definitely help.

The other obvious note in terms of if we want to talk about just strictly monetary efficiency is that it's considerably cheaper to keep people in their community, and AISH recipients would much rather be in as normalized an environment as possible as opposed to institutionalizing them. So I wish within this bill that we would recognize that we are investing a very small amount overall to look after these most vulnerable individuals.

One of the things that bothers me is the way the system works in terms of how people end up on AISH. Basically, if they apply for AISH, my understanding in the past – and the minister can correct me – is that they lost their long-term disability coverage. It just was lost to them. They may have worked for a number of years and then, due to some unfortunate accident or illness, were forced onto AISH. The insurance companies to which they had paid premiums for years and years and years cut them off as soon as they go onto AISH.

Another sort of, you know, “You’ve been kicked once and now you’re stepped on,” is that AISH recipients are prematurely forced, basically, to go on Canada pension. This is particularly hard for people who end up on AISH after having worked for 30 years or more and are forced to go prematurely into drawing funds from their Canada pension. So I wish we could co-ordinate the various levels of benefits. AISH should be a sort of topping up rather than a minimal amount of funding.

I am concerned that this bill in its current format may not make it through this House because it was presented as a private member’s bill.

Some Hon. Members: No, it’s not.

Mr. Chase: Oh, sorry. I stand corrected. I am so glad that it’s a government member’s bill. I was mistaken. By giving it the authority of a government member’s bill . . .

Some Hon. Members: It’s a government bill.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. And again I praise you for taking the most vulnerable people on AISH and recognizing this.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, it would really help if you could direct your comments to the Speaker.

Mr. Chase: Oh, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I need an Annie Oakley mirror so that I can see the people I’m talking to, but I understand the process.

I am very pleased that this is a government member’s bill. I gladly accept the embarrassment of my confusion over this government bill because it recognizes the vulnerability of AISH recipients. It just doesn’t go far enough. I will be supportive of this bill and its baby steps. I would like to see yearly updated market-value, cost-of-living allowance cheques built into this bill, and will probably be suggesting such things in the form of amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with great interest to make some comments in second reading on Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. To my understanding this act is replacing some old legislation, providing some new flexibility to better respond to the needs of Albertans with disabilities, who are amongst our most vulnerable citizens here in the province.

The new legislation says that it’s updating the language, improving reporting. Now, I’m not entirely sure how the reporting procedures are in fact improved with this new bill, but we perhaps can look to the regulations – I don’t know – to see if that is where we might see the improvement in regard to reporting. This AISH Act hasn’t been seriously updated for more than 25 years, so we’re glad to see some changes. We certainly do applaud this long overdue increase to AISH payments that was announced last year, and we look forward in the new budget to see more such increases that would meet the rise in inflation, the cost of living, the realities of individuals living on this very, very limited monthly budget.

We do have some questions regarding this bill that we see here before us this afternoon. When the hon. Member for Strathcona introduced this bill, he stated that “this act replaces and updates the current legislation and, along with its forthcoming regulations, will provide the AISH program with increased flexibility.” As no less than many dozens of sections and subsections of this bill refer to regulations, I would ask if it was possible for this Assembly to see some of these regulations so that we might better understand just exactly what he means by this and how we can support this legislation, in fact, by seeing what the regulations have to say.

I guess you see my point, Mr. Speaker. I do find it a bit odd, to say the least, that in light of the class-action suit against the government for overpayment recovery and underpayment issues, the current proposed bill should allow these same important issues to remain under directorial control in the regulation part of this act. Again, what processes and guidelines would be in place to ensure that the government doesn’t misstep again, as they did with this very large class-action suit that we find pending against the government right now?

You know, the original act made a distinction between facilities and institutions and denied benefits or payments to persons living in institutions. The proposed act doesn’t mention institutions at all, and we’d like to know if that distinction has now faded into regulation or obscurity or what exactly that distinction is. So that is a worthwhile thing for us to be watching for.

Lastly, if the MLA AISH Review could send a questionnaire to every AISH client and make available that same questionnaire online, accept other written submissions, consult with 4,000 disability organizations and individuals, hold two public meetings, speak to over 18,000 people apparently, and in the end make public their findings before beginning the legislative review, all to begin a much-needed review affecting many tens of thousands of people in this province, then my question, obviously, Mr. Speaker, is: why can’t Albertans expect the same level of commitment or consultation to review a much larger program, our public health care system that affects well over 3 million people?

So, Mr. Speaker, certainly it’s welcome to see some activity in regard to our AISH recipients here in this province. I know that we have underrepresented the needs of these people for far too long, and I would just like to close by reminding everyone that but for the grace of God or whatever you happen to believe in, we all can be in that same position of need and of requiring assistance, and it’s our duty to remind ourselves that these people who are requiring special assistance are everyday individuals who have run into a series of circumstances or medical problems or whatever it is that have put them into this position. We as a caring society must make sure that we look after their needs and their wants, and that is a measure of what sort of society we are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and debate on Bill 21, Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. This act will replace the existing AISH Act and consolidate AISH-related legislation under the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports.

It is expected that changes in this act will increase flexibility in reporting income and result in fewer incidents of overpayments and underpayments, likely in response to the $100 million settlement reached in December 2005. This act outlines the appeal process for individuals required to repay benefits because of accidental overpayments. Clients will have access to the Citizens' Appeal Panel to review an overpayment before a debt is assessed and a collection action is taken. This act will allow health benefits to be provided to disabled individuals who do not meet the income eligibility requirements but face financial hardship because of their high health costs.

It is very important to discuss a little bit of background of the AISH program in detail. Mr. Speaker, about 6.4 per cent of Alberta's population between the ages of 18 and 64, totalling 205,000 people, have a disability; about 2.4 per cent, 75,000 people, have a severe disability; 1 per cent of Alberta's population, which is 32,000, currently receive the AISH benefit; 32 per cent receive AISH because of mental illness, 23 per cent because of developmental disabilities, and 45 per cent because of physical disabilities. The caseload has increased from 16,368 cases in 1994-95 to 31,450 in the year 2004-05. In the year 2005-06 AISH program funding was $488 million. It is projected that in 2007-08 program funding will reach approximately $606 million. Albertans on AISH receive a monthly allowance of up to $950, $1,000 as of April 1, 2006, and the personal support benefit for raising children, health benefits like premium-free Alberta health care insurance, AADL copayment fees, prescription drugs, eye care, dental care, emergency ambulance services, and essential diabetic supplies.

In the year 2004 an AISH review committee was established to review the AISH program because clients and stakeholders indicated that the benefits were too low and the program was not meeting clients' needs. There was also a legislative requirement to review the AISH Act in 2004 to identify ways to make the program more responsible to clients' needs.

A review guide was sent out to AISH clients and disability organizations and was made available to the public. The results indicated that almost every respondent identified the need to increase the AISH financial benefit. Ninety-six per cent wanted to see additional benefits for clients with unique needs beyond the cash benefit and health care coverage. Eighty-four per cent supported having medical benefits separate from income support. Eighty-three per cent supported increases to the employment earnings exemption rate.

Mr. Speaker, many of the recommendations have been adopted by this government since the review was completed. Most notably, there has been an increase in the monthly benefit from $850 to $1,000 effective April 2006.

My debate would be incomplete if I didn't talk about the background of the lawsuit details. In December 2005 the government of Alberta settled a class-action lawsuit allocating $100 million for the victims of decades of illegal debt collection processes. The government was accused of arbitrarily interpreting its own policies and legislation in order to recover overpayment as far back as possible. Legislation dictated that when collecting an amount over $500 up until 1983 and over $1,000 after that, the government needed a signed repayment agreement or had to go through the court to recover the money. The government instead went against its own policy and began arbitrarily docking clients for overpayments caused by administration errors.

The new policy allowed the government to avoid court in cases where there was no signed agreement and simply start repayments of future benefit cheques. For years deductions were made without any judicial oversight. In a May 1999 court case the government acknowledged that it could not make these deductions, but the practice still continued until the year 2004, when the government changed its policy to make this practice legal. It allowed for debt to be recovered without going through a court process or securing an agreement with the client. They also denied clients full compensation when they were underpaid, limiting them to six months of payments. The recipients who received less money than they should have were allowed to recover six months' worth of their losses even if the underpayment had been going on for years and was the result of administrative mistakes.

Mr. Speaker, many of the changes in this act will increase flexibility in the AISH program, especially the health benefit provision; however, we should be cautious and suspicious that so many significant provisions are being moved to regulation. Transparency and accountability should be this government's number one priority, especially considering their track record on this issue. We want to voice our commitment to providing client-friendly, flexible programs that meet the needs of disabled Albertans, but we also need to be aware that in order to restore public confidence in the provision of the AISH program, changes must be made in an open and accountable manner. It is essential that any changes to the AISH program make the process more client friendly, minimize costs to clients, and demonstrate flexibility and simplicity. We are opposed to details being made by regulation, especially since this government has a history of betraying the most vulnerable members of our society through decades of illegal debt collections. We hope that changes to the AISH Act were made with the needs of the clients in mind and reflect a change in attitude towards disabled people by this government. I welcome the move by this government. I commend the sponsor, the Member for Strathcona, for introducing this bill. I support this bill in principle.

Before I conclude, I want to say a little bit. I met a constituent yesterday, and he was complaining about the money. I mean, although the total amount of money they've received since April is about $1,000, he's not happy with that. He believes that the government should review the case every year and that they should get the benefit like other disabled people in Alberta. The review was due for a long, long time, and the Alberta government should consider this case very seriously. They have sacrificed a lot in the past. The Premier admitted this many times, and it is about time to consider them very seriously.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just a couple of points I'd like to get on the record during second reading of Bill 21, the Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act. There have been a number of speakers that have spoken prior to me about the good work that has been done in this act and in recognizing how onerous some of the old legislation was towards our vulnerable people.

A couple of points I'd like to make. What I'm not seeing in this act is any attempt to index AISH. Considering that we as MLAs in this House are the beneficiaries of an indexing which attaches any increase we receive, or decrease, I suppose, in the Alberta weekly wage, I would really like to see the same kind of indexing happen for the AISH benefit amount. What tends to happen here is that it's not indexed. It doesn't come up year after year after year, and all of a sudden it's a huge amount of money that's being considered, and the government balks at it. Really, if we looked at an incremental increase all the way along tied to something, inflation, the Alberta weekly wage – there are a number of things that it could be tied to – then it's a smaller incremental amount and keeps everybody up to speed and benefits people very immediately. It helps them deal with the increase in their utilities and other inflationary costs.

The second thing I'd like to see that I don't see in here is a legislated review. I think that once a year is too often, probably even every two years. I'm thinking three years might be appropriate, but I'll leave it up to the government. I think there should be a legislated review of the entire program. Things do shift and change in this province, and to just leave it out there until somebody manages to drag this back up again out of the depths of the swamp to have a look at it is really putting an expectation on a vulnerable group of people to be able to cope with all kinds of things which, frankly, we don't really expect out of anybody else. I mean, unions renegotiate their contracts every year or every several years. As I said, we as MLAs are indexed. So I think it's important that we do look at all the aspects of the program on a regular basis, whatever is appropriate there. I'm suggesting three years.

I'd also like to outline my concerns about the amount that is being moved into regulation. The old AISH Act is essentially being reinvented, and there are a number of sections that have been moved straight across from the old act into this one. Here are the sections that have not been moved across and are now being included under regulations, not in the legislation: employment training programs and services, asset testing, exempt assets, deemed assets and income from assets, changes in circumstances, disentitlement to benefit, application of Income and Employment Supports Act, financial administrator, confidentiality of information, and as I mentioned a review process. All of those were under the legislation in the old act. Now they are coming under some kind of regulation.

The problem with a regulation is that it does not come before this Assembly. There is very little opportunity for the public or for our constituents who are AISH recipients to have an opportunity to comment on it, and by not having it come in legislation, it makes it really difficult. Regulation changes can be made. They're published in Alberta Gazette, which comes out I think twice a year. It's very difficult for citizens to be able to find. Frankly, it's not incredibly easy for members of the Assembly to track down. So it makes it very obscure and difficult to find out what changes have been made that affect their lives and gives them almost no opportunity to respond to what is probably presented to them as a fait accompli.

I'm looking in the enlarged section that appears in this bill outlining what the cabinet can make regulations on. In particular, I would like details from the minister on what the regulations will look like. I'd like to get those before we actually pass this legislation, not sometime a year or something down the road when it comes out in Alberta Gazette. I'd like to know what the ministry is considering now – they must know, and if they don't know now, we've got a much bigger problem on our hands – in particular, “respecting the circumstances in which a director may provide, refuse, suspend, vary, or discontinue a benefit”; “respecting the appointment and duties of a financial administrator”; “respecting requirements to repay under section 7, including the circumstances in which a director does not have to require repayment”; “respecting underpayments”; “respecting the collection of debts due under section 9(2)(b).” This is specific to the minister. So we've now got two sets of regulations that can be made. One set of regulations can come through the cabinet, and the second set of regulations can simply be done by the minister, which is even harder to track.

There are three regulations that are now being empowered under the minister: “respecting applications for benefits”; “respecting appeal panels, appeals, and the decisions of a director that are exempt from appeal”; and finally, “respecting the transition of any matter from the previous legislation.” That's a huge field to play in, Mr. Speaker.

So I would like some detail from the minister responsible on what is being anticipated here. I would encourage her to table the draft regulations in the House so that we can look at those at the same time as we are considering support for this particular bill because this causes me great concern. This government has a real habit of creating these shell bills. To a great extent when you look at what's being moved out of the legislation into regulations, this becomes a huge shell bill. For all the other good things that have been done here, when I weigh that in balance with the potential for, frankly, abuse and a lack of transparency and openness and accountability from the government, it gives me great concern about what's being anticipated and planned here.

Those were the points that I just wanted to get on the record as part of second reading. I will look forward to hearing back from the minister with the specifics of the requests that I've made here.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Strathcona to close debate.

Mr. Lougheed: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:26 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 14, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/03/14

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: We'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 9

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 9, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006. During second reading of Bill 9 some important questions were raised that I would like to address. The most important change in the amendment act will update the province's Alberta Works legislation to provide more flexibility in decision-making for grant-funded students. This will be achieved primarily by outlining the one year out of school rule in regulations so that more exceptions can be made for people applying in certain circumstances. The change will benefit the immigrant with limited English skills or the single parent who needs more skills to earn sufficient wages to support her family.

I would like to clarify that this change will not prevent any student from completing a high school diploma. Current regulations already ensure that at-risk youth under 18 years can get the supports they need to remain in the school system.

For those who pursue occupational training, I want to clarify that the government is not interested in forcing anyone into low-paying work. Rather, the government is committed to helping people increase their income through working so that all Albertans can obtain the self-reliance and independence they deserve. That's why so much is done to help people enter training programs for occupations like machinist, licensed practical nurse, drywall installer, and pharmacy technicians. All of these occupations are in high demand with good salaries.

Alberta Works also provides services that help single parents to get child support in addition to the financial assistance they receive.

The second change being proposed here is strictly housekeeping. One of the references to the minister's authority to establish forms pertaining to child support agreements is missing. Now it will be added. Parents have a legal obligation to support their children. The government is not interested in depriving single parents of the child support they deserve. That's why free services are provided to Alberta Works' clients to ensure that this is obtained.

Before I close, I would also like to acknowledge the observation that none of these changes speak to an increase in rates. As announced in the throne speech, the government is raising rates for Alberta Works' clients who cannot work. This government believes that more assistance is needed for this group, and I'm given to understand that more details will be announced at budget.

Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I look forward to answering any other questions that may be raised at the Committee of the Whole stage.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 9, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006. I thank the mover for some of the clarifications that were brought up in second reading. They were very helpful. The opposition certainly is interested in seeing that people can learn, can get an opportunity to be self-reliant, can have the training and the ability to partake of training with proper child support, with help in their English skills, with help for some of the peculiar problems that they run into as single parents.

While these amendments in themselves are not contentious, the problem with the Income and Employment Supports Act remains. There is too much reliance on regulations, and there is no way to measure exactly how much people living in poverty truly need. Without indexing rates to inflation and tying it to an accepted measure such as the market-basket measure, there is no accurate determination of what people need to survive. Apparently, the government believes it can determine this through regulations.

We've been speaking quite a bit in this House on health care in the last couple of weeks. You know, there's been some discussion of the social determinants of health, and they continue to be a major cause for concern in terms of the health care costs, the actual health of the people in our population. The need to address especially those who cannot work and their income levels is apparent, and it has been apparent for a long time. The health costs for those populations are often very much higher and very much more complicated than those for the population in general.

On the impacts and outcomes of Bill 9, removing the provision that made eligibility for income support and benefits tied to not attending school for the previous year and amending it to just include meeting the age allows people who attended school in the past year to apply for and receive benefits if they meet the requirements. Previously those eligible for benefits and income support were precluded from applying for and retaining income supports if they attended an educational institution in the previous year.

The amendment that addresses those under the age of 18 is questionable as to whether it serves its purpose. The effect of this amendment is to allow the minister through regulations to determine eligibility for part-time training benefits for high school dropouts. The sample form on the Human Resources and Employment website states that an eligible person "must be out of public high school for 24 months" in order to receive training support for part-time study. It appears that this requirement placed an undue burden on high school dropouts who wanted to re-enter an educational institution the next year but could not afford it or who were perhaps faced with other obstacles that required exiting from high school.

The question here is whether the suggested amendment serves the purpose of allowing those who dropped out of a training facility while under the age of 18 to access benefits even if they left the educational facility within the past year or two. If it does, then it will have a significant impact on those under 18 who require assistance, such as unmarried mothers who left school due to pregnancy or those whose family circumstances or financial circumstances forced them to discontinue their education.

The other main impact of this act is to give the minister more authority to make regulations prescribing the form and contents of support agreements, specifically related to the director assisting a person who is in receipt of assistance under another act or who is qualified for assistance but has not received it from the person obligated to pay support and arrears. The amendment makes a change to allow the minister to make regulations to determine the form and contents of a support agreement between parties. Previously the ability by the minister to make regulations was not mentioned specifically but, rather, was implied.

This amendment is rather a housekeeping change to make the regulation-making ability of the minister specific and not implied. However, while there is no problem with the specific change in Bill 9 in this area, the more global problem here is that almost everything in the Income and Employment Supports Act is subject to the regulations. I spoke to that in second reading. It's not detailed in the legislation. The main problem with the entire act is that it allows for the content and form of almost everything to be determined in the regulations. While this specific amendment is merely housekeeping, the overriding problem is that this entire act is subject to the minister's or the Lieutenant Governor in Council's ability to make regulations.

Another criticism not only of this amendment act but the Income and Employment Supports Act in general is that it does not address some critical problems already associated with the government's social assistance programs. The amendments in this act are not troublesome taken in context with the act that it amends, but the original act attempted to expand an already flawed system without addressing those problems.

There is an overriding problem with the act that amends the Income and Employment Supports Act. The act took a system that was already flawed. When that one came in, it did not adequately meet people's needs and, really, expanded that flawed system. Bill 9 at least attempts to address some of the problems by taking out the requirement that an eligible recipient of income support and benefits could not have attended school in the previous year. It's a good step, but more people need to apply for assistance to get the training that they need to obtain employment.

There is a need, perhaps, for additional amendments to the Income and Employment Supports Act in order to address some of the problems with it. Increasing the social assistance rates is a vital step in supporting independence. These rates, as I've already mentioned, must be indexed to inflation and tied to an accepted measurement tool like the market-basket measure. Only by incorporating the market-basket measure can the government determine what income support and benefits are needed for individuals and households and what basic necessities actually are. The Income and Employment Supports Act does not define what basic necessities are, and this ambiguity can lead to an inaccurate assessment of benefits. While this specific act, Bill 9, does not address these issues, perhaps it is time that this government takes action to ensure that low-income Albertans have a decent standard of living.

Some of the training programs that we so often see supported by Human Resources and Employment are of little value. Sometimes they are put forward as a money-making device for some of the companies that are involved. I think there has to be sufficient and adequate supervision of some of these types of schools, types of contracts, types of endeavours to ensure that they're not just a way for someone to take the government's largesse and interest in getting people off the welfare roll, so to speak, to ensure that they are in fact getting proper training, that they are in fact getting a good basis in language. I've talked to a number of students in these schools. There's no attendance taken. There's no sense of any need for achievement. The main thing is that they're getting their forms done, their money paid from the government, and that's all that the schools, if we want to call them schools, have an interest in. There are some huge difficulties that have been related to us by many of these students. Sometimes it's very difficult to prove that because they meet some rather lax requirements under HRE in skills development and some of these other areas. You know, there is such a tremendous push to satisfy the need in small business and in our smaller centres, our smaller communities, for workers. Throwing money at this item and thereafter reducing so-called welfare statistics seems and looks good. In reality we're not doing anything for our economy. We're not doing anything to properly train the required skills that many employers need to put people into the workforce.

Why is it that we still have such a high, high level of youth unemployment? Across Canada it's well over a million people in the 18 to 24 age group, yet we're looking for temporary foreign workers. Why is it that we have so many aboriginals that remain without access to real programs to properly train them? There have been, certainly, some improvements. There have been some great increases, I guess you might say, percentage-wise, but the actual numbers in comparison to the population are still not very large. Yet we look at the city of Edmonton, for example, an urban centre that's going to be the largest centre of aboriginal population in Canada of any major city.

The opposition, in looking at this particular bill, gives qualified support. There are some good improvements in it, but it does not go far enough. With that, Mr. Chair, I'll end my words.

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next member to speak, may we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I grew up in a family of girls, an older sister and a younger sister, and I'm very pleased to have here up in the gallery my younger sister, Isabella Bishop. I would hope that she would stand up, and everyone give her a good welcome.

The Chair: Members in the gallery, you may notice that some of the members don't have their jackets on. We're in the committee stage of a bill, when members can remove their jackets and sit in a seat other than their own and perhaps carry on quiet conversations. I would like to encourage all members to make sure that your conversations are quiet as I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm not sure whether this change will accomplish its goal in allowing high school dropouts, which was mentioned in section 2, to go back into training programs without having to wait the year or two or 24 months. It's questionable because under section 2 it says: that the individual "is at least 18 years of age and did not attend school in the immediately preceding year, or meets the age or other requirements provided in the regulations." So, again, my question is whether it will accomplish that specific task or not.

I've got some specific questions with regard to it. How does this affect the person who is essentially single but because of income or lack of income thus shares with a roommate or parent? How does this affect them in their ability to access this particular program? As to the bill's extent, the purpose, I guess, is to provide programs for persons in need . . . for food, shelter, [clothing,] personal items and medical and other benefits as are essential to their health and well-being and, in particular, to provide training and other measures to facilitate their movement toward more independent living, outside of a dependent, such as, you know, those that are living still within the households with their parents or having to rely on someone as joint income, preventing them from being out on their own.

Does this open a door for people who were previously turned down for assistance if they can't take the training because they live in remote areas or they're without a vehicle or a computer or the Internet courses? I know that we talk about the Internet being wide ranging and spread from one end of the province to the other, but in some areas it's just not feasible, or they just can't afford it.

You know, section 3 talks about directors as well: in accordance with the Public Service Act, one or more directors may be appointed to administer the act under the minister's direction. If more than one director is appointed, the responsibilities are to be determined by the minister for each individual. Will these directors be in addition to the people that are currently holding administrative positions and presiding over the programs? Or will the current administrators be laid off with benefits or with parachute packages? This sometimes happens to those in government service that are being let go.

Where is the accountability? When any organization or employee is asked to do any duty or function, does that include handing out training contracts and money? There's got to be some specific kind of criteria or checks and balances when we're talking about public money trying to benefit the public in general.

Those would be just a couple of specifics that I would have. Overall, it doesn't look like a bad program, but there are some specifics that we have raised on a number of issues that we're hoping would be clarified or at least would be tightened to ensure that the effectiveness of the bill is able to be met then.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This would be the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 9, Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006. This is a very important bill for two groups of people that both reside in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre but also have their primary training and support organizations located there. Specifically, they're the participants in the Terra program and also a number of immigrants and new Canadians who tend to cluster in Edmonton-Centre and are attending programs like NorQuest. They're looking for educational upgrading and in many cases ESL training to be able to move into a productive life here in Edmonton and Alberta and Canada.

With the changes that came through with the new act in 2004, we ended up with this bizarre and very wrong situation. I'll use the example of Terra because I actually wrote a letter to the minister on this. The whole point of the Terra program is dealing with young women who have chosen to carry pregnancies to term. There they are, usually in high school, sometimes in junior high school, now with a baby. This program is to support them to go back and complete their education. That's the entire point of the program. It has enlarged its services, and now it goes as far as to offer sort of support and counselling for the fathers of these children if they wish to participate in such a program.

Here we had Terra, whose very purpose was to be helping these girls finish their education, and many of them were reliant upon funding through what was then called SFI and then, more recently, the Income and Employment Supports Act. With the change in the legislation they got cut off, and they couldn't get funding anymore. So a number of these girls had to literally leave Terra, the very program that's there to help them, and go out and get a job because they could no longer get funding to help them stay in Terra and complete their education. So just a total mess, a really bad scene. I don't think that it was what the government intended to do, but nonetheless it did it.

It's taken us a good year to straighten this out, which is unfortunate because there will have been some young women who were not able to recover from the setback that they experienced because of the changes in the program. But credit where credit is due: even though the government were the ones that originally messed this up, they did recognize their mess and cleaned it. So good on you for doing that.

The second group that I referred to is the ESL and upgrading students who attend NorQuest. I get invited to come out and speak to them two or three times a year, and I'm happy to go because I think it's important for people who are new and are integrating into our country. Let's face it; some people have been here four or five years or may have even come when they were youths. The more that we can acculturate them to our society and have them come to see their political representatives as someone that they work with is a good thing, in my opinion, so I'm willing to spend my time there.

I can't tell you how many people have said to me as I visit their classes: "Please, please, can't you do something about the level of support that we get? You know, we're expected to work hard and be successful at our studies here, and we're also expected to earn something on our own. We do that, and we do it happily, but we can't work too much or we're neglecting our class time or we're neglecting our study time, and the amount of money that we're receiving is just not enough. We're suffering here. We can't eat properly. We can't find ourselves accommodation that is safe for us," for many of them who are women, for men, even for people with families. On their behalf I want to put those concerns on the record.

I understand that this bill is not in fact giving them an increase in their support payments, but it will be allowing some of them that got caught in this thing of where you had to have been out of school for two years before you were eligible to receive support payments again to go back to school. There can be all kinds of reasons why these particular individuals have had an intermittent educational career, if I can put it that way. We are seeing more and more people coming from Africa where some of them have been involved in some terrible episodes that we in this very safe, protected environment cannot even believe. We can't possibly imagine what they've been through. Some of them are victims of torture. Some have lived for long periods of time in refugee camps in other countries and have made their way here sort of bunny-hopping across a number of other countries to settle here. So they may have episodes of flashbacks where they're having to cope with the aftermaths of torture or from having viewed that sort of activity, and it can affect their ability to stay in school and to be successful. Then to put further barriers in their way just was not helping.

One of my colleagues has already talked about the need for workers and why aren't we looking at helping our own workers to be successful and able to participate fully in the job market first, before we start bringing in boatloads of people on a temporary worker permit from another country? And I agree. People of aboriginal societies, people that are coming here from other countries, immigrants and new Canadians, are certainly two of the groups that we could be looking at and working with very closely, and those are the people who primarily are filling the classes at NorQuest. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I introduced one of those classes in the Assembly this afternoon, and I read out a little description of the program that they were in, which was job opportunities and vocational upgrading. That's exactly the people who are qualifying for this income support and who really need it. It's a good investment on our part, and it really pays off for us in the long run. By assisting these people, we certainly get our investment back many times over.

On behalf of those people who are participating in the Terra program and those who are attending the NorQuest classes and some others, I thank the government for recognizing that they had made an error earlier and for being able to correct it.

Just a few other things that I want to note with this legislation. I know that a number of other people have spoken about the increasing move of the government to push the decision-making and detail work into the regulations. I note that this bill is rife with it, and what a mistake I think that is for Albertans and for our future. We need to have some of that detail brought into this Legislative Assembly and the ability of our constituents to view it, to download it, and to talk to us about it and we can bring their comments into this Assembly. None of that happens when you are dealing with regulations. It's not available to people widely. It's not available on the Internet or through Our House or on www.assembly.ab.ca, so it's very difficult for people to get hold of.

One of my colleagues was talking about instituting a market-basket measurement for deciding what levels of income and benefit are appropriate, and I certainly support that. We have a fairly wide disparity in Alberta between appropriate levels of benefits, between rural areas, for example, and cities, even smaller centres. This is important. We're probably spending too much in some places and not enough in others, and there are simple ways to deal with that.

The last two things are the need to index the support and benefit payments to something. I don't particularly advocate one indexing scheme over another, but I think it should be indexed on a yearly basis. Whether you're going to index that to the rate of inflation or you want to index it to the Alberta weekly wage or any other reasonable annual measurement, fine. Work that out. But it should happen so that we have an incremental increase that happens. I mean, people receiving these support benefits are having to deal with inflationary costs in groceries, in transportation, in housing, in utilities just like all the rest of us, but we, especially we here in this Assembly, are privileged enough to have our salaries tied to annual indexing with the Alberta weekly wage.

Why do we take the most vulnerable, the poorest in our society, and send them out there in a leaky boat, push them off from the pier and just send them out there in the middle of the ocean, never being able to come back and dock anywhere and have any kind of annual review? Then when five or ten years go past and all of a sudden they are so far behind that it's a huge amount of money to bring them back even with everybody else, there's this huge hue and cry about how expensive it is. Well, you know, get a grip. Do this on a reasonable basis and quit making this such a grand patriarchal handout. It's just inappropriate, and frankly it's grandstanding. So get on it: index it to something.

Tied with that is the need for a review on some sort of reasonable basis. I said this afternoon, when we were talking about the AISH benefits, that I didn't feel an annual review was necessary, that it's probably onerous to look at the whole program on an annual basis. Maybe even two years still might be too soon, but probably at three years you should definitely be looking at all aspects of the program to see if they're still relevant, if you should tweak the program here or there. Maybe you should be dropping a program.

Maybe there's something new that really needs to be addressed. If you made no changes at all, no one would have telephones installed in their homes, and now we're at the point where we've got Internet. You've got to continue to review these programs in light of what's going on in the world around them. The government's insistence on refusing to do this is quite tiresome, frankly, and I think very old-fashioned and, as I said, patriarchal, and they've just got to move away from that. It's not a reasonable way to deal with people in our society.

Those are the comments I wanted to make. Thank you for the opportunity. I appreciate it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be relatively brief. I spoke before on this particular bill, and I said at the time that I certainly see the intent of it as being reasonable. I understand that it's giving more flexibility to people that are falling between the cracks. I think a couple of those 148 people that I raised in question period today that had to deal with the Winspear Foundation might have been helped with this bill. So I think it's a step in the right direction.

I won't go on about the rates as I did in question period because I know that's coming on another day. I mentioned today that the rates are appallingly low. We've virtually had no increases at all since 1993, and I think that's causing more people to fall between the cracks. But we'll save that debate for another day after the budget.

I will support the bill because I think that for the groups that the member bringing it forward talked about, we do need that flexibility to deal with those sorts of groups.

I know what the member said, and I take him at his word, and I'm sure he'll be reminding the minister, but I think that when you have this sort of flexibility when people are trying to learn the language – they may be very good academically, and they may have a lot of potential, but because they're struggling with the various issues that the member referred to earlier on, there can be a tendency for: well, let's get them into some training right away, or let's move them into some lower paid jobs. I think we have to be somewhat careful of that.

I'm not sure how you do that when you move it into regulations. I think we shortchange people when we say – just from my own experience as an MLA in the inner city, it used to be that we said of these kids in the inner city coming from very tough backgrounds: well, the best we could hope for is to socialize them. Thankfully, I trust that we've gone away from that. We're demanding that they learn to read and write and have those literary skills. So the only caution I have about this is that it can be fairly easy, then, especially when people are clamouring for workers, that we shortchange these people and say: well, you'd be better off here rather than continuing with your formal education in some way. When it's not out in the legislation, we don't know what's going on behind closed doors, if that's happening or not.

I guess that I would ask the person bringing the bill forward just what precautions we might have for that. As I say, that concern is not enough for me not to support the good intentions of this bill. I think the intentions are good, but I think there is that potential for abuse, Mr. Chairman. So I'm asking for some clarification on how we can recognize how this program is going to work, if we're ever going to know how it's going to work if it's behind closed doors in terms of regulations.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, we'll save the debate about the adequacy of the supports programs that people are facing. I'll be looking forward very much to seeing what's in that budget. As I said, it better be substantial, or there are going to be some serious questions because all the bills in the world won't solve that problem unless we raise those rates for people. The majority of these people are trying. It's not that they're lazy and not trying – I think the member would agree; you know, this is why we're bringing this bill forward – but they do need adequate help to help themselves.

So I'd be interested in how the member sees the problem that I'm laying out. Again, it's certainly not enough for me not to support the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to begin by first thanking all the four speakers before me for accepting in principle the amendments that I'm bringing forward. I do understand that they do have a number of different issues that they have raised, and with some of them I do agree. I think it's very important that our services that are provided stream our young people into training that will be meaningful for them and not just send them to low-paying training because they do not have the English skills. I agree with you a hundred per cent.

There were also concerns raised about the level of social benefits to people on social assistance or AISH or other such programs, and I agree that the amounts that we do give out are not sufficient, particularly if you're living in a big urban centre where housing cost is phenomenally high. To live on $600, $700, $800, or a thousand dollars is just difficult. None of us in this room would be able to live on that. I agree, but that's beyond the scope of the amendments that I'm bringing forward.

One of the beauties about committee stage is that members are able to stretch the concept to bring in arguments and debates on various subjects, and we've heard quite a few today. I do understand the experience of the Terra program or AISH or the Winspear centre, but again I think those are all arguments for a debate at a later stage with a different matter. For now, as far as the two amendments that have been brought forward, I do understand that there is an agreement in principle. As far as the other issues are concerned, I think every member in this House should be concerned about it, should be raising it, and certainly I agree with some of the arguments that have been brought forward.

With that, Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions, I'd call the question.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 9, Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 22

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to briefly comment on what has now become an institution in this Assembly. This is my 10th spring session, and I've seen an interim supply bill every single time, so I'm having to admit that this is part of the government's agenda.

Unfortunately, I don't see any meaningful movement towards changing this, what is now an institution. I think there's something wrong with that.

For the people reading this at home, what the situation is is our budget year runs from the first of April to the end of March. It takes us about five weeks to work our way through all of the debates on the various budget departments and then the appropriation bill that follows that. So, really, in order to have a budget completely debated and passed prior to its implementation on the first of April, we would have to start debating this back in sort of mid to late February.

This government has increasingly moved our start date for the spring session to about that time and has been moving back the introduction of the budget to very late. At this point we're now expecting that the budget will not in fact be introduced until barely a week before the end of the fiscal year. So in order to have permission to cut the cheques to pay the people who work so hard in the government bureaucracy and to, you know, purchase those supplies that are necessary and keep various programs up and running, the government has to give itself a little bit of operating money to tide it over, so to speak. That's what the interim supply budget is: it gets you through the interim.

We now have this government habit of pushing the budget later and later and later, and it has to grant itself interim funding. We end up, as the opposition, with a document booklet that basically sort of takes 60 days worth of operational money from each department, figures it out as a percentage, and says: this is what we need for this department. We get no information that goes along with it. It doesn't say how many people are going to be paid for how many days of work or which projects are going to be commenced or whether there's full funding given to certain programs to get them started or no money at all to various other programs that don't commence until the fall. We don't get any information. We just get a line item that says: this department is asking for X million or billion dollars to get them through the 60 days.

So it's very, very bad planning. From a government that prides itself on its fiscal responsibility, in quotes, this is appalling behaviour. The members of the opposition regularly get up about this time every year and flog the government with its poor behaviour around this interim supply, and it seems to have not the slightest bit of effect upon the government, so I'm taking it that they really don't care that they're appallingly bad fiscal managers and that they can't seem to understand when the 1st of April is and be able to back the budget up enough to do that. It's not going to stop me from trying to influence the government.

I think that what really bothers me about this is that I don't see any movement forward. I don't see the government learning anything, and I'm really concerned with the lack of information, that decreasing information that is provided around budget documents overall. All I can do for that is go to other observers of the government's fiscal behaviour for some assistance in holding the government to account. So I go back to the Auditor General's report, and I look at the recommendations and key recommendations that he and his staff have made and say: "Okay. Well, has the government learned anything here? Is anything being done about this?" If I'm now being asked to just blanket give you 60 days' worth of operational money in all these departments, do we have any sense of whether lessons have been learned and changes are being made to implement some things that are fiscally responsible?

I'll also point out, Mr. Chairman, as you are well aware having been a previous member of the Public Accounts Committee, that the Public Accounts Committee in Alberta has only permitted itself to sit while the session is in, so this committee doesn't meet outside of sitting. We're also aware that this Alberta Legislature sits fewer days than any other Legislature in the country. The argument that I'm immediately met with from the other side is: yes, but we sit at night too, so that actually makes more days. Well, it doesn't when you're only meeting on Wednesday mornings while we're in session.

What's happened is that we meet for so few weeks that we are now examining about a third of the ministries every year. Some ministries, obviously, come up more often. The big ones like Health are going to get viewed every year. You can have a ministry like Infrastructure or Science or Gaming or Aboriginal Affairs that does not come under scrutiny before the Public Accounts Committee for four or even five years. The committee has not permitted itself to look at anything outside of the year under question, so even though you're only seeing this department once every four or five years, you're not allowed to question at that point for the four and five years that's gone on between the last time you saw them. You can only question them for the year that's under examination at the time. So we're missing a lot of scrutiny here, and a lot of fiscal lessons are not being learned.

I will just bring to the government's attention once again the number of key recommendations that have been made that aren't likely to be dealt with in Public Accounts this year, just given, you know, how many ministries are likely to be scrutinized. We have a couple of cross-ministry recommendations that have been made, and interestingly two of the five in the cross-ministry were recommendations that were in fact brought forward in Motion 502, proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, around appointments: recruiting, evaluation, and training of boards of directors. The first recommendation was that "the Deputy Minister of Executive Council update Alberta public sector governance principles and guidance so that they are consistent with . . . good practices for recruiting, evaluating and training directors" who would be appointed to these various agencies, boards, and commissions.

The second recommendation was that "the guidance include a statement that governing boards evaluate and report publicly their own performance against both Alberta public sector principles and their own board governance policies." The intent of that was included under the motion from my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, and surprisingly and shockingly, Mr. Chairman, that motion was voted down by the Assembly. It was a great disappointment. Another key recommendation in the cross-ministry. Again this doesn't get to be talked about in Public Accounts because it's meaning to be dealt with by a number of ministries or possibly all ministries, which is why I'm bringing it up in the context of interim supply because we're supposed to be granting money to operate in a fiscally responsible manner for 60 days.

So I'd like to know if these are being incorporated and, in fact, if they are being accepted and integrated.

We also have a recommendation – it is a key recommendation – that "the Deputy Minister of Executive Council provide audit committees with guidance for overseeing internal audit departments, including identifying related training."

There are two other, one unnumbered and one numbered, additional ones under cross-ministry: one for linking government and ministry business plans, just a recommendation that they, in fact, be links, and that "the Department of Finance identify and describe core businesses in the government business plan," and a numbered recommendation, number 4, that "the Department of Finance develop guidance related to the purpose, definition and use of societal [norms]."

Now, there are a number of recommendations on seniors' care and programs. I'm hoping that we are going to get that minister in front of Public Accounts.

Then we have Sustainable Resource and Environmental Management, and I think that minister might be coming.

Advanced Education. I don't think we will see that minister, so we have recommendation 15, designating programs as eligible; 16, departmental compliance tests; 17, public postsecondary institution purchasing; 18, research roles and responsibilities – this is at the University of Calgary; an unnumbered recommendation on research policies, again specific to the University of Calgary. Oh, my Lord, there are actually 11 more recommendations from the Auditor General specific to the Advanced Education department, so I recommend people have themselves a read of the Auditor General's annual report, 2004-2005, on page 20, to get the rest of those recommendations.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has five recommendations. Three of them are numbered. Recommendation 20 again recommending that the department "evaluate the performance of its grant programs in meeting Ministry goals." Recommendation 21 recommending that the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation "clearly define eligibility criteria," "document its evaluation of the loan applicant," "analyze the borrower's financial condition," and a number of other suggestions that they're making on that. Recommendation 22 is around managing the beginning farm loans program. Recommendation 23 recommending that "the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation improve controls over the administration of the Canadian Agricultural Income Stabilization program," and a number of recommendations they make there. Finally, an unnumbered recommendation on the testing of advance payment methodology.

Children's Services. There are two recommendations there.

Community Development. Ah, yes, Wild Rose grants to Applewood. Recommendation 26 recommending that "the Wild Rose Foundation review the results of [their] audit into the grants to Applewood . . . Community Association and take appropriate action." Now, I'm pretty sure that Community Development will not be coming before Public Accounts this year, and I'd be very interested in hearing from the minister as part of the interim supply debate during Committee of the Whole what, in fact, has happened with that. There's also an unnumbered recommendation that the Wild Rose Foundation systems for the international development program improve its grant systems and again three different specific recommendations on how they should do that.

One numbered recommendation for Education.

Three recommendations, all of them numbered, two of them key recommendations, for Energy.

One on Environment.

Finance has three of them. Two of them are numbered recommendations, and one is a numbered and a key recommendation.

Gaming. There are three recommendations.

Government Services, one.

Infrastructure and Transportation, three.

Restructuring and Government Efficiency performance measures. In numbered recommendation 37 they again recommend that the Ministry of Restructuring and Government Efficiency:

- clearly define its performance measures and targets, and
- develop systems to monitor and report results.

Now, when they say “again recommend,” they’re very subtly and quite elegantly pointing out that they have made this recommendation before and there’s been no satisfactory response from the government. In fact, this was made in the 2001-02 year and again in ’02-03, and now we’ve got it coming up again in ’04-05. Really, I think that’s telling us that the Restructuring and Government Efficiency department doesn’t know what it’s doing since it can’t even clearly define its own performance measurements and targets. Dear Lord, Mr. Chairman. I mean, sometimes you really do have to question what the heck is going on when you’ve got a whole government department that doesn’t know what its own performance measurements are supposed to be and that the Auditor General has to tell it not once, not twice but three times to try and figure that out for itself. “Develop systems to monitor and report results.” Oh, please.

I think that’s all I need to say about this government and interim financial reports and its ability to be fiscally responsible, open, accountable, and transparent. There’s a lot of work to be done here.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to rise and debate on Bill 22, the interim supply estimates, 2006-07, general revenue fund and lottery fund. The focus of the interim supply is to make sure that the government has operating grants when they have not yet completed the budgeting process. Even when this government has a budget, they end up overspending. This is not a new thing for us. I saw the same thing last year. They keep on repeating the same thing again and again. I think the main reason is because they have 62 members in this House and the opposition has 21. They don’t care. If we have differences, they can ask for a vote, and they can do whatever they like. But they are forgetting one thing: they have to answer to their constituents, who elected them. So I just warn them: if not this time, next time be careful. They should make the budget process properly.

Even when this government has a budget, they end up overspending like they did last year. How foolish can that be for a government that cannot organize its time? It’s in their hands. They are in power, and they have the staff, and they can do it. Once again they want us to write a blank cheque without giving us any details. It tells us that there is progress in place to start planning, and that’s what is critical. If we are going to be fiscally responsible, as they always proclaim, they should do the job right. If it’s fiscally proven in this province, we have got to signal them – that’s all we can do – so that the proper budget planning can be undertaken so that we can have a reflection of the needs of the agencies that are going to be doing the expenditure planning on our behalf.

Mr. Chairman, we need to have the detail that’s associated with being able to say that these are the types of expenditures. We don’t know why they don’t give us the full details. We don’t know what they are spending, so how can we comment on them appropriately?

This is the booklet they gave us, a few pages, all the portfolios. Community Development is just two lines: Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases, $93,600,000. I’m not sure about this. The same with the other portfolios: no details at all. They don’t give us any detail before they give us this booklet, and they expect us to debate on this. This is not fair. Next time they should do the job right. If I show this booklet to my accountant and tell him, you know, “This is the way my government is doing it,” I think that any good accountant would laugh at the government. I don’t know why they are repeating again and again.

It’s really a huge amount in this booklet, a huge amount with no details. I want to ask the Minister of Community Development because I’m the critic for Community Development, and the figure I see in this booklet is a huge amount but no full details. I can’t see the breakdown of some $93 million, which the government mentions in this supply list, $93 million or whatever they are spending on expenses and equipment/inventory purchases. I mean, I don’t know what they call it. How much money will be spent on the programs or the services? We don’t know. When we ask them, well, nobody gives us the proper answer. Is it possible to receive full details in the future, a full breakdown of the whole amount found under each line, under each item where they are spending it?

These are just a few questions that I raise, but there are definitely many, many more questions to ask. Maybe I will ask in detail when the question period comes.

Mr. Chairman, as in the last year, this year once again they are asking us to sign a blank cheque. They can’t bring a financial budget before us in a timely fashion. They have only had three months. I mean, I think we had a budget in November. How long does it take when they start preparing for these budgets way back in November?

I guess one of the things that’s really difficult as we go about talking with Albertans is focusing on the kind of debate around what the expenditures are. I know that the normal answer to that is: well, wait till the budget comes. But if we are supposed to vote on this judiciously and in the spirit of appropriate government recognition of expenditure, we need to have full details, which we don’t.

I notice that during question period, when we ask them questions, sometimes they expect us to direct them to the departments. Last week I asked a question of the Minister of Education about one of the problems in my riding. It was a water problem, and I contacted the people concerned a few times. When I asked him, he said: well, you are welcome to do it. When I asked him again, he said: it’s your problem. I mean, this is the attitude. We all are here for the people. They elect us. We are answerable to them. So I can only request each and everybody sitting in this hall: if they choose us, we should respect their judgment. They have so many expectations of us.

My next question is from this booklet. I don’t know. Where is this funding going? Where are they going to spend the money? We don’t have details. They don’t give us the answer. How would we find out? What are we doing here?

I know some people are saying: oh, we are wasting time here. No, we are not wasting time here. Somebody here is not doing the job right. If I were the CA, chartered accountant, and the budget is something like this, I would just throw that paper out and say, “You’re fired,” right away. I said the same thing last year. Nobody listened. Now I think most of the MLAs sitting here are not listening, Mr. Chairman. They are talking. They’re not listening.

Some Hon. Members: We’re listening.

Mr. Agnihotri: Are you? Okay. Thank you.

Being the critic of Community Development in my portfolio my priorities are, like I asked the minister many times, to increase the funding for the arts. I heard from the stakeholders that they want us to double the funding. We are getting approximately $20 million for arts funding, and they said that the reasonable amount they want is $40 million. But every budget they say: well, just wait for the budget. I listened to the same thing last year, and I'm going to listen, I think, to the same thing this year. Nobody listened. I mean, we are here for the people who elected us.

Another thing in my portfolio is the Human Rights Commission, and I asked questions a few times. I mean, people are waiting. Some people made complaints to the Human Rights Commission, and the cases are there for two, three years.

We are fortunate. We have sufficient money, and this is a very important department as the Minister for Community Development agreed. I mean, he said: "Yes, it's very important. We should look into it." Still, when I talk to my stakeholders, they are not happy. When I listen to the ministers here, they always say: education, we are number 1; number 3 on this; health care, yeah, yeah, we have done this or that.

I went to the Grey Nuns hospital. I'm the witness. I took my wife there, and we had to wait nine hours. Nine hours. She was crying like a baby. It's serious. When we put the question to the ministers, I remember the wording from the health minister: I talked to somebody in Europe. They say: "Oh, you guys are really lucky. You are ten times ahead of us." I mean, I don't want to know the position in Europe. I'm talking about here in Alberta, especially in my riding. The people are suffering, and nobody's listening. Every time everything is okay, okay.

We are fortunate. We have money. But we don't plan properly; we don't have long-term sustainable policies here. That's what we need.

One of the stakeholders in Calgary – I don't want to mention his name. He's very important. [interjections] It's very interesting. Please listen. He said that he talked to 20 MLAs from Calgary, and nobody listened to him. What they want is a proper sports policy. I even wrote a letter to the Minister of Community Development, and he replied: yes, in the next session we will introduce sports policy. I'm still waiting for that. Cultural policies; sports policies; resource policies. What do you have? Every time we ask you the question: where is your policy? Then we show you the policy, and you throw that policy out. Are you guys listening? [interjections] I'm not finished yet.

If the government is serious about making Alberta number one in health, make Alberta active and healthy and save dollars from Alberta health care. Where's that plan?

An Hon. Member: It's the fourth way.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yeah. Fourth way, fifth way, seventh way, maybe no way. No way.

You will see. If there is pressure from the public, you guys will change your opinion just like that. So think about it. The reason I'm saying this is because I heard so many times from the minister of health: "The priority is to make Albertans active. If we make them active, we can save tons of money in the health care system. Alberta helps society by accepting and implementing all the recommendations in the Alberta sports plan." This or that I've heard so many times but no answers. I want the government to begin to develop a strategy that will promote and support Alberta's sports plan. I'm going to ask that question to the Community Development minister when he's here maybe next time during question period. This is very, very important.

Okay. Now I want to talk a little bit about the economic priorities, long-term sustainable funding. So many times we discuss the policies. Where are your policies? You guys always ask the opposition, always blame the opposition parties. I've never seen your policies on resources.

Ms Blakeman: Or land use policies.

Mr. Agnihotri: Did you see one?

Ms Blakeman: No.

Mr. Agnihotri: You, Mr. Chairman? Anybody? [interjections] Well, why don't you admit that you don't have any policies?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, it would really help if you would direct your statements through the chair rather than going across the floor.

Mr. Agnihotri: What I am trying to say, Mr. Chairman, is very simple. It's taxpayers' hard-earned money, and this government should spend money very wisely, very wisely. And do you know what? The Tories are always blaming Alberta Liberals: oh, Alberta Liberals, party of spending; they spend money like crazy. Now you see your record. I think that if you see your record, you are the biggest spenders in the history of Alberta – the biggest spenders in the history of Alberta. [interjections]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, please. I know that a lot of members wish to speak. We are at committee stage. There's ample opportunity for everyone to participate in this debate, and the chair would be happy to recognize each and every one of you. So rather than interjecting, let me know, and I will recognize you, and you can speak next.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the floor.

Debate Continued

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you. I simply want to make sure that taxpayers' hard-earned money improves the lives of Albertans. This is where the money should go, not $45 million on horse racing. The gap between rich and poor is increasing, widening. What are we doing? You go somewhere – I don't want to mention the place . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I regret that the time allocated has run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I will try to be brief. I want to take a different attack. For one, back in the days when I was here before, we always had interim supply. I think the one thing that we could do, that we used to do, is have the budget sooner after the Speech from the Throne. As I and maybe some people here recollect, it used to come about a week after the Speech from the Throne.

An Hon. Member: And elections right after.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, there were elections right after that the odd time too.

But I see no reason why we couldn't do that. The interim supplies then would probably be a month rather than two months.

In saying that, it's not the interim supply that I'm as worried about; it's the overall, what the budget means when we do see it next week. The budgets that I've been seeing in the last couple years: we pass them, we have a debate in estimates, we go through the procedure, and then the budget is basically outdated as soon as we pass it. We have to come back in the fall with supplementary estimates. This year, as I recollect, was $3 billion or $4 billion – $3 billion or $4 billion – in supplementary estimates. Then we come back a few weeks later, and we're dealing again with supplementary estimates in January.

The point, Mr. Chairman, that I make is that it seems that the budget doesn't mean much. I can live with an interim budget. I think it could be a month if we did it the proper way. But I want the budget and the estimates that we're debating come next week to mean something. I don't want to have to come back in November and be dealing with $3 billion or $4 billion again in supplementary estimates. That makes no sense at all.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman – and it's been alluded to – we have to tighten up the way we do things. I mean, money's rolling in here. It's not because of the brilliance of the government; we happen to be sitting on resources. The money's rolling in. But we do not have the ability on both sides of the House to deal with the budget in a tough-minded priority way. We just spend it. If we don't like what's going on, we'll spend and bring in supplementary estimates.

Our Public Accounts, we know, is a joke compared to other places. We should be having smaller committees. To the House leader: smaller committees looking at the budget in more detail; perhaps not every department all the time, but some of that should go on. It happens in other places, and I would think the leadership candidates that are coming hopefully will take a look at tightening up the budget process.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, it bothers me that next Wednesday we'll have a budget, then we will debate the estimates for 30-some days, and then that budget won't mean anything because the spending will go on after. If the Premier decides some other important thing has come up in his mind, on a paper napkin, there'll be more money spent there, Mr. Chairman.

So the point that I think this government should get – there's another for leadership; there are a few of them around here – is that they used to call themselves fiscal conservatives. [interjection]

I didn't know that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs was running, but it's good to know.

The point that I make is that we should be tightening up this whole process. So an interim supply bill? Yeah. Let's begin to move the budget process closer to the Speech from the Throne so it doesn't have to go as long. A month it used to be. That makes sense. Then let's make the budget mean something. Sure, we still have supplementary estimates. There are emergencies that sometimes you just can't predict, like the floods in southern Alberta or forest fires in northern Alberta. That was always there, but that should be limited to emergencies.

It shouldn't be, you know, a spending thing where you can spend $3 billion or $4 billion dollars in the fall and another, I think, $245 million again in November, and we're back here. I would think that for people that call themselves fiscal conservatives, that should make sense to them, that we should be tightening up this whole process.

I guess that I will hope and see that this budget that's coming down next week, Mr. Chairman, is actually a budget that does list the government's priorities, and they intend to live with that budget for 12 months and not go on a spending spree as they did last year and spend whenever they feel like it. It's undemocratic, and it's just not a good way to fiscally run the province.

We will see – we will see – Mr. Chairman, if they've learned anything. We won't know probably till – well, we'll know all along. There'll be announcements all the way along in the press, you know, as we go along the budget. But I really suggest to the people and the leadership candidates out there that this is one process that we can all agree has to be tightened up. Let's have a budget that actually means something when we pass it in March and April.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to the interim supply estimates for 2006-2007. You know, I've only been in this Legislature for a year and some months, and I've seen in that time a supplementary supply, an interim supply, a budget, a supplementary supply 1, a supplementary supply 2, now an interim supply, and a budget next week. Clearly, we seem to be doing supply after supply after supply, budget after budget. We're voting again and again and again on money, and we're not really dealing with any real budgetary process, which I would think would deal with these things on an annual basis and maybe on some occasions only for emergency monies.

You know, what are we going to be dealing with next in terms of these supply bills? An extra supply bill, an additional supply bill, something that says the more supply bill or the simply supply bill or the pie in the sky supply bill or the gone awry supply bill? I mean, what are we getting into here? The dealings that we're having here and the lack of budgetary discipline on the part of this government are clear.

I look at this document for interim supply estimates, and it's seven pages long, seven pages and a lot of blank space. I look at line items: Health and Wellness, $2,291,700,000; I look at Advanced Education, $344,700,000; $224,500,000 for – that's all of the information that we get, Mr. Chair. I mean, I'm just amazed. We're arguing mainly on process here because we're getting no information. Is that responsible to the voter? Is that responsible to Albertans? Is that responsible to the people that elect us? The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked time and again in his remarks that were just finished: are you listening? We heard, "yes, we are; we are; we are" from the government's side, but I don't hear any active listening. I don't see these processes ending. I look at time and time again a whole list of these supply things.

Mr. Chair, I think it's time to look at a real budget process. I think that any small business, any corporation, gosh, a meeting of shareholders would dump the executive if they saw this sort of process in place. A union meeting would dump their executive if they saw this sort of process in place, and yet we seem to see it continue time and again with massive amounts of money on the part of the government.

With that, I conclude my remarks and hope that we might see in the future some sort of budgetary process. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Carried.

Bill 1Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, did you want to speak on this?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: You have been recognized.

Mr. Martin: Thank you.

I thought you waited with bated breath for me to stand up there, hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, certainly we all spoke on this bill before. It would be hard – it would be like kicking a puppy – to vote against it, but we mentioned that there are things that should go with it, smoking and the rest of it.

I thought that the Minister of Finance might look at this because our concern with Bill 1 is that it's going under the minister's purview rather than the Cancer Board's. One of the things that's very clear when you deal with the Cancer Board: you have to deal with ethical funds, and the obvious ethical fund that you should not be investing in is tobacco companies. That's not true if you take it to Finance necessarily. Now they may well do it, and I hope they do, but it seems to me that it would be quite hypocritical if we did not do that, if we had an endowment fund and there were no ethical standards put on those particular investments.

I think this makes sense, and I'd like to bring in an amendment. Certainly, we support the intent of the bill. The only amendment that I have, if I could send this up, is to move that Bill 1, Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, be amended in section 3(2) by adding "subject to subsection (2.1)" before "the Minister of Finance shall hold and administer" and by adding the following after subsection (2): "(2.1) the Minister of Finance shall not invest the Fund or any portion of the Fund in securities of companies in the tobacco industry."

Now, surely this is an amendment that makes common sense. If we're going to have an endowment fund of $500 million and we want to cut down cancer and all the things that the Premier talked about that they want to do with the endowment fund, this just makes good housekeeping sense. How embarrassing would it be for the government if the opposition checked the endowment fund down the way and found out that there were investments in securities of companies in the tobacco industry? So I would hope that this would be a friendly amendment to make the bill even better.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

9:30

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I just want to check with you. Do you have the original copy with your initials?

Mr. Martin: Yes, I do.

The Deputy Chair: I will require that.

Hon. members, the amendment is being circulated. We shall refer to this amendment as A1. We'll give a minute for distribution, if you don't mind.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that's been tabled by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is one that I think provokes some interest. I know that there were a number of members tonight who were hoping to speak to the main bill in committee. I'm not sure those members were necessarily prepared to speak to the amendment. Because there wasn't any previous notice of the amendment coming forward, I would propose that we adjourn debate at this point on Bill 1 so that members can reflect on the amendment and come back to deal with it at a later date.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3Protection Against Family Violence
Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take this opportunity to address some of the questions raised during second reading. I was asked if the addition of stalking to the definition of family violence would result in an increase in the number of people charged with this offence. I must emphasize that the sole purpose of this proposed legislation is to protect victims. The Criminal Code is the mechanism responsible for laying charges. As such, the addition of stalking to the definition of family violence is not for the purpose of increasing charges against stalkers. Its intent is to increase the number of people who can be protected from this type of behaviour. I'd like to note that the definition of stalking in Bill 3 is similar to the definition in the Criminal Code; therefore, these pieces of legislation will complement each other.

There was also concern that the definition of stalking is too broad and does not specify that it is a repetitive behaviour. Mr. Chairman, the definition specifies repeated conduct and recognizes stalking as a series of events, not an isolated incident. Furthermore, the definition is based on Manitoba's domestic violence legislation, which has successfully withstood a constitutional challenge.

There was also a question regarding how a judge or justice of the peace determines if controlling behaviour exists and if an emergency protection order should be granted. Controlling behaviour is only one of the factors being considered when determining if an order should be granted. The proposed amendments provide a more comprehensive explanation of family violence based on research and best practices. This means that judges and justices of the peace will have a better understanding of the dynamics of family violence, and this will allow them to make more informed decisions about family violence situations.

Concern was also raised that aboriginal and immigrant families were not identified in the proposed amendments. Although Bill 3 does not specifically identify these populations, it does ensure protection for all vulnerable populations. The dynamics of family violence and the unique needs of specific populations will be addressed in more appropriate ways such as training, public awareness, and education initiatives.

My colleagues also asked if the appropriate resources and supports are in place at the community level to respond to stalking and family violence. Family violence is a crime, and police are involved in investigation and enforcement activities. Furthermore, women's shelters exist throughout the province to assist those fleeing family violence. Support for these important services will continue. Mr. Chair, as a point of clarification let me just say that no one is ever sent away without help.

During second reading concern was raised that the proposed amendment would result in a need for more shelter beds. In fact, we hope that the opposite will occur. By keeping victims and their children in their own homes and requiring the abuser to leave the residence, victims won't need to leave their homes and seek shelter elsewhere. In circumstances where a victim must flee to a shelter, an emergency protection order may still be granted to allow time for the family to put measures in place to support a safe return home.

I also received a question about the proposed amendment to section 8 regarding the confidentiality of a victim's address. This is a common-sense amendment, Mr. Chair. It's intended to clarify the duties of a clerk respecting the requirement to keep the location of a claimant confidential. It simply clarifies that where a judge orders that a respondent stay away from a particular address, the clerk can disclose this, and they won't be in contravention of their duty.

The Protection Against Family Violence Act has been very effective since it first came into effect in 1999. The proposed amendments are based on several evaluations and reviews that have taken place since then. I believe Bill 3 will better protect victims of family violence and will help make an already good piece of legislation even more effective.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 3, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006. I did raise a number of issues when I spoke in second reading and talked about stalking.

I hope that members of the government caucus are aware of the excellent and, I think, unique work that's being done by a special unit of the Crown prosecutors here in Alberta and in particular by a woman named Val Campbell. The previous Minister of Justice is well aware of the good work that she's doing. I've heard her speak a couple of times, and she really makes an impression not only for her passion and commitment to the issues but also because she's just loaded with statistics, facts, figures, connections and has really started to bore down on this issue through the many layers that I talked about when I was addressing this in second reading.

There's a fundraising breakfast that the legal community, particularly the women in the legal community, have held for many years approximately around the date of International Women's Day. Sometimes it's shifted a bit so that it's around the anniversary of women getting the vote in Alberta, which would have been April 17, I think it was.

The breakfast happened to be last Friday, and Val Campbell was the guest speaker there. I got to hear her presentation again, and it drove home particularly the stalking component. I know that there's government support for this. I hope that all my colleagues in the opposition and in the other opposition parties in the Assembly are going to support this bill. We really are starting to see the connection of behaviours that are around violence against women and their children. These should not be viewed as separate activities and separate aggressions. These are about control. This is about somebody trying to control their intimate partner or their family members every living, breathing moment. It is about having someone completely under your control and mostly using fear to do that.

One of the ways that they do that is by stalking. As mentioned by the sponsoring member, the definition of stalking that appears in this bill is indeed very similar to the stalking definition that appears in section 231(6) of the Criminal Code. Essentially, it's about following from place to place either the individual or a family member or someone precious or known to the family member, communicating directly or indirectly with that individual or someone known to them. It can be just as effective to control a mom by threatening or controlling her kid or even her sister or her parents. So this is not necessarily about, you know, directly pounding on somebody. A lot of these control issues are about other means of making that person bend to your will.

We've also got another section that talks about being present or watching the home or the place of business or a place where they're likely to be present; for example, the store where they buy all their groceries, the gas station where they always stop to gas up their car, or some place where it's likely that person is going to be. To have somebody standing there, watching them, signalling to them, staring at them, that's stalking, and we need to be clear about that behaviour and what the purpose of that behaviour is.

In Alberta we have the highest stalking rates in Canada. We now know that stalking is connected to homicide rates. It's one of the factors that we find turns up consistently. When we look at all the factors that were in place when we actually have a spousal homicide, there are some consistent ones, and stalking is one. So if we can start to get on top of stalking activities, we may be able to prevent another woman dying at the hands of her intimate partner. I know that I'm going to get cards and letters saying that there are women that kill men. Yes, that's true, but we're dealing with a percentage here in Alberta of 85 per cent.

Alberta has, I'm not happy to report, the highest rate of spousal abuse in Canada – I've already talked about the highest stalking numbers – and the highest domestic murder/suicide rates in the country. What on earth are we doing in this province that we cannot get on top of this? We're not getting better. This is not improving year to year. We are not leaders here, unless you want to be leading in a trend for murdering women. Why can we not get on top of this? I watch initiatives like this one, which is a good initiative, and of course I'll support it, but I go: "Okay. What else is needed?"

We get some special units like this Crown prosecutors' team approach – excellent idea – where we've got Crown prosecutors that are highly trained and experienced in dealing with these kinds of cases. They know what to look for. We've got Val Campbell out there doing I don't know how many public appearances and lectures every year to try and get the police to understand how to investigate these episodes, what to look for, how not to be hoodwinked, to understand what the situation is that they're walking into, and to be alive to the possibilities of it. We're trying to do some things here, and we still can't get on top of this. Somehow we're allowing a culture to exist in this province that still says that it's okay to do this despite the attempts that we're making through a pretty enlightened Department of Justice, I have to say, both the previous minister and the current minister for keeping this up, but obviously there's a lot of work we need to be doing in other places because we're not succeeding.

One of the things that I'd like to remind people about is what the cost to society is of violence. When we look at the other departments, the social service agencies that have to be pulled in on this, here's a fairly short list: law enforcement; the Crown; emergency shelters; child protection services; a civil or a family lawyer; victim services through the police; social services through the government; Edmonton community services, the municipal ones that are offered; Capital health; housing; mental health. We're looking at prevention programs, parenting counselling, sexual assault services, aboriginal services, multicultural addiction, off-site treatment for offenders, treatment for victims, treatment for children. All of that costs money.

I talk about how we can reduce the need for acute-care services and emergency services and those costs to our health care system, which is an entirely preventable activity that we could be doing. We could cut those costs right out of the health care system and move that money over and spend it on something else. This is one of the areas that I like to talk about. If we could reduce and completely eradicate domestic violence, we could take a huge chunk of health care spending and move it over to spend it on something else, but we haven't been successful at doing that, and we continue to treat women and their children in emergency services and in clinics and doctors' offices for the myriad of things that manifests itself as a result of family violence.

The other issue that I want to talk about in connection to this is how important it is to keep the separation of concepts between access to children and the maintenance payments. Again, this government has been good about understanding that concept. They haven't fallen in that hole where they start to attach the two things. You can see why it becomes a natural connection for people because they think: "I'm paying for something. I'm paying you money, so I'm paying for access. It is connected." It cannot be connected particularly because this is what you end up with.

We've had a couple of terrible murder/suicides here in Alberta. In particular, one in Red Deer was directly connected to access to a child, and that child was being used as a way of controlling the mother and keeping the mother within the reach of the father. Always they want to put together the access and the maintenance, and it absolutely cannot be. This is a good example of why we need to keep those two concepts separated. We need to keep them separated through the programming, separated through the legislation. Every time we approach this in the courts, we have to understand that they are separate concepts and not let them get linked together because when they do, we end up with terrible, terrible tragedies.

I wanted to use this opportunity to congratulate Val and her team for the work that they're doing. I think it's worthwhile. I think it's paying off. I know it's tough for her and the other people working on this concept. I've met some people that are working through the city of Edmonton services in the same sort of small teams. A very tough thing to do day after day after day. My thanks to them; my congratulations to them. I believe what you're doing is working. Don't lose hope. You are having an effect. We have to look in some of the other areas of our lives and the other areas of our influence in this Assembly as to how to help you in the work that you're doing.

Thank you for the opportunity to raise a couple of additional points while we're in Committee of the Whole on Bill 3, and I look forward to hearing the debate from my colleagues in this Assembly.

Mr. Bonko: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. A pleasure to speak on Bill 3, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006. We have to remember that this isn't associated with just those of low economic income or inner-city residents. This is widespread. It's something that affects each and every one of us in some way, shape, or form. The problem is, like I said, that it's not associated just with those with low income. It might be associated with those with high incomes; they are strapped to the very end, and they resort to violence.

Some specifics that were raised about the stalking – and I'm glad the member from Red Deer gave a little bit of clarification that it would not increase or lead to increasing charges with regard to stalking. That was one of the concerns that I had when I originally looked at this. I don't know if this is going to do much good if we don't have the bodies in place to enforce it and to in fact give some education as to what is and what is not acceptable as far as family violence goes.

We have an increased amount of immigrants coming into the country, and what may be acceptable to one culture as to how they do control their family in their motherland certainly is going to be different and less acceptable when they are here. In fact, some could be of the Muslim faith, who have strict dress codes for their women: how they can act in public, how they can dress in public. This can in fact lead to violence. When they come to a different country, they may want to experience something a little bit different. In fact, they may want to meet new people, but because where they came from doesn't allow for that, this could be the exact reason why there is family violence: they are trying to experience and maybe acculturate themselves as new immigrants with some other people, say at the Mennonite centre. There's obviously resentment as to their losing their dependence on the spouse. Maybe some violence occurs from that. So I think some of it has to come with education to be able to back up or at least add a little bit more of a topping up to this particular bill as to what is and what is not acceptable for immigrants coming into the country.

Not to just list aboriginal people, but there are a great deal of aboriginal people especially on the reserves or in the northern areas where there is a lot of violence, and it's a lot because of their isolation. They might just find that this is the only way to come to terms with one another because they are not used to speaking civilly to one another.

I've just highlighted a couple of specifics here with regard to the bill with new immigrants and with the distance and the lack of actual mediation or supports to be able to help the people with regard to their problems. Perhaps if there were more inner agencies, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned, to be able to catch these people before they continue to go down the cycle of violence, that would certainly go a long way. If we did have the people in place, such as the Edmonton Police Service or in the rural areas the RCMP, to be able to do this – but that's not their main focus: to be able to prevent family violence. Their main focus is to protect and to serve the citizens. They need separate departments to be able to reach out and to give a little bit of support to families who are experiencing this.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I won't take much time. As I said before, this is a very good bill. I think that the member has realized that we do have a serious problem. It's been mentioned before that we have the highest stalking rate in the country. The member said and I say that this is a very important step, but I don't think that we can be sure that this isn't going to add to extra work by the police and other people. I don't think we know at this point. I guess that's the only point I would make: if the members can use their influence to deal with the whole problem. I think we were told last week that 40 per cent of the homicides – you know, one step will lead to another – are domestic disputes. So this stalking can lead to some very serious matters down the way.

We do need more resources. I think it's clear in a boom economy – I was told that in places like Fort McMurray and others there are some serious problems. So we do need more resources. It's nice to have the legislation – we need that – but I think it's clear we need more resources. I mentioned earlier on that Edmonton WIN House alone had to turn away more than a thousand women seeking assistance because of lack of funding, and I'm sure that's true right throughout the province. We need, as mentioned, more education for front-line workers: the social workers, police officers. We need more police officers. I mean, this is just a part of the boom economy.

Certainly, it's a good bill, but I don't think that we recognize that by passing legislation here, we'd solve all the problems. We do need to have the backup services. So I would say to the hon. Member for Red Deer-North that any influence she can have in the budget that's coming up and in talking to the minister – as we put these bills through, let's provide the backup services.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll just be brief. I'm pleased to rise in support of this bill, and I echo the Member for Edmonton-Centre in commending the work of Val Campbell and others in this area in trying to bring this terrible societal problem into the public sphere to try to limit it somewhat. It is much more pervasive than we would like to think: the ability to intimidate, the ability to instill fear, the desire of some to have power over another human being just through stalking. I believe the use of emergency protection orders, the greater power they'll give for police to use them, will be a positive thing and reduce the potential for increased violence.

I'm very pleased to support this bill, and I'll just say that, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise in debate on Bill 3, Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006. I'll be very brief.

An Hon. Member: We're listening.

Mr. Agnihotri: You're listening. Okay.

Just one point that should be made regarding this bill, Mr. Chairman, is that it does not mention or address the high rates of family violence and stalking that are experienced by aboriginal people. I think my colleague already mentioned violence against ethnic people. Violence against women is a very important issue. I support this bill because principally this is a good bill. We need to be seen as advocates for women and all victims of family violence. By showing our support for this particular bill, we will demonstrate our commitment to reducing our occurrence rate of family violence. I don't want to go into details. Maybe I will speak at the next stage. Mr. Chairman, I want to adjourn this debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, did I hear you that you wanted to have it adjourned? [interjections] Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

10:00

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report bills 3, 9, and 22 and report progress on Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 9, Bill 22, Bill 3, Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I presume you meant to say: report progress on Bill 1. Is that correct?

Mr. Agnihotri: Yeah. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie just proposed that we report three bills and report progress on Bill 1. Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for the record the motion, then, was that bills 22, 3, and 9 were reported. That's what we just concurred in.

The Acting Speaker: That's correct. I meant three bills, not only Bill 3. Three bills, yes.

Mr. Hancock: And those three bills were reported out of the committee.

The Acting Speaker: That's correct.

Mr. Hancock: I then would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:03 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 15, 2006 1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/15

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms bearing Alberta's original Mace, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly and Mr. Ray Speaker, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

[Mr. Ray Speaker took his place behind the Bar]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this special occasion we give thanks as legislators for the rich diversity of our 100 years of history. We ask for guidance in our deliberations and debate of the future that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. We welcome the many challenges before us and dedicate ourselves to both the present and the future as we join in the continuing service to Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, as we await the arrival of Their Honours, let me welcome all who are here today. The galleries today host many former members, spouses, relatives of deceased members, and guests of former members. Those of us who currently serve are honoured by your presence, and we welcome you. One hundred and twenty-eight former members and 16 spouses of former members will join with current members as we celebrate the 100 years of democracy in Alberta today.

We currently serve in the 26th Legislature. In the general election of August 5, 1952, three former members with us today were elected to serve in Alberta's 12th Legislature. As Alberta's senior parliamentarians let me introduce them and ask them to stand. Arthur Dixon was elected as a Social Credit member as one of six Calgary MLAs in 1952. Nick Dushenski was elected as a member of the CCF in the Willingdon constituency in 1952. Raymond Reiersen was elected as a Social Credit member in the constituency of St. Paul in 1952. [applause]

By coincidence, 1952 was 54 years ago. That was the average age of current members elected to this Legislature in the election of 2004.

I'm also pleased today to acknowledge the presence of a message that we have received from Buckingham Palace, a message delivered to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

I was pleased to receive your kind message of loyal greetings sent on behalf of the Members of the Legislative Assembly on the occasion of the Centenary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta which is being marked during a Special Ceremony in the Chamber today.

I remember with pleasure my visit to Alberta last year and send my warm good wishes to you all for an enjoyable event during this most special anniversary year.

Signed Elizabeth R.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Kwong.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Mrs. Kwong, and their party entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

His Honour: Ladies and gentlemen, please be seated.

The Speaker: Your Honours and hon. members, 100 years ago today at the hour of 3 p.m. the 25 members of the First Legislative Assembly of Alberta came to order in a makeshift Chamber in the Thistle Roller and Ice Rink, located only a short distance from this site. They heard the province's first Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. George Hedley Vicars Bulyea, outline the first steps to be taken in the evolution of the fledgling province.

Today we sit in the Chamber of a magnificent Legislature Building, where we celebrate the centennial of our Legislative Assembly and, in doing so, give recognition and our profound thanks to the contributions of the 769 men and women who built and developed this institution beginning in 1905. Their vision, dedication, and sound judgment in serving the interests of Alberta have led us to where we stand today, a province with a high standard of living, productive and healthy citizens, and unparalleled potential for the future.

In celebrating 100 years of democracy in Alberta, we are thankful for the wisdom shown by our forebears in choosing the Westminster model of democratic governance that, despite its occasional foibles and frustrations, has demonstrated its staying power and effectiveness over 700 years of history.

It's now my great honour to call on Alberta's 16th Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Norman Kwong, to address the Assembly on this most auspicious of all occasions.

Your Honour.

His Honour: Thank you. It's not very often that I'm the best dressed guy in the room.

Good afternoon, Premier Klein, Mr. Speaker, hon. ministers, hon. members, distinguished guests. I am honoured to join you all today in paying tribute to the 100th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This is a proud day for we who are gathered in this Chamber. Indeed, it is a proud day for all Albertans.

Since 1906 the Legislative Assembly and those who served through it have been one of our most powerful and enduring symbols of democracy. While it is true that democratic ideals thrived in this land long before Alberta was a province, it is the Legislative Assembly and its special partnership of Crown and Assembly members that gives us the means to govern in a truly democratic fashion. Since 1906 nearly 800 Albertans have responded to the call of public office. They have given their hearts and minds to serve as Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Throughout our history hon. members have represented a variety of viewpoints and political affiliations. They have debated issues both great and small. Regardless of which side of the House they sat on or sit in, each has shown the highest degree of personal sacrifice, dedication, and commitment. Each person who has served in this Assembly has an intense desire to leave their communities and this province a better place than they found it.

As Her Majesty the Queen's representative in Alberta I congratulate all of you on 100 years of service to the citizens of Alberta.

Thank you very much. [applause]

The Speaker: Thank you, Your Honour.

It's now the pleasure of this Assembly to invite former member Mr. Ray Speaker to give remarks on behalf of all former members.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta 100th Anniversary Addresses to the Assembly

Mr. R. Speaker: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour, Mr. Premier, Leader of the Official Opposition, ministers, members, former members, and spouses of former members, I want to say that it is a great opportunity to be able to say thank you for letting us as former members be part of this ceremony today. Mr. Speaker, you have done a superb job. Thank you. My colleagues in the gallery are having a great time today. We want to thank you for that, and they want to thank you for this great time. [applause]

Your Honour, I should say, first of all, that it's the first time I've appeared before the Bar. I'm off subject – and Mr. Speaker has only allowed me a limited amount of time – but I was threatened the first time I arrived at the Legislature that if I didn't behave and if I didn't quit swearing, I might end up here. But I will behave.

Spending nearly 30 years in this place has allowed me a very special friendship with MLAs dating back to 1935, some 70 years. I want to say something about those people. Every one of them was very strong in purpose. They came here because they wanted to represent their constituents, they wanted to do it in a democratic process, and they wanted to make sure that the individual needs of Albertans were well met. I can only say again that our gallery here has a group of people that have made an excellent contribution to this Assembly and the government and the democratic process of our province.

A few remarks on the lighter side. My first visit to this Legislature was 42 years ago on February 13 for the opening of the 1964 session of the Legislature. I walked from the hotel with a member that was elected in 1935. He said: I will show you what to do and when to do it. So I followed and went along with him. We entered the rotunda, and as I saw this new building and looked up, I said to myself: man, there's nothing like this in Little Bow. After that, we proceeded up the marble steps and turned to the left. Now, that's the only time that I've done that. The two of us proceeded to a room just outside this door over here, and we walked into the room. It was larger than it is today. It was a bare room, and all that was on the wall was a series of coat hooks. My colleague said to me, "That's your hook right over there; hang up your hat and coat," which I did. Then as I turned, he said: "Over on the right here, through that open door, is the urinal. If you have to use it, go ahead." That was my introduction to this Legislature.

The session of 1964 was also special in that it was the first session to have a sound system. Prior to 1964 the Premier and the government had difficulty hearing the opposition, and that was for two reasons. It's not quite the same today, I understand. Democracy in Alberta had the habit of electing small oppositions. That was the first reason. The second reason was that at that time the members of the government brought a local paper back into the Assembly, and they read the paper during question period, so you couldn't hear anything. I had a Scandinavian friend that was part of the Legislature at that time. That was prior to my time. I said: what was the name of that paper? He said: well, gee whiz, I think it was the Edmonton Urinal. Anyway, at that point in our history the opposition was finally heard. Also, we had Hansard introduced in the same session, and you could read what the opposition had to say to the government at that point in time.

Well, the 1964 session ended with a volley of paper from the press gallery, and that signalled two things. Certainly, first of all, the session was over, and secondly, as members – and you don't go through this practice – we all came out this door. We lined up at the Clerk's office over here, and there was the Clerk's counter. As your turn came to approach the counter, you were given two things: first of all, your annual paycheque, and it was one cheque, no deductions. Secondly, you were given your annual supplies. Mr. Speaker, as a note I want to say that it wasn't a briefcase with a million dollars in it. It was a cardboard box, and in that cardboard box were the following: one pack of legislative paper, one pack of envelopes, four steel loose-leaf rings, one eraser, and one box of paper clips. Now, I tried to understand that, but I understood it better and respected it, this kind of frugality, when I was reminded by some of the members at that time that in 1935 the public servants couldn't be paid by the government. So it was part of that era.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Premier, and certainly members here, things have changed, but I think the constant that we have in this Legislative Assembly is the democratic process that keeps us free and able to speak our minds and give our opinions. If we could look back and witness 100 years of our democratic system, that has been in partnership with the private sector of our province, the way to observe it, the most obvious way, is in our success as Alberta. Today I just happened to read the third-quarter report of the Finance minister: $24 billion in the budget, $7 billion as a surplus, no deficit, no debt. We have the heritage savings trust fund that is active and viable, specifically in research. We have an infrastructure in this province of roads, schools, public buildings, hospitals, and telecommunications. We have a program of health care and social services. Along with that, in our private sector we have a broadened diversity, which is most important. We can all agree that it's most exciting that in 100 years we have moved from a frontier province of homesteaders to a diversity and combination of public and private opportunities in this province that are second to none.

From my recent travels to Ottawa and other places in Canada I can report to all of you that Alberta is the envy of all Canada. Congratulations. Mr. Premier, you know what I think? It's time we throw a party.

In our 100 years former governments have set the stage, though, for this progress. With the former members that are here, I think that historically, as to what has happened, we should recognize that. For example, the government of Premier Brownlee in 1930 secured for Alberta provincial rights to our public lands and natural resources, and that was a promise made by the Laurier government in 1905. Premiers Aberhart and Manning in the 1940s legislated a checkerboard system of resource development and a resource reserve program to manage Alberta's provincial oil and gas resources.

Premier Strom in the 1970s supported resource development and balanced the first billion dollar surplus budget for the province of Alberta. Premier Lougheed in the 1970s and the 1980s, in battling constitutional and national energy program challenges, ensured the protection of Alberta's natural resource ownership, specifically oil and gas, by insisting on the notwithstanding clause being in the Canadian Constitution Act of 1982. Premier Getty took courageous steps to diversify our Alberta economy to protect our public revenue in times of unexpected shifts. Premier Klein, you heard the call of Albertans in the 1990s to eliminate the deficit and the debt. Your government listened at that time, and you are to be congratulated.

That brings me back to today. This government and this opposition face a fantastic opportunity at the beginning of the next hundred years. Democracy holds the answer to what unfolds in this province of Alberta. With this privilege, on behalf of my colleagues here assembled I wish you the best on the 100th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Thank you. [standing ovation]

The Speaker: Mr. Speaker served in the Assembly for 28 years and six months. Thank you very much, sir.

It's now my honour and my pleasure to introduce to all here the dean of current Canadian first ministers, the hon. the Premier of the province of Alberta.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your Honours, current and former Members of the Legislative Assembly, distinguished guests, families, and friends. Mr. Speaker, the other Mr. Speaker, Ray Speaker, noted that when he was first elected to the Legislative Assembly, one of the first things he was shown was his way to the washroom. I can tell you that across the hall from me existed Ray Speaker when I was in room 137 as Minister of Environment, and one of the first things he did was show me the bathroom.

On behalf of my fellow MLAs I am pleased to welcome our special guests here today. This is a very, very special day, the 100th year of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. It's been a challenging and rewarding 100 years, and I am privileged to be part of that history and to call myself an Albertan because certainly we have changed a lot since that first day in 1906, when the very first Legislative Assembly began its work in I believe McKay school.

Today Alberta is a prosperous and vibrant province with some of the most innovative and compassionate people in Canada, and it has an exceptionally bright future ahead. The hard work, passion, and energy that the members of this Assembly have dedicated to serving the people of Alberta have played an important role in making sure that future is bright. One hundred years of discussion, deliberation, and progress have taken place under this dome and have led to many remarkable achievements. Every MLA that has served in this Legislature has a right to feel proud. No matter what side of the House he or she sat on, all MLAs have shared in Alberta's democratic traditions and in the work of building this province.

One thing in particular should make us all proud, and that is the teamwork and the dedication of our families and our staff and our colleagues, who, although not elected officials, have made large sacrifices and have supported us and worked hard to make this province great. The work and success of each MLA is a team effort with a network of individuals standing behind them, supporting them, and helping them to succeed.

Of course, all of these people include researchers and ministry staff, program experts, and many other dedicated professionals who share their knowledge and passion for the province to help us do our jobs to the best of our ability; administrative staff and pages to help keep us all organized; Legislature caretakers, who keep this beautiful building going and ticking; Legislature security, who keep us all safe; our spouses and our children and friends, who offer support and understanding even when our duties require many hours away from home. Each person over the past 100 years has played an extremely important role in making Alberta's future bright, and together we can make our province's next 100 years an even greater success.

Some of the special people I've mentioned are seated in our galleries and on the floor today, and I would ask them all now to stand and receive the warm and very special acknowledgement of the Legislative Assembly for their commitment to Alberta. Please all stand. [applause]

The Speaker: The Premier was elected to this Assembly in 1989 as the Member for Calgary-Elbow. Thank you, sir.

Many people, including me, believe that democracy functions best with an effective opposition. It's now my pleasure to introduce the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With two Mr. Speakers in the Assembly we may be in twice as much trouble as normal.

It's a great pleasure to rise here. To all of you who are gathered here, all the special guests, I'm sure we listened carefully to Mr. Speaker's comments about the importance of democracy and to the Premier's comments about how behind every elected representative there's a whole team of people. How true that is. I'm pleased and honoured to join with them in this Assembly and with people across the province in celebrating our first century of legislative democracy in Alberta.

One of the great strengths of democracy is that it adapts. It adapts to changing social values, to new technologies, to changes in demographics. Democracy's flexibility and its responsiveness to the needs of the people it serves is what allows democratic ideals and the economic, cultural, and social benefits derived from those ideals to endure. The flexibility of democracy was demonstrated early in the history of this Legislature when the government of Premier A.L. Sifton in April 1916 recognized the right of women to vote. Far too many years later, in the 1960s, peoples of Alberta's First Nations secured the same right. Changes such as these have benefited us all, bringing fresh perspectives to the Legislature, empowering Albertans, and raising the legitimacy and effectiveness of our democracy.

Now we believe it is time to start thinking about further changes. Alberta's Legislature has served its citizens reliably for 100 years, offering stable, responsible, and at times even visionary government. As we enter our second century of democratic governance, I think Albertans should take this opportunity to consider ways in which to continue to renew our democracy, to make our Legislature more representative and accountable and our elections more fair. Ideas like fixed election dates, electoral reform, better rules on political financing, and other changes could inject new life into our democracy, encouraging more citizens to vote and increasing citizen engagement in the democratic process.

While people of different political viewpoints often disagree on questions of policy and ideology, disagree here every day that we sit, I think we can all agree that as legislators we have a responsibility to make sure that the people we serve remain committed to and engaged in the political process.

The ultimate aim of democracy is to ensure that government serves the public good, that citizens' interests are protected, and that peace, prosperity, and freedom are nurtured. While far from perfect – it is, after all, a human institution – our Legislature has done an excellent job of serving its people, and I look forward to witnessing the changes the people of Alberta will forge in the years to come.

Thank you very much. [applause]

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition was elected in 2001 to this Assembly in the constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. Thank you, sir.

It is now my pleasure to call on the hon. leader of the third party in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Sir.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking you for your efforts and the efforts of your staff in organizing today's celebration. I think it's much appreciated by members both current and past, and I'd like to express my welcome to all of our former colleagues, friends, and their families today. Welcome.

Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate 100 years of representative democracy in Alberta. The importance of this fact cannot be overestimated. It has protected the rights of individuals and provided for their collective needs. It is the wellspring of social progress and even of economic progress. But democracy is not a static thing; it is a living thing. It needs to be nurtured and supported.

Democracy in Canada was not something that was handed to us by the British or by the Crown. The history of democracy in Canada and Alberta is a history of the struggle by those who were ignored and disenfranchised to extend their rights and to strive for greater measures of equality. It had to be wrested step by step from the elite of this country. When this Legislature first met, the elected representatives were all men. Because of the work of the Famous Five and thousands of women and men who believed in the equality of women, the franchise was extended to women in 1916, and by 1917 the first female MLAs in Alberta joined this Assembly.

Now we enjoy broad democratic rights and freedoms. That is certainly worth celebrating. It is an enormous accomplishment and has improved and enriched people's lives in countless ways. We owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to those who have worked over the last 100 years to build our democracy in Alberta and in Canada. To the workers and the farmers, the small business owners, and community-minded people from all backgrounds who worked so hard for a voice at the table and for the right to be treated with the same dignity as their fellow citizens a hearty thank you.

The very name of the New Democratic Party's political philosophy is social democracy, and it proclaims our goal of extending formal democracy into the social and economic fields. We see real democracy as far more than just elections and Legislatures. The extension of human rights to all, the right to free and unfettered collective bargaining, the right to quality education and medical care regardless of ability to pay, the reduction in poverty, and the elimination of homelessness are all parts of our vision of democracy. The extension of democracy is vital to the people's interests. Things like the Alberta Bill of Rights, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Human Rights Commission, and freedom of information legislation are all important parts of our democracy.

As we enter the second century of democracy in Alberta, parliamentary reform, electoral reform, limits on executive power, transparency and accountability in government are keys to extending social and economic progress in our province. They are vital to defending the gains of the past 100 years and extending them into the future.

Let us dedicate ourselves to renewing our vision of democracy in Alberta. Let's do our part to ensure that we hand to our descendants 100 years from now as much progress in building real democracy as we have received from our forebears.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to get unanimous consent of the House to allow the leader of the Alliance Party to speak today.

The Speaker: The request is that the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner be given an opportunity to participate today. We will need unanimous consent. Any dissenters?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour, Mr. Premier, and all the special guests that are here today, it truly is an honour to be here. As mentioned, 100 years ago today 25 MLAs from across Alberta came to the Edmonton Thistle Roller and Ice Rink to meet for the first time. Their challenge was much like ours: to provide good government and to serve the people.

Perhaps the most important principle that we need to ensure good government as we enter the second century of democracy is that of accountability. I know of no better way than to have a democratic process for recall.

Albertans have a long history of independence and self-sufficiency. As stewards of the land we need to foster that independence and continue to foster an appreciation of our democratic rights. It is a sad situation for a government to be considered out of touch and not putting the interests of the people first and foremost. People must be engaged and part of the process when they believe that they will make a difference. We should never underestimate the capacity of Albertans to make a difference and to rise to the challenges. So let us challenge ourselves to protect our freedoms by protecting the rights of our fellow citizens. The best government is the one that governs the least, one that helps the people to help themselves.

Mr. Speaker, democracy is exciting and challenging. It's truly an honour to be here half a century after my grandfather and to see his passion and the passion of the MLAs here in this House to provide that democracy. May we be strong and free and continue to enjoy peace and prosperity for another century. [applause]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Your Honour, Mr. Premier, the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the hon. leader of the third party, all members, I would like to thank all of you for your contributions today in marking the 100th anniversary of the first sitting of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. The citizens of Alberta place a profound trust in the members elected to this institution, and it's certainly my hope that we and our successors will continue the legacy of excellence demonstrated by our predecessors.

To conclude our ceremony today, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau, who is in the Speaker's gallery, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem and God Save The Queen.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

God save our gracious Queen, long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send Her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us:
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will now follow through the normal Routine. It's back to work.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly my father, Mr. Mel Dunford, who is here from Calgary to celebrate with us the hundred years of democracy in Alberta. So I'd ask you to share the warm and traditional welcome with him.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Parliamentary Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's of course an honour to rise in this Assembly on the 100th anniversary of its first sitting, under, I might add, a Liberal government, in 1906. It would be far too easy, however, to revel in the celebrations and overlook the fact that Alberta's democracy is in need of serious repair. Where once Alberta led in democratic innovation, this government is now viewed as a democratic dinosaur. My question is to the Premier. Given that in the last election voter turnout was just 45 per cent and this government received only a minority of those votes, will the Premier finally give his support to the Alberta Liberal proposal for a citizens' assembly on electoral reform?

Mr. Klein: Well, notwithstanding how many people or what percentage of people turned out, we managed to elect 63 members. That is the democratic process, Mr. Speaker. That is the democratic process. If the hon. member can count, there are 63 of us. There are only – how many? – 16 of them, give or take, four, and one. Everything is on the table. Send me a proposal.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that over 50 per cent of voters in the last election supported opposition parties, why doesn't this government have all-party policy committees, which are common practice elsewhere?

Mr. Klein: I have explained time and time again. First of all, this is a Legislature. It is not the House of Commons. Other ND Legislatures and other Liberal Legislatures don't have any form of committee system whatsoever. In other words, they do things from the top down, including Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Mr. Speaker, these are standing policy committees. They are not standing committees of the Parliament or the Legislature. They are standing policy committees of government. I would like to make that clear: of government. Standing policy committees of government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Premier has said that he could, quote, care less about fixed election dates because he, quote, won't be running, won't be around anyways, will the Premier level the playing field for everyone who will be running and commit to fixed election dates in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with telling only part of the story . . .

An Hon. Member: That's tactful.

Mr. Klein: Oh, it is tactful. That's what he does.

The other part of the story, Mr. Speaker, is that for every upside there is a downside. What he forgot to say is that I also said, "For every action there is an equal and opposite and often negative reaction." So send me a proposal. We'll consider it, but we'll consider both the pros and the cons.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Opinion Survey on Health Care

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today this government released the results of a survey which concludes that changes are needed to our health care system, a point that I believe all of us would agree on. What this survey does not do is justify the government's plan for its so-called third way. Instead, it shows that Albertans want changes within the public system. My questions are to the Premier. Given that this survey shows that half of these respondents didn't know what the third way was and those who did had five different ideas of its definition, will the Premier commit now to releasing more details of the government's plans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the Minister of Health and Wellness speak to the specifics of the survey results. But what I find very interesting – and the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition alluded to it – is that changes are needed. Substantial changes are needed to achieve sustainability; in other words, to bring the cost of health care down in line with the rate of inflation and to improve access. Another thing the survey pointed out was that Albertans want to make their own choices and manage their own health care, and that speaks to many of the initiatives that have already been undertaken. I've said from the very beginning that debate is healthy, and Albertans are making sure their voices are heard. The survey is just one more way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the top two suggested changes were to improve wait times and to increase staff levels, why is this government pursuing reforms that will see increased doctor shortages and even longer wait times in the public system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, all we have put forward are proposals contained in the health policy framework, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the colleagues in the House would know, when we talked about our supplementary estimates, we talked about additional dollars to improve the access times, to build on the great success of the hip and joint project, which has made a considerable difference throughout, putting the patient first, building a strong public system. The heavy emphasis of eight of the 10 policies is on building a strong public system, sustaining it, and advancing innovatively.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that within those surveyed, of those who wanted a change to the health care system, only 3 per cent – 3 per cent – wanted a two-tiered system and 7 per cent wanted partial privatization, will the Premier now rule out private payment for preferential access? Will he rule it out?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would rule in anything that achieves the two things that we want to achieve, and I'm sure the opposition wants to achieve them. Those are improvement in access and bringing the costs of health care, which now exceed $10 billion annually and will eat up our total budget by the year 2025 – already in New Democrat Manitoba, where they have no cares whatsoever about spending money, it eats up 43 per cent of their budget. It's no wonder that their roads are falling to pieces and their education system is lacking and there's no money for the protection of people and property and privacy. That's the ND way.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Government Accountability

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Democracies can be distinguished by whether the people and their representatives can examine what the government does and whether the government is accountable. Yet in this province secrecy and spin, not openness and transparency, seem to be the norm. To the Premier: why is the government proposing a new FOIP policy which will increase government secrecy when there is such compelling evidence that democratic openness and transparency are much needed?

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. member, as the chair recalls, yesterday there was second reading on a bill dealing with this matter. This matter is currently before the House. All members have opinions on this and may participate; this is not a position of one person. The bill is before the House, hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: I see, Mr. Speaker. Okay. I'll move on.

Mr. Elsalhy: To the Premier again: when will the public-sector whistle-blowers in Alberta receive legislated protection instead of a witch hunt every time they open their mouths to expose corruption?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take strong exception to that assertion that a witch hunt is conducted against those who wish to report legitimately on the misdoings and the misconduct of others. I can tell you that if anyone wants to report anything, they are not punished in any way, shape, or form.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Okay. One more time to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given the vital role in ensuring accountability played by the federal Auditor General, when will this government empower Alberta's Auditor General with the necessary resources, the necessary autonomy, and the investigative powers for him to do a better job?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member – and I understand that he is new and maybe doesn't understand the rules – that the Auditor General reports to the Legislature. He is not under the control or the direction of the government whatsoever. He is under the control and the direction of the Legislature, including the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans who want to see what our health care system will look like in a few years under the Conservative third way need look no further than the profits being made today by the private auto insurance industry. The insurance industry made an obscene profit of $6.5 billion on the backs of the country's drivers in 2005, which was almost 50 per cent higher than the record $4.2 billion profit they made the year before. My questions are for the Premier. Will the government take action to protect Alberta drivers from being gouged and order an immediate rollback in auto insurance rates?

Mr. Klein: I'm going to have the Minister of Finance expand on my answer, but I want to provide a preamble, and that is to remind the New Democrat opposition that the Alberta Automobile Insurance Rate Board sets rates annually to ensure fairness to consumers.

I'll have the hon. Finance minister respond further.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the report that I think the hon. member is referring to does not confine itself to automobile insurance. It is all property insurance. So you really have to take that information and look at the area of auto alone. What I would inform the House is that it is our estimate and I think the insurance industry's estimate that Alberta drivers have saved $300 million in premiums under our reforms.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there's a Santa Claus too.

This is to the Premier. If the Saskatchewan automobile insurance corporation can offer an 8 per cent reduction in rates to its drivers because it's making a good profit, why can't the private insurance industry do it, and why doesn't this government direct them to do it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance expand on that, but I would remind the leader of the New Democratic Party that the insurance agency in Saskatchewan, the socialist agency, can compete here if they want to.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that rather than charging the money and giving it back, the system that we've put in place will work much better. We have had two rollbacks in insurance rates here. We have an opportunity again this summer for the Automobile Insurance Rate Board to examine the premiums and profits, and at that time if it is determined that there should be a further lowering of premiums, it will happen then.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the government promised Alberta drivers that the rates that they pay would be the same or even lower than those enjoyed by people who live in provinces with public automobile insurance, isn't it true and will the Premier not admit that he has just broken another promise to Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no, I won't admit anything. The only thing I will admit is that we achieved what we wanted to do. The hon.

leader of the ND, the socialist opposition, would have us think that we were trying to punish all drivers. What we were trying to do was eliminate penalties for younger good drivers and eliminate financial penalties for older good drivers. If the ND opposition, the socialist opposition, thinks that was wrong, stand up and say so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

2:30 Government Spending

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have been hearing a lot from this government recently about sustainability and the cost of health care. While health spending is increasing, the rate of overall government spending, excluding health, is also rising at an unsustainable rate. We should learn our lessons from the past and avoid boom/bust spending. Wise fiscal prudence would have us cap spending and increase savings now to avoid drastic cuts later. My questions are for the Premier. Will this government limit the budget to current levels with an index for inflation and population growth to avoid drastic cuts later?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, details of our spending plans will be contained in the budget when it's tabled in a short period of time.

I'll have the hon. Finance minister respond to the extent that she can respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I always find it interesting when they get up and say: "You should reduce spending. You're spending too much." When I ask the question of the hon. members who say this, "Do you want me to reduce spending in Health?" it's "Well, actually, we've been asking for more spending in that area." "Do you want to reduce spending in Education?" "Well, actually, we're not funding our schools enough." "Do we want to reduce funding in Advanced Education?" "Well, actually, we don't have enough spaces for all of our students, so we can't do that either." "Should we reduce spending in Children's Services?" "Well, no. We want more money for Children's Services so that we can provide more lunches, more services every day." It is irresponsible to stand in this House and complain about government spending with absolutely no solution at hand.

Mr. Hinman: Well, more ministers and more bureaucrats wasn't where we were asking for spending.

My question again is to the Premier. Will this government protect Alberta's long-term interests by depositing 30 per cent of resource revenues into the heritage savings trust fund, as was originally intended?

Mr. Klein: I don't know if it was originally intended. I can't find the policy written anywhere that that, indeed, should happen. I would remind the hon. member that when I came into government in 1989, as you so rightfully pointed out, Mr. Speaker, the size of the public service was in excess of 30,000. It is now 22,960.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It won't take long and we'll be back to where we were.

My last question to the Premier: will this government alleviate the pressure on property tax by distributing 2 per cent of the provincial revenues on a per capita basis unconditionally to municipal governments?

Mr. Klein: I'll have the hon. Finance minister expand on that question through her answer. I can tell the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we give 5 cents per litre of gasoline to major municipalities. We have taken over total financing for all secondary roads, total financing for all major highways through municipalities. In addition to that, we have distributed amongst the municipalities $3 billion in unsolicited funds. Three billion dollars. That is a lot of money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Marlborough Elementary School

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning 400 students went to Marlborough school expecting that they would have a normal day filled with classroom activities. Instead, they were confronted with locked doors because the roof on their school is structurally unsound. These students have been dispersed to other schools, such as Bob Edwards and Greenview in northwest Calgary, which is at least 45 minutes on the bus for K to grade 4 students. My question is to the hon. Minister of Education. What is his department doing to work with the Calgary board of education to ensure that not a single instructional hour is lost for the students at Marlborough elementary school?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think we should thank the Calgary public board for acting very quickly and doing the precautionary measure of ensuring that the structural nature of the roof is thoroughly investigated and assessed. The second thing is that the Calgary board has already made arrangements for these students to be transferred for the next several days, I would assume, to neighbouring schools to make sure that no instructional time is being lost. My department has been working with them in that respect, and I feel pretty comfortable that the temporary plan, at least, will not result in any lost educational time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform my constituents as to how long his department has been aware of concerns with the structural integrity of the roof at the Marlborough elementary school?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, my Department of Education doesn't yet have full technical responsibility for infrastructure. That is the plan, and that is going to be transferred over very soon. We have consulted with the ministry of infrastructure, and I can tell you that an assessment was performed by the ministry of infrastructure in co-operation with the Calgary board of education. Our government, in fact, provided some $25,000 some time ago for that to be done. I don't have an exact date. I will get that for the hon. member.

I think it's important to stress here that there have been no casualties. There hasn't been any harm done. This is a precautionary measure taken by locally elected trustees, and I think they've acted in very good faith.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: could the minister inform my constituents as to what steps he is taking to ensure that repairs to the school will be expedited to permit students to return to school in their community as soon as possible?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, a lot is being done. In fact, I just got an envelope here of the news release from the Calgary board. I think it's important, first of all, to address the fact that the Calgary board of education will hold a meeting for parents on Thursday, March 16 – that's tomorrow – at the Bob Edwards school, and they will provide some more detailed information to parents and guardians regarding the situation at Marlborough school.

The other thing is to stress, of course, that the Calgary board of education and our government take the health and safety of our children very, very seriously. I'm very pleased that we're going to be ensuring that health and safety for students is not compromised. We are going to be working with them as soon as that engineering report is completed, and we will ensure that whatever funds are necessary there will be provided. We provide about $9 million to the Calgary board of education for major infrastructure renewal as part of the $730 million overall that we provide annually.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

School Infrastructure

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Member for Calgary-East pointed out, Marlborough elementary school in Calgary had to be evacuated this morning because of structural concerns. The school has problems with the roof. After engineers examined it, school board officials decided it was unsafe for the students. The majority of schools in Calgary are of a similar age, 1968 or older. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity does have the floor.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Minister of Education. Given that the Calgary board of education has an infrastructure debt of over $400 million, how many more structural concerns will be allowed to reach the critical point before this government takes action? [interjections]

2:40

The Speaker: There's a synergy that exists between the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and the Minister of Education. Now it's the Minister of Education's turn.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my turn, but I'm not going to start yelling and shouting, not on the democratic day that we're celebrating.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there are a number of new schools that have opened or have been approved for the Calgary board of education just in the last couple of years. Let me just read 15 of them quickly. [interjections] No? All right.

Well, then, let me simply say this. Mr. Speaker, the Calgary board of education in its news release today clearly said that it is "temporarily relocating students from Marlborough School in Northeast Calgary as a precautionary measure while it conducts a comprehensive assessment of potential structural problems at the building." They are doing a precautionary thing. We should be thanking them. We shouldn't be yelling at them. We shouldn't be accusing them of anything untoward. They've not done anything wrong here. They've acknowledged that there might be a problem, and they're erring on the side of caution and doing this preliminary assessment. So that's a good move.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the backdrop of a $7.4 billion surplus how can the Education ministry justify its inaction on maintenance and new school construction?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think we've done a pretty good job so far. That doesn't mean that a better job can't be done in the future. I'm going to be addressing this with school board chairs when I meet with them on Friday, March 24, which I've alluded to here earlier. I've already provided them with a temporary agenda, and infrastructure is one of those issues that we're going to look at. Suffice it to say that in the range of about $800 million is being spent in this area, and Calgary is getting a reasonable share of that. I'm not immune to Calgary's growth pressures. I know that they need more schools in that area. As soon as monies become available, I can guarantee you that they're going to get some.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When is this government going to take kids off the buses, out of decaying school structures, and provide a healthy school environment?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that there's no inference that buses are an unsafe environment. We have very capable bus drivers out there who are absolutely pledged to ensuring a safe and caring environment on the school buses. Now, there is an issue of bus ride times. That's a separate matter. But the health and safety of our students is protected on buses and in the classroom. We're pretty proud of that record so far, and we're going to ensure that that proud record continues as a legacy into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Keephills Electricity Generation Plant

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's announcement by TransAlta and EPCOR to construct a new 450 megawatt, $750 million coal-fired generating unit at TransAlta's Keehills site is great news for the economic development of my constituency of Stony Plain and great news for all Albertans. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister assure my constituents and all Albertans that this new project will utilize the newest proven technology to ensure that the coal required for this project will be used in the most efficient manner and that the environmental impact of the generating process will be further reduced to protect our environment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I can assure Albertans that they're going to have continued progress on the cleanest coal, the best technologies that are available to be used. This is still early in the process. They've just signed a development agreement. There's much work to be done. It'll have to have all of the clearances by the Energy and Utilities Board, by Alberta Environment to ensure that those environmental standards are met.

In fact, Genesee 3 was one of the latest coal-fired plants brought on, and that set the benchmark. It's going to have to meet that or even a superior benchmark. Just for some illustration of the standards that that's meeting, most of the sulphur dioxide is eliminated in those processes. There's about a 50 per cent reduction in NO_x; particulates, virtually nil. Carbon dioxide emission is even down 15 per cent in those coal-fired plants.

New legislation is coming for mercury. Alberta Environment has brought in a 50 per cent reduction in mercury emissions. That's going to be in place by 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: does the minister's department project that the electricity will be needed by Albertans in 2011, when this project is scheduled to be commissioned?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate that we have one of the fastest growing, best places in the world to invest, to live, and to work, and we continue to see the growth and the need for generation of electricity. We are going to need this plant and others to come forward, so clearly there is a great demand. The marketplace has acknowledged the tremendous benefits of our electricity deregulation. They have brought on generation faster than in any other jurisdiction in North America. About 4,000 megawatts have been brought on in the last few years, and this will add to the continuing growth of the long-term availability and supply of generation.

Mr. Lindsay: To the same minister: will the province's electrical transmission network be strengthened in time to ensure that this much-needed new generation will be deliverable to Albertans and possibly others?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, transmission continues to be one of the more urgent needs. The Energy and Utilities Board along with the Alberta Electric System Operator have been doing a long 10-year, 20-year plan on the transmission needs. They've approved a line between Calgary and Edmonton that's to be constructed. It's urgent that that be put in place. The anticipated completion of that is 2009-2010, in that time period. That will be in advance of this new generation that comes from that area. The transmission lines will be available to carry that load.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Calgary Health Trust

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Health Trust, a fundraising arm of the Calgary health region, has resorted to soliciting donations for medical equipment like heart monitors and stretchers. Requests for charitable donations have been posted throughout Calgary hospitals in an effort to make up for funding shortfalls. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. As the richest province in the country why are we collecting donations for basic medical equipment?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, today in Public Accounts this question was raised relative to the collection of funds by Calgary Health Trust. I had the opportunity to speak with the chair of the Calgary Health Trust, Mrs. Pat Nelson, who used to be a sitting member. She talked to me about the times that people in memory of their loved ones wished to make donations, and predominantly many of the bequests that come to the Calgary Health Trust take advantage of just that opportunity.

For many decades in Alberta people have chosen either to fund raise on behalf of local priorities or because local people want to prompt other kinds of amenities in hospitals or, in fact, have been in appreciation of the kinds of care they've received in public health care facilities. Particularly when people are in the terminal stages, they often feel a great attachment to those facilities. This trust fund takes an opportunity to take advantage of consolidating those resources in order to supply hospitals and health care facilities with the right types of facilities.

Ms Blakeman: Openly soliciting, advertising for donations.

Again to the same minister: where does this government draw the line on what new medical equipment is deemed essential and what is a luxury and open for donations?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that in some of the private, nonprofit, and other institutions one might well categorize some of the replacement equipment provided by auxiliaries or other fundraisers as essential. Again, it is their choice. Our government with the federal government has through the last several years, in the recent past, done a great deal to co-operate on diagnostic equipment. The many millions of dollars that are spent on new MRIs and CT scans come from the resources of the province. To the largest extent we try to provide the essential ingredients. I would suggest that although some of these pieces of equipment from time to time in certain institutions might also be categorized as essential, it has not been so much solicited as it has been the preferred offering of generous donors who want to improve our health care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: well, is it the minister's position, then, that these health regions should have to rely on these so-called generous donations in order to provide basic medical services to Albertans?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, basic medical services for Albertans is certainly the mandate and mission of the government of Alberta. I might also add that if people wish to provide more amenities – many people fund raise for ambulances, for example, in rural communities – it becomes a large part of a community endeavour that they're not only proud to do, but they enjoy doing. Many of these kinds of amenities have built communities by pioneers who have taken great pride in adding to their community with local dollars over and above what has been provided by government. Rather than worry about this, I think we should congratulate the members of the Calgary trust fund for a job well done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West-Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Forest Industry

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Recently the government of Ontario announced a multimillion dollar aid package for its forest industry. Is Alberta considering similar relief for this province's forest sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, as you and this Assembly and all Albertans know, we are not in the business of being in business. We recognize first and foremost that the forest industry is facing many economic challenges that have been brought on by a number of things, including a strong Canadian dollar and a weak U.S. dollar, rising costs, and certainly global competitiveness works its way into there too. These economic pressures are not just being faced by Alberta industry; this is across Canada as well. Ontario recently updated their stumpage system, which we did January 1, 2006, in Alberta. So all provinces across this country are grappling with this issue. Our industry, to their credit, has not asked for a bailout. What they have asked is that the Alberta Forest Products Association and the government, my ministry, look at competitiveness, costs, and at future markets and come up with an Alberta-made solution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Is your department working on a strategy to develop other market opportunities for Alberta's forest industry?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is yes. We are actually committing to seeing the forest industry grow and prosper. To support our industry, we have to take a look at participating in cross-ministry initiatives with Economic Development and other ministries to look at exploring emerging markets that may be out there for our fibre, fibre that we can adapt to the marketplace for our own forest products, and looking at new and innovative ways in terms of synthetic fibres that come from agricultural products as well. We would be working through our partnerships but, more importantly, looking at science, research, and technology to help us build those new markets for our products.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. How is this approach going to help Albertans in rural communities that look to forest industries for their livelihood?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very important question, and I want to thank the hon. member for it because it actually speaks to the heart of the issue. This is not just about industry; this is about Alberta and it's about Albertans. The long-term sustainability of our rural communities is impacted by the long-term health and sustainability of our forests and the forest industry in Alberta. In addition to those initiatives that I talked about, we're working with our MLAs; we are working with our industry and our communities to help industry remain competitive in a global market. More importantly, these efforts I believe will address the viability of our existing communities to help them remain competitive and supportive of Alberta communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Coal-fired Electricity Generation Plants

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I attended a news conference with citizens fighting a massive new set of transmission lines designed to facilitate exports of coal-fired electricity to the California market. This follows on the heels of yesterday's EPCOR and TransAlta announcement that they plan to build a new 450-megawatt generating unit near Lake Wabamun using the same old dirty-coal technology that the Premier told Albertans in his televised address was no longer being used. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Will the minister stand in his place and assure Albertans that under no circumstances will his government allow the proposed Keephills 3 generating plant to be built using the same old dirty-coal burning technology that is being used in the Genesee 3 generating units?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much for the question. To the hon. member I also want to say that I think it's really wise for all of us in this 21st century that rather than dealing with labels, such as calling things dirty coal, maybe we should save labels for planets and not for people and the kinds of initiatives that are taken forward. That actually came from David Suzuki. He said that rather than trying to pigeonhole and disenfranchise and really exclude in terms of new technologies, new regulation that's going to reduce mercury as we go forward, Alberta will continue to lead this country with environmental practices.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask why the minister is stubbornly refusing to require zero-emission coal gasification technologies to be used for these future coal-generating units, including the proposed Keephills 3 plant.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the ultimate goal of all Albertans – and I know that all Albertans and members of this House and, certainly, the Member for West Yellowhead would agree – is: first and foremost, how do we use technology? How do we reduce emissions? What is the government doing? I'll tell you what the government is doing. We are reducing, in terms of our emissions, by 50 per cent by the year 2010. Can we do better? Our attitude is – Albertans have an attitude – we can always do better, and we will continue to do better through technologies.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, why is the minister putting the profits of power companies who want to use and have been using outdated coal-burning technology to export Alberta power to the United States ahead of public health and this province's environment?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, public health in this province is number one. The environment is very important to us all. Again, rather than using labels, let us embrace our positive energy and positive things in what we're doing to harness that energy in positive initiatives. As a former not NDP but Liberal cabinet minister from Ottawa said: it's clear that Alberta is leading the way in environmental initiatives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Alberta/Montana Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation has been a very bad deal for Alberta consumers from the very start: higher costs, lower service . . .

An Hon. Member: It's the same as yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald: It is the same as yesterday, but the power bills have not gone down, hon. member.

Now, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor, and I hear interjections from all corners of the House. So, hon. member, let's start over.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Electricity deregulation has been a bad deal for Alberta consumers from the very start: higher costs, lower customer service, and now we have problems with the development of the transmission system. Citizens from across this province and even in the state of Montana gathered in the south end of Edmonton before noon today to express their concerns about increased electricity exports from this province. They spoke specifically about the Alberta/Montana tie-line. My first question, Mr. Speaker, is to the hon. Minister of Energy. Will the Alberta government intervene before the National Energy Board on behalf of this alliance of landowners, farmers, and ranchers that are opposed to the proposed construction of the Alberta/Montana tie-line?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out a couple of things. First off, this line that's proposed is actually being built and developed to promote wind energy, for one. We're trying to still promote the renewables, trying to promote clean alternatives. I guess that we could cut off an ability to transport it anywhere, but transmission is a fundamental piece of our integration and reliable delivery of electricity. Better ties will only allow more generation capacity to also be imported into Alberta. It's not just a one-way flow outside, going export. It allows us reliability of bringing more in. We are one of the few jurisdictions in North America that are very limited by the amount of inter-ties between the provinces and the United States.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can this government guarantee electricity consumers in Alberta that their bills will not increase even more if we export large volumes of electricity to the United States through this proposed Alberta/Montana tie-line?

The Speaker: On previous occasions the chair has said that nobody can give guarantees.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Okay. I cannot guarantee that.

Mr. MacDonald: I knew the answer to the question, Mr. Speaker.

Now this question to the same minister: given that we now have a link to the North American market for natural gas and everyone knows what that has done for the gas bills here in Alberta – they have gone up; we pay the same price in Edmonton as we do in Chicago – will the same effect happen for electricity prices when we have this direct link to the American market? Will our bills go even higher?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, that's pure speculation again. We have benefited substantially by having greater capacity to export natural gas. This year alone something like 14 and a half billion dollars in royalties and revenues have been brought in that we wouldn't have been able to have. We were stranding our gas in the past right here in Alberta. There's a very major difference, though, between natural gas and electricity. Natural gas is really quite a scarce commodity. It is becoming very difficult to find, so supply and demand have made for a higher North American price on natural gas, clearly. We have substantial, many ways, numerous opportunities to perpetually generate electricity in many formats, not having ever the concern of being short of supply.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Assistance for Grains and Oilseeds Sector

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly enough, 100 years ago our grains and oilseeds producers were earning almost the same dollar for a bushel of wheat as they are today. Yet today, in the past 30 years they've seen a 1,200 per cent increase in the cost of fuel, an over 1,500 per cent increase in the cost of fertilizer. Most of our producers in the grains and oilseeds sector are cash strapped going into the spring season. They hope they can afford crop insurance. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. One of the primary questions that the producers have been asking of late, those that couldn't afford to get into CAIS before, is: will they be eligible to receive some of the federal payment under the grains and oilseeds program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member made some very interesting and accurate comments about the crisis facing our grains and oilseeds sectors this year. While our production breaker has obviously gone up a tremendous amount, it is indeed true that the input costs have gone up a tremendous amount as well. The federal government, as many in this House will know, did announce a program payment last fall that the new federal government has accelerated this spring. How they've accelerated that payment is by utilization of the CAIS program and the '04 information that producers had applied with in the CAIS program.

What's important to note for Alberta, Mr. Speaker, is that all producers have the ability to retroactively participate in the CAIS program all the way back to 2003 if they get their information in prior to the end of March this year. What's also important, as it relates to the payments from the federal government, is that if they had their '04 information in, then automatically those federal payments will flow to those producers. My concern is that close to 9,000 producers who participated in '03 have not put their information in for '04 as yet, and the deadline at the end of March is fast approaching.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second question that seems to come up a lot, Mr. Minister: if producers who might receive payment under the spring price endorsement or the revenue insurance coverage component of crop insurance receive that payment, is it going to impact their production index? Will it have a long-term effect on their yield coverage for their premium?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The great thing about these two options is that they do not have an impact on the yield coverage in the premiums nor do they reduce payments under the CAIS program, which we were just talking about. There are two beneficial features of these programs, and they are that they are independent from the producers' marketing strategies – therefore, they'll have no impact on the producers' future premiums – and secondly, the programs actually encourage producers to manage their farm and not the program.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that we did raise the revenue insurance coverage floor prices by 7 per cent this year to help offset some of the impact of this higher cost of production. For example, some of these floor prices for 2006 and some of our major commodities are: red spring wheat, $4.22 a bushel; barley, $2.57 a bushel; canola, $7.17 per bushel. Those are the target prices that were set under the RIC program. Again, we would like the producers to actively get involved in participating in these programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. For those that are contemplating enrolling this year but might not be able to afford it, are there any options available in terms of affordability, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm encouraging all of the producers to participate in some of the meetings that are being held across the province right now. The Ag Financial Services Corporation is exploring those options with all producers in about 32 meetings that are happening across the province. It's important that these workshops are attended by producers who are interested in participating in CAIS or by those producers who may not understand the programs that are out there or the package of benefits that we have for producers. So I would encourage them to get in touch with their local AFSC office to explore those options.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 78 questions and answers in the 50-minute time frame today.

In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of several hon. members to participate in Members' Statements.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you to you for your indulgence and, certainly, to the House. Mr. Speaker, what I consider one of the perks of this job is that I can introduce to you and through you to this House my granddaughter Kerstin Williams. In the end this is what it's really all about: our grandchildren. She's a grade 11 student at Bev Facey high school in Sherwood Park. She's an accomplished dancer. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just so you know, your grandmother does behave here.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Britny Martens
Danielle Hilsabeck

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have known for quite some time that my constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka is blessed with a strong, talented, and active youth population. The 2006 Great Kids awards that were presented on March 5 proved this yet again. Out of the 236 province-wide nominations 16 kids were honoured, including two young ladies from my riding: Britny Martens and Danielle Hilsabeck.

Britny was recognized in part because of her efforts in organizing a seven-kilometre walk in her hometown of Alix to raise funds and awareness for the Kidney Foundation of Canada. What's more is that the event, which was named the Give the Gift of Life Walk for Awareness, was done in response to her father's kidney disease. For an 11-year-old to show this kind of perseverance, compassion, and courage is a true inspiration. Through Britny's leadership the event was extremely successful, having raised $7,000 and an invaluable increase in public knowledge.

The list of Danielle Hilsabeck's accomplishments is long and impressive, especially considering her age of only 14 years. Through her duties as the Clive junior high school students' union president she portrays natural leadership qualities, kindness, and respect to all students. On top of Danielle's other responsibilities she also took on the lead role in the production of the school yearbook last year, acting as a replacement for a teacher who fell ill. Her management skills allowed her to guide 15 student volunteers to a successful result. She is now the official editor of the entire yearbook.

I am proud to recognize the efforts and determination of these young ladies here today, and it is an honour to represent them in this Assembly. With great kids like Britny and Danielle calling the riding of Lacombe-Ponoka their home, I know that our constituency and our province have a bright future. Mr. Speaker, once again I congratulate them both on their outstanding accomplishments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

3:10 New Brigden School Fundraising

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. In life and in sports it's often said that it's not how tall or how strong you are that counts; it's your dedication and the size of your heart. So is the case with Alberta's small rural schools.

New Brigden school is one fine example. It's the most northerly school in the Prairie Rose school division, located in a small farming community in the Drumheller-Stettler constituency. This small school of just 49 students in grades 1 to 9 was involved in three projects which are making a big difference in many ways.

Mrs. Machell and the grades 1, 2, and 3 class learned their lessons about conservation and over three years collected pennies for the planet. The students then presented $180 to Ducks Unlimited in October 2005 towards preserving wetlands.

The students together with their parents and community members tackled recycling. They filled recycling bins with beverage containers and helped the students' union win $500 from Alberta Beverage Container Recycling Corporation's school recycling program as the top collector in the small school category. These funds along with the money from the containers themselves will be used for students' union activities.

The school has also undertaken a project to fund the building of a well in India. By raising $750, the students will provide a safe source of drinking water to a village of over 200 people. Through the sale of calendars created by the grades 1, 2, and 3 class, a silver collection at the Christmas concert, and a number of donations from within the community, they have raised $608.64 as of March 9, leaving them just shy of their goal.

Mr. Speaker, the efforts of the students of this rural school should be an inspiration to all of us and demonstrate the importance of small rural schools as important members of the community and helping to develop strong character and good citizenship as part of a well-rounded education. These are just a couple of the reasons why Alberta students are amongst the best in the world and benefit from an outstanding and caring education system in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Democratic Reform

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To remember democracy is especially important as many of our sons and daughters are in harm's way in Afghanistan as we meet here today. They are tasked to battle a terrorism that is directly aimed at our way of life and our democracy.

I speak often of democracy to children. I visit all the school classes in Edmonton-Manning that have visited these halls. We talk of this room as our great hall of democracy. We talk of its importance to our way of life. I tell them of some of the 46 countries I've been in and how so many of the places are where people are fighting and dying to have the right to vote. Much of the world would love to have our democracy. I tell them that it is so important what we have, but when I leave the kids, I sometimes wonder: what is happening here in Alberta?

Last night we debated yet another emergency supply bill, over $6 billion outlined in a small booklet with no details, some line items in the billions, emergency supply gone awry. This should not be normal for a democracy. The huge amounts do not constitute emergencies. What is happening? Our American neighbours started their revolution with the cry: no taxation without representation. What is happening?

We also debated last night a bill which put more into regulation, to be decided in secret behind closed doors. Secret decision-making is out of control, and there are no opposition members on standing policy committees, more secrets. What is happening?

There is hope, Mr. Speaker. There is hope for democracy. We heard questions today about citizens' assemblies and about electoral reform. We must enter this 21st century. We must renew our democracy. It is rapidly approaching a time for change. Let us embrace it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

U of C Human Performance Laboratory

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People who live at the foot of a mountain seldom realize how high the mountain is, so today I rise to speak about something outstanding that is close to us. I'm talking about the human performance lab at the University of Calgary, that I had the opportunity to visit. The lab's international reputation is well established with its partnership with many athletic companies. Name any international, well-known sport company; my bet is that they are working with the U of C's human performance lab. Name any high-tech shoes worn by top world athletes and players; my bet is that they can be traced to the research and design from this lab. I'm talking about high-tech shoes for athletes in soccer, basketball, track and field sports, even golf clubs as well.

The work on sports equipment is only a small part. The greater research discoveries and achievements are in human physical and mental performance and endurance. In the recent Winter Olympics the outstanding achievements of Canadian athletes can be traced to the work of dedicated people at the U of C's human performance lab. They are now working harder and smarter for the 2010 Winter Olympics in Vancouver.

Building the ultimate athletic and sports equipment is only about 20 per cent of the researchers' work. The other 80 per cent of the work is on health and wellness and improvement of the quality of life for Albertans, Canadians, and humanity. The researchers also examine aging and mobility of people, how to prevent injuries and diseases such as osteoporosis, arthritis, and cardiovascular problems.

I would like to ask all members of this House to join me in commending the great work of the researchers at the U of C's human performance lab and commending the University of Calgary for their vision in establishing such a world-leading study centre. Alberta's educational institutions are outstanding, Alberta researchers are world class, and Alberta students are eager to learn and discover. So investment in education is the best investment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

One Hundred Years of Democracy

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also my great honour to rise today in recognition of Alberta's milestone, the 100th anniversary of democracy in our province. Last year was a banner year for all Albertans. We celebrated the centennial of our province in grand fashion. We took time to recognize how far we have come together and recognize how much further we have the potential to go. Today we celebrate something even more important. The prosperity, good governance, and democratic freedoms that Albertans enjoy today saw their genesis not in this Chamber but rather in the Thistle rink and then the McKay Avenue school with the first sitting of the Alberta Legislature. From these humble beginnings 100 years ago our predecessors have developed a grand and noble tradition. They sat, as we sit now, with the goal of making Alberta a better place for all who are fortunate to call it home.

A full century has passed since that beginning, and while the location of the Legislature may have changed, the principles that guide it have not. The concepts of freedom, democracy, and justice introduced to our province so long ago have only grown stronger with the passage of time. Albertans are fortunate to enjoy a level of democracy that many in the world do not. As we pass this anniversary, let us look back with pride at what was and forward with hope to what will be.

Tomorrow this anniversary will be behind us, but what it represents will remain everlasting. We as representatives of the democratic process will continue to play our part. Eventually we will move on, but democracy will remain and grow stronger. The principles established a century ago have survived war, disease, depression, and hardship. They have survived and emerged healthier and more vibrant than ever. They will continue to flourish well into their second century and beyond.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it has been my honour today as a member of this Assembly to recognize this anniversary, and it continues to be my privilege as a citizen of this province to participate every day in the freedoms that it commemorates.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Assistance for Alberta's Farm Families

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Alberta's farm families. Farmers and their families were some of the first settlers in our province, but times have changed on the family farm.

An Hon. Member: You don't even know one.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry. I grew up on one.

Now fertilizer and fuel costs are some of the biggest regular expenses for farmers, not to mention the costs of equipment and even university tuition for their children. Commodity prices continue to fall despite increases in all the expenses for supplies purchased off the farm. Everyone else, it seems, gets their share before the farmer. This is not the result of a one-time disaster or just a bad year. These trends are an economic reality for many farmers.

This government, in co-operation with the federal government, responded to this farm crisis with the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, or the CAIS program, as it is called. The goal of this program was to integrate stabilization and disaster protection into one program. It has however fallen far short of its goal. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business described the ills of the CAIS program in its recently released report The Case Against CAIS.

The pages of this report tell a tale familiar to all those that call farming a way of life. A full 58 per cent of CAIS participants are dissatisfied with the program. They feel that it is far too complex, and they know that it is riddled with time-consuming and expensive paperwork. Farmers continue to jump this endless series of hurdles in their need for some income support only to find that the program that is there for them provides too little money and often is too late. The result is that the CAIS program has added accountant fees to the long list of farm input costs. Almost 10 per cent of farmers are paying over $5,000 just to participate in the program. It is clear that the CAIS program is not providing a long-term solution to the farm income crisis. Farmers need to be treated fairly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on to the next item of business on the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasant task that I have this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all our colleagues here in the Legislature a lady that's here on her first-time visit. She would be one of the stalwarts behind legislators in the province of Alberta. She is associated with my colleague from West Yellowhead, and I would ask Tammy to please rise and receive the warm welcome of my colleagues in the Legislature.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm submitting a petition on behalf of many concerned Albertans from the communities of Hill Spring, Magrath, and Glenwood petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to eliminate all [school] fees for instructional supplies and materials . . . textbooks, musical instruments, physical education programs, locker rentals, lunch hour supervision and required field trips, and to ensure that schools are not deprived of the resources necessary to offer these programs and services without additional charges to parents or guardians.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present to the Legislative Assembly on behalf of 20 Albertans. This petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to call a public inquiry into Enron's role in the development of electricity deregulation in Alberta and their market conduct in the Power Pool of Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first tabling is from two of my constituents from Edmonton-McClung, Lorene Gervais and Bryn Berezanski, addressed to the hon. Premier and CCed to me as their MLA, requesting that the hon. Premier instruct the Treasury Board to immediately increase funding to programs helping persons with developmental disabilities.

My second tabling today, Mr. Speaker, is a letter written by a really bright young woman from Edmonton-McClung, Miss Christel Hyshka, addressed to the Premier, again, where she goes into great detail informing the Premier why the proposed third way is wrong and complains about the lack of consultation with the citizens of this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a total of seven sets of tablings expressing concerns about the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. For the sake of speed, Mr. Speaker, I will only share the names of those who sent the concerns. To begin with: Maureen Broda, Dan Rupert, Jeanie Blanchette, Dave Miller, and Louise Vos.

The second set was sent by Sarah Webber, Marwa Bondak, Pam Thind, Mary Ann Rabie, Rushmi.

The third set was sent by Binda Pokhareil,* Sandeep Thind, Marianne Skibova, Sharon Kumar, Maryann Javed,* and Sadia Javed.

The next set was sent by Irene Nand, Theresa Baron, Jessie Ramsomair, Bev MacDonald, Sunojnie Gunraj,* Jasvinder Thind.

The next set was by Emma P. Baragona, Surinder Kaur Dhillon, Kathy Justason, Sheryl Semmler, Carolyn Epp, Genna Cabinas.

My second-last set was sent from Don Horne, Lisa McLean, Martin Lafaille, Pritpal Kooner, Burton Baskerville.

The last set was sent by S. Kala, Kanwaljit Thind, Sukhinder Thind, Jashir Bhamber, Avril Magara, and Jolene Chamberlain.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seven more letters regarding the provincial government's involvement in the national daycare program: Tracy and Dave Ludwick, Michele Parker, Tammy Adams, Kimina Sloan,* Vanessa Rotuk,* Joanna Carnium,* and Denise Cote.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table on behalf of the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar a public notice to a town hall meeting on public health care, a public consultation which is to occur Wednesday, March 22, at The King's University College, 7125 – 50th Street. The time of this public consultation is between 7 and 9 p.m. Look forward to seeing everyone there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table six letters and the appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. These letters are from Jean-Marie Ndahiro, Suzanne Poirier, Rene Robitu, Tamara S. Miners, Joyce Lawrence, and Fatima Bellahmer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I'm tabling today are from Carmen Magana, Mavis Cardinal, Myria Lewis, Pamela Gogowich, J. Perrin, and Matthew Milloy.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my great pleasure today to table with the Assembly a message from Her Majesty the Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, in recognition of the 100th anniversary of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, March 15, 2006.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 22

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance it's my pleasure to move for third reading Bill 22, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006.

There's been some discussion in second reading and at committee of the provisions of the bill. I would just briefly say what I've said every time I've heard the same arguments from the opposition relative to the timing and relative to the process, that interim supply is a time-honoured tradition not just in this House but across the Commonwealth. It's an appropriate methodology to ensure that the business of government continues while the intimate details of budgetary process and normal supply are provided for. This House has the opportunity to debate every bit of spending in detail, not only the budget estimates when they're brought forward and through Committee of Supply but also, of course, supplementary supply.

I was just astounded by the member's statement today from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning when he was talking about emergency. This is not a bill about emergency supply at all. This is part of the normal process of governance. It's part of making sure that governance continues while the opposition and the House, every member of the House, has an opportunity to fully and completely debate the full set of estimates when they're brought forward. It allows government to do budget and estimates on an appropriate basis so that they're not rushed in and fully debated before the end of March in every year but that they have the fullness of debate. Obviously, the interim supply bill only provides for a modest amount of the year coverage to give the time for that full debate.

I would commend it to the House and move Bill 22 for third reading.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to comment on the Education expenditures. I'm just looking for it here. I believe we're addressing the question of $637,400,000. As my good colleague from the constituency of Edmonton-Manning suggested, democracy is not being given the benefit of the process by having to deal with this in a lump sum.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But be that aside, Mr. Speaker, I think I'm able to dream a little bit here and talk a bit about the things that should be in the budget, and maybe I'll score some points. The Education minister is not here, but I know that his good colleague is there. [interjections] Pardon me, Mr. Speaker. I will just comment further on this. Excuse me for that. Anyway, let me say something positive to follow that remark that I carelessly made.

First of all, I think the government deserves some accolades for the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I think I support that. I hope that in the purpose – I've added a number (iv) point under Purpose – they would take a look at the act to support and encourage research into the nutrition aspect of people, the spirits they take in, and look at that in terms of healthy bodies and lifestyles. So I hope they would maybe add another purpose to the act, but I think that generally I'm very much supportive of it.

Let me, then, just turn to a claim the government continually makes. It continually says that we have the best education system in the world, and there's a lot of money here. I would just challenge that, and I would go along by saying that we have the best, excellent teaching force in the world in Alberta.

I was at a wonderful ceremony the other night with 16 teachers in St. Albert receiving excellent teaching awards. The interesting thing about these teaching people and meeting the elementary principals at the end of the evening was asking them: what thing would you change in terms of the elementary school? It was interesting that they suggested that the whole question of diagnostic testing should be looked at. It was interesting to hear what they said about that. So I think we're on the right track over here by asking the government to take a look again at the K to 3 area, laying the foundation for kids, and have a look at the whole question of diagnostic testing.

As the Minister of Education was saying the other day, he's meeting, I believe, with special education parents even today. I think that it's today he's meeting them. One of the things that comes out in their literature, their brief to the Minister of Education, is the fact that one in five children – one in five children – has reading problems in starting school. One of the pieces of research that's very clear now is that if we don't do remediation in the elementary school, we are losing these kids. I haven't got a crystal ball, but I hope some of that $637 million that we're talking about there has some dollars for that particular thrust. I think it's very, very much needed.

On the whole question of special needs for children, the government has the postulates laid out about what special education parents can receive from the government. One of the things that seems to be lacking, according to these parents that I talked to, is the resource base for children with special needs. That's an area I think the government needs to look at as well.

A third area along with this is the whole question of career education. I don't read the Edmonton Journal very often. In fact, I went swimming this morning; that's why my face is so red and my eyes are kind of blurry.

An Hon. Member: I thought they were Liberal.

Mr. Flaherty: No. I do read the Edmonton Journal once in a while, and I noticed that in the Edmonton Journal they talked about the good apprenticeship program. I'd like to commend the minister on that. But if you think you're doing well now, Mr. Minister, I would suggest that if you could get good support from career counselling in our secondary schools and develop a career education diploma and give it some prestige – with all those good communication officers you have, I'm sure they could spin you up something nice – we would attract students that need to be encouraged to go in that area. I think that's one thing I really would urge the government to look at.

Now, one of the other areas that I have to say I was kind of impressed with the government on is this half hour of physical activity. Unfortunately, I ran into a phys ed specialist from an elementary school at this function the other night in St. Albert, and he said: this is not a bad idea, but the problem with it is we have no way of measuring to see if kids' endurance or cardiovascular is improving. You know, I think that's a very significant point.

An Hon. Member: Put them on a scale.

Mr. Flaherty: We could do that, but I think we have to look at this whole thing.

In terms of the educational process I'd just like again to talk about the Crystal Meth Task Force. I think this is a good move, but I really would like to know how the government is going to report to this Legislature on what this task force is doing. Is it making a difference? What are its deliberations all about? I think it would be very, very important to get that information.

Continuing on my dream for kids and talking about this particular interim budget, about how we're looking to help kids in our schools, I think we should have a look – hopefully there's some money in there; maybe we're going to be surprised on the 22nd and hear that there's money in there for a hot lunch program. We are blessed in St. Albert in that the chairman of the Protestant school board in St. Albert is a specialist in nutrition at the University of Alberta, one of our fine institutions. She's saying that children need good nutrition to do well in school. I think it would be very wonderful if this government could come out with some real insightful and really good thinking and look at this as an area that they would consider in the budget on the 22nd.

Now, the sad thing to talk about here in terms of infrastructure – and we had a look at this this afternoon in terms of the school that had the problem in Calgary; thank goodness no one was hurt, and that's wonderful. We have to look at this whole business of portables. I believe the Calgary Catholic school board received 12 new portables, that, by the way, don't work in the system that they have. These new portables don't fit into the Calgary Catholic school board system, so I'm hoping that we can give them the kind of support that they need. They need 180 of these over the next three years. I hope this budget that we're waiting for will address that issue if it's not in this interim statement here.

Of course, the question of transportation is a big issue as my colleague from Calgary talked about this afternoon. I had a meeting with one of the officials from the ASBA the other day, and he was telling me that we have to look at the funding framework in education in the rural and the urban areas because it's not doing the job.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down and thank you, and I'll turn it over to you. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak this afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief with my remarks at this time on Bill 22. I would have to caution Alberta taxpayers in regard to this government's attitude towards interim supply. Certainly, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education is correct that it is a tried and true parliamentary tradition, but we have to be very, very careful. Taxpayers are quite aware of this government's spending habits in the past and how those spending habits got us into deep, deep economic trouble. The consequences of those excessive spending habits were cuts to public health care, cuts to public education, cuts to the public service, an infrastructure debt that we're just now beginning to realize how extensive it is.

So we have to be careful here whenever you consider that the provincial budget literally, Mr. Speaker, under this Progressive Conservative government in the last 10 years has almost doubled. Yet we still have problems like what the hon. Member for St. Albert was talking about. This large amount in this bill, Bill 22, indicates that this government has some planning and priority problems.

Now, I don't know – and I've said this before – whether all the hon. members are so focused on the upcoming leadership review and leadership campaign that they're not focusing on these respective departments, but I sure would urge the hon. members across the way to focus on their departments and, certainly, focus on some of the problems that are currently being brought to the attention of this hon. member.

Specifically, adults with developmental disabilities and their families are very, very concerned this winter about the money that is going to be provided through Seniors and Community Supports for Albertans with developmental disabilities. Now, much has been said about this issue already, and certainly there's a significant amount of money in this bill. Hopefully, that issue will be addressed, and this government won't ignore the advocates, who are standing up and speaking out on behalf of Albertans with developmental disabilities and their families.

It's very important. It is our duty, our obligation, to provide for these citizens. Through no fault of their own they can't participate in our rosy economic activity, but they have every right to live their lives with dignity and with respect, and we must never, never forget that. We shouldn't have to force their families into action every budget year by contacting their respective Member of the Legislative Assembly. They shouldn't have to do that to know that their loved ones with developmental disabilities will be cared for. Now, that's just one issue, Mr. Speaker, but certainly I hope that will be addressed.

Now, the hon. Member for St. Albert was talking about education a little earlier. When we look at this budget and we see the amount of over $600 million that's going to be allocated for public education, we have to still be concerned about the leadership that's been shown by this government towards the Learning Commission. Certainly, in the neighbourhood that I represent, we've seen the school closure process, that some unfortunate neighbourhoods in Calgary are now experiencing: good public schools being closed, some of them being sold after parents, taxpayers, were told that there was no money to keep these schools open. Now we have millions of dollars in extra money to turn them over to another group. Is that fair? Is this how this government is operating these days?

Parents, Mr. Speaker, have suggested that this government has lost touch; they've lost direction. Parents are very concerned that whenever one school closes and the other schools in the neighbourhood become overcrowded, the fact that the gymnasium can't be used by all students at one time because of the crowding, that's not what I would certainly describe as an Alberta advantage. We have schools that have been designated as receiving schools as a result of these closures, with overcrowding to such an extent that the library is now being used as a classroom. Children routinely eat their lunch in the corridors. They sit on the floor and eat their lunch. Again, I don't think this is good public policy. This was initiated by this government: by the Minister of Infrastructure, by the Minister of Education. Parents, the people who pay the taxes, are not happy. They don't think that their resources are being used wisely. When they're told to send their child to a school and they abide by that, they find out when they get there that the school is in poor repair, that it is overcrowded, and that class sizes have not been reduced like they had been promised. So there's certainly a lot of work to do.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education is correct when he talks about the historical use of the interim supply bill, but we have to be very, very careful. I know we're spending a lot of money in this province. I'm going to continue to ask this government if it's being spent wisely and in the right places.

We were at Public Accounts this morning, and one of the officials from the department of health, Mr. Speaker, said that we've got bucketfuls of money. I'm going to have to review Hansard from that meeting to get the exact quote. I was surprised that the financial situation was referred to as bucketfuls of money. We have to be very, very careful.

An Hon. Member: Who was it?

Mr. MacDonald: Hon. minister, the ministry of health was in Public Accounts today.

I listened with great interest to that description. I hope that is not the attitude in all ministries: that we have bucketfuls of money. If we do have bucketfuls of money, let's save it in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and spend wisely. Spend smartly, spend wisely. Let's not spend our finances unnecessarily.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and cede the floor to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, who seems very interested in speaking on this matter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm intrigued by the hon. member making the statement that a minister of this government made comments about buckets of money. I would just like to get some clarification: was it the minister that made this comment and of which department?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: as I said earlier, I'm going to check the record in Hansard, but it was the department of health that was appearing before Public Accounts this morning, and it was one of the department officials.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 22, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2006. I've been looking through the bill to see for what period, for what particular number of days or weeks or months into the next fiscal year this 6 and a half billion dollars or so is being asked for approval by this House. I don't find those numbers here. Is it to tide us over the next two months, three months, four months? I think it would be useful to have the information here. It's not there. I'm just trying to look for it. I presume that it's for two months. It would be important to have that kind of information included in the text of the bill so that we don't spend more time asking questions with respect to this kind of issue. It's a lot of money. I think the government has to go on while we debate the budget, so I understand that there's a reason for asking for approval of interim supply funds.

Mr. Speaker, we are now only about seven, eight days away from when the budget comes down, when we'll have more information, but to speak to this request with some focus, I think it would be good to have a little more information from each ministry with respect to what the money is being asked for and how that money is going to be spent, on what program, and what have you. Without that information here it becomes a sort of pro forma kind of discussion: you either vote for it or you don't. You don't want the government to stop. You want people who work for the government to be paid, programs to be funded. But as a member of the Assembly I find it very difficult to intelligently ask questions on the amounts being asked for or on the bill as such unless I have more information on this. So I regret that that information isn't there.

The practice that the Minister of Advanced Education as House leader for the government side suggested, that all governments do this, doesn't justify not having the information here that's essential for the deliberations of this House before the House votes on it. Otherwise, as I said, it becomes simply an exercise in tradition, and the appeal is made to past practice rather than to the reasons and the information needed for us to make up our minds on which way to vote on this. So I find that a little bit frustrating.

I would move on now to talk a bit about two or three departments that are asking for money. Advanced Education is the one I'll start with, where $344,700,000 is being asked for in terms of interim supply for this department.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I was listening to CBC Radio, to a program called The Current, which runs, I guess, between 8:30 and 10 o'clock in the morning. One of the persons being interviewed by Anna Maria Tremonti, who is the host of this program, was none other than the president of the University of Alberta, Dr. Indira Samarasekera.

In the dialogue between the host and the president one point that President Samarasekera made very much was the challenge that we have before us in this province. Certainly, we have the opportunity in this province more than other places. She also talked about the country in general. One of the most important natural resources, she said, is that stuff between our two ears, our brains, our development, our human capacities and skills and abilities. She emphasized the importance of postsecondary education and in particular, of course, spoke about universities and the University of Alberta, which she is now the president of.

The point that she made was this. She said that class size, to improve the quality of education, is the key challenge that we face, that the quality of education is contingent on the size of classes that our students have to be in. She gave a sort of average figure. She said that about 15, 20 years ago at this university the average class size used to be around 16. There's a great deal of variation between the smallest graduate classes and the undergraduate classes, but on the whole the average was around 16, 17. Today, she said, the average is 24 or 25. Huge increase. Absolutely huge increase. She said that we tap into this enormously important resource called human capital through providing the best quality of postsecondary education that we can to Albertans who return to university.

Another point she made there was that only about 50 per cent of the students at the university now are between the ages of, say, 18 and 35. The remainder are people who return to university or come to university in their mid-careers to learn new things and to upgrade and to update what they already learned perhaps 10, 15, 20 years ago. She said that the class size is the critical factor here. We must try and roll back the class size, the University of Alberta being one case in point, but I'm sure that the situation is the same at the University of Calgary and other institutions. The class size must be reduced, she said, to between 14 and 16. That's our challenge.

Now, questions that come to mind here are: is the minister planning to respond to this kind of advice from one of the most respected leaders in the area of postsecondary education in this province? If so, in the request that he is making, is he providing for such reductions? If so, how? I'm just putting this question for the minister's consideration, and I hope that he will certainly address that because the development of human resources is the key to increasing productivity, to improving our quality of life, to increasing our competitiveness, and to ensuring prosperity into the future. That's the message from people like Dr. Indira Samarasekera, the president of the University of Alberta. I think it's important that we address those questions here, as to how we invest our resources to address those very fundamental challenges that our postsecondary institutions such as the University of Alberta and other institutions in this province face.

Moving on, Mr. Speaker, to another minister's request here. Children's Services: $224,500,000 is being requested for the period, which, as I say, I'm assuming is the next two months, April and May, but that information is not contained at least in this document, Bill 22, for me to be surely able to say that these monies are there to tide us over into the new fiscal year during the first 60 or 61 or 62 days. But this is a fair bit of money here.

The minister made some very, I think, important commitments to the families of Alberta not long ago – a couple of months ago perhaps, maybe a bit longer – with respect to bringing forward a five-point plan for the provision of child care services and early childhood learning services and opportunities for preschool-age children, in particular those whose parents work, are in the labour force and have employment and are not home for at least part of the day or most of the day. Seventy to 75 per cent of parents of children under six years of age, Mr. Speaker, are in that situation in this province. What the minister had to offer by way of a five-point plan that she made public and released some months ago – there was a great promise in that plan for those families and for the children in those families who need and use child care and daycare services.

I want the minister to perhaps address the question of where she stands now in the context of a new government in Ottawa, which has very different plans than the five-point plan that the minister had not only endorsed but, in fact, with some great deal of pride and joy offered to the families of Alberta three or four months ago. Is that plan going to be pursued regardless of what the federal government does or doesn't do for our children, for our families on that score?

I think it's important that we invest in these very young children and families who are in that situation in order for us to tap into the human resources that are available in this province. But in order for us to help them grow to the maximum possible extent and capacity, investment must be made not only at the postsecondary sector, but we should start making those investments in the very critical first few years of every child's life.

That's why child care these days is more than just babysitting. It is, in fact, to instill in our very young children the capacities and skills that serve as the starting points for their formal education. Stimulating environments in which to spend their early years lead to their ability to succeed and do very well indeed as they start formal schooling from kindergarten onwards.

At this point I think I could probably also refer to whether or not the monies being asked for under Education by the Minister of Education also include a commitment to bringing in full-day kindergarten, that's been recommended by the Learning Commission, a recommendation that has been accepted by this government.

No answers to these questions here because there are no details. There's no information here on how this government is planning to spend the money that it's asking for on fundamentally important programs, programs that will certainly make sure that as we move into the future years, the investments begin to pay back.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, the House has before it Bill 2, Drug-endangered Children Act. If passed, its implementation will require a huge injection of new resources for social workers, for caseworkers, for police officers, for others.

So these are questions that are germane to this discussion but can't really be addressed very well unless we have more information. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 22, interim supply, in third reading. Since it is third reading, we're supposed to speak to the effect of the bill. We've had, I think, some opportunity – some might argue ample; some might say not enough; I'm not going to get into that argument right now – to question specific ministers about specific departments, specific line items in the interim supply estimates in Committee of Supply. We've gotten some answers back to some of our questions. Some of those answers we like; some of those answers we weren't so impressed with. But we're beyond that point now, and we're talking about interim supply in third reading. So what's the effect of this bill? Well, the effect of this bill is to keep the government of Alberta going for the next two months or so, if that's what it takes to get the actual budget fully debated and passed. I'm sure it won't take two months to do that.

The hon. Government House Leader and Minister of Advanced Education referred to interim supply as being, I believe the words were, a time-honoured tradition or a tried and true tradition, something like that. Of course, on the face of it he's right. Just because something has been done a certain way for a long enough period of time to refer to it, though, as a time-honoured or tried and true tradition doesn't mean that we can't improve upon the process. The minister is looking at me now going: oh, here we go again; another opposition member is going to talk about the process of interim supply and why we need to rush through $6 billion plus in government spending to keep the lights on and the wolves from the door.

Yeah, I've got to mention it once again – I really do – and, in fact, refer the minister and hon. Government House Leader back to an exchange, perhaps, that I had with the hon. Minister of Finance last Wednesday evening, as a matter of fact. It's in Hansard, and I'm certainly not going to quote from it, but I asked a general question about the process: especially since planning for next year's budget will begin scant weeks after this year's budget is debated, why is it that there's such a thorough process that we go through, that we can't simply start the process earlier so that the budget is ready to be delivered in time to be debated and passed before we run out of the fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker, here we are today celebrating the 100th anniversary of the first sitting of the Alberta Legislature. It's not like we change the dates of the fiscal year year in and year out. That's pretty predictable. That's a heck of a lot more predictable than the weather in this province has been for the last 100 years, for instance. She undertook, Mr. Speaker, to actually try and see if some changes could be made in the great, creaky, old government ship of state to effect a more efficient moving forward of the shuffling of the paper so that we could actually get to that point next year. She said:

As I say, I don't take issue with the member's question. It would be the ideal. Can we work towards that? I'll make a commitment to the House that we try. We've got a lot of work to do, a lot of policy to make sure that we have right.

Then she went on to say that she takes "a great deal of pride" in the way that the budget process does come together.

She finished off by saying, "I thank you for your comments. I understand entirely where you're coming from," and she said – and I'm sure that the Minister of Advanced Education will agree with this point – "You know, Mr. Chairman, it would be refreshing to have a debate that didn't centre around: I don't have any detail for these numbers." Mr. Speaker, would it ever be. Would it ever be refreshing to have a budget debate about the budget so that we didn't need to have a debate about interim supply, which is kind of like an episode of Seinfeld, in a way, a show about nothing – well, a show about nothing in terms of the information that's supplied to justify figures. On the other hand, it's a show about over $6 billion.

So we're supposed to talk about the effect of this bill if it passes third reading today. I think that in the course of talking about that, I will refer back to a remark made by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar a little while ago. Of course, I haven't had the opportunity to review Hansard from this morning's Public Accounts either, so I don't know that this is absolutely, 100 per cent, word for word accurate. He referred to the official from the ministry of health who referred to the notion that we have buckets of money.

Mr. MacDonald: Bucketsful.

Mr. Taylor: Bucketsful, or bucketfuls, of money. I never know where to put the "s" in that. Bucketfuls of money.

I mean, that not only speaks to the effect of this bill and the effect of the budgeting process that goes on over the course of an entire fiscal year, an entire calendar year, goes on on a daily basis, but that's really the challenge that we face here in the province of Alberta over the next fiscal year, over the course of the budget debate that we will have starting in a few days, over the course of the fiscal year beyond that.

Perhaps at that point we'll have gone through a leadership replacement process on the other side, an election, and a change of government so that we can set about doing this right.

Mr. MacDonald: That's a time-honoured parliamentary tradition as well.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. That's a time-honoured parliamentary tradition, exactly: changing governments when they lose their way.

You know, here we have on the one hand the bucketfuls of money, whether we're referring to the particular buckets that the official from the health department was referencing in Public Accounts today or whether we are referring to the general state of things these days in the province of Alberta. Bucketfuls of money: we have bucketfuls of money. We have bucketfuls coming through the door. We have bucketfuls going out that door as we spend it, and this government, Mr. Speaker, is spending it so rapidly that we could actually find ourselves in this province back in a deficit position in 2008 if we stay the course.

You know, projecting what will happen if we stay the course is always a dangerous game because, of course, courses seldom stay the way they are, and thank goodness for that. If they did, for instance, by now every man, woman, and child in the United States of America would be an Elvis impersonator. You know, that prediction was made a couple of years after Elvis died. There was a rash of people rushing to become Elvis impersonators. I know we have an occasional one in this House.

Mr. MacDonald: And a fairly good one too.

Mr. Taylor: A very good one; better than most, in fact.

If we stay the course, health care will consume 100 per cent of our budget by 2025, quoth the Premier. Well, you know, we're not going to stay that course, regardless of whether he gets his way in the debate over whether health care should be commercialized in this province or not.

If we stay the course, we're going to be back in a deficit position by 2008. There are many aspects of policy with which government members and members on this side of the House disagree, but I don't really think that members of the government opposite are quite that profligate in their spending and quite that crazed with going through the bucketfuls of cash that they'll actually allow that to happen. But if we stay the course, that could happen. So we've got the bucketfuls of money. The challenge here is not to spend it; the challenge is to spend it well, to spend it wisely, to spend it effectively.

I'm not going to go over all the ground that has been covered this afternoon because it's on the public record already, and it's there for anybody to look up, but there have been some excellent points raised already by my colleagues who have spoken to Bill 22 in third reading so far. There are areas and there are people in this province that we should be spending on that we're not. There are schools in this province where the roofs are threatening to fall in. I just don't understand how you can get to that point in the richest province in the land unless, of course, you're spending stupidly. We certainly know that the spending is going on.

So that's one example. There are many, many others. I mean, you can look all around this province and see examples of money, bucketfuls of money, being thrown at things without any logical think-through of the process, of the need, of the consequences, of the effect of doing that, without any logical thought being given to an investment strategy first, followed by the spending that needs to be done. There's a kind of – oh, it's almost a panicked approach, the realization when you wake up one day that you've neglected all sorts of things and you can't possibly fix it all, but let's try and fix as much of it as fast as we possibly can. Well, you end up overpaying the contractor whom you hired to renovate your house and fix the leak in your roof when you take that sort of attitude. Although I think we could work the process better and more efficiently and more effectively, I don't have a fundamental problem with what's being asked of the members of the Legislature here today, which is to give final, third reading approval to $6 billion and change in interim supply.

The number is a lot higher than I'd like to see because of the process, but I'm okay with interim supply in principle. I've got less of a problem with that than I do with supplementary supply, where partway through the budget year this government comes back to the House and asks us to retroactively approve the spending of billions of dollars more that wasn't in the original budget, because that just says that they spend without any discipline, without any plan, without any vision. Whoever yells the loudest gets the last piece of candy in the jar. I have a huge problem with that. I have a huge problem with the overall approach to spending by this government. I don't see a plan. I don't see a vision. I don't see a logical process there.

So, yeah, we need to approve Bill 22 to keep the lights on and the wolves from the door and to make sure, Mr. Speaker, that your cheque doesn't bounce and mine doesn't and, far more importantly than that, the 22,959 public servants – was that the number that the Premier gave today? Oh, no: 22,960, minus the one who perhaps talked about bucketfuls of money at Public Accounts today; I don't know – that everybody gets their paycheque or severance or whatever.

So we need to pass Bill 22, and I'm going to vote for it; of course I am. But I hope I've raised some questions here that get some serious debate, some serious consideration not only during the budget debate that starts in a few days' time but by the tall foreheads who start to work on preparing next year's budget in a few weeks time, because the process needs changing. The overall process needs changing.

This government, Mr. Speaker, spends an incredible amount of time taking relatively simple, straightforward concepts and adding layers of complexity to those concepts until they've spent entire days chasing their tails so that at the end of the day they're too tired to make a decision or too caught up in the complexity of what should have been common sense. We need some common sense back in this province. This government isn't delivering.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to speak?

Does the hon. Government House Leader wish to close on behalf of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it would be appropriate just to say a few words given the amount of discussion this afternoon on Advanced Education. I appreciate the words that were given by various members opposite about the value of education to Alberta and about the need for us to invest in education and to treat education as a very important way of ensuring that our human potential is maximized in this province so that we can achieve the future that this province has. That is an extremely important investment.

The issue of interim supply gives us the time to move forward to talk about full supply. I hope that those same interests will be expressed as we go into Committee of Supply in each of the departments and talk in detail about the uses that we have from our nonrenewable resource revenue and from our citizens and the ways in which we apply it most effectively to maximize the human potential and maximize the opportunity for the province and that we take that time and we do that appropriately, recognizing that in most jurisdictions the question of interim supply is not about providing that full amount of information and debate that we've heard talked about before, but it's about getting the resources so that we can continue to do the job that needs to be done for Albertans while we have that full debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a third time]

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been a very momentous day as we celebrate the 100th anniversary of our Legislature and of leadership in this province. We've had many guests in the Legislature, former members who've come back to help celebrate with us, and the Speaker has made a conscious effort, indeed a stellar effort, to make sure that we mark the anniversary appropriately.

Members will be retiring to a dinner with former members to help celebrate this event, and so we've agreed, I think, earlier that it would be appropriate to adjourn the House early today so that we could enjoy the company and the camaraderie of members and former members and share stories about the various ages that we've represented in this House.

Therefore, I would move under Standing Order 4(3) that the House do now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 4:21 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 16, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/16

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, in commemoration and celebration of 100 years of democracy in Alberta the Legislative Assembly of Alberta undertook a province-wide essay competition in two categories, one for senior citizens and one for students. The question they were to respond to was: what democracy means to me. I am delighted to announce that we have the two winners of our contest here with us today, and they are in the Speaker's gallery.

First of all, the seniors' competition. Mr. Louis Warring of Edmonton submitted the winning essay from Alberta senior citizens. Mr. Warring, as I said, lives in Edmonton with his wife, Molly Anne. During the Second World War he served in the air force as an instrument mechanic with a bomber group in northern England, and until his retirement he owned a glass business in Edmonton. Mr. Warring presented his essay this morning to a special gathering that was held in commemoration of the centennial event, and I am pleased now to ask Mr. Warring to stand and receive the recognition of the House.

Master Jan (Yash) Mitsosz Lisiecki submitted the winning essay from Alberta's students. Master Lisiecki lives in Calgary with his family, where he attends Earl Grey elementary school. He is in grade 6, and he's already achieved world-class status as a pianist. Yash was the youngest pianist to play at the National Centre for the Arts in Ottawa. Please, Yash, rise with your parents, Anita and Zbigniew.

Hon. members, in the story of Alberta going back to 1905, in the first Speech from the Throne in this province the Lieutenant Governor of the day gave his Speech from the Throne and spent three paragraphs on the subject of immigrants. This is in 1905. This family watched the Olympics in Calgary in 1988 from their homeland of Poland. They fell in love with the visuals of the Rocky Mountains. They fell in love with the Canadian flag. They moved to Alberta. They had this child called Yash.

His mother said to me this morning: he's so advanced in mathematics that we had to give him a diversion. Now, the kid's in grade 6, okay? He's so advanced that he's taking high school mathematics now, but he has to have a diversion, so she gets him into piano. So I say to him this morning, "Who's your favourite rock music group?" He looks at me and says, "Chopin," as if it was to be mine.

So here is a young man. In his essay he said today that one of the great things about democracy in this province is that everyone can aspire to be the Prime Minister of this country. Well, stay tuned 30 some-odd years in the future. I had to tell him this morning that with the group that we had of former MLAs and current MLAs, it's a good thing he said Prime Minister because I understand that there were a few members in the room who are aspiring to another position here in Alberta. Jan and family, please rise.

I'm also pleased today to advise all members that we have in the Speaker's gallery as well a very talented and creative group of people who worked together to produce a new book called 100 Years at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta: A Centennial Celebration. These are people who are all in-house employees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta who undertook a challenge several years ago to do something in commemoration of this year.

I'm going to ask them to stand, and I'll say something further about them as I give my vignette of the day. First of all: Wolfgang Maul, a communications consultant with our communications services, provided both the design and exceptional writing for the project; Tracey Sales, with our communications services, assisted with the production for the project; Rhonda Sorensen, communications co-ordinator for us, oversaw the project and provided editing expertise; Kathy Hnatiuk, editorial assistant with House services, provided editing expertise for the project; and we got editorial assistance as well from Philip Massolin with the Legislature Library. I'll say more about them: exceptional in-house people. Congratulations and thank you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce today to you and through you to members of the Assembly grade 6 students from Mountain View school, which is in our Premier's constituency of Calgary-Elbow. They're here along with their teacher, Elo Olalekan, and helpers Mrs. Spencer and Mrs. Christakis. They're here to learn about government and the work that we do in the Legislature, and they're also here to participate in our mock Legislature program, to learn how a bill is passed. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and that our members give them the customary warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a privilege today to meet the students from Father Kenneth Kearns school from Sherwood Park, seated in the members' gallery. This vibrant group of students is from a school that has learning excellence, and they're accompanied today by their teachers, Jim Schiebelbein, Clint Moroziuk, and Marina Colbert, along with parent helpers Kathy Farquhar, Kara Clark, Yvonne Groat, and Jim Martin. I wonder if the students could please rise and we would welcome them with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through to the members of the House a number of Lethbridge constituents. Now, they are all community minded, but one of the organizations that they represent is called Family Voices. I would like to introduce Anne Kish, Barbara Nish, and then the Fowler family – father, Dean; mother, Khristina; and children Payton and Brooklyn – and ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of the loveliest ladies in the city of Edmonton. They are the Hattitude Sisters in Red. Yes, all of these sisters wear a red hat – well, almost all, but I'll get to that. There are a number of societies within the city; however, this particular society has members primarily from south Edmonton, with a number of them living in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Speaker, I have met with these delightful ladies. In fact, they allowed me to have my picture taken with them today, and I can truly say that they have a wonderful sense of humour and certainly have the most positive outlook on life. They do not complain, and they are always smiling. They have a tremendous amount of fun, and, as was mentioned to me, they have things to do and places to go.

With us today we have 13 members, one being a queen and one being a hostess. We have Queen Joyce Reid and Hostess Jeanne Jones, whose favourite saying, I'm told, is: behind every successful man is an even more successful woman. By the way, Jeannie's husband, Edgar, is a recipient of the Order of Canada, and Edgar and Jeannie recently received the Order of the Bighorn, an award which recognizes their outstanding contributions made to fish and wildlife conservation.

Joining Joyce and Jeannie today are Joyce Anderson, Irene Barr, much to my surprise my mother's cousin Eileen Dobie, Wendy Fithen, Jennie Jones, Ina McDonald, Mavis McKay, Donna McQuade, Ivy Stevens, Trudy Smith, and one lady in a purple hat. The purple hat, Mr. Speaker, evidences the fact that it's her birthday month. I wasn't given a year, nor did I ask. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Allie Wojtaszek. Allie Wojtaszek is a student in Edmonton, and she and her husband, Duncan, are very active in student politics and activities. Duncan Wojtaszek is the executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students. I understood that he might be here, but I didn't see him. If Allie would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to the Assembly somebody who has worked very closely with me for the last 18 months and regrettably is moving on to other opportunities. She's been my executive assistant and, as such, has had to put up with several of my foibles, shall we say, but she's done it wonderfully. I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the entire Assembly. If I didn't mention it, her name is Susie Sykes.

With Susie is someone who is also assisting me and is staying on. She's a glutton for all kinds of things. Her name is Carmen Remenda, and she's also a terrific worker. Please give her a warm reception.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a visiting delegation from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This delegation is part of the Harmony Senior Citizens Agency, and they're from the St. Nicholas Seniors' Home. This delegation is led by Bill Orfino, and the group today consists of Clara Hamal, Elsie Dunbar, Winnifred Zyla, Victoria Ruzycki, George Danilak, Shirley Cherwak, Liz Orfino, John and Pearl Kaminsky, and Lawrence and Betty Kachman. I would encourage them to return any time to their Legislative Assembly and listen to the proceedings here. They are in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to welcome to you and through you to members of the Assembly two members of the Greater St. Albert Catholic regional division No. 29. Mr. Dave Caron, chair, and his trustee colleague Jacquie Hansen are in the public gallery. Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House close to a dozen members of the students' union of the University of Alberta. They are all seated, I believe, in the public gallery. We've got a pretty crowded House today, so they might be spread around. They are Don Iveson, Duncan Wojtaszek, Jason Tobias, Jeannine Saunders, Colin Robertson, Matt Schneider, Samantha Power, Graham Lettner, Justin Kehoe, Tim Schneider, Catrin Berghoff, and David Cournoyer. If you would please all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House individuals who are here to express concern about education funding for students with developmental disabilities: Kathryn Burke, the co-chair of the parent advisory council for the Academy at King Edward, a specialized school in Edmonton for children with learning disabilities, and three students, Kyle Noruschat, Brad Jones, Gavin Reilly. I'd like to ask these individuals to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 people who are working with the Canadian Mental Health Association Mindworks program. That's a very cool program located in downtown Edmonton. If I'm remembering the correct program, they really grilled me on a number of policies when I went to visit them. It was a great exchange. They're seated in the public gallery, I believe. With them today is their group leader, Elizabeth Kunzle. I'm sorry about the pronunciation. I'd ask you to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Tammy Winder. Tammy has joined us all the way from Lethbridge. She has a beautiful daughter who was born deaf and with developmental disabilities and at the age of 15 was diagnosed with juvenile diabetes. Tammy is here today to remind us all of our commitment to persons living with disabilities; namely, to value and respect persons with disabilities and implement comprehensive support and services for these citizens. She's seated in the public gallery. I would ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really thrilled today to introduce to you 22 seniors from my constituency. They have lived through most of the years of the century of the province that we've been celebrating, and they've made substantial contributions to what Alberta is today. They are from the Harmony senior citizens agency and from Father Hannas and St. Basil's seniors' homes. With your permission I would like to read their names: Terry Spence, Mabel Wynnyk, Betty Pitchko, Pauline Chmilar, Aleida Peredery, Barb Stolz, Lill Westcott, Irene Colburne, Dorothy Archibald, Ann Melnyk, Steva Markowsky, Kay Kutt, Victoria Zignash, Stella Huculak, Walter Brown, Mary Lazaruk, Julie Mitchell, Stella Wasylycia, Sharon Terry, Maria Bilynska, Kay Ostafichuk, and Georgia Liakopoulos. I was hoping they would be seated in the public gallery, but they may not be. I had the pleasure of getting a picture taken with them and chatting with them. One of them is over 90 years old, and they're still active and engaged. I will now ask them to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three wonderful people. They are Mrs. Kanak Chamarty, Mrs. Smriti Patnaik, and Dr. Suman Kollipara. Dr. Kollipara and Mrs. Patnaik are in software engineering, and Mrs. Chamarty is a financial consultant and entrepreneur. They are here this afternoon to tour the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery. I request them to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Renata Romanek and Annamaria Edwards. Renata and Annamaria both work at Chrysalis: An Alberta Society for Citizens with Disabilities. Renata is a client marketing co-ordinator, and she graduated from the university in Cracow, Poland, with a master's degree in philosophy. Annamaria is a front-line worker for Chrysalis and was born here in Edmonton. She has a bachelor's degree in sociology. They are both seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bowcroft, Montgomery, Sir William Van Horne, Terrace Road, and Western Canada are just five of the 185 schools listed in the Calgary board of education's rankings of schools in worse overall condition than Marlborough school. Marlborough school itself was evacuated yesterday because of serious roof problems. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Given that the Calgary board of education's documents state that most Calgary schools are in worse condition than Marlborough, can the minister assure the parents of students attending the schools ranked in worse condition than Marlborough that their children are safe?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in tandem with our locally elected school boards we do have a responsibility to ensure that a safe and caring environment is provided for children that attend our schools. We are doing that to the best of our abilities. I do acknowledge that there are some schools that need attention. That's why we have a fairly aggressive maintenance and repair program in place. In fact, tens of millions of dollars go into this area every year. In acknowledgement of the hon. opposition leader's question he should know that I am meeting with all the school board chairs on March 24, and we will be talking exactly about infrastructure needs.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the head of the union responsible for maintenance services for Calgary schools stated today that Marlborough elementary school isn't the only public school with significant roof problems, will this minister commit here and now to reinvesting in infrastructure for Calgary schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, once I get the technical and full responsibility for the infrastructure piece, I'll be able to answer that question, perhaps, more specifically. That should happen in a few weeks.

However, I think it's important to note that in the case of Marlborough school the Calgary public board of education took a very proactive, a very precautionary approach here. We provided them with tens of thousands of dollars – I forget the exact amount, somewhere between $25,000 and $40,000, as I recall – and they did a structural assessment. In doing that, they determined that that particular roof needed some attention, so they did the proactive thing: closed the school. They're dealing with it. Nobody is in any harm's way there in that respect.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the minister speaking of an aggressive maintenance program, there is over $425 million in deferred maintenance to Calgary schools. How does the minister justify this backlog?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, every school board submits on an annual basis their three-year capital plans. Included in those plans are issues pertaining to new school construction needs, to modernizations, to upgrades, to rightsizing, to expansions, to other similar-type needs. We review them, they provide them on a prioritized basis, and then we do our best to fund them on that basis.

The Speaker: The second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we all know and the minister knows that the state of disrepair in Calgary schools is well documented. Teachers, students, trustees, parents, and maintenance staff have all raised concerns, serious concerns, over the state of Calgary schools for years and have not had adequate attention. This puts the health of students, teachers at risk and puts at risk as well the value of our public assets. To the Minister of Education: given that toxic mould is a direct result of leaky roofs, will the minister order independent air quality assessments in this and other at-risk Calgary schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I would think that if the local school board had that specific concern, with those specific connotations, they probably would have already done that. I'm not aware that that is the exact case there. If there are concerns of that nature, then certainly the Calgary public board or the Calgary Catholic board – I'm not sure which one he's referring to – either one of them I'm sure would be happy to follow up.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Exactly what is this minister's responsibility for the safety of schoolchildren in this province?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, section 45(8) has a wonderful explanation of this. I would direct the hon. member to have a look at that section. It is the section that says that there is "a safe and caring" learning environment requirement. What that means is that we work with locally elected school trustees to ensure that that is met. If he knows, if he has examples where some students are indeed in danger, then I would ask him to please provide me with that specific case.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance: given that deferring maintenance drives up costs over the long run, how does this minister justify allowing public assets like these public schools to deteriorate to the level where they need this kind of work?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we have a very large infrastructure budget. It covers new. It covers enhancing hospitals, schools, public buildings. We've been criticized for not saving enough money. We've made over a 40 per cent increase in our infrastructure budget since the last budget. We have a budget that will be presented in this Legislature on Wednesday, March 22, at 3 p.m., I believe, and we can have a full discussion of all of these issues in that budget debate.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordability of Postsecondary Education

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is spinning its two-tier user-pay commercialization of health by saying that paying for health care must become more of a shared responsibility. Now, back in the day, back in the early '90s the government said that the cost of advanced education had to be, and I quote: a responsibility shared by the learner and the government. The results? The fastest tuition increases in the nation. Thanks for sharing. To the Minister of Advanced Education: with the minister's spring deadline for a new affordability policy fast approaching, why are stakeholders still waiting for a draft policy that contains some actual specific details?

Mr. Hancock: Because it's not done yet, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was my suspicion. Will the minister commit to rolling back tuition fees for students?

Mr. Hancock: As the hon. member well knows, Mr. Speaker, because it has been well publicized, last fall our Premier promised students in this province that tuition fees would be held constant at the 2004-2005 levels into the new year and that we will be bringing forward a new affordability policy which will include the tuition policy element. That policy will be available this spring for implementation in the fall for institutions and students planning their budgets for the following school year. That's what the Premier promised. That's what I've promised. That's what will happen, and the students are part of that process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the Premier's ultimatum yesterday to Conservative leadership contenders, will this minister be around long enough to make sure that the new policy actually gets implemented?

Mr. Hancock: Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: I'm sure we're all waiting with bated breath, Mr. Speaker.

Public Opinion Survey on Health Care

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government released a poll which they purported claims support for reform of the health system along the lines envisaged by the government. However, this was not a public opinion survey designed to solicit the views of Albertans on health care or on the third way. It was, in fact, a market research survey done by Margaret Kool Marketing, which is developing the multimillion dollar PR strategy to sell private health care to Albertans. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why are the minister and her staff attempting to pass off the Leger Marketing survey as a serious attempt to gauge the views of Albertans on health care when it was in reality nothing more than message testing done for the company hired to sell Albertans on the supposed merits of the Conservatives' two-tier health plan?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the cost of some $11,000 nine hundred people in Alberta were surveyed about their beliefs and what the health system looked like in the times of January and February. There was no attempt whatsoever either from myself or the news release to sell this or market this as a way of advancing the third way. In fact, it starts talking about: the survey of 900 people conducted during the months of January and February found that Albertans generally perceive the state of the current health care system as not sufficient for future generations. It goes on to answer a number of questions.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is continuing to purport that this survey in some way represents the accurate views of Albertans, why has she chosen to selectively release only the market research component rather than the entire communication strategy done by the Margaret Kool Marketing company, and will she in fact make that entire marketing plan public?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is a different study that's being referenced now. The $141,000 spent for Margaret Kool Marketing company, MKM, is a number of things that may or may not, some of them, see the light of day. We were looking at a number of focus tests, a thorough examination of how people responded to sustainability of health in their region, how people responded to the various terminology used, the third way, to talk to them about access times, to talk to them about private pay, what their thoughts were on it. Although a summary has, I believe, been made available, we can make more of that available, both through posting it on the web and making more detail available.

Mr. Speaker, the Leger Marketing polling was released in its entire form yesterday.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that 78 per cent of the respondents to that market survey agreed that all health care services covered by the Canada Health Act should be delivered through publicly owned facilities and paid for by Alberta Health and only 3 per cent of the respondents supported two-tier health care in this province, will the government now commit to abandon its proposals for two-tier private health care in this province?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, you cannot simply isolate and select certain data in order to just justify anything. You could look at the data saying that 66 per cent believe that if people pulled out of the queue and had services elsewhere, it would shorten waiting lists and make it better for them. I'm not either subscribing to or judging that data. I'm saying that there are a number of different questions that were asked with different answers.

I think it very significant, Mr. Speaker, that when you look at it, 5 per cent said that they were completely satisfied with the health care system in Alberta, but 95 per cent, by the obvious, not completely satisfied answer, were representing concerns about the length of waiting times, about the access they get to the system. While generally they thought it was a good system, they want us to do exactly what we're doing today, and that's working at making a public system that's strong even stronger.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by hon. Member for St. Albert.

Surface Rights Compensation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are being asked to sign surface rights agreements due to the increased coal-bed methane drilling in my constituency. They're quite surprised to learn that compensation rates have not changed in the past 20 years or more, yet in that same time frame property values have risen three to four times and energy prices have soared much higher. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. When is the minister going to adjust the surface rights compensation so that farmers are more fairly compensated for the footprint the energy industry places on their land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Surface Rights Board has authority under the Surface Rights Act, and under the Surface Rights Act it's very explicit and very complicated. I'd like to be very clear here that if a landowner and a company can't agree on entry or compensation related to the resource activity, the board may grant right of entry and determine compensation. The board may do that.

In determining compensation, the board has clear guidelines. They take into account the value of the land, the loss of use as well as adverse effects such as noise, nuisance, inconvenience, and that type of thing, and more importantly damage to the land. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the value of resources, such as oil and gas, is important, but it's very volatile, and that's not the only factor in determining compensation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary to the same minister: given that these compensation rates haven't been keeping abreast of the increase in costs of taxes and land values, will the minister consider annual mandatory compensation fees for transmission lines, such as pipelines and power lines, in addition to increased compensation for the footprint?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, again it's very complicated, but under the Surface Rights Act pipeline and utility companies can apply for right of entry to construct pipelines, power lines, and telephone lines. A pipeline does not normally result in above ground structures and generally creates a short-term disturbance, so in addition to land values the board assesses a compensation payment for the crop season following installation. Major transmission lines are covered by long-term agreements under easements or right of entry orders. To determine if a transmission line is considered major, as the hon. member asked in the question, the Surface Rights Board uses the Energy and Utilities Board's definition of a 69 kV transmission line or larger.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary to the same minister: will the minister commit to a regular review of surface rights compensation rates, say every five or 10 years or adjusted to some benchmark, such as increasing assessment rates?

Mr. Coutts: Currently under the Surface Rights Act, Mr. Speaker, the annual compensation for right of entry or surface lease may be reviewed every five years until the site is reclaimed or terminated. At the same time, we keep abreast of the trends, and the Surface Rights Board definitely considers aspects of determining compensation of payment. We're constantly reviewing that and will continue to review that in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Special-needs Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seventy-eight per cent of Alberta's classrooms have at least one child with special needs. Early intervention is essential for children with special needs to become healthy, happy adults. The standards for special education introduced in 2004 do not come close to meeting children's classroom needs. To the Minister of Education: what will this minister do to assure parents and teachers that our special-needs kids will be properly educated?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're providing an envelope of over $4 billion in number and general terms to achieve exactly that. I would take exception to his comment that the standards for special education are insufficient or inadequate. These are more than sufficient and adequate. There may be an issue of funding connected to that. That's what the parents have been telling me, but they're quite happy with the standards themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. How long will these parents here today have to wait until they find some relief from the minister?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the area of special-needs funding has in fact gone up by 99 per cent. It's almost doubled from $170 million five years ago to $340 million today. That's a significant commitment on the part of our government towards special-needs children.

Now, we not only provide that, but also in the area of early identification I know that in co-operation with the lead Ministry of Children's Services there have been now 36 parent link centres established across the province. That's an additional 15 or 20 this year alone, and that will help a great deal, Mr. Speaker, with the earlier identification through developmental screening, which I'm assuming the hon. member is aware of.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the parents' point of view, given that early intervention is vital for a child's success, Mr. Minister, has the minister evaluated how the shortage of funding at the kindergarten to grade 3 level will impact children completing their schooling?

2:10

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't have a specific evaluation on that exact question, but I can tell you that we've made tremendous improvements, tremendous strides in providing education at all levels, not just at the K to 3 level. Through initiatives such as our student health initiative program, working with Health and Wellness and with Children's Services, we provide an additional $34 million for that kind of early identification. That strategy coupled with our early identification strategy through the parent link centres and a number of other initiatives, PUF and so on, are all helping to make sure that parents out there know that we care very much about their children and about the circumstances of those parents in helping provide for those children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Class Size Reduction

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta announced funding in July 2004 to reduce average class sizes across Alberta. It is now almost two years later, and some parents in my constituency are expressing concern that student numbers in some classrooms are still too high. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Why is it that some of our class sizes are still much higher than what was recommended by the Alberta Commission on Learning?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that is indeed a very good question. Just by way of brief history, the Learning Commission had said: here are some guidelines that we would expect the school system to achieve over a period of five years. Government has tried very hard to achieve those targets within three years. We're about to finish our second year. We've provided about $200 million in new monies so far to hire 1,600 additional teachers. I think what's important to keep in mind here is that we're talking about jurisdiction-wide averages, not specific school classroom averages. I will acknowledge that we have a little bit more work to do in that area.

Ms Haley: Well, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. What are you doing to address the challenges that school boards have regarding insufficient student space as it relates to that recommendation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: That, too, is a good question, Mr. Speaker. The thing about it is that we know that when we were very aggressively pursuing meeting the Commission on Learning guidelines for average jurisdiction-wide class size, we automatically put pressure on the infrastructure side, on student school spaces, and how many are needed. So I addressed this issue with the school boards last November. We're going to pursue it and follow up on it a little bit further at my meeting on March 24.

Let me just conclude by saying that I'm very pleased that as a result of the 215 million new dollars that we've put in in the last 18 months for our class size reduction initiative target, we are right on track if not ahead of schedule in some areas, and that's very positive news.

Ms Haley: My last question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker, is this. Given that growth in my constituency ranges between 10 per cent and 20 per cent a year and inside my constituency we're short about five schools, which has got to be putting more pressure on your classroom initiative, will you be announcing five new schools for my constituency?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, nothing would give me more pleasure than to be able to stand in this House and say yes to a question like that, but I just don't have the money at this time. However, I will commit to the hon. member that next time I am there, we will meet again, and we'll pursue this issue even further. On March 24, however, I expect that I'll be addressing it with the school board chairs from that area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace.

Special-needs Education Funding

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teachers and parents in my constituency are very concerned about addressing the needs of children with special needs. They would like to know how school districts who receive less than half of what they need for children with severe disabilities are able to provide the mandated level of service. There is no room in the general grant to make up this government shortfall. My questions are to the Minister of Education. If the minister is aware of the shortfall for each and every case of a child with severe special needs, why isn't this problem being addressed?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware that each and every child has a shortfall in funding. What I am aware of is that when it comes to severe special-needs children, for example, that budget increased in this last year alone by something like 11.4 per cent. So we are adding more money into the system to help alleviate those problems, but we work in conjunction with our locally elected school boards whose job it is to ensure that appropriate programming is provided for children with special needs, be that children with mild, moderate, or severe special needs or be it with gifted and talented special-needs children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. How does the minister respond to teachers and other staff who take the mandate to provide adequate services for children with learning disabilities seriously and are distressed with funding constraints?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what funding constraints she might be referring to. I think I indicated earlier this afternoon that our funding in this area has doubled from $170 million to $340 million, and I expect that there might be a price increase and perhaps even a volume increase in the forthcoming budget. We'll just have to wait and see, as the hon. Treasurer has indicated, until March 22, and then we'll have some additional answers to that very question, I would suspect.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. How does the minister respond to angry and tired parents who are spending enormous time and effort fund raising for basics that should be provided by core funding?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, school parent councils or parents or others should not be doing fundraising for so-called basics or essentials in the school system. If there is an example that the hon. member knows of where parents are fund raising specifically for something that is forbidden, I can tell that you I'd be very interested to see that, and I'll bet you the school board would be as well because that should not in fact be happening. We're providing about $21 million per school day into our school system, and our school boards are doing a pretty good job in implementing and using those dollars to make sure that the basics are provided for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Little Smoky Caribou Herd

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Many animal advocacy groups are critical of the program being carried out to cull wolves in the area of the Little Smoky herd. They emphasize that industrial development has much to do with the decline of the caribou population. Why has Alberta taken this drastic step of removing wolves?

Mr. Coutts: Well, first and foremost, Mr. Speaker, this step is being taken because the Alberta government is serious about protecting the threatened caribou. It isn't an action that is taken lightly. It's very, very serious. Secondly, we've done this because predation is the primary cause of caribou mortality, and the Little Smoky caribou will disappear without this type of action. It's important that we follow the recovery plan as it was put forward, and that's what we're doing. That recovery plan was prepared by stakeholders and NGOs and industry as well, and that has been recommended as a predator control. This is a short-term action, and it's also important to note that we're only reducing the local wolf numbers and not the total number of wolves in the province.

Mr. Goudreau: My next question is also for the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Why single out wolves instead of putting a moratorium on certain developments, as some groups are recommending?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that is also consistent with the recovery plan, and we're looking at ways to minimize activity on the land as well. We're working with industry to make sure that that's one of their major efforts as well. A moratorium is not the solution to better management on the ground. There are strict operation restrictions on all industrial activity where there are caribou. We use best practices from other jurisdictions, and companies are required to do annual management plans on protection areas with strict deadlines and compliance reviews as well. Industry itself is a major funding partner in research and monitoring the caribou as well. We like to have those partners do our integrated management plans with us, and as a result there are many good pilot projects out there on caribou protection.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, my final question is also for the same minister. He talks about a plan. When is Alberta going to implement the full plan?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. There are good plans in place at this particular time. We have had a strong history of being good managers of caribou and other wildlife in this province. We were the first in Canada to recognize caribou as threatened, and we conduct more research on woodland caribou than any other jurisdiction in Canada. I spoke about our recovery plan in the previous answer, and that includes a number of short-term and long-term solutions to making sure that caribou still remain on the land not only with the help of good management practices from the department but also our industry and stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Policing Services

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's population continues to grow, and that means, unfortunately, an increase in crime, particularly violent crime and gang violence. In response to this reality, the government is not increasing its funding for police services in our big cities of Edmonton and Calgary. This government is counting its pennies when it comes to public safety while giving a billion here and a billion there. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Given the billions of dollars of surplus money, why is this government, a grinch in respect of public safety, making an insulting offer to the city of Calgary of $16 per capita for police funding, the same as last year and the year before?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cernaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The numbers that the hon. member mentions are correct. They have $16 per capita in the city of Calgary and in the city of Edmonton. In the previous year we tried to look at our overall budget and stress smaller communities throughout Alberta, assisting them in their policing grants to give them an automatic base: if they were under 20,000, a thousand dollar lump sum plus $8 per capita. The hon. member should remember, though, that the program that we have in Alberta is by far the best policing grant system in all of Canada. One example: the city of Vancouver shares their fine revenue with the province of British Columbia, and that's all the funding they get.

Dr. B. Miller: To the same minister: given that this government's share of policing services for our cities is a measly 6 per cent, why in a province with so much are we leaving our cities on their own? Why are we being so soft on crime?

Mr. Cernaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, the 6 per cent that the hon. member mentioned may not be accurate. In fact, $15 million is the per capita allotment that the city of Calgary received. They also received over $6 million from the organized crime strategy, which includes officers in the IROC and ICE units, that the province provides funding for. As well, if you look at the roughly $30 million of fine revenue that the municipality gets to keep, we're talking $50 million.

Dr. B. Miller: Can the minister explain if the use of sheriffs – and it sounds like a western movie – is the new plan to deal with gang violence and violence on the streets? Is this the best the government can do?

Mr. Cernaiko: Well, the use of sheriffs and that western theme is because we're in western Canada as well, Mr. Speaker.

Sheriffs are there for a particular purpose. Their main function is court security and prisoner transport. They're in a pilot project with the RCMP right now regarding traffic investigation and traffic enforcement. We're looking as well to the future. There may be other areas where we expand their role to provincial officers throughout Alberta to assist and complement our policing services, not to replace them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Learning Commission Recommendations

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Education minister continues to hone his well-deserved reputation as a ditherer who couldn't make a decision to save his life. Whether it's implementing two-and-a-half-year-old recommendations of the Learning Commission, implementing a strategy to improve low high school completion rates, or coming up with a revamped school closure process, there seems to be no decision that the minister isn't prepared to run away from. This indecision is creating havoc. My question is to the Minister of Education. Given that the minister promised that he would make a decision about the outstanding recommendations of the Learning Commission by the end of 2005, when is he finally going to get around to making these decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, when I met with the school boards in November for the second time last year – and I appreciate that this hon. member wasn't there and wouldn't know this – I told them that I would do my best to have either an answer, a yes or a no, on the outstanding recommendations, or I would have an alternative to the proposals, or I would at least make government's position on each of them clearer, and I would try to do that by the end of December. That's what I said to them, and they will all back that up.

Now, unfortunately, we got a little behind in the schedule with that particular target deadline, and it's only because some other groups wanted to come in and present to one of our standing policy committees. In the guise of openness and transparency we allowed them to come in. The last one of them, Mr. Speaker, came to us on December 12, and something called Christmas got in there. It was a wonderful occasion, but unfortunately we couldn't get all the meetings that we had wanted. So we're a few months behind with that, but if the hon. member would stay tuned, there will be some decisions on this fairly soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My point remains: Mr. Dithers. Christmas is now an excuse.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Let's be nice. Okay?

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I'm always nice to this minister.

My question. Specifically, one of the recommendations has to do with full-day kindergarten for high-needs students, and that's a very important decision, Mr. Speaker. When is that decision going to be made?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Soon.

Mr. Martin: Soon to this minister could be another two and a half years.

My question to the minister is simply this. Is the minister aware that 18 high-needs schools in Edmonton public could lose their full-day kindergarten because of a lack of funding from his department? That could be coming down the pike.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we provide millions of dollars for school boards across the province, and these are locally elected officials. Kindergarten is not a mandatory program. If they wish to provide it, they provide it to the best of their abilities. They presumably use our envelope of broader funding to do that.

Now, every school board has a slightly different approach to this because it's based on local needs as determined by locally elected officials. That's how the system should work, and you would think that this hon. member, who used to be a trustee, would know that by now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alexis Reserve Land-use Study

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this Assembly we're hearing lots about health care and education issues, but when I go home to my constituency in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, land issues and land-use issues far outnumber these concerns. This weekend I'll be meeting with leaders from my First Nations communities. It's my understanding that traditional land-use studies are being conducted across the province. My questions are to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Why has there not been noticeable progress with regard to land-use issues in my constituency of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, there has been some progress. The Alexis First Nation was first involved in 2004 to do traditional land-use studies, and it takes approximately three years to be able to do a land-use study mostly because it entails a lot of things. One is that the First Nations have to map their traditional, spiritual, and cultural use of the land, and also they have to be able to bring in the elders to be able to work with the information as well as the regular kind of information on GPS studies. So on the issue of the First Nation they have been working very hard. They are only at the two-year time of the three-year program.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I understand the process, but given the answer, Mr. Speaker, I have to report back to my chief this weekend, and he wants to know: what's the progress with the status of the Alexis Indian reserve with land-use studies that are happening?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the question because I know that the First Nations have been wanting to know whether or not they can continue and complete the traditional land-use study. They will be getting some information from my department shortly to let them know that they can complete the study. So, as a result, the member can tell his First Nations to continue to work with my department to ensure that they get the dollars that they require to complete the study.

The other component, Mr. Speaker, is to be able to ensure that they do the protocols that we've requested them to do. They are now working on those protocols with government. I would like to commend the First Nations for making sure that they do that. For your information, I'd appreciate that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

2:30 Private Health Insurance for Artists

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the economic contributions of the arts sector in this province artists generally earn less money than the provincial average. Most artists cannot afford private insurance. Many are self-employed – you know that – and do not have employer health benefits. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the minister plans on limiting public health coverage to only emergency services, what plans does this minister have for the artists who cannot afford private health care insurance?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, if you look at our new health policy framework, eight of the 10 policies deal with strengthening the public system. The value statements talk about looking after individuals, families, communities, and working in co-operation and collaboration with health care providers to do just that. Today we provide supports and coverage for people who are vulnerable because of income, who are senior. That will continue regardless of any changes that would come in the future. I'm very confident of that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Community Development. Has the minister consulted with the arts community to hear their concerns regarding health services and access?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. We provide health support, as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has said, based on the fact that they're Albertans, not based on their occupation.

Mr. Agnihotri: My next question is to the Minister of Economic Development. How does the minister hope to grow the film industry in Alberta when our actors leave the province because they cannot afford private health insurance? We don't want to lose them.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we will take that question under advisement and provide an answer to the hon. member as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Trade Certification

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The red seal certification program for trades workers is an excellent program that ensures that trades workers coming into Alberta have the necessary skills to carry out their work functions in a knowledgeable and safe manner while possessing the required skill set to work at the same level of skill as other qualified Alberta trades workers. My question is to the Minister of Advanced Education. With the influx of out-of-province workers to alleviate skill shortages, is this program meeting its objectives?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, it's a very important question because the interprovincial standards, or red seal program, as many in the industry know it, is a very valuable program and is really referred to as the passport for mobility for tradespeople across the country. The objectives of the red seal program are to assess the skills and knowledge of workers against national standards agreed to by industry in each province or territory, and that then provides the mobility. In other words, once they have that red seal, they can work anywhere in Canada. They can work in Alberta. The real value of the red seal is knowing that those people who come to this province have met the standard and are capable to go right to work. It's available to skilled workers in all jurisdictions. We know that workers with the red seal that come to Alberta are qualified. They know that they can immediately start working.

Mr. Speaker, it's a well-taken-up program. We know that we have 110,000 Alberta tradespeople who have attained that designation since it was created, more than in any other jurisdiction in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can trades workers who are presently working and trained in Alberta challenge these exams in trades that they are not currently qualified under but have work experience in to provide them with the opportunity to become more employable by being certified in more than one trade?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. People who have skills and knowledge can challenge the red seal exam. The red seal is recognized in the industry. People who have that designation in one trade may have skills in a different trade. The pipefitter trade, for example, fits into the steam fitter/pipe fitter process. Maybe a welder could fit into the pipefitting area. So there are cross-skills, and a person who has a red seal certificate in one area can seek to challenge the exam in another area and get tickets in a second or even a third trade.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you. To the same minister: what is the process for trades workers in Alberta to challenge these exams to enable them to be red seal certified in multiple trades?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the process is fairly straightforward, Mr. Speaker. The individuals involved get their documentation together showing that they're qualified in their occupation. They need evidence of training and related work experience and any related certifications. They make an application through one of our field offices. We have regional apprenticeship offices in a number of places across the province. Our department will verify the authenticity of the documentation against the standards set for that trade. Once approved, usually within two weeks, the individual can schedule a time to write the exam. They may also be required to perform a practical test to demonstrate skill, depending on the trade in which they're seeking recognition.

In some trades, Mr. Speaker, the industry has recommended that credit given for skills in one trade be applied to another trade. If there is a common set of skills, they can actually have the recognized skill set applied to the new trade.

So the process works. The process is available for people coming to the province to get their tickets in a number of areas.

One thing is very important. While we have a shortage of skilled workers in the province and we're recruiting people both to take their training as apprentices in the province and to come to the province with their skills, we want to make sure that we have qualified workers. We do not want to water down in any way the qualifications necessary because we want to have the highest quality work in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sixteen days down and 15 days left to go in the government's health care consultation, and it's not looking good for the government. The government's own survey results reveal that only half of Albertans are even aware of what the third way might be, and many stakeholder groups, like the Alberta Medical Association and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, say that they need more information in order to provide constructive feedback. My questions today are all to the minister of health. Will the minister commit to providing Albertans and stakeholder groups like the AMA and the college with the detailed information they have requested?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of talking earlier this morning with the president of the AMA about the consultations and about a number of other issues. I think we are proceeding very well. They asked some specific questions. We've agreed to provide them the answers. At such time that we're prepared to either introduce legislation or introduce new policies, obviously, we will continue to inform Albertans.

Speaking of the consultations, Mr. Speaker, we are doing very well with the consultations in covering Alberta. I will be in both Hinton and Calgary this weekend having meetings and have arranged other meetings in other parts of Alberta to make sure that we get as much information from Albertans as possible. We will continue to work with the college and other providers as they come forward and in due course respond to their questions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Madam Minister, when will the rest of us get to know what these details are, or is it just the AMA that gets to get the details from you? Have you now got two tiers of information?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, obviously, anything that is asked for from some of the groups will be available to all. Some of them don't ask for definite, specific information. They ask for things that may be private in their view. They have sometimes asked for meetings that are not held in the public consultation by their own request. We will be quite prepared to share our concerns. The documents that come forward as a result of our consultation process will disclose everything that we possibly can. Some people, for example, ask questions about the scope of practice. Quite specifically, the role of pharmacists in prescribing was an issue that was raised. They're asking how we will advance the Health Professions Act. All of these things will be available and in due course will be raised either on the Legislature floor or in the ways that we configure our policy. Many of the things that people bring forward, especially about the electronic health record, relate to the use of the record and how we will advance it in the future.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: will the minister listen to Albertans and extend the timeline and widen the public consultation to include town halls where individuals, not just special groups, get to question the minister and include translation services, a televised debate to make this truly an open, public debate for all Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, at this rate we've had a number of individuals. We have two days' worth of consultations with individuals who have registered and have asked for meetings. We're doing our best to speak with the health care providers and the stakeholders. At the end of the period designed for consultation, if there's a need to do more, we would certainly advance it. The important part is that Albertans through their MLAs, through consultations that they're having with MLAs in their own communities can advance their papers if they so choose. They're responding in many cases to the discussion guides. They're phoning us. They're sending letters to us. We've received about 2,800 thus far.

In terms of the quality of representation from the various communities, from the various providers, and from the various people that have a role in supporting the health care system, I'm quite satisfied that the representative views that have come forward are very high quality and will enable us to make good, sound policy decisions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we had 89 questions and answers in the 50-minute question period. That's the best we've had in a long time.

In 30 seconds I'll provide you with an historical vignette and call upon the first of six members to participate.

100 Years at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta:
A Centennial Celebration

The Speaker: Hon members, in keeping with the theme of the anniversary this year, 100 years of democracy in the province of Alberta, last evening at a special and unique event for former members and current members we unveiled a new book, a book titled 100 Years at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta: A Centennial Celebration.

This project was begun three years ago. We concluded that we would hire an architectural photographer and ask that person to show the building, to take a series of visuals of the building in a way that many of us may have never seen it before. The photographer in question, a gentleman by the name of Jason Statler, accepted the challenge and excelled at the task. Then came the difficult part, the choosing of only about 100 photos from the thousands taken by both the architectural photographer as well as other photographers associated with the Legislative Assembly in the province of Alberta.

Earlier today I introduced a number of people who did work on the book. They were team leader, Rhonda Sorensen; writing and book design, Wolfgang Maul; colour photographs of the building by the architectural photographer, Jason Statler, and Wolfgang Maul as well; editing and production by Rhonda Sorensen, Philip Massolin of the library, Tracey Sales, and Kathy Hnatiuk of House services. We selected 100 photographs from over 1,000 digital photos that were taken with respect to it.

All current and former Members of the Legislative Assembly will receive a copy of this publication. We had 1,000 volumes of the book published for our centennial event. We're in the process of publishing an additional 9,000, so all Albertans and Canadians can view and appreciate this book. The books will be available within six weeks at our gift shop.

I will also be providing to all Members of the Legislative Assembly sufficient copies so that they may distribute them to all of the libraries in their constituencies if they wish to participate. If a member chooses not to participate in the delivery of such at the libraries within their constituencies, then, of course, we will arrange for the distribution. We hope to have this process in place by early May of this year.

The books were published in the province of Alberta, and you will see in the back page of the book the whole production team, the team that worked on it. This is the first time in 26 years that we've had a book done on the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. The people who worked on it, I repeat, volunteered evenings, weekends, and holidays because they believed in the project here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I'm really proud of them.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Louis Warring
Jan Mitsosiz Lisiecki

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On that very same note of our celebration of the Alberta Legislature's 100-year anniversary, I must tell you that you have created a wonderful opportunity by allowing our seniors and our youth to compete by way of writing essays on their explanation of what democracy in this province and in this country means to them. Rightfully, Mr. Louis Warring, a gentleman who fought in World War II with the Royal Canadian Air Force in bomber airplanes, put his life on the line so we could be here to celebrate democracy, which otherwise may not have come about without the efforts of such individuals like him. That effort, as you know, continues throughout the world with our armed forces in combat.

Benefiting from that effort is a young man whose parents, as you mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, saw Alberta during the 1988 Olympics.

Mr. Cao: In Calgary.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, the Olympics were in Calgary.

They fell in love with the scenery, and I'm sure did some research on the province and decided that this was going to be their new, adopted home.

This is a transition from a senior who fought for this province, who fought for democracy, to a young man who now gets to live in Alberta and flourish. Mr. Speaker, I know that Jan Mitsosiz Lisiecki aspires to be a Canadian Prime Minister, and I can tell you that I think he passed the first test because when you put him to the test and asked him to play a little piano concerto without any notes, I think he performed perfectly.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think we owe a note of gratitude to Mr. Louis Warring, who allowed us to be here, allowed young Mr. Jan Mitsosiz Lisiecki to benefit from it, and I think that we should be proud as Albertans to have such individuals among us to celebrate 100 years of the Alberta Legislature with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Legislative Assembly Centennial Celebration

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Yesterday, March 15, this Legislative Assembly was the site of a very special, event-filled day to commemorate its 100th anniversary in Alberta. Without knowing all the details, planning, and events that many talented individuals had masterminded over many months, we in this Assembly were treated to a wonderful trip down memory lane. Starting with the well-organized noon registration of 128 former and 83 current members and spouses, this special ceremony heard addresses from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor; one of the longest-serving former MLAs, Mr. Ray Speaker; our Premier; leaders of the opposition parties; and the recognition of four former Speakers.

The day concluded with a first-class time to reminisce, have dinner, hear our current Premier and a former Premier, hear our current Speaker recognize the members and their families who supported them as well as the many staff in this building from years ago to the present day. It was truly a superbly planned, well-timed event. From bagpipers to table officers, the Sergeant-at-Arms, pages and our current security staff, each one contributed to this very special night. As more than one former MLA told me: this really is an historic event, an occasion I'm glad I could come to.

Everyone involved in the production of this once-in-a-century celebration needs to be commended. Mr. Speaker, you demonstrated the attribute for which you are so well known: detail. Although there were only a few unable to be in attendance, I know that they along with all former and current members in this Assembly today along with our families would like to express our sincere gratitude and say thank you to Mr. Speaker. You and your dedicated team of volunteers did a first-class job. [standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you very much. The thanks will be conveyed to the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, Dr. McNeil, and the literally dozens of volunteers who worked. I'll be identifying them to you as we go through the remainder of the session this year. Thank you very, very much.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Alberta/Montana Transmission Line

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first sentence, on a topic that is not what I was going to talk about, is to say: yes, thank you, sir; it was a party.

Today there are plans in the works to develop a Montana/Alberta tie-line that will link our electricity distribution system with our neighbours' to the south. The government has refused to provide a cost-benefit analysis detailing the benefit to consumers, us, of the Montana/Alberta tie-line. Why export more electricity from Alberta when the government's own report states that the province is going to require 6,150 more megawatts over the next 20 years?

Southern Albertans who have contacted me have repeatedly posed questions to both the companies involved with this project and the EUB but received unsatisfactory answers. These are legitimate questions from Albertans whose lives will be significantly impacted by this project and still no answers. Now is the time for our provincial government to intervene on behalf of citizens before the National Energy Board.

What impact will these high-powered lines have on Albertans whose property falls only feet from the proposed locations? Many of our concerned constituents have small children and are fearful of the health effects that these lines may have. How will these lines impact the environment surrounding them? Southern Albertans have voiced their concern that the environmental impact of these high-powered lines could have great significance, in particular, on the native grasslands, the birds, the wildlife, and certainly on wetlands.

Albertans value their property and, understandably, do not want to see their property damaged or altered. Southern Albertans have even voiced their concerns regarding the effects that these high-powered lines will have on their communication devices. Working on a farm with small children requires these devices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Role of Grandparents

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We say a lot about a word by the way we say it. Said in the usual way, "grandparents" is like "half-brother," "mother-in-law," "stepson." These are package phrases. They carry a load of associations, insinuations, stereotypes that we usually take in without thinking. Let's shift the emphasis. If we say "grand parents" in the way First Nations say "grand chief," we get a different take for grandparents are parents of a larger family with a larger field of vision. Regular parents are often preoccupied, focused on paying bills, putting food on the table, reading the report cards, not to mention the challenges of their own careers. They're anxious with the sense that how they do all these things and how the kids turn out is a reflection on them.

Grandparents are able to take in the big picture. Most have nothing to prove. They're able to give children something closer to unconditional love because they're at arm's length, not implicated in a situation, not responsible for the results. Being in that place is a wonderful asset, one that those who are concerned with families need to recognize and treasure.

Grandparents can provide a stabilizing force in the lives of children. In times of family crisis they can be negotiators between parent and child, helping one to understand the other. In a society with high divorce rates, economic hardship, and drug and alcohol abuse grandparents may be the only source of stability a child can rely on. Grandparents can be a major influence in child development, and they can help families to cope with the challenges of everyday life.

Grandparent/grandchild access is a gift to our society, one to be encouraged unless there is a strong reason to the contrary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Keephills 3 Electricity Generation Plant

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday, March 14, TransAlta and EPCOR announced an exciting project, the expansion of the Keephills power plant. They are planning to construct a 450-megawatt, $750 million addition to this coal-fired generating site. Keephills 3 should be in commercial operation by 2011 and will supply Albertans with additional environmentally friendly coal-fired generation while ensuring that Albertans continue to receive low-cost, coal-fuelled electrical energy, energy that is part of the Alberta advantage.

The coal in the Keephills area is classified as subbituminous class C and is specially suited for power generation. As a fuel it is at least 10 times more economical to use for generation than natural gas. I believe our recent marginal electrical cost increases can be attributed to the fact that in the last five years the majority of generation built in Alberta has been gas fired. The land that this coal is extracted from is reclaimed to a state that is at least as or more productive than it was prior to mining.

Present technology removes over 99 per cent of particulate matter from stack emissions, and this new technology will greatly reduce NO_x, SO_x, and CO₂ emissions. This new unit will meet the new mercury reduction guidelines and will be the most environmentally efficient plant operating in our province and probably in North America.

Mr. Speaker, this planned addition is great news for the economic growth in my constituency, and when built, it will be great news for power consumers in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Collective Bargaining in Alberta

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we observed the 100th anniversary of democracy in this province, yet every day glaring problems with our democratic institutions become increasingly obvious. One of the most important rights that working people have in a functioning democracy is the right to come together and bargain collectively for fair wages and working conditions.

For this government it isn't enough to maintain the worst labour laws in the country; this government also likes to take sides. When UFCW workers went on strike for fair wages in Brooks, this government did everything they could to support the rabidly antiunion Tyson Foods.

Last May this government took sides again by granting CNRL's Horizon project a special designation under division 8 of the labour code. This designation allowed CNRL to negotiate a weak agreement with a company-friendly union, CLAC, and bypass democratically determined agreements with legitimate building trade unions. The division 8 designation is part of what the labour movement calls a dangerous one-two punch aimed at Alberta workers.

Recently the Conservatives got into bed with the Liberal federal government to allow big oil interests like CNRL to fast-track foreign workers into the oil sands. Here's the bottom line: CNRL works out a low-wage deal with CLAC under division 8; if Alberta workers won't work under this bogus contract, they'll import workers who will. All this has been perpetrated in the name of labour peace. CNRL and CLAC brag about getting work done, negotiating deals, and building the province. They don't talk about the real agenda to let big oil keep raking in the money, sending sizable amounts to the Conservative election accounts, while wages to the labour rights are rolled back.

Mr. Speaker, that is not my vision of democracy.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition on behalf of 20 Albertans. This petition reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to establish public auto insurance as proposed in 'People Before Profits' from the Alberta Liberal Caucus."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 1,193 residents of Alberta petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "recognize the financial burden borne by postsecondary students in this province, and to take action by implementing a significant rollback of tuition fees."

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Riverview I would like to present a petition signed by him and sent to him from a number of people, 1,175 to be exact, who are asking that the government "recognize the financial burden borne by postsecondary students" and "take action by implementing a significant rollback of tuition fees."

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1 through 19.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Bill 23

Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir, I beg leave to introduce Bill 23, the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006.

The proposed amendments will make the Provincial Parks Act easier to administer and provide more effective ways to preserve the province's natural heritage. They are largely administrative in nature.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Bill 206

Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and beg leave to introduce Bill 206, the Designation of Child Access Exchange Centres Act, for first reading.

I believe that there is a need to encourage parents and guardians who are separated or divorced to have access to their children, and this bill promotes access exchange in a positive environment by designating child-centred facilities in Alberta for this purpose.

Thank you very much.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the Teaching Profession Act I am pleased to table in this Assembly five copies of the annual report received from the Alberta Teachers' Association for the year 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table six letters and the appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for future daycare. The letters are signed by Paulette Calvert,* Juana Rodriguez, Vesna Peric, Teresa Czapiga, Helene Milloy, and another doctor's signature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm also pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. These letters are from Ruby Rosales, Lori Ann Sheplaw, Heather Evans, Lori Dickson, Patricia Haynes, and Andrea Mercredi.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today, the first of which is from a constituent of mine, Gordon Inglis, who has copied me on a letter he sent to the health minister. He asked her: "Please keep the Public Health Care System. Do not create a two tier system. Do not violate the Canada Health Act."

The second, also a letter regarding the health care system, is from Martha Dobbin. She says that her "experiences with American two-tiered health care system are in sharp contrast" to the positive experiences she's had with the Canadian system.

The third letter, copied to myself, was sent to the Premier. The writer, Tonya Malo, urges the Premier to abandon the "current plans to reform health care."

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

Mr. Speaker, I also have six subsequent letters regarding the provincial government's involvement in a national daycare program, and these letters are from Lisa Whelan, Brenda McNeil, Jan MacGregor, Annaleta Kikins,* Gloria Rurka, and R. Bernard.*

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and to table six letters and the appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I am tabling today are from Kerri Desnoyers, Judy Payou, Norm Desnoyers, Lori Engman, James Grant,* and Connie Bowie. These letters all are expressing concern over the cancellation of the national child care agreement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a final report, Summary of Proceedings, January 28, 2006, for the Community Workshop Special Education Review from the parent advisory council, Academy at King Edward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is from Cheryl Senger, who is concerned that if people who are single parents lose their subsidy programs for daycare and after school care, they won't be able to afford to work because most of them make so little money.

I also have tablings from Ted Woynillowicz around health care. His point is that the doctors will "cherry-pick for their private practice." Britain tried this, and it didn't work.

Also from Chris O'Brien, making the point that there's "no justifiable logic" to the Premier's "persistent and perplexing efforts to reform our public health care system."

From James Johnson, noting that the health framework is "coy when it comes to defining what is and what isn't 'medically necessary but not an emergency', although rhetoric and history have hinted this may include hip and knee replacement," et cetera.

From Colleen Mead, noting that "Britain and Australia are now re-investing in public health care and reducing the role" of private health care.

Finally, from Virginia Stephen, who sees "nothing in the 'values' expressed that could not be addressed" within a fully funded public health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I am tabling today are from Carmen Patterson, Jamie Mayes, Shannon Mitchell, Sherman Louis, Angelina Daniel, and Sasha Kebuson.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table this afternoon. The first one is a backgrounder on the Horizon project, produced by the Alberta Federation of Labour. It argues that government is giving CNRL special privileges that undermine negotiations with legitimate trade unions.

I also have a letter from Tammy Winder, who is visiting us today. Mrs. Winder's daughter is a vibrant young woman with a developmental disability and juvenile diabetes. She has not received proper support to manage her diabetes. When Mrs. Winder looked into moving her daughter, she was told that cuts to PDD meant funding would not follow.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table a number of letters from constituents from across Alberta who are concerned parents of children with special needs. They're concerned about the level of funding in Alberta. The letters are from Marilyn Cramer, Wendy King, Domenic Cusanelli and Angela Iavasile, Traci Dunlop, Lori Fankhanel, Kim and Dave Kinders, Garnet Boutette, Shirley and Dave Williams, Terry Appleton, Holly and Rob Brown, Gwynne Holder, Nicola Quilliam, Sarah Gilroyed, Deborah Paquette, Sandra Pollard, Shelley Broadhurst, Cathie Sarafinchan, Carol Quilliam, and Carol Chabot.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. According to Standing Order 7(5), I would request that the Government House Leader share with us the business for the week commencing March 20.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'll be happy to provide that information. On Monday, March 20, in the afternoon we will of course deal with private members' business and written questions 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9. Then we will deal with motions for returns numbered 1 through 19. Depending on how time goes here, I expect we will deal with second reading of Bill 205, the Continuing Care Standards Act. On Monday evening we'll deal with some government motions, which will include the spring and Easter recesses and also the spring sitting adjournment. Later that evening we hope, at least, to deal with third reading on Bill 1 and Bill 3. Also, we would hope to deal with bills 10, 13, and 16 at second reading.

On Tuesday afternoon we should be able to be in Committee of the Whole and deal with bills 18, 17, and 10. On the Tuesday evening we hope to be in Committee of the Whole, dealing with bills 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 11.

On Wednesday, March 22, in the afternoon I think it's important to note that immediately following question period, at whatever time it ends, the House will recess so that we can get ready for the Budget Address at 3:30 p.m. In the evening I expect we will deal with the government motion that pertains to Standing Orders of the House.

On Thursday afternoon I anticipate that we will be able to receive Royal Assent, Mr. Speaker, for Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, and perhaps other bills as available. At the same time under Government Motions we would be pleased to hear the opposition leader's responses to the budget.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1

Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

The Chair: Anyone wish to speak on the amendment? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak to the amendment. Just to refresh members' memories, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview moved an amendment to Bill 1, that the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act be amended in section 3. Basically, the key point is 2.1, that "The Minister of Finance shall not invest the Fund or any portion of the Fund in securities of companies in the tobacco industry."

This, in our view, is very fitting given a couple of facts. First of all, this is a bill that deals with cancer prevention, and one of the leading causes of cancer, the cause that is probably best researched and best documented as a direct cause of lung and other cancers, is the use of tobacco. So I think that it would be not only fitting if this amendment were passed but extraordinarily ironic if it were not because the government does have a history of allowing these investments in tobacco companies.

For example, if you look at the heritage savings trust fund 2005 annual report in schedule 12, there's a schedule of the 10 largest issues based on fair value. Japan Tobacco is the eighth largest investment in that schedule, and the fair value of the stock held in the heritage trust fund in Japan Tobacco Inc. is $4,785,000. So it's clear that the government has not taken steps, at least with respect to the heritage trust fund, to ensure that this money is not invested in tobacco companies.

Mr. Chairman, we have a bill, which I think is a fine bill, called the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, which is attempting to make investments in order to conduct research with respect to preventing cancer. I think it would be a shame – in fact, I think it would be completely unacceptable if money that the government put into this fund for that purpose was actually invested in corporations which produce products that are directly linked to the causing of cancer, so I am ever hopeful that the government will accept this amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. We need to put our mouth where our money is in this case. That means making sure that the public money that's invested in a fund for cancer research in fact be money that will work in a way that will not be contradicting the intentions for which it was invested in the first place.

It's very important that all members of the House support this amendment. I think it signals that not only are we prepared to put some money in, not only are we prepared to put our voice in the fight against cancer, but we're also willing to make decisions, hard decisions, in a practical way that lead towards the prevention of cancer and which further the fight and further the principles that are enunciated in Bill 1, which is, as I said, an excellent bill and something we'd like to support. Certainly, this amendment will make the bill much more consistent with its stated purpose, and we believe that it should be supported.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before we recognize the next speaker, might we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very, very special group of individuals who have been working with me and, in fact, advising me regarding the debate on this particular Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. They are from a school in my constituency, Oliver school, and all enrolled in a special program called the Nellie McClung school for girls. I would like them to please rise as I call their names. The two instructors that are with them today are Mrs. Heather Jubenvill and Mrs. Elizabeth Fraser. Also with them are the students also known as the BLAST girls: Taylor Pinch, Kelsey Roehler, Haylee Fortin, Emily Dutton, Katherine Shimazaki, Tsue Anderson, and Allisha Rivera. With them is my constituency manager, Keltie Watson. Please give them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Bill 1

Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you. I'd like to start off by saying that I support the concept of this amendment. I am concerned at the broadness of it, though, that if a fund manager were to purchase an index stock, they would be in violation of something here. I would be much more comfortable if this amendment could be altered just slightly to say direct investment. It's just my view on it, but I concur with what the hon. member is trying to accomplish. I think that if we could look at it from the point of view of it being a direct investment, I would have absolutely no problem supporting it on that basis.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I'd just like to rise briefly in support of this amendment from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. You know, ethical investing should be a matter of course for any government, and I was hoping that that was the case with the current government. From what I heard just a few moments ago from the leader of the third party, that may not entirely be the case, so I think it's important that we do have an amendment in this bill ensuring that no money at all is put into the tobacco industry. It certainly would be hypocritical, to put it mildly, for a cancer prevention legacy to be connected in any way, shape, or form to one of the leading causes of preventable cancer in the world.

I don't know what the government's stand is on this amendment right now, but I certainly hope they support it. It's straightforward. I understand some of the points you made, but very clearly some companies are tobacco companies. It says: do not invest in them. I think it's very clear. I don't know if we really need another amendment to it. Perhaps he may want to yet, but in the meantime, until it is amended, I think this is certainly a worthwhile amendment, and I support it wholeheartedly.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to be on the record. My comments are very similar to those that have been articulated by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and as one of the individuals in this Assembly that sits on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, I think it is a good start towards perhaps developing a comprehensive policy towards ethical investing in that fund. I certainly hope that that fund grows significantly larger. When we look at this bill and this amendment that is proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment, and the reasons were articulated, I thought, very well by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Please support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Listening to the debate and following on the heels of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar with regard to the support of this amendment, I too would like to support this amendment. However, I also have concerns, as were expressed by my colleague from Airdrie-Chestermere, about potentially having the phraseology changed so that it was direct investment in those types of companies. The investment world as we know it today sometimes has groups of investments, blocks of investments. Sometimes it's a fund of sorts. Sometimes it could be a very large investment. We're talking about a very large fund here, which I think we can separate out, and we can make some strategic changes to the way that we do our investments. Certainly, when you're setting up something that is related to cancer and tobacco, you want to have that separation because it just makes sense to do so.

So I would also like to indicate my support if we could get the changes to the wording so that it really did narrow it down and thereby not hinder any earning potential, which would have the benefit of earning more dollars for cancer research and for the cancer issues. I don't want to limit it so much so that we limit the earning potential of the fund. Although I do agree with the amendment and the intention of the amendment, I just want to make sure that we're not going to do something that would jeopardize the long-term viability of the fund.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to speak in support of this amendment. I know that there's been some concern expressed by a number of members this afternoon about perhaps being a little more specific as to identifying direct investment, and I understand, in fact, that there may be some work being done as I speak towards a subamendment. I'm hopeful that that will be coming forward, and perhaps we can have the support of the House on the amended amendment because this is really important.

I'd like to remind the House that last year during question period I asked a question of the Minister of Finance on this particular issue, that being the investment of funds from the heritage savings trust fund in tobacco companies. I was very disappointed, unfortunately, in the answer that I received from the Finance minister. What I was told at that time was that the primary, overriding concern when it came to investing funds from the heritage savings trust fund was return on investment. That is a concern for me, and I think it should be a concern for all Albertans, not simply when it comes to the funds invested from this act but, in fact, as my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned, in general the funds that are invested from the heritage savings trust fund.

If return on investment is the overarching criterion that we look at when we decide how to invest those funds, we could be investing in all sorts of things, whether it be tobacco companies – it might be legalized brothels. It could be weapons of mass destruction. Let your mind wander. It could go on and on. [interjections] We could be investing in casinos, as my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark said, and Edmonton-Gold Bar suggests perhaps even oil companies.

To get back to the particular amendment, Mr. Chairman, I think that given the prevalence of cancer, given the overarching support from all sides of the House for Bill 1, and given the recognition, I think, in general in society today of the negative effects of tobacco, it simply would be wrong to take money from this fund and invest it in tobacco companies. So I wholeheartedly support the amendment, and I'm hopeful that we'll see a subamendment that will make the amendment a little more palatable to all members of the House so that we can make this very important change to Bill 1 and thereby ensure that it gets the full support of all the members of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise with anticipation on the amendment to Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. We certainly have been very pleased to see the construction and development of this bill over these past weeks and months. I think that the bill's best quality, certainly, is that it provides some sense of hope for people not just who have been afflicted by cancer and looking for treatment but otherwise looking to prevention and lifestyle and societal changes that would reduce the incidence of cancer in our society in general.

It's an unfortunate side effect of the industrialization of North America and specifically here in Alberta that our cancer rates are rising. One of the most interesting aspects of that is, of course, the accumulated effects of carcinogens in our atmosphere and in our water and in our land. As we move along from 1930 to 1940 and so on and so on, each layer of increased industrialization adds another layer of long-term carcinogenic components to our environment. So we have to be aware of that. Certainly, mortality is a fact for all of us, but there is a way to reduce our cancer rates considerably by looking at the prevention side as opposed to the treatment side.

Our amendment specifically is looking at one obvious carcinogenic element that is in our society and identifying it as such and not investing in the promotion of the use of that carcinogenic material in the future so that we might reduce the cancer rate. It would be removing an obvious irony in this bill that has been pointed out by a number of people around this House and in the media as well that, of course, if we are investing in preventing cancer in our society, then certainly we must steer away from those parts of our behaviour and processes in our economy that, in fact, do promote cancer. To not be investing in the tobacco industry I recognize is a little bit delicate. An hon. member from across the way mentioned about the enormity of funds and how mutual funds are lumped and grouped together, but I think that we might be able to find a way around that.

Certainly, the history of ethical investment portfolios is quite advanced in our society. They've been around for more than 30 years in the investment community. It's becoming a very sophisticated way to avoid certain harmful investments. You know, tobacco has been identified as one of the very first places for ethical investment to not go. So I'm sure that there would be some sophisticated advice around that we could access so that the provincial government in fact is not investing in tobacco products.

It's interesting because, of course, we are assisting the provincial Cancer Board here, which already has a set of ethical investment precepts. By subsuming that somehow or stepping in the way of their ethical investment guidelines by the absence of ethical guidelines in our larger Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, it's again an irony that we would be best to avoid here in building this bill.

I'm certainly glad to see the spirit of co-operation and, perhaps, compromise abuzz around the room as I speak, and I hope that all members might consider some compromise here that will be delivered to you shortly.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to my hon. colleague across the way for agreeing to accept a minor amendment to this. It would be a subamendment that would read this way: "The Minister of Finance shall not make any direct investment of the Fund or any portion of the Fund in securities of companies in the tobacco industry." On that basis I am confident that my caucus will also support this change.

The Chair: So you're moving a subamendment?

Ms Haley: Yes, I am.

The Chair: We'll call this subamendment SA1. Does everyone have it circulated to them? Anyone wish to speak on the subamendment? The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that this compromise really shows how this House can work. In celebrating the hundred years of democracy of Alberta, seeing the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere work together so closely to get this done, I'm really proud. I'm sure that the Speaker a hundred years from today will say that on this date, this is what happened. Congratulations.

Mr. Martin: Maybe we can get a lot of bills changed here in the future, Mr. Chairman.

I certainly support the subamendment. Having been in the business at one time of selling mutual funds, I understand some of the concerns. At least this is clear. I would hope it will still send the message to the fund managers that even if they can find out down the way about some of these funds, they shouldn't be doing it. So it sends a precaution. It makes it clear that Japan Tobacco, for instance, should not be part of this particular fund. We will certainly support it on this side of the House.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, I want to thank all the hon. members for consideration of our subamendment. Certainly, our investment management group do their very best to manage our funds in the way that can bring the best return to support the good work that our endowments and other funds that they manage can carry out.

This will certainly be of great assistance. As the hon. members know, quite often you buy a composite of a particular fund. This, I think, suggests that we do not want to invest in tobacco funds, but a composite may carry a very small portion. I think that would be quite – "unavoidable" is a good word – inadvertent. You would not want to take away from the value of this great legacy endowment by an inadvertent investment. So I appreciate all hon. members' input into this and support for this.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on subamendment SA1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 carried]

The Chair: On amendment A1 as amended, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 as amended carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. We have now voted on the amendment and are continuing in Committee of the Whole?

An Hon. Member: Right.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I really welcome this opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I had introduced a group of students from the Nellie McClung school, which is housed in the Oliver school in my constituency. The material I'm about to present has been researched and brought forward by these young women, and I wanted them in the gallery to see what happens when you become an advocate for positive change and work the process through to bring it to the floor of this Assembly. So I really welcome the opportunity to do this, and thank you for co-operating with me.

In Bill 1 we are attempting to set up three purposes with the bill around a cancer legacy. That is to be able to fund research, testing and screening is the second portion, and the third portion is prevention. I think that we could all agree that a major part of prevention is getting people to quit smoking or, better yet, getting them to never start in the first place. I'll tell that you as someone who started smoking in grade 6 and smoked for 32 years, it is a very, very difficult thing to withstand the marketing that constantly comes at you. Once you're addicted, you're addicted. This is a stronger addiction than heroin, and it's very difficult to quit once you start. You need a lot of support.

I would say that the group that is most vulnerable to targeted marketing is teens. Although tobacco companies say that they don't target teens, yes, they do. We've been quite successful through a number of initiatives, some of them government generated, some of them generated by various agencies in the community, in getting smoking rates to decrease; in other words, getting people to quit and, as part of that, not having people start, except that just recently the Canadian Tobacco Use Monitoring Survey showed us that, in fact, for current smokers aged 15 to 19 – and these are Alberta statistics – that number started to go up in the 2005 survey. It was decreasing, and it has started to increase. That increase represents 12,400 new teen smokers – new teen smokers – people we didn't have smoking before.

There is a prevention method available that we think is quite successful. Last Friday I was invited to attend Oliver school for a presentation. As I said before, Oliver is home to the Nellie McClung school for girls grades 7 to 9, and that is a girls-only school. They had a presentation that was put together by a group that I think is self-titled the BLAST group. I introduced them earlier. That includes their instructor, Mrs. Jubenvill. Taylor, Kelsey, Haylee, Emily, Katherine, Tsue, Jessica, and Allisha were the members of the group.

What they would like to do is get power walls banned. Now, for those of you who are not familiar with power walls, in fact you are familiar with power walls. You may just not know that that's what they're called. Especially in convenience stores, when you go to the checkout, you look behind the cashier and what you see is a wall of little cigarette packages. It's a whole wall. It usually goes from about waist level right up over the six-foot level. So when you look at the clerk, as you're talking to them and paying, all you can see are these cigarette packages. It usually fills up the whole space. That's the power wall that I'm talking about. They're point of sale tobacco displays that are placed at or near the checkout counter in many retail stores and particularly in convenience stores, like Mac's or 7-Elevens. When you look at who is frequenting those convenience stores, by far and away the most frequent visitors are people in that teen smoking group that I was talking about, the 15 to 19.

These power walls are paid advertisements for the tobacco industry. They spend a lot of money doing this. They're serious about it. In 2004 the industry paid retailers across Canada $95 million for these power walls.

What's really insidious about this is that the power walls are deliberately displaying tobacco products in close proximity to products that you would expect teenagers to buy, like gum and chocolate bars, candy. They're entirely entitled to buy that, and you would expect most teenagers to be in a store at the counter buying gum and chocolate bars. What goes just knitted with that are these power walls. So it's saying over and over and over again: candy, gum, okay; tobacco . . . okay. So it's a very effective tobacco marketing tool. That's the description of what the power walls are.

What the Nellie girls did, if I may call them that, this BLAST group, is a project on smoking and nicotine, and it had a number of components. They did the research on what was out there, they did site visits to test some things out and see whether they could get retailers to sell them tobacco products, they created a video, they organized the presentation that happened on March 10, and they did a postcard campaign.

When they did the research, they found that a number of other provinces have passed legislation specifically banning power walls. That includes Saskatchewan, who was I think the first jurisdiction to specifically prohibit the display of tobacco products in retail outlets. In fact, one of the students, Katherine, provided me with a copy of the Saskatchewan legislation, and I will table that at the conclusion of my debate. So we've got Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nunavut, Quebec, Ontario, and Prince Edward Island. All passed legislation that in one way or another is talking about prohibiting these power walls. The newest one was in fact the Northwest Territories. On March 2, two weeks ago today actually, I think, the Northwest Territories passed the Tobacco Control Act through final reading and Royal Assent. It includes prohibiting the visible display of tobacco products at the point of purchase, the very power walls we're talking about.

They did the research on what was already out there and who was already involved in this kind of thing. They did a really cool video in which they had, like, a little spy camera in a bag, and they went into a number of stores and did a couple of things. They tried to purchase cigarettes and were refused outright from buying the cigarettes. But in a couple of places – yeah, I'm quoting here: "Though not part of the final documentary at one point we asked to buy a package of cigarettes for our 'Mom' and were told if we were to come back with our Mother's ID we could purchase a package." So, gee, that'd be hard. Just to have to nip that driver's licence out of mum's purse, down to the convenience store, and you've got a pack of cigarettes, which is a little alarming. I mean, highly illegal, but very alarming that they managed to do that. And they didn't even try hard. They had their little spy camera, and they just walked in there and did this stuff. Right?

The purpose of the video was around buying other substances that were for sale in these locations that contained the same product or similar products. Nicotine is what I'm talking about. Their point is that there are no age restrictions on the patch. There are age restrictions on purchasing cigarettes but no age restrictions on purchasing the patch. One of them had heard about inmates in prisons taking the patch and soaking it and getting the nicotine out of it and then rolling up, I think, tissue paper and smoking that. That's how they were getting the nicotine into their systems in the correction facilities. They thought: "Well, if that's a way to get nicotine, maybe we could get that as teenagers. Let's try it." So they went into the store.

They note that, depending on which type you buy, the levels of nicotine in the patches is still very high. That makes sense. You get somebody like me that smoked for 30 years, you're going to have to get some serious drugs at work to help me move off and break that addiction. So very high levels of nicotine. I mean, I smoked more than a pack of cigarettes a day. If you're going to try and wean me off that drug, you're going to have to start with a fairly high level of nicotine. That's what they were trying to make the point about, that they were able to purchase these nicotine patches and walk out. They could access the actual drug that we're all trying to stay away from and that really has an addictive component.

I believe, if I'm remembering this right, they actually were able to get clerks to agree to sell them the patches, of course, again for their mom. But it was quite alarming to them and, I think, really opened their eyes to both how loose the monitoring is in these stores but also that the commitment is not really strong from everybody out there to be very careful about the marketing of these products and the availability of the products.

The other thing the BLAST team did was that they organized the presentation. They had a really hot young man that came in, which didn't hurt, and talk to the assembled classes.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell us more about this man. How young was he?

Ms Blakeman: I don't know how young he was. But, yeah, he was very nice looking, and that didn't hurt. He was a young guy, so he was speaking directly to them and talking about the power walls.

Mr. MacDonald: Not to you. To them.

Ms Blakeman: No, not to me. Oh, man. Some days.

He was talking about having worked on the legislation for the power walls in Saskatchewan, a very effective presentation. It was very clever of the BLAST girls to work with ASH, actually, to bring this fellow in because I think he was quite effective in getting the message across with that particular group. So talk about marketing.

One of the things that they showed was a video that came out of Ontario. This is what really grabbed me because this video interviewed 160 teenagers in Ontario, none of whom smoked. They did things like ask them, you know: what colour is a pack of Du Maurier cigarettes? What colour is Player's?

An Hon. Member: Red.

Ms Blakeman: Exactly. I'm getting answers from across the floor.

What's alarming about this is that they were able to answer all the questions correctly, and how did they know that? None of these teenagers smoked. How did they know that Du Maurier was a red package? Well, because every time they went to buy a pack of gum, every time they went to buy a Kit Kat chocolate bar or an Oh Henry, they were looking at them because they were part of the power wall behind the clerk at the point of purchase when you went to pay for your gum. So they knew what all the names of the major cigarette brands were. They knew the colour and what the package looked like.

The young fellow was saying that one of the reasons that he started smoking a particular brand was because his favourite was red, so he chose the red brand of cigarette. I mean, there are no marketing mistakes here, Mr. Chairman. This is quite deliberate on the part of tobacco companies. They pay a lot of money to figure this stuff out, and it's very effective. It works.

Here we have a whole group of teenagers who know a lot about brand names and colours of cigarettes. They were asked: what would you suggest? What do you think would make a difference here? They were the ones that said: "Take the power walls away. We don't want and need to see those cigarettes when we go to buy gum or a chocolate bar or a soda pop or whatever. We don't need to see that stuff." Really, for the people that smoke, they know it already, and they don't need to see it. The whole purpose of it being there is to get people who don't smoke to start smoking. Right?

They were suggesting that these power walls either be covered up or entirely moved away, and I think they're right. That's exactly what the BLAST girls are trying to do. They are trying to get this Assembly here, this government to understand that there is no reason except pure marketing to have those power walls in place, and they are asking that those power walls either be covered up or the merchandise be moved under the counter.

In following through on that, they did a postcard campaign, which they either have or they will be sending to the minister of health. It says: Powerwalls Target Youth – Ban Tobacco Retail Displays. It's a great picture of a little tiny head of a kid. His head is just barely clearing the checkout counter at a convenience store, and his whole view is filled with the power wall of cigarette packs. It's an excellent visual. This is the postcard that they have organized. They got it printed up and everything, and they've organized to send it to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Everybody who was at that presentation on Friday signed up for it, so they really did a lot of work on this campaign.

That's a wonderful example of a follow-through of public advocacy. These young women were really caught by something. They felt it was wrong. They felt it should be changed. They went out, and they did the research to make sure that they knew what they were talking about. They advocated amongst their friends and colleagues. They've taken it a further step with the postcards to the minister. They have briefed me as their elected representative to come before you in the Assembly while we're in Committee of the Whole and ask you to consider this.

Mr. Backs: They should be thanked for that.

Ms Blakeman: They should be thanked for their work.

I'm asking on behalf of the BLAST girls from the Oliver Nellie McClung school and in recognition of that prevention component of Bill 1, the cancer legacy bill: we want to ask the government to bring forward legislation to ban power walls.

I think it's important that we do thank Taylor, Kelsey, Haylee, Emily, Katherine, Tsue, Jessica, and Allisha. They did all the work that you need to do to change public policy, and I think we should reward them for their effort by taking what they did seriously. They've done a good thing here. I know that the BLAST girls are very happy to meet with the Minister of Health and Wellness, and I'm sure we can organize that if she's got time. The truth is that they've done all the work they need to do to make this happen.

At this point I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of an ad that's been created by Action on Smoking and Health, Campaign for a Smoke-Free Alberta, and Unite against Tobacco: The Place We're Most Exposed to Smoking Is Indoors. It shows the kid in front of the power wall. I'll table that, and, as promised, I would like to table the Tobacco Control Act, which is the Saskatchewan legislation. It's in section 2 that they get quite specific. So here is a sample for the government to look to and learn by. I'll pass that on as well in my tablings.

So thank you very much for the opportunity to get involved with a little citizens' action here today and work with students from my constituency, bring it forward to the Assembly. I know that many of you in here were paying attention, and I appreciate that. We're certainly supportive here on the opposition side to this legislation. It would be lovely to see the government be able to carry through on it. I look forward to seeing one of the government members before the end of the spring session bring forward some legislation to ban power walls.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak today in Committee of the Whole. I really appreciate it, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill as amended.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 1 as amended. It makes it a lot easier for all of us now to enthusiastically support Bill 1 with this very important amendment which the House has just voted on and voted unanimously, for a change. This is a very good omen. Without sounding Pollyannish about it, I hope that this spirit of co-operation flourishes in this House as we step into the second century of the history of this Legislature.

It is important that pieces of legislation that are vital to the health of us as Albertans and as individuals, vital to the health of our communities and of the province, health being used in the broadest sense of the meaning of the term, receive careful debate, intense debate, engaging debate across all sides of the House and that we, in the spirit of compromise and trying to seek to vote on the best possible legislation that we can agree on, will continue to negotiate on important pieces of legislation into this session and beyond as Albertans expect it.

With respect to what's happened here with respect to the acceptance of this amendment by this House, I'm heartened, and I know that my constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona would be very heartened, to notice that it is possible once in a while in this House for us to talk across this very wide space that separates us, the two sides of the House, and listen to each other and come to agreements that make sense, that appeal to the common objectives that Albertans expect this House to pursue, that serve the public interest, and that are to the benefit of all Albertans. So I'm very pleased about the passage of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to make a quick note of an important word in the title of the bill, "prevention." I think we need to move in a determined way towards prevention of disease across the spectrum, and let's start with cancer. This bill is titled Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. It is designed to prevent the spread of cancer, to reduce the incidence of cancer through research, through education, through public policy development, and through what's called social marketing initiatives. This bill will establish a fund called the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund, from which monies can be allocated to support these activities of policy development or research, education, et cetera. That's all very good.

I notice that in section 6 of the bill under the payments from the fund, section 6(4) says, "The Minister may impose terms and conditions on the making of grants, including conditions that the money be granted only to match funds provided by others." It doesn't say that that's the only concern that the minister will have. The minister can impose conditions for other reasons as well.

I want to make sure that I'm on record speaking on behalf of the NDP caucus here. Research on tobacco use and diseases associated with tobacco use is sometimes funded by the very companies that produce the product to sell. Certainly, the tobacco companies are very strong and powerful corporate players, and they often want to promote research at the same time that the consumption of the product that they produce promotes the spread of cancer. So I hope that the minister would impose conditions, including that research the minister comes to know is funded by tobacco companies themselves will not qualify for drawing on the fund, for matching funds from this fund. I think it would be totally contradictory to the spirit and the purpose of the fund for such decisions to happen, where tobacco company funded research is also funded from this research.

I'm hoping that this can be either dealt with in the regulations or, at least, the minister will agree with what I'm saying, that the spirit of this bill now and the consensus around this House with respect to what this bill is about demand that there be a clear separation, that the research, education, and other projects that this fund will be used to fund will be stand alone, independent at least of the kind of research that tobacco companies may also be interested in funding.

We know that drug companies, tobacco companies have their own set of conditionalities for the recipients of their research funds. The case of Professor Dr. Nancy Olivieri at the University of Toronto is the most recent case in Canada that comes to mind, where she was asked to suppress the findings of drug trial results because the company felt that publishing those results in a publicly accessible outlet would jeopardize the commercial interests of the company. The results of the research happened to be negative with respect to the use of the drug and the side effects of the drug. Dr. Olivieri came under enormous pressure both from the university administration and from the companies because as a scientist she thought that her first obligation was to the public interest and to maintaining the integrity of the research enterprise that she was so proud to have been undertaking for a very long time.

There are conflicts between the interests of companies that fund certain kinds of research and the kinds of interests that this bill, hopefully, will promote. I'm very, very supportive of the bill. I just want to make sure that the Minister of Finance takes into account these conflicts of interest and contradictions and says very clearly and firmly that this fund will be available to those research projects and those other education projects which don't receive funding from corporate interests which have an interest in promoting the use of drugs.

Mr. Chairman, this weed called tobacco is really a highly carcinogenic weed. We know this, and its use should be discouraged as much as it can be discouraged through public policy, through education, through community-based initiatives. We need to proceed with legislation such as exists in our neighbouring province to the east: the Tobacco Control Act. I know that the government of B.C. tried several times to make illegal the advertising of tobacco use by tobacco companies, and it ran into some difficulties at the Supreme Court level. Perhaps the Saskatchewan province's act on controlling tobacco use would serve as a better model to proceed with legislation in this province. I hope that in the wake of the passage of this bill in this House the government will take the initiative to bring forward another piece of legislation which will reinforce both the purposes, the goals, and the spirit of this act so that this huge amount of money, money Albertans are putting into this act, is not indirectly lost because we have failed to act on bringing forward legislation that will discourage both the marketing of tobacco and its use.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you for this opportunity.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 1 in committee. When we look at cancer rates across this province and across this country, this legislation is certainly needed. We have to listen to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona when he reminds us that this bill is the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, and prevention is certainly, I would agree, the key word here.

When we look at some of the past actions of this government, we see that this legislation is certainly refreshing. What I mean by past actions, Mr. Chairman, is that it's not that long ago, in the last six years, that there was a lack of radiation therapists in this province, and the few that we were training were leaving the province, being recruited to work elsewhere. It got to the point where there were a significant number of these skilled professionals recruited from Australia. These individuals settled in Calgary, and they were coming up here on a daily basis. They were flown up to Edmonton to work here at the Cross Cancer Institute to reduce the significant backlog that was going on there.

I read in here, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of this act is "to support and encourage cancer prevention initiatives, including research, education, public policy development and social marketing initiatives and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing . . ." I'm certainly pleased to read that, and I encourage the government to be mindful of what happened when we had some significant lists, some lengthy lists of individuals waiting for cancer treatment. To be diagnosed with that disease is dreadful, is horrifying, and then to know that you have to wait for some time to receive treatment: I can't imagine what that's like. That's why I would expect everyone here to support this initiative.

Mr. Chairman, we look at our society and the 10 most common environmental toxins. We have PCBs. We have pesticides. We have mould and other fungal toxins. We have asbestos. We have dioxins. We have volatile organic compounds, or VOCs. We have chloroform. We have chlorine. We have heavy metals like arsenic, mercury, lead, aluminum, cadmium. In question period earlier the hon. Member for Stony Plain was talking about another coal-fired generator going in around Lake Wabamun. We look at the effect, for instance, that that coal-fired plant will have on the local environment.

I think that we should go one step further with this bill and have a look at some of the policy positions that were developed in this book, Mr. Chairman: Creating a Healthy Future. This is the very book that was tossed. This is the very one that was tossed by the Premier on March 1, 2006, in this Legislative Assembly. This is the one. I think it is an historical document. Many people in the province have already signed this because they agree with me that this is a piece of Alberta history. I would like to toss around some of the ideas that are presented in this book. Certainly, on that day I was surprised to see the page startled, and I was surprised to see the government whip was startled. It was amazing to see the reaction on the face of the government whip. But I'm getting off topic here, and I'm being encouraged by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

I would like to say this. We look at the environmental consequences at a site such as the one that was described by the hon. Member for Stony Plain, where we're going to burn coal, we're going to produce electricity, and hopefully we're going to capture and compress the flue gas stream from that facility and use that for enhanced oil recovery, Mr. Chairman. But when we develop these facilities and we look at the production of heavy metals through this flue gas stream, perhaps it's time – and it's not specifically in this legislation. One could look at the regulations and say: well, it could be developed in the regulations, or it could be interpreted through the purpose of this act, Bill 1. Policy position 1 from this document, this famous document, Creating a Healthy Future, requires major policies and funding decisions to undergo health impact assessments. The whole idea of an HIA, or health impact assessment, I think, should be incorporated into this bill.

Most of the important factors in determining our health have nothing to do with the health care system, lifestyle choices, or injury prevention, Mr. Chairman. Despite this, most government departments fail to consider the effects that their policies may have on health. Not only government does this; industry does this as well. I've worked in industry all my life, and some of my contemporaries have passed on or are fighting this very disease that we are trying to reduce and eliminate in this bill. Cancer rates are high, and unfortunately with some kinds of cancer they're going even higher. So we have a lot of work to do. If we want to reduce the rate of cancer and reduce expenditures for public health care, health impact assessments are something that I hope we can work into this legislation. A health impact assessment would examine a policy's potential effect on a wide range of factors that influence the health of our society, including, as I said, the environment.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

What effect would a specific proposed policy have on the health of Albertans or, Mr. Chairman, in this case the rate of cancer in the general population? This idea of studying the potential health impacts of various projects would be a step that certainly would be in line with the whole idea of the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I said earlier that this health impact assessment could certainly control health care spending by building a healthier society. I think we all must work together towards this goal, Mr. Chairman. With a health impact assessment this bill, I think, would be improved.

There are other parts of this document that certainly have caught the eye of health care planners, and I would encourage all members of this Assembly and all people, whether they're involved with the Cancer Board or the Minister of Health and Wellness or other departments within government, that are hopefully doing some long-term planning, to take a look at this whole idea of health impact assessments and how they could help us reduce the rates of this dreadful, horrible disease. This disease is certainly affecting many families, and when we set up this fund, I think we have to remember where we were six years ago and what I talked about when we had a shortage of radiation therapists in this province and what it meant to those who were diagnosed with the disease, with cancer.

So, hopefully, that will not happen again. Hopefully, this money will not have to be used to pay overtime because there is a shortage of these skilled professionals, and hopefully through this bill we will recognize that we always have to be training staff. We have to recognize that some are going to go to British Columbia; some are going to go to Saskatchewan; some may even go to California. I don't think we can point fingers when we're so aggressively recruiting these individuals from places as far away as Australia, but we have to make sure that we have the professionals in place.

After I conclude my remarks, I'm going to have a look at the annual report from the Alberta Cancer Board and just see the staff that are currently there and also, if I can through the financial statements, find out the rate of overtime. Hopefully, it will not be the same as it was three years ago, Mr. Chairman, because that statistic indicates that we still have a problem with recruiting and retaining these professionals.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks, but hopefully in the future another good, sound idea from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview will be considered by this government, and that is the idea of incorporating into their long-term planning having a health impact assessment. Let's see if we can reduce some of these cancer-causing agents that are, unfortunately, too common in our environment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just some brief comments on Bill 1, the amended Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I, too, would like to add my name to those members who have congratulated the Assembly this afternoon for the tremendous co-operation involved in amending this act. I believe that all Albertans will be better served by that change.

I also want to make a brief comment about the girls from Nellie McClung school that were here this afternoon. In light of the celebration yesterday, Mr. Chairman, of the 100 years of democracy, to see young leaders in our community involved to the extent that these young ladies were for an issue and a cause which they are obviously very passionate about I think is just a wonderful thing, and it speaks very well for the future of this province.

I'd like to congratulate as well my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre, again, in the spirit of democracy for, I think, setting a tremendous example for all members, showing that, in fact, democracy is a bottom-up process, a two-way street. So it's not just us getting up in this Assembly and talking about our views, but it's actually listening to our constituents and encouraging them to bring their ideas forward and then showing them, literally step-by-step, how the process can work, to the point where these young ladies as part of their CEEDs – CEEDs stands for curriculum enrichment and extension days – actually used one of those days to come to our Assembly today, Mr. Chairman, and see the next evolution of the process that they had worked on. So I just think that's a wonderful initiative by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre.

The other evening, Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. Minister of Economic Development speak on Bill 1. He spoke very openly and frankly and passionately about cancer and Bill 1 and the efforts contained in this bill to work towards eventually preventing and eliminating so many different kinds of cancer. I just wanted to thank the minister for the manner in which he addressed that situation. I think we've all heard that when you're dealing with cancer, attitude is everything. Clearly the minister has a great attitude as it relates to his particular struggle and journey with the demon cancer, and it was quite heartwarming to hear his address the other evening.

Mr. Chairman, I'm sure that every MLA who has spoken to Bill 1 has commented on the fact that they have in some way been touched by cancer, and certainly this MLA is no different. I lost grandparents to cancer, I lost a father-in-law to cancer, and I have a wife who is a cancer survivor. So it certainly touches close to all of us.

I support this bill totally, especially now with the amendment that was passed this afternoon. I look forward to seeing, hopefully, the positive impacts that it will have in the future for the citizens of this province.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and look forward to further debate in committee or perhaps in third. I felt it important to get those comments on the record because I think there has been some very good work done in this Assembly today. In the spirit of the 100 years of democracy that we've been celebrating yesterday and today, I think it's especially important to acknowledge that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 1, Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, as amended?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 1 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 2 Drug-endangered Children Act

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Firstly, I'd like to take the opportunity to briefly mention and acknowledge the hard work of one member of my staff, who is seated in the gallery this afternoon. Laura Alcock, the director of our Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, has worked extremely hard on this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to take the opportunity to address some of the questions asked during second reading. I was asked: why don't we just amend the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act? We've heard from stakeholders all over this province that a smaller, stand-alone piece of legislation would be more effective. It will be clear, it will be concise, and it will not be buried within a much larger piece of legislation. This will ensure that drug-endangered children receive the attention and protection they need. This means that it's more likely to be understood and used than an amendment. We need to make sure that this legislation won't be misinterpreted.

Some members also asked: how many drug-endangered children live in our province? Mr. Chair, because drug-endangered children aren't clearly defined under the enhancement act, we don't currently track the number of children who fall into this category. Furthermore, because Albertans aren't aware of the dangers children face when exposed to drug manufacturing and trafficking, we believe a number of incidences go unreported. But the fact of the matter is that more than once a week we're forced to remove a child from an environment where drugs are being made or sold. This is an emerging social issue in our province, and we need to be able to respond.

One of my colleagues also asked if this bill will help 30, 300, or 3,000 children. As far as I'm concerned, Mr. Chair, one child that has to grow up in such a damaging physical and social environment is one too many, but from what the police and our caseworkers are telling us, the problem affects far more than one child in our province.

There was also a concern during second reading that a child would be apprehended and left without family. Mr. Chair, these children are being abused, and their health and safety are in jeopardy. Apprehending a child is a serious matter and one my ministry does not take lightly. If the child can't be returned home within two days, an application for future care and longer term services would be made under the enhancement act. Under the enhancement act we make every effort to place children with their extended family and within their community.

I was also asked to specify which chemicals were referred to in Bill 2. Mr. Chair, it's very important that we don't limit the effectiveness of this legislation. The recipe for crystal meth is easily available on the Internet, and the ingredients are easy to come by. If there is any doubt, all members need to do is go online to see a number of recipes using a variety of ingredients. Cold medicine, iodine, paint thinner, drain cleaners are just some of the ingredients that can be used in meth. Because these ingredients are common and innocuous on their own, we were very careful to ensure that a guardian must not only possess the chemicals but must also have the intent of using them to manufacture illicit drugs.

A few years ago ecstasy was the drug of choice and the use of crystal meth was just beginning. Who knows what new or reinvented drug will present a risk down the road. Bill 2 will help us to respond to the emerging social issue, not only now but in the future as well.

A question was raised: what constitutes a cannabis grow op? Mr. Chair, the decision to remove a child from a cannabis grow operation would not be based on the number of plants presented. Instead, we look at the likelihood a child would be harmed if the child was to remain in that environment. Bill 2 is designed to protect children from serious illegal drug activity that poses a significant threat to the well-being and the safety of the child.

There were also some concerns that Bill 2 would allow the state to intervene in people's homes. Mr. Chair, the purpose of this legislation is to protect children exposed to serious drug-related activities such as manufacturing and trafficking. It will allow caseworkers to better protect children.

I've also been asked about one part of the bill that states that a child can be apprehended without an order if a child's life, health, or safety is in jeopardy. There is some concern that this may be abused. Mr. Chair, staff will be well trained so they understand when this is an appropriate response. Furthermore, the same provision currently exists under the enhancement act, and it is not abused.

One of my colleagues also asked how we prove a child has been or is likely to be physically, emotionally, or sexually abused. Mr. Chair, that definition is clearly set out in the enhancement act.

I was also asked whether this bill comes with any resources. This bill clarifies and focuses that attention on actions that can be taken to protect children exposed to serious illegal drug activity such as manufacturing and trafficking. As such, we don't expect a lot of additional costs. We must keep in mind that if a child cannot be returned to their home after the initial two days, we'll turn to the enhancement act to provide support.

Finally, Mr. Chair, I was asked: what are we doing to address the root causes of this problem? The issues surrounding drug-endangered children are complex, urgent, and ongoing. Drug use is a problem, and it's up to government as a whole to work together to effectively address this issue. A number of cross-government ministries are under way to do that.

In July 2003 government formed a cross-ministry working group on crystal meth involving nine ministries. AADAC has a variety of programs that deal with drug use and addiction. A variety of crime prevention programs are also now in place, and most recently Mrs. Colleen Klein headed up the Crystal Meth Task Force. At Children's Services we have the advancing futures bursary program. This program provides bursaries to kids who are or have been in government care so that they have the opportunity to continue their education. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul has been doing some outstanding work with the Youth Secretariat. This secretariat works with youth to identify and address key issues facing our young people. We're also piloting projects in Edmonton and Calgary to develop new ways to work with high-risk youth. This includes special steering committees and programs targeted specifically at our high-risk youth.

Bill 2, Mr. Chair, is about protecting children. It will help us ensure that all Alberta children have the safe, healthy, supportive home they deserve, a home free from abuse. I ask all members to support this important piece of legislation and ensure a promising future for some of Alberta's most vulnerable children.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It gives me pleasure to speak to Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act, in Committee of the Whole. I will be supporting this bill. I think it is a good step forward in terms of addressing some of the serious issues, particularly as it relates to crystal meth and the growing problem of crystal meth but also the issue of marijuana grow operations and the dangers that they pose to Alberta's children.

I consulted rather extensively over the last few days with a number of members of various police forces that I know but particularly a member of the Edmonton Police Service, Doug Green, whom I have mentioned in this Assembly before. He is a school resource officer at Harry Ainlay high school and does a tremendous job educating children about the risks of crystal meth and other illicit drugs with the assistance of his black Lab, Ebony. Just a great program that he operates, and I would strongly encourage all members of this Assembly to seek out a presentation of Doug Green's. I'm more than willing to facilitate that at any time. It's just amazing to see the reaction of the children as they learn with the help of a passively trained drug dog not only what the dog is capable of doing but, of course, as part of the learning exercise the dangers of crystal meth and the other drugs that they're constantly faced with in their lives.

I also spoke at length with a superintendent of the RCMP, and both of these police officers that I've spoken with at length are supportive of this bill, and I think that shows that we're on the right track if both local Edmonton police and RCMP – actually, the RCMP officer I spoke with is in Richmond, B.C., so it's not just Alberta that we're talking about now but recognizing, of course, that this is a problem that extends beyond our borders.

A couple of things that they pointed out and that I'm glad to see are addressed in here. There's always a danger right now with crystal meth sort of being the drug that has caught the attention of the media, I suppose, as well as legislators and many parents for sure. I mean, there's just a general growing awareness of the dangers of this drug. There's always a danger, then, that we may pay a little too much attention to that drug at the expense of others, so both of the gentlemen in question were pleased to see that we've addressed the situation of marijuana grow ops because they, too, pose a serious danger to children, especially when it comes to issues of mould and toxicity. One of the comments from the RCMP officer was that any time you mix water and electricity, you're asking for trouble. The pesticides that are used in these operations – and let's extend it to other things, mushrooms as an example. I think the minister mentioned a few minutes ago that we never know what the next drug of choice might be. So certainly it appears that this bill is all encompassing, and that's good.

Some interesting things came out of the conversations with these officers as well. It's funny how these things work. I was able to consult with another RCMP drug officer this week who spoke to my Rotary club, giving a presentation on meth labs. One of the things that came out of that is that only three meth labs were busted in Edmonton last year. That is by large reason due to the fact that these operations have become smaller and more portable. They're not what we envision in terms of, you know, great big – I shouldn't say that they are not because there are still big operations, but they can be in a box and moved literally from location to location. The officer that spoke to the Rotary club on Wednesday indicated that, in fact, you can carry a box into a hotel room and manufacture a pound of crystal meth within four hours.

Interestingly enough, at my particular Rotary club the manager of the hotel where we have our club meetings is also a member of the club, so I asked the hotel manager whether or not he had had that experience. Indeed, they have had in that particular hotel two or three occasions where they have discovered meth labs. The staff has discovered meth labs right in the hotel. So it's a very real danger not just to children but to anybody that might be staying in that hotel. For all you know, there's a meth lab right next door on the other side of the wall in your hotel room. In fact, a number of hotels have now undertaken initiatives where they're training their staff what to look for in terms of whether or not there may be a meth lab in the hotel or may have been one operating.

This is interesting to me in that there are so few labs being found now as a result of the fact that they're becoming smaller and more portable, but I think it also illustrates, Mr. Chairman, the fact that children may be in even greater danger if, in fact, these things can be moved around as readily as they can.

The other fact that came forward from one of the gentlemen I spoke to was that in his experience – and he has spent a number of years on the drug squad – somewhere between 10 and 20 per cent of meth labs and marijuana grow operations will have children in the vicinity, actually in that particular structure. That as well causes us to support this bill. In particular, he mentioned hotels, as I've already outlined, but also daycare centres and schools and so forth that might be in the area of the meth labs. So while this bill addresses particularly children that might be housed in that structure, in that house or apartment or hotel room, there's certainly a concern as well for other children that might be in the vicinity.

So with those opening comments, then, I would like to just sort of go over some of the concerns that we have section by section in the committee stage, and perhaps with the minister's assistance we may be able to address some of these this afternoon.

Section 1. The minister did mention that not only are we talking about the possession of chemicals – and I do appreciate how difficult it is to define the chemicals – but the fact that the bill talks about the intent of manufacturing an illegal drug. The only question I would have there is: does the minister have any idea as to how we would actually define intent? Is it based on quantity, for instance? Again, most of us are aware or can easily find out which chemicals are involved in the manufacture of crystal meth, but are we talking about 45-gallon drums? Clearly, there's intent. Are we talking – and I would hope not. You know, a package of Sudafed probably wouldn't be included. So I'm wondering if the minister might just be able to identify for us how we're going to define the word "intent."

Certainly, I can share with this House that when I was speaking to the various police officers, they said that they're glad to see that we're talking about intent to manufacture because if you wait until the manufacturing is under way, that just doesn't make any sense. If these chemicals are present in any quantity or if there are some other criteria that show that, in fact, intent was there to manufacture, clearly the children are in danger and action would be required.

In section 2(9) we talk about "reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the child's life, health or safety is seriously and imminently endangered." The minister mentioned a few minutes ago that all of the police officers and directors would have training to help to identify both of those – that is, which would be reasonable and probable grounds – and also whether or not the children's health and safety is seriously and imminently endangered. The question I would have there would be: how much training? What would the training look like? Are we talking about a half-day course or a one-day course, or is it, perhaps, something more extensive that would help these various officials to know exactly when a child might be in imminent danger or their health jeopardized?

Section 2(10) again talks about a police officer or director may enter a premise and if necessary search for a child again using reasonable and probable grounds. Again, the same question is: just how much training is going to be in place to ensure that those officers do in fact use reasonable and probable grounds? Is the minister going to be able to ensure either through this legislation or perhaps in regulation that we won't have unauthorized or unwarranted searches of homes?

Section 3 under the heading Notice of Apprehension. There's discussion of notification to the guardian "by any method." This question may have been asked before. I didn't hear the minister answer it this afternoon, so if I can beg her forgiveness if it has been asked and answered before, I apologize. But it does raise some concerns as to just what "any method" might be and whether or not that is sufficient. Perhaps we should define a little more specifically how notification might be given.

I'm just using as an example, Mr. Chairman, a message left on an answering machine. We all know – certainly I know. I have teenage children, and I'm often left messages that disappear by the time I get home, and I would normally have received them. You know, I like to think that my home is relatively stable. If we're talking about some of these homes where the situation might not be as rosy, there are any number of scenarios that one could envision where notice might not arrive to the guardian. So I'm wondering if we could have, perhaps, some clarification on that. In B.C., as an example – and I'm sure that the minister probably is aware of this – their family and community service act requires that notice must, if practical, be in writing and must include a statement of the reasons for removing the child. So I would suggest that that might be a good idea for us to consider as well. Section 3(4), again under Notice of Apprehension, talks about "reasonable effort" having been used "to give notice in accordance with this section." I'm just wondering if the minister might be able to identify for us how we would define reasonable effort.

Again, Mr. Chairman, under item 4 of the notice of apprehension it talks about when a child is apprehended under the act, the director would have exclusive custody of the child and is responsible for the child's well-being. Perhaps the minister was addressing this when she talked about every effort being made to keep the child with family members because that was my question. Would we look first at perhaps an aunt or an uncle or a grandparent or some other stable situation where we might be able to place the child rather than putting them in an unfamiliar setting? I believe she did address that, and I do appreciate that.

Those are the questions that I would have in the committee stage, Mr. Chairman. As I said, despite the relatively minor concerns I have, certainly the members of law enforcement that I have spoken to are in favour of this bill. They think it's a step in the right direction. They do believe that we've covered our bases in terms of addressing not only crystal meth and the marijuana grow ops but also some of the other drugs, current and perhaps future, that might put children in danger. They support it, and I will be supporting the bill as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to rise and voice my support of Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act. I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the Minister of Children's Services, for bringing this legislation forward.

Mr. Chairman, Albertans reside in a province of great prosperity. We look after our children, communities, and in this respect, again, this is a great piece of legislation. Our children represent the future of our province, and we focus on protecting them from the harmful environment, even uncaring parents or parents who are into illegal activities. I think we cannot and must not fail those children.

When I look at this piece of legislation, there is a perspective, a common understanding that drug abuse only happens in what I call high-needs areas, or I could say a low-class neighbourhood, but actually it is not. It is prevalent in all areas of society. This law will help us to protect our children across the province, across all communities, across all cultural and ethnic groups.

I think that the most effective element of Bill 2 is that it suggests that a child that is exposed to an environment of illegal drug trade is endangered and, therefore, the victim of abuse. Intervention is then deemed necessary, and in my thought, Mr. Chairman, this will prove to be a very successful deterrent to any individual, those involved and those who may be considering becoming involved with drugs.

The fact that any child is living within this kind of unstable and dangerous environment is in itself a proof of abuse. The children can be harmed in many ways. The most obvious one is physical abuse, but in the long-term they suffer negative health effects, exposure to toxins and chemicals, and even more troubling, Mr.

Chairman, are the psychological consequences that children may face due to exposure to drug activity.

It is possible that affected children who live in an environment where illegal activity is normal may not understand that it is wrong. They may believe that the activity is morally acceptable, and they may even become prone to experimenting with such activity themselves in a later part of their lives. This would ultimately compound the problem even more. Bill 2 aims at preventing exactly that, and it will strike a hard blow to drug activity in Alberta while preserving the innocence of our children. I believe that the act will allow for children who are considered to be abused to be placed in an environment where they will be protected, loved, and nurtured. It will give them a home that fosters kindness and gives mutual respect. It will help to reinforce the solidity of the family dynamic.

Even further, this act will encourage communities to become more actively involved in detecting and reporting illegal drug activity. Communities must be seen as large families, as support networks where everyone is looking out for each other. As people become more vigilant in the defence of our youth, neighbourhoods from all over the province will have the opportunity to rid themselves of this kind of negative activity.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 2, as I read it in detail, is the first of its kind in Canada and will show the rest of the country that Albertans are prepared to take a stand in defence of the rights and welfare of our children and to stand up against illegal drug activities. This proposed legislation may also lead the way for others for improved and innovative ways for fighting drug crime.

I suggest that, following the lead of Bill 2, Albertans should look at legislation or city bylaws to create a tracking system designed to record and monitor hydroponic greenhouse equipment sales. It would aid in the fight against illegal marijuana grow operations. Hydroponic systems are commonly found in marijuana grow operations as they allow the plants to grow faster in a small area with no soil involved. These systems will grow a large number of plants in a relatively small area.

For equipment like this, commonly known as garden or greenhouse equipment, that the illegal grower relies upon to keep the operation concealed and running, the creation of a registry would allow all hydroponic greenhouse equipment sales from across the province to be traced to the individuals who purchased it. It could be argued that this would be seen as invasion of privacy, but I feel that it would simply serve to increase the transparency of the purchase. It would also provide valuable information for authorities should any illegal activity arise.

A current city of Edmonton business licence bylaw with regard to municipal pawnshops offers insight into how this could be accomplished. This bylaw requires that the licensee of a pawnshop obtain from the person pawning the goods detailed personal information: two pieces of identification; a description of the goods in question, including details such as make, model, serial number; and other information about the transaction. Now, in case of any illegal activity the authorities are able to trace the originals of the goods sold with the help of the information obtained at the time of the sale.

Another means of fighting crime in illegal drugs is looking at the money, tracing the money. Drug activity creates some benefits for drug-dealing people. The question should be asked why some people have no proven source of high income, no profession, and are of young age, and they own big homes, acquire expensive cars, keep expensive assets and large amounts of cash.

Now, I believe that a system of such monitoring of hydroponic greenhouse equipment and going after the money would be excellent mechanisms to help the province fight drug crime as well, so those are things that I suggest for further on.

As far as Bill 2 is concerned, I think this is an excellent piece of legislation, and I conclude that we should all support this bill and have it passed wholeheartedly as this is a great cause in fighting for the children. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act, in this debate in the committee. I want to make it very clear at the very beginning that I agree with the purposes of the act, the spirit of the act, the objectives of the act. Children must be protected from abuse, even when that abuse is practised or inflicted by their own parents, guardians, or caregivers.

In the same vein, Mr. Chairman, I also want to reiterate my belief that children must be protected from abuse from actions taken by governments, by the state, or its agencies, be they child care agencies, social work agencies, or law enforcement agencies. In principle our concern is protecting children from abuse regardless of which quarter that abuse comes from. So, as I said, we are in agreement with the fact that children must be protected from abuse, and this particular piece of legislation speaks to a particular kind of abuse which results from drugs produced inside family dwellings, I presume.

Mr. Chairman, our research staff contacted and I personally spoke with some law enforcement representatives. I spoke with Sergeant Sanderson from the RCMP K Division just a few days ago, and he sent me, as he promised during the conversation, this document called Drug Endangered Children: Equating Drug Activity to Child Abuse. An interesting document.

One thing that struck me here was a bar graph on page 5 of this, which I found quite revealing. Distinctions were made in the incidents of crystal meth trafficking – that's all the information there is in this graph – between what is called northern Alberta and southern Alberta. It's quite striking that the rate of increase in the files on trafficking in this particular drug is very high. It's grown over the years in northern Alberta dramatically, I should say, whereas in southern Alberta there is continuous growth but at a very, very low rate. So I really would like to get the minister's attention to this issue. It seems to me that if this graph tells us something about the evidence of drugs being produced – in this case it's not about production, it's only about trafficking in drugs. In order for drugs to be trafficked, they have to be made available. You know, they have to come from somewhere. Some of these may be produced in homes in Alberta itself.

The impact of this piece of legislation – in the name of protecting children, we'll have to remove children from parents or caregivers – the uneven effect of impact given the demographic differences between northern Alberta and southern Alberta is something that we must address. Northern Alberta, I submit, Mr. Chairman, has a much higher proportion of First Nations Albertans dwelling in the region as compared to southern Alberta. We already know that the problem of child abuse, of child neglect, or other reasons for which children get removed from families is much more serious within these communities, the First Nations communities. It's a fact that's undeniable. It's a fact that must be recognized when we develop public policy, social policy as well as legislation that reflects that social policy. So I have a concern that the children that will get removed will overwhelmingly, perhaps, come from northern Alberta, using this relevant indicator, and that in northern Alberta the families from which the children will be removed will predominantly be First Nations families. I invite the minister and the department staff to really look closely at these possibilities and then ask themselves: are the actions that we are taking appropriate?

The second point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is the question of abuse in the family and what happens to children once they get removed from the family and become wards of the Crown. In that respect I want to share with the House and with the minister a revealing documentary that I just happened to come upon by accident. I happened to be home on the evening of March 7, about a week or so ago. I turned the TV on – and this was between 8 and 9 o'clock – and on the Newsworld channel there was a documentary called Wards of the Crown. That was a recently produced documentary under the program called The Lens. It's a new program on Newsworld.

This talked about the experience of children who get removed from families and what happens to them through the words and the experiences of the children narrated by themselves, using their own words. Of the four that were interviewed, two of them – I noted their names: a girl, Leah, and a young adolescent fellow, Andrew – had been shuffled through the system, moved from one foster family to the next foster family to group homes and, ultimately, onto the street. It was very painful to listen to their story. Children that are removed from the family don't necessarily get the protection that they need. In fact, they get exposed in many cases to continued abuses of who they are. They have a sense of instability, a lack of belonging, a lack of sense of place. Therefore, the problems that they develop in their psychological development and in their ability to develop social relationships are huge, absolutely huge.

So I would urge the minister to perhaps get hold of this video and look at it as we deliberate on this bill and how effective the measures proposed in it will be, notwithstanding the very noble goals that we have in mind that we want this legislation to accomplish. It's not a partisan issue. I say without any reservation that I'm with the minister on this. We must protect our children from harm. We must try to reduce the possibility of harm, but we must also weigh the effectiveness of the measures that we propose to take in order to do so. This particular documentary draws attention to it.

Mr. Chairman, the third point I want to make has to do with the conventions of the rule of law in a democratic society. All of us are engaged in celebrating 100 years of democracy in our province. We have a proud record. We also know that we made mistakes in the past when we took rights away from people who were disabled or whom we saw as imbeciles, or whatever, and we corrected ourselves. But as we move forward into the next century, I think we must ask the question of whether or not we respect on a continuing basis, on a systematic basis the strictures of the rule of law that this principle imposes on the state and on the legislators when making their laws. What do I mean by it? I want to very quickly go through this.

The rule of law entails, of course, preventing the state from unauthorized and unchecked use of power in the enforcement of laws, in the apprehension of children or other people, some of whom may in fact be criminals. The rule of law, Mr. Chairman, requires that we reserve the use of coercion, detention, punishment, the use of force to remove children. There are actually words used in this legislation to say that if necessary to use force to remove children from families, the use of force is for those who have been shown, on the basis of sound evidence and fair procedure – two things here: sound evidence and fair procedure – to have committed some wrongful act.

The police can invade privacy by tapping the phones or searching houses but only after getting a warrant based on probable cause that evidence of crime is likely to be found – probable cause that evidence of crime is to be found; in this case, that evidence of abuse is to be found. Individuals can be arrested or children apprehended or removed from their families and put under Crown custody only after government shows probable cause that they have committed a crime or have been abused. They can be preventively detained but only after evidence is submitted of the past wrongdoing as well as of danger to the community or to children at the hands of their parents or risk of flight, whatever. They can be punished only upon proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

Now, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, section 2(9) and (10) seem to offend this fundamental principle of the rule of law and respect for the rule of law by all parties, particularly by the state. In this case I want to draw section 2(9) and (10) to the attention of the House for a serious look at those two provisions in the act. To me they seem to run against the grain of the rule of law doctrine, on which all of our democratic decisions and practices in law should be based.

So I have an amendment that I would like to introduce. It doesn't have to be voted on today. I would urge the minister to look at this. If she doesn't want to, that's her decision. All I'm saying is that by tabling this amendment today, I'm providing the opportunity to the House and to the minister to at least consider it before we move forward on this bill. So, Mr. Chairman, I have this amendment, and I want to circulate it.

The Chair: We will refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Everyone has a copy. Please proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the first eight subsections of section 2, (1) to (8) inclusive. These eight subsections of section 2 are entirely consistent with the doctrine of the rule of law. So I would be very happy to vote for those eight subsections of section 2 because they, as I said, are totally consistent with the principle of the rule of law and respect for the rule of law.

However, as we move to subsections (9) and (10), Mr. Chairman, subsection (9) says:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), a director or police officer may apprehend a child without an order if the director or police officer has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the child's life, health or safety is seriously and imminently endangered because the child is a drug-endangered child.

This subsection relieves the law enforcement authorities or the director of the strictures that the rule of law imposes on the state and its agencies when acting to enforce a law. That is why I think that this subsection (9) is a matter for concern and should not be part of the final piece of legislation.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, subsection (10) of section 2 says that:

A person who is authorized to apprehend a child under subsection (9) and who has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the child may be found in a place or premises may, without an order and by force if necessary, enter that place or those premises and search for the child.

Mr. Chairman, in my view, again, this subsection (10) is in violation of the principle of the rule of law.

So what I'm proposing, then, by way of the amendment before the House is that these two subsections, which offend the very fundamental principle of the rule of law on which our parliamentary system is based, on which our laws are based, on which our law enforcement activities are based, be removed from the bill. That is the purpose of this amendment. The amendment moves that “Bill 2, Drug-endangered Children Act, be amended in section 2 by striking out subsections (9) and (10).”

I would, in concluding, Mr. Chairman, urge the minister to at least give it some consideration. I’ll be happy to receive her advice and sit down with her and go over it. If after that we don’t agree on this, then surely, you know, she has all the powers and opportunity to move forward. But I would urge the minister not to proceed with haste on this bill until she has had the opportunity to consult with her officials and with other members of this House and, hopefully, to give me an opportunity to talk with her about it, if she so chooses, before proceeding.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children’s Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. I was actually holding myself in my chair so that I wasn’t jumping up immediately when I heard the hon. member talking about striking out sections 2(9) and (10). Mr. Chair, this isn’t about the rule of law. This is simply about protecting children. That’s what it’s about. The act authorizes either the director or the police to apprehend a drug-endangered child. The application for an apprehension order must be made to a court in person or by telephone. When there’s imminent danger, then a child can be apprehended.

What I’d like to say to my colleague across the way is that when we were in the process of drafting up this legislation, we consulted with stakeholders. We talked to the police. We talked to caseworkers. We had it go through Justice in regard to all of the sections within this piece of legislation. As Minister of Children’s Services I would encourage the hon. member to see some of the things that cross my desk on a daily basis when we’re talking about some of the poor children in this province that we have to apprehend. For example, the police are called to a family violence situation, and it ends up that all of a sudden they’ve come across a meth lab or something. It could be a huge grow op. It could be a number of things. We just read in the paper recently about a child pornography case. There are times in this province when we have to apprehend children immediately.

I would encourage all members in the House not to support this amendment.

The Chair: Anyone else?

Mrs. McClellan: I’d like to speak on this just very briefly. I think that when you read this whole section in its entirety and you come to subsections (9) and (10), it’s very clear that the reason you would apprehend a child without an order is because of the child’s life, health, or safety. That, to me, is the answer. It’s only under those circumstances where an officer believes that a child’s “life, health or safety is seriously and imminently endangered.” That would be the only exception.

I can’t imagine that any one of us – any one of us – in this room would agree that you should not step in to save a child’s life. I don’t think the hon. member believes that either. I think he may be right in some of his comments on the rule of law. This is the rule of law for a child. I couldn’t support that amendment after reading the whole section and understanding all of the opportunities that there are to go through the process properly. When I read the section and it says that a child’s life, health or safety is seriously endangered, to me this section has to stay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I take seriously what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona says about how we look at the rule of law in our province and in our country. We should take those comments very, very seriously in how we deal with this bill. It is an important bill, and we must deal with this very, very serious problem, somehow bring to bear the force of the government on the problems of crystal meth and, really, other drugs. I think the mover of this amendment has got some very clear arguments, that this should be looked at a little bit further, some good arguments for delaying and thinking and pondering this a little bit further.

With that, Mr. Chair, I’d move adjournment on this amendment.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Chair: Does anyone else wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Children’s Services to speak on the amendment.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Chair, I have to get up just one more time because I think there’s some confusion within the House. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act that we have in place at this particular time and the Child Welfare Act before that all had this same piece, sections (9) and (10), in the legislation. It’s not about the rule of law. It’s that the child’s “life, health or safety is seriously and imminently endangered because the child is a drug-endangered child.”

I urge all members of the House not to support this amendment brought forward by the hon. member from across the way. It’s something that on occasion we have to do in this province to protect our children who are very, very vulnerable.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I’m very, very sensitive to what I’m hearing here. The issue is not whether or not children when in danger must receive immediate protection or relief from that danger. That’s not the issue. The bill is about endangering children through their exposure to the manufacturing or cooking of drugs. The whole notion of immediate danger that creeps into the argument here seems to be really out of place. The danger that the bill speaks to, what it’s talking about, is the danger that results from an activity called drug manufacturing, illegal drugs being produced in the family residence, in the basement or wherever.

I ask: what is the probability of immediate danger to the lives of the children here? I don’t see that. The argument that these two provisions are already there in another act doesn’t justify continuing to make the mistake, what I would think would be a mistake if it’s already in another piece of legislation. The issue should be debated on the grounds of whether the ability to enter a premise to apprehend a child because the child’s parents or family or caregivers are cooking some sort of drug should be appropriately authorized. I say that the practice of the rule of law, on which all democracies are based, and respect for the rule of law require that an order be issued by an independent authority, not the authority that is going to enter the house.

I think it’s a fundamental right to have protections on that kind of entry and intervention. That’s the issue. The provisions in the act between subsections (1) and (8) allow the director or police enforcement authority to use the phone to seek such authorization to enter a family dwelling, to call by phone or through other technical means. So provisions are there. They do allow the ability of the law enforcement authorities to seek that kind of legal order before they enter, and that, Mr. Chairman, is the kind of guarantee that I am seeking, that this bill and other bills that we have that deal with the violation of our rights to privacy be addressed properly and be addressed seriously in this House.

I'm not at all at loggerheads with the minister or with the argument that children must be protected, but so should be our liberties. That's the issue. The minister says that there's no evidence; she has no numbers. So how serious is the incidence of this problem in this province? If there's no emergency, why is it necessary, then, to suspend our fundamental liberties? That's the question I'm asking. Subsections (9) and (10) in my view do in fact amount to the suspension of our fundamental civil liberties by way of allowing law enforcement authorities to enter a place and remove a child without proper and prior legal authorization by a court or by a justice of the peace. That's the issue.

We ought not to take these matters so lightly simply because we get carried away with an argument. If the minister had given me some evidence – and many other members have asked her to do the same. Tell us: how serious is the problem? What's the scale of the problem here? Have you got some numbers to convince me or anyone else in the House that it's such a serious problem that you want to go ahead and suspend our liberties in such cases?

The argument that children are endangered doesn't make sense to me. The danger that's being addressed in this bill is the danger that results from an activity to produce drugs in the house, not an immediate danger to the safety and the life of the child. It is the long-term harmful effects. Abuse is the word that you use. Abuse isn't some sort of a death sentence, you know, that right away the child is going to be dying because someone is producing crystal meth. That could happen if the drug is consumed, but that's not the issue here.

It's a legislation that has serious intentions, good intentions. It's also a legislation that, in my view, must raise some serious concerns on the part of all of us as lawmakers. I'm simply doing my duty as a member of a democratically elected House of Assembly to draw attention to the fact that we must always respect and subscribe to the values of freedom, of liberty that are enshrined in our Constitution, that are enshrined in our laws and do what we can to make laws that will do the thing that we want them to do while at the same time respecting those fundamental freedoms and liberties.

I rest my case, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 1 as amended and Bill 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 2. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 1.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly. I'd also like to table copies of documents tabled during Committee of the Whole this day for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

The Assembly stands adjourned.

[At 5:30 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Hon. members, would you now please remain standing as I invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to sing our national anthem, and to all here, please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today Dan Lidgett. He's a resident of Edmonton, formerly of Wetaskiwin. He's a volunteer with the Canadian Paraplegic Association and the PARTY program, prevent alcohol- and risk-related trauma in youth. Dan is in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to wave and acknowledge the Assembly as we give him the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of students from Woodhaven junior high. There are 90 students here today. They're accompanied by Jayme Foster, Ray Shapko, Deb Schellenberger and parents Kelli Holden, Darren Stumbur, Sherry Mitchell, Mrs. Tina Gibson, Marilyn Freund, Karen Headrick and educational assistant Dana Stewart. I would ask that the House give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly and that they would please stand.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 26 enthusiastic grade 6 students from Earl Buxton elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Val Ritter, and by parent helpers Mrs. Kalra and Mrs. Rawat. They're here to observe and learn with keen interest about government and the Legislature. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, do you have guests today?

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 24 bright and energetic grade 6 students from Patricia Heights elementary school who are attending our School at the Leg. program for a week. Today they decided to come and watch us during part of question period and observe their MLA and everyone here working hard on their behalf. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Beverly Oldford. I would like to ask them all now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this esteemed Assembly.

The Speaker: The students should also know that it's the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung's birthday today.

This is also the 17th anniversary of the election to this House of four distinguished members of this House. On March 20, 1989, these four individuals were elected to this parliament for the first time: the hon. the Premier, the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, and the hon. Minister of Government Services.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two of my constituents: Gail Ells and Florence Ingham. Florence works with the Alberta Dental Association, and Gail is a copyright assistant for Athabasca University. I'd ask them to rise in the public gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly six citizens from a group focused on the industrial heartland expansion in Sturgeon and Strathcona counties. They are Mike Sudayko, Joan Sudayko, Maureen Chichak, Laura Martin, and Diane Gorgichuk. Please stand, and we'll give you the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, although I don't see the group of wonderful professionals that joined me this afternoon, they may in fact be in a different part of the Legislature. They will be here today at some point. They are resident physicians, the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta, known as PARA.

There are some 1,200 residents in Alberta. They perform a valued service in all of our hospitals and care institutions for health. They recently concluded a collective agreement with the government of Alberta. They are here today to meet MLAs, to ask questions, to represent issues of the student body both as it applies to their education and to the work that they're doing. Today at lunchtime they gave me excellent ideas on the subject of physician recruitment. If any members are in the audience on either side of the House, I wish they would please stand, and we could acknowledge their presence with pleasure.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Services for Rural Albertans

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as electricity deregulation hurt people across rural Alberta, this government's health care deregulation is about to do the same. Even the government's hand-picked chairman of the Peace Country health authority has gone public with his concerns that the third way will draw health care professionals away from rural Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How does the minister possibly respond to the chairman of the Peace Country health authority when he says, and I quote, there's a shortage of orthopaedic surgeons, and if 10 of them are operating in the private sector, that's 10 less for the public system across Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, throughout the policy framework we have a number of initiatives designed to improve and strengthen the public health care system. Under the policy that relates to choice and access we have identified very clearly that any effort to accept an access proposal must only be done when there's an assurance that the public health care capacity will be maintained and will be strengthened. Although the hon. member has referenced a chair that is valued and has raised concerns about rural Alberta, we fully intend, if any access proposal is accepted, to make sure that it does so only in the context of making sure that there's adequate provision of services throughout Alberta and that the public system stays strong.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the minister has said that if all else fails, she could order doctors to go to rural communities for, quote, brief periods, how are rural Albertans supposed to receive consistent, high-quality care if doctors are only in the community for brief periods?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have never at any time stated that I would order doctors to do anything. We indicated in the context of accepting an access proposal that we could require doctors to provide services in other places, but it would be a proposal where there would have to be mutual agreement from the physicians in question, the health authority, and it would have to be evaluated by Health and Wellness no doubt in the context of a process that included specific issues as raised by the nurses, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the AMA, and others. So looking at what might conclude a successful access proposal, we would evaluate on the basis of all these things and ask them to provide us with some type of proposal that would be innovative and make sure that in rural Alberta we were filling those spaces that had to be filled.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will this minister finally admit the obvious, that the third way is going to make it harder to attract doctors to rural Alberta?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, that makes a number of assumptions about a policy that is one of 10 in our book that talks about choice and access. The intention of our policy framework is to increase access. Increasing access is fundamental to the success of the policy – it's done through a number of measures – and ensuring that we move towards as much sustainability as possible not only in the larger urban authorities but in rural Alberta as well. You should be pleased to know that when we visited parts of rural Alberta, many of them are embracing with some enthusiasm some of the options that they believe will ultimately increase the number of physicians that will work in our system.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform Consultation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are now just 11 days left in this government's rush-job consultations on the third way. Earlier this month the Minister of Health and Wellness made much of her consultations in Bonnyville and St. Paul. The fact is that these so-called consultations were little more than closed door, private meetings. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: how many members of the public in total were involved in the consultations in Bonnyville and St. Paul?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to table that information. In Calgary we met with several on Saturday that were much expanded groups and various numbers, but we can table that exact information. The media were present at the conclusion and were able to talk to a number of the presenters. But as I've told this House before, in these consultations many people want private meetings, want to share private information. That does not prevent them in any way from sharing any of their information with the public. We've invited them all to have a proposal available for the media. Should they not wish to share it during the consultation with me, they can share it following. I believe that in Calgary we had about eight people from the media.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: does this minister believe that this kind of consultation, that left out the general public and much of the medical community in St. Paul, can really be considered complete?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this government has had a very strong track record of consulting with Albertans. If you looked at the consultations on health from the Mazankowski report, A Framework for Reform, to the type of information we've been making available in various forms through policies, our Getting on with Better Health Care, that was released last summer, a document that various individuals have followed up on and given us response to, several types of information that have gone either through the public arena or through MLAs for consulting, we have got a lot of information out there. This particular policy framework is available in all the libraries. We've had responses to it. We've had about 2,800 written and phone responses. We've had numerous consultations. I can table those results to date. Probably tomorrow would be the best time for those results to date, and I'll continue to provide them.

I'd like to just make one comment, Mr. Speaker, to conclude. Can I just say that the people that have consulted with me have been anything but cynical about the process. They very much appreciated that we have had a dialogue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why didn't this minister just do the right thing and host a public town hall meeting in St. Paul and Bonnyville? Why didn't you do it?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have been providing those stakeholders, first and foremost, the opportunity. We wanted to make sure that the various municipal leaders who are responsible for preventive social services through family and community supports, that the seniors groups that might not otherwise have a chance get their voices heard, that the health care providers have an opportunity, the regional health boards. The community health councils have an invitation to come and bring forward their information. First and foremost, we were dealing with stakeholders who are part of the provision of health care services and those people that support health care systems in all of the regions. Those were the ones that we were targeting in each of the regions that we have met with thus far.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Lottery Grant to Alpha Gamma Delta Fraternity

Mr. Tougas: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, $18,760 can buy you a lot of luxury furniture, as the members of the Alpha Gamma Delta fraternity house have found out. That's how much they received from the community initiatives program, a lottery-funded initiative which was intended for projects that, quote, are of benefit to the general public, unquote. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister tell us how $1,400 sofas, $1,500 worth of leather bar stools, and a $600 ottoman for a frat house could be considered of benefit to the general public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alpha Gamma Delta is a registered not-for-profit association. The application that they made was fully in order. They met all the criteria for that application and for that grant.

Mr. Tougas: To the same minister: since CIP guidelines allow a maximum of $10,000 in nonmatching funds and initially that's all Alpha Gamma Delta asked for, why did they receive more than $18,000?

Mr. Graydon: There are provisions that on some occasions the matching component can be waived, and that was done in this case. This is not the first and only case where the matching component has been waived. They had raised funds during the year, but they had already committed those funds to I believe juvenile diabetes. Instead of taking money back from that program, that was allowed.

Mr. Tougas: Will the minister investigate this grant to find out why it went through so quickly and why so many rules were violated?

Mr. Graydon: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Private Health Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A private health insurance scheme is already promoting faster service for heart bypass, prostate, cataract, and joint replacement surgeries. Acure Health Insurance website states that "medical access insurance will take you out of the line and arrange to expedite your diagnosis and treatment in the [U.S.], or in Canada when services are available." Acure and dozens of other private investors are already drooling over the third way. They can hardly wait. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier tell all Albertans what Acure already knows, that the third way will allow wealthy people to get lifesaving surgery before low- and middle-income Albertans?

1:50

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this company offers insurance for people that wish to avail themselves of medical services that exist elsewhere, out of the province. Right now, as the hon. member knows, it is prohibited under the Canada Health Act to offer a similar service in Canada. That's what we're wrestling with right now, and that's what the public consultation process is all about. But it's been happening for years and years that people who can't get access to medical services to alleviate pain and suffering here will go to the United States or to the United Kingdom or to India or to other jurisdictions that offer the alternative to obtain medical relief.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the public of Alberta wants to know what the government has in mind and they're tired of the smoke and mirrors of this government, will the Premier now tell the people of Alberta whether or not under the third way people will be able to jump the queue for lifesaving surgeries such as a heart bypass?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond in detail. I don't know, because I'm not a physician, of the urgency and the urgent nature of the bypass operations to which the hon. member refers, but I can tell you that if he has a heart attack right now, an ambulance will be called, he will be taken to the hospital, and he will be treated under the publicly funded system.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why is the Premier continuing to refuse a direct question; that is, whether or not under the third way, his government's proposed policy, people will be able to get ahead of the line by paying more for surgeries like bypass surgery, cataract surgery, prostate surgery, and a long list of other surgeries?

Mr. Klein: I don't know about cataracts, Mr. Speaker, because cataract surgeries – and I don't know if the hon. member has had a cataract surgery by a private clinic.

Mr. Mason: No. I can see you clearly.

Mr. Klein: He wears glasses, Mr. Speaker, so I don't know how clearly he can see.

Mr. Speaker, this is hard to define because the urgency of a particular procedure has to be defined by a physician, who's in the best position to know.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Marlborough Elementary School

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents in my constituency were shocked to learn that their community school needs were again being shuffled aside and ignored. These honest and hard-working Alberta families are being confronted . . . [interjections] This is a very important issue, hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, these honest and hard-working Alberta families are being confronted with the ongoing reality of five to 10-year-old students being bused 40 minutes away, sometimes to different schools than other siblings, just to go to school. My question is to the hon. Minister of Education. Since the school was closed to students last Wednesday, what has the minister or his department done to ensure that renovations or repairs to the Marlborough elementary school are being done immediately?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I did contact officials with the Calgary public board. They apprised me of what occurred on Thursday night when 400 parents met, and they told me that they had a very good meeting. They presented what the facts of the case were, and the facts simply are that about seven or eight years ago, I think it was, a major renovation was done to 30 per cent of the roof there. They brought in some steel reinforcements, some steel cladding, as they call it. That alleviated part of the problem, and things seemed to be okay. Then very recently they found out that there might be other concerns, so they did the preventative thing: they closed the school down. They've made arrangements for all the children to be bused to neighbouring schools while they sort out what the problems exactly are and engage a contractor to look more deeply into this. We need to respect their decision for having done this very, very efficiently.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Minister of Education: will the minister undertake to have a meaningful discussion with parents at Marlborough school and discuss the future of the school as soon as possible?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to comment on the future of the school per se. That would be up to the Calgary public board to comment on. I think that a very meaningful consultation occurred last Thursday between locally elected officials and other administrators with Calgary public and the 400 parents. I might just add that, as a result of all of that, the Calgary public board worked very, very hard with their officials to move all of the furniture, to move all of the desks, to move all of the school books, the computers, and everything else over this past weekend so that the two receiving schools, Mayland and Greenview, as I recall, were ready to receive the first busload of students from Marlborough as early as I think this morning. That's the truth of the matter. So they've done a pretty good job of looking after that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Given that the department of infrastructure was aware of this issue of the structural integrity of this building since September, why hasn't his department done anything to ensure a safe working and learning environment for the staff and the students at Marlborough elementary school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What occurred back in actually late October, early November is that we received a notification from the Calgary public school board that there was a leak in the roof. Subsequently what happened is that we gave the Calgary public school district a $25,000 grant to do an engineering study to determine, quite simply, if the school was safe or not. To this point in time we have not seen the study despite repeated attempts to gain the contents of that study back to us.

An interesting point on this as well, Mr. Speaker, is that the roof is actually made of a thing called Stramit board, which is a different type of roof, and it subsequently has not turned out that well. This is the only school in Calgary that has that type of roof. Therefore, we're anticipating a speedy, speedy cure to this particular issue once we get the engineering report.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Major Projects in the Industrial Heartland

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today many concerned residents of the industrial heartland in Sturgeon and Strathcona counties have come forth with serious concerns about the unbalanced development in their area. They're concerned about the air they breathe, the water they drink, their rural way of life, and agriculture. Hundreds of people in the region believe that this government has failed to do its job in planning and consulting on heavy oil upgraders added to massive industrial sites already present, and now they're demanding answers. My first question to the Premier: can the Premier explain why this government continues to approve major developments without a provincial land-use plan to guide the process and balance the interests of industry with those of landowners, agriculture, and the environment?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that the Liberals held a news conference this morning to reflect the concerns of Sturgeon county residents about a proposed – I underline "proposed" – plan for an oil upgrader in their region. It's my understanding that the companies or company involved has yet to seek regulatory approval for construction of the oil upgrader. Further, this is a matter that has to be adjudicated by the county as well as by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. I understand as well that the project will have to undergo an environmental impact assessment. I'll have the hon. minister respond in more detail to that.

The Speaker: Perhaps we can get to that as a supplementary.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: given the large number of Albertans who claim that they have not been fairly and appropriately consulted, can the minister inform the Legislature as to what evidence he has that a meaningful public consultation has occurred?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I too will have the Minister of Environment respond because both of our departments are involved in this.

With all of these projects that have come forward, first off, the counties involved have done quite extensive work on zoning those lands for heavy industrial use. That was some of the first long-term planning kind of work done by those counties, specifically identifying that area for large, heavy industrial use. The last project to come through went through a very extensive environmental impact assessment. It's gone through the Energy and Utilities Board. It goes through all of those kinds of requirements to ensure that the impacts of land, air, and water are preserved so that the safety and security of the people in the area are secured.

The Speaker: I suspect that the next one is to the Minister of Environment, but that's guessing. The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry that I'm so predictable.

To the Minister of Environment: given the serious cumulative environmental impact already in the industrial heartland area and three more heavy oil upgraders proposed, will he commit in the interests of public and environmental health to a cumulative environmental impact assessment before development decisions?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to all Albertans that, first of all, we have a very, very public consultation process when it comes to perhaps the strictest of EIAs that we do in this province. I might also say that for the approval that was carried out in 2003 by BA Energy, in fact there were five steps that were taken for public consultation in terms of preconsultation, during the process, during the approval, as well as the terms of reference. In all of those situations, such as the important things that the member has talked about in terms of balance of the air, water, and integrated land management, the public had an opportunity to present. Not only that, but I could give you the example of the Fort Air Partnership, that Alberta Environment works closely with, which is in part 5 of the five-step process. Something we continue to commit to is working with all of the stakeholders because there is nothing more important than the air and the water and the integrated land that you speak of. Getting that balance right and the cumulative impact of getting that balance right is exactly what Alberta Environment is committing to and is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Highway 19

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 19 is located between Nisku on highway 2 and the town of Devon in my constituency. It is approximately 10 kilometres long and serves as an extremely busy truck bypass around Edmonton to western and northern Alberta. It is also a commuter route for thousands of residents of the town of Devon and surrounding area who work in Edmonton, Nisku, or the international airport. This roadway is overdue for twinning. Unfortunately, two residents of Devon were killed in separate accidents in the last two weeks. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. In order to improve the safety and efficiency of this roadway, when can we expect it to be twinned?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I certainly take great condolences with the hon. member on the passing of two of his constituents.

We are presently in the process of finishing off the functional plan for that particular twinning of the road. We're in the process of acquiring the right-of-way, which has not fully been done yet, to ensure that that road is twinned.

I will say one thing to the hon. member, and that is that the Anthony Henday is going to be finished this fall, and that will allow a straight access from highway 2 right through to highway 16. So one of the things that we're hoping will occur is that truck traffic will utilize the Anthony Henday to go from highway 2 to highway 16 as opposed to highway 19. Unfortunately, that doesn't completely answer the question, but the functional plan is being done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. How can we get this moved up in priority?

Dr. Oberg: Well, one of the big issues, Mr. Speaker, has nothing to do with money. It has nothing to do with time. It has nothing to do with the priority list. Quite simply, what it has to deal with is how to accumulate the land that is needed for this, and there are numerous, numerous landholders along highway 19. There are roughly, as the hon. member mentioned, 10 kilometres of road that have various different landholders. We're currently in the process of negotiating this land and attempting to get the right-of-way so that we can twin it, but that at times can be quite an arduous process.

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: due to the urgency will he consider expropriation if necessary to acquire these rights-of-way?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, expropriation is actually very much a final step. It's a last attempt in order to get the land. We would much sooner attempt to deal with the landowners through good negotiation, through coming to an agreement, so that everyone walks away with a win-win scenario. There are some very difficult lands, as the hon. member knows, along that route – for example, part of a church – and the whole idea of expropriating some of these things is going to be very, very difficult. We would much sooner have an amicable settlement to this. We would much sooner have an amicable settlement when it comes to the negotiation, so we are going to negotiate. The expropriation process is certainly, certainly a last step, a last-ditch effort.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Medical Residents' Debt Load

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall I asked the Minister of Advanced Education why medical residents, who are still students, are required to begin paying back their student loans, and he, describing it as a very good question, admitted, "That is an issue that we do need to work on." Well, like the tuition policy, there is something else from the minister's department that isn't ready yet. To the minister: with the average student debt load of residents at $112,000 and rising with differential tuition, will he at least accredit the residency program for interest relief, like Saskatchewan, Newfoundland, and Quebec have done?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I think that's a very good suggestion. We're working through a number of good suggestions with respect to student loans, student finance, student affordability policy. We will continue to work until we get the best answer, not the most immediate answer. That's what we're trying to do: deal with the issue of student finance and affordability of education in a comprehensive way. I believe that not only the individuals who the hon. member just raised but all students will look forward to a good and comprehensive result.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that servicing that debt with interest that no other postgraduate student is required to pay takes up to half a medical resident's take-home pay?

Mr. Mason: Their average debt is more than you've raised for your leadership race.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: I'm not sure quite how the leader of the third party would know how much. Perhaps this is evidence of the quality of his research.

Mr. Speaker, it's a very important issue, and it's not one that we deal with lightly. In fact, I've got a lot of sympathy. We're putting a lot of effort into how we deal appropriately with the financing of students, with the affordability policy, and how we ensure that students do get an interest break when they're not earning at a level necessary to pay back their loans. Hopefully, by the time we get through this process and come out with an affordability policy, we'll have a whole new structure which will make sure that every student knows that finances will not be a barrier to getting an education, that they'll be able to graduate with an appropriate level of debt, and they will have an appropriate way to pay it back out of the income that they can expect to receive from employment in their area or their profession.

I know that it's frustrating for people to wait for processes to happen. I know that this particular organization has been very, very patient and very, very helpful in the process, and there will be a new affordability policy in place soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the health minister: is it just a coincidence, or did the minister plan to make differential tuition and crippling debt add up to a powerful incentive for doctors to want to moonlight in private, commercialized medicine?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member attributes motives to me which are not worthy.

I would like to say that we have had a very thorough review today, an opportunity that was unparalleled, with the student residents who came in and spoke to me for over an hour, talking about a number of their issues, including tuition, including the kinds of aspirations they have to serve Albertans, to provide the best care possible. I have been impressed by their due diligence. Though I've already introduced them, Mr. Speaker, at some point I'd beg your indulgence to do that again to be able to highlight that this government values their students, values the residents. Some of the initiatives that I think will be evident in this year's budget will support that contention.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Child Pornography Investigation

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the actions of a brave woman in Edmonton who overheard a disturbing conversation between two children and reported it to the authorities and thanks to the authorities in Edmonton, the Attorney General of the United States was able to announce the takedown of a large, highly organized international child porn ring. This child porn ring swapped pictures and live video of children being sexually abused and raped. The U.S. Attorney General stated that these images that were sent around the world are the worst imaginable form of child pornography. My first two questions are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What involvement did police in Alberta have in this investigation?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to publicly acknowledge the outstanding work that the Edmonton

Police Service did in this investigation as well as the outstanding investigative work of Detective Randy Wickens.

The origins of this particular case actually came to light last May, in 2005, when an arrest was made here in the city of Edmonton. Upon investigation the investigators realized the tentacles of this investigation and the far-reaching effects it had throughout the world. These investigators are on the front line. They are trained and highly skilled in investigations regarding this type of technical experience that they need. So last week's announcement in Chicago was really a benefit to all of us throughout the law enforcement community, across Canada as well as around the world, and the fact that there are no boundaries to this type of technical advance.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: what is this government doing to stop those who would use the Internet to attack one of the most vulnerable segments of our society, our children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to ensuring the safety of all Albertans, whether they're on our highways, in our homes, or online. Last year we announced that $1.7 million would be provided to an ICE unit, an integrated child exploitation unit: an integrated team of officers from the RCMP, from the Edmonton Police Service, Calgary Police Service, the Medicine Hat and Lethbridge police services as well working together with 21 officers throughout the province as one team in different locations, with two hubs, Calgary and Edmonton. Information is being shared from our police services, amongst each other, with each other, again focusing on the safety of our children in the province and focusing on the future effects of these types of investigations. This province is committed and will continue to be committed to fighting this type of crime in the future.

Mrs. Jablonski: My last question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell me what his department is doing to ensure that the people who commit these heinous crimes are being prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is quite right. Child exploitation is a sickening crime, and here in Alberta we recognized that something special needed to be done. In February of 2003 we assigned a special prosecutor to deal with this form of crime. His name is Steve Bilodeau, and he was front and centre in Chicago last week. Mr. Bilodeau was able to work with the police in this case to arrange for search warrants, precharge legal advice, undercover police investigation techniques, and the like in order to ensure that there was this successful bust throughout North America and the world.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, at this point in time we have 91 outstanding child pornography cases before the courts here in Alberta. The good news is that Mr. Bilodeau and his team have over a 90 per cent success rate in prosecution of those crimes. I'm also pleased to say that, like the Solicitor General, we intend to enhance our service in this area, and later this year we hope to be able to announce that additional prosecutorial resources will be applied.

Thank you.

Sustainability of Caribou Population

Mr. Bonko: If the Alberta government is serious about protecting caribou and talked about keeping caribou on the landscape, what we really need is a landscape that can keep the caribou, period. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. After three failed attempts for a land-use framework, when will the government develop a land-use strategy?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government has worked very, very hard on putting down the criteria for a land-use framework. It was announced in the Speech from the Throne 2005 and was further added onto this Speech from the Throne in 2006. In between that year what we have done is we've set up a sustainable resource environmental management office under Sustainable Resource Development that includes the co-operation of seven departments across this government that are concerned about a provincial land-use framework and that deal with land use on a day-to-day basis. We will continue to go out and consult with Albertans this spring, and this fall we'll have a round-table that will deal with discussions from the valued discussions that we have this spring that will come up with recommendations on a provincial land-use strategy for the next 50 years in this province.

Mr. Bonko: How can this government justify a wolf cull, which is really a last-ditch effort that kills one species to save another, all because of a lack of government policy?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that is quite the opposite. We do have a policy for dealing with threatened species in this province, and the caribou has been designated as a threatened species in this province. It's about management. When you have a natural predator that is going out and eating the young caribou that will be born this spring, you have to manage that. Sustainable Resource Development has had a very, very good history in balancing and making sure that proper management of the resource is taking place so that the wildlife that are threatened can definitely be preserved for the future. It's part of our recovery plan, and we're staying with that recovery plan. For him to say that there is absolutely no plan is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Bonko: My last question, to the Minister of Community Development then: what collaboration is this ministry undergoing with other government ministries to ensure that the caribou do have a permanent home on Alberta's landscape?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, that I'm aware of, there are no caribou within our provincial parks. To the extent that there are, we do cooperate with the minister responsible for Environment and the minister responsible for sustainable resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Tuition Fees for Postsecondary Education

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province has the lowest percentage of students from our high schools going on to postsecondary education, and this province also has some of the highest tuition fees. The government claims that it wants to make postsecondary education both affordable and accessible to more young Albertans. At the same time, Alberta's postsecondary institutions do need a funding formula that encourages significant enrolment growth and improvements in teaching and learning conditions. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education. Will the minister categorically rule out the inflation plus 3.5

per cent formula for tuition increase policy recommended by the Alberta university presidents, because doing so will further worsen affordability of public postsecondary education in this province?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a Legislature which has been consumed by the discussion of how you appropriately consult, the suggestion that one should rule out ideas that are brought forward in a consultation process before the process has been finished would seem to be out of bounds. What we have is A Learning Alberta process, which started last year. We now have a subcommittee in which both universities and students as well as all sorts of other players within the postsecondary system are participating to talk about an affordability policy and in that context to talk about how tuition fits into it. In that context, I hope they're discussing a wide range of alternatives. So, no, I can't rule out one alternative that someone has put forward as part of that process, but I can say this. It is a proposal that the four presidents put on the table for discussion purposes, and it appears to have had the effect of enlivening the discussion. That's a wonderful thing.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if the minister actually believes in improving not impeding affordability, why doesn't he adopt the tuition fee policy recommended by the coalition of Alberta university students that would set tuition at 1999-2000 levels and thereafter increase tuition at the CPI minus 1 per cent rate?

Mr. Hancock: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, that just shows how fortunate it is that we do not have a government that deals with things on a one-off basis. If you implemented piece by piece a policy like that, what would happen is you would then deal with the whole question that was in the preamble to this member's question, and that is: how do you make sure that there's access for every Albertan who wants to get an education? How do you make sure that there are spaces? How do you allocate the resources to make sure that you have access, quality, and affordability?

It's not about one piece, about rolling tuition back. It's not about rolling tuition back to 1999 levels or 1995 levels or anything else. It's about the whole package. So that suggestion along with the suggestion from the university presidents need to be on the table and need to be discussed in the whole context of the complete affordability policy and a tuition policy and in the context of how we make sure that there's access for every Albertan who wants to learn.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has been at it for almost a year now. Given that the minister has failed either to endorse the CAUS proposal or to categorically reject the university presidents' proposal, what exactly is his position on developing a tuition fee policy to achieve affordability and a funding formula to achieve accessibility?

Mr. Hancock: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, that hon. member would be the first one to cry foul if I hired a whole group of people or invited a whole group of people in to discuss a policy and then put my preferences on the table before their preferences had been fully discussed. I'm not going to do it now. He wouldn't agree with it in any other context of consultation. What we have is a large committee of people right across the postsecondary system looking at broad issues of tuition and affordability, how finances can be removed as a barrier to any student getting an education, and we're going to look at the broad context of that. Certainly, I have some viewpoints as to what I think ought to be done, but I'm interested in informing myself and government with the full breadth of knowledge and interest from not only students . . .

Dr. Pannu: Talk is cheap.

Mr. Hancock: The hon. member is saying, "Talk is cheap," so he should quit talking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the North American free trade agreement panel ruled that the United States improperly assessed countervailing duties on softwood lumber imports from Canada. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Does this ruling end the softwood lumber dispute?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the NAFTA panel ruled that Canadian lumber is not subsidized, and it's something that we knew right along. Now, will the ruling end the dispute? No. The United States government has till April to decide whether they're going to appeal. They have more or less indicated that they will appeal, and the appeal process will take at least another several months.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Does this decision mean relief for Alberta's softwood lumber producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. The hon. minister that answered the first question noted that the NAFTA decision is good news for Canada, and of course in Alberta it would be good news for us, hoping that the panel and the government accepts that decision. Our government and the industry have worked very, very hard to make sure that the trade panel based its decisions on accurate information about forestry practices in Alberta, and we will continue to work hard, as we have in the previous years, including consultation with Alberta's forestry industry, to make sure that we move this dispute forward so that it will provide the kind of relief that the Alberta industry wants and the Alberta industry thinks that they expect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Fort McMurray Infrastructure Needs

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is starving our golden goose, Fort McMurray. The mayor and councillors are doing their best to accommodate the increased demand on services by borrowing to their limit and going as far as humanely possible, to the point of permitting a work camp to be set up in the heart of the city. Fort McMurray is caught in the vice of an economic boom and a government-forced infrastructure depression. My first question is to the Deputy Premier. Given that Fort McMurray is the economic driver of this province, why has your government abandoned the citizens of Fort Mac?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing – nothing – could be further from the truth. I've got to tell you that Fort McMurray, the Wood Buffalo area, has a very aggressive MLA, who brings all of their concerns to this building and to our caucus and, differently than some, looks to working on a solution for the long term.

Mr. Speaker, although I will be the first to say the great amount of economic activity that Fort McMurray brings to this province, there is also a very significant commitment from this government to that region as recent as an announcement of the beginning of the twinning of the highway to Fort McMurray, the work that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is doing with that municipality on achieving their concerns around water and water treatment.

Mr. Speaker, the Fort McMurray story is a wonderful Alberta story. We are proud of what's happening there, and we're going to do everything that we can to work with that community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that Fort Mac's waste treatment plant, hospital, schools, and recreation complex can't keep up with the rapid growth, will this minister provide financial relief in the form of grants rather than forcing the municipality further into debt through having to pay back interest-free loans?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are processes to deal with all of the things that the hon. member has brought forward. As I indicated in my earlier answer, the Minister of Municipal Affairs is working very closely with that municipality, the minister of infrastructure is working very closely with that municipality, the Minister of Energy is working very closely with all of the players in that municipality, and again – I will repeat one more time – they have a very capable, very competent MLA, that brings those concerns to us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My third and final question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Will the minister push her government to release not only the land but provide subsidized funding for the sewers and roads necessary to support affordable housing in Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak to this issue because we do have land, as you know, that's available to the community of Fort McMurray. Right now we have a request for proposal, a second one going out to the community. It will be complete here within about the next 20 to 30 days, and a part of that is deep infrastructure needs. But I have found that with the first proposal that we did with parcel D, it is the developer that's coming forward as part of the initiative when they do put in a number of alternatives that they have available, and one of those is for the deep infrastructure needs. So that is something that is coming from the proponents for the lands.

Having said that, I know that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation may want to comment on the infrastructure needs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ethics and Accuracy in Research

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It can be argued that our high standard of living is due to the scientific and emerging research of the past. For us to continue to advance as a society, it's imperative that research results be reliable and trustworthy. I understand that two federal agencies, the Canadian Institutes of Health Research and the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, have uncovered problems associated with the accuracy of research and use of funding dollars that they receive in Canada. My question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What steps are being taken in Alberta to ensure that research in Alberta is protected from unethical or inaccurate research?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, let me say from the first part that it is unfortunate when the activities of a few can do so much damage to the reputation of so many great minds and great researchers not only in Alberta but across Canada. With this story we did a review of all of the research activities that have been happening in this province, and we have not found any evidence of any research funding from the province or our related entities, such as the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, that have been involved in any of these particular transactions.

Mr. Speaker, the one researcher from the U of A that was publicly mentioned in this particular article was dealt with actually in 2003. The University of Alberta dealt very quickly and appropriately with that particular individual.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My one and only supplemental to the same minister: in cases where unethical behaviour has been found, what recourse is available?

2:30

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, there are really two elements of accountability that are in place when you look at a research grant in particular. The first would be, of course, the scientific process whereby applications have to go through a peer review process to make sure that they meet the standards and the objectives that are necessary before proceeding with research, and that's all vetted through people that understand the directions of the research, to make sure that that all makes sense.

The second element, of course, would have to do with the expenditure of money. To that degree, we sign grant agreements with the universities, which put into place the accountability mechanisms for monitoring the funds that are expended. In the event there would be any indiscretion, the matter there would be between the university and the researcher, and we would immediately ask the university for our funds to be returned to us, and they would then be expected to deal with the matter of the indiscretion at their level, which they have in the past always shown the willingness to do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we had 80 questions and answers in a 50-minute question period.

In a few seconds from now I'm going to ask if the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness can revert to Introduction of Guests, but prior to that our historical vignette of the day.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Three major plebiscites, one on electrification and two concerning daylight savings time, were voted on province-wide in conjunction with provincial general elections in 1948, 1967, and 1971. On August 17, 1948, the plebiscite subject was electrification, and 139,991 Albertans, or 50.017 per cent, voted yes to, "Are you in favour of the generation and distribution of electricity being continued by the power companies?" and 139,840, or 49.973 per cent, of the people of Alberta voted yes to the question, "Are you in favour of the generation and distribution of electricity being made a publicly owned utility administered by the Alberta Government Power Commission?"

On May 27, 1967, 236,555 Albertans, or 48.75 per cent of the citizens, voted for the question, "Do you favour province-wide daylight savings time?" and 248,680, or 51.25 per cent, voted against the question. The question, "Do you favour province-wide daylight savings time?" was again asked on August 31, 1971, and 386,846, or 61.4 per cent, of Albertans voted yes, and 242,431, or 38.53 per cent, voted against.

As a separate vote a province-wide liquor plebiscite was conducted on October 30, 1957, on the question, "Do you approve additional types of outlets for the sale of beer, wine, and spiritous liquor subject to a local vote?" and 171,786, or 63.9 per cent, voted in favour, and 96,961, or 36.1 per cent, voted against. The same plebiscite also asked the question, "Should mixed drinking be allowed in beer parlours in Edmonton and Calgary and the surrounding areas?" and 99,150, or 78.5 per cent, voted in favour of mixed drinking, while 27,203, or 21.5 per cent, voted against.

Since 1971 no province-wide plebiscites have been held in Alberta.

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What an honour today to introduce the people you're most likely to meet first if you attend a clinical or teaching hospital, and those are the attending resident physicians, who are completing between two and seven years of their practicum in order to become fully qualified as professional doctors. Members of PARA, the Professional Association of Residents, are with us today in the Legislature. They are spending time today meeting with a variety of MLAs and planning with MLAs and staff to host a reception later. They are remarkably bright, and thank God they're the ones that are coming up to look after us as we age. They were very astute in raising issues today about their tuition and also the kinds of things that we should be considerate of in hoping to attract more residents and physicians to Alberta. I would invite them to please rise and all Members of this Legislative Assembly to celebrate such remarkable potential in these individuals.

Youth Forums

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Young Albertans are a vital part of our province and a human resource that we must protect and listen to as a government. Recently I discussed the Youth Secretariat, the youth networks, the Youth Advisory Panel, and the work that these groups do for our province. This afternoon I would like to share a little bit about Alberta youth forums.

Youth forums supported by Children's Services are geared towards empowerment and engagement of youth and are youth driven and organized. Through these forums youth are brought together for a day or for a weekend and through these gatherings are able to discuss issues that affect all youth of Alberta.

During these youth events many topics are discussed. The usage and prevention of drugs and alcohol and tobacco addictions are also commonly debated. Some forums have discussed the issues of sexuality, sexually transmitted diseases, HIV/AIDS, as well as tattoos and piercing, racism, drinking and driving, violence in the family, and the homeless. The individuals who participate in these gatherings, through sharing their concerns and ideas for solutions, are helping to improve youth policies not just for the youth of their communities but for all of this province.

Mr. Speaker, 33 youth forums have been scheduled for 2005 to June 2006, ranging from large communities to small towns like Slave Lake and settlements like Buffalo Lake Métis settlement. These youth forums are a great way to identify key challenges facing youth and allow us to work with our youth to build on existing initiatives that affect them.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Association for Community Living

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I attended the 50th anniversary of the Alberta Association for Community Living, and I will later table five copies of their just released book Hear My Voice.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge everyone in this House and those watching this telecast to read that book and not shed one tear. It is a story in their own words of people with developmental disabilities who were in institutionalized care; in other words, they were in the system. They tell of their survival and how the spirit can triumph with a little help. They were the vulnerable, they were the neglected, and they were the forgotten. It tells of how they regained their dignity, self-worth, and became contributing members of society by the very fact of their existence. Good legislation and hard-working families helped turn that around.

I draw the parallel to the vulnerable in our continuing care system. We know of the loss of dignity, self-worth, and lack of respectful treatment, the lack of accountability, and outdated standards, and even those standards have no mechanism for enforcement.

We fear human beings being perceived as without value in our overly commercial world. We hear Romeo Dallaire, Stephen Lewis, Jean Vanier, Bill Clinton, and Jimmy Carter speak from the global perspective of the need to overlay commercialism with humanity, so we are not alone on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Skating Championships in Calgary

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary is home to the world's greatest hockey team. The stars that the ice in the city of Calgary has become accustomed to are those of the Calgary Flames of the National Hockey League. However, recently in Calgary sports fans have been and will be exposed to stars of a much different nature. The likes of Flames like Iginla and Kiprusoff have been replaced with other skating stars, such as Cindy Klassen and Jeffrey Buttle.

At this time I'd like to formally recognize the city of Calgary for hosting this past weekend's World Allround Speed Skating Championships as it also prepares to host the 2006 World Figure Skating Championships. The attendance at the Allround Speed Skating Championships at the Olympic Oval was outstanding last weekend as the skating stars showcased their fast-paced sport at its best to sold-out crowds.

Canadian star Cindy Klassen picked up right where she left off after the recent Olympic Games in Torino. Klassen swept all four of her races this weekend, completely blowing out the competition. Her performance was highlighted by posting near record times in the women's 1,500-metre and 5,000-metre races. In dramatic style she saved the best for last, though, as she posted a personal best in the women's 500 metre to win the event.

Up-and-coming male star Denny Morrison decided to make a name for himself as well. At only 20 years old Morrison set a Canadian men's record and nearly missed the world record in the 1,500-metre event, surpassing all expectations.

The past championships are definite indications that the future of Canadian sport is extremely bright. The upcoming week will be no different. There is no doubt that it will be an amazing figure skating competition as well, as all the top figure skaters from around the world have gathered in Calgary this week to take a shot at the world skating title.

The province should be proud of the city of Calgary for earning the right to host these events. Calgary has always done a tremendous job of displaying all that it has to offer to those who travel to our province for occasions such as these.

I'd like to wish all the competitors the best of luck throughout this week's championships.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Alberta Formed, Alberta Transformed Team Thomas World Junior Curling Champions

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and thank the members of the Alberta 2005 Centennial History Society and 34 authors who collaborated to produce a two-volume book titled Alberta Formed, Alberta Transformed. The book, a project supported by the centennial legacies program, was initiated in 1989 and had its launch at Grande Prairie Regional College on Friday, March 17. Society president and co-author Dr. Jaroslav Petryshyn was joined at the launch by three other authors, editor-in-chief Dr. Michael Payne, Brian Calliou, and Patricia Myers, all contributors, to unveil this remarkable history covering 12,000 years in Alberta. The book will be presented to all libraries, schools, and postsecondary institutions in the province. Truly, a lasting legacy of our centennial celebrations.

I would be remiss if I stood here and had an opportunity and did not tell you and all of my colleagues that Grande Prairie is now the home of the world junior curling champions. The Charley Thomas rink, Mr. Speaker, from Grande Prairie, brought home the gold. Again, the city of Grande Prairie, the province of Alberta, and Canada are proud of their accomplishments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: With the World Figure Skating Championships going on in Calgary and the world curling championships, the chair has to ask the question: why are we here today?

Multiple Sclerosis Society

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity to attend a Multiple Sclerosis of Alberta information evening, and for that I would like to thank my old high school friend Joan Ozirny for the invitation. At this information session one of the problems was the problem of raising awareness of MS. I want to take this moment to do my little part in raising awareness amongst my colleagues here today of the MS Society and the work they do on behalf of the people who suffer through this illness.

The Alberta division is located in Edmonton and was founded in 1981. The division is made up of 17 chapters, which provide services to people affected with MS and living within the boundaries. One of these chapters is in Lloydminster, Mr. Speaker.

Multiple sclerosis, or MS, is a disease of the central nervous system that affects 1 in 300 people. In Alberta approximately 10,000 are living with MS. MS is the most common neurological disease in Canada affecting young adults. It is usually diagnosed between the ages of 15 and 40 but can occur in children or adults. Women are twice as likely to develop MS as men. Alberta has one of the highest rates of occurrence of MS anywhere in the world.

Symptoms may include vision problems, numbness or tingling sensation, loss of balance, extreme fatigue, short-term memory or cognitive difficulties, even paralysis. As yet there is no cure for MS, but drug therapy can reduce the frequency and severity of the MS attacks, allowing many people with MS to live normal or near normal lives.

Fundraising is another issue facing this society. The Alberta division and chapters organize and sponsor a number of fundraising events. However, four stand out as attracting the largest number of participants: the Super Cities Walk for MS, the Rona MS Bike Tour, the readathon program, and the carnation campaign. Together these annual events raise over 3 and a half million dollars for MS research and client services in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, their motto is: don't talk about us without us. I want to commend all the volunteers and members of the MS Society as they work to find a cure, raise awareness, and work to enable people affected by MS to enhance their quality of life.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Public Health Care

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two-tiered medicine will not work as promised here in Alberta. The government are creating more problems than they are solving with the introduction of the third way. There is another way to the third way: a bold new government that believes in one health care system for everyone, not the two-tiered, Americanized system proposed by this tired old government. Public health care is sustainable; the Progressive Conservative government is not.

Canadians spend less than 10 per cent of their GDP on health care while Americans spend 15 per cent. Private health care is more expensive than public health care. We will not save money, and in fact costs to individual Albertans and employers will increase significantly through the purchase of private health insurance. We need to remind those who demand a private, parallel system that Canada's publicly funded, single-payer health care system provides businesses here with a competitive advantage over American companies who must pay the high costs of private health insurance for their employees.

How many times have we heard this government claim that health care spending is out of control? Instead of the 10 per cent annual increase in spending that's claimed by this government, health care spending increases in real dollars since 1992 have been very modest, averaging only 1.6 per cent a year between 1992 and 2004. The government uses misleading numbers, not controlled for population growth or inflation, from a few high-growth years that followed deep cuts to make its spending figures artificially high.

This government is out of control, not health care spending. We used to have faith in our public health care system. Now we feel insecurity because the government continues to distort the truth.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we should never forget that universal access to comparable levels of publicly funded health care services, regardless of the ability to pay, is a fundamental element of Alberta's health care system. Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I beg leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 93(2):

- (1) the petition of Royal Trust Corporation of Canada for the Burns Memorial Trust Amendment Act, 2006,
- (2) the petition of Thomas Wispinski on behalf of the Alberta Catholic Health Corporation for the Mary Immaculate Hospital of Mundare Act,
- (3) the petition of Edmonton Community Foundation for the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006, and
- (4) the petition of Calgary Olympic Development Association for the Canada Olympic Park Property Tax Exemption Amendment Act, 2006.

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table two documents on behalf of the leader of the NDP opposition. The first is a letter from Dr. John Wodak, of Sherwood Park. He calls the government's third-way experiment ill-defined and suggests that the venture be postponed for several years.

I'm also tabling an ad by Acure Health Corporation that was faxed to my constituency. It is promoting private health insurance for insured services. The insurance is underwritten by Western Financial Group, of which Mr. Jim Dinning is chairman of the board.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, did you have a tabling? Go ahead.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling six copies of letters from Karen Caine, Shauna Vanderheide, T. Beyer, Roberta Wells, M. Beyer, and Kristine Hagen regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycares.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings on health care. The first is from Richard Clarke, asking for sustainable universal medical insurance for all Albertans; then from Michele Brown, commenting on her concerns with having doctors work in both systems; from Susan Williams, against having the government's third way; from Pat Anderson, with concerns about using a private insurance company, Aon, to design our health system; from P. Stein, again commenting on the capacity shortage of specialists and family doctors practising in Alberta, particularly rural.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings, and I have the appropriate copies. The first is from a constituent. The constituent is saying that he wishes to express his feelings about the incident in the Legislative Assembly involving the page earlier this month: "We expect our leaders to set an example. We have a right to demand that they respect their political opponents and respect ideas with which they do not agree."

My second tabling, with the appropriate number of copies, is letters regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters are from Robbin Bowman, Kelly Ireland, Multicultural Health Brokers Cooperative Limited, Gail Clarke, Mellissa Kraft, and Denise Fenton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of six of the many letters we have received from concerned parents voicing serious concerns with the cancellation of the national daycare program. The letters I am tabling today are from Tina Yanitski, Nicole Kerfont, Pamela Hollander, Jane Potenher-Neal, Carol Hanson, and Pam Kerrigan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I would like to table five copies of the book Hear My Voice, which I referred to earlier. It's personal stories of persons with developmental disabilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise here today and table six letters from concerned Albertans regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare in our province. The letters I am tabling today are from Lori Folk, Pearl Frederick, Wendy, Christine Roguski, Andrea Hylak, and Maria Esperanza.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today with a number of tablings, the first being a letter from a constituent of Edmonton-Rutherford, Sterling Rideout. He indicates that he read the government's health policy framework with interest but, unfortunately, found it full of "ambiguity, vagueness, platitudes and repetition." Having read the Alberta Liberal vision for the health of Albertans, he found the proposals "to the point, specific, informative, easy to understand."

Also, the requisite number of copies from Reg Roberts, who e-mailed the Alberta Connects website, had a response from the Minister of Health and Wellness. This is his response to that response, indicating that it doesn't match up with his experiences with the private health care system.

The Speaker: Do you have them all?

Mr. R. Miller: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. R. Miller: I have more tablings, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, let's hurry up. We're two minutes now into this.

Mr. R. Miller: I'm trying to hurry, Mr. Speaker.

I also have six further letters regarding the provincial government's participation in the national daycare program. These are from Earl Naddin,* Coreen Rieland, Denise Cote, Ms Iwaskow, Irene Jackson, and Kim Ganne.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Mr. Stuart Palace, who believes that the four teenagers alleged to have murdered a passenger on an ETS bus should have been denied bail.

The second tabling is from Marlene and Don Schwartz, also constituents of mine. This is a copy of their letter to the Premier, asking him to advise the Treasury Board to increase funding to persons with developmental disabilities, or PDD, programs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one document to table. It's a letter from Mary and Ed Gamble. The Gambles are strongly opposed to the Premier's third-way agenda in health care. Among many reasons that they give here for their opposition is that third-way health care in Alberta is about to make many Albertans second-class citizens.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I'm tabling today are from the Terra Association, Megan Shandro, N. Keith, Angie Wiebe, Kim Pender, Janelle Schultz.

Thank you.

Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given last week on Thursday, March 16, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9.

[Motion carried]

Opted-out Physicians

Q1. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that the following question be accepted.

What is the total number of physicians who have opted out of the Alberta health care insurance plan for each of the 2001 to 2005 fiscal years and from April 1, 2005, to February 22, 2006?

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close debate.

Mr. Martin: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll look forward to getting the answers to that question.
Thank you.

[Written Question 1 carried]

Wild Rose Foundation Grants

Q3. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. Agnihotri that the following question be accepted.
For each of the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, 2003-2004, and 2004-2005 how many grants awarded by the Wild Rose Foundation were subsequently investigated due to inadequate assurance that grant funds were used as intended?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Community Development I'm pleased to respond and indicate that he, on behalf of government, is prepared to accept Written Question 3.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate or call the question.

[Written Question 3 carried]

3:00 Acheson Acclaim Sour Gas Blowout

Q4. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.
What was the total cost incurred by the government for its response to the Acheson Acclaim sour gas blowout that occurred on December 12, 2004, broken down by department?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're quite able and willing to indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 4.

Mr. Taylor: Call the question.

[Written Question 4 carried]

Royalty Payments

Q5. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.
What is the exact dollar amount paid to each group or individual by the Ministry of Energy pertaining to its latest royalty review?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Written

Question 5, we're not prepared to accept this question on the basis that the department is continuously reviewing royalties. In respect to individuals or groups it's primarily an internal review that we do, so it's just employees and staff. We also accumulate all kinds of reports that are done by various groups, both industry and other associations throughout the world, but those aren't individual amounts that we pay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would think that with all those many, many, many reports and calculations gathering dust in the basement of the Ministry of Energy, the minister could lay his hands on, you know, a few exact amounts and share them with the House. So I'm rising to express my disappointment but not my surprise.

Thank you Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 5 lost]

Medical School Spaces

Q6. Mr. Taylor moved that the following question be accepted.
For each of the fiscal years 2006-2007 through 2009-2010 how many additional spaces will be created in Alberta's medical schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is one of those questions which is very difficult to determine whether you should accept it or reject it because it asks for information which is not necessarily readily available. However, I'm going to recommend that the House accept the question, but I want to put a bit of a context around that.

Since the fall of 2000 there have been substantial increases in funded first-year physician seats in each of the two Alberta medical schools, 26 at the University of Alberta and 31 at the University of Calgary. The first graduates of those programs are now in residency training. That brings the spaces currently to 100 at the University of Calgary and 127 at the University of Alberta.

Now, the hon. member and the House will probably know that what we do each year with respect to growth in access places at postsecondary institutions is request each of the institutions to put forward their proposals for access growth. We then fund new spaces through the access growth fund, which we hope to rename the enrolment planning envelope so as to reduce any confusion between that and the access to the future fund. We also then talk with other departments. For example, with respect to health professions we would be sitting down and have been sitting down with the ministry of health to talk about where the greatest area of need is and how we can allocate resources appropriately. So the probable answer to the question, not to jump ahead of the game, is that that growth will be worked out in consultation with the postsecondary institutions involved and with the ministry of health and other stakeholders. The exact numbers will not be available until final budget dollars in each of those years are allocated.

I didn't want anyone to be under any illusions that by accepting this question or by rejecting the question, if that's what we recommend, we were trying to get around the information. It's really one of those situations where, while you have growth plans and you have growth aspirations, the question asks how many places will be in place, and that answer is never certain until the funding dollars are actually appropriated to it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I have the hon. minister on my side on this one. I'll press my luck and call the question.

[Written Question 6 carried]

Nursing Program Spaces

Q7. Mr. Taylor moved that the following question be accepted. For each of the fiscal years 2006-2007 through 2009-2010 how many additional spaces will be created in Alberta's nursing programs, broken down by institution and type of program?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to suggest that the House accept this question on the same basis as they did the last one, on the understanding that there has been considerable growth in the capacity. Between 1999 and 2005, for example, increased enrolment capacity in nursing programs across Alberta is anticipated to result in 3,177 student seats across all years of programming in registered nurse, licensed practical nurse, and registered psychiatric nurse education programs in 2009-2010. It will translate into approximately 525 new RN bachelor graduates, 188 new RN diploma graduates, 67 new RN masters and PhD graduates, 285 new LPN graduates.

However, as I indicated before, while we plan growth, while we anticipate growth, while we work with the department of health in terms of where we need new health care professionals and we work with each of the institutions in terms of how they can expand capacity, we're working in a number of areas to ensure that access to enrolment growth is available not just in urban centres but distributed across the province and distributed into rural areas where appropriate. New programs are being proposed. For example, Grande Prairie college is hoping to offer an RN program in co-operation with the University of Alberta. Both Grande Prairie and Northern Lakes colleges have proposals with respect to, for example, cohorts of education for RNs and LPNs in High Level. So there are many things happening and many proposals in place, some of which will actually be the subject of funding in the budget, I hope, in a couple of days.

With respect to exact places that are going to happen down the road, all I can actually report are the ones that we've got funded and put in place, and then we'll have to speculate on the others, knowing that as enrolment growth funds become available, both health profession and occupation programs and other programs are allocated to institutions across the province.

[Written Question 7 carried]

Physician Recruitment

Q8. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted. How many physicians have been recruited to work in Alberta municipalities with populations equal to or less than 15,000 residents for the fiscal years 2002-03, 2003-04, 2004-05, and April 1, 2005, to February 23, 2006?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government will accept this written question with an amendment. The hon. member was notified before 10 this morning of such an amendment. We would propose that the question be amended by striking out "How many physicians have been recruited to work in" and substituting "What was the percentage increase in the number of physicians working in."

The Speaker: On the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not keen on this amendment because it disguises the information that I was looking for. I wanted to see what the numbers were that had actually been recruited because it makes a difference to us if there was one, or 10, or 50, and a percentage increase doesn't give us that kind of specificity. You could say that it increased by 100 per cent over the previous year because you had zero and now you have one. It really doesn't give us any kind of an indication of what's going on in those areas. I would have preferred to have had the information that I had requested originally, but it appears that I'm not going to get it.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Shall I now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate, or just call the question?

Ms Blakeman: Question.

[Written Question 8 as amended carried]

3:10 Health Resource Centre Joint Replacements

Q9. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted. How many of the patients who had qualified to be put on the list for surgery in the Alberta hip and knee replacement project were unable to have their surgery completed at the Health Resource Centre in Calgary due to other health issues that these patients had that could not be treated by this particular private clinic during the fiscal year 2004-2005?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 9.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate?

[Written Question 9 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given last Thursday, March 16, it is my pleasure to now move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1 through 19.

[Motion carried]

Public Affairs Bureau Review Committee

M1. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all submissions received by the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau Review Committee between May 26, 2005, and February 22, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 1 I will respond on behalf of the hon. Premier by saying that this particular motion will need to be rejected, and I'd like to basically provide a little bit of insight as to why. Number one, the information about the review that is requested here is in fact subject to our internal review process, and as such it's not able to be released. Secondly, I should probably mention that the interviews that were conducted were verbal, and they were as such conducted either in person or by telephone. Thirdly, the parties who were interviewed in this particular internal review did so with the expectation that their comments would not be publicly disseminated. So on that basis we are unable to respond in the affirmative, and we'll have to reject MR 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this is sort of the idea of consultation behind closed doors again. I would remind the minister that this is taxpayers' money. I know that they see the Public Affairs Bureau as basically their little institution to run and put their spin on things, but I would remind them that it's not the Conservative Party, that this is actually taxpayers' money. These people are supposedly public servants paid for by the taxpayers of Alberta, and they have a lot of power. We've learned this over the years.

If there was to be a review, I would think we'd want an open public review. I see the member back there – I hope he gets into the debate. An open public review: obviously, they don't want to do this. Again, the reputation that this group has is just basically an arm of government, the spin doctors. That's totally inappropriate in a society where the taxpayers are picking up the bill. It now is basically a propaganda arm run directly out of the Premier's office. I was hoping that this review would say that that's what's happening because that's what all of us believe.

I can't understand, when we're dealing with something that's paid for by taxpayers' money in the public regime, that we can't have this information. Mr. Speaker, this makes absolutely no sense to me at all. I could understand it if it was the Conservative Party paying for this, even though they treat it as sort of their propaganda wing. We really would like to know who's saying what behind closed doors. Are we just going to continue in the same way? I hope the member from Calgary – I forget the name of the last debate – I'd certainly like to hear from that member in this particular debate. Maybe we'll get time in the second question that he can stand up and do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 1 lost]

Public Affairs Bureau Review Committee

M2. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all minutes of the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau Review Committee meetings from May 26, 2005, to February 22, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 2, which effectively requests the provision of certain minutes from certain meetings, I need to inform all members present that there were no minutes kept at those particular meetings, so it would be impossible to provide something that does not exist. On that basis, I would indicate that we will have to reject this Motion for a Return 2.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I find it, to say the least, unusual, unbelievable that we'd have these meetings, and there would not be minutes of what was going on in the meetings. I mean, what kind of way to run the ship is that? Again, it's this whole idea of closed meetings, taxpayers' money, and the public not consulted, the public not supposed to know, not even people in the Legislature supposed to know what's going on.

Doesn't this talk about 100 years of democracy, the way this Public Affairs Bureau works, Mr. Speaker? I think that the government should be totally ashamed about this, totally ashamed that a Public Affairs Bureau is working out of the Premier's office as a propaganda spin for the government, and you say to the people in the Legislative Assembly here today and through us to the people of Alberta that we have no rights – we have no rights – to know what's going on. This is the government's take on it.

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't surprise me. I can't say that I'm shocked. I'm appalled but not shocked because I expected this.

Mr. Hancock: Not shocked and appalled?

Mr. Martin: Well, the hon. House leader should be shocked and appalled that this is happening, Mr. Speaker.

I can't believe that this Public Affairs Bureau – while I may not have liked the Public Affairs Bureau before, I think it's just under this government, under this Premier, since it came under the Premier's purview, under his direction. Surely the government must see something wrong with this. If they don't, then maybe we do have a four-year dictatorship here in the province. Hopefully, the next time we celebrate 100 years of democracy, we can at least have a Legislature that has purview over some of this information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

Health Resource Centre and Network Health Inc.

M3. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence, including e-mails, contracts, proposals, briefing notes, or memoranda, prepared for or by the government and/or the Calgary health region pertaining to the Health Resource Centre or Network Health Inc. between January 1, 2002, and February 22, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is rejecting Motion for a Return 3. When the public body is considering giving access to a record that may contain third-party business information, the public body must provide written notice to the third party prior to disclosure in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Therefore, request for this information must be made under provision of the FOIP Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, here we have a government and a minister that says that they want to consult with Albertans. They're moving ahead with the so-called third way, and the minister says, "We can consult, and we want everybody to know what's going on." One of the advocates for privatization is this particular group in Calgary moving ahead, pushing ahead, yet the minister says, "Well, it's their business review." Well, this is a very important part of the information that we should have and the people of Alberta should have because this is a group that's pushing ahead with privatization. What influence do they have with government?

Again, if the minister talks about the consultation process, that they're open, transparent. Well, we're not. This is information that the people of Alberta should have. I'm not naive enough to think that they're going to do this but, again, it's just typical, Mr. Speaker, absolutely typical of the way this government operates, behind closed doors.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 3 lost]

Public Affairs Bureau Review Committee

M4. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the report of the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau Review Committee announced on May 26, 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion 4 I will indicate on behalf of government that we are going to be rejecting this particular motion, and I'd like to briefly explain the rationale for that conclusion. Within government management periodically reviews the structure and resourcing of departments to ensure that they are organized in a manner that would allow them to carry out their mandates as effectively as possible. These, in fact, are internal, management-type responsibilities, and they are not therefore deemed appropriate for public review. They are internal.

Now, the Public Affairs Bureau review process was no different than many other processes. In fact, the particular recommendations of an advisory committee that does get obtained for consideration by management in its review of the Public Affairs Bureau organizations were provided for internal purposes only. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, we will be rejecting Motion for a Return 4.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hate repeating myself, but here we go again. Here's a government agency, paid for by the taxpayers. The minister is right about one thing. He says that it's no different from other reviews; it's an internal review. It seems like they think that the taxpayers' money is just for their use. Here we have a very powerful part of the government, the Public Affairs Bureau. Here we are in the Legislature of Alberta, the elected representatives, asking for information about a government department and being refused by the government, saying, "It's just for internal review, and it's no different from other reviews."

That's the problem, Mr. Speaker, to the deputy House leader. That's the problem. That's the way this government operates: behind closed doors. We're well aware of that, but this is something that should change. Surely this government should see the irony of this. Here is a Public Affairs Bureau that's probably the most important – directly out of the Premier's office, paid for by the taxpayers – and they think that it's their own internal right to control this information. We as legislators here have no rights. I mean, democracy. Yeah, real democracy in Alberta, Alberta style.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

CO₂ Injection

M5. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies, briefing notes, backgrounders, feasibility studies, or environmental assessments prepared by or for the Ministry of Environment from January 1, 2003, to February 22, 2006, that analyze the injection of CO₂ for storage purposes.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Environment I'd like to state that we would like to move an amendment to this motion. We certainly accept the intent of this motion. Copies have been distributed to everybody. We would accept an amendment saying, "copies of all studies, feasibility studies, or environmental assessments prepared by or for the Ministry of Environment from January 1, 2003, to February 22, 2006, that analyze the injection of CO₂ for storage purposes." That does amend it by striking out "briefing notes" and "backgrounders."

Both briefing notes and backgrounders for the most part are provided very much on a confidential basis, internal for discussion for the minister's purposes. They also would potentially contain information that would be very proprietary to any individual company that would be involved, and that would be subject to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

So we'd move to accept it on an amended basis.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to look at some of the information in regard to the decisions being made in regard to CO₂ injection. However, I do take exception to the amendment in some very important ways, not the least of which being the fact that backgrounders and briefing notes are, in fact, very useful in understanding the direction of the policy being undertaken in this particular issue and then all other issues as well. There are lots of statistical analyses and data sets out there, but what I think Albertans would like to know and need to know about this major undertaking of CO₂ injection and storage is which ones are actually being considered by the minister, what recommendations are being made, and how those recommendations are actually deliberated or considered.

I feel a dark shadow passing over the Legislature here in regard to this motion because it reminds me of Bill 20. Bill 20 looks to categorically exempt briefing notes and ministerial backgrounders from any FOIP requests, and conceivably any information could be CCed to the minister and then become exempt from FOIP. So by putting that stamp of being a briefing note or something that is confidential to ministerial jurisdiction only will, as I say, put a censor across, perhaps, vast tracts of information that are relevant to the proceedings of good government here in this Legislature. I have a serious problem with that. For the minister to indicate that such information will also not be provided to the Assembly directly is completely counter to the rhetoric and talk around here about transparency, openness, and accountability. So I have difficulty. In fact, I will not support the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder do you want to close the debate or should we call the question?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I don't preclude the anticipation with which I'm looking for this information that I've asked for. You know, on this whole CO₂ injection process we need to have further clarification, and I've had some very illuminating discussions with members here in the House. I guess my biggest concern is to make sure we are differentiating between injection of CO₂ for the extraction of oil and CO₂ for storage so that it does not contribute to the greenhouse effect in the atmosphere. I would like to see clarification between those two things because they are, in fact, two very different things. I hope that we all are edified and educated on this subject so that we don't spread confusion on this matter and think that we're perhaps helping the atmosphere by injecting just for the sake of extracting oil.

So I close the debate.

[Motion for a Return 5 as amended carried]

3:30 CO₂ Injection

M6. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies, briefing notes, backgrounders, feasibility studies, or environmental assessments prepared by or for the Ministry of Energy and/or the Ministry of Environment from January 1, 2003, to February 22, 2006, that analyze the injection of CO₂ for the extraction of oil.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one is very much like Motion for a Return 5. It does take a very significant difference, though, as the hon. member mentioned. This is more for the extraction of oil rather than for storage purposes, and they are different purposes.

We'd like to move an amendment to this one as well, Motion for a Return 6, by striking out "briefing notes, backgrounders." Therefore, the amended motion would read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all studies, feasibility studies, or environmental assessments prepared by or for the Ministry of Energy and/or the Ministry of Environment from January 1, 2003, to February 22, 2006, that analyze the injection of CO₂ for the extraction of oil.

For the same reasons previously said, we are happy to give the information. You get lots of material that comes to the minister.

Much of it is for your own internal purpose and need for when you're examining various possibilities. Some of it's very proprietary. Much of it's proprietary to individual companies as they're coming forward and making some recommendations. So it's for that reason that we're striking out "briefing notes, backgrounders," but we're happy to comply with the basic request of this motion as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. minister has an amendment. That's what we're on now if people want to participate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's openness in presenting at least some of the information relevant to this. Once again my very same argument applies to this amendment, and I just want to reiterate, I guess, the crossroads that we could be at here in regard to excluding information from public purview.

I do realize that there is some sensitivity in briefing notes. You know, I do have my own briefing notes that I use every day here, but when it comes down to making an actual policy and the direction of that policy, I believe that at least sometimes we do need to have that direction. There's a vast galaxy of information out there on any given subject, but if we know where the minister is drawing his or her conclusions from, it makes a very large difference as to what sorts of plans and information we can have to work with.

Again, it's this whole issue of Bill 20. I'm very concerned about Bill 20 in regard to being able to just put that ministerial briefing note stamp on any pile of information, and suddenly it disappears from public view. So I do with all due respect speak in rejection of this amendment.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, do you want to conclude the debate, or should I call the question?

Mr. Eggen: I'll just very briefly, yes. I'm looking forward to seeing this information. As you can see, I'm looking both from the Energy and the Environment side in regard to CO₂ injection, and I hope that each of us here in the House doesn't mix up storage with injection for taking the oil out. In fact, the New Democrats support very much using CO₂ as opposed to water for injection to extract more oil from the ground, but we just don't want it to be framed in the illusion that this is somehow long-term storage of CO₂ that would protect us from the effects of greenhouse gases.

I will close the debate on this one and thank you very much.

[Motion for a Return 6 as amended carried]

Third-way Health Initiative

M7. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including legal opinions, briefing notes, backgrounders, or memoranda, prepared by or for the Ministry of Health from January 1, 2003, to February 22, 2006, that analyze whether the government's third-way initiative violates either existing provincial legislation or the Canada Health Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon.

Minister of Health and Wellness I need to indicate to all members that government's response to this particular request will be to reject it, and I'd like to briefly explain why on behalf of that same minister. The reason, really, is because the records that are being requested here are likely to fall within the exception that is outlined in section 27 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, otherwise known as FOIP. The department's practice is not to disclose records that are protected by solicitor-client privilege, or legal privilege. So, on that basis, we find it necessary to reject this particular MR.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: I'm absolutely shocked that this got rejected, Mr. Speaker. This I think goes to the heart of it. Now the minister is doing the Privacy Commissioner's job for him before it even goes there. This is absolutely key because this has to do with the so-called third-way initiative. We're trying to figure out here, because of the vagueness of what the government is talking about, whether this initiative, the so-called third way, violates either existing provincial legislation or the Canada Health Act. This is absolutely crucial for us to know what we're dealing with here. If it does violate the Canada Health Act – and we believe on this side that it does to some degree – that could end up costing the taxpayers millions of dollars if this government bullheadedly moves ahead in this particular way with the health care privatization.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we'd want to know this information that could end up, as I say, costing the taxpayers millions of dollars. Again, typical of this government: if we can find a loophole, we don't want to give the information; behind closed doors. It's just typical of what we've learned to expect, and we'll keep asking the questions. Maybe someday there'll be a miracle, and they'll actually answer something that was worth while.

[Motion for a Return 7 lost]

Health and Wellness Consultations

M8. Mr. Martin moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the results, data, and analysis of all public opinion polls, focus groups, surveys, and questionnaires undertaken by or on behalf of the Ministry of Health and Wellness from January 1, 2004, to February 22, 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Alberta Health and Wellness I will indicate that government is not able to support this motion, and as such we will have to reject it. I'd like to briefly offer an explanation as to why that is the case. Mr. Speaker, as you and all members here would know, when the public body is considering giving access to a record that may contain third-party business or personal information, the public body must provide written notice to the third party and/or to individuals prior to disclosure in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Therefore, a request for this information must be made under provisions of that act, and as such we find ourselves in a position of having to reject this particular request.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What patent nonsense. This has nothing to do with getting written permission from third parties. We're talking about public opinion polls, focus groups, surveys, and questionnaires paid for by the taxpayers of Alberta. That's what we're asking about. Where's the third party in that?

This is money, again, paid by the taxpayers of Alberta. They're doing these focus groups. They told us that. They're doing opinion polls. We're bringing in what is supposed to be a major initiative sometime later on in the session, and here again this government is saying that we as legislators don't have the right to know this business. To say that this is third party, that they can't do this without, you know, getting permission from the third party – from what? The opinion poll? I'm sure that the government could release opinion polls that they paid for. They can talk about the focus groups and all the rest of it. Again, it's the taxpayers paying for this, Mr. Speaker.

You know, to me it's just unbelievable that this government can sit there, and for the most important initiative that we're going to be dealing with in the next number of years, we can't get this information. Yet they're going to come, they say, with legislation later on.

Again, tie the two together. I'm sure the Public Affairs Bureau is behind this. I'm sure that this group that we can't get information on is also tied into this particular polling and all the rest of it. But, again, we'll keep trying. Closed-door government, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 8 lost]

Grizzly Bear Population Data

M9. Mr. Eggen moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all reports, briefing notes, backgrounders, or memoranda regarding grizzly bear populations in Alberta prepared by or for the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development from January 1, 2004, to February 22, 2006.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I would like to indicate that we will be rejecting this motion for a return, but on March 3 of this year the Department of SRD released the information regarding the grizzly bear recovery program and other information regarding the provincial grizzly bear population. This information is publicly available on the Sustainable Resource Development website. With respect to the other materials, the briefing notes and memoranda, we've had a number of discussions already on that issue, and we don't need to further that debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to close the debate.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, this particular motion, which I drafted before that information was released, is somewhat less urgent save for the fact that it's curious to see how poorly the decision was executed to in fact suspend the hunt for the next three years. It wasn't a smooth process by any means, and it took several individuals and the press to quite frankly stick their necks out to actually have this move forward. What we would like to know and I'm sure the public would like to know is: what was wrong with the study that was being withheld for so long in regard to the grizzly bear population, and why were there so many differing opinions there?

I think that there was, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of spin and misinformation being put forward by the SRD department in regard to the actual number of grizzly bears. It was clear that they knew that their estimates were seriously less than the actual population out there. I had heard that between highway 16 and highway 1, in fact, there could be as few as a hundred bears as opposed to the 500 or 600 or 700 bears being put forward by SRD for several seasons. You know, there's a whole mix here that gets in the way of true ecological decision-making in terms of sustaining this population, and the politics of the hunt got involved there. Certainly, a very, very powerful lobby of the Energy and forestry departments was getting involved and interfering with this.

So, finally, I do applaud the minister for making the decision to suspend the hunt for three years. I'm just hoping that we will realize that the numbers are in a crisis state, that the grizzly bear is a threatened species, that the grizzly bear, in fact, is an indicator of a larger problem of unsustainable development of the eastern slopes and that we look to preserving meaningful tracts of land for future generations, which would be for the benefit of not just the grizzly bears but for the whole ecosystem and for our children and grandchildren.

I do want to say once again, though, that I do appreciate the hon. minister suspending the hunt for the next three years. I know that the grizzly bears are currently still hibernating, but I would like to suggest and nominate that the hon. minister is the first one out there to break the good news to the grizzly bear population when they do wake up and be there to tell them that they won't be at the short end of a gun coming this fall.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 9 lost]

Land Sales Systems

M10. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the agenda and minutes of the February 20, 2004, meeting involving the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo referenced on page 30 of the October 2005 Report of the Auditor General on Alberta Social Housing Corporation – Land Sales Systems.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion 10 I'm recommending that it be rejected. That is because, as referenced in the Auditor General's report, the February 20, 2004, meeting between the minister of seniors and the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was an informal meeting that did not have a written agenda or minutes, so these documents simply do not exist. I'd also like to add that on July 15, 2005, my department released almost 500 pages of land appraisals, land sales agreements, correspondence, and other records to the opposition under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This clearly shows that we do release information when it's appropriate under this act, but in this case the release of these documents under FOIP is inappropriate. Those same reasons apply to this motion because the documents simply do not exist.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to conclude the debate.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. That may well be the case, but something happened, Mr. Speaker. I would just remind the minister that the Auditor General found very serious failings in the way we dealt with the Fort McMurray land deal. In the 2000 Confederation Heights deal, 73 free acres, the price was lower than the appraised value. I mean, that cost the taxpayers a lot of money. It caused housing prices to certainly skyrocket in Fort McMurray. Then we found with Timberlea all the untendered parts of the bids going, you know, for much less than the tendered parts right by each other. We found financing terms.

All these things the Auditor General talked about. We've been trying to find out: why did that happen, Mr. Speaker? Why did that happen? We have not got an answer yet. The Auditor General doesn't have the answer. All we know is that there are problems, big problems again, that cost the taxpayers a lot of extra money and certainly didn't help the land prices in Fort McMurray. We know what has happened there.

Again it's transparency. We're told by this government that they always look into things. They would never have any problems at all in this government, never any things that were wrong. They would never have a Gomery. They would never have anything like this because I think the Premier said that he would be hung. Well, I mean, something went desperately wrong here, Mr. Speaker, and we still don't have the answers. We know the answers that the taxpayers got and we know what some of the people in Fort McMurray got. Why did it happen? We still don't know. We'll wait, then, for the next question.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 10 lost]

3:50 Land Sales Systems

M11. Mr. Martin moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the memo from the deputy minister to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports referenced on page 30 of the October 2005 Report of the Auditor General on Alberta Social Housing Corporation – Land Sales Systems.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this particular case the same answers can't come back from the minister because there was a copy of the memo, and it is alluded to by the Auditor General.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 11 I am recommending that it be rejected, and that's because the memo identified in the motion has already been requested under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. After a thorough review it was determined that it would be inappropriate to provide this memo to the opposition because the request would breach sections 17, 21, and 24 of the FOIP Act. Specifically, releasing this information would be an unreasonable invasion of a third party's personal privacy. The same reasons why this request was denied apply here as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that's interesting. This is not an informal conversation, that the minister used last time. This was a memo, and she's talking about a third party. Well, it was a memo from the deputy minister – the last time I looked, they were paid by the taxpayers of Alberta – to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Who's the third party here? I mean, this is the top deputy minister to the minister.

Again I would remind members of the Assembly that this is a very serious situation in terms of how this went awry, and surely it's part of the job of the opposition but, more than that, of the people in the Legislative Assembly to try to find out when taxpayers' money is wasted – in this case it was – why it was wasted, why certain people that were close to the government seem to have an inside track. This information could be very valuable so it never happens again. I know that it didn't happen in this minister's time, but if we don't learn from the past, we're doomed to repeat the same mistakes again.

So again I'm not surprised but disappointed that we'll probably never get to the thing. We'll never have a public inquiry in this province ever to get to the bottom of this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 11 lost]

Audit of Securities Commission

M12. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. R. Miller that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the final report submitted by the accounting firm KPMG to the Alberta Securities Commission, ASC, auditing ASC employee computer systems.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I need to indicate that this particular Motion for a Return 12 will need to be rejected. The reason for that is as follows. First of all, the Alberta Securities Commission Board did in fact retain the KPMG firm to perform an audit on the ASC's e-mail system, that being the Alberta Securities Commission. I'm advised that the KPMG report in question is, in fact, an internal and confidential document of the Alberta Securities Commission. As such, it is necessary for government to reject this Motion for a Return 12.

I should just conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the hon. Minister of Finance actually addressed this matter here in question period over a year ago – as I recall, it was April 21 – and perhaps on other occasions as well. So there is some previous record with respect to this particular issue.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, if we thought that the hon. Minister of Finance had addressed the issue in question period in a manner that we found a satisfactory answering to our questions, I'm sure we wouldn't have gone ahead with this motion for a return. What can I say except that I'm disappointed and once again not surprised? Although I do note the note of regret in the Deputy Government House Leader's voice every time he says that he's going to have to reject one of these things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 12 lost]

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

M13. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. R. Miller that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund ethical investment policy.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, again on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance, who oversees this particular area, I need to indicate that government will be rejecting this particular motion. The motion for a return, as we can all read, refers to an ethical investment policy, inferring that there is, in fact, some stand-alone ethical policy in existence. In fact, there is no separate ethical investment policy that I'm aware of. Investments are made on the basis of what their risk and return components are. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I need to indicate that that's the answer, and we'll have to reject this particular motion for those reasons.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to conclude the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am of course absolutely unsurprised by the response, and with that in mind I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a document called Ethical Guidelines for the Government Pension Fund – Global, put out by the Finance department, the Ministry of Finance, of the government of Norway.

The Speaker: Perhaps you could do that tomorrow during the Routine.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will.

[Motion for a Return 13 lost]

Student Loan Relief Program

M14. Mr. Taylor moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including but not limited to studies, budgetary analyses, submissions, proposals, memos, and other correspondence, related to the decision to increase the minimum debt level required for eligibility for the Alberta student loan relief program from $5,000 to $7,140 per annum.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to indicate that I'm prepared to accept this motion. I recommend acceptance of the motion, although before the hon. member opposite gets too excited, I would want to make sure that people were aware that it's not likely to end up in a whole truckload of documents coming over. The hon. member will know or should know that the rationale for moving to $7,140 is that the federal government finally, after 10 years, increased their lending limits to $7,140. Provincial lending kicks in after the federal lending, so that's essentially where the increase in the lending limit comes from and the increase in the debt load comes from.

So it's not rocket science. It's not as a result of a huge amount of analysis. It's really as a result of the collaborative process of the loan system across the country. In fact, one of the reasons why the debt load increased as well is that we don't forgive federal debt. We encourage the federal government to get involved in a program where they could forgive some of the debt that they put out.

We essentially have two ways of dealing with student debt. The first is for a first-time student borrowing money to have a student loan relief program so that the first amount of money that we would give a first-time student borrowing would be a grant rather than a loan. Then the second is a student relief benefit, which pays down their debt on their behalf after they graduate and consolidate their debt.

The problem we have, of course, is that we only give relief on provincially advanced debt, not federally advanced debt, and the new level, the $7,140, is a federal amount. Under the student loan program across the country we advance federal monies first and then advance provincial monies on top of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to acknowledge the comments of the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and thank him on a couple of levels: number one, for agreeing to support this motion for a return and, number two, for promising that there won't be a truckload of documents forthcoming. Any time that we can get the answers we're seeking, that give us a fuller and more complete understanding of issues around student debt load and student assistance program matters and affordability, you know, without having to clear-cut another chunk of Clayoquot Sound in British Columbia to fell the trees to produce the paper to do that I think is a good day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 14 carried]

Campus Alberta Quality Council

M15. Mr. Taylor moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents, including but not limited to studies, reports, proposals, presentations, and correspondence, related to the design, mandate, and implementation of the Campus Alberta Quality Council, including any correspondence between the Ministry of Advanced Education, formerly Learning, and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, AUCC, or other accreditation organizations.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In keeping with the hon. member's desire not to clear-cut Clayoquot or any other place in order to get documents, I have to recommend that this particular motion be rejected.

Mr. Speaker, the Campus Alberta Quality Council is a very important agency, a quality assurance agency that makes recommendations to the Minister of Advanced Education on applications from postsecondary institutions seeking to offer new degree programs in Alberta. Other than degrees in divinity all degree programs offered in Alberta, including degrees offered by nonresident institutions, must be approved by the minister after such a recommendation.

This motion for a return is very similar to Motion for a Return 50 in the last session of this Legislature. It was also moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Again, the concern is similar, that the motion is very broad, asks for a wide range of documents, most of which are available to the member by going to the Campus Alberta Quality Council's website. Any information that is not available on the website he could certainly ask for. There are no secrets here. I'd be happy to provide him with appropriate information.

Some of the information that's being requested simply just does not exist. On the question of correspondence between the department and AUCC about the design, mandate, and implementation of the council, there's no such official correspondence of which I am aware after questioning. This was also already indicated to the hon. member in the response to Motion for a Return 50 in the last session.

In short, Mr. Speaker, most of the information the hon. member wants is available on the website at www.caqc.gov.ab.ca. Most of the rest of the information he's seeking doesn't exist. But if there's some specific information he wants about the set-up, operation, investigation, analysis with respect to the Alberta quality council, I'd be happy to deal with his questions and invite him to either send me the request for the information or arrange to sit down with myself and, if I can, invite the members of the quality council.

There's nothing secret about the quality council. They're doing great work for Albertans. They were set up to achieve a quality standard. They're working with us to achieve standards of assessment, standards of quality across the country so that education in Alberta can be seen for its value to any institution around the world. It's appropriate for every Albertan to take a look at the quality council and the good work that it's doing. I'd be happy to zero in on whatever information might be applicable, but this question is too broad to be answered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll close the debate very quickly simply by making a point, and I will take the minister up on his offer. The Campus Alberta Quality Council is set up and does seek to set high standards for excellence in postsecondary education within the province of Alberta. Of course, the problem with the Campus Alberta Quality Council, as we speak today, is that it confines its activities to the province of Alberta. The last time I looked, although we may be a distinct society, we are still a member of Confederation. We cannot operate in isolation. That's why it is instructive to know what work has been undertaken or, furthermore, what work is being undertaken or will be undertaken in the future. I realize that I'm going a little off the scope of the motion, as broad as the minister thinks it already is at this point, to determine any kind of communication that is or should be going on between the Campus Alberta Quality Council and the AUCC, the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that right now, because we do not have a national accreditation facility for postsecondary institutions and the programs that they offer in this country, the AUCC falls almost by default into a role very similar to that. In order to get easy transition and transference from a baccalaureate degree in this province to a graduate studies program at an institution in another province, it helps a whole lot to have AUCC recognition because that tells the graduate school at the other university in whatever province that, in fact, the baccalaureate degree that the student has meets certain standards and is recognized by the AUCC.

I see that the minister is shaking his head. We've had this discussion before. We'll have this discussion again. Until such time as the Campus Alberta Quality Council, perhaps, is the campus Canada quality council, I think there's benefit in communicating with the AUCC and making sure that the quality council's mandate and standards line up with the AUCC.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 15 lost]

Health and Wellness Travel Expenses

M16. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a detailed breakdown of all expenses incurred by the Minister of Health and Wellness, her staff, and/or designate on trips during the 2004-2005 fiscal year, including but not limited to travel, accommodation, meals, receptions, and hosting as well as incidental and miscellaneous expenses.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to just quickly reference Motion for a Return 16. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness I would like to indicate that the government is prepared to accept Motion for a Return 16.

Ms Blakeman: Excellent.
Question.

[Motion for a Return 16 carried]

Private Nonemergency Health Insurance

M17. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all cost-benefit analyses for the implementation of private insurance for nonemergency health services.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again on behalf of the hon. Minister of Alberta Health and Wellness I need to indicate that the government will be rejecting this Motion for a Return 17. Briefly, here is why. The information may contain pending policy and/or budgetary information – perhaps forthcoming budgetary information; we'll see – that could interfere with the decision-making process at Alberta Health and Wellness. As such, that ministry may need to consider these records prior to any such broad dissemination. Finally, Alberta Health and Wellness has in fact received a similar FOIP request on these records. For those particular reasons the government will indicate that it is unable to support this motion for a return and will be rejecting it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm disappointed to hear that because the information that has been requested here is of keen interest to Albertans to help understand why the government is making certain decisions. If the issue for the government is the timing of the particular request, I invite the minister to provide that information following the budget debate if, in fact, that is what is causing her concern at this time. I'm certainly willing to honour the confidentiality of the budget until it's released. If that is what her primary holdback concern is, please release it after that time.

This is another example, Mr. Speaker, of the frustration that we in the opposition experience in trying to get information. As you've pointed out on a number of occasions, it's question period, not answer period. We don't get answers during that opportunity. We send letters. We don't get information that way. We ask in written questions and motions for returns. We often are turned down there. We do FOIP requests and are met with enormous expenses that are in the tens and sometimes hundreds of thousands of dollars to try and meet some of these requests. So, yes, we are going to continue to try every possible avenue that is available to us to pry information out of this government because they certainly don't provide it without having every legal means brought upon them to provide that information. I'm not surprised. This is typical of the government, particularly around their plans for privatizing health care, that they will not tell us from whence this is coming and who's talking to them and what the studies are that they've done. Disappointed, but on we go.

[Motion for a Return 17 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Meetings with Private Health Care Representatives

M18. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing for each of the fiscal years 2003-2004 and 2004-2005 a list of all groups and individuals representing either specific private health care related companies or any association, group, or organization representing the interests of the private health care industry who have met with the Premier, the Minister of Health and Wellness, the assistant deputy ministers of Health and Wellness, or any Alberta standing policy committee.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. The purpose of this is obvious, Mr. Speaker. Since we don't have a lobbyist registry, we are unable to find out who has had the ear of the Premier and of the Minister of Health and Wellness to be able to influence them in the decisions that they make. This is an attempt on our part to elicit exactly who has had access to them so that the rest of the public can find out who's been able to influence them when members of the public have not.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion for a Return 18 falls within the purview of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, and I will respond on her behalf by indicating that the government will need to reject this motion for a return. Here, briefly, are some of the reasons why. First of all, the information requested may in fact contain personal and very private information. When the public body is considering giving access to a record that may contain third-party business information, the public body must provide written notice to the third party prior to such disclosure, which is in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, FOIP. This information is not readily available and would require an inordinate amount of departmental resources to research and compile. Accessing this information under FOIP would allow government to consider an appropriate fee for this request if applicable.

So for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, a request for this particular information would be better made and, I would submit, must be made under the provisions of the FOIP Act. As such, the government will need to reject this particular MR.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to conclude the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly why we need a lobbyist registry in this province. We had an all-party committee that looked at it and certainly recommended that that happen because this is the process that's met. We've had a group of people who've been able to meet with the Premier, with the Minister of Health and Wellness, influence them, and the rest of the people, the citizens of the province of Alberta, have no idea who those people are. Using the excuse that this is somehow private does not cut it in this province when there's been access to be able to influence government policy. All we asked for was a listing of those people. We didn't ask for what was in the meeting or what the policies were that were recommended.

Mr. Taylor: Or how much the orange juice cost.

Ms Blakeman: Or, indeed, how much the orange juice cost.

But this is why there's such a problem here. It's antidemocratic. This is part of what is going to bring this government down, if I may be allowed to say so, Mr. Speaker. It's that absolute disregard for openness and transparency. What is the need to have secrecy here? If those individuals are meeting to influence this government on government policy, then their names should be public. Maybe what they're actually discussing behind closed doors may not be, but who is getting access to the government is of utmost importance, and it should be made public. That's why this kind of arrogance is going to contribute to bringing this government down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 18 lost]

Alberta Securities Commission

M19. Mr. Taylor moved on behalf of Mr. R. Miller that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the report completed by BearingPoint Canada regarding employee complaints at the Alberta Securities Commission that allege senior management engaged in favouritism and fostered an oppressive work environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance with respect to Motion for a Return 19 and to indicate on her behalf and on behalf of government that there are reasons to reject this particular motion for a return.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Securities Commission Board retained BearingPoint Canada as their management consultant in order to conduct an organizational assessment of the Alberta Securities Commission management. The BearingPoint Canada report is an internal and confidential report of the Alberta Securities Commission.

Furthermore, I believe that the Minister of Finance did speak to the issues at hand with respect to the Alberta Securities Commission on May 9, 2005, on April 26, 2005, on April 7, 2005, on April 5, 2005, on April 4, 2005, on March 23, 2005, and perhaps on other occasions as well and has advised me that her advice is that government will have to reject this particular motion for a return.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close the debate.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wow. That was quite a list you put together, quite a list, in fact, of all the times that the Minister of Finance has spoken to this issue. It must have taken some research dollars and resources and time. Needless to say – but I'll say it anyway – if the Official Opposition had been satisfied with those answers, this motion for a return would not be appearing on the Order Paper today.

Thank you.

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you two people who have been following the progress of the MLA task force with great interest: Robert Warden and Laura Gibos. I would ask them to rise and be recognized by this House.

Bill 205 Continuing Care Standards Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would firstly like to thank my caucus colleague from Edmonton-Manning for so generously giving me his bill draw number, 205. The issue of protection for those in care has been of great interest to him for many years.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I delivered my maiden speech on May 8, '05. I had no idea at that time how prophetic it would be, and I am paraphrasing. I spoke of the need for provincial, standardized care for the vulnerable in long-term care. I spoke of staff shortages or, in the case of assisted living or designated living, having to pay extra costs for those services because what they were entitled to was so minimal. I said that I prayed that none of us or more so our parents would experience the indignity of only being a commodity on a bottom line. I said that we can as a collective Assembly do better, and we must. We owe it to this House and to the people to govern fairly, openly, honestly, and to be accountable. I've finished at this point paraphrasing.

We must do better than to have class-action lawsuits as a form of accountability. The Auditor General's report of May 2005 into long-term care in Alberta was scathing in its findings. The standards were outdated, and even those were not being adhered to. However, there were new standards being contemplated but only in draft form. In response to the Auditor General's report a task force was established by the ministries of Seniors and Community Supports and Health and Wellness. The task force's mandate was to discuss these draft standards with the stakeholders. I thank the Premier for hearing me when I suggested that because of my experience as a front-line caregiver in long-term care I would be of benefit to that task force. My appointment did set a precedent for opposition members to be involved.

Mr. Speaker, believe me, everyone connected with that task force, MLAs and staff, worked flat out, but the hardest part was the emotional stories, that could leave you mentally and emotionally exhausted. Early into the process it became very clear that in addition to discussion on the draft standards, it was going to take on a different dimension and a life of its own, and as a result the process was opened to more of the general public. People started to share their pain and frustrations of having no one to talk to about complaints on the care of their family members. Complaints were shuffled around until often the person died and the family understandably gave up.

There was talk of perceived neglect and abuse. There were investigations, but only recommendations were forthcoming, and that did nothing to relieve the frustrations of the families. There appeared to be no one ultimately responsible. It became clear to me – and the task force’s document Achieving Excellence in Continuing Care echoes that – there is a need for provincial standards for all of those in care regardless of where they live or who delivers the care. They must be clear, measurable, resident-focused standards with strict guidelines for enforcement.

This bill is intended to create a position for a thoroughly independent officer, legislated and responsible to this House. The officer would monitor Alberta’s continuing care facilities to ensure that they all comply with provincial standards; receive, review, and investigate complaints while protecting the confidentiality of whistleblowers; conduct inquiries and investigations where appropriate; report annually to the Legislature. They would have the power to enter continuing care premises, collect information, and order action on the licences, grants, and contracts of continuing care facilities. It would be the final stop for accountability, for protection for all of those in continuing care.

This should not be another big bureaucracy, nor should it have the chance to turn into a growth industry. Small is good, accountable, and as a rule it is more efficient. With the increasing privatization of housing and care delivery in continuing care, this commissioner’s office, in my opinion, is imperative. Regulations will not cut it. I believe the key is the independent aspect of this commissioner. This office must do more than just review the processes. These investigations have been happening for a long time, and clearly they have failed.

The most important mandate, the main point, is that this office would have the authority of enforcement in the case of noncompliance with the standards. This office would keep the standards current and make them available to the public. There are presently the Health Facilities Review Committee and the Protection for Persons in Care Act, both of which do a credible job in investigating, but they do not have the power, the teeth if you will, to enforce these recommendations. Enforcement and accountability is what was asked for. Accountability and enforcement of the standards: the Auditor General identified this, as did the task force and the public.

More staff with increased training was identified as the greatest need, and I believe that without exception families, residences, staff, administration, and private owners spoke up for extra staff. What we heard was that the staff did the best they could, but neglect was happening and even premature deaths. The neglect was not intentional, but does that make it okay? I think not.

Housing and health care are each under a separate ministry. They truly are interconnected and depend on each other, which is another reason, in my mind, to have an overall commissioner who understands and is involved with the standards for both.

I believe this is a very important bill and will make very important rules that will protect those we are responsible for. I know that the public and anyone who had been, has been, or is presently involved in continuing care is watching this very closely.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to think that history will record that something was done under my watch. As a member of this House I was fortunate to be a part of the task force. The co-chairs and I wrote reports, and they have been incorporated into the Achieving Excellence in Continuing Care document. The work will not be finished until we can be assured that there are legislated provincial standards with accountability and enforcement.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise today to join the debate on Bill 205, the Continuing Care Standards Act. First of all, I would like to acknowledge the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for introducing this bill. I’d like to thank her for her tireless work on behalf of our seniors, her genuine compassion for our seniors. Her efforts to improve on the quality of continuing care in our province should be commended.

I agree with this bill’s general premise that we should have some mechanism in place to ensure that standards are adhered to and that there is accountability for the care our seniors receive in continuing care facilities across the province. Bill 205 includes four short sections, about half a page on continuing care standards, and 10 pages of descriptions of duties, powers, and responsibilities of the commissioner or advocate for seniors.

Last year the MLA Task Force on Continuing Care Health Service and Accommodation Standards was established in response to the Auditor General’s report on the government of Alberta’s seniors core services and programs. The task force was made up of the hon. members for Calgary-Foothills, Lethbridge-East, and myself. In light of the topic of this legislation I’d like to take a few minutes here to discuss some of the experiences that we had serving as co-chairs of the task force, the task force recommendations, and the government’s subsequent response.

During the public consultation stage of the process the three of us along with a couple of very helpful and dedicated individuals from the departments of Health and Wellness and Seniors and Community Supports – and I’ll name them: Gayle Almond and Carmen Grabusic; they were very helpful – travelled across the province to meet with stakeholders and members of the public to examine ways to improve upon health service and accommodation standards in Alberta’s continuing care facilities.

Albertans from communities spanning the entire province shared their insights, experiences, and knowledge with the task force. These meetings along with hundreds of phone calls, letters, e-mails, and written briefs and completed discussion guides covered a great deal of ground. We heard numerous personal stories that reinforced that this is a very sensitive and emotional topic for many Albertans. We gained a greater understanding of how Albertans and many stakeholders perceive the current system. We were told time and time again that overall the system is quite sound. Albertans are generally pleased with the facilities and the level of care received by individuals in continuing care. However, we were told that the current system is not always perfect, and we were provided with a great deal of constructive advice on how best to enhance and improve upon it.

After the initial consultation process the task force compiled the comments and advice it received and incorporated it into a list of draft recommendations. The task force released the draft report to the public and provided Albertans with the opportunity to respond to the recommendations. This first draft going to the public happened in September of last year. Following this second stage of consultation the task force issued its final report, Achieving Excellence in Continuing Care. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East did not participate in this part of the process, opting instead to write a complementary report of her own. Mr. Speaker, our Achieving Excellence in Continuing Care report made several recommendations pertaining to the standards in continuing care facilities.

So to put this whole discussion into perspective, I’ll outline some of the recommendations. There are 12 main themes in the report and a total of 45 recommendations. I won’t go through all of them, but I’ll just mention a few of them. These recommendations included establishing provincial standards pertaining to meal services in supportive living facilities; establishing “a clear concerns resolution process”; reviewing the roles, responsibilities and effectiveness of the Health Facilities Review Committee, Protection of Persons in Care [Act], and the Provincial Ombudsman in receiving and resolving concerns or complaints from within the continuing care system.

This would actually completely cover the hon. member's request for a commissioner to look after these issues.

We recommended to "undertake a review and update of all continuing care health service and accommodation related legislation." We recommended to "assess options for monitoring compliance" and review "existing mechanisms, such as the Health Facilities Review Committee." The report specifically recommended that the inspection of facilities be carried out "by one organization" and that "enforcement should remain with the Ministry responsible for the funding." So there would be no need for an additional level of bureaucracy to deal with these issues.

The report also included recommendations pertaining to the enforcement of training, education, and support standards and offered examples of potential enforcement measures – such as levying fines, revoking licences, or appointing an administrator – to be used only as a last resort if operators fail to meet standards and the issue is not resolved.

Recommendations were also made regarding the licensing of nursing homes and auxiliary hospitals as well as licensing all supportive living facilities. The task force also recommended in its final report that the government "enable supportive living and long-term care facilities that provide publicly funded health care services to access and complete an accreditation process."

In addition, the report recommended that Alberta Seniors and Community Supports and Alberta Health and Wellness pursue a process in conjunction with stakeholders "to rate supportive living and long-term care facilities and make these ratings publicly available." This should be another way to expose any facilities that do not meet standards or are not accountable.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see from my brief recap of but a few highlights, the report covered a lot of ground. Some of the recommendations to improve standards in continuing care facilities can be employed now, while others will have to be phased in over some time.

Last month the government formally responded to the report, accepting it in principle and announcing the initial strategies to respond and to implement its recommendations. The government has committed to implementing the standards recommended in the report this year and has also pledged to act on recommendations concerning new monitoring, reporting, enforcement, and concerns resolution processes. Once these new standards are implemented, there should be little or no need for the suggested commissioner's position. I would like to give the new standards a chance to work before we add another layer of enforcement for something that may not even be needed.

Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the intent behind this legislation and agree that additional steps must be taken to review and implement continuing care standards, I have a few concerns with Bill 205. There are two basic themes in this bill. One is establishing a commissioner to enforce standards, and the other is the setting up of the standards for the care and accommodations. First of all, as I've already mentioned, the government of Alberta is already committed and began acting on the second purpose of this bill, which is reviewing and implementing these standards. As far as the establishment of a commissioner on continuing care, proposed in this legislation, I believe that this may not necessarily be the best course of action at this point in time. The government will be reviewing the compliance and enforcement processes governing continuing care facilities this year, and this legislation would be premature or may not be necessary at all when the current process is fully implemented.

While I support the intent of this bill, I believe that the specifics in the bill are not necessarily the right solution that we need. So I'll not be supporting this bill, but I am pleased that this issue is being debated, and I look forward to hearing what other members have to say on this matter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make a few comments about the particular bill in front of us and say that, clearly, we agree with the spirit of the bill. We've called for something similar, as I'm sure the member is well aware. Certainly, we need – we call it a seniors' advocate; you can call it whatever you want. One of the things that we suggested is that it should be an officer of the Legislature, the same as some of our other officers. I think that the hon. member would probably agree with that. I believe that unless we have this person that has some clout and some authority, we're going to continue to have problems in long-term care.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we can certainly support the spirit of this bill, but I want to say in respect that there are some problems with the text itself. I guess the most important thing is that the bill will not help seniors this year. It may not help seniors next year or the next. We know that some seniors – it's still coming forward – are in crisis situations, so time is of the essence, somewhat, with the people that we're dealing with.

What bothers me a bit about this bill is that it will establish another set of reviews and committees. Mr. Speaker, surely the creation of the office of independent commissioner or, as we call it, seniors' advocate, whose sole task is to guard the safety and well-being of our most vulnerable citizens, is overdue. However – and this is the catch – we must ensure that establishing this office does not result in more delays and red tape when addressing real and pressing issues. For example, section 3(1) of the proposed bill establishes that "within 6 months of the coming into force of this Act, the Government must review, in conjunction with the Commissioner, the standards of care prescribed for long-term care facilities and supportive living settings." Another review.

With all due respect, I think we do not need another review. We've had the Auditor General's. We've had the MLA task force on continuing care. We in the New Democratic Party had public hearings and have released reports. This is all just in the last year. So we've had a number of reviews. We believe that we do not need another review. We need new standards and actual implementation of them.

Of course, this means more money for updating facilities and equipment, but more than that it means more health care professionals and a commitment for sustained funding to support them. Mr. Speaker, I think we have the evidence, and I'll come to that. There are things we need to do. Certainly, we will support a commissioner, seniors' advocate, whatever name they want. Contrary to the previous speaker I do believe that we need this person to have this power to deal with some of these situations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, regarding this review, section 3(4) stipulates that prior to implementation, standards of care developed under this section must be

- (a) approved . . . by the Commissioner, and
- (b) made available to the public.

Well, again we question whether we need another review. We think that there are things that could be done right away. It seems to at least address the problems of lack of accountability and transparency that have plagued this government, and this is a good step in that it appears to seek the input and approval of the public, especially the people who stand to be affected by new care standards.

I think that we have to lay it out, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member might clarify how the new standards of care will be made public and to what end. Will feedback be invited? If so, will it in fact be considered before implementation proceeds? What mechanism will be in place to ensure that the public is indeed consulted? Does it have the intent of making findings or determinations public?

Yet another worry that I have in terms of the bill's delay is that the proposed bill requires serious consideration. Section 20 provides for a process of appeals and delays in compliance. According to Parliamentary Counsel, whose expertise was sought in trying to make heads or tails of this section, these provisions mirror those set forth in section 74(1) of the FOIP Act, allowing for such appeals. Now, we just had a discussion about FOIP and some of the problems that we're facing, so our objection rests on the fact that if you have additional delays while waiting to access information, while this is inconvenient, it may have serious repercussions. In this case, you're dealing with cases of abuse, neglect, or death, needing immediate attention, so I think we have to relook at that particular part of the bill, Mr. Speaker. Again I would stress that certainly I'm glad that the member has brought forward this idea that we do need a commissioner, senior's advocate, whatever name that we want.

I think there are some things, though, that I would like to see done right away rather than having a six-month consultation period. Let's get the seniors' advocate, the commissioner that the member is talking about. I think she and I could agree that we need to change the legislation. We suggest in our report that that should have been done this spring because the legislation, according to many advocates that I've talked to, Mr. Speaker, does not lay out what it should in terms of standards and all the rest of it. So we need to go right back here and change the legislation, but that can be done while we have a seniors' advocate.

We need to set up a patient's bill of rights. That could be done right away, and that would certainly help the commissioner, as the member is talking about.

Something we need to do right away because it's happening is put an immediate stop to redesignating auxiliary hospitals and nursing homes as assistive living facilities. It's interesting to me that we can have the same people there one day in long-term care, and the next day it's assistive living. Well, right now there are no standards. They say that they're coming.

Another thing that I would suggest we do right away as we set up the commissioner's office that the member is talking about is require all new long-term care beds to be delivered either through the public or the voluntary, nonprofit sector. If there are some good private ones, we can grandfather them. In the meantime, some of them shouldn't be grandfathered. They should be thrown out, as we know. We require all new long-term beds to be in private rooms in order to respect personal privacy and, where feasible, upgrade existing facilities to private rooms only. Mr. Speaker, we could do this right away, I believe, without a study.

Whistle-blowing protection for front-line staff. We see a lot of the problems going on.

The other part of it, very quickly, Mr. Speaker, because I know a number of people want to speak on this, is the 2003 hikes in long-term care fees. They were unconscionable at that time, and it's still a hardship for many families. We should certainly reverse these fees. I think we can do that in this rich province for the people that have contributed all the years to the future of this province. Also, we could set up an open, transparent process to clearly identify the types of services provided in long-term care settings to which extra charges can be applied. You know, let's get a handle on the money that people are having to fork out from their pockets.

So, Mr. Speaker, the point that I want to make – and we certainly are not going to vote against it because we think the bill is important to bring forward. An officer of the Legislature: I hope we're agreeing on that. As I say, we call it a seniors' advocate, the people do. We need that immediately. Let's get on with some of these other serious matters now rather than waiting for another study because I think we've had enough studies. We believe that we know what we have to do, and I think that the member on the opposite side would probably agree with most of the things I'm saying. That's the only question I have, you know, if we have another commission six months back and forward.

Let's just get on with this. Let's get on with changing the legislation. Let's bring the standards in. Let's reverse some of the fees. Let's do all of these things and do them immediately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My thanks to the previous speaker for his excellent suggestions, I think many of which we share here in the Liberal opposition. I am very glad to see this bill actually get to the floor because I think I've been associated with an idea, this idea or one very similar to it, since prior to the 2001 election.

It was initially prepared by my colleague who was then MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark. Then a version of it was brought forward by my colleague who was then the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I prepared a version of it and had a bill draw that was stratospheric, so the bill didn't even make it to first reading. I know that last year, in 2005, the same member did have a bill forward, but the number was too high, and it didn't make it to the floor. I'm delighted that it's made it to the floor now.

What I would like to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is just to detail some of the expectations and the reasons why we were looking for a bill that would actually establish standards. What's important about standards is that you know what they are and everybody knows what they are and that you all operate by them – that's the point – but also that the standards are monitored and, finally, that they are enforced. We have had some variations on this theme, but unfortunately when it came right down to it, very few of them actually had standards in place that were shared by all. Two, it wasn't monitored in any kind of a systemic way. Three, it certainly wasn't enforced by anything that had teeth. So those are underlying the work that we are attempting to do here.

I think, in fact, that was reflected by the work that was done by the travelling MLA committee but also by the Auditor General. As members in the Assembly are aware, I've sat on the Public Accounts Committee for many years and had in fact raised a number of these same issues during my time as the Official Opposition critic for seniors. I was very relieved to see the Auditor General's report because it did in fact validate what residents, their families, their friends, advocacy groups in the community like the Elder Advocates association, and what opposition critics from both of the parties had been saying for many years. It had fallen on very deaf ears on the government side, but it seemed that once the Auditor General came out with his report, then the government was willing to listen. It did validate everything that all the rest of us had been saying for many, many, many years.

I talked earlier about the standards being effective only if we have the compliance monitored and enforced. I think that what we have in Bill 205 as proposed by the Member for Lethbridge-East does address exactly that. It does address the problems that were identified by the Auditor General's report from May of 2005 and by the MLA task force, that released its report in September of 2005. Both of these did identify that current systems to monitor compliance with standards were absolutely inadequate and ineffective.

Key findings that the Continuing Care Standards Act addresses are that standards for the provision of nursing and personal care and housing services in long-term care facilities are not current at all. For example, 30 per cent of the facilities that the Auditor General investigated did not meet basic standards of care, and that appears on page 15 of the special report that he issued. On that same page he notes that standards are needed for services delivered in assisted living and other supported living facilities.

Here the opposition differs very much with the direction that the government is going around redesignating people, and this was touched on very briefly by my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. We're basically, with a swish of a pen and a wave of a hand, reclassifying people from one day being recipients of care – and part of that is assumed to be medical care – in a long-term care facility, and the next day they are individuals who do not qualify for medical care and are now someone living in an assisted-care facility. And do you know what? They never even got out of bed. That's what this government is able to accomplish. So that's part of what we're trying to address with this bill.

We've got their systems to monitor compliance with standards for both long-term care facilities and the lodges that are not adequate. I had spoken about that earlier, and again that's mirrored in the Auditor General's report on page 15. Just continuing with that, the Department does not have an adequate system to monitor long-term care facilities' compliance with Basic Standards. The Department relies on the Authorities, the Health Facilities Review Committee (HFRC) and the Protection for Persons in Care Office (PPIC) to monitor whether the facilities comply with Basic Standards . . . Further, HFRC and PPIC do not inspect facilities for compliance with the Basic Standards and do not have enforcement mechanisms to ensure that facilities rectify non-compliance.

Absolutely toothless. During a number of the Auditor General's facility visits he noted that "31% of the Basic Standards relating to care were not met."

I cannot underline enough my frustration with the Protection for Persons in Care Act. Every time we have to refer someone to that process, what we get is some very well-meaning but incredibly apologetic staff member who very sadly reports back to us that, basically, the Protection for Persons in Care Act is an educational tool, which is very cold comfort when that is all that is available to you as a resident or as an advocate for a resident or a guardian or a trustee for a resident who is trying to get some action taken. They're trying to get some recognition that standards have not been met, that it has not been monitored, and that it has most definitively not been enforced. Very frustrating.

So the mechanisms that the government has had in place and keeps touting as the solution to all of this have absolutely failed us. It's important to note here that it didn't just fail all of us here in this Assembly: well fed, well paid, and completely able to move about through our lives. This failed vulnerable people. That is what is most unforgivable about what has happened to this point in time.

The Health Facilities Review Committee has no authority to enforce the compliance. Equally toothless. I know there are good people involved with that, but it's equally useless, frankly. I'm sorry for such harsh words, but I think they have to be used when we're talking about vulnerable people.

The protection of persons in care, as I said, does not conduct compliance or regulatory reviews in long-term care facilities for basic standards, for policies, for procedures, or for legislation. Where they investigate reports of abuse involving adults receiving publicly funded care from whatever kind of facility they're in, the protection of persons in care investigates approximately 90% of abuse complaints [and they use] contracted investigators who have backgrounds in health professions and law enforcement. In some cases, referrals are made directly to police authorities or professional associations or colleges.

That has been a very frustrating process indeed and certainly needs help.

My colleague the Member for Lethbridge-East was a member of the MLA Task Force on Continuing Care Health Service and Accommodation Standards and has given me some notes about what the task force heard and what she tried to incorporate into her bill as a result: that standards should be measurable, that they should provide for consistent reporting and define a minimal acceptable quality of care and quality of life.

It's really important what we do with that minimal level of care because, of course, what ends up being what everybody shoots for is the minimum but not anything above that. The lessons we've learned from the AG and other places and, again, reflected in what the committee heard: that the standards will only be effective if compliance is monitored and enforced and that these standards need to be updated and reviewed routinely. They do get out of fashion and out of effectiveness, and they do need to be reviewed. That also holds for legislation and policies around these standards that also need to be reviewed and updated.

I know there are others that wish to speak. Thank you for the opportunity to speak in support of Bill 205.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to be able to rise to speak to Bill 205, Continuing Care Standards Act. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing this act forward, and I think she should be commended for her concern and for her passion for seniors.

With this in mind I must say, though, that there are presently mechanisms in place to monitor care and treatment for everyone, including seniors, and I believe it would be best to continue with current mechanisms which monitor the quality of health care for all citizens of Alberta and not just one group. There really are a number of mechanisms in place to hold health authorities, health professionals, and other care providers, such as nursing home operators, accountable for the quality of care they provide. These mechanisms include not only the review and monitoring of the facility but also measures such as requiring the preparation of regional business plans and annual reports, having contracts in place with service providers so that expectations are clear, monitoring performance through approved performance measures, establishing standards which are currently being updated, encouraging best practices, and licensing and accrediting of individuals and organizations by expert organizations.

There are currently other bodies in place in addition to the aforementioned who help monitor quality of care and treatment, such as the Health Facilities Review Committee and the protection of persons in care office. It's been said that these groups have no teeth, but this is not necessarily the case. Recommendations during routine reviews are met and followed through with. With regard to complaints these are investigated thoroughly, and recommendations must be met. I might add that if there is any opposition or reluctance to positively or satisfactorily adhere to recommendations, the minister of health has the authority to force the facility to upgrade or to rectify the particular situation.

The Health Facilities Review Committee and the protection of persons in care office work for all groups and all demographics, not just the needs of one particular group. Perhaps the needs of one group should not supersede the needs of the whole, and for this reason I will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 205, Continuing Care Standards Act. Seniors have worked so hard all their lives to build this province, and we owe them a lot. They deserve to be treated with dignity and respect. The long-term care centre system is facing a crisis. We've seen casualties. We've seen deaths. Albertans put their lives and the lives of their loved ones in the hands of providers of long-term care. The government by law is charged with providing direction and sufficient funding to these facilities, yet there are no minimum standards of care in this province. Do we have to fall on the deaf ears of this present government or of present government officials who earn tons of money? I heard that one of the big guns in the department is earning $638,000.

We expect a little bit more for our vulnerable people. The ugly truth about government neglect: the Auditor General's report, which we have all seen, has clearly indicated that 30 per cent of facilities under review did not meet basic care standards. It came through loud and very clear. We need province-wide standards, and we need solid plans. Our loved ones or maybe – maybe – we will have to go there one day. We should not forget this.

I receive numerous complaints from my constituents, and we definitely need a proper commissioner's office to listen to those complaints and enforce them. We need a commissioner's office that could report to this House and take further action. We must create a continuing care commissioner's office that is responsible to this House to ensure that provincial standards of care are monitored. If we read the Auditor General's report, he clearly mentioned that if we don't monitor something, we can't get a good result.

People from ethnic groups are invisible in these facilities. I want to know from the government: why is that? Why do not many people from the ethnic community go in there? If they want something special, I think that we should consider that very seriously. I want to know from the government if any of the task force or any of the government officials have ever thought of talking to or listening to the ethnic community. I mean, they are part of this province. They pay the same tax as everybody, including myself.

Now I would like to talk about the accountability in this Bill 205. Our goal is to put a continuing care commissioner in place to ensure that facilities provide residents with high-quality care. Facilities, both public and private, must be accountable for the care and service they provide. This Bill 205 grants a continuing care commissioner a unique power: to monitor compliance with standards and issue orders to ensure compliance.

Mr. Speaker, the families and residents across the province have voiced frustration about the lack of accountability that exists in the continuing care system. There is a lack of transparency and accountability in this system. Even when recommendations are issued to a facility, they are not obligated to carry them out. Often this leaves families with the burden of fighting it out with the facility.

Now I want to talk about the Allen Gray facility, which is in my riding. We have seen cases at the Allen Gray where the family members have been banned from visiting relatives for voicing concerns. I know of one woman, whose father was a resident of the Allen Gray, who was denied access to him by this facility even though she had power of attorney and should have full access to him. Why was she denied visitation rights to her own father? Is it because she had criticized the care her father was receiving? We live in a free country, and people should feel free to question this system. For the people in that facility, Mr. Speaker, some people who complain about the system get punishment, and some people who praise the officials sometimes get rewards. There are 16 suites, and some people pay a little bit more, and the people who are yes-men get those suites.

I have received a report from the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. According to this report, it shows that this Allen Gray long-term care centre is a paradise. I mean, I don't know who I should believe. Should I believe those about 20 people who wrote me letters, phoned me regularly? They have lots of concerns. I don't know. I think the hon. member should know whom I should blame.

Anyway, the report is here, and I haven't gone through it yet. I just want to remind the hon. member that the facility no doubt – I mean, building-wise it's fantastic, overlooking a lake. But when the complaints were coming, nobody complained about the building of the facility. They were complaining about the care standards inside. I know he talked to 40 people, but I talked to many people. I mean, I disagree with that. But the decision is up to the government, up to the task force, so they should look at it again. I'm still receiving numerous calls and complaints about that facility.

Another thing. The office that we are talking about that this bill establishes would be a safe place for the staff and families to bring complaints without having to fear repercussions. I just mentioned the Allen Gray facility in my riding. Some people are so worried that they don't speak out. They are worried that if they speak out, maybe an official inside there will give them punishment, so they are not in a position to speak out. Maybe when delegates or the task force visit the facilities, if they visit there with the authorities, they will talk totally differently. So just to make a note of that.

Just about two or three months ago, Mr. Speaker, I asked the authorities through FOIP to give me a copy of the contract between the Capital health authority versus Allen Gray, which is now called Gray House Guild. They sent me this copy. It's about 130, 140 pages. I was asking for the latest financial statement of Allen Gray, and they sent me the financial statement from 1998 to 2000. I'm asking the member: is that fair? I want to know how much they are earning and what powers they have. Why is the minister not taking action against those facilities? They know that. I wrote the letters to the minister. I talked to the CEO, and I talked to the people there, and the people talked to the minister. They keep on contacting the minister. From this document I found out that the minister doesn't have the power to take action against those facilities.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister of seniors.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 205, the Continuing Care Standards Act. I'd like to commend the Member for Lethbridge-East for her commitment to Albertans living in continuing care. We all know of her passion, especially during session in the Legislature, when we've heard that many times as she speaks to continuing care. That compassion and commitment we all share, though, as well. It's to improve the quality of life for our seniors and other vulnerable Albertans living in our continuing care facilities.

I know that I let the House know previously, Mr. Speaker, that I would be reviewing the legislation in detail. I want to assure you that I have done that on several occasions and had an opportunity to speak to the member briefly about my thoughts in regard to Bill 205. I've been in the same situation as the member opposite: I've brought forward several private members' bills previously. I am aware of the importance of second reading because second reading focuses totally on the principle of the bill. I am supportive of some of the principles of Bill 205 but not all of them. I do support that updated standards be implemented, but the dilemma that I find I am in, Mr. Speaker, is that I'm not supportive of all the steps that have been put forward in the process, you know, to the whole situation of the standards and with continuing care.

I also recognize that the bill cannot be amended in second reading. It can only be amended at Committee of the Whole, which is the next step. Mr. Speaker – and I've learned this through putting through private members' bills – in order for it to get to Committee of the Whole, we must be supportive of second reading and, as you would say, not just the principle at second reading but every word, actually, that's in the bill at second reading before you get to Committee of the Whole. Having said that, I regret that I do not support all of the principles that are here in this bill. It's helped me recognize as a new minister, as well, for the past year that we need to communicate far better when these types of bills come forward because we're looking for the collective good at the end of the day with the right intent in the spirit of the bill and that we didn't have the opportunity to do that in the way that we could have.

Mr. Speaker, there is, as I've said, definitely value in enhancing the standards that are currently in place, and we are working hard to do that. If someone is at risk of neglect or abuse, that should be fully investigated, and you know that we do that now. The act is called the Continuing Care Standards Act, and really I view it as actually being more about a continuing care commissioner. Especially because the accommodation side of the standards, as we had discussed before, hon. member, fits in this ministry and the care standards with the Minister of Health and Wellness and for the reason, as I said, about it being mainly about the commissioner more than the actual accommodation/standards area, I'm unable to support Bill 205 because I know this to be reality: that creating a position such as this will duplicate many of the efforts that are already in place.

Creating a commissioner would also overlap planned changes that we heard in earlier debate are to come this year in response to the MLA task force on continuing care report. You know, Mr. Speaker, the idea of an independent advocate to address seniors' issues is a good idea. It's an idea that's been discussed before. It's an idea that has a lot of merit. In fact, we've recently had a formal presentation by a number of seniors' groups to the majority of our colleagues about establishing such a position. The desire of these seniors' groups was to have a seniors' advocate to address all issues related to seniors aged 55 and over.

I regret that Bill 205 identifies a commissioner that would not be inclusive of all seniors' issues, as was put forward to me, but has a very narrow scope of only examining concerns in continuing care. I do remain open to the concept and the idea of moving forward with a seniors' advocate, but if such a position were created, my view is that the role would look at seniors' issues more broadly than the position that's described in Bill 205 and not be confined strictly to continuing care. Having said that, the greater concern I have with Bill 205 is that I believe that, in effect, it confuses not only roles and responsibilities but lines of communication and accountability on a very important issue which we all care about, which is the safety and well-being of seniors and others living in continuing care.

Clearly, in light of the Auditor General's report and the findings of the MLA task force there is much improvement needed in this area, Mr. Speaker. However, my colleague the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and I are working to address these concerns, and we have worked quickly. As the minister responsible for seniors' issues I support a more holistic approach to monitoring standards in our continuing care facilities. Rather than dealing with complaints or concerns one at a time, my ministry is developing a comprehensive strategy to address a number of processes that will respond directly to the concerns that the member has outlined in her bill. I have heard those concerns and am looking to address those. The strategy will include how to handle facility licensing, reporting, monitoring, enforcement of standards, the introduction of a new concerns resolution process.

The bill notes that the commissioner's duties would include monitoring compliance with continuing care standards. What is unclear is whether that means the commissioner would be responsible for all of the routine monitoring and enforcement across the province. I did try to bring clarity to that as I was reviewing the bill. As I said, I've read it several times. If that is the bill's intent, then this would be a significant administrative function, especially when you consider that there are more than 14,400 long-term care beds in the province, nearly 2,000 designated living spaces, not to mention the 9,000 lodge units across the province.

This would also be a challenge when you consider the other duties identified in the bill for the commissioner, especially the one that states, "To receive, review and investigate complaints regarding the health, safety or well-being of persons receiving continuing care in long-term care facilities or supportive living settings." My concern with this provision, hon. member, is that we already have both legislation and a process in place to address this function right now. I'm referring to the Protection for Persons in Care Act, which you know provides safeguards against the abuse of adults in government-funded care facilities. Protection for persons in care helps to ensure that abuse is reported, all complaints are investigated fully, and recommendations can be made to help prevent abuse from occurring in the future. If criminal activity is suspected, then protection for persons in care notifies the police immediately, which our guests here today would be fully aware of. If a continuing care commissioner were introduced as outlined in Bill 205, there would appear to be significant overlap, I believe, between the commissioner's duties and those of protection for persons in care.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, a legislative review of the Protection for Persons in Care Act has been completed, and my colleague from Calgary-Nose Hill is reviewing options for legislative amendments to be introduced during a future sitting of the Assembly.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, much of this legislation, although I know it to be really well intended, will duplicate other established legislative processes and other work already under way in regard to continuing care standards. For that reason, I cannot support Bill 205 here at second reading.

As you know, the Minister of Health and Wellness is responsible for health care standards, as I said earlier. Well, I am responsible for the accommodation standards. Together we are working to improve our continuing care system, and we're doing that not only with an investment of new funding but with the compassion and care that I know the member is looking for here today as well because we know that that's needed, too, to make the necessary changes to improve the system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 205, and I must very much commend the Member for Lethbridge-East for the fine work done on this bill, which is the priority bill for a private member's bill for the Alberta Liberal Official Opposition. I had that draw, and I was very pleased to see that the Member for Lethbridge-East could take this forward because this has been an issue of primary importance for me as the Member for Edmonton-Manning, primary importance for many, many Albertans, to see that the situation would somehow get fixed.

I was very displeased just a minute ago to hear the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports seem to indicate that she would not support this going through to the next level of debate and begin to talk about not dealing with this issue. This is something that came up very, very much during the last election. That was almost a year and a half ago now. It came up after to us. Many members have raised this in the House. The Auditor General's report put an exclamation mark behind the problems that we have in this area and the very real need that there has to be some sort of ability to enforce compliance, to ensure that standards are properly in place and properly enforced.

I find it very, very difficult that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka would say over and over again that the system is quite sound is what he heard in the committee that travelled around this province. Well, I attended one of those meetings in Calgary, and almost every person that reported in that meeting was appalled. Some of the stories were so horrific, almost, that I couldn't believe how bad the government has bungled its administration in this area and its responsibilities in this area. There's a huge need to achieve excellence in continuing care, especially as our demographic moves forward, especially as greater proportions of the population are part of this.

There are real inadequacies in the current system. The Auditor General was clear in his report that "standards will only be effective if compliance is monitored and enforced." One of the other names that we proposed earlier was inspector general to give force to the name of this position. The commissioner for continuing care is more comprehensive, I suppose, but we need something here that would in reality begin to ensure that there is somebody there that is independent, that could enforce compliance, that could pull a licence – pull a licence – to ensure that some of the abuses that we've seen, some of the abuses just through negligence that we've seen that have hurt so many families and have hurt the reputation of Alberta in this area, that that sort of independent power that would report to the Legislature, not report to the department, would be in place.

A continuing care commissioner addresses the exact problems that were identified by the Auditor General in May 2005 and the MLA task force in September of 2005. The Auditor General inspected long-term care facilities to obtain evidence about the quality of care and services provided throughout Alberta. Both the Auditor General and the MLA task force identified that systems to monitor compliance and standards are inadequate and ineffective.

For example, page 15: standards for the provision of nursing and personal care in housing services and long-term care facilities are not current. Thirty per cent of facilities don't meet basic standards of care. The Member for Edmonton-Centre already emphasized that particular point. Standards are needed for services delivered in assisted living and other supportive living facilities. Page 15 of the Auditor General's report: systems to monitor compliance with standards for both long-term care facilities and lodges are not adequate. It goes on and on.

The Department does not have an adequate system to monitor long-term care facilities' compliance with Basic Standards. The Department relies on the Authorities, the Health Facilities Review Committee . . . and the Protection for Persons in Care Office . . . to monitor whether the facilities comply with Basic Standards.

In reality, these are all toothless. The HFRC and PPIC, the Health Facilities Review Committee and the protection for persons in care office, "do not inspect facilities for compliance with the Basic Standards and do not have enforcement mechanisms to ensure that facilities rectify non-compliance." As they said, "During our facility visits, we found that 31% of the Basic Standards relating to care were not met."

The HFRC has no authority to enforce compliance. There are no sanctions specified in the Health Facilities Review Committee Act. Facilities or regional health authorities have failed to implement recommendations following an investigation by the committee.

The protection for persons in care was established to prevent abuse of adults living in publicly funded facilities by requiring that abuse be reported and investigated . . . PPIC investigates reports of abuse involving adults receiving publicly funded care services from hospitals, long-term care facilities, seniors lodges, shelters and group homes. PPIC investigates approximately 90% of abuse complaints using contracted investigators who have backgrounds in health professions and law enforcement. In some cases, referrals are made directly to police authorities or professional associations or colleges.

PPIC completes investigations based on complaints of abuse from residents, family, facility staff or others in a number of settings, including long-term care facilities. PPIC provides only limited assurance of compliance . . . PPIC does not conduct compliance or regulatory reviews in long-term care facilities for the Basic Standards, policies, procedures or legislation.

The task force did a lot of work last summer. I think it was good to see an opposition member on that task force and a very qualified one at that, the Member for Lethbridge-East. You know, that committee said that "standards will only be effective if compliance is monitored and enforced." Again we come to the need for being monitored and for being enforced, the need for an office that has some independent authority. The standards need to be updated and reviewed routinely. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview mentioned that we have to move quickly. I think, actually, that the legislation that the Member for Lethbridge-East has put forward here does provide something that would probably get this going much quicker than anything else we have seen to date.

The committee went on that "legislation and policies around standards need to be reviewed and updated." Well, it seems to be obvious.

"The public would like inspections to be carried out by an organization that is at arms-length from government, RHAs and operators," and that seems to be a key recommendation that the government looks to be going back on.

“It is the role of government to monitor and enforce standards and that the RHAs need to be held accountable for the quality of care, including contracted health services,” and the only way to do that would be through some independent authority. One that reports to this Legislature, as I’ve said before, is what we really need in this, and this bill addresses that clearly.

“The public is not confident that providers are being held accountable, and are especially concerned with private providers. As a result, the public would like detailed operational standards that are easily measurable.”

Recommendation 26 of the MLA task force:

Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Seniors and Community Supports should collaboratively assess options for monitoring compliance with the health service and accommodation standards, including reviewing the roles, responsibilities and effectiveness of existing mechanisms, such as the Health Facilities Review Committee.

Well, I mean, how we’re going to be relying on that as the way out here is almost beyond me. It is just almost impossible.

Well, I’ll move to adjourn, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:29 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 20, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/03/20

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Request for Unanimous Consent

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before proceeding to the debate on Motion 504, the chair wants to comment about Motion Other than Government Motion 505, which in the ordinary course of events would be considered by the Assembly on the evening of Monday, April 3, 2006. The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, who is proposing the motion, asked late last week that he be allowed to amend it. The request arrived in the Speaker's office last Thursday but did not make it in today's Order Paper. Under Standing Order 39.2(2) notice of the amendment "must appear on the Order Paper not less than 4 sitting days before the motion is moved."

All members should have the proposed amended Motion 505 on their desks. As the motion will not be debated until two weeks from today, the chair would ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39.2(2).

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Although motions other than government motions appear only in Monday's Order Paper, the chair will arrange to have the amended motion appear in tomorrow's Order Paper.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Emergency Services

504. Rev. Abbott moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to encourage municipalities to provide minimum standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to open the debate on Motion 504. One of the key functions of government is to ensure that public safety is enhanced and protected in every way possible. This is by no means a simple task. As society evolves and changes, our protective institutions must also change.

Fire departments serve many functions in today's world, only one of which is putting out fires. Firefighters serve as first-line responders in all sorts of emergencies, from car accidents to water rescues. It is a challenging and dangerous job. Albertans depend on these brave men and women to act decisively and competently in emergencies that are often matters of life and death. In most cases, in the vast majority of cases, Mr. Speaker, firefighters are well prepared and well equipped to deal decisively with these emergencies. Like anything else, however, there is always room for improvement, thus the impetus for Motion 504.

Currently the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, the Alberta fire commissioner's office, and the Fire Services Advisory Committee work closely with municipalities in respect to fire and rescue services. As the operation, financing, and practices of fire departments are municipal responsibilities, these organizations are not generally concerned with micromanaging departments but, rather, providing guidance to them. Through the development and promotion of guidelines and a series of field mentoring staff, these organizations encourage municipal fire departments to operate efficiently and in a way that best reflects the protective needs of the population they protect. Motion 504 seeks to build on the good work already accomplished under this system by further urging municipalities to adopt minimum standards for fire, rescue, and recovery services.

One purpose of the motion is to open a dialogue on potential deficiencies in the current system. Currently there is a host of confusing regulations, which, while they are relatively comprehensive, have the potential to allow situations where public safety may be at undue risk. There are provisions in labour law, for example, that make some degree of training necessary for firefighters. Perhaps we could build on this by aggressively encouraging training to a certified standard. This would enable more volunteer firefighters to enhance both their safety and the safety of those they protect in areas such as rural Alberta.

There's also the matter of equipment, Mr. Speaker. Right now vehicles used for fire, rescue, and recovery services must meet transportation standards, which is a great start. Right now departments are encouraged to have equipment appropriate to their situational needs. Now, that's good. It's okay, but we can always do better. For example, a 30-year-old fire truck might be road-worthy. It might meet existing codes and guidelines. But in today's world it may not be enough. How do we know? There are no minimum standards. Whether it is or isn't, I think there's always room to live up discussion on the subject and to push for something better.

There is no requirement for a department to possess up-to-date life-saving equipment either, like the jaws of life, for example. I think the name of this equipment speaks for itself. Maybe we should look at more actively encouraging every department to adopt as a minimum standard the possession of this and other vital equipment, like diving gear, for example. If a child were to fall through the ice of a dugout, Mr. Speaker, can he or she really wait the extra time it would take for that equipment to come from a larger centre? In an emergency time is critical. Every minute counts. So does every little bit of motivation that we can provide to improve the current situation.

Another area that might be discussed is the distribution of fire, rescue, and recovery services in a municipality. Population distributions change. Let's face it. Alberta is enormous. Some of the rural municipalities have to cover a huge area. Maybe we should be more vocal in encouraging them to aggressively study how best to locate their equipment and personnel. Should they have two trucks or three? How big should those trucks be? How many firefighters should be trained and ready to go in a given situation or in a given area?

Mr. Speaker, I've only scratched the surface with these few examples, but I think I've made my point. There are literally thousands of things we can do to facilitate improvement. With this motion I believe we hold in our hands a powerful tool to do just that.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 504 is urging the government to "encourage municipalities to provide minimum standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services." Now, that might sound a bit vague, but there's a reason for that. I've worded the motion in this way so as not to limit its possibilities. Words like "encourage" and "minimum standards" are fairly open-ended words, and that's exactly why they were chosen. Fire services have evolved over the years. Some areas have rural fire co-ops; others don't. In studying this issue, I have learned that municipalities are responsible for funding and operating their own fire, rescue, and recovery departments. We've given them that power, and we don't want to intrude on it unnecessarily. This is why we encourage instead of demand. It's more productive. Minimum standards were chosen because these words will serve to open a dialogue on potential deficiencies in the current system. It is not specific on purpose. I want to inspire as much discussion as possible on areas of concern so that we can work toward fixing them by any means necessary, so that we can work together in this area.

I want to urge this government to add to the encouragement already being given to municipalities. We have a framework. We have tools in place. What I am proposing is a further filling in of that framework with increased co-operation between municipalities, fire departments, and the government. I want us, in short, to add to the toolbox we already have and help our front-line fire and rescue workers build a better Alberta, a safer Alberta.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, in the quest for public safety we can always do better. I believe that by supporting Motion 504, we can not only encourage further discussions on means of improving current practices; we can also build on the steps we've already taken. We need to. Together we can raise the bar of public safety with all the means at our disposal. I believe this motion is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, my sincere hope is that we will see co-operation, camaraderie, and improved service throughout Alberta as a result of passing this motion tonight. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of the Official Opposition this evening and give a response to Motion 504. First of all, I would like to thank the mover of the motion, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, for bringing forward an idea that, I think, is certainly in the best interest of the public in Alberta and must be supported in principle. However, as one might expect, I do have some comments and concerns about the motion, particularly the way it's worded, but in principle I support the concept of what this motion is trying to accomplish.

Mr. Speaker, municipalities in this province are already stretched to the maximum when it comes to providing services. We know that as MLAs. We all hear that in our offices. I'm sure that I'm not the only one, and I'm quite sure that opposition MLAs are not the only MLAs that hear that. It's a steady refrain from across the province. Whenever we attend meetings with the AUMA or the AAMD and C, this is a common concern that's expressed to all MLAs. If years of downloading by the provincial government and the federal government – in all fairness, the federal government has downloaded as well – and decreased financial support have put such an extra tremendous burden on the municipalities, the first question that jumps out at you, of course, with this motion and some of the things that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar spoke about in terms of equipment, you know, newer and better fire trucks and a standard of having a jaws of life in every municipality and so forth: those are all good things, but obviously somebody has to pay for them. That hasn't been addressed at all either in the motion or in the comments that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar made.

He gave a little bit of an explanation toward the end of his speech this evening about the vagueness of the motion and why it is that way. I'll just point out one glaring problem with the vagueness of the motion, Mr. Speaker. It talks about minimum standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services, but there's no explanation at all as to what those minimum standards might be. In fact, it's so vague that one could interpret it to be either minimum standards across the province or allowing each municipality to set their own minimum standards. I think the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar would agree that those two scenarios are entirely different: if we have one set of standards that is the minimum for every municipality and every individual that lives in this province or if we allow each single municipality to set their own minimum level of standards. I'm going to trust and assume that the member meant province-wide standards. That would make sense to me. If we're allowing each individual municipality to set their own minimum, I'm not so sure that I could support this motion.

Of course, if we establish, in fact, that these are province-wide minimum standards, then the next question is: how would we establish those, how would they be met, and, as I said, most importantly really, who is going to pay for the implementation of those standards? We know that municipalities at this point are already desperately seeking alternative sources of reliable and sustainable funding. To add more financial responsibility to the burden that they're already facing would, without question, just exacerbate what is already a very grave problem for many, if not all, municipalities.

A question in my mind is where this idea is coming from. I was hoping that the member might address it in his comments, and he didn't. I'm not sure if we'll have an opportunity at some point to hear from him further, but I'm wondering if he consulted, in fact, with the AUMA or the AAMD and C, or maybe it was with his local council. I'm not sure. In the conversations I've had with members of the AUMA, they weren't aware of this at all. Not to pick on the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar in particular, but I think, rather, I'd prefer to pick on the government as a whole.

An Hon. Member: Go ahead. Pick on him.

Mr. R. Miller: It's much more fun to pick on the government as a whole.

There seems to be a pattern, a fairly noticeable pattern in the year and a bit that I've been in this Assembly of the government not consulting with primary stakeholders on issues of relatively great importance. The most obvious example we have of that right now is, you know, an issue that we discuss daily in this Legislature, and that is the proposed changes to health care, the so-called third way. What I believe and certainly the correspondence I get into my office would indicate many Albertans believe is that there's either a lack of consultation or a very poorly disguised process that really is no substitute for public consultation. I'm not sure whether or not the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar had an opportunity to consult with any of these groups that I've mentioned or perhaps others, but I would hope so because, as I say, there does seem to be a pattern here, and I would hope that we're not continuing to go down that road.

Mr. Speaker, there's no mention in the motion of police or ambulance service, and it would make me wonder, if we're going to establish minimum standards province-wide – and, again, I hope that that's what the intention is here – for fire and rescue and recovery services, that we would also have the same for police and ambulance service.

If I could just take a minute and talk about those two examples; most recently, of course, the almost takeover of the ambulance service by the province. What a disaster that whole thing was a year ago, and of course we're still waiting and probably will have to wait for some time to find out how that's all eventually going to be worked out. Clearly, there was an effort there to ensure province-wide standards and province-wide delivery of ambulance service, and it just hasn't happened. In fact, it's left many municipalities in disarray. I think it's perhaps a little better this year, but certainly a year ago they were in total disarray in terms of their planning, not knowing exactly which way the province was going to go on that issue. I would hate to see the same thing happen as it relates to fire and rescue services.

Policing. We look at the RCMP as an example. There was no substantial increase in manpower for the RCMP for over 20 years until last year.

Mr. Bonko: How many years?

Mr. R. Miller: Twenty years without any substantial increase in manpower in the RCMP.

Of course, last year, following the tragedy out in Mayerthorpe, it sort of became the issue du jour, if I can call it that, and suddenly we saw an increase. It shouldn't take the death of four young men to raise our awareness and our sensitivity to the fact that our province is growing. As we grow, the level of crime and the type of crime that we see changes as well, and we have to keep up with that in terms of the resources we give our communities to police themselves.

Edmonton and Calgary still this year – maybe it'll change in the budget on Wednesday – as of right now are still being offered $16 per capita for policing. No increase over the last five years. As I said, Mr. Speaker, certainly not only the number of crimes but the type of crime, the level of crime, and the severity of crime that we see, change as these two major cities grow. They've both reached that relatively critical mass of a million people, and when that happens, the comfortable little city that you grew up in doesn't feel like a little city anymore. We're now big, major league metropolises with major league problems, and not having an increase in the per capita funding over the last five years clearly doesn't address those problems that we're facing.

The next question I would have is whether or not, in fact, the standardization of resources for fire and rescue and recovery might perhaps be a veiled way of addressing issues like the Wabamun disaster and the fact that there didn't seem to be any co-ordinated response from the provincial government in that case, and maybe this is what's trying to be accomplished here.

It looks like I'm running out of time, Mr. Speaker, so I'll just say that while I will offer qualified support for this motion, I really wish it had said something like this: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to implement province-wide minimum standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services for municipalities in full consultation with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and ensure that all municipalities have the resources necessary to implement such minimum standards.

Had we been a little more specific in terms of who we were consulting with to get there and how we were going to fund it, it would undoubtedly have received my unqualified support, Mr. Speaker. As it is, as I say, I can lend it qualified support, but I really wish that it was a little more specific, and I'm particularly concerned about the vagueness in the wording of the motion as it now sits.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

8:20

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk to this motion from a little bit of a different point of view, and that's focusing on the recovery part of it. Right now in Alberta we've probably got one of the world-class facilities to train firefighters.

Thankfully, it's located in Vermilion, but it's trained just about all of the firefighters in Alberta. It does a very good job, and Albertans can go to bed at night knowing that there are a very dedicated group of professionals out there to look after that aspect of safety. We also have an incredibly dedicated group of police officers, RCMP, in Alberta that also give people a great deal of comfort and do a very good job. Although many of the different fire departments are made up of volunteers, I think it's safe to say that they could probably go against most professional firefighters anywhere in the world.

So it's not that we don't have very good people in all corners of Alberta, but what we're missing, Mr. Speaker, in my personal experience, is a co-ordinated effort to invoke a recovery or in some cases a rescue. I think it wouldn't take very much for the province to activate some training or to encourage some people to learn what's involved in a recovery and co-ordinate these two bodies.

Mr. Speaker, last August at Muriel Lake in Bonnyville we had a friend of ours drown. I can tell you that as hurtful as it is to go through it, and I wish no one else ever has to, I was as disappointed in the government of Alberta's response to that as anything I've ever been disappointed in in my life. It was virtually nonexistent.

Now, the people that showed up, the volunteer firefighters from Bonnyville, were there as fast as they could be there. They didn't have a boat. They had a small drag hook in a lake that covers 50 square miles, and they were willing, but they didn't know how to contribute to that recovery. The RCMP showed up quickly. They, too, had a boat but really no idea how to put in place any kind of a recovery grid or method or organize the volunteers. The fish and wildlife conservation officer showed up the next day. I can say nothing bad about anyone who was there. Their intentions were great. They didn't have the machines or the technology or the ability to co-ordinate, and I think that it says to me that we need to move our fire and rescue people under the Solicitor General so that one department co-ordinates these activities. The name has been changed to Solicitor General and Ministry of Public Security.

I think that we do ourselves a disservice to think that it just takes more money all the time to do better things. That's not true. Sometimes we need to take an inventory of what we've got in people, in products, and available boats, whatever would be needed in a particular recovery, and have someone there who can explain to the families and the people involved: this is what you can expect; this is what you can't expect. It's not very prudent, Mr. Speaker, to send out a heat-seeking helicopter the day after they've drowned and then have them say: well, quite frankly, we can't locate them two hours after they're in there. You give them hope; you take it away.

Many people become experts on this kind of thing as they work. I mean, I don't believe that it's not well-intentioned, but information about: how long does it take for a body to surface? What should you do? What could you do? How do you develop a grid so that people with cameras – I mean, if you have GPS and you have a boat that's equipped and you can do it, that's great. At one time I think we had around 16 boats out there trying to do this, but there was no one from the Alberta government in any capacity that was suggesting or telling us how to do this. People shouldn't be trying on their own to invent flotation devices that might mirror what a human body does. Surely we can do that and then give that information out to the different fire departments or whatever recovery group is there.

Granted, cost is a real, real driver. Mr. Speaker, if the Bonnyville fire department were in charge of the 10-day rescue, it would probably take all of their budget to look for someone who is not part of their community at a lake outside of their town. It would be very unfair to suggest that fire departments could be put in a huge deficit because of trying to do the right thing. I think the Alberta government needs to look at that and determine if there are circumstances where we need to fund these searches or to have people there to help co-ordinate them. It certainly shouldn't put the municipality in a detrimental position.

Albertans rise to the top in times of crisis, and I'll guarantee you that every community is like that. We have unbelievable people that show up. Many days there, Mr. Speaker, we had over a hundred people, at times up to 150 people there trying to offer their services: what can we do? Quads and boats and spotting scopes and people bringing food. It happens everywhere in Alberta. It's not exclusive to me, but at that point it makes you very, very proud to be a part of that community.

Here are the people and the co-ordinating people – it's really unfair to single out some, but I have to say that a fellow named Bert Samuelson who works at Lakeland College in Vermilion just dropped his life for 10 days and worked with the people. Unfortunately, Bert's dad passed away today. Also, Milt Anderson, who worked at Webb's of Vermilion: 10 days. Their wives and their other families. People dropped their lives and sat there helping the family. And what did we do? Nothing. It just isn't right.

It's not a knock on our fire department and our municipalities not meeting standards. We have it. We've got a lot of it. Maybe if you're not on a highway, you don't need the fancy jaws of life, and maybe if there are no lakes in your constituency or your area, sir, you don't need a recovery boat or someone to do that, but it wouldn't be a big stretch to train half a dozen or twelve of these people that are probably in our fire departments now or in our police departments and have them available to move to an area where tragedies have happened and help co-ordinate and at least explain to the families what they can expect: this is what happens.

Let's not waste the resources. If there is no point in divers, don't do it. The divers that came there from the volunteer group here in Edmonton were unbelievable. They worked so hard trying to locate it. They often came back on our boat and collapsed, utterly exhausted. This is not a criticism, but they had very little help from us, I guess. We didn't know what to do. Finally, we get more divers. You finally start to develop grid patterns. You develop ways to pull them through the lake so you can cover more ground and save oxygen. But you shouldn't be reinventing the wheel.

We need one of the departments to bring this together under one block and say: here's what we do; here are the best practices when you're involved, unfortunately, in one of these circumstances, and that isn't there now. I would say that if this happened in Edmonton or Calgary or virtually any other town and you were told, "Well, you just have to wait; in 10 days they'll come up," I don't think that would be good enough.

Now, sometimes it's impossible. There are people who go through the lakes in the winter. There are people who fall into rivers. You know what? You can't die if you don't live. It's unfortunate. But when you're in a lake that's 10 feet deep, 17 at its deepest – and I want to talk to the minister that's got water about that – you'd think that there would be someone that could show up and say: "Here would be the best practices to set out a grid. Here are the people that are going to go around the lake and talk to the people, ask if they saw anything, and they're going to put that information through the co-ordinator right here, and he's going to keep the family in touch. He's going to make sure that they understand what's going on, and he'll make sure that we're not wasting our time, wasting our resources." So someone who understands it.

I don't think that every motion or every sentence in it needs to be taken to: what can go wrong? I think we need to look at some motions as: what can we do right? If co-ordinating the fire, the rescue, and the recovery under one department would make it better, it will probably save a little money. Mr. Speaker, until you go through this, you don't realize how many people you'll run into that will say: well, the same thing happened to us, and here's what we had to do.

There are lakes where your loved ones will be taken to a certain area. Well, if the family knows that, that's great. But if the widow and the family that were at our campground didn't have to stay there and didn't have the huge support that her family was, what would she have done? I guess she would have sat at the end of the pier and waited. It just isn't what you want to put a dollar figure on. You want to be able to say: we showed up, and we did the very best we could because we were trained in co-ordinating the volunteers and the professionals that we had to do it.

Mr. Speaker, there's no magic bullet, but I would just say that I would hope the Assembly would support the intent of this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to this motion this evening. You know, like the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I must support this in principle. The need to ensure that there are "standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services" in all municipalities is a laudable objective for our province. I look at this motion, and I wonder how it will achieve that. I think it is essentially pretty weak and ineffectual in terms of trying to achieve that. Minimum standards for delivery of fire, rescue, and recovery services are a good idea, but the questions are: what will these minimum standards be, and who will develop them?

If the province and the provincial government want minimum standards, then it is the responsibility of the provincial government to establish what these standards are, and then they must ensure that the municipalities have the necessary capabilities, both in terms of finances and personnel, to meet these standards. If the responsibility for this is downloaded to municipalities, then they have to have the ability to meet these standards.

Municipalities should not be left with the responsibility to implement the standards because there will then be differing minimum standards across the province based upon the existing capabilities of that particular municipality. St. Albert might be able to do something which would require a fair amount of resources; other communities, counties, municipalities may not be able to. The reality is that if the province wants all municipalities to adopt and meet a minimum standard for fire, rescue, and recovery services, then it is the province that needs to establish such a standard, and they should do so in full consultation with the AUMA and the AAMD and C and then provide the funding necessary for those municipalities that cannot meet these standards.

You know, there was talk earlier that some municipalities may not need certain capabilities in terms, perhaps, of divers or whatever, even the jaws of life, but I think all of them have accidents that would require that. All of the municipalities and counties, indeed all of the municipal governments in our province have lakes and sloughs and dugouts and rivers and could benefit from having a true standard set up that would cover all the local governments in our great province.

You know, I believe the wording that was put out by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford would be a far stronger wording and a far more effective wording in trying to ensure that the actual intent of this motion actually comes into play. Sometimes it does take a bit more money, and sometimes it takes some specifics in order to get some real advances made in terms of public safety and in terms of providing a better standard for all Albertans.

Indeed, there will always be the great volunteer added to the great ability of Albertans to jump into things and try and make things better to save those who are in need and to help them when we have natural disasters and tragic circumstance. I think it is one of the characteristics of Albertans that we will always jump in and do that sort of thing no matter what or where we are in this province.

I'm encouraged by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar talking about the importance of perhaps bringing all the firefighters across the province to the union standard. It is encouraging to hear him say that. You know, we do need some minimum standards all across the board.

With that, Mr. Speaker, although the intent of the motion is good, and we must support it for its basic principle, I think that it will be ineffectual in reaching its end if it stays with that particular wording. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also appreciate the opportunity to stand and speak in support of Motion 504. I would like to take this opportunity, at first, to congratulate the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for introducing this outstanding proposal.

An Hon. Member: Well said; very well said.

Mr. Prins: Thank you.

There are some great examples across this province that illustrate the potential benefits of this motion. I would like to highlight one of them: the Lacombe Regional Fire Service. This organization that serves within my riding of Lacombe-Ponoka, is a true success story that I believe can be used as a model for many other regions across the province.

The goal of the Lacombe Regional Fire Service is to continually strive to reduce the frequency and severity of emergency incidents within their service area in order to shield their communities from the damaging effects of these events. For this organization their mission statement is more than just a slick phrase; it's part of their planning process and the reality of their action.

The Lacombe Regional Fire Service was the result of a thorough investigative review by Lacombe county, the town of Lacombe, and the Lacombe fire department. These three partners joined to become the founding members of the fire service which they envisioned. However, they did not limit their success by restricting membership. Instead, they welcomed expansion and created a fire and rescue network that serves surrounding communities and the rural areas between these communities. As such, the Lacombe Regional Fire Service has grown to include the village of Clive, the village of Alix, the town of Eckville, and most recently the town of Bentley. The village of Mirror was a member before dissolution – now they're part of the county – and the Lacombe Regional Fire Service is looking to bring Blackfalds into the organization in the near future, so then it will encompass all the urban municipalities within the county.

Lacombe acts as the main hub for the administrative services, allowing all of the communities within the organization to be well connected and well served. This means that the entire area covered by the Lacombe Regional Fire Service has capabilities that far outreach those which would be achieved by individual communities. However, the small towns in the region are not seen as peripheral or satellites; they are seen as partners, with each community fire department playing an important role in serving the designated area.

Despite its size the organization still relies totally on the support of volunteers, with the regional fire chief being the only serving employee. In part he is responsible for providing technical advice to the organization's board of directors, which is comprised of elected representatives from major member groups.

I can personally attest to the fact that the Lacombe Regional Fire Service is a first-class operation from top to bottom. The success story of the Lacombe Regional Fire Service was built under the current governing system we have in place for fire and rescue services in Alberta. This does not mean that the treatment of these organizations and the standards they operate under are flawless. I believe we need to be constantly searching for ways to improve.

Being content with the status quo eliminates the opportunity for progress. That's the premise behind Motion 504. While there are great fire and rescue services in this province, some are falling behind. These organizations need new ideas and encouragement. Communities need to focus more attention on their fire and rescue services, making them the priority they need to be. Ignoring this issue would be a big mistake.

I'm not saying that every municipality should necessarily adopt the exact system of the Lacombe region because the situation is not that simple. Alberta is a diverse province, and to some extent unique solutions need to be found for each region. However, the overlying concepts of the regional fire service can be applied to nearly all areas. In my discussions with the Lacombe county officials they expressed their beliefs that the structure and dealings of their fire service are applicable to most regions. For example, the Member for Peace River has areas within his constituency in which travel time between communities is measured in hours instead of minutes. In these types of areas populations are smaller, limiting human resources and decreasing the tax base. Nonetheless, the concepts of sharing information, training facilities, business plans, communication plans, income and economic plans, and performance measures are still extremely valid. In fact, in these relatively remote areas co-operation and sharing these types of resources is even more important.

I just would like to add that in my work with the Lacombe Regional Fire Service – I was a member of it at one time – one of the main things that we did was get together in practice sessions. We would bring all of the firefighters from the different villages and towns together, and they would plan the co-ordination of their equipment, the co-ordination of their radios, their communications. They would build a comradery that would strengthen them for the times when they would have to deal with emergencies in joint force.

They would set policies as to who would be in control of situations if there was a multidepartment response, and they had policies in place that would determine who would pay for a multforce response because there's always the problem of who pays for these things. This is because small communities have huge volunteer demands, and as a result fire and rescue crews are difficult to attain. The training these brave citizens require is typically only available from the Alberta Fire Training School in Vermilion, making time and cost an issue for small municipalities. The Lacombe Regional Fire Service would bring in training to its fire departments, directly to the villages or towns, making the lives of everyone involved much easier and saving time and money for these municipalities.

Motion 504 can help facilitate this sort of progress. With the carrying of this motion, we will open the doors for all municipalities to establish first-class fire and rescue networks. I don't think we need to spend a lot of money to accomplish this. We just have to start working together to train and plan and co-ordinate and find efficiencies in any way possible. In fact, when we do this, we might even save money. Instead of costing more, it might cost us less to do this.

Working together is part of Alberta's history. It's an age-old way of making the most of what we each have individually to create the greatest good for all. Co-operation is an important concept to consider in every activity, especially for something that impacts all of our lives like fire and rescue systems do. Although some of our members here would like to see the wording stronger in this motion and would like to see it more prescriptive, I believe that the actual decisions that have to be made are political decisions that have to be made at local levels, in local municipalities. They will have to decide how far they want to go, how much money they want to spend, and how much equipment they want to invest in, so I want to leave that up to the local municipalities.

For these reasons I've outlined, Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting Motion 504. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand and speak to Motion 504 this evening, and I appreciate the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor and his intent and his desire in this motion. There have been many good discussions brought forward. I guess the one that excites me the most in all of this is the fact that we realize that we live in a diverse province. Too often we're in remote areas, and accidents happen, and we wonder: how do we resolve these problems?

My biggest concern with this is that we just went through the ambulance fiasco saying that we need to have standards across the province, and as soon as we brought that up, we realized all of a sudden that it's not a $55 million program, it's $110 million, and even at that they weren't sure. It really worries me when they say, "Provide minimum standards." I could support this wholly if we were to make an amendment for municipalities to provide recommended standards, realizing that in rural Alberta in many areas they're not able to meet those minimum standards.

There are small communities with just 50, 100 people living there. They have a fire truck, they have a boat, and they've bought these other pieces of equipment. They've raised the money because of disasters in their communities, and they have them there, yet the minimum standard might say: well, it has to be a 16-foot boat. So all of a sudden they're not allowed to go out because of these minimum standards.

I have great fear for the smaller communities in rural Alberta that if, in fact, you place minimum standards, they'll be eliminated. We've gone through the Walkerton episode with the water treatment plant. New standards have been put in place, and it's very onerous on some of the smaller hamlets and small communities to try to meet those new standards when, in fact, their water is okay.

It just doesn't work to have a blanket program saying, "These are the new minimum standards" when it's easy for Edmonton and Calgary or perhaps Lethbridge to meet those, but the smaller areas cannot have it anymore. I'm very concerned when we say, "minimum standards." I see that that often turns into maximum amount of money, and therefore we can't operate or have some of these firemen or ambulances in our communities because we no longer meet the minimum standards. I think that it's sad when we do that to communities and tell them, "Your way of life is outdated, and you can't live that way anymore," because what it is is it's shutting down those small communities, and people have to leave because of the new minimum standards.

So the intent and the desire to provide safety to Albertans and to have rescue and fire and recovery services is excellent. I like the idea from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster that perhaps what we need is to have emergency response teams in different areas of the province that can go out and help these small communities and have experts available.

To put in those minimum standards: I'm very apprehensive about that. I think that it'll do more harm than good in the small rural areas. So I would encourage us to reconsider that and to change it to have recommended standards, to have facilities and places where people can go and receive the training.

Another huge help would be to give tax credits or other areas to these volunteer people who put an immense amount of time and effort and money into keeping their areas alive. We need to help them in that way, not necessarily saying that you're no longer qualified and we're going to shut down your rescue or fire department because you no longer meet the minimum standards.

So with that slight change to provide recommended standards and to have easier access to training, I'd be happy to support this motion, and I look forward to more debate on this one. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very glad to be able to stand and take part in the debate on Motion 504. I'd like to also assure the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor that fire prevention and fire support in rural areas is a passion with volunteers. I want to say that it is probably one of the most important issues for individuals in rural Alberta, and I know that it may sound as if I'm speaking against motherhood when I make a couple of comments that question some of the directions of this motion.

Urging municipalities to provide a minimum standard for fire and rescue services is an important issue, and I very much appreciate the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor bringing up this issue. I also understand the intentions of the member in bringing forward this motion. I have some questions about some of the practicality in rural Alberta but especially in remote areas of Alberta.

We talk about regular standards. I was the chairman of the fire department in our area for approximately six or seven years. What happened: under that fire department we had communities that partnered with aboriginal communities in order that we could provide a service. If you had standards and regulations that asked each and every one of those communities to have a certain standard, then I don't think there would be fire departments in some of those areas, and they would have to be left up to larger communities. The time that it would take for those individual fire departments to get there would be way too long for any sort of feasible control.

Mr. Speaker, today in our province we have 431 fire departments.

Mr. Lukaszuk: How many?

Mr. Danyluk: Four hundred and thirty-one. Approximately 85 per cent – and I stress to you 85 per cent – of these organizations are staffed by volunteers. These community fire departments pride themselves on the services that they provide and just do not have the means to be able to meet any further standards. As we know, if it's possible, they will do it. Right now I have fire departments in my area that are running bingos and casinos, fund raising to upgrade their equipment. Should there be a standard? Maybe yes, if the government is willing to provide some support, but if they're not willing to provide the support, those individuals can't afford to do it.

Mr. Speaker, training is an integral part of any firefighter's career. In our area we have collaborated with the regional fire communities or municipalities and provided services and training in co-operation with the excellent school out of Vermilion. They have done a tremendous job of training and have provided some very needed equity in regard to knowledge. I don't want to correct the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, but part of that training very much involves the co-ordination of fire departments and their involvement in search and rescue and firefighting and some co-ordination with the community.

I want to say that if we did have standards – and I say the standards that seem to be brought forward – I just don't see how it would at all be possible to . . . [interjections] Sorry, Mr. Speaker. It's just a little distraction.

Certain equipment is also regulated under these pieces of legislation, and vehicles used in firefighting and rescue services are also regulated in a number of ways. For example, under the transportation act, as mentioned by the hon. member that presented this motion, vehicles must be noteworthy – and I think that is very important – and remain so throughout the course of their use or firefighting practices. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is not as if the rural firefighter departments or any fire department for that matter go completely unregulated and without standards for staff and equipment.

Under the Department of Municipal Affairs Alberta has an Alberta fire commissions office that oversees the Alberta Fire Services Advisory Committee. Mr. Speaker, this committee helps to ensure that our municipal fire departments provide an appropriate level of fire service within their regions. They provide a great deal of information and assistance to those in the field. For example, they develop and publish information packages on how to establish and operate a fire department and on how they have individuals that go through the fire departments to ensure that they are operating in a manner that meets the accepted practices. Therefore, these municipal fire departments have support, and most do the best job they possibly can.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the problems municipalities have with their firefighting and rescue services or lack thereof are actually few and far between. While there are, no doubt, some situations where municipal fire departments could improve the level of service they provide as a whole, I feel that these groups provide a very excellent service both in firefighting and rescue services. In turn, as a province we provide them with ample tools to do so. Without providing provincial funding for municipal firefighting departments, especially in rural areas, I do not see how it will be possible for the majority of these groups to meet increased standards if such standards were encouraged.

Mr. Speaker, we heard today discussions about Lacombe, Edmonton, Calgary, Drayton Valley, Bonnyville, Peace River. Now, these communities are large communities and have the ability to support firefighting services and equipment. I am mostly speaking on behalf of the small communities that do not have the abilities, that rely on other communities to help them out, and they are there as support. They are there as suboffices or subdepartments. We cannot put too many standards or restrictions on those individuals. To ask a hardworking, dedicated crew of firefighters, the majority of whom are working in a voluntary capacity, to give even more of their time in additional training is really hardly fair. As I said, in our area we do not have anyone that is in a paid position except the chief, who was just hired to overlook and help with the training. So, you know, some of the comments the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar had talked about, that we need to train more – that is happening already, and if there are places where it isn't happening, maybe there should be some support in that direction.

As well, to ask municipalities to come up with more money to finance these small fire departments may be pushing them just a little bit far. I know that most of the municipalities support firefighting to the best of their abilities. If you go throughout the communities and I know that if you go throughout my constituency, there are so many that have provided great effort in the support of their fire departments.

Mr. Speaker, I guess it is good to talk about equity, it is good to talk about consistency in firefighting, and it's good to talk about standards. I could support this motion if there was some latitude in the acceptability of standards from different communities because I think that if we equalize standards, then the communities in remote areas, especially my communities, will not be able to afford to have any sort of firefighting. So I want to support the individuals that are there, that are trying to protect the homes of the community, that are trying to protect the community.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this motion put forward by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I find, as I listen to the debate on both sides from the one side of the House, that the issue is becoming a little bit clarified in my mind.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that people of Alberta, regardless of where they live, whether they live in a rural area or in an urban area, deserve a reasonable level of fire and rescue service. They deserve, whether or not they live in an area with a volunteer firefighting system or a trained professional system, at least a minimum standard. That's not to say that the standard can be the same across the province. Obviously, in a highly dense urban area there's going to be faster response than otherwise. I don't believe that this is a question of putting a greater burden on local municipalities or on volunteer firefighters. I don't think that that is what the hon. member intends by his motion. In fact, I would say that I believe that volunteer firefighters would welcome assistance that could be provided to them that would allow them to do their job better. They are involved in that because they care about the people in their community and they want to save lives, and anything that this government can do, it should do in order to assist them and to ensure that all people in rural Alberta have a decent and minimum standard of emergency care.

The problem is – and I think that's why this motion has been somewhat modified by the mover – that there is an implied requirement that if the government chooses to do this, it has a financial obligation. I think it's high time that the government recognize that it has that obligation.

Mr. Speaker, just in conclusion – I know that the time is running out – I want to say that while I think that the motion does not address the resource issue and the responsibility of the government, it should be passed. It's a good first step.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I've just been advised that because of the first vote that we had, there are still another three minutes if you wanted to conclude your thoughts.

Mr. Mason: I'll allow if there's another member.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for bringing this motion forward. It's creating some good discussion, so I appreciate what he's done.

Reading it, it says, "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to encourage municipalities to provide minimum standards of fire, rescue, and recovery services." A very fine motherhood statement, and of course I would never ever think of arguing against motherhood.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it's important to recognize that I would hope what the hon. member is talking about is allowing each municipality to set the standards that they think they can attain. If we start setting standards across the province and/or a number of municipalities like the AUMA or the AAMDs and Cs are figuring out the standards, we're going to have great difficulty in a lot of areas because most of these people are volunteers. In fact, to impose on them standards that would require a lot of training, you end up with almost having to have full-time people on staff. Quite frankly, the municipalities simply cannot afford to do that, so I think it's really important that the municipalities have that ability.

Some have mentioned the training. I think it is really important, and I think it's really the role of the provincial government to assist in the training. Of course, there's a lot of that happening today, but probably there could be more done.

I know that in the county that I'm in, they have a regional director for services, and that person looks after all of the fire departments, does the co-ordinating.

There's one area that has been mentioned a couple of times: rescue. Well, Mr. Speaker, in the Rocky constituency we have that vast area in the west country. There is a search and rescue group that are volunteers, and they have taken a lot of training. Through donations – and I have helped them in some of the government programs to get various equipment. Quite frankly, if we were going to offer a real high standard there, that would require a lot of dollars, a lot of training.

Sometimes I have a little difficulty understanding why taxpayers should have to pay for, in a lot of cases, some dumb decisions by the public. For example, why on earth do people riding skidoos go up on the high elevations and trigger snowslides and then expect taxpayers to pay to recover them? I think that there is a responsibility on the part of the individual to recognize some of those dangers so that, in fact, if they get in trouble, they pay to have themselves rescued. Often it requires a helicopter, and of course we end up paying for that.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Government Services, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to close debate on Motion 504.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really would sincerely like to thank all of those who participated in the debate tonight. I thought it was an excellent debate. I would really like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for his excellent and very supportive comments as well as the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. I thought he made some great, great points. The Member for Rocky Mountain House was just outstanding. Even the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was very supportive, and I appreciate him.

With regard to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, well, he and I need to do some more talking, I think, Mr. Speaker. I think he needs to see that this motion really is aimed in the right direction. I have one question. The question is this: what if your best is not good enough? What if your best is not good enough? You see, I really believe that minimum standards are our job. As a government that is certainly our job. We're the ones who have to set that province-wide standard. Minimum standards need to be set. There needs to be a benchmark.

We've heard about areas such as Lacombe-Ponoka that have found ways to work together. They've found ways to make it work with the existing dollars, not with any outside dollars but with the existing dollars that they have within their budget. They spend the money that they have, and they make a system that works, a system that is able to meet the needs of the community. I do recognize that the standards will vary from municipality to municipality. For some places it takes minutes to get across their rescue area. For other places it takes hours to get across their rescue area. So of course we need to be understanding that there will be a somewhat different standard depending on where you are, but there still have to be some minimums provided.

The whole thing where this bill came from, Mr. Speaker, is that we had a little situation in my constituency where we found that there were two competing forces trying to provide for fire and rescue services in a portion of my constituency. One was sort of trying to take over from the other one, and one had kind of a higher standard than the other one. So they came to their MLA, and they said: "You know, who is right? What are the minimum standards for fire and rescue?" I guess that I was shocked to find out we didn't really have any.

Then I started to look into it, and I found out that there is a committee that's out there currently working on guidelines, working on recommendations, working on sort of provincial standards or provincial minimums that municipalities are going to be encouraged to meet. Again, it's not always an issue of money. Sometimes you can spend the money that you're currently spending in a more focused and in a wiser fashion.

I'm really thankful for the way we got to talk about this tonight, and I hope it's only a springboard. You know, motions generally are fairly vague, and motions are generally just encouraging in nature, but I really hope that this is just a springboard, that maybe we could talk more about this at the AUMA, at the AAMD and C. Maybe we can talk more about it in our own meetings as a government and even here on the floor of the Legislature. My hope is that we can work together with Municipal Affairs and with the Solicitor General to come to an amicable agreement on how we can put this forward and how we can make this work.

I guess, in closing, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that as legislators we must remain vigilant in regard to public safety by constantly aiming to improve the safety and well-being of the citizens of Alberta. We must ensure that all Albertans feel safe within their communities. It's extremely important for our citizens to have the peace of mind to function openly and freely, having the confidence of knowing that someone will be there to help in the case of an emergency or a crisis. Province-wide standards are our job as a government and as a Legislature, but municipalities are our partners. They are our friends. We have to work with them to see this come about.

I do encourage all members, even the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, to support Motion 504. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

head: Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move three government motions. I'll do them one at a time. As all members here would know, these are effectively adjournment-type motions, so they're not debatable.

Spring Recess

12. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns on Thursday, March 23, 2006, at the regular hour of 5:30 p.m., it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 3, 2006, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried]

9:10 Easter Recess

13. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns on Thursday, April 13, 2006, at the regular hour of 5:30 p.m., it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 24, 2006, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried]

Adjournment of Session

14. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the spring sitting of the Second Session of the 26th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

[Motion carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Premier to move Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, at this stage, third reading.

I've already indicated to the House earlier, Mr. Speaker, what the potential impact of this act is and why I think it's incumbent upon all of us to support it. That having been said, I'll look forward to any other positive comments or observations that other members of the House might have and seek their concurrence at the end to have this proceed through third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak about Bill 1 in third reading. Actually, it's the first time I've had the opportunity to speak about this bill. The effect of this bill will be to direct a considerable amount of money into a fund focused on cancer prevention initiatives, including, as the bill states, education, public policy development, and social marketing initiatives and the support of screening programs and a virtual research institute.

Everyone is in agreement that we have received tremendous benefits from medical research as it has developed, especially in the last few decades. In fact, demographers, those who trace the trends in population growth, have referred to the great health transition, the shift from short lives marked by early death caused by infectious diseases like typhoid and smallpox to long lives marked by death from chronic diseases like heart disease and cancer. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a huge trade-off. We, on the one hand, deem ourselves fortunate to be able to live long lives, but the downside is having to deal with chronic diseases like cancer. On the one hand, fighting infectious diseases like smallpox did not take long. If you lost the fight, it was over rather quickly, and if you won, there were no lasting effects. But with chronic diseases, which we encounter so much now in old age, the struggle is often slow and drawn out, lasting many weeks, months, or even years. This is the trade-off: a longer, healthier life followed by many more years of serious decline and often disability.

The reality that we face today is that the greater prevalence of chronic disease like cancer means rising costs in health care, so of course there has to be a greater investment of our money. Part of this is the high cost of medical technology. A common estimate is that 40 to 50 per cent of expenditure growth can be traced to increased costs in technology. Few of us would criticize this because it is obviously a societal good that we can keep finding new ways to help people fight disease.

For example – and I want to make a personal reference here – my mother, who passed away a number of years ago, had breast cancer twice in her lifetime. The first time, about 60 years ago, the treatment was successful given medical technology at the time, but it left her with many lingering effects of radiation sickness. The second time she had breast cancer, 40 years later, the treatment was also successful, and because medical technology had advanced and improved so much, there were few side effects. No one would disagree and oppose the fact that medical technology is improving the opportunities for people to deal with diseases like cancer.

However, the statistics on the rising costs of technology coupled with another statistic raise serious questions. Beginning in the 1970s, patients in the last year of their life consumed over 25 per cent of medical costs, and that seems to be an increasing trend. What is desperately needed in our society, I believe, is a frank, open, wide-ranging discussion of dying and death. Given all of the money that we put into the last year of our lives, it appears that the great enemy is death. We put more money by far into prolonging our life in the face of death than into the quality of life during our last days.

As Daniel Callahan, the outstanding medical ethicist, puts it, there is a great schism in our approach to chronic disease and death. On the one side is the research drive, and on the other side is palliative care. The research drive aims to find a cure for a lethal disease like cancer. Death is the enemy, not to be accepted. The research drive seems to treat death itself as a curable disease, as if it is merely a biological accident and can be controlled, prolonging life.

Of course, people die for a variety of reasons. One reason is that for the moment we do not have the cure, and research must go on and do its work. Another reason people die is because of bad health behaviours, bad lifestyle choices such as smoking. Many have mentioned in the debate on Bill 1 the importance of environmental factors influencing our health and contributing to disease. Of course, there are also genetic factors, which research is dealing with.

Bill 1, with its emphasis on cancer prevention and research, is one answer to the research drive. The bill's focus on prevention through education and increased screening for early detection is most important. No one, I think, in good conscience could oppose this bill. It's one answer to the research drive. But this is only one side of the challenge. I mentioned that there's a great schism in our approach to chronic disease and death. On the one side is the research drive. We want to invest in research and have the best medical technology, the best science available. On the other side is the palliative care movement. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few words about that because this bill doesn't deal with that, and I think there should be an equal amount of investment in the palliative care side of the whole issue.

Palliative care as a movement became quite important in the 1990s. It's an attempt to work to pull the care of the dying back to its ancient roots of giving comfort and relieving suffering. In this movement death is not perceived as the great enemy; rather, death is seen as a part of life. The goal is to help the terminally ill to die more peacefully by taking them out of the cure-driven apparatus of modern medicine and allowing them to live in peace during their final days.

Mr. Speaker, another personal note. My father passed away a couple of years ago from pancreatic cancer. Fortunately, he was able to live in his apartment almost right to the very end with home care, with palliative care. I see that as a tremendous plus that the palliative care movement has given us.

Bill 1 only deals with one side of this schism. Governments must also invest in palliative care, not just on the research side, the drive to have the best research available. We must invest in palliative care. Granted, a lot of progress has been made with palliative care like hospices, pain management, and living wills. Mr. Speaker, much, much more needs to be done. Reasoned debate about the conditions of our long-term care and assisted living institutions is an important part of the overall approach to end-of-life care, and that debate has to continue to take place. Most research money goes toward combatting lethal diseases such as cancer, heart disease, and strokes, but what is also needed is the funding of research on mental health, arthritis, and osteoporosis, all of which actually affect more people and directly affect our quality of life.

If we focused more on the quality of life and less on the length of life, we would probably save billions in health care costs. The war against death has actually put many, many people at risk of dying horrible, agonizing deaths, deaths so miserable that in the last 20 years a whole debate has emerged in our society about euthanasia and about assisted suicide. So to be able to live long lives and to face lethal diseases like cancer also poses a huge issue for us in terms of how we deal with dying and death.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 is a step in the right direction because it shifts the attention from a narrow focus on finding a cure and combatting death to preventions and screening, where quality of life and lifestyle issues can be raised. That's why I would support this bill. But it does not go far enough. We need another bill, the Alberta palliative care act, in which we set aside $500 million for end-of-life care because that is surely a direction that we need for the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 1 this evening. There's no doubt that Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act, demonstrates the vision of the government, and I commend the hon. Premier for sponsoring it. This piece of legislation embodies the dream of all Albertans, that one day we will live in a society that is free from the pain and suffering of cancer.

I would also commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his amendment and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for her clarifying subamendment. The amendment seeks to eliminate the investment of the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund into ventures that are involved in the tobacco industry. As we're all aware, tobacco use is the largest preventable cause of cancer. It would be inconsistent with the objects of the act, one of the most important of which is to reduce the incidence of cancer, to have the fund provide capital to corporations which produce known addictive, carcinogenic products.

The Alberta cancer legacy fund established by Bill 1 will support new cancer screening programs as early detection is one of the keys to winning the battle against the disease. Co-operation is another key to success in the treatment and prevention of cancer. The fund will assist in the co-ordination and collaboration between research programs, between the public and the private sector, and between Alberta and other provincial, national, and international researchers. It will help us to get the best value for every dollar invested in cancer research.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the best place in Canada to live, and with our efforts to create legislation such as Bill 1, there is no doubt that it will continue as such for generations to come.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) kicks in. Any questions or comments?

There being none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Act. I, too, want to commend the promoters of this innovative investment. Not common that we see this kind of investment in prevention, and indeed very welcome. Screening, early detection, education, research: all of these are critical to moving forward on this devastating disease for which in many cases we have no cure and we don't have a prevention yet because we don't know the cause. But in those cases where we do know the cause – for example, air pollution and tobacco smoke – we should be doing everything possible.

Many of us are concerned that, indeed, the rates of cancer are increasing, and it's not purely a function of age. It seems to be increasing environmental exposures. Increasingly the wrong foods, alcohol itself, in high doses are associated with cancer. Certainly, we could do more in the area of tobacco and air quality in buildings, especially for employees and workers, as we debated in this House with the last bill on smoke-free places. It's our hope that we will take the next step and ban smoking in all public places, not just those where children are, because lungs are lungs whether they're children's lungs or adults' lungs.

It's also clear in the literature that we know something about dietary carcinogens. Preservatives in some cases seem to be associated with an increased rate of cancer. Hormones seem to be related to cancer, and their use in animal production needs to be looked at very carefully because we know something about how that's translated not only into an increased risk of cancer but also feminization of animal species and, perhaps, some precocious puberty in young people. Obesity itself seems to be a risk factor for cancer. Active living and a healthy diet would not only reduce cancer, but it would reduce some of the chronic diseases that we're seeing add significantly to the health care costs. So there's a spectrum of actions that we could be taking and that this fund, I think, could help to promote and educate about that would not only reduce cancer but would reduce a lot of chronic diseases; for example, heart disease and arthritis and obesity.

There are a few contradictions, though, in spending $500 million in prevention and not addressing some of the thousands of synthetic chemicals that we introduce into our diets, into our air, into our land every day. We do need to look at how we can pull ourselves off the chemical society that we've become and recognize, I think, that some of the increase, especially in hormone-related cancers like breast and prostate, may well be related to what we are doing to animals in food production and what we are strewing on the land and putting out of our smokestacks, especially our internal combustion engines, and the increasing focus of this government on fossil fuel development over the next few years. We have to do it better. We have to do it more cleanly. We have to make the shift towards renewable fuels and away from fossil fuels in order to reduce in another way the incidence of cancer.

Some of the synthetic chemicals – and I'm thinking here of both fertilizers and pesticides – from the fossil fuel industry are also adding to the potential carcinogens in our environment. We have to find some other ways, some more natural ways of producing food and minimizing the risks of cancer.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. A very positive direction with investing in prevention, early intervention, research, and education but a contradiction in terms of our heavy emphasis on fossil fuels in this province. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Bill 3 Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and move Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006, for third reading.

I've been encouraged by the support of my colleagues for this bill, and I appreciate the lively discussions we've had about these important amendments. They will give us an improved means of protecting vulnerable people like seniors or those with disabilities and those at risk of family violence through stalking.

I would ask the entire Assembly to lend their support to these amendments and help keep our communities safe from family violence. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 3 in third reading and to make some comments on the effect of this bill, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006. Of course, we all agree that the topic of family violence is one of the most important issues in our ongoing struggle to prevent violence in our society. It is really shocking and unacceptable that Alberta, one of the wealthiest provinces in Canada, should also have the highest rate of spousal abuse in Canada. In 2004 a total of 5,520 spousal abuse incidents were reported to the police in Alberta and 3,865 charges were laid. According to Statistics Canada, Alberta women experience the highest rates of domestic violence in the country. Granted, there are many strains on families these days, with being uprooted because of working away from the family, and there are high amounts of gambling problems and alcoholism and a very high divorce rate in this province. Still, there's no excuse. We must encourage and enforce in Alberta a zero tolerance policy for family violence.

I support fully the well-written statements of the preamble of this bill outlining different aspects of the commitment to oppose family violence and protect especially its victims. The effect of this bill will be, I believe, to strengthen our society's ability to respond to family violence.

I want to make a few comments: first, about the definition of family violence and, second, about the process of apprehension of offenders. I want to commend the government, especially the Department of Justice, for the publication of a very fine handbook called the Domestic Violence Handbook. Many speakers have already congratulated Valerie Campbell for her work in educating prosecutors and police officers with respect to family violence, and I, too, wish to add my congratulations. She's just doing a splendid job throughout Alberta.

This handbook, Domestic Violence Handbook, is a splendid, clearly written, helpful handbook which raises awareness and outlines the processes of dealing with offenders. As noted in the introduction of this handbook, we've come a long way since July 8, 1982, when the House of Commons introduced a motion on police charging those accused of wife-beating, a motion which was greeted initially with laughter and jeers. We've come a long way since 1982.

Valerie Campbell writes in the handbook that in the first few months of prosecuting cases of domestic violence here in Edmonton, she watched "in helpless disbelief as most victims, often with children in tow, left the courtroom only to return to abusive . . . situations." She also mentioned seeing frustrated and angry police officers leaving the courtroom because a "domestic violence charge was either stayed or dismissed for lack of evidence." So much progress has been made, and three years after the domestic violence unit began in Edmonton, there are now six designated prosecutors and three specialized courtrooms. Victims receive more support, and fewer cases are falling through the cracks.

It is important for the public to be aware of the nature of family violence, and this bill contributes to a wider understanding of such violence. As many reports and studies have indicated, typical abusive relationships occur when one partner exerts control over and exploits the other partner. Such behaviour may involve physical violence or threats of violence or constant denigration of the other partner; in other words, emotional and psychological abuse. It may involve economic means whereby a partner is isolated and made to depend completely on an abusive partner.

Now, this bill adds stalking to the definition of domestic violence. Stalking, or criminal harassment as it has been called, has been a crime in Canada since 1993. Stalking is simply an extension of control as the abuser tries to dominate, follow the victim, watching and threatening the victim, causing tremendous fear. The Domestic Violence Handbook states that despite its purpose and the best intentions of police and prosecutors, criminal harassment or stalking continues to be overlooked in many domestic violence cases. This oversight can have tragic consequences, particularly for victims who have left abusive relationships.

Hopefully, the inclusion of stalking in this bill will contribute to correcting such an oversight.

Mr. Speaker, that was my first main comment about this bill, about the definition of family violence. Now, the second main comment I want to make is about the process of apprehension. The October 31, 2003, report, A Coherent and Principled Response to Family Violence in Alberta: Recommendations for Action and Change, submitted to the Minister of Children's Services, recommended changes concerning the emergency protection orders, or EPOs. Up until now a justice of the peace or a judge would only grant an EPO when two requirements were fulfilled: family violence has occurred, and by reason of the seriousness or urgency the order should be granted to protect the claimant. The report recommended broadening these requirements.

For an example, an abuser may be in custody or just released and is on the way to where the victim resides. So the addition in this bill after the words “that family violence has occurred” of the statement “that the claimant has reason to believe that the respondent will continue or resume carrying out family violence” is a good addition. Abusers may not like this, but society needs to protect victims of family violence, and this should outweigh any inconvenience to respondents. So I think that’s an improvement in this bill.

The 2003 report, which I referred to, also raises the issue of sanctions for breaches of an emergency protection order. Bill 3 is fine, but if there are problems in the processing and the enforcement of EPOs, then we still have work to do. Under section 127 of the Criminal Code a police officer can arrest a person for breaching an order by the court, which is of course important for serious cases, and the police act on that, but in many cases involving domestic violence breaches of emergency protection orders are often considered not serious enough for arrest, and there’s a problem there. This is a very serious problem.

Even under section 495 of the Criminal Code a police officer has the power of arrest without warrant for an indictable offence if the officer has reasonable and probable grounds for believing that an offence has occurred. But Bill 3 underlines the importance of dealing with a person who is thought to be about to resume a practice of family violence, not that such an abuse has happened. If such a person is moving toward the home of a victim and is found to be in a place he should not be, he should be charged with a breach of an EPO.

The Protection Against Family Violence Act does not prescribe any penalty for the breach of an EPO. That’s my understanding. The 2003 report recommends that a breach of an EPO should be made a provincial offence so that lesser punishments can be imposed for lesser breaches, and this is especially important now that we’re using special constables and peace officers instead of police officers. Will the special constables – and we don’t know this because we haven’t dealt with Bill 16 yet – be able to deal with offenders who breach EPOs? Bill 3 does not deal with these issues, but, Mr. Speaker, this is addressing its effect. I think this bill will be limited in its effect if we do not also go on to deal with the effectiveness of enforcement.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006. I think I join most of the other members on this side with positive comments about the amendments being made: section 4, incorporating stalking into the current legislation and defining stalking; section 5, changing the processes used in issuing emergency protection orders, including the vulnerability of elderly people and children, again an important addition; and section 6, requiring only one parent to consent to a child receiving counselling due to family violence.

On a more general basis, I think it’s important to begin to discuss and look at why Alberta has a higher rate of family violence and look at some of the unique features of our culture that contribute to it. Indeed, as has already been alluded to, we need to consider some of the extra strains and stresses on First Nations people and on new Canadians, some of the living conditions that they are faced with, and how we could reduce some of the primary causes that lead to family violence and despair. Some people are living close to the edge and need the support of a living income, and I include many of our people on welfare and on AISH supports as living well below the poverty line and experiencing on some levels extreme stress that contributes to relationship problems and contributes to violence. I think we need to look at areas in which we could be more conscientious about early intervention in situations that are potentially at risk and with children who are potentially at risk in poverty situations and deprived emotional climates.

Finally, we need to look at areas where we’re not providing the kind of opportunities for growth and development, educational opportunities and training that would also help people of both genders and all races and all walks of life and all ages to maximize their human potential, another area where frustration and anger and bitterness can arise and contribute to an Alberta disadvantage, Mr. Speaker, that I know we would all want to try to address.

I also want to just talk briefly about the recognition in my own profession, in medicine and nursing, that we need, I think, better training to identify and respond to signs of domestic abuse and violence. I don’t think we’re doing as good a job as we could in our hospitals, clinics and in nursing assessments, medical assessments. I think there’s a real reluctance in some quarters to identify and report and act on domestic violence, and there’s too commonly a willingness to blame the victim in domestic violence – and that needs to be addressed – in terms of attitudes, whether it’s in the health sector, the legal sector, or the policing sector. It may be associated with racism. It may be associated with lack of professional experience. It may be associated with just fear of getting involved in a situation that’s often uncomfortable and leads to a lot of time and counselling, in courtrooms, in interventions of various kinds. So training and preparation of all of our society for dealing straightforwardly with signs of domestic violence is an important contribution that we would like to see in this province to reduce the incidence that has become singularly high in Alberta.

I could allude also to the gun registry and the gun licensing system in Canada, that I believe has made a contribution to reducing some of the injuries, accidents, and violence associated with guns and firearms, long arms particularly. There’s been a significant reduction over the last decade in both injuries and homicides in conjunction with the new national legislation. It’s impossible to say that it’s cause and effect, of course, but there is an association with this legislation and the dropping in gun-related deaths and injuries.

So, on balance, looking at prevention, looking at early intervention, and, finally, at the level of salvage operations in families where the violence has gone beyond it, I think this goes some distance in helping us address this very important issue in creating a healthier society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Any other speakers?

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank all the speakers for their comments on Bill 3, the Protection Against Family Violence Amendment Act, 2006. It’s obvious that we all recognize the need to reduce the incidence of family violence and that we believe that family violence is the root of many societal dysfunctions. Together I think we can make a difference, and I just want to thank everybody in advance for supporting this important legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Second Reading

Bill 10
Engineering, Geological and Geophysical
Professions Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Danyluk]

Mr. Danyluk: If there are no other members wishing to talk, I would like to ask for the question.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you have to move second reading.

Mr. Danyluk: No. What happened is that I am sure that I moved second reading when I did my introduction before, Mr. Speaker, so I'm not sure if I have to do it again.

The Acting Speaker: No, you don't.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise on Bill 10, which on the face of it may seem like something innocuous and not a very detailed bill, but sometimes when the government looks to try and deal with some things that are dealing with some very important groups in our society – I think that in this particular situation, they maybe tried to exercise the wisdom of Solomon and, in doing so, cut the baby in half. You know, it's kind of hard to deal with this particular bill in second reading because I understand from first reading that we're going to get an amendment, which will actually give us the meat of part of what is actually happening here. That will come in Committee of the Whole, which makes it kind of bizarre trying to debate.

On the face of it this bill has some great concerns, to be truthful, for members of ASET, which is the association of science and engineering technology professionals. It's also a matter of some concern to many members of APEGGA, which is the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta. Any legislation that affects the operation of the engineering and engineering technologist professions is of major concern to many industrial concerns in our province: many construction companies and owners and, indeed, many major interests in Alberta. The people who work in these professional capacities have a huge and significant effect on the economy of Alberta. APEGGA has 43,000 members in Alberta, and ASET has many thousands as well, over 16,000 members.

Now, the context of this legislation is rather important. Engineers and engineering technologists work to design, build, organize, indeed, to engineer many of the projects undertaken in Alberta. We have a huge number, actually, on the books right now in Alberta. We've had a huge number on the books for the last 30 years. We've always had tens of billions of dollars in projects, but actually some of them are being acted on right now. It is important to all Albertans that any work performed in the engineering field is done professionally and with the greatest competence possible. We don't want any more roofs of schools falling down, and we certainly don't want our plants and petrochemical facilities blowing up. Engineers and engineering technologists are very important. Both the representatives and the executive of members of APEGGA and ASET take their professional duties very seriously. They also understand clearly the importance of legislation governing how their work is performed.

To clarify their concerns regarding professional practices and the regulation of their work, ASET has established standards and has long asked for legislation to govern their work. APEGGA has for many years represented the professional and other interests for professional engineers, and the engineering profession has long been regulated by the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Act. Many engineers are strong in their feeling that their profession of engineering should be protected even more.

There are many issues surrounding the growth of the engineering profession in our very busy economy. It's extremely busy in the oilfield and construction sectors. It will continue to be so. There are issues like outsourcing engineering services, and that has raised questions of how much engineers tasked with approving work done overseas and sent here online can do and, you know, how far they should go in approving such work and how quickly they should approve such work. What proportion and what degree of vetting of this work should be the responsibility of P.Engs as a sign-off and okay? How much more should we be looking to have the work done here by Alberta engineers and, perhaps, technologists?

Also, there's the integration of the labour market for engineers in the Pacific Northwest, that has allowed for much greater movement of engineers between Alberta and the northwestern United States. Actually, I think the government's Human Resources and Employment department has done some very good work in this area to integrate this labour market for professional engineers, but here again when we deal with legislation, we get into some complicated areas on how this does affect our professions.

Significantly, in this bill there's always going to be a certain difficulty in finding out where the dividing line is, and this has been the true significance of what's been going on for quite some time between ASET and APEGGA. Where is the dividing line, or should we be looking at something else, between engineering technologists and professional engineers, who have the iron ring and the designation of P.Eng? Where is the demarcation, and how do you determine it? ASET has asked for some time for its own legislation, for its own regulations. APEGGA has been reserved about this because it may affect their professional status. APEGGA has offered to essentially absorb ASET in the past, and the membership of ASET totally rejected that. It creates difficulties.

The government in this bill has the official agreement of both organizations, the executives of both ASET and APEGGA. On the face of it this may look like it reflects unanimity and agreement by the membership of the affected organizations, but in reality this is far from the truth. APEGGA counsels reluctantly agreed with parts of the bill, but they did not actually see the final bill before it happened. It would have been nice to have seen some of the government MLAs at the APEGGA MLA day, but there were none there. To be truthful, some of them were quite surprised at seeing some parts of the bill that were there that will now be taken out by amendment. Now, I understand, we will see these amendments coming forward. To my understanding from talking to a number of the actual ASET membership, even though the executive is supporting the legislation, many of the members have hope for much different legislation. They are prepared to support the changes because they at least see it as a step forward.

I think the government has not dealt itself proudly in how it has pulled this together, and as this situation in the development of the engineering profession and the P.Engs and technologists develops, I think that we are going to have to look at spending a bit more time in trying to come up with some better ways to have the legislation developed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, now it's your time to close debate.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to close debate. As the hon. member suggested, yes, there is an amendment that is coming, and we can discuss that at length when we go into Committee of the Whole. Yes, I would very much like to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a very productive day and a very productive evening. On that basis, I would move that we now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 21, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are indeed lucky and fortunate to have with us today Canada's very first gold medallist in the 2006 Winter Olympics, Jennifer Heil. Jennifer is here today with her mother, Heather McSporrnan-Heil; her agent, J.D. Miller; her coach, Dominick Gauthier; and Ken Scott, the mayor of Spruce Grove.

Jennifer is a true-blue Albertan. She was born and raised in Spruce Grove. She began skiing at the age of two and took up the sport of freestyle skiing when she was 9.

You know, I have to tell Jennifer of my experience skiing. I took lessons at what was then the old Paskapoo, and a friend took me up to Lake Louise. I'm stumbling around, and he said: just follow the trail. I saw a sign that said ladies downhill so I took it. I gave up skiing after that.

But I can tell you that Jennifer's years of hard work and training paid off in spades at the recent Olympic Games in Torino, Italy. She made her fellow Albertans exceptionally proud, taking home the gold in the Olympic freestyle moguls event. Jennifer's win was not only Canada's first medal of the games but was also the first gold ever won by a Canadian woman in a moguls event. Needless to say, it was also a win that marked the beginning of a great medal run for Alberta athletes.

Jennifer is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I'll ask all members of the Assembly to join me in offering her and her delegation the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but this introduction will be made by our whip, who hosted our very special guest, the ambassador from France.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis très fier d'introduire à vous et à tous les membres de l'Assemblée M. Luc Serot Almeras, le consul général de la France.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Mr. Luc Serot Almeras, the consul general of France. The consul general, who is based in Vancouver, is on his first official visit to Alberta. France is the world's fifth largest economic power and is Canada's third largest source of foreign investment. Indeed, French investments were in the spotlight last year when the energy group Total increased its investments in Alberta's oil sands. Accompanying the consul general is M. Gérard Carlier, honorary consul of France in Calgary, and Corinne Arabeyre, présidente de l'Alliance Française d'Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask our honoured guests, who are seated in your gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Well, we'll call on the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations again.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 75 very, very special guests from the A.L. Horton elementary school. They are seated in both galleries. Today they are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Bev McCarty, Mrs. Colleen Welsh, and Mrs. Larissa Moroziuk and parent helpers Mrs. Kim Giesbrecht, Mrs. Ann Waters, Ms. Karen Schmitke, Mr. Darcy Humeniuk, Mr. Eugene Rudyk, Mrs. Svitlana Fedorouk, Mrs. Helen Litwin, Mrs. Cheryl Elkow, and Mrs. Nancy Makowecki. Please all rise in both galleries and really give them a warm welcome to this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last evening in Spruce Grove we had a tribute to Jennifer Heil in the TransAlta leisure centre, and I was honoured to be able to listen to Jenn speak to the kids that were assembled in the TLC and talk about all of the things that helped her accomplish her goals and the choices she made. One of those things is the people that have helped her to achieve those goals by being, in some cases, her eastern family, and we have some of those members in our gallery today. They are Andrea Miller, Jason Miller, and Julia Miller, who are seated in the members' gallery. This is Jennifer's eastern family who help her do what we're so proud of her doing. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce a young constituent of mine. Kate Bolsten-Hoder is a second-year student at Athabasca University, one of our great long-distance learning universities, and she is studying political science and anthropology. I suggested to her that upon graduation she will be well qualified to study dead politicians. I would ask her to rise and receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions this afternoon. The first is a very special group from D.S. MacKenzie junior high school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. We have with us today four exchange students from Fushimi school in Sapporo city, Hokkaido province, our sister province in Japan, and I'm going to introduce them. They are Hikari Ezaki, Yoshifumi Sawada, Yuki Shipagaki, and Momoko Shindo. They're up in the public gallery. As well, they are accompanied by two young ladies who will be returning to Japan this summer as part of the exchange, Heather Johnston and my daughter Kim Miller. I'll ask them to stand. Accompanying them are several other family members and students from D.S. MacKenzie as well as the principal of D.S. MacKenzie school, Mr. Phillip Grehan, teacher leader Miss Christine Cao, and parent helpers Mrs. Joyce Aulenback and Mr. Randy Johnston. Could they please all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre I also have a group that I would like to introduce from the Metro Community College. There are 15 students today, and they're led by their group leader, Betty Woloszyn. I would ask them to rise as well and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Sherry McKibben. Sherry was an Edmonton city councillor between 1994 and 1995 and served as president of the Alberta NDP between 1995 and 1997. Prior to her term at city hall Sherry worked with the Boyle-McCauley Health Centre on a number of projects, including Alberta's first harm reduction and needle exchange program. She served as the executive director for the Norwood child and family service centre and most recently as the executive director of HIV Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to announce that Sherry has agreed to join our caucus as the chief of staff. We're excited to have Sherry join us and would like her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Liesel Hack. Liesel is a social work student who is doing her field placement in my constituency office. She's a first-year student at Grant MacEwan College and is interested in areas of social policy and international development. Liesel has been an invaluable member of our team in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and we are happy to have her with us. She is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask now that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mark Ramsankar. Mark has been a special education teacher with the Edmonton public school board for the past 19 years. In his 20th year Mark was elected to the Edmonton public school board local as the president. He's working very hard to represent teachers in a strong public education system. He's seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 23 grades 5 and 6 students from Namao school. They are accompanied by their parents and teachers, and they are seated in the members' gallery. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Unbudgeted Surpluses

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This province needs a government with a plan and the guts to stick to it. While the hard-working people of this province certainly deserve to get something back from their government, there is a right time for rebates. The right time for rebates is when the roofs of our schools are not in danger of collapsing, when our province's seniors are able to live in dignity, and when children are not going to school in Alberta hungry. My question is to the Premier. Given that the government has an obligation to ensure that our province's resource revenues will benefit us for generations to come, why doesn't this government make the Alberta advantage permanent by investing 35 per cent of surpluses in the heritage fund?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I could anticipate the question. I have to in all honesty express my frustration because the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was at the media scrum yesterday, and I was asked: what is planned for the unbudgeted surplus? My reply was that the policy now, established by caucus, was to spend some on needed infrastructure, save some through the heritage savings trust fund and various endowments, and give some back. That is the policy now. Relative to the policy in the future, that will be decided by the government caucus, not by the Liberals.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The day will come when the Liberal caucus is the government caucus.

Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the Premier has indicated that there will not be significant new funds for long-term care facilities, can the Premier explain the Alberta advantage to the many Albertans in long-term care facilities who live every day facing staff shortages and inadequate care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that the budget will be tabled tomorrow, and I would ask that he be patient.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the Premier explain the Alberta advantage to the hundreds of children across this province who sit in schools hungry because this province refuses to support school nutrition programs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we don't abandon our responsibility to children. I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that this is probably the first government and maybe the only government in Canada to have a Minister of Children's Services. I'm advised that about three-quarters of our school boards are involved in meal programs, and of course we fully fund the school boards outside of the money that is collected through the education portion of property taxes.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Industrial Development in Natural Areas

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in the Liberal opposition recently released our paper calling for a land-use strategy in Alberta. I'll send the Premier a copy. We understand that Albertans expect their governments to be stewards of their land, especially protected areas, to ensure both ecological integrity and economic prosperity. This government's decision to allow petroleum drilling in the Rumsey natural area is clearly a fundamental contradiction in government policy. Either special areas are protected or they aren't. My question is to the Premier. Why does this government allow overruling of the Minister of Community Development in allowing the Minister of Energy to open the possibility of drilling in the Rumsey natural area, an area your government supposedly designated as protected?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, my recollection of that particular case involving the Rumsey area is that it allowed for a certain amount of drilling, but I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think one of the first things we need to clarify is that the Rumsey area is an area that has been valued. There's a portion of it, the Rumsey ecological reserve, that has been designated under Special Places 2000, and absolutely no oil and gas activity is allowed in that reserve area. But there is a current management plan that does accept petroleum and natural gas postings in the natural area. However, in the natural area, which is not the reserve, even those are issued under very strict restrictions and constraints.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: given that over 20,000 wells will be drilled in Alberta this year, why can't this minister just draw the line and say that we've got a duty to preserve some areas of Alberta in its natural state?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, years ago when they went into the special places that were designated, there was a management plan put under for all of those areas. In these cases, in the reserves specifically, there is no drilling activity allowed. Under the other areas, the broader area, the natural area, it's under strict guidelines. That was the plan that is being followed, that was approved from day one.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier inform this Assembly as to when we will see and when the people of Alberta will see a comprehensive land-use policy that will finally set out clear guidelines on what forms of development are appropriate in what areas?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I regret to inform you that the minister who can speak to this is unavoidably absent today, but I can tell you that I have discussed this matter with him. He is working very diligently on a land-use study for the province, and it will be tabled in due course. I can't give the hon. member the exact time.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Coal-bed Methane Drilling in Horseshoe Canyon

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Coal-bed methane is an important resource to our province, but it must be developed properly. Thousands of coal-bed methane wells in the Horseshoe Canyon formation have brought to light a stark reminder, that our groundwater is more precious. We don't know what we need to know before proceeding on to the target of 50,000 coal-bed methane wells in this decade. Only this month the government has put in place a process of baseline testing of groundwater to establish that when changes occur to people's water, what is causing the change. To the Minister of Environment: what is your plan to do baseline testing in the areas of coal-bed methane development in the Horseshoe Canyon?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I think the announcement last week regarding what the hon. member has mentioned is an important first step to many steps. Baseline testing will be based on evidence, on scientific fact. It will not be based on simply emotion even though we're emotional people. People have even accused me of being emotional on occasion. [interjections] It's true. But with that emotion, based on scientific fact and evidence is how this government is proceeding to protect the most important resource we have, the blue gold called our water.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will you commit to an independent review of the testing protocol for this baseline water testing?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member, first of all, that he brought to my attention members of the public who had some concerns relative to the issue. I might add that I thank him for the hour-and-a-half or almost two-hour meeting that we had with them because I think all of us, including the residents and the hon. member, want to ensure that this resource that we call blue gold is protected today, tomorrow, and well into the future. We're going to use it based on fact and the baseline testing that this government announced in my ministry last week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, given that we can no longer get baseline data in the areas that were drilled, will you consider holding off on new drilling in new areas of the Horseshoe Canyon until we have the baseline information?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, baseline testing is proceeding so that we can in fact go forward in a comprehensive way and also in an integrated management way, that the Minister of SRD and the Minister of Energy collectively, the three ministries, are working on. I can say that our culture, as the hon. member has said in the past, may be fuelled by petroleum and lubricated by oil, but it runs on water.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Mason: Oh, that's tough to match, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow afternoon the Finance minister will rise in the House to deliver her latest work of fiction, otherwise known as the provincial budget. True to form, the government will no doubt underestimate its projected revenues by billions of dollars, resulting once more in billions of dollars in unplanned surpluses. Next year's surplus will then be added to the $33.4 billion in unplanned surpluses since 1993. I want to ask the Provincial Treasurer: does she believe that $41 billion of unbudgeted revenue over the same period – $34 billion of unbudgeted surpluses and $7 billion of unbudgeted spending – is fiscally responsible?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we're going to have a great opportunity over the next several days to discuss this. However, there isn't a government in Canada, indeed I doubt in the world that wouldn't like to have our problem. I will only say this on the forecast of resource revenue, which is primarily where, if there is a wide fluctuation either up or down, it occurs. If the hon. member believes that he can forecast better than the private sector – we used eight, at least eight outside energy specialists, analysts to give us that information. I would invite the hon. member to look at our record of projections based on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in previous years the NDP opposition has actually gone to energy analysts that are respected in their field and come up with projections that were far more accurate than what the government came up with with its Oujja board, will the minister admit that she in fact could do a much better job?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're going to have days and days to discuss this issue. I would rather err on the side of having a surplus than spending more than we have, which is what I hear from the opposition benches: "Spend, spend, spend. Spend on this, spend on that, spend on this." On the other hand, we don't save enough. There is a history of contradiction over there that you could write a best-selling novel on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, hey, big spender, spend a little time with us because we can tell you that, in fact, this government has failed to project accurately its income by a wide margin. To the Provincial Treasurer: will she admit that the government has been out by billions of dollars in almost every year, and why can't she do better than that?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I will admit that we have had a higher surplus than we anticipated in the majority of years, but I will also be happy to admit that we deliver consecutively balanced budgets. Because of good, prudent management, when the farmers and ranchers and livestock industry in this province were under the siege of BSE and a potential crippling of their industry, we were ready to respond, and we didn't need to borrow money to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the president of CUPE local 40 issued an invitation to the Minister of Education to take a tour of Calgary schools that are suffering from significant maintenance problems. My question is to the Minister of Education. Will the minister undertake to join me and the local CUPE president in a tour of some of the affected schools in east Calgary?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Such a friendly invitation, Mr. Speaker. You know, as a matter of course in my role as the Minister of Education I routinely visit schools throughout the province. Just recently we visited a school in Caslan, a school in Onoway, in Whitecourt, in Cessford, of course Edmonton, of course Calgary. The next time I'm down in Calgary-East, I'd be very happy to visit some of the schools in the hon. member's constituency, and I thank him for that invitation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister visited a lot of these schools, can the minister indicate which other schools in Calgary are facing closure because of deferred maintenance problems?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, on the issue of the one school that was closed this week by the Calgary board of education, I'm told that that particular issue was somewhat unique. I think Calgary public did the smart and precautionary thing. Rather than allowing any potential risk or harm to come to some 400 children, they said: why don't we just close this school for a while and look at this issue a little more closely and then send those students off to another school?

With respect to the general issue of closure there is a process that is very clearly outlined in our school regulations that boards must follow. It's entirely up to the local school boards to follow that process, and I have no knowledge of what they may or may not be contemplating by way of closures for whatever reasons.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since reports and spreadsheets will not adequately illuminate the dire conditions in some of our schools, will the minister form a committee to get first-hand knowledge of this situation and report back to him immediately?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be encouraged to know that the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation has some officials, and the Department of Education has some officials, and they are working together on a review and an assessment of some of the schools that have been put forward on priority lists by school boards right across the province, not just in Calgary. We have 62 school jurisdictions, and all of them have varying degrees of concerns about capacity, on the one hand perhaps, about issues of aging infrastructure in others. That is an internal committee that is doing that work as we speak, and they do it every year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member of Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Lottery Grant to Alpha Gamma Delta Fraternity

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Gaming minister declined to investigate a nearly $19,000 lottery grant awarded to the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority. Now, while I in no way question the motives of the fraternity – in fact, I would like to congratulate them for their fundraising efforts for juvenile diabetes and other organizations – I do question the process surrounding the grant approval. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister explain why a project that clearly had no urgency to it was pushed through his department in about three weeks when community groups can wait six months or more for an answer?

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I'm not entirely confident that that's true information, the timing. I do know that they are certainly a qualified applicant. I do know that I have a copy of their original application here. Despite some rumoured numbers in today's paper, in quotes from someone who I'm not sure was there two years ago when this original request went in, the original grant application was for $18,760.

Mr. Tougas: I don't believe that's accurate Mr. Speaker.

Second question. Can the minister give the rationale why his ministry chose to nearly double the original grant request to the surprise of the sorority?

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I believe I just answered that. The original grant application says $18,760, and that's what the grant was all about.

Mr. Tougas: Not true.

How can the minister justify turning down any organization for a grant when he allows nearly $19,000 to be spent on luxury furniture for one house?

Mr. Graydon: The application was for upgrades to the main floor, to the common areas. It's not unlike requests for furniture, if you will, for daycares, for maybe a seniors' recreation complex. It's not unlike a lot of the requests we get. It was an applicable use of funds. We do not do a microscopic examination of what it was spent on. In the two-year period from the application there will be by this fall an examination to make sure that the money was spent on what they said they would spend it for. For example, if a band asked for a grant for band instruments, we would make sure that they spent that money on band instruments. We wouldn't determine exactly what instruments they bought.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Freedom of Choice in Supporting School Systems

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the hon. Minister of Education. The current School Act contains provisions which make it illegal for a member of the minority faith where a separate school jurisdiction exists to choose to be a supporter of the public school system. These provisions predate the enactment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and they predate an agreement among the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, and the Public School Boards' Association that individual members of the minority faith should have the right to choose to be supporters of the public school system. Given this agreement, would the minister be prepared to recommend an amendment to the School Act to allow an individual member of the minority faith to be a supporter of the public school system in his or her community?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the question correctly, I think that perhaps indirectly the hon. member is seeking information that pertains to a complaint that has been submitted by one particular school board to our Alberta Human Rights Commission, according to the press release that was issued about two weeks ago. Members of the House would certainly know that the nature and effect of the Human Rights Commission and anything before it would be therefore a matter of sub judice, and I don't think it would be appropriate for me to comment on something that might be headed in that direction at this time.

Rev. Abbott: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister could circumvent this given that in 2001 the ACSTA agreed that individual members of the Catholic faith, where a Catholic separate school jurisdiction exists, should have the right to choose to be supporters of the public school jurisdiction in the community. So has the minister consulted with them so that we could put this issue to bed and end the dispute?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have met with a number of school boards on a variety of issues, and I can't comment on a specific case such as is being sort of pursued here. However, we'll just have to wait and see what the exact nature of the complaint is that I understand by press release only has been submitted to the Human Rights Commission, and perhaps some of the answers will flow from whatever their deliberations might be. I think that's all that I'm at liberty to say on this particular issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has the power to open the School Act, would the minister be prepared to arrange a meeting with the ACSTA and the PSBA for the purpose of discussing an appropriate amendment to the School Act to resolve this issue?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, again, I won't comment on a specific case. But in a general sense any time an act of any sort that belongs to this Legislature is opened up for whatever purposes, it goes through a normal, natural process of consultation. I think that same style would be followed should any act be opened up, and I'm not going to comment any further on that particular issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Medical Personnel in Edmonton Remand Centre

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms states that "everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person." However, these fundamental freedoms apparently do not apply to those housed in the Edmonton Remand Centre. Jody Umpherville died on August 9, 2003, in the Edmonton Remand Centre because this government did not provide adequate medical care, a violation of her Charter rights. My first question is to the Minister of Justice. Given that the minister has received the 10 recommendations from the fatality inquiry into the death of Jody Umpherville, can the minister tell us if he will implement any of these recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a fatality inquiry process that we have in the province, for which I am responsible. When recommendations come forward, we publish the report and pass it on to the ministry that is principally responsible for the recommendations. I must admit that in this particular case I do not recall the specifics of the recommendations. However, typically, matters of the remand centre are matters for the Solicitor General.

Dr. B. Miller: My second question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Given that there are 2.1 physicians per 1,000 people in Canada and the Remand Centre houses over 700 residents, will the minister appoint a chief medical officer for the Edmonton Remand Centre, at least one physician, as recommended by the fatality inquiry?

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, at present the process is that any time there is an arrest made, whether in one of our municipalities or out in rural Alberta, they're taken to the remand centre, or they're taken to an arrest processing unit where they are seen by a paramedic or a nurse that is on staff 24 hours a day. If it's deemed that that individual needs hospitalization, then the police are responsible for taking that individual to a hospital, waiting there while the individual gets that attention from medical staff, and then transporting back to that facility. In the future are we looking at medical personnel being permanent staff? That's something that we're going to have to review.

Dr. B. Miller: To the same minister: now that there is no money for a new remand centre, is it the policy of this government that those housed in the remand centre who have not been found guilty or innocent of any crimes should endure conditions in which their fundamental rights are placed in serious jeopardy?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member. I've been to the remand centre. I've eaten the food, and it's very good. I'll tell you that although the cells are built for one and then double bunked for two, at this point in time we do have four-inch mats that can be placed on the floor when there is some overcrowding at the Edmonton Remand Centre. But I can say that we're looking at other options. We're utilizing the facility at Fort Saskatchewan, which is close to the city of Edmonton. We're also ensuring that our facilities in Red Deer as well as Calgary are being used. On our corrections side for our sentenced offenders those facilities in Peace River, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge are being fully utilized as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Assistance for the Grains and Oilseeds Sector

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, many of the members of this Assembly are aware that the federal ag minister and provincial ag ministers met this past weekend to discuss a number of key agricultural issues. I would be most happy to hear that you came back with some resolve to some of the current issues outstanding that many of our Alberta producers are experiencing. To say that their expectations are high would be an understatement. Mr. Minister, have you come back with any information that will currently help the situation that our grain and oilseed producers are experiencing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member:

it is indeed a very important question across the country in terms of the grains and oilseeds sector. All of us at the meeting of provincial ministers were unanimous in our support of the federal minister to do whatever it is that he can do to help us negate some of the negative impacts to the grains and oilseeds sector and other sectors in agriculture across the country.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government is still proceeding with the $755 million payments to the grains and oilseeds sector based on net sales. Of that amount, Alberta producers stand to share in about $200 million. It's important that those producers have their '04 information into the CAIS program for speedier payment. If they don't do that, there will be an application process down the road.

The other thing that I'm very pleased about: the federal government is going to continue with their commitment for $500 million added to the federal budget for agriculture each year over the next five years, so a 2 and a half billion dollar commitment. That commitment, as we discussed at the meeting, is for long-term development and long-term sustainability.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. I've heard of four different cheques coming out from the federal program in our area, so I guess our guys are more concerned with knowing if there are any upcoming CAIS changes that will actually help put money in their pocket before spring.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to note that as far as the CAIS program goes, Alberta being one of the lucky ones to manage the program ourselves is probably quite a bit ahead of some of the other jurisdictions in terms of some of the administrative changes that we're making. Most of the criticism that has been directed at the CAIS program has been administrative in nature: it's too slow, it's too cumbersome, it's too complicated. We are taking a lot of steps to make it simpler, to make it faster, to make it online.

The consensus at our meetings over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, was that the unanimity amongst the provincial ministers was: don't throw the baby out with the bathwater. We have a CAIS program that is not working for the producers. Let's fix it. Let's make it work. We have several initiatives that are coming forward to all ministers, because we all have to sign on this thing, for future decisions to be made at our next federal/provincial/territorial meeting.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For those that can survive through this spring and the crop seeding that continues on, Mr. Minister, what is the long-term initiative that they might look forward to?

Mr. Horner: Well, coming out of the meetings with the federal minister and other provincial ministers, we have obviously told them about our three-point strategy and the grains and oilseeds recovery strategy that we're embarking on in this province very, very soon.

In terms of consultations with the industry it's a $1.7 billion industry in this province, Mr. Speaker, so it is very, very important to us. We are going to be going out into the country to talk to the industry leaders, to talk to our federal government as well about what we can do to make this a long-term, viable business into the future, talk to people like the Grain Commission, the Wild Roses of the world, the AGCATs of the world to make sure that we're on the right path as well as our position on the WTO, which will also be critical to the grains and oilseeds sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Youth Homelessness

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The August 2005 report entitled Seeking Sanctuary: An Exploration of the Realities of Youth Homelessness in Calgary provides valuable insight into the challenges that thousands of homeless children face in our province every day. According to the report most of the youth surveyed were not aware of or had limited knowledge about the programs and services that are available to them. My questions are for the Minister of Children's Services. What specifically has your ministry done to reach out to homeless children in Alberta to provide them with information and support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the question from the hon. member. If I recall, it was a conversation that the hon. member and I had when she came to a meeting in my office to talk about some of the issues. I explained to her that I had met with the Homeless Foundation, listened to what they had to say about homeless youth in Alberta. I explained to them some of the innovative things that we're doing in our office in regard to our high-risk youth project. I talked to her about our Youth Secretariat, that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is working so hard on, our youth forums. In fact, we have expanded our bursary program which is dealing with high-needs youth. I think we can be very proud in this province of how we're dealing with our high-risk youth.

Mrs. Mather: To the same minister: given that many of the children who were surveyed reported being on the street for longer than two years with no support or basic needs being met, why are these children falling through the cracks?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, children can fall through cracks for various reasons. We're trying to reach out to the youth in this province. We're doing a review of our youth emergency shelters right now. We're talking to youth across this province under the leadership of the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Speaker, I think what's innovative about this government is that we're listening to youth and we're trying to deal with what the youth are telling us are their problems. They want some things dealt with in this province in regard to their education because we realize that we've got some, you know, round holes and are trying to put square pegs in them. We're doing a lot of innovative things in this province. We've talked, again, to the Homeless Foundation about getting our messages out to the various agencies on what this province is doing to address the needs of the high-risk youth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. To the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: given that aboriginal youth are overrepresented among the homeless population in Alberta, what is your ministry doing about this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms. Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud to be able to answer that question. First of all, we've been working with a number of different aboriginal groups to be able to identify some of the struggles that the people are going through. What we've done is we've worked with the minister of seniors to look at some of the possibilities for homeless people. We also have what we call a transitional program where we've been working with the various municipalities to be able to identify those challenges and to be able to address the concerns that are coming through. As you know, when people migrate from either the reserves or from the isolated communities, we have problems when it comes to some of the areas of concern, and definitely homelessness is one of the areas.

As a result, we've been working not only with the people from the various reservations and the First Nations but also with the communities, with the northern communities to identify some of those areas and to be able to see what can be done. I want to give praise to the minister of seniors, who is responsible for housing, for being able to identify some of those areas. So we've been working on some of those programs just to ensure that we can begin to address those terrible gaps.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Highwood.

Major Projects in the Industrial Heartland

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of Sturgeon and Strathcona counties feel as though they are caught in the headlights of this government's headlong rush to put profit ahead of people and the environment. Without a proper consultation process and especially without proper standards to report and monitor leaks and emissions, this whole thing just stinks. To the Minister of Environment, please: since the massive industrial heartland complex will generate billions of dollars in profits for decades to come, why does the minister refuse to develop a proper special compensation package that better reflects the losses of nearby residents, something that goes beyond the government's very stingy concept of fair market value?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member just said simply does not reflect the truth of what is happening.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister: since not everyone is able to pack up and leave, is this government willing to provide for the loss of land values and quality-of-life issues that arise when some of the world's biggest oil refineries and bitumen upgraders begin to arrive at their back door?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the member that when you talk about the Q word, I agree with the hon. member that the quality of life we enjoy as Albertans is unmatched anywhere else, and the standard of living we enjoy is unmatched anywhere else in this country.

In terms of protecting what you're suggesting, absolutely so. We intend to do that and are doing that and will continue to do that.

Mr. Eggen: To the same minister: is the minister willing to commit to requiring the very best standards of emission control that the world has to offer for these new bitumen upgraders, refineries, and chemical plants in the industrial complex, or is he going down the road again of letting the polluters call the shots, like he's done with the proposed Keephills 3 coal-fired plant?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the last statement was simply not true. Yes, Alberta will continue to lead this country and this continent when it comes to tough environmental standards. In fact, two weeks ago it was announced in terms of our new regulation regarding mercury and regarding the issue that as we go forward, we will continue to use our science and innovation to lead the world. So I agree with the hon. member: we'll continue to lead the world. To the members on the front bench, they may want to pay attention to what I'm saying because it is about leading the world.

Alternative Energy Project in Okotoks

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I brought up the issue of Drake Landing in Okotoks. Drake Landing, as the members will recall, is a 52-unit solar-heated and -cooled housing complex which is a complete boon to the environmental emissions. However, material cost overruns and flooding have caused a monetary crisis. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Has your department come to any consensus to salvage this leading-edge environmental technology?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member asked on behalf of his residents relative to what we can do to help such an environmental initiative as this green project. Actually it's another example of Alberta leading the world, as I mentioned earlier. I'm pleased to announce to the House today that working very closely with Climate Change Central, in fact the government is committing a half million dollars towards ensuring that the investment that Climate Change Central has put into this program will continue based on the extraordinary circumstances that took place with some of the work from last summer.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, that is a great answer indeed for me. In fact, that has absolutely blown my supplemental questions right out of the water, or the blue gold, as he might say.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fairy tale of the Three Little Pigs and the Big Bad Wolf is being played out in real life in Calgary and Edmonton. Instead of houses, however, we have schools constructed with saturated straw, rotting sticks, and crumbling bricks. We have two tap-dancing ministers, infrastructure and education, wolfishly huffing, puffing, and disclaiming the responsibilities for infrastructure maintenance while a justifiably frustrated Drake Hammill, the head of the Canadian Union of Public Employees local 40, is offering school devastation tours. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Given that the minister's reply to the hon. Member for Calgary-East's invitation was evasive, when you are in Calgary this Friday, March 24, attempting to justify the disconnect between reduced class size and your decaying space utilization formula, will you make time for Drake's tour? Yes or no?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this hon. member got the information that I would be in Calgary this Friday. I'm hosting 62 school board chairs here in Edmonton, and they all know that, so I won't be there on the 24th. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll send your regrets to Drake. Another time possibly.

Can you offer Calgary students, parents, caretakers, teachers, and trustees any indication that the plight of their older schools and yet-to-be-built new schools is at the top of your priority list?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to assure this member and all members in this House that the safety and security of our children is always at the top of mind of any Minister of Education. That's a number one concern, and that's why I personally phoned and thanked, I even congratulated the Calgary public board on taking a preventative step such as they did. It's never easy to take a step to close a school temporarily, but in this particular case they did a very prudent and logical thing to ensure that nobody would come in harm's way. We should be reiterating that thanks to them, but we should also be reminding people that that decision is made by locally elected trustees – that's what they're there for – and they have acted prudently in this particular case. So I will continue to support them in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that a healthy school environment is absolutely essential for learning to occur, what steps are you taking personally to ensure student safety?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I phoned officials in the Calgary public to get a little more rounding on this particular issue. I'm aware that virtually the minute it came across our desks, a supplementary amount of some 25,000 dollars was given to conduct an immediate assessment when it was flagged and brought to our attention. We'll just wait for and see the ongoing report, that is being done right now, to come our way to see what future steps the Calgary public board wishes to undertake. But let's keep in mind that there are school boards right throughout the province who are doing their best to address these issues. It's not just one isolated case that has to be dealt with here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Senior Public-sector Salaries

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Recent salary increases for some public-sector employees as high as 17 per cent have raised concerns that people in senior public-sector positions are paid way too high wages. Could the minister explain how the salaries of senior officials in Alberta compare to what other provinces pay employees in those same types of positions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. When we're talking about the broader public sector, that includes organizations and employees that are not employees of the Alberta public service, such as health authorities and school boards. As minister responsible for the personnel administration office for Alberta, I am only able to speak to salaries of employees who are members of the Alberta public service. The government reviews the salaries and benefits that it provides to its employees to ensure that we are comparable with other employers offering the same type of work for similar situations. This is important so that the government can find and keep the talent it needs to continue running the services.

Mr. Marz: My next and last question to the same minister: can the minister advise how senior public service salaries or tax-funded employees, including these boards, compare to what private-sector employees make in those similar positions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is a very good question because it has to do with the challenge our government faces in retaining and attracting employees. Our government faces the same challenges as the private sector in finding and keeping employees in the tight and competitive labour market out there. We review the competition levels for employees to ensure that we are able to attract and retain qualified people to run our senior government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Nutrition Programs in Schools

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to put ideology before the health of young Albertans by not only ignoring the obesity crisis in children today but also contributing to it. The causes are a lack of knowledge and poor food choices. It is further soured by a funding formula that makes schools rely on junk food sales to fund basic school operations like physical education. My question is to the Minister of Education. Does the minister evaluate the health-related costs of new and existing policies, such as allowing the promotion and sale of junk food in schools?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously the health and welfare of our students, and the member would know that we started an even more aggressive campaign in that regard last year when we brought in the daily physical activity program. We are providing somewhere over a million dollars to help bring that initiative along, and that's just the first part. Our next part of that same plan is to deal with the overall health and wellness perspective, and that will include things to do with nutrition and proper eating habits and proper food habits. We have a fairly aggressive plan in mind for that. So if you'll just stay tuned, we plan to move that issue along very soon.

Mr. Flaherty: My second question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Has the minister conducted any analysis of the costs of relying on the sale of junk food to students to fund Alberta schools? How much is the lack of action costing Albertans?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the type of analysis that the hon. member is referencing is something I am unfamiliar with. However, I would tell you that our Choose Well Challenge, our community challenges have been very successful in not only engaging adult and senior populations but engaging several youth. We launched the Choose Well Challenge for this year focusing on nutrition in schools, on regular exercise programs, on students looking after themselves by going to bed and getting plenty of rest and enjoying a balanced lifestyle. When we launched that this year, there were a number of schools present. They were already engaged in physical activity and nutrition programs within their schools. The teachers were very knowledgeable, had been trained to that effect. So I'm very satisfied that there are strides being taken.

As to studies about the losses or costs referenced, I would endeavour to follow up and in due course inform the hon. member of what data we do have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Education remove junk food from schools in an effort to alleviate the obesity crisis in Alberta's children and reduce future health care costs?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, locally elected trustees have in fact taken some of those initiatives already. Some so-called junk food machines have been removed. Others have been removed and replaced with milk machines. So there are a variety of different approaches. My experience has been that locally elected officials are in the best position to make common-sense, local decisions, and that's what's going on right now.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: Hon. members, by way of a historical vignette today I'm going to do a several parts series on leaders of the Official Opposition, so today is part one.

From 1906 until an amendment to the Legislative Assembly Act came into effect in 1972, the tenures of leaders of the Official Opposition were based on actual session dates. In other words, one was the Leader of the Official Opposition when the Legislature sat and not when it did not. Between 1906 and 1971 Alberta had 18 different leaders of the Official Opposition.

Albert J. Robertson, a Conservative representing High River, served from 1906 to 1909. Richard B. Bennett, a Conservative representing Calgary, served in 1910. Edward Michener, an independent, then Conservative representing Red Deer, served from 1910 to 1917. George Hoadley, a Conservative representing Okotoks, served in 1918-1919.

James Ramsey, a Conservative representing Edmonton-East, served in 1920. John R. Boyle, a Liberal representing Edmonton, served from 1922 to 1924. Charles R. Mitchell, a Liberal representing Bow Valley, served in 1925 and 1926. John C. Bowen, a Liberal representing Edmonton, served in 1926. From 1926 to 1940 there was no recognized Leader of the Official Opposition.

In 1941 and 1944 James H. Walker, an independent from Warner, served as the leader. Alfred Speakman, an independent from Red Deer, served in 1942, and James C. Mahaffy, an independent from Calgary, served in 1943. From 1945 to 1948 J. Percy Page, an independent from Edmonton, served. The Legislative Assembly had no recognized Leader of the Official Opposition from 1949 to 1951.

J. Harper Prowse, an Edmonton Liberal, served from 1952 to 1958, and in 1959 J.W. Grant MacEwan, a Calgary Liberal, served as the leader. From 1960 to 1963 the Legislative Assembly had no recognized Leader of the Official Opposition.

From 1964 to 1967 Michael Maccagno, a Liberal representing Lac La Biche, served as the leader. In 1968 a Conservative, Peter Lougheed, representing Calgary-West, became the Leader of the Official Opposition and served in that capacity to 1971.

Tomorrow I will take you from 1971 to the current situation.

Torino Paralympic Winter Games

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to acknowledge the efforts and achievements of an exceptional group of athletes. Two weeks after the conclusion of the Winter Olympics Torino, Italy, was once again host to an Olympic competition, this time the Paralympic Winter Games. Once again Canadian athletes proved to the world that their spirit and dedication remains second to none. Team Canada's athletes won five gold, three silver, and five bronze medals for a total of 13, surpassing the expectations of most. Albertans played a significant role in this total victory, and I would like to take a moment to acknowledge them individually.

Skier Brian McKeever of Canmore was responsible for almost a quarter of Canada's medals, winning gold medals in both the five- and 10-K visually impaired cross-country races. He also won a silver medal in the 20-K cross country and a bronze in the 7.5-kilometre visually impaired biathlon. His older brother, Robin McKeever, also of Canmore, assisted in these victories by acting as his guide.

Lauren Woolstencroft, a native Calgarian, brought home a gold medal in the women's standing giant slalom and a silver in the women's standing super-giant slalom.

Kimberly Joines of Edmonton won a bronze in alpine sit-skiing, and Shauna Maria Whyte of Hinton, the final Alberta member of the team, was in second place in the biathlon when an equipment failure removed her from further competition. While she didn't bring home a medal, her sportsmanship and dedication were truly world class.

The five Alberta members of the 33-member Canadian team accounted for over half of Canada's total medal count, a fact of which we can all be extremely proud. I would encourage every member of this Assembly to join me in offering best wishes to the Canadian paralympic team and especially to the Alberta athletes, whose contributions meant so much.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, March 21 is the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This international day was established in 1966 through Resolution 2142 of the 21st Assembly of the United Nations General Assembly. This was done in part to commemorate the tragic events in South Africa known as the Sharpeville massacre. The terrible tragedy, which occurred in 1960, saw police open fire on a group of young students who were peacefully protesting the apartheid's passbook laws. At the end of the dreadful ordeal 67 protesters were left dead and 186 more were injured.

With the resolution the United Nations General Assembly called for the international community to increase its efforts to stop racial discrimination. Since the proclamation of this international day Canada and other nations have joined the March 21 campaign that has now become a pillar on which the movement against racism stands.

It is important that all of us gathered here and all citizens of Alberta not be satisfied with the status quo in our province. While we can be proud of the fact that we do not have extreme laws such as those administering the policy of apartheid, we can always improve our situation. We will not be free from the evils of racial discrimination until we eliminate it from all aspects of our society, including elements as mundane as our everyday discourse. Only when this is fully addressed will we have rid our society of racial oppression.

On this the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination let this Assembly recognize the strengths of our multicultural society and recognize the need to continually work towards making Alberta free of racial injustice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forty-six years ago on March 21, 1960, police opened fire and killed 69 people in the township of Sharpeville, South Africa, people who were peacefully demonstrating against apartheid. As the hon. member mentioned, the United Nations General Assembly later declared that day, the 21st of March, International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

The UN called on all nations and communities to not only remember that tragedy but to work together to eliminate racism wherever it exists. In response many organizations throughout the world and also here in Alberta have worked hard to educate the public about racism, organizations such as NAARR, the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission, and the Alberta human rights and multicultural education fund. Last Sunday some of us attended the ninth annual Harmony Brunch here in Edmonton sponsored by these organizations, and I commend them for their work.

The theme this year for the international day is Fighting Everyday Racism. It is an important emphasis because despite all the declarations and conventions and special days the evidence of racism continues to undermine the foundations of our society. No country and no province is free from racism and racial discrimination. We must address the racial slurs and jokes which occur in everyday speech, racial innuendo on the Internet and in magazines, especially racist epithets hurled at our First Nations people.

Mr. Speaker, many years before Sharpeville, in 1893, a young lawyer was travelling in the first-class section of a train on his way to Pretoria when a white male passenger insisted that because he was a coloured man, he would have to sit back in third class. He refused to move, and a conductor threw him off the train. Mahatma Gandhi sat in the cold outside the train station all night reflecting on the deep and painful disease of prejudice. That incident was the turning point in his life. Soon after his experience on the train Gandhi created the theory of Satyagraha, or the force of love, and he determined to root out the disease of prejudice but never to yield to violence and never to use violence against others.

Now more than 100 years later there's no excuse for us. We have the right kind of charters and laws and declarations and examples like Gandhi. The struggle to combat racism must shift to the streets and schools and parks and our own families and communities, where we must commit ourselves to zero tolerance of racist behaviour and fight against everyday racism.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Commonwealth Parliamentary Association

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week hon. members of this House rose and recognized Commonwealth Day, which is celebrated the second Monday of March each year. Today I rise to recognize the practical benefits of being a part of the Commonwealth of Nations. Recently I had the opportunity to travel to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association 55th parliamentary seminar at Westminster, England, where I had the honour to celebrate Commonwealth Day at Westminster Abbey.

The mission of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, or CPA, is to “promote the advancement of parliamentary democracy by enhancing knowledge and understanding of democratic governance.” The programs administered by the CPA provide the sole means of regular consultation among Commonwealth members. This provides the opportunity to increase understanding of different parliamentary procedures around the globe.

I was one of two Canadian delegates and was honoured to represent this Legislature and lend a Canadian provincial perspective to the debate as the other representative was a Member of Parliament. This seminar gives participants the opportunity to share their ideas and debate processes from different parliamentary perspectives. Through the sharing of ideas we had the opportunity to learn what has worked for other nations and what hasn't as well as share our own experiences as legislators and parliamentarians. The debate and ideas were as diverse and interesting as the member countries of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth includes 53 countries which represent over a quarter of the world's population, living in vastly different nations, ranging from Fiji to Zimbabwe. This diversity has lent itself to a wide range of parliamentary practices and procedures all stemming from the original Parliament at Westminster. The contribution of the CPA to the betterment of parliaments around the globe is immeasurable, and I would like to recognize their contribution to good parliamentary practices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Youth Science Month

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year thousands of young Albertans participate in local and regional science events all across our province. These young scientists work hard and usually have a lot of fun developing projects that demonstrate their innovation, knowledge, and imagination. Many of us in this Assembly have had the good fortune of meeting with many of these brilliant young people in the last few years, and I'm sure I can speak for all members in saying that they leave us feeling a tremendous sense of optimism in Alberta's future.

Unleashing innovation is a key pillar of this government's 20-year strategy, and it is essential that we continue encouraging our young people to gain knowledge and skills in science and technology. This knowledge will help them to better understand the world and also to excel in their education and broaden their career options.

It's in the best interests of our society and our economy to develop and support a culture of innovation. We must nurture new generations of scientifically literate young people who will push the boundaries of our knowledge and improve the quality of our lives in the future. That's why I'm happy to join the Minister of Innovation and Science in supporting Canada's Youth Science Foundation in recognition of March 2006 as Youth Science Month in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Long-term Care

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nearly a year has passed since the Auditor General released a scathing report on the shameful conditions of many long-term care facilities in Alberta. A year ago we were calling the neglect and abuse seniors experience Alberta's dirty little secret. The fact that a year has been allowed to pass without any significant improvements is an outright scandal.

Far from making improvements over the past year, the Minister of Health and Wellness and the minister of seniors have allowed numerous long-term care facilities to be downgraded to assisted living facilities. In many cases residents remain in place while their services are downgraded. With the government now raising the spectre of medical savings accounts and further privatization, it is no wonder Albertans are worried about the quality of care they can expect as they age.

The NDP has put forward some very practical, very workable solutions to this crisis. We have called for a new comprehensive long-term care act to replace the hodgepodge of legislation that now governs various types of supportive housing. We also are calling for the implementation of high standards of care followed up with unannounced inspections to ensure that those standards are being met.

We also need to invest in hiring and training staff in these facilities. In our consultations with seniors across the province we heard about the hard work and dedication of the staff in supportive living facilities, but we also heard that they were overworked and that there simply weren't enough of them to ensure that residents were safe and comfortable. The NDP is calling for staffing standards that require a minimum of four hours per day per resident of nursing and personal attendant care as well as at least one registered nurse on duty 24 hours a day at every long-term care facility.

Mr. Speaker, these measures won't break the bank. They're reasonable. In fact, they are the least we can do for the people who spent their lives building this province.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 94 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that I presented Monday, March 20, 2006, and I can advise the House that all but one of the petitions comply with Standing Orders 85 to 89.

The committee has considered the remaining petition and recommends to the Assembly that Standing Order 89(1)(b) be waived for the petition for the Edmonton Community Foundation Amendment Act, 2006, subject to the petitioner completing the necessary advertising in accordance with the Standing Orders before the committee hears the petitioner.

Mr. Speaker, that is my report.

The Speaker: I'll call the question then. Would all hon. members in the Assembly supportive of the report please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. It's carried.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am submitting a petition on behalf of 106 concerned Albertans urging the government to, one, abandon its plans to implement the third-way reforms; two, defeat legislation allowing expansion of private, for-profit hospitals and permitting doctors to work in both public and private systems; three, oppose any action by this government to contravene the Canada Health Act; and four, vote against forcing Albertans to pay for private health insurance for services that should be covered under medicare.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here stating, "We, the undersigned residents . . . petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased." Fifty-one signatures.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have here a petition with 53 signatures from Calgarians on it, petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table a petition containing the names of 92 Albertans from the communities of Edmonton, Calgary, Leduc, and Sherwood Park urging the government not to proceed with their third-way health care reforms.

Thank you.

Bill 26

Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce and move first reading of Bill 26, the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act of 2006.

This bill will replace the Blood Samples Act of 2004 and offer protection to police officers, firefighters, paramedics, and good Samaritans who provide emergency assistance and have come into contact with a bodily substance of a source individual.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 26 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question from the hon. opposition leader in question period yesterday I will table five copies of the list of groups that I met with in Bonnyville and St. Paul on March 11, 2006, and would like to remind all hon. members that the list of stakeholder groups that I have met with is listed on our website, www.health.ab.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today. The first letter is from Don Veldhoen, and he is saying that the government has a widening credibility gap when it comes to health care.

The second is from two of my constituents, Merv and Jean Rogers, and they accuse the government of releasing a very vague health policy and not telling the truth about wait times in countries with parallel health systems.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four sets of tablings, all having to do with the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The participants, the signatories are Ron Barnhart, Kathy Barnhart, Darlene Senio, Dan Chalifoux, Dale Côté, Ann Boylan, Eugene Rienks, Donna Lynn Smith, Carol Carbol, Judith Axelson, L. Fjerwold, Don Massey, Barbara Massey, Gene Leblanc, Jean and R.K. Taylor, Glenda Roberts, Judy Wilson, John Tanasichuk, Karen Glauser, Agnes Fisher, Doug McEwen, and F.J. Fjerwold.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table six letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I am tabling today are from Kathy Briner, Marie MacDonald, Heather McEwen, Arnette Anderson, V.C. Pich, and Judi Cook.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table five letters and appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare from Pam Buckler, Phuong Chau, Tara Malo, Monica Jok Mach, and Julie Henkelman.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table four letters, the appropriate copies thereof, regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. These letters are from Natalia Petrossie, Tina Valjak, E. Heimannsberg, and S. Heimannsberg.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings, letters from constituents with appropriate copies, all expressing concern about the third way and the future of health care in Alberta. The first letter is from Brenda Knight and the second one is from Eileen Carpenter and the third is from Ken Baden.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the government's answer to my Motion for a Return 12 yesterday, I am pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a document entitled Ethical Guidelines for the Government Pension Fund – Global produced by the Finance department of the government of Norway. It's an ethical investment policy, which I believe the Alberta government sorely needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from an Edmonton-McClung constituent, Ms Marilyn Caskey, who strongly objects to further privatizing health care and allowing people to queue jump. She talks about how insurance companies try to make money for their shareholders and avoid covering services or paying claims. She also opposes allowing physicians to work in both public and private spheres, wants actual, serious consultation before anything is decided, and supports the idea of a leaders' debate on the future of health care. It's actually good reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It's my pleasure today to table the appropriate copies of a book titled 100 Years at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta: A Centennial Celebration, which was produced by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Bill 13 Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 13: Mr. Strang]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Question.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you participating in the debate on Bill 13?

Mr. Agnihotri: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Then I will recognize you.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 13, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006. The purpose of this bill is to delegate new responsibilities to the Real Estate Council of Alberta, which we call RECA, in an attempt to combat mortgage fraud in this province. The members of the Real Estate Council of Alberta will now act as a first line of defence against mortgage fraud in Alberta. If this bill passes, members will likely require some level of training to help them identify potential mortgage fraud and, more importantly, to respond effectively and safely when they identify potential mortgage fraud.

This is a good bill. I support this with some cautions, Mr. Speaker. Mortgage fraud was an issue that got significant media coverage in the past few months as cases became publicized in the newspapers. This is really a problem that does exist in Alberta, and this bill is a positive step in combatting mortgage fraud.

There are questions that need to be asked regarding this bill. Specifically, by delegating this new responsibility to the Real Estate Council of Alberta, there will be a need for training, potentially increased funding, et cetera. Because this bill is so brief, there is no elaboration as to how these issues may be dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, mortgage fraud is booming in Alberta. Mortgage fraud has emerged as a real issue here in this province. Let me mention a few of them, some very popular frauds, which are illegal.

First of all, it's the straw buyers. The straw buyer is a phony loan application. Some people get a mortgage from someone who is not a serious buyer, but they use their name. They use their phony names and get the mortgage in their name. Sometimes the person who is getting the mortgage doesn't even see the property. I mean, without seeing the property, buying is illegal, but this practice has been going on in Alberta for a long, long time. I am surprised that this government or RECA haven't taken any serious action against this fraud. But I'm happy that at least RECA is considering this as a fraud, which is a good step.

The second one I want to mention is flipping properties. Flipping a property is when you buy a property, assume somebody else's mortgage, and then, you know, when the market is good, you transfer, flip this property to somebody else. Some people think it's legal, but it's not legal. It's only in Alberta, I think, where we get this assumable mortgage. An assumable mortgage in other states is not acceptable. There was a rumour that Alberta, not the Alberta government but RECA, was considering stopping assuming mortgages. It's a big fraud.

I'll give you an example. Some people come from B.C. or Toronto or some other part of the world, and they come with $100,000. [interjections] Just a minute. Just a minute. With $100,000 they can buy 50 properties. Sometimes with a $1,000 down payment they buy a house, and after some time they flip the property when the market rate is high. Some people think it's legal, but it's not legal. It's a fraud, a big fraud, and especially when they give some money to a third party to get the mortgage. Suppose you are A and I buy a mortgage in your name, and you haven't even seen the property. This is a fraud. It's a good thing RECA is taking action on this one.

The third one, as I said, is the low down payment. Most of us have seen in the newspaper zero down payment or for a $1,000 down payment you buy a house, you buy a condominium, right? You know, there are lots of people who are first-time buyers, and they don't understand this legality. Sometimes the seller or the broker says: you move into the property, you live there for six months, and then we will transfer that mortgage into your name, and the title is still in somebody else's name.

I mean, it's sometimes a gang. They appraise the property, and sometimes the appraiser is involved. The bankers are involved. They get the mortgage. They buy lots of properties only when the time is bad. Before 1980, when the market was really low, millionaires came with a small amount of money, they bought 200 properties, and when the market went up, they made lots of money. Business is business, and if the business is legal, then it's okay. But I think RECA has known of this problem for a long, long time. I'm surprised they haven't stopped the assuming of somebody else's mortgage. They should have stopped assumable mortgages because they know that this thing was going on for a long, long time. I think it was two years ago that there was a rumour that they were stopping the assumption of mortgages, but it's still going on. Then they started taking action against the banks. Some bank officials were involved with some people who made frauds, with the big gangs. It was in the newspaper for a long, long time. So those are two or three types of popular frauds I have mentioned.

Some people buy property in bad shape. I'll give you an example. In the downtown area the structure of a building is rotten, totally gone, and they buy those properties, and somehow they get the inspection done. We don't have the mechanism or we don't have some sort of strict policies. I mean, how can they buy those properties where the structure is so poor? Then some innocent third person who doesn't even live in Alberta buys those properties. The people living here make money. They depend on that after buying these properties. The first-time buyers, the people who can't afford or don't have a big amount of money always, you know, buy those types of properties because they're always advertised: you will be better off buying this property than renting the property. Some people take the mortgage and rent the property first. Then they sell after six months when the property rate has gone up. This is also illegal, and it's a big fraud.

I mean, going through the data in this bill I found lots of things that are really good. I think RECA is taking the right step. The government of Alberta participated in a mortgage fraud prevention committee to encourage communication, develop best practices, and improve training for workers in the mortgage and real estate industries, which is good. What we need is to educate people, especially the first-time buyer who doesn't know how to buy property. Sometimes they think they'll just save some real estate commission, and they don't consult with an expert in the industry who has the experience. Those innocent people take a wrong step, and they repent afterwards.

Another thing I want to ask the proposer of this bill: in Alberta why don't both buyer and seller pay commission? I have seen some other countries where buyer and seller both pay the commission. In Alberta only the seller pays the commission. I don't understand. Both parties are involved. Why does only the seller pay the commission to the real estate person or any broker?

Another question I want to ask is about mortgage refinancing. In some cases some investors buy the properties and keep on refinancing the property again and again, and then they flip the properties and make lots of money. The whole gang, as I said before – surveyors, inspectors, and sometimes the builders – is involved in this. This is totally illegal, and it should also be considered.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Another thing. I lived in England for 14 years, and there were different laws than here. In England there was gazumping. Maybe this is something new for most of the people sitting here. Gazumping means that the seller can change their mind, even signing at the last moment. He should have the right to refuse to sell the property, but it's not happening in Alberta. Gazumping is like, I suppose, where you buy a property and you write in the contract that the possession date is in six months, and when the market is really hot sometimes, the seller loses a huge amount of money. As the buyer has some rights, sellers should have some rights. They should have the right to say no. I'm not saying once the agreement is made, but there should be two agreements: the initial agreement and the last agreement should be close to the closing time. It's not happening in Alberta. This is very important. I want to know why it's not happening in Alberta.

Another thing I want to mention is the builder. We have seen so much construction, especially in the urban areas, in new developments, and the builders are cutting corners. I'm surprised. I've been a real estate agent myself, and sometimes I'm surprised how they pass that cheap material. The people don't know, especially the first-time buyers. When they build a house, it goes through the departments, but finally at the time of the inspection they don't find those things which they see in the contract, and it's very difficult to fight against. I mean, some big builders always guarantee that it's under warranty for such and such years, but it's my personal experience that it's hard to fight against those big companies. We should have some strict laws against the builders.

Another thing I find is in the land titles, especially when the property is bought and sold by the government; I mean, the government of Alberta, the provincial level. It could be the federal level, or it could be civic government. If the property is bought and sold by the government, normally it should be highlighted. It should be highlighted, and it should be accessible to the people for transparency, what the government is doing. I mean, I've seen so many land titles. I've never seen property where the government was involved and it was not highlighted in the property archive report on the land title. In my eyes, this is not right, and the Minister of Justice should know. He should make a note. He's the expert in this field. I'm not. Please note this point: if we could do something to make it a little bit more strict on this one.

As I said before, this bill is a really, really good step in combating mortgage fraud in Alberta, and I'm happy to see that this government is taking this issue very seriously. As I said, I support this bill but with some precautions. I would however like to hear about the training and the other supports that the Real Estate Council of Alberta will be receiving for this added responsibility.

This is a good bill, and my only question is regarding the other recommendations that were made by the Advisory Committee on Mortgage Fraud. Is the government planning on following through on all of those recommendations or what I talked about? If we look into some questions I raised, you know, this bill will be even better. Other than that, I didn't see anything wrong with this bill. I will definitely listen to the other speakers if we have any, and then I will make up my mind whether I support this bill or not.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Based on my colleague's pretty much unreserved support of this bill, I stand in support of it as well. Under the title of mortgage fraud I would like to see somewhere within this bill some kind of requirement that when a person goes to sell their home, they are responsible for informing the buyer of the materials that were used in the construction of the home. I know that a major concern that cost a number of people in Calgary, Edgemont and some of the newer districts, was pine shakes, this fiasco where the government approved the shakes, and then later a number of companies went bankrupt, and the owners of these homes were stuck with a replacement bill of between $9,000 and $15,000, dependent upon the size of their roof. Sellers, as far as I'm concerned, should be required under law to indicate the types of materials and the faults that have been found with them, whether they're government-sponsored faults or not.

Another concern I have is when realtors are selling property and point to a vacant space and say: well, that's for the new school. Well, for the last number of years in Calgary 40 districts have been waiting for that new school to magically appear, and unfortunately that has not happened. I believe real estate agents need to provide a history and some kind of however accurate information that they can provide about where at least on the priority list for the government and for the school board that school might be. Otherwise, it's just an interesting space of land.

I think that something else that realtors and sellers should be required to do is inform people of potential land-use changes. Quite often somebody buys in a particular area with a so-called green space in the back, and it turns out later that that has now been rezoned for commercial. Instead of a park-like atmosphere, they're finding that they've got another strip mall or 7-Eleven popping up.

These are areas that I would like included. They border on fraud by not informing the purchaser of the problems associated with either the property itself or the changing designations or the sort of false proposition that a school will be coming sometime soon to a neighbourhood near you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 16 Peace Officer Act

[Adjourned debate March 7: Ms Blakeman]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in second reading debate of Bill 16, the Peace Officer Act, a bill that's the result of a consultation process, that I would congratulate the government for undertaking, a series of consultations with police, municipal officials, provincial officials, and special constables over an eight-month period. It's good to see that that consultation took place before this bill was crafted.

Having said that, though, it strikes me that this bill leaves out a great deal. Some it purposely leaves out because it intends to deal with those issues under regulations, and I have a problem with that, both philosophically and in terms of the details as well. Some it just seems to leave out because it didn't really consider those issues or the ramifications of some of the issues that this bill does seek to deal with.

In short, the bill seeks to bring all peace officers under one piece of legislation that will clarify their roles and responsibilities, increase accountability, and at least allegedly strengthen provincial standards for training, the use of force, and qualifications. There's no question that there is a place for peace officers, or special constables as they used to be known, to function as a level of law enforcement, but they should not function in the place of fully trained, fully accredited police officers. Mr. Speaker, I believe that that's what this bill seeks to do: to get some bargain-priced pseudo-cops into the system to do the work of police officers at a lower rate of pay, at a lower level of training. I think that the consequences of that will not be good.

You know, we're fortunate, Mr. Speaker. We do live in a very peaceful society. I know that sometimes it doesn't seem like that when we get up in the morning and turn on the radio or grab the morning paper and look at the headlines and some horrible, heinous crime has been committed here in Edmonton or in Calgary.

Dr. Morton: Listen to talk radio.

Mr. Taylor: Oh. And talk radio, of course. No question about it. It makes mountains out of molehills on a regular basis. That's pretty much the purpose for its existence.

There's a very good example. The hon. member mentioned talk radio. An hour of talk radio can in fact leave the listener with the distinct impression that this is a perilous, dangerous society in which we live. But it's not, really, not in Alberta. If you want a perilous, dangerous society, I mean, there are plenty of big cities in the United States that you can look at with crime rates hugely out of proportion to our own. We are fortunate to live, the media notwithstanding and the media's creations of impressions notwithstanding, in a safe and peaceable province. That will probably get us through most of the flaws and faults in this legislation most of the time, but most of the flaws most of the time is not good enough.

What we're suggesting that we should be doing with this legislation is put peace officers in the place of police officers doing specific tasks, specific duties that traditionally have been the responsibility in the province of a fully trained police officer for a very good reason; that is, the police officer is really the only person in our society who is appropriately trained to anticipate, judge, and react to the level of threat involved in that particular incident.

A very good example is the proposal to use peace officers in traffic stops. Traffic stops, as any police officer will tell you, can be – can be – one of the most dangerous aspects of policing. You never really know, when you pull over a motorist, what you're going to find when you walk up to the driver's side door of that car and ask for the licence and registration. You may have cause as the police officer or the peace officer to pull that car over. Maybe the driver was speeding. Maybe the driver was weaving, and you suspect that he's impaired. Maybe the driver has a burnt-out tail light, and you just want to advise him of that. There can be all kinds of things, but you don't actually know until you approach the driver and he rolls down the window of the car what exactly you're going to be facing.

In order to safely and successfully conduct a traffic stop, you need someone with a full range of abilities, including a knowledge of tactical communications, the ability to defuse a hostile situation through verbal techniques. It can be nothing other than an otherwise law-abiding citizen who's had a bad day and made an illegal left turn or ran a red light or did something that, yes, you know, is potentially dangerous but didn't cause any problem at the time. So the otherwise law-abiding citizen is going to the police officer: what are you picking on me for? Then the attitude starts. Well, the police officer has to be able to quickly and peacefully defuse the situation because situations like that, even with law-abiding citizens, can get out of hand pretty quickly. The officer needs knowledge of the legal aspects of moving violations, needs sound judgment, needs the judgment to responsibly deploy weapons if the situation escalates. In short, that officer needs one heck of a lot of training.

I don't see in this bill clear evidence that the training is going to be sufficient, and I think that's a real problem, Mr. Speaker. We don't know who is going to be responsible for the training. We don't know who these peace officers will be accountable to. We don't know whether it will be, as in the traditional case with special constables, the employers who have the authority to discipline or the police service that they'll be working with or on behalf of or in place of. Is it the municipality or jurisdiction that employs them? Will it be the Solicitor General through the director of law enforcement who is accountable? We need to know that before we can possibly vote in favour of this bill.

We need to know precisely what process will be involved in the hiring of police officers, especially – especially – if they're going to be hired as a level 1 APO, level 1 Alberta police officer, the top level of the four levels of authority to be adopted for peace officers: Alberta peace officers levels 1 and 2 and community peace officers levels 1 and 2. It's the level 1 APO who will have and be the highest level of authority that can be obtained for a peace officer. These are the peace officers who will receive the authority to enforce the provisions of provincial statutes and the Criminal Code that are specific to their mandate. This will probably mean enforcing traffic violations on Alberta's highways. This will probably mean providing prisoner transport and court security, protection services for high levels of government and other individuals as deemed necessary. It's expected as well that this level of peace officer will further complement the role of policing through the provision of specialized services. These officers will be trained in the use-of-force model, so they'll have the authority to carry some kind of weapon, whether it's a baton or pepper spray or, you know, a combination of these weapons or perhaps even a firearm.

3:30

Now, we're not breaking entirely new ground here, admittedly. We have special constables who have the authority to carry some limited, shall I say, low-grade – I don't know that that's the best phrase that I could use, but it's the one that comes most readily to mind – weapon as it is now, and they're functioning rather successfully at their job, although you do run into problems from time to time with special constables in the transit service, for instance, where they really do not have the force of police officers, the full impact and effect of police officers, nor should they for the level of training that they have right now. But by the same token, absent a full-fledged police officer, you have a dangerous situation that cannot be necessarily completely defused.

There is certainly a role for special constables. They're on our transit systems. They're on our college and university campuses. They're in our hospitals alongside doctors and nurses. They enforce city bylaws in municipalities. They work as conservation officers in our parks, also as fish and wildlife officers, and they do play a very significant law enforcement role in those aspects of our society.

Now we're talking about expanding this to place peace officers in the place of police officers doing such things as traffic stops. You know, I mentioned training before, and the problem with this new model, Mr. Speaker, is that we really have no idea what level of training these officers will receive and for how long. Nor do we know who will administer the training. Will it be police training section members? Will it be private security agencies? How long will the training go on? What's the content of the training? How much time will be spent on tactical communications? I've referred to that before. The Solicitor General thus far has not been able to tell us the details of any of this because the training models haven't been developed yet. Training models will be developed through regulations.

Well, I can't support that. I can't support this expanded role for peace officers in which they take the place of police without knowing absolutely that they have received the appropriate amount of training to ensure the public's safety and the safety of the officers themselves. I can't take a verbal assurance from government. You know: "Trust us. When have we ever let you down before?" A big old group hug isn't going to do it here.

These officers, some of them, will be carrying nine-millimetre handguns and shotguns, and, you know, we all absolutely need to know that they have the full training needed to be able to safely and responsibly deploy these weapons. As the Solicitor General himself would know, as at least one other member of the government benches opposite would know from their past lives as police officers, police officers have this training. We have in this province, in this country as a rule, with occasional exceptions, tremendous confidence in our police officers because we know that they have a long history and heritage of excellent training and excellent recruitment practices as well.

You know, police officers are subject to, depending upon the police service that's doing the hiring, polygraph examinations, psychological tests, very extensive background checks, references from other members of family, from friends, from neighbours, all kinds of people who've known this individual in the past. The police service wants to know when they recruit somebody to join their force that they're recruiting a very stable, level-headed individual who shares the values of his or her fellow officers, who's committed to serving and protecting the civilian population, who's committed to defusing difficult situations, not making them worse, committed to solving and investigating crimes and keeping our streets safe, as corny as that phrase might sound from time to time, and committed to right, not to might but right.

So we trust our police officers. We trust our police officers, Mr. Speaker, with our lives sometimes, and we have every good reason to do so based on the heritage of policing in this province and this country. We pay our police officers reasonably well. As we talked about in this House I think just last week, we don't have what in my opinion is sufficient funding to hire enough police officers for our biggest cities. We need more police. This seems to be a backdoor way to get more police resources, more people acting as police without actually really going to the trouble of hiring police, and I think they're going about it the wrong way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, respect the role of any officer attempting to carry out the mandate that they have been given, but I don't believe that Bill 16 offers sufficient clarification or support for the differentiated roles.

I have similar concerns with regard to training and education. A concern that I have is: are we trying to reduce policing to its lowest level and therefore pay someone a smaller salary to carry out that role? The medical equivalent would be a person who has received a limited amount of training, such as a licensed practical nurse, taking on duties of a registered nurse. They simply have not received the amount of training to make what in both cases can be a life-and-death decision. So I'm concerned about the training.

I'm also concerned about the various levels and the identifications and even the vocabulary that is connected. This new sort of Americanization of bringing the term "sheriff" into our Alberta context to me is a concern in itself. You know, do they have five-star badges? Are they wearing western paraphernalia as they go out in their cruisers? Are we having sort of a Dukes of Hazzard kind of mentality?

I'm concerned that we're potentially setting up special constables in various levels for failure because we're sending them out not sort of in a ride-along circumstance where you've got either a city police member in the same vehicle or you've got an RCMP member in the same vehicle. Quite often we'll be sending these people out to a large degree on their own with limited backup. Yes, they'll have a radio, which depending on where they are may or may not transmit. I've experienced this first-hand myself when working in the parks in the mountains in the southeast part of the Kananaskis. The RCMP have the advantage of the satellite phones and special communications. I'm not sure that with the average car radio or cellular technology, given some of the effects of the Canadian Shield and the distance between towers – these people may find themselves in circumstances where backup that they require is not readily available. Putting people out on the roads or into the streets without sufficient authority and support concerns me. It also concerns me about the number of different uniforms, the number of different insignias, the different car markings.

Albertans will, I would like to believe, respect the role that each officer is trying to carry out, but I'm afraid that they may not get any more respect than some bouncers, who have been badly wounded in bar fights and so on. I'm hoping that every constable, special or otherwise, every law enforcement individual will be equipped with a vest. That, to me, would be a minimum expectation. I do praise this government because my understanding is that these vests are going to be available for people working in the penitentiary and jail systems provincially much sooner than they'll be available federally, so I salute members of this government for seeing this through. I'm hoping that these individuals will receive that as minimal equipment. Another piece of what I would consider to be minimal equipment is the gloves that are basically knife and razor blade and sort of puncture proof so that they have an opportunity to defend themselves.

I have difficulty, again, with the level of training. It seems to me almost contradictory when a special constable, basically a civilian volunteer who has been put through a limited amount of training, is not allowed a side arm but has the much more dangerous equipment of a shotgun. This may not be the regular circumstance, but quite often these special constables are sent alone in a fully marked RCMP vehicle to do routine tasks, possibly issue a summons or patrol the local park.

From a friend who had experience doing this, the number of times when surprises occurred – I suppose it shouldn't come as much of a surprise on a long weekend that people are going to consume more alcohol than they might normally do. This individual was surrounded and put in a position of risk. Whether or not there had been another fully trained RCMP individual with him at that time, the result was that they would both have been outnumbered. I have concern about: how do you take on this kind of role when you find yourself in an emergent circumstance when you haven't had the variety of experience that a fully trained either city police or RCMP individual will have had?

To me, regardless of what level of policing you're doing, the most important aspect is strength of character. Strength of character, being able to be calm in a situation which is extremely frightening and being able to talk calmly and encourage an individual not to take the particular action that they're about to take, is to me tantamount. Strength of character can't be taught. It's something that you possess.

In my experience in the parks and protected areas and the wilderness area, I was responsible along with my wife for 101 campsites. I personally dreaded long weekends because I knew that the closest RCMP detachment was over 70 kilometres away in High River and that if I ran into any trouble, the conservation officers were usually very involved closer to the city, in campgrounds like Bluerock, which because of their close proximity people got to faster, started drinking sooner, and the difficulties arose. I was very grateful for the supporting role of the conservation officers because, basically, all that stood between me and some difficulty was the golf pencil with which I used to register campers. Quite often those campers, after they've had a number of beers, were less than supportive when I asked why they hadn't registered.

Fortunately, my background in teaching and negotiating served me well, but I didn't have a shotgun, I didn't have a pistol, nor was I trained in the use of those particular weapons. If you take a person, especially a young person who has had very limited training, and you put them out into a dangerous circumstance like a highway 63 or a remote campground and you just say to do your best and there isn't backup support, then I have great concerns about that.

Bill 16 appears to water down law enforcement as opposed to clearly defining what can be and can't be done. I don't want anyone in a position of risk. I don't want there to be risk to the general public. I don't want there to be risk to any officers attempting to do their best, to carry out their mandate in good faith. I am hoping that with these special constables there will be a lengthy period of ride-alongs with more experienced individuals, that they will not be sent out by themselves to either endanger their lives or those of the people they serve.

Bill 16 is basically an appetite whetter. If the fine details are going to be put through legislation that doesn't go through this House for debate, then Bill 16 just does not provide the sense of organization, the sense of planning, the sense of peace of mind that a peace officer act should contain.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The use of peace officers in law enforcement is not a new concept. The act that we're bringing forward in Bill 16 is new. The actions of the officers that we're talking about in this new legislation really come from a number of different acts. They come from the Police Act, and they come from various acts throughout our provincial government's legislation. So they come from a number of different pieces of legislation. We want to take from a number of different areas, put it into one act for them, a peace officer act, removing the term "constable" or "special constable" just to infer that they are not police officers, that they are peace officers.

As I mentioned, the use of peace officers in law enforcement is not a new concept. In fact, peace officers have had a presence in Alberta since 1953. Their role has evolved over time to meet the changing needs of the communities that they work in and the organizations that they work for. Bill 16 is designed to further clarify the roles and responsibilities for these peace officers, but we also want to clearly distinguish one level of peace officer, that authority, from another. There is a need to develop specific levels of authority that properly reflect the variety of duties peace officers have acquired over the years.

It's our goal with Bill 16 to enhance and complement police services. This is not about replacing police officers. This government has shown a strong commitment to policing in this province. Budget 2005 was the largest single increase of police officers in 20 years in Alberta. We announced $23 million in new funding to increase provincial policing programs and expand courtroom security and prisoner transfer programs. That enabled us, Mr. Speaker, to add nearly 200 police officers to Alberta communities; 100 of these new positions went to rural communities. An additional $3 million was allocated to hire sheriffs to handle courtroom security and prisoner transport in smaller centres. This allowed the redeployment of 30 RCMP officers from those various duties in courtrooms and court security, which they didn't want to be in, to be able to manage and be back on front-line duties responding to the calls required from the community, investigating criminal activity, and responding to emergencies.

There's an urgent need to develop new ways to deal with the shortage of police officers not just in Alberta but throughout Canada. Looking at new models of service delivery, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what we're doing, and we're taking a lead in Canada regarding that. Peace officers who have the authority to perform specific enforcement duties can help reduce the pressure on police while delivering high-quality service to the public. Police officers can then focus their attention on the more serious crimes in our communities. Achieving this will help keep the citizens of this great province safe and secure for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just respond to some of the questions that the hon. members across the way raised regarding some of the issues that they have or some of the concerns that they have. When we talk about the various levels, the four levels that are in Bill 16 refer to two levels for a community peace officer and two levels for our government peace officers. It really clarifies who is at what level and which government they work for, the provincial government or a municipal government. So that is really an explanation to ensure that there is stand-alone legislation to ensure that that's fully explained.

When we talk about training and the question regarding training, in the Police Act or, I believe, in any other act the training requirements aren't in an act per se. They may be in the regulations, but they're normally in policy. For example, for policing the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police meets regularly. They have a not-for-profit organization, obviously, that is there to ensure that they have great communication amongst all police services in Alberta. They are the ones that determine the training of their policing services throughout Alberta. The RCMP, on the other hand, have a national picture, a national scope of what type of training they provide, but they do all fall in line.

For the training standards that we have in place for the special constable program, we train the officers that come from Calgary, Edmonton, Rocky Mountain House, Grande Prairie and are going to continue to train them. The municipalities have been advised that that level of training is going to be increased. There will be higher standards for them to ensure that the program that we want to provide in the community is really needed in the community as well as the designation provided to them. They have had the training to meet that designation. So training standards are going to be increased. They have been increased, in fact, in this past year.

The legislation in Bill 16 doesn't have the hiring process. It doesn't talk about the training because that's going to be done, some of that, either in regulations or in the policy that we have, but I do want to advise the members that these officers have been out there and have been enforcing traffic for years and years and years. This isn't something that happened two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker. They've even had the authority to write traffic summonses throughout Alberta for I'm sure at least the last 20 years, if not longer. So these officers have been out there. They have been trained. They have been trained by our department, who utilizes the RCMP. We utilize RCMP officers, Edmonton police officers, and Calgary police officers regarding the training and where we're moving in the future.

The training that took place for the sheriffs that were mentioned was an additional six weeks of training, which totalled 12 weeks. Again, these officers are trained. The main function, the main role of the sheriffs is that of prisoner transport, prisoner security, courtroom security, and judicial security. That included, as of January 6 of this year, doing interprovincial transport of prisoners throughout Canada. So the 350 officers that we have in our ministry are doing that now. They have the training for that now. We're adding an additional number of weeks of training for them to be taught how to investigate traffic collisions as well as the ability to write summonses and/or enforce highway traffic act legislation. But they also have the ability to arrest on warrants, Canada-wide warrants or criminal warrants or provincial legislative warrants. They have the ability to do that now, as do special constables; for example, from Rocky Mountain House. They have the authority to do that now as well.

This act shouldn't be new to the members from the opposition, but in fact they should be looking at it saying, "Wow, this makes sense" in the fact that we're pulling all the pieces together and bringing one act forward.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just mention as well that they talked about the peace officers that carry side arms. Again, the officers that we have have been carrying side arms for 20 years. They've been trained in it. They've been carrying side arms for 20 years in their role as sheriffs for court security and prisoner transport. So they have the training, and they'll continue to have that training as we move forward with looking at other opportunities for them in the future.

We have confidence in our police, and we'll continue to as they are our emergency responders and our criminal investigators. The special constable program or the Peace Officer Act don't say anything about these officers investigating criminal activity or having authority under the Criminal Code to investigate a homicide or a sexual assault. That's not their role. That's not what they're trained for. It's job specific, and it will be job specific in the future.

So peace officers have and will continue to supplement and complement the police through training to respond to non-urgent services like traffic enforcement, traffic investigation. As I mentioned earlier, the RCMP used to provide transport of prisoners. They used to provide courtroom security, judicial security in this province. They were the ones as well that did not want to provide that function any longer because they felt that there was a better need for front-line police officers to be out on the front line and not sitting in a courtroom. I agreed with them, Mr. Speaker, and we developed this plan over the last year.

I want to just bring to light that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity said that these are Dukes of Hazzard-type officers. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora mentioned that they were dumbed-down policing. I take great offence with both of those comments, Mr. Speaker. These are young – well, some of them are older. They're educated. They're young, professional men and women who have chosen a career with the province of Alberta. They've chosen a career with the Solicitor General and Ministry of Public Security to take on those roles of court security and prisoner transport. They've taken on that role. They want to look at new opportunities to provide out in the community, to serve their community in a law enforcement capacity as a peace officer, not a police officer. So I take great offence to the hon. members from the Liberals making statements such as those, which are degrading, which are improper.

I want to just finally mention, Mr. Speaker, a few other things regarding the sheriffs. As I mentioned – and I won't belabour the point – they have additional training that's provided above and beyond what was provided in the past. The investigative training that they have is second to none. It's with the RCMP and the Edmonton Police Service. The pilot project that we have is going very well. From the information I received today at lunchtime, it's going very well. The partnership between the sheriffs and the RCMP is tremendous. They are having a marked effect on highway 21, and they're seeing a decline in speeders on highway 63. In the two months that they've been there, they've seen a decline in speeding from the fact that obviously the media and, as well, ourselves are getting the message out to communities and to drivers that they are going to be monitored in their driving habits on those two highways. So that's good news.

We're going to deliver more good news at budget tomorrow afternoon. I'm looking forward to tomorrow afternoon's budget, as I believe all members in this Assembly are. We're here representing 3.2 million Albertans in a number of various different ministries, Mr. Speaker, and I'm honoured and proud to be the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

As well, I'm honoured and proud to bring forward Bill 16, which is really going to provide the legislative backbone for peace officers in Alberta, for peace officers that want to share in a law enforcement career, that want to work and provide Albertans with a safer and a more secure community, ensuring that, yes, there are programs and, yes, there are functions that they can handle that police officers don't need to handle, that will allow and free up the time of police officers to respond to those emergency calls and respond to the needs of the community, whether it's the investigation of a theft or the investigation of a fraud at a business. So it allows them the opportunity to concentrate on criminal investigation, and it provides an opportunity for peace officers, who are focused and skilled and trained in these areas, to provide that service to Albertans.

As you look through the act, Mr. Speaker, really we have six parts, which fully explain the employers' authorizations and the peace officers' appointments. It talks about the complaints and discipline procedure, inspections, offences and penalties, regulations, and transitional provisions, which I mentioned earlier.

Again, I want to thank the members opposite for the debate on this bill. As well, I thank the MLA for Calgary-Hays for the tremendous amount of work he's done in the last 10 or 11 months on this act as well as staff from our ministry. I see that Sandra Klashinsky, who has played a tremendous role as well, is here from our ministry.

Mr. Speaker, I'll leave as my parting comments that this act has been a long time coming in the fact that this provides, as I mentioned, a backbone for peace officers in this province, whether they are government employees, whether they are corrections officers, some of the 1,100 corrections officers and 400 probation officers and caseworkers that we have, whether it's the 350 provincial sheriffs that we have, the 180 officers that work in SRD, the I believe over a hundred that work in Community Development, the 180 or so that work in the ministry of transportation for inspection services, and as well the 150 or 160 officers that are in uniform working for various municipalities throughout Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if it's appropriate to ask a few questions of the hon. minister, but anyway I'll try.

Is it just opening the door for other professions? Like, now we are talking about these special constables with some training. How about in the future if the health minister starts saying that they need some health professionals? They can get some special training, and they can work in place of doctors or some other professionals in the medical profession. The next time it could be the Minister of Education saying that they can give a little bit of training to teachers for special purposes. Is that what this government is planning to do in the future?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister and Solicitor General.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This legislation provides, again, for the opportunity for special constables to move forward under the new act, and once proclaimed, of course, they'll be peace officers, not special constables. Again, we want to ensure that the public isn't confused with the terms "constable" or "special constable." They are not police officers. We want to ensure that the public is well aware that they are not police officers. They can be attached to an enforcement unit, but they are peace officers. They have authority as peace officers in the province of Alberta. Dependent on the training and dependent on the municipality, on what the municipality's request may be regarding enforcement in their own community, that's the designation that will be provided to them by the director of law enforcement.

Again to the hon. member, training has been an issue in the past. When we talk about the use of force and we talk about standards, the Auditor General is very clear in ensuring that we have audited standards throughout Alberta regarding policing, and obviously we're going to ensure that we have those standards in the peace officer program that we're going to have throughout this province. This is a complementary or a supplementary level of service to the community. It is a law enforcement occupation. It is in the field of law enforcement, but there are a number of fields of law enforcement, not just policing.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. First, does the minister have a long-term plan on how many more of these specially trained officers we're going to have, and is this possibly a first level of training so that in the future we can have an Alberta police force and have people that are partially trained to move up and expand on that?

Mr. Cenaiko: Well, absolutely not, to the latter remark regarding an Alberta police service. No, absolutely not. The RCMP are our provincially contracted police service for Alberta. We are entering into negotiations with Canada regarding their contract, which is due in 2012. We have a tremendous working relationship with the RCMP, a tremendous amount of history regarding the RCMP in our province. I think that if we were going to look at a provincial police service, we wouldn't have added 200 officers last year, and as well we wouldn't add the number of officers to the RCMP that we're going to announce tomorrow. Obviously, they are the police service of choice for us in Alberta for our provincial police service. Therefore, no.

On the number of officers that we're going to be looking at for sheriffs in the future, obviously our program is expanding because the services have expanded into rural areas to look after the courts. There are 70 courthouses in the province of Alberta. That means that we have to provide court security, judicial security in some cases, as well as prisoner transport back and forth from those courts to the various holding facilities. Are we going to be looking at additional officers? You'll have to wait for tomorrow's budget.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: A couple of questions. Are the peace officer positions ranked in order of authority? Will Bill 16 clarify the various levels of authority? The second question is: what opportunity is there for moving up or across the existing ranks? For example, if you're a security officer or a prison guard, does that put you three steps up from, say, a court security person? Will there be opportunities within the existing ranks, sort of levels of training where you could potentially move within the forces themselves with a little extra education to receive that upgrading in your position?

The Deputy Speaker: The time has elapsed for Standing Order 29(2)(a).

The next member to be recognized is the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had actually risen at the same time as the Solicitor General. I had meant to rise under 29(2)(a). There was a comment that the Member for Calgary-Varsity made which to me is a very important concept and which an awful lot of people don't understand. A lot of people have misconceptions about strength of character. He said that you're born with strength of character. You're not born with strength of character. Strength of character is something that one learns by doing difficult things.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we're not under Standing Order 29(2)(a), where you can question the previous speaker. We're speaking on the bill in second reading of the bill. If you wish to keep your comments on the bill, please proceed.

Ms DeLong: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Police officers not only have strength of character, but they also learn strength of character by doing difficult things, when it's a difficult personal thing for them. And yes, strength of character is something that is learned.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? Hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, are you rising under Standing Order 29(2)(a), or are you rising to speak on the bill?

Ms Pastoor: To speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to make a few comments. Many that I would have wished to make have already been made, so I will certainly save the time. There are a number of things that give me pause for concern with this. I guess that I'm coming with an overlay from my experience in long-term care and, of course, the bill that I have on the floor at the moment.

One of my concerns – and perhaps the minister could address these later – is that I see what the qualification standards are. One of them is grade 12 or the equivalent. Then further down it says that stronger qualifications would be for a more stringent – if I was a kid getting out of grade 12 and my dream from early childhood was to be a police officer, I would think that that would be enough because that's what it says, and I'm going to be really disappointed when I find out that that's not enough. I'm not sure that that's not sending the wrong message. I think we need highly qualified people.

Also, somebody out of grade 12 will not have taken the psychology courses that deal with human behaviour, certainly with deviant human behaviour. I'm assuming that when these people are hired and trained, they may well end up going through your police academy – that may well end up in southern Alberta, Lethbridge in particular. But I would assume that they are going to go at that level of training because these are young people.

Yes, I agree with the hon. member across the way who said that character can be learned. But young 18-, 19-, and 20-year-olds, when they consistently have people in their face – really, it takes more than two or three years to learn the skill of disassociation, where you can actually learn to deal with that and disassociate yourself from the situation and become professional. It takes many, many years of training for that, and I'm just not sure that young people out of grade 12 would have that.

One of the other things is – and I'm going to perhaps use a personal example. Trying not to be totally disrespectful, but I have gone through customs, and I'm hoping that these young people that are trained in Alberta are going to be trained to perhaps treat people with respect. I've really had some very unpleasant situations that appeared sometimes to just be, "Because I've got the uniform and you don't," a very bad attitude when you're alone on a highway trying to stop someone for a speeding ticket.

One of my other concerns is that once we have these people trained, I'm not sure what their pay scale will be, but I'm hoping that they would not be allowed to moonlight and perhaps end up being rent-a-cops. The reason I'm saying that is because I'm used to, as I'm sure the other police officer is – and I'm really not sure who it is. We've all done nights, and we know what it is to work shift work. You come off those, and you're bagged. You're really, really tired. But if your pay scale is such that you have to work two jobs, I don't want that person trying to stop me for a speeding ticket or anything else when they're so spun out from having to work two jobs because the pay scale isn't going to be high enough. It could well happen. I look at it in terms of LPNs. I look at it in the downgrading of the professional staff. Yes, there are people, certainly, within the health industry that work two jobs and do shift work. It's exhausting.

The other question that I might have is: would there ever be the possibility that a particular contract would go to a private firm that now can supply trained officers? I'm thinking of, perhaps, well, bars would be good, but security on different pieces of property particularly at night.

The other questions that I had were about the curriculum. Would it be a provincially applied curriculum? Would they all learn the same thing so that no matter where they go in the province, their behaviour has an expectation and their training has an expectation? Is there any possibility that at any time this curriculum or education would be delivered by a private contractor?

Another concern that I had was something that comes out of my experience of wanting legislated responsibility. I see that on page 17 the accountability is going to be between the Auditor General, the Solicitor General, and Minister of Public Security. In my mind, that's far too many people. The complaints can go round and around and around in a circle, not unlike what they do in continuing care. There is never one person that can take the responsibility of saying yes or no. It just goes around in circles, and it never ends.

I can see that there will be some complaints. I don't think that people are perfect, and there will be complaints. There will be young people that will overstep their boundaries. I can also see that this could well end up in frustrations, and if the complaints go around in circles and are not handled, I can see lawsuits coming.

The other thing on the monitoring of conduct is: would there be drug testing and would it be random?

I think those were some of my concerns that other people, perhaps, have not addressed.

At this point, I would like to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not prolong this very long. I've listened to the debate and the minister's answers earlier on, and I appreciate what he's saying. There have been peace officers involved in Alberta for many, many years. I think these questions are more in terms of when it comes to Committee of the Whole, in case we're not here. I'd be interested to know, though, if there is a different direction, not clarifying what's in the bill. The minister has indicated that that's what they're trying to do, clarify the role and actually to codify what's already happening, as I understood what the minister was saying.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think what we're somewhat concerned about is: are we going in a direction where there's going to be a significant number more peace officers? I think therein lies the worry to some degree, that we may be attempting to do policing on the cheap. Now, I don't think that necessarily flows from the bill, but I guess that what I'm trying to do is figure out the numbers that we have now. Are we looking at significant new numbers in terms of peace officers? What is the direction that we are going?

I know that the minister has already spoken. I'm more interested in seeing what he says in Committee of the Whole. I'm not particularly worried about the bill as such. I think that to codify what these people do – and this minister is correct: we've had peace officers for many years. To repeat, I guess the concern is: are we changing the direction to where we're going to have more of these people? Is that the goal of the government? If that's the case, then I think we should have a serious look at our policing because, as some other members alluded to on the opposition side, some routine things can become not routine very quickly when people are dealing with it.

So I'm not sure. The bill is not necessarily what worries me because I think the minister is right that it makes some sense to codify, as I call it. But I guess what I'm trying to find out is the direction that we're going in the long run. What are the numbers of peace officers that we have now in Alberta? Is there some estimate about how many more we might want and what their role may be? As I said, I would hope that the minister could come back in Committee of the Whole and give us some idea of the government's direction in this whole matter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Others?
Ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays wish to close?

Mr. Johnston: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was prepared to answer questions from the members opposite, but I felt that that has been done very eloquently by our Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. I would therefore like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Libraries Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again to speak in support of Bill 17.

The Chair: Hon. member, I should have recognized the hon. minister first to have introductory comments.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make a few comments on behalf of the Minister of Community Development just to cover off some of the points that were raised during second reading. One member inquired about the municipalities' usage of the public library rate. At the moment only two municipalities that we know of have a public library rate. Municipalities continue to have the power to establish a public library rate; however, it comes from the Municipal Government Act, not from the Libraries Act.

Another issue raised during second reading was about the municipalities' ability to collect funds for libraries and service delivery. Bill 17 has no impact on a municipality's ability to collect money for libraries and to deliver services. Municipalities now provide funding for library service from the general tax base if they do not have a public library rate. In fact, in most cases the public library funding is minimal, so they do not even think it's worthwhile identifying as a separate rate.

Another member commented that the bill may provide a mechanism to allow municipalities to dissolve and leave the library behind. In fact, at the moment there is no process, and there have been libraries left behind when the municipality dissolved. In those cases, there was no legal board and no one responsible for paying salaries, for paying bills, or for providing service. Bill 17 provides a process to dissolve a library when the municipality dissolves. Bill 17 can allow the work of the board to wind down in an orderly manner when the municipality has dissolved, so that the service can be either transferred to a new municipality or be terminated if that council will not provide the service.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that Bill 17 be moved through Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again to speak to Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, 2006. I know that this bill makes four very important changes in the library administration. I want to discuss that very briefly.

The first one is the creation of intermunicipal library boards. This is an updating of the Libraries Act to incorporate current practice. It allows up to three municipalities or municipal districts to join together to form a board to go on the local library. There are currently at least two examples of this in this province. For example, the towns of Black Diamond and Turner Valley have one library. The towns are proximate to each other, and sharing the cost allows the communities to provide a higher level of service.

The next one is financial supporting. The act adds intermunicipal library boards to the act and states that the intermunicipal board shall prepare an annual budget and submit it to the municipalities. The act also requires intermunicipal boards to keep financial records, audit these records, prepare a financial report, and submit it to each municipal council.

The third one is dissolution or amalgamation. This is a new section that allows for the dissolution or amalgamation of the library board in the event of municipal dissolution or amalgamation or annexation. There is currently no process to transfer public library services if a municipality is dissolved, amalgamated, or annexed. This amendment allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to dissolve board services, assets, and liabilities or terminate services if public library service is not provided by the new municipality.

The fourth one is the special public library rate. The ability for municipalities to levy a special public library rate is being repealed by this act. This change was not included in the government press release. I want to know why this change to the act was not included in the press release. Did they complete a comprehensive survey of all the municipalities to see if any were using the public library rate? What consultation was done with the municipalities? This omission is cause for concern. The municipalities I contacted don't use it, but one of the 300 municipalities with libraries could. So we should be concerned that this may impact the municipalities' ability to collect money for libraries and, therefore, to deliver services.

Our position will depend on the answers to questions in this area. If no one is using the public library and if no one is using the public library rate, then you could make the argument to remove it for housekeeping sake.

The next one, section 11:

- (1) A council may, in addition to all other rates and assessments levied and assessed for municipal purposes, levy and assess from year to year a special annual rate on the assessed value of all property liable to taxation for municipal purposes, which rate is to be called the "Public Library Rate".
- (2) The money collected under the Public Library Rate must be used by the municipality
 - (a) to provide the municipal board with money with respect to the amount approved under section 8(3),
 - (b) if it is a party to an agreement described in section 13, to provide an annual grant to the library system board with respect to its budget under section 18, or
 - (c) to provide money to both the municipal board and the library system board with respect to budgets under sections 8 and 18.

4:30

This Bill 17 I think definitely would improve library services by making it easier for municipalities to co-operatively provide library services. There is a risk that more municipalities will choose to provide one large intermunicipal library rather than smaller libraries in each community if the stakeholders in the affected regions feel that the option is an intermunicipal library or no library at all. The bill will not help the significant problem with the libraries in Alberta, underfunding. Libraries have been funded at the same per capita rate funding for the last 14 years. I got the answer from the hon. member.

The next one is that Alberta's libraries will continue to have one or two jurisdictions that charge fees to access library resources. Why won't the government take action in any of these areas?

Mr. Chairman, the groups I consulted all are in favour of the changes. I believe that these improvements are long awaited. We always support local democracy – that is, local library boards – and support literacy. Learning begins with reading. Therefore, we encourage the library system to improve their services and make more books available. We believe in access to libraries in rural areas, and these changes definitely will make that easier. We would like to see greater funding for the libraries and the removal of library user fees.

Mr. Chairman, libraries are very essential, basic services for every citizen in this province. Alberta's first public libraries act – I'm not sure, but I read it on the Internet – stated very clearly that the libraries should be free to the public. Even the website from Community Development says very clearly that the libraries should be accessible, accountable, with quality service and the proper funding. They're talking about the proper funding. The stakeholders that I've talked to so far in the library field are complaining that the funding is not properly given to them. Recently the $20 million, whatever, lump-sum amount that the government announced – I don't have the full details of how they are going to utilize that money.

My point is that this act which I'm talking about, the first libraries act, which was made in 1907, did not say anything like that, that money should be taken from the people as user fees, so we should respect the first libraries act, and we should not charge user fees. According to the Community Development website, I found this very clearly saying that in Alberta public libraries may charge for the following. Please allow me to read five words. Number one is a penalty for overdue materials. I agree. If somebody is late in returning the books, definitely we should charge, but there should be some flexibility. If the weather is bad or somebody is ill, at least they should be allowed to extend the date through the telephone or through e-mail or something, which is not happening. It used to be like this in the '80s. If somebody is really not returning those books for a long, long time and not replying to their letter or something, yes, we can ask them to pay the penalty.

The next user fee at this moment is the library cards. I know that I introduced the motion urging the government to remove that fee. Some libraries charge $12, some even $30, and some people cannot afford that. Some people, yes, definitely can afford it. My point is that we all pay the tax, and once we pay the tax – this is a basic necessity. We should not charge money, especially the user fee, whether it's in the library or in the hospital or in the schools. Necessities are necessities, especially if we still charge for the library card. I know where the government is spending money in other departments. Why do they not spend wisely on literacy so that we can make the base of our children? This is very important, and the government should consider it very seriously. I know my motion was shot down; I think it was last year sometime.

Another user fee at this moment: we are charging for meeting rooms. I mean, some libraries may have meeting rooms. If a community or some students want to discuss something inside the library, I don't think anything is wrong. I mean, we should encourage them to sit and discuss the future. If they are planning, certainly, about something educational, we should encourage them to sit there, but we should not charge them money. If a group of businesspeople want to have the room, definitely we can charge money for that meeting room inside the library. If we charge money for the meeting rooms to some individuals who want to talk about something beneficial to the schools and colleges, definitely we should not charge for that.

The photocopying and other user fees that we are charging. Suppose I go to the library and see some things, very special material. I can't borrow that book, and I need to just photocopy one copy or two copies, so there should be some flexibility. The libraries should not charge to make two or three photocopies. To me, it's a library, and it's very important. If somebody makes some photocopies, why do we pay 20 cents or 25 cents per copy? Sometimes you don't have the change. There should be flexibility, and I think they should be allowed to make a few copies. If a group of people are making tons of photocopies, 100 or 200, from the library, then, yes, we can ask them to pay some money.

Another user fee we are still charging is for downloading onto disk or paper in the library. This is ridiculous. I mean, kids normally use this. They don't always load onto disk. I don't know how much it will cost the library. We are the richest province and should encourage our children to learn more and more things.

The last user fee mentioned on this Community Development website is contracted services. If a group of people belongs to a private business and they want to research certain things, well, they can charge them money, but if a group of people like a community group wants to do some research on certain topics, sometimes it takes more time, and I don't think it's reasonable to charge them money. The library is there to help people, to encourage them to find out some more. I notice, you know, that sometimes the scholars, the very learned people, go to the library, and after reading good books, they enlighten some other people.

I'm trying to say that user fees – it's not according to the act, the first act I mentioned. It should be free, but if it's necessary, we should be flexible, especially for the six things I mentioned. I want the minister to make a note because the government has already spent too much money. If they can spend $45 million on horse racing, why not spend money on the libraries, which are essential, basic necessities? The government is ignoring that.

Once again, I'm not against this bill. This bill makes really good changes, but if they consider those user fees, then it would make it even better. Thank you very much once again.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to briefly speak on this bill, Bill 17, Libraries Amendment Act, 2006. In the constituency of St. Albert and the city of St. Albert libraries are very, very important. I'm very pleased with this bill because I think it supports libraries.

Certainly, there are some suggestions I'd like to make. Maybe you could look at these things; the government could look at some changes. I think Lois Hole said it very well when she said: "A world without libraries is a world without education . . . without progress, without justice. Without libraries we can neither explore and learn from our past, nor build a better future." Our Rotary associations in northwest Alberta have taken a major stand on literacy, and in fact there was a national conference on the importance of literacy and libraries to help us alleviate this problem internationally, across the world.

I am very much in support of this amendment, and the only thing I would suggest is the question of regular grants. It would be important, I think, in the city of St. Albert if we could receive money, dollars, on an annual basis, every fiscal year, because it would help us with the operation of our library in St. Albert.

I'm in support of the amendments, and I look forward to supporting this.

Thank you very much.

[Mr. Danyluk in the chair]

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This particular bill is straightforward, and certainly on this end we're not going to have any problem supporting it. You like that, right?

I do want to draw some cautions, though, on this. As I said, the bill is straightforward. The municipalities are themselves responsible for voting on amalgamating boards. Of course, they have to get the minister's approval. I would hope – and I don't think this is the intent of the bill – that it's not a choice way to cut funding to smaller municipalities with smaller libraries, because I see that as a problem.

I just want to allude to what I'm talking about, Mr. Chairman. Back in the early '80s, when I was in this Legislature, in my riding in the inner city there was a library that had the possibility of being shut down. Of course, we got involved in it in the community. This was in the inner city. The argument was that there wasn't enough usage in that particular library. There in the inner city – it was in Norwood – is precisely where they need libraries because the inner city often is where some of the higher illiteracy rates are. We fought hard to keep that particular library. It went through a possible chopping block just a while ago again, when I was a public trustee. What we found in that particular library, if I can use it as an example, is that now it's overfilled. It's busy all the time because they went out and marketed it and encouraged the community to become involved in it. It became friendly for the users. The computers are there, the books, the rest of it.

The point I make, drawing it to this bill, Mr. Chairman, is that whether it's in the rural areas or the inner cities, in some cases a small library in a small town or a small village, just like a school, might be very important to that village, and maybe there is a need for there to be a small board there. I don't think that's the intent of the bill, Mr. Chairman, but I do believe that that could possibly move in that direction.

I would remind people that we have some work to do. We do need more libraries not less libraries in light of the fact that 30 per cent of Albertan adults aged 60 and older do not have the literacy skills required to properly read the back of a bottle of Tylenol. Given that only 69 per cent of our teens are graduating high school on schedule, we need to seriously reinvest in literacy and education.

Now, I won't go on long about this, Mr. Chairman. The $20 million is gratefully accepted that was announced March 2, to tie in with this particular bill, but what we need to do is look at more sustained funding because we have some serious literacy problems in this area.

I know it's not part of this bill, but another shame is what's been happening in our schools. If the school libraries are going down, usually that has an impact in terms of our other libraries. I noticed in Edmonton – and I'm sure it's pretty well true throughout the province – that the number of librarians has dropped dramatically. In Edmonton in the schools – in the Edmonton public, I'm talking about – the number of learning resource people, mainly librarians, dropped from 81.7 FTE to 12.1. Now, that's a pretty serious matter. We have to deal with literacy. We wonder about the high school dropout rates. I think that may be one of the reasons. We can talk about school counsellors too.

The bill makes sense. The $20 million that was announced makes sense, but I would hope that we'd do it in a more sustained way. Again, Mr. Chairman, just a caution. It's true in the rural areas too, that where they need the libraries may be the first place that they are cut away under this amalgamation. I know that's not the purpose, but that's what can happen. That may be precisely, as it was in my case in the inner city, where they need the libraries the most. So that's a caution in terms of the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

4:50

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much, Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The Member for Calgary-Varsity, please.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to rise and echo what my colleagues from Edmonton-Ellerslie, St. Albert, and Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview have pointed out in terms of support for Bill 17. I'd like to make three brief observations, and I have one question, which will hopefully be answered.

In my 34 years as a schoolteacher I have noted what was previously pointed out by the MLA for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, that school librarians have become an endangered species. The number has been greatly reduced. There are very few schools – elementary, junior high, high school – that even have part-time librarians, and in some cases they're the first to go. Librarians are intellectual guides, from preschool story corners to advanced postsecondary research. Librarians play a key role, and this bill recognizes that role to a degree.

As the Liberal opposition we would like to see greater funding for libraries and the removal of library user fees. We're not fans of either health care user fees or library user fees. The only concern I have with regard to Bill 17 is the fourth requirement, where it says that it removes the right of municipalities to levy a local property tax to fund the libraries. What I'd like to know is: what is the government's role in financially supporting libraries and assuring that libraries will be available in sparsely populated rural areas? I know at one point the bookmobile was the way that sparsely populated rural areas and reserves were reached. I would hope that this government, in recognizing the importance of literacy and investing in our youth, would consider support for such outreach concerns as bookmobiles.

As I say, I support the intent of Bill 17. I would appreciate an answer as to what role the government sees in financially underwriting the costs of libraries. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

The Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Just on behalf of the minister, in response to the last speaker, I would certainly refer that matter to the Minister of Community Development. He can probably address that in third reading.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 17 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 10
Engineering, Geological and Geophysical
Professions Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 10. During second reading of Bill 10 I outlined several reasons why this legislation is important to Alberta's registered professional technologists. I believe that the comments were fairly self-explanatory. It is my pleasure to ask that the government make amendment to this bill, which I will table now and which I believe is being distributed at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that all the members have now received this amendment. It is my pleasure to move the amendment. To give all the chance to review the amendment before we sit in the Committee of the Whole next time and discuss it, it is my pleasure to adjourn debate on Bill 10 with the amendment on the floor.

The Chair: We'll refer to that amendment as amendment A1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12
Land Titles Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I mentioned in second reading, the purpose of the bill was to try to deal with the issue of fraud primarily. There are a number of housekeeping clauses in there, and then, also, to define the purpose of the land titles office and the registration. Of course, the purpose of collecting that information is so that it can identify individuals and corporations with real interest in property.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'm primarily in support of the bill. I'm just looking for a couple of clarifications.

Section 17 of the act reads:

On receiving a request for a search and the payment of the prescribed fee and on the fulfillment of any conditions, criteria or qualifications prescribed by regulation, the Registrar shall furnish a search of the information contained in the register.

With regard to section 43.1(2) in the bill there may be some privacy issues to be raised here. There have been concerns raised in the past regarding businesses asking for personal information only when it is required for the purpose of the business transaction. This clause seems to imply that the registrar may arbitrarily scribble down an individual's social insurance number, driver's licence number and simply put it in a file. My question is: will this information be tracked? At what point would the information then be destroyed?

The other concern I have has to do with Section 50.1(1). Are registrars trained in identifying potential fraud? Is this completely subjective, or are there guidelines in place for identifying potential fraud? What happens after the registrar identifies the potential of fraud, and to what extent is the registrar obligated to report the incident to the authorities?

As I say, in general I support the bill. Just those two clarifications which I would appreciate a response on. Thank you.

Mr. Lund: If you don't mind, I'll just deal with them as they come up. That's a very observant point, dealing with 43.1 and how long the information will be stored. I will try to get you a more definitive answer, but it's my understanding that it would be kept on file long enough so that if there was an issue about the title, then it would be on file how the registrar actually, in fact, was convinced that the individuals that were signing the documents were actually those persons. But I'll try to find out exactly, and I'll give you that information.

The identification of fraud. We are training our people to look for a number of areas that would trigger some suspicion. There are a lot of times that, actually, the titles are brought to the registrar; they tried to file them right at the office. That's one place that they will be looking very carefully at. The bulk of the titles are actually registered through a lawyer, but some of them are walked right into the office. The registrar then, of course, is going to be asking for the identification as in 43(1). If they see something there that they're a little bit concerned about, then we will start to investigate it further.

We have on staff special investigators. There's a whole unit that is trained. They're primarily ex-policemen, and they're trained in looking at this stuff. If, in fact, they do find that there is fraud, then, of course, there could be charges laid. The police would be involved and then take it to court.

There are a number of things that I mentioned in second reading. If a title is changing hands very frequently, and each time the price, the value goes up, that's worth checking out. That's one of the problems we're having today with the hot market, particularly in Calgary. Goodness. I read that people are buying homes that have been grow ops and paying a huge price for them. That's why it's even getting more difficult for us to find this stuff.

They will be watching for three or four transactions in a short period of time. Each time the price is up $20,000 or $30,000 on a $250,000 home, that kind of thing. That's when they'll get suspicious that there is something going on, and that's when they would start checking it back to see whether, in fact, there is some fraud. That's another definition of fraud. One might think, "Well, as long as the individual can get that price, why are we worried?" Well, the problem is that often, too, you'll have a numbered company. Then when you start checking it out, you find out that it's the same individuals. They're selling it among a group.

The Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have more questions that perhaps the minister can reply to. I think all of us want to reduce the number of fraudulent incidents in Alberta. We heard in the previous bill that we're the mortgage fraud capital of Canada, something that I don't think we're particularly proud of. I understand that the minister is trying to deal with this.

I have some questions dealing with the bill. For example, section 13 of the proposed amendment stipulates that proof of identification may be required in order to register. Just a simple suggestion: rather than leaving up to the discretion of the registrars who and what group may need to produce said proof of identity, it seems to me that it would be tougher if we said that the amendment should read that proof of identification must be required, the same as we often do when we're on a plane or whatever. You would have no choice about it, and that would take away some of the loophole. I'd like the minister to comment if that might be a possibility, to take away that discrepancy.

Another example, from a different perspective, is section 14, which gives the registrar the right to refuse registration if fraud is suspected. Of course, we support the registrar's right to do so, but I'm thinking of people that are in the inner city or whatever. Sometimes they don't have the proper identification, but maybe with some help they can get the proper identification. So I'm wondering why there were no provisions made for appeals by individuals refused, nor are there provisions for the registrar to report suspected fraud. I hope to hear some elaboration on this, and maybe there's something the minister might want to take a look at.

I think I heard the minister talk about that in his department they have investigative officers, ex-policemen and that, that work in this area. Tying into that, white-collar crimes are getting more complicated, and often the criminals are ahead of us in technology and the rest of it. I think that's true in a lot of areas. So I'm wondering if the minister has addressed the question of training staff at land titles to recognize incidents of fraud. For instance, a question I'd ask: is land titles pairing with the police services of Edmonton and Calgary to help establish such training, perhaps with the investigative officers that he talked about before in a previous question? I mean, as criminal manipulations of the legal system continue to evolve, it becomes harder and harder to catch these people. We know that.

I guess the other thing is getting tough on crime. In terms of dollars and cents white-collar crime often costs society more than violent crime. We hear a lot about that. In terms of money lost or spent pursuing these criminals, I wondered if – and I know it's not just in his department; the Minister of Justice is here – we're looking at legislating penalties in addition to those handed down through court proceedings; for example, large fines for those who profit from mortgage fraud in addition to criminal proceedings. This is a growing problem.

Mr. Chairman, I'm more interested in where we're going with this. Obviously, we'll support the bill. Maybe we can cut down fraud, and we'll try to do it. But I'd like to ask the minister those questions.

Thank you.

The Chair: The Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for those comments. The reason that we're not saying that they must ask for identity. Often these are filed in a lawyer's office, and it's up to the lawyer to check and see that all of the people have signed it. The ones they'll really be watching are where individuals come in to the counter and file. That's when in some cases they will probably be going right back to the people that signed the affidavit, that they knew the person that signed it is that person. So it would be rather onerous to say that you had to ask for this identification.

No appeals from the registrar's decision. That was brought up in second reading as well. The fact is that if the registrar makes the decision to hold, they will do some checking themselves. If they feel that there needs to be more investigation, they'll call in the special investigation unit that looks at these things. Then, of course, from there if, in fact, they find out that, yes, there is something here, that it's not proper, they would involve the police. The penalties? It's theft. Fraud is theft, so immediately it will be turned over to the Solicitor General's department, and the appropriate charges would be laid.

The training of staff: that's an ongoing process. Of course, the advantage we got with the special investigators part of the unit: they're training our people on what to look for, what looks suspicious, and are part of it. There is a long training process. That's one of the difficulties we've got today when we try to hire more people. You can't just take somebody in off the street and train them in a couple weeks to do this type of work. It takes a lot of training and a lot of work.

I hope that covers your questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few more questions on land titles. The first one is that when you pull out a land title, sometimes we don't see the full description. I suppose there's the property, the background, the ownership. How many owners were there, and how much money did they pay? A few years back when we used to pull out the land title, the full description was there. Now I don't see the full details in there. I want to know why we don't get the full information in the land title. I think this is one of the reasons that fraud is booming in Alberta.

My second question. You know, when you refinance something, maybe we should ask the registrar to accommodate some sort of help. There should be some collaboration between the banks and the registrar so that they can get all the information, especially about the refinancing. It's very important.

The third question. You know the registries where you get the land title? One of my friends was asking me: who gets it? What's the procedure for that?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A good question about the number of owners. Quite frankly, the changes that we're making in the purpose of the land titles may address some of this problem. But under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act there are instances where it's very important that a lot of the information not be disclosed.

Like I say, the reason we put in the purpose clause is so that if you have a good reason to be wanting to know the history of who owned this property, then you could get it. But the difficulty we have is that if people just willy-nilly develop themselves a data bank for whatever reason – maybe they're going to start soliciting from those individuals – that's not the purpose of land titles. Land titles is simply to show who has interest in this property. So while I can understand where you might want to know who the owners have been – for example, if you're concerned about a contamination of the site, you need to know what happened on that site – there are ways of getting it, but hopefully it will be more distinct now that we have that new purpose clause.

The refinancing: these amendments are really not about financing. That's another area altogether. This has really got nothing to do with that area. We do allow rollovers as far as land titles are concerned. We do allow that in Alberta, and that's a very valuable tool. But, really, what you were talking about, as I get it, is for the whole financing. That's not part of what we're doing here.

The history: I think I covered that in the answer to my first one. There are ways that you can get it through application.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Minister, would you buy a car without knowing, you know, the whole details, like a couple of buyers in the past? This property archive, the full description in the land title, was always there. This stopped just a year or two years ago. Why did they suddenly stop giving us information? My point is that especially when the property is bought and sold by the government, it must be highlighted. People should know about property dealings, especially from the government side.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, I'll try to get you a more definitive answer before third reading. It's my understanding that if you're an individual looking for the history of the property that you're wanting to buy, you can apply and get it. But you can't put in for a batch or identify an individual and ask for all the properties that they own. You can't get that. That's private. But we'll review Hansard and try to get a more definitive answer for you because I totally understand what you're talking about. I totally understand it.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 13

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 13: Mr. Strang]

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand and move out of committee Bill 13. Some of the questions that were asked related to the legislation's purpose. The Real Estate Council of Alberta's mandate as described in the Real Estate Act is "to set and enforce standards of conduct" of regulated members "in order to promote the integrity of the industry and to protect consumers," to provide services to "enhance and improve the industry," and also to administer the Real Estate Act and its regulations, bylaws, and rules.

We had talked sometimes, you know, about how these amendments are going to assist agents and look at combating the aspect of mortgage fraud. While these amendments make it easier for investigative agents, such as municipal police forces and lenders, to share information with the Real Estate Council of Alberta where feasible to do so, many of these agents are bound by information-sharing policies and privacy legislation wherein they are only able to share these with other bona fide investigative and enforcement agencies. Strengthening the Real Estate Council of Alberta's mandate to clearly an investigation and enforcement role in terms of mortgage fraud will go a long ways to ensuring that the Real Estate Council of Alberta is empowered to receive such information.

One of the other aspects that I heard some of the members talking about is: what else can we do to combat mortgage fraud? Well, amendments are being submitted from other acts which are also impacted by mortgage fraud issues. Government Services and the Real Estate Council of Alberta have also developed a tipsheet to help consumers, lenders, and real estate professionals protect themselves from mortgage fraud. The Real Estate Act was amended in 2004 for licensing of appraisers by the Real Estate Council of Alberta, and all industry members were also required to take mandatory mortgage fraud awareness courses offered by the Real Estate Council of Alberta.

Some of the other aspects that were sort of discussed earlier were on the Advisory Committee on Mortgage Fraud and who the members were. Well, because mortgage fraud impacts a variety of sectors, it was important to work with partners to outline what the next steps should be. To review these issues and develop potential solutions, the Minister of Government Services struck the Advisory Committee on Mortgage Fraud. This committee brought together representatives from a cross-section of society, including the financial sector, the real estate sector, the legal community, law enforcement agencies, and representatives from four Alberta ministries: Government Services, Justice and Attorney General, Finance, Solicitor General and Public Security.

So these are some of the items that I thought I'd bring up, and if there are any more that I have missed from the members opposite, I'll bring them up and clarify them in third reading. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I attended that course about mortgage fraud a couple of years ago, and even two years ago they were talking about stopping the assumption of a mortgage. I think it is only this province which allows assumption of a mortgage. This rumour was going on for a long, long time. Why so far have we failed to enforce this law? Another thing: RECA I don't think has the power to enforce this type of fraud or illegal activities in the real estate market. Could you please clarify that?

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think the main thing we're talking about here is the co-operation and co-ordination that we're working on with all sectors and sharing the information so that we can combat the aspect of mortgage fraud so that we can work with it so that we don't move forward and have people suffer a lot on these aspects. Like I mentioned before, the sharing of knowledge with the financial sector, the real estate sector, and the legal community as well as law enforcement agencies – at least they work in a cohesive group so that they don't allow this aspect of mortgage fraud in our province to continue, as we've seen in the earlier days when we had people possibly just paying a dollar to take over the mortgage of a home. So this way, they're working together to combat that.

Thank you.

Mr. Agnihotri: The problem has been there for a long, long time. Why are they not taking action?

Mr. Strang: Well, they are taking action, Mr. Chairman. They're moving forward on this and working together. I mean, we're just bringing this together now, bringing these amendments in so that they can work together co-operatively to make sure that this mortgage fraud is going to be under control. We've got to pass this first before they'll be able to work together.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very quick here. [some applause] I love it when I get applause. It doesn't happen often.

The amendment is fine: "to protect against, investigate, detect and suppress." I mean, anything that we can do. We've already talked about Alberta being the mortgage fraud capital of Canada. I want to say that we can pass a lot of bills here, but we have some other serious problems because in an overheated economy, this is going to go up. The police say that this is automatic. I think the member would agree with me that just by adding this as an amendment – it's a good one – we're not going to solve the problem. I don't know what else can be done. I'm not sure about the licensing, how people get into the business, whether that should be toughened up or not, but this is going to continue, I think, to be a major problem even with this amendment. I think the member would agree. I'm just asking the question – perhaps the member can't answer – if there is something else we can do in terms of licensing to try to deal with it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. What we're looking at right now is that these changes will involve considerable consultation with industry and investigation agencies on what practical steps will work best to combat mortgage fraud and help consumers. They reflect the ongoing and collaborative efforts on the part of government to ensure that it is taking the mortgage fraud issue seriously and that it deals with these areas in a proactive manner. So I think that's what we're looking at, and as the member stated, we've got to pass this to move forward. Sure, we've got a booming economy, but I think that with this amendment we'll make sure that we help curtail this.

So I'd move out of committee at this time.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 13, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 4

Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to make a few comments with respect to this matter in committee. The first point I'd like to mention is that it really doesn't matter if we have the same time changes as other parts of the world. This is something that some of the members raised in their comments in second. Specifically, other jurisdictions have managed to exist without following the path of their neighbours. There has been one major difference with the decision made by these jurisdictions. They have simply not followed daylight saving time at all. We're not eliminating the time change, only discussing when we change. Changing the clocks at the same time as most of our immediate neighbours is the easiest way to make this happen. It's one change two times a year, and that's all. Simply, there is no confusion.

I'd also like to take a moment to discuss the safety of schoolchildren because that, again, came up in some of the comments in second reading. I certainly don't want anyone to be left with the impression that we're not concerned with the safety of our children. In fact, I think the evidence would indicate that the safety of our children will be enhanced as a result of this initiative. Obviously, changing the clock earlier will affect how dark it is when the children leave for school, and I trust that parents, educators, and drivers will continue to be aware of the need for vigilance in the morning.

On the other side of that issue is the effect it will have in the afternoon. Transport Canada has advised that there will likely be a reduction in the number of pedestrian and motor vehicle occupant fatalities and injuries. They told us that most pedestrian injuries occur between the hours of 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. The extra daylight during that period will make pedestrians more visible.

As one hon. member pointed out, we are not the first off the mark on this, and the only question remaining is: what will be made most easy for Albertans . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but under Standing Order 4(4) the committee stands adjourned until 8 o'clock tonight, at which time we'll reconvene in committee.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 21, 2006 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 06/03/21
 head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 4 Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wish to conclude my remarks from this afternoon by saying that Bill 4 is a bill that we consulted on. We're proceeding with the recommendation of the people that we consulted with, that we should be making this change by adding four weeks throughout the year to daylight saving. It is a good bill for industry; it is a good bill for Albertans. I would encourage all members to support this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 4, Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006. Actually, it's the first time that I've been able to speak about this bill. Bill 4 ensures that our yearly love affair with daylight saving will take place earlier and last longer. So the spring ahead will take place a few weeks earlier, on the second Sunday of March, and the fall back will occur on the first Sunday of November.

I thank the hon. minister for his history lesson about daylight saving in Alberta. I have a very personal interest in this topic because my astronomer father worked in the time service with the dominion observatory in Ottawa. My oldest son actually just moved a few weeks ago to Greenwich, England. As is well known, Greenwich Mean Time is the basis for the world's time zones, which begin on the Greenwich meridian, longitude zero.

Daylight saving time was first implemented by Germany and Austria at 11 p.m. on April 30, 1916, and many other European countries, including Britain, followed suit. Nova Scotia and Manitoba adopted daylight saving at the same time as Britain, and the United States adopted it in 1918. Recently the United States has proposed an extension of daylight saving to begin in 2007, and Ontario, Manitoba, and Quebec have already chosen to follow the lead of the U.S.

As the minister has pointed out, the rationale for following the lead of the United States includes many factors. The importance of remaining in line with our most important trade partner is supported by our financial and business sector. In the realm of agriculture with the transportation of live animals and perishable food across the border it is important that we be on the same page in respect to time. Of course, it's convenient to travelers if flight schedules are on the same time schedule. The argument about energy savings has some merit, I suppose, since more daylight at the evening rush hour reduces energy consumption.

As the minister said this afternoon, Transport Canada advises that the extra hours of daylight in the evening would reduce pedestrian and motor vehicle occupant fatalities and injuries, although this argument has to be balanced by the fact that the morning rush hour will see more darkness. That is not a problem if you live in the U.S., but it's quite wearisome to have to get up in the morning in the midst of darkness for so long during the winter months. Of course, the many hearty Canadians living in the far north would not be impressed by such whining.

I could go on and give an extensive lecture on sun worship, which goes back to paleolithic times when you'd find that the dead were buried facing the direction of the rising sun. Ancient temples, especially in Egypt, were built with their entrances facing the rising sun. But I won't go on with that lecture.

I will conclude by referring to Plato's famous allegory of the cave. He saw the liberation of people from the darkness of the cave moving out into the sunlight as a movement from ignorance into the light of truth. In conclusion, let me say that if this move to daylight saving is also accompanied by a commitment of this government to greater transparency and truth, then so let it happen. Amen and amen.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, after that inspiring speech and in light of the savings that may occur as a result of this bill, I would like to ask the hon. minister if any effort has been made to study the electricity grid to see if there will be at least any modest reduction in electricity consumption in this province as a result of this bill.

Certainly, whenever we look at Bill 4, it is necessary for Albertans, as the hon. minister stated earlier, to remain in sync with our largest trading partner. Our financial interests, our agricultural interests, our transportation interests: all of these sectors need this change to maintain our competitive advantage. If there's a chance again, as I said, to reduce our energy consumption due to this change, even a small saving to the power grid, then certainly I would urge all hon. members to vote for this bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly of the importance of our north-south ties. Some people talk about our east-west ties, but our north-south ties are so important, and the integration is much too valuable to be jeopardized by not implementing this bill. This is not just a case of following the Americans. It is vitally important to our economy to remain synchronized with our largest trading partner. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has talked about the Canadian provinces, and he is absolutely correct, but we also have to be cognizant of our trading partner south of the border.

With that, I will conclude my remarks on Bill 4. I can't imagine any people who would be opposed to this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In looking at the object of this bill, the proposed legislation will mean an extension of daylight saving time by having daylight saving time come into effect three weeks earlier than before, the second Sunday in March, and also falling back by one week, the first Sunday in November. I'm speaking in support of this bill, but I'd like to make some observations.

I think this is about bringing Alberta practice in line with other jurisdictions around us. The alternative is what we see on a current FedEx commercial: offices adding or subtracting from the calendar to deal with the outside world. The United States Congress has made a start here, increasing the number of weeks per year that the clock is advanced to save energy consumption. If this motion passes, Alberta will be the fourth Canadian jurisdiction to follow suit. Alberta was one of the last provinces to adopt daylight saving time in Canada. Daylight saving time was first invented in 1921. It did not come to Alberta until the end of the 1960s and the Social Credit era due to rural opposition. So now it's about 40 years old.

If Alberta was behind the country in first adopting daylight saving time, we need to remember that Canada led the world in the adoption of standard time. Many Canadians are becoming aware of the legacy of Sandford Fleming, the engineer who surveyed passes through the mountains for two railways, designed the first original Canadian postage stamp, and put together the proposal for standard time that was eventually adopted by the rest of the world. Fleming's contribution is well documented in Clark Blaise's book, Time Lord.

There's a philosophical side to this issue also. The Greeks had two words for time: khronos, or measured time, with its sequence of minutes, hours, days, and weeks; and kairos, or appropriate time, the right time to be born, plant, harvest, marry, leave home, as in the 1960s song Turn, Turn, Turn. In our world khronos is the only time we know. We try to fit our lives, our children's development, our body rhythms, and our choices into it, but it doesn't always work that way. The time sense of our First Nations, of young children, of the aged, and of artists, a time sense that we call primitive and underdeveloped, has something to teach us here. It is in the nowness of their needs that our children call us more fully into life and rescue us from the tyranny of the clock time.

If we adopt this bill – and I believe we will – let's see that time becomes a tool, not continue as a tyrant. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak on Bill 4 in committee. I spoke on this bill during second reading and spoke in support of it, so I won't repeat the reasons for support. I think they are the reasons that were well articulated by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General in introducing the bill, and we agree with those reasons for bringing forward the changes.

There were some concerns expressed by several members when speaking on this bill with respect to how changing daylight saving time in the spring, in particular, would cause young children to walk to school when there is not enough daylight, perhaps, for them to walk to school safely. So some concerns expressed that this might expose our children on their way to school in the morning to some increased risk of being involved in a traffic accident, if not entirely run over. I think that's something that needs to be considered.

We make all kinds of assumptions when we either propose legislation or speak to it. Often we hope that those assumptions are sound, but sometimes only experience tells whether or not every one of those assumptions is indeed sound and things turn out as they're supposed to. So I would suggest that we monitor for the next year or two, as we make this change, the incidents of young children involved in accidents in the morning rather than pedestrians at the closing end of the day, if I may use that term, as has been the case in the past, and see if there's a change needed then. If we need to revisit, we'll do it then.

Certainly there is more than daylight hours that affects the safety of our roads. If we are intent on protecting our children walking to school in the morning, especially as a result of these changes that we are making – and we should be – we must obviously teach our children better road safety rules as well as address other outside factors such as the behaviour of motorists. For example, according to Stats Canada, young pedestrian victims under 14 years of age are most often at fault for their injuries. Clearly, there is some room there, therefore, to educate our young children with respect to traffic rules and their own safety. As for motorists' behaviour, aside from increasing penalties for drunk drivers and speeding, we must also address the issue of cellphone use while driving, which has been banned in other places, including the United Kingdom, for example.

These issues may sound peripheral to the daylight saving debate, a change in the daylight saving hours, but these come from questions raised during the second reading of this bill, so we feel that they ought to be addressed as clearly as other issues.

In general I think that I am in support of the bill. Let's move on with the passage of the bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Briefly. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona makes a good point, that we should monitor the early morning hours of this extension. In that regard, I know that the information we have regarding the potential effect of this from a safety perspective has been provided to us by Transport Canada, and I'll ask my department to follow up with that organization to ask them, when they next consider this matter, if they could take into account the point of additional dark time in this four-week extension of daylight saving. I think that's an excellent point, and I do appreciate your comment in that regard.

For Edmonton-Gold Bar there's no doubt that in the information that's available on this, the Americans used energy saving as their number one reason for bringing in the bill. I can also tell you that independent of that I've seen anecdotal evidence that there will be some modest saving simply because there will be more daylight in the latter part of the day when more of us are up. Hence, the idea is that less lights will be turned on during that time, and as a result there will be some modest saving. Time will tell.

In any event, I appreciate the members' comments and would call the question.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 4, Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 5

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have some brief comments I'd like to make with respect to Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, in committee. I do appreciate the input and comments of the hon. members in second reading. This bill, once again, deals with minor amendments to three pieces of justice legislation: the Civil Enforcement Act, the judicature amendment act, and the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act.

Briefly, Mr. Chairman, the Civil Enforcement Act amendments will further refine and clarify the process for seizing property that is already under seizure so that all types of creditors can use the same process under the act.

The amendments to the judicature amendment act, which had been originally introduced in 2004, will refine and clarify original amendments that allow structured settlements in injury and death cases so that payments can be made in instalments rather than in a lump sum.

The last amendments relate to the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is correct. The reason for these amendments is in large measure as a result of going digital in about the year 2000, so much of what is involved in these minor amendments is to bring us up to date in the 21st century. I can tell the hon. member that we continue to have court reporters even though we are digital because there are certain cases, for example, that require daily transcripts, and where daily transcripts are required, it's my understanding that court reporters do continue to attend in the courtroom.

In any event, I appreciate the comments of the members to date. These are practical amendments to three pieces of justice legislation which will improve justice in Alberta, and I look forward to receiving the support of the members for this particular bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the Minister of Justice for his explanation of the recommended amendments in his addressing this bill in second reading. This bill deals with minor amendments, I think, to three different pieces of legislation.

First, the amendments to the Civil Enforcement Act. These amendments simply refine the process for creditors who seize properties. At first I had difficulty understanding the language, which is the case for most of these bills, but the minister's explanation is very helpful. We are dealing here with two different kinds of creditors: the distressed creditor, someone like a landlord who is owed rent by a tenant and who has the right to seize property, and an enforcement creditor, who can seize property under a court order. So with the changes being suggested, if the distressed creditor has a recognized interest in a property, the enforcement creditor may also give notice of his interest and vice versa.

There's no point in my summarizing the points already made by the minister. My understanding is that these changes are rooted in recommendations of the Uniform Law Conference. Frankly, I did not know about the existence of such a body. The Uniform Law Conference was founded in 1918 and charged with the task of harmonizing the laws of the provinces and territories of Canada. It meets every year bringing government policy lawyers together to consider where harmonization of laws would be of benefit. It sounds about as exciting as a group of bishops getting together to decide cannon law or the creeds of the church, but I assume that someone has to do this kind of work and make the right kinds of recommendations. The legal advice that I have received is that this is just fine-tuning of procedures and that I do not need to ask any questions or comment further.

The second part of this Bill 5 is an amendment that has to do with awards by courts in respect to injuries or death. My understanding is that traditionally the courts have awarded lump-sum damages for personal injuries, and there has been pressure over the years to allow for structured settlements which can provide for the plaintiff a steady stream of money.

One of the important issues here is the tax situation. If the lump-sum award is invested in order to produce money as needed for years to come, the income earned by the investment will be taxed while in the plaintiff's hands. What needs to happen is that the whole sum of the award must take this into consideration so that the income generated by the award and the investment will pay the tax and provide what the plaintiff needs.

The changes recommended here in this bill provide guidelines for courts to order structured settlements in such a way that the plaintiff doesn't have to worry about the tax issues. The positive value of this is that the plaintiff doesn't have to worry about investing the money, money he might be tempted to spend right away, and he doesn't have to worry about the taxes. So this is a good thing, and I have no issues about the wording of this amendment.

The third part, the Mechanical Recording of Evidence Act, proposes to update the definition of a reporter as defined in the Alberta Rules of Court. It repeals Section 1(b)(f) and updates the language of "reporter" to refer to "a person who is appointed by the Minister as a court reporter for the purposes of this Act or an agent or employee of that person." Given the evolution of recording of court actions from typing to digital recordings by machine, the amendment allows for the certification of such records by the court official in charge of the sound-recording machine. There are other additions in this amendment in respect to the storage of records and the keeping of records for 10 years, after which they may be erased.

My only question – and I think the minister has already alluded to it – is about the traditional role of official court reporters, which has been quite important. They have been, it appears, independent officers of the court charged with the task of making a record of the proceedings, then transcribing the record, and under oath certifying the accuracy of the transcription. This is extremely important because in the case of an appeal to a higher court, there must be an accurate account of court proceedings. It's very important to recognize the independence of the court reporter, who does not work directly for the judge or the lawyers but is the "official court reporter."

Now that the government has installed digital recording devices, does this mean that such official court reporters are unnecessary? Section 4(b) is amended, and it is no longer necessary for a transcript to be certified by a court reporter. Who is it that certifies digital recordings? The substitution of 3(1) states that a record must be certified "by the judge or the court official in charge of the sound-recording machine." Who is this court official? Presumably, the reporter as referred to above in this amendment, a person appointed by the minister or an agent or employee of that person. I don't know. Is something lost here in terms of the independence of court reporters? I think one could see that independence and the role of court reporters as a kind of check or a safeguard on court proceedings, and I'm just wondering if that independence, that safeguard is somehow compromised here. So that's my only question.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I spoke to this bill in its second reading and dwelt on the importance of the maintenance enforcement program and how it has helped children and families who find themselves in a situation where maintenance support is necessary, so I won't repeat that. I indicated our support for the bill in general. I asked some very general questions. Those questions are on record, but they're not questions of the sort that would either lead me to propose any amendments or express any serious reservations while supporting the bill. So that said, I simply conclude my remarks by reiterating our general support for the legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly to the point raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. There are less reporters today as a result of the conversion to digital. Prior to digital the reporters took the record and when necessary converted it into transcript. Today the digital equipment takes the record, and where necessary the reporter converts it into transcript. So the role of the reporter in terms of ensuring that the record is correct for either use in court in the first instance or on appeal remains identical to that before. They're just using the digital recording device rather than the mechanical recording devices that they had previously. So I think I can safely say to the hon. member that the role of the reporter in that regard is the same. It hasn't altered whatsoever.

I would call the question.

Bill 6

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to make some remarks with respect to Bill 6 in committee. There were a number of points raised by hon. members in second reading, and I would like to try and address some of those points at this time. I certainly appreciate the feedback that I received from members and their genuine interest in this very important program, the maintenance enforcement program.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked a number of questions. His questions centred on the bill's provisions regarding financial examinations and maintenance enforcement support agreements. First, I'll speak to the financial examinations. Perhaps it will clarify some things for all members if I take the time to explain in more detail exactly what a financial examination is.

Simply put, the act allows the director to require a debtor to appear at MEP's office to be examined on their finances. Mr. Chairman, these are seriously defaulting debtors that are examined. During these examinations staff reviews debtors' financial particulars so they can negotiate a repayment schedule with the debtor. Financial examinations give MEP and debtors another avenue to resolve matters before using the courts.

This is still a very formal and serious process; however, the financial examination gives the debtor the opportunity to talk to a MEP representative and to come clean with a fresh start. The debtor is able to obtain referrals to organizations such as creditor counselling or addictions counselling and begin feeling responsible again by making payment arrangements. MEP is also able to update its files with relevant information on the debtor and children to ensure that correct amounts are being collected.

Mr. Chairman, in almost all cases the financial examination process involves MEP and the debtor only. The court is not usually involved whatsoever. Currently the courts only become involved in the financial examination process at the request of MEP's legal counsel. This request would be made when the debtor fails to appear for the financial examination or where a debtor appears but still refuses to provide full financial disclosure to the director. MEP may then apply to a court for an order compelling the debtor to attend at MEP or provide disclosure to MEP. Should the debtor still fail to comply with financial disclosure, MEP may then apply for a further order finding the debtor in contempt of court, and should the debtor still fail to appear before the director, MEP may apply for a warrant for the debtor's arrest.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 6 seeks court assistance with financial examination in a couple of other key areas. First, the bill would allow the court to grant substitutional service orders for summoning debtors to appear at MEP's office. This means that a summons can be served to someone who knows the debtor in substitution for serving the debtor personally. I can tell you that this is a standard procedure under the rules of court in ordinary civil litigation proceedings. Currently MEP is required by its act to personally serve someone with a summons to appear for a financial examination. That means having a process server hand the documents directly to the debtor. However, there are debtors who are difficult to serve. In fact, some people go to great lengths to evade service. For example, they may refuse to come to the door when a process server arrives or tell people at work to say that that person is not there if someone comes calling.

In these cases, Mr. Chairman, Bill 6 will enable MEP to go to the courts, explain the past problems in service, and ask for an order allowing for service of the summons in a different way. This might mean allowing MEP to substitutionally serve through the debtor's relative, friend, or employer or allowing the documents to be posted on the door of the debtor's home. With substitutional service MEP will be able to call more debtors to attend at financial examination, and since financial examinations have been very successful, it will provide MEP with the tools that will almost assuredly have more dollars collected for the creditors.

A second area where the member asked questions for clarification was regarding alternative arrangements for examination. Bill 6 seeks to provide MEP with the court's assistance by allowing the court to order alternative arrangements for financial examination of the debtor. This will give MEP the ability to conduct financial examinations in locations other than MEP's office. Examples of when this would be useful would be if a debtor were incarcerated or unable to travel. Again, the intention here is to give MEP more ability to conduct the examinations and to be flexible in where the examination takes place.

The member also had a question about adjournment of financial examination. The purpose of this amendment is to provide MEP and the debtor with greater flexibility and less paperwork. The amendment will allow MEP rather than the courts to grant the adjournment. For example, if the debtor has not brought all the necessary documents or if the debtor or MEP staff cannot complete the examination in the scheduled time, they will be able to adjourn the examination to a time that is agreeable to all without the requirement to re-serve the debtor. Also, if the debtor calls MEP after first being served and requests the examination to be rescheduled to avoid the debtor's missing another important obligation, the amendment will facilitate this. Mr. Chairman, the provision for adjournments will allow MEP to accommodate debtors' schedules, and this will likely result in greater attendance.

In short, the changes in the Maintenance Enforcement Act to support financial examinations will result in more efficiency and client satisfaction. The changes will also result in higher collections and greater resolution of arrears because more financial examination will occur.

Before I leave this particular topic, I'd like to address a comment made by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. She was concerned that alternative arrangements for financial exams might allow debtors to get accountants in and paint a bleak picture of their finances so that they can get out of paying support. This certainly is not the intention of Bill 6, nor will it likely be the result. As mentioned earlier, the intention of allowing the court to order alternative arrangements for financial examinations is to grant the ability to conduct examinations at places that are more convenient for MEP and the debtor.

As for debtors trying to get out of paying support, MEP's experience with financial examinations so far shows that the collection rate is very high. Staff is well trained to identify when a debtor may be exaggerating hardship. In these cases if MEP feels that a reasonable payment arrangement cannot be negotiated, a default hearing may still be scheduled in court. This is a separate process, that MEP has had in its legislation for many years, requiring a debtor to appear in court to explain why they have not been paying maintenance. In other words, where MEP feels that debtors are not being truthful, those debtors may be asked to convince a court of their position. Bill 6 does not in any way change that default hearing process.

Referring back to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's comments, I'd like to address his question regarding the registration of maintenance enforcement support agreements. As I understand it, the member is concerned that parties may feel that there is a loss of control by allowing MEP to file their agreement. Mr. Chairman, it's important to underscore the fact that the ability of the parties to file their maintenance enforcement support agreements themselves is not compromised whatsoever by this amendment, and there are no legal implications resulting from this change. If the amendment is passed, the parties will still be able to file and serve their own agreements. The benefit is that they will also have the option of having MEP do the filing and serving for them. For many people courts are intimidating. Even filing a document is a burden for some. The amendments here will allow MEP staff to take on, if requested, those responsibilities of those people who wish to register with the program, and in my perspective, access to justice, which is one of the primary objects of Alberta Justice, will be advanced.

Those are the comments I have, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the questions raised by hon. members in second reading, and I would encourage all to support this very good bill, which amends an important part of the work we do in Alberta Justice under the maintenance enforcement program.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of amendments to the Maintenance Enforcement Act here, and the purpose of these amendments is to facilitate better access to justice for families dealing with MEP. I thank the hon. minister for his explanations although when he gave his speech in second reading, the first amendment he discussed is actually the last amendment. He discussed them in reverse order, causing me considerable confusion for about 30 seconds, but then I realized what he was talking about.

I don't have many comments. In the first amendment, which is number 2 in the bill, section 10.1 is amended by adding a clause that allows for the director to file documents on behalf of either party with the Court of Queen's Bench and to give notice of the filing to either party. This seems to facilitate the process on behalf of the parties involved since they do not have to serve notice of the filing to the other party. MEP will do this and inform all involved, and there seems to be no problems with that. That facilitates things.

Amendment 3. Section 17.1 of the act is amended by adding (2.1), which allows the MEP to access funds that a debtor has in locked-in retirement funds, or LIRAs. Previously such funds were not accessible, and this was changed in 2004. This is obviously in the best interests of children, who need the financial support right away instead of waiting for years and years. But as the minister has pointed out, in practice financial institutions have insisted that such funds cannot be accessed until the debtor is at least 50 years old. This amendment makes it possible for families to access these retirement funds right away, and this amendment makes it clear that when a financial institution is given notice to pay out from a retirement fund, it is not entitled to deduct anything for charges or for any tax withheld. So there are no problems with that.

Amendment 4. Section 24 is amended and allows for the director to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench "for alternative arrangements for the examination of a debtor" and his financial circumstances. The hon. minister has explained in great detail the importance of these meetings with the debtor concerning his employment and his financial circumstances. I have a greater appreciation of the complexities involved and what MEP has to confront in dealing with people who owe money for the support of children, and I recognize the success that MEP has had in dealing with debtors, bringing in about $900,000 a month.

The changes proposed under subsection (5) assume that there is a problem with the debtor appearing before the director because many debtors try to evade their responsibility, so this addition allows for more flexibility. I don't know whether it was intended to make the process less confrontational so that debtors would be encouraged to come in and discuss their special circumstances. Such a change would allow debtors to come in and deal with their circumstances and responsibilities before they risk arrest. This would obviously save the court's time.

I guess that in general the only question I have – I mean, I appreciate all the complexities. I don't know whether this question even makes sense. I think we have to ask in relationship to the children who are affected: what are the gains and losses with this change? Is the attempt to facilitate the process to speed it up so that the debtor is dealt with in a quicker way before you have to go to the court? Will more people respond when they have that opportunity before the courts get involved? I guess that's the question. You know, there's a problem here. I guess it's necessary because debtors keep trying to evade their responsibilities, even moving their residence and fleeing to other provinces, so there have to be some steps to facilitate this process. It is very complex. That's all I have to say.

Amendment 5. Section 36 is amended by striking out "periodic payment" and substituting just the words "payment or payments." This will ensure that families will get the current funds owing to them under a maintenance order before any arrears or any fees and charges are collected. So families owed by the debtor will receive the money currently owed to them before the issue of arrears is addressed or the issue of penalties for late payments is addressed. This change is clearly a good thing because the families need the money right away.

So those are my comments. Other than the one question, that is all I have, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate this opportunity to stand up and respond to Bill 6, Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006, in this stage of debate.

Undoubtedly this is one of the main or major concerns that each of us here in this House receives in his or her constituency office. Family maintenance is probably one of the main topics, you know, for walk-in traffic in the constituency office or people phoning asking for help or clarification: where to go, who to talk to, and things like this. It's apparently a growing problem. It's not an urban-only issue or a rural-only issue. It's evenly spread out across the province and across Canada, for that matter. The issues surrounding family maintenance and the issues surrounding child care and custody and all these things are really a growing concern not only for us as elected officials but for the parents that have to go through them or for the government agencies like the maintenance enforcement program, that looks after the collection component of that formula.

I'm looking at some statistics here. I realize that in Committee of the Whole we are supposed to mainly focus on the provisions one by one or the line-by-line stipulations in the bill, and I'm going to do that in about a minute. But I'm noticing here that, for example, in the year 2004-05 the maintenance enforcement program had a collection rate of 84 per cent, which amounts to about $167 million. I'm getting this from the government backgrounder that accompanied their press release on February 24. In 2005-06, which is this current year, the MEP was projected to have a collection rate of 88 per cent, which amounts to about $182 million.

Now, I look at these statistics in two ways. One, that, yes, we are scoring more success in our collection efforts, which is great. We still have a bit more to do, or some more road to travel, which is acceptable because things seem to be improving overall. But it also shows that $182 million was pending or in transition between the debtors and the creditors, or between one parent and the other. So we have to look at other ways to further address this concern.

I keep thinking that there has to be more education for parents. There has to be more sort of a heavy-handed approach, like you get one strike and the second strike you're out type of thing. We have to be extra vigilant in our collection efforts. We have to be extra forceful in those collection efforts because some people get away with things. They think that the system is too relaxed or too easy on them.

I have been exposed to many situations where the children are used as leverage. They're used as a bargaining chip from one parent to the other. Mostly the parent that has custody would use the children to arm twist or blackmail the other parent. They deny them visitation. They prevent them from seeing the kids, and there is a lot of emotional and psychological trauma to those children. We all know that children typically and normally require care and love and attention from both parents, and now they're being used as leverage, or a bargaining chip, and it's really traumatic for them.

You also hear cases about, you know, some settlements or payments that are being done outside of the MEP. Sometimes one parent would tell the other that it's an emergency or that it's needed for this or that. They both either agree or by negligence fail to report it to the MEP, and then these payments or settlements are never registered. I'm telling every person that walks into the constituency office in Edmonton-McClung: "No, don't do things outside of the program. Register every payment on the program because that's proof that you've actually done your part and you're abiding by the collection notice."

Another angle that caught my eye is that based on surveys, the client – and I don't typically like that word, but anyway, being the debtor or the creditor – satisfaction with the MEP has also steadily climbed from 54 per cent in 1999 to 68 per cent in 2005. Again, you can read numbers either way. You can look at the percentage approval, or you can also think about the percentage disapproval. I think that dissatisfaction would either stem from deadbeat parents who are forced to comply, and they don't like it and they're complaining about it, or from the other parent who is going through difficult times and the program doesn't seem to be delivering. There is a failure to collect, which places a bigger burden on the creditor. So, again, I refer back to the issue of education and enforceability because no deadbeat parent should get away with it, and we should be looking at ways, like we are today in this Bill 6, to streamline and improve the process.

Now, I'll talk about the section-by-section analysis, the different provisions in this bill, and I promise to do it briefly. Section 2, which amends section 10.1 of the Maintenance Enforcement Act, adds a clause which allows the director on behalf of either party to file documents contained in a maintenance agreement – that is to be done with the Court of Queen's Bench – and to give notice to either party. This is good. It allows the MEP staff to take care of certain processes on behalf of the parties. So really what we're doing here is facilitating and intervening on their behalf, which is a positive direction to take.

Adding the new subsection (2.1) in section 17.1 allows the MEP to access funds that the debtor has in a locked-in retirement vehicle, which is great. These debtors, if they're sneaky or if they're trying to cheat the system by locking some of their money into RRSPs or some long-term GICs or stuff like that, would now face the same exposure because the MEP can actually go in and take some of that. So I also support this.

Adding section 24, allowing the director to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for alternative arrangements for the financial examination of a debtor, makes the process less confrontational. I agree with that too because, you know, emotions are running high as it is. There is usually confrontation. There is animosity between the two parents or the two partners. It's really difficult for the kids and difficult for them, too, as it is. So it alleviates some of that.

In section 5 the amendment ensures that families get the current funds owing under the maintenance order before any penalties are collected for late payments or failure to pay and so on. In other words, families owed by the debtor will receive the money currently owed to them before looking at any outstanding debt or penalties for late payments. Once the current balance owing is paid out, 90 per cent of any remaining money will be allocated to the arrears and the remaining 10 per cent will be allocated to the fees and charges payable to the MEP. So that's good.

I really support this bill. I think it's a step in the right direction. I would just add before I conclude that one area that I think should be addressed by the government from now on is cross-jurisdictional or interprovincial co-operation because some parents might leave Alberta and go to B.C., for example, and it takes longer to talk to the equivalent of the MEP in B.C. and try to get the money from there. Maybe talk to the federal government, that they can possibly take over the MEP program and administer it federally, and we could be the Alberta branch, and British Columbia would be the B.C. branch, and so on and so forth and have cross-jurisdictional co-operation. Having one database where all the payments are registered, where all the outstanding debts are catalogued and listed, and then having one agency federally looking at it would definitely alleviate a lot of pain and suffering. People change addresses. They move from one jurisdiction to the next. It makes it really difficult to track the money and to track the debtor to extract that money from him or her.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity, and I invite further comment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 6, Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006. I want to thank the minister for addressing in some considerable detail several of the questions that were raised in the debate on this bill in second reading. Certainly, for me many of those questions have been addressed to my satisfaction. I had questions about substitutional service orders, allowing for alternate arrangements, financial examinations. Those have been answered. The director of MEP's power to file maintenance orders with the court on either party's behalf was another set of questions that I had. They've been answered.

Mr. Chairman, having heard the minister address those questions in detail, I really don't have much more to add to what I've already stated with respect to my support for this bill. With those questions addressed and clarification provided, I'm happy to support the bill because I think it will make life easier for everyone and certainly make the MEP program much more effective.

I have one question here, and it just occurred to me as I was going through what the minister had said. The discretionary powers of the director of the MEP are quite considerable. Perhaps they have been further enhanced. There's always a question of how good the director's judgments are when they allow that kind of discretionary power to one office or to one person holding that office. That's the only question that came to mind. Are there any ways in which a director's use of discretionary powers can be either challenged or examined by a third party or can be appealed? Those sorts of things come to mind. You know, to have a fair procedure, which is very important in matters of dispensing justice, is an important one, I think, and I just raise it as a question that I'm curious about. It's an enormous amount of discretionary power to the director, and I hope that it works well. It will address, I think, many of the problems that the minister and his staff have identified and then have proposed legislation to address.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A few brief comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora asked in general why we are making some of these changes. I think it's to facilitate the process so that it is going to be easier for those who are part of this process. I must say that the debtors who become part of the financial examination process, I would think, in many cases would be some of our more difficult cases because people who are paying and who are complying clearly don't get into that particular process.

That being said, I rely upon the information that is provided by the experts; that is, the director of the maintenance enforcement program. I am told that there is incredible success when people actually get into the financial examination process. There is great confidence by the director and other people from the program that these changes, while on the surface appearing to be of a conflict nature, the fact that they're in the same room and they'll be able to discuss these matters, gives the director and his staff a belief that they will be more successful in accomplishing the goal of collecting the money and entering into meaningful and successful repayment programs. That is what I am told. That is why we are bringing it forward, and we will monitor it like we monitor all of our changes to see whether or not our belief is in fact ultimately reflected in the product.

To the Member for Edmonton-McClung and to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I would say this about the future and future potential changes. The last examination of this bill was a number of years ago. In fact, it was just a few months ago that we brought in the last of the recommendations from that particular review. I would anticipate that in a couple of years or so we will probably be considering reviewing the program again in light of the fact that we brought in a number of amendments over the years to examine how they are working, to see how other jurisdictions are operating. This is clearly a program that will continue to be under review. We want it to be as efficient and effective as possible. We are all in agreement as to the appropriateness of the goal of the program.

I certainly appreciate the support and the comments of the members who have spoken to it and look forward to your continuing support as we move this through. Thank you.

Bill 7

Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to make a few comments with respect to Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, in committee. I'd like to thank the hon. members for Edmonton-McClung and Edmonton-Strathcona for their comments in support of the bill at second reading.

The Assembly heard from me in second that the amendments are designed to adjust wording to clearly indicate that a personal injury lawsuit involving the motor vehicle accident claims program can be commenced in either the Court of Queen's Bench or Provincial Court, and accordingly terminology in the act will be changed to reflect that.

I'd like to provide some additional explanation to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, who had some important comments to make. The question was asked whether a person could begin his or her own action without a lawyer as the system works today. In fact, Mr. Chairman, the ability does currently exist, but in this particular piece of legislation it's not as clear as it could be, and it's that lack of clarity that gives rise to the amendments here although it's certainly clear that whether you're in Provincial Court or whether you're in Queen's Bench, you can go there and proceed on your own as a self-represented litigant.

The concern is that the act here uses language that is particular to the Court of Queen's Bench. Therefore, a citizen wishing to commence a lawsuit for personal injuries in Provincial Court may read the act and be left with the mistaken impression that they cannot do so. That clearly is not the practice today, but we're trying to ensure that our legislation reflects the practice.

They may read the terms of the act that are different from what they may be reading from other sources. For instance, a person reading an Alberta Justice publication or viewing the Alberta Justice website on how to commence a claim in Provincial Court will notice certain key words such as "civil claim," "dispute note," and "notice of application." All of these terms are associated with the Provincial Court. In the current legislation, however, these terms are referred to as "statement of claim," "statement of defence," and "notice of motion," and all of those terms are associated primarily with the Court of Queen's Bench. Once again, we want to ensure that there is no confusion or misunderstanding as to a person's legal right to sue under the act in Provincial Court or to act without legal counsel.

One amendment, Mr. Chairman, deals directly with wording that is more inviting to a self-represented litigant. In the current version of the act section 25(2)(h) states that a barrister and solicitor but not a self-represented litigant may be paid for costs of services performed subsequent to the judgment being obtained. The amendment is removing the words "barristers and solicitors" so that self-represented litigants can be reimbursed for any costs they incur as well. As you can see by this example, these changes are important to our overall goal of improving speedy and efficient access to justice for Albertans.

Further changes to the act, Mr. Chairman, include the following: wherever the act says "statement of claim," it will also now say "or civil claim." Wherever the act says "statement of defence," it will also now say "or dispute note." Wherever the act says "notice of motion" or "originating notice," it will also now say "or notice of application."

Section 4 of the act is being amended to reflect that an agent other than a barrister and solicitor in Provincial Court may represent the Administrator. In section 4 the act is being amended to specify what the Administrator may do on behalf of the defendant in Provincial Court or the Court of Queen's Bench, since procedurally there are certain differences between the two levels of court and they are governed by different legislation.

Section 18 is likewise being amended to state that legislation governs how to proceed with an action, depending on the level of court the action is commenced in.

Also, for housekeeping purposes some other changes are being made. Wherever the act says "solicitor," it will now say "barrister and solicitor" instead because these terms are not differentiated under Alberta law.

For consistency with the rest of the act section 11 is being amended to say "defendant" instead of "person."

Section 17 is being amended to reflect that the plaintiff may receive payment by either a judgment or a settlement, as the case may be. Current wording uses only the term "judgment."

Mr. Chairman, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act protects victims of uninsured and unknown drivers by ensuring that they have someone from whom to recover. This is a very important program for Albertans. It's important that these changes proceed so that the act reads clearly and that there is no confusion or complication for people who access Provincial Court relative to this piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few words about Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006, now in Committee of the Whole. I appreciate the reference to the importance of the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act and its ability to protect victims of uninsured drivers by facilitating the process of appealing for damages for personal injury. Very important.

I guess it's important to smooth things out, to make sure that it's clear that there's a reference both to the Court of Queen's Bench and to Provincial Court. My understanding was that most people would go to Provincial Court because that's an issue of small claims. Right? For anything below $25,000 you go to Provincial Court; if it's over $25,000, you go to Queen's Bench. Is that the distinction?

Mr. Stevens: Right.

Dr. B. Miller: This simply facilitates this so that a person knows what direction to go, I guess, in order to recover damages for personal injury.

This amending act allows for the provision that litigants can choose to pursue a case without legal counsel and represent themselves, as was mentioned. I assume that that would speed up the process for some people. The hon. minister mentioned the words "barrister and solicitor," and I wasn't sure why that was added. In the world I come from, there are cardinals and bishops and priests and so on. I guess that in every profession there have to be lots of categories, and this is an attempt to be more inclusive.

I went through this very carefully line by line, but I have nothing to add in terms of questions, so there's no doubt that we'll support it. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I looked at Bill 7, I realized that the current wording of the act presumes that all actions are resolved in Court of Queen's Bench and that all litigants must be represented by legal counsel. This amendment changes these provisions to allow an action to be commenced in either Court of Queen's Bench or Provincial Court. It also allows for the new provision that litigants can choose to pursue a case without representation. An effect of this is also that litigants will not have to have representation by a lawyer to commence action.

The move to allow actions in Provincial Court means that the litigants are bound by the Provincial Court Act, which has a less complex process and does not require a lawyer. This act will improve access to justice for Albertans involved in these types of claims by giving a choice of whether to have representation or not. As well, it will free up time in Court of Queen's Bench to hear cases of a more serious nature. I support the intent of this bill, and I'd like to thank the minister for the explanations.

As a victim of a motor vehicle accident I find this bill one that I can identify with in many ways. My accident was in June 1972, a few months after the province deemed to no longer have the unsatisfied judgment fund, I think it was called. I was hit by someone who was an assigned risk driver who had no insurance or driver's licence. The anguish my family experienced with my injuries was exacerbated by the anxiety about a possible settlement or going to court and experiencing costs with no likelihood of a reasonable outcome. So we chose not to proceed but to release that energy and that concern and focus on moving forward.

I notice that the limit for small claims was changed in 2002 to $25,000 from $7,500. This is positive, but it is pitifully little when injuries result in lifelong pain and need for accommodation. I believe now – and I'm asking: is this correct? – that victims still would have to sue and hope that compensation will actually happen if the $25,000 is deemed not to be appropriate for meeting their needs. If that's the case, this is unfortunate, and it's unfair when the victim does not get the settlement even though the court system rules such an award. I do know of many cases where that has been ruled, but the victim does not get the money. Every effort is made to get it, but it just doesn't come.

That's my only concern, and that's sort of an aside because this bill serves to increase access to justice for Albertans, and that's a positive step. It's a good move for those who are attempting to obtain damages for injuries suffered from a motor vehicle accident. It is a positive step as long as those injuries aren't so severe that they should have, I think, more compensation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to take part in debate in committee on Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act. Thanks again to the minister for providing some additional clarification information on the various subsections of the bill. Since we're dealing with two different courts, and there are two different procedures for the courts, some changes are simply clarifying which rules apply to which court.

One thing that caught my attention was when the minister said that given that the small claims amount has been increased to $25,000 – I think it's about three years ago or four years ago that it happened. Since then, according to the minister's comments during second reading, more Albertans are now opting to go the route of the Provincial Court, the small claims court, and they're doing so because it's often faster, less expensive, and legally less complex and complicated. It all sounds very plausible, but this would have then led, I think, to an increase in the caseload for Provincial Court. I wonder if the capacity of the Provincial Court to deal with an increased caseload has been enhanced. If not, then the assumption that going to the Provincial Court will expedite, you know, the matters I think would be frustrated if the number of judges is the same, if the number of court hours is the same, and more people are going there to seek settlement. So that's the main question that comes to mind.

The second one. I heard, at least read somewhere, I suppose in the press some day, that the courts are becoming a little bit frustrated with people who represent themselves as they go to the court. Certainly, the Provincial Court allows people to appear before it without any legal advice or without any person representing them, without legal representation. If that is also the case for the Court of Queen's Bench, I think it's with the Court of Queen's Bench that some frustration has been expressed by judges with respect to those people who choose to represent themselves. Given the complexity in the way the Court of Queen's Bench proceedings happen, that may make matters even worse, you know, when you allow people to go there on their own. Any changes by way of these amendments that might cause more frustration at the level of the judges in the Court of Queen's Bench? If not, that's fine, but the other questions certainly remain. You know, what happens to the caseload in the provincial courts as a result of this?

Other than that, I think the changes are helpful. They'll certainly allow settlements to happen without too much cost, without too complex a legal route to be followed by the people who go to these courts. So I support the bill in general.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate briefly in the debate this evening on Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006. Earlier I was reviewing this act with our critic on this side of the House, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. At first glance I thought this legislation was a result of changes that had been made to the Insurance Act, specifically the cap on pain and suffering. I'm cautious in my support of this bill and certainly do not think that is the reason why there has been a need for this bill.

When we review this bill, we see that the small claims court limit was raised to $25,000 going back three and a half years, Mr. Chairman. When that happened, making that at the time the highest ceiling in Canada – the increase then had been from $7,500 – it was thought that it would take some of the judicial load out of the Queen's Bench and into the Provincial Court, but I'm not so sure that this bill is a consequence of those changes.

Now, I understand that this change was made necessary by an increase in actions in the Court of Queen's Bench. I don't know why we have waited three and a half years, but so be it. We certainly have to ensure that there is timely access to justice. If there have been problems in the past three and a half years, hopefully these changes will address those problems.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to any other hon. member that may wish to speak on this matter. Certainly, as I have a look at this, it seems to be in step with what occurred in 2002.

Thank you.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to start out by thanking the hon. members for their most excellent observations. There are a few points I'd like to make. The purpose of this legislation, really, is to ensure that the wording reflects the practices in both Provincial Court and Queen's Bench. That's the essence of what we're doing here. It was drafted with a Queen's Bench lens, and it is necessary to have a Provincial Court lens also. That is what we are doing, so it reads for both.

I'm sure that it should have been drafted with both perspectives in the first instance; however, the increase in the limit of Provincial Court from $7,500 to $25,000 enhanced the likelihood of personal injury actions being brought at Provincial Court and, hence, the likelihood of actions where there are uninsured or unknown drivers giving rise to personal injury being advanced in Provincial Court. It's just simply a combination of things that could have been drafted this way initially, but we're doing it now to bring it up to date. That's the thrust of it.

Just a few observations. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked some questions. The self-represented litigant issue is an issue that we have in all of our courts, whether it's a Provincial Court, Queen's Bench, or Court of Appeal. In fact, last year when I met with the representatives of the three courts and I said to them "Let's see if we can identify one issue that is common to all of us, whether it be the courts or Alberta Justice, that we can work on together in a unified fashion to see if we can enhance the issue," it was the self-represented litigant issue that was identified.

I can tell the hon. member and all members that at this point in time we are devoting energy and resources, including representatives from Provincial Court, Queen's Bench, and Court of Appeal together with Alberta Justice representatives, to develop strategies to enhance information to self-represented litigants appearing in all courts. That is going to be an ongoing effort for some time. You don't solve and don't deal with that issue in a year or two. I can tell you that all of the courts and Alberta Justice are working on it. So you're right: it is not simply a Provincial Court.

The court capacity did expand in Provincial Court in a modest way, and I think tomorrow, perhaps, if you pay keen attention to the budget, there may be some good news relative to Alberta Justice in that regard. I can't tell you any particulars. I just want you to pay keen attention tomorrow afternoon when the hon. Minister of Finance provides us some very good detail on what may be occurring there. Of course, you will have an opportunity to grill me later, perhaps in April or May, and I'll be happy to provide the detail at that time.

You can bring an action in Queen's Bench for any amount. There is no threshold amount. Practically speaking, I think it's fair to say that you're not going to be commencing too many actions in Queen's Bench for a modest amount of money because the cost associated with the process is relatively high compared to a provincial court. I'm talking about filing fees and things of that nature. Of course, if you use legal counsel, it becomes very difficult to justify for modest amounts. That's why people are self-represented litigants at Provincial Court, for those two reasons. But you don't have a minimum amount in practice.

We use barrister and solicitor because in Canada, in Alberta, you are upon becoming a member of the Law Society of Alberta a barrister and solicitor. The English practice is to be a barrister or a solicitor, and the reason that we're changing it here is so that there's consistent wording. There's no magic to it. It's just that barrister and solicitor is what they are called. Albeit that they probably practise as a barrister or as a solicitor, they are called both.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods made a couple of points. I believe that the limit under this motor vehicle accident claims fund legislation may be a hundred thousand dollars. I don't have the material in front of me. If you have a claim for greater than $25,000, you have two choices: you can bring it in Provincial Court and waive the amount above $25,000 and seek a judgment for $25,000 or less, should it be that that's all you can establish, but you can sue for more in Queen's Bench, and there's a maximum amount that you can claim under the act.

One of the other things that's changed since 1972 – and I don't know whether it was offered then – certainly is the prevalence as an option in insurance coverage of the SEF 44 coverage, which is the uninsured motorist coverage. Effectively, the way it works is that you can buy coverage that says that the amount of your insurance policy that you have for third-party liability will apply for your benefit in the event that you are involved with an uninsured or unknown motorist who causes injury to you. You buy basically third-party liability for your own benefit and the benefit of people who are insured under your policy and who are riding with you in your vehicle. I don't know if that was available in 1972, but certainly it is pretty prevalent today, and it is something that I think is wise for people to take because it provides probably more than $100,000 in terms of coverage for the type of situation that you were involved in, unfortunately.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006?

Bill 8

Trustee Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start by clarifying a few points raised by members in second reading of this Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006. First, Mr. Chairman, it's important to note that this bill is not a correction of past errors but is part of a planned process leading to the modernization of the investment rules in the Trustee Act. The amendments introduced in 2001 were intended as a first step to better investment rules. The passage of time was necessary in order to give trustees of pre-existing trusts time to become familiar with the 2001 changes.

The second point, Mr. Chairman, relates to the other acts that are amended by this bill. Some of the other ministries impacted have chosen to establish investment rules by regulation. This does not mean that these departments were not willing to co-operate. Consequential amendments were made to legislation of other departments. It's up to those other departments to decide how to set up their own investment rules. Each of those departments will be consulting with their appropriate stakeholders in the development of their regulations, and we encourage this due diligence. Putting investment rules into a regulation makes it possible for those rules to be updated more regularly. This ensures that the regulation remains consistent with the existing investment options.

In terms of regulations to the Dependent Adults Act, at this time we are not making any substantive changes to the investment rules because that act, along with the Personal Directives Act, is currently part of a comprehensive review. The ministries of Seniors and Community Supports and Justice initiated the review in the summer of 2005 and have conducted extensive public consultations regarding possible changes to the two acts. The review, which is being chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, is looking at many issues, including the rules that should govern investment by trustees under the Dependent Adults Act.

Mr. Chairman, I'd also like to address specific questions regarding the prudent investor rule and how the trustee is monitored. These amendments do not change the rules regarding monitoring of investors and penalizing of improper or inappropriate investment. The act does not provide for the government to monitor trustees. The person who set up the trust, the beneficiary, or other interested party monitors the trusts. Under the act trustees can seek from the court an opinion, advice, or direction on any question affecting the management or administration of the trust property.

If a trustee is believed to have improperly handled or invested trust funds, the court can be asked to determine liability and assess the damages payable by the trustee. It should be noted, though, that less than optimal returns are not sufficient grounds for the court to find the trustee liable. If someone believes that the trustee has acted improperly, the potential plaintiff would have to do more than show that the trustee could have adopted a different investment strategy that would have produced better returns. The plaintiff would have to show that no trustee exercising reasonable skill and prudence would have invested in the way that the defendant trustee invested.

Those are some responses to the questions that were raised in second, and I seek the support of the hon. members. Thank you.

9:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of the bill is to replace the legal list and all references to it in other legislation. Given the acceptance of the prudent investor rule, I turned to something provided by Alberta Justice – namely, Amendments to the Trustee Act Change Investment Guidelines for Appointed Trustees – to try to make some sense of this.

Proclaimed on February 1, 2002, the Trustee Amendment Act 2001 legislated the “prudent investor rule”, which specifies that a trustee must make investment decisions based on reasonable returns while avoiding undue risk.

Then the guidelines go on to explain some of the highlights of this legislation, referring to, “Unlike the ‘legal list approach’, the prudent investor approach expressly instructs the trustee to consider [other] matters” in terms of investments.

As the hon. minister has said, there’s a kind of staged-in process where the legal list now needs to be taken out of the legislation and set aside. Given what was there before, it was necessary. If a trustee wanted to go beyond that list, the trustee was bound to go to the Court of Queen’s Bench for an order permitting the trustee to invest funds in accordance with prudent investment standards. So this facilitates things considerably by removing the legal list. That’s my understanding, and I don’t think the bill really goes any further than that. Most jurisdictions and other places have replaced the legal list approach with the prudent investor approach, and this is something that seems quite in order.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: I’ll be very brief, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to speak on Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act. I indicated our support for the bill in its second reading.

I had raised a question about: if the prudent trustee rule doesn’t work and imprudent decisions are made, who does the monitoring? I understand that this bill surely does not deal with that issue, but I wonder if the Trustee Act itself does. This is the amendment to the existing one. You had mentioned how it works, but there must be some statute that gives people on whose behalf the trust is administered by the trustee that if they’re not satisfied with the way the trust is being administered or the investment is being made, they have some legal recourse. Which particular statute defines that procedure and opportunity for the plaintiffs, I guess, to go ahead is something I was sort of curious about. I know that the existing piece that we’re discussing here is not about that. It’s only about dealing with the transitional arrangements which no longer are needed, so we’re simply saying that they’re not there, that they won’t be there. I understand that.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to what this particular Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, seeks to accomplish, we are happy about that and in agreement. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 8, the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

Bill 11

Architects Amendment Act, 2006

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, 2006. The Architects Act was amended in March 2004 to provide an up-to-date definition for the restricted architectural practice of interior design. The Architects Amendment Act is needed to enable the Alberta Association of Architects to require its member architects and licensed interior designers to demonstrate continuing competence in their professions. By doing so, they will maintain their membership with the association.

These amendments would include licensed interior designers within the definition of authorized entity and would allow these individuals to be governed by all the pertinent provisions of the act. It would clarify that licensed interior designers and their employees can engage in the practice of interior design. It would allow licensed interior designers full voting rights to elect architects and interior designers to the association’s council. These amendments would also ensure that up-to-date regulations and bylaws can be developed for licensed interior designers and ensure that they are registered in the same manner as the architects.

Mr. Chairman, this act will help to clarify and strengthen the architect profession by allowing the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify its governance of licensed interior designers and enforce the requirement for mandatory continuing competence in their profession.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for this opportunity. This time I rise to participate in the debate on Bill 11, the Architects Amendment Act, 2006, in committee, and I thank the hon. member for sponsoring this bill. Bill 11 proposes changes that would allow the Alberta Association of Architects to clarify their governance, licensing interior designers and enforcing the requirement for compulsory continuing competency, which is great. I come from a profession myself that has strict regulations and guidelines as to the scope of practice and for continuing education that are strictly enforced every year. Professionals who fail to accumulate enough continuing education credits are sometimes suspended, and within a certain period of time if they continue to fail to meet the requirements, they’re permanently struck off the register and have to go through many, many hoops and hurdles to requalify. So this is good because now it shows that interior designers are moving towards a better governance structure and more competency in their field, which is tremendous.

The bill also clarifies that licensed interior designers and/or their employees, because sometimes they're big companies, can engage in the practice of interior design and allows them full voting rights when it's time for them and their colleagues, the architects, to vote on people who they want to elect to their association's council. Basically, it's a good bill to ensure that up-to-date regulations reflect the current practice and to make this organization comparable to other similar professional bodies, which is good too.

We all know that Canada and particularly this province, Alberta, are going through a very hot housing market. There is a building boom in this province, and there is more need for the services of architects and interior designers. Parallel to this, there is also a lot of need from owners of older homes who want to either renovate or upgrade. Sometimes they are increasing space or adding things like secondary suites, for example, or just doing renovations and upkeep to continue to live in their quarters.

Interior designers are hard-working men and women, a huge majority of whom are professional and trustworthy. They make our living spaces more beautiful, more inviting, and more enjoyable. I commend them on wanting to take this direction and going down this path that would regulate their industry and their profession more. I have a lot of respect for organizations that want to adopt such a governance model.

I know that committee stage is definitely for sectional analysis, studying the various provisions one by one, line by line, or clause by clause, but this time I'm not going to do that because overall it is a positive bill. I know that there were stakeholders that were consulted. The Alberta Association of Architects – they use the acronym AAA – were consulted and are supportive. Also, the Interior Designers of Alberta, who really this act affects the most, voiced their support when we in the Official Opposition asked them what they thought. For these two reasons, I would definitely voice my support and encourage all hon. members to do the same.

I will now take my seat and encourage further discussion. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very, very brief on this Bill 11. It simply seeks to include under this act licensed interior designers, so the changes are being made in every section or subsection of the bill to represent that addition of licensed interior designers.

I notice that there are some requirements with respect to the kind of training, skills, and abilities that they need to have and how they're going to be certified. It's certain that licensed interior designers meet those educational and training and professional requirements. I don't see anything else that really is of a great deal of significance that should require extended debate.

Interior design is an important occupation. It's growing in significance. They certainly inject life and colour and design to all kinds of spaces, small and big, and make workplaces and places where we spend time, either for living or for working, pleasant places.

Mr. Chairman, I don't have much more to say on it. I think it's a fairly simple matter. It's an extension of the Architects Act to include the licensed interior designers, and that's all for the good, I think. Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 11, Architects Amendment Act, 2006?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 11 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 17, 12, 13, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 11 and report progress on Bill 10.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 17, Bill 12, Bill 13, Bill 4, Bill 5, Bill 6, Bill 7, Bill 8, and Bill 11. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Third Reading

Bill 4
Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for third reading Bill 4, Daylight Saving Time Amendment Act, 2006.

I believe that we've had a full discussion with respect to this matter in second and in committee, and I would ask for support again from the hon. members in third.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just say in third reading on Bill 4 that I want to express my thanks. I'm not going to repeat this for all the bills that are coming, but I want to express my thanks to the hon. minister for his openness and his willingness to share the contents of these bills beforehand, which was very helpful, and also his explanations, a little bit of history on these bills, which are very complex. A lot of the issues come out of the courts, not this one in particular but most of them. I found it very helpful to have the explanations offered.

Now, with Bill 4 there's no question that we would support this, and the debate has been good. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister to close?

Mr. Stevens: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Bill 5
Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to at this time move for third reading Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2006.

I'd like to thank the members who participated in debate for their thoughtful comments, and I would ask for continued support. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Bill 6
Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure at this time to move for third reading Bill 6, Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006.

From the comments of the hon. members it's very clear that the purpose of this bill is well understood and very much supported, and the amendments are supported because they will enhance recovery for this important program, which at the end of the day supports the children of this province who are receiving support. So, Mr. Speaker, I would at this time ask for the continued support of the hon. members.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you. I was a minister actually. I still am a minister. Not a government minister, but I am a minister, a reverend. You know, that kind.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak on third reading of Bill 6. Now, this Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act has given many hon. members a chance to talk about MEP because in our constituencies we all receive many people coming to complain about the process and so on. Many of the people that come, their complaints are not necessarily justified because the whole point of the MEP is to protect families and take care of children in this province. There are a lot of difficulties, and most of the people who come to complain to me are men, actually, who feel that they haven't been treated fairly. So the provisions in this bill to allow a chance for people to go in and meet with the director and discuss their financial situations before they have to deal with court orders and threats of arrest is very important.

The effect of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I think would be to really facilitate the whole process of MEP, and anything we can do to facilitate the process is good. So I fully support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this chance to rise on third reading of Bill 6, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2006. I promise to be brief, you know, seconding the opinion of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora that the reason we're supporting these amendments is that they are geared towards providing funds to creditors more quickly. As indicated by my hon. colleague, again, children seem to be the group that is most affected by problems with custody and with financial support from one parent or one partner to the other. Any change that allows for those children to obtain the funds owed to them by debtors is a positive change, and it should be supported.

The amendments address some of the problems with application in practice, specifically allowing for the MEP to access locked-in retirement funds, as was previously discussed and as was the intent in 2004, the review that the hon. minister alluded to. These changes ensure that the debtors cannot hide a chunk of their income owed to the creditors.

This bill also brings maintenance agreements into line with provisions in the Family Law Act and encourages families to use these agreements as an alternative to going to court. This is a tremendous development, and it should be encouraged. Maybe it should be looked at for similar or other quarrels or disputes as a means of settling such disputes. The idea of using MEP staff as facilitators instead of always resorting to going to the Court of Queen's Bench is also a positive development.

This is just a brief summary of why myself and most of my hon. colleagues in the opposition felt that it was a worthy bill to support, and I voice my support in third reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Stevens: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Bill 7
Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure at this time to move for third reading Bill 7, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Amendment Act, 2006.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 8
Trustee Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Bill 8 for third reading. Bill 8 is the Trustee Amendment Act, 2006.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General has succeeded, I think, in having a record number of bills passed through two stages this evening, I think we ought to reward ourselves by taking the rest of the evening off. I therefore move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 22, 2006

1:30 p.m.

Date: 06/03/22

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Restructuring and Government Efficiency.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a few guests joining us today from Red Deer county: Reeve Earl Kinsella, councillors Reimar Poth and Jim Wood, and County Manager Rob Coon. They are here today to meet with both hon. members from Red Deer and myself to discuss very important municipal issues. I'm so pleased that these hard-working members of Red Deer county are able to be here to enjoy question period and to take an interest in the budget speech. They work very hard for all constituents of Red Deer county. They are joining us today in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask them to rise and get the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly three very good friends. First off, Louise Kidney, who's lived in our area for some time, Calgary-North West, has been a very good friend and supporter over all the years that I've certainly been in public office, has lived in Mirror, Alberta, as well. The second individual is Jeff Gaulin, who likewise lives in our area of Calgary-North West, attended parent meetings last night with Royal Oak and Rocky Ridge, looking for schools in the area. He's a very good person, friend, and supporter. Jeff actually works with Molson Canada. I should mention also that Louise has done a lot of work with SuperNet on behalf of the province over the years. The third individual is Ravinder Minhas, the owner and CEO of Mountain Crest breweries. His slogan is Damn Good Beer. I have to take that on the recommendation of others. He and Molson's can sort that out. I'll ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 64 enthusiastic grade 6 students along with their teachers, Mrs. Michelle Armstrong, Mrs. Krista MacGregor, and David Mireau, along with parent helpers Julie DeRose, Leah Steiner, and Jo-Anne Balla. They're all from the St. Mary elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you've read Parent magazine and you'll know that St. Mary's was the cool school last year. These students are here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government. They're seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great opportunity today to introduce to you a resident of Rocky Mountain House and a great golfer but also, more importantly, the superintendent of the Wild Rose school division, Greg Thomas. I'd ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, what a pleasure it is for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a young lady who hails from High Prairie, Alberta. She is a member of the PDD board in the northwest region, a small business owner, and, of course, an active member of the family farm. Recently she was elected as president of the Lesser Slave Lake PC Association. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the other members of this Assembly a group of very bright and able grade 6 students from Lacombe upper elementary school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Derek Rankin and Mrs. Carrie Lisafeld, some parent helpers as well: Mrs. Miriam Kunz; Charlene Drozd; Margaret Church, a very close neighbour and friend of ours; Mr. Alvin Peck; and Mr. Phil Boston, the bus driver. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of friends with me from Lacombe. They are Mr. Lennard Vanderschee, the chairman of the board of the Lacombe Christian School Society, and former board member Mr. Dennis MacLeod. They are also seated. I'd ask them to rise and receive our welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of active and inquisitive students from NorQuest College in the constituency of Edmonton-Centre. There are 11 students joining us today. They're in the public gallery, and they're joined by their teacher-leader, Mr. Allan Carlson. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two members of the St. Albert community, Ireen Slater and Bill Alton. Ireen Slater has a wonderful background in associations, the national one parent association and the RCMP Community Advisory Committee, and is also now president of the SUN organization, Seniors United Now. Mr. Alton is the St. Albert director of policy development for the St. Albert constituency, and he's also involved with the organization Alberta and Northwest Territories Regional Council of Carpenters and Allied Workers. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the Candora Society staff of Edmonton. The Candora Society of Edmonton is a not-for-profit organization with a mandate to address the needs of low-income residents of northeast Edmonton. The Candora Society promotes positive growth in the lives of women, children, and families in our community. The society connects people to increase understanding of each other, to reduce isolation, build self-worth, and enrich the community. I would now ask that the staff members of Candora rise as I call out their names and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly: the executive director, Debbie Clark, Kristi Beckett, Shelley Westwood, Jackie L'Hirondelle, Michelle Ackland, Melanie Aloisio, Susan Skaret, Ana Monzo, and Jane Awawias.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Art Macklin. Art, his wife, Donna, and youngest son, Nathan, operate a family farm in the Peace River country of northwestern Alberta, where he has homesteaded the land from the original forest since the mid-1960s. He is past-president of the Canadian National Farmers Union and is currently serving his second term on the board of directors of the Canadian Wheat Board. Art is also the chairman of the Canadian International Grains Institute. He is seated in the public gallery. I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a young man who exemplifies the promise of Alberta's youth. Visiting today is Erik Saude, the co-chair of the Alberta Graduate Council. He was involved in the postsecondary review with the Department of Advanced Education and is in the final year of his PhD in the faculty of medicine at the University of Alberta. Erik's research is focused on the development of nuclear magnetic resonance as a diagnostic and prognostic tool for pulmonary disorders. He is a varsity athlete. He received the Jimmy Condon award. He is ranked nationally in track and field and is an academic all-Canadian.

I have had the great privilege of spending time with Erik since he happens to be a constant companion of my daughter, Robyn, and I know first-hand that he is not only a fine academic, but he rustles cows with the best of them. Mr. Speaker, Erik Saude is seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Did you leave out anything?
Others? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly my long-time friend and past colleague Wendy Crawford. Wendy and I had the opportunity to serve on the Alberta association of adult and continuing education for a number of years. Wendy has stayed with that role, and of course I came here. Wendy is accompanied by a visitor from Texas, her friend Shirlie Childers. Shirlie hails from the Dallas-Fort Worth area, finds the snow a bit much, but we're delighted to have you here, Shirlie. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two Calgary entrepreneurs, Mr. Glen Gurr, who is an insurance broker in my constituency and a long-time community volunteer, and Mr. Trevor Tomanik, who is in the food and beverage and property development business. I assume that they're in the members' gallery, and I'd like everyone to provide them with a warm welcome.

Thank you.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Progressive Conservative Leadership Campaign

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we had one cabinet minister resign to pursue the Conservative leadership, and no doubt we will see others departing soon. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier please explain to the Assembly the concerns that prompted him to require cabinet ministers to resign if they are pursuing the Conservative leadership?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, I hate to say it, but really it is none of the Leader of the Official Opposition's business. The appointment of cabinet is the prerogative of the Premier, and I think that the question is entirely inappropriate.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, my second question is also to the Premier. For the record is it the position of this government that anyone seeking the leadership of the Conservative Party must not under any circumstances use government resources such as aircraft, automobiles, staff, or office supplies to support their leadership campaign?

Mr. Klein: To support their leadership campaign, no. That is forbidden. To conduct their ministerial duties, yes. They can use the resources that are available through the government.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that flight logs for government aircraft were freely accessible without FOIP until about two years ago, when the public became very interested in them, will the Premier return to a policy of full accessibility to complete flight logs so everyone can monitor the use of government aircraft by leadership contenders?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the use of aircraft by leadership contenders if they're using it for leadership purposes will be suspended.

Mr. Speaker, relative to access to the files it's my understanding that the last time there was a FOIP request, it involved boxes and boxes and boxes and just an extraordinary amount of administrative time. If the request is reasonable, I don't see a problem. Very often the request might be reasonable, but it involves a tremendous amount of time on the part of the aircraft staff and all of the public service employees. You know, we will try to accommodate the Leader of the Official Opposition and any other member of the public as best we possibly can if the request is reasonable.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will say to the hon. Leader of the Opposition that those aircraft logs will be available fully to everyone probably next week in the library.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Gambling Self-exclusion Program

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I spoke to a woman who had a serious gambling problem who told me how she finally convinced herself to sign up for the government's voluntary self-exclusion program, whereby a person with a gambling problem agrees to ban themselves from casinos. She was surprised to find out that the applicant has to wait two days, then bring the form back to the casino. In that two-day period her resolve failed, and she proceeded to go on a six-month gambling binge that cost her at least $75,000 and nearly destroyed her marriage. My questions are for the Minister of Gaming. Why does this government turn away gambling addicts who are pleading for help and tell them to come back two days later?

Mr. Graydon: One of the new initiatives that we just started is information centres in the casinos. There are full-time staff there. You can go up, discuss your issue with them if you wish, pick up printed material on problem gambling, and get information, actually, on the program that he's talking about. It's a program that has been very successful.

Mr. Tougas: Well, I'm going to ask the question again. Why is there a two-day wait period? Is it a cooling-off period? Do you want them to keep gambling?

Mr. Graydon: This has never been raised as an issue before, but I'll be happy to follow up on that.

Mr. Tougas: Well, will the minister commit to changing the rules here and now so that voluntary self-exclusion can occur immediately rather than after a two-day cooling-off period?

Mr. Graydon: No. I suggest that if that is the rule, it was put in after some research and due diligence, so I would expect that to happen before there was any change in policy.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Small Business Labour Supply

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good restaurants in my constituency are shutting down their lunch trade because there is no help. Small business cries for help, yet more than a million young Canadians between 18 and 25 are unemployed, close to $6 million budgeted for skills investment last year was transferred to pay for the AISH lawsuit, and 9 and a half million dollars the year before for skills investment lapsed, wasn't even used. For all the talk, skills investment has not been a priority for this government. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How will this government ensure that resources for skills development are actually used to alleviate skills shortages for small business?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, as we move forward with our long- and short-term labour force strategy in Alberta, issues like that, of course, will be dealt with. First of all, we want to deal with the short-term issue of ensuring that as the economy grows – and only the Liberal opposition would find anything negative about such a strong economy and so many jobs out there. In fact, in the time they spend criticizing that we have too many jobs, they could be helping us participate in the development of the long-term strategy. We spent close to $300 million alone through my department to assist in the transition of people getting off social assistance, for an example, and into the workforce.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: will this government continue to let the oil price driven, distorted labour market suck the life out of small business, or can it and will it energetically seek to train the unemployed?

Mr. Cardinal: Number one, Mr. Speaker, we should be thankful that we are blessed with a strong economy in Alberta. Only a good government will do that, and this is a government that did do it. In this area, of course, we are trying our darndest to train as many people as possible to fill these jobs that are out there. It was only 10 years ago, when you drove around the province, that there were people looking for jobs. Today when you drive around the province, all you see is job openings.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another question to the minister of human resources: how will the minister direct his department's immigration and skills development efforts to deal with the area of greatest need, the labour crisis in small business?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question because our first priority in Alberta is to hire Albertans first. Then there is also the aboriginal population, with very, very high unemployment. We're concentrating on that. We have the youth. We have persons with developmental disabilities. We also have elderly people that are wanting to get back into the workforce. In addition to that, we want the mobility of Canadians, to be able to move across the provinces to take jobs in Alberta.

In the area of immigration, Mr. Speaker, of course, as you are aware and as the member knows also, some of those policies fall under the federal government. There is a new immigration minister. I am in the process of setting up a meeting with that particular minister to determine how we may improve the situation of immigrants wanting to come to Alberta to live and work. As you're aware, in the past the feds have targeted to have at least 250,000 people per year immigrate to Canada. Now, Alberta in the past only received I believe 6 per cent of that, or about 16,000, and 3,000 of those 16,000 moved back to the larger centres across Canada. Therefore, we definitely need to improve the services, and we have to work with the federal government to do that. It's not in our mandate to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Long-term Care Standards

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier promised to implement every single recommendation of the Auditor General regarding the deplorable state of long-term care in Alberta. The government's failure to implement this promise has meant that tragic deaths and severe injuries to vulnerable seniors continue. The $36 million committed by the government so far is a fraction of what the government's own MLA committee said was needed. My questions are to the minister of seniors. When is this government going to replace the toothless Tory MLA led Health Facilities Review Committee on the management of long-term care facilities with unannounced visits and inspections done by an independent and competent authority set up for that purpose?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important committee that the member has addressed here today, the Health Facilities Review Committee. It's an excellent committee that I know has attended to any concerns that are related to long-term care and related to the care side of the standards. As you know, my area is the accommodation standards, but the Health Facilities Review Committee is under the purview of the Minister of Health and Wellness, and I'll ask that she respond to that question.

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister can provide the answer in writing.

Instead of downgrading seniors' care, when is the government going to require a registered nurse to be on-site 24 hours a day, seven days a week at every licensed long-term care facility in the province?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, care is not being downgraded, and you know that, hon. member, but I will refer this issue to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the questions about care in facilities quite properly belong with this minister. Standards and the new identified standards, which we've been in consultation on with not only providers but health authorities, are pretty well imminently ready to come forward to this Assembly, but I am not yet satisfied that they're in the proper form. We've done extensive consultation on them. We want to make sure they are achievable, and we want to make sure the plans are in place to effect them. So in due course we will be providing those standards.

Suffice it to say that the addition of the $36 million, the $25 million that allowed us to add more supports for lifting patients as well as supports for staffing in the third quarter have been embraced, and we've had many different accolades from groups that say that we are seeing improvements in long-term care as a result of it.

Mr. Mason: Accolades there may be, Mr. Speaker, but people are still dying.

This is to the minister of seniors. When is the government going to put a stop to the redesignations of existing long-term care facilities to unregulated assisted living facilities that either have lower or nonexistent standards of care?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, as I explained to you earlier, the responsibility for this service regarding seniors in long-term care is a shared responsibility between the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself, and I will direct this question once again as it's under the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will take under advisement the question from the hon. member, and we will collaborate and provide an answer.

Mr. Speaker, the inference at the start of this question that there is not adequate address of the Auditor General's remarks is totally in error. We accepted and put in place systems to try and work on every front, including support for medication delivery in the proper way and for reconfiguring the mix of administrative support so that long-term care facilities had that kind of capacity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Democratic Reform

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have just celebrated 100 years of democracy. In a recent editorial in the Lethbridge Herald they wrote about the democratic decline. There is no democracy where there is no accountability of elected representatives and the protection of what should be constitutional rights. Dar Heatherington and David Emerson, just to name two who have escaped accountability for their actions in the face of public outrage. Since 1994 B.C. has legislated recall, citizens' initiative, and fixed election dates. My question for the Premier: will he protect the future of Alberta and our property by entrenching property rights into an Alberta Constitution?

Mr. Klein: I don't know what the hon. member means by entrenching property rights in the Constitution. Mr. Speaker, I think that it goes without saying that people have a right to own and ensure the privacy of their property. I think that that is enshrined in law, but I would have to check.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It isn't as far as I'm aware.

Will the Premier level the playing field for the next provincial election – and I don't mean the PC leadership election – by setting fixed election dates?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no problems. It's a matter that hasn't been discussed by my caucus, but I've often said that for every upside there's a downside, that for every action there's an equal and opposite and mostly negative reaction, and that applies to many of the suggestions that come from the Liberals and the NDs. They all say: "Why don't you do this, and why don't you do that? Why don't you do the other thing?" But what we like to do in our caucus is do a reasonable assessment of any proposal and find out what the downsides are. You know, they don't recognize the downside. All they do is say, "Oh, this is an idea; accept it," without doing an assessment of the downside. I'm a firm believer in the law that prescribes that for every action there is an equal and opposite and mostly negative reaction.

2:00

Mr. Hinman: I'm looking forward to hearing the downside.

Mr. Speaker, my final question to the Premier: will he empower the people with the ability to say no way to the third way by putting people first and passing legislation for recall before passing third-way health legislation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the other way is about achieving sustainability in health care; in other words, about bringing the costs of health care in line with the rate of inflation. But if the hon. member considers it appropriate that there will be no money to spend on anything else by the year 2025 if health care costs continue to climb the way they are, if he thinks that that is okay, let him stand up and say so, and let the NDs stand up and say so, too, if they think it's okay. All we want to do is bring it back in line with the rate of inflation and improve accessibility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

West Fraser Timber Co. Ltd.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday West Fraser Timber announced that it's closing down one of the two of its pulp lines at Hinton Pulp. With the loss of 100 jobs, my question is to the Acting Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Is this a sign of trouble for the pulp industry in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that the North American pulp industry faces uncertain times due to certain global pressures, and Alberta, of course, is not immune to this. However, West Fraser is not in fact shutting down its entire operation as pulp mills in other parts of the country are. In fact, West Fraser is investing, investing $20 million to upgrade the mill to be more competitive in the long term in that particular industry. That is an investment in the future for the forest industry in Hinton and, of course, other parts of Alberta also.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplementary question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What resources are being made available to the 100 Hinton employees whose jobs will be lost as a result of this pulp line closure?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, as in my earlier answers to questions from the opposition we already spend around $288 million or so specifically to deal with situations of this nature. In fact, my staff has already contacted West Fraser officials to look at where we may provide additional services for the employees that may need some transitional support, including job and career counselling, resumé writing, job search assistance, and other transitional supports for people who need to move to new locations either in Alberta or in Canada or in within their community. Also, it just happens that there is a job fair in Hinton and Edson tomorrow that the employers have requested and will participate in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Telemarketing Investigation

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are by nature very generous people who are willing to offer their support for noble causes. Unfortunately, recent reports suggest that an Alberta-based private, for-profit fundraising company, Xentel, may be preying upon the generosity of Albertans, using unethical business practices. Government Services is currently conducting an investigation into these alleged abuses. My questions are all to the Minister of Government Services. Will the minister publicly release or table the findings of the investigation into Xentel's telemarketing practices?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, it is true that we are investigating the whole incident. What we know so far, of course, is that there was a charity donation made to two organizations from this fundraising activity, but we are making sure that there's not misrepresentation to people that may have contributed. So, yes, we will release all of the information from our investigation once it's complete.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Xentel records all of its telephone solicitations, will this government order these recordings to be made public to those Albertans who believe they were ripped off?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that we have the authority to require those taped recordings to be made public. It's a private company that talked to individuals. Whether we can force them to make those public I'm not sure, but of course our investigators have the ability to listen to the tapes and make sure that there wasn't any misrepresentation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that after receiving much criticism Xentel has promised to make its complete solicitation script available and has thus far failed to do so, will the minister commit to tabling the script once he gets it?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, in our role in the investigation we will make public our findings. Whether we can actually go beyond that and require that is speculative. I'm not sure that we have the legal authority to do it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Avian Influenza

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Experts have recently predicted that a deadly strain of avian influenza virus may be coming to North America via the conduit of wild birds which are migrating between Asia and this continent. They say that it's not a question of if but when the pandemic will hit here in Alberta. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister advise the House whether Alberta is fully prepared to deal with the risk of a pandemic influenza striking Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, along with Health and the Department of Municipal Affairs, that minister, and the Solicitor General and the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development many ministries are involved. I am satisfied that every day we become more fully prepared. Let me start by saying that avian flu is not necessarily pandemic influenza. If the avian flu migrates from birds to human beings and it then becomes an influenza and could certainly become a pandemic influenza, that is one of our major concerns.

Mr. Speaker, government officials, people, scientists working in laboratories have been readying themselves by looking at how the more recent strains of avian flu might transmit. Our medical officers of health are liaising with government officials, municipal officials. We have doses of Tamiflu for some 260,000 of the most seriously ill Albertans and front-line care workers.

Mr. Speaker, I think that at such time when it comes – and hopefully it won't come to Canada or to Alberta – then we are as prepared today as we can be given the nature of this particular flu, where we're not quite sure whether this virus is the one that either Tamiflu would protect us from or some of the other, more recent developments that we're working on.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: has the government formulated a plan to educate Martha and Henry on how to prepare for the possible influenza outbreak?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, a lot of that work is going on now not only with the chambers of commerce but by, for example, medical officers of health in the regions, who are educating local businesses, making sure in schools of the programs that encourage people on how they should behave if they've got the flu or to stay home when they're sick, to cover their mouths, and so on. Also, recently a wonderful session held by Capital health, the second of which I know we've had in the last several months, invited many of the scientists – Dr. Louis Francescutti, Dr. Mark Joffe – and talked about a plan to cope with a pandemic, reminding people how staff should be treated, how they should be talked to about if they stay home the day they're sick, reminding people about the various things they should do to keep their workforce healthy and sustainable.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm satisfied that as far as we have gone, the planning is in place, but we're doing more due diligence. I know that other ministries are looking, with me, at tabletop exercises to be sure that the plans are active and working.

Dr. Brown: My final supplementary is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Has the government instituted any programs to specifically educate and protect individuals who may be exposed to the avian flu virus through exposure to domestic poultry or wild birds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The key to biosecurity and protecting the poultry from avian influenza, or bird flu, is education and preparedness. We've been working with the industry for a number of years, actually, on biosecurity measures and a plan to deal with an outbreak of a disease like AI. We've actually been taking the lead in Canada in terms of preparedness and developing the plan to minimize the risk and spread of any kind of disease; in this case, it would be AI. We have an upcoming campaign to educate owners of backyard bird flocks because we view that as an area which may have some risk to it. We want to reduce the risk of domestic birds coming into contact with wild birds as much as we possibly can. To that end, in answer to the member's question we are definitely on an education track right now.

Water Quality of Lesser Slave Lake

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, Lesser Slave Lake is the region's most prominent natural asset. It's now suffering from the combined stress of forestry, agriculture, and recreation. The government has the ability to ensure that the lake remains in its pristine condition; however, they have failed to take action to steward this prestigious area. To the Minister of Environment: can the minister assure local residents that runoff from confined feedlot operations and local septic fields will not enter the lake?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and all members of this House and all Albertans that we will do everything in our power to ensure the protection of this lake that the hon. member has mentioned and that I know the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has recognized. We will do that. Yes, we will.

Mr. Bonko: Given a lack of trust in provincial government, will the minister empower local communities to engage in community-based water quality monitoring?

Mr. Boutilier: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but with all the boos I didn't hear the question. So I'm sorry; I'd have to ask the hon. member to repeat the question.

The Speaker: That's not exactly how it works, hon. minister.

Mr. Bonko: To the minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: given that residents told us that they have no faith in the NRCB's ability to address environmental impacts of expanding confined feedlot operations on the lakeshore, will they review the AOPA legislation and ensure that no raw sewage ends up in the lake?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we've been doing an ongoing review of the procedures involved in the NRCB's application of AOPA. Agriculture has been working on extension programs with producers. We believe that we have the best legislation in the country as it relates to intensive livestock operations. In fact, other provinces are looking to us to develop their own legislation because urban and rural communities need to coexist, and intensive livestock operations are a fact in agriculture. It's part of our value chain. It's part of how agriculture will grow in the future. We're very good at what we do, and we're very good stewards of the environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution-related Offences

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year our Legislature passed Bill 39, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2005, including an amendment to Bill 206, Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, which allowed law enforcement to seize vehicles in prostitution-related activity. On behalf of my constituents I thank the minister and all the members who voted for it. My main question today is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. My constituents are impatient after three years. Can the minister give the Assembly and constituents of mine an update on how long they have to wait before the law comes into effect?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows and I'm sure the Assembly knows, the law was originally passed in the spring of 2003. At that particular point in time we felt that there had to be some amendments, and those amendments were subsequently brought forward in May of 2005. Since that time, we've been dealing with the regulations, and the regulations have been around issues of essentially what to do with the car once it is seized. We have worked all of those out, Mr. Speaker, and we will be in a position within the next month or so, later on this spring, to make the announcement that this law will be taking effect, and this law will allow the cars of johns to be seized in the hon. member's neighbourhood.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the Solicitor General, who is responsible for law enforcement. Given that three years ago as the private Member for Calgary-Buffalo he brought in the bill – and I commend him for that and support him on that – can the Solicitor General tell us when law enforcement can start seizing those vehicles?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We anticipate this law to become an important tool for the law enforcement community once it does come into being. We will continue to work with Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation regarding this. As soon as the regulations are complete, police will have this additional tool, as I mentioned, and the authority to seize vehicles. We always have to support the public, whether regarding the efforts to stop those people who have disregard for residential communities or regarding the safety within these communities, whether it's drugs and alcohol or whether it's physical assaults or needles and condoms.

We also have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that enforcement is just one side of this issue. We need to ensure that there are also adequate programs in place to allow these young women to safely be removed from the streets to transition themselves away from being involved in the sex trade industry and, as well, so that they can get the help and support they need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that my constituents complain to me about the lack of city bylaws in Calgary that can be developed to control prostitution, such as prohibiting the sex trade near schools and residential areas, what can the minister do to encourage the city of Calgary to develop such municipal bylaws?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the outset let me say that Municipal Affairs certainly is supportive of any municipality's initiatives to establish bylaws that will result in creating safer and more viable communities. At the same time I need to point out that while the Municipal Government Act is enabling in nature and will allow for bylaws respecting the safety, health, and welfare of people and the protection of people and property and respecting people, activities, and things in, on, or near a public place or place that is open to the public, the municipal powers do not extend to areas of jurisdiction that include the control of activities that fall under the federal Criminal Code.

So creating bylaws that will accomplish what the member is seeking is a little bit tricky and does require some creativity on the part of the municipality. To that extent, Mr. Speaker, I understand that initiatives such as this are being discussed and sponsored by an organization by the name of the Community Life Improvement Council as well as the Canada West Foundation. In fact, a workshop is being held in Calgary on April 4, 5, and 6, and they will be dealing at that workshop with issues such as safe streets, safe cities, and seeking solutions. I hope that they're able to come up with those creative concepts that bylaws can work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

First Contract Labour Arbitration

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the worst labour laws in the country as far as workers are concerned. The province, frankly, is a haven for unscrupulous employers, who often treat their workers as second-class citizens. Tyson Foods is a case in point. After the ugly labour dispute in Brooks last fall the government indicated that they were prepared to look at first contract arbitration. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: can the minister tell us when he's going to do the right thing and bring in first contract arbitration?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, like the Liberals, only the NDs would find something negative about too many jobs in Alberta and such a strong economy, but we'll have to live with that. That's why they're the opposition.

I just want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the labour laws in Alberta are probably the best in North America.

An Hon. Member: Probably in the universe.

Mr. Cardinal: Maybe the universe even, Mr. Speaker. They are the best.

Presently in Alberta with such a strong economy, so many jobs out there, many industries are moving to Alberta to set up purposely because Alberta's environment as far as the labour situation is really good. In fact, over 99 per cent of all collective agreements – that's 1,200 collective agreements – are in place and approved without any disruption at all.

Mr. Martin: No doubt the best labour laws in the country for people like Tyson. No doubt about it.

My question. The minister avoided it, so I'm going to ask again: what is it going to take for the government to move on first contract arbitration? Another dispute? Violence? Somebody getting killed? Is that what it's going to take?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, this particular issue is under discussion right now, and of course the member knows that any issue that is under discussion in caucus is not discussed in the House until a final decision is made.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's absolute nonsense. The minister said before that he was looking at first contract arbitration. It's not for discussion behind closed doors by this government. My question again: when is the minister going to do the right thing and move on first contract arbitration? This year, next year, or in a hundred years?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course this member knows that anything that's under discussion by our government is not shared in public until a final decision is made. Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Shared Responsibility for Seniors' Programs

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Continuing care health services have been separated from housing. This leaves the public uncertain of where to go for help and unable to identify who is ultimately responsible. It is confusing, inefficient, and an ineffective approach. We need to establish a system with clear lines of responsibility and accountability. To the minister of seniors: given that the minister indicated on Monday that she has a new concerns resolution process for continuing care in mind, would the minister describe this new process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to comment that the responsibility for continuing care is shared between the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself, but that responsibility is actually working very, very well. The area for accommodation and for housing that was mentioned here, the concerns resolution process as far as the standards related to accommodation in my ministry, what that would relate to is this: as we updated the standards through the MLA task force, one of the areas that we thought would bring immediacy to change and to help people in care if they did have a complaint was that that would be reported, it would be monitored, and it would be enforced. That would occur through a concerns resolution process. The concerns resolution process, for example, under accommodation would mean that if somebody had a concern about food, which many of the complaints in care to my ministry are about, then the staff would record that. They would report on it. That's what it's about, to actually resolve that for the individual and for the family, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier said last fall that consolidating seniors' programs and services is under active consideration, can the minister explain how this plan has gone forward or is being implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the shared responsibility, especially in the area that's related to standards, which I know the member is very familiar with, where this is coming together for supportive living and for long-term care is that areas such as designated assisted living and the long-term care are under the regional health authorities, whereas lodges and assisted living are within my ministry. But where it comes together is with the funding that we allocate to both.

I don't know if that assists you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. My next question would be to the Minister of RAGE. Has the minister assessed the efficiency or not of having seniors' care, housing, and programs divided between multiple ministries?

Mr. Ouellette: No, Mr. Speaker, I haven't. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Railway Transportation in Northern Alberta

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Canadian National Railway recently announced the acquisition of the Mackenzie Northern rail line, running from Smith, Alberta, to Hay River, Northwest Territories. CN's $40 million investment will see upgrades of the line, increasing train velocities, expediting train shipments. The development of the container handling facility in Prince Rupert is also becoming a reality, with potential long-term benefits for northern Alberta. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what are the implications of this new project on northern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The short answer to this question is that this project obviously is going to have wonderful implications for northern Alberta. The port of Prince Rupert is looking at having roughly 500,000 containers per year once phase 1 of the project is done. Again, this is probably the third or fourth time this session that I'm in a little bit of an uncomfortable position, and that is that I'm actually going to congratulate the previous federal government for the Pacific gateway strategy. This is a strategy that yesterday I reconfirmed with the new minister of infrastructure and transportation in Ottawa. This is a very important strategy both for northern Alberta as well as Alberta in general as well as the Pacific gateway to expand our export markets, to expand our export capability. Quite simply, this is wonderful news for northern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. The north still lacks a connection to the west coast because of the removal of the Watino rail line. Does the minister see a role for the provincial government in supporting rail infrastructure and development?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that's a very interesting question. Prior to CN taking over the short-line railroads, which were under provincial jurisdiction, there was an element of potentially helping the short-line railroads. I find it very difficult to attempt to help an organization or a company that is making 31 per cent profit, which is what CN is presently making. I believe the figures are very close to that. So this is very much an enigma. We don't necessarily want to enter into the market to be helping one particular company versus the other company. On the other hand, we do want to ensure that there is mobility, that there is a rail transportation in northern Alberta. Obviously, we are looking very closely at this decision. We are looking very closely at whether or not we do become involved in this, but we have to be careful because we simply don't want to be seen as subsidizing one company over another.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand the dilemma that the minister has. Still, looking at it from the northern Alberta perspective, can he please tell me how we can take advantage of an infrastructure without having part of it there?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we've done, obviously, is the northern road strategy, which the hon. member has been intimately involved in, and another thing that we've done is provide land for the intermodal port that the county of Grande Prairie is presently doing. So we're there to do whatever we can from an infrastructure and transportation point of view to ensure that the goods and services move and that the supply chain is very effective from northern Alberta right out to the port. We will do whatever it takes. We have to get over this issue about subsidizing one company versus the other. That's a very large philosophical dilemma that we're in in this particular situation. It was actually much easier when the short-line railroads were under provincial jurisdiction as opposed to the large railroads, which are under federal jurisdiction.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Sports and Fitness Strategy

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An active lifestyle is an important and effective way to maintain good health. By promoting sports and recreation, this government can contribute to a healthier population and decrease the cost of public health care. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Does the minister agree that fully implementing the Alberta sports plan would help to reduce the cost of public health care by promoting a healthier population?

Mr. Mar: The short answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the longer answer, though, is that the Alberta government through Community Development has had a long history of promoting sports at both the recreational and competitive levels. One can see the results of the recent winter Olympics, that were held in Torino, Italy. One can see the number of athletes that train right here in the province of Alberta that are members of Canada's Olympic team. One looks at success that we've had in World Cup events in skiing, cross-country, and downhill.

I would invite the hon. member to also see the level of participation at games like the Alberta Winter Games, that were recently hosted up in the Hinton area, where it was an extraordinary result, where some 2,200 athletes from throughout the province descended upon Hinton and the surrounding area and participated greatly.

So, Mr. Speaker, we do recognize this. The sports plan would certainly be an excellent adjunct to supporting what we already do, but we already do a great job, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: has the minister taken part in the third-way consultation to advocate for a fully implemented Alberta sports plan?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, certainly I have advocated for the implementation of the Alberta sport plan, but again I want to emphasize that participation of young people in athletic endeavours is very, very important. This is something that the Minister of Education certainly is aware of. Anybody who's been a Minister of Community Development in the past knows that kids that are part of a team are not part of a gang. Kids that are slinging around a tennis racket are not slinging around a firearm. Kids that are high on their achievement are not high on drugs. We recognize intuitively and statistically the value of participation in the arts, in culture, in sport, in recreation, and this has been a very important part of the emphasis of the Department of Community Development.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: has your department conducted any studies to determine the financial impact an Alberta sports plan would have on health care costs?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak with any knowledge about studies in the past, but I would tell you that a very effective program started by my predecessor, the Choose Well Challenge and the Healthy U program, seems to be having a tremendous amount of benefit in communities. A number of communities participated last year. We had 62 communities. We expect to have even more communities involved this year. If there are studies or data that I can provide for the hon. member, I will search that out and see if we can provide them.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds I will call on the first of a number to participate but first of all our historical vignette of the day.

Vignettes from the Assembly's History

The Speaker: As of June 1, 1972, the Legislative Assembly Act addressed the actual tenure of the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Since that time the leader was the leader on a full-time basis, unlike the practice which existed from 1906 to 1971.

Former Premier Harry Strom, Social Credit representing the constituency of Cypress, served in 1972. In 1973 James D. Henderson, Social Credit representing Wetaskiwin-Leduc, served for a brief period before Robert C. Clark, Social Credit representing Olds-Didsbury was elected leader. Mr. Clark served as Leader of the Official Opposition from 1973 to 1980. In 1980 Raymond A. Speaker, Social Credit representing Little Bow, became the leader and served to 1982.

Grant Notley, New Democratic Party representing the constituency of Spirit River-Fairview, served as the opposition leader in 1983 and 1984. Following Mr. Notley's untimely death, the current member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, a member of the New Democratic Party representing the constituency of Edmonton-Norwood, assumed the position and served from 1984 to 1993.

Laurence Decore, a Liberal representing Edmonton-Glengarry, served in 1993 and 1994, when D. Grant Mitchell became the new Liberal leader. Mr. Mitchell served as Leader of the Official Opposition from 1994 to 1998. From July 7, 1998, to March 12, 2001, Nancy J. MacBeth, a Liberal representing the constituency of Edmonton-McClung, served as the leader. In 2001 Dr. Ken Nicol, a Liberal representing Lethbridge-East, became the leader and served in that capacity to March 27, 2004, when the current member for Edmonton-Riverview, a Liberal, assumed the position.

Alberta has had 28 different leaders of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, 16 Lieutenant Governors, and 12 Premiers. While one, E. Peter Lougheed, was to be elected Premier of the province of Alberta in Alberta's first 100 years, four were to become Lieutenant Governors of Alberta, and that will be a subject of another vignette.

Alberta Association for Community Living

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I had the opportunity to attend the Alberta Association for Community Living's 50th anniversary celebration and annual family conference here in Edmonton. AACL is a family-based, not-for-profit organization that represents the interests of children and adults with developmental disabilities and their families. This organization believes in the importance of supportive, loving families and fully inclusive communities.

It strives to assist children and adults with developmental disabilities and to provide opportunity for them to grow up in supportive and understanding families, have a home in the community, and develop and strengthen the family relationships and friendships in their lives. The AACL provides supports to increase the opportunities for persons with developmental disabilities to be educated in inclusive classrooms, find and maintain meaningful employment, and develop other life skills that will help them be valued members of their communities.

As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, I would like to recognize the work of the AACL and the positive impact it has made in the lives of Albertans with developmental disabilities and their families. Congratulations to the Alberta Association for Community Living for 50 successful years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Challenge North 2006 Conference

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to draw attention to northern Alberta. Northern Alberta makes a significant contribution to Alberta's economy and the quality of life all Albertans enjoy, but it is only beginning to capture its full potential.

Much of the northern economy is based on resource extraction; however, the long-term sustainability of northern Alberta communities depends on adding value to our resources and achieving a high quality of life for northern residents. While many communities in the north are experiencing unprecedented growth, others are experiencing difficulties adapting to changes taking place in northern and rural economies.

Next month the Northern Alberta Development Council is hosting Challenge North 2006: Today's Promise, Tomorrow's Reality, a conference that brings together northern leaders to identify strategies to guide the development of their own communities and the region as a whole. Infrastructure, human resources, education, and housing are just some of the northern priorities to be discussed at this conference.

As a government we must make a commitment to provide the opportunity for these Albertans to build vibrant communities and economies through co-operation, innovation, and diversification.

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome all members to attend this important conference in High Level and to take a tour of the area. I look forward to being part of the process as we move forward as a whole province to ensure that northern Alberta is not overlooked and receives the investment and support it needs to grow in the future.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Catherine Druhall

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise in sorrow

this afternoon to pay homage to a constituent of mine whose funeral I recently attended. Mrs. Catherine Druhall first contacted my constituency office almost exactly one year ago. She came to seek help because she was fearful for the health and safety of her husband, John, who is a resident of a long-term care facility in Calgary. When she met with my assistant, she had books, binders, and boxes of documentation she had made documenting the poor level of care her husband was receiving and the times he needed acute care as a result.

Catherine spent time with her husband nearly every day until she could no longer walk, just one month ago. She spent time with him so often not only because she was a loving, dedicated woman but also because she was terrified of what might happen to him when she was not there. Catherine used every government process to try and get help. She received at best lip service and at worst outright intimidation. Catherine said one day: "We have always worked hard. We never cheated. We lived our lives with dignity, and my husband deserves to live out his last years in dignity and to die with dignity."

Catherine did live her last years with dignity, and she did die with dignity, because and perhaps only because she did not have to depend on long-term care in this province. Catherine prayed that after the Auditor General's report of last spring and the MLA commission report of last fall she might see positive change. Instead, this honest, hardworking, and caring senior died in fear of what would happen to John now.

Thank you, Catherine Druhall. Women like you created the opportunities that we enjoy today. In return, you and other seniors have been treated with disregard and disdain by this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Telus University Cup

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize some of the best hockey being played in our province, indeed our country. Now, to be clear, I'm not referring to the Edmonton Oilers or the Calgary Flames. The University of Alberta is hosting the Telus University Cup. This tournament features the top six university men's teams from across Canada. Over 200 athletes, coaches, and staff will compete for the national title from March 23 to 26 in Edmonton. The defending champion U of A Golden Bears will host Lakehead University of Thunder Bay, Acadia University of Wolfville, Nova Scotia, the University of Saskatchewan, McGill University of Montreal, and Wilfrid Laurier of Waterloo, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage everyone to take in some of this competition and experience exceptional hockey and possibly discover some future NHL talent. I would encourage all members of the House to join me in congratulating the organizers, sponsors, and athletes and in wishing them well over the next three days.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

World Water Day

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is World Water Day. Water is so fundamental to life that it is often taken for granted, yet lack of water and unsafe water is a threat to life in many countries of the world. Rural Albertans close to their source of water and intimately involved with its uses are most conscious of how vital to life, livelihood, and the precious ecosystems it is. They, among others, are increasingly anxious about the present administration of this resource and are concerned about this when most of the water is invisible. Weak systems of monitoring and enforcement continue to take their toll and affect 20 per cent of our Alberta population.

The Alberta government has stated in its Water for Life strategy of three years ago that groundwater and surface water must be preserved in pursuing community and economic development, but evidence of this is wanting. Our water is declining in quantity and quality. Industrial expansion is predicted to consume more water than agriculture this decade. In the case of oil and gas, activity has the potential to both contaminate underground aquifers and contribute to loss in deeper zones, where higher mineral content can make it unpotable. This is of particular concern in recent unconventional CBM activity burgeoning across the province.

What is the volume and quality of our groundwater? We don't know, yet government refuses to slow the pace of industrial development until we know. We must manage surface activities to protect this vital resource and move to full-cost accounting to ensure that industry and the public treat water conservatively and sustainably.

The Water for Life strategy remains largely a vision without major new investments and baseline measures and new regulations. Albertans have identified the environment as a close third in priority, yet it receives only 0.5 per cent of the provincial budget. Alberta is caught in a frenzy of industrial activity, population growth, and climate change that could leave future generations with a starkly different environment and an economy hampered by a shortage of water. We cannot be complacent about our lifeblood. We need leadership for smart growth. Government must take control of the profound industrial pressures on surface and subsurface water and balance them with ecological and human needs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and present a petition representing a hundred residents of Alberta from the communities of Sherwood Park, Edmonton, St. Albert, Fort Saskatchewan, Red Deer, Delburne, and Calgary expressing their concern about the proposed changes to the health care system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to submit a petition with 51 names: "We, the undersigned . . . petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to consider increasing funding in order that all Alberta Works income support benefit levels may be increased."

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings with regard to the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The e-mailers and letter writers are as follows: Christine Dober-Miller, David Langdon, Kim Tufford, Billy-Jo Schmidt, Dena Gillies, Katya Pekh, Sergei Pekh, Dawn Laprise, Barbara Brochu, Arlene Thompson, Sandra Krasowski, Peggy Flesher, C. Moorey, Eugenia Alcasabas, J. Oliver, Rakesh Kapoor, and Kaya Frayn.*

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also have copies of six letters regarding the provincial government's involvement with the national daycare program. These letters are from Linda Bourassa, Sandy Bowhay, Peter Adams,* Stacey Wickman, William Fedorak, and Ron Wickman.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to table six letters and the appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. These letters are signed by Gladys Wrynn, Ed Wrynn, R.J. Grant, Peggy Ziebarth, Samantha Pekh, and Maxine Howard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a letter requesting support for adequate funding for the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Edmonton Region Community Board to support individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. This is from Jan Ardis.

My second tabling is five letters with appropriate copies regarding the provincial government's plan for the future of daycare. The letters I am tabling today are from Dawn Schroeder, Kim Tufford, Teena Wilks, Ronald Pasnak, and Joyce Assen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Carolyn Pogue calling on the government to reject the privatization of the health care system.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of the Assembly my special guests from the outstanding Ernest Morrow junior high school, located in the hard-working community of Forest Lawn in my excellent Calgary-Fort constituency. I must point out that the better half of the Member for Foothills-Rocky View is a dedicated teacher at this school. There are 35 hard-working students here today accompanied by five dedicated group leaders and teachers: Shannon Donnelly, Marilyn Russel, Verna Oystriick, Darren Kiziak, and Diane Pham. I would like to ask all of them to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

2:50

The Speaker: With a great deal of trepidation, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is again indeed a pleasure and an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two young Albertans from the constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. Joining us for the budget are Graham Beaulieu and my youngest son, George Danyluk. Graham and George are both in their third year of mechanical engineering at the University of Alberta. Both of them will be working with Nexum this summer, Graham in Lloydminster and George in Fort McMurray. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in order to adequately prepare for the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance, the House is recessed until 3:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:51 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.]

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2007, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

15. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the messages from His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2006-07 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates, the 2006-07 government estimates, fiscal and business plans, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving Government Motion 16, I now wish to table the 2006-07 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2006-07 government estimates.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the government's consolidated fiscal, capital, and business plans for Budget 2006 as required under sections 4, 7, and 7(1) of the Government Accountability Act.

Also provided for the information of the Legislative Assembly are business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the same act.

head: Budget Address

16. Mrs. McClellan moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mrs. McClellan: As a proud Albertan it is my honour and privilege to rise today and present Alberta's budget for 2006, the first year of our second century. Mr. Speaker, 2005 was a special year for Alberta. We celebrated 100 years as a member of Canada's Confederation. Just last week we celebrated the 100th anniversary of the Alberta Legislature. Alberta has come a long way from that first legislative session, held in the Thistle Roller and Ice Rink, just a few blocks from where we sit today. Together Albertans have built a province that's gone from a remote wilderness with great promise to an economic powerhouse with tremendous achievements and boundless opportunities.

Alberta has always been a place for optimists. People like Karl Clark, who pioneered Alberta's oil sands discoveries back in the 1920s and refused to give up on his dreams. Karl Clark would be amazed at what's happening today. People like Dr. James Shapiro and his team at the University of Alberta, whose Edmonton protocol is giving new hope to millions of people with diabetes. People like our former Lieutenant Governor Lois Hole, whose passion for education and for life inspired us all. People like Arno, Steve, Glenn, Terry, Darcy, Rick, Tony, and, oh, so many others, who refused to give up when BSE turned their lives and their livestock businesses upside down. And people like our Premier, who has always believed in Alberta and Albertans, who believed that we could be the first and only province in Canada to be debt free and kept us firmly on track till that goal was achieved.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's history is defined by optimists, and if there was ever a time for optimism about Alberta and about our future, this is it. We enter our second century in a truly remarkable position. Our economy is leading the country. More people are working and earning more than ever before. Our education system is among the best in the world. Our colleges, universities, and technical schools are producing outstanding graduates, leading researchers, and thoughtful young people who will lead our province in years to come.

Leading businesses and entrepreneurs see Alberta as the place to achieve their dreams. Across the province there's a feeling that this is Alberta; the sky is the limit. Our challenge, Mr. Speaker, is to channel Albertans' optimism, their energy, and their ideas to take the best advantage of today's prosperity and secure an even better future for our province.

In a nutshell, that's what Alberta's budget for 2006 is designed to achieve. It's about strengthening today and securing tomorrow. It's about seizing today's opportunities and investing wisely to meet today's challenges. But most of all it's about keeping our eyes firmly on Alberta's future and making sure that everything we do today, every investment that we make helps build a better future for our children and their children.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2006 is Alberta's 13th consecutive balanced budget. It positions Alberta for continued growth and prosperity. It strengthens our position today, ensuring businesses can compete, communities can thrive, and Albertans can succeed. It invests in priority areas, saves for the future, and gives back to Albertans, keeping our taxes the lowest in Canada and helping people who need our support. Before I get into some of the details, Mr. Speaker, let me begin with the big picture.

For 2006-07 our budget projects a surplus of just over $4 billion. That surplus is largely due to continuing high prices for oil and gas. I'll tell you right now that the surplus could be more if prices are higher than we anticipate, and it could be less if prices drop. That's the reality that we live with in Alberta, and like every Finance minister under our Premier's leadership I would rather be pleasantly surprised with higher-than-expected prices than be forced to cut back if prices drop.

This year's surplus will be earmarked to three key priorities: saving for Alberta's future, responding to capital and infrastructure needs, and increasing the sustainability fund to provide added protection against any sudden declines in revenues and to respond to emergencies throughout the year.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce today that an additional $1 billion will be invested in the heritage fund in 2006. That's in addition to the $1 billion we invested earlier this year and our ongoing commitment to inflation-proof the fund. It's a direct reflection of our government's commitment to use Alberta's abundance of resource revenues not only to meet the challenges of today but to share that legacy with future generations of Albertans.

This year our government's base operating spending will increase by 8.3 per cent. As Alberta's Finance minister my focus never strays far from the bottom line. I'll be honest and say that I wish spending was lower, but I believe this is responsible spending for this year, and I am confident that we're making the right investments today to secure a better future for our province.

At the same time, I will also give fair warning to Albertans and to those who think that there's no end to how much we can spend. Do not expect this rate of spending to continue in years to come. We have learned the lessons from Alberta's past. We will not squander Alberta's future security by spending more than we can afford, and we will not spend money today, then pass on the bills to future generations of Albertans. Not on our government's watch. This year, Mr. Speaker, we will also review our fiscal framework to make sure that it continues to serve Alberta's needs now and into the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me talk about some of the details in our budget for 2006-07. This budget invests in five key areas: in infrastructure; in people; in communities, both rural and urban; in Alberta's environment; and in sustaining economic prosperity.

Over the next three years our government will support $13.3 billion in infrastructure and important capital projects. That's a 45 per cent increase over our previous capital plan. It's a level of spending that is unmatched in Canada. In fact, on a per capita basis we'll spend three times the average of other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, $13 billion is a lot of money, but it's also a very critical investment in Alberta's future. It will continue our investments in new and revitalized schools across the province. It will open up new spaces at colleges, universities, and technical institutes and make sure that Alberta has the highly skilled workforce we need. It will improve Alberta's access to leading health care treatments, and it will make sure that we have safe and efficient roads and highways all across the province.

Let me give Albertans just a quick list of some of the projects that this $13 billion investment will support: a new centennial centre for interdisciplinary science at the University of Alberta, the Campus Calgary digital library at the University of Calgary, the second phase of redevelopment of Bow Valley College, expansion of trades facilities at Red Deer College, the new Robbins health learning centre at Grant MacEwan College, expansion of Lakeland College in Lloydminster, a new water and environmental science building at the University of Lethbridge, and a new centre for apprenticeship training at NAIT.

In education, Mr. Speaker, 21 school capital projects will be completed this school year, opening up more than 7,300 spaces for kindergarten to grade 12 students across the province; 109 new modular classrooms will open up an additional 2,725 new spaces. Work will begin or continue on 51 previously announced school projects.

In health care, Mr. Speaker, our capital budget will support new health facilities in Sherwood Park and Fort Saskatchewan; the new Sheldon M. Chumir health centre and the bone and joint institute in Calgary; expansion of the Rockyview, Foothills, and Peter Lougheed hospitals in Calgary; redevelopment of the Royal Alexandra hospital in Edmonton and hospitals in Lethbridge, Edson, Barrhead, Viking, and High Prairie. It will replace the Eastwood primary health centre in Edmonton. It will continue building the new south Calgary hospital and the health sciences ambulatory learning centre in Edmonton. It will complete the Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute in Edmonton and move ahead with health information systems, including electronic health records.

On top of these projects, over $3 billion will go to Alberta's municipalities over the next three years to support roads, bridges, public transit, water and waste water and other infrastructure initiatives in towns, cities, and villages across the province. We'll invest $3.6 billion in Alberta's highway network, including critical work to begin twinning highway 63 to Fort McMurray, build ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary, and pave our high-volume gravel roads.

Mr. Speaker, this is a clear case of investing now, when we have the money, and putting our resource revenue to work for future generations of Albertans.

The second area I want to highlight today is our investment in people. Ask Albertans what they expect their government's priorities to be, and the answers are pretty clear: make sure our children get a good education, that there's a place for my son or daughter at Alberta's universities, colleges, or technical institutes; make sure I can get health care when I need it; and take care of Albertans who need our help, especially children and seniors. That's exactly what Budget 2006 is designed to do.

Total health spending will reach over $10 billion this year. That includes a 7.5 per cent increase in operating spending and nearly $700 million for health capital grants. Nearly two-thirds of operating spending will go to health regions to support everything from promoting good health to providing home care to running hospitals and transplanting hearts even in the tiniest babies. This year and for the next two years grants to health regions will increase by 6 per cent per year, giving them the certainty they need to plan and deliver health services to Albertans.

We'll follow through on Alberta's commitment to lead the rest of the country in cancer prevention through a combination of screening, research, and prevention. If Albertans like Dr. Tony Fields have their way, we'll prevent thousands of new cases of cancer, save lives, and maybe, Mr. Speaker, just maybe find a cure for cancer right here in Alberta.

We'll also take very important steps this year to build on our experience with the highly successful hip and knee replacement project and reduce waiting times for breast and prostate cancer care, coronary artery bypass surgery, MRIs, and CT scans.

By 2008-09 our annual operating spending on continuing care initiatives will have increased by $127 million. That additional funding will result in more hours of nursing and personal care in long-term care facilities, better access to therapy, expanded staff training, and implementation of new health care standards. This is in addition to capital funding last year and this year which is being used to support 1,500 new rural supportive living units and upgrade close to 4,000 units in 77 seniors' lodges across the province.

Mr. Speaker, these are substantial investments in the future of Alberta's health care system. Over the past 10 years spending on health has grown by about an average of 10 per cent per year. This trend cannot continue, or we will have a health care system that we can only afford with $60 oil and $7 gas. If we keep spending like we have been over the last 10 years, we're betting the future of Alberta's health care system on the price of oil and gas. That worries me, and it worries Albertans. Our government has launched a comprehensive discussion on what needs to be done to make sure that our health system is there when people need it and at a price Alberta taxpayers can afford. It's a debate that Albertans need to have, and it's a debate that will shape the future sustainability of health care in Alberta.

This budget also makes very significant investments in the education of our children and young people across the province. In 2006-07 our government will increase operating spending on basic education by over 5 per cent. Funding to school boards will also increase, including another $16.6 million to reduce class sizes in Alberta schools, especially in the earlier grades. Increased funding will also support technology, transportation, student health, children with special needs, and students whose first language isn't English.

This year the Minister of Education will also launch a series of round-table discussions talking to students, parents, educators, business and community leaders to find the best ways to increase the number of young Albertans who complete high school. A high school completion symposium will also be convened to address these issues.

In 2005, Mr. Speaker, postsecondary education was our government's number one priority, and that was just the beginning. Our commitment to postsecondary education will be even stronger in 2006-07. Operating spending will increase by 16 per cent, and over $270 million will be invested in capital projects at Alberta's universities, colleges, and technical institutes. By 2008-09 our government will have increased operating spending on postsecondary education by nearly 29 per cent and will have opened up 20,000 new learning opportunities for students across the province.

The first allocations will be made this year from the access to the future fund, providing support for up to $45 million in projects at Alberta's postsecondary institutions, and as announced already, Alberta's postsecondary students will not pay $1 more in tuition this year thanks to our government's promise to pick up the costs of tuition increases again this year. On top of that direct support for Alberta students, we will also increase funding for scholarships, bursaries, and grants by 21.5 per cent and increase the yearly loan limits to recognize rising costs for students.

Here are some of the other investments that we will make in Albertans, young and old, as part of Budget 2006. Support for the Alberta seniors' benefit will increase by over 8 per cent. Funding for AISH will increase by nearly 18 per cent. Money will be invested in affordable housing, and funding for children's programs will increase by over 12 per cent, providing additional funding for child care, for child intervention services, to support families of children with disabilities, and to step up our actions in preventing family violence and bullying.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are fiercely proud of the communities where they live. They want their communities to be good places to raise their families and build their futures. There's no doubt that many rural communities have been under an enormous strain. While Alberta's cities have struggled to keep pace with a booming economy, rural communities faced the devastation of BSE. Albertans stood by farmers and ranchers when BSE and bad weather took their toll, but it's really the rural communities that face the hard repercussions right in their own backyards. They see the impact today whenever commodity prices rise or fall, and they watch their youth and young families leave for the cities in search of further education and better jobs.

In spite of that, Mr. Speaker, rural Alberta is a place for optimists, for people who believe there's a future for rural Alberta and rural communities all across the province. I'm fiercely proud of my rural heritage. It's where I live. It's where my heart and soul will always be. I'm enormously proud of our government's commitment to rural communities, to their futures, and to the families who call rural Alberta home.

It gives me a great deal of pleasure to announce today that our government is committing $100 million for a new rural development initiative. This initiative will support a number of projects and help us move forward with implementing our government's comprehensive rural development strategy. We're going to work with rural communities, expand and diversify the rural economy, improve services, and enhance the quality of life in small-town Alberta. Details of this new initiative are still being developed, so I can only say to people in rural Alberta: "Stay tuned. There's more good news to come."

Mr. Speaker, this budget will also provide ongoing support to communities all across the province, large and small, rural and urban. This year we'll increase our funding for provincial and municipal policing, step up our efforts to combat organized crime, take steps to address the serious problem of crystal meth, improve access to the justice system, and establish a new initiative to handle high-risk family violence cases.

We will also spend an additional $7 million on provincial foundations: foundations for the arts, sports and recreation, parks and wildlife, human rights and multiculturalism, volunteerism, and historical resources.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are proud of their communities and rightly so, but they're also fiercely proud and protective of our environment. They value Alberta's land and water, and they want to make sure that it's preserved for future generations. With this budget our government will add to its investment in the Water for Life strategy. Over the next three years $172 million will be spent on municipal water and waste-water treatment facilities, on reducing the risk of flooding, and on testing and protecting Alberta's water supply. We'll invest $15 million in a new initiative to develop a comprehensive land-use framework for Alberta, a framework that will guide future decisions on how Alberta's land is used, whether that's to preserve sensitive grasslands, to open up recreation areas, manage growth around our major cities, or preserve our valuable farmland.

Twelve million dollars will be spent this year on initiatives related to climate change, including major research initiatives through the Alberta Energy Research Institute.

Our Premier has joined with others in the industry to champion a new future for Alberta's vast supplies of coal. We've all heard his passion when he talks about clean coal, and he's working hard to turn the skeptics into believers. Just like with the skeptics who said that the oil sands would never be viable, we're going to prove that the naysayers are wrong.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has coal reserves to last upwards of 1,000 years, and they contain some of the cleanest burning coal in the world. Alberta's coal contains twice the energy of Alberta's conventional crude, natural gas, and bitumen combined. Our challenge is this: to combine new technology with the ingenuity of Albertans to transform those vast reserves of coal into an affordable, reliable, and clean source of energy for the future.

Mr. Speaker, our Premier has said that a new day is dawning for coal, and it's dawning right here in Alberta. With our government's support the Alberta Energy Research Institute will partner with leading Alberta-based industries to develop clean-coal technology, technology designed to eliminate emissions and open the door to new, clean-burning alternatives to meet our growing energy demands. This is another area where Alberta optimists will lead the way, and the result will be a cleaner environment, a long-term source of energy in Alberta, and a wealth of new opportunity to expand Alberta's economy and build for the future.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy is stronger than ever, and all signs point to a continued strong growth in the near future. As one author put it, for the first time in our history Alberta is being widely emulated rather than casually dismissed. There is no doubt Alberta is the place to be, and there's no longer a chance that we can be dismissed. People are flocking here to get jobs and pursue their dreams. Businesses look to Alberta as the place to invest, pursue new opportunities, and build their futures.

Mr. Speaker, make no mistake. Alberta has to be able to compete not only with the rest of Canada but the rest of the world. To do that, it's not enough just to sell Alberta as a great place to be. We need to be competitive on taxes.

Our government will reduce the general corporate tax rate from 11.5 per cent to 10 per cent effective April 1, 2006. Mr. Speaker, I know that some will criticize us for this decision and say that we should give the break to small business instead or pass on any tax reductions to individual Albertans first, so let me put this in perspective. Alberta's tax rates for small business are already very competitive, and in comparison to the rates for bigger businesses small business today pays only 3 per cent. That was the target we set five years ago, and that target has been reached. We've seen no indication that our rates for small business are not competitive or fair. On the other hand, larger corporations face growing pressures to compete not only here in Canada but on a global basis. Alberta must be able to compete and attract business investment from around the world.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of tax reductions for individuals and families I also have some good news to report. Our priority again this year is low- and middle-income Albertans, lightening the load they pay and leaving more of their hard-earned tax dollars in their pockets, not ours.

As many will remember, Mr. Speaker, our first priority when Alberta's financial picture improved in the late 1990s was to reduce personal income taxes. As a result, from 1999 to 2001 our government phased in over $1.5 billion in personal income tax cuts, including the single tax rate and the highest income exemptions in Canada.

This year the basic spousal and eligible dependant tax credits will be increased to $14,899, compared to an average in other provinces of $7,800 for the basic credit – that's for the basic credit in other provinces – and $6,850 for spousal amounts. All tax credits in this province will be indexed, including the Alberta family employment tax credit. Together these changes will save Albertans about $77 million in personal income taxes.

Mr. Speaker, effective April 1 we'll also increase the threshold for health care premiums by $5,000. That means that a family with children will pay no health care premiums if their taxable income is less than $32,210. This is a direct benefit to 140,000 people, and it will save them $30 million in 2006-07 alone.

On top of these very important steps, Mr. Speaker, our government will also reduce school property tax rates by over 7 per cent and continue to protect Alberta seniors from paying increases in school property taxes.

We'll invest in research and innovation and continue to attract leading researchers to our province. We'll expand our research endowment funds, encourage innovation and faster commercialization of new energy technologies, invest over $50 million in life sciences research, and continue to support start-up business ventures.

We'll also continue to assist Alberta's agricultural producers in their ongoing recovery from the effects of drought, low commodity prices, and BSE. For the 2006 crop year we are extending the previously announced enhancements to the spring price endorsement and revenue insurance coverage programs. We are reducing the producers' share of production insurance premiums. These changes will provide some relief from rising input costs and sagging commodity prices while encouraging producers to protect themselves in an uncertain sector of our economy. In addition, we'll continue our efforts to promote value-added agriculture and secure a brighter future for Alberta's agriculture industry.

Taken together, these investments will make Alberta a fierce competitor for national and international business. It will maintain our commitment to small business, provide more certainty for agriculture producers, leave more money in Albertans' pockets, and support research, innovation, and leading-edge ideas.

Mr. Speaker, these are the highlights of Budget 2006. As I said at the outset, if there was ever a time for optimism about Alberta's future, this is it. With Budget 2006 we're determined to capture Alberta's optimism and hopes for the future, to address the challenges of today but, most important, to secure an even better future for our province and for generations of Albertans to come. We're also determined to play a strong leadership role on the national stage, contributing our ideas and experience and showing everyone that a strong Alberta makes for an even stronger Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the Premier's television address a few weeks ago I listened to the voices of so many Albertans. I heard them talk about their hopes and their dreams for the future, and I listened as they talked and our Premier talked about Alberta and the kind of things that are possible here if we just set our minds to it.

The comments from one young man struck me in particular. He talked of his experience as a youth and how he works with youth today, and he said: "I've always been told opportunity knocks once. Not in Alberta. It knocks several times on your door. You just have to capitalize on the opportunity when it's there."

Mr. Speaker, opportunity is definitely knocking on Alberta's door. We can hear it. It's all around us. With this budget, with the right investments, and with our eyes on Alberta's future we're ready, and we will capitalize on every opportunity that comes our way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Mr. Premier. Thank you, Albertans. To quote our Premier, welcome to Alberta's second century. With Albertans' unique blend of optimism, ingenuity, and sheer hard work, I have no doubt it will be even better than the first.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:05 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 22, 2006

8:00 p.m.

Date: 06/03/22

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 2
Drug-endangered Children Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't tell you how pleased I am to rise today and move Bill 2, the Drug-endangered Children Act, for third reading.

We've had many good discussions about this legislation and what it will do for some of Alberta's most vulnerable children, and I'd like to take the opportunity to address one issue which was brought up during committee. There is some concern that the part of Bill 2 which provides for an emergency apprehension of a child without a court order violates fundamental civil liberties. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reassure all members of this Assembly that this is not the case.

Apprehending a child is a serious matter and one that my ministry does not take lightly. These provisions are used in situations where clearly a child is at risk. Unfortunately, police and caseworkers aren't always aware of all the circumstances of a case until they go to investigate. They need to be able to respond to what they find, and this may include immediately removing a child from a dangerous situation.

I'd like to thank my hon. colleague for his concern and assure him that the aforementioned subsections are necessary to protect the children in our province who most need our help. These provisions have consistently been upheld by the courts as being constitutional.

Again, I'd like to ask the entire Assembly to support this important piece of legislation and help address this emergent social issue. Your support will put an end to the abuse that these children face. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had spoken actually against this bill I think in second reading. I have the same concerns now that I did then. There's been nothing coming from the government side that alleviates my concerns, and those are specifically that all the powers that are needed to apprehend children if they are in danger, in fact, exist now. So the purpose of this bill is unclear.

My concern about it is that it becomes a window dressing. It becomes something that can be waved around that we're protecting children, but in fact the actual resources that need to be in place for this – I don't see them being in place, and I'm a little concerned that we'll see a parallel to what we saw with the PCHIP bill, in which young prostitutes were apprehended and were supposed to go to a safe house when, in fact, there were no resources for the safe house. For the first period of time after the bill was in effect, there was no place to put these young women. I think that program has not been as successful as the government had hoped, but it's much flashed around as proof that somehow the government is doing something, and that's my concern with this bill that I see before me.

Everything that the government claims it wants to do with this bill it, in fact, can do now, and if it was really concerned about expanding the definition of abuse to include being in a house where toxic drugs are being manufactured or grown, then I question why the current definitions of abuse under the existing child and family act – and I never get that name right; sorry – aren't just expanded to include this additional definition of abuse.

So I, too, have some real concerns about how the effect of this bill ends up getting played out. I don't see the resources in place to make it operational. I question why we're not using the existing legislation, that we're piling on yet another layer here, which, to my mind, is inefficient government, not efficient government.

I share my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona's concerns about extraordinary powers that are being granted here. I think we have to always strive for that balance, and I know that that's difficult for child welfare workers and for the police that are dealing with these cases. This is not easy stuff. I just have real concerns that this is a bill that's all about grandstanding and window dressing and not about actually doing what the government professes that it wants to do because if it did use the laws that are there, resource them so that they're effective and get on with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments very brief this evening. It's not often in this Assembly that I find myself changing my mind on a piece of legislation. The other day when I spoke to Bill 2, I gave it my wholehearted support, and I would like to be able to do that still. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that particular day gave what I believe to be some very, very compelling arguments about the rule of law, particularly as it relates to sections (9) and (10) regarding the apprehension of a child.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that upon reflection over the last few days, I share as well the concerns of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and that doesn't mean that I don't believe there's an awful lot of good that is being attempted to be accomplished by this bill. But when we're talking about basic civil rights and civil liberties and in this case perhaps an unnecessary infringement on those civil liberties, I do in fact share the concerns of a number of my colleagues in this Legislature, and I'm not so sure that I'm going to be able to continue to be able to offer my full support of this bill unless we can address those two clauses that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona addressed in his comments the other day.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. My concern with this bill is that once the children are apprehended, do we have the facilities and do we have the operational budget to support them? Whatever hell we've taken them out of, I want them to have an opportunity to recuperate, to be placed in the care of loving foster families, possibly the opportunity for the parents who went down this wrong road to have an opportunity to receive counselling with the hope that maybe these damaged families can be brought back together.

This reminds me a little bit of what we were trying to accomplish with the children that were addicted to crystal meth. Initially we were talking about a 90-day treatment plan, but over the course of amendments and discussions that was greatly reduced. I guess I'm asking the minister: can you outline some of the support programs – for example, the number of beds, the potential for foster families – that would address my concerns? While we're apprehending the children, are we putting them in an environment of care and protection where their educational goals, their health goals, their basic needs can be fulfilled?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 2 in third reading. I want to start by bringing to the attention of the House a bill that was passed in this Assembly some 75 years or so ago, to be exact, in 1928. It was called the Sexual Sterilization Act. I just want to remind all members of the House about that bill and the injury that bill did to over 3,000 innocent Albertans who were sterilized because that law was passed in this House. That law was wrong. It was morally wrong. It's a legal abomination. The Supreme Court said so. This government then compensated those innocent victims of that carelessly passed law. I bring this to the attention of the House because it's sobering to think about how Assemblies such as ours get carried away by the argument of the moment or the concern of the moment, not a sound argument but a concern of the moment, and enact laws that are wrongful, that do irreparable injury and damage to innocent citizens.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention to the pseudoscience that drove that particular decision by this Assembly in 1928 as yesterday was the anniversary of the passage of this bill in this Assembly under this roof. That bill was driven by the science of genetics and the eugenics movement based on a pseudoscience of theories of genetic inheritance, that somehow imbecility, mental illness, or a deficiency in intelligence were the result of defective genes, and therefore mothers who were alleged to have those genes had to be deprived of their right to have children, hence sterilization.

One of the key figures in the early part of last century, a scientist, a psychologist, and a celebrated psychometrician of the time, was Cyril Burt, who was later on knighted for his scholarship and became Sir Cyril Burt. He was a professor at the University of London in England. Seventy years later Sir Cyril Burt's research was shown to be based on forged and falsified data. The psychological association of Great Britain took away his membership posthumously. His peers 70 years later saw the offence that he committed was so serious that they found it necessary to take away from the already passed away Sir Cyril Burt the honour of being a member of that association.

Now turning to Bill 2, Mr. Speaker, I have had time to reflect after last Thursday's debate in which we argued back and forth about the legal status of this bill, whether or not it's respectful of the conventions of the rule of law on which all democracies are based, and I have been unable to change my mind about my concern that the bill, in fact, does not respect this fundamental principle of the rule of law to which all democratically elected governments must submit their legislation, must use it as a test, as a proof whether or not the legislation is worthy of the support of Houses or Assemblies such as this one.

Mr. Speaker, we either have to accept the first eight subsections of section 2 and say that those are sufficient in themselves to permit the apprehending of children who are defined by this act as being endangered through drug production in the home – they're drug-endangered children. These are not children whose lives are in immediate and imminent and present danger. These are children whose well-being is endangered because they inhale the fumes, the chemicals that are cooked and produced in a residence. The first eight subsections of section 2 allow enough leeway to law enforcement agencies or the child protection agencies to seek legal permission and authority to enter the premises to apprehend those children. Subs (9) and (10) are the exact opposite of the first eight, and if this bill is to allow (9) and (10) to stand, then we don't need the first eight. If we are going to allow child protection authorities or other agencies of the state to go in at will without being authorized to go into a residence, then why do we need the first eight?

So either we have (9) and (10) – and then it's clear that this Assembly is saying to child protection authorities that they don't need to follow the rule of law and to go in and do whatever they want because that's in the best judgment of the Assembly – or we say that the first eight are the ones that we stand by and that these are the only ones that we give approval to. We can't have it both ways.

Mr. Speaker, the state, in my view, without due cause has no place in the living quarters and in the family rooms of this province and of this nation. That is why I find it ironic that the minister is supposed to protect children. When you protect children, you protect them not only in terms of their physical well-being but you also protect them with all the civil liberties and the freedoms that they enjoy now and that they will enjoy when they become adults. You can't pass a law, violate a fundamental principle or rule of law, and then say that you are protecting children. You are not protecting them from anything. You are simply in fact creating conditions in which the legitimacy of the laws that we enact will be undermined, and therefore the laws themselves will be weakened.

There are 516,700 children between the ages of birth to 12 years and 315,300 mothers with such children in that age group. Of these, 60 per cent of the mothers of children in a family where the youngest child is less than three years old work. Mr. Speaker, 71.4 per cent of mothers with the youngest child being between years three to five work. Then 83.6 per cent of mothers with the youngest child being between the ages of six and 12 years work. These are the children who need the protection of and the services of this minister. The minister has been to Ottawa last week to seek such protection, to seek such assurance from the federal government, and these families, hundreds of thousands of children and their parents, are still waiting to hear from the minister. I think she has an appropriate role, a major role as a matter of fact, in improving the lives of our children. This bill doesn't do that. If anything, it undermines the conditions under which our children can grow up as healthy children and become healthy and enabled adults.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment, usually called a hoist amendment, to the act. I have the copies of the amendment with me. I would like it to be circulated before I speak to the amendment any further.

Thank you.

8:20

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you may now proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 2, Drug-endangered Children Act, presented to the House by the minister just a few minutes ago, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 2, Drug-endangered Children Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, to speak to the amendment, I argued with some passion Thursday afternoon for the minister to give this Assembly and, more than anything else, give herself some time to reflect on what some of us have expressed as serious concerns with respect to this bill. I was unable to persuade the minister to do so on Thursday afternoon.

This motion gives me another chance to make yet one more attempt to ask the minister to allow a cooling-off period of six months – and this motion will do precisely that – in which she and her department officials will have the time to weigh the arguments made in this House against subs (9) and (10) of section 2 of this bill. Perhaps it would be possible, then, for the minister on reflection to say: yes, there is some merit to the arguments made in this House tonight and on Thursday afternoon. If she is not convinced, then six months from now she will have opportunity, a full opportunity, to proceed with this bill in its third reading.

All it does is allow the minister six months of time to engage in some further consultation, and she's welcome to consult with us. I'll be happy to walk into her office and spend some time with her and share my concerns again and explain. Perhaps if I haven't explained myself successfully enough now, I'd be willing to work harder on it and see if I can convince her, and if at that moment she still thinks that she wants to proceed with it, she will have the opportunity to do so then.

So I ask the House to support this amendment in order to allow, certainly, the minister and other members of the House to have the necessary time to reflect on the arguments because the arguments are serious. They deal with the essential aspects of the rule of law and whether or not the legislation before us does meet the test of the principles of the rule of law.

As I said in my introductory remarks earlier, Mr. Speaker, legislation passed in haste or in partisan zeal does not necessarily serve the interests of Albertans in the best way possible. The sterilization act of 1928 is one significant example of a law that was passed in that kind of zeal, under those conditions of the limits of our knowledge that prevailed at the time. We didn't ask questions about how limited that science was, how flawed those arguments based on that science were, how unreliable the data that justified that science turned out to be, so unreliable that it turned out to be in fact false, and the author and the principal investigator was in fact dishonoured by his own peers 70 years later.

All of this, I think, draws our attention to be cautious when we move forward with laws which have the possibility of offending and infringing on our fundamental rights. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, spoke in support of this bill originally, and I'm having some second thoughts based on what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and also the Member for Edmonton-Centre said. They brought up some very good points about the rule of law, about civil liberties. A lot of my concerns about this Bill 2, regarding marijuana grow ops for instance, have not been fully addressed. I know that earlier today the Minister of Children's Services said that this law does not violate civil liberties, but just saying that it doesn't violate them doesn't mean it's so. With all due respect, I'm not questioning your judgment.

I think that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has made some excellent points, and a little sober second thought on a bill of this magnitude is certainly something to think about. Removing a child from a home is a last-ditch, draconian measure, and it's not something that can be done lightly. I'm sure it never is. But if we're talking about a bill that can take children out of their homes, it would be worth while to give this more thought. So I'm saying this in favour of the member's amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to spend just a few moments to discuss Bill 2 because Bill 2 is very important legislation. When we talk about the children of this province, we know that around the province, unfortunately, there are unscrupulous adults who will do anything, essentially, without morals or ethics and put their children in danger while they're in the pursuit of making a dollar by cooking methamphetamines in their homes. When they're prepared to do that type of work, it's absolutely amazing to me that somebody would stand up and say that you're putting their civil rights in danger when what you're talking about is protecting the rights of the children, making sure that the children have an opportunity to grow up, making sure that the children have an opportunity to overcome the barriers to success. Quite frankly, children that are in that type of situation obviously have far too many barriers to their success already.

There are appropriate times and appropriate places when one has to go into a home and apprehend a child – there are appropriate times and appropriate places – where a child is being abused, and this is a type of abuse. You need to be able to protect children. I heard one of the hon. members opposite indicate that just by saying that it doesn't violate human rights doesn't make it so. Well, just by saying that it does violate human rights doesn't make it so either. Obviously, what happens when you put together legislation of this nature is that you have to do a very careful consideration and weighing of the relative merits of each case and determine what's appropriate in the circumstances. You need to have legal opinions and legal views of it. Obviously, you need to look at what the respective rights are, but no rights are absolute. Absolutely no rights are absolute. Every right is subject to . . . [interjections] If you want to get into the debate, feel free to get into the debate.

Every right, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Acting Speaker: It would really help if the person who is recognized speaks through the chair. If there are other members who wish to participate in the debate, there is an opportunity for the chair to recognize them. Currently the floor is with the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the long and short of it is: when children are in danger, it's in the community's interest and the child's interest to protect that child. Obviously, the question of danger can be a subjective question at times, but when you're talking about people who are cooking drugs in their homes, when you're talking about people who are violating the law and abandoning their duty and responsibility to provide a safe and caring environment for their children, then it is in the interest of society, in fact it's the obligation of society to provide that caring and that protection. That's what this bill is about. The bill is child protection legislation. The provision that concerns us, section 2(9), mirrors the provision of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. The apprehension of children in urgent situations where their life, health, or safety is in imminent danger is valid child protection legislation. It's not only the right thing to do; it's our responsibility to do it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important for us to recognize and differentiate the intention of my hon. colleague's amendment. An idea of putting some sober second thought into this I believe originates at least twofold, the first being that we have provisions within the Child Welfare Act already to remove children if they are in a situation that is dangerous to their welfare, either their physical or mental state. So we are just trying to point out that by layering on other more specific things in regard to the apprehension of children doesn't necessarily make it a better way to actually look after the welfare of children. I mean, we're not debating the nefarious activity of people and all of the terrible things that they do while being parents and their responsibility in that regard. I'd think that you would recognize, Mr. Speaker and all members across, the differentiation that we're making.

Important, I think, as well, is the second point that I want to make, that it's so easy to cloak oneself in self-righteousness by pointing out something that happens to be the newsworthy crime of the day. So making crystal meth in people's homes seems to be the thing that everybody wants to talk about, and we seem to be spending an inordinate amount of time here in this House on that one specific place where children can be endangered. I certainly am not showing any disrespect to the intention of looking after children and the welfare of children, but to just to focus on that and to put another layer of law on there when we already have the law in place to look after children if they're in danger I would say has an element of grandstanding.

So I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, that we are simply looking at a sober second thought, and any time we build on layers of apprehension of children or rights in general, we have to be very, very careful. You know, we're speaking across different political ideologies here, from both the left and the right, and we will not look after the protection of children by also putting on extra laws just for the sake of them when we probably have them in place already.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. We all care about kids. There is no partisan nature to caring about kids, and to attribute accusations that we care less or that because we're Liberal or NDP or Conservative or Alliance, somehow we have a different value for children. I hope we don't go there. To various degrees fathers, mothers, parents, grandparents all have a concern for children. I would think that that's a large part of the motivation of why we're here: we're trying to establish and protect the generation to come.

I was not here in earlier debate, but I did ask the minister – and this was for clarification purposes – are we going to improve the lot of these children? Do we have a place to take them to after we've apprehended them? This would very much help me in my decision-making if laws exist already that make such apprehension possible. If they don't exist, I'd like to hear that discussion as well. What I'm looking for, Mr. Speaker, is further information so that I can make an accurate judgment on the hoisting of this bill.

We dealt with crystal meth in terms of the environment. It was felt that there wasn't sufficient information at that time. We spoke at length, the better part of two hours, on that particular crystal meth-related bill. In the end it was hoisted because it was felt that we could craft a better bill. We also hoisted the bill with regard to, again, protecting children and requiring children who are under 15 to have their parents' permission for any kind of medical services that might be provided. Again, with that particular bill we addressed it; we spoke to it. We did our best, but we found that it was short. It didn't have the strength of recommendation, the strength of legislation to go through it.

This is where I'm at. I need more information so that when it comes to the vote on the hoisting process, I have all the information I need to make a good decision. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to speak to this bill at the last stage of the bill, and I'm not going to take a lot of the House's time tonight to speak again. As I understand the issue with the hon. member who has put forward the amendment, it really was sections (9) and (10). We discussed that at some length in the last stage of this bill.

When I read section (9), to me it is very explanatory as to why you would do that. It would be in exceptional circumstances. The prior sections of this bill go through all of the procedures that an officer must follow. But in section (9), without reading it all, they say:

may apprehend a child without an order if the director or police officer has reasonable and probable grounds to believe that the child's life, health or safety is seriously and imminently endangered because the child is a drug-endangered child.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has answered that question prior to this amendment being put forward. She has had legal opinions. I have seen the legal opinion; it does not suggest that in this circumstance the rule of law would be jeopardized or somehow gone around. It's the "reasonable and probable" belief that the child is in danger. Now, there isn't any one of us in this Chamber that would sleep very well if we had put this off for six months, which means a year, and a child was lost because there wasn't an ability to apprehend that child.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't know all of the circumstances, but I can assure you that the Minister of Children's Services has far more information on this matter than I or any one of us in this House has and, I would suggest, more information than any of us would want to have on this matter.

This is a very, very serious issue. We are concerned in this province about the disposition of the by-products of cooking crystal meth. We're worried about endangering our environment. We are condemning houses that have had drug activities occurring in them because they're not fit to live in. And we are suggesting that we can put off for a year taking a child out of one of those places? I think not.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to briefly comment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder perhaps explained his colleague's intention to forward this amendment to provide us with an opportunity for sober second thought. I happen to think that's an excellent idea. However, what's requiring sober second thought here is the unbelievable stretch one would make to compare the intent of a bill, which is to save children's very lives, with a bill that was passed in this House 70 years ago that was meant to sterilize mentally handicapped people. That stretch is an absolute insult.

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Finance minister has just pointed out, our Minister of Children's Services didn't just pluck this one out of the air. It's the product of a lot of thought, a lot of sober thought, I might point out, and a lot of consultation, including legal consultation. We're not talking about children who are the victims of bad parenting here. We're talking about children who are in imminent danger, and we're talking about the ability of someone to go and save their lives.

The argument is absolutely lost on me. I just don't understand why we're having this argument. It seems absolutely logical. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the hon. member that made this motion – and I'm going to try and stick to the motion – is probably quite aware that there is no legitimate way for a hoisted bill to come back six months hence. There is no legitimate way to bring a bill back six months from now. It was done once in error in our Parliament in Ottawa. I think the hon. member knows that, so he knows full well what he's doing, which is essentially killing the bill. It doesn't give anybody any time to improve on things. It essentially buries it. So if the hon. member didn't know that, I hope he does now.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, a hoist amendment doesn't come before the Assembly very frequently, so I just want to let you know that there will be potentially two votes. The first will be on the hoist amendment. If the vote on the hoist amendment passes, then the bill drops off the Order Paper and technically dies. If the hoist amendment fails, then I have to put forward a question for the third reading right away. Okay?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:42 p.m.]

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 14
Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Agnihotri]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 14, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2006, with, I think, much the same feelings as I expressed under the first iteration, with changes to the application procedures to become a regulated profession, clarification of complaint procedures, changes to the requirements for continuing competence, adding new protected titles for some professions, and amending the scope of practice for opticians. All of these, to my mind, have added strength to the professions act and added to the confidence that the public can have in these professions. I think that while some of it is housekeeping, there are significant parts to this that will give us all a greater confidence that these are going to be professions that will have publicly designated recruitment procedures, standard evaluations, public oversight.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, the chair needs to clarify something. I am looking at the information that's before me, and it appears that the hon. member has already spoken at this stage before, on second reading.

Dr. Swann: I thought it was first.

The Acting Speaker: No. This is second reading, and I believe you've already spoken.

Dr. Swann: Yes. That's right.

The Acting Speaker: I should have interjected earlier on.

Dr. Swann: That's fine.

The Acting Speaker: Does anybody else wish to speak?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I do have a number of speaking notes to clarify some of the points that the hon. member raised previously, and perhaps that would illuminate it. I will just be very brief and then forward a copy of some of those points so that that could be perused later.

Relative to scope of practice in the issues that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View raised previously, he identified very important issues in the regulation of health professions on which we certainly concur. The Health Professions Act, which is being amended here, sets out the framework within which health professions are regulated. Issues related to scope of practice, the development and enforcement of standards, and the development and evaluation of training programs are addressed in professional regulations and through the ongoing activities of regulatory colleges.

With regard to the complaints section and the reason why there is a reference in one clause to registering complaints in writing with a signature, and then there's a reference to having the ability to take a complaint orally, there are contradictions regarding the complaints process, especially in sections (7) and (8). When a complaint is made under section 54 of the Health Professions Act, the complaints director is obligated to take action as set out in section 55. Thus, if a complainant makes a formal complaint that is a written, signed complaint, the complaints director must proceed with that complaint. But what if the person does not make a formal complaint? They do not want to get involved. They are afraid or whatever. If an individual simply brings an issue to the attention of the complaints director and chooses not to make a formal complaint, the amendment to section 56 allows the complaints director to treat that information like any other information in that section and take action if the complaints director has reasonable grounds to believe the conduct of a regulated member or former member constitutes unprofessional conduct.

Relative to the consultation for the amendments all of the health professions with schedules under the Health Professions Act were consulted during the development of these amendments. The minister seeks advice from the advisory board on any issue relative to the Health Professions Act but usually seeks advice when there are issues that require extensive investigation and consultation with a variety of stakeholders or a with a variety of concerns. The kinds of issues that the minister normally refers include recognition of new professions, expansions of a profession's scope of practice, and the development of new restricted activities.

Just briefly on why an amendment on assessment of competence. Section 50(2)(a) and (b) is amended by adding "or categories of regulated members" after "regulated members". So it's "or categories of regulated members." The amendment to section 50 allows a college to limit its continuing competence program to certain categories of practitioners. For example, many colleges provide for short-term courtesy registration of practitioners from other jurisdictions in order that they may practise for a short period of time in Alberta, to provide a seminar, for example. To require such individuals to participate in a college continuing competence program may be unrealistic.

On the question of massage therapists, relative to regulating their training, no decision has been made about this. The amendment to the act will allow the minister to initiate the process to determine if regulation is appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other points relative to massage therapists, but I'll just conclude with the fact that the Health Professions Act was passed in 1999, came into force in 2001. These amendments have arisen from issues experienced by the professions and government in administering the act since it came into force.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Anybody else?

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Mittel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened to all the debate on this, and certainly the minister of health has answered a lot of the questions. If there are any other questions that do arise, certainly we can look at those during Committee of the Whole.

With that, I call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

Bill 23

Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 23 is intended to make the Provincial Parks Act easier to administer by providing more clarity, closing legal gaps, and deleting outdated provisions. Bill 23 clearly defines administrative authority; for example, ministerial authority to issue parkland use dispositions like leases or permits according to the regulations. Where authority to conduct certain practices was implied, they are now instead clearly stated.

Heritage preservation is now stated as a fundamental purpose for Alberta's parks. This authorizes established practices that protect the land. A separate reference to education and experience of the province's natural heritage provides legislative authority for parks education programs.

Bill 23 updates and clarifies the powers of conservation officers. They will now have the authority, similar to wildlife officers, to stop and search vehicles or boats within parks and in an emergency take steps to protect the public or prevent damage to the environment or to property.

Bill 23 also substantially increases the maximum fines for serious violations like those that cause significant damage or destruction. Instead of a maximum $2,000 fine individuals can now face fines of up to $100,000. Corporations can be fined up to one-half a million dollars. Under Bill 23 if a person makes money from an offence, like cutting trees in a park and selling the timber, the Crown may recover the costs for damages and the courts may levy an additional penalty for damages.

Mr. Speaker, I seek second reading and move the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006, Bill 23.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Hon. minister, I am more supportive of Bill 23 than I was of Bill 18. I would like to go through some definitions, points of clarification, and then suggestions on the potential of strengthening this bill even further.

Bill 23 conducts a number of housekeeping changes to the Provincial Parks Act. The Provincial Parks Act along with the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Act is the main legislation governing the establishment and management of Alberta's provincial parks and protected areas. The highlights of this particular act include updated enforcement, offence and penalty provisions; cleaning up the obsolete provisions; defining the purpose of parks; attempts to provide clarity and remove deficiencies or conflicts; and updates the wording. These are all very positive aspects of it, and of course the minister is very aware of my concern that I brought up with regard to Bill 18; that is, in order to enforce the tougher fines, we have to have more enforcement officers on the ground.

Bill 23 proposes a substantial increase in maximum fines for serious violations. That's extremely positive. We need to be protecting our parks. I've referred to how little of Alberta's land is designated under the protected areas, so anything we can do to strengthen that protection I'm all for.

Under park management the act proposes to move the minister's authority to issue park land-use dispositions like leases or permits from regulations into the act. These include provisions on what you can and can't do in the park, and I'm very pleased to see these moved into the act and out of regulations because it's a more publicly accountable methodology.

With regard to the background part of the problem with some of the legislation associated with parks is that, you know, there are three main acts but eight different categories of parks, and that tends to cause some confusion. I realize this bill is trying to clarify that, but the categories that provide some level of protection in this act are wildland provincial parks, provincial parks, and recreation areas.

Without going into definitions of the various parks, I would like to move ahead with what I see as good about this bill and then indicate my reservations and suggestions.

What is good about this bill is that it makes much-needed improvements to the park legislation. It adds legislative authority rather than regulatory protection for parks. It provides for more ecological protection, and we're all in favour of that beyond a doubt. It makes improvements to the work conservation officers can do in enforcing peace and order in the parks, and again I throw out my usual statement that in order for conservation officers to have a workload that is manageable, we need to have more of them in the field.

The area that I'm hoping that the minister can work towards improving is that this act, from my understanding, still provides no protection for recreation areas. It falls short of making protection the highest priority for the park system, as most other provincial and federal park systems have done. This act sort of equates recreation and preservation.

The act does not give clear legislation direction on off-highway vehicle use in parks. The bill still allows ministerial oversight in allowing some extraction activities, and of course that became very controversial in Monday's story about the Rumsey areas. The lack of protection and the ministerial oversight also apply to areas like Suffield, the Whaleback, and the reserve land bordering Waterton national park. Obviously, we would like to see these as protected as they possibly could be and in legislation not subject to ministerial approval.

What we'd like to see happen – and this is a direction that I would ask the minister to consider – is complete the system. Restart the special places campaign and start the process of designating new areas as parks in underrepresented areas and in unique places. We need to seek a balance and ensure that there are proper offsets or protected areas to compensate for industrial areas, such as the oil sands in northeast Alberta. I understand that later on, either this month or early next month, the Canadian Parks and Wilderness will be presenting a plan, so I don't want to take away from their limelight. I know that CPAWS has talked to the minister and also to the Minister of Environment and sought input.

Under protection there's no doubt that we need tougher park legislation. Parks need protection from industrial activities that are still allowed to progress in too many categories. The density of oil wells is higher in parks than in nonpark landscapes, and that seems kind of an oxymoron circumstance. Drilling in the Rumsey natural area continues, and it is allowed in all natural areas. We need protectors. We need to restore the number of conservation officers. I would like to see at some point – and I spoke briefly with the minister about returning the number of conservation officers to their precut 1992 level so that these penalties that have been suggested in this bill can actually be taken into account.

Under the planning with regard to Bill 18 I talked about the need for management plans. In Bill 23 I believe we need stronger planning as well. I believe we should enshrine the requirement to maintain current park master plans. Too many park master plans are out of date, and some parks, unfortunately a large number of them, have no plan at all. We need to introduce a requirement that transactive includes public involvement. Park master plans are completed every seven years. These are to be approved by the minister and tabled in the Legislature. In other words, we would like this planning to happen on an ongoing basis.

With regard to infrastructure I've talked numerous times about the need to restore and renew. This means renewing basic infrastructure in the regular run-of-the-mill parks across Alberta, whether it be picnic tables, fire rings, toilets, hiking trails, et cetera. I would love to see the fencing around the parks be maintained so that the parks themselves do not become multi-use – that was not what they were intended for – in terms of grazing cattle.

Four other suggestions I would like to have considered. Why not include in the act a specific requirement to prepare transactive park master plans and submit these? Given that recreation areas are for outdoor recreation, why not include some level of protection to ensure that natural areas remain in a natural state? In other words, the recreation that takes place within these parks isn't detrimental to the natural capital, the value of the park itself.

I would like to see detailed direction on the use of off-highway vehicles in the act. I know that there are a number of quad drivers and four-by-fours and so on who would like to see clarification too. They would appreciate knowing where they're allowed to recreate, and that way we could avoid conflict in these recreational areas.

Lastly, I would like to see an advisory committee for provincial parks and recreation areas established. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just very happy to speak on second reading of Bill 23. Again, as with Bill 18, I believe, there's just a myriad of changes and amendments to the parks and natural areas legislation in this Bill 23, although this is specific to provincial parks, of course. Generally, I am on first glance happy with most of the amendments that are in Bill 23.

It's important for us to recognize that provincial parks legislation needs to be updated considering the changes of the population and land use in the province of Alberta over the past years and decades and, certainly, to recognize just how important these recreational lands are, provincial parks specifically, to the integrity, I suppose, of the future recreation opportunities for the population, future generations, and for the natural areas that they cover and seek to protect as well.

I think that in second reading it's appropriate to speak in general terms of what we would intend to see, and for each of the points that I have for us this evening, I certainly have places where I can see the potential for these ambitions to be realized. There are some specific areas that I have outlined, but we will look at those in third reading or Committee of the Whole in terms of specific sections that I think that I would seek clarification for.

Certainly, the focus that we would like to see as a caucus, I think, reflects the interest that Albertans have in their natural environments. You know, we like to identify with the natural world here in Canada in general and Alberta specifically. As we develop and seek energy and forestry and farmland from our natural areas in Alberta, we have to be very conscious of protection while we still can indeed protect the wilderness areas.

I think I saw a map this morning that was showing continuous forestation in the province of Alberta, and it was quite shocking, Mr. Speaker, just to see how much the map has changed since I have been following these things with some interest for most of my adult life. We know that these are the economic realities and the population pressure and the increased economic activity, which is good for the economy and good for everyone. We can see what a robust economic situation we're in from this afternoon, but then we have to remember what our duty and responsibility is, to protect natural areas while we can.

I would like to see provincial park legislation continue to be on the table and to be supported by financial contribution from the province to ensure that more parks are in fact built in each of the ecosystems that are distinct to the province of Alberta. I'm looking as well to hope to see at least 10 per cent of the province under some form of protection in regard to each of these individual ecosystems, together totalling perhaps 10 per cent of the total area of the province under provincial protection.

What we need to do – and we can see some degree of evolution with Bill 23 – is to be very much more specific about land use in protected areas and not to fall into the tendency to sort of either/or with protected areas. I think what we're seeing now are some battleground areas where people want to use motorized vehicles or people want to have a place protected in its pristine state, with minimal human activity. I think it's important for us to consider both because the first way by which we can protect our natural areas in a real way is to ingrain and educate an appreciation of the natural world in our population.

The first step is to get people out. We're increasingly urbanized as a population, so just to get people, especially from urban areas, out into any park situation is an important first step. Certainly, I do not preclude the possibility of having special designated areas where people can engage in a wide variety of outdoor activities that, you know, are perhaps going beyond camping and hiking and skiing and whatnot but also bringing some of their other hobbies and interests into the areas.

I guess it's important to differentiate – and this is where I have some specific areas that I've highlighted in this Bill 23 – where we need to make some very clear distinctions so that we don't immediately presume that any given provincial park area, just by designating it a park, is protected in its pristine ecological state. Many of these places are completely fenced in by developed areas, agriculture or otherwise, and that's the first step to saying that it's not a continuous ecological zone. Of course, it's more like a fenced-in area. Then people with varying degrees of intensive land use also sort of undermine, perhaps, the protected aspects of it being a provincial park.

We have provincial parks, of course, as we know, adjacent to urban areas or even in urban areas. My own constituency, Edmonton-Calder, I think has one of the very latest provincial parks in it, of which I am very proud and would like to see. It's adjacent to many hundreds of thousands of people, Mr. Speaker, so of course this would be one of the areas that requires regulation and legislation. Ultimately and first and foremost we want people to get there and to enjoy it and to enrich their lives and to educate them about the natural world because that's, in fact, what the provincial park legislation is all about in the most general way possible.

I would like to put forward just very quickly as well our hope that the level of conservation officers in the province would be considered to be increased. We have just simply too few people to enforce a lot of regulation and legislation in our provincial park areas. There are just simply too few of them, and the area is just so large.

Also, over the last number of years it's become clear that the infrastructure in many of our provincial parks is found wanting, and I think now is the time to make an investment in building up that infrastructure, be it from picnic tables to washrooms and roads, so that people feel as though the province is caring about that place, and, thus, they must care about it as well. Remember that, just as in our society, we don't have a policeperson looking over our shoulder to make sure that we look after and follow the rule of law. Rather, we have it internalized in our own minds through education and training. The same with people's relationship with a provincial park: if it's in a derelict state, it just somehow sends a message that perhaps this is a place where anything goes, with further sort of destructive behaviour. So I believe that as in urban areas, where if we make a point of cleaning off graffiti and fixing that broken window straightaway, it somehow increases the overall level of crime prevention in an urban area, if we fix up and maintain our provincial parks to a proper level, then people are getting the message that this is a valuable place that we invest in, and it's important to take care of that place too.

So, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to pointing out some specific areas for Bill 23 with the hon. minister, and I'm very glad to see some activity in regard to our provincial parks. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the remarks of the minister as he introduced this Bill 23, the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006, in second reading. I won't spend a lot of time reiterating the very worthwhile comments from both my colleagues from Calgary-Varsity and Edmonton-Calder, but there are two points in particular that I would like to get on the record this evening.

For those members of this Assembly who hang intently on every word that I speak – and really, folks, who doesn't? – you will know that I am not a fan of moving legislation into regulation. In this particular instance, as has already been pointed out, we have the minister actually moving regulation into legislation. So I would like to congratulate you for that, Mr. Minister, because any time we see that, I will speak in support of that move. Mr. Speaker, I think it's a breath of fresh air in this Assembly to see regulations being moved into legislation whereby we all know that in order to change them, public debate is required. That leads to openness and accountability, and for that I am thankful. Again, I applaud the minister for that.

The other comment that I do want to make, Mr. Speaker, is on section 16, which deals with the operation, particularly the takeoff and landing, of aircraft in a park or recreation area. My peers in the foot-launched, free-flight community, particularly hang-gliding and paragliding, would be rather upset with me if I didn't acknowledge the fact that in this proposed legislation the minister is including an exemption for those of us who fly hang-gliders and paragliders as well as parasails and other nonpowered aircraft.

Ms Blakeman: What makes you so special?

Mr. R. Miller: What makes us so special? Well, I think it is our appreciation for the solitude and the reflection that the two sports in particular that I've described tonight provide us.

I appreciate the fact that the minister is recognizing how special that activity in which I and many thousands of others across this country partake is, so just for the record I'd like to read into Hansard that particular clause which says that a person shall not take off or land an aircraft in a park or recreation area except . . . in the case of a hang-glider, parasail or other non-powered aircraft, in a specific location that is designated, and in accordance with any conditions established, by order of the Minister for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can think of one very obvious example right here in the city of Edmonton, actually, and that would be at – I was going to say Rundle park, but it's across the river from Rundle park – Gold Bar park. No, it's not even Gold Bar park. I'll have to check, Mr. Minister, and get the name, or perhaps the minister might be able to help me out.

There is a west-facing ridge along the banks of the North Saskatchewan River. There's a ski hill there, and there is a provincial park that encompasses this area. Special permission has been granted in the past for hang-gliding activities to take place there. Currently there is a remote-controlled airplane club that also operates out of that particular area in recognition of the special geological features that the ridge along the riverbank provides there. That's one example of where, in fact, this sort of thing currently takes place.

There are also, Mr. Speaker, a number of areas in the province where hang-gliders do not necessarily intend to land in a provincial park, but just by the nature of the geography those activities may be taking place in proximity to a provincial park. That in itself would add to the possibility that a landing may take place in a provincial park. Again, having the opportunity to negotiate with the ministry to have permission to utilize certain areas of a park or a recreation area where it might fit well with the activities of foot-launched free flight certainly is something that I know my colleagues and my peers involved in those activities would appreciate.

When we speak to Bill 18 later on, I will address similar comments because, unfortunately, unless I'm missing something, I'm not sure that Bill 18 allows the same latitude. As I said, I will be addressing similar issues at that point. Certainly, it appears that section 16 in this particular amendment act does accomplish what I know my colleagues involved in those activities would want it to, and for that I thank the minister, and it will have my support.

Thank you.

9:30

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 23, the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006. I, too, am very encouraged by this, and being a frequent user of the parks and other protected areas, I think it's progress. With the provincial debt out of the way it certainly is something that we can begin to look at again. As a province that attracts a lot of people, in which we take a lot of pride, there's a tremendous economic benefit associated with these wonderful areas that are continuing to attract the world population. I think we could start to think about and move toward some new areas.

While this particular amendment deals in a fairly specific way with updating and strengthening some of the regulations and powers of conservation officers, I just wanted to put in a plug for looking seriously at the importance, especially with the heavy industrial pressures on our province, of looking at the possibility of the Bighorn area and the Andy Russell park being proposed in the southwest of the province as being some important additions to our wonderful province.

I also echo the need for the tougher park legislation. With the recreational and the increased load of citizens on these parks, clearly we need to send a strong message to people, and I hope we can move in a constructive way, especially to deal with some of the off-highway vehicles that are a concern for many of us who use the parks. We have to find a good balance. Obviously, people have to have access to many of these places, but some of the environmental damage and some of the obvious noise pollution associated with motorized vehicles are a significant detractor from these pristine places or places that we want to keep pristine.

So there's a lot of work that we need to do there, and I would hope that we could find a balanced way of setting up committees and interest groups and finding some constructive ways to work through some of what appears to be a growing phenomenon that has impacts not only on those of us in the local communities that are recreating but also on our international visitors and, of course, on our wildlife. I guess that would fall into the area of planning. The more we can get stakeholder involvement in that, the more constructive our policies and plans will be.

I think we have a tremendous amount to be proud of in Alberta. We've got some tremendous special places, parks, and wildlands, and I would like to see, as many would, an extension of the protection and an extension of the areas covered under this important ministry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll certainly be supporting the changes here and encouraging more in the future.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

Any other speakers?

The hon. Minister of Community Development to close debate.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This has been a tremendous opportunity to get feedback from a number of members of this Assembly on the bill. I appreciate their positive comments as well as their constructive criticisms. I should comment that all four members who spoke were members of the opposition, and they spoke in such glowing terms that I was fearing that there might be an amendment for a hoist coming from my own side.

However, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure now to move second reading of Bill 23, the Provincial Parks Amendment Act, 2006.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Bill 17
Libraries Amendment Act, 2006

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I would like at the outset to make a couple of comments on points raised in debate on Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, 2006, that were made in Committee of the Whole. Library boards are established by municipal councils, and the Libraries Act clearly states that a library board is established by the council of a municipality, and municipalities provide the majority of funding for libraries.

Ninety-eight per cent of Albertans have access to public library service. Many can access their libraries through the Internet, making 5 million virtual visits per year. More than one-half of Alberta's 309 libraries serve communities of fewer than 1,200 people, and municipal library boards are working very hard to meet the needs of all their residents. As an example, the municipal district of Opportunity has just set up library service points in Red Earth Creek and Calling Lake in addition to their existing library in Wabasca.

The role of the Alberta government is to administer the Libraries Act, that governs Alberta's libraries, and to support public libraries with operating grants. About 16 per cent of public library funding comes from the province of Alberta. The government of Alberta provides operational funds to Alberta's libraries: $16.9 million in operational grants on a per capita basis, $3 million allocated for SuperNet expenditures and other library-related projects. We also recently announced $20 million in one-time funding for libraries out of the recent budget surpluses of the province of Alberta.

With those closing remarks, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 17.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, my comments will be relatively brief. I would just like to share an anecdotal story about libraries and the importance of libraries. I think I've mentioned in the past that I am a member of a Rotary club, a proud member of the Rotary Club of Edmonton Gateway. One of the great things about Rotary, of course, is that we bring in guest speakers every week that serve to educate and enlighten us about the going-ons in our community.

About a year ago we had a superintendent from the Edmonton Police Service speak to the Rotary club, and we were talking about children and raising children, and that's maybe an appropriate anecdote tonight given the earlier conversation. Mr. Speaker, the comment that the superintendent made was that he can walk into any house in Edmonton and tell you within seconds whether or not those children are going to be in trouble as they grow. Of course, that piqued the interest of the members of the club, and when asked to elaborate, he said that the methodology he uses is to look for books. He said that if there is clear evidence of books upon his entry into the household, that always reassures him that these children are likely to turn out well. I think that's very telling in today's society given the prevalence of the Internet, and I think there are a number of people who sense that perhaps books are losing their importance and that thereby perhaps libraries are losing their importance. Clearly, this was not the feeling of this superintendent.

In fact, I think most members of this Assembly recognize the value of books and libraries. I know that libraries are a lot more than just books, but without question that is still sort of the primary focus and the primary service that libraries provide. I think that anything we can do that will aid in the preservation and enhancement of libraries, Mr. Speaker, is good, so for that reason the Official Opposition has been supporting Bill 17, the Libraries Amendment Act, 2006, throughout, and I appreciate the minister's comments about what we like to think has been constructive criticism regarding the bill.

I guess that the other thing, because I haven't had an opportunity to speak to it yet, is the whole issue around library fees, Mr. Speaker. That is the one disappointment that I have. I know that the comment has been made by a number of members in this House this spring sitting that when an act is opened, it's opened not just for one purpose but usually to allow for several changes at once. There's one change that perhaps could have been included in this bill, and that would have been the elimination of library fees altogether. That's not here, and it is a disappointment for me because that is an impediment, unfortunately, for some individuals and some families to access libraries. We are one of only a very few jurisdictions that even allow library fees to be charged, and I think that given the current prosperity of Alberta, it would have been a really positive step forward to eliminate the possibility for library fees to be charged, to fund libraries so that that change could have been made. I think all Albertans would be better off for that.

But despite that omission, as I said, I think that overall this is a bill that will improve libraries and access to libraries and perhaps ensure their viability for some time, and for that reason I will be supporting the bill in third reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I concur with my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, and as I had mentioned in second reading, I'm certainly in support of this. The $20 million that the government recently announced is very welcome, and certainly it's needed as well, but I think what I would like to see is more than just the one-time funding initiative and a sustained commitment on the part of the province to encourage, provide, and fund lifelong literacy.

I find some statistics very disturbing about the illiteracy rate in Alberta. You know, I don't see a clear way by which we are tackling this problem. The completion rate has not improved substantially since I've been following it in the province. We have many external pressures that interfere with literacy. People are less likely to be reading, young people especially, with other recreation pursuits taking precedence perhaps. Certainly, for high school students who are struggling, there is the temptation of a very positive job market out there to lure them away, so they don't finish high school.

So I see the libraries as a very important component of improving our literacy rates and the capacity of students at a young age to pick up the habit of reading and going with their family to the library on weekends or for a family activity. It's very important. I think that we have an unfair advantage in some of the larger municipalities, where our libraries are just much more accessible and much larger, and I would like to see that wonderful opportunity extended to smaller municipalities across the province and encouraged over a much longer period. I'm wondering how we can do that over time.

I'm looking specifically now at this bill, and perhaps I can just seek clarification from the hon. minister. I'm looking on page 3 at section 8 of this bill, and this section seems to repeal section 11 of the Libraries Act, which allowed for municipalities to levy taxes for their libraries. I'm just wondering why this was decided to be the way that it is and what we might be able to do to replace this option for funding. Mr. Speaker, as I said, smaller municipalities, I really believe, deserve to have libraries that are comparable to what we have access to in our neighbourhood here in the larger cities. We need a way to sustain the funding. If that's a local tax that can be levied for the library, I think that's a first step to perhaps engaging some people to the fact that, "We're paying for it; we might as well use it" in terms of a local library.

I'm just curious about that one section. Otherwise, I'm certainly in support of this bill in general. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any questions or comments?

The hon. Minister of Community Development to close the debate.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have anything further to add other than to say thank you for the comments made by hon. members and to move third reading of Bill 17.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 18

Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act, 2006

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I'm hitting for the cycle tonight.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to remind members of the House that Bill 18 amends the legislation that governs wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands. Bill 18 clarifies a number of provisions for the different categories of protected areas that have been added since 1971. It updates enforcement, offence, and penalty provisions. It updates definitions, improves wording and clarity. It deletes obsolete provisions.

Bill 18 repeals the Advisory Committee on Wilderness Areas and Ecological Reserves. For the past 10 years we have been using a completely different and, in my view, improved process that involves local communities and stakeholders in management planning and development of any policies in these protected areas.

Other changes include a substantial increase in the maximum fines for serious violations, up to $100,000 for individuals and up to one-half a million dollars for corporations, with additional penalties if a profit is being made in the commission of an offence.

In addition, there are four House amendments to improve the wording in Bill 18. The first makes it clear that any reference to the act also makes a reference to the regulations. The second focuses on damage to the land, which would include pollution at a level that causes damage. The third and fourth House amendments simply make a change from plural to singular and substitute the accepted term "individual" for the term "a natural person."

Mr. Chairman, I ask support for the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves, Natural Areas and Heritage Rangelands Amendment Act.

Mr. Chase: Just for the sake of speed I see that the purpose of your amendment is strictly clarification. I support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Chase: On the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: You have moved the amendment?

Mr. Chase: No. I'm just suggesting that at this point I believe we're talking about approval of the amendment that was just made as opposed to the whole Bill 18 process.

The Deputy Chair: The committee has before it the bill.

9:50

Mr. R. Miller: Did he not just move the amendment?

The Deputy Chair: That's right. We have the government amendments to Bill 18 before us, so we are voting on the amendment as moved by the hon. minister, and the amendment shall be referred to as A1. Are you ready for the vote on that?

Hon. Members: Yes.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendments that are before us as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity were distributed and should be on your desks. We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

The hon. member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to begin by apologizing both to the minister and to this House. This is the first time I've brought forth an amendment, and if I'd done things in a proper fashion, I would have approached the minister and discussed the nature of the amendment with him beforehand and sought his input. I didn't do that. I apologize.

What I'm trying to accomplish in the A2 amendment is to reinvigorate, reinstate the advisory committee, and I'll just go through what I'm hoping to accomplish in the amendment. Also, I put forward the amendment as an entire package instead of a series of sectional debate circumstances because I believe that we're either in favour of establishing greater advisory committees or we're not, so I'm dealing with it as a whole matter.

This amendment to Bill 18 reintroduces the advisory committee and makes it more active and more effective at improving the management of all protected areas described in this act. The proposal updates the scope of the advisory committees to make recommendations on the creation, expansion, withdrawal, and management of wilderness areas, ecological reserves, natural areas, and heritage rangelands. The composition of the committee has been changed to allow greater public involvement by reducing the number of government members to three and continuing with six members who are representative of the public at large. So I'm looking for balance on the committee. The chair would ideally be one of the public members.

By requiring that the committee meet not less than twice a year, we've taken steps to ensure that this committee is recognized and valued by the government. The advisory committee will be held accountable to the Legislature as any and all recommendations must be placed before the House immediately when in session or within 15 days of the next sitting of the House.

I propose these amendments because Alberta's parks belong to Albertans, and as such they should have a say in their creation and management. Just in summary, I am trying to empower average Albertans. I want to involve them in the planning and preservation of parks. I want to increase their voice and by so doing increase their involvement and interest in the parks and preserve landscapes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on the amendment.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just had an opportunity to read this now. One of the parts of Bill 18 that I found problematic was the elimination of these advisory committees. I think it was part of the housekeeping that was going on with Bill 18. The advisory committees were basically not functional and hadn't been sitting for a long time, but, you know, that doesn't preclude the value of having those there. In fact, this was one of the areas that was pointed out to me by interested groups that were reading Bill 18. They suggested that it would be nice to have these advisory committees functioning or resurrected, so to speak. I would commend the diligence of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to pursue this and to place it into an amendment. I certainly support the spirit of resurrecting the advisory committees and strengthening them too.

I think that whatever we do in a democratic setting, we seek to engage the public through representation, and the best way to do so is to give people the opportunity to actually speak and to act on issues that affect them. Some of the most innovative and interesting new parks that have been created around the world I know employ advisory committees, people who actually live in or around natural areas, and they ask them what they want. Again, it goes back to what we were speaking on previously with Bill 23, this level of engagement and democracy to in fact find out what people want out of their parks. If they're living in proximity to a park, really, I think it will encourage the success and the viability of the park.

I know that there's one provincial park, which name escapes me right now, close to Valleyview which is almost entirely encircled by First Nations. Part of the problem with the park in the past is that this park was not entirely accepted by the First Nations. Having an advisory committee in that specific circumstance I think would go a long way to creating a line of communication to find out what local people want out of the park and how it might interact with their lives.

I am speaking in favour of the amendment. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else? The hon. Minister of Community Development.
