Again, how much money is going to be spent on this? What kind of information programs for the public who don't know that much about it? Quite frankly, there was just a little informative brochure, and that was about it. A lot of municipalities, like down in Lethbridge, don't know about TILMA and aren't sure exactly what the overall effect will be on their municipality. So I would encourage the government to come up with something sooner rather than later. This certainly would give them an opportunity to have input with regard to this agreement and the overall impact that it will have on their area.

One area I'm thinking of is the corporate registry. This is an incredibly useful tool to find out about businesses in Alberta, who owns what and so on. It provides a public service to Alberta. However, article 11, section 1 of TILMA states that "parties shall reconcile their business registration and reporting requirements so that an enterprise meeting such requirements of one Party shall be deemed to have met those of the other Party." So I'm not sure.

This is where we talk about trade relations in B.C. If they're coming into Alberta, if they register in one, they don't have to register here? I'm not sure how that effect is going to be able to measure that here. We'd like to have a little information. Does that mean that companies registered in British Columbia are now considered to be equal and equivalent here within Alberta, as I mentioned? Will Alberta corporate registry now have to list all companies registered in British Columbia so that their details are accessible to Albertans as part of our openness and transparency? I'm sure there are other implications for the recognition of the B.C. companies that are considered registered in Alberta as well, but I'd just like to have some specifics on that.

We talked about alliance building.

I know that I've already gone through a number of questions, so maybe I'll sit down here. I know that I'm not quite at my 10 minutes, but I'll give the minister an opportunity to come back on some of the specifics that I've asked. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. Some very good points. I'd like to first of all say that I'm very pleased that on the issue of TILMA, the trade investment labour mobility agreement, that in front of this Legislature right now we have Bill 38, which is going to be dealing with in a very open and transparent way the penalties. It's demonstrating when both the Premier of Alberta and British Columbia met in our joint cabinet meetings last week – and I might add a Liberal government from British Columbia – where we talked about the seriousness. It's in the B.C. Legislature right now in an open way, and it's also in this Legislature. Of course, Bill 38 is going through the normal course of proceedings here relative to the potential seriousness of fines that will be allocated if, in fact, TILMA is not followed according to the agreement.

I want to go back just for a moment in terms of performance measures, which is a very good point, and it's exactly the point I asked when I first became minister: relative to our foreign offices what measurements do we use? I want to say that three separate client satisfaction surveys now fall under IIAR. The international office survey and the trade division survey are very helpful in determining client satisfaction. Client satisfaction really is Albertans and citizens who are travelling to our offices in terms of: are they satisfied; are they not; what can they do to improve? So we do have measurements. The IIAR program consistently has always scored very high.

I don't know if you're familiar with the actual trade policy program area, but relative to the client satisfaction question, for instance, in Washington, which the hon. member did mention, in the Smithsonian a client satisfaction office was introduced. At the end of the day, pertaining to a five-point scale, the Alberta office in Washington had scored a very high result, between 4.3 and 4.5. The target of the rating is somewhere around 4 on a five-point scale, so we have always been very pleased if we can be at 80 per cent satisfaction or higher. The fact that we were scoring closer to 90 per cent I think speaks very well of Albertans who are working there and also the satisfaction that Albertans are sharing with our offices. So that's just an example of a measurement that we are using because if it's not measured, it's not done. I agree with the hon. member that we need to continue to measure these types of successes.

The international offices survey also shows exceptionally high satisfaction. If you can imagine that in the '04-05 year – and I don't have the results for this year – it was 93.1 per cent. I think that, obviously, for any of us that are working toward satisfaction, it clearly shows that we're in a top percentile.

The international trade division client survey is new in the '07-10 business plan, and I want to say that we have a benchmark where we want to reach 75 to 80 per cent in terms of satisfied clients. Of course, we'll be reviewing that. Key clients were surveyed within the Alberta government, with ministers, Members of the Legislative Assembly as well as seniors officials, businesses external to the government, and domestic and international private sector. Actual measurements were used to determine if, in fact, we're on the right track.

The ministry also, I might add, in terms of performance will constantly use a variety, a plethora, of stakeholders to evaluate. I want to assure the hon. member that whatever dollar that is spent in any office anywhere, if there is a sense that we can do better based on the client satisfaction rate, we will. Not only will we do a good job in our foreign offices, we will do a good job and then some. If I were to describe my ministry, "and then some" is how I best describe my ministry. These three words really separate the difference between what I refer to as excellent and average.

I believe that as members of this Assembly we take an approach in terms of the A personalities that we have to be in this business of serving the public sector, that ultimately we have an attitude that we can always do better. That is really what I believe is separating our province and our government from other provinces, that attitude. I'm very proud of that, and that will continue.

I also would like to say on the issue of TILMA, which was an important point by the hon. member, that as we go forward, it's important to recognize that the next two years are going to be a very key time, between '07 and '09, when we will of course be having a very complete consultation process with municipalities, with business associations, labour bodies, chambers of commerce, industry groups, academic groups. I'm very proud, when I was a private member, to have taught at the University of Alberta in the school of business. We're looking forward to working with the U of A, who will provide us with important input as well. By the end of June 2007 our formal consultations with the municipal associations, the AUMA and the AAMD and C, but also with our academic institutions as well as school boards and health boards – at the end of the day we want to ensure that whatever we do in this agreement, it is to help the taxpayers, that all of us have been elected to serve in this Legislature.

Our job is to ensure that we get good value and that there are not unnecessary barriers. When there are barriers, it is ultimately our voters who are being hurt because it means they have to dig deeper into their pockets. No one likes to dig deeper into their pockets in terms of obtaining value. So my commitment to all of these public institutions is: what can we do to get even greater value for what we do by working together? I must say that the Premier of British Columbia with our Premier had a very positive joint cabinet meeting talking about: how do we help jointly our 7.7 million citizens from both provinces when it comes to working together in terms of getting the best value? That is the ultimate objective of TILMA.

You asked some important questions, I want to say, on the issue of the Korean office. I think the comment was regarding being over budget. It's really important to frame this in context. Essentially, the Korean office is located with the Canadian embassy. Rather than Alberta just going out and having its own independent office, we partnered with the federal government at the time. Because we are with the embassy, we are obligated under this partnership to abide by the federal local hiring guidelines. So we set aside funds for what is referred to as future compulsory one-time retirement payments because there are no pensions. Similar to the fact that we have no pension in this Legislature, well, we have the same approach in other foreign offices.

For the Korean office it's important to get the detail. It really is not over budget. What it really is about is that we had two local employees, and in lieu of a pension the cost in terms of when we are obligated to provide them with a separation when they leave the office – in fact, their office experience goes on for many, many years, so we're obligated. We followed the federal government rule on how their employees are treated; we're doing exactly the same.

Ultimately, it's important to recognize – and I'm sure the hon. member would agree – that we treat people fairly. I might add that they're local people from that country that are working there, and we are just treating them with the same respect and the same approach that the federal government has been doing. That was the reason, hon. member, in terms of what I believe is a very good question, and that kind of accountability I welcome because there are also very good explanations for that.

With that, I'll take my seat and welcome more questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just getting back to some of the specifics that the minister mentioned with regard to TILMA and his intent to bring this subject to the forefront with regard to municipalities, universities. I'm not trying to assume anything, and I'm not trying to put any words in your mouth. Would you be doing somewhat of a consultation such as we've done with the Affordable Housing Task Force, gathering stakeholder input and recommendations to enhance or claw back the agreement? If this agreement by the mass that are being consulted is not palatable, is this government prepared to pull back TILMA? That is the big question right there in itself. If, in fact, the AUMA and the AAMD and C as well as the other stakeholders are not in full support of this particular piece, is the government prepared to pull back that agreement before 2009?

I'm hoping that we do get this started sooner rather than later because this is a huge, impactful agreement which affects B.C. and Alberta. I'm hoping that we do give this much-needed time and consideration to do a really thorough and full consultation instead of something like the Affordable Housing Task Force, where it was a quick 45 days and turn around and bang something out, and we're still fighting about it.

This is huge, and like I said, a lot of people in Alberta in the small towns don't have an idea as to the vastness or the scope of this particular agreement. Can you give us some sort of an idea as to when you're prepared to bring this forward to Albertans? I'm hoping that we do have a good opportunity to really get in and pick it apart to ensure that what we're promising is in fact going to be the real goods because, again, without the proof and without the actual debate we're concerned about this, just like a lot of people would be skeptical. At that point, when we've in fact done the debate with the stakeholders, will it be brought forward to the Legislature to have a full debate as well as the opportunity to either pass or reject this agreement?

Those are two particular pieces that I certainly would like the minister to comment on.

If I could go on, then, next to another important component of this ministry, it would be aboriginal and Métis issues. Certainly, we talk about the long-standing tradition that the people have had in Alberta and their contributions to it, and a lot of this ministry's budget is devoted to the aboriginal and Métis people in helping them continue to get out – no pun intended – from under a rock and be successful like the rest of the province, we're hoping, is successful as well. But it's tough.

Getting back to question period today, we talked before about displaced Albertans, aboriginals, farm people, and then Canadians. I think when we're bringing in these temporary foreign workers, we are absolutely and totally ignoring the workforce out on the reserves. The Member for Lesser Slave Lake mentioned trying to get people in the youth apprenticeship program or the registered apprenticeship program. That's an untapped resource of the aboriginal youth and areas out there that we're ignoring when we continue to bring in – and we'll just call it what it is – cheap labour. And it's being abused, labour. But you know what? I won't belabour that point because I know we could be here all day on that.

I'd just like to know some specifics about the particular program, about the resource consultation: how it works and what it is specifically going to be for. For example, this year it's gone up over 2 times and almost $3 million. Just some specifics as to why that would be. Which areas are they consulting over? Is the government consulting on behalf of companies wishing to extract some of the resources, or is it just government dealing with First Nations and Métis?

I'm concerned about some of the Métis people. This is where it gets into a grey area, when you talk about the reserves and some of the settlements there. When they do have the opportunity to have resources and they own the land – of course they own the resources, but when you have companies that are going outside of the boundaries and they're directional drilling to take out those resources, in my opinion, if that's happening, that's just theft. I'd like the minister to comment on that because, surely, we should be able to allow these people to have the same benefits as the other companies from the oil or gas exploration boom and allow their community to benefit from the resources that are right there on their inherent land. When you allow other companies to go outside and, like I said, do directional, I've got some real concern with that particular issue there.

So, again, with regard to dealing with the First Nations with regard to the resource consultation, is the amount embedded with the dialogue, or is it with regard to just some compensation there as well? I know there are a number of questions in here.

If we go with the Métis settlements ombudsman, there is no extra funding for this office. I've had some conversations with him over the past, say, eight months since I've been appointed to this particular ministry, and he certainly does get a lot of concerns and calls on it. With the current rate of inflation this effectively means that it's going to be losing money, or it may not be able to continue to do the job that it does right now because with inflation it's going to have to do more with less. That's something that a lot of us complain about: doing more with less. Well, you're going to say, "You've got to be a little bit more prudent with money," as we ask our foreign trade offices to do. But I'm sure that they do get a line item and an increase in the budget. So in this particular case why was there no extra funding for the ombudsman there? Is his office, like I said, going to have to do less, or is it going to work more efficiently, then?

I've gone about seven minutes here. I'm hoping to have a little bit more information. There are a number of questions in there for you.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. I want to say that on the issue of TILMA I think it's important for the record to be very clear. As someone who sat on a local municipal government for 12 years and as the youngest city mayor in Fort McMurray, the relationship, I'm very proud to say, that I had in my former ministry of municipal affairs with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, I can assure you that they will be 100 per cent onside as we go forward. The reason, in consulting with them, is because as all of us in this Legislature are elected, we want to ensure that we get the best value for our citizens, be it in British Columbia or in Alberta or wherever that is.

That being the case, I have met with them. We have consulted with them. We are consulting with them. When they raise an issue, we deal with it in a way that makes sense for both them and us and the British Columbia counterparts, the Liberal government in British Columbia, who sees the value in this. I'm quite certain that the hon. member will see the value in this.

Unlike – what are they called? – the Council of Canadians. Let me use them as an example. They said that NAFTA would fail and the world would come to an end. Well, ultimately that was proven wrong 15 years ago. As we look forward to TILMA, this is about getting best value for our citizens, that elect us. If someone wants to stand up and say, "I'm against getting best value for my taxpayers and my tax dollars," then I guess I will argue with them forever because I believe that it is a very worthwhile, critical principle to follow through with.

So we are consulting. We are also consulting with professional associations, I might add. They're taking place not only with municipalities. But TILMA does not apply to municipalities in 2009. I'm very optimistic that by that time we will have, by consulting with our key stakeholders, the best deal possible.

It will not be coming back to this Legislature. It's not necessary because of the fact that this is a trade deal. It's a trade deal helping citizens. There is no law that is required. It is about simple, good, old-fashioned common sense. My grandfather would often say that the whole problem with common sense is that it's not so common.

In listening to the Council of Canadians, one would think that the sky is going to come down. For some reason they think that there is some ulterior motive. There is no ulterior motive. You have a Liberal government in British Columbia working with a Conservative government in Alberta trying to say: what can we do to bust barriers to get the best value for our citizens? That is the principle behind what we are doing.

Now, the hon. member raises a very important point relative to aboriginals being part of the solution when it comes to the issue of employment opportunities. I'm very proud of what has taken place. But let me reiterate, and these are exactly the words that came from our Premier regarding the issue of foreign workers. This government has a policy: first and foremost is Alberta, second is Canada and other provinces and territories, and third is foreign workers. So Alberta first because it just makes good sense – and I say good sense: s-e-n-s-e and c-e-n-t-s – rather than having someone come from another part of the world.

Aboriginals and the training with the RAP program and Careers: the Next Generation. My very good friend Eric Newell, the former CEO of Syncrude. Of course, I'm very proud to say that Syncrude Canada is the single largest employer of aboriginals in this country at over 25 per cent. It's because of a long-term plan, and that plan is being employed with tremendous economic opportunity. The approach that we are taking as a government is Alberta first, Canada second, and other provinces and territories and foreign offices third. That is the approach of our Premier and our government, and we remain steadfast to that approach. I want to assure the hon. member that that will continue to be and, without question, that aboriginals will continue to be part of the solution relative to successful employment opportunity and training.

Alberta is covered, by the way, under a First Nations consultation, which is an important point. Alberta is covered under Treaty 6, Treaty 7, and Treaty 8. More than 30 land claims with potential liability are out there right now. The Supreme Court of Canada has ruled – and Alberta is following this ruling – that the First Nations must be consulted. We are consulting with them. Alberta's aboriginal consultation policy and guidelines is a cross-ministry initiative where rights are respected, risks are mitigated, and greater investment certainty is provided for everyone involved, with tremendous opportunity.

First Nations and industry interact every day over resource development and exploration. Policy and guidelines help to avoid conflicts involving Crown land. I'm very proud to say that the province of Alberta is viewed by the rest of Canada as a leader. Why are we viewed as a leader? We had 15 land claims in the province of Alberta, and of the 15 land claims, working with the federal government and our First Nations, 12 of them, over 85 per cent, are complete. No other province can match that impressive work that has been done. I say that because of the good work and the relationships we've built over the last 15 years with the aboriginal people. They are a part of our solution.

I want to also say that as we go forward, the work that we are doing I believe is very important, and we'll continue on that way because at the end of the day we want to do what is best for our citizens, who are paying the bills in this budget that I present today.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I was just intrigued by the comments that the minister was making about TILMA. I disagree very strongly with the take that this government has on TILMA, that it's just a trade deal, so it needn't come before the elected representatives in this province. You can consult far and wide, but that is not bringing this matter before this Assembly and allowing the people of Alberta to have their say through their elected representatives. Once again I see this government doing things behind closed doors, secretive and arrogant. That's what this TILMA deal is.

You're not kidding me that this is just a trade deal. This is affecting every part of our lives, and more importantly, you guys are selling away, giving away our ability as local governments on any level to enforce public policy. If you now want to bring in public policy that contravenes what's in TILMA, you're stuck because TILMA is going to be paramount. If you've negotiated something that says otherwise, I'd like to see it. Table it in this House. Because what I've seen so far says that TILMA is paramount.

Just let me pick something out of thin air. For example, let's say you've got schools – and a number of them have done this. Let's say that you've got a school that, you know, sells pop and chips and chocolate bars and stuff, and they decide that in the future they want to do something that is going to be better for their student population and for their students' health, and that is to not renew their contract with Coke or Pepsi or whoever has been supplying the carbonated beverage and not renew their contract with whoever is the distributor of the food that goes into the vending machines. But this is now a B.C. firm that has this contract or this agreement, and they go: sorry, but you're impinging upon our right to make money and to invest in this, and the school must keep providing these vending machines in the school.

So you've got a situation where local authorities, like a school board, a city council, a municipality, a provincial government, want to make transformative policy to either encourage the behaviour of its citizens or discourage the behaviour of its citizens through public policy. You are now limited by the terms that are under TILMA. That's the problem. It is arrogant beyond belief – and this government doesn't even understand how arrogant it is – that it did not bring that agreement here. You can be as flippant as you want, that it was a Liberal government in B.C. that did this, but that Liberal government actually had the respect for their citizens to bring it before the Legislative Assembly in B.C. and allow it to be openly debated. None of this 10 hours of debate, and then you've had too much, stuff. They allowed it to come before their Assembly and be openly debated for as long as people wanted to keep that discussion going.

We have an agreement here that affects every part of our lives. It affects labour. Let's not kid ourselves: this is going to affect the standards of labour here. We have some trade unions that have higher standards in this province. You think that B.C. is going to come up? I don't think so. It's going to be about Alberta's standards going down. Let's look at the differences right now between the standards of accreditation for nurse practitioners between Alberta and B.C. Do you think Alberta is going to end up going up or down to meet B.C.? It's not going to go up, folks. It's going to end up going down. Why as a legislator, why as a government would you people go in there and negotiate something that is going to put me and other Albertans in a worse spot than we were before? How could you do that on our behalf and then not even allow us to talk about it, supposedly in an open and democratic society?

This is not a new government. I'm looking at the same 60 people here that are approaching things in exactly the same way as they did six and eight months ago. It's about: we know better. It's completely paternalistic. It's done behind closed doors. Then all the citizens get a pat on the head, that you really know best, and they should just all fall in line and agree to it. Well, I think we're beginning to see that some of the provisions that came through under free trade and now under NAFTA have not been, particularly, to the benefit of citizens. I think there'd be a number of people who would be arguing that they'd rather have those jobs that are now being done offshore by somebody in India or Latin America. They would rather have that job here and be employed and have a salary and some dignity in their lives.

There's a lot more to TILMA than meets the eye, and I am extremely disappointed in the continuing intransigence of this government to refuse to get out there and support your beliefs in an open forum. What I'm getting right now is very one-sided. Even individual members of the public that have gone to meet with backbenchers in the government are patted on the head: oh, you don't really understand what's going on. Well, I'd argue that some of those citizens do understand what's going on.

I really am concerned that this government has gotten us into something that is not going to be to the benefit of the citizens of Alberta. I don't know why the government continually makes choices that put the profit and the health and wellness of the business sector ahead of the autonomy of our citizens. That's not to say that there's anything wrong with the business sector. There's not. They're very successful. They make a lot of people a lot of money here. They supply us with many goods and services. It's a well-respected profession. There's nothing wrong with them. But I don't understand why this government always opts for policies that favour that sector over their citizens.

Who else is going to speak up for the citizens? There's just us. That's our job, to look after them, and I don't understand why this government always abdicates that in favour of another sector. The business sector doesn't need a lot of help. They've got a lot of money. They've got a lot of connections. They've got good marketing skills. They've got lobbyists working for them. They're doing pretty well. They're pretty smart guys. They're good at looking after themselves. I don't understand why you always fold, every time, in favour of our own citizens. It doesn't make sense to me.

Once again, the refusal to bring it before this Assembly is really wrong. I cannot see how you can defend that choice. If you've got nothing to worry about, if you're so right about the choices that have been made here, if people are going to be so excited by this, then, great. Bring it before this Assembly for debate. Let's see how excited everybody is.

Thanks very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. In fact, I'm very pleased by what the hon. member said in her preamble, when she said, and I quote: the British Columbia government at least have it in front of their people in the Legislature. We, the government of Alberta, are doing exactly the same thing that the British Columbia government is doing in front of the Legislature, so I can interpret from that that the hon. member is obviously very pleased in terms of what we are doing. We, also, under Bill 38 have it in front of the Legislature. Obviously, the hon. member is not a free trader.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Ms Blakeman: Under 23(h), (i), and (j).

Don't twist my words. I very clearly was talking about bringing the whole idea of supporting that contract before this Assembly for debate, not one section of it that allows the fines to go through the court system. So don't twist my words. Don't impugn motives to me.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Chairperson, of course, through you. But please remind that member that, you know, if he's going to quote me directly, then he should quote me directly and include in that the intent behind it. Don't impugn motives to me. Don't assign things to me that I didn't say. Very clearly, in almost 10 minutes, I talked about bringing approval of that trade agreement before this Assembly to debate in its entirety, not one tiny little clause that allows the courts to assign a benefit if somebody tries to sue us and we lose. And this is what he's claiming is bringing TILMA in front of us?

I'm sorry; I'm wandering into debate. I apologize for that, Mr. Chairman, but clearly the member's remarks have provoked debate.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister, on the point of order.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, there's no point of order, in my judgment. Having said that . . .

Ms Blakeman: He's the chairman. Allow him to rule.

The Deputy Chair: The minister has the floor.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Chairman, in terms of twisting her words, I am not twisting her words. The words came out the way they were, and I do not believe I have twisted them. We have Bill 38 in front of this Legislature, under which is TILMA. It is in front of the Legislature. I will quite simply say that the facts are the facts, and I'm not twisting anyone's words.

I'd like to proceed with some of the other comments.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the point of order?

Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Centre did rise on a point of order citing Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j), I believe. The hon. minister has also responded on that matter. Every member of this Assembly is an hon. member, and we would like to respect every individual and believe that what they are saying is based on factual information. I hope that what transpired right now will be something that will clarify the position of both the Member for Edmonton-Centre as well as the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. I'd like us to proceed with the debate that was before us.

Debate Continued

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have interpreted that it's obvious that the hon. member, in making this observation, is clearly not a free trader. That is an observation, with the utmost respect. This government and the Liberal government of B.C. are free traders, and they're free traders in this way: they want the best value for the citizens that elect them. I'm quite certain that the hon. member wants the best value for the citizens that elect all of us in this Legislature, so that is the motive behind what it is that we're doing.

I would like to also say this, and I use a quote. I might add that everyone really listen carefully, and I will attribute the quote: we look forward to continuing to work with our counterparts in the B.C. government to facilitate labour mobility between both provinces; we believe that registered nurses in Alberta should without any barrier be able to go from one province to the other. That is of course said by Mary-Anne Robinson. Now, you may ask: who is Mary-Anne Robinson? She is the executive director of the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta.

As much as we are all here supporting health care in terms of providing the services, I don't think anyone in this Legislature would want to stop a nurse. Now, one can only interpret by some of the other comments that it's almost like we don't want health care professionals coming from other provinces to Alberta. Well, we want them to come to Alberta, and that is our motive behind this mobility trade agreement.

We want to not have buses going from one province to another and then simply coming back empty. We want to barrier-bust. We want the best value. We want to ensure it. Rather than a truck of goods and services that used to stop at the B.C. border because the regulation was different in B.C. versus Alberta, we want to be able to allow the goods to flow to the other province. You know why? Because it means a lower and best-value cost to the taxpayer, be it of Alberta or B.C.

The fine example that we use is in Golden, B.C., where we have an Alberta vehicle inspection office. This is an inspection office where bales of hay that used to be reloaded at a border are now done in a joint Alberta/B.C. inspection office where we actually have joint mobility for inspecting our regulatory regimes that we have in a co-ordinated approach. It is harmonized. It avoids duplication. Who is the winner in all this? We do not compromise standard. We do not compromise safety. Ultimately, the people that are paying for that product and those goods and service are going to be the ones that benefit because of that, because we are more harmonized. That's what TILMA is all about.

I am proud to say that I am a free trader. I believe in the best value. I think every hon. member in here does support free trade. Contrary to the Council of Canadians, who on their website believe that myself and the hon. Liberal cabinet minister from B.C. are going to make sure that the sky falls because of TILMA, nothing could be further from the truth. Let me say one other thing. It could not be further from the truth when an hon. member suggests that the government, not a person, is arrogant. I can only say to you that this government is not arrogant. We are consulting. We are transparent. We are doing exactly what the British Columbia Liberal government is doing in their Legislature. Consequently, one can interpret from that that we are clearly, without any question, far from arrogant but, if anything, a consultative government that believes that we want to get the best value for our citizens.

Ms Blakeman: A complete fabrication.

Mr. Boutillier: On a point of order. She suggested a complete fabrication. She's calling me a liar. That's not true.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, first, the chair did not recognize you on the point of order. Secondly, there was no citation.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, just for your information, we have about nine minutes left in this segment, so govern yourself accordingly.

Mr. Bonko: Oh, boy. Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I think the whole thing comes down to standards. I think we in Alberta are very proud of the standards that we've achieved as far as being journeypersons or being recognized as health care professionals. I think that's what the Member for Edmonton-Centre was trying to get at, that we're very proud of the distinction and the high standards which we govern ourselves by. When you bring in people with lower standards, that's when we do take exception. When we hired sheriffs, we were concerned about it being dumbing down. That's what the whole thing is about. Why would we lower our standards when we have been come to known as the province with exceptional standards? That's all I'm going to say about that particular piece.

Dr. Brown: B.C. is not a Third World country.

Mr. Bonko: Not at all, but they have lower standards. Why not come up to our standards? Then we're all competing on the same thing: an apple to an apple, an orange to an orange, but not three years versus four years. There's a big difference right there in itself because we go to grade 12 and they go to grade 13 there, so you get an idea of where I'm going here.

I'm going to talk about the Métis settlements transitional funding and about this program that relates to the significant opportunities and challenges listed in the ministry's business plan. This is clearly taking over from the Métis settlements funding, which ended this year. I'd like a little bit more information as to where the money is going to go and the single biggest chunk of it as well.

Could the minister please tell us what that particular money is going for? How will the minister's consultation with the Métis settlements work? What are the discussions to be with the public, or at least will there be an opportunity for public input? Is this one-off funding or is this long-term funding that's going to take the place of that other funding that was cut off there? What kind of end result is the minister looking for for his government with the relationship with the Métis people?

Again, this gets back to: how do we know of the effectiveness of the money? How can this be measured? Do we have tangible results so that we could say that from this point on there's been an improvement in area X, Y, Z? But just to say, "Well, there have been improvements," how do you measure the effectiveness and the use of this money? I'll just end right there specifically with some of that part on the transitional funding.

The other part that I'd like to raise is aboriginal health. We know that there are some real concerns with health strategies that need to be in place, and it's more about educating than, I guess, telling them. It's a long process because there are a number of them that have serious health concerns, and the biggest one would be with diabetes. I was at the one conference there, and that's one of the biggest single issues that they have to deal with right now, the increase in diabetes. How is the minister going to be dealing with the continued aboriginal health strategies, which were indicated on line 4.0.3 with the overall heading of aboriginal health?

I'll sit down and listen for some specifics, but just one more question before I do. I would like a little bit more specific, tighter timelines with regard to TILMA. When will we begin consultations with the public? How much time are we going to allow? Again, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre said, it would be fantastic to say that we did bring it before the Legislature, that specific bill, TILMA, the same way that they are bringing it before their Legislature in B.C. That's exactly what we're looking for: open, transparent debate, accountable to the public which elected us through our representation to be their voices. That's exactly what we're looking for.

Those are the specifics that I'd like to ask the minister for. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member raises some excellent points. First of all, addressing the issue of aboriginal health care, I'm very proud to say that, of course, diabetes has been an identified area within aboriginal communities. I must admit that I'm not aboriginal but also have a chronic disease, type 1 diabetes. Many of my aboriginal friends do as well, so we have something in common.

I'm very proud of Alberta Health and the cross-ministry initiatives that they have undertaken, working with the aboriginal communities.

The hon. minister of health, who was here today – I want to say that it is my understanding that these cross-ministry initiatives are working very well and will continue to work well because of the commitment of our government.

On the point of TILMA and its consultation the consultation and speaking with Albertans is taking place as we speak, and it will continue to take place over the next two-year period. That is very important to ensure that the process that B.C. is undertaking, that we're taking – we're both in the Legislature now on this component of TILMA. I can say that I'm very optimistic with the excellent advice that we get from many of the professional groups, nursing association, teachers.

We have a situation now where a teacher would actually move to Alberta with their spouse, be it male or female. They'd get here, but they would not be able to teach right away. The reason they weren't able to teach is because we did not have a harmonized approach. So this is really an example of, you know: here we are; our province is growing. We are building more schools with our capital budget. We have more teachers coming in. Ultimately, we're trying to ensure that we have the educators that are required, and TILMA will be another barrier buster to achieve that objective.

Consequently, I want to say that that consultation will continue in an open and transparent way. I'm very pleased that we're discussing it right here, right now, in my budget. I can't think of anything for the people of Alberta that would be more transparent and open than what we are doing as we speak.

The other comment that I was going to answer was on the issue of transitional funding on Métis settlements. Of course, we have eight Métis settlements. I work very closely with the president of the Métis settlements, Alden Armstrong. I just recently met with him again. We have $9 million. The ultimate goal – and I know that the hon. member will agree – is self-sufficiency, building our communities in these settlements in a way that they are self-sufficient.

I want to say how pleased I am working with the Métis settlements council. The Premier has met with them. If you have an opportunity to see the most current Métis Matters, that messenger that just came out, you'll see where the Premier was awarded the important sash from the Métis settlements by Mr. Armstrong and his executive. I'm very proud of that relationship.

I might say that $7 million of the $9 million – of course, we're waiting for the business plan, which the Métis settlements are bringing back by the end of June. I've been informed by the chair that they are making excellent progress with the $7 million that is being used for the business plan that they are doing relative to sustaining their communities. Also, I believe that there is $2 million in addition. That is a million at the front end and a million at the back end of a successful business case. What we will be doing is evaluating the business case and the practices that are going to be utilized in terms of successes on Métis settlements across, you know, many, many areas.

I want to assure the hon. member that this initiative is a very positive one, and I do not view it as an expense but, actually, as an investment in terms of building that self-sufficiency within our Métis settlements.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just some more specifics. Will the public be able to have input with regard to those discussions on the transitional funding? Again, how do we know the effectiveness of the money? How can the effectiveness or the results be measured? That's the big thing that we're looking for. It's easy just to throw money, but how do you know that the money is being well spent, and what are the results that we're getting from that money?

Mr. Boutilier: That's exactly part of the analysis, Mr. Chair, that we will be covering. This will be coming back to government, but right now we have tremendous confidence in the Métis settlements and their leadership. Their leadership are carrying out this very extensive review within their people, within the settlements. What we will be doing is working in partnership with them. We'll be coming forward and evaluating the business case. It's intended to be back by mid-summer. That was a commitment made by the chair. I have every confidence that there is no indication that any of those dollars that are being utilized for this self-sufficiency initiative are in any way deviating from that. In fact, quite contrary: I have been hearing very positive successes.

So we're measuring it, but I think it's fair to wait until the business case comes back, to allow the peoples within the Métis settlements to finalize with their traditional knowledge, with their examples of good work that will be done.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the time allocated for the Department of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations has now lapsed. I would like to thank the department officials and any other support staff for providing assistance to the minister. Thank you so very much.

Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture

The Deputy Chair: I'll invite the hon. minister to begin his opening remarks and introduce the officials present in the Assembly.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present the estimates for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture for 2007 and 2008. Joining me here today are a few of my key department staff who help keep my ministry running smoothly: on my immediate right, Fay Orr, my deputy minister; on my left, Sue Bohaichuk, acting assistant deputy minister of culture and community development; Dave Nielsen, acting assistant deputy minister of parks, conservation, recreation, and sport; Bob Scott, assistant deputy minister of tourism marketing and heritage; and Pam Arnston, executive director of financial services. Also, seated in the gallery is Susan Cribbs, executive director of policy, planning, and legislative services.

Mr. Chairman, our ministry is known as the quality of life ministry. We help create a strong and vibrant province. Our investments in culture, recreation, parks, and so much more generate economic benefits and create jobs for Albertans. Our volunteer organizations and nonprofits employ 176,000 people and have an economic impact of $9.6 billion. Recreation and sport grants generate impressive returns. For every grant dollar that's spent, this generates $5 in community spending. Our provincial historic and cultural sites contribute $61 million to our economy, while our parks contribute $1.3 billion. Also, our tourism industry alone generates over $5 billion for Alberta's economy, and it employs more than 103,000 people.

Mr. Chairman, it's clear that our investments are sound ones, but the main focus of our department, our vision, is to foster a superior quality of life to make Alberta one of the best places to live, work, and visit. Our mission is to promote, develop, and preserve tourism, culture, and heritage in support of vibrant, active, and inclusive communities. The work of our ministry touches the lives of all Albertans. With our population growing every day, it is vital that we continue to invest in the well-being of our growing communities for current and future generations. That's why Budget 2007 focused on managing growth pressures, one of our government's top priorities. With your approval and support our department will help meet some of the challenges we are facing.

Our 2007-08 program expense is $756 million, a net increase of $300 million, the majority of which is one-time capital grants. We have allocated $40 million for the first year of a three-year $69 million commitment to the Calgary Olympic Development Association capital renewal project. Another $80 million in one-time capital grants will support major athletic facilities, fairs, and exhibitions. We have allocated $140 million a year for two years to create the new major community facilities program. This program will help nonprofit groups, municipalities, and aboriginal communities build, maintain, or upgrade recreation and cultural facilities for public use. These commitments have been made in response to the incredible growth and demands we are experiencing. Mr. Chairman, other budget allocations have also been based on the need to grow along with our population.

We have listened to what Albertans want and what Albertans value. The rights of all Albertans are always of utmost importance. Educating Albertans and protecting their rights are key to making our province a safe and welcoming place to call home. Ninety per cent of Albertans say that the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission is important to ensuring that our rights are protected in our province. With that in mind, we will increase support for the commission for programs promoting fairness, diversity, and inclusion by 7 per cent.

Another important group representing the interests of Albertans is the Francophone Secretariat. The secretariat represents more than 205,000 francophones in our province. An 8 per cent increase in its budget will support initiatives promoting French language and culture and will help to preserve a rich part of our heritage.

Other aspects of our heritage are preserved in our provincially owned historical sites and museums. Four million dollars more has been allocated to these attractions to help with operating costs and refurbishing displays and exhibits. The Royal Tyrrell Museum has already unveiled its plans to renovate a permanent gallery. Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump will produce a new presentation for their main theatre. Exterior and exhibit improvements will also be done at Historic Dunvegan, Stephansson House, and Fort George and Buckingham House. Our museums and historic sites are major attractions for Albertans and other visitors alike, attracting some 850,000 visits in 2005.

Our provincial parks are another major draw for visitors, attracting 8 and a half million visits per year. We will address service and maintenance in these popular areas with an $8 million injection. That means more conservation officers, interpreters, maintenance, and gate staff to serve visitors and protect our lands and facilities. Mr. Chairman, as we celebrate the 75th anniversary of Alberta's provincial parks this year, it is the perfect opportunity to invest in these valuable resources.

Our natural areas are very popular with Albertans perhaps because over 80 per cent of adult Albertans participate in some sort of recreation or sport. Albertans are interested in leading healthy, active lives, and we are committed to fostering this. Lottery funding for the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation will increase by 15 per cent, an additional $3 million. The foundation uses its total budget of $26.6 million to support programs like the Alberta Games, providing grants to more than 100 associations to train coaches and much more. By helping to encourage Albertans to stay active, we are lowering diabetes and cancer rates, promoting higher academic achievement, and involving families in their communities, another sound investment.

Albertans also like to get involved with our artistic and cultural communities. Most Albertans, 87 per cent of them, feel that the arts are an important contributor to our quality of life. That's why we will invest $65.9 million in the arts and cultural programs this year.

Mr. Strang: How much?

Mr. Goudreau: Sixty-five point nine million.

The Alberta Foundation for the Arts, which supports festivals, exhibits, artists, and more, received an additional $4.5 million in lottery funding. This is an increase of 20 per cent over last year. Our festivals and events draw millions of visitors each year, and they are a highlight for Alberta's tourism industry.

Promoting our cultural attractions, our exciting adventures, and our beautiful landscapes in a very competitive industry is a challenge. Our efforts to improve our tourism industry will receive a $9 million boost this year thanks to increased collections under the tourism levy. These additional funds will help us attract visitors from key markets and will allow us to focus on emerging markets as well. Albertans continue to be our largest market and represent about half of Alberta's total tourism expenditures. With new Albertans arriving every day, we will continue to encourage people to explore our province and all it has to offer.

Increased funding will also go towards developing new and improved tourism products that will help us to be competitive in this competitive industry. Initiatives like the Canadian badlands come to mind. The Canadian badlands are being branded as Alberta's next tourism icon. Reaching from Stettler in the north to the Montana border and all the way from just east of Queen Elizabeth II highway to the Saskatchewan border, the Canadian badlands include an impressive mix of history, art, culture, and adventure perfect for any traveller. The Canadian badlands are a great example of how we are building on our natural advantages and our past successes and making smart investments in our future.

By supporting the 2007-08 estimates for my ministry, you are supporting our efforts in helping us make Alberta one of the best places to live, work, and visit now and for the years to come.

Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to answer any questions that the members may have.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and participate in the budget debate for the Ministry of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. I want to congratulate the minister for deliberating his first budget debate, and I want to thank the minister as well as his staff for their hard work and great effort in presenting all the paperwork.

First of all, I would like to start with some key issues and questions in regard to this ministry. I'll start with arts and culture. Mr. Chairman, overall funding for culture is being reduced by $3.84 million. Even with a slight increase to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, according to the most recent Stats Canada figures available, Alberta ranks 11th of the 13 provinces and territories in its per capita funding for the arts. Even though we are the richest province in the country, this government only spends about $63 per person on the arts.

This contradicts a recent poll indicating that 55 per cent of Calgarians believe the government should invest more in performing arts, and 33 per cent of Edmontonians feel that the province doesn't spend enough on arts and culture. Young professionals in Alberta want to live in vibrant communities that value arts and culture. They want to have a variety of high-quality arts and culture events available to them.

Artists in Alberta have shown how incredibly entrepreneurial they are by finding ways to adapt to this government's neglect of their profession. They find creative ways to raise money and budget, but they have to accept low wages as the price of pursuing their dreams. Understandably, artists often leave Alberta to go to provinces where governments are more supportive and encouraging.

Stats Canada also reported that the economic impact of the culture sector in Alberta was $4.3 billion in the year 2001. The arts are an important tool in job creation and economic diversification. The Alberta Liberals recognize the value of the arts and culture sector and have developed policies that include immediately doubling the budget for AFA and considering substantial increases in the future; reviewing the operations and the mandate of the AFA; establishing a $500 million endowment fund for the arts, social sciences, and humanities.

Estimates, page 355, line 5.0.2. Funding for the arts is decreasing again this year by $1.167 million, or 37 per cent. Why hasn't this government made arts funding a real priority yet? How will this money be utilized this year? What groups, organizations, or programs will be impacted by this funding cut?

Estimates, page 355, line 5.0.8. Funding for assistance to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is $26.634 million, an increase of 21 per cent. Although this increase is welcome, it is once again far below what the arts sector requires in this province. Is the new minister prepared to work with the arts sector to ensure that their concerns are addressed? Is the minister willing to commit today to making arts funding a real priority for this government in years to come?

Arts groups have been asking for a substantial increase in funding for years. It has been estimated that the arts contribute approximately $150 million annually to the economy of this province, yet this government continues to rank among the poorest supporters of the arts in Canada. The point here, which is agreed upon by many stakeholders, is: why does this government consistently fail to support the arts when municipal and federal governments recognize the importance of the arts? Can the minister explain to these artists why they are always underfunded? Can the minister explain to the citizens of Alberta why this government ignores their wishes and continues to underfund the arts sector? Previous ministers claimed that the Tory caucus did not support a substantial increase to arts funding. What is the new minister going to do to change this ongoing problem?

GOA strategic business plan, page 36. A goal of this government is to create a cultural policy. What groups has the minister consulted? How do professional artists fit into the cultural policy?

Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture's business plan, page 307. How does the minister expect to meet the goal of attracting and retaining knowledge workers by enhancing Alberta's reputation as a sophisticated, modern province with a thriving cultural sector without providing professional artists with more funding and opportunities?

The next issue I want to talk about is parks. Estimates, page 354, line 2.0.3. Funding for the parks operations is increasing to $39.6

million, or by 18 per cent, for the maintenance, operations, and more parks staff. What problems with the parks operations has the minister identified that require additional financial support? How will this additional money be used? Which parks have requested additional funding? Which parks will be receiving this money? Is there a long-term plan that sets priorities for infrastructure renewal and conservation plans? Where do the Alberta river valleys fit on this government's list of priorities?

Estimates, page 354, line 2.0.6. One million dollars is allocated for nominal sum disposals. What is included under this line item? Where does this money go?

TPRC's business plan, page 308. "To keep pace with population growth and high visitation rates, new provincial parks and recreational areas that provide additional outdoor recreation opportunities, facilities and services need to be pursued." What areas are being considered for designation as provincial parks? Are municipalities and communities being consulted?

Now I come to sports. Estimates, page 354, section 3, recreation and sports. What plans does the minister have for implementing the Alberta sports plan? The Alberta Liberals have been very vocal in urging this government to implement the Alberta sports plan and make sports, recreation, and healthy living a priority.

Estimates page 354, line 3.0.4. A new recreation and sports facilities grant is being established this year. What are the guidelines for this $90 million fund? Who is eligible? Who can apply? Where can interested groups find more information? Who will be overseeing the distribution of this fund? What limits or conditions are in place for this fund? Has the minister been working with the minister of health to develop sports and recreation programs?

I have a few miscellaneous issues and questions that I would like to ask the minister, Mr. Chairman. The new major community facility program is intended to provide funding for projects identified as a priority for communities. Given the fact that rules in other granting programs such as the community initiatives program were clearly broken by this government, will this minister guarantee that the rules governing this $280 million program be consistently followed?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First, I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for his kind opening comments. I really appreciate it, and certainly my staff, who have done a tremendous amount of work on our budget and on our business plan, also appreciate that.

Your discussion started off by talking about arts and culture. You're aware that one of my mandates is to look at drafting a cultural policy that will encompass Alberta's cultural, historical, and natural advantages. My goal is to have a policy that reflects the widely held view that culture is recognized in a broad sense.

You talked about arts funding. Certainly the arts are very much a key element in quality of life, and improving Alberta's quality of life is one of my goals and one of our government's top priorities. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts received an additional 4 and a half million dollars through this particular budget, raising the foundation's total budget to $27.3 million. In total, then, the foundation has received – and I have to emphasize that – a 63 per cent increase in lottery funding since 2002. This year's increase, at about 20 per cent, takes that to 63, so it's a significant change from where we were in the past. I'm not sure where your numbers come from, hon. member, but in 2006-07 the numbers that we have ranked Alberta fifth out of all the provinces and territories in per capita funds awarded by provincial arts funding agencies.

We looked at funding that's given to other groups aside from the Foundation for the Arts. For example, a half million dollars is dedicated to supporting the 2008 Juno awards in Calgary. Resident companies of the Jubilee auditoria are given reduced rental rates, and those savings range anywhere from 6 to 7 per cent to 85 per cent. In addition, the government supports the arts through Alberta's educational institutions, where over 5,000 students are enrolled full-time in fine arts programs. Advanced education operating grants to institutions like the Alberta College of Art and Design and the Banff Centre exceeded $21 million in 2004-05. So if you compare the dollars provided to the community, then you need to include those dollars and not just strictly the dollars that are provided to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. We can talk about the province's film industry, and that budget is receiving a 24 per cent increase, totalling $18.3 million.

No doubt, as we evolve the cultural policy, arts funding will become a very, very strong element of that particular policy being developed for the province. In talking about the cultural policy, you've asked as to who we would have inquired or who we would have talked to. I need to indicate that extensive research has been completed to define the scope and the content of the policies. We've had a number of public opinions, research. There have been nine focus groups. There have been telephone surveys of over a thousand Albertans. We've had 13 stakeholder consultations and dialogue with other ministries and other jurisdictions on all of those policies and programs.

We've basically identified the key components of the cultural policy. We're establishing priorities and strategies and the desired outcomes. Those are going to be reviewed with further consultations that will be happening throughout this particular summer. Again, it will provide an assessment of priorities for the use, then, in developing the associated implementation plan. Certainly, as we move forward with that particular cultural policy, there will be additional budget dollars that will be tied to that, and we hope that we'll be able to introduce that in next year's budget.

You also talked about other funding, and I want to indicate to the hon. member that we've been supporting other groups and facilities. I just want to touch base very quickly on the Art Gallery of Alberta. You're aware that the provincial government has committed $15 million to the Art Gallery. We are one of the largest contributors to this project to date, and certainly those dollars came from the centennial funding.

We recognize that the Art Gallery has a shortfall of $32 million and that they've made a formal request for funding. That is being considered through our regular process, along with other government priorities and commitments, so as we speak we are considering the shortfall. We're committed. We want to see the Art Gallery proceed in the province and are prepared to cover some of those costs.

The question on nominal sum disposals. Basically, we are looking at the possibility of transferring ownership of assets. There are some discussions that we might be disposing of some provincial recreation areas. There are a number of sites that we are reviewing that we might be able to divest ourselves of and transfer those particular assets to local municipalities. That's where the $1 million comes from.

I'm just going through some of the questions that you might have had otherwise. You indicated a decrease in the total overall arts and cultural budget. Last year we had given about $600,000 to support the 2006 Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, DC. It was a one-time commitment; that $600,000 is not reflected in this year's budget.

As well, we had injected $12.5 million as a one-time increase that was approved by our ministry and the government of Alberta to address the backlog of approved grants for the film industry, the film development fund. That 12 and a half million dollars is not in this year's budget. So if you look at 12 and a half million dollars and $600,000, total those numbers up and remove them from our budget, you will actually see that our budget is increasing quite dramatically, rather than decreasing, as you indicated.

On the Alberta Foundation for the Arts we are doing a program evaluation as well. Certainly, we want to make sure that the Alberta Foundation for the Arts is providing the effectiveness that is required, and we are seeing how we might be able to make some improvements and actually increase its effectiveness for the province of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down now and entertain additional questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll move on to the horse racing and breeding renewal program. That program is receiving about a $56 million subsidy, an $11 million increase over last year. How is this industry sustainable? What is the long-term funding strategy for the for-profit horse-racing industry? Why does this government continue to subsidize horse racing at the expense of other programs?

In the year 2006 the Auditor General's report recommends that the ministry approve its system for selecting private operators to run provincially owned parks and for monitoring contract performance. Have these recommendations been implemented yet? They were supposed to be implemented by December 31, 2006. What specific changes were made to the contracting process? How are improvements being measured?

The next question I have is about the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, which is no longer able to issue special permission for an underage musician to perform in a licensed premise. This move will limit opportunities for young performers to learn and practise. According to musicians, being able to perform in licensed facilities is an essential part of developing and applying skills. What involvement did the minister have in making this decision? Given that there were never any complaints about underage musicians working in these establishments, why was the decision made to ban them? Will the minister reverse this decision?

I'll move on to the film industry estimates page 355, line 5.0.5. Can the minister explain why the Alberta film development program overspent in the year 2006 by $12.5 million? Can the minister explain why funding for this program is back down to $18 million, a reduction of 33 per cent or $9 million? How does the minister justify this cut given the slowing pace of production in Alberta this summer? Is the minister developing other incentives to attract the film industry to Alberta?

On tourism. On May 10 I asked the minister to release the Leitch report. The tourism community is waiting for the final report that identifies gaps in the accountability in the current tourism framework and recommends options to close those gaps. Will the minister make that report public immediately? What changes to Travel

Alberta's governance structure is the minister considering? How much of the $57 million tourism budget does Travel Alberta control? What involvement does the tourism industry have in deciding how these funds are spent? We hear that there is an opportunity for tourism revenue growth in rural communities, especially agricultural tourism. How much support is being allocated specifically for agricultural tourism? What is being done to assist rural communities in creating marketing and development plans?

Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of other miscellaneous questions. I asked the minister questions about the Alberta Provincial Museum project that is delayed for the time being. I just want to know what progress has been made so far.

One of my constituents asked me about the name of the ministry. We call it Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. How come culture comes last? It's not even alphabetical. Arts and culture are so important, and culture is last. Even the former Premier of this province was suggesting that there should be a separate ministry for arts and culture. I'm really shocked to see the name of the ministry – Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture – with culture named last. I think we should think twice, I mean, a hundred times before naming this ministry. I want to know who named this ministry, and what's the secret behind this?

I want to ask another question about tourism. You know, it's the fourth largest industry in Alberta. Do we have the proper plan for this? If not, are we going to make a sustainable plan for this industry? If we have a proper sustainable policy for this sector, I think most of the stakeholders I talked to said that we can increase this industry to maybe a $10 billion industry. If we have a long-term sustainable plan for this, I would love to see that plan. I want to know what the progress is on this sector.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you. I'll keep on responding to some of the initial questions first and then move on to the second series of questions that he had.

There were some discussions initially about the $90 million under the ministry's budget. The hon. member was asking why $90 million had been allocated towards recreation and sports facilities as grants. Those are one-time grants in the capital plan. There was $10 million being allocated to Rexall Place, $10 million for Pengrowth Saddledome, $15 million for Commonwealth Stadium, $15 million for McMahon Stadium, and $40 million for Canada Olympic Park in Calgary. Certainly, $40 million is a start towards $69 million of improvements that we're doing to help train our Olympians for the 2010 games.

The provincial parks, a question there about the plan. Certainly, the ministry will develop the parks plan in three different phases, starting with the comprehensive needs assessment and reviewing sort of the deferred maintenance issues in existing parks. We're looking at some of the deferred maintenance there, and we're looking at options to expand the outdoor recreational opportunities. We're also looking at opportunities for new provincial parks, that will respond to increasing provincial growth and the overall services we offer to our visitors. Our visitors' expectations are rising all the time. We want to provide additional services there.

On the Alberta gaming and liquor control that the hon. member talked about, certainly that's not a mandate of my ministry. All of those regulations fall under the Ministry of the Solicitor General. Those questions would have to be directed at him. We are not involved at all there. From the revenues that we get from lottery funds, we administer the revenue side and the spending side. But when it comes to the rules and the regulations and the control of the gaming machines, for instance, then that falls under a different ministry, so you would have to direct the questions there.

Going to horse racing. Certainly, the horse-racing industry is a controversial one amongst the opposition, but I need to indicate that we truly believe in the horse-racing industry in the province. It has a very, very long history in the province of Alberta. It generates some strong economic benefits and employs over 8,000 Albertans in the province. The thing that I need to indicate is that, you know, although they do get some revenues, a third of the money that's generated through the lottery comes back to the province of Alberta, and a third of those dollars are some of the dollars that we do use to support activities like the arts.

Certainly, they're not any different than other organizations where they actually work and earn a portion of the revenues from the casinos. They'll keep a portion. The other portion comes back to us as a province, and we allocate it back to other priorities that this province has. Last year there was $41.8 million of slot machine revenue that was invested in the horse-racing industry. We need to remember that that $41.8 million generated $385 million of economic activity for the province of Alberta. So we still look at it as a positive investment, an investment that provides not only returns on the portion of the casino revenues but a portion of the revenues coming back in additional economic activity.

The horse-racing association, as well, has a business plan that they need to follow. That particular business plan is monitored very, very closely by ourselves as a government. The funding has to be used for very, very specific purposes. It's for the racetrack operations and capital. It's for breeding improvements and, certainly, purse enhancements. We are still supportive of the horse-racing industry. We want to see it grow. We want to see it evolve in the province of Alberta.

Going back to the Leitch report very quickly, the Leitch report has been made public over the last couple of weeks as information to you as hon. members. The four options that the Leitch report provided are there. They're on the Travel Alberta site. The Leitch report was released to the tourism industry and is being looked at and reviewed, and we expect comments from our stakeholders in the tourism industry.

When we look at the work that we might be doing in agricultural tourism, for instance, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council advises the government on tourism. Generally, about a quarter of the funds that are collected through the levy is reinvested or expended in rural Alberta or targeted to rural Alberta initiatives. Right now, Travel Alberta spends about $49 million for marketing out of the $57.3 million that is collected under the levy, of which, as I indicated, a portion goes back to rural Alberta.

The question was asked about the overspending on the film industry. The hon. member needs to understand that the film industry budget went up by $3.5 million. Last year we injected an additional $12.5 million in one-time funding to the film industry, and that was to catch up on all the applications. There was a backlog of applications. To the member, that's a very, very positive thing.

We see the film industry growing quite rapidly in the province of Alberta. We are adding additional dollars to that particular sector, and we hope that it will keep on growing. At the rate that it's growing, we anticipate that we'll probably be again in a deficit position this year and may have to go back sometime in the next year or two with, you know, maybe an additional one-time funding to catch up on shortfalls. We anticipate that a certain number of films might be filmed in the province of Alberta. We don't know how many will actually be filmed, so we tend to be somewhat, maybe, after the fact in terms of trying to support that particular industry.

But we are committed to the industry. We want to see it develop and grow. We want to eventually move into series productions in the province of Alberta, and we're looking at different alternatives to see that happen. The growth in the film industry and the television industry is basically due to Alberta's really strong winning combination of diverse locations that we can offer in the province. We're getting some very strong crews that are becoming experts in the film industry. We're having better and better producers in the province of Alberta. Certainly, the film development fund – all of that combined provides incentives to both our domestic and foreign productions.

The last comment that you had was on the word “culture” being part of the name of this particular Ministry of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. I need to remind the hon. member that the word “culture” had not been in the name of any ministry, well, for the last 15 years, probably.

You know, I had a chance to sit down with our past Premier Lougheed after he had made his comments. Premier Lougheed had not recognized or realized that “culture” had come back as part of the full name of a ministry. After he made his comments, I pointed out to him the fact that “culture” was back into a ministry name. He was very, very pleased to hear that. Certainly, we're heading in the right direction. The opposition member might say: well, it's the last name. It's at least within the name of the ministry.

On the Royal Alberta Museum the project renewal . . .

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the staff coming down and being on the floor to assist the minister today. I do appreciate the efforts of the minister, and I appreciate that he's made some attempts to get out and attend some of the artistic offerings in my city, Edmonton. I know that I've seen him at the opera and the ballet. There is much more in our cultural offerings, and I encourage him to continue to explore that. I think he's a nice person, and I think he's trying, but this government has set him at a task where he is coming from very, very, very far behind. What's that saying? A day late and a dollar short? Well, this would be about, oh, I don't know, 15 years late and $20 million short.

I was going to say that I was disappointed in the efforts of the government around culture. I'm not disappointed; I'm flat out exasperated. You guys have missed the boat over and over and over again. To try and stand in here and say that we've increased funding by 25 per cent and 50 per cent or whatever number you're pulling out, you're funding the whole amount by so little that we have not allowed growth.

We had an amazing artistic community here, and in the last two incarnations of this particular Tory government, with the stagnant funding for the arts and the minuscule increases that we've had of $2 million, $3 million, or $4 million, we've lost companies. We've lost theatres. We've lost dance companies. We've lost publishers. We've lost musical producers. The film industry was almost completely decimated by choices that the government made in the early '90s and has been rebuilding ever since then. So we're coming from way, way behind and trying to make up for the lack of support and in some cases the outright hostility of this government towards our artistic communities. That's an editorial comment.

There are two particular issues that I'd like to raise with you today that have been brought to my attention. I appreciate the efforts of my colleague who is the shadow minister for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture to have gone through a wide range of questions on this ministry. There are two things that I'd like to address. One is a situation where there has been an unlevel playing field created both in Edmonton and in Calgary. I'm referring specifically to the Winspear Centre and the EPCOR centre in Calgary. Those facilities do not receive funding for the operation of the facility. It's a commonly held misconception that funding the symphony is funding the Winspear Centre. It's not. They're separate organizations; there are separate boards of directors, and they have separate needs. The ESO is getting funding and does what it does, but the Winspear does not receive direct core funding as a facility, and neither does the EPCOR centre in Calgary. What we have is that they are trying to compete with the northern and southern Jubilee auditoriums, which are subsidized in one form or another by this government, so we have an unlevel playing field.

To the credit of the people that I've been talking to at the Winspear Centre, they're not asking particularly to start receiving money, but they are saying: let's make it a level playing field. I guess what I would say is that if you're going to continue to subsidize and make sure that the Jubilee auditoria never run deficits – which, let's face it, is a way of subsidizing them – then you need to have some kind of program that benefits the other medium and large performing spaces in Alberta.

Now, you currently have a program called major facilities where there are grants available to the Citadel Theatre and EPCOR centre, but that is grandfathered, and it's only those two organizations. Despite attempts by the Winspear Centre to be included in that grant, the government has refused, saying that it's grandfathered and it's going to be phased out. We have a situation where an artificial economy has been set up, where the Jubilee auditoria in both places are funded by Public Works and several other provincial agencies, which is creating a situation where the Winspear Centre has to remain competitive in a marketplace while not having the same benefit of support.

There is an inequity that has been created here, and I would like to see that inequity addressed specifically. I really would prefer not to have a bunch of excuses about how the Jubilee auditoria aren't really funded, because they are. They are owned by the province. They are never allowed to go into debt, and there is direct and indirect funding that goes in there. But here we have a well-respected – frankly, world-class – musical centre, and it doesn't get direct funding. Funding the ESO or funding other groups that use that facility does not fund that facility. In order to keep it sort of in the marketplace for other not-for-profits to use, it has to be competitive in the rates that it's offering, and that's not possible right now.

Again, they're not necessarily looking for ongoing funding, but they are looking for some kind of level playing field. To say, “They got lottery dollars once. That's government funding,” well, lottery dollars, as you keep telling me, are not out of general revenue, so I can't accept that argument. I'm happy to put the current minister together with the general manager of the Edmonton Concert Hall Foundation, which is the official name for the Winspear Centre, to see if we can get resolution for this.

I'm really concerned. We've lost two medium-size playing spaces in Edmonton with the Kaasa, and we have gained a number of them in Calgary, thank goodness, with the Vertigo Theatre space and the Grand Theatre space.

An Hon. Member: Great support from government.

Ms Blakeman: Great support from government, that's true, because the other initiatives fund, that amorphous slush fund of the government, God bless them, came through and funded those two theatre spaces. So we have medium-size theatre spaces available in Calgary. We don't in Edmonton. While the Winspear is not suitable for all spaces – it is a smaller place than the Jubilee, for example – it's in competition with the Jubilee. So we need to look after that Winspear and make sure that it's available for groups to access. I would urge the minister to continue to look for opportunity. I'm happy to give him personal advice on how we can create – we literally need to build or modify, renovate, to create another mid-sized playing space in Edmonton because the loss of the Kaasa has really hurt us. The Catalyst and Third Space and even the additional spaces at the Citadel are not filling that gap.

The next issue that I wanted to bring up was brought to me by an individual artist who has actually just returned to Edmonton. He's quite frustrated by this whole idea of a one-grant policy. I remember when that came in because somebody got it in their head over there that the artists were double-dipping – oh, horror, horror – and that they should only be allowed to access one grant. What we had before was core funding, for example, or operating funding going to a theatre, and then the theatres could often apply for a special project grant for a special project. It wasn't for ongoing funding. It was a special project. Sometimes even artists could get additional funding if they were doing something unique or one-time only or special or a very large project that fed into that. So it wasn't double-dipping. It was about augmenting special projects.

If we want to keep our artists here, we have to help them and support them in the work they're trying to do. With this one-grant policy you've basically restricted artists to a particular field, and they're not eligible to apply for grants in more than one field. You're losing your cross-disciplinary people, which, frankly, with new media is where we all need to be going. You're cutting off a group of people from being able to access funding they should be able to access. I'm asking you to relook at that whole idea of the one-grant policy because it does restrict artists from practising in more than one discipline or arts organizations from doing that.

The second comment that I had from the individual was the frustration with the very odd timing of the new grant program, Alberta creative development initiative, which won't be announced until the fall. Then they're told that there's an intake deadline for these programs that will be, sort of, very shortly after the day of the announcement, and everything has got to commence before the fiscal year-end of March 31. You know, these groups are darn good at planning. Most of them have already announced next season, and now we're expecting them to come in and very quickly put together a project without knowing what the parameters are or very quickly after learning the parameters. It's not working, and you need to address this particular program.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. member for her initial kind comments at the start of her discussion. I want to re-emphasize that, certainly, on the arts funding the information that we have ranks Alberta fifth in all of the provinces. You know, I agree that we might be low. We're heading in the right direction. We want to do more, and we want to go ahead and add to the support that we give. The cultural policy will allow us to move forward in that particular area. I need to re-emphasize, although we talked about percentages, that 63 per cent over the last three years or 20 per cent this year is still a very, very significant number, in my opinion. It certainly beats 6 per cent or 7 per cent, and we're going there.

When it comes to the film industry, again, we are doing well with the film industry. We certainly want to grow that particular side. Mr. Chairman, I see that we're slowly running out of time, so I'll try to be fairly quick with my comments.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we have another about six and a half, almost seven, six minutes, 45 seconds to go.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you. That's fine. The review of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts that we're doing certainly will ensure that we have appropriate and optimal use of grant funds to meet the needs of our artists and our arts organizations in the province of Alberta.

The Winspear, you know, to talk about facilities, will certainly be invited to also participate on the cultural policy, and we would hope that that particular message would come through as well. The Winspear has never formally approached me as a new minister to ask for funding, and certainly they could do that. I'm not aware that they've ever approached us.

On the EPCOR centre. They are getting a couple hundred thousand dollars a year for their operational side. We are giving them some support there. The Citadel also receives a fair amount of funding in that way. So, generally, we encourage the Winspear and the Citadel or any other group, if we're looking at new mid-sized type facilities, to look at the major community facilities program that we've just announced. Certainly, that particular program, the $140 million a year for the next two years, is aimed, aside from recreational facilities or health-related type of facilities, very much at cultural facilities. Those dollars are going to be there, and if there's a group that would approach us with a particular proposal, we'd be looking at it as a possibility in that particular area.

On the new program that you talked about, our recent partnership that we announced with the Canada council certainly will directly benefit, again, our arts and arts organizations. That's an additional $6 million that's being injected into the particular community.

I'm going to close by talking about the Royal Alberta Museum. It's one question that I wanted to talk about initially. Our government is still committed to having one of the finest museums in Canada at the Royal Alberta Museum. We're still looking at a series of options to best implement that particular museum renewal, and we are committed to a museum in the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Chairman, I will sit down at this stage.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the three hours that were allocated for the Liberal caucus has elapsed. Is there any other member who would like to participate for the next three minutes that we have left? If none, I can recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have one more question for the hon. minister about the website. Normally when we see the website about all the grants, we don't find the full details in there. It's sometimes misleading. When you see the website, you see the total amount of money and the name of the group. They don't say exactly how they get the grant and whether they are matching grants or nonmatching grants and some other qualifications. It's not there.

Another question I wanted to ask you is about the Human Rights Commission. I think that in the last budget the government hired two full-time employees. I just want to know whether the government has any plans to hire some more people because the workload there – what I heard from some of the stakeholders is that the applications are there for years. I mean, they have to wait a long time. So what's the plan for hiring some more people there?

The third one: as the minister knows, in CIP grants and CFEP and other initiative programs in the Applewood community the rules were broken, and even the Auditor General's report recognized that. Are we going to improve the system? I mean, even with the Applewood community, as far as I know, we couldn't recover that money from them.

So those are a few more questions. I would really appreciate if you would answer them in a couple of minutes. If not today, maybe some other time in writing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon minister, we have about a minute.

Mr. Goudreau: Okay. Very quickly, then, Mr. Chairman. On the grants, on the website: we're evaluating what information is provided there, and certainly we're looking at and committed to making improvements and providing additional information while at the same time respecting the names of individuals. You know, we can give more information and provide additional materials there to be more open and more transparent. Certainly, we want to show individuals what those grants are all about.

Under the Human Rights Commission we presently have 50 staff. We are adding two more, and you will note that this year we've been able to process more applications. Our total numbers actually . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but I will now invite the officials to leave the Assembly so the committee may rise and report progress.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(a) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Sustainable Resource Development; International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations; Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Evening Sitting on June 5

26. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly pursuant to Standing Order 4 convene an evening sitting beginning at 7 p.m. on Tuesday, June 5, 2007, for the consideration of main estimates in Committee of Supply.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Colleagues will recall that a few weeks ago we had occasion to debate I think it was Bill 34, Tenancies Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. At that time it was necessary to reschedule the afternoon of that Thursday that we debated Bill 34 for third reading, and it's therefore necessary to find the replacement time period for what was scheduled for that afternoon. I believe it's fair to say that all parties agree that it should be rescheduled for the evening of June 5. We now need the motion necessary to put that into effect and call the session for the evening of June 5.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, I'm happy to support this government motion. I'm not happy that it's sitting in the evening, but I understand the circumstances. I'm happy to support it because it was very good of the government caucus to agree to move their time to make way for a longer debate time on Bill 34 for the Residential Tenancies Act. That was a bill that everyone was interested in having before the House. So I appreciate the effort from the government caucus, and I'm happy to support having it moved to the evening of Tuesday, June 5.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Government Motion 26 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Referral of Bill 31 to Community Services Committee

24. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly refer Bill 31, Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, to the Standing Committee on Community Services for the committee's consideration, review, and comment and request the committee to report to the Assembly on or before the first week of the fall 2007 sitting.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both yesterday and the day before we debated similar motions with respect to Bill 1 and Bill 2. I think, if I may just say, that Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, is a particularly important bill to put before the policy field committee. There's a wide range of viewpoints with respect to community treatment orders. The committee will have the opportunity, I believe, to hear a variety of views with respect to community treatment orders themselves and their use, will have the opportunity to hear the concerns of families that have adult children with a mental disorder and who have a need of another tool. They'll also have the opportunity to hear concerns about the civil liberties of the individual, concerns about the ability of our health system to provide proactive treatment in the community. That's a very important public discussion to have, and I can think of no better place to have it than in the policy field committee and then recommendations, perhaps, of amendments to the bill or at least a report on what they've heard back to the Legislature before we consider the bill for committee and third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I think this is a great opportunity, and this should be a very interesting bill to explore the many different facets of the particular policy field committee that this bill is being referred to for all of the reasons that the hon. Government House Leader has outlined. We are stepping into uncharted territory here. We don't really know how these committees are going to operate. I'm pleased to hear that the Government House Leader is open to having presentations made from the public. I'm hoping that we can have some experts brought in to present as well, perhaps have some additional research and literature reviews done for the members of the committee to help educate and explore the issue to the fullest extent possible.

This is a highly charged issue, and I think it's entirely appropriate that we get to move the issue to a policy field committee and open it up so that there is wider participation. I'm looking forward to this debate. I'm not on the committee, but I'm certainly going to be looking for my opportunity to attend and perhaps even participate in the proceedings. I'm pleased to see as well that there is a report-back date that's included in the referral motion from the government so that we know when it's going to be coming back before the session. I'm assuming that if there are recommended amendments or observations that the committee is going to make, then they can be dealt with further in the Assembly during the fall sitting.

I urge all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support Motion 24 to refer Bill 31, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, to the Standing Committee on Community Services. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the sponsor of Bill 31 I also support Government Motion 24. I'm glad to see all sides of the House agreeing on this, and I also look forward to bringing this bill to the policy field committee. I have received several letters of correspondence from different groups that are interested in having input on the bill, so I think this is going to be a great process.

I, too, urge all of my colleagues to support Government Motion 24. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Government Motion 24 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It being 5:53 on a Thursday afternoon, I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, June 4.

[Motion carried; at 5:53 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1 p.m.]

Title: Monday, June 4, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I'm now going to ask Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the ambassador of Belgium to Canada, His Excellency Mr. Jean Lint. This is the first time His Excellency has travelled to Alberta. I'm pleased to say that Belgium and Alberta have always been strong trading partners. Since 2001 annual exports have increased from $118 million to over $213 million, including nickel, wheat, wood pulp, and cobalt. Between 2001 and 2005 Alberta imports from Belgium were worth approximately $134 million a year, including diamonds, medications, blood products, and chocolate.

Mr. Speaker, Belgium has been at the forefront of international trade and diplomacy. It is one of the six founding countries of the European Union, and the headquarters of the EU as well as NATO headquarters are located in Belgium's capital city, Brussels. Not only do we share a strong trade relationship with Belgium; there are about 15,000 Albertans of Belgian descent who call our province home.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to welcome His Excellency to our province. May I ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some very special guests who are with us in the House this afternoon. I am honoured to welcome 47 ladies and gentlemen from my constituency representing the communities of Innisfree, Islay, Clandonald, Marwayne, Dewberry, Blackfoot, Mannville, and Vermilion. Through the organizational efforts of Shirley McRobert, the seniors' co-ordinator for the county of Vermilion River in the town of Vermilion, these fine folks are visiting us here today to take part in the Alberta Legislature's celebrations for Seniors' Week 2007.

Alberta's seniors have contributed much to our province. Their vision, their personal sacrifice, and unfaltering resourcefulness shaped our province and laid the foundation for our current prosperity. They continue to remain active and viable in our communities. The theme of this year's Seniors' Week, Celebrate Seniors' Present and Future Contributions, accurately reflects the important role of our most experienced citizens.

I would now ask these very special guests of ours to rise and please accept the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 19 bright and very well-behaved students from Eastwood school along with their teacher, Khery Wallace. I would ask that they now please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and pleasure to introduce to you and Members of the Legislative Assembly some 60 energetic students from the Edmonton Christian school northeast campus. They are accompanied by two teachers, Elaine Junk and Mr. Greg Gurnett. I might point out again that his brother Jim Gurnett served in this Legislature with me many years ago. They're also accompanied by parents Angela VanKooten, Mr. Mark Hennig, Mrs. Linda Ryks, Mrs. Edith Sinclair, Mrs. Rose VandenBoogard, Mrs. Fran Wolthius. I would now ask them to stand – I think they're in both sections – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a group of 17 industrious, hard-working employees from the Department of Sustainable Resource Development finance branch seated in the members' gallery. They're here on a public service orientation tour. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly representative students from the grade 9 class at Allendale school here in Edmonton. They are Maggie Boeske, Kira Dlusskaya, and Nikolai Semenenko along with their teacher, Robin Knight. They'll be joined by 22 of their peers at about 1:30, when room is opening up for them in the galleries.

Mr. Speaker, you may remember that a few weeks ago Dr. Richard Leakey was in Edmonton. One of the things that Dr. Leakey did was make a presentation to school students here in Edmonton at the science centre. This particular class of students, as a class project, wrote individual letters to me, the Environment minister, about their impressions of what Dr. Leakey had to tell them. I was so impressed with the quality of those letters that I asked that those students come and join me here at the Legislature so that I could meet them face to face and answer their questions and deal with their concerns. We just had lunch in room 512. I'm here to say that this is an outstanding group of young Albertans that, I'm proud to say, will become, I'm sure, the leaders of our province in years to come.

I would ask that they stand and be recognized and receive the traditional warm welcome of all members of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Heather Massel, a public affairs officer in the Department of Justice and Attorney General. Heather is a fellow member of the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. We affectionately call her Princess. I'll ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two individuals from southern Alberta. The first is Gerard Gibbs, the executive director of the Empress Theatre Society. The Empress Theatre is that jewel on Main Street Fort Macleod.

An Hon. Member: Indeed.

Mr. Coutts: Absolutely.

It is Alberta's oldest working theatre. It started in June of 1912. Today it boasts about 12,000 patrons per year, and it is the unique cultural and historic resource in southern Alberta that stands, I believe, as the flagship today, as Gerard says, for performing arts in southern Alberta. Joining Mr. Gibbs is Lise Boutin. Lise is a Franco-Albertan artist, Mr. Speaker. She is an accomplished concert violinist. She is the concertmaster of the Calgary Bach orchestra, a member of the Pacific Baroque Orchestra of Vancouver. She has played with the Winnipeg, Edmonton, and Calgary symphonies, but her favourite place is the Empress Theatre stage in Fort Macleod. They are seated in the members' gallery. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my pleasure to take part today in what has become an annual luncheon meeting, almost a meeting of the minds, if you will, as today in the Legislature seven central and southern Alberta MLAs met with six central Alberta ATA presidents to discuss a number of very important issues. I'd ask the gentlemen to rise as I call their names and please remain standing until all are introduced. Today we met with Jere Geiger from Central West, Gary Hansen from Wetaskiwin, Scott Lewis from Wolf Creek, Brenton Baum from Timberline, Hans Huizing from Red Deer public, and Bob Worsfold from Chinook's Edge. Sending his regrets, also, was Chris McCullough from Red Deer separate. I see that the gentlemen are all standing, so I would ask my colleagues to please give them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been looking forward to this day for some time to introduce to you, to all members, and to all Albertans two of Alberta's brightest shining young stars. First, I'm very proud to announce that our STEP student for Calgary-Lougheed for the summer is Sandra Watson, who has spent time personally and professionally in Harbin, China, and speaks Mandarin Chinese. She has many, many other gifts and talents. She has two young boys, Austin and Zachary, and currently is in her final year of her bachelor of applied policy studies degree at Mount Royal College. She really enjoys dealing with people, does a great job of that, and she really loves politics.

Second, I'm proud to present a born and raised Calgarian named David Rothwell, who's always had a passion for public service. I can relate to him in a couple of other ways: an outdoor enthusiast who loves hiking and spending time in the mountains. This year David graduated with a bachelor of applied policy studies degree at Mount Royal College and recently completed a sport development policy framework on behalf of Sport Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, in the future if Alberta is in the hands of young people like this, we'll be just fine. I'd like to ask Sandra and David, who are behind me every step of the way, including today in the members' gallery, to please stand to accept the warm wishes of everyone in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group from the St. Albert Catholic teachers' local 23: Ms Viviane Pezer, president of the Greater St. Albert Catholic teachers; Sean Brown, vice-president of the Greater St. Albert Catholic teachers' local 23; Carryl Bennett, secretary of the Greater St. Albert Catholic teachers' local 23; Sun Ang, high school teacher; Janice McDonald, elementary teacher; Herman Weidle, elementary teacher; and Claude Dubé, elementary teacher. Would they please rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of my ongoing celebration of Edmonton being named Canada's cultural capital for 2007 I'd like to introduce to you Robert Shannon. Now, Robert is one of the representatives from Canada who is going to the Prague Quadriennial. This is an exhibition of outstanding stage design from around the world. Over 60 countries are represented, and Robert is going to represent us here. His exhibit that is on display there is from Edmonton Opera's performance of Weill in Weimar. I think it was Robert's costume designs that were there. He is currently on faculty with the fine arts department here at the U of A in theatre design, specializing in costumes, lighting, and new media. I would ask Robert to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Florentino Yap, Juan Tamag, and Tania Wiest. They're on their 269th day of strike at the Palace Casino, due to this government's unwillingness to pass fair first contract legislation. Florentino has worked at the casino for five years. Originally he came from the Philippines, in 1992. He's a husband and father of three. Juan has been at the Palace Casino for three years in the maintenance department. He's also from the Philippines and immigrated to Canada in 2002 with his wife of 43 years. Tania has been at the casino for three years in the food and beverage department. She enjoys sports and is looking forward to enjoying playing in the summer weather. Accompanying them is UFCW union representative Don Crisall. I would now ask my guests, who are sitting in the public gallery, to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, today over 500 individuals will visit the Alberta Legislature Building. Just as a point of interest, the Alberta Legislature Building and Grounds are the third-largest destination point for visitors to the city of Edmonton on an annual basis.

International Aboriginal Film & Television Festival

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 12 years Albertans and the international community have had the pleasure to be enlightened, entertained, and amused by the presentations at the International Aboriginal Film & Television Festival. Over the next six days the richness of aboriginal culture, life stories, and voyages will be highlighted for all to enjoy. Because Dreamspeakers is the only aboriginal film and TV festival in Alberta, it plays a vital role in allowing these stories to be told to the population as a whole, breaking barriers and facilitating cultural understanding.

It begins with a welcome reception tonight at the Citadel Theatre and will feature our Premier and the festival society's board chair as they welcome local, national, and international guests from as far away as New Zealand and Africa. In addition, the New Zealand movie The Waimate Conspiracy will be featured during the opening screening.

On Tuesday and Wednesday audiences will be challenged as they attend pitching workshops for TV and movies and will enjoy indigenous works of art and film. After all, Mr. Speaker, visual arts are a profound representation of the thoughts of our souls and allow us to express that which words alone cannot. When we celebrate and explore ecstatic joy, crushing pain, unbreakable connection with nature, our love and kinship, we are connected to our community and are filled with great freedom and strength.

Aboriginal youth are a key component in this year's festival. Over 20 youth workshops were held throughout Alberta, sponsored and facilitated by the Dreamspeakers' festival and resulting in evocative and moving films, each of which will be premiered to a broad audience on the featured Youth Day, Thursday, June 7. Programs like this build confidence and teach transferrable skills that can help our aboriginal youth cope and express their stories in positive ways, as well as create the next generation of filmmakers in Alberta.

Saturday, June 9, will be the wrap-up party. To one and all, come and join the Dreamspeakers' International Aboriginal Film & Television Festival as they party into the wee hours with the Jim Cuddy Band.

I commend the Dreamspeakers Festival Society and volunteers for making this unique cultural extravaganza possible. To the aboriginal talent brought alive on screen and in our hearts, your expression feeds our souls and gives us all great power. Enjoy a great week.

CFB Suffield

Mr. Mittel: Mr. Speaker, eximius ordo is Latin for "out of the ordinary." It is also the motto of Canadian Forces Base (CFB) Suffield.

Last week I attended the change of command ceremony at the base, where Lieutenant-Colonel Dan Drew, who is headed for duty in Afghanistan, was succeeded by Lieutenant-Colonel Malcolm Bruce. Lieutenant-Colonel Bruce, in taking command of CFB Suffield, now holds the reins of a very important military base. It spans over 2,690 square kilometres and is one of the largest live-fire training areas in the western world.

To give you a little bit of history, Mr. Speaker, in 1941 the need for a combined British/Canadian experimental station for trials in biological and chemical warfare was satisfied by establishing one in Suffield. In 1971 CFB Suffield was officially named and was allocated to the army. That year the Canadian government also ratified a 10-year agreement permitting the British forces to use approximately three-quarters of the training area for armoured, infantry, and artillery training. Four years later the Alberta Energy Company, now EnCana, was given permission to develop natural gas deposits and heavy oil deposits underneath the base. Since June 2003 458 square kilometres of the base have been protected as part of the CFB Suffield national wildlife area, home to a number of unique plants and animals.

Today the base provides support services for a number of units, including the British Army Training Unit Suffield, or BATUS, and Defence Research and Development Canada (DRDC) Suffield. DRDC Suffield conducts research into areas such as artificial intelligence in robotic equipment and performs antiterrorism training for countries around the world. The BATUS battle groups, three to five per year, have between 800 and 1,800 soldiers who use this as their last training before deployment to places like Afghanistan. Prince Harry and his command are presently training out on the prairie.

A new Canadian/United Kingdom treaty and MOU to permit continued British Army training at the base was signed last year. The signing will ensure that the base remains viable well into the future.

Mr. Speaker, as you can tell from this extensive and quick history, CFB Suffield is, indeed, out of the ordinary. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Sports Hall of Fame and Museum Inductees

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend I had the pleasure of attending the 2007 induction ceremony for the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame and Museum in Red Deer. Among the group of 14 inductees at this year's ceremony were international athletes, Olympic champions, innovative business leaders, championship teams, and other men and women who have made their mark in sport not only here in Alberta and Canada but all over the world. In fact, the team that our own Lieutenant Governor played on for 10 seasons, the Edmonton Eskimos, was inducted into the Alberta Hall of Fame in the team category this weekend. His Honour and the Eskimos won three consecutive Grey Cups, between 1954 and 1956.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents and I recognize the importance of the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame and Museum to the city of Red Deer and to this province. It is a place for people of all ages to learn the history of sport in our province. From the amateur to the professional, Alberta's athletes, teams, and sports builders enshrined in the Hall of Fame all contribute to the rich legacy of sport here in Alberta.

I would now like to ask the members of the House to join me in recognizing the 2007 Alberta Sports Hall of Fame and Museum inductees. They are Cassie Campbell, Megan Delehanty, Earl Ingarfield Sr., Curtis Myden, Eldon C. Godfrey, Harley Hotchkiss, D.K. Seaman, B.J. Seaman, Lorna Snow, the 1954, '55, and '56 Edmonton Eskimos, the 1987 and '88 Medicine Hat Tigers, John F. Mayell, Robert MacDermott, and Wes Montgomery. Congratulations to all the inductees.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Government Report Card

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tories failing Albertans: the June report card. For 32 years of my professional life as a public schoolteacher I and my colleagues were very busy in June preparing students to write final exams, the results from which would be averaged into their June report cards. As the end of both this Legislative session and the reporting period of June are fast approaching, it is time to issue the Premier and his government their report card.

From the top Tory to the bottom of his backbench this government has been a disappointment to the majority of Albertans. Our current Premier wasn't crowned even by the members of his own party. He was the compromise candidate, the least feared, with the least baggage. He ran on a ticket of not rocking the boat, of offering transparency and accountability. To Albertans' dismay those promises have not been kept. His boat has never left dry dock. Secrecy and superficiality continue to dominate this government's market-driven dogma. Whether it's the Premier's failure to disclose the source of $163,000 of his campaign donations, his choice of a primarily male, rural-dominated cabinet, which refuses to allow municipalities, school boards, or health regions the autonomy of budget decisions, or its interference in the outcomes of task forces, this government has failed to deliver on its promise of transparency and accountability. It has failed to find a balance between economic and environmental issues.

The government, through its lack of intervention and refusal to set aside a significant portion of surplus savings, recommended not only by our Alberta Liberal caucus but by the Canada West Foundation, the Chambers of Commerce, and the Canadian taxpayers association, has jumped on the boom train and will ride it through to its inevitable bust. This tired government has failed. It's time for a change, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Councillor Terry Cavanagh

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to speak about a very well-known and respected member of the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency, Councillor Terry Cavanagh.

Born in Edmonton, he was first elected to Edmonton city council in 1971 and served until 1975, when he was elected mayor by council after the death of Mayor William Hawrelak. Mr. Cavanagh was mayor from 1975 until 1977. He returned to council in 1983 as a councillor and served in this capacity until 1988, when he was again elected by council to serve as mayor. He served as mayor until 1989. Three years later he was once again elected councillor. He currently represents ward 6 and does it very well.

He was the first native-born mayor of Edmonton and is the recipient of many awards, including the commemorative medal for Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II's golden jubilee in 2002, admission to the Order of St. John in 1999 in recognition of contributions to the city of Edmonton, the Alberta human rights and civil liberties association human rights award in 1996, and the Governor General's 125th anniversary commemorative medal in 1992 in recognition of significant contribution to compatriots, community, and Canada.

Both Mr. Cavanagh and his wife, June, have served diligently as councillors for the city of Edmonton. On May 15, 2007, Mr. Cavanagh decided to retire, after 27 years of service to the city of Edmonton and the citizens of ward 6. He will be greatly missed. I would like to thank him on behalf of all Edmontonians for his many years of dedicated service to Edmonton and its citizens. He is a proud Edmontonian. He is an avid promoter of this province. He is a patriotic Canadian. We wish him and his family all the very best in retirement, long life, and good health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Brain Injury Awareness Week

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about Brain Injury Awareness Week, which runs from June 1 to 8. This special week helps to increase awareness of the effects of brain injuries and the ways Albertans can prevent them. Over 10,000 Albertans acquire brain injury each year. Many of them are preventable. For every preventable injury there is needless cost to individuals and to society.

The Alberta brain injury initiative, supported by the government through Seniors and Community Supports, since the year 2000 has addressed the needs of adults with acquired brain injury. The initiative works to support Albertans with brain injuries and their families by connecting them with supports that assist with relearning daily living skills, including managing conflict, also through co-ordination of community services, including assistance in finding appropriate housing and re-entry into the community, through providing training to family caregivers and professionals, and through providing information and education on all areas of brain injury to the public. They also publish the brain injury survival guide, which contains a wealth of information resources, and also sponsor the brain injury conference. As well, there's consulting going on with Albertans at community meetings in over 26 different communities. More information about the initiative can be found at www.seniors.gov.ab.ca.

We need to remember, Mr. Speaker, that when the roads are clear and dry not to increase our driving speeds or pay less attention, which potentially leads to crashes that can cause brain injuries. As Albertans get back on their bikes and rollerblades and skateboards, they should remember that one of the best ways to prevent brain injuries is to wear a helmet.

During Brain Injury Awareness Week I encourage all Albertans to learn more about brain injuries and their effects. Thank you.

The Speaker: Members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House today two people who are vitally important in my professional life in that they keep me organized, on track, and are a constant source of ideas and challenges, which I think help to sharpen the saw around the constituency of Calgary-Currie. Evan Woolley is the manager of my constituency office and my executive assistant. He is here in the House today, as is Shannon Haggins, my STEP student for this summer, a student in the applied degree program of policy studies at Mount Royal College. They're up for the day to observe and learn and, perhaps, plot for the future. If they would stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Contributions to Premier's Leadership Campaign

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberal caucus has obtained minutes from the board meeting of the Beaver regional waste management commission from August 17, 2006, in which Mr. Tom Walter and Mr. Ron Gaida, with the support of a Mr. Rod Krips, solicited a donation for a Tory leadership candidate. The minutes read as follows: Mr. Walter "explained the reasons that the Commission should support Mr. Stelmach in his campaign for leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta." My question is to the Premier. Given that this commission is incorporated under the Municipal Government Act, can the Premier explain what reasons were given that the commission should donate to his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, I could double-check, but upon receiving funds from this commission, I believe the committee that was responsible for fundraising sent the money back. But I could confirm that tomorrow to make sure that my information, what I believe is correct, is absolutely true.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That does not change the fact that the solicitation was made, and the cheque was issued. The minutes from the commission meeting continue as follows:

Mr. Walter, Mr. Gaida and Mr. Krips left the Council Chambers at 7:33 pm.

Administrator Wright recommended that the Commission should donate $25,000 to the Stelmach campaign.

Moved by CM Hrabec to donate $10,000 to the Ed Stelmach campaign for Leader . . . and to leave communication open for additional funds in the future.

Carried.

To the Premier: does the Premier condone government policy under which a commission specifically created under regulation of this government to manage a landfill can make a donation of $10,000 to a leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the same error was committed by a particular municipality that bought tickets in support of the Liberal leader for one of his dinners, and subsequently they asked the money to be returned. So, again, it's an infraction according to the law, but like I said, back to the first question: I'm sure that the money was sent back. We didn't accept any money.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier should know that the laws are actually different in these circumstances. This commission had a specific mandate under regulation 75/92 of this government to provide regional waste management services to its shareholders, which are the towns of Tofield and Viking, the villages of Ryley and Holden, and Beaver county. Waste management services, nothing else. Yet they gave away $10,000 in about 31 minutes for a political campaign. To the Premier: how does the Premier justify a regional waste management commission regulated by his government donating to a political leadership campaign, which is completely outside its mandate?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, this is something that volunteers did during the leadership campaign. Upon realizing that – again, I'll clarify absolutely tomorrow in terms of the money going back.

An Hon. Member: Did St. Albert give the money back?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, maybe St. Albert did. I don't know. Maybe the hon. leader will tell us if he did or not give the money back to St. Albert. But this is an omission on behalf of the commission or a municipality. The rules are the same.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you Mr. Speaker. The Beaver regional waste management commission gets its mandate under regulation of this government, as do all similar commissions. The minutes of the commission board meeting from last August 17 state the following: Mr. Walters "stated that the campaign would need financial support, not only from the public sector but also from the business sector." This suggests a systematic approach by this campaign to solicit political funds from publicly regulated bodies. To the Premier: how many public agencies were solicited for the funds by his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: None by me. If there are any that were approached inappropriately by any volunteer, I'm not aware of it. In this particular case, when it became evident that there was actually money received – and, again, I'll confirm it tomorrow – the money was sent back.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only a party in power for 36 years could think it's okay to dole out tens of thousands of dollars in taxpayer grants to a commission and then turn around and ask the same commission for a $10,000 donation for partisan purposes. To the Premier: will this commission remain eligible for provincial grants?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, here's an opposition that's been in opposition since – what? – 1912. Well, you know the history. That's the last time they served in government. They know the rules as well. Some of their volunteers approached a municipality for funding. I believe that once they found out that it was against legislation, they returned the money.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the nature of this donation and the nature of this attempted cover-up will the Premier do the right thing and disclose all the donors to his leadership campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously this was in the minutes, that are fully public. I don't know where the cover-up is or what you guys are talking about. It's getting really to the point that it's getting a little absurd. It's public minutes. They've been reviewed by the commission. Like I say, tomorrow I'll give further information in terms of the cheque.

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the chair knows not if these documents have been filed before or tabled, but if they haven't been, you'll table them a little later in the afternoon, right?

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're joined by a number of teachers in the gallery today. Similar to all Alberta taxpayers they're concerned about finding a solution to the unfunded teachers' pension liability. To the Minister of Education: will the minister please explain to these teachers why he's delivering a $25 million wedge between experienced and less experienced teachers? Can you explain that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, one of the directives in my mandate letter was to resolve the unfunded pension liability issue, and I intend to do that. In meeting with the Alberta Teachers' Association and many teachers prior to budget day, it was indicated to me that the 3 per cent of a new teacher's salary that is deducted to cover the unfunded pension liability is a huge deterrent to recruitment of new students into the teaching profession and retaining those young teachers in the profession. Our initiative is to assist those teachers so that we keep the best minds teaching in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the minister, thank you as well. To the Minister of Education: how do you expect Alberta teachers to trust their retirement savings to this task force when you've created a situation where their input is clearly not welcome?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we also did at the time of the budget was that we announced that we would be creating a task force. Let's make it clear what the role of the task force is. It is to meet with stakeholders throughout the province to come up with options that we can discuss with the Alberta Teachers' Association relative to what would be fair for Alberta taxpayers if Alberta taxpayers are asked to assume the $2 billion liability that exists today. That'll be the role of the task force. The option to have a member from the Alberta Teachers' Association on that task force was rejected.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Nowhere in the minister's mandate letter from the Premier does it say that you should divide teachers, undermine the ATA, or link salary negotiations with the pension liability. Why does he continue to do all three in this process?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there was no intention to undermine the ATA. The ATA was asked to participate in the task force and refused, so I don't understand what the hon. member is referring to. Relative to negotiations, those will commence over the next few months between ATA locals and various school boards across the province. In the meantime parallel to that will be the work of the task force, and at this stage they are not related.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Keystone Pipeline Project

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The National Energy Board hearings into the Keystone pipeline are set for today in Calgary. If approved, this pipeline will export over 40,000 barrels of bitumen a day south of the border for processing. An estimated 18,000 jobs will be lost in the process, yet this government is willing to stand aside and watch as the sellout of our natural resources continues. When he was campaigning for the Tory leadership, the Premier promised to protect Alberta's jobs and resources, but now that he has the big job, that promise has been broken. To the Premier: will this government intervene in the NEB Keystone hearing to oppose the export of our bitumen and our jobs?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question came up in the House the other day with respect to the amount of bitumen that's exported out of the province of Alberta. Today we process about 65 per cent of the bitumen in the province, looking to of course processing more. But there are a number of areas of further consultation: not only how do we build the kind of plants that are necessary to upgrade, the impact on the environment, our water and also work with various companies with respect to the labour situation. Just the other day the third party raised the issue of greenhouse gas emissions and how we minimize those and minimize the impact on the environment. Well, these are the considerations we're giving.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, consultation is a wonderful thing, Mr. Premier, but these decisions are being made by the National Energy Board today, and there are massive increases in the capacity to export unprocessed bitumen from this province that are currently being considered. Why is the government not intervening at the National Energy Board hearing about the Keystone pipeline?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have the royalty review that's ongoing today and will be completed sometime in August. These are the kinds of questions and information that the royalty review will be bringing forward and answering in terms of how we get more upgrading in the province of Alberta but also, of course, looking at the environment and all of the other issues. Again, the other day this question came up, and I said that we're going to find that balance. The bitumen is leaving the province. It crosses a national boundary. That's why the NRCB is involved.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board is considering these matters. It has nothing to do with the government's royalty review. So they can review the royalties all they want; it won't affect the decision about export of our bitumen out of this province. Why is it that the government is failing to stand up for Alberta jobs and failing to stand up for a petrochemical industry right here in this province? Why won't you, Mr. Premier, go to the NEB and present the position of the government of Alberta that we are against the export of our jobs and our bitumen?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the first three months of this year more than 11,000 people moved to Alberta, migrated from other provinces. Just in speaking to the mayor of Calgary, 100 people a day come to the city of Calgary. They're coming here for jobs; there are many vacancies. That's why there's another balance to this, and that is available housing for the people that are all moving to the province of Alberta because there are job opportunities. That's why one of our priorities in this government is managing those growth pressures and making sure that we have the housing available and the infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Economic Strategy

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the weekend we had a warning sign that our revenue is going to go down in the province because of our strong dollar. In the past we've talked about failing to plan for growth. We failed to plan for the windfall, but the real question is: are we planning for a downturn in our economy as we did in the '80s? We don't know why it'll turn, but we know that it will. My question is to the Premier. What plan does this government have for cutbacks when the downturn to our economy comes, or do you not have one?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the province is well prepared to of course cushion any of the loss of revenue stream for any particular reason. It could be a drop in the oil and gas prices; it could be because of the dollar; it could be because of manufacturing issues tied to global competition. That's why a number of years ago we restructured our financial reporting so that we do have a sustainability fund in place to cushion, if it ever does happen. Again, conservative, prudent forecasting for revenues as well. And that's why we also have quarterly reports to all Albertans so that all Albertans know the direction the province is taking in terms of its revenue and expenses.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that it's going to happen. It's just a matter of when. We don't know why. Our former Premier always said that we don't have a revenue problem; we have a spending problem. But that revenue problem will come. I ask the Premier: will you release the plan, which is a list, of how we would balance our budget or whether you're not going to balance the budget when that turns around on the next report to all Albertans that you continue to put out?

Mr. Stelmach: It's in the budget. It's part of the sustainability plan. It's part of the investment in various endowments. It's part of, of course, the money we put into our savings account. Without a doubt Alberta has always been identified – and that's nationally – as having the best books and being the best prepared to take any downturn in the economy. Mr. Speaker, we have the most volatile revenue stream in North America. We recognize that. That's why we plan and forecast our revenues very conservatively.

Mr. Hinman: It's obvious that they don't have a plan for a downturn.

An Hon. Member: He just told you.

Mr. Hinman: That isn't a plan, to say that we're going to do nothing.

The planning people and the elected representatives feel like they're buying a ticket when they apply for the different provincial grants. They don't know whether they're going to be accepted, the rules are always changing, and they sit on pins and needles on whether or not their next project is going to go forward. It's a real problem. The municipalities had to put forward a 10-year plan. This government has it. Obviously, they've looked at it. They must have prioritized it and what municipalities want. Will they release the plan and what order they're in so that they know that, yes, we're three years down the road or five years down the road? They wonder: when is it coming up, or is it just going to be a lottery? They need a plan on the funding.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure if it's to do with the revenue stream or with the expenditure, but working with municipalities, we put on the table a commitment of $1.4 billion ramped up in the 2010-2011 budget to support municipalities during this unbelievable growth period. We're working with them. We also increased – doubled – the amount of money in the Water for Life strategy to assist those municipalities that have to increase not only their potable water supplies but also the sewer treatment. So the plan is there. We're working very well with municipalities, and municipalities are applying to criteria that have been consistent. We don't change from year to year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry for providing at least temporary rent relief for fixed-income renters in the 297-suite Varsity apartment complex, where rent was raised by $50,000. Of course, this is only one-month June reprieve, and the news came too late for some 30 individuals who were forced to move, but it is helpful. A 91-year-old pensioner on fixed income who has lived in the complex for the past 17 years called my office last Wednesday, wondering how long this assistance would last, fearing that come July or August or September this band-aid solution would be exposed. To the minister: what can the minister say to her?

Ms Evans: Well, like I've repeated several times in this House, Mr. Speaker, every case will be dealt with on an individual basis, looking at the family situation, the availability of alternative housing, whether that's a practical solution, whether it's a 91-year-old or whether it's somebody who has a truck, a job, and is having troubles because of rental difficulties. We have given out over half a million dollars to over 500 people in the last three weeks. We continue to listen to people on an individual basis. Although this individual likely didn't have an improvement in the set of circumstances over the last month, we'll continue to look after them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll also offer another nod to the minister on the quality of staff that I and my constituent, Jeff Stewart, encountered at the Fisher Road processing centre last Thursday. Cumulative construction injuries have meant Mr. Stewart cannot get work and is having to live on $425 of social assistance a month. The obvious problem that even the patient and compassionate help of the centre's staff, including Ken, Francesca, and Deidre, cannot overcome is that Mr. Stewart needs to find an apartment in a failed rental marketplace first. Furthermore, even when he gets one, his ability to pay rests entirely on fickle and unclear government housing subsidies. To the same minister: what guarantees of long-term rent payment can Mr. Stewart offer prospective landlords?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think this government has made it very clear that when people have a need, we will be there. We will work with them and counsel them and try to identify whether there are other opportunities available. We have had a diminished number of people coming that qualify for a rent supplement. There have been centres both in Calgary and Edmonton where we have been working with the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing's staff. We're not getting too many that are coming that need a rent supplement. Many of them need some short-term fix. But we will be there as long as they need us, Mr. Speaker. We will not put them out on the street. We will help them find other alternatives, help make them as comfortable as possible, and continue to work as long as it takes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Why is the government continuing to only provide patchwork solutions that reward the extortion of a few unscrupulous landlords at the expense of both taxpayers and Alberta's most vulnerable individuals rather than coming up with a longer term solution until sufficient affordable housing is built? Why didn't you just listen to your Affordable Housing Task Force's advice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We did listen to the housing task force. One of the major challenges is to make sure that there is a continuing supply of units for individuals to rent. That is why this government has taken the position that it has in order not to have rent controls, which would definitely provide some uncertainty in the marketplace for those individuals who are building units. In that way, we would have some continuing future solution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Nonresident Hunting Regulations

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday a question was asked to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development regarding out-of-country hunters entering the province to hunt. Some of my constituents have expressed concerns with the answers provided by the minister, and I was hoping that the minister could provide some further clarification for this Assembly and Albertans. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and it's about the same issue. Are the six-day alien nonresident hunting licences he discussed renewable, or are the nonresident hunters limited to six days?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that these six-day permits for alien nonresidents are renewable. You have six days. If you want to buy another, you pay your $77; you can buy a second permit. I'd also remind Albertans that nonresident Canadians, nonresidents but people who are Canadian citizens, can buy a permit for $33, and this is good for the entire season.

Mr. Prins: My next question to the same minister: is there a limit on how long or how many days nonresident hunters can stay in the province to hunt?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there's no limit. They may stay and continue to hunt for as long as they please. Of course, nonresident alien and nonresident Canadian hunters are subject to the same daily limits and possession limits as residents. That probably explains why of the 4,500 nonresident aliens who came and hunted waterfowl in Alberta last year, 95 per cent only bought one six-day permit. In six days you can get all the ducks and geese you need in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hunting tourism contributes a great deal to local economies and particularly to communities in rural Alberta. My last question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: does the minister see an opportunity for enhanced hunting tourism in the province?

Dr. Morton: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely yes. Hunting tourism adds over a hundred million dollars to the Alberta economy every year, and much of this goes into our rural communities. In recent weeks I've met with Alberta Tourism to discuss greater promotion of hunting opportunities in Alberta for nonresidents. Our new fish and wildlife website, that will deal with licensing and that we expect to have online in about 18 months, will publicize these opportunities for both residents and nonresidents. I can assure the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and all other members of the Assembly that I will work to add hunting tourism to our rural development strategy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Lottery Retailer Practices

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provinces across Canada have been uncovering irregularities with their lottery retailer practices. In response to these problems and given my interest in consumer protection I wrote the Solicitor General back in early April, and the minister thankfully responded on May 1. The minister wrote: "I am pleased to confirm that a special committee, led by the [Western Canada Lottery Corporation's] Internal Audit, has conducted an internal review." The minister did not share any of the report's findings with me but detailed the scope of that review. To the Solicitor General: did the WCLC internal audit, in fact, find any discrepancies with respect to lottery retailer practices? What did you learn, Mr. Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As indicated by the hon. member, the WCLC is reviewing lottery activities in the province of Alberta as well as those across the rest of western Canada. Because of their findings in other provinces, they have decided to take a more in-depth look in Alberta. I haven't seen the report yet, unfortunately, and to the best of my knowledge they have not found anything unusual. A preliminary look indicated that the winnings by retailers were at a normal average in Alberta. So I believe it's a prudent thing for them to do, to take a more in-depth look, and we await the results.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the minister's reply letter he indicated that in addition to that internal review, Ernst & Young was commissioned to conduct another assessment, so now I need clarification whether the first one, the internal audit, is continuing and then Ernst & Young is doing another one. He said in his letter that both reports will be provided to the WCLC board in May. Now we're now into June, and I would like to ask if the other report has been finalized and if he saw that one in particular.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that Ernst & Young is doing the review on behalf of WCLC. As I indicated earlier, I believe it's prudent that they do a more thorough look based on findings in other provinces, and I believe it's in the best interest of all Albertans that we do a thorough look. The wait is definitely going to be worth while.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would really appreciate the minister tabling these results when he gets them.

My third question to him is: in British Columbia and Ontario lottery retailer investigations were commissioned by offices of the Legislature, and then when you add the Atlantic Lottery Corporation, the reports for all three investigations are available for the public to see on the Internet. Your letter to me, Mr. Minister, did not mention making these reports public. Will these reports remain hidden, or are you going to release them? Basically, are you going to deny Alberta consumers the type of access to information that Canadians in other jurisdictions enjoy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is very open and transparent, and the results that I get will be communicated to all Albertans in an appropriate manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Law Enforcement Review Board

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the Law Enforcement Review Board is looking for a new chairperson. The current chair will step down on June 15 to accept a position as a Provincial Court judge. The board is dealing with a large number of cases that are being heard or have yet to be scheduled. This resignation has the potential to delay these cases even more. My questions are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister tell us what his department is doing to fill the vacancy as quickly as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to reiterate that this government recognizes that the Law Enforcement Review Board plays an important role in the administration of justice in this province. Unfortunately, we do have a backlog of cases. The resignation of the current chair is a matter of unfortunate timing; however, we are moving as quickly as possible to replace that chair. An acting chair will be in place in the LERB as soon as possible, and the LERB will be able to continue to conduct timely and efficient hearings.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. You mentioned the backlog. How bad is the backlog, and can you tell us how many cases are currently before the board and how many are yet to be scheduled?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, to the hon. member: there are currently 69 hearings in progress, another 21 waiting to be scheduled, and we have seven previous hearings that we're still waiting for decisions on. So, yes, we are behind the eight ball here a little bit. But I want to say that in December 2005 we did amend the Police Act to allow the LERB to have two panels conduct hearings at the same time in different locations. These amendments also allowed the LERB to appoint one of its members to deal with preliminary and procedural matters to improve efficiencies in our system.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. The Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police recently passed a resolution calling for increased staff and funding for the LERB, the Law Enforcement Review Board. Can the minister tell us what else his department is doing to address the backlog of cases before the board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are certainly aware of the recommendations by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, and we are taking this matter very seriously. We will continue to work with all of our law enforcement partners to ensure an effective administration of justice. One thing we are doing is increasing the number of LERB members from seven to nine. We also are building a separate hearing room so that we can have more than one hearing at a time. So we are addressing these things in as expeditious a manner as we can.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Child Care Review

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are few fields where high quality and enforced safety standards are as important as they are in child care. Recognizing this, the Minister of Children's Services introduced a Child Care Licensing Act that will seek to increase the quality of child care available in Alberta. While this action is certainly important, many parents and child care providers have raised concerns over the consultation process that accompanies the development of new standards. Staff retention is a chronic problem in Alberta's child care sector. To the Minister of Children's Services: how will proposed regulations to increase the number as well as the level of training of workers in each facility contribute to solving the staffing issues in this sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd like to say that our goal with going out with this consultation is to make sure that at the end of the day we create standards for quality child care in this province. We have just started a six-week process, and I haven't heard any concerns with regard to the process. I think what we're talking about is some questions and concerns with some of the proposals, but that's exactly what this is about. The proposals that have gone out are a result of what we heard over the last two years in consultations with the public. They are out there just as proposals. What I would encourage at this point is for as many people as possible who are interested in child care to get out there and get involved in the consultation and give us their feedback on the proposals, whether it's at one of the public meetings or whether it's online or through the discussion guide.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring that child care workers are providing the best possible care to children is only one part of a successful child care equation. The other half is ensuring that parents who rely on child care services are able to access them. This province could have the highest standards of care in the world, but they would be meaningless if no one could afford to use them. Improving the quality of child care will obviously make child care more expensive. To the Minister of Children's Services: how will you ensure that the costs of these new standards will not hurt accessibility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point I don't want to speculate as to what the end result of the consultations will be in terms of the standards that do come out. What I can say is that you're absolutely right: this portion of the consultation we're going through right now is a focus on the quality of care. That is not to take away from the huge number of initiatives that we've come out with in the last couple of months to deal with access for parents, to deal with the attraction and retaining of staff, and to deal with the affordability of child care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many questions are on the minds of child care providers and parents as they head into this government's consultation process. I'm hearing them every day. Specifically, they worry that if they go ahead and welcome improved daycare standards, they may unknowingly be assuming costs they cannot afford. To the Minister of Children's Services: will you ensure that parents and providers are able to participate freely in the public consultations by assuring them today that they will not be responsible for bearing the costs of new government-mandated regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I would like to encourage at this point is that if anybody – parents, operators – has any concerns, whether or not it's specific to the proposals individually or that some of the proposals could impact costs of child care, please get out and take part in the consultation. Again, just to remind people, it can be online, or it can be through a discussion guide, or we still have meetings coming up in Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Whitecourt, Bonnyville, Red Deer, Calgary, Grande Prairie, Peace River, Lloydminster, and Fort McMurray. So I do hope that interested people do come out to participate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Palace Casino Labour Dispute

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the 269th day of the strike at the Palace Casino in West Edmonton Mall. The NDP has proudly introduced to this Assembly 70 workers from the picket line – and there are more here today – in the hope that the government might finally take notice and do something to help these workers. Six months ago the NDP along with the UFCW brought forward concerns about patrons drinking alcohol outside the casino. It's been over six months, and the minister still hasn't arranged for proper enforcement mechanisms. My question is to the Solicitor General. Why is the Solicitor General turning a blind eye to the ongoing violations of the gaming act taking place at the Palace Casino?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, an example of allegations. If the hon. member opposite has proof of what he's suggesting, I would ask that he bring it forward. We are not turning a blind eye to any activities at any of our establishments, including the Palace Casino. I know that our inspectors are doing their due diligence and inspecting those on a regular basis. Again, if he has evidence otherwise, I would certainly appreciate having a look at it.

Thank you.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the evidence that was sent over six months ago, pictures like this. Surely, that's come to the Solicitor General's attention. My question is, again, knowing that he has those pictures: why hasn't the minister taken immediate action to ensure that liquor and gaming rules are enforced? That's his job.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that the pictures were delivered to the AGLC, and they have acted on them. They have increased their visits over there. Again, if it's still ongoing, I would like to see the evidence of it.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that it's probably getting worse over there rather than better. So when is the minister going to take responsibility and do something about these clear violations that continue to this day?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, to me it indicates probabilities, and the probability and the facts are that we have increased our inspections there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: You're doing nothing.

Mr. Lindsay: I would like to see evidence of that, hon. member, because they are doing something, and they are doing a great job for Albertans in enforcing rules and regulations of the AGLC.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Flood Preparedness

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans don't have to look too far into the history books to recall the devastating impact flooding can have on a community, my constituents included. In June of 2005 the floods that swept through southern Alberta nearly wiped out Fish Creek provincial park. As we approach the two-year anniversary of flooding in southern Alberta, residents in my constituency are getting nervous of a repeat event. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. What is the current risk for flooding for communities across Alberta this summer?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, fortunately at this point in time Calgary and Fish Creek in particular are at a very low risk of flooding although the Bow and the Elbow rivers may appear to be high. Our flood forecasting team continues to monitor levels around the clock and works with Environment Canada weather services. The fact of the matter is that with the snow pack that we have, above normal, and above-normal temperatures, we do have some potential and have issued some advisories of potential flooding in Banff and Jasper. We're also closely monitoring Canmore, Hinton, and Grande Prairie. If the weather changes, there could be additional advisories issued.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How will your ministry ensure that Albertans are well informed of flood potential this summer?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we work very closely with municipalities, and we issue advisories and warnings when conditions indicate the need. Municipalities are the first line of defence when it comes to dealing with an emergency situation. So municipalities do have within their emergency management plans the availability to actually one-on-one contact people who are at immediate risk from flooding. The important thing is that Albertans at this time of year should listen to the media, pay close attention to the media, and those that wish may consult with our website under Advisories, which are updated on a regular basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In March the Premier dismissed concerns about the government's risk of legal liability regarding negligence in monitoring and enforcing infection-control procedures. These are stemming from the problems in Vegreville, Lloydminster, and other locations in Alberta. But now that testing for HIV and hepatitis B and C is currently under way for some 3,000 Albertans and the results will be released within weeks, does the minister of health still think that assessing the risk of lawsuits is unnecessary and premature?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, it would be unnecessary and premature to assess the risk of lawsuits. Essentially, the whole issue of health status is the most important issue in this. The testing needs to be done, but I said at the time and I'll say again: the risks were low. Nonetheless, it was incumbent on government to make sure that all of the appropriate screening and testing was done. It would be too early to even consider whether or not anyone might come forward with legal liability or to try and put any sort of quantification around that kind of liability.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. In March we also found out that it took the College of Physicians and Surgeons two years to notify patients about infection and sterilization concerns. To the minister of health again: what specific changes to reporting systems have been made since March?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, immediately upon finding out about the incident that happened, I addressed all of the professions with a letter asking them to ensure that they had their members report on infection-control issues and how they handled it. We've also had some talks with the health professions relative to ensuring that they know and understand that the Public Health Act takes priority over their act. I will be meeting with registrars and presidents of health professions tomorrow, in fact, with respect to the next steps in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Research shows that one out of every nine hospital patients in Canada gets an infection that may force a longer stay and further treatment. In order to understand the extent of the issue in Alberta and the cost to the health system, we need to be collecting the right information. My question again is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does Alberta collect data on the frequency and cost of hospital-acquired infection?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is: not at the appropriate level. We should. The Health Quality Council has been specifically put in place to ensure that we are able to monitor the right kinds of data, and that's certainly a priority for me as minister and for this government. The health authorities are collecting data, but what we need to do provincially is make sure that that data is collected on a consistent basis and then take the next step to see what data the public should have in order to know and understand the risks they take. Entering a hospital is not without its risks, but the public should be able to be aware of those risks. So that information is important information for the public, and we need to be able to collect it appropriately and make it public in an appropriate way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility Agreement

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend Calgary hosted the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to meet and explore how they can work better together. After many years of waiting for all Canadian provinces to agree to work together, Alberta and B.C. moved ahead with the Alberta/B.C. trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, TILMA. It's an important interprovincial initiative. To the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations: are municipalities being consulted on this important priority?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, of course, this past weekend was in Calgary where they hosted thousands of municipalities. This was a very productive time. We had 2,200 delegates there. It was about consulting, getting advice from municipalities because they are important partners. We're doing that, and I might also add that we are consulting in the north, in the south, east, and west. We're up in Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie. We're down in Medicine Hat and Lethbridge and further south. We're actually in Lloydminster. We're over in Edson and further west. We are really, really moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Some critics predict that TILMA is hopelessly tying the hands of Alberta's elected municipal governments. My first supplemental is again to the same minister. Can he tell us exactly what the impact of TILMA is on municipalities?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as you know, in front of this House right now is Bill 38. We are doing exactly what the Liberal government in British Columbia is doing: debating here in the Legislature. We are doing it because we are an open and transparent government. The opposition may not like what we're doing, but we're consulting because we want the best value for our taxpayers. The Liberals may not want the best value, but we do because we want to take a dollar and stretch it so that it can even do more. The Liberal opposition may not, but we do, and we will continue to. Even the New Democrats support some of the important principles of what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Can he please clear up the confusion and explain how he can describe the TILMA as a trade agreement when some critics see it as more than that?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, there are, clearly, some critics. I can hear the hon. member across the way in the opposition saying that she doesn't like to be a free trader. We want our citizens to get the best value. That may be very much the case, and my view is that as we go forward . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Boutilier: This is so much fun today, Mr. Speaker. I haven't had so much fun in quite some time.

This really is about what we do to better serve Albertans and British Columbians. That's what we're doing today; we're doing it tomorrow. Regardless of what the Official Opposition doesn't want to do, we're going full speed ahead. It's damn the torpedoes.

The Speaker: We'll deal with the point of order at the conclusion of the Routine. The hon. minister might want to check the Blues to see where the hon. member, unidentified but presumed the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, said, quote, that she doesn't want to be a free trader. We need some clarification.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And things were going so well today, weren't they?

Government Contract with Former MLA

Mr. Bonko: On April 16 the Premier promised the House that he'd undertake an internal audit about the contracts awarded to Bob Maskell, a former Tory MLA. Well, it's been more than 50 days since that promise, and we've heard nothing. Clearly, without our prompting, this government won't clean up its act. My questions are to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Where are the results of Mr. Maskell's appointment and contracts as promised by the Premier?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased that the hon. member brought this up, in fact, and I'll tell you why. At the appropriate time I will show you the outcomes of the work that was done under this particular contract, referred to as the Alberta centennial project. It is a very detailed analysis of the work and the value that Albertans got for this excellent work with aboriginal communities.

Mr. Bonko: I'm assuming that he's going to table those as well, Mr. Speaker, since he's already shown them to us. We certainly don't want the spring sitting of the House to end before the results emerge. Usually they do it during the summertime, when most people are sleeping and enjoying their holidays. They need to come back to us during a relevant time, so we're hoping that they, in fact, get us the original questions. To the minister: does he think that the typical line, the way they answer the questions in this fashion, is appropriate with this government being transparent and accountable?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition may sleep, but this government does not sleep.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: A perfect example of sleeping: when he doesn't have the answer.

Thank you very much. We have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that the last time this government had names of members on the audit committee for public view, one was the vice-president of finance of the Progressive Conservative Party. Now, mysteriously, the names are no longer available on the government website. Again, no longer open or transparent. This is bad enough. Another situation: when it comes to the investigation of Tory insiders, patronage, and cronyism, Mr. Gary Campbell is in no position whatsoever to be able to give judgment on Maskell. To the minister: is Mr. Campbell on a committee investigating Mr. Maskell still? Yes or no?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting to note that the hon.

member is making reference to, without question, a very valuable educator in this province and in this city. He has a reputation for what he has done over time. Rather than besmirching an Albertan's name, maybe we should be celebrating the successes of the aboriginal centennial initiative, which I am tabling, a very detailed outcome of the good work and good value that all Albertans got. Contrary to the comments and the assumptions that may be made and the sleeping that's going on across the way, we will continue to move forward in a productive way in helping all Albertans, including aboriginals.

The Speaker: Well, that was 88 questions and responses today.

head: 2:20 Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This House might be winding down, but this issue is not going away. I'm continuing with the tabling of petitions with respect to housing affordability, 104 signatures, and the petition reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition with 293 signatures, or approximately 15 per cent of the people of Magrath, as they were just hit with exorbitant property tax increases. They are petitioning the Legislative Assembly "not to grant additional taxation powers to municipalities."

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 59.04(3) indicates that "the Government House Leader shall give notice of the date for the vote on the main estimates not later than the completion of the 4th 15-hour cycle of estimates." Standing Order 59.04(4) says:

Notwithstanding suborders (1) and (3), for the 2007 Spring Sitting the vote on the main estimates may be scheduled with a minimum of one sitting day's notice to occur any time after the completion of the 4th rotation of the 15-hour cycle, unless otherwise ordered.

That time would be this Thursday, so I'd like to give oral notice today that pursuant to Standing Order 59.04 the vote on the main estimates shall be scheduled for Thursday, June 7, 2007, at 5:44 p.m.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition the requisite number of copies of minutes of the regular meeting on Thursday, August 17, 2006, of the Beaver Regional Waste Management Services Commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling. In response to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a value-for-money report from PricewaterhouseCoopers. This shows the public-sector comparator of the Calgary northeast ring road project as well as the bids submitted by all three companies that bid on the project. The documents clearly show that the P3 project will result in a substantial saving to taxpayers, in the range of $350 million to $450 million, than if the government had built the project the conventional way.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from GGC Consultants providing the results of a fairness audit on the bidding process for the same project. The letter is signed by Gary Campbell, QC. It certifies that there are no issues with regard to any question of fairness in the northeast Stoney Trail bidding process.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the final report of the Alberta Centennial 2005: Aboriginal Centennial Initiative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of an information package from the Academy of Learning career and business college, which is celebrating its 20th year this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table today the appropriate number of copies of 18 letters from Alberta teachers. They're writing to express their concern over both inadequate operational funding and the inability of this government to immediately resolve the outstanding issue of the unfunded pension liability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Mr. John Younk, co-owner of Children's Academy Day Care Centre and out of school care, regarding the consultation program aimed at daycare centres and proposing some very serious changes that will likely result in spaces being closed. The theme of the process is to improve care for children and the method being employed to reach this is to put a huge financial burden on owners of [daycares].

The second letter is from Blayne Rebinsky. "I am from Alberta. Why is Ontario getting cheaper gas than us? Do they even have oil! Explain."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling copies of photos taken by UFCW workers outside the Palace Casino. The photos show casino patrons drinking alcohol outside the facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter written by Mr. Noel Somerville, vice-chair, SALT, Seniors' Action and Liaison Team, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. SALT, this group, is disappointed in the government's ineffective response to the housing crisis and calls for short-term rent guidelines to prevent exorbitant rent increases.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: a report entitled A Workforce Strategy for Alberta's Tourism and Hospitality Industry.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to the introduction of guests?

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly Her Excellency Evadne Coxe, Jamaican High Commissioner to Canada; Mr. Art Clarke, honorary consul of Jamaica in Edmonton; and Ms Coleen Neita, president of the Jamaica Association of Northern Alberta. Her Excellency is in Alberta to explore trade and business opportunities between Alberta and Jamaica and to reconnect with the expatriate Jamaican community. This member is very proud to be part of this community. Our guests are seated in your gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a purported point of order.

Point of Order
False Allegations

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is referring to something uttered by the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations during an exchange between himself and the Member for Calgary-Bow earlier. I'm citing 23(h), (i), and (j). The minister has made a statement that I said something which I have not, not today and not previously. In doing so, he has violated 23(h) in making a false allegation, he has violated 23(i) in imputing a false and an unavowed motive, and he certainly violated 23(j) in creating some pretty rowdy disorder.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that he needs to fabricate support for the TILMA agreement, but I think he doesn't need to be making something up about me in order to do it. I have asked very clearly that the entire TILMA agreement be brought before this House for a fulsome debate, not just a bill which allows payment of fines which may be assessed against the government if they lose any cases brought against them by industry under TILMA. That's quite a different thing.

I ask at this point that the minister withdraw his statements and apologize to me for saying in this House that I made them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Anyone else want to participate on this point of order? Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say first of all that I did not utter but actually specifically said, to be very clear. At no time and in no shape or form did I direct the comment to this hon. member.

Dr. Brown: Well, Mr. Speaker, today was no exception to the fact that during question period there's often a lot of loud heckling from the opposition benches, and to me it's no surprise that occasionally there is a retort to some of that heckling. I don't see this as a point of order at all. I think it's a natural outcome of what is sometimes very boisterous heckling on the other side.

The Speaker: Well, here's what was said by the hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations: "Well, there are clearly some critics. I can hear the hon. member across the way in the opposition saying that she doesn't like to be a free trader. We want our citizens to get the best value." Actually, I could go on quite a bit, but I'll stop right there.

The reality is that the chair made an assumption that it was the certain member who raised the point of order, but that is an assumption. There is certainly more than one she across the way. The minister is absolutely correct; he did not identify the member. This allowed the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to rise on a point of clarification, which was very important, to clarify her position. So this really amounted to a difference of opinion, not a point of order. We will move on.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I likewise move that motions for returns standing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places.

Gaming Planning Act

[Debate adjourned May 28: Ms DeLong speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to address Bill 211, Planning for the Future of . . .

The Speaker: Actually, we're on Bill 210.

Ms DeLong: Bill 210?

The Speaker: Yes. The hon. member adjourned the debate. She has three minutes left if she chooses.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has not participated yet. Please proceed.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to speak to this bill. I feel that it's addressing a very important issue in Alberta. Bill 210 would allow for a sweeping public review of how gaming is conducted in Alberta and ask Albertans what future they see for gambling in this province. Bill 210 establishes a committee to plan the future role of gaming in Alberta. Part of the mandate of the committee is to consider re-establishing community lottery boards for distributing gaming revenues. In other words, Bill 210 addresses gambling planning in Alberta.

It's quite straightforward. The Gaming Planning Act calls for the creation of a nine-member all-party committee whose mandate is to investigate and report on the gaming industry in Alberta. This committee will conduct the first fully public investigation of all aspects of gaming in this province. The committee will assess the amount of gaming revenue that is allocated to charities and how it is distributed, examine whether we should re-establish the community lottery boards, evaluate the role of charitable organizations in gaming activities, address the social impact of gaming, and examine the role of gaming in Alberta in the future in regard to the number of casinos and gaming machines in the province. In short, Bill 210 will allow for a sweeping public review of how gaming is conducted in Alberta and ask Albertans what future they see for gambling in the province of Alberta. I believe this is very important. This is an issue that is significant to many volunteer organizations, many schools, many public facilities who are dependent on revenues from gaming.

It's important to note that Alberta has the widest variety of legal gambling options available of any jurisdiction in North America. The bottom-line figure of profit for 2005-2006 was $1.4 billion. According to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's annual report of '05-06 Albertans poured more than $11 billion into slot machines and more than $10 billion into VLTs, for a total of more than $21 billion into gaming machines alone. There are more than 8,600 gaming machines in casinos in Alberta and another 6,000 VLTs in bars, for a total of more than 14,000 gambling machines. There are now 17 casinos in Alberta and nine others in the final stages of the approval process. Little by little gambling is becoming very big in Alberta. It's a very important industry in this province, but it's also a social issue and an industry worthy of scrutiny.

So what is the future of gaming in Alberta? Is it an industry that we should grow, or should we rein it in? I don't know whether the gaming minister has long-range plans for gambling in Alberta. We need to find out. Is there any upper limit on the number of casinos or slot machines that would be allowed in Alberta? The public's opinion on gaming should be heard. I hear questions such as: is the government addicted to gaming revenue; is it morally correct for the government to profit from gambling; is it necessary to have volunteers work long hours for casino funds; is the division of revenue equitable? The questions are there everywhere I go where people are working casinos trying to support good causes. The province reaps the benefits of a hugely profitable industry, but, you know, we also know that there are moral implications to the whole issue of the government profiting from what is considered by many people still to be a vice.

I know that there was a major review of gambling in Alberta as recently as 2001. I think this review was called Achieving a Balance. It was a gaming licensing policy review and was quite wide ranging, but it differs significantly from the committee that is suggested by Bill 210. The objective of the 2001 review was to "address issues of growth in gaming and continue to ensure the effective regulation and socially-responsible delivery of gaming activities in the province." However, the 2001 review did not hold public hearings into gambling and did not include the all-party element. The gaming licensing policy review of 2001 also did not include a widely distributed report. In fact, the final report was not even tabled with the Clerk of the Legislature.

It's time for a more all-encompassing review that will set the course for the gaming industry and the administration of the charity model for the next decade. There has been significant growth in gaming since the 2001 report. In the fiscal year 2001 gaming activities in Alberta generated gross sales, that is before prizes, of $14.6 billion from all forms of gambling in Alberta. In '05-06 the gross revenue in gaming came in at more than $22 billion.

It is apparent that public opinion has changed dramatically when it comes to the question of gaming and gambling. While once considered a vice that had to be curtailed at all costs, it seems that gambling has now almost gone mainstream. The public's attitude towards gambling has changed so much that today Albertans might even welcome the growth in gaming. So should we look upon gambling as an actual growth industry and tourist attraction?

Many charitable groups who have concerns about the volunteer aspect of casino gambling and the tremendous pressures it puts on volunteers need to be listened to. Also questions about who qualifies as a charity. Should one minor sports team with limited financial needs get the same revenue as an agency that's serving homeless youth or that serves the needs of hundreds of thousands of disadvantaged people?

Bill 210 would ask Albertans in the most open way possible exactly how they feel about gaming and where we should take the charitable model in the future.

I'd like to see some of the questions raised in Bill 210 actually discussed because, as I remember my colleague from Edmonton-Centre saying, how much is enough? We need to have that answered. How much revenue generated by gambling activities is enough for this province? Is it limitless? Do citizens in Alberta really want to just keep going: more casinos, more bingos, more VLTs, more slots, more whatever, ad infinitum? I think the answer is no, but I don't know where the threshold is reached. I think that Bill 210 will offer us a reasonable consultation process to get some of these answers.

What are the consequences of having our funding for the voluntary, charitable sector primarily coming from gambling dollars? What are the consequences for the volunteer sector? You know, these are individuals that want to work, that want to do something good for the community, that want to help. However, we see many of them as parents working a bingo or a casino so that they can raise money for their children to participate in special activities. That's one thing. Those are extraordinary expenses, perhaps. But, at the same time, I hear about shelters with volunteers working casinos and bingos to help provide the basic essentials for those programs, like hiring staff, providing food. Shouldn't these things be funded through regular sources? Why is it that in Alberta we are dependent on volunteer help working the gaming industry?

I'm concerned about the fragility of our volunteer sector. More and more we're asking them to do more, and it's a concern. They're having to raise the number of dollars that they have by subsidizing the services that they're offering to the province to make it a better place. In a number of cases they're actually contracted by the government to provide services, and they're still having to go and raise charitable dollars to subsidize what the government is giving for programs that the government is very proud of.

I think we need an extensive review. I believe that Bill 210 speaks to that and offers that, and I ask you all to vote for Bill 210.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the chair will try and find a rotation to allow government members to participate if they wish, but none has been identified. Is there a government member who wishes or a third-party member who wishes?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and make some brief observations on Bill 210, Gaming Planning Act. Gaming certainly is a very extensive activity in this province. It has become a critical source of public revenues, so it does need close scrutiny as does any activity that generates public revenues requires the regular and quite thorough scrutiny of this House. In general, I think a review such as the one proposed here of gaming in the province and also looking at the role of these gaming revenues with respect to the way current activities undertaken by voluntary or nonprofit or charitable organizations are funded through the allocation of funds generated from gambling and gaming activities – all of these are important issues and deserve a sober and thorough and careful scrutiny and discussion and public debate.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

With respect to the functions or the terms of reference a committee will be set up by way of the motion that's proposed in this bill that will come from the minister responsible for gaming to this House, and if that motion is passed, then by virtue of that decision by this House, a committee will come into being, and that will then address the functions proposed here. I think the issue of whether this list of functions are terms of reference exhaustive is an open one. I presume that the five or six or seven items indicated here could be some of the functions, but there could be more. So there's a need for more thorough consideration, and I would think that perhaps a different kind of action taken by this House to in fact look at the terms of reference themselves before they're legislated into existence would be a good idea.

Another question, Mr. Speaker, that arises in my mind has to do with the composition of the committee proposed here. The proposed bill fails to recognize the existence of the three recognized parties in this province. For some reason – I suppose it's the sponsoring member's judgment – here is a decision not to make a reference to all the recognized parties on the committee, and the necessity of those parties to be represented on this committee is a curious omission, in my view.

The third question, Mr. Speaker, that I have is that this bill might have been drafted before the coming into being of policy field committees in this Legislature. The committees were established by the decision of the Legislature through negotiations among the three House leaders, and perhaps the independent member was consulted in the process as well, but those committees are now in place, and I think that it would be perhaps more appropriate, given the fact that those committees, in fact, are more representative of the House as they're presently constituted than the committee being proposed here, to have this matter referred to the appropriate committee, whether it's the committee that deals with services or community activities. I don't know which committee would be most appropriate, but that's easy to identify. So I would think that one of the existing policy field committees would be a more appropriate vehicle to undertake a review and propose a legislation if in the committee's judgment such a legislation is needed in order to proceed with a review by the committee.

Given, Mr. Speaker, in particular the unrepresentative nature of the proposal with respect to the composition of the proposed committee, I simply cannot see how I can support this bill in its present form. Second, I am concerned that this may lead to duplication of the committee structure. We have committees in place. As I said, those committees are in fact representative. Those committees are based on the consensus across this House, across party lines that those are the right kinds of committees, and we need to put those committees to use to see if they need improvement or if they can work.

In fact, they can show in practice what they promise in theory; that is, they are a way of democratizing the activities of this House. They will broaden the participation in policy-making by all members and all parties represented in this House, particularly parties that are recognized parties, rather than creating yet one more committee, which to me, on the face of it, seems to fail to address the issue of proper representation of parties that are in this House and are appropriately recognized according to the rules of this House.

So, with that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and let other members speak to the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just in response to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona, rather than rejecting the bill outright on the basis of the potential of duplication or the failure to include by definition who the other member who is not a member of the governing party might be – I realize that we do have a member of the Alliance; we have an independent member as well as four members of the NDP – I would suggest that the hon. member offer during Committee of the Whole an amendment to this particular bill.

The second objection the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona brought up was the idea that the committees might take on this particular responsibility. I know that the committee structure is kind of a wide-open vehicle at this point. But one thing – and I think we'll agree on this – we could never accuse the government of is too much planning because to date that planning has not occurred. It may seem a bit of a juxtaposition of the terms “gaming” and “planning” in the title. Putting the two together might appear as a bit of an oxymoron because gaming suggests a free, open-wide chance circumstance where planning suggests that there is a series of events; there's an evaluation process; there's some thought that goes into it. I would suggest to not have planning would be moronic, and that's, unfortunately, what has occurred.

This government is so short on its ability to come up with diversifying methods of strengthening our economy that its sole dependence on the basically one-trick pony of oil and gas, nonrenewable resources, has placed gaming as its backup. So we have one sort of God-given quantity below our earth, and then we have the creation of a false economy through the gaming procedures. There is no doubt, as a former colleague from Edmonton-Mill

Woods indicated, of the amount of revenue that is brought into this province through gaming. My question has to do with the ethics and the morality of that type of process where people's lives are lost and their fortunes and families are broken up because of this particular pursuit.

When it comes to how the money is distributed – and this is what the Gaming Planning Act calls upon – let's look at the fact that AADAC receives approximately 3 per cent of the entire revenue of the lotteries, of the VLTs, of the slots, of the casinos to try and deal with those individuals who are most vulnerable to its effects. The government encourages the gambling process by sprucing up its VLTs and slots. In fact, it went so far as to put out $120 million – it might be slightly larger – to get those bells and whistles to the point where they would be appealing, for lack of a better word.

An Hon. Member: Hypnotic.

Mr. Chase: Hypnotic. There's the word that I'm looking for. Thank you.

For a province as resourceful as this province not to tap into other methods of generating revenue such as, instead of our dependency on oil and gas, considering wind power, considering solar power, considering the power of the rivers without having to dam them, the river-run-through-it concept, putting money into Alberta's research and innovation, putting money into our postsecondary colleges because we know that those types of investments in education will bring a threefold return without the negativity associated with gambling, that community leaders in Calgary such as Bishop Henry have stood up and challenged – and I know that Bishop Henry received a bit of a backlash initially from members of his church and the school board because this government doesn't properly fund education. As a result, the Catholic board along with the public board were in such a state of desperation that they felt that the only way to get the large amounts of money necessary to run their education programs was through this casino, slots, VLT process. Well, I'm pleased to see that members of the Catholic faith, of which I am not, were the first to see the light and have supported their bishop in his strive to reduce, eliminate the dependency of his parishioners on gambling.

We have tourism in this province. We have all kinds of opportunities. We could have, if this government saw it as an investment, a thriving arts community. We could have as part of that thriving arts community a thriving film industry. But, unfortunately, this government doesn't put in the seed money, whether it's in the form of tourism in terms of looking after parks and protected areas, encouraging people to come and see them, protecting the landscape that serves as the backdrop for the various movies that have previously been shot, primarily of a western heritage nature. But we don't need to just reduce ourselves to our historical western past. We could be looking into the future in the areas of science and innovation. This government has to get off its lazy – and you can fill in whatever posterior form you want to use – and get on to using the brain part, the other end of its body, to come up with diversification ideas.

Bill 210 doesn't say: let's just get rid of gambling. It doesn't say: let's just get rid of lotteries. It says: let's look at the pros and cons. Let's weigh the issue. Let's consider how lottery funds could impact our province. I don't have the same difficulties with lotteries as I do with VLTs. They don't seem to have the same disastrous effect on individuals and families that the VLTs, slots, and casinos have. But this bill is saying: let's pause for some intellectual reflection; let's take a moment; let's actually steer the ship of state instead of, as I alluded to earlier, leaving it in dry dock.

We have an opportunity. We have good minds. There are the good minds. They're not limited to the opposition. There are good minds throughout this House. But, unfortunately, too much time is spent with the easy out. Sure, some sucker is going to continue putting money into the slot machines, and because of the underfunding of this government, people have become so dependent on casinos that they're an easy mark. That easy mark is not just the addict. That easy mark becomes the sporting communities. The easy mark becomes the schools. The easy mark becomes the arts associations because they are not properly funded in the beginning; therefore, they resort to holding their nose and participating.

A story from one of my constituents brought forth the fact that she had to withdraw her son and her daughter from a variety of choir activities that they had enjoyed for a series of years because the choir required parents to either fund the total amount of the tuition up front or participate in casinos. She made the choice based on her family's ethical and moral beliefs that it was better not to participate in these activities, although the children had enjoyed them for several years, rather than succumb to the casino gambling addiction.

We have all kinds of money in this province. We have surpluses. We don't need to have such a tremendous emphasis on gaming, but if it's going to continue to be acceptable to the majority of this House, then at least let's plan for it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to join debate on Bill 210, the Gaming Planning Act. This piece of legislation aims to establish an all-party gaming review committee. This committee will focus on current revenue-sharing policies for charities, the role of volunteers in casinos, social impacts of gaming, and the future role and scope of gaming in Alberta. Now, because of the efforts of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, or the AGLC, our province already has an excellent gaming framework, which is continuously monitored and improving gaming in this province. As a result of the ongoing research and monitoring of the gaming industry by the AGLC and other affiliated agencies, Alberta has one of the most comprehensive and appropriately regulated frameworks in the country.

Mr. Speaker, gaming in Alberta has undergone extensive change and development in previous years in response to this government's priority to ensure accountability, solid regulation, community benefit, and social responsibility. Since the inception of gaming in our province our government has been consistently monitoring Alberta's gaming industry in order to stay on top of evolving trends, effectively managing growth, while daily ensuring social responsibility of all liquor and gaming.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to be honest, I don't really want to stand up and defend gaming in Alberta today because I don't particularly like it. I don't particularly think it's the greatest way for us to go as a province. Although if it's going to happen – and obviously it is – it needs to be properly regulated by our government, and I believe that it is. I wasn't even going to speak on this subject today, but after listening to the opposition, I felt compelled to get up and to try to set the record straight.

Mr. Speaker, in 2002 the MLA Review Committee on Charitable Gaming Licensing Eligibility and Use of Proceeds was established to consolidate licensing eligibility policies, to review the use of AGLC proceeds, and to evaluate charitable gaming policies. In April 2003 the committee came out with a report and produced 42 recommendations, the majority of which were adopted by our government. As a result of our government's ongoing research and concern for the public, Alberta has the most comprehensive and well-maintained gaming framework in the country. The charitable gaming model, which allows all four major gaming streams – bingo, casino table games, pull tickets, and raffles – to be directly managed by religious and charitable organizations, provides organizations with the opportunity to directly raise funds while managing their own charitable gaming activities. This is an excellent example of our government's dedication to effective, innovative, and socially responsible gaming initiatives.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, for the fiscal year ended March 2006 charities in Alberta earned over $252 million . . .

Mr. Rodney: How much?

Rev. Abbott: Two hundred and fifty-two million dollars, hon. member.

. . . to support their programs and activities, while British Columbia, by solely allowing charities to conduct and manage raffles and small-scale bingos, minimized the proceeds earned directly by charities to just over $27 million.

Mr. Speaker, as a person who is sitting on the new community spirit committee, I've heard from charities. They need more. It's no different than health or education or infrastructure or anything else. They need more. They're asking for more. They would like more. They can do more with more. They can do more good in the community. They can do more good for the citizens of Alberta. The Alberta government empowers our charitable organizations, allowing them more freedom to act in their own best interests as well as giving them the potential to earn more money through our charitable gaming model.

Now, although this bill is focusing on gaming, another model unique to Alberta, mandated under the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, is the retail liquor model. This model is distinct from other provinces in that it continues to allow the provincial government or the AGLC to license and regulate the liquor industry while leaving the warehousing and distributing and retailing of liquor to the private sector. According to a recent poll, when asked to rate the overall satisfaction with the way the liquor business is conducted in our province, 78 per cent of Albertans indicated a high level of satisfaction. Again, this shows our government's strong commitment to responsibly and equitably regulating these sorts of entertainment industries.

The Ministry of Public Security and Solicitor General is currently responsible for regulating Alberta's gaming industry. It is committed to ensuring that Alberta's gaming industry continues to be progressive while operating with social responsibility, Mr. Speaker. Currently gaming research is conducted by the Alberta Gaming Research Council, or the AGRC, a broad-based advisory group to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. The Alberta Gaming Research Council helps direct the research activities of the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, a consortium of educational institutions supporting and promoting research into gaming and gambling in the province. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission prides itself on its ability to conduct ongoing research to continuously improve its programs to better the industry and, in turn, Albertans' way of life.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the most progressive well-researched and well-regulated gaming industry in the country. I am confident with the AGLC, that it will continue to secure integrity, social responsibility for the best interests of Albertans; hence, I do not believe that establishing an all-party review committee would be effective at this time. In fact, I believe it would be a complete waste of taxpayers' dollars. So I ask all members to carefully weigh the arguments for and against Bill 210, and I urge my colleagues to vote against it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a very impressive off-the-cuff few minutes of remarks from my hon. colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar, who said himself that he wasn't even going to get up and speak until he heard some members on this side of the House. Then he got up and spoke so eloquently that it sounded like he'd been up all night preparing those notes, or perhaps somebody from the Public Affairs Bureau had. I don't know.

You know, every once in a while the world of rock and roll provides us with a saying that has great wisdom and timeless value in it. In 1974 the Doobie Brothers came out with an album titled What Were Once Vices Are Now Habits, and that describes the state of gaming in the province of Alberta and, frankly, Mr. Speaker, throughout most of North America now. It is for that reason, if no other, that beyond the work of the AGLC, this Legislature, this House should periodically, regularly, on a regular schedule, review gaming in the province of Alberta because it was a vice and now it's a habit. Of all Albertans the Albertan with the biggest gambling habit is this government because it produces $1.4 billion in revenue every year – $1.4 billion – an amazing amount.

I know that you'll find it hard to believe, but 1974 was practically back in my childhood. Another saying from my childhood was that the house always wins, and, boy, is that ever true, Mr. Speaker. The government scoops up one-third of all revenues from racetrack slots, 70 per cent of all revenues from casino slots, 85 per cent of all revenues from video and lottery terminals. Nobody needs gaming more and nobody does better by gaming in this province than the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could say that over the years since 1974, when the Doobie Brothers first came out with an album called What Were Once Vices Are Now Habits, that in fact the quality of life of Alberta and all its citizens has dramatically improved because of our increased reliance on gaming revenues, our increased acceptance of gaming in all its forms, but frankly I don't see the evidence of it. Oh, the tennis courts in my community a couple of years ago got resurfaced using community facility enhancement program funds, which ultimately trace back to lottery revenues. You can look at all kinds of specific examples like that: schools that have been able to buy biology textbooks that they didn't have enough of a supply of because the parent council went out and had a casino night, something like that. But, really, are we better off as a society?

Are we better off as a society when we ask our school parent councils and our PTAs to hold casino nights, to raise money to fill in all the gaps caused by the chronic underfunding? I know that the Education minister right now probably wants to leap to his feet and say, "How can you say that the system in Alberta is underfunded?" because that's what he says every time you use the word.

So even for the sake of argument I'll allow that maybe the Education minister, maybe, just possibly, is right that the system is not underfunded. If it's not, then the only other conclusion is that the money, the billions that we spend on education in this province, is badly spent. Because how in 2007, in the middle of a boom, can 40 communities in the city of Calgary be going without a public elementary school? How can parent councils still have to raise money for textbooks? Previous education and learning ministers have denied that that was ever the case, but talk to almost any parent council and they'll tell you what the real fact of the matter is. You know, increasingly elementary school parent councils rely on casino nights to raise the money they need to fill in the gaps caused by this government's mismanagement of the education file.

And there are so many, many other examples of that. Since 1993 the Conservatives have been downloading the responsibility for looking after people and looking after quality of life issues onto communities and volunteer groups who have nowhere else to turn for the money but casinos and gaming revenues because this province won't properly fund any of that, yet we suck from the people of Alberta $1.4 billion a year. It's a voluntary tax. It's a tax on the poor. Sometimes people say that it's a tax on the stupid. I'm not going to go there because I don't think you have to be stupid to play the ponies or buy lottery tickets or go to a casino or whatever.

In fact, I'm not in any way really qualified to judge who goes to those sorts of places because gambling has never in any form held any interest for me whatsoever. I've been to the track a grand total of four times in my life. The only times I've been in casinos have been when I've been volunteering with my community association on our casino nights, that sort of thing. I think the last time I bought a lottery ticket they were still called Olympic lottery tickets. It was a long, long time ago. A long time ago. It doesn't turn my crank.

Clearly, it turns a lot of Albertans' cranks. Clearly, it has been deemed a legal undertaking. Clearly, it's better that the government should be the house than the mob. Clearly. However, it's also clear that while the vast majority of people who choose to gamble can do so responsibly, I guess, for lack of a better word, do so without getting themselves into a jackpot situation – oh, bad choice of words – without putting their family finances in the rhubarb, if you will, a study done in Ontario in 2003 clearly indicates that 4.8 per cent of problem gamblers in that province accounted for approximately 36 per cent of Ontario gambling revenue. Mr. Speaker, I hammer away at the government members opposite because that's part of my job as an opposition member, no doubt, but this is not a problem that by any stretch of the imagination is exclusive to the province of Alberta. It's not.

There are social problems attached to gaming. There are policy problems attached to gaming whenever a government makes as much money off other people's vices, other people's habits, as we make off gaming. There are significant issues that need to be monitored and studied and revisited, and decisions need to be made about those things. That's why I think it's essential that we not only have a plan for gaming, but that periodically we conduct sweeping public reviews of how gaming is conducted in this province and ask the people of this province what future they see for gambling in the province and to establish a committee to plan the future role of gaming in Alberta, and to ask the committee as part of its mandate to consider re-establishing community lottery boards for distributing gaming revenues is absolutely fair and on and justifiable.

This is not to take away from the ongoing work that the AGLC does. This is to enhance that. It's to add to it. It's to make sure that what we're doing around gaming is, in fact, in the public interest of the people of Alberta and to give the people of Alberta an opportunity to speak to that as well.

I would urge passage of Bill 210. I would urge everyone in the House to vote in favour of it. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we make decisions in government, we normally make them for financial reasons because we are put here to tax people's money and then spend it appropriately. It shouldn't be a government's position to tax their morals or to tell them where they should or shouldn't go. I've heard about the people that are protesting outside the casino. They should probably watch to see how many people are dragged off the street and thrown into the casino to spend their own money. I'm presuming most of them do it of their own free choice, whether it's good or bad or otherwise. I, too, like most of the members have very little interest in playing at the casinos although I do occasionally travel to some of the sunnier spots south and do that. That's a choice I make, and in most cases I fully intend to lose some money. That's what it's all about.

The intent of this bill is good. Unfortunately or fortunately, it's being done. The government is far ahead of the recommendations here, with the exception of trying to put MLAs in a position of deciding what to do within that department, the money. I think the administrative details of the gaming industry and the regulatory approvals and supervision need to be done by people – to say professionals may not be it – who are involved in the business, who arbitrarily deal with the policies of the government to make sure that gaming is open and transparent and that it's done under the rules of the Solicitor General's department.

Another thing that one of the hon. members over there suggested was that, you know, it might be better if they spent their money on people's important initiatives. I'm not sure if some of the pages were left out of the budget documents they got or if they just chose not to look. When you look at what the lottery fund spends, whether it's on the Alberta film development program – one of them said that we should spend some on that; we do – or assistance to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts or the Wild Rose Foundation or the major community facilities program or the community facility enhancement program or the community initiatives program or the major fairs and exhibitions or the bingos or the First Nations development fund or the centennial initiative or the assistance to the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation or the human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund, the recreational sports facilities, these dollars are going back into communities where people are living, raising their families, and contributing greatly to the quality of life.

There is a downside; there's no question. When you lose your paycheque, that was to buy the diapers or pay the rent, that has a cost to society. This government has taken that responsibility very seriously through AADAC and through the department itself and the responsible gaming initiatives, addictions. Mr. Speaker, you can't have it both ways. You can't simply say that gaming is all bad, all good, or that if we were to study it longer, all of the ills that are related to it would go away. In fact, what this bill is purporting to do is being done even better, more efficiently, more effectively, not politically. Practically it's being delivered. There are about eight or 10 departments that receive hundreds of millions of dollars from the gaming fund. Clearly, the Premier has made it a major initiative.

We recognize how important it is to diversify the income streams to this province, and we are. Mr. Speaker, the nanotechnology sector, that we're supporting, expects in 15 years to be a $20 billion to $22 billion industry. We have some of the most innovative approaches in medical research. We're providing health care to people at a level that is seen in very few places in the world by using innovative ideas, by accessing the total dollars that come to government, and they all contribute to the pie.

We're working with the energy sector to develop different and alternative forms of energy. We're working in the agriculture sector to try and diversify, try and value-add to make sure that we have a good, safe, secure supply of food. The forestry industry has faced challenges for years, and we're working with research, development, and marketing to make sure that their products can be sold around the world and are of utmost quality.

We're working with arts and culture. In Lloydminster about 10 days ago, Mr. Speaker, I was actually pleasantly surprised by how glowingly the artists receiving the awards spoke of being in Alberta, where they had the opportunity to live the life they dreamed of in the arts and become writers or actors and to promote the things that the Alberta government and the people of Alberta supported. I was surprised and happy that they felt so blessed to live in this province, as I do, as many people do.

Mr. Speaker, most of us in Alberta can see the positive side of what we've got here. Most of us can see the opportunities for our children. Most of us know that our parents and our grandparents will be looked after by a decent, caring government in this province. Most of us in this province realize that the environment is critically important to all of us. None of us live in a vacuum. It's a balance, and it's all brought together. It's been 36 very successful years, and unfortunately for many on the other side I have a tendency to think it'll be many more years, particularly with the approach they've taken: everything in Alberta is bad; we're just a polluting, homeless bunch of people who just can't do much; we gamble too much; we don't have roads; we don't have schools; hardly anybody learns anything. If you listen to them, it'd be a terrible place to come to.

Actually, I think it's a darn good place to live. There's a good balance between responsibility yet giving people the rights they cherish: to do what they want to do and in some cases the right to make bad decisions. Mr. Speaker, it can come from gambling. It can come from buying lottery tickets. It can come from buying a car that doesn't work from a guy in a back lot or buying a house with a leaky basement or tying yourself to a mortgage at 16 per cent. There are a lot of decisions that we let you do because that's what makes it work in this country. The responsibility you have comes from you and your family and the people around you.

So I find it not surprising that the Liberals there know what's best for everyone morally. They magically won't collect money from gaming. They'll lower taxes. They'll spend more on education. They'll spend more on everything, and they won't collect much. I'd love to have a piece of the fantasy world they live in. The hon. member continues to talk about the '70s. I guess we should have saved a bag of what they were smoking then because it might come in handy now to try and understand the way their approach is.

Mr. Speaker, I would certainly hope that the reasonably intelligent members of this Assembly would vote this down, give a vote of thanks to the Solicitor General and his department for the great job they do, and move on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on this topic. I wasn't around like the Member for Calgary-Currie in the '60s, so I'm not sure whether there were any songs about sucking and blowing at the same time, but if there were, I'm sure this member had a 45 spinning all the time.

It was really a relief to hear that he finally for the first time admitted that there is a possibility that public education is adequately funded in this province. That's the first time I've ever heard a member from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition admit that there is that possibility that public education may be sufficiently funded.

But that in itself would be too positive. They just couldn't have it that way. So then he goes on to say and argue, Mr. Speaker, that even though public education may be well enough funded, the money is not properly spent. Well, it doesn't take a genius to figure out, then, that obviously this member has issues with school boards. I would challenge the Member for Calgary-Currie to have the fortitude – maybe he can find a song from the '60s that he can use as a vehicle by which to deliver that message.

An Hon. Member: I Can't Get No Satisfaction.

Mr. Lukaszuk: I Can't Get No Satisfaction: there is a song that you can use.

Go to all the school boards within the province of Alberta and tell them: you're getting enough money, but you're not spending it well, and that's why teachers have to fund raise. There is no other way of interpreting what this member is saying. Hence, Mr. Speaker, lottery . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I'll now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to close debate on Bill 210.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I would like to thank all hon. members . . .

Mr. Rodney: Really?

Mr. Tougas: Yes, even you.

. . . for participating in Bill 210 over the last couple of days. I knew, of course, from the outset that Bill 210 would go down to defeat.

An Hon. Member: You're prejudging.

Mr. Tougas: I'm prejudging? Would you like to prove me wrong? It's quiet all of a sudden, isn't it. Yeah, I knew that was going to happen.

Mr. Lougheed: Wait for the vote.

Mr. Tougas: Oh, wait for the vote. Fine. The Member for Strathcona says that we should wait for the vote to see how this is going to go. That would be quite surprising, Mr. Speaker.

To be honest, I'm disappointed by the arguments that we've heard from the government side and quite often by the calibre of debate. When we hear terms like "sucking and blowing at the same time," that we heard from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, it doesn't exactly elevate the level of discourse in this House.

Mr. Speaker, during the debate we heard a laundry list of all the wonderful things that come from various lottery programs. Now, there's no argument here, but none of what was said is relevant to the debate on Bill 210. We heard about how much lottery money went into the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, the Wild Rose Foundation. Again, no arguments here, but again not relevant. Nothing in Bill 210 would limit or restrict the distribution of money to these organizations.

Now, there were some comments that Bill 210 would duplicate reviews that are done on a regular basis by the government. There may be some truth to this, but the difference between the performance reviews by the government and the all-party committee proposed in Bill 210 is that there would be full, open, public reviews of all aspects of gaming policy that would invite the public to help formulate gaming policy. To date gambling policy is established entirely behind closed government doors, with only the barest minimum of consultation with the people. The heart of Bill 210 is the public consultation aspect of the bill. The so-called monitoring of satisfaction with gaming policies that we've heard from government members just doesn't cut it. The questions are simply measurements of satisfaction and don't really delve deep enough to come up with a true picture of gaming in Alberta. I'm not entirely sure why the government is so worried about bringing these issues to the public, unless they're afraid of what they might hear.

Gambling is a growth industry in this province, but like with so many other industries there are moral and ethical questions attached to this growth, that would have been addressed in Bill 210. The thousands of volunteers who provide millions of hours of their time to working casinos would have had their voices heard. Again, prove me wrong.

Bill 210 might have forced the government to outline its plans for the future of gaming in Alberta. We have heard much about the government's buzzwords this year of transparency and openness. Unfortunately, faced with a chance to act with genuine transparency and openness, this government has chosen to do what it does best: make decisions behind closed doors.

Despite the impending demise of Bill 210 – and, again, if you want to prove me wrong, please do – it has been an honour to have had the opportunity to present a bill to this Legislature. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 211

Planning for the Future of Communities Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise in the House today and speak to open second reading debate on Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act. I think that this has the potential to be an extremely important piece of legislation that governs the direction that we take in high-growth, rapid-growth areas and gives the people of those areas a significant stake in planning their own destiny five years out, 10 years out, 50 years out. It gives us the opportunity to design the communities we want in the Alberta that we need.

The objective of this legislation is to ensure that a long-term vision and long-term goals guide the decision-making dealing with growth in the province of Alberta, and it provides for co-ordination of growth policies among all levels of government. What the bill would do is designate specific geographical regions of Alberta as growth-plan areas. Within these areas a regional planning commission would be established, consisting of representatives of the provincial government, all the municipal governments within the region, stakeholders, and public representation as well, and those commissions would develop appropriate growth plans for the specific regions.

So what this bill is about, in short, is a return to regional planning. It is about land use. It is about environmental considerations. It is about human health and well-being. It is about quality of life and sustainability of that quality of life. It is about continued economic growth. It is about creating a predictable, sustainable framework within which that economic growth can occur, and it is about livable, sustainable communities, the communities that we want in the Alberta that we need.

Now, there are many already who are on record as supporting legislation very much like this, as supporting the concepts and the principles behind this legislation. The current Premier during the leadership campaign said, and I quote: without a regional plan we'll have a disjointed patchwork that will create additional problems in the future. To help municipalities facing significant growth pressures, I believe government must provide new, predictable, and long-term funding. I believe this will be welcomed in places like Fort McMurray where the infrastructure needs cannot keep up with the population growth.

This bill, of course, is a private member's bill. It cannot be about funding. It cannot be about money, so it's not. Money, funding, from time to time, if this bill is adopted, may have to follow some of the decisions made by the regional growth planning commissions, the regional advisory committees, and that will be dealt with in the fullness of time, Mr. Speaker. But one of things that is needed is to bring some order to chaos, and we've been in a rather chaotic situation. It wasn't too noticeable for the first few years since 1995 because we weren't growing as wildly as we are today. But since growth took off like a rocket, it's been rather chaotic, and it's, rather, not an every man but an every municipality for themselves approach to trying to grab at the brass ring, if you will.

That pits counties and cities, towns and municipal districts against one another. It has caused an untold amount of conflict between the city of Edmonton and the other 22 municipalities that are part of the Alberta Capital Region Alliance. There is conflict between the city of Calgary and the municipal district of Rocky View. There has been conflict, which seems to have been resolved to an extent I'm happy to say – and I hope that the resolution holds – between the city of Red Deer and the county of Red Deer. There's dispute between the city of Grande Prairie and the county of Grande Prairie. There are disputes almost everywhere you look, where urban and rural areas come into conflict and sometimes collision over what should be common interests.

The situation here is that there's a challenge that all this growth pressure presents to municipalities, a challenge that has implications beyond each municipality's borders. Bill 211, if passed, will allow us to make rational – and by us I mean all the people of Alberta, and I'll come back to that point in a minute – and balanced decisions about the way that we grow in the future, decisions that will strengthen our economy, decisions that will promote a healthy and sustainable environment and a high quality of life for all Albertans. This is enabling legislation that would allow the designation of certain geographical areas as growth-plan areas and the development of plans to focus and guide the regions' further development.

I want to come back to that notion that it would allow us to make rational and balanced decisions about the way we grow in the future and to reiterate that when I say us, I mean all people in Alberta; I don't just mean the provincial government. Bill 211 will provide the province with a flexible mechanism to facilitate intermunicipal planning. In periods and areas of rapid growth I don't think planning is an option; it's a required element. This bill balances our respect for municipal autonomy with the clear need for a provincial role in supportive integrated intermunicipal planning. The province has a clear role in ensuring that planning occurs, but we believe those plans are best developed by the local people: local citizens, local leaders. The outcomes of better, more integrated planning, we believe, will include more cost-effective delivery of services, stronger economic prospects, a certainty that the infrastructure is located where it's needed and is in place when it's needed, a sustained high quality of life, whether that's in terms of community design, transportation, environmental protection, whatever.

As the bill itself says: a growth plan may contain policies, goals, and criteria in relation to intensification and density, land supply for residential, employment and other uses, the location of industry and commerce, conservation of energy, infrastructure development and location of infrastructure and institutions, transportation planning, municipal waste management planning, growth-related capital spending and financing, affordable housing – this bill would allow affordable housing now to become a planning priority – community design, including the heritage character of neighbourhoods and buildings and community historical resources. And as you have seen, because I know that everybody in the House has done their homework on this bill, a host of other possibilities as well.

The idea is to create growth plans that will govern future growth and development decisions in the growth area so that plans, bylaws, actions, developments must be consistent with the plan. The plan is the overarching design. So we enter municipal disputes over the application of the plan that get referred to the Municipal Government Board. Growth plans prevail over other regulatory approvals by the NRCB or the EUB. There are a growing number of people in Alberta affected by those decisions who do not believe that they have sufficient input into those decisions, sufficient influence over the process of making decisions, and they're certainly not happy with the outcome of those decisions.

Conflicts between growth plans and other plans and policies will always be resolved in favour of the one that provides the greatest protection for the environment and human health. Very good reason for that. We can make oodles and oodles of money over the next couple of years by continuing on in the current context, but we can only do that while creating great damage to the environment and to the social environment if we continue on the path we're on. We don't want to end up there. When this boom is over, as booms always end, we want to end up ensuring that the places where we live and the places where we grow provide an ongoing sustainable quality of life that in and of itself encourages future and ongoing economic growth and development. So this is important. It puts people first, but it puts people first in concert with continued, orderly economic growth.

There's really a great deal more that I could say about this, but I know that my colleagues want to join the debate. I would simply urge you to review Bill 211 carefully, see the wisdom in it, and hopefully this House will support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. The idea around planning and that is good. You bet. The municipalities all talked about it: the bigger centres that are infringing on the smaller big centres. There's no question that it's in the best interests of municipal governments to develop a framework where they can deal with the issues on a regional basis or on an issue basis.

The big difference from this government or this bill is that we want to work co-operatively with the municipalities. They want to maintain their identity within a bigger planning framework. This bill, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, is code for forced amalgamation. There is no way that you can give a regional planning group the responsibilities left out here in section 4, everything from capital spending and financing to waste management, transportation planning, location. That is creating another level of government that most municipalities don't want. They want to be included in a planning process. They don't want to be told by a committee that only answers to the Lieutenant Governor that: "We have a plan that's being forced on you. You can like it or lump it, but we're going to do what we want."

A bill in this growth plan that says that the growth plan prevails over any licence, permit, approval, or other authorization granted by the NRCB and that – Mr. Speaker, one of the most contentious issues in this province is going to be water licence and water rights. If the hon. member thinks that you can just create a bill that will roll over or supersede water rights which were established long before the province was, then, while his intentions may be good, his understanding of the legal opportunity there is not.

Mr. Speaker, there are, as they say, many ways to skin a cat. I think the way our Premier and our minister have approached regional planning is that that is an opportunity out there. It shouldn't become another bureaucratic step in the way of development. Many municipalities – Wood Buffalo, for example – have done this, where they have developed a regional concept and they're moving forward, yet their problems are still there because of the tremendous growth. A plan or another group around a regional planning committee is not the be-all and end-all, the answer to all.

I don't believe that setting up a committee with the broad, broad tremendous scope as proposed here in Bill 211 would be accepted by municipalities in any way. I believe they would see it for what it is, which is forced amalgamation. Mr. Speaker, that is not where this government has come from. I certainly don't think as a former municipal councillor that I want to have a group appointed that has the opportunity to rule over all aspects of our communities. I like the approach of one of co-operation, done from a practical point of view with the municipalities involved. It is certainly far better in the long run. It certainly respects the right of individual municipalities and the tremendous opportunity that the municipal councillors and all of them bring to the table to work in this.

I wouldn't support Bill 211, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and join the debate and speak in support of Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act. I want to thank the sponsor, my colleague, the MLA for Calgary-Currie. The impact of this bill would mandate complete growth plans for specific regions. The rationale is that in order to accommodate future population growth, continue to support economic prosperity, and achieve a high quality of life for Albertans, planning must occur in a rational and strategic way that recognizes that an integrated and co-ordinated approach that determines future growth requirements must occur regionally to ensure that long-term vision and long-term goals guide decision-making, dealing with the growth in Alberta, and provide for the co-ordination of growth policies among all levels of government.

To provide for an appropriate range of housing types and densities required to meet the projected requirement of current and future residents of regional municipalities or regions facing unprecedented growth, Mr. Speaker, this legislation would allow for the provincial government to designate specific geographical areas of Alberta as growth plan areas. Within these areas a regional planning commission would be established, consisting of representatives of the provincial government, municipal governments within the region, stakeholders, and public representatives who would develop appropriate growth plans for the specific regions. These plans would then be used to focus and guide the region's future development. This growth planning process would encourage broader, more comprehensive planning that links land-use planning decisions to future infrastructure needs.

Mr. Speaker, this would create a new mechanism to deal effectively with the broader planning issues that go beyond both the boundaries and the interest of individual municipalities. Elements contained within these integrated growth plans could be population projections and allocations; policies, goals, and criteria relating to issues such as intensification and density; location and the density of industry, commerce; protection of sensitive and significant lands, including agricultural lands and water resources; infrastructure development; and community design. In other words, a truly integrated system of planning completed regionally to guide present and future development of the region.

This type of legislation would require individual municipalities to bring their municipal development plans into conformity with the regional growth plan. This is essentially a provincial land-use strategy but could encompass much more. I would protect agricultural land; preserve watersheds, forests, and rivers; and address air quality issues; promote healthier Albertans by encouraging open spaces and parklands; set limits on where urban boundaries can expand and cannot expand; provide for affordable housing; more importantly, guide the development of Alberta well into the future. Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Currie already explained, you know, how this Bill 211 provides the province with a flexible mechanism to facilitate intermunicipal planning.

Mr. Speaker, we need to take a different approach to planning, and we want to start planning for the future of Alberta in a balanced and co-ordinated fashion. Bill 211, this proposed legislation, would ensure that whatever planning decisions we make, we would always ensure the protection of the environment, of prime agricultural lands and natural resources that drive Alberta's economy. We will ensure the future sustainability of our communities.

Alberta is growing at a rate that is unprecedented. Every day people move to Alberta in search of a better quality of life. Those numbers will continue to increase. We must plan right now for that growth. We must plan in a way that integrates and brings together under one focused plan everything required to build vibrant communities and a vigorous economy while at the same time protecting our natural environment and our health.

We cannot continue to make planning decisions in isolation. Alberta's future cannot be planned like that, so this legislation will allow us to co-ordinate growth for geographic-specific areas of the province. It will allow the integration of infrastructure requirements of roads, of affordable housing, of community design, of the location of industry and commerce, of the population projections and allocations. In short, it will guide planning and development across all sectors to ensure our future prosperity.

The purpose of this bill is very clear. We want our communities to be places where everyone has access to a place to live, to hospitals, jobs, and recreational facilities. We want our communities to be places where families can live and work and participate in vibrant communities. These are the communities we want and the Alberta we need.

Bill 211 allows not only for continued economic success, but it ensures that economic growth is sensible and sustainable. As Alberta's economy continues to grow, our environment and our quality of life must continue to be great. This legislation is all about helping the people of Alberta and the government make better choices for a better future. We want our communities of the future to be places where all Albertans can enjoy clean air, clean water, and sustainable and vibrant communities. It's up to us right here in this Legislature to make that happen, to take these necessary steps so that we can leave the legacy for future generations.

These are goals deserving of this Legislature, and Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act, will allow us to achieve them, so I urge all the members sitting in this House to support this bill. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence and with the indulgence of the Assembly I would seek unanimous consent to allow us to be able to take off our jackets.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder to members that permission is not granted to assume the normal rules of committee, so you must remain in your seats. Just remove your jackets.

I assume that you didn't wish to speak in the debate.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to stand and talk to Bill 211.

Bill 211 proposes to establish growth plan areas that would be designated to oversee the development of municipalities in Alberta. As I understand it, each growth plan area would have to establish an advisory committee, including representatives from municipalities within that growth plan area, the government of Alberta, and the general public.

Improved municipal planning could alleviate concerns about the pace of growth, but Bill 211 is not the way to achieve it. Bill 211 proposes a significant change in municipal planning as it usurps planning responsibilities from municipalities and shifts them to the government of Alberta. Bill 211 does not recognize the cost of funding advisory committees and does not provide guidance on which level of government would bear this cost. Mr. Speaker, there is no indication of whether advisory committees are permanent planning bodies or are in place to address growth issues for temporary periods.

I want to emphasize that municipalities need some predictability and sustainability for the future, which very much involves regional discussion. Bill 211 would place this government in direct control of addressing regional planning issues as opposed to an open and co-operative approach to dealing with municipal issues. Mr. Speaker, this bill falls outside the planning framework laid out in the Municipal Government Act since there are consultations ongoing with municipalities on municipal planning. It would be more appropriate to include any changes within the MGA once consultations are complete. We have talked in question period many times about the consultation that is happening with municipalities, with the municipal associations, with the minister's council. I think it would be more appropriate to have consultation with those groups and those association and go from there.

The bill does not include any guidelines with respect to determining the representation of municipalities. Larger municipalities may feel that they are underrepresented due to the growth pressures brought on by rapidly growing populations. The municipal sustainability initiative is providing funding in 2007-08 for intermunicipal co-operative initiatives and co-operative projects. Mr. Speaker, additionally the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is developing a land-use framework which will provide a vision for an integrated, sustainable land-use approach that balances, if I can say, economic, environmental, and social concerns.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, this bill does not identify emergency prevention and preparation as an issue to consider within a growth plan. Advisory committees would be unable to conduct regional emergency planning without including that provision.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am not supporting Bill 211.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act. I think that as we look at the purpose of this bill, it's important to understand the background. As Alberta continues to grow at an accelerated rate, there's a tremendous potential to enjoy lucrative economic benefits. However, this potential is seriously jeopardized in certain high-growth areas where the lack of a mechanism under the Municipal Government Act, the MGA, to mandate regional planning is affecting the future growth potential of municipalities and leading to serious land-use complications.

The current MGA was introduced in 1995, and its main principle was to ensure that municipalities could act with natural person powers, essentially as individual corporations making decisions in isolation. The MGA does not prescribe intermunicipal co-operation on land-use planning but, rather, is permissive in this regard. The effect of this is that municipalities make land-use planning decisions in isolation that quite often are not in the best interests of the region or the province.

This is the 21st century. I think that in most cases we understand that with 21st leadership there is a need for co-operation and collaboration and greater understanding of community, but we have a failure with this MGA. An example of this is the failure of the Alberta Capital Region Alliance, ACRA, as noted recently by the mayor of Edmonton. The inability of Edmonton and its regional partners to pull together is our biggest challenge. Working in silos is not just silly; it's destructive.

We have report after report indicating that there is a greater need, a huge need, for regional planning. The government's own Radke report clearly indicates that the lack of regional planning in the capital region in terms of infrastructure, transportation, environmental considerations, water use by the proposed upgraders, lack of knowledge of groundwater quality and the government's lack of involvement in regional planning could have serious implications for the future of the capital region.

The purpose of Bill 211 is to provide a mechanism to plan for future sustainable communities where growth pressures are presenting challenges to municipalities that have implications beyond their own borders. This legislation will allow the province to make rational and balanced decisions about the way we grow in the future, decisions that will strengthen our economy, promote a healthy and sustainable environment, and support a high quality of life for all Albertans. This is enabling legislation that would allow the designation of a certain geographical area as a growth plan area and the development of plans to focus and guide the region's future development. It's in the spirit of co-operation and collaboration and understanding of community and the recognition that one area's benefiting means that the province benefits. If one area loses, we all lose.

Bill 211's approach is to be collaborative with municipalities as partners in this process. Instead of the minister preparing proposed growth plans for designated areas as well as defining specific growth areas, this act has that responsibility passed to an advisory committee for the preparation of growth plans, with the Lieutenant Governor in Council approving the designation of growth plan areas and growth plans. So this legislation would mandate complete growth plans for specific regions. The rationale is that in order to accommodate future population growth, continue to support economic prosperity, and achieve a high quality of life for Albertans, planning must occur in a rational and strategic way that recognizes that an integrated and co-ordinated approach that determines future growth requirements must occur regionally. We must work together. To me it seems like common sense to ensure that a long-term vision and long-term goals guide decision-making dealing with growth in Alberta and provide for co-ordination of growth policies among all levels of government.

Local autonomy is crucial and important as decisions are made with continued orderly growth that benefits the entire province. This legislation would allow for the provincial government to designate specific regional or geographical areas of growth of Alberta as growth plan areas. Within these areas a regional planning commission would be established consisting of representatives of the provincial government, municipal governments within the region, stakeholders, and public representation who could develop appropriate growth plans for the specific regions.

These plans would then be used to focus and guide the region's future development, and these plans would have been made with collaboration and co-operation, with discussion, and lead to consensus, something that I hope in the 21st century is going to be more common. This growth planning process would encourage broader, more comprehensive planning that links land-use planning decisions to future infrastructure needs. This would create a new mechanism to deal effectively with broader planning issues that go beyond both the boundaries and the interests of individual municipalities. This type of legislation would require individual municipalities to bring their municipal development plans into conformity with the regional growth plan. Again, I emphasize that it's a matter of co-operation and a sense of community, that we really are one. What benefits one can benefit all. At the same time, what harms one can harm all.

This is essentially a provincial land-use strategy, which is sorely needed, but it could also encompass much more. It would protect agricultural lands, preserve watersheds, forests, and rivers, and address air quality issues, promote healthier Albertans by encouraging open spaces and parklands, set limits on where urban boundaries can expand and cannot expand, provide for affordable housing, and, most importantly, guide the development of Alberta well into the future.

Bill 211 provides the province with a flexible mechanism to facilitate intermunicipal planning. There is no doubt that we must have intermunicipal planning. In periods and areas of rapid growth planning is not an option. This bill balances a respect for municipal autonomy and the clear need for a provincial role in support of integrated intermunicipal planning. The province has a role in ensuring that planning occurs, but we believe these plans are best developed by local leaders and citizens. The outcomes of better, more integrated planning may include, for example, more cost-effective delivery of services, stronger economic prospects, sustaining a high quality of life, community design, transportation, environmental protection, et cetera.

I grew up in the Crownsnest Pass at a time when there was a great, I guess, desire not to amalgamate and not to work together. It's interesting to go back now after a number of years to see the benefits of actually working together and the cost reductions, the co-operation that's going on to produce better opportunities for schooling and so forth.

I think that in order to accommodate the tremendous rate of growth in certain geographical areas and to accommodate the future growth potential of communities and to ensure their economic prosperity, to guarantee a high quality of life for all Albertans, and to maintain a sustainable and vibrant environment, planning must occur in a co-ordinated and strategic manner. We can look all over to find examples where planning and working together has benefited the people.

Bill 211 provides a mechanism to deal effectively with those broader planning issues, which all too often transcend both the boundaries and the interests of individual municipalities. We cannot, especially in key high-growth areas, continue to make decisions in isolation. It doesn't make any sense. We will all lose if we do that. The proposed Planning for the Future of Communities Act will ensure that our choices about the future are guided by a long-term vision of the kind of strong and healthy communities that Albertans want to see.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have before us Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act. It proposes new co-ordination and planning requirements for municipalities. This is a complex subject and in many ways extends beyond the capacity of a private member's bill. However, I do appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie bringing this bill forward so that we may bring all members up to speed on this government's municipal initiatives.

It has been refreshing to hear once again how our government is actively working on addressing municipal growth concerns either through the new municipal sustainability funding or through the consideration of the report from the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability, which I know, Mr. Speaker, is vigorously working its way through the process. Clearly, when considering the work that is already being undertaken, the government is carrying its weight on handling municipal development.

I think the other speakers have adequately covered topics relating to municipal planning and development, so this afternoon I want to focus specifically on one element of the business of a municipality, and that would be the element of housing and community infrastructure. As Bill 211 recognizes, part of developing a productive municipality is addressing social and cultural concerns. The bill correctly identifies both these issues as critical to sustainable municipal growth. However, here, just as in most circumstances, the Liberal opposition fails to recognize the work this government is accomplishing in relation to housing and community infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, housing has been a significant issue facing every single member of this Assembly. It's an issue that confronts urban and rural centres in the four corners of this province. Or should I say five corners? There is no question that every Albertan needs some form of roof over their head. However, before I address the government response to the need for additional housing, we need to consider the housing construction that is going on in this province.

In the last three years, Mr. Speaker, housing starts have exceeded 40,000 per year and were over 50,000 in 2006. This represents 25 per cent of home construction in Canada. It is a reflection of the thousands of individuals that move to Alberta every month. Twenty-five per cent of construction, yet only 10 per cent, roughly, of the national population. This tells me something. It tells me of the great desire of people to own their own home, which is really one of the greatest sources of independence for an individual. We must also bear in mind that this level of construction has sustained employment and supported many businesses and communities throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, as I think of my own community of Drayton Valley and Calmar and surrounding area, I think of all the new homes going up as well as all the new businesses going in. What does this do? It creates jobs. It creates long-term sustainability. This level of construction and the eagerness of individuals to own their own home is a great Alberta success story despite the fog of rhetoric generated by members opposite.

In Alberta there are situations where individuals are unable to own their own home or unable to afford the rent for an apartment. This government opted to address the problem by supporting the construction of affordable housing and supporting individuals through income supplements. To support the construction of affordable housing units, our government announced a municipal sustainability housing program. This program has a $100 million per year budget available over the next three years. Now, that's $300 million, Mr. Speaker. This initiative is part of the new municipal sustainability program and will specifically address housing concerns in high-growth and high-need municipalities such as Drayton Valley. It is intended that this funding be available on a consistent and a sustainable basis for the next 10 years, and I believe that'll happen. I believe that our boom is going to continue and that we will be able to address these growth issues over the coming years.

Funding for affordable housing extends to capital enhancement of $96 million in 2007-2008. By working with other levels of government and the private and nonprofit sectors, it is expected that 11,000 new housing units will be built over the next five years. Combined, both programs represent nearly $400 million over the next three years for affordable housing units. The critical element to this funding is that it is given to municipalities to address their own unique issues. There is no cookie-cutter template to add affordable housing units. If it were available, I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing would have found it by now and would have informed the Assembly of its existence. The approach of this government is preferable because it recognizes that municipalities each have unique issues. They're all different. They all have ideas. They all have plans, their own municipal plans, as to how to address this important issue.

I also want to address what I'm going to term community infrastructure. I'm talking about libraries, cultural and community centres, swimming pools, arenas, concert halls, art galleries, and museums. All of these facilities enhance quality of life and, perhaps most importantly, make communities attractive places to live, work, and prosper. To address the need for community infrastructure, the municipal sustainability initiative has allocated $75 million in 2007-08 through a community capital envelope.

Now, community infrastructure is not only needed in new communities and neighbourhoods, but there are many facilities needing to be replaced and refurbished. We know that. Alberta just celebrated 100 years last year, and some of these facilities are getting old. Recognizing the demand for such facilities, Budget 2007 announced funding for community facilities above the community capital funding in the municipal sustainability initiative.

The Department of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture is responsible for two new programs supporting community infrastructure. The first program – I think it was mentioned earlier – is the major community facilities program. Over the next two years, Mr.

Speaker, $280 million is available to support significant public-use facilities in our province. It's intended that the program will allow municipalities to build recreational and cultural facilities that will enhance the well-being of Albertans. That is the singular focus of this initiative, and as such it is an outstanding legacy for future generations.

The second program will provide $90 million through a recreation and sport facilities grant program. While it is specifically targeted to sports, I'm sure that the hockey and soccer moms and dads in my constituency will be appreciative of support for new fields and new arenas in addition to the other recreation and sport facilities that are needed in this province.

Overall there's sizable support for community infrastructure, which is part of a rather sizable capital plan for this province. In fact, it is an unprecedented investment in our communities. Our municipalities stand to build and enhance communities which will make every Albertan and every newcomer to this province proud to call this wonderful place their home. Mr. Speaker, this government is addressing the very concerns of municipalities, including housing and community infrastructure. Both items cover the so-called social issues that are very important in maintaining sustainable economic growth.

Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act, is an interesting document. However, I wonder when considering the initiatives of this government in relation to municipal growth – that is, the municipal sustainability program and the land-use framework – if this legislation was formed within some sort of vacuum. Now, there are growth pressures, and there is a need to address municipal co-operation, and this bill may help to provide the answer, but as I said, this is a complex issue. As legislators we cannot pretend that this issue would be dealt with after only two hours of debate.

Mr. Speaker, there will be positive results arising from the municipal sustainability program. It's already happening around Alberta. There's also the need to allow the land-use framework consultation to complete its work as the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has said in his comments on this bill.

When I weigh all of this together, Mr. Speaker, I have difficulty supporting Bill 211, considering that there is work already being done in relation to supporting strong communities. So I guess my answer is no. No, I will not be supporting Bill 211, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It is my hope that at some point within the legislative session this year or next the value of a variety of ideas and the wisdom of a number of sources will be taken into consideration. It seems that frequently in this House we're at the knuckle-dragging, chest-thumping state of mantra and chanting: government good, opposition bad.

We have the legislative democratic process. It's called amendment. So if there's something you don't like, may I suggest you use your intellect to amend and change and fix as opposed to just simply tossing it out because you don't like the source from which the information came or the party or the individual? We have to get past that. I had hoped that within this legislative session the all-party policy committees, the field committees, would be actually under way. This is the one change that I looked most forward to, the idea of combined, collaborative thinking. This is the type of thinking that Bill 211 is calling for.

Bill 211 sees the role of the government as a funder, as a facilitator, as a collaborator, not a dictator, not a forced amalgamator, nor a micromanager. Right now this government has got its tendrils so far into municipal governments' planning that with the exception of, I believe, the $127 million, for example, that was offered to Calgary as part of the eventual $1.4 billion portion, this government feels that it needs to micromanage every last decision. It doesn't matter that municipal leaders and councillors were elected. It doesn't matter that school boards once had control over half of their own budget, which this government took away.

This notion, this nonsensical idea of: "We know best; we've done it for 36 years. Things must be just wonderful, so just leave them the way they are. Let the market decide. If the market needs a little bit of a tune-up, let's throw money at it, such as the millions and millions of dollars that were quoted by the member, as justification." Money does not equal planning, and that's what Bill 211 is trying to address. You know, we're accused of doomsday attitudes, of always seeing the darkness and refusing to see the light, but we don't accept that what we currently have in Alberta is the most illuminated circumstance that we could possibly have, that everything is fine; let it continue. What we as Alberta Liberals and other parties have tried to do is suggest alternatives.

The previous member spoke of the housing solutions, and he spoke in terms of dollars. Well, let me suggest that it's a lot more expensive to correct a mistake than to prevent it in the first place. You can't just hope to buy your way back to a just and genuine progress form of lifestyle for Albertans. If we could solve Alberta's problems strictly with money and we didn't have to plan and we just sort of tuned into the market – "What are the shares today? Okay. That's good. Let's buy a few of those" – then governing would be absolutely easy. It would be just a matter of reading the stocks and tuning into the market. But that's not the case. We need at times to intervene.

Right now the government is very content to provide emergency funding for vulnerable individuals. Far be it from me to say that they shouldn't do that, but how long do you keep plugging dollars into that leaky dike of taxpayers' dollars before you get your first affordable house built? Once you've got that first affordable house built, what kind of support mechanisms are there for the people who would potentially inhabit that house? You sort of see the beginning, you see the end, and unfortunately you frequently ignore the middle, and we're in that interim middle when it comes to affordable housing. The government has no balance. The boom is on, and we need people to fill the jobs, but we don't have accommodations for them. We're always playing catch-up, and playing catch-up is a very expensive, nonproductive game to play.

One thing that I believe all members in this House can accept – and it's based on the fact that it comes from a neutral source – is Dr. Brad Stelfox's presentations. Dr. Brad Stelfox has done a series of presentations on a variety of issues, but they all deal with the growth. They take a historical perspective, and then they provide a little bit of future suggestions as to: if we continue along this particular line, this is where we'll end up; if we continue along that line, here is where our projections say we'll finally end up.

Anyone who has seen Dr. Brad Stelfox's presentations, whether it was in Canmore in the spring of 2005 at the parks and protected areas or whether it was with the PNWER presentation in the summer of 2006, regardless of where they saw it, what Brad Stelfox does is show the growth that has occurred in this province since 1900. He indicates that growth by a series of dots, and what you start to see as the years progress is a series of dots of different colours that indicate agricultural land use, industrial well sites, and so on. It shows the growth and footprints of the cities. It shows the current rate of loss of farmland. It shows the depleting nature of our water resources.

What Brad Stelfox doesn't do is exactly what I wish the government wouldn't do, and that's come up with the ultimate end answer. Brad Stelfox says: here's the information, people; let's get our collective heads around this and come up with a solution. Because of that Brad has been welcomed in numerous government presentations, and I thank the government for having the wisdom to have Dr. Stelfox take on these explanations and PowerPoint presentations. The last presentation that I saw from Dr. Stelfox had to do with the last five miles, the area in the southeast Rockies that the Nature Conservancy is so concerned about protecting.

If we don't get it right now, we leave no legacy for our children and their children and generations to come. What we don't have right now is any kind of a balance between our environmental requirements for a quality of life: breathable air, water that will continue to be available. All this government appears to be doing at this point is letting the market decide. Put that money into your pocket as fast as you can. Put it into your right pocket, and then transfer it to your left pocket. Overspend by $2,000 per Albertan what you take in in general revenue. Dip into what should be going into the heritage trust fund. Dip into the surpluses. Just get that money out there. Why? Because the government failed to plan back in 1994. The preoccupation with paying down the debt has resulted in tremendous extra expense. [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, I have to remind you that we're not in the committee stage of the bill. We're in second reading.

An Hon. Member: Hey, George, get back in your seat.

Mr. VanderBurg: I apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to make some comments today on Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act. This bill hopes to establish a new planning and co-ordination requirement to support municipal development and intermunicipal or regional co-operation. In other words, it's a shotgun marriage. The contents of the growth plans as proposed in Bill 211 would include population projections, growth strategies and policies, goals and criteria related to land supply, location of industry, and conservation of energy, among others.

This province has long recognized the critical importance of strong local government and has developed a tradition of visionary local government systems. This is reflected in the Municipal Government Act, which places a focus on the autonomy and the accountability of municipalities while empowering them to take more action on local planning and development. Most municipalities want to retain their ability to address planning and growth issues, allowing them to adapt to the unique challenges and needs of their particular region. For many areas of Alberta the broad enabling provisions within the current planning framework continue to work very well. Municipalities are able to develop plans and intermunicipal agreements to achieve high levels of co-ordination and co-operation, creating solutions beneficial to all parties.

By allowing municipalities to manage their own endeavours, we allow municipalities to grow to their fullest potential by giving them autonomy and empowering them rather than imposing restrictions.

The Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing strongly believes that each municipality must grow according to the desires of its citizens and own the right to realize economic development and prosperity. As a result, it encourages intermunicipal partnerships and facilitates common resource sharing, regional partnership initiatives, and various joint planning initiatives.

The regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is a prime example of a flourishing and successful model of intermunicipal co-operation. The municipality of Wood Buffalo has been able to work effectively by liaising with other stakeholders and surrounding municipalities to attain the region's goals and mutual benefit to all. For example, because of its flourishing economy and effective intermunicipal co-operation, it is predicted that by 2011 the municipality of Wood Buffalo will have created some 17,000 new jobs for our province. The creation of jobs in the municipality has a significant relationship to its increase in population. Between 2001 and 2006 Wood Buffalo's population increased by some 24.3 per cent, showing to be a benefit not only to the municipality and the region but also having a direct, positive contribution to our province's economic growth.

By creating a forum where municipalities must deal with one another by means of intermunicipal co-operation, we have strived to create stronger and more effective municipalities, resulting in tighter knit, municipally responsible communities which look out for each other's best interests. A great example of this is Lac La Biche in Lakeland county, approximately 220 kilometres northeast of Edmonton. Over the years the area has flourished into a stable economic climate and thriving business community. As Lac La Biche is conveniently located between two major oil sands producing areas, Fort McMurray and Cold Lake, seismic drilling and pipeline construction have become an issue among its citizens, but due to successful intermunicipal co-operation the region has benefited from the industries, turning the area into a vibrant and growing community.

Lac La Biche and its surrounding municipalities have learned to effectively work together on regional matters such as information sharing and networking, advocating regional interests, providing research on regional issues, providing a forum for stakeholders, facilitating implementation of regional initiatives, and working as a team to meet the economic and environmental and social goals of the region.

I'd like to talk a bit about the benefits that we are currently seeing in the Rocky Mountain House constituency. The county of Clearwater, the town of Rocky Mountain House, and Caroline have for years worked as a unit. As a matter of fact, there are a number of joint municipal plans and agencies working with the waste management system, fire and ambulance, joint planning around those urban centres. As a matter of fact, when I was still there, we initiated a program where we were actually cost sharing. We were giving to Rocky Mountain House and Caroline a portion of the taxes that we collected from the large gas plants in the county. This has enabled us to work with those urban municipalities, and I would just hate to see the provincial government force onto that area a new planning system.

It's now happening in the county of Mountain View with the town of Sundre, which is in the Rocky constituency, and I understand it's also happening with some of the other towns within the county of Mountain View. They have a joint ambulance service, joint planning around the municipality. In the county of Lacombe: in the town of Eckville an emergency building was paid for by the town of Eckville plus the county, with county money coming into recreation facilities within the town. So it's working. Let's leave it alone. Don't impose a new level.

Municipal Affairs and Housing understands the divergent benefits from well-functioning intermunicipal relationships and has for years shown dedication by means of providing long-term funding. Initiatives such as the targeted investment initiative provide grants to certain municipalities with limited financial resources. This has enabled many municipalities to cope with priority spending pressures, thus helping ensure long-term sustainability. As well, a partnership established in 2001 between Alberta and the federal government created the Canada/Alberta municipal rural infrastructure fund, which responds to local needs and priorities of municipalities by helping to provide clean water, better sewage systems, upgraded waste management processes, and safe roads and bridges. Also under the Canada/Alberta municipal rural infrastructure fund there exists a municipal capacity building special projects fund established to help municipalities to implement modern and innovative life cycle management plans for their infrastructure assets.

Furthermore, as a result of our government's dedication to providing strong, sustainable municipalities, the 2007 budget introduced the municipal sustainability initiative, which will provide some 1.4 billion dollars to Alberta municipalities, phased in over the next four years. This new funding will include incentives to encourage collaboration and co-operation between municipalities and provide needed financial support for critical core and community infrastructure projects. This will enable high-growth municipalities around the province to be better able to anticipate and meet growth-related challenges.

Through the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability our government received further recommendations on how to enhance the long-term sustainability of municipal governments and fully capitalize on the opportunity presented by Alberta's strong economic climate. Ideas such as further negotiating intermunicipal development plans and helping to establish more complex intermunicipal relations are all ideas our government is considering to strengthen intermunicipal co-operation while keeping power at the local level.

In order to achieve success in Alberta's growing economy, it is paramount that we support each municipality in its own endeavours. Strong municipalities provide critical and visible services at the local level while instilling accountability and responsibility through the region, helping to contribute to a great and strong and unified province . . . [Mr. Lund's speaking time expired]

Mr. Speaker, I remember years back, when we had the regional planning commissions . . .

The Speaker: I think it was time there, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: It's a good thing you got that last plug in there. That was very important. We weren't sure where you were going with that, so thank you for clarifying that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and say a few brief words about Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act. I'd like to thank my colleague and friend from Calgary-Currie for bringing forward this bill. I hope he has a little bit better luck with his than I had with mine, but I'm not getting that vibe here this afternoon, so I think his is going to meet the same fate as mine. But we shall carry on. [interjection] Yes, vibe.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most amazing statements ever uttered by a politician in Alberta came from the former Premier, Ralph Klein. Now, when Ralph Klein was Premier, he made a lot of quite amazing statements, but perhaps his crowning achievement was his admission that the government had no plan to deal with Alberta's explosive growth. That was really one for the history books. While it has been apparent for years that the government really had no plans for the future, the fact that the man in charge of the government would admit that the government was without a plan was quite astonishing, even by Premier Klein's standards.

With the government's well-known aversion to planning, Bill 211 is needed now more than ever. The purpose of Bill 211 is to provide a mechanism to plan for future sustainable communities where growth pressures are presenting a challenge to municipalities that have implications beyond their borders. The legislation would allow the designation of certain geographical areas as growth areas and the development of plans to focus and guide the regions' future development.

Bill 211 would be collaborative, treating municipalities as equal partners rather than junior partners in the Alberta family business. Mr. Speaker, the importance of planning cannot be overstated. Businesses around the world depend on planning for their long-term survival. Indeed, in the business world many very successful companies have foundered when they failed to plan properly. Alberta's current state reminds me of a number of companies in business history who expanded during boom times only to find that they had expanded too far and too fast, resulting in their demise. This legislation would mandate that the growth areas would produce complete growth plans. Planning must occur in a rational and strategic way that recognizes that an integrated and co-ordinated approach that determines future growth can only be accomplished with all parties at the table planning for the future.

Perhaps nowhere is the need for planning more evident than in the capital region. Edmonton is faced with an untenable situation of having 23 municipalities in the Alberta Capital Region Alliance. The mayor of Edmonton, Stephen Mandel, quite correctly described it as working in silos. Report after report indicates the need for regional planning. The Hemson report states that the capital region's inefficiencies will erode competitiveness. The Percy report clearly advocated for regional collaboration. The McNally royal commission, which is a 50-year-old report, reported that regional co-operation was necessary to deal with future growth issues. That's a 50-year old report, Mr. Speaker. The government's own Radke report clearly indicates that the lack of regional planning in the capital region in terms of infrastructure, transportation, environmental considerations, and the government's lack of involvement in regional planning could have serious implications for the future of the capital region.

The evidence indicating the need to establish a regional planning mechanism for high-growth areas that has the authority to make binding decisions on land-use matters is undeniable. Failure to implement such mechanisms and processes jeopardizes the future growth potential of not only the capital region but also high-growth areas such as Grande Prairie and Cold Lake.

We need, Mr. Speaker, to take a different approach to planning. We want to start planning for the future of Alberta in a balanced and co-ordinated fashion. Bill 211 would ensure that whatever planning decisions we make, we would always ensure the protection of the environment, our prime agricultural lands, and natural resources that drive Alberta's economy. We will ensure the future sustainability of our communities.

The purpose of the bill is clear: we want our communities to be places where everyone has access to a place to live, hospitals, jobs, and recreational facilities. This legislation is all about helping the people of Alberta and the government make better choices for a better future.

I believe that earlier the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar said that it was too complicated an issue – [some applause] he applauds himself – to deal with in just two hours, which is a wonderful reason to vote for the bill, so that we can send it to committee and discuss it even further.

I encourage all members to vote in favour of this bill. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to join debate on Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act. The debate to this point has been most interesting. We've been going back and forth, but the debate essentially is about the recognition of the need for planning or defence of the status quo, that it's okay to keep on doing things the way we are doing. Clearly, I think one must recognize the absence of any regional planning mechanisms. They were in place at one time in this province. All of that arrangement was trashed by this government many years ago. The consequences of the lack of regional planning in terms of intermunicipal tensions and inability to co-operate are evident to all of us.

Urban sprawl as an issue is a huge one and the problems that it generates in terms of absence of any public transportation plans for the region. Take the capital region here. They're all so very evident. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the absence of any ability to regionally plan and to encourage and generate co-operation and collaboration between neighbouring municipal entities and areas creates absolutely huge problems.

There was a comment made earlier on by one of the members on the government side with respect to: what about the costs of establishing these advisory committees? Mr. Speaker, my question is: imagine the costs of not having any planning arrangements in place, costs in terms of transportation, costs in terms of urban sprawl, costs in terms of having no plans for population density, costs in environmental terms, social terms. They're huge costs when there is no attempt to in fact engage different municipal authorities/entities into co-operating and planning co-operatively for the future. Particularly in the context of rapid population growth and in the context of very, very rapid economic growth to refuse to acknowledge the need for some sort of co-ordinated planning arrangements is asking for trouble in the future. Costs, I think, of not planning are huge, much greater than it will cost to fund a regional commission or an advisory committee as proposed in this act.

At this point, of course, we are speaking more in terms of the principles entailed in this act, and I think the principle of some sort of need for co-operative and future-oriented planning is a principle that I support. I think it's an important principle and needs the support of this House. With respect to the details, or the substance of the bill, I think we should allow the bill to move to the next stage so that we can look at the details of the bill in terms of what it proposes to do substantively, clause by clause.

At that stage, issues such as the concern that I think one of the members on the government side expressed with respect to the centralization concern, that the bill, in fact, centralizes too much power with respect to municipal planning and interregional, intermunicipal planning into the hands of the Executive Council – I think that's a valid argument. We can certainly examine this, debate it, and ask ourselves whether or not that centralizing element of the bill can be mitigated by making some changes if some of the other provisions of the bill meet the approval of the House.

For example, I have a concern with respect to the role of this Legislature beyond it voting on this bill. I think there should be some provision in this bill with respect to the advisory committee's planning report when it comes before, for example, the Executive Council. Before the Executive Council ratifies it in the final stages, it should perhaps be referred to one of the policy field committees. I'm very concerned about us not paying attention to the presence of these policy field committees, which represent this House, which represent the province.

I think we could make those changes in a bill such as this one by suggesting how the centralizing elements of this bill perhaps could be mitigated by enhancing the role of this Legislature before this bill or another bill such as this one could finally get the approval of the House. So there are positive and constructive ways in which we need to engage ourselves with respect to the whole issue of the need for regional planning and the costs of not paying attention to the need for planning.

Land use policies. Fertile land around the province is disappearing without anyone asking questions about the long-term consequences of it. There are ecological microsystems in existence all over the regions in which these kinds of developments are taking place, and no one is paying attention to what happens to the loss of those microsystems, which represent very, very important ecological treasures. Once they're gone, they're gone forever.

We do need to pay some attention to the issue of how to address environmental issues, how to address issues of urban sprawl, issues of providing economical transportation for the future, how to deal with issues of greenhouse gas emissions which result from the excessive use of individual means of transportation in the absence of affordable and effective public transportation. Plans for the regions around big urban areas are developing as we speak.

There are a huge number of issues. There's the issue of leaving some sort of legacy for the future generations. That's where planning comes in, thinking about the future in the long term and making provisions and, in fact, being able to forecast and see some risks and dangers. In failing to plan, failing to forecast, we are failing to develop plans to deal with possible difficulties that will arise if we do not plan beyond existing municipal boundaries.

Existing municipal boundaries are there. They are a reality. Surely, the whole issue of regional planning, having a plan for a whole region, is complex. It's made more difficult, certainly, by the political realities that are there, but that doesn't mean that we should throw our hands up in the air and say in frustration that nothing can be done. Something has to be done. I'm sure municipally elected officials are as much sensitive to these concerns as we are, and simply saying that they will not listen, that they will be absolutely outraged if we raise some of these questions in this Assembly and encourage them to think in the long term, think beyond existing municipal boundaries, I think, is ludicrous. I don't think that's an argument that holds.

I think Albertans increasingly, whether they are elected municipal officials, whether they are provincial elected representatives, whether they are regular, ordinary citizens, parents raising their children and families, you know, looking to the future, all are concerned about the lack of planning. They would like to see this government take some leadership role in moving in the direction of developing regional plans which will address issues of potential water scarcity in the coming years, water conservation, issues of greenhouse gas emissions and how we deal with those through regional planning, urban planning, municipal planning.

They would certainly like to see the land use rationalized. Currently, in this free-for-all sort of development strategy that's happening all over the place, we are losing a most valuable natural resource called land. Very, very fertile agricultural land is disappearing without any thought being given to what will happen in the next 20, 30, 40 years, when this land is no longer there and our population base has changed, our environmental conditions have changed. What will we do under those circumstances? We're not here temporarily. We're not here just to exploit the resources for a while and then move on to the moon or some other place. It's a place that we need to carefully plan for, use, enhance, and leave something for our children to enjoy and further develop based on what we have done.

So, Mr. Speaker, at this stage I, certainly, support the principles underlying this bill and hope the House will do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to address Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act. This bill attempts to deal with a very timely issue, but fortunately land planning in Alberta is already being thoroughly addressed in many ways. The Member for Calgary-Currie calls for the enhancement of municipal development intermunicipal co-operation, and this bill aims to achieve that through new planning and co-ordination requirements. As I will explain, this act is very simplistic when it's compared to the steps that the Alberta government has taken and continues to take to co-ordinate land use in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as our province's population is increasing, more infrastructure facilities and parks are needed. In the last 25 years our population has grown almost 50 per cent. New communities are being formed across Alberta at an incredible rate. Economic development is also unprecedented in Alberta. Over the last 10 years our economy has grown at an average rate of 4.3 per cent a year.

Mr. Rodney: How much is that?

Ms DeLong: 4.3 per cent a year.

More land is required to accommodate the industrial and residential growth that is occurring, and it's important that these needs are met in a co-ordinated and co-operative fashion. At a time of growth, planning activity is of the utmost importance. Almost every industrial sector requires an increasing amount of land while our increasing citizenry populates more areas across the province. Agriculture, forestry, parks, tourism, wildlife, and watersheds must be minded. Growth has taken competition over land use to new heights. These development plans can naturally co-exist, but sometimes land uses are conflicting. Different groups want access to the same area, and sometimes there is a need to exercise caution when . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, but the time consideration for this item of business has concluded.

Skilled Worker Immigration Program

509. Mr. Agnihotri moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately enter into negotiations with the federal government to expand the provincial nominee program into a reliable and permanent source of skilled labour for Alberta, thereby reducing the demand for temporary foreign workers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this motion was originally tabled, there was no movement on an immigration deal, so we are going to amend this motion later on.

The provincial nominee program is a core strategy for ensuring that Alberta has enough workers 10, 20, 30 years down the road. We cannot afford to be unprepared again. If we are inviting workers to this province because we have a legitimate and desperate need for them, sending them back home in two or three years is not going to alleviate that need in the long run. Immigration has to be part of the solution. The temporary foreign worker program is not enough.

This province does not just have a skilled labour shortage; it has a worker shortage in general. The provincial nominee program must be extended further to include the lower skilled and semiskilled labour that small businesses rely on. If there's a long-term need for one type of worker, we have to address that with a long-term solution.

Temporary foreign workers are being exploited in Alberta, and government cannot do anything to stop it even though we have an Alberta trades act in place to protect them. Government has no control over the temporary foreign worker program, especially regulating overseas. They don't even know how many workers are in this province, much less where they are located. Add into consideration the heightened vulnerability of these workers, and you have a recipe for abuse.

The overall thrust of this motion is to strengthen the provincial nominee program. There are several motivating factors for this: sustainability, strength of the provincial program. There is really no valid reason for opposing the provincial nominee program in this province. The PNP is an important part of a long-term sustainable solution for addressing Alberta's labour shortage. By allowing skilled workers to permanently immigrate to Alberta, PNP can work in the long term to reduce further labour shortages.

This program also treats workers who would like to permanently immigrate to Canada more fairly than the temporary foreign worker. Under the provincial nominee program skilled and some semiskilled workers are able to enter Canada permanently. All other workers may only stay here temporarily.

It is also important to recognize that we do not only have a skilled labour shortage; we have a people shortage in general. This will not be going away any time soon. Expanding the PNP to include more types of workers can address long-term labour shortages across many industry sectors which are badly in need of people.

The provincial nominee program also allows Alberta more flexibility in determining what types of immigrants are best suited for this province. For example, according to the Alberta director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, 91 per cent of small businesses say that they need immigrants in the low-skilled or medium-skilled categories – that is, jobs that require high school, on the job, or some college or apprenticeship training – yet the permanent immigration system brings in only 25 per cent immigration in this category. While only 7 per cent of small business say that they need workers in the professional category, jobs that require a university degree, 65 per cent of permanent immigrants are in that category. We need to strengthen our commitment to the provincial nominee program.

By calling for the expansion of the PNP, this motion also recognizes the need to strengthen the program and address existing weaknesses. Stakeholders like the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers have pointed to the weaknesses of immigrant settlement services in the province. Alberta has one of the lowest immigrant retention rates in the country. It's not just a matter of bringing immigrants here; we also need to keep them here.

The website for the provincial nominee program and the temporary foreign worker program is only in English. I think it should be in some other languages, too, to attract foreigners to Alberta.

An expanded PNP would do more for small businesses. Allowing more semi- and lower skilled workers would help small businesses. Making the program easier would also increase the participation of small businesses in the program.

The temporary foreign worker program has many flaws. This program has an unsustainable solution to the long-term labour shortage in this province. By definition, these people are temporary. They are here, and they are gone. Expansion of immigration is the best long-term solution we have. The temporary foreign worker is not immigration. Many stakeholders have indicated to us that they think businesses misuse the temporary foreign worker as a way to cut costs and undermine unions. We have heard many stories about the temporary foreign worker program by both employers and brokers.

Current weaknesses of the provincial nominee program. The difficulty with the provincial nominee program is that it's not user friendly for the small- to medium-sized businesses that require unskilled or semiskilled labour. Moreover, businesses with the hard-to-fill positions and no local labour market to accept the positions do not have the resources to recruit nationally or internationally. The nature of the program discourages industry from bringing in foreign workers for those which are in high demand, such as the construction industry, retail, and agriculture, to name but a few. The result is that many industries have a hard time filling the positions in the short term and long term. Unfortunately, with the PNP there is often a large responsibility upon small businesses that have less than 10 employees and only need to recruit one immigrant worker. Furthermore, it's not always possible to fast-track the immigrants under the provincial nominee program.

The key to ensuring Canada's economic growth involves an efficient and accessible provincial nominee program. It's recognized that as the Canadian population ages, over the next five, 10 years immigration will be required in every corner of the country to help ensure that our economy remains vibrant and strong. The provincial nominee program is a good example of using immigration to address the current and growing labour shortages in our province. The labour shortage in Alberta is already critical and getting worse. We need aggressive action to ensure that highly skilled workers are entering Alberta and staying here. Albertans want sustainable solutions, not short-term ones. The labour shortage is a long-term problem, and we need long-term solutions to solve it. Expanding the scope and strengthening the effectiveness of the provincial nominee program is an important part of finding a long-term solution to Alberta's labour shortage.

This measure should be coupled with an emphasis on the training of Albertans who want to become skilled tradespeople. Mr. Speaker, we should provide better training opportunities and improve assistance for Albertans and Canadians first and then foreigners.

Let us adopt this motion, expand the provincial nominee program further, and thereby reduce reliance on the temporary foreign workers. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since we recognize that the government has entered into an agreement with the federal government on improving the provincial nominee program, we want to change the motion to reflect that. I propose an amendment to this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll give the pages a moment for distribution to the members.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I believe you can continue on the amendment.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Motion 509 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out "immediately enter into negotiations" and substituting "continue negotiating" and (b) by striking out "reducing the demand" and substituting "further reducing the demand." The amended motion would read as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue negotiating with the federal government to expand the provincial nominee program into a reliable and permanent source of skilled labour for Alberta, thereby further reducing the demand for temporary foreign workers.

Mr. Speaker, I think this amendment acknowledges the good work that the government has already done in negotiating with the federal government. There's a lot of progress that has been made. We're a bit behind, because provinces like Manitoba seem to be way ahead of us in managing to draw permanent immigrant people to their province. Still, we acknowledge the work that has been done. It's a question of continuing to negotiate to improve this provincial nominee program, which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has so well described, and then changing the last part to further reduce the demand for temporary foreign workers.

I could speak at length about the motion, but I would rather come back and speak about the motion as amended later. I'm not allowed to? This is the only time I get to speak?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Dr. B. Miller: But this is on the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: If you sit down now, your time is deemed to be given up.

Dr. B. Miller: Okay. The rules, I thought, were that you could speak to an amendment, and then later, after the motion is amended, you could speak again on the motion as amended. But I will take the Speaker's rule as the rule.

Well, then, let me just say a few words about it. In my questions to the minister in this House I've been very critical of the temporary foreign worker program because I think that it is fraught with all kinds of problems. Even an organization such as the Petroleum Human Resources Council of Canada has said, in advice to employers, that such a program is not without risk. "If it is not done properly, hiring temporary foreign workers can create its own set of problems and challenges." They're suggesting to employers that they have to count the costs. They may think that they're moving ahead by supplying needed labour by hiring temporary foreign workers, but they have to consider the costs. This advice from the Petroleum Human Resources Council of Canada says that the costs include recruiting costs, government fees to pay for immigration documents, passports, medical exams, and, of course, relocation costs, paying for trips for foreign workers to Canada and back home, also accommodation costs, and all kinds of other costs that they have to take into consideration.

It's obvious that some employers are not prepared to pay these costs and that, because there seems to be inadequate oversight, there are some cases of abuse. We have one example of a foreign worker who came to Canada from Mexico to work on a farm in southern Alberta. The employer did not cover his medical expenses, did not provide adequate accommodation. That worker actually came and appealed to us here in the Legislature and has since returned to Mexico. There is more and more evidence among temporary foreign workers of isolation, discrimination, fear, exploitation, and limited access to health services and social services.

It's much, much better to focus on permanent immigration when we can, through a provincial nominee program that's effective, identify the occupations that we need to fill and bring people with their families to Alberta as permanent residents. That is always the better way. I mean, if we look at it historically, we brought Chinese workers here to Alberta at the end of the 19th century to work on the railroads. That was not a particularly good example of what should be done. There was much suffering and many deaths, and there's the matter of the Chinese head tax. Mr. Speaker, I think we have to be careful and move forward in a better way.

I'm always in fear through the temporary foreign worker program that we're actually creating a kind of underclass of workers, guest workers who are here without the same rights as Canadians. They work here for a while, and they go back. They work longer, get paid less, live worse, and then they leave. Many temporary foreign workers come to fill jobs that no one else seems to want, and we create thereby an underclass of workers.

It's much better to put all of our focus into permanent immigration, something that's sustainable over the long run, not just a solution for the moment. That has been the policy on this side of the House, that the foreign temporary worker program is an unsustainable solution to the long-term labour shortage of this province. An expansion of immigration is the best long-term solution we have.

Those are my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I hope that this amendment is satisfactory to all members of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Others on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment to the motion.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In speaking to the amendment, I'd like to first thank the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for bringing forward Motion 509, to which the mover of the amendment, my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, responded. I don't want to cover a whole lot of territory that's already been referred to, but what it does, for potentially a change in pace and place, is recognize the wisdom of the government. Initially, when this motion was designed, we were concerned that the program would not be extended and would not serve as the sort of secondary source – I know that it sounds funny to say primary secondary source. Our primary source of employment has to be within Alberta, within Canada, but this recognizes the importance of a predictable and sustainable workforce.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora referred to the history of the head tax and the fact that temporary foreign workers at that point and temporary foreign workers today, you know, over 140 years later, are facing the same type of discrimination in the sense that they are not allowed to bring their family members with them. Therefore, they're in a foreign country without the family support and with a sense of isolation. We have seen the abuse that has happened to temporary foreign workers who have basically been preyed upon by unscrupulous travel agents or business promoters, and then they're left here to make their own way back if they can escape these conditions.

There is no doubt that our first commitment should be to providing the best employment for Alberta-born individuals. The most rapidly growing population in Alberta is our First Nations population, so we want to make sure that they have the training and the support possible. What we have noticed in general, except for little birth rate bubbles that are, for example, currently happening in Calgary, is that we don't have the home-born population to sustain and provide predictability into the future.

I have had first-hand experience, as I'm sure other members who have been in teaching have had, with English as a second language immigrants. When they have the stability of their family and the supports of their ethnic communities, they tend to thrive. The beauty of the immigrant community is that they have a built-in support system that enables the individuals who are seeking Canadian citizenship to have the language support, the cultural support, the support that is necessary to see them become Canadian citizens. The way that Canada and in this case Alberta benefits is the fact that we have the sustainable, educated individuals that take on the highly skilled jobs, and we also have a variety of people who for occupational reasons are able to fill other areas that are more of a menial or a manual area. But regardless of whether it's importing a surgeon or importing a person to, you know, serve coffee, Alberta benefits.

Again, what the amendment to Motion 509 brings forward is: government, you're doing a good job; government, please continue to do that good job and consider the permanency and the sustainability and the predictability of having a workforce that not only lives in Alberta for the long term but has the rights of Canadian citizenship to promote and protect.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to briefly address the amendment that's at hand. I think that as the member that made the amendment indicated, it is an amendment that reflects the fact that there has been some action taken on this motion perhaps since it was originally put onto the Order Paper and that the amendment really does truly reflect a little bit more, in fact virtually everything more, of what is in fact happening at this point in time. My suggestion would be that members may want to vote and accept this amendment now if they so choose, and then we could revert to debating the amended motion that more clearly reflects the intent.

The Deputy Speaker: Ready for the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to join in debate on this Motion 509 to expand the provincial nominee program in an effort to reduce the demand for temporary foreign workers, and I would like to commend the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for putting forth this motion before the Assembly today. I certainly appreciate that the hon. member has chosen to support our government's initiative. Alberta's unprecedented economic growth has increased the demand for skilled workers, and our government is developing a made-in-Alberta immigration strategy which will help businesses to alleviate their labour pressures. Part of the strategy focuses on assisting businesses to manage their labour shortages by effectively utilizing Alberta's provincial nominee program. The skilled worker immigration program is employer driven. It expedites permanent resident applications and allows a provincial or territorial government, for that matter, to nominate a person for an immigrant visa on the grounds that the individual's labour market skills are particularly in demand in that province or territory.

Now, Alberta is the fourth-largest immigrant-receiving province, approximately 7.4 per cent of immigrants to Canada in 2005. Preliminary data indicates that Alberta received over 20,000 immigrants in 2006, exactly 20,561, compared to 19,403 in 2005 and 16,473 in 2004. The Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry has received another $9 million, an increase in funding for immigration, bringing the total budget to $68 million in 2007-2008. A portion of the funding will help to expand the number of nominees under the provincial nominee program to 2,500 nominations in 2007-2008, up again to 5,000 in 2008-2009, and 8,000 in 2009-2010.

In addition to the funding increases our government successfully negotiated an agreement, as we all know, with the federal government for Canada/Alberta co-operation on immigration, an agreement that removed the limit on the number of immigrants that the province can nominate for permanent residence in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I was on hand for that announcement, and I can tell you that it was very, very well received. I'd like to note that the changes to Alberta's provincial nominee program will continue indefinitely, allowing the program an opportunity to optimize its potential.

Some members are aware that Manitoba has a similar provincial nominee program, and it provides an excellent example of how effective this type of strategy can be when it is used to its full capacity. Manitoba was the first province with a provincial nominee program, and its program has been significant and very successful. Since 1998 economic immigration rose 311 per cent in Manitoba in contrast to an increase of only 56 per cent for the rest of the country. In 2005 Manitoba welcomed 4,617 immigrants through the provincial nominee program, and in 2006 the province very narrowly met its goal of attracting 10,000 immigrants of whom 6,600 were provincial nominees.

Our province will continue to address the labour shortage by facilitating several initiatives that will assist employers to adequately staff their businesses. The Alberta government will continue to support employers who use the federal temporary foreign worker program and the federal skilled worker immigrant program as a means for addressing labour demands. In 2006 the federal government reviewed applications for about 20,000 positions and issued an estimated 10,000 temporary foreign work permits for Alberta. For 2007 it expects to review applications for 40,000 positions.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's provincial nominee program is an excellent mechanism for employers to recruit competent, skilled, and knowledgeable employees to immigrate to Alberta. Our government has made a commitment to the businesses of this province to support them in finding qualified personnel in Alberta, and we're also improving our current immigration programs, which will assist businesses in reducing staffing shortages. I'd urge members of the Assembly to support our government's current immigration strategy, and I again want to thank the hon. member for supporting the government of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'm pleased to be able to rise today and join in the debate on amended Motion 509, regarding the continued expansion of Alberta's provincial nominee program. I do appreciate the hon. member's interest in a cause that has long been a high priority for this government.

Mr. Speaker, every year over 90,000 foreign workers enter Canada temporarily to work in order to help Canadian employers address skill shortages. Although temporarily bringing in workers helps address labour shortages, Alberta also offers skilled workers fast-tracked, permanent residency opportunities. Immigration has accounted for over 15,000 individuals coming to live and work in our province last year alone.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta provincial nominee program is an employer-driven, skilled worker immigration program that is offered by the government of Alberta in association with Citizenship and Immigration Canada to facilitate permanent residency for skilled immigrants. The provincial nominee program is a commendable plan that considers skilled and educated workers in a variety of occupational descriptions relative to their potential role in Alberta's workforce. Given our vibrant economy there is great potential for both this province and individual immigrants and their families to benefit from the provincial nominee program. Thirty-five per cent of immigrants over the age of 20 currently coming into this province have a bachelor's degree. There is no denying that there is great potential in utilizing those resources in our economy when the opportunity presents itself.

Unfortunately, there seems to be some confusion in the wording of this motion. It is unclear whether this motion encourages the government to broaden the categories associated with the provincial nominee program or to expand the number of positions available. Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear to hon. members that the provincial nominee program is one of the preferred approaches to immigration in the province of Alberta, and we are committed to continuing to examine all opportunities.

As Alberta's labour force develops both in quantity and variety of positions available, it will be important to source employees from outside of Canada. This government is developing a made-in-Alberta immigration strategy that ensures that there are mutual benefits for all parties involved. This includes (a) continuing to support the provincial nominee program by expanding the spaces available from 2,500 this year to 8,000 per year by 2009-10, (b) developing a new immigration agreement with the federal government, (c) increasing settlement services, (d) improving recruitment and attraction initiatives, and finally, supporting the strategy with an additional $9 million as per Budget 2007. While the program has always facilitated permanent residency for immigrants in occupations requiring postsecondary education such as physicians, nurses, educators, and tradespeople, the made-in-Alberta thrust of the program will now also support jobs in manufacturing, tourism, and trucking.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, success in attracting, placing, and supporting new immigrants in Alberta requires balancing between the social, cultural, and economic needs of immigrants. Alberta will continue to attract potential immigrants through programs such as the provincial nominee program. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for supporting the government of Alberta in seeking to maximize the benefits associated with the provincial nominee program, thus I will support this motion on behalf of the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. I, too, want to congratulate my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie for bringing this motion forward, a motion that urges government to continue negotiating with the federal government to expand the provincial nominee program and end reliance on the temporary foreign worker program. I think that reducing the demand for temporary foreign workers is also an issue that needs to be addressed, and when we look at the Alberta provincial nominee program, I understand that it's designed to meet the needs of Alberta employers who are unable to fill skilled labour positions with Canadian citizens or permanent residents of Canada.

In the latest developments in May 2007 the agreement for Canada/Alberta co-operation on immigration is that Alberta will be able to nominate more immigrants possessing skills needed in the province for quicker processing by the federal government, and that range of occupations eligible for nomination has been expanded. Any limit on the number of immigrants brought to the province by the nominee program has been lifted, and this year alone the government has set a target of 2,500 nominees. This target grows to 8,000 nominees by 2009-10. This number would ensure that Alberta receives the same proportion of all immigration to Canada, 10 per cent, as its proportion of the total Canadian population, which is 10 per cent.

Another new focus will be on applications from international student graduates who are being offered permanent full-time employment from Alberta companies. As we are looking at the current situation, there are 23,000 foreign temporary workers in the province. The foreign worker program allows temporary foreign workers to enter Canada if employers can demonstrate that they cannot find Canadian workers to fill job openings. Employers must be able to prove that they have made every effort to find and train willing and available workers in Alberta and Canada. Temporary foreign workers generally require far less labour skills or experience than immigrants under the provincial nominee program. Unskilled workers are only able to come to Alberta through the temporary foreign worker program.

Over a six-year span, from 2000 to 2006, the number of foreign workers has grown by 260 per cent, which means it's a program that we need to look at carefully. I appreciate the efforts with this motion because the overall thrust of this motion is to strengthen the provincial nominee program at the expense of the temporary foreign worker program.

There are several motivating factors for this. There really is no valid reason for opposing the provincial nominee program in this province. The provincial nominee program is an important part of a long-term, sustainable solution for addressing Alberta's labour shortage. By allowing skilled workers to permanently immigrate to Alberta, the provincial nominee program can work in the long term to reduce future labour shortages.

This program also treats workers who would like to permanently immigrate to Canada more fairly than under the temporary foreign worker program. Under the provincial nominee program skilled and some semiskilled workers are able to enter Canada permanently. All other workers may only stay here temporarily.

I think the need to strengthen our commitment to the provincial nominee program is evident because we recognize that there are existing weaknesses. Stakeholders like the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers have pointed to the weakness of the immigrant settlement services in this province. Alberta has one of the lowest immigration retention rates in the country. It's not just a matter of bringing immigrants here; we also need to keep them here.

A Canadian Chamber of Commerce brief recently provided an excellent overview of the potential of an expanded provincial nominee program for small business. Allowing more semiskilled and lower skilled workers would help small businesses find the labour that they need, and making the program easier to use for small business would also, obviously, increase the participation of small businesses in the program. Expanding the scope and strengthening the effectiveness of the provincial nominee program is an important part of finding a long-term solution to Alberta's labour shortage.

This measure should be coupled with an emphasis on training Albertans who want to become skilled tradespeople. Foreign temporary workers are pouring into this province while we have Albertans lining up overnight to fight for a spot at NAIT. We need to look at a long-term solution here. Again, the Edmonton Mennonite centre suggests that the immigration policy needs to address longer terms than five years because five-year quick fixes will lead to more problems.

We need a clearer provincial policy about temporary foreign workers and a general discouragement of employers to use this alternative rather than employing landed immigrants in this province. The Alberta Federation of Labour, AFL, statement in May 2006 states that the concern does not lie with immigration or individual newcomers to Canada. Instead, we are concerned about the way our federal and provincial governments have designed and how they operate . . . the Foreign Temporary Worker program.

Again, the real solution to all of this is to improve our post-secondary and apprenticeship systems to make sure that Canadians are properly trained for the jobs we will need in the future.

However, this motion addresses the need right now, and I'm happy to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Motion 509. It proposes the expansion of the provincial nominee program. This debate has become moot in my mind because our hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry recently announced an agreement with Canada about our co-operation on immigration. It is great news for Alberta, and I'm glad to have the opportunity to speak about the agreement.

One of the critical elements of the agreement is a permanent provincial nominee program for Alberta. Under this arrangement there is no cap on the number of people Alberta can nominate in any given year. The provincial nominee program allows Alberta to nominate potential immigrants to the federal government. This allows the province to select people to fill positions that are in demand. Furthermore, individuals nominated under the program are expected to be permanent residents. As such, it can expedite the permanent residency process, which is of benefit when there is a labour shortage.

To facilitate this new arrangement, funding was available in Budget 2007 to increase Alberta's nominations to 2,500 this year. Funding will increase to support 8,000 nominations in 2009-2010. This funding is part of a total $68 million in support for immigration in Budget 2007. This is a significant amount and represents a 15 per cent increase over the last fiscal year. Both the new immigration arrangement and additional provincial nominee program funding are supporting this government's commitment to attracting newcomers to Alberta.

There is no doubt there is a need for more people to come to Alberta. Over the next 10 years Alberta may have a shortage of up to 100,000 workers. Maintaining a steady supply of skilled labour is critical to sustaining economic development over the long term. Our prosperity is linked to the availability of labour, and businesses are loud and clear on the need for more workers.

Increasing immigration in Alberta is a priority of the hon. Premier and has led to the signing of the immigration agreement with the federal government. This agreement will improve Alberta's ability to attract immigrants to Alberta and assist them in settling in this province. It is a landmark agreement, and our Premier has said that this deal represents an increase in autonomy like Alberta's securing ownership of its natural resources in the 1930s.

The new immigration agreement also provides for co-operation on promotion and recruitment abilities abroad. It is critical for Alberta to attract the best and most qualified nominees to this province from wherever they may be in the world. Further, the agreement will establish a pilot program to facilitate the entry of health professionals wanting to come to Alberta. There is also a commitment from the federal government for ongoing, predictable, and, perhaps most importantly, equitable settlement funding for this province.

Mr. Speaker, before I close, I want to note a critical flaw in Motion 509, in that it links the provincial nominee program and the temporary foreign worker program. Their goals and objectives are unrelated. The temporary foreign worker program acts as a stopgap solution if no workers are available or able to be trained in the Canadian job market. The provincial nominee program is a permanent program which facilitates permanent residencies.

Mr. Speaker, I'm thankful that the hon. member gave me the opportunity to set the record straight on the government record on immigration. Looking at our new immigration agreement with the federal government and the expansion of the provincial nominee program, our government is on the right track. I support the continued efforts of the government in addressing the needs of a dynamic labour force.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others who wish to participate?

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Motion 509, which urges the government to expand the provincial nominee program into a reliable, permanent source of skilled labour for Alberta, thereby reducing the demand for temporary foreign workers. Like another hon. member who already spoke on the subject matter, these provincial nominee programs are an excellent tool to help in the economic development of Alberta. We have been doing it in the last, as far as I know, probably two or three years now. The government of Alberta is working on training our internal Albertan workforce in trades and also recently signed an agreement with the federal government to expedite the entry of foreign workers into Alberta. We also learned that the government of Alberta and the government of British Columbia have an agreement in terms of workforce and skills and all the other aspects of agreement on that. This has been going on and doing very well.

I had the privilege of attending the signing of the agreement between the Alberta government and the federal government on this immigration agreement. I was there and very pleased to see our Premier and Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry work with their federal counterparts in this matter.

Now there are two points in my interest in supporting this motion. One is: in my area there is a big industrial park and a lot of manufacturing companies, and they export to the world our products and earn wealth for Alberta. They need people. They need production workers. They need assembly workers, not just highly skilled tradespeople but also people who just work on the production line. In this kind of direction I support the movement in this provincial nominee program, but I also encourage looking beyond the provincial nominee in the aspect of getting people here to do the assembly production work.

Many Alberta unions support immigration and feel that immigration is a key to building a strong and diverse society and are very proud that many of their members are new immigrants. They advocate for a compassionate immigration policy that addresses both the concerns of immigrants and the needs of the economy by allowing for a broader range of skilled workers to enter the country, to enter our province.

Now, the temporary foreign worker program, as it says, is temporary. In fact, people are allowed to get into the country with visa work permits. That is run by our federal government, and they are the ones who screen the permits to get into the country. Once people get into the country – let's say they come to Alberta – we have to have some programs that help those people to work, and we have employment standards that we should apply to all the people who come from any part of the world to come here to work. The provincial nominee program allows for workers to come to Alberta and remain here permanently if they desire. When the employee's application has been approved, they receive expedited processing, but it takes six to 12 months, and I wish that the federal government and the province worked together and reduced that time so that employers in my constituency can deal with that in an efficient manner.

I just want to point out that this is a great program. It's supported federally, by the province, the employers. Some of the employees have relatives overseas, and they know their skills, so the companies already has some connection here. I have talked to some companies in my area, and they'd love to see this program extended. I was very pleased to learn at the ceremony of the agreement between Canada and Alberta that the limit on the number of nominees has been lifted. This is a great initiative.

Going back to this motion, I commend the member for having presented this motion and bringing up this high-profile issue. With that, I urge everybody in this Assembly to support this made-in-Alberta solution. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others who wish to participate?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to speak very briefly on Motion 509, put before the House by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I rise to speak in support of the amended motion. Knowing what we know about the problems attendant upon temporary foreign workers who have been brought into this province – the kind of shabby treatment that they have received, the kinds of risks that they face, the kinds of ordinary rights of the workplace that they're deprived of – we know that there's need for a more rational, more just, more stable, more acceptable policy to address the needs of the labour force in Alberta. Someone listening from the outside, one who also understands the talk about labour shortages in this province and the need to have more people out there in the labour market, would probably see the whole debate as a no-brainer. This is a sane and decent and appropriate way of addressing the very obvious need of having more people available to work in the Alberta economy. Therefore, I'm not going to engage in detailed defence or support of the motion. I think it makes sense to me that the province needs to move in this direction.

I just want to make one observation, Mr. Speaker. As we call for a more rational, more updated, more modernized nominee program to bring in more workers who are, in fact, immigrants, when people come here as landed immigrants, they automatically are entitled to certain rights and protections under our Constitution, under our provincial and federal laws. That's why it makes sense to bolster our labour force numbers through what I call this socially just and humane way of bringing in people if you need more workers in the labour market and in the workplace.

One cautionary note here, Mr. Speaker. I meet with my constituents on Fridays, and over the last two weeks, two successive Fridays, I had the opportunity to meet with one foreign medical graduate, a foreign-trained doctor. She's having enormous difficulty, in spite of the fact that she has passed all the exams that she's required to pass, finding a placement. We are short of doctors in this province, yet she's unable to find a placement within our health care system. We proclaim that we are short of appropriately trained medical personnel. We are desperately looking for them, yet we have people here, and they don't get the help and the support that they need in order for them to become part of the health care labour force.

The next week I met an engineer, a foreign-trained mechanical engineer, who was smart enough and bright enough or deemed so by the University of Alberta to be admitted to a master's program in the field of mechanical engineering. He passed with flying colours and has been struggling since his graduation two years ago to find a job. We are told that we're short of engineers and technologists and technicians and plumbers and others, yet we have people in Alberta who are not getting the positions which, ostensibly, are available all over the place.

So that's a caution that as we try to address the issue of shortage of labour by way of updating and upgrading our nominee program in co-operation with the federal government, we must also pay equal attention to those who are already here and are having difficulty finding an appropriate place in our labour market, in our workplaces in spite of the fact that they have credentials and work experience which should qualify them easily to find these jobs.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, I want to again say that so long as we have these temporary foreign workers in our midst, they deserve absolutely the same protection, the same rights, the same opportunities as Albertans who are part of the labour force.

All these three issues are interlinked, and in this debate they should be seen as integral, complex, not just individual, isolated issues. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others that wish to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Motion 509 urges the government to expand the provincial nominee program into a reliable and permanent source of skilled labour for Alberta. Alberta's employers can attest to how important it is to be able to recruit and retain skilled workers. Our current prosperity means that skilled workers are highly sought after, so employers need all the tools to find employees who meet their needs.

Employers who are seeking persons with work experience in management occupations, occupations usually requiring a university education, or occupations usually requiring a college education or apprenticeship training can benefit from Alberta's provincial nominee program. In Alberta health professionals, administrators, nurses, senior managers, teachers, and professors all have unemployment of 1.6 per cent or less. This program has helped employers bring in qualified staff from outside the country since its inception in 2002.

The proportion of immigrants arriving in Alberta with postsecondary education continues to rise. In 2006 about half of the immigrants to Alberta had a university degree, roughly 12 per cent arrived with a non-university diploma, and just under 5 per cent held a trade certificate. The majority of immigrants to Alberta in 2006 were of working age, with almost 70 per cent between the ages of 20 and 64.

The provincial nominee program expedites the immigration process for workers with sought-after skills. Employers can seek out workers who have the qualifications, work experience, and certification that they need. Employers benefit from the reduced immigration wait-times this program offers because it allows them to have skilled workers on the job sooner. Because the provincial nominee program helps Alberta's employers fill permanent positions with immigrants who qualify for permanent resident status, those employers can meet their labour needs on a long-term basis.

About 550 people came to Alberta through the program in 2005-06, and another 650 made Alberta their home this past year. Due to the obvious advantages of the provincial nominee program the Alberta government has already committed to expanding it in coming years. In '07-08 the number of nominees will grow to 2,500, and in '09-10 this number will grow to 8,000. The government's made-in-Alberta immigration strategy is improving initiatives like the provincial nominee program so that employers in Alberta will be able to find the skilled labour they need when they need it. Welcoming new immigrants to our province will help ensure that Alberta's prosperity continues.

One recent improvement to the provincial nominee program will have a clear benefit to all Albertans. The recent signing of the agreement for Canada/Alberta co-operation on immigration includes a pilot project to speed the processing of health care professionals entering Alberta. This process will identify health care professionals who have already applied for entry into Canada and who intend to live in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close debate on Motion 509.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank all the members who participated in debate on Motion 509. During the debate we heard so many good points. Some members mentioned a few bad points on the temporary foreign workers such as the immigrants who come here as temporary foreign workers are facing some serious problems like medical facilities, accommodation problems, and such. Most of the members mentioned the problem with abuse in the system, especially from both sides, employers and the brokers.

I think most of us have heard from constituents that this temporary foreign worker program is not immigration. I think the majority of the people are in favour of immigration. We should increase the nominations in the provincial nominee program rather than temporary foreign workers. That's the reason we sponsored this motion. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, when this motion was tabled, there was no movement in the immigration deal. Now we have a deal already in place. When the new immigration agreement was announced last month, we were encouraged, but we felt that it didn't go that far. We want to see a long-term, sustainable plan, like a 10-, 20-, 30-year plan, not what we have in the new deal, just for only five years.

I request the minister to consider that one because Alberta is booming. We are fortunate. If we have a long-term plan, a sustainable plan, it will be good for all of us. The new deal does not eliminate this province's reliance on temporary foreign workers as a long-term solution. We are looking for a long-term solution. The new deal, Mr. Speaker, promises negotiation to speed up the process. The new deal may have a more provincial say in immigration, which is good, but I want to see this program where we can lead the nation. Other provinces had very similar programs a long time ago. Manitoba had this provincial nominee program about 11 years ago, and some six or seven other provinces had a very similar program about six or seven years before. Although we are a little late, we are never too late. I think I appreciate the minister who initiated this provincial nominee program recently.

To make the provincial nominee program the best, we must have the provision for ending our dependency on the temporary foreign workers. I request all the members to support this motion. Thank you very much.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 509 as amended carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out that it's 6 o'clock and move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

8:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/04

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order.

Bill 33 Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start out this discussion maybe with a brief introduction of some friends of mine. With us in the members' gallery are a number of guests. First of all, I'd like to introduce His Worship Ron Dyck, mayor of Ferintosh. With him is Marvin Jassman, councillor of the village of Ferintosh; also His Worship Bob Cammidge, mayor of Bashaw; Al Radke, the chief administrative officer of the town of Bashaw; Bill Knight, who is the chairman of the highway 12/21 water commission; and John Van Doesburg, the administrator of the highway 12/21 water commission. So I'd like to ask you all to welcome these people.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, while we are in committee, you are allowed to move around but not stand around. So please take a seat beside whomever you want to chat with. Thank you.

The hon. member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much. As you can see tonight, this is a very exciting day for the town of Bashaw and for the village of Ferintosh as these people have all come down to watch this discussion and to support us as a government in the passage of Bill 33.

The issue of water is always interesting. We take water for granted until the well runs dry, and then you see how valuable water is. That's when people have to get together and make sure that we can get water to every needy person in the province. This is also very interesting today that we have these two towns working very closely together: Bashaw sharing water with the village of Ferintosh. We talked this afternoon for some time about intermunicipal cooperation, and this is a prime example of what can actually happen when municipalities get together and solve problems together.

Before I go any further, I would like to thank all hon. members that have spoken in support of Bill 33. Opposition members have voiced some concerns, and what I want to do is answer some of the questions that have come up in discussion in second reading. Hopefully, I can address some of the concerns that were expressed during second reading.

First, let's be very clear about what this bill is about. It's just about transferring water from the same . . .

An Hon. Member: Treated water.

Mr. Prins: It's treated water. Exactly. It's treated water coming from one town to another. It's aquifer water. It's not surface water or river water. It's water from the same geological formation going from one town to another. So that means there's very little risk of environmental impact. This was proven through the scientific studies that were done by the village of Ferintosh, studies that are required any time there's an interbasin transfer proposed.

You may ask: if there's no risk, why is a special act of the Legislature permitting the interbasin transfer necessary? Technically, it's because these two municipalities are in two different river basins. Even though this transfer is about groundwater and not river water, according to the Water Act they need special approval from the Legislature. The town of Ferintosh lies in the Battle River water basin and the town of Bashaw in the Red Deer River basin, so the water would have to be transported from one basin to another, and that's why we're here talking about it.

There was some concern expressed by the members opposite with respect to the amount of information that we have about groundwater. Mr. Chairman, I can tell you that currently we have a great deal of information available, but we're always adding to this database. We have a huge amount of information about the water in Alberta. Let me remind all members of this Assembly and particularly those opposite that this government has spent more than $8 million in the past five years on groundwater monitoring, scientific research, and data management programs. In addition, another $12 million in new funding is being committed for groundwater inventory work over the next three years, so $12 million more to find out what we have as far as groundwater goes. This includes initiatives to assess coal-bed methane and groundwater impacts, conducting a provincial groundwater risk assessment, and completing a base of groundwater mapping, evaluating and upgrading groundwater monitoring and data.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was wondering if this water was to be used for racetracks or oil recovery, and the answer is simply no. Ferintosh needs this water for its citizens, and you can see that just by the members of Ferintosh and Bashaw and people from that area that are here tonight.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona suggested that new licences are prohibited in this area. This is also not true. It's incorrect. There's a prohibition on new surface water licences for the Bow and Oldman river basins. This happens to be in the Red Deer basin. There is no restriction. Particularly on groundwater, there's never been a restriction. The Red Deer River is not included in the ban of the Oldman and Bow rivers.

Someone else suggested that this was a hidden agenda to provide water to other areas and sidestep environmental concerns. This also is not true. This water will be strictly used for residential purposes. It's not for industrial, agricultural, or oil field use, and it's not for irrigation or confined feeding operations. So these concerns have all been allayed.

There was also some concern about the frequency at which these interbasin transfers are being requested, and let me assure him and all members of this Assembly that these are unusual requests that are not taken lightly. In fact, this is only the third interbasin transfer that this Assembly has seen for regional water systems in the past number of years.

The hon. member was also interested in how much water was being transferred. There was a concern that there was too much water. Let me tell you that the town of Bashaw has a licensed capacity of 236,000 cubic metres of water per year, and of that amount they only use 125,000 cubic metres. Ferintosh is using currently about 15,000 cubic metres, which is partially being trucked in, so they won't be impacting Bashaw very much at all. This is a very small amount of water. The act calls for 55,800 cubic metres per year, and the question was asked: why do they need that much water if they're only using 15,000? This is a 25-year projection, Mr. Chairman, based on 3 and a half per cent population growth, so this 55,800 should last for a long, long time. This means that this interbasin transfer if approved by this Assembly will meet the needs of Ferintosh probably for the next 25 years at least, or a quarter of a century.

So, Mr. Chairman, the town of Ferintosh and the members of the highway 12/21 commission have done everything required. They've done the scientific tests. They've done the studies. They've consulted with their communities. They need the water, and this transfer is the best option available to them. I would once again encourage all hon. members to support Bill 33.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to indicate that I will be supporting this bill, as my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View has already discussed with the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, and I will also add that I very much appreciate that discussion that you held and the reasoning that you provided at that time. It's based on that reasoning that I'm supporting it, and I'm very pleased that our guests from Ferintosh and Bashaw are here tonight.

Normally I would be opposed to interbasin transfers because in a number of circumstances they're interfering with the natural process. However, in this case, as the hon. member pointed out, this isn't the result of any fault of the citizens of Bashaw and overuse, too much industry, a pollution of existing systems, and so on. This is just nature's luck of the draw, and unfortunately nature is not always kind. So this transfer of treated water for people I see as necessary.

However, I do want to point out what Dr. Schindler has said for future developments in Alberta, and that is that very soon we should be looking at moving people to water instead of water to people. I would compare the circumstance that Dr. Schindler reiterated at this past weekend's Athabasca River conference, that my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Mountain View and the shadow minister of environment attended along with other notable researchers such as Andrew Nikiforuk. The point that was being made is that we have to treasure water and we have to treat it as a commodity, that we cannot count on it being replenished.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka talked about the $8 million that has gone into mapping at this point, and he also referred to the $12 million more that's going to be expended. I just want to point out that water is of inestimable value; therefore, while $8 million seems like a large amount and $12 million is that much more, in the larger scheme of things knowing where our water is, both the quantities and qualities of our ground and especially our underground aquifers, is absolutely essential for any type of planning that is to take place in this province. We debated this afternoon Bill 211 that called for greater planning and greater process.

Now, I have great concerns as does my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View. When we've attended meetings in Stettler, Trochu, Drayton Valley, Ma-Me-O Beach, Nanton, and Ponoka, we have seen hundreds of people turning out to meetings because of their concern about how groundwater is being used or abused. There is great concern in the community of Rosebud because of concerns over the potential fracking and movement, the unnatural movement, of coal-bed methane into the water systems there. So in agreeing to this particular bill and recognizing the emergent nature for these townspeople, I don't want to suggest that it's a carte blanche for future water considerations.

I am extremely concerned about the effect of clear-cutting in the watershed in the Bow and Elbow and the Bragg Creek, Ghost-Waiparous, Sibbald Flats areas. I don't think that this has been given sufficient thought. I am also very concerned about the potential EUB approval of exploration in the southeast slopes, where fracking could very much interfere with the town of Nanton's water supply as well as all the ranchers and individuals who live in that southeast slope area. The water table is a very fragile circumstance, and we need to take it into greater account.

With regard to other developments. If somebody should suggest that we have a water transfer for the development that's being proposed at Seebe, I'll give you a heads-up. We will be adamantly opposed to that as we are to further developments in areas of protected parks and places such as further developments to Waterton, Jasper, Banff, and Canmore. At some point the primacy of nature and the importance of not interfering with the water flows has to be taken into account.

To the government's credit there is a moratorium on the Oldman and the Bow, and that moratorium should prevent developments like Seebe from going further ahead. Something that Newfoundland has realized – and that's another moratorium – is the moratorium on cod fishing. There comes a point when the product is no longer there. You can no longer have your livelihood dependent on that product, and moratoriums are going to be something, as Alberta further develops, that are going to be absolutely necessary for protection.

At this weekend's Athabasca conference it was noted that the glacier that feeds the Athabasca is rapidly melting. It was noticed that the flow of the Athabasca River, especially during the winter months, is dangerously low for the amount of development that is currently occurring in the oil sands, and further development is putting the Athabasca River in danger. The members of the Fort McKay band have recounted the stories of two-headed fish, the fact that they can no longer eat the fish out of the river. Dr. John O'Connor has pointed out the carcinogenic problems associated with some of the water in the Athabasca. So no amount of money – $8 million, $12 million – will make up for a lost water resource. As the former Environment minister said, it's blue gold, but it has to be valued at a much higher standard than the gold standard.

Because of the immediate need for these people, knowing that it will not be used for anything but drinking water, washing, and day-to-day activities of life rather than industry or irrigation or other developments, I support this bill, and I support the need for aquifer mapping, for baseline testing, for the protection and conservation of water, our most important resource.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to finally speak on Bill 33, the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act. I think it's good for us to pause, to remind everyone in the Assembly of the importance of having to pass a bill to do these water interbasin transfers. You know, it's just such a sensitive issue. Considering the scarcity of water, it's absolutely incumbent upon us to debate and to analyze thoroughly any of these transfers of water. I think the gentlemen that are watching here this evening should certainly appreciate the tenacity of their MLA. I don't think I've been chased down so much in my life as I was with the MLA for Lacombe-Ponoka, asking me daily, sometimes hourly, about Bill 33 and would I support it. Certainly, upon great reflection and lots of study we do in fact support the bill.

The main issue, I guess, for me in defence of this enterprise of moving the water from the Battle River-Red Deer system, first of all, is that it's part of a regional water system. My experience and study of this throughout the province is that, you know, it's very important that we expand these regional water systems to provide drinking water for smaller towns because, as we see in Ferintosh and many communities around that area as well as other parts of Alberta, the water quality and volume is just simply insufficient for the population of towns. It's very expensive to truck the water, and oftentimes the quality is left wanting. So setting up these regional water systems, certainly, the New Democrats support wholeheartedly. But keep in mind that each time we do an interbasin transfer or the potential for an interbasin transfer, we study the effects of this very, very carefully.

Our researchers were looking at this whole issue very, very closely. I think one of my researchers even stopped by the fine, fine town of Ferintosh just to take a peek on the way home from somewhere else. We wouldn't consider denying the population a steady supply of clean drinking water. I think that that's very reasonable. We just want to make sure that we're not setting a precedent, which we're not, because every transfer does require legislation to actually have it passed.

So I'm happy to say that with some reservation but certainly with a lot of reflection our caucus supports this bill as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mittel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having listened to the debate through first reading and second reading on Bill 33, the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act, I feel compelled to enter my thoughts into the record.

I think I'd like to start with the whole idea of interbasin transfers. Interbasin transfers from the South Saskatchewan River basin to the North Saskatchewan River basin was a point that was made. Technically, these specifically are from subbasins to respective basins. Clearly, this is not, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View suggested, that we're setting ourselves up as a province to actually move more water from northern Alberta to southern Alberta. This water actually moves in the opposite direction.

Another point the hon. member made was that this policy and specifically this project would allow organisms which are foreign to one particular basin to be transported to the other and thereby pollute forever the streams and rivers and the water supply in the receiving basin. As I see this project, it is groundwater, well water, not surface water that is proposed to be transported to Ferintosh, the very same type of water that was identified and approved in one of the prior interbasin approvals in 2005. I might add that this, too, transported water from the South Saskatchewan to the North Saskatchewan basin. On top of this, regardless of whether it's surface water or well water, it's also treated water, which means filtering and chemical treating, such as chlorine, and perhaps even ultraviolet light treating. Even I know that organisms native to Alberta can't survive subjection to that.

Another point that was made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore and then also tonight by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was that perhaps it's time to stop growth in any community or area that is short of water, and the people should be moved to where the water is. Now, Mr. Chairman, it sounds like the point that's being made is that anyone who is short of water and, I've heard mention, especially in the south, should pick themselves up and move to where the water is, without any consideration of who is going to buy their present property, some of which has perhaps been owned for three or more generations. There wouldn't be water for the potential purchaser as well. This begs the question: how could they possibly actually acquire property where the water is if they perhaps were not paid for their existing property?

With regard to moving because of the lack of water I can only think of one group of people who did this, voluntarily I might add, if my history serves me correctly, and that was the Anasazi Indians of Arizona and New Mexico, who I believe moved because of the lack of water. But having the government urge moving or force moving, I can only think of two instances. One was the Bolsheviks in Russia in the 1890s and early 1900s, who urged the people to move from Ukraine or to be given a one-way ticket to Siberia. I know this because my grandfather moved to the United States and then to Canada because of this urging. Another example of government urging was the government of the Stalin regime, who moved people from one point of the USSR to Siberia. The consequences of moving were very dire.

I recognize that these last two moves that I mentioned were not because of the lack of water, but the point I'm trying to make is that this was the result of government intervention. This is exactly what the two hon. members said, move the people to where the water is, which would require government intervention in order to carry it out. It should be the job of our government and us as leaders to provide opportunities for rural development and rural sustainability. I think this is the common-sense way, not a socialist philosophy, which makes absolutely no sense.

I will be supporting this bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to take this opportunity to put on the record my support for this very important bill. This is critical that we allow this sort of thing to happen, but I do find it rather disturbing that we're even having to do this. I happen to have a little history on the Water Act from my days in environmental protection. The fact is that it was never the intent that we would have to pass legislation when it's treated water. It was never the intent. I know that it's in the regulations currently. But when you think about it, the hon. member that just spoke mentioned about the organisms. That was always the risk where you have interbasin transfer.

I find it unfortunate that we're having to do this, but it is critical. It is critical that we move the water to where the people are. I mean, to follow the notion that you'd move the people to the water, basically what that's saying, then, is that we'd have to move Airdrie down and put it into Calgary. Extending it to the extreme, that's exactly what they're saying. So I think that this is absolutely critical, and I want to congratulate the sponsor of the bill. It's really important that we do this.

Mr. Chase: Well, just to set the record straight tonight, I have previously been called a Communist, and that occurred when I spoke up for medicare provisions. It was at a meeting in my constituency that was held by Diane Ablonczy years ago. For standing up for universal public health care I was called a Communist, but I've never been compared to a Bolshevik or a Stalinist.

My belief is that if we manage the water resources properly, there will be room for growth, but when we end up with transfers going north when the south has sufficient and then heading back the other way when it isn't and when we interfere with nature, we're playing a dangerous game. So growth has to be sustainable, and without that sustainability limits have to be applied. Never was I suggesting that there be a mass forced movement of individuals from one place to another, but the reality is that when you no longer have the supply, you've got to go somewhere else.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to take this opportunity once again to thank all hon. members for speaking in favour of Bill 33 and supporting the transfer of this water. Members from Calgary-Varsity, Edmonton-Calder, Cypress-Medicine Hat, and Rocky Mountain House spoke tonight. I want to thank them for that. I want to thank my guests for coming down from Ferintosh and Bashaw and Lacombe county.

This is a very exciting day for Ferintosh, to be able to hear these kinds of comments. The people of Ferintosh can rest assured that there'll be no more rationing of water, that there'll be no more uncertainty about water in their village. They can look forward to construction of a pipeline as soon as possible when this is done and the funding is in place, and they can look forward to a quality and a quantity of water that will be needed to build and sustain normal growth in their beautiful village of Ferintosh.

I would once again ask all members to support this, and I would call for the question. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 33 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. My comments will be very brief.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Danyluk: Not quite that brief, but very close.

Mr. Chairman, there was a question that was asked – and I'm going to try to answer it the best way I can – that came from second reading of Bill 26. There have been a number of procedural challenges to the validity of the minister's guidelines since the late 1990s. Working on addressing these procedural issues came long before the Calgary lawsuit was commenced, and I would reiterate that these amendments are to deal with perceived procedural deficiency and are not intended to take away anyone's right to appeal the amount of their assessment. I want to reaffirm that Bill 26 does not affect the right to appeal an assessment that has been prepared correctly or where the legislation has been interpreted properly.

Mr. Chairman, I would also say that I don't think it would be appropriate for me to comment on the Calgary lawsuit, for sure, at this time. If I were to try to put the context of the bill in one sentence, it would be: confirming the power to authorize the use of the guidelines that we presently have.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will sit down and listen to other comments from other members.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I may not be quite so brief, and I may not be quite so prepared and supportive of the idea of us letting Bill 26 as it stands now go forward unamended.

We have a problem. The minister and I discussed part of this – and the minister has referred to it again tonight – at second reading debate because there was some concern being expressed in a couple of quarters at that time that Bill 26 as it reads, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007, might in fact impinge upon people's authority or right to appeal their property tax assessments. There were concerns in a couple of quarters about that.

Those were not concerns that I shared or that my researcher shared, but I had to check it out anyway, so I asked the minister about it. The minister said, "No, no, no; that wasn't the intention," and he just reiterated that tonight. I'm not questioning what the minister is saying. I take that at face value. However, there is more of a problem with this bill, apparently, than just that.

The minister has alluded to the court case currently before the courts involving the city of Calgary and its statement of claim against the province in regard to market value assessment and equalized assessment. In short, the belief by the city of Calgary is that ministerial guidelines with respect to equalized assessments are unfairly penalizing the city of Calgary.

Now, it's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that although not quite as dramatic, there are serious concerns about this with the city of Edmonton as well. On speaking with the city of Calgary director of assessment and also the senior market strategist for the city of Calgary, it's become clear to us that the amendments to the Municipal Government Act in Bill 26 are not in the best interests of either of Alberta's big cities.

With that in mind – and I do intend to talk to this a little further – before I go any further, I would like to move an amendment that Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 3 in the proposed section 322.

The Deputy Chair: It would be nice for you to pass the amendment to the pages so they can circulate it, please. And make sure that the original copy comes to the table.

Mr. Taylor: Absolutely. The original copy is on its way to the table, sir.

While those copies are being delivered, I'll just move that Bill 26, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 3 in the proposed section 322.1(2) by striking out "existing or" in both clauses (a) and (b).

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, while the amendment is being circulated, I'd like everyone to know that we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, you may proceed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A1 it is.

The city of Calgary has been in conflict with the province and with the ministry of municipal affairs for some years now over the way in which equalized assessments are handled. The primary purpose for equalized assessments is to provide a uniform basis for the assessment and taxation of property in Alberta for the Alberta school foundation fund. You have on the one hand nonregulated property, assessed at the market value standard. That's residential, commercial, industrial. Then you have regulated property, assessed at values based on regulated rates, and this applies to everything from farmland to linear property to pipelines and telecommunications. Machinery and equipment was included in the equalized assessment originally, but as of 1999 it was no longer taxed for education property tax purposes.

The effect of this is to give certain industries – agricultural operations, oil and gas – potentially huge windfalls by removing them from the equalized assessment. The effect on the big cities, where market value assessment is much more of a factor than equalized assessment, is to create a situation where both Calgary and Edmonton, with their high concentration of market value properties, pay a higher proportion of provincial property taxes than those municipalities with a higher concentration of regulated properties.

Now, in the case of the city of Calgary the estimate is that they've been paying $94 million too much in school taxes per year for several years now. In light of this inequality the city of Calgary launched a lawsuit against the province over the way in which the province assesses regulated properties and for how the guidelines are set to determine the amount of education property tax each municipality has to pay.

The city of Calgary has tried to get the government of Alberta to sit down with them so that they can explain their position and work together to come up with an equitable solution, but the ministry of municipal affairs, according to the city, has refused to discuss the guidelines for equalized assessment. The feeling in the city of Calgary is that the ministry is treating the city as children – that's over a million children – and dictating instead of consulting with them.

The effect of the amendment to section 322 is to alter the rules governing the bringing of a legal challenge in the middle of said legal challenge. Whether or not the minister feels that it's appropriate to comment on the legal challenge while the legal challenge is in the midst of its challenge, that's the way it is, and that's unacceptable to the city of Calgary. The question of information sharing by the province with the municipalities has always been an issue. It has led some municipalities to believe that uniform standards that apply equally to all have not been applied. That's why these amendments are so contentious in Calgary and Edmonton: because it takes away their ability to challenge these guidelines that are imposed on them.

Now, I'm not going to ascribe intentions or motivations to the minister or his department. I don't know why there has been this apparent communication breakdown or lack of even establishing communication, perhaps, between the big cities and his department. I trust that he will take care of that in the fullness of time. I do not know that it was the intention of the minister to try and interfere in this legal challenge or intervene in this legal challenge or to alter the rules governing the bringing of a legal challenge in the midst of that challenge, but I do know this, Mr. Chairman. If the amendment that I have moved is approved by this House, then what that allows is for this legal challenge which is in play involving the city of Calgary and the province of Alberta – that legal challenge will be allowed to play out as it should, in court, while perhaps giving effect to the minister's desire that he and his department and his government not be continually caught up in what I quite suspect that the minister regards in many cases, probably rightly so, as vexatious litigation.

Going forward, my amendment will allow the minister to accomplish what I believe the minister wants to do with this bill, but it does not try to change the rules in the middle of the game that Calgary and the province of Alberta are involved in now.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to say that the practice of having regulated assessment takes place, you know, throughout Canada and, I would say, throughout the taxation world.

I would also say that there are two different types of taxation that are used in this particular situation. The market value assessment, as was talked about by the hon. member, in which some properties are assessed based on their market value: these are types of properties where there are sales that can be used as identities, if I could so use the word, so it has some sort of base.

Regulated assessments are types of properties, basically, which we're talking about, based on the minister's guidelines, that are for pipelines and wells, railway property, telecommunications and electric power systems, and farmland. Now, let me give you a little bit of an explanation why there needs to be regulated assessment. How do you describe or how do you assess the value, a market value, for a pipeline that is in the ground? How do you assess the value for a railway property where it probably would keep changing depending on the use? How would you assess telecommunications and electric power systems that are also in the ground except by way of having some appreciated and depreciated values? That is how the regulated assessment works.

The other aspect of it is that you need to have, I believe, on farmland assessment on production value and not on market value because market value very much depends on where your location is. If you are beside a city and your market value is high but it's still assessed as agricultural land and you assess it on market value, you could never produce agriculturally, yet you would be in a situation where that land would not be able to be afforded, to be had. You can't sell it. It has speculation, yet as agricultural land you're taking it out of production.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we are doing all of those guidelines right now. What is being challenged is not the process in which we're doing it. What is being challenged: I guess what you would call it is an interpretation of how the guidelines are being presented. That is what we're trying to clear up. It is only a procedural issue.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, did you want to speak on this amendment?

Mr. Eggen: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I find it interesting that the Member for Calgary-Currie found this section 322.1 contentious because, in fact, we were thinking the same thing. In our view, section 322.1 removes any possible challenges to the validity of the minister's guidelines, including possible lawsuits. Although there may be precedents in what the government is doing, any move by the government to indemnify itself from its actions by stakeholders is one, in our view, that chips away at the basis of open and accountable governance. Although the government may claim that stability of taxation is ensured through this act, such stability is best attained through laws and regulations that include meaningful stakeholder input rather than sort of an authoritarian approach, which, in our view, that is an example of.

If the government is worried about frivolous lawsuits hindering government business, then it would be wise to follow its own laws that already exist. With claimants that are considered to be frivolous, you can declare them vexatious litigants, and off they go. Right? If the test of the vexatious litigant fails, then the stakeholder should have the right to challenge the government, as is the basis for an open and transparent democracy.

I don't often think similarly to the Member for Calgary-Currie, but today it seems like we are. So I certainly support this amendment. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to rise and speak again in direct response to what the minister was saying just a few minutes ago. I don't think that the minister would find that I disagree with anything that he said about regulated assessment. The issue, though, is not regulated assessment. The issue is about equalized assessment. Also, the issue is not about process. The issue is about a challenge to the validity of the ministerial guidelines.

As the minister said himself – and I'm going now from memory, and if I get this wrong, I'll admit that my short-term memory isn't always as good as it perhaps should be at this time of the evening. If, as I thought the minister said, this is really an argument over interpretation between the city of Calgary and the province of Alberta, then given the legislation that was in place at the time that the city tried to interest the province and the ministry of municipal affairs in sitting down and negotiating any equitable solution to the problem, and if in fact the legislation was in place when this degenerated into the filing of a lawsuit, then the appropriate place to resolve this is, in fact, in the courts.

Now, if the minister and the government wish to amend the Municipal Government Act so that going forward everything that the minister has talked about in regard to moving the guidelines so that they have the effect of regulation, so that they are legitimized, for lack of a better word, so that the practice is codified as the process, that's fine. Then if the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton or the hamlet of Rolling Hills, for heaven's sake, or Farmer Jones has a problem with the process, then the appropriate avenue to follow, if the process is unacceptable to somebody, is a political challenge to that, not a legal challenge. I understand that. But we're in a situation where we're in the middle of a legal proceeding now, and the government is trying to change the rules without allowing that legal proceeding to see itself through.

There's an old cliché about closing the barn door after the horse has bolted, Mr. Chairman. This seems to me to be a case of the government trying to close the door on the horse as it's halfway out of the barn and do the horse some significant injurious harm.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The degree of arrogance of the government goes unchecked. What we have here is the suggestion that a minister is omnipotent, is omniscient, and therefore the guidelines that he or she comes up with are not subject to question or appeal.

Now, what we're doing with this proposed amendment is rather generous. We're not handcuffing future decisions or future guidelines, because we believe those guidelines should be discussed in the open democratic atmosphere of this Legislature. But we're not going to stand by and let two-thirds of Albertans who are directly affected by equalized assessment have their potential pockets picked or micromanaged by this government. This government complains about federal intervention, but when it intervenes in the lives of the citizens of two-thirds of this province and attempts to do an end run by changing the rules midstream, the government needs to think twice.

The choices of this cabinet have already alienated people living in urban areas. While I appreciated the minister's explanation of the difference between farmland and city land and the need for farmers to have a different sort of tax structure, that makes absolute sense, but meanwhile city dwellers are getting hit with so-called fair assessments that do not take into account the nature of the house or the dwelling on the property. As the cities expand, the value of those inner-city properties increases to the point where seniors or anyone on a fixed income could have a ramshackle shack assessed at half a million, a million and a half dollars because of the land that they once had. The only way they can realize any of that value is by selling it.

For the member opposite to suggest that this is just bookkeeping or wording and to ignore the millions and millions and millions of dollars that are in dispute over the unfair assessments is not acceptable. I would suggest that by failing to heed our suggested amendment, the government will probably face a court challenge in trying to change the legislation in the midst of a legal argument. I don't think that would be legal to start with, but I don't know enough. My profession was education, not law, but I think the government would be walking on thin ground.

I would suggest you take what we offer, which is a single amendment which acknowledges the fact that the minister is not omnipotent or omniscient, that the appeal process should be able to take into account the guidelines. Otherwise, all we have is a kangaroo court, where the outcome is predetermined, and that happens far too often with this government in this province. What I would suggest for the sake of your future electoral potential: you'd better heed what two-thirds of this province and its two major mayors are concerned about.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, the hon. member opposite said that we were not willing to meet, some of those types of allegations. I would suggest to the hon. member that we did have discussions. We did have discussions about, you know, the focus that the mayor had in mind. We did not agree with that direction. It does not mean that we didn't have discussions.

Just to answer the other comments, guidelines are only an interpretation, really, of assessment. Those guidelines are large volumes. They talk about the size of wire. They talk about the size of pipe, you know, linear pipe. They talk about what services – let me find the right word – telecommunications and power systems supply. They talk about how assessment is achieved for farmland. Those guidelines are not referenced in the act. All that we're trying to do is reference those guidelines in the act and in that way being available.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very briefly, I wanted to rise and speak in favour of this amendment, amendment A1, as moved by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie. Not to sound redundant or to duplicate some of my colleagues' previous remarks,

I just wanted to emphasize the fact that nothing in this amendment prevents the minister from moving forward and changing things from this point forward.

What we're trying to say is that it's not fair, and like my colleague from Calgary-Varsity I, too, as a layperson – I don't have a law background – don't think that this should be allowed or that, in fact, it is possible for a government, any government, to change things midstream and to come in and say that anything is going to be changed retroactively and that any claim that is being pursued in court would be cancelled or terminated or rendered invalid. I don't think as a layperson that this is right or that it is fair.

Now, I bet you the government has its own legal consultants, be it the Department of Justice, or be it Parliamentary Counsel, and they probably asked those questions, Mr. Chairman, ahead of introducing this bill. I just find it puzzling and unacceptable, to be frank.

The hon. minister indicated, contrary to what we in the opposition believe, that he in fact did have consultations and discussions with the different municipalities. What my colleague from Calgary-Varsity was trying to emphasize is that this is a changing province, Mr. Chairman, and it's an urban province. People who live in the major cities constitute more than two-thirds of the population of this province. Their interests have to be protected, and their points of view have to be heard.

One example that we have is an exchange of ideas and points between a Calgary resident who actually happens to be an assessor – his name is Wayne Llewellyn – and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. I noticed that the government is trying to say: we are fair, and we have your interests at heart. I noticed that the argument we're presenting from this side of the House is: no, you're not, and there's a bit of arrogance in your language and in your treatment of those municipalities, be it Calgary, Edmonton, or some of the other centres.

In one of the responses back and forth between the minister and that particular gentleman the minister in his response indicated, and I'm quoting.

However, government does not consider it proper to challenge the Minister's authority to set out guidelines for the assessment of regulated property through the assessment appeal system, and Bill 26 is merely a further confirmation of this position.

Now, why does the government think that it's inappropriate for people to question them? Certainly, governments have a right to govern, and they have the technical expertise and the support staff and all the people at their disposal to come up with legislation, which should be good legislation. There should be also an equally important mechanism for people who are unhappy or dissatisfied with government decisions to question those government decisions, and having the court was a mechanism that provided that functionality. Now, this bill is taking that away from people. Nobody could question the government. The government decrees what they see fit, and we should believe, first, that it's accurate, second, that it's fair, and third, we have no right to question it.

I doubt that this is the direction that the drafters of the bill intended. If, in fact, that was their intention, then I'm forced to say that this is the worst example of government arrogance I have yet to encounter after having been elected to this esteemed Assembly two and a half years ago. It's in writing, the government doesn't think that people should question it, and now they're putting it into law. I totally disagree, and I know citizens of this province will totally disagree. People who are affected directly will totally disagree. This amendment restores some of that balance that was lost when Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, was introduced.

Mr. Chairman, not to prolong this discussion, I support amendment A1, and I urge all members of this House to support it as well in the interest of fairness and, again, to avoid a legal challenge based on a government changing its direction midstream.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I need to reiterate again that an individual has the right to appeal. We are not taking away any rights as far as appeal on the basis that they have been prepared correctly or that the legislation has been interpreted properly. That is what we're talking about. As far as the right to appeal, we don't take those rights away. Those rights are still there.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. The rights that aren't there are the rights to question the guidelines. They're at ministerial discretion. This is a repeat of what happened last year with Bill 40, where instead of tuition increases being discussed in the open light of this democratic institution, they were put into ministerial discretion. This is one more attempt to be covert instead of open and transparent.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Chairman, you know, we need to talk about, let's say, the application. You can't appeal a speed limit. You can appeal if it's applied correctly, but the speed limit is still there. So when we look at regulated assessment, there are guidelines that are in place. Are they applied correctly? That is what you can appeal.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I think the minister needs to come up with a stronger example. A minister didn't sit in the darkness of his room saying: "Hmm, let me think. I think I'll make the speed limit on the Deerfoot 110. So be it." There was a committee involved in the decisions. There was a regulated, legislated process. Taking away the process of appealing based on the questionable guidelines just basically says, "I know it all, so accept me," and that, of course, is not acceptable.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Those guidelines are established with consultation: established with consultation with assessors, established with consultation with industry. I would like to inform the hon. member that, no, the minister did not just sit there one day and decide that these are what the regulations should be, the regulated assessment. What does happen is that there is a lot of consultation, and the guidelines that are formed are probably – and I'm only guessing – 500-plus pages long.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. When the government is formed by Liberals, consultation will be replaced with collaboration. We won't just tell people what we'd like them to hear and say: what do you think of that? We'll involve them in the decision-making. That way we won't alienate two-thirds of the province.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Further to the problems that we have seen in regard to Bill 26, I have an area that I would like to focus on which is to do with section 322(3), and I would like to distribute an amendment that I'll pass through the pages.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you wouldn't mind, you have to give them to the pages and the original copy to the table.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you may proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Good. As you will see, I'm passing the amendment around. Right now the bill states that the guidelines will have the same effect as the regulations but at the same time will not be considered as adherent to the Regulations Act. So while we don't challenge the right of the minister to create regulations and guidelines, we do have issues with the guidelines being treated as regulations while being exempted from the Regulations Act.

Mr. Elsalhy: That sounds simple.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. This would be the result of section 322(3), and that's what my amendment would endeavour to strike.

The Regulation Act is a substantial bit of problematic area in our parliamentary system, ensuring that regulations are published in a timely manner and in a manner that is open and transparent, which is good. Creating guidelines as regulations but not making them adherent to the Regulations Act is a step against this idea of openness and transparency. It removes the regulations for public scrutiny, and it takes away public accountability. Guidelines are written annually. There is no reason why a year isn't enough time to process them through the appropriate channels and to in fact treat them as proper regulations adherent to the Regulations Act. By removing the restriction on the application of the Regulation Act, we can ensure that the guidelines, if treated as regulations, in fact will function in an open and transparent manner.

My amendment, Mr. Chair, is to simply strike that section, section 2, by striking out “, but is exempted from the application of the Regulations Act”. So, of course, we will all support this and move on in the most transparent and democratic way possible.

Thanks.

Mr. Chase: It makes me think of the line from the song: a horse is a horse, of course, of course; a horse is a horse, of course. In this case this exempting regulations – it's almost so absurd as to be difficult to argue. It, again, makes me think of 1984, where he who controls the past controls the future. How deep does this government want to go to bury the public transparency and accountability process? It's just unbelievable to me: the manipulation of the words. “A guideline established under subsection (2) is a regulation for the purposes of this Act, but is exempted from the application of the Regulations Act.” How can you have a regulation that doesn't fit into the Regulations Act? I don't know. I really think you need to have your legal counsel go over your bills before you bring them to this House because I believe you're wasting our time and that of the taxpayers.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else?

Hon. members, first, for the record this amendment is referred to as amendment A2. There being no other speakers, I'll call for a vote on this amendment.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the bill itself?

Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 32 Animal Health Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 32, the Animal Health Act. I certainly appreciate the support received at second reading of the bill, and responses to the questions proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East during second debate have been tabled.

The provision in Bill 32 will allow Alberta to better prepare for an outbreak of highly contagious livestock disease and respond to emergency situations quicker and more effectively to protect both animal and human health. Mr. Chairman, that is why I'm encouraging all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 32.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 32, the Animal Health Act. I first thought it was very good and sound legislation, but the more I look into it, I think it is legislation that if we pass in its current form will certainly hide from the public another outbreak of incompetence by this department because of the inclusion of a provision to essentially override the FOIP Act.

The hon. minister is absolutely correct, and I appreciate his time and his diligence in preparing answers to previous questions that we had in second reading. Of course, we asked if the Privacy Commissioner had been consulted and, if so, what his response was to the proposed paramountcy provision in this legislation. The minister writes that the Privacy Commissioner was consulted, but he does not agree with the proposed paramountcy provision in Bill 32.

Now, there appear to be differing legal interpretations of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, section 17(2)(b), from the Department of Agriculture and Food. This department believes that the proposed paramountcy provision is required to provide an increased degree of assurance to animal owners. Release of information will occur as required by section 32 of FOIP, when it is clearly in the public interest to do so.

If we look at section 32 of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, we will see its division 4, public health and safety, that information must be disclosed if it is in the public interest. It goes on to say here, Mr. Chairman, in section 32(1):

- (a) information about a risk of significant harm to the environment or to the health or safety of the public, of the affected group of people, of the person or of the applicant, or
- (b) information the disclosure of which is, for any other reason, clearly in the public interest.

Well, I don't know who is going to determine the public interest. I certainly don't have the confidence that Agriculture and Food is going to do that. I'm sorry.

Mr. Boutilier: I have confidence in you, George.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has confidence in the hon. minister, but certainly taxpayers are asking me a lot of questions about what's going on with that department.

The Privacy Commissioner, Mr. Chairman, does not agree with the proposed paramountcy provision in Bill 32. The Privacy Commissioner does not see the need for the extra secrecy. Citizens of Alberta can't understand why this government is so obsessed with the extra secrecy, but after question period today and the questions that were addressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I can see why this government is so obsessed with these extra layers or veils of secrecy.

Now, I would reconsider my opposition to this bill if the Department of Agriculture and Food would table these legal interpretations of the FOIP Act that they have and that they're basing this letter on. If they'd table them in the Assembly, I will certainly make every effort to have a look at them. Mr. Chairman, it is alarming that the minister has consulted with the Privacy Commissioner on the paramountcy clause in section 55 and ignored his advice. The Privacy Commissioner, according to the minister, does not agree that this provision is necessary. This government, as I said earlier, as we all know, prefers to hide information from Albertans as opposed to being open and transparent.

The minister states in a letter dated May 14 of this year: "Agriculture and Food (AF) believes the proposed paramountcy provision is required to provide an increased degree of assurance [as I said] to animal owners." Why do animal owners need an increased degree of assurance? Is it the minister's position that animal owners will hold back information if this provision is not included? Which animal owners has the minister consulted with to make this determination? Has the minister spoken with animal owners who say that they will not share information, even though the law requires it? Are there a lot of animal owners in Alberta, in the minister's opinion again, that would break the law if they don't have increased assurance in the form of secrecy provisions? Who has the minister spoken with specifically? Who is lobbying the minister to hide information from Albertans despite the advice of the Privacy Commissioner not to do so? If this paramountcy provision is, in fact, about protecting animal owners, why is there only a five-year limit on the release of that information?

Now, the Premier likes to talk about how open and transparent the current government is. Can the minister tell us how his decision to ignore the Privacy Commissioner's advice and to hide more information from Albertans fits with the Premier's claims? Did the minister consult with the Premier in his decision to ignore the Privacy Commissioner? Does the Premier support the minister's decision to hide this information from Albertans? Is creating even more secretive legislation part of this government's pledge to be more open and transparent? Why does the minister consult with the Privacy Commissioner if he simply ignores his advice? Can the minister tell us exactly what the Privacy Commissioner said about this paramountcy provision? Will the minister table in this House any correspondence or documentation between his department and the Privacy Commissioner regarding Bill 32, or is that secret as well?

Again, can the minister tell us, Mr. Chairman, why he believes it is necessary to continue with this government tradition of being secretive, hiding information once again from Albertans? Can the minister tell us why he's ignoring the Privacy Commissioner? Does the minister believe that the Privacy Commissioner is wrong? Why does the minister need to be so secretive? What does the minister hope to gain by hiding this information from Albertans? Can the minister please explain what the point of consulting with experts is if he's simply going to ignore their advice?

Now, in his letter dated the 14th of May, the hon. minister states:

The Privacy Commissioner was consulted. He does not agree with the proposed paramountcy provision in Bill 32 being necessary. Because of differing legal interpretations of the . . . FOIP, Agriculture and Food believes the proposed paramountcy provision is required to provide an increased degree of assurance to animal owners.

Can the minister now tell us who in the department is interpreting the FOIP Act? I hope it's not the same people who were doing your farm fuel benefit.

Now, demanding that this statute be more secretive than is necessary according to the Privacy Commissioner, in his letter, again, dated May 14, 2007, the minister states: "Release of information will occur, as required" – and we had a little discussion of section 32, Public Health and Safety, of the FOIP Act – "when it is clearly in the public interest to do so." Can the minister tell us who determines whether or not, as I said earlier, the information is clearly in the public interest? Does the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner play some role in this determination? Why, then, doesn't the hon. minister just listen to the commissioner when he tells his department that added secrecy provisions are not needed? Why does the minister insist on moving backwards in terms of openness and accountability? How does the minister justify his decision to support a bill that increases the secrecy of this government? Is this the minister's idea of openness?

Mr. Chairman, there are also other parties that have come forward to our office with the claim that they were not consulted in regard to the drafting of this legislation. I'm wondering if the hon. minister would table a complete list of all the organizations that were consulted regarding the drafting of Bill 32, the Animal Health Act.

Certainly, there are provisions in here that are noteworthy. I think the Livestock Diseases Act needs to be updated. You know, there's an interest in Bill 32, the Animal Health Act. There's a genuine interest to improve things, but with these secrecy provisions, I'm sorry; on this side of the House, until we get further clarification and perhaps have a look at the legal opinion, we cannot at this time contemplate supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having not had a chance to speak in second reading, it's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 32, the Animal Health Act. I want to thank the Minister of Agriculture and Food for bringing this act forward. I think this act will go a long way towards helping our livestock industry move into a new era, an era of global trade where market access is of critical importance. As an MLA and farmer I see benefits in this new approach, benefits for my constituents and Albertans as we adapt to the changing times. After all, we all want to and need to keep our livestock industry competitive and our food safe.

I've heard from my constituents about the devastating effect the emergence of BSE in our cattle herd had on them. I want to ensure that we learn lessons from the past and do better for our producers going forward. I'm keen on how this act will help meet our present and possible future challenges. One of the most devastating things for the farming regions of Alberta was the BSE crisis. The cow-calf operators of Alberta were extremely jeopardized when they were not able to market their animals to global markets. In particular, losing market access to the United States was our biggest loss as they are our largest market. Even today we've not fully restored market access for cattle over 30 months of age. This restriction certainly limits our ability to market cull cows. All the while, we continue to face organized lobby groups like R-CALF and other challenges that are making it slow and laborious to open borders.

Bill 32 also enables Alberta to progress with animal traceability. As the minister said, it enables us to move forward in a way that makes sense for Alberta, that considers the needs of our producers and industry as a whole. Not only will it help us fight disease, but I'd like to emphasize that this initiative can have direct benefit for producers seeking global market opportunities. Under the new Animal Health Act we can show our diligence with control and containment of highly contagious diseases. Our ability to trace our animals and animal products from the farm to the fork is beneficial to maintain and expand market opportunities. Consumers around the world, including my constituents, are demanding this assurance.

We've seen how our good work at BSE surveillance and our commitment to improving traceability has helped open borders. But I've also been talking to other sectors, and I can tell you that this is not just a concern for beef. Consumer confidence in all our animal products will continue to become more and more important. There's no denying it. This is a global trend that is here now. I want to commend these industries that have already made the commitment to improve traceability. The way the regulations are being developed, I'm confident they will reflect the good work that has been started and will build on these successes.

Mr. Chairman, one of the issues that came up during the consultation period in this Legislature and was just mentioned by our previous speaker was centred around the information farmers would have to submit to help prepare for and respond to a disease outbreak and the level of protection that would be given that information by this government. I want to assure my constituents that any information collected under this legislation is considered necessary for the success of our industry and maintaining trade opportunities. I believe we need information in order to respond quickly and effectively to an outbreak of an animal disease.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I understand that we are strengthening the protection of information under this act by seeking paramouncy over section 17(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. This will give members of our industry protection when an outbreak occurs with no direct threat to animal or human health in the immediate vicinity. We understand that farms are businesses, and we want to protect and respect their rights as businesses to maintain the reputation of their business. This exemption will encourage the sharing of information and increase the level of confidence in our system.

When there's a disease outbreak that poses a threat to the health of animals or humans in the immediate vicinity, it will still be subject to FOIP, section 32, that requires the release of enough personal information about the disease outbreak to those at risk to enable them to take precautions against the disease in question.

Mr. Chairman, the health and safety of Albertans is the number one priority of this bill and this government. We want to make sure that when an outbreak occurs, we have the right information to act immediately to minimize any impacts on animal and human health. By having this information readily available, we are able to respond decisively at the first sign of an outbreak. This legislation is not intended to pry into the records of Alberta ranchers. I think the protection provided by Alberta's FOIP laws and by the exemption in this legislation is very appropriate.

One of the concerns I had with this legislation was the amount of information that would be required to be kept and filled in as we progress to make important decisions on this act through the regulation development stage. I've consulted with the Minister of Agriculture and Food to ensure that stakeholders will be consulted as the regulations develop. The minister has expressed an openness and commitment to stakeholders.

There's a commitment to continue working with industry every step of the way to make sure that this legislation works for them. After all, it's the members of our livestock industry who will be most affected by this change in legislation. This will affect the way they keep records, the way they respond to disease outbreaks, and the way they set up animal health and biosecurity programs to support the viability of their operations. We need their involvement and expertise to make sure that what we implement is effective, attainable, and affordable.

A great deal of stakeholder consultation work has already been done, Mr. Chairman, and I'm satisfied that the same openness to various perspectives will continue as we find the best approach for all Albertans in the regulation development process. In fact, I was happy to learn from the Minister of Agriculture and Food that the first stakeholder meeting to discuss the development of regulations is already planned in the next couple of weeks.

I know that the Department of Agriculture and Food is full of knowledgeable employees who help keep our agricultural industry competitive and strong. However, these individuals may not be able to identify problems in the legislation like the rancher who is immersed in the industry every day, problems that can only be recognized by those who work in the corral or on the slaughterhouse floor. This is the input the department needs to make sure that this legislation is as effective as it can be, and that is why it is important to consult with these stakeholders. After talking with the minister, I am confident that the approach we are taking is the best one to get us there.

In conclusion, I believe the proposed Animal Health Act would repeal and replace the existing Livestock Diseases Act, which was created in 1946 to minimize the impact of diseases in Alberta livestock. Much has changed in livestock farming in the last 61 years, and much has changed in the expectations of consumers in the marketplace.

I support the passage of Bill 32, and I thank the Minister of Agriculture and Food for bringing forward a bill reflective of the best interests of the modern livestock industry.

Mr. Chase: My belief is that Bill 32 accomplishes the exact opposite of what it's intended to do. In fact, I believe Premier Klein would be proud of this Bill 32 because it supports his response to the BSE crisis: shoot, shovel, and shut up. Burying things in FOIP on a covert, need-to-know basis sounds like something that we'd find with the Sandinistas or the CIA. It kills the credibility for importers, and it goes against traceability rather than supporting it.

I may be a city-based individual, but my family members in the Vermilion area have very direct experience with BSE. It was one of my cousins who bought the cow from the Saskatchewan farmer where the end result was the culling of his entire Angus herd. This is a herd that my uncle, David, and his wife, Patsy – we've got the Chase and the Cross families of Vermilion – had built up over years and years and years, and because of the poor handling of the BSE crisis, the inability to test live animals, his whole herd was culled. That was an awful lot of expensive meat that went to waste.

Now, this government, when the BSE crisis broke out, couldn't act for three months because there weren't sufficient testers at the time. The lone one or two testers were so caught up with testing for CWD that the results weren't announced for three months, and the credibility of the Alberta beef industry suffered tremendously as a result.

We can't afford another BSE crisis, and the only way to be proactive about this is being transparent and accountable so that all people who would wish to import beef, whether it's across the border or meat sent to Japan, can trust the Alberta process. Bill 32 and its FOIP attitude take secrecy to another high level.

Today we have been talking about transparency and accountability in a number of bills. This government has got to really shake its head because there are outfits like the R-CALF down in Montana that are trying to prevent Canadian beef from crossing the line. I support what the former agricultural minister said, that we need to be shipping beef in a box rather than beef on the hoof. But as long as we're exchanging live animals, we have to have such an open and transparent process. We have to know that each of those animals has been thoroughly tested. I know that the test on live animals – I gather it hasn't been completed. But because we don't have that blood testing at this point, we need to reassure the world that Alberta beef is the best.

Bill 32, by saying that only certain people require this information, goes against the Privacy Commissioner's interpretation of what necessary information should be out there. How can we possibly say to people who would buy Alberta beef that we've gone through the process, that it's thoroughly protected, when it took this government so long to do the feed recall? I know that it's hard to trace back, but it was suggested that for some of the feed that contained the animal products itself that were being fed to the cattle, we were so slow to act that it continued, basically, a year and a half after the BSE ban. During the BSE crisis the people that profited the most were the American slaughterhouse owners because they not only received compensation for their own internal large herds, but they did their own slaughtering first before regular Alberta ranchers could get their beef to processing.

We cannot afford to maintain a ranching industry and support farmers if the government is suggesting that anything but absolute transparency and accountability take place. We have improved the traceability. Why would we work against it?

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking on Bill 32, I do support a number of the positions that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has taken about openness and transparency. If we're going to continue to ensure that everyone, including ourselves, has complete and total confidence in our industry, we've got to make sure that there's nothing that can be hidden from anyone. We've got to make sure that any and all available information is available to all citizens, not just a select few who happen to sit behind the privacy desk. The Privacy Commissioner did say that everyone should in fact have the opportunity to have the information.

Even though I believe that the intent of the bill is good, that we do need to modernize the legislation, my concern with this particular piece surrounds the game farming. Were the game ranchers consulted as well? That is part of the Animal Health Act because they do, in fact . . .

An Hon. Member: Are they covered?

Mr. Bonko: Well, that's right. Are they going to be double-fencing to make sure that they don't have the chronic wasting disease continue to perhaps affect that? That is a big industry. That's an industry that we've been concerned about for quite a while, since the breakout, and it was denied that it was ever in existence.

We've already done some culling twice or three times now. The last cull was around Oyen, where they did about 1,200, and they did in fact detect some more, that the existence is in the wild, and it's continuing. I'm not sure if it's slipping in from Saskatchewan or if it's manifesting itself right within the borders, if it's linked to the ranching. That's definitely some concerns that we have on our side of the House. I know there are concerns out there. As an avid hunter myself and people out in the area of Stettler, Drumheller, where the cull has occurred, are definitely concerned.

That is some of the talk out there during the door-knocking as we happen to be in a by-election right now. Those are some of the tips that people are talking about as a candidate does go out there in the area of Oyen and that. People want to know: what's the government doing about that? How has it managed to get this far this fast? Those are some of the conversations that our candidate has been inquiring about and has questions about, constituents out there have, myself as well.

I'm not sure if the minister is prepared to answer some questions with regard to some of that. If you could tell me, I wouldn't mind. Has the minister talked to some of the ranchers and insisted or flown the idea about the double-fencing to ensure that we don't have the ability for the wild animals to get right in with our game animals, that are supposed to be domesticated?

Those are some specifics, Mr. Chairman, that I wouldn't mind having answered, then. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: Just to follow up on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, the Alberta Fish and Game Association and Bob Scammell, who frequently writes for the Calgary Herald, are extremely concerned about the interaction of wild and farmed elk, deer, and so on. Our first problem with CWD can be traced back to elk that we imported from I believe it was Montana. It might have been Idaho, but I believe it was Montana. Now we are taking such expensive measures, shooting from the air and culling large numbers of the wild deer population, again because we don't have the ability to test the animals live. So until the government decides that they're going to provide compensation for these people that they lured into the elk velvet and deer, we're going to be liable for an awful lot of compensation. The faster we get out of this industry, the better.

While I'm talking about that industry, the most offensive thing that could possibly be occurring in terms of the culling or the eventual getting out of that industry would be the penned hunts. This is something that the government had suggested, and some of the owners of these elk and deer, who were so frustrated by the lack of their industry's value, had suggested bringing people in. This is the equivalent of that large hog story down in the States, where it turns out that the so-called wild hog was actually one that had been on a farm and then was shot within a penned circumstance. Heaven forbid that that kind of penned hunting should ever find itself within Alberta boundaries.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Groeneveld: No way. After that got rolled at me, I'm going to roll right back.

I will for the hon. members across discuss the freedom of information and privacy act because apparently that's where they're trying to come from. I guess that I get a little disturbed when three members opposite stand up and once again try and attack the credibility of agriculture people. Whether it's the farm fuel benefit act or whatever it is, it's always these people that are doing all these illegal and secretive things.

Mr. Chase: We've got the government speaking, not the farmers.

Mr. Groeneveld: I was quiet when you were talking.

I will talk about where we're at with the FOIP Act on Bill 32. I don't think I'm going to have to table it. You may as well listen to it right here. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat explained it very well. I don't think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar happened to be listening at that time, so I guess that he'd better listen this time because I'm not going to table this document. I'm going to read it to him.

Clearly, accurate data must be available for any rapid response to a contagious disease. Not only is this information vital in responding to emergency health situations, but it is necessary for the success of our industry and maintaining trade opportunities.

However, it is important to note that this is also confidential business information. For that reason, the Animal Health Act aims to gain paramouncy over Section 17(2)(b) of the Act to further protect information. This means that information will not be provided if it is requested by a third party who is not directly at risk. Information would only be provided subject to Section 32 that was specifically required to those at risk to enable them to take precautions.

A balance is needed between the need for the sharing of confidential information, the protection of human health and the protection of privacy. This balance will ensure participation and maximum confidence in Alberta's handling of information.

- FOIP section 17(2)(b) provides that if there is a request for information under FOIP, if the information can affect public health, it must be released whether or not the person making the FOIP request is personally affected.
- Release of disease information from a farm under FOIP 17(2)(b) could have a serious impact on the owner without providing any significant information to the 3rd party. In other words, if the 3rd party was not directly at risk, the released personal information would not facilitate mitigation of a risk but would compromise the owner's confidentiality.
- The [Animal Health Act] is requiring animal owners to provide information on the disease status of their animals. Compliance with this requirement will be a significant issue if there is not some guarantee of confidentiality of the information.
- The [Animal Health Act] proposes an exemption to FOIP section 17(2)(b) only. The information will be kept confidential for five years. After five years, there would likely be little impact of releasing the information because the disease will have been dealt with or would no longer be relevant, and in all likelihood will not be of sufficient merit to generate a FOIP request.
- Any disease outbreak that poses a threat to the health of animals or humans in the immediate vicinity will still be subject to FOIP section 32. It requires the release of enough personal information about the disease outbreak to those at risk to enable them to take precautions against the disease in question.

Mr. Chair, I have great faith in the animal owners to report the diseases that might come along under this. The hon. member always seems to think that we're out there and we're dishonest. But we have to change this act. We have to be modern. It doesn't have a lot to do with some of the issues that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity brought up.

Now, with the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, I sometimes wonder where his relevance comes from. I guess that it's a chance to sneak in some other issues that aren't relevant to where we're at with this bill. The elk and deer farm hunts in Alberta are not legal. We've never even brought them up since I've been in this capacity, so I'm not sure where he's going with that one.

Game farming is under the auspices of SRD, and the chronic wasting disease, certainly, has a relevance to this. Somewhere in there there was a question about compensation. These are wild animals out there, and I'm not sure who should be compensated and the cost that we are . . .

Mr. Chase: The game ranchers.

Mr. Groeneveld: The game ranchers? They have nothing to do with the wild animals out there.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I would encourage all people to look favourably upon this act. It is certainly not an act out there to try and be dishonest and hide things. It's exactly the opposite, and anybody that thinks different is exactly out of line as far as I'm concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I'm a farmer. My livelihood and my son's livelihood depend on what we do with the Animal Health Act. Why would we go out there and cut our own throat? I don't understand their issues. There are certainly issues that seem to come from the other side of the House that I don't agree with.

There is openness and transparency in this act. This is a good act. We have to move forward on it.

Mr. Chase: I look at this third-person, need-to-know basis in the same way that the Energy and Utilities Board conducts hearings. People who are in the surrounding area who are affected by the potential of fracking have a right to intervene at the hearings, but the government has prevented them from doing so. It's only if you're within I believe the distance is 500 metres of the well being drilled that you have any opportunity to respond to the effect it might have on your own agricultural and water well-being.

On this third-person, need-to-know, and the government decides with whom it will share the information: my limited understanding is that BSE is potentially transferred through prions. I would think that when herds come into contact with each other, the importance of the traceability is paramount. I'm also very aware, having worked in the park area and having been forced to be a cattle herder against my own will, that cattle don't necessarily respect fencelines, so there is the possibility of intermingling of the various farm animals.

The length of time it takes for the BSE to take hold is such that years later – and if I were the farmer down the road or beside the individual where the BSE was discovered, I'd very much want to know because I would be questioning the health of my animals. I'm not suggesting that we have to double-fence our cattle like I do believe we need to double-fence our elk and deer. Sharing information with those affected: I don't think you can go wrong by being overly accountable or transparent, but I do believe you can get into a great deal of difficulty if you don't share that information and appear to the world that will be importing your beef that your process is completely open.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 32 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report bills 33, 26, and 32.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 33, Bill 26, Bill 32. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate May 30: Reverend Abbott]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First off, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor for his efforts to update us on this side of the House in regard to this legislation. Certainly, the provisions of Bill 29 have been summarized already in the Assembly by the hon. member, I believe, and they have been summarized very well. I see this legislation as a step toward this province becoming aligned with Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Those Assemblies, as I understand it, have enacted similar legislation. It's interesting, I guess, for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder that the Conservative government here would be following in the New Democrats' footsteps in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Certainly, this bill is a step in the right direction. Whenever we look at amending the Farm Implement Act, enabling financial institutions to offer financial lease and financial lease-purchase options to farmers for the acquisition of farm implements, it's a change.

The board that is going to be set up with this bill – it certainly will be interesting to see how this board develops. It's a seven-member board, as I understand it, consisting of three farm commodity group members, three industry members respecting dealers, distributors, and manufacturers of agricultural equipment, and a member appointed by the minister. The board advises the minister on matters arising from the operation of the act. The Alberta Farmers' Advocate's office administers the act. I'm wondering: is the hon. member confident that the budget of the Farmers' Advocate is sufficient to administer this act?

First off, I would like to make a comment in regard to the member of this seven-person panel appointed by the minister. I hope the criteria for this is not a Progressive Conservative Party membership. You know, some of these commissions and boards that we've set up here recently are patronage appointments, Mr. Speaker. I hope this board doesn't become a soft landing for a Progressive Conservative Party member. We see this commission or this task force that has undertaken this review of all these agencies, boards, and commissions, and we'll see what happens with this task force.

A farm implement, as has been indicated earlier, is "any implement, equipment, engine, motor, machine, combine, tractor or attachment used or intended for use in farming operations" but does not include items exempted by regulation. There is a retail selling price mentioned here of $4,000 or less. Currently, a farm implement dealer is defined as a person who sells, offers for sale, leases, or offers for lease farm implements. Licences are required for both dealers and distributors with options to guarantee warranty service and parts available for a period of 10 years.

I would also assume that the lending agencies have all been contacted in regard to Bill 29 and they are satisfied. I was surprised with previous legislation that had been drafted and developed by this department where, you know, the banks had major issues with it. I'm sure the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food is quite aware of that situation and the consequences of that.

Certainly, whenever we look at this, farmers will have more choices when it comes to acquiring farm implements. Financial institutions will basically become middlemen, as I understand it, hon. member, in the transaction process, acquiring the farm implement on behalf of the purchaser from the implement dealer. Once the purchaser has acquired the farm implement, the implement distributor, dealer, and farmer are bound by statutory and other agreed upon guarantees or warranties relating to the implement.

This side of this House has nothing against farmers or rural people, as the minister of agriculture maintains. He is certainly out to lunch on that one, Mr. Speaker. It's the furthest thing from the truth, hon. member, and the minister knows that. He's just trying to get a lifeline because of inadequate auditing done by the department over the last 10 years. He can publicly try to blame us, but the farmers that phone us certainly know. I'm talking about the latest program delivery that isn't working out, and that's the farm fuel benefit. The hon. minister knows that it's not this side of the House that's at fault or to blame. He can point fingers at us all he wants, but farmers and taxpayers know what the real problem is and who caused it.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and the effect of this bill is to provide greater financing options to farmers who are looking to acquire farm implements. There does not appear to be any controversial provisions within this bill, and again through the course of debate I think we're going to find out which financial institutions and other groups have been contacted and what they've had to say about this. At this time I'm certainly willing to support this bill. The intent and the effect of this bill are positive, and I think that this bill will have some very positive outcomes for farmers in Alberta. I look forward to further discussion on this, and I thank the House and the Speaker for their attention.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just very briefly would like to also express the New Democrat caucus's support for Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act. This bill, in fact, seems to resolve a number of potential difficulties over warranty implementations by dealers and liabilities concerning issues with purchases of farm equipment, making the purchaser rather than the financial institution brokering the deal responsible for the payment of lease-purchase amounts to the dealer. In fact, this bill ensures that unscrupulous purchasers cannot get out of paying the dealer by stating that the financial institution as the broker is responsible for the payment.

So by making dealers responsible for enforcement of the warranty regardless of who bought the equipment, the bill ensures that farmers can get their equipment fixed or serviced even if it was the financial institution that brokered the deal. This bill does not put any unfair or onerous financial burdens on any particular party, so we see no reason why we shouldn't support it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in support of Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, and commend the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for bringing forth this bill. It's an important agricultural bill for our Alberta farmers, but it's also an important economic bill because it does increase the opportunity for capital aggregation, really, by ensuring that certain economic factors become more readily available to our farm producers.

Farming is a business, and it's very clear that this will increase the opportunities for farmers to finance their business. It's not only looking at Saskatchewan and Manitoba, although they have similar legislation. Some of the European models certainly look to leasing in a major way. The AIB, for example, has spoken about this quite a bit in trying to encourage greater leasing in Ireland.

Leasing is a method of financing agricultural equipment in a cost-effective manner. It is attractive to farmers as it avoids tying up money in depreciating assets. Leasing provides farmers with the option of making regular payments that suit their cash flow and budgetary requirements and as such presents a very cost-effective alternative to paying cash. Leasing may also confer certain tax advantages for farm businesses as payments made under a lease agreement can be tax deductible, making this form of asset financing even more attractive. Essentially, leasing allows farmers the immediate use of a productive asset while not imposing large restrictions on their cash flow. Leasing can provide financing with little initial outlay, thereby reducing the cash flow strain of capital expenditure. Importantly, given the significant expenditure involved with some of today's specialist machinery, leasing payments are a small portion of the purchase price of the equipment, and the lease payments can be scheduled to coincide with the seasonal cash flow of a farm business. In addition to preserving cash flow, the fixed payments associated with lease financing improve the ability of farmers to accurately budget and forecast their cash flows over the planning horizon.

Leasing is a very important type of option that must be made more available to farm producers, to farm businesses. In some countries in Europe leasing of implements and such is the preferred option in three out of four cases. It is a very important area in terms of increasing capital aggregation in the farm economy to have this option open.

Now, with all due respect to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I have often heard the Official Opposition – in fact, this was raised the other day, when the Official Opposition was laughing at agricultural and rural interests in Alberta. There was some discussion and even a point of order raised on that. Actually, it's clear from my experience outside this House that I have seen that often and very clearly a factor that has been part of the Official Opposition's way of approaching agriculture. It's certainly not the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar but certainly the Official Opposition and its leader and leadership in general, and that is something that has been argued in this House and has actually, I think, been clearly proven.

Bill 29, in any case, Mr. Speaker, is a very important bill. I commend the mover again, and I do support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I, too, along with my colleagues support Bill 29. Although the majority of my life has been spent in the city, I was born in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. My grandparents lived in Meota, Saskatchewan, very near to Jackfish Lake, and we had a number of farming friends, and a number of my cousins were farm based. I have fond memories as a child playing with the combines and the tractors that my grandfather had partially carved and partially built with pieces of tin, and I have fond memories of crawling through some of the old combines that were basically left in a heap to rust.

The face of farming, as I say, has changed tremendously since my father in the Dirty Thirties worked in threshing crews powered by steam engines. At that time there was, and there is still to a degree, sort of a collective nature to things. What the threshing crews did is kind of what the member referred to before. The threshing crews came through. They had the equipment, and the farmer would basically pay them in kind or after a fashion. It was almost like our modern leases today. They didn't have to have the overhead of having very expensive machinery.

For farmers today keeping the family farm intact is extremely difficult. What Bill 29 provides is a degree of reliability and liability for the implement dealership and the lessor of the equipment to treat the farmer in a fair manner. I know that we still have various combining crews that go from farm to farm and help each of their neighbours get the crop off, but the factory farm is becoming almost a necessity for a number of farmers to survive. The whole historical roots and connection to the soil get lost when it becomes an industry instead of a family-owned business. Bill 29 gives the individual farmer the degree of support that is necessary to maintain a family farm in Alberta today.

I thank the government member and the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for recognizing the plight of farmers. Hopefully, through government land-use bills and so on we will stop encroaching on wonderfully arable farmland and maintain our proud traditional history.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to close debate.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I would like to say thank you very much for the support. I do appreciate the support from all sides of the House on Bill 29. There were some excellent questions raised tonight by several of the members that spoke, and I will endeavour to answer those in Committee of the Whole or possibly in written form if we don't get a chance to do it in Committee of the Whole. I will answer those as soon as possible with detailed answers.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

Bill 39
Engineering, Geological and Geophysical
Professions Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate May 30: Mr. Lukaszuk]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in second reading of Bill 39, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007. This bill is a result of a long period of discussion which culminated in a memorandum of understanding in December 2006, which was signed by both the members on the engineering side and also the members on the technologists side. The discussion paper accompanying this memorandum of understanding, which was published actually in The PEGG, provides valuable background material to help us understand

Bill 39. In fact, the discussion paper begins with this statement, and I thought it was a very clear delineation of the issue. "Engineering and technology are intertwined, and engineers and technologists work together across a wide spectrum of professional activity."

I mean, this is an important, descriptive statement. In the field, in the workplace, engineers and technologists work together to get the work done. There doesn't seem to be any conflict when work has to be done. They work together in teams, and in the field, in the actual workplace there's no conflict, but when it comes to organizing themselves into professional societies, that's where they perhaps get into conflict. It doesn't make much sense to have one group, engineers, having in place legislation pertaining to their profession, but technologists do not have legislation in place to regulate their profession.

Currently professional engineers, geologists, and geophysicists are regulated under provincial legislation as members of APEGGA, the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists, and Geophysicists of Alberta. Registered professional technologists are voluntary members of ASET, the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta. ASET is registered under the Societies Act but is not a legislated regulatory organization, so this bill is an attempt to elevate ASET and provide them the same kind of legislative protection and oversight and regulation as APEGGA. Discussions have gone on for some time to join the two together. B.C. tried to form the two into one association, and apparently that failed. What we have before us in Bill 39 is the proposal to have one act regulating two associations, so one act, two associations.

Why do this? Well, as the discussion paper indicates, this is in the public interest, and here I follow some of the points of the discussion paper. The model of one act, two associations will "better protect the public interest by assuring the competence of engineering and technology professionals across the spectrum of their intertwined practices." In the field engineers and technologists work together in teams, so it makes sense for their collected work, their integrated work to be regulated in an integrated way. If they work together in teams, are doing essentially the same scope of work, then they should have the same kind of legislation that oversees their collective work.

One act with oversight over all of its members brings professional standards and discipline and ethical standards to bear upon the members, so there is no discrimination or there's not a separate set of standards, set of discipline issues, ethical standards, or ethical code applying to one association and not the other. The same kinds of ethical standards apply to both associations, and this can be only a good thing.

The bill recognizes the independently practised engineering work of registered professional technologists who have been licensed by APEGGA. Now they will be recognized in this bill as professional licensees, and there will be a new designation, professional technologist, jointly regulated by APEGGA and ASET. I won't speak to specifics in the bill, but you have in the definitions in the front of the bill an outline of the various ways in which professional technologists are understood.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is all about professionalism or professionalization. It's about the ethics of professions. We've seen an evolution through recent history where all professions try to take charge of their own work, applying strict definitions, recognition of roles and responsibilities, and discipline. There's a great responsibility of professions to take care of their own house, so any kind of enhancement of the ethics of professions is something that I'm sure all members in the House would support.

The members of APEGGA and ASET are really to be commended in working together. I don't think it has been easy. You know, in any profession there is a kind of pride in one's profession that often leads to, perhaps, a kind of conflict, if you like, with other professions, and especially when the word "engineer" is used. Some workers doing the same kind of work want to be considered to be engineers even though they're not, yet they're all basically working together, doing the same kind of work.

So it's to be commended that APEGGA and ASET have worked together to work out their relationship and to in a sense elevate the importance of their profession and the processes of accountability to the public. This elevation of the accountability to the public only will lead to an elevation of their professions' credibility, so under this act – one act, two professions – the credibility of the profession goes up and, I think, is enhanced.

Hopefully, this bill will bring to an end all conflict between the two organizations over the scope and role of each organization's members, and they will continue to work on this. Most of the bill is then putting into effect all the regulations with respect to ASET, which mirror what's already in place in terms of the legislation dealing with APEGGA.

We've met with members from APEGGA and ASET, and we are very impressed by the way they've been working together, so on this side we would certainly support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, whenever you look at this bill and you listen to the remarks of the previous speaker, I would urge all hon. members to support this legislation.

I would like to thank the members of APEGGA for their updates. There has been a lot of work done by both groups here, the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists, and Geophysicists of Alberta and the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta, to establish this one act, two associations model of governance. I, too, would like to commend them for their hard work.

I would also like to commend the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West and the previous minister of human resources and employment, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater, and also the current Minister of EII, because certainly this memorandum of understanding that has resulted in this legislation is significant. There have been some jurisdictional issues between these two groups. Hopefully, this will resolve the majority of them, and they will work together.

The engineers go out of their way to ensure that there is proper accreditation for engineers from other jurisdictions who come here to practise. I was very impressed with the work that they do to ensure that qualified engineers are given the proper accreditation so that they can carry on with their work here in this province. Other government departments could learn a lesson from APEGGA as far as professional accreditation goes, in my opinion, because certainly they do a very good job of ensuring that the engineers that are practising in this province meet their standards and the standards that, of course, are set out in legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this act has been a long time in coming. In the real world engineers and technologists work in integrated teams in order to serve the public interests effectively. Regulation of their respective professional practices needs to be conducted in an integrated manner, but we always must recognize that with engineered drawings and blueprints we've got to look down in the corner and we've got to make sure that the beaver stamp is there. There can be no shortcuts. There can be no cost-saving measures. We're all protected by the education that these individuals have before they become professional engineers. We have to accept that, and we have to realize that we need the supervision of the professional engineer, the professional geologist, or the professional geophysicist. Let's not forget that.

I'm very pleased to see, as I said before, that these two organizations are working together to improve public safety by expanding the number of workers within their profession who hold themselves publicly accountable. We will always remember that there is a grey area between engineers and technologists, but this bill will make it easier for companies to identify qualified workers.

Again, in conclusion, let's not forget the role that engineers have to play, and it is a very, very important role. I certainly hope that we in no way are going to ever contemplate in this Assembly watering down the excellent standards that already exist for engineers, geologists, and geophysicists.

I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this bill and please support it. A lot of work has already gone into it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in support of Bill 39, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007. This is an important bill and a long time in coming. I must commend the Member for Lethbridge-West for bringing this forward, the minister as well, and, most particularly, the two associations. I know that a lot of professionals in both organizations, APEGGA and ASET, take their work very, very seriously and are professionals. There has been some competition in the past and even – I wouldn't say conflict – real competition on certain sites for work in certain areas of the field. These are two very broad and wide-ranging organizations in terms of the work that they look at and the types of responsibilities they do have.

Bringing this forward has been the result of a lot of goodwill on behalf of both organizations. I think they are continuing that goodwill. I have spoken with executives and members from both, and I think this is a great move forward. I must commend, again, the mover on bringing this forward and the associations. I support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be extremely quick. One of the main reasons that I support Bill 39 is the fact that I'm a lifetime member of the Alberta Teachers' Association, which is another regulating, self-governing organization. The fact that two professional groups, while having similar interests but different regulations, have seen fit to come together and have been consulted under the professionalism of this Bill 39 is a tremendous accomplishment that I fully support.

In the interest of co-operation I believe that my members would be quite willing to move quickly into Committee of the Whole and get this legislation passed. There is no controversy here. All parties support it. We appreciate the research and the background work that was done and would like to see it passed into legislation sooner rather than later.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I promise to be brief as well. I, too, rise to voice my support for this bill, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007. I really like the direction that this bill is taking both organizations, both APEGGA and ASET, and I really like the fact that they're moving towards a one act, two associations governance model. The bill actually offers an effective regulatory structure for professionals from both sides to now work together and to maintain the standards of their profession, some 48,000 members of APEGGA. ASET is also growing. More people are moving into the province. As well, their current membership is mushrooming. It was really a long time coming for both organizations to work together instead of some of the conflicts or confrontations of the past.

Two of the reasons why I support this bill, Mr. Speaker. First is the fact that this bill improves public safety. As was mentioned by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, this bill does not lower the standards. It basically maintains and raises them, which is a good direction. Second, it optimizes the effectiveness of the Alberta workforce, and it basically streamlines some of the roles and responsibilities and codes of practice. It also allows more competition and more life and more energy in the workforce. So these are two things that I really like.

Again, the conflict of the past was not the right way to continue, and I commend both organizations on coming together and working together to achieve this. I really felt happy on April 11, Mr. Speaker, when both organizations issued a joint press release celebrating their agreement. They even had a picture, you know, of the officers of both organizations meeting with the minister of employment and industry and celebrating that direction. The ASET executive director, Barry Cavanagh; ASET president, Larry Stone; the minister; APEGGA president, David Chalcraft; and the APEGGA executive director and registrar, Neil Windsor, were there. It was mentioned that we've met with both organizations. Barry Cavanagh, in particular, I have met more than once in the past because before he moved to ASET, he was actually the CEO of the Pharmacists Association. As you know, I am a pharmacist by profession, so I know this gentleman quite well.

Really, I'm liking this because I see a role for both pharmacists and pharmacy technicians to be the next phase of this interdisciplinary co-operation. We have some of the same issues that engineers and technicians have had in the past, and role clarification is necessary. Achieving this collaboration and working together is very important for pharmacists and pharmacy technicians, again in the interest of collaboration, to maintain and heighten or raise job standards and codes of practice, to enhance public safety, and to maintain credibility in both industries or both professions, if you will, Mr. Speaker.

I see this as a tremendous day, and I am truly happy to support this bill in second reading. I hope it's a sign of things to come. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on behalf of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole to present Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007. As stated earlier, I do appreciate the support and the comments received at second reading of the bill.

Some questions have been posed by the hon. members; namely, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. He talked about the member of the board and their political affiliation, so we will check into that. He asked about the Farmers' Advocate office budget and if that was sufficient. Certainly, I believe it is in the fact that the Farmers' Advocate has helped us with Bill 29, but I will check into that. Thirdly, about the lending agencies and if they've been contacted: in fact, yes, they're the ones that were asking for this bill. But I would like to actually get the member detailed answers to these questions, so I'm going to send those over to him in written form. Also, I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Calder for his comments as well as Edmonton-Manning and Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 29 will allow financial institutions to lease farm equipment directly to producers. Farmers will have access to more potential sources for leasing and lease purchasing equipment for their operations. Farmers have requested more choice and competition in their leasing providers, and Bill 29 ensures that financial institutions will purchase the equipment through the Alberta dealer network. The dealer and distributor network will continue to provide warranty service and parts supply for the leased farm implement, so it is an issue of choice and possibly will help farmers in their quest for cost efficiency, et cetera.

Mr. Chairman, I know the hour is late, but I must tell one very brief, brief story. This past Saturday I attended the graduation at St. Anthony high school in Drayton Valley. A point came up there about a student who was approaching the guidance counsellor of the school and talking about what he wanted to do when he was finished school. He said to the guidance counsellor that he dreamed of making a million dollars in farming, like his father did. The guidance counsellor was quite surprised, so he said to the student: "Are you serious? Your father made a million dollars in farming?" The boy said, "No, he just dreamed of it, and I want to do that too."

Mr. Chairman, sometimes farming can be tough. Anything we can do to help our farmers out is appreciated, so I encourage all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 29. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I've previously indicated our support in second reading for Bill 29. Therefore, I call the question.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 39
Engineering, Geological and Geophysical
Professions Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Chase: Again, we're referred to as the opposition because we're not in government, but when we view good legislation, when the research has been done, when collaborative efforts have been made to encourage feedback, as was the case with the two organizations APEGGA and ASET, then we would not want to halt the legislation. In fact, we would like to see it put through. Therefore, I call the question.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 39 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report Bill 29 and Bill 39.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 29 and Bill 39.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, considering the progress we made this evening, I would like to move that we adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:49 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some important members of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Mr. Brad McManus has been acting chairman of the EUB for over two months now, and his handling of this challenging task deserves recognition here today. Taking the reins of an organization in an interim capacity, especially one as dynamic and robust as the EUB, is not something that many individuals are suited for. Thankfully, the culmination of his experiences, including that as a member of the Public Utilities Board of Alberta, has served him well in this position and has enabled him to step up in a leadership role during this time of transition.

Joining him today, Mr. Speaker, the talented Rich Jones, who was kind enough to make time to join us again today.

I would ask Brad and Rich, who are seated in the members' gallery, to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly quite a number of guests who are in the public gallery. I will proceed through the names fairly quickly because of the number. I'd like to introduce Indira Saroya, vice-president of the Alberta women's commission; Jagjit Singh Gill, president of the Gurdwara Singh Sabha; Darshan Singh Gill, former president of the Gurdwara Singh Sabha; Baljinder Singh Sandhu, president of Khalsa school; Jagjit Singh Sidhu, principal of Headway school; Reverend Patras Bhatti; Jagda Chanan; Surinder Deol, Punjabi Art Association; Sanjeevan Singh, Punjabi Art Association; Narinder Singh Bhui, president of the Gurdwara, Mill Woods; Paramjit Singh Ubhi, senior vice-president, Gurdwara, Mill Woods; Surinder Singh Hunjan, general secretary of the Gurdwara, Mill Woods; and Balbir Singh Kular, president of Mill Woods cultural society. I would ask the people I've named to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 10 outstanding community leaders. They are seated in the public gallery. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. Allow me to read their names. Dr.

Shahab Ahmad, director, Ahmadiyya Muslim Community, Edmonton; Gurbhulinder Singh Sandu, editor, Des Pardes Punjabi news; Kamal Loyal, director, Des Pardes Punjabi news; Joginder Singh Pannu, president, Gurdwara Guru Nanak; Skattar Singh Sandhu, chairman, Nagar Kirtan committee; Charan Singh Sagoo, chairman, Indo-Canadian liaison committee of Edmonton; Aman Gill, co-chair, Indo-Canadian committee of Edmonton and also a candidate for the Edmonton-Mill Creek riding for the Alberta Liberals; Dr. Prithviraj Kalia, president, Maple Leaf Writers Foundation of Edmonton; Sohail Quadri, president, Pakistan-Canada Association; Yogesh Ashta, editor, Wildrose Times; Vilmal Sharma, director, Wildrose Times. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of wonderful leaders from Mill Woods. The first is Chander Mittal, president of the Bhartiya Cultural Society; Amarjit Sohi, spokesman for the Mill Woods crime council and candidate for ward 6 in the civic election; Gurcharn Buttar, host, Radio Sur Sangam; Mewa Singh Phul, vice-president of the Ramgarhia cultural association; Jaspal Singh Bansal, treasurer of the Ramgarhia cultural association; Sital Singh Nanuan, spokesman for the Sikh Federation and president of the Mill Woods-Beaumont Liberal association; Rukhsana Amin, president of the Multicultural Society; Sofia Yakub, president, arts and crafts centre; Naimat Khan, president of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Community, Edmonton. I'd like them to rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for St. Albert it is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House today 11 members of the St. Albert Red Hat Society. This particular chapter is known as the SALSA chapter, which stands for St. Albert Ladies with a Sassy Attitude. If all 11 sassy ladies would please stand and accept the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two picketers from the Palace Casino strike, which is now in its 270th day due to this government's refusal to pass first contract legislation. Their names are Mark Mendoza and Jason Hnidan. Mark has been at the Palace Casino for two years in the slot department as a cashier. He enjoys outdoor activities like running and mountain biking. At the moment he's saving for school to be a civil engineer. Jason has been a poker dealer for two years and before that worked in computer sales and still enjoys working in that field. Accompanying them is bargaining committee member Richard Konkin and UFCW 401 member Tania Wiest. I would now ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

National Hunger Awareness Day

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to June 5 as the inaugural National Hunger Awareness Day, a day that raises awareness about a solvable problem. Alberta's farm and ranch families are proud of our province's productive agricultural sector and are doing their part in a province where agriculture is such a vital part of our economy and food supply. In our agricultural sector we are looking at our practices and are committed to ongoing work to develop innovative, sustainable agricultural systems. We are continuing to find ways that encourage greater local food supplies, that in turn make food purchases more affordable for Albertans.

Eliminating hunger will also be achieved through greater collaboration amongst organizations, businesses, and individuals. For example, in Edmonton, Calgary, Leduc, and Olds residents are participating in the Plant a Row, Grow a Row program, that encourages local gardeners to plant an extra row of produce for their local food bank. This program demonstrates how solutions can sometimes be found, literally, in our own backyard. Building on the idea of people helping people, this unique program provides a simple way to get involved and make a meaningful difference in your community. This approach not only contributes thousands of pounds of produce for local food banks but also helps build and foster community spirit. We hope that innovative approaches like this continue to grow in other communities across Alberta.

As people prepare for summer activities, this is a good time to remind everyone that the actions of even one person can help make a difference. All Albertans can play a part by volunteering in their community and donating food and funds during special event food drives.

I would like to acknowledge the efforts made by food banks and Albertans across the province in bringing awareness to this issue and working together for the less fortunate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Seniors' Week 2007

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to invite all Albertans to join me in celebrating Seniors' Week 2007 from June 4 to June 10. This special week is an opportunity to recognize our parents, grandparents, and older friends and neighbours for the difference that they make in our lives every day. One of these special people is my mom, who continues to amaze me with her wisdom, humour, and thought-provoking questions. My life is much richer because of her. I know that this is the case for many Albertans who think of a senior in their life when asked to name someone who has helped them to be happier, healthier, and smarter. Many families benefit from having a grandparent to help with their kids or provide advice to a mom or dad when they're in need of it most.

Alberta's seniors have made enormous contributions to our province. Their hard work helped to build this province into the vibrant place it is today, and their involvement in our communities will continue to benefit Albertans of all ages for generations to come.

I'm proud to be the chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, which leads the annual Seniors' Week celebrations. This year's Seniors' Week theme, Celebrate Seniors' Present and Future Contributions, recognizes that seniors are and will remain key to a strong and prosperous province. I encourage Albertans to participate in Seniors' Week events and to thank the seniors who have made their lives better. A calendar of events being held across the province is available on the Seniors and Community Supports website.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Nate Gartke

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege and honour to acknowledge an outstanding young Alberta student from right here in the capital region who recently claimed second place in the 2007 Scripps National Spelling Bee in Washington, DC. Nate Gartke is a 13-year-old grade 8 student from Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts, who lives in Spruce Grove. Nate out-spelled 284 out of 285 other participants from across Canada and the United States. He has truly demonstrated his tremendous aptitude when it comes to spelling. He advanced from regionally sponsored competitions in Canada to compete in the national competition in Washington, DC, as I mentioned before, winning second place on May 31.

This was Nate's first year participating in the Scripps National Spelling Bee, while many of his opponents were competing for their second, third, and even a fifth time, Mr. Speaker. Nate's preparation and training helped him outperform all but one of his opponents. After several hours of elimination rounds Nate was stumped by the word "coryza" in the 11th and 12th rounds. Please allow me to define that word for you. The word coryza is spelled c-o-r-y-z-a, and it is the swelling of the mucous membrane in the nose as caused by a cold.

Mr. Speaker, we can all take comfort in knowing that Alberta's education system is turning out wonderful students like Nate. This is highlighted by the fact that he is the second Alberta student in a row to place second in this prestigious competition. This young man is supported at all levels: by his school, his community, and his loving family. It's no surprise that Nate's parents, both of whom are educators, have raised a competitive, intelligent, and humble young man.

The Speaker: Well, all 82 members got that one right, didn't they? So I've got a test for you, hon. member. Honour: is it h-o-n-o-r or h-o-n-o-u-r?

We'll move on now to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Family and Community Support Services Association

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize an organization that's been on the Alberta scene for 40 years and has made a significant contribution. The Family and Community Support Services Association was crucial in shifting us from a palliative to a preventative approach to social services. It has been an advocate of decision-making at the level that issues impact. As specialties increase, FCSS remains committed to volunteerism as an opportunity to involve the community.

In Hebrew thought 40 years represents completion of a cycle. There were 40 days of testing in the wilderness, the 40 days and nights of the flood, and for 40 years the escaped slaves wandered as nomads. Each of these marks a transition: the end of one state and the beginning of a new one.

Alberta has changed significantly in 40 years. New citizens coming here do not have the type of in-house networks to turn to, in child care for instance, that earlier Albertans did. They have brought new networks, new challenges, new opportunities. Human need has not gone away. It has taken new and acute forms.

I say that our most important task is reframing how we look at human need. We have to recognize that those who look to us for help offer us ways to affirm our humanity in serving theirs. What results is mutual sharing, not a division into donors and receivers. This cannot be funded in the old way of having agencies coming to government begging us as in the moving Oliver! with a plaintive, "Please, sir, may I have some more?"

It's time to give the fifth sector resources to meet challenges proactively. It's time for a mentality of investment rather than bottom line. It's time to index budgets to rising costs. It's time to take the truth that we are our brothers' and sisters' keepers as a baseline and go beyond to recognize that in community when one suffers, all suffer, and as one benefits, all do. FCSS is an important part in bringing us to that awareness.

Alberta Water Quality Awareness Day

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, today is Alberta Water Quality Awareness Day. This is a province-wide program initiated by the Alberta Lake Management Society to increase awareness of watershed health and water quality through hands-on water testing. It is modelled after the World Water Monitoring Day that was created in 2002 to connect people personally with efforts to preserve their local water sources.

The test covers four basic measures for water quality, including temperature, dissolved oxygen, pH, and turbidity. Through this successful program participants are provided with free water quality test kits and are able to learn about water quality and to gather information on local waterways. They can then contribute their findings to the online database and watershed map. Participation in the test helps Albertans to gain an understanding of the health of their watersheds, to provide input into a province-wide snapshot of water quality, and to become involved in watersheds at a local level. The program improves public knowledge and appreciation that will in turn help lead to effective management.

Mr. Speaker, every year our population grows, and along with it comes increasing demands on our province's waters. Albertans recognize that water is our greatest resource and are determined to ensure that abundant, high-quality water will be ours to enjoy now and in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Royalty Review

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The results of the Royalty Review Panel will be a clear demonstration of whose side this government is on, and it looks like it's not the side of working and middle-class Albertans. At a time when energy companies are reporting record profits, the Minister of Finance has undermined the review, telling Albertans to lower their expectations. The minister is rightly concerned about the political fallout the Conservatives risk by once again putting the energy companies' interests first.

There's a direct link between our overheated economy, record oil profits, and the economic and social pressures facing working Albertans. The strong Canadian dollar, fuelled largely by energy exports to the U.S., means that the government spending for Albertans does not go as far as it used to. So, too, the energy-fuelled boom is quickly making many Albertans go bust as they face rising rents and a lack of affordable housing. Rather than raising royalties to offset these pressures on Albertans, the government is getting ready to protect already record-setting oil profits.

It doesn't take a genius to figure out why the Conservatives are so eager to keep the status quo on royalties. Just follow the money.

The Conservative Party and its leadership contestants have long been supported by energy companies. For example, EnCana, which posted a record-breaking profit of $6.5 billion in 2006, shared over $10,000 of that wealth with the PC Party and donated between $1,000 and $5,000 to the Premier's leadership campaign. The list goes on with a who's who of big energy companies who donate hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Conservative Party every year, and the list is not that much different on the Liberal side of the House.

While places like Alaska and Norway have captured significant value from their energy resources, the Conservatives have squandered our opportunity with low royalty rates. The price of oil has tripled since the current royalty regime was put in place. Texans are getting 25 per cent on royalties while Albertans get only 1 cent on the dollar for many projects.

head: 1:20 Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had a certain bill under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following private bill proceed with amendments: Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act. As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the proposed amendments. I request the concurrence of the Assembly in this recommendation.

The Speaker: Would all hon. members in favour of the report please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. It's carried.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm continuing with the tabling of petitions today. I am submitting 231 signatures, and the petition reads:

We, the undersigned residents . . . hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to:

1. Ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector, regardless of whether these workers are employed by government or by community-based or private providers;
2. Ensure these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive . . .
3. Improve employees' access to professional development opportunities (training and upgrading); and
4. Introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 162 signatures on a petition that reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income, fixed-income

Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those . . . hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee annual report for 2005-06. As members here would know, I'm privileged to chair this particular committee at this time. It's a committee that monitors care and promotes high standards for patients in Alberta's health care facilities. In my final sentence I'd just like to say thank you to the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who was the chair and steward of the committee at this time, '05-06.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of correspondence from a constituent, Brandi Roach, who's very concerned about the uncontrolled growth of Alberta's economy and notes that "the so-called 'price of prosperity' is not distributed equally and income levels simply cannot keep up with the rising cost of living." She's seeing that current circumstances are benefiting a very small, select group of people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today as chairperson of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. The first is a letter dated May 28, 2007, to Dr. David Marshall, president of Mount Royal College, requesting confirmation to attend the Public Accounts Committee on Tuesday, October 16, 2007, from 1 to 3 p.m.

The second letter I have is also dated May 28, 2007, and this is to Dr. Harvey Weingarten, president and vice-chancellor, University of Calgary. This is requesting confirmation to attend the Public Accounts Committee here on Wednesday, October 17, 2007, from 1 to 3 p.m.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from Herman Ansink, a constituent, who is writing to support antismoking legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings today. One is the program for the Northern Alberta Brain Injury kick-off breakfast and kick-off for Brain Injury Awareness Week, which I attended on Friday morning. Ed Hervey of our Edmonton Eskimos gave quite a moving speech at that particular event.

The other tabling is a program for the 75th birthday party of Father Bernie Gilliece of St. Dominic's Catholic parish in Edmonton-Manning. Four hundred tickets were sold, Mr. Speaker. Archbishop Emeritus MacNeil and many other honoured guests travelled from near and far. I told a bad joke, and a good time was had by all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling eight letters from Albertans who are concerned about the government's handling of the teachers' unfunded pension liability. They're disappointed that the government won't sit down and negotiate. There are Dawn Duffy, Henri Chauvet, Tanya Oppedisano, Anita Kilpatrick, Helen Ford, Patrick Duffy, Lee Boylan, and Paul Sevigny.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra's May-June 2007 Signature magazine. The magazine was given to me on Saturday, May 26, at the Winspear, when I attended the salute to the troops, an afternoon with the Canadian Brass. It was a wonderful event.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have six tablings today. The first set contains correspondence from the summer village of Norris Beach, the village of Longview, the city of St. Albert, and the municipal district of Lesser Slave River, indicating their top three infrastructure priorities and transportation. Like so many other Alberta municipalities funding for water treatment is their common concern.

My second set of tablings involves the municipality of Jasper, the town of Taber, and the village of Sangudo, which I described in great detail during the Infrastructure budget debate. Again, the common concern is provincial funding for waste-water management.

My third tabling is an e-mail from Fred Jack of Swan Hills, who notes:

I think it's great the Alberta government is looking at affordable housing. However, I think it must look at this concept wider and not just [look at] the lowest 10 per cent of income earners, and people who need an expensive housing and shelter.

My fourth tabling comes from Kathy L. Belton, who has an M.Ed. degree, who is the director of the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research at the University of Alberta. This tabling is a position paper on demerit points to increase compliance for occupant restraint. Kathy notes that "research suggests an [Alberta] savings of 478 million could be realized by increasing the usage of seat belts by motor vehicle occupants."

My fifth tabling is a series of essays from students James Michael Rinehart, Carrie Jance, Cameron Tompkins, and Andrew Osborne in support of my Motion 510, to lower the voting age to 16.

My sixth and final tabling, a letter, comes from a teacher in my constituency in support of my Motion 510 on lowering the voting age to 16 and my second, Motion 511, which calls for the establishment of a unified family court.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Health Professions Act, the College of Licensed Practical Nurses of Alberta 2006 annual report, the College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta 2006 annual report.

On behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, pursuant to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act, the Alberta ingenuity fund annual report 2003-2004, the Alberta ingenuity fund tri-annual report 2000-2003.

On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on May 15, 2007, Department of Infrastructure and Transportation 2007-2008 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the Minister of Education responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning on May 16, 2007, Department of Education 2007-2008 main estimates.

Responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on May 29, 2007, Department of Education 2007-2008 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce a group under the leadership of Mrs. Andrea Cooper. They are students from Belgravia elementary school, which is a fine school. I am a graduate of that school as is the Member for Edmonton-Centre. The group here includes 33 people in total, and the parent helpers coming along are Gwen Berdan and Yvette Maskell. I'd ask them to please rise – I believe they're in the members' gallery – and I'd ask all MLAs to give them a warm welcome.

Thank you very much.

1:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this House guests from the Sun Country Christian school in Bow Island. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Christine Barkman*, Mr. Terry Barkman; their group leader, Mr. Kelly Reimer; and parent helpers Mrs. Wendy Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Weldon and Brenda Reimer, Mr. and Mrs. Brian and Laura Thiessen*, and Mrs. Laura Isaac*. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Contribution to Premier's Leadership Campaign

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's campaign team sought a donation that the Premier now admits was unethical. He claims not to have known about it and is blaming another fundraising misstep, another stumble, on volunteers. Well, we'll be looking for some accountability. Section 602.34 of the Municipal Government Act requires commissions to prepare a financial information return on their financial affairs for the year and to submit this along with audited financial statements to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. My question is to that minister. Can the minister confirm whether this donation, a $10,000 expenditure that has nothing to do with its provincial mandate, was reported in these documents?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, at this time I cannot, but I will definitely find the information and bring it to this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to that.

The minutes of the commission reveal that the chief administrative officer recommended to the board of the commission that they donate $25,000 to the Premier's leadership campaign. The largest donations disclosed by the Premier were between $10,000 and $15,000, but the CAO recommended $25,000. I hope the minister will agree that political allegiances should not come into the CAO's recommendations. To the minister: will the minister admit that this recommendation for a political donation from the chief administrative officer of this commission was improper?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, what would be obvious from the presentation there is that that administrator knows what a disaster for Alberta a Liberal government would be. Obviously, in a leadership campaign there are literally hundreds of volunteers working across all of the many leadership candidates. They are involved in all the aspects: some fundraising, some doing mail-outs. It's a very busy time. At the end of the leadership campaign the Premier's campaign team sat down and reviewed all contributions to find out if there were any that were made improperly, and they were returned.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This commission in question has ambitious expansion plans and is in fact seeking reapproval of its licence from this government even as we speak, yet this donation clearly demonstrates that the commission is operating outside of its provincial mandate, which has nothing to do with political donations, spending money on helping the Premier win the leadership race rather than on waste management services for its shareholders. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Section 602.35 of the Municipal Government Act enables the minister to call for an inspection of a commission. Will this minister initiate a full inspection of this commission, and will he do it before its licence is renewed?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed in the authority of municipal affairs to be able to call an inspection on municipalities, also on commissions. As I answered in the first question, I am going to find out whether there was any donation made, what exactly did happen, and I will report.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Economic Strategy

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only a PC government in power for 36 consecutive years without any real vision for the future would start lowering expectations. Yesterday the Minister of Education spoke about the Tory government hitting a financial wall. He said, and I quote: Do the math. The big days of budgetary surpluses are behind us. End quote. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Doesn't this just confirm what so many people are now saying, that this Conservative government has failed – has completely failed – to manage Alberta's wealth?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how prudent financial planning, having a sustainability fund and having a capital fund and budgeting for cost overruns and balancing our budgets and paying off our debt and creating huge surpluses for Alberta, is a bad plan. We on this side of the House, quite frankly, think that spending money like it's supposed to be spent – carefully planning, saving, reinvesting – is all part of a great plan that's contributed to 36 years of very good government.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. You know, Mr. Speaker, this Tory government has received nearly $220 billion in oil and gas revenues since it was first elected if you adjust for inflation. As we know – and the Treasury president is confirming that – they've spent it as if there was no tomorrow. Well, tomorrow is arriving. The Education minister is voicing concerns about this government's ability to continue providing something as basic as elementary schools. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. When will this government deliver a serious long-term plan that ensures a sustainable financial future for this province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, while financial planning is critically important to any government, this party, this government also understands about the tremendous human aspect that a budget needs to include. That's why we spend more on health care than any other province. That's why we spend nearly $6 billion on education. That's why we spend billions on advanced education. We're continuing to work and to spread our economy to increase the revenue streams because it's not all about money. This province was built by hard work. They expect good money management, but they also don't want us to turn our backs on the rest of Canada as the Liberals would like to do by somehow inferring that all of the revenue should come to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, my question will be to the same minister. This government has, as I said, taken in about $220 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue since it was first elected, an unbelievable amount. Yet even though it is spending more per capita than any other province, which the Treasury president is so proud of, it can't even deliver basics like roads and schools. To the President of the Treasury Board: can this minister explain how it is that his government is spending so much but can't even deliver basics like schools?

Mr. Snelgrove: I honestly don't know where the hon. Leader of the Opposition lives. I think we have 76 schools under construction right now, 76. We have population that's growing out. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, in a population of students that hasn't grown, the increase in spending in education has been enormous, the highest funding education system in Canada. But when the people move away from the schools, it's really difficult to take their schools with them. We are in the middle of working with other ways, alternative financing and bundling, to put schools in the high-growth areas of the bigger cities, and we're able to do that because we have been prudent money managers.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Western Irrigation District

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears that the government of Alberta is now turning to the Western irrigation district for water for the Balzac project. For information purposes, this memorandum of understanding between the WID and the MD of Rocky View would be about plan D for a water supply. Now, an irrigation district's mandate is clearly for irrigation purposes. According to the district's 2006 annual report, the WID is part of the Alberta Crown and is listed as a tax-exempt government of Alberta agency. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: can the minister deny now that this government has made a secret deal to supply water for a horse-racing track? The Western irrigation district is, after all, under provincial control.

Mr. Groeneveld: No secret deal, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Irrigation Districts Act says that if an irrigation district wants to transfer part of its water licence, it has to hold a plebiscite and can only make the application for a transfer of the allocation if more than 50 per cent of the irrigators vote in favour. Of course, as usual with the Conservatives, there's a way out of that one. The minister can overrule the plebiscite requirement if the board establishes that there's no risk to water supply. It would be quite interesting to see the minister make the argument that providing the badly needed water for irrigation to a horse track, casino, and megamall is somehow in the public interest. To the same minister: will the minister make a commitment right now that he will allow the plebiscite to take place and that he will abide by the wishes of the irrigators in the municipalities serviced by the WID?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, that's a great question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder why he asked the first one if he knew that one. It's a little strange to me. I certainly will encourage the WID to hold its public meeting. They've indicated that they're going to do so. Why would we have a problem with them holding a public meeting to see what the irrigators feel about the whole project? The WID makes a strong argument that the transfer of water will be taken out of the efficiencies they have gained throughout the system.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, that was, I guess, an answer to part 1 of my excellent question or however he described it. But part 2 went like this: will the minister make a commitment right now to abide by the wishes of the irrigators in the municipalities serviced by the WID and not use section 11(6) to avoid asking the people what they want?

Mr. Snelgrove: It's amazing. He asks a question that is unanswerable, he puts an answer in that isn't real, and then he bases his supplementary question on his answer that he provided to a question that doesn't apply if there's no deal. You know, it's amazing. I don't know why they call it question period, because he's got all the answers, and he doesn't even understand the question.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Strength of Canadian Dollar

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are some very serious issues facing the people of this province, and I'd like to deal with one. The Minister of Education has claimed that the higher Canadian dollar means that the days of large budget surpluses are behind us. He goes on to say that Alberta may soon hit a revenue wall and tells school boards across Alberta to think about the hard facts of the funding they're likely to receive. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Is it the position of the government that the higher dollar means that Albertans need to lower their already modest expectations, or is his colleague the Education minister simply engaging in some clumsy negotiations with Alberta teachers through the media?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member, I'm sure, knows, for every one-cent increase in the Canadian dollar it actually costs Alberta taxpayers roughly $123 million. In our budget the Canadian dollar is set at 86 cents. In February of this year the Canadian dollar was 84 cents. Many of us said that perhaps 86 cents was even a little bit too high. Well, in reality what has occurred is that we've seen a 10-cent increase in the Canadian dollar in the last four months, with it supposedly going up to eventually being at par by the end of the year. It's what the experts are saying. This does have ramifications for our budget and, indeed, potentially could be as high as one and a half billion dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Then I ask the Minister of Finance why, given that most economists believe that the increased export value of oil from this province to the United States is a major cause for the rise of the Alberta dollar, this government didn't see it coming, why they set the estimate in the budget at an 86-cent dollar when they should have known that the Canadian dollar was going north at a real high rate precisely because of Alberta's export of oil to the United States?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, many of us would like to think it is an Alberta dollar, but it's actually a Canadian dollar. Despite what the socialist economists actually look at, one of the real reasons why we're seeing the strength of the Canadian dollar is not necessarily the strength of the dollar, but it's the falling of the U.S. dollar which in relative terms puts our dollar up. This is a multifaceted issue. It is not – and I respectfully say it is not – purely because of Alberta's exports. As a matter of fact, we've had higher exports at higher prices, and we have not seen the Canadian dollar act this way in the past.

Mr. Mason: I'm surprised to learn that we actually have had higher prices for our oil than in the recent period.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister if he doesn't think that it's high time to quit messing around with a phony task force that's looking at royalties and just raise royalties so that Albertans get a reasonable return on the resources which they own. Why don't you do it, Mr. Minister? Raise royalties now.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what we have committed to and what this Premier has committed to is looking at the royalties from a very holistic point of view. We appointed six very good, very dedicated, and very intelligent people to take a look at the royalty system in Alberta. What we must remember in Alberta is that there is not simply one royalty. There are very close to 50 to 100 different royalty patterns that are out there, depending on the type of well, depending on the type of research. The Royalty Review Panel has been charged with looking at all of them. They've been charged with taking a look at what is fair share for Albertans versus what will keep the economic activity in Alberta going, and that's what they're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Support for Seniors

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Seniors' Week, our chance to celebrate older Albertans who contribute so much to our communities. Our seniors worked hard to create the strong and prosperous province we all enjoy today. For some the very prosperity they created seems to have come with an unwelcome price. With the province's cost of living at an all-time high some seniors are finding it difficult to make ends meet. My question today is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. What is the government doing to help seniors deal with rising living costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to first express my appreciation to the many seniors in this province. We are very fortunate to have a tremendous heritage. We've been richly blessed with a number of seniors that have built this province, and I would like to say that we have one of the most comprehensive packages of anywhere in this country. Over $2 billion are actually provided for program services in one form or another to support the seniors in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest concerns that I've heard from seniors in my constituency is that they have a safe place to live. My second question is to the same minister. What is the government doing to ensure that seniors have a safe place to live in the communities that they helped to build?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first like to clarify, in case there was any misunderstanding, that over $2 billion are provided in various supports by this government. They go from Alberta seniors' benefit, the special-needs assistance, dental and optical. But with respect to helping them stay in place, the first priority is to let and to help seniors live in place. About two-thirds, 67 per cent, of seniors own their own home. It's in response to that that we've had the education property tax relief for those for the rising cost of property taxes. It's our home care policies that help them facilitate being able to stay in their home. That is our first and ongoing priority. Secondly, we look to: how can we help them stay within their own community? As their health and those things deteriorate, we . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My last question to the same minister: what is the minister doing to prepare the province to meet the needs of a growing seniors population?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The seniors demographics: not just in this province, clearly in this continent there is a growing population of seniors. One of the mandates from the Premier is the demographic planning commission, and we are consulting and working with seniors on how we plan for the next generation coming up, the growing numbers of people that will be seniors. It's with the groups like the Seniors Advisory Council, that's chaired by the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, that we do make sure we're getting out and speaking with seniors, consulting around the province to ensure that the programs are in place and designed specifically for the future needs as well. That will be part of the ongoing things we'll do with the demographic planning commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Police Services

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency the biggest concern that we have is serious crime. My constituents are extremely concerned about the number of shootings, acts of violence, and they demand answers. Our police service is scrambling to keep up with the increase in violent crime with the same number of officers that they had years ago and with the same level of funding. To the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. The city of Edmonton is spending $220 million this year for police. The provincial government is providing $11 million, or only 4.9 per cent. That's it. Can this minister explain how this level of funding is enough to fulfill this government's responsibility to provide safe communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct in that our funding level for municipalities remains at $16 per capita. It has increased over last year because, as we all know, the population is increasing. However, I also want to let the hon. member know that Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada that returns fine revenues to the municipalities. This year that number is over $99 million.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. In order to deal with the issue of quicker response times, the Edmonton Police Service has added a fifth division to Edmonton, instead of the usual four. What this means is that many beat officers, community policing officers, and street teams dedicated to fighting specific areas such as organized crime, gangs, are being disbanded to service the five districts. The EPS is being forced to make some very difficult choices. The Police Act states that the minister is responsible for ensuring adequate and effective policing in Alberta. This is not happening.

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't catch a question there, but I will comment that community policing is seen by the police of the Edmonton Police Service as an excellent way to get a pulse on its community, and I support those initiatives. They've decided to go from four regional police stations to five, and I believe that that's a great move.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I have asked questions on behalf of my constituents before, and the answers have not been adequate. Everything is not all right in my community. Our children are not safe. It's the responsibility of this minister to provide safe and secure communities. People should not be afraid to walk the streets, but they are. This government has underfunded the police for years, has failed to provide them with the resources they need, has failed to address the serious crime in our cities. Can the minister tell my constituents why he is not doing more to assist our police to maintain safe communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, in regard to community safety it's interesting that the majority of Albertans, including Edmontonians, feel very safe and secure in their communities. That being said, there's certainly more we can do, and there's more that we are doing. We are taking all kinds of initiatives to ensure that policing agencies work together in a more effective and efficient manner. We will continue to do that and to ensure that our communities do remain safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period the leader of the third party talked about the increasing value of the Canadian dollar compared to the U.S. dollar. He seemed to allude to the fact that he thinks it's because of Alberta's oil exports to the U.S. that our dollar is going up. Maybe his researchers should have told him that back in 2003 our dollar was 63 cents, and we exported just as much oil then as we do today. At any rate, this scenario may be good for Canadians who are travelling to the U.S., but Alberta's primary market for goods is the U.S., and a lot of our province's revenue is based on resources sold in U.S. dollars. To the Minister of Finance: have you done any revisions to the provincial budget to take into account this increased dollar?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have not done any revisions to this point in time. We will however be doing revisions when the first quarter comes out. The first quarter will be done the end of June, and we will be making those revisions. We automatically make revisions on the price of oil, the price of gas, the price of the dollar, potential interest rate changes. The whole economic picture is taken another look at four times a year, with the first quarter coming out towards the end September. So the answer is definitely yes. We will be looking at these prices, and it will change our revenue forecast.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The opposition seems to be calling question, question, and they don't realize that the private members on the government side also have 45 seconds to do our preamble before we ask questions of the other side. So, yes, we do have 45 seconds.

To the same minister: based on today's rising dollar, how much will the budget have to change as the Canadian dollar continues to go up? In other words, should we be expecting program cuts, Mr. Minister?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as I alluded to in an answer to an earlier question, for every 1 cent increase in the price of the Canadian dollar, we tend to lose $123 million annualized over the year. So what this generally means is that potentially if it's 10 cents, if it does indeed go up 10 cents as it has now, if it stays over the year, we're looking at about $1.2 billion that could be a difference. I will remind the Assembly, though, according to what the hon. member said, at $60 U.S. a barrel and a 65-cent dollar we receive $92.30 Canadian. At $60 a barrel and 94-cent dollar we receive $63.82.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will remind the opposition that Beauchesne 333 and 334 talk about keeping heckling to a minimum during question period.

Anyhow, to the same minister: should Albertans expect a tax increase to make up for this shortfall? In other words, how are we going to absorb this huge impact in our budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the excellent planning that this government has done, we have $7.7 billion sitting in a sustainability fund, which is used to cushion those temporary cycles. Whether or not this is a temporary cycle is very difficult to say, but if indeed it does stay up there, if indeed the dollar does hit par and stay at par, we will have to take that into consideration in future years. But due to the excellent, excellent planning of this and previous governments, we have $7.7 billion sitting there to ensure that these temporary cycles do not change our budgeting process.

The Speaker: Did I understand the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar correctly that he was quoting from "the good book"?

Rev. Abbott: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Foster Care System

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When children are placed in foster families, it is done with the understanding that they need special attention and care. Without careful intervention at-risk children can slip through the cracks and may experience an entire lifetime of hardship. This is why reports of a foster parent shortage in this province demand the immediate attention of this government. The number of foster parents in this province has declined consistently over the last five years. In Edmonton alone last year the number declined by over 12 per cent. To the Minister of Children's Services: how many children are waiting today for a foster family?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I can tell you – and I know that we talked about this in the last couple of weeks, going through estimates – that we will be spending a large focus of this year on campaigns looking for more foster parents. We know that if we can find more foster parents, we'll be able to better match the needs of the children with the capabilities of parents.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When foster families are unavailable, children are often placed in hotels. This means that they do not have access to the special attention, care, or even sense of normalcy that they need to grow. Even more shocking, many of the approved facilities used by the Department of Children's Services are in areas noted for crime, drug use, and prostitution. This is clearly not the best environment for at-risk children. To the Minister of Children's Services: do you agree that the placement of children in need of foster care in hotels is an unacceptable course of action?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say – and I know that I've mentioned this to the hon. member before – talking about the number of foster parents we have in this province, that we have a ratio in Alberta of 1.9 foster children per foster home, and that is lower than most other provinces in the country. With respect to hotel use – and I know that this has been raised as well in this House – it is a very rare occasion. It's exceptionally uncommon. Within the past year it has happened a few times only in extenuating circumstances, and we do provide one-on-one supervision for children by support workers when that does happen.

Mrs. Mather: Small efforts like the minister's long overdue public foster parent promotion campaign will not be effective unless the larger systemic problems are addressed. A lack of support for foster families is a major problem. Less than one year ago this ministry shelved new workload standards for social workers, yet agency staff, youth workers, and addiction counsellors report 15 per cent vacancy rates and high turnover rates. To the Minister of Children's Services: when will your department do something to meaningfully address the crisis in foster care in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that just last week I met with the Foster Parent Association. We had a great discussion. They actually are very pleased about this year's budget and the additional $7 million that we put into foster care. As well, they're very excited to move forward on I think it's $650,000 that we're putting towards raising awareness and a campaign to get more foster parents. I can commit to the House that I will continue to work very closely with the foster community and our foster association.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Property Tax Increases

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the property owners in Calgary received their city tax bills. The large increase in our city property tax will hurt and worry constituents. The increase in property tax also pushes up the cost of housing rent and also the cost of running businesses. So my question today is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Can the minister tell our constituents what the process is for the city tax increases and who is responsible for those increases?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities are responsible for municipal taxes, and those municipal taxes could increase or decrease depending on the services that are required, maybe the cost pressures on infrastructure or just related to the cost pressures for municipalities. I want to say that some individuals may receive an increase, and some may receive a decrease due to the increased city assessment. Therefore, because of value added their costs could go down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you. To the same minister: given that our Premier created the housing portfolio under your wing, and following the process you just explained, what measure can you or are you taking to alleviate the property tax increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government supports municipalities directly through municipal affairs, and some of the services provided they support with the $773 million, the $600 million a year through the municipal infrastructure program, this year $400 million through the municipal sustainability initiative. We do have a commitment to municipalities, and I want to say unprecedented in Alberta history, of $1.4 billion to support municipalities after 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My question is now to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Any upward move in property tax no doubt increases the cost of living and maintaining households, particularly for Albertans on fixed low incomes, such as seniors and Albertans with disabilities. Hon. minister, what measure can you or are you taking to help those individuals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rising cost of living, property taxes, all taxes clearly become a burden for those on fixed incomes. That's why in 2004 the province acted to cap at those levels the rate of education property tax increases: so that seniors do not pay any more than what they paid in 2004 or, if they purchased their home at a later date, that level of education property tax. One interesting development that the city of Edmonton, actually, is working on through our Alberta seniors' benefits program: they're rebating a portion of their taxes, $63. That is working in conjunction with our department through the Alberta seniors' benefits program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Lottery Retailer Practices

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Solicitor General said that he hadn't yet seen the results from the Western Canada Lottery Corporation's internal lottery retailer practices audit, but he told the House that everything seemed fine. To the minister: if you haven't seen the results from this initial review, how can you be so confident that everything is fine?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have not seen anything in writing from the WCLC in regard to their initial investigation, but they did indicate that things were looking quite well in Alberta. We have done some work internally ourselves, and indications are that the winnings, as I indicated yesterday, of retail owners in our province are at an average which is acceptable. However, based on the findings of other provinces, which I indicated yesterday, WCLC has asked Ernst & Young to continue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The results that the minister is referring to were actually from a previous three-year study and not this one that we're talking about. Now, yesterday the minister told the House that the WCLC has decided to take a more in-depth review of Alberta's lottery systems. The minister didn't ask, and the WCLC did not voluntarily release the information. My question is: if all is on the up and up, according to the minister, why in fact did the WCLC commission Ernst & Young, as he just said, to investigate deeper at considerable cost to the taxpayers? It would make absolute sense that he would ask to see the results first, before a step like this is taken.

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that to ensure that the integrity of the lottery industry in Alberta is where we want it to be, the WCLC has requested Ernst & Young to take a more in-depth look, and that's what they're doing. When those results are in, we will share them with Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the risks involved and the gravity of the allegations that retailer fraud may be as costly and as damaging in this province as it is in other Canadian jurisdictions, will the minister instruct the WCLC to follow the lead of B.C., Ontario, and the Atlantic provinces and make the review findings public? He doesn't seem to have any issue with this. Will he instruct them to put it on the website, as those jurisdictions do?

Mr. Lindsay: As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, when we get the results of the study, we will be making them public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Child Care Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A comprehensive child care strategy is an integral part of supporting families, promoting women's participation in the workforce, and developing a flexible and efficient labour force. As the Minister of Children's Services knows, the number of child care spaces in the province has dropped in the last decade despite an increasing demand for services. It's no coincidence that this drop followed this government's decision to terminate the operating grants program for child care facilities. When will the minister commit to restoring operating grants to child care centres?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that we are very serious about ensuring that we have access to affordable and quality child care. A lot of time and effort, based on consultation with the stakeholders in the province, has been spent on implementing all kinds of initiatives that will help us reach that objective, and I'm going to continue working with those stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try to get the minister's attention on the core issue of operating grants to centres again. Many not-for-profit child care facilities allocate as much as 85 per cent of their budgets to pay for salaries, yet it is not enough. Lack of core funding for child care creates a downward pressure on staff wages and leaves hard-working child care providers subsidizing the cost of our child care system. No wonder that this very important service sector is facing problems with recruitment and retention. To the minister: how can the minister expect to create enough new spaces to keep up with the demand when she won't provide operating grants to help existing facilities to remain open and to retain and recruit staff?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we believe in supporting the parents, and there are a number of ways in which we are doing that. We have just increased our subsidies for parents. We have just increased wage top-ups for staff. Talking with stakeholders, we know that the number one issue that we're talking about with child care and the only way that we can impact capacity in this province is to attract and retain staff. That's what the bulk of our initiatives are based on.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the minister's current consultation process – and we referred to this several times in this House over the last couple of weeks – is merely a tinkering at the edges and doesn't get to the core issue of child care in the province. Licensing protocols are important, but the real issue is funding. Why won't the minister admit that all Albertans benefit from having a high-quality child care system and establish stable operating grants to make it happen?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, our funding has increased dramatically in the last couple of years. In fact, I think it's doubled just over a period of a couple of years, and this year alone we've increased it another $16 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Forest Fires

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's forest fire season blazed to life on the weekend when Albertans learned that a large wildfire had developed near Suncor Energy's oil sands plant near Fort McMurray, destroying thousands of hectares of forest. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister please update the Assembly on the status of this massive forest fire and whether it poses any danger to nearby communities or oil sands developments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My latest information is that the wildfire has grown to about 10,000 hectares and is not yet under control. We have 120 firefighters there who are working on this. We have confidence that they will get it under control. Their job has been complicated by the hot, dry weather, but the weather is expected to change, and we expect that the cooler weather and, possibly, some rain will help us bring it under control. The good news is that no community nor any oil sands infrastructure is threatened by this fire. In fact, it's actually moving in the other direction.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental question is also directed to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Albertans are known for their generosity. In the last few weeks our province was gracious enough to lend more than 200 firefighters to Ontario and Quebec to battle blazes there. It was a gesture that I'm sure was certainly appreciated in those two provinces, but it begs the question: has that act of generosity depleted Alberta of crucial resources that could be fighting this massive fire in Fort McMurray?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to reply to that question. The answer is no. Our generous loan of our firefighters to Quebec and Ontario does not pose any risk to the province of Alberta. We have approximately 580 firefighters that are on call during the fire season, and we have a reserve, if you like, or a bench strength of another 2,000 that we can call upon. We did send 80 firefighters to Ontario on the May long weekend. They've all returned. The 120 that we sent to Quebec two weeks ago came back on Monday, and 40 of those have already been redeployed to the Fort McMurray fire. So I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all these young, hard-working Albertans for their good work.

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, my final question is also to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Albertans expect his ministry to be prepared to fight blazes like the one near Fort McMurray as well as others that can pop up at any time anywhere. Alberta is known for its drastic climate changes. Last year his ministry also helped when grasslands in southeast Alberta had major wildfires. Can he tell us what preparations his department makes to minimize the wildfire risk to all Albertans in all of Alberta and how they ensure that wildfires are responded to with maximum emergency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to report that our firefighting crews are well trained and prepared to fight fires this summer. We have a system of moving our firefighting crews and also our air tankers around the province based on the probability of wildfires in one region or another. That puts them closer to where fires are likely to break out and thus minimizes the response time.

I'd like to remind Albertans that they can all assist in fighting fires by looking at our FireSmart program on the SRD website. Also, if you spot a fire, you can call 310-FIRE to report any wildfires.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, this is Seniors' Week, and it's quite appropriate that we've had many questions pertaining to seniors. They have contributed to the economic growth and prosperity of this province and expect that that contribution would be recognized. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. How does this government expect retired seniors, most of whom are on fixed incomes, to keep up with the rising costs associated with living in Alberta?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I too, as mentioned before, am appreciative of the seniors of this province for the great work that they do and the contribution they make. That is why our program design was more tailored to assist those in the highest of need. As we have a growing population of seniors, I think that's going to continue to have to be the focus of where we look, those in the greatest of need, to ensure that we provide the supports for them rather than trying to see if we could do something for all of the seniors, some of whom may not require that assistance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question would be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Finding affordable housing is a constant struggle that weighs heavily on seniors. The constant stress and insecurity about something as basic as home can aggravate both physical and mental illness. Will the government commit to conducting a comprehensive assessment of the health impacts of the policies before they're implemented?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's a very interesting concept. I'd certainly be willing to look at that concept. I think that's what we need to do, quite frankly, with respect to all of our policies as we move forward and look at reviewing the health status of Albertans and making sure that individuals can take responsibility for their personal health but have the necessary supports in place to be able to do that and, as we've talked about in this House before, looking at the continuum of care that's necessary to either support a senior or any individual, for that matter, who needs assistance in their own home versus the continuum of care through to living in a long-term care facility. Any policy that we bring forward from a health perspective needs to be examined in terms of how it impacts an individual's ability to take care of themselves and to use the supports in the system necessary for a healthy life.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Ms Pastoor: I'm finished. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Keystone Pipeline Project

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we are sitting here today, the National Energy Board is reviewing a proposal to construct a pipeline between Alberta and the U.S.A. for the purpose of exporting raw bitumen. This bitumen is to be refined and upgraded in the U.S. and possibly sold back to Canada as a value-added product. Unless the Minister of Energy has some additional facts to contribute, at face value this proposition does not seem to be in the best interest of Albertans and Canadians. My first question to the Minister of Energy: since diversifying Alberta's economy, promoting value-added production in Alberta, and expanding Alberta's labour opportunities are this government's priorities, why do we consent to exporting our unrefined, raw resources?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Initially what I have to say is that this government has a plan to build a stronger Alberta. Getting the best value from our resources involves more than just upgrading or refining. What makes the best sense for Albertans is to have the flexibility of a basket of products, a portfolio of resources, including everything from raw bitumen to synthetic crude to petrochemicals and transportation fuels. It's important that we get the pipelines to the best markets for these products: for our bitumen, for other products that we ship out of Alberta. To be clear . . .

The Speaker: I think we'll ask the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. One could then argue that Albertans are getting the dirty end of the stick, where the environmental footprint of extraction of raw resources stays in Alberta, but the U.S.A. benefits from high-skilled employment opportunities and the value-added of the product refined in the U.S.A. What is the minister's comment on that?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, we certainly do believe in increasing Alberta's capacity to upgrade and refine, and we will see a significant increase in these activities in coming years. But, at the same time, these operations are very carbon intense and require large amounts of resources, including electricity and water. More upgrading means more greenhouse gas. You have to look at the carbon intensity and environmental impacts of both – of both – recovery and upgrading.

Mr. Speaker, my comment with respect to the member is this. You've got one foot in the canoe and one foot on the dock. The boat is leaving. Make up your mind.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, it sounds like I'm doing splits, Mr. Speaker. I hope it doesn't hurt.

To the Minister of Energy: will the minister submit the Alberta government's position on this issue to the National Energy Board or intervene at the hearings?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, we already have. Alberta has intervened in this process to ensure that we get all of the information available about the Keystone project and what it means to the energy industry and to Albertans. On the issues of bitumen export and upgrading we will continue to intervene and represent the best interests of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 82 questions and answers.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board to supplement an answer to a question raised to the Premier yesterday.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Premier, the Premier committed to confirm that what he believed to be true was that the return of the donation had happened, and I'm happy to confirm it was returned to Beaver regional management, as the Premier had stated yesterday.*

The Speaker: That allows for a supplementary question from the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then my supplementary question would be: seeing as how the donation was made about six months before the money was returned and the cheque was cashed in the interim, what gives with all that? Why not just give it back right off the bat if, as the Premier said, it was unethical?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I think we've explained the process and how large of an undertaking it is to run a leadership campaign, and as soon as the Premier was made aware of the donation, it was returned.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, a number of members have already commented that this is Seniors' Week in the province of Alberta, and as we're in the first few days of June, I'd just draw to the attention of all members the other weeks and days this month so that nobody feels left out.

June is also ALS Awareness Month, or Lou Gehrig's Disease Awareness Month. We've already heard a statement with respect to Brain Injury Awareness Month. It is also Recreation and Parks Month. It's also National Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus Awareness Month. It's also Stroke Awareness Month. We've heard one statement with respect to that. May 28 to June 3 is also National Sun Awareness Week. June 1 to June 8 is Water Safety Awareness Week. June 3 was National Cancer Survivors Day. June 4 was International Day of Innocent Children Victims of Aggression. June 4 to June 10 is also Canadian Environment Week. June 5 is World Environment Day. June 6 is Clean Air Day. June 6 to June 9 is Canadian skills competition, trades awareness week. June 8 is World Oceans Day. June 14 is World Blood Donor Day. June 17 is World Day to Combat Desertification and Drought. June 20 is World Refugee Day. June 21 is National Aboriginal Day. June 23 is United Nations Public Service Day. In la belle province June 24 is Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day. June 26 is International Day Against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking. June 26 is International Day in Support of Victims of Torture. June 27 is Multicultural Day.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Deputy Chair: The committee has before it three departments today: Infrastructure and Transportation; Employment, Immigration and Industry; and Seniors and Community Supports. Today is also the New Democratic caucus day. What we shall do is we'll begin now. The first hour we'll allocate to Infrastructure and Transportation, the second hour to Employment, Immigration and Industry, and the third hour to Seniors and Community Supports.

Hon. members of the ND caucus, you will have to indicate to me whether you prefer to use the 10-minute time slots. Is that what you'd prefer? Okay. We'll use the 10-minute time slots and go back and forth between your caucus members and the minister.

I also want to welcome the support staff that are here with the minister and advise them that should they need a glass of water or a cup of coffee, just raise your hand, and one of the pages will come by and get that for you.

Infrastructure and Transportation

The Deputy Chair: We'll begin with the minister introducing members of his staff and giving his opening remarks.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to appear before the Committee of Supply once again to represent Infrastructure and Transportation.

I would like to start by introducing the members of my department's executive committee and some other officials that are accompanying us today. To my left here is my deputy minister, Jay Ramotar. To my immediate right is Winnie Yiu-Young, senior financial officer, and Mr. Rob Penny, assistant deputy minister of policy and corporate services. Up in the balcony we have Shaun Hammond, assistant deputy minister, transportation safety services; Bob Smith, assistant deputy minister of the properties division; Barry Day, assistant deputy minister, capital projects; Angela Paterson, director of financial planning; Patti Van Mechelen, budget analyst; my executive assistant, Warren Chandler; and my communications director, Jerry Bellikka. We did find a booster seat for him today so that we could all see him.

Quite simply, roads and infrastructure play a critical role in the success of our province and in Albertans' quality of life. To be sure, the ability to move people and goods safely and efficiently is vital to our prosperity. However, the fact is that Alberta's population has increased by more than half a million people over the last five years. During that period at least 300,000 more cars and trucks have been added to our highways and roads, and this has clearly taken a toll. There has never been a greater need in our province for well-designed, efficient, and safe highways, bridges, and infrastructure.

As Alberta continues to grow, my department is helping to address the challenges associated with this growth. The construction and maintenance of roads is directly related to our government's priorities of managing growth pressures and providing safe communities. The Alberta government is making a huge commitment through the capital plan with a three-year target of more than $18 billion. This level of investment has never been seen before in our province. In fact, on a per capita basis it's the highest in the country.

The estimates I am presenting today are clearly tied with the capital plan. For the '07-08 fiscal year the ministry's estimates to be voted will be approximately $3.2 billion for expense and equipment inventory purchases, nearly a 16 per cent increase from '06-07 forecast. Of the $3.2 billion, $372 million is for noncash items such as amortization, nominal sum disposals, and consumption of inventories. When the noncash is excluded, the ministry has a $2.8 billion spending target for programs. Four hundred and twenty one million dollars are primarily for highway rehabilitation and maintenance. Approximately $297 million will go towards provincial highway maintenance and systems and $124 million to highway rehabilitation.

More than $1 million will go towards the Transportation Safety Board. Almost $41 million will go into transportation safety services to fund things like vehicle and driver safety programs, monitoring of the commercial carrier industry, and safety initiatives, including implementation of the new traffic safety plan, which is one of my department's key mandates.

The traffic safety plan is aimed at reducing the number of people killed or injured on our roads. In 2005 a total of 466 people died in traffic collisions in Alberta. That same year there were more than 124,000 collisions. These are disturbing statistics, and we are working to change driver attitudes and save lives. Part of our plan involves key initiatives to help prevent collisions such as building safer roads, enhancing enforcement of traffic laws, and educating Albertans about traffic safety.

A key element of the ministry's program expense is capital support to municipal infrastructure. More than $1.2 billion in grants will be provided to Alberta municipalities in '07-08. These grants help municipalities fund their priority infrastructure projects. In most cases the decisions are local. Using this money local governments can direct funding at projects, including roads, bridges, public transit, water and waste water, and emergency services.

Over the next three years the ministry will provide $422 million for the Water for Life strategy, of which $103 million is specifically for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo; $159.3 million was approved in '07-08, of which $35 million is for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo; $174 million was approved for '08-09, $34 million of that was for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo; $88.3 million approved for '09-10, $34 million of that for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo.

Also included in the ministry's voted expenses category is $360 million for government operations. This funding enables the ministry to maintain the day-to-day operations and maintenance of government-owned properties as well as leases, the Swan Hills Treatment Centre, and capital and accommodation projects.

Funding for natural gas rebates in '07-08 is budgeted at $477.3 million, a $114 million increase over the '06-07 forecast. This reflects the projected increase in natural gas prices.

The ministry's capital investment budget will be nearly $1.5 billion in '07-08, an increase of $549 million over the '06-07 forecast. Approximately $201 million will help fund several major projects such as the Royal Alberta Museum's renovation and expansion, the first phase of the construction of Edmonton's new remand centre, and the Brooks crop research greenhouse. In addition, Infrastructure and Transportation will invest in provincial highway systems and the strategic economic corridors: $626 million is allocated for the strategic economic corridor investment initiative, including the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads and the north-south trade corridor.

I want to take this opportunity to clear up any possible misunderstanding about the cost of construction on the Anthony Henday Drive south-east in Edmonton. The '05-06 provincial budget provided $83.3 million for this P3 ring road, but the Infrastructure and Transportation annual report for that period shows an expenditure of $118 million. The additional $34.7 million recognizes the actual amount of work completed by the end of March '06. The $34.7 million does not represent a cost overrun as the cost of this project is fixed. This amount will be reduced from the future budgets to stay within the project cost.

To continue with program expenses: more than $385 million will be used for provincial highway systems. This includes constructing and enhancing provincial highways and bridges so we can continue to meet the transportation needs of Albertans and others who drive through our province.

Infrastructure and Transportation plays a key role in managing Alberta's growth pressures. We are also looking ahead to what Alberta's infrastructure needs will be many years down the road. Through careful planning and strategic investment in key projects, we can ensure that Alberta continues to be an economic leader in Canada.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to ask questions of the minister and would like to welcome his assistants here this afternoon. The Alberta New Democrats, as you know, have been very concerned – and I'm sure the minister has been concerned as well – about the infrastructure of our province not keeping pace with the increase in population, the increase in our GDP, and just the overall expansion of the province.

I realize that your job is very difficult, but, Mr. Chair, I'm also concerned that for every month or quarter that we delay in building certain projects, the cost of those projects with inflation and other pressures just adds to the project to the point where we have to cut back or defer projects even further. I'm sure the minister and his department have been calculating this.

So my first question would be to ask if they've done a cost projection back five years, to say: how much more are we paying for some of these infrastructure projects because of the inflationary pressures that we find ourselves in now? We've kind of painted ourselves into a corner, so to speak, with some of these projects. Certainly, I'm sure that the Infrastructure department has some going back five years to determine how much more we're paying as a result of the inflationary pressures that we find ourselves today.

Of course, you know, while perhaps it's a bit of a crass way to put it, there is a measure of truth when you say that you build public works projects when there might be more of a lull in the economy. This is just an historical way of dealing with things, right? You say, "Okay, the economy is pulling back a bit here," so the government inserts capital projects to keep the economy going. It's a good time to do it, and you might even save some money off of it as well.

You know, we missed that opportunity, Mr. Chair. That's what I'm saying. In the past five years, with this sort of ideological stubbornness to not pay, now we do have to pay because, of course, inevitably you do need to build roads and infrastructure and schools and everything, and we're kind of stuck with a considerably higher bill. I would like to know what percentage more of a higher bill, in fact, have we been stuck with here in infrastructure projects in the province of Alberta.

As well, further to that, I'm just thinking of what you've been saying to me here. Now, we know that perhaps with the P3 project with the Calgary ring road we kind of hit a good bit of luck there, really, because, as you've said, these guys got stuck with a much lower contract bill, and then the inflationary pressure kicked in, and there we go. I just want my second question to be to ensure what sort of long-term contract we have with the maintenance of that Calgary ring road. Does it have provisions in place for the company or companies to add costs into the maintenance of the Calgary ring road so that they can defer their costs?

After all, they're going to have to make a dollar from the whole thing. They're not just going to take the loss. If they do take the loss, is there a provision to ensure that, you know, the contract isn't left out to dry somehow? If they really did take a loss in the tendering of this contract, then are we not at risk of the providers to perhaps pull out? They would say: "Well, this is just too much. We can't take a bath like this." So that's another question that I have.

Certainly, as New Democrats, we want to make sure that everything is transparent in regard to the public/private partnerships that the government might enter into. So we were just wondering, as another question, if we could make it as a matter of course that a public comparator is always done with these major projects and as a matter of course that that is always disclosed so we don't have to have that difficulty. Of course, we knew you had it. You gave it to us, and that's great. But if we could build that into this in a systemic way so that we can always know straightaway and we'll say: "Here we go. Here's the piece. Here's the P3 contract. Here's the public service comparator, and that's how the choice was made," we would appreciate that very much, and I'm sure the public would as well.

This isn't my department as such, but I found it intriguing that as part of Infrastructure you have the natural gas rebate as a line item in your department. You deal with a lot of money it seems, and I can appreciate that as well. Certainly, with the natural gas rebates you must build that into your budget, and you must also have a projection for where the natural gas prices are going to go over the next twelve months. So I'd like to ask if you could give us that information of how you are budgeting for the rebates and where you think that natural gas price is going to go here in the next fiscal year.

Of course, Albertans have come to really count on those rebates. When the rebates kick in, it becomes a media story. Right? "The rebates are in today" sort of thing. You know, it has become part of our energy-consumption culture in the province, so I'd like to know how much you are projecting to spend on that next year. I think that would be quite revealing.

Just as a final note for our first round here, I know that there was a great folderol with the municipal funding for Calgary, and straightaway the mayor of Calgary came back and said: well, because of the perceived shortfall, we're going to cut our LRT projects. You know, I found it very disconcerting how flippantly and how quickly the mayor just said, "Well, that's the first thing to go" as if that is less of a priority than something else. Of course, with the change in the way we have to use energy in this province and the way the cities are both growing – Edmonton and Calgary and others as well – I'm very concerned about the expansion of the LRT.

We have an expansion project now here in Edmonton. I want to make sure that there is a guaranteed commitment from Infrastructure and from this government that we're going to continue to expand lines in Calgary, to build the west line in Calgary, and we're not going to let the vagaries of some political squabbling get in the way of building an expanded LRT. I would like to ask as well if the ministry is indeed committed to the expansion of the east/west line of the LRT here in Edmonton, again an absolutely essential project considering how fast we're building now.

You must build your train lines at the same time as the buildings of your city are being built, as the real estate is being committed so that you can commit to nodes of where the railway stations are and rebuild, sort of, the model of your city, quite frankly, around the train lines that you decide to plan on. That's a commitment to an east/west line in Edmonton and a commitment to the original funding to the Calgary west LRT line as well. I would like to know just to what extent the government is planning for that in a long-term way within the Infrastructure budget.

Finally, the last comment I would like to make, something that makes me sound like a municipal politician, is that the state of the roads in municipalities is quite a big deal. I know that everyone here drives on Edmonton roads at least a little bit, and you know that if you get past the point of rehabilitation and a road is not maintained properly, it really has to get redone. I know that this budget talks about kilometres of highway to be rehabilitated, but I'm just asking about capital commitment to the urban road systems, if Infrastructure has built into their budget some projections on how much the municipalities need to not just rehabilitate but expand their road systems to make the grade. I know that this is a municipal issue, but then a good portion of road development is funded through Infrastructure through the municipalities.

Certainly, Edmontonians are very concerned about roads crumbling around them. You know, it creates practical problems but also sort of an irony on a higher level because the economy has never been functioning at a higher level than it is today. This is a boom of unprecedented proportions. But then the population looks out at certain infrastructure things and says: well, this has never been worse. So the contrast, I think, creates a problem in a higher sense. People say: if this is the best of times, why have these things never been worse? Municipal roads in the city of Edmonton and to a lesser extent in other municipalities would fit into that category.

Thanks.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, hon. member, for all of the great questions you're coming up with. I do have to admit that we do have an awfully hard time trying to keep up with the growth that we have in this province. I don't think anybody could have predicted as huge a growth as we've been having here and how strong our economy has been, and with all of that come all the challenges of the inflation problems that you've been speaking about and what those costs are going to be.

But let me tell you that we're going to do the very, very best we can to try to catch up in our backlog. It's not just costs we're going to have a problem with there, hon. member. We're also going to have a problem with capacity, I'm sure. There will be times that we will actually have the money and could probably do more roads and probably won't have the capacity.

You were talking about: how much more is it really going to cost? Did we go back five years? I think probably the department did. They've got some figures they've passed on to me. But I like to believe that we're a department moving ahead, not looking back. We want to move ahead, and we want to get things done. I will tell you that over the next five years there are some large increases coming. In the year '07-08 our prices went up: for buildings, 18 per cent is what we believe we're going to pay more for this year; highways, 25 per cent. In '08-09, both of them, another 15 per cent increase. In '09-10, 10 per cent on buildings; 7 per cent on highways. In '10-11, 10 per cent on buildings; 7 per cent on highways. In '11-12, 7 per cent on buildings; 5 per cent on highways.

Because my people beside me are so efficient, I'll give you a little backwards stuff also. I want them to be much more efficient moving ahead, of course. When we move back from '07-08 to '06-07, there was a 20 per cent increase there. If we move back another year, there was 15 per cent. From the '04-05 it only went back 5 per cent, and the '03-04 only went back 5 per cent. So now I've given you a 10-year span.

You were also talking about what we do on our ring roads when we go about doing the comparator. We will actually do that on every single job that we even consider as a P3. We will never, ever build a P3 in Alberta without doing the due diligence, doing the cost comparator, and making sure that it's a good deal for Alberta taxpayers.

You were also asking about: can they increase us anywhere along over that 30 years? There is a clause in the contract tied strictly to maintenance and inflation rate, so it can't be a made-up number or anything else. When we have those inflations going up, they can increase a little bit tied to the inflation rate. Basically, what we say we have is a 30-year warranty because they have to pay all of the major rehab. Most roads in Alberta are constructed with about a 17-year lifespan expectancy to them. That's what they're engineered for. This is a 30-year program, so they may end up having to rehab that road at least twice – once for sure, possibly twice – before we get it back. That's where, actually, a lot of that saving comes into play and why we talk so highly of P3 situations.

We have full intentions of carrying on with ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary until they're completely done as you were asking earlier. We're going to go into the process here right away for some of the other legs that are left to do. We'll get a conventional market comparator done, and we'll also look at it the P3 way. As you know, it's like anything else. On the last one in Calgary what was so good, if you looked at what I tabled yesterday, is that the amount of money between those bids, how much money there was left on the table from the low to the high. That shows how competitive it is.

That also is a reason why we have to be very, very careful on what information we give out as far as how the comparator was done and everything because it actually will take away our competitive edge if all of the contractors know how each other priced that contract. It actually would take away some competitive edge. We want you to know what all the figures were as long as it's not releasing their private information and what they used, so their competitors don't know how they go about doing their tender. That's pretty important to us, and it's really important to them because they come to us and say: don't tell these other guys how we've done this. They're not talking about our opposition; they're talking about their opposition within the marketplace.

You were talking about whether or not we would make sure that the LRTs were done. It's really not any of our type of business, but I'll tell you how I believe it should be looked at. We probably give more grants out on a per capita basis to municipalities than any other jurisdiction in Canada. We have a lot of grant money, whether it's AMIP or CAMRIF or the new deals for cities, the gas tax. As I said in my notes, there's over $1.2 billion in grants alone that goes out to municipalities; it basically flows through out of my department.

That's not counting the new $400 million that came out this year. Yes, there were some strings to that one, but some of these others: there aren't a lot of strings there. They can use that money for their infrastructure anywhere they want. It's their choice on what their priority is, whether it's an LRT line or an interchange or any of those different infrastructure things they need to build. We're here to try to help them as much as we can, but there are all of those grants in place for them to use that money to do that job with.

You also talked about the gas rebates. Really, the gas rebates: we're just a deliverer of the program. The Minister of Energy puts the price in on the estimate of what he feels the prices are going to be at the time, and then that's how much money comes to us. I do know, though, that they felt that our gas prices were going to be high this year and drop in the following two years. It's the estimate that they gave us. In '07-08 natural gas prices are projected to increase by 80 cents to $6.75; the following two years prices are expected to decline, falling to $6.25 by '09-10.

I think that I've covered all your questions. I think I got all four or five that you'd asked in there. I'm just trying to read the notes that I got down. Did I get them all?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Pretty good job.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Hon. minister, if there are any questions that you may have missed, you can submit the answers in writing.

Mr. Ouellette: I'd just as soon get it over with now. I have lots of work to do later without finding answers.

Mr. Martin: We want to give you some writing lessons. Maybe we can do that, Mr. Chairman.

There are a number of areas, of course. I want to talk again generally about what we might call the infrastructure deficit. I don't envy you in an overheated economy – I call it an economy on steroids – trying to keep up. The impact is dramatic in infrastructure; it's dramatic in housing; it's dramatic in health care, education; you name it. But we have to deal with it. That's a reality. If we're not going to put the foot on the brake a little bit up in Fort McMurray, then we have to deal with it, and it's not cheap. There's absolutely no doubt about that.

I notice some of the figures just in highways that I read, and maybe the minister can comment if these are correct. The figures that I've seen are that by year's end 17 per cent of Alberta's 30,860-kilometre highway network, more than 5,000 kilometres, are in serious shape and need to be fixed. You know, the potholes. We talk about Edmonton. That seems to be a big issue, but I'm talking generally around the province. I'm told that by 2009-2010 that is projected to hit 21 per cent. So even just in roads, and that's only a small part of the minister's department. I don't know how we keep up with that, frankly. I think we're going to have to look at what we're doing.

I guess the question flowing from that is that the department must have sort of a short-term and long-term estimate about what I would call the cumulative deficit across the province whether it be roads, whether it be bridges, whether it be schools, or whatever. In other words, how serious is this problem, and could they give us that sort of figure? People bandy around figures. I'm not sure. I've heard $20 billion. I don't know, but the department's best estimates and how they see them beginning to deal with this. I know that we start in this budget with more money, and the minister has alluded to that, but when we're playing catch-up, it's very difficult. So I think it's important for us in the Legislature here, I think it's important for the people of Alberta to know exactly what sort of problem we have here.

As I say, the cumulative deficit and then what the department sees. I don't know if it's five years, 10 years, or how we're going to deal with this because you can never catch up because as the minister well knows, the longer you wait, the bigger the bill becomes down the way, right? So if we don't fix it today, and we wait until next year – I know that's true with schools – then next year it's even more expensive. It becomes very difficult to try to deal with this. We're trying to get a handle on just how serious the problem is and what the department wants to look at in terms of how they're going to deal with it.

That ties into another thing that I'd like the minister's comments on. It's fairly new. We've been talking about the rising Canadian dollar. We now know that it's 94 cents. I think the Treasurer has been alluding to this. That means that our revenues would be down about $984 million. When I look at that, that's equal to all the capital dollars dedicated to schools over the next two years. Nothing we've done, but the dollar has changed. A lot of people are speculating that we'll have parity with the U.S. dollar by the end of the year. Who knows? But there is that speculation. If that were the case, we would lose from revenues here $1.7 billion. When I look at that, that would be like losing every dollar budgeted for infrastructure support province-wide. So not only are we playing catch-up, we may be playing with our dollar.

I wonder if the department has had some discussion about this new reality of the rising Canadian dollar and what that may mean in terms of our projections down the way. If we start to lose something like $1.7 billion, that surely is going to have an impact. Now, I think that would be tying in to the royalty rates that we've talked about and that there should be an increase there, but that's not in this minister's department.

Before we talk a little more about P3s – I know that they're the minister's favourite topic, and the minister alluded to it – I want to ask about just the transportation part of his portfolio. I think we all drive highway 2. If I can say, often I try – and I know it's not right – to go 10 miles over the speed limit, but I almost feel when I'm doing that, that everybody is passing me. I know that this has to do with the Solicitor General, but I don't know how you deal with that problem either. I'm not expecting a magic wand here, but that is a very dangerous highway.

Of course, the other highway that I specifically want to talk about is highway 63. There have been a lot of complaints about that road. I know that we're working on twinning it. It seems to shift when we're going to have that road completed. Can you give me just an update for when we'll see that finally done, including I think it's highway 28, where the connection is? Because that's also a very dangerous road.

The other question. There'll be some other things that we can get into, but I want to talk a little bit about the school situation, having, Mr. Chairman, formerly been a trustee. At the time when I was there, it was Infrastructure that was solely responsible for school maintenance and building new schools. Now it's my understanding that it's both. I'm a little confused. I asked some of the board people that I know, too, and nobody seems to know who calls the shots here. I'd really like an explanation of how that works with schools, with Infrastructure and the Department of Education and who makes a decision and how it comes about in that reality.

I just want to come back to the overall Infrastructure budget and say to the minister that if we're going to move ahead in the next little while – he has three-year projections, and I've asked for what the total deficit is. But in the next one to two to three years we've got all these things occurring: the rising dollar, more projects coming up, overheated economy. The longer we wait, the more expensive. I've asked for 10 years, you know, how we deal with it. What does he see over the next one to two to three years, and how can we begin to dent some of this problem? It becomes a fairly serious matter. We've got people coming in, the quality of life that people talk about, wanting to live here in Alberta. If our roads are falling apart, that's the first thing that people notice. That's what they complain about. I remember being in B.C. once during an election campaign, and he said: you know, it doesn't matter what you do in a rural area; all you have to do is promise them that you'll blacktop everything, and you'll be popular. So roads are very much things that people look at very quickly, but I know that there are all sorts of other areas. I'm saying that it's not an easy job. I don't envy the minister in trying to deal with this, and of course you have to deal with the Treasury Board and the rest of it, but it is a key department if we're going to deal with the problems that we're facing.

I'd just conclude there and sit down. I'll have some more questions, perhaps about P3s, but I'd like the minister to fill me in on those issues.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much. There's a lot of stuff you're saying that you're right on the money with. I might jump around a little bit to try to answer some of your stuff.

I think I'd like to start out by addressing a little of when you were saying that we have this backlog, because I've been admitting everywhere that we are in trouble. We've got a deficit with our roads. One of the main reasons is that we've only been actually doing 350 to 400 kilometres a year of highway rehabilitation. With the amount of highways we have and the way they've been deteriorating, we should be doing about 1,500 kilometres a year.

We are working on a four-year plan. We basically have what we're considering as a four-year plan to get us caught up. We haven't got the money committed to us in the budget yet, although in this year's three-year plan we have enough money in that budget to do about 2,500 kilometres of highway rehabilitation over the next three years. Again I want to stress that we have a little bit of two types of problems there. One is that we're not fully funded to get to where we need to be to completely stop the bleeding, and we're asking industry to ramp up their capacity to make sure that we can carry on. Even though we're working on a four-year plan right now, and it's not fully showing it in this year's three-year plan, we believe we're going to get there.

I'll tell you how bad it really is. As of March 31, '07, total deferred maintenance across government was $5.8 billion, and the figure is going to continue to increase as funding for preservation has not been sufficient to cover ongoing maintenance requirements and escalation in wages and materials. Ongoing maintenance is currently underfunded by approximately $500 million a year plus escalation. The backlog of deferred maintenance is expected to exceed $12 billion by 2012. We're working on that. That's what our estimates are today. That's why I'm telling you that we have a four-year plan, to try and bring that down. Out of that $5.8 billion, about $1.8 billion is highways and the other is vertical.

You were talking about the dollar. I mean, there's no doubt that as a government as a whole we all have to worry about what the difference in our revenue stream is going to be and that our dollar rising is going to change our revenue stream. We have, though – I think it's in our capital account reserve – about $6.1 billion sitting there. We have our sustainability fund. So as far as it affecting the three-year business plan that we have right now or especially our in-year plan, it wouldn't affect that in-year plan. What we've got budgeted for and have money for, if it falls short, that's when we use the sustainability fund, for operations-type stuff, and the capital account for making sure that what we've budgeted for to build capital this year would go ahead. I mean, that doesn't make the taxpayer feel better that we're not going to have as much money coming in, but it's good planning on the part of this PC government and our Premier to make sure that we don't have the big ups and downs of cutbacks and all of a sudden the influxes like we used to have. We're trying to create a good, stable rate of funding.

Highway 2. I think we're up to 45,000 cars a day on that highway on counts, or right in that range. That's a lot of vehicles and a very busy highway for a four-lane highway. The speeds are unbelievable on it. I've been asking our department to try to figure out: is it safer to try to slow those vehicles down or let them move? I'm just going by experience now of driving that highway. I drive it at least twice a week and lots of times four. If I happen to pick up a policeman or catch up to one or one pulls out in front of me on the four-lanes somewhere between Red Deer and Ponoka and he happens to be going all the way to Edmonton, you just watch in the mirror as the cars back up. By the time we get to Leduc, you've got four or five miles of traffic backed up in fully both lanes. Is it safer to let them clear, or is it safer to back them up when you hold them at the 110? Actually, most of the time the policemen are also driving 120 or 125. I have to say that I don't know what's best there, and we're trying to check it.

I don't mean this badly, but you might be listening to the media too much, who don't always come clean with things or have the right facts to give, because by our stats and everything if highway 2 is not the safest, it's right in that ballpark of the safest highways in Alberta to drive on as far as the billion kilometres travelled with no collisions or the number of collisions. Highway 2 is the safest in Alberta. I don't know if that makes you feel better because there are lots of vehicles on it. By the stats on how they test highways for their safeness, not just us but across the country – I think the U.S. uses that same testing mechanism – that's classed as one of the safest highways.

Highways 63 and 28. That's about a middle of the road one in our average. Highway 63, which really you hear about a lot in the media, saying that it's unsafe, by our testing is a little bit safer than the average for Alberta by the traffic count and the billion kilometres travelled on it. Right now we're doing the planning, and engineering is under way. We're getting land acquisition. We're doing our aboriginal consultations. In the areas where we already have that done, we're starting to twin. I think we've already tendered the piece between 881 and the townsite of Fort McMurray. That tender is given to twin that this year. Why we believe that piece is so important – now that last year we finished paving 881 all the way up there – is that at least you have two choices now. You've got four-lanes coming out of Fort McMurray till you reach 881. Then you can either take 881 or 63. So you have two highways you can travel on. That also will make things a little better for us with the overweight, overheight, overwidth loads. We could actually direct traffic so they don't have to be held up. We could actually turn them at 881 and bring them out that way or bring them up that way.

We're also working on the new five-lane bridge that's going to go across the river right into the town of Fort McMurray, which is very, very important. I was talking to some people up there. If there's ever an accident on that bridge at shift change coming out of the plants, and let's say that they're coming into town at 7:30 at night, it might be 10, 11 o'clock at night before they get it closed, and they can't get across the river any other way. So they're pretty anxious to see the new five-lane bridge go in also.

You were asking about how our budgets work today or whose responsibility it is on schools. We have . . . [Mr. Ouellette's speaking time expired] I'll answer it next go-around.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: We have until approximately . . .

The Deputy Chair: You have until 3:28.

Mr. Martin: Okay. I'll try to judge my remarks to give the minister time.

Just a follow-up, and hopefully we'll get time on the other. I just want to come back to the deferred maintenance to make sure that I understand what that means. I was asking about the cumulative infrastructure deficit, and I think the minister was alluding to the deferred maintenance right now of $5.8 billion, $1.8 billion being highways, and projected to be $12 billion.

Mr. Ouellette: By 2012.

Mr. Martin: Yeah, by 2012. Right.

What does that figure mean exactly? Is it desperate need? We've looked at the cumulative deficit. In that period of time is that the amount of money we'll need, or is that sort of more the emergency of things that we have to deal with very quickly? In other words, I'm just trying to get a handle on what deferred maintenance means. The minister said – he'll correct me if I heard him wrong – something about vertical.

Mr. Ouellette: Yeah. That's buildings.

Mr. Martin: Buildings. Okay. So schools and the rest of things like that, right? We're talking about schools and that. I'm trying to figure out what deferred maintenance means exactly.

You know, I guess the only other thing I'd say is that I think we still have to be concerned about the dollar and the amount of money. Yes, we do have the sustainability fund, and we do have the capital fund, and we can do that, but ultimately if we keep going into that, that disappears too. I mean, that's not just the minister's problem. That's a problem that the government is going to face. But if the dollar goes to, say, parity and it stays there for a number of years, even if it stays at 94 cents, I think we really have to reassess a lot of things with that dollar. That's all I'm saying.

I want to just briefly have a discussion about P3s. I know that the minister loves talking about P3s. I want to say a couple of things. I appreciate the fact that he gave me the public-sector comparator. I think the previous minister said before that it was forthcoming. I haven't had time to go through it because I've been in Calgary, but I understand that a lot of it is blacked out. I think the minister is alluding to why: because of the different bids and the rest of it. I'm not going to ask, necessarily, for the minister to go through it. I need to go through it and take a read of what you've handed me. But remember that the reason that we were skeptical is because Henday did come out different than what was said before the public-sector comparator, and finally we got that information.

It is startling, the figures that the minister brought forward. I'm wondering how long this company will be in business. You know, that has to be of some concern. I guess I don't know what's in the P3. Is it maintenance and all the things? That's what I will sort out, and eventually we can ask the minister through a letter or whatever to deal with that. But it seems almost too good to be true. You know the old saying: if it's too good to be true, it probably is. I just haven't had the opportunity yet. I will do that and take a better look.

I know the government gives me the idea that the courthouse was a success as a P3. Well, it's a success after the fact, I suppose, because the original budget of $300 million, as the minister is well aware, went to $500 million, a 67 per cent overrun. The government said that was because of the judges, because of the security demands. Then we cut back on the project, and then it was a P3 for that private company to run it. I guess it's all in the interpretation. I don't see that as a P3 raving success from where it started. I think the government perhaps learned something from that courthouse, at least hopefully.

The other area, though, that I want to mention – and this is why I was asking about the schools. The Minister of Education keeps talking about the schools, and I know something about schools. If we're going to go that way, I think there's a better way. When we have the traditional financing, we can even get a better rate. Even if we have to borrow, we can do it cheaper than companies because of our credit rating. With the amount of money we have right now, I guess one would argue whether we need to borrow or not, but we also know that there's a huge infrastructure, so we want to put it off over time.

Let's not kid ourselves with a P3. The old saying: if it quacks like a duck and walks like a duck, it is a duck. We still will be responsible for that money over a period of whatever that time is: 20 years, 30 years. We're still paying for the service, so I think we have to recognize that in our plans. We always say: well, it's not a debt. It is a debt if we're in a contract, and I think the minister would agree with that. We have to be somewhat careful about that.

The other point that I'd make, though, is that I know that in Breton, Nova Scotia, especially with the schools – I mean, I question the P3s, as the minister knows, and indeed with some of the others there might be more of a rationale than there is in schools because what happens after in the schools becomes a crucial thing, Mr. Minister. In Breton, for instance, they couldn't have school lunches because the private people were the ones that determined what was going on in the schools. A lot of what happens in schools, you know, is after for the community in the schools, and if somebody else owns those schools, for the time being they're the ones that are going to determine.

I think there are all sorts of potential problems there that I don't think the minister has particularly worked out. If the minister is pushing the P3s on the broader projects and they can say that there is a good public-sector comparator, you know, and they can actually do it – and I can't tell yet on this other one because a lot of it's blanked out – that's one thing. But I think that when we get into schools, that's another thing.

There are some other things the minister wants to say, and I want to give him enough time to respond. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Ouellette: I'll try to talk a bit faster because there's a quite a bit to talk about. On a really quick shot on where the schools are and where we are and who's responsible, we know that we have some of the best expertise across the country in being able to assess a job, being able to price that job, being able to do the due diligence to see whether we're getting good value for the dollar.

Way back when, Treasury Board decided or somebody decided, long before I got this ministry, where a school would be built, how much money would be spent on it and that sort of thing. Those decisions are all made by Education. After that point then we get involved. We check the tender out. We make sure they're getting value for their dollar and so on and so on, about the same as our P3.

Today on roads we probably have the best expertise. We're as good as anywhere in the world on being able to assess, design, construct, make sure the maintenance is done, the rehab is done, and the financing is right. We're working on trying to have that model with our vertical infrastructure, what you would call buildings. We still may have a little way to go there. I mean, we didn't do the courthouse P3. There's a portion of it that's being done as a P3, the finishing and stuff, and I'm not even a hundred per cent sure on how all of that worked.

The deferred maintenance stuff you were asking about: no, it's not an emergency. That's where we'll be if we don't do anything more than we've been doing in the past, just barely holding our own, I guess, or worse than holding our own. We're creating a deficit, I guess you'd say.

Currently on our road status 57 per cent is good, 26 per cent is fair, and 17 per cent is poor. If we do what our four-year plan is, we won't be in that position in 2012. We're only going to be in that position in 2012 if we don't pick up anything we've been doing. The target we're shooting for: we would like to have 80 per cent good, 15 per cent fair, and 5 per cent poor. We believe that at that rate you would have good roads in Alberta to drive on. People wouldn't say that they're deteriorating.

The buildings, the ones that I'm mostly concerned with now are the actual provincial buildings because all the budgets for the schools are in Education, the budgets for health are in Health and for advanced education in Advanced Ed.

I'm done. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the time allocated for this portion has now elapsed.

Employment, Immigration and Industry

The Deputy Chair: I'd to welcome the minister and the officials that have accompanied her today. I would ask the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry to bring forward opening remarks and introduce her guests as well.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. If I may, to my immediate right is Ulysses Currie, deputy minister; to my immediate left, Rick Sloan, assistant deputy minister. Duncan Campbell, who is the architect of much of the financial information that has been the background to the business plan, is with us. I believe that in the gallery we have assistant deputy ministers Susan Williams and Neil Irvine. I see a few others. Lorelei Fiset-Cassidy is there as communications director. I'm not sure if I see Ellen Hambrook. Peter Kennett and Shelley Engstrom are also joining us. Thank you. Glad to have you here.

I know that if the hon. members have had an opportunity to review Hansard for my last comments, they will indicate much of what I had said in the fullness of examining the issues that we're here for at the Committee of Supply, but I'd like to make a couple of brief additional comments to add to the opening remarks that were recorded previously.

First of all, since 1995 Alberta has created an average of 42,000 jobs a year and a growth rate of 2.7 per cent. Last year, 2006, we led Canada with a 6.8 per cent economic growth. We provide tremendous support in this department to the people of Alberta relative to the employment, the immigration as well as the industry.

Our department has allocated almost $300 million in support of employment in Alberta, so our relationship with many of the postsecondary institutions is well known. We provide skills training like English as an additional language, and we provide increased living allowances for people taking English. I tabled a response to this question, but I do want to indicate that with our increased living allowance this year of 5 per cent for all grant-funded students taking courses after the 1st of August, we are giving significant increases in support to many people that are taking extra programming, either upgrading or improving their skills. We also announced a core benefit increase of 5 per cent that will be put in place on July 1 for those who are not expected to have employment or are temporarily unable to work. I'd like to indicate that the cost of these benefits increased our total amount for 2007-08 by $9.1 million.

If anybody is eligible for income support, including those taking English as a second or an additional language, they're also eligible to receive support under the homeless and eviction fund, something people ask me about, whether or not students would be able to receive support.

Relative to answers tabled on temporary foreign workers in my last presentation, I want to once again remind this House that this is a federal program. Although we are working over the next few months, right until November, it's our intent to negotiate an annex with the federal government to the temporary foreign worker program. Greater accountability, no doubt, will result as a result of that collaborative negotiation process.

I want to just indicate that so far we've had many pilot projects that have increased the capacity of this government to respond to urgent labour needs. Even with the provincial nominee program I remind this House that this is employer driven. We're committed to the PNP program, but employers themselves have a great deal of responsibility in the definition of who shall come and what jobs they will undertake.

We increased our immigration funding by 15 per cent to almost $68 million in our immigration programs overall. Our provincial nominee program will increase from an anticipated 2,500 nominees this year to some 8,000 in the third year of 2009-10. So we're looking at a significant number of people that will be entitled to come in on the PNP program. If you look back six years and think that only 128 came in, it's a significant amount of increase.

Recently with the signing of our made-in-Alberta called the Canada/Alberta co-operation on immigration agreement, we have defined just how we will work collaboratively on all aspects of the agreement to increase and speed up the flow of immigrants that will be coming and taking advantage of these labour issues that are coming forward.

Our funding for labour standards and workplace safety increased $30 million, up from $7 million last year. Seventy-two people helping us keep Albertans safer on the job. Assessments, inspections, workplace safety, and funding for labour standards have been given a great benefit and a great boost. As I indicated, Gil McGowan gave me a letter of astonished pleasure, that he believed we had given such considerable influence to improving our capacity to monitor compliance and support with the labour force.

So, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the questions, but I'm very confident with this budget that we will have a more comprehensive workplace health and safety campaign in place. It will be announced with further details this fall. I think that we have all the tools to address the issues that I look forward to receiving from our hon. colleagues.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's hard to try to get a handle on this department, all the various areas that the minister has to look at. I'm going to try to, you know, break it down in certain areas and go from there. I'll try to see how much time I have here. I think we'll do 10 and 10 and 10 and 10 if that's okay with the minister.

I want to start with the labour standards. We've been promised a review by the previous minister I talked to, and it was coming soon. In fact, after we dealt with Tyson, I was expecting it last spring. It's next spring, and I'm not sure when this is coming. I take it it is coming, so I'd like the minister, to begin with, to give us some idea. With all due respect, sometimes maybe in the past people on the workers' side would say, "Maybe it's better if they don't look at it because it might make it worse," but I'm sure that this minister would not do that to the working people, Mr. Chairman.

I think there are certain things in the labour standards that we want to look at, and we don't have to have a review. I think the minimum wage, again, has become an issue, especially with the overheated economy the way it is. I know that most workers aren't at the minimum wage, but the minimum wage has an impact on the rest of the wages. I'm wondering if that's part of the review. I'll come to the living wage part of it. Most people are now saying that in Alberta we should be looking at around the $10 range because we've dropped behind, and with the cost-of-living here even at $10 an hour it would be very difficult to live with the price of housing and the rest of it. So I wonder if the minister will talk about where that's at. Is that part of the review, or are they assessing that separately from the labour standards?

The other area – it sort of came upon us rather quickly – was the whole idea of 12-year-olds working. It wasn't during this minister's term but during the previous minister's. As the minister is well aware, that came up behind closed doors, and all of a sudden we knew that 12-year-olds were participating. Now, I guess there's a different argument here. Some people say: well, 12-year-olds, it teaches them responsibility. You know, that argument. I guess my bias is that I think 12-year-olds should be 12-year-olds. We're too anxious to get into the world of work. We're going to be doing that for the rest of our time. There are so many other things to do, and I think there's a potential for school work and other things to suffer. Also, I think there is a health and safety matter. I know that the minister will say that we actually do monitor that, but I think that's very hard. You're not going to have a young 12-year-old that's going to have the confidence to take on the boss if they say to do this or that. So I really hope that we're taking a good look at that in the labour review. Maybe we're taking a good look, and we'll make it 10-year-olds. I would hope not. But I think that we should be relooking at that whole area. I'm wondering if the minister could comment if that's part of the review, when this comes forward.

The other area that I think is a real thorny one and probably one that the minister is having to deal with in caucus is farm workers, in terms of whether they should be included. I would say yes. I mean, we're not talking about the family farm. I think we could exempt them, you know, the one or two or whatever temporary people. But we have a whole agribusiness growing in this province. I think how ludicrous it becomes. I was down there during the strike in Tyson, and on one hand you had a labour union fighting for first contract arbitration with a union – I'll come to that later – and on the other side of the street there were workers there, and because they were called farm workers, they didn't even have labour standards. It seemed to me that was so ludicrous that it didn't make sense. I think we really have to straighten this out. As I say, there are these companies of agribusiness that can virtually move away from the whole labour standards in the province by calling themselves farm workers.

Now, I know that's a tough sell with some people. I think there's probably a way to get around it, you know, within the little family farms, but there are less and less of them, as we know, as we go along. So I would like the minister's comments on that. I have a feeling that that may be one of the small problems of why we've been waiting for this labour standards review to come public.

I want to ask the minister's comments – and it ties into the minimum wage and the rest of it – on the living wage. The minister is well aware that, I think, in Calgary they've moved ahead with what they call a living wage. It's Vibrant Communities in Calgary, and I think the city of Calgary has bought into this to some degree too. You know, they're talking that for a living wage – and I'm using Calgary figures here because these are the ones that I have. It's determined that "an individual working full-time (35 hours per week, 52 weeks a year) needs a minimum of $12 per hour to earn a Living Wage (or $13.25 in lieu of benefits). This figure is based on the Statistics Canada 2001," the reason being that Calgary's accumulated inflation rate surpassed the national average, as we know. In other words, they're saying that that's sort of a minimum to live in Calgary with any decency at all. So it's broader than the minimum wage.

I'm wondering if the minister is looking at it. I suppose we could recommend – I'm not sure how we'd go about doing it, but we could perhaps do it in government or whatever, but at least we know that Calgary is moving ahead. I wondered if the minister could make some comments dealing with the living wage and tie that, I guess, if you like, into the minimum wage.

There are so many other things. Maybe while I've got a minute or two, I'll throw out as many things as we can and bounce them here now. I've asked the other ministers about another report that's coming down the way – the minister is aware of this from her previous portfolio – the health workforce training. I think the minister's department is involved in this as is Advanced Ed and Technology, I think now, and the minister of health. This is a report that I thought was coming earlier on. I've asked the other two ministers. Maybe this minister can give me an update about when we might deal with that because the minister knows better than anybody that the health situation is going to get severe. It's severe now, and it will get even more severe, not only with doctors and nurses but with everybody, certainly with the health sciences – that's a problem – to the point where it could be very dangerous.

I've seen various figures, Mr. Chairman, about the shortages that we're looking at down the way. I'm wondering if that's maybe why it's taking some time. At least it's better to get this out so that we know how serious the problem is. I was talking the same about infrastructure. We've got to know these sorts of things. While we're looking at reports, maybe we can comment on the two reports.

My time is almost up, Mr. Chairman, so I'd sit down and wait for the minister to come back with some of the answers. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Yes. It's always a pleasure to hear the comments from my colleague opposite. There isn't much that we haven't experienced at least peripherally together in the political arena. He was teaching students at a time when I was a school trustee, and we both had a passion for making sure that children had a proper education. He was very respected in Sal comp, I must say, and I'm never surprised when he has a lot of the insights that relate to students and children. We share a lot of common backgrounds and thoughts on those items.

Let me start in the order in which the hon. colleague raised issues. The employment standards review has been undertaken by previous ministers, and we are looking at still further consultation this fall. If I could speculate, it's because a little bit of the scene in Alberta has been changing. You could reflect on whether or not rules that the federal government has brought in place to address employment standards should be part of ours, or should there be an assumption that those, for example, dealing with compassionate leave and other issues should be understood from the federal perspective as addressing that issue?

I thought that it might be a simple matter, but the more I look at the employment standards, the results of the review, and perhaps some of the ambiguities between federal rules and where we're currently going with our rules – and I think that the hon. member has also profiled the issues that relate to safety of workers when on farms, which is the way I'll propose it. If you have somebody working on a farm that's an electrician, that is there under contract, it might be relatively simple to identify that they are an electrician when they're there, but it might not be assumed to be that in terms of liability for the farmer.

It's taking a little longer than I would have hoped to really put in place something that would address the issues in employment standards in the proper vein. What I'm working on is making sure that for the ones that this budget anticipates, we're putting emphasis on those employment standards we have to make sure that there is adherence to the compliance for those employment standards.

The hon. member makes an observation: will we make it worse? I sincerely hope not, but I think underscored in that remark is the thought I have that if we're not improving it for the people that are employed, then we have to take a serious look at it. An understanding that I have is that the employment standards have to be complementary both for the person that's employed and the employer, that there should be some reasonableness and understanding, but overall I have taken the belief in this ministry that I should work at trying to reduce injuries on the job. In any case, people should expect to have somebody go home safe at night. They shouldn't be injured on the job, and there shouldn't be a situation where people are asked to do things that have jeopardized or imperilled their safety in any way.

I think to that end, comments that have been made in this House have actually taught me a lot through the questions. I'll give you one example, and that is that when we look at negotiating our annex with the temporary foreign worker, I think it behooves us to look at how we can ensure that we know where that temporary foreign worker lands when they come to Alberta so that we can make sure that the employers are compliant with the standards that we do have. I think that has been profiled by the number of questions surrounding the knowledge we have of where temporary foreign workers are and acknowledgments in the House.

On many fronts, especially as we're looking to the annex on the made-in-Alberta agreement on attracting a labour force, I think the responsibility for us to look at these employment standards through the lens of a province that's attempting to attract many new workers – far from being less responsible, we have to be more responsible in what we anticipate our attraction should include. At the very least it should include an understanding of what the safety standards are for people who are applying to come here, and we should be providing that information through the employer, ensuring that it's provided in a form that we believe is correct.

So with your indulgence I would seek a little patience as we do that consultation this fall, as we look at some of the major employers who will be bringing over for short periods of time temporary foreign workers and finding out the very best possible way that we can ensure they're keeping those workers safe.

I've spent quite a bit of time with representatives from the Building Trades Council and dealing with people who represent the unions here in Alberta, and they are drawing my attention to the needs that I have to represent the safety and the health of these people in occupations. Unsolicited, people have come forward to meet with me to make that same observation. To the hon. member: I think that with additional consultation this fall, with a little bit of extra time and due diligence with the people that are most likely to employ people for temporary periods of time, with the opportunities we have to site in the heartland some 10 to 13 new businesses and industries, we need to understand the changing face of what labour really looks like in Alberta as people come for both times of shorter duration as well as the sustained opportunities for people who will one day manage an operation.

I look back, and probably at the time the hon. member was in Strathcona, when we were looking at the Shell Scotford being built with some 4,200 employees, about 10 per cent of those numbers were actually put in place to manage the plant. So at one point you have an inflation of a large number of workers, and then all of a sudden you go down and just have about 10 per cent of those workers.

It seems to me that while we've got this boom of construction, looking at the employment standards for those people that are likely to work in those situations and reflecting on what their needs are and the employers' needs for workers but reflecting on the needs to make sure those employees are maintained in the same kind of safe environment we would expect every day of the year for any Albertan, we want to make sure that those standards reflect best practices, particularly with the influx of so many. While much has been said about the red seal and certification and professional regulations governing the various professions, I think much more should be said about being sure that we have a safe environment for people that are coming, however temporarily, to do any kind of work in Alberta.

In the very few weeks ahead you will see more on the minimum wage, but let me just say this: I have every intention of tabling an increase to the minimum wage for our caucus, and that will be coming forward. I know that they're aware of it, and our Premier spoke in this House about that. I would remind this House that, in fact, along with supplementary benefits Albertans are doing better, but over the last several months, with the rise in cost of living and the squeeze on higher rent costs and scarcer accommodation, it has been harder. So the living wage index that's being presented by the hon. member is something that I will clearly use as an argument. Whether it's for supplementary supports like the supplementary supports that are provided for child care through the Children's Services ministry for those people that need child care subsidies, through our health benefits for children, through our income supports, in all of these areas we are looking at what it takes to support people.

Looking at the constituency that receives the minimum wage, you know, I went into Dairy Queen in Calgary just on the weekend and noted that their minimum wage is posted for part-timers at just under $10 – I believe $9.95 – and full-time starting wage, I believe, was $12.50. But almost nobody today – admittedly, very few places are getting away, if you can put it in those terms, with paying minimum wage because they simply won't attract employees.

So it's a good time for us to be looking because then we take a reality check of what is out there, what the market has.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. You'll get another opportunity. I understand that you'll go through, and for anything that's missed, certainly, written is fine.

Just while the minister was following up, I'm glad she said that it was complicated. The compassionate leave is something that I didn't mention, but the minister did. Just an update because I think that's a crucial one compared to the federal, but the minister seemed to say that there were some – maybe I misunderstood – problems with it. But if she gets a moment, could she talk a little bit about the compassionate leave?

I'm going to ask just a couple more questions flowing from the minister's answers. I'm glad that the minister is looking at increasing the minimum wage. I guess I'm sort of curious as to what, if she can give us a hint. I expect that I might be disappointed, but I'll ask anyhow. You know, I think most people were talking around $10. The minister alluded to what some of the fast-food places are starting at right now. If she would comment from there into the living wage. She probably just didn't get time.

The other question. I know that she'll come to the task force if she gets a moment, and if she doesn't, she can write. But for employment standards I was looking for sort of a hint about when this might come about. I know that the minister can't say it's going to be, you know, that on August 31 we're going to come down, but if you can give us some rough idea of when people might look for these reports.

I want to go from there, though, into sort of the broader issues. As I say, there are so many different areas in the minister's department. I do want to talk about – and I think she'd be surprised if I didn't raise it – the labour laws. I'm wondering if there is any review here about labour laws. We've had some very tough strikes or lockouts or whatever, you know, since I've been involved. The most recent ones are Tyson and the Palace Casino now. The one that I think cries out is first contract arbitration.

Now, the previous minister said that they were looking at it because, you know, other provinces have. I know that it's a Conservative government, and I probably could ask about all sorts of things that I think would be necessary to tip the balance to make it fair on both sides, if you like: replacement workers and those sorts of things. But I know that I'd be dreaming if we thought we'd get that, even though I would always make the case for it. I think it should be important to look at that first contract arbitration. We've seen it a number of times. A number of them have been with the UFCW because they've had some tough strikes, but once the union gets in there, then it's very hard to negotiate, and they try to wait them out.

Tyson did the first time, and eventually the union passed. I mean, we saw the violence, the potential violence there. We saw another long one at the centre here in Edmonton. I'm thinking now that the Palace Casino has been going on a long time. It becomes hard to negotiate to get that first contract. If there was sort of binding arbitration at a certain point, you know, with the strike, I think it would lead to better labour relations for everybody. I would ask the minister if they are considering that because, as I say, I think there are only three provinces that don't have it. She may correct me, but I think that's the case. I think that would be absolutely crucial.

As I say, I won't bother going through all the list and litany of other things, but that one has been so much in the news. I think that would lead to some fairness, so I'd ask the minister to comment on that.

The other thing I want to talk about – the minister alluded to it – is the temporary workers. It's a difficult thing. I know that the minister says that it's a federal program, but it was jointly brought together by the now Minister of Education and the Provincial Treasurer. I don't think we understood the scope of what was going to happen. It's part of the overheated economy again. We've had a number of instances that we've talked about here in the Legislature. I know the minister believes that the employment standards should be there, the same as for any other workers.

I want to just broadly ask, though. There's some discussion – and the minister is aware of it – about the use, especially in the tar sands and that, of temporary foreign workers. As the minister is well aware, within the building trades there is a feeling that this is a way to get around what they would consider legitimate unions. They bring people in. You know, we could talk about the apprenticeship, the training, and the rest of it. Actually, I've had people tell us that they had applied for a job that they'd advertised for temporary foreign workers. A person that was a tradesman had actually applied for that particular job, and they were told: don't even bother. Many in the building trades are saying that there are people in the hiring halls that do not necessarily always have jobs, and I think the minister would agree that our first priority would be the people here.

The other thing. Maybe the minister could comment. I know we're doing some work here, but I'm wondering what the scope is of bringing aboriginal people, especially, into those types of skilled jobs. I think our priority is our own people first. Aboriginal people are our people, and they need the training, you know, so if we can deal with them ahead of the temporary workers. Then I think the minister mentioned trying to get a handle on who's bringing people in so that you can have some idea of where they're at and in which industries and which companies. I think I heard the minister say that. I'd be very interested if she could add to that a little bit. I take it that this is a fairly new initiative, and I'm wondering if she could comment about that.

I'll give the minister a little more time because there's a lot of information here, but there is, as I say, a feeling that – well, I'll tell you a good example. I was in Mazatlán, Mexico, over Christmas, and a guy, a peddler on the street there, came up to me. "Where are you from?" I said, "Well, I'm from Alberta." "Oh, I'm trying to get to Fort McMurray." So it's certainly out there, you know, that people want to come in as temporary foreign workers, but we really have to monitor it. We really have to make sure that it is legitimate. I really say that it should not be a way to sort of drive down wages in the legitimate building trades, who have done a great job here of building this economy. I would hope that the minister is monitoring all that.

I'm going to give you a little more time to go through because there are a lot of questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you. Timelines on anything: I haven't got anything definitive. I said that on employment standards: more consultation in the fall. I can tell you from my thought about it that it's likely going to be sometime next year before it comes back and sees the light of day. I would love to give you a different answer. I don't know that with the fall session it's likely going to be that we're going to tackle something that would be big at that time, but we might have done the consultation period.

You also asked me to expand a little bit on the 12-year-old. You know, the 12-year-old still has very strict controls, still with parental guidance and agreement, and we could probably both have some long conversations about whether that's the right thing. It depends, I think, a lot on what the placement is, but if that is revisited during the employment standards review, well, I'm sure that it will be discussed, in any event.

The health workforce plan. I think we're maybe days away from the release of that plan, but that's because, just like the hon. member has noted, it is a very important piece of our activity. We're continuing to work on it. That's the point. We haven't stopped working on some of the things like the retention/recruitment initiatives, the issues that relate to the purchase of lifts for people so that we avoid overexertion. We know that there are several hundred people that are off work as nurses because of overexertion, so that's been crucial. The work is going on even though the plan hasn't been released, but it won't be very long before it's released.

I think it's been quite novel to actually have three ministers work together on this plan, but it's the right link. It's something that I would have so appreciated when I was health minister because it's linking the trainer and the training piece with the practical application, and it's linking it with our ministry, dealing with six ministries under one roof now. When Mr. Sloan and his team go off to other places to talk about immigration or about attracting a workforce, we've got an opportunity to put that health group under the umbrella. When I was in London, it was astonishing to see how many of the health group came forward. Our federal government has agreed to contact everybody in the U.K. with a letter if they have applied to be a health worker in Alberta and tell them that under the new terms of this made-in-Alberta agreement, the PNP program is open, and if they get a job – several of them had jobs when we were there – then they will be able to.

The hon. member mentioned first contract arbitration. Although it was mentioned, I believe here in the House, that my predecessor would look at it, there was nothing initiated at that time, nor have I initiated anything. But the labour agreements generally, overall, have been really satisfactory if you look at the fact that 98 per cent are resolved without government intervention, that there's less time lost in strikes here in Alberta than almost anywhere else in Canada – I think our statistics are really admirable – and that the negotiations generally have been very positive. We've had some exceptions to the rule, but in large part they have been going very well.

I'd just say on the temporary foreign worker and the comments made about people that are trying to come here that we're going to look this fall at marketing through a web portal – we're marketing currently – so that your friend in Mexico would be able to read in Spanish what the credential requirements were, so that he didn't have to pay money there to some unscrupulous recruiter to get a job in Alberta. Those are some things that we're really going to target in protection for that worker and in anticipation of what they need to know.

We know that we will continue to maintain the responsibility of the employer to find housing for them. This is one of the reasons why in our department now we're doing an inventory of these groups that are coming here, including Total and Air Liquide and Aux Sable, others that might be coming, to say: what workers do you need, and what are your provisions for housing for them? We're trying to get a bit of a tighter grip on that, and I really appreciate that question.

Mr. Martin: How much time do we have left, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: Until 4:28.

Mr. Martin: Okay. I'll start anyhow.

Maybe we should have some time to talk about the homeless and eviction fund. In listening to the minister, obviously we have – well, I'm not sure if she and I do, but the government and I have a difference of opinion about what we need to do in the short run on a very serious situation. I do appreciate that the minister is doing her best with this eviction fund to try to deal with the severe cases, but again I would say – and this is not necessarily the minister – that it's a funny way to do government policy. I think we have a broader problem here, and there are hardships.

I'm glad the fund is there because that was one of the recommendations that we made when I was on the task force. It was always the idea, from our perspective in putting it all together, that the eviction fund would be, you know, there for people. There might be a big utility bill that they couldn't handle or the first month's deposit when people came in. That was becoming a problem, and it sort of got broader than that. I think the minister has said that there's a fair amount of flexibility, so it's sort of gone beyond that, perhaps because it has to.

I guess the question that sort of flows from here, though, is: is there any suggestion? I've asked the minister because it used to be that we looked at: accommodation should take no more than 30 per cent of your income. I doubt that you can do that with this fund because I think it would be too overwhelming with the amount of people that are paying over 30 per cent. Dealing with the eviction fund – I know this is a government policy – even though there's flexibility, I'm wondering if they're saying: "If it's 50 per cent or 60 per cent of your income, it's too much. We'll look at it. If you're paying 40 per cent, that's too bad. That's just the way it is. We can't do much for you."

Obviously, I doubt that we could begin to handle – and that's why we called for the rent guidelines in the short term – all the people that are paying over 30 per cent of their income. That was sort of the standard thing before. I know that there is a supplemental program, too, that the government has. It's been there for a while. I don't think we can begin to deal with the amount of numbers. At least, that's what we're getting from people.

I know the minister says that there's flexibility. I understand the reason for that with the circumstances we're in, but there must be some rough idea that people are using in terms of how much of your income should be going and when we'd take a look at you. I'm wondering if in doing this, this will become a major government policy. When more people know about this eviction fund, are there more people coming forward or less? What's the minister's assessment about where this program will be in the future?

Ms Evans: I think that's an excellent . . .

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My apologies. I was up so fast. I didn't mean to cut you off there.

My understanding is that we've had over 500 clients now, who've received a benefit of over $500,000. Now, that's really interesting because by May 31 there were 448 who received prevention eviction monies to the cost of $385,900, an increase of 175 clients and $151,000 over some period of time back, about a week before that.

What the director is to look at, if you read the one-pager that identifies the homeless and eviction fund, is they are to have the flexibility in one of the 59 centres in Alberta to judge the circumstance of the person themselves. I think that sometimes they probably subsidize considerably more than leaving a person with a situation where they would have been paying 30 per cent of their income. A rough idea would be hard to identify because periodically they're paying arrears in utilities for up to three months. We've got couples that have moved here who couldn't find housing, were given emergency funding, money for meals. We found them a residence, assisted them with a damage deposit. For people who are new to Alberta, for people who face arrears, it's just adjudicated on the basis of their needs.

There has been – and I think the deputy would agree – a considerable pride by the workers that we haven't struck an arrangement with them that forced them into any box in terms of what they provided. They had to look at the circumstances for the family, provide for their needs, and make sure that they were given what they needed for accommodation and, as well, that they didn't have to rob out of their food budget to pay for that. When I met, for example, with this city's west Edmonton office, they said that the best thing we ever did was give them some flexibility. I think that that's overwhelmingly been something where I think: if we were smart enough to hire those social workers, we should be smart enough to consider that they have the capacity to judge better themselves. The deputy particularly fought for us to make sure that there was some flexibility there so that they could make those decisions with the best needs of that family in mind.

Now, in this House, Mr. Chairman, I've received a lot of questions about how sustainable this program will be. Interestingly enough, there haven't been as many people as I might have thought across Alberta that would have been taking advantage of that homeless and eviction fund. But then I look ahead to the November to March period of this coming year. Last year during that period we spent some 9 million dollars supporting increased utility costs and all kinds of other things in emergency situations. At this point it may not be as severe, but I'm not sure that that will persist over an extended period of time because if people do get short, if the costs of living, as you pointed out, rise still further – and you see what they are saying in Calgary – we have no doubt that there are going to be more petitions to this fund.

Frankly, I'm surprised that there hasn't been a bigger uptake, which might speak well of the renter accommodation that's available, the attitude of landlords in not trying to pressure. But this homeless and eviction fund has been given very flexible latitude, and

I haven't had complaints come to my office that we haven't seriously considered the capacity of each. I think that where we have had some cautions raised is on whether or not they qualify for rent supplement on a different basis, and different kinds of criteria apply to the rent supplement program with the minister of housing.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. Just to follow up in the few minutes remaining. My guess about the homeless and eviction fund: what we're getting from our office is that people, seniors and people like that, probably would never go. You know, that's just the way they were brought up. They would not go. They might see this as welfare or whatever. So there are some people that just won't ever do that. Now, how many? I don't know, but I know there are some.

I think that probably the minister's department is doing a good job with those people that are coming in there. They see the need, and they are social workers. I agree that they should have the competence to look at each individual situation, and because of circumstances I agree that you have to do that.

I think that what I'm broadly getting at – and I don't know if the minister could allude to this – is what the social workers are saying about how much they are paying the ones that are coming in for their accommodation. I think there's a whole range of people that are hurting. Maybe they're not destitute to the point where they might need the eviction fund, but some people on fixed incomes and others may be spending 50 per cent of their income, and they're struggling and that. They probably wouldn't necessarily qualify because they're probably not as badly off as some other people, and they probably wouldn't apply. I think that's the group that I'm worried about. Well, I guess that we're worried right across the board. I mean, that's why we had the housing task force.

But that's what we perceive happening. We're not making it up, to the minister, because we are getting these calls at our office about people getting the rent increases. One of the things we talked about on the task force ties into the eviction fund. If we're not accepting the old idea of what affordability was – and that was 30 per cent. That's what we were suggesting on the task force. What is it now? The government said that they agree that there should be a definition, but they're not sure what it is. If the minister has any clout, I think that's something we have to deal with.

Now, I know the government has in the short run rejected guidelines, but then I think it's incumbent to take a look at what we now consider affordability. Times change, and maybe the government's mind will change if things cool off and we're able to get more housing on, but that takes time. That's the problem with the idea of the market. Most people say that it's two years, maybe three or four. Even if we're going to do all the right things to bring housing on and we have some money, in fairness to the government, to do this, it takes time, and that's what the problem is.

It's not just the destitute. It's a whole group of people that are probably spending way too much, and it's impacting their lives in very dramatic ways. They wouldn't necessarily show up at the eviction fund. I'll give the minister some time to talk about that.

That ties in with the one thing we did miss in view of the minimum wage: the minister's – I know that they're not going to announce a policy – analysis of what Calgary is doing with the living wage. If there are some ideas that we can learn from there, something we can do provincially, I think that that would help us deal with the housing crisis and some of the other things that we're talking about. I wonder if she would comment on her analysis of the living wage.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, I think we could probably give you some more in a written response, and I'm going to volunteer that on the living wage. I'm reminded of what I looked at with the lost-time claim rate and WCB, where the modification of that rate based on the worker going back to the workplace may not show any lost time but may show that they're working at something differently. You have to add the figure from the modified claim rate to the lost-time claim rate to get the true number of the injuries. Right? So you really can't look at one without the other to get a true picture of the injuries.

What you're telling me is that you can't look just at the 55,000 households that are getting income supports or the 20,000 learners that are getting income supports or the people that come under this eviction fund to get income supports in times of crisis or to sustain them through a period of time. You have to really look at, with the rising costs of housing and the inflationary circumstances we find ourselves in in this boom, whether or not we should be evaluating what the standard of living is in that context, whether or not they are suffering a much-reduced standard of living because they are paying more for each of the things.

I'm going to undertake to see whether or not we can get a handle on that. I think that's a very valuable situation for us to look at: to see what the actual living wage should be. Even though maybe our officials are looking at it, the pressures that are being brought to bear on the family income aren't overcome by the fact that we don't have a PST or that we have some fairly decent supplementary health benefits.

So I think that what you've pointed out is something we should be examining. We should be looking at whether or not it's fair and, even if we look at a rolling average across the province, to see whether or not that judgment is a fair judgment. If we are imperiling the nutritional needs of anybody because they've had to convert themselves to a dinner of pasta because there's nothing left in the kitty for food, for protein, then I think it behooves us to understand that. I think that that's of real value.

I have actually had a conversation with my son in Calgary, who fortunately isn't in that circumstance but does recognize that many of the people expect to be less wealthy even though some of them are receiving a cost-of-living adjustment because the actual inflationary cost of almost everything is hard to measure. The impact on a family of three or four people, for example, with the children and everybody else – costs at school, with everybody accepting, "Oh, well, the costs are going up," et cetera – may not be reflective on the average weekly wage that people receive because that wage rate may not be keeping pace with the actual inflationary costs of so many of the commodities.

I think you've challenged me with something that I've been thinking about for a while because it's a little bit like our injury rates, where you should be looking at the cumulative effect. I will undertake to take a look at that because I think it's an important consideration that you've mentioned.

I think I probably should just leave you a last-minute comment. I'll just say that I really appreciate that question, and I will try and see how we follow up on that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, we have about two minutes left in this segment.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Minister, for taking a look at that.

While we're in this mood, I would ask just one last thing: if the minister would at least consider taking a look at how first contract arbitration is working in other provinces. I know that it's not going to happen overnight, but take a look and see if there's something that might be of value that we could bring back in the future.

Ms Evans: I will consider that. I will have a conversation with the hon. member at another time, perhaps before we really get into that with my staff so that I'm clear on the elements. If you'd like to prepare for that conversation, then we can bring it back and at least cover the bases that you'd hoped we would.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Minister.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister and members of the staff, I want to thank you for your presence here and for answering our questions.

Seniors and Community Supports

The Deputy Chair: I welcome the officials that are present here and upstairs in the gallery to support the minister.

Before I call upon the minister, I just got word – and we don't have it officially exactly to what extent – that a tornado has just touched down in Stony Plain, and some form of emergency has been declared. As we get a little more information, I'll bring you up to speed.

Mr. Melchin: Hopefully we're safe and secure in this building. Tornadoes will not come into this area. Those are actually very severe occurrences, so certainly our thoughts go out to any challenges that may be there, hopefully minimal.

I'm delighted to take the opportunity to spend the next little while reviewing the estimates of the Department of Seniors and Community Supports, but before I do that, I'd like to introduce the officials: Tim Wiles, deputy minister; Susan McCulloch, our senior financial officer. Next is Chi Loo, our assistant deputy minister, seniors services division. We have Dave Arsenaault, assistant deputy minister, community support programs, strategic planning division. Then we have Reegan McCullough, who's our assistant deputy minister, disability supports division. Very capable, really, I must admit, and I will reiterate again . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, your staff can easily move forward so that they can be of more support to you. There's room there.

Mr. Melchin: They're right behind me.

The Deputy Chair: They're behind the minister. Very well.

Mr. Melchin: "We're right behind you, Minister." "That's very brave of you, Minister." "Courageous initiative of you there, Minister." And they are. They truly are, I would say, and they're willing to change places if you wish, as they wish.

The Deputy Chair: Very well, Minister. I have no problem with it. I just want to advise you that we are covered on camera. The camera is in front of you, and every time you turn around, your back will be on the screen.

Mr. Melchin: Anything for the television.

The Deputy Chair: For the officials, should you need a glass of water or a cup of coffee, please raise your hand, and a page will come by and offer that to you.

Thank you.

4:30

Mr. Melchin: It looks like there's already some water that's been appropriately tested here.

Anyway, I am pleased that we can take this time to review the estimates of the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. Really an outstanding group of individuals in this department also, among the leadership in this government. I've been very pleased to see the quality of service and capability and strength that we have in the government in all of the departments where I've had exposure, outstanding expertise and dedication. We just had last week, I guess it was, the tenure recognition of awards, not 10-year but tenure, so the five, 10, 15, 20, 30, and 35, and there were some that had had 40 years' service with the government of Alberta, really quite a remarkable achievement. We need to do more to recognize the great achievements and devotion and loyalty of those that work for the government.

This department has just been enjoyable to work with. The people issues that you can deal with, everything from all of the seniors. Clearly, many of them or most of them might be on fixed income and those in various forms of need. Our department gets into providing services and supports and even recognition of seniors and their achievements. Then we do a lot of work on behalf of those with various forms of disabilities and how we might be able to facilitate them. I would say, really, that the objective is to help them to become and attain to the best of their abilities.

So how do we provide the support structures to facilitate just that? There are some tremendous differences, real differences that are made in the lives of Albertans as a result of the services that are provided through this department. Just as a note, we're investing in the ministry's budget about $1.8 billion. That's about an increase of 10 per cent off forecast, 8 per cent over last year's budget, a very substantial increase to acknowledge that this is an area where the government does consider it a priority to help those in need and to try to assess in the priority of the allocation of dollars where there would be an allocation of resources to facilitate ongoing services that are provided.

You know, the better quality of life enables some to give back to their communities as volunteers and mentors. We talk about seniors as volunteers and mentors. It is a very familiar concept to all of us, and most of them that you see are just as busy or busier than when they were full-time employed. Their contribution doesn't end with, really, the end of their work careers but continues to be that of role models and mentors and examples of strength to ongoing generations of Albertans.

Persons with disabilities also serve as credible mentors and role models. In fact, I attended a conference recently for Alberta youths with disabilities. There was a speaker, a keynote presentation. I thought I'd just quote it. I was really captured by the topic and their thoughts around it. Everything Worth Knowing I Learned from Being Disabled was the topic, and here's the description of the address:

It is a tragedy that some people are born without disabilities. Because of fate's flip of a coin, non-disabled people are destined to live lives desperately trying to prove that they're worthy human beings, measuring up to arbitrary standards of normalcy, perfection and worth. It seems so unfair that only people with disabilities should have the opportunity to recognize that the standards are inadequate, not the people.

Really quite inspiring as we'd gone around and met with various service providers that there's a real refocusing on how we think towards the abilities that one has to contribute rather than those characteristics that may be preventative of some of their participation and pleasing to see that there is that thought that people have interests and talents and abilities, and how do you tap into that to help them really attain more of the same goals and aspirations that each and every one of us would have? So it's in those thoughts and directions that we really are encouraged and want to build.

I thought I'd touch just briefly on the seniors' services. About $275 million is for the Alberta seniors' benefit, and it assists about 142,000 seniors. That's about 40 per cent of the seniors that qualify for the Alberta seniors' benefit. It's income tested, as you're aware, and it's a graduated scale. The more income the less of the benefit you might receive. What it is and has been designed for is to really provide targeted assistance and higher assistance to those in greater need. The models of income, obviously, aren't the only ways to measure it, but it at least was a methodology to make it simpler to help those on lower income.

So the Alberta seniors' benefit provides monthly payments to low-income seniors to help with day-to-day living expenses. It's a supplement; it was not meant to be a stand-alone. This was a supplement to the federal programs. There are programs like the Canada pension plan for when you retire. There are also old age security and other programs that were built on by contributions over time, and just being Canadians, we've all participated. This was to augment and supplement those federal programs, not to be stand-alone, in isolation. As such, just now we've signed an order in council that increases the income thresholds because the Canada pension plan raised its amount that they're paying for both Canada pension and old age security. So we increased our thresholds to exempt that income. We're not trying to claw back the amount that we provide but that we would help ensure that it was a supplement to and in addition to those federal programs.

There is a variety of special-needs assistance for seniors. There's $26 million in special-needs programs to fund low-income seniors, and these are for one-time emergency expenses. You know, we could list a variety of things that are helped. Just as an anecdote, Mary is an 87-year-old who received funding for two hearing aids through the special-needs assistance program. Initially, Mary's application didn't contain all the information needed by the program to make a decision, but our staff are committed to ensuring that seniors obtain the assistance they require. They followed up with Mary's daughter Liz to get the additional information so that the program could fund two hearing aids for Mary. Liz was very grateful for the assistance, saying that it made a huge difference. These are the kinds of human things that do happen in the lives of people.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the minister for his introductory remarks, short albeit they were, but I'm sure he'll come back at it later on. I also want to acknowledge the presence of the departmental staff. I appreciate their presence here.

I think the minister is right in stating that we deal with people who for a variety of reasons, whether it's age or disability or whatever else, are exposed to certain vulnerabilities which those of us who are neither old nor aged nor damaged by aging or don't have the disabilities sometimes don't recognize, and I appreciate that. On the other hand, I think it is true, as the minister again articulated, that although there may be people who are disabled, they have lots of abilities. That's a recognition, I think, that's been sort of progressively growing, I notice, over the last many years, and it's our job to continue to ensure that all of us educate ourselves, keep up to date about the enormous potential and abilities that visibly disabled people among us do have. It's our job to enable them to translate that potential, those abilities into productive lives to the best of their ability and the best of our capacity to help them do so. That's certainly true.

Now, in order to do these things, of course, we need resources, and this budget is about those resources and availabilities. There is a fairly large number of people that the minister has indicated to us who, in fact, are the recipients of the programs and the assistance that the programs provide for both people who are seniors and people who are younger but suffer from disabilities of one kind or another.

The minister has drawn our attention to the fact that the budget has been increased by 8 per cent from budget to budget and 10 per cent if you look at what was spent last year. My first questions actually deal with the discrepancy between the forecasted program expenditures and the budgeted expenditures. I noticed that there's a noticeable difference between what was budgeted and what is now being forecast.

I look at the business plan, page 260, and then I'm looking at the other document too, on pages 281 and 280. I notice that there are several important programs where the money actually spent is considerably less than what was budgeted. Just to draw attention to a few things here that came to my attention: the budget for 2006-2007 for the seniors' benefit was roughly $274,500 million. The actual spent, the forecast, is $266 million, so there's about $8 million there, or close to it, that was not spent. I know that the number of people in need and seniors in need is growing by the year, yet I find underspending happening there. I would ask the minister to perhaps try and explain to me what explains this discrepancy between the forecast and the budget.

Similarly, supportive living and long-term care: the budget was over $5 million, $5.364 million, and the forecast is $3.864 million. That's again from page 260 of the business plan. Similarly, community support programs budgeted $17.8 million and spent only $11.8 million or so. I'm using approximate, rounded numbers here, Mr. Chairman. There are several of these discrepancies that cause me both some curiosity and concern. On the one hand, we recognize that these fellow citizens of ours are in considerable need, and the money that we budget is, in fact, to meet those needs, yet that money doesn't get spent. So there is need for an answer.

This is with the absolute due respect for the staff here. I was confronted with a similar discrepancy when I was debating with the Minister of Children's Services, and there were about $30 million that were underspent in her budget, too, in the child care area. I probed her, too, about this. You know, why this underspending? I find this again happening here, so my curiosity is stimulated a second time around.

Let me ask this blunt question, as I've said, you know, with due respect for the staff, no reflection on them: are there any built-in incentives within the minister's office or in the government's policies which encourage departments to in fact underspend and find ways of underspending? Are there any built-in incentives, rewards, for showing forecast spending less than the budgeted spending? I hope that's not the case. We need to ask: why is it, then, that the budgets, which are carefully prepared, scrutinized in this House line by line, more or less, then appear to either be overestimates or to indicate some failures to spend them where they should be spent? Is it because of the qualifying requirements? Because these are income contingent. They are based on assessed need. Is the assessment of needs, perhaps, responsible for this discrepancy between these expenditures? That's one question, Mr. Chairman, for the minister.

I was also looking at page 252 of the business section, on the business plans, and there is an interesting recognition there, rising cost of living, on page 252, I think. Yes.

Many of the Ministry's clients have relatively low or fixed incomes with limited capacity to adjust to the cumulative effect of rising living costs. In recent years, cost of living increases have been disproportionately higher for low-income households compared to higher-income households and the gap in after-tax income between families with the highest and lowest incomes has continued to widen.

Very, I think, cogent observations on what's happening in the province: the increase in the gap between high-income and low-income Albertans and the effect of the cost-of-living increases on family budgets, particularly for seniors and Albertans living on fixed incomes. I want to specifically ask the minister how these observations, which are not only cogent but very sober, I think, and important, are reflected in the estimates that we are examining. What's the response in the budget to the realities that a large number of Albertans are facing, both with respect to the impact of the cost of living on their budgets and also the increase in the gap between those?

One question that comes again and again to our attention . . . Later on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. We'll attempt to answer as many of those as we can right now. If we miss something, we'll follow up through Hansard as well and provide some more detailed explanation of some specifics, which would be easy enough to do.

First off, I will even ask – certainly we can do it by a nod. I'm not aware of any incentives which are encouraging the department to underspend the budgets. Would that be a true statement? Yeah. I must admit, I have not heard of anything. I've not heard the topic raised. I've not actually initiated such a thing. In fact, we really have tried to assess – this is not a department where we're trying to lead by cutting anything. We're trying to really assess. That's why there was an increase in the budget. We're certainly trying to attempt it.

I can tell you only from experience as a chartered accountant and having had some experience in the past in controllership and financial vice-president kinds of roles that budgets are estimates, and there's no way to anticipate all the issues that could unroll through the year, to get that precision. There are really too many factors that go into it. In fact, I would say, quite rarely, unless the program's quite easy in design, can you ever guarantee that your actuals and budgets will come within a few dollars. You're going to expect some degree of variation from program element to program element.

What we did actually do: in some of the areas where we didn't spend as much money, there has been some reallocation of those dollars. You'll notice that we reallocated some dollars. Some of them went to the RASL grants and from operating to capital for rural affordable sustainable living projects. Some of it had gone towards even some wages and PDD. There was a reallocation of $11 million at the end of the year to really go back to within that specifically to address service providers and wages and retention of people.

The comments I've got with respect to some lapses, in particular – I've got to make sure I'm talking to the right line item. I'll talk about some of the lapses. There was $10 million that was lapsed in AISH and carried forward to the next year. It was used for initiatives to encourage independence in employment. With AISH you don't really know the numbers of people that may come, so that will be some. There was $15 million dollars that was lapsed in various programs and carried forward to be used for supportive living programs. There was $4 million that was lapsed in AISH when a request to transfer funds from operating to capital for an IT system was turned down. In addition, there was $16 million that was lapsed, and these are more AISH related. These funds were redirected within the year and used to offset federal revenues for the affordable supportive living projects. Some of that I mentioned on the RASL.

The community supports reduction was for a specialized service initiative. There was an initiative to help disabled young people, other than seniors, living in long-term care to have other accommodation and so forth. It was a program that really didn't have its take-up and wasn't started and therefore really was not used for that in that particular year. That's still an ongoing challenge for us because although sometimes we have the health facilities that can help the individual, you don't necessarily have the numbers of younger individuals to group together. As such, even with the best intent you don't always have the ability to deliver or the desire of the individuals or the quantity of individuals.

The seniors' budget, the difference between $274 million versus $267 million: funds were lapsed due to lower take-up for the long-term care initiatives for keeping couples together. That was 7 and a half million dollars. Now, what will happen in future years? I can't say. But that one particular period of time you allocate for a specific initiative, and it doesn't always roll out as fast or not as fast of uptake. Some of it's also because of seniors' higher incomes, so that would have another impact upon the budgets that we would have. Seniors on the Alberta seniors' benefit: the seniors' average total income went up from $14,790 in 2005 to $15,940 in 2007, so those would have some impacts upon the quantities that would be paid.

I missed, actually, your last question. I think they're getting me some notes back here, so I'll see what I get on that. This was to address the cost-of-living increases. The Seniors and Community Supports budget provides an 18 per cent increase in the AISH budget as follows: there is $40 for financial assistance – $40 million. Sorry. Yeah, $40. That might be in our wallets, but it certainly isn't in the budgets of the government.

Dr. Pannu: Even accountants can make mistakes.

Mr. Melchin: What's a few zeros among friends?

Yeah, $40 million for financial assistance, a $50 per month per client increase. There is an increase in health benefits, an increase in personal. We were talking about cost of living. I mean, clearly those are the challenges of going forward. That was in response to reviews being done on AISH, for example, in that program about: how do you help those individuals?

Over the last three years there have been continued increases. As we plan forward, that's going to be kind of the direction we're looking at. How do you continue to see that there is that ability to help those on our programs like AISH to be able to meet the ongoing rise in the cost of living? That's been supported over the last three years. AISH has gone from $850 up to $1,050, and it still is the intent that we would continue to move that forward on an annual basis.

PDD. We did put another 15 and a half million dollars for staff retention and volume, and those are in relation to wage issues, wage pressures, those providing services. That's why we put even in the last year reallocation so that there could be kind of a top-up, an incentive to retain, not an incentive to not spend the money. It was actually given back out as an incentive to provide some dollars back to those providing services so that we could keep them and hire additional staff for those providing services with PDD. So those are just a few examples, and we'd be happy to, if we've missed some questions, respond in more detail.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Some more questions for the Minister. The minister has touched on the AISH program and the increases over the last three consecutive years, which will bring the monthly AISH payment to $1,050, I guess, as of April 1 this year. I'm sure these increases have been welcomed. I've been looking at a graph here a moment ago, Mr. Chairman. I'll just wave it at the Minister and then translate it into numbers.

The monthly AISH financial benefit, you know, declined quite dramatically in actual dollar value terms between '93 and 2003. In 1993 the monthly payment for AISH was $810, and in real dollar value terms in 2003 it was $663. If you use a '93 dollar to look at the actual absolute numbers, it was $663. So the last two, three years of increases have helped, but they certainly are far from having brought to the level at which these payments were, say, 14 years ago. Far from it. But what's hopeful – I want to look at the optimistic side, the bright side of the picture – is that over the last three consecutive years there have been increases.

My question to the Minister is: is he going to at least link these increases to cost-of-living increases, just as has happened in the case of MLA remuneration? People on AISH are diagnosed or assessed to be in very, very dire need of help, and that's why they receive the money. They are highly vulnerable people. Is it possible for the minister to say to me and to these AISH recipients that from now on at least the real value of their monthly payments will not be allowed to decline, in other words it will be automatically linked, with respect to increases, to the increases in the cost of living or the rate of inflation, one or the other? That's my question.

Some other questions related to this have to do, of course, with the earnings that people living on AISH are allowed now. What problem does the minister see with increasing the allowable earnings limit for the AISH recipients so that that gives them incentive to go out and work? People seek to go out and work not only to generate supplementary income or additional income, but it also provides a great deal of social support and social networks, which are good for the mental and the social health of everyone. So would it not in fact be a good thing to increase the allowable earning limits for people on AISH so that they have this added incentive to go out and work? The minister's comments on that, I think, would be helpful.

Similarly, medical and health supports that recipients receive that are directly related to their disability need to be separated from the income support. The income support and the medical and health support related payments need to be separate. If this were to happen, AISH recipients who are able to obtain employment would not risk losing the medical and health supports required to work or to live independently in the community. Again, there would be more incentive to work.

Now, I'm not entirely sure how these two things are linked and how they work. The minister has the resources. You're surrounded by them, so I'm sure you'll enlighten me on this. I've got lots of AISH recipients in my own constituency, and of course their numbers are increasing across the province. So these are important issues of policy that will affect the well-being and sense of well-being of lots of Albertans who are recipients of this.

Another question that has been raised sometimes has to do with the level of AISH support. Should we try to approach it in terms of the low-income cut-off levels and see if, in fact, it's appropriate to move it up so that it will at least be at the level of low-income cut-off rather than the somewhat arbitrary number of $1,050 that we have this year? Although, as I said, I am pleased that there have been increases over the last three consecutive years. That gives hope to people on AISH and certainly relieves some of their anxieties.

The minister very briefly referred to persons with developmental disabilities, the PDD program. Services to persons with developmental disabilities are delivered through six regional boards. Most of those services are contracted through community agencies, many of whom are struggling to recruit and retain staff in Alberta's hot job market. You did refer to some increase, you know, in this part of the budget, and I understand that the increase is about 3.5 per cent. Now, it is unlikely, in my view, that the modest 3.5 per cent increase in the PDD budget will allow contracted community agencies to retain staff, let alone address growth in caseloads and to reduce caseloads in order to make those services more effective. I wonder if the minister has some reflections on that.

Yes, I acknowledge that there's some increase there, but is it sufficient? I have before me a document called Alberta Disabilities Forum: Addressing the Needs of Special Populations in Continuing Care, Issues Prioritization Summary. I'm sure that the minister has seen a copy of it too. In this document one of the major issues that is identified that needs addressing, you know, along the continuum of care, whether it's home living, whether it's supportive living, or whether it's facility living, is the problem of attracting appropriate staff and the ability to retain them once you have them there. It is a very serious problem. It cuts across various categories of care that is provided and received.

If a 3.5 per cent increase in the PDD is a reflection of the general increases that the minister has sought to provide, will that be sufficient? Will that be an adequate increase given the labour market pressures, given the problems identified by this group? There are 36, I guess, different groups. Yes. I'm told that the Alberta Disabilities Forum, a coalition of 36 disability organizations, prepared this report. I don't know if you have this report or not. I'm sure you do. So that's another question.

With respect to Seniors and Community Supports, yes, $255 million is budgeted for Alberta's seniors' benefits for this current fiscal year that we are discussing, a modest $18 million increase from what was budgeted to be spent in the previous year. If there was going to be an increase in the monthly benefit level, it will likely have been announced. I'm not sure what this level is or if there's going to be an increase. It's therefore likely that the increase will be used to cover the growing number of seniors eligible for the benefit rather than increasing the benefit itself. A 14.7 per cent increase in funding for seniors' lodges was announced, which will allow the addition of 250 more lodge units. I guess the increase would seem to be targeted on increasing spaces rather than on the assistance per person. Would the minister like to comment on that, the problem that it creates?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. Some excellent comments. I'll start with AISH. You're absolutely correct. I guess that back in '93 there was an amount of $810 per month, and it's only really been in the last few years that there's been any marked increase. But a number of things did actually happen in the past. There were some new personal benefits. Child care, transportation, a variety of benefits went up in addition to rate increases. In fact, there were substantial additional health benefits: drugs, dental, and so on.

What happened in the past and is ongoing with some of the programs with AISH is that while it may not have always been to the monthly amount, there were benefit increases. I believe it's about $350 a month, as an average, the amount of health benefits that we provide for AISH recipients in addition to the $1,050 of income. So there are supports well above that. There is $895 in financial benefits. On average, clients on AISH receive about $1,245 per month. I guess that is what we're saying. In addition, a single AISH client can earn up to $700 per month for the first $1,000 of employment earnings.

A number of things did happen, actually. When you look at the cost of living, there were two things. One, we've been putting up in the last few years the monthly payment. Health benefits and other benefits have increased over the past years as well. Then there's been a shift also in the last reviews to increasing the threshold of income, exactly what you were talking about. But how do you encourage people to work, especially at that level of income to be able to retain some of that before losing their benefits, so that they have an opportunity to get on their own two feet before you take away the supports that might be helpful to get them there in a more long-term kind of setting?

I would fully agree and support that notion. How do you help someone get into some situations of more permanency and independence to the extent that they might? We have been working on this very much as a high priority and thinking that we have an opportunity of helping those on AISH to realize and think about their abilities rather than just their disabilities. How do we help them focus on how they, too, could be, like all of us, wanting to be active and contributing and earning and providing for those principles of independence and self-reliance? Those are very good qualities that we would wish for everyone.

I worry. There are 36,000 people on AISH, growing to 38,000, almost 39,000 in our projections this year. How can we get more of those back into the mainstream of life, work, and community and everything that would go with that? That's an enormous challenge, but I think that's more the direction we've got to really focus on. How do we help those individuals one at a time to be more capable of providing for their own needs, not just as a financial issue to us but for their own well-being? We are going to look at that.

As to whether we link it, that's a policy question. We've got some work left to do. The higher priority at this stage is to try to focus on helping those on AISH to really think about gaining their independence by providing supports to help them search and find work. We're working with Employment, Immigration and Industry quite actively on just that and hope to report through the year progress just on that front.

You mentioned some question about moving AISH amounts to other thresholds, the low-income cut-off and the like. Those are comments that are not in the business plan at this stage. Those are things that, I guess, we could certainly examine and see what that means. I don't know what that number would be, actually, off the top of my mind.

Dr. Pannu: I'm going to plant some ideas in your mind.

Mr. Melchin: Certainly. Yeah, I understand. That's part of the discussion. As we go forward, that's exactly, you know, part of the input. I'll be happy to accommodate and see what that means for us going forward.

The PDD agency staff retention: is 3.5 per cent sufficient? I concur that that's still an enormous challenge. How do you retain staff? Three point five per cent in this environment is still an ongoing problem. We've increased the budget to PDD, though, 90 per cent since 1999. There's been an enormous increase to the budget over time and not necessarily a substantial increase in the number of people. There are about 9,100 people that we're servicing under PDD. Over half a billion dollars, a very substantive budget. It averages about $58,000 per person for PDD. That's on top of AISH payments that they receive and on top of health benefits that they would also receive. For those receiving PDD, there's $70,000, $75,000 in financial resources that are being allocated. It's fairly substantive.

We've actually had a brainstorming session with service providers just recently, and it's part of our ongoing challenge. We've talked to them and said: "You know, we've put a high dedication of dollars to this. How do we see that this is getting to the front lines, to those providing the service?" We brought a cross-section of people there. It was just a brainstorming session. It was an excellent meeting. We plan to follow that up with providing people that are active, creative, looking at new ideas and new ways. There are some really innovative and successful models and ideas being employed by some of the service agencies. How do we encourage and engender more of that to come through the whole system?

If we can provide services more effectively, I think that would help us to reallocate more of those dollars, potentially from savings, to retention of staff. It won't be the direction of cutting the budget per se. But how do we get more effective in the use of these resources so that you can actually also afford to retain people to provide the services? It's very important and necessary.

I'm quite encouraged by the feedback we've had from the PDD, those that were there, the various boards and service providers alike. They are coming forward with ideas. It's not all about just a lot more dollars but how to better use those dollars. It's in that line that we're really trying to work hard this year and trying to find out those ideas. If it means that we have to start small and pilot some programs, we'll pilot them. We'll allow people to be innovative if they possibly can, provide the ability to try some things, get creative. It is about helping those persons, even those with severe disabilities, helping them and focusing on their abilities. How do we better do just that? How do we empower those 9,100 individuals to get the services that they might best qualify for? We are going to look at those.

Coming back to AISH, I wanted to mention, too, the income, and I'm glad to hear you speak in those terms. We do want to support their being able to earn income. We want to get rid of the barriers to people. You know, for those that are in that position, it's hard to give up those supports. We want to take away some of the barriers and risks to help them be able to get more positions of permanency and then, maybe, work on their transition off the support programs if they are able to support themselves. We will try and look at how flexible we can be and design programs or even work with individuals in contemplating those specifics.

Seniors' rates. You're correct that the rate increases have really gone towards the increasing number of seniors. There, too, we've had a number of discussions with various seniors' groups. One of the mandates from the Premier is a demographic planning commission. That's going to be a growing issue for us: the population of seniors as a percentage of the population. How do we ensure that the programs and the dollars that we have are best left to assist those seniors at that time and targeted to the highest need, to the best program? There is an ability for us to change what we have. It's hard to accommodate rate increases and volume increases and also see about sustainability of programs.

We've got some large challenges before us, and I think it's under that context that we start to engage some of the seniors' groups about how we might best do that. We have some other information that we'll supply also.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We'll continue. Again, I want to commend the minister and his staff for providing a very good analysis of the background to the budget and the business plan. On page 252 one cost that's identified as running almost out of control is the health care related costs, drug costs, number 4 on that page.

New and more effective drugs and advances in medical equipment can significantly improve the quality of people's lives and enhance inclusion in the community. Drugs have been the fastest growing component of Canadian health care costs over the past 25 years.

That, certainly, is true and has an impact when you later observe that there is an attempt, in fact, to move people out of long-term care facilities into community-based facilities or community-based support systems.

There, again, under 6 the observation is made that the shift from facility care to community-based care allows individuals to return home after shorter hospital stays or have their ongoing health and personal care needs met in their community where they may experience greater quality of life. However . . .

And I appreciate this observation here.

. . . this shift currently requires Albertans to absorb a significant portion of the costs of equipment, supplies, drugs, transportation and other items that would have previously been covered by facilities.

Now, it's been again brought to our attention that there's an attempt, of course, to move people from facility-based care centres into the communities, but the shift of costs over to families or to individuals is a key issue that's identified here under 6. Is there a response in the budget to this? As we encourage people who may have been receiving care in long-term care facilities over to more community-based support systems, how do you help such persons moving from one location to the other? It does translate into increased costs for them or for their families. What provision is there in the budget to support this policy of encouraging people to live in communities where, of course, there is a better quality of life? But in order for them to be able to do this, they have to be able to pay the bills, or someone has to pick up their additional costs. So that's one question.

While I have the book in hand, there's one little table here that I found somewhat intriguing. I couldn't make sense of it. It's right here on page 256. It's a performance measure, on the top of that page, having to do with seniors and persons with disabilities having appropriate supportive living options. The number of affordable supportive living units for aging in place developed with support from provincial funding: the last actual was 1,640. The target for 2007-2008 is 166, and by 2009-10, I guess, it will disappear, it seems to me.

Why is it that the business plan contemplates elimination, if I read the table correctly, of this number of affordable supportive living units for the aging in place program? I may be misinterpreting or misunderstanding this performance measure. How does it enhance performance? Performance measures are supposed to tell us something about enhancement, I guess, of some programs or the performance of those programs, but it seems to me that here we are kind of moving away from providing that particular kind of support in the first place.

Moving on, Mr. Chairman, to long-term care issues. Long-term care facilities, of course, are operated – you know, several different players are coming into the picture. Public facilities is one, of course. Corporations and individuals under contract to authorities: these would be private facilities for profit, I would think. Then the third: private but nonprofit voluntary cultural or religious organization under contract to authorities. Three different ones.

As of a couple of years ago, 2005, there were 179 long-term care facilities, with 14,065 beds. There were roughly 600 people on waiting lists for long-term care beds. What is the picture with respect to waiting lists now, two years later, in 2007? Has the waiting list shrunk or, in fact, grown in size? If so, is it a matter that concerns the minister and the department? The waiting list is growing. What happens with people who remain on the waiting list for years?

I know that, personally, we had to deal with it when my mother needed to be moved to some facility. We just couldn't cope with all the services that she needed at home. The waiting list stood in the way. I know the excruciating kind of feeling that we had. We couldn't help her enough, yet we couldn't find a place for her, the waiting time issue. I'm sure there are families now that struggle with this day in and day out, and if the waiting list is growing, then I'm sure the minister shares my concern that this shouldn't be the case. Shortening the waiting list would be, certainly, a message of hope and relief to families who deal with their loved ones and can't provide the care that they need but at the same time can't find a placement for them somewhere in the facilities.

Now, one of the concerns that I have had – it may be a figment of my imagination, and I hope it is – is that more and more people in need of long-term care are having to move into private, for-profit facilities, where they have to bear additional costs. The costs of receiving those services in for-profit facilities are much higher than they would be in publicly owned facilities. If, in fact, it is the case that increasing numbers of Albertans receiving such care are having to move into private, for-profit facilities, then that would be a serious concern of mine. I wonder if the minister would have some light to shed on if there is a trend, if the cost differences are fairly considerable, and if that's making it difficult for people, seniors, particularly on fixed incomes, to be able to pay their bills. I hope to hear further on that.

We know that a lawsuit has been in the making with respect to the increases in long-term care areas. I think the increases are about 40 per cent to nursing care brought forward to nursing home residents, I think, three or four years ago, and that followed another 15 per cent increase just a year before that. With about 14,000 people in Alberta in nursing homes – and the numbers may be growing, so my numbers here may be somewhat outdated, and the minister can correct me on that – that would have amounted to $128.7 million at the time the claim was filed, the cumulative, you know, money that went out of the pockets of families or persons in nursing homes because of the massive increase in fees.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we have about two minutes left in this segment.

Mr. Melchin: Two minutes?

Yes, no, and yes, no. I don't know what the questions were up front, but we'll supply much of the answer in response. On drug costs: you were mentioning in number 4 or number 6 on page 252 opportunities and challenges. We do recognize that that's just in the category. Though we have programs, services, we don't have all of the answers other than we want to identify that these are some of the challenges. We'd like to see more people living in place, helping in their home and those kinds of questions. That could save us substantively in the hospitals and the like, but as you pointed out, then some of the companion costs shift to the person to bear.

That's part of what we're trying to sort out. In the end there are probably savings for the government to help continue to facilitate even if we picked up some of the costs, but those are things we'll have to work with the health department to finally resolve. We don't have something specific today.

I would just say that on the affordable living units, your performance measure, there are about 4,256 units since 2000 that have been developed for the assisted living. You're right. The performance measure mentions that goes down. The capital budget we've had and some federal and a lot of the provincial dollars, those programs have ended. They were short term in nature, program, and design.

So that's part of the work that we're considering at this stage: what is that program design? Going forward, how do we continue to see about those units, and in what fashion are they provided? We'll have to be reporting more on this performance measure in due course in the next year's business plan.

Accommodation rates. I thought I'd just mention that for long-term care, whether it's private or public, at this stage those are all fixed. It's at 48 and something dollars per diem. So it doesn't really matter if you're in long-term care, whether it's a private or public facility, their rate is fixed as to how much they would be charged.

I guess that's two minutes. I want to thank you. We'll respond to other questions. Didn't have time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hour that was allocated between the New Democratic caucus and the minister has now lapsed. Are there any other members who wish to participate in the estimates? Anybody else have any questions? Seeing none, the committee will now rise and report progress.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Infrastructure and Transportation; Employment, Immigration and Industry; Seniors and Community Supports relating to the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

5:30

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly now adjourn and reconvene at 7 tonight in Committee of Supply.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on that particular motion, I just want to caution every member that there have been a number of weather advisories in and around Edmonton, so if you're going to be travelling, be careful. There was some word that there was a tornado that did touch down in Stony Plain, but I don't have any further information to give you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:31 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/05

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening, everyone. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Chair: We have for consideration tonight the budget estimates and business plans for the Department of Education, Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry, Department of Seniors and Community Supports, and the Department of Children's Services. I've been advised that there is a 45-minute time allocation for each department.

I will now invite the hon. Minister of Education to present his opening comments.

Education

Mr. Liepert: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce the members of the Department of Education that are on the floor tonight. First of all, Lois Hawkins, assistant deputy minister; Gene Williams, who is our financial guru; and Jamie Curran, from my office.

Mr. Chairman, this is the fourth appearance for me in estimates, so I'm not going to open with any comments. Considering the time of only 45 minutes, I would be pleased to take any questions from hon. members at this time.

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments from any members? The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a couple of questions that I think need to be addressed, and that is on the issue of school facilities. The minister and I have had discussion in the past with respect to some of the plans for school facilities. I know that the minister has had some discussion with school boards and, in fact, was recently in my constituency talking with school boards in the Medicine Hat area about opportunities for alternative financing in school facilities, opportunities for there to be co-operation among and between various school boards.

I have also had discussion with parents and teachers and board members, and while I think there is a sense that everyone would like to co-operate, to buy into the process, I think there is generally a feeling that this is something that is more suited for the Calgarys and Edmontons of this world, where you have private developers and much larger developments than you would find in a mid-sized city like Medicine Hat or Lethbridge or Red Deer. For that reason they have indicated that while they would be very pleased to come across with some innovative funding proposals, they feel that they are limited in opportunities. The impression that they have been receiving from the minister is that unless they're able to come forward with some innovative and alternative types of funding arrangements, there is a diminished likelihood of proceeding with some much-needed projects.

My question is very simple. Can the minister explain what his concept is on alternative funding and innovative infrastructure for school projects and how that kind of innovation would apply to markets that are not Calgary or Edmonton but, in fact, are Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Red Deer: still growing, still with a high degree of demand but not to the same extent as the larger cities?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that if I left the impression that the only way schools are going to be built in the future is through innovative funding methods, that is certainly not what I believe is going to be the case. As this House is well aware, we have some $3 billion in infrastructure needs in the province, and there's simply no way that we're going to do all of that in the conventional, traditional method of building schools. I guess what we have to do is look at some options. I think that I would agree with the hon. member that creative methods of financing new schools are probably more applicable to the Calgary and Edmonton regions than they are to the rest of the province. I hope that within the next couple of weeks I can shed some light around that.

At the same time, I think what we need to do is start to address with traditional capital methods some of the other needs that are required around the province. The reality of it is – and Medicine Hat is probably not a good example; I'll use Lac La Biche – that it's unlikely we're going to get much interest from the private sector to be involved in the building of a school in Lac La Biche, as an example. I think there are some options in the medium-sized cities like Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Red Deer, but our first emphasis, if I might, on a new concept would apply to Edmonton and Calgary. If we can meet some of the needs in Edmonton and Calgary via that model, then I think it, actually, in the long run will free up more of the traditional dollars for other parts of the province.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To the minister. I had some interesting conversations lately. Some of it started around the unfunded liability but branched into other areas of interest. Some of the messaging that we're hearing from the Alberta Teachers' Association relates to the retention of teachers and the impact of the unfunded liability on bringing teachers into the profession and also retaining them after they've started.

I think studies would probably show that teachers start their career, and if they stay for a few years, they keep on with their career right through and retire out of the profession. I would ask the minister if he could reflect a little bit upon how he views the unfunded liability to be impacting that aspect. I've been hearing from some folks in the profession that there are quite a few teachers applying for jobs these days as the hiring goes on right about now. There are many good prospects out there. We thought there might be a bit of a teacher shortage looming because the boomers are essentially retiring, and we're looking at that kind of scenario.

What are the long-term prospects for the profession, and is it going to be impacted regionally? The north has always had trouble attracting and retaining teachers. The migration seemed to be to the large cities, and even within districts teachers migrate after some experience to – I guess the word "preferred" schools could be used, in different people's minds, at any rate. There are many different reasons for that: proximity to larger communities and different kinds of facilities and different course offerings and different opportunities to grow professionally. I think one of the things that, certainly, has happened positively from the amalgamation of school boards was the opportunity for more professional development and more movement within a board, people not having to resign from one board and move off to another one to have different job opportunities within the teaching profession.

So could you comment on your perceptions with respect to the future prospects of the profession and what it's looking like down the road for teacher supply? Does this province differ from other provinces? How is it going to be impacted around Canada?

Mr. Liepert: Well, a number of good issues raised. I'll try to cover them off. I guess, first of all, in a general sense our research is not indicating that there's going to be a teacher shortage. Indications are that because our enrolment has remained relatively stable – a slight increase but nothing dramatic – the universities are in all likelihood able to keep up with the numbers required.

The challenge is what the hon. member alluded to. Probably if we think about it for a minute, two-thirds of our population now live in the Edmonton, or the capital, region and the Calgary region. So the likelihood of two-thirds of the students coming out of those two regions is fairly high. Students probably would want to pursue their profession in the region that they were raised. Our challenge is to meet some of the needs in the rural, especially the northern rural. I think it also would apply to some of the areas where we've got declining enrolments and a sparser population. I can think of southeastern Alberta as an example.

There's no doubt in my mind that once someone reaches that, say, 10- or 15-year plateau, the likelihood of that teacher leaving the profession before retirement for another career is significantly less than it is if you're below that 10- or 15-year plateau. There's no doubt that the teaching profession, like any other profession today, is faced with the challenge of attempting to pay salaries that are in most cases below what would be considered, certainly, some less educated careers. I am a believer that teachers do not go into the field of education based on money. They go in for the passion of education. I think that we're never going to be able to compete in a dollar sense with the drilling industry. I don't believe that there are a lot of teachers who get an education degree and then decide: well, I can make more money working on an oil rig. But there are probably some of those.

Now, relative to the unfunded pension liability, I think that probably the first two words I heard after taking over this portfolio – three words, I guess – are teacher recruitment and retention. All of the discussions I had around that issue were relative to: what is it that we are currently doing that is deterring good, young people from entering the profession, and what is it that we're currently doing that is discouraging them from staying in the profession? Each time the 3 per cent deduction off their pay for the unfunded liability comes up. Now, I think that it is a factor, but it's probably also been, I would say, somewhat overstated in order that teachers get the attention of government to resolve this issue that I believe teachers feel has been out there for too long. I think the hon. member is quite aware of the steps that we've taken to get us to the resolution of this issue, and I am committed to doing that.

I guess there would be two other things that I would say related to teachers. There may very well be in the near term a number of teachers moving into retirement, and there are several reasons for that, which I won't get into. So we may have a number of teachers moving into retirement.

I guess the one concluding comment that I would like to make, however, is that I think that as much as all of the other issues that we've talked about, the thing that will bring and keep a teacher at a particular school is the environment that he or she has to go to work in every day. I've seen some tremendous examples in the short period of time I've been here of particular schools, be it where the board or the principal or the superintendent or whomever has created an environment that actually had changed from a situation where teachers did not want to be at a particular school. A principal has come in, created an environment whereby he or she is now interviewing a number of candidates to come to teach at that school. Like a lot of things that we do in life, the work environment that you find yourself in on a day-to-day basis has as much to do with your enjoyment of the profession as just about anything else that happens to take place.

I think that I have answered most of the questions posed by the hon. member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to begin with good news. I want to congratulate the minister and the staff, both present and in the recent past. We are quite aware, I think, of the achievement of Alberta students within our province, but those results, of course, transcend across the world. There are examinations that take place where Alberta students are involved in international testing, and Alberta has, in the recent past, anyway, that I'm aware of, shown very, very excellent results.

Actually, what pleases me as much as the fact that Alberta might be third or fourth in the world in some of these categories is the fact that we are ahead of Canada. It warms, certainly, my heart because those of us that have been around here since 1993 remember all of the stories about when we were trying to get rid of deficits and pay down some debt, and we, of course, believed that no department should not be touched by some of the rationalization and budget cutting. Every day in this hallowed hall we would hear all kinds of stories of gloom and doom and that the sky is falling and how 10 years on our education system would be in total ruin. Well, it's turned out to be the exact opposite. Alberta and its education system are now being held up as shining examples of what can happen.

Now, it isn't we the politicians, of course, that ultimately are responsible for that. It's the students themselves, the kind of upbringing that they've had with their parents, providing them with the curiosity and with a firm background, then, in the ability to learn, then also the excellent teachers that have remained in the system and have come into the system in, again, the last 10 or 15 years that some of us have been around.

While the published results of the international testing are very, very good and, of course, should be sent to every home in Alberta, as far as I'm concerned, it shows up in other places. One of my favourite articles that ever appeared in Economist magazine was entitled Clever Red-necks. I believe that one of the members of this House actually did circulate that article to other members, and I hope that everyone had a chance to read it. I don't have it in front of me, but my recollection, of course, is that the writer of the article began with the old criticism that we have that's just so easy, and it doesn't even need any thought in order to be critical: that anyone with the amount of money coming into Alberta could run that operation out there and that it didn't take any brains at all.

The reporter went on to say, "Well, if that was the case, then how do you explain the fact that Albertans do so well in so many areas?" of course including education, and then went on again to restate the standings that Alberta students have in these international testing procedures. For an article in the Economist, which isn't really a hard, right-wing kind of publication, to be acknowledging the great work in Alberta I thought was quite excellent.

Now, today during Members' Statements we had another student from Alberta that was recognized. This is tremendous. I don't know if people recognize the impact of things like second place in an internationally televised spelling bee and of Alberta being second for the second year in a row. This is quite significant. I want to congratulate the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon for bringing that forward because it is very, very important and vital to Alberta's future that we start to celebrate scholarship instead of allowing American pop culture to continue to celebrate dumbing down or that it's cool to be stupid. Whatever we can do along these lines is very, very important and also significant.

I've talked about the students, again under the good-news portion of my little speech here. I want to continue by talking about the teachers. My colleague from Lethbridge-East, my colleague from Little Bow, and myself were on stage at a building at the University of Lethbridge last Friday afternoon for one session of the University of Lethbridge's 2007 spring convocation. Now, there were lots of interesting things that went on there, but I want to talk about what struck me. I've been on that stage at these convocations probably 13, 14 times. I'm not sure just exactly how many years that has happened. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell you and I want to tell the minister that I have never seen – never seen – on any graduating class that I've attended so many honour braids as were coming across that stage last Friday afternoon.

Now, as people here would know but just for the record, an honour braid at the University of Lethbridge is either in gold, which indicates great distinction, or is in blue, indicating distinction. Great distinction means that their marks are above 3.75, and for distinction they're above 3.5. Graduate after graduate coming forward with either blue or gold braids: it was a sight to see.

When one paid attention to the actual convocation book, then another thing became very apparent. There must have been – what? – 350 graduating students. I didn't count them. But do you know that the ones that were graduating with a degree in education probably made up no more than 30, maybe less than 10 per cent? Most of the people, most of them young people, that were coming across that stage were double-degree students. They had a bachelor of arts and a bachelor of education or a bachelor of science and a bachelor of education. Again, just a tremendous resource that is now coming out of the University of Lethbridge, and probably the same situation has happened at the University of Calgary and at the University of Alberta. A tremendous resource that's coming out into our schools. I have no doubt, after witnessing that, that we in fact are going to be seeing the same kind of standard of achievement by Alberta students because of the calibre of Alberta teachers that we have in those classrooms.

Now, that brings me to the issues, then, that I want to bring, and that is classrooms. I'm very, very anxious to view capital plans, and certainly as the representative of Lethbridge-West I cannot stand here and not mention the west side high school, a collaboration between the public school board and the separate school board in Lethbridge. Yes, the original . . .

The Chair: The time has elapsed, unfortunately, hon. member.

The hon. minister to respond.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I will because I know how passionate the Member for Lethbridge-West is about the high school and, I have to acknowledge, so is the Member for Lethbridge-East. I guess I could only supplement what I said earlier. We recognize the – I'll call it a backlog – backlog in school construction and some of the challenges that growth areas are facing, and I can only promise my hon. colleague that we'll be dealing with that very soon.

It would be hard not to make a couple of comments following the member relative to his praise for our students and the quality that we have witnessed. He mentioned young Nate Gartke, who is the runner-up in the international Scripps spelling bee in Washington.

I guess the thing that I find absolutely astounding is that this young student didn't come from Webber Academy or a school that specializes in high achievers. He actually went to Vic comp. I guess it used to be Vic comp. It's now the Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts. I think what it does is it shows that for school boards who have taken the initiative to provide a variety of programming for students, it just can pay off in so many different ways.

The hon. member mentioned about the graduating class at the University of Lethbridge. I should assure him that if the recent graduating class at Ross Sheppard high school here in Edmonton was a harbinger for future students at the University of Lethbridge, those honours with distinction and honours graduates will be continuing to walk across that stage because out of 573 total grads at Ross Shep high school a couple of weeks ago, 236 were grads with honours or honours with distinction. I'm sure that's not an anomaly. I think that's happening all across this province. So I really appreciate the comments by the hon. member.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few brief comments and questions for the minister and would just like to echo my colleague from Lethbridge-West in saying that I do believe that the minister and the department are doing an excellent job. In fact, I want to give them a chance to prove that, because I have a few questions around that.

The first one is actually a very, very general question, but I think it would be good to get it on the record. Could the minister explain or just outline briefly the total funding increases for Education over the past five years, and could he also, then, at the same time talk about the total enrolment increase over the last five years? What I understand is that we've increased our budget a couple of billion while enrolment has remained relatively flat, but I could be wrong there, so I'd like to know just approximates on that.

In the context of all of that, as we look at the 3 per cent funding increase for this year, I have heard some teachers and school boards talk about how this could affect the class size initiative. I'm wondering if the minister could explain, sort of, how the 3 per cent funding increase for this year's budget will be able to maintain or sustain the class size initiative. That's a very, very important question for many of my school boards and many of my teachers.

I did have a meeting with some teachers, actually, this past week, and they had some really good questions that I'd like to bring up and maybe just put on the record. Of course, some of the questions were around the unfunded pension liability, and I know that the minister and the department are working on that. Some teachers had a couple of suggestions. They said that they'd like to go to the weekly wage index, the same thing that MLAs use. In fact, they said that they'd like to see salaries taken right out of the instruction budget and treated as a separate line item with the weekly wage index built in as sort of an automatic trigger, which would be somewhat akin to, I guess, provincial bargaining, but there's really no bargaining to be had because it's done for us by the private and public sectors. That was one sort of question/suggestion/idea.

Also, I know that when we looked at the unfunded pension liability a couple of years ago, we did try to tie in a concept paper that had the ability to fire or remove teachers that were not meeting certain performance measures. I hope we don't lose that as we go through the unfunded pension liability review. I hope we can find some way of getting rid of lazy or poor teachers because right now it's very difficult, almost impossible, to do that. In fact, the sad thing is that when I was a school trustee, we had to actually buy those teachers out in order to get them to retire. We would pay the bad teachers $60,000 or $80,000 to quit, and we couldn't reward the good teachers with any kind of bonus pay. That was very frustrating, to say the least, as a school board trustee. So some kind of a mechanism to fire or remove lazy or poor teachers would be a very good thing for us to do.

Also, when I talk to some of my teachers and the ATA presidents, they talk about the average age of teachers really going up, and I know that the unfunded pension liability would be a great tool in helping the attraction and retention of young teachers. That would be a good thing to look at.

Getting back to some more specific issues. Again, on the funding side, for the K to 12 rural schools, it would be great if somehow the rural schools could get a little bit more of the sparsity funding. Because of the class size initiative now, it's actually made it harder to fund these small rural schools. We used to be able to put, you know, 20, 23, 24 students in a class in order to be able to afford a teacher. Now that is really frowned upon by the department and by the board. I'm just wondering if there could be some further sparsity funding for some of the smaller rural schools.

A few other things. You wonder if it's necessary or if it's the best use of dollars for the review of coding. There's apparently a constant review going on of coded kids, which seems like a waste of time and money. Like somebody said: once you're blind, you're pretty much always blind; we don't have to keep recoding and rechecking that child to see if he's still blind. So for certain special needs I think that these constant reviews of the coding, maybe, are not necessary as well as some of the silly audits that are done and clawbacks by the department. Some schools and school boards are frustrated at that and would like to see some of those practices, maybe, reviewed by the department.

Also, another interesting one came up – and I guess I'm jumping all over the map – as we talked about teachers that we can, maybe, move or remove. It was interesting because one of the teachers said that it would be nice to have more mobility of teachers within Alberta. Right now you have pretty much total mobility within your school jurisdiction, within your board. We just did this big thing with TILMA, you know, where people – labour and professionals, et cetera – can move back and forth between B.C. and Alberta, yet within Alberta teachers are pretty much stuck within their own jurisdiction. Sometimes getting a change is a fresh start. Being able to maybe transfer to another division would give them, sort of, a new lease on life and a new look at things. Maybe there should be some kind of a mobility provision within Alberta for having teachers move around from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

I know that that creates a lot of work for the boards and maybe for the department, but it might be something to keep the new and the revitalization in the classroom, which is so important. Some people like to move around Alberta, and rather than go and start at the bottom of the scale again and have to apply and get in at the beginning, it might be nice to just be able to keep your seniority as you move around.

An Hon. Member: Portability.

Rev. Abbott: Portability. That's the word. Thank you very much.

The final thing I'd like to talk about is just the school buildings. I'm very appreciative that we are inching – very, very slowly but inching along – toward getting a new Catholic high school in Drayton Valley, the Holy Trinity school. I think there are some tenders out right now or due to come back right away. Also, the H.W. Pickup junior high school is one where we would love to see the shovels go in the ground this summer or this fall. I think those two are kind of moving along.

The one I don't have any understanding of what's happening is the replacement school at Thorsby elementary, so I was wondering if the minister could give me an update on that. I'm constantly getting letters and calls from people in the Thorsby area asking me when their new replacement school will be funded. It's already approved. It's on the list, but it just hasn't been funded yet. If the minister could just explain how the capital plan relates to individual schools that are on the approved list. Is there any new funding for schools that are already approved, or is there no new funding at all for approved schools? Why do we approve a school without funding it? That seems like an odd way to do things. So if the minister could talk about that.

Then the final, final thing is on transportation. Again, some of the rural boards are having trouble these days with busing costs with regard to cost of fuel and what's happening with, you know, long, long commutes between residences. The busing costs are going up, and there doesn't seem to be any kind of a formula for that to help some of the rural boards with some of their busing issues.

I think that's it. Some very easy questions for the minister to answer, and if he can't provide it now, then later would be just fine as well. Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'll make a few quick comments. First of all, relative to the hon. member talking about busing costs, he's absolutely right; there are significantly increasing costs for rural boards. It was interesting because I met with the Calgary Catholic board several weeks ago, and they were trying to impress upon me all these extra challenges they have as a large metro board that rural boards don't have. So it depends on which particular member of the Legislature you're talking to as to who is in the most dire financial need.

Just a couple of things. The comments around coding. We are reviewing that as we speak, and hopefully we can streamline some of that administrative burden. Every time I meet with school boards and they complain about administrative burdens that we place on them, I say: "Give me specific examples, and we'll deal with them. Don't just talk in broad terms about, well, you placed all these administrative burdens on us. I want to see specific things." So that's what they've been given.

I'm not going to comment around the couple of comments that the member made relative to teachers, what would be a fair settlement going forward, because we have created a task force now. I want that task force to go out and hear from Albertans as to what we should be taking to the table with the ATA, so I'm just not going to comment on that.

A couple of questions relative to numbers. In the past 10 years our enrolment is actually 4.9 per cent, in the last 10 years. At the same time our funding has increased by almost double, a 90 per cent increase, and inflation has gone up 28 per cent. I think those are numbers that do need to be put on the record.

Finally, I want to also just correct a couple of numbers that the hon. member used. He talked about a 3 per cent funding increase. I'm disappointed in my colleague that he has fallen into the media trap of saying that we've had a 3 per cent funding increase because, my goodness, we had a 5.2 per cent funding increase in our Education budget. Yes, there was a 3 per cent increase in operational grants, but there was a whole bunch of other envelopes of money, including class size initiative. Our class size initiative funding this year brings our total commitment over three years for class size funding to just over a half a billion dollars. That has provided 2,500 new teachers throughout the province. We are doing a tremendous amount to get class sizes down to an acceptable level, as outlined by the Learning Commission.

I think that covers most of what the hon. member raised.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Minister, there are a couple of areas here, and there may not be much coherence to this, but maybe in order to get the questions to you, I'll just go through a few different things.

It's interesting to hear the Member for Lethbridge-West speak about the honour grades and the number of students with honours. In the whole scheme of things any of us in this Assembly, I'm sure, would not want to pit our achievement on an exam against any of the students that are out there today and graduating from either grade 12 or our colleges. The course expectations have risen dramatically. The ability of the students to comprehend and to problem solve and to go through the calculus and all the rest of it is quite astounding when you compare it to our generation, when we went through those programs.

By the same token, it was interesting that within the last week or so I did read in the paper some concerns being expressed by colleges that the professors felt set upon by their students to make sure that their marks went up and up and up. When I left the profession to come to the Assembly 10 years ago, it was a concern in the diploma exam area that there was mark creep. The marks were being inflated. The averages were getting higher. Were the capacities and the capabilities of the students increasing relative to their cohort? How does that go? It appeared to me – and I don't know whether your department has studied these things – that there was a vast difference, a significant difference, a measurable difference between the marks from the 50 per cent classroom evaluation and the diploma evaluation.

Now, I know, before anybody thinks I'm being simplistic about this, that there is a vast number of things that fall into the classroom evaluation category. You don't simply mark that based on a one-shot observation. It is complicated, and there are a lot of parts that go into that. By the same token, the capacity and the ability of one student to be measured fairly against another student in a different classroom in the same school and, even more so, a completely different jurisdiction, a different approach taken by another school district: is the department doing anything to evaluate those differences? I know at the current time we're basing scholarships and we're basing entrance on blended marks. Universities, if they deem this to be not appropriate, may have to go to entrance exams of some sort and do their own evaluations for those purposes.

When we talk about diploma exams and those things regarding evaluation, one thing that I've been interested in observing over the last few years . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but the time allocation for this particular department has elapsed.

Mr. Liepert: I thought we had an hour, Mr. Chairman. Sorry.

The Chair: Forty-five minutes for each department. Perhaps the minister could respond to the member in writing.

Employment, Immigration and Industry

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you have officials here?

Ms Evans: I do, indeed, have officials here. As the Education officials here leave, I will begin, and then we can take it from there.

May I first introduce the officials that are in the listening audience upstairs: Dan Kennedy, Neil Irvine, Susan Williams, and Ellen Hambrook as well as Lorelei Fiset-Cassidy. They have all joined us here this evening. Then to my immediate right is Ulysses Currie, and to my immediate left is Rick Sloan, and beyond Deputy Currie we have Duncan Campbell, that I identified earlier as the person that has done so much in making sure that our figures are accurate and they're ready for you this evening.

This afternoon, colleagues, we amplified on some of the issues surrounding the temporary foreign worker program, the PNP program. We also spent some time, in response to members of the third party, talking about issues that related to the minimum wage and so on. So I will repeat none of the above and just simply say that we look forward to the questions from my colleagues.

The Chair: Are there any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and welcome to the minister and her officials. I want to begin by saying that I'm particularly impressed by the broad spectrum now of this department. I think it makes a great deal of sense in terms of the files now that, of course, would come under one minister. I keep forgetting that I only have 10 minutes. Sometimes I get up and assume that I have 90, but I guess that's in error, so I'll try to stay within the time limit and also recognize the admonishment about relevance.

In my comments I'd like to advise the minister of how concerned I am about the rural development strategy. I want to commend her for her efforts that she is making towards that end, but we need some kind of stimulation in order for that program to keep moving forward. The $100 million that was put aside was, of course, hard fought at various tables that the government has to sit around. We don't want to lose the opportunity, then, to have that invested in rural Alberta. For the record I want to indicate that I agree with the definition of rural within this context, meaning outside of Calgary and outside of whatever definition we can use of capital region.

In any event, the recent announcement of five programs that receive funding is very good. It's a start. I know that wherever I travel throughout the province, when the Alberta rural development fund comes up, they're asking me what I think would be successful instead of the people within the region having to look at what they know best about, of course, and that is the local jurisdiction that they live in.

Sometimes, I suppose, Madam Minister, with your approval and sometimes really on my own initiative I've been trying to find ways in which to encourage people and challenge people to come up with some ideas that might generate. I tend to spend most of my time, in thinking about this particular issue, around the high school. I know that we're not talking about education per se; we've just had an opportunity to do that. In my experience – and I say it quite often and have yet to be seriously challenged on the attitude that I have – in terms of rural Alberta, you lose your school, you lose your community. So I think it's very, very important that we maintain that as one of the focuses when we're looking at rural development in Alberta.

We've got some examples right now in terms of the hockey school at Warner for both boys and girls and also the baseball academy for boys at the Vauxhall high school, but I don't think we need to restrict ourselves just to athletics. I recognize that there are opportunities, perhaps, in other areas for baseball academies and hockey schools. The town of Cardston, by the way, is thinking of a rodeo as a one of their activities. I've challenged Milk River with paleontology.

A couple from the Hussar area were talking to me one night about potentially losing their particular school. We chatted and talked about whether or not there wasn't an opportunity to work with Calgary developers and the lack of skilled workers that are available. You know, why didn't they go to a program of carpentry and build themselves a residence and then get into the situation similar to Vauxhall, where parents from around the province and really beyond boundaries are actually paying tuition in the order of over $10,000 a year, at least in Vauxhall's case, for their son to attend that particular high school because of the programs that are being developed.

The fundamental, though, of what I'm saying is that we have to find ways to fund innovation and make use of that fund in order to keep away the temptation that seems to be very prevalent out there amongst not only politicians of all orders of government to gain access to that money to build a community facility, to build a road, to fill a pot hole. It is for innovative ideas and not infrastructure, and we must be cognizant of that.

In the area of labour mobility I want to congratulate the minister for her involvement in the recent MOU with British Columbia, affectionately known around here as TILMA. I hope that her officials, as we speak, are working on other bilateral agreements with other provinces. Part of the reason that I bring up this topic is that having had the experience of being a minister in charge of Alberta's portion of labour mobility in Canada, being charged by my respective Premier of the day along with every other peer that I had in the provinces of Canada, we were given a specific task and, of course, had to admit to failure when we were unable to get true labour mobility in this country by a specified date, which happened to be, again for the record, July 1, 2001.

I think the character of this nation is such that when a province undertakes sort of interboundary initiatives, we're really going to have to look at bilateral agreements and start dealing with provinces one by one by one because, in my experience, if there ever was a recipe for failure it was: we're not going to do this unless we get every province to sign on. It just won't happen in my lifetime.

On the labour mobility package I want to encourage the minister to be strident. We have given over authority and responsibility to self-regulated professions. I think that's a good thing; I support it. But like any other responsibility and authority, if you abuse it, you lose it. I think it's very, very important that we not only encourage but that we insist on some type of performance measurement from all of the different self-regulated professions as to what they are doing specifically that is allowing for more labour mobility in Canada. I would use APEGGA as an example of how to get this done. I think in my experience, although I'm dated now . . . I see I've used up my time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. The comments of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West very much touched my heart, and I'll explain in a moment. Let me first give credit to the hon. member for the yeoman's service he has done since my appointment in this role to facilitate a better understanding of the rural development fund himself. The work that he did as minister along with the minister then of agriculture to define a rural development initiative that would show innovation is deeply appreciated.

What touched my heart about the comments about the schools, that when a school closes, the community closes, was that in Stavely, Alberta, when they closed the school that was named after my father and then ultimately tore it down, I had to accept the party line that if there wasn't sufficient use for that school, it wasn't economically wise for our province to keep it there. Many people had hoped I would be stronger as an advocate to retain that school because of their fear that bussing all of the children to some other point away would lead to an effective shutdown of the businesses in town. Also, the fact that we could never seem to find a reconfiguration, although it's been noted that the size of a classroom is perfectly positioned to become the size of a self-contained adult suite for retirees. It would have made an excellent community centre, and we could have put affordable housing in that place for people that need it and no doubt would have had many takers along with the other capacities. So sometimes these ambitions – we have to change the use or else destroy something that's built not because it wasn't a very adequate facility whatsoever. It didn't have asbestos in it, didn't have anything else, but it just wasn't something we were prepared to maintain for the community. As a result, if you go down the streets in Stavely, you can see a number of boarded windows, so you know what's happening there.

In terms of the rural development strategy it's my sincere hope that with the five projects that have been approved and have been announced, they will spawn some initiative.

I suppose the one that I worried about a little bit more than most was the one with the clerkship, placing clerks for the clerkship program, doctors in rural communities, to learn because it's perceived that they will not only learn but they'll like it there and they'll stay there. It does smack of somewhat contradicting the intent of making sure that this fund doesn't fill potholes created in other ministries where there wasn't capacity to undertake that on behalf of Health.

I'd like to reassure the hon. member on the TILMA agreement. At the recent meeting we had with British Columbia, we agreed that we would try to accelerate the approval of the TILMA from the date of April 2009 to April 2008. It may not be available to us in all the professions because the professional list has increased from about 60 to over 150. So we may not be able to achieve it, but the intent of TILMA is certainly excellent.

I think that the intent of the buyer/seller forum that has been part of this ministry's mandate and the co-operative work we've done with the minister of economic development from Ontario sets the stage for us to explore some other initiatives where we can look at not just labour mobility but a business co-operative approach that ensures that people can still sleep in their own beds at night yet work for a program in another province many miles away. That is a wonderful use of Canadians working at home to better their overall economy and better their personal economy by working in another province, even though it may be thousands of miles away.

I note that the hon. member referenced the self-regulated professions. In Ontario they have taken the stick approach. Quebec has taken the carrot approach. But insisting on performance measures is a very noble objective, and I certainly respect the hon. member's comments on that and will try to accelerate that where that becomes a barrier.

What I've been most proud of is the initiative that he started that has resulted in one act, two associations, with APEGGA. That is a group that has made considerable strides in opening its arms to others that could be supportive of the profession and make this a better place to do business on the engineering front.

So thank you. I await others' questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do have a couple of questions for the minister. I want to start by asking the minister if she would perhaps expand a little bit on the provincial nominee program and how that fits into the plans of the department and whether any resources are necessary to be allocated to that program.

The second item that I wanted to discuss this evening was the rural development initiative, and it's an initiative that I'm certainly supportive of. I think anything that we can do to encourage diversification in the rural areas to take some of the pressure off the explosive growth that we've seen in the large cities such as Calgary would be an excellent idea. I know that the program has had a somewhat slow start, but I understand that some of the initiatives have now been funded. I wonder whether the minister could expand on what these program parameters would entail, what's envisioned in terms of expansion of rural opportunities for employment, and in general just to give us some feedback on what kinds of performance measures or criteria would be used in ensuring that the taxpayer dollars are well spent in that program and that the taxpayers are getting good value for their money and any funds expended on that rural development initiative.

So I'll leave those questions for the time being.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. Earlier today I commented that the overall immigration program was going to have this year under the budget a $15 million increase, from approximately $54 million to over $68 million. I think that the most exciting thing about the work that we're doing is that if you look back six years ago, you see that we had about 128 PNP nominees that were successfully admitted. You look to this past year where we have 986 and in this coming year, in the 2007-08 budget, an anticipated 2,500 members. In '09-10 we'll have about 8,000 that will be members of that PNP club.

You can see that there's an intent to really accelerate, and probably the most exciting thing about the co-operation agreement between Canada and Alberta was the agreement by the federal government that indicated that they will send letters in the U.K., for example, to everybody who applied to be a health care professional in Alberta to ask if they're still interested in being retained in that area. So that will be a very definite plus for us this year as we're looking to augment our health workforce with people from other countries, and when they are socially and culturally and linguistically aligned with Alberta, it makes it that much easier.

The other observation I would make about the PNP this year that will be unique from the past will be the initiative of trying to attract those students who have come in from other countries that may choose, then, to make a career and live in a place that they have been educated in. So that will be a little more aggression that we will bring to bear on those postsecondary institutes. On that front, I think that the PNP will be as good and as positive as we can entice the employers and the communities to arrange.

May I just make one other observation? One of the performance measures in this budget is that we would try to improve our track record of a 70 per cent retention of people who chose to immigrate here to an 85 per cent, and I believe that some of the work that we're doing on our integrated settlement services will help us with that. A mere week ago we heard and saw some evidence of celebration of the roots program at St. Anthony's school and the tremendous capacity we have to make immigrant families feel more accustomed and comfortable in their new environment by defining programs that help parents parent, which incidentally is a good part of what keeps families happy when they arrive, if they get that additional support like the Changing Together program here in Edmonton. Many of these kinds of programs encourage the caregiver at home to be comfortable, even though the grandparents aren't there, so it's just really quite an amazing domino effect, and in November we will have a program that targets vulnerable immigrant communities. We're looking at neighbourhoods unconfirmed yet, but Calgary and Edmonton and perhaps Brooks, where we have large settlements from overseas that would appreciate, I think, some more support.

On the rural development fund the performance measures are still under development, and later on this month we'll review them. One of the difficulties was really getting off the ground on how we provided the program itself, how we encouraged the initiative of people to become really truly innovative, and a performance measure can't be the same for exactly every program. If you looked at the ones that we announced, some of them are more easily aligned with a program of supervision and evaluation of students, a student-related program. For the others like ones that connect with the SuperNet, it's a whole different criteria.

I think one of the things that's key from my point of view is that they have to identify their values. They have to identify their cost accountability. They have to identify how they hope to sustain that program even without these funds and have to work in some kind of co-operative mode. I think we really have to consider that the community itself has to give a response on the effectiveness of the program, and your acknowledgement that the larger communities that need extra support in rural Alberta of programs that can make those residents feel like they are at home and comfortable in their surroundings is a very good one. So we can certainly look at that.

Overall, I think that you've probably got other questions, so I'll sit down and take the rest. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Minister, certainly in this current economic climate we know that the demand for labour has increased. I wouldn't say exponentially because the level of employment was high already, but the demand, I guess, is maybe what's increased most significantly. There appears to be a shortage everywhere you turn. People are looking for people to fill all sorts of different jobs, whether they be professional or skilled labour or even in the service industry and not much experience is required.

For one group of Albertans, those persons with disabilities, they haven't seen that kind of increase in their opportunities. They have some increase in opportunity, but considering the kind of demand for labour, one would have expected to have seen perhaps even a quantum increase because there is so much demand unfulfilled that could be taken up by persons with disabilities.

Employers who, in fact, have hired persons with disabilities and have had them on staff for some time find them to be a real benefit to their workplace. They are loyal employees. They will be happy to work there for a long term. They aren't out looking for new opportunities somewhere, in many cases, because they're loyal to their employer. It brings stability into that workplace even. Other employees are pleased to have them in the workplace. They find them to be good to work with.

In many cases the challenges they face have to be accommodated. There are reasons why some employers think that they will have to make significant modifications of their workplace or their schedules or something. Mostly, it appears that it's a lack of understanding on the part of the employer. There's also a lack of understanding that the modification in that workplace is, on average, less than about $500 per workplace modification.

Some of the things that are required are perhaps flexible work hours because some illnesses require that a person is able to work a couple of days, and then perhaps because of fatigue they have to take a day or two off. So flexibility in the workplace is really important. If employers know these things before they go into the interview, it's found that they're much more receptive to employing people with disabilities.

Given that and given that the federal government has some initiatives, I'm wondering what kind of work you might be doing with the feds in that regard, what kinds of opportunities there may be to share resources and share some of the costs of moving the agenda a little bit to improve more employment for persons with disabilities.

I know also that the new federal government has recently announced changes to the tax structure that will better accommodate persons with disabilities. I've talked about a few initiatives that they're seeking to move forward. I'm wondering if your department is taking on behalf of the Alberta government any kind of lead role in this, or is another department taking that lead to interact with the federal government in regard to employment taxation issues as it relates, I guess, to employment expenses and deductions, which I think may not be directly your department but may have some spinoff onto it?

So those are questions that we know are out there, that the community is asking. People with disabilities are wanting to be more involved in the workplace. The opportunity that exists now may not come around again for a while if we don't move on this. I know that your department is doing a few things. If you'd elaborate on that a little bit and talk about that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. I'm really glad that the hon. member has raised these issues. I think he's absolutely right; there's never been a better time to really push the frontier of employer expectations about the capacity of the person with a disability. We've got a cry for help, requiring many more people to work. Sobeys has been a particularly positive partner. But I think we can do more. The Minister of Seniors and Community Supports and his deputy and, obviously, our deputy, Currie, have equally expressed an interest in trying to identify those places and those situations in which we can give people that opportunity to work and to accommodate their schedule in a way that best suits them.

Mr. Chairman, just this Monday, speaking to people in the oil and gas and petrochemical business, I identified that we have to start looking at employment differently for everybody. The student that graduates from university today doesn't want to put in the hours that, no doubt, you did as a young dad, going many hours more than what a lot of people would have thought was wise on a health-related basis. Well, today's graduate does want a balance in both their work and their family life, so that is going to mean that we're going to have to be much more creative.

We're going to have to be more creative not only with people with disabilities, but Minister Prentice and I have spoken about those people in aboriginal communities, First Nations, either on or off reserve, in Métis settlements, how we can explore the opportunities available to them as well. For people who have traditionally either been ignored or overlooked in many of the opportunities for employment, we have to make some significant strides there. We are undertaking right now to work in a partnership. Officials at the ADM level are also working in partnership to see what we can do to bridge some of the expectations of both the employer and the employee group as it relates to persons with disabilities. In my first federal/provincial/territorial meeting relative to labour we had discussions about labour issues, about tax credits, about some of the things that could be available. So, yes, indeed, you're talking to the minister whose ministry is the one that partners and makes those kinds of situations possible with the federal government.

I think that your comments are well observed, that the federal government has looked at a tax credit. We see some other options available, but at this time they're very much preliminary. In our discussions from our very first meeting there was supposed to be an additional meeting where the minister was to be available for touring out west, but then, as we find in a minority government, sometimes they have to change their plans. It's our intent, when we get an opportunity to meet again, to pursue that as it relates to those kinds of strategies, talking about not only compensation, health benefits, but tax credits for people where that may be prudent to do so and talking about other supports that the federal government can provide to accommodate adjustments at the workplace. I think that where these can be facilitated in a partnership with the federal government, the provincial government, and the employer, that's the very best initiative.

I'm really hoping to the larger degree that we can engage the employers because when they get an ownership in it – and I'll return, again, to Sobeys, who has an ownership in it, takes a pride in it – then we're going to make significant progress.

One other thing that I believe has been very positive for the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports is I understand that they're looking at different ways for accounting for all those other kinds of dollars that might be earned while somebody with a disability is employed. Rather than a monthly accounting, looking at some other options available. To me that just smacks of smart thinking while it relates to encouraging people to take the bold step of going back to work. We shouldn't make it unnecessarily onerous or encumbered by rules and regulations and red tape but make it as simple as possible for them to go back to work, to find the best market niche for their skills.

One final thing that I think you should know about. In our department our staff have all been charged with the responsibility of looking at their own area. If somebody is predominantly on the telephone, at a desk, in a government building, I think we should be saying that when that person leaves, retires, or moves to another position, that position, if still necessary, should and could be filled by somebody who is not in an office building downtown.

Consider the opportunity for us to employ many more people with a disability, allow them to work at their speed in their placements, allow us to have the benefit of not, for example, paying $360 for a square metre of space in Commerce Place when this person could be working in a home office with a proper chair and a proper table and a dedicated line and could be working in a fashion that might be much more comfortable for them and give us a whole new opportunity not only to employ people with disabilities but to employ those people who do want to stay at home, who do want to work under those circumstances. Besides the benefit of not having that type of aggregate of people working downtown, we give them the opportunity to be there for their families or work in the comfort of their own home without the needless expense of transportation and many other things.

I believe that that initiative, proudly undertaken by our department, will be one thing that will create a whole smorgasbord of new opportunities. We do have call-centre capacity within the people that work in our department, and I'm looking forward to us considering that that all should be jobs that could be done back at their home and not there.

I could just point out, as validation of the cost savings, that IBM has saved over a hundred million dollars, I believe, in a year by looking at this kind of option: if you will, delegating to home residence other opportunities for people to provide government support without that costly kind of situation that we currently have.

So I think we're on the threshold of opening up many opportunities, and your question gives me an opportunity to shine a little light on some of the things that we're actively pursuing.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Yes. Just briefly, in the time available, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the minister to elaborate a little bit on the rural development initiative and to perhaps advise what type of performance measures or criteria would be used in approving projects that would qualify under that program and what kind of criteria or performance measures would be used to ensure that taxpayers of Alberta are getting good value for their money in those initiatives that are approved.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps the hon. member wasn't in this evening when I did mention that, so I will just reiterate my earlier observations. The criteria for the rural development fund is currently under review, and later this month we ought to have that criteria ready for publication. It will in fact be extended to the various projects in different ways. The accountability for the dollars must be there. The accountability to the community must be there. Obviously, the accountability back to government.

We have to have different sets of criteria for the various ranges of projects. If you think, for example, about the clerkship program that is being provided, evaluating the effectiveness of that will involve the university, involve the communities, involve the health care institutions, the partners that will be involved in administering that program. Then you look at the different program linking with the SuperNet. In their review of that program they will be looking at quite a different coterie of events in terms of the training, the skills development, the satisfaction of the student, the capacity to meet the needs in that part of rural Alberta. So we'll be looking at things like whether or not this technology adapts and removes the barriers and helps the apprenticeship trades training and postsecondary education. Better access of learning opportunities: that will be evaluated. The local capacity to meet the region's needs and new connectivity applications will be part of it.

Then you look at, for example, the Killam regional economic development initiative, which has had a fund contribution for agribusiness, to help attract key agribusinesses. Their expected performance measures will include whether or not the agriculture base was generally enhanced with greater crop demand and revenue, whether there was more local economic activity and employment, whether there was secondary value-added services for local residents, and whether there was more local ownership and return on investment for regional groups. What we have to do is take the anticipated results, see if we agree that those results are sufficient, give evaluation on the basis of the results of the return, and report back whether or not that expenditure of dollars either showed in the short term or in the longer term a credible return on our investment.

Much of what is done will be performance measures that are targeted to those descriptors of the learner and achievement of the learning results. Different communities learn in different ways, whether it's about apprenticeship or whether it's about a retraining opportunity or helping people in rural communities expand their knowledge or their opportunity for learning.

One thing I wanted to indicate is that the Sunchild e-learning community, with a fund of $220,000, is going to be able to look at whether or not this course content as delivered is adapted to aboriginal culture and learning needs. We will be working with aboriginal communities to evaluate that particular content.

I'd have to say to the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill that the performance measures will be at some degree of variance depending upon the project, and ultimately the report back to the rural development initiative will give those key indicators on each of the projects. Then, in the context of that, we will evaluate and weigh whether or not the RADF did a credible job in conducting their reviews.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the minister could perhaps consider moving some of the government of Alberta departments out to the rural areas, like the government of Saskatchewan did, perhaps using some of those rural development initiative dollars to move some of the civil service into the outlying areas in Alberta and provide some sustainable jobs and employment in those areas in that way.

Ms Evans: Well, you're speaking my language, hon. member. In fact, the . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time allocation for this particular order of business has elapsed, the 45 minutes. We will now ask the officials to vacate the Assembly so that we can get the next group in.

8:30

Seniors and Community Supports

The Chair: I'll now invite the minister to make his opening presentation.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I maybe would just submit my comments from this afternoon in Hansard that we had as opening comments. We could certainly leave it in that respect.

I will make a few comments to introduce my colleagues that are here. To my right is Tim Wiles, Deputy Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. We have Reegan McCullough, assistant deputy minister, disability supports. To his left is Dave Arsenault, assistant deputy minister of the community support programs and strategic planning division. Then we have Chi Loo, assistant deputy minister, senior services division, and we have Susan McCulloch, senior financial officer, corporate finance.

For the benefit of those that are here, I would once again state that we are very fortunate to have the expertise and dedication and competency in this department of those that are here and many others that work for this department as well as, really, most of our departments in government: an outstanding group of professional, dedicated individuals.

We have a number of programs in this department that are fairly significant, all about helping Albertans, seniors and persons with disabilities: $1.8 billion in the budget, a 10 per cent increase over forecast of last year and an 8 per cent increase over budget of last year.

I didn't get enough time for opening remarks to cover a few things for the record, so I won't go over some of the seniors' programs initially. We have an Alberta seniors' benefit program. These are mostly designed for an income-based approach – a higher threshold of income will mean that you don't qualify – and targeted assistance to those in greatest need. That encompasses a large portion of what the seniors' programs are about. We have a few specific targeted ones like special-needs assistance for seniors to help with one-time emergency expenses. Then there's a dental and optical assistance plan for seniors. There's a variety of those related income-based supports.

The disability supports, $751 million for assured income for the severely handicapped: about 36,000 individuals on AISH, and that's growing potentially to 38,900 this year. For people who have severe impairments to their livelihood, we did increase the monthly payment from $1,000 to $1,050. This is the third successive year of increasing AISH monthly benefits to those. There's about another $300 or so in health benefits that are provided on average cost to those on AISH.

The concern is that with that number and growing numbers of people with disabilities not working, how do we re-engage to the extent possible more of them to be working, having opportunities to contribute to sustain their own lives? We're going to work very actively as a department, maybe starting with those that are more willing and able and desirous, to see if we can't build some success. Working with the Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry, we really put an emphasis upon how we take advantage of the opportunity that's in Alberta, with low unemployment rates, to let those with AISH participate in the workforce and be part of and included in the opportunities and not really be held back. There might be barriers to our programs that trap people into the concern about starting to earn some income and being cut off and losing benefits. We'll try and work on design to make sure that we don't make them worried, take away the barriers so that they might be more able to take those risks to find the work.

We have another program, Alberta Aids to Daily Living. That's part of the disability support. There's an Alberta brain injury initiative and a residential access modification program, RAM as it's referred to.

The other area of community support programs and strategic planning has to do with the persons with developmental disabilities. About half, $519 million, of our budget goes towards this. There are about 9,100 adults that are supported, persons with developmental disabilities. A lot of those dollars are really to help for living, supervisory care, 24/7 for some individuals. So there's a lot of that expenditure just in helping them live. Some of it's to help them participate in activities in the communities. Some of those funds are to help them prepare for or retain a job, and others are for psychological and behavioural services. Even with those people we are working through service providers, the concern being, really, retention of people providing the services, wages, especially in an economy such as ours. How do they afford to attract the staff?

We brought together and had a brainstorming session among quite a few of the service providers and various stakeholders to just try and find more creative ways to deploy our dollars to give the best value, to help empower those that are receiving the services. We've increased our budget 90 per cent since 1999, a very substantial increase in this budget, and even those involved in providing the services acknowledge that it's not about more money; it's about more effectively deploying that money that could then allow redeploying those funds into even helping the savings in retaining their staff. So we're going to work substantively in that direction as well through this year.

I would say that there's also some discussion with, I got to see the hon. Member – I keep forgetting the constituency – for Strathcona, the chairman of the Premier's council on the persons with disabilities. Really, I think our department in this business plan is encompassing some thought about how we prepare for many people, not just those that are on our AISH or PDD programs but those with disabilities that may not be funded for various supports. How do we see that there's more inclusion of all those with any form of disability and that there's that discussion on barrier-free access, inclusion in the workplace, and the like? Those are some of the things with which we were quite pleased that the chair of that council, the Member for Strathcona, is working towards and facilitating with our department.

With those brief introductory comments I'd be happy to entertain the questions from the members.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With those last few comments, Minister, you've been reading my notes. I'd like to just draw some attention to your strategic priorities, listed on page 253 of the budget document, and the government priority to improve Albertans' quality of life, an admirable priority for this government and something we're really interested in. First off for the ministry: improve supports and services for persons with disabilities. In many ways I wish there was a period there instead of carrying on to complete that sentence. The first priority for the ministry is to "improve supports and services for persons with disabilities through better coordination and integration of programs."

The reason I think it would be good to have a period after the first part of that sentence is because persons with disabilities who are served through programs like AISH and PDD and a few of those programs, although a large proportion of the budget, in numbers only comprise about 10 per cent of persons with disabilities in this province. Across Canada, typically, those are the kinds of numbers of people that would be supported versus people who have disabilities but are not supported through any particular program like AISH or PDD.

In order to improve Albertans quality of life, it behooves us to look at all sorts of other kinds of barriers that people with disabilities would be facing as they seek to be full participants in our society and, to use their term, that's often used, to enjoy full citizenship. When I look at some of the challenges that persons with disabilities are facing, it's in my mind easiest for me to describe it in terms of access. People with disabilities want access to society and to all aspects of our society. They want access to employment and to housing. They want access to the built environment, the physical environment. They want access to education. They want access to recreation.

If we just envision that part of the access component, the physical part, and think in terms of one kind of disability, people in a wheelchair, for them even the smallest of curbs, a four-inch or six-inch curb, is a barrier that people without disabilities would have to compare to a fence or something they couldn't climb over. If you can't get over a little curb, you have to either go around it or you have to go home. That, in my mind, symbolizes the access challenges that people with disabilities face. It's simple enough to envision that for things like the built environment, where access is encumbered because of curbs or other kinds of physical barriers like that.

There are all sorts of barriers that people with disabilities face with respect to employment, whether it be employer attitudes, ignorance, or again a lack of appropriate technology that they can utilize to overcome whatever disability they have. Another barrier to full citizenship would be opportunities in education. Maybe they are not able to access programs or to travel to enjoy different kinds of programs and take part fully in all aspects of education. Recreation may be another barrier that they face.

Housing is a huge concern. We don't have opportunity for people with disabilities to buy an accessible house because we haven't as citizens become aware of the challenges that exist and the challenges that we ourselves might face if, in fact, say, our spouse has a stroke, and we're not able to access our own upstairs in our own home. We haven't encouraged people to look down the road and think about building what's termed visitable housing in their own circumstances in order to accommodate future disabilities that members of their family might face.

Those are the kinds of things that in order to improve Albertans' quality of life we have to look at, and it goes beyond those programs that the ministry or other ministries might be providing. We have to, I think, take a look at those kinds of challenges and do our best to address them. It shouldn't be viewed as some kind of altruistic motive that we have, because the challenges that persons with disabilities face with regard to barriers and access are exactly the same kind of challenges that people will face as they age. Whatever the mobility challenge is, it doesn't matter whether it's acquired through disease or injury or some problem at birth, something that a person has had through their entire life, or whether it's as a result of aging. Those mobility challenges are the same. They're faced in increasing numbers as people age, and we're going to have to prepare for those times. We're going to have to prepare for that through the education of Albertans so that we can take those things into account as we make our plans for the future.

We have a lot of these programs that exist, but beyond that could the minister elaborate a little bit on what direction the ministry might be moving for people that are outside of the programs like AISH and PDD, what direction the ministry may be moving in with regard to that in order to address that government priority number 1, to improve Albertans' quality of life?

I have some other questions, but maybe we'll deal with those later. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. With respect to the comments on the priority 1, to improve supports and services for persons with disabilities, and putting a period at that point, we have, as you're aware, a mandate letter that we've received from the Premier with respect to priorities. This is the verbiage, actually, from there without the period.

I think that's an excellent point, though, on those without support through AISH or PDD. Much of our work through the programs and services we deliver doesn't really contemplate those with a broader range of disabilities that aren't provided for through the programs that we offer. I would assess that there is, I think, some degree of acceptance that that's the right approach: how do we assist in a variety of ways those with any disability whether they're on a program that's providing funding or services?

I would also state that I don't know; we'd have to be somewhat cautious that the expectation isn't there that we should see that government as providing programs and financial supports and a variety of things to everyone. We should be encouraging everybody to focus in more on their abilities. In fact, that's one of the concepts, as we've provided and worked with service providers, that they've been talking about. They're focusing much more on the abilities rather than on their disabilities, on their interests and their talents and their capabilities. I would agree that that's an excellent direction and focus. While we want to encompass how we can make this a better place for all people, including those with any kind of disability, it may not be through more services and programs directly of the government. I think that would be consistent with the statements that you're making.

Though it would be very good – and there's a leadership role that the government could take in helping assess. It's not necessarily a program, but it gets into standards like barrier-free access, that I know your council has been working on, and how to get architects even in design at the universities so that they're teaching architects and engineers about barrier-free access and what makes it easier, more accessible, not just in public facilities like this but even planning in your homes. Like we were talking at one stage, building a home at the present time and contemplating how can you stay in your home longer: it might just be by some few minor modifications in your home design to anticipate when you're aging or you have a disability that you can still stay in your own home.

I think there are a lot of things there that have much merit in how we could help facilitate in our thinking and our planning in structures, in regulation, in design, in our culture more inclusiveness of people with all disabilities. When we're considering how you put out a design of recreational facilities, that could go into the planning because it might be just commonly accepted and understood that we could get to that stage as to what things you would have to put in a design for recreation and how you would facilitate access for people using it.

[Ms Pastoor in the chair]

Employment. I fully concur. There is a broader range of people other than on AISH that need employment. How do we work with the employers? We have a great opportunity, given the low unemployment rates, to try and work with those with disabilities whether they're on AISH or not, seeing that they're more included in the opportunities that are there in the market and in that light are very much willing to accept, I would say, the consideration of our department as we work through it this year.

We've made some minor changes already in some wordage in the business plan to start considering a broader range in advocacy on behalf of our department for those with all forms of disabilities. In that I'd be very happy and pleased to work with the Member for Strathcona as he chairs the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, though we might put a more focused and direct effort among his council members, among the department, and among other groups to consider much more positively the things that we as a society – individually, private sector – and those things which government could also do to facilitate more inclusion of people and access – the word they used – for all people whether they have some disability or not.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have a couple questions for the hon. minister relating to seniors. As the minister is well aware, there are many seniors in my riding of Calgary-Nose Hill, and over the past year the inflationary pressures have been quite considerable in the city of Calgary. The consumer price index has gone up by over 5 per cent. The result for many seniors is that they're finding that their purchasing power is decreasing and, consequently, their standard of living.

Many of these seniors have concerns about being able to support themselves and stay in their own homes, particularly from the point of view of their property taxes. I know that the minister's department has a property tax assistance program which rebates to seniors the increase in the provincial portion of property taxes on any increase over the 2004 tax levels. But given the fact that the purchasing power of their dollars, many of these seniors being on fixed incomes, is decreasing, it is becoming increasingly difficult for many of these seniors to stay in their homes.

I wonder if the minister could comment on whether or not his department has any plans to implement some sort of tax deferral program in conjunction, I suppose, with the city of Calgary, by which it would have to be administered. It certainly would be beneficial if seniors could defer some of their taxes until such time as their homes were either sold or they were deceased and thereby have some additional room for living expenses. I would just ask the minister whether or not his department is investigating that, if it's something that is feasible.

The second area that I would like to ask him about is relating to the PDD program. As he is aware, the cost of caregivers is certainly escalating, and with the employment rates as high as they are and the unemployment rates as low as they are, there is a great shortage of individuals in those fields of personal care. The result is that it's very difficult to keep people in those PDD positions. It's most disconcerting for those individuals that have become accustomed to being served by an individual. They form individual relationships with those people who are their caregivers. The revolving wheel of losing those individuals and having a constant turnover in personnel is certainly something that I think is very disconcerting to those individuals who are requisite of PDD care. I wonder whether or not the minister could comment on any funding in the budget to increase the support to the PDD individuals. I think it is certainly critical.

Also in the area of PDD I wonder if the minister could comment on the functioning of the regional boards – I know that the provincial PDD board has now been dissolved, and we now have more direct administration of the funds – and whether he could elaborate, perhaps, on some of the experiences of the department on whether or not that particular initiative is going well, whether it's proving to be more efficient in getting the resources where they're needed, on the ground.

Finally, in the area of protection of persons in care I wonder if the minister could advise whether or not his department has any plans to expand that program and the resources available in the protection for persons in care program so that it's expanded beyond the institutional care setting into the area of home care, because as the minister is well aware, we are entering an era where more of the delivery of care is taking place in the homes and outside of the institutional settings. I think it's certainly no less important that the individuals that are receiving their care outside of those institutions, like lodges and nursing homes, would also receive the benefit of the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Madam Chair. First off, you mentioned the seniors' inflationary pressures. Absolutely correct: they face it along with all Albertans, everyone.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

As I mentioned, we do provide a property tax rebate all in assessment of our first priority to help seniors, to assist them to stay in their own homes. That would probably be the best opportunity for us to assist them. In that light, that's why we did bring in the rebate so that no increases in their education property taxes will have to be paid. That'll be rebated for any years subsequent to 2004. It's in that light, really, that we have mitigated all those cost increases for that portion of housing. We have a variety of other programs that talk about a one-time, special-needs program. If there are some extraordinary costs, they can apply and receive some one-time assistance for their house.

Acknowledging that you mentioned a tax deferral methodology, I note that British Columbia actually has a property tax deferral program where seniors can defer paying property tax until they dispose of their homes or until they're deceased. In light of that, there's a variety of options, I say, that one could consider. I guess that one could consider that thought. Our programs in Alberta, for example: compared to British Columbia, we have a more generous program of assistance for seniors in total than the compensation package that would be provided for those in British Columbia. So I guess we provide different levels of service.

One concern I might have, though, is that there's a growing number of seniors, and clearly with the baby boom generation coming up, it's going to only increasingly be a challenge to provide for both higher amounts of payments per individual plus greater numbers of seniors. There's much we could do. Where our programs have for the most part been designed is to focus a greater amount of assistance towards those in need. We still have some programs that are universal. Even the education property tax one that we have is a universal program. If it was really looking to those in the greatest of need, we might have to do some further work in policy as to who should actually receive the assistance and under what format that might best be delivered.

Some excellent thoughts. At the present time there's no specific plan in developing a tax deferral with the city of Calgary or otherwise. I would say that one recent advent, I guess, is that the city of Edmonton did put in kind of a cap of the increase as well. They worked it through the Alberta seniors' benefit. We have the information on seniors of low income. Through our own systems as we provide cheques through the Alberta seniors' benefit program, the city of Edmonton is actually rebating, I think, up to $63 of their property tax increase to the low-income seniors. So there is a facility, really, with not too much additional complexity or administration, given that we have the systems already in place, to identify the low-income seniors who might qualify. Other municipalities could look at theirs as well. That is an example that I think we could show to other cities like Calgary and other municipalities if that were their wish. We'd be happy to work with them in that regard.

I might mention just for information that for the property tax year 2007 in Edmonton 9,400 senior households will receive an average of $95 in assistance. In Calgary 17,000 senior households will receive an average of $130 in assistance on the education property tax rebates this year.

You mentioned the other one about PDD, persons with developmental disabilities: caregivers, retaining staff, the turnover. Clearly, that's a real challenge in this environment where wage rates have gone up, finding people. The challenge is for the caregivers to retain their staff and have the sufficient funds. We did increase our budget. In the last year $11.3 million was reallocated at the end of last year in the budget specifically to address staff retention questions. We had some funds that were in that area that were rededicated just for the specific issue of the service providers to help retain their staff. That money has also been built into this year's budget to annualize that increase going forward, acknowledging that that's not going to answer the full questions, and there will still be challenges for them to compete with the wages that they might offer.

We had a brainstorming session just a little over a week ago and brought together a number of service providers, various stakeholders, those providing the services to persons with developmental disabilities. We've increased our budget, I mentioned earlier, 90 per cent since 1999, a very substantive increase. The rate of growth is well beyond inflation, well beyond our caseload. Even the service providers are acknowledging that this isn't a matter of just more money. It's really a matter of us starting to take a look at more efficiencies within the system. There's a real range of how services are provided, the cost of those various services that are provided, and how it may be best to deliver those services. If we could gain a lot more efficiency in how we provide those, using some of the best examples that are already being tried in Alberta, if we made that more across the board and used those as templates, we could free up dollars that could be redeployed among the agencies for retaining their own staff. It won't be a function for us of design, just to cut the budget, but it will be a matter of how we help build greater capacity among the service providers to retain staff and provide the services on an ongoing basis.

With respect to the protection for persons in care I thank the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for his work specifically on this area with the recommendation as to expanding beyond the people in the public facilities. We're in receipt of that report. We've got some more work to do on that. Specifically, I don't have any recommendations at the present time as to what course of action or direction we may take, though we do have that information, and we'll respond to it in due course as to what might be the best outcome that we could take.

We've added, for example, another million dollars in 2008-09 to address potential changes in the act such as home care, with specific reference to the protection for persons in care.

With those comments, I'll be happy to answer any further questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The second priority for the ministry is to bring forward an updated plan to expand long-term care and improve standards of care. The first sentence there talks about improving it for seniors and persons with disabilities, but it's working through Health and Wellness in order to achieve that. In discussing some of these issues with people with disabilities, there's a vast difference between people who need care because of an injury and need to be helped out for a while, home care and so on, to move into a state of health, and people who need home care – and I know this is talking about long-term care here, but the analogy is somewhat similar – the people with disabilities who are not going to move into the ability to just be on their own. I'm wondering if there are discussions taking place that will differentiate those kinds of programs whether it be for people recovering from an accident or from an injury or some kind of disease as opposed to those who will require care for the rest of their lives because of their disability. That's one of the questions I did have regarding that.

I was talking earlier about some of the challenges and the barriers that are faced. Goal 5 for the ministry: "Seniors and persons with disabilities live in supportive, barrier-free communities and have access to the necessary supports and services to enhance independence." I think some groups in our community should be commended for the work that they're doing. Christenson Developments and the president of the company, Greg Christenson: in some discussions recently he's been talking about this very type of community. In the hamlet of Sherwood Park, just adjacent to my constituency of Strathcona, just across Clover Bar road they're building a community, and Christenson Developments should be commended for taking the initiative in building what Greg has called a prototype community where, in fact, people will be able to age in place. They will have access to all sorts of the community facilities in the immediate neighbourhood and be able to get about the community whether they're ambulatory or whether they are in a wheelchair.

In recent discussions with Jayman Master Built the same kinds of things: a huge amount of interest on their part to move towards incorporating these kinds of designs. These kind of builders in our community should be commended for the leadership that they're showing in these kinds of endeavours and the initiatives that they're taking.

I did have one question with respect to PDD, and that would be whether the ministry, in looking at the PDD-funded services, has in their performance measures and their satisfaction measures noted any kind of difference in the type of organization that's delivering the services, whether there's a difference between, you know, some of the for-profits and not-for-profits or whether there's any kind of variance in approach that leads to a higher sense of satisfaction from clients than is just represented in the blanket statement here.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to long-term care our priority 2, to bring forward an updated plan to expand long-term care and improve standards of care: in the long-term care area and a lot of the housing issues with respect to seniors I would concur that there's much work yet to be done in developing how we, one, maybe help people age in place first in their homes all the way through the various forms of facilities.

One of the issues in particular that you addressed is younger people in long-term care and how we can maybe provide some choice of facilities for them other than these facilities that are predominantly seniors, where they might have some choices to be with other individuals closer to their age. A specialized service initiative funding of $6 million allocated in '06-07 is in the budget to provide people who are currently in long-term care with choices for community involvement to counteract the isolation experience as a result of these living conditions. The budget was also intended to prevent premature admission to facilities and to increase the housing options available for adults with disabilities in the community. There is some more work, obviously, yet to be done on that, but it is an issue that has clearly been identified, and some progress is being made.

You commented on this prototype kind of community that some of the private developers are putting together and developing. I would concur that it would be useful for us to further explore to see what they're doing. How do you replicate that? How do you get that more commonly thought of in various developments that are going on throughout the province: to increase the accessibility question once again in designing communities where all people can participate and live and enjoy the quality of life in that community regardless of their abilities and/or disabilities? So we look forward to working with the Member for Strathcona in following up on some of those. I know that we've talked previously on that specific point and, out of interest, look forward to seeing what some of those prototype kind of communities would look like, what interesting concepts they've brought forward, and what we might do as a department to help facilitate that thinking or correlate that with other departments.

That said about all those things, part of the challenge and focus of the department is that you can't spread your resources too thin, so we'll have to see, out of all the ideas that come forward, those that we can act upon quickly versus some that might be a longer term priority. As you were mentioning previously, there are strategic priorities that have been listed that we are going to continue to focus on. Sometimes the accomplishment of the strategic priorities is to the exclusion of other issues so that while there might be interest and desire to do many things, you have to be careful not to try to accomplish too many and spread your resources too thin and too defused to actually make headway in some key strategic areas.

With respect to the service providers for persons with developmental disabilities, the difference is in types of organizations, for-profit versus not-for-profit and their effectiveness or their efficiency and/or creativeness. I guess we'd only have some anecdotal information. We're not aware specifically that there is a substantive difference in the form of structure, like for-profit or not-for-profit. One organization could be profit or nonprofit due to the expertise or the creativeness or the innovation of some of them. Some of them are actually accomplishing and focusing more on outcomes, and it's in that thought that I would agree about where we ought to start pushing some of the next steps.

What do we desire to be appropriate outcomes for those persons with developmental disabilities? We need to start thinking about who's identifying them, to begin with. What are the appropriate outcomes? How are they measuring those? How are they delivering the services to accomplish that? What are their successes in achieving those results? We have obviously provided many services based upon inputs: so many dollars for so many people for so much time. Much of this is related to people, some of whom need care 24/7. They don't have the capacity to be on their own, so some of it is about just trying to care for a person, be it in a homelike setting where they might be safe and secure. Others would be services to help enhance that experience of their inclusion in the community or their development as an individual. But I don't have anything. We talked about it some in the brain-storming session we just had. Maybe along with the service providers and ourselves developing a web-based . . .

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to inform you that the allocated time for this order of business has elapsed. We will proceed with the next department. So if I could invite your officials to retire from the Assembly, we will have the opportunity for the next department, Children's Services, to come in.

Children's Services

The Chair: We will start by inviting the hon. Minister of Children's Services to present us with her opening comments.

Ms Tarchuk: Great. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I get started, I'd like to introduce the ministry staff here with me today. Sitting in the House we have Maria David-Evans, deputy minister; Shehnaz Hutchinson, director of financial strategies; Niki Wosnack, ADM, community strategies and support; and Gord Johnston, ADM, ministry support services. In the members' gallery we also have Mark Hattori, acting ADM; Sheryl Fricke; David Wilson; and Neris Havelock. I would like to say that these are just a few of the thousands of dedicated staff who work in our ministry committed to improving the lives of children, youth, families across the province. I would like to say for the record that their passion and hard work each and every day is what makes the ministry the success that it is.

Seeing that this is my third time doing estimates and the hour of the day, I think that rather than going on at great length talking about all the wonderful things we're doing, maybe I'll just hand it over to you for questions. We'll endeavour to answer what we can. Anything we can't, we will get back in short order with fuller answers.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any members who wish to participate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do have a number of lines of inquiry that I would like to delve into, and the first is relating to the daycare situation and the shortage of workers. I know that there is considerable difficulty in recruiting people into the daycare field as there are in many of the other services industries. I know that there is strong competition for those individuals and sometimes a tendency for them to take other jobs that may be higher paying. I wondered whether or not the minister could elaborate on what steps her department is taking to deal with that shortage of workers and the ability to remain competitive in the job market.

Another area that I would like to inquire about is relating to the recruitment of foster parents and what can be done to enhance that program, whether there are any other additional resources that her department is utilizing to address that shortage.

The third area that I would like some comment on regarding resources in the budget and the programs of the ministry would be relating to the provision of before and after school care for working parents. Particularly of great concern are those areas of the workforce that may find that they are in difficult straits regarding the availability of workers, and I'm thinking particularly in the area of the health care fields and whatnot, where the provision of before and after care sometimes becomes critical to the number of hours that nursing staff or other medical professionals are able to dedicate to their jobs. I know that's a great concern presently because we do have shortages in those particular fields.

I will allow the minister to make some comments on those, and then I may have some further follow-up questions later on.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad that the hon. member brought up some of the child care issues because that is one of the mandated priorities as given by the Premier this year. A lot of my time and effort in the last couple of months has been to meet with stakeholders involved with child care and to take a look at what was working well, what's not working so well, and get some ideas from them as to a number of things, ultimately how to create capacity in the province. But the number one issue that was identified over and over during the discussions and the consultation was the attraction of staff.

Before I specifically get into some of the initiatives that we announced that directly impacted the staff and specific to the attraction of staff, we did through the budget process get endorsement, well, first of all, committing to the five-point plan, which was huge, as well as enhancing the five-point plan. Specific to some of the strategies to help out with the workforce participation issues, we committed $9 million to fund a 40 per cent increase to staff wage top-ups. We are putting $1.5 million to fund a new child care leadership bursary, and that will help staff in child care programs continue their education and help them offset some costs. We also increased subsidies for parents and introduced funding to help cover the start-up costs of creating more child care spaces across the province, and that was looking at $1,500 per space created. We also put $400,000 towards establishing a staff attraction incentive for child care programs to recruit back workers who agree to sign a two-year return service agreement. As well, we put together a $1 million package to take care of some specific child care issues up in Fort McMurray. The total funding for child care is $134 million, and that's $16 million over and above last year. I can tell you that the response across the province has been very good for those initiatives.

I can tell you that we have put another $7 million into our foster care. I know that we can see during question period that foster care happens to be one of the favorites to talk about and whether or not we have enough foster care parents in the province. I've pointed out several times that our ratios are actually fairly good when you're looking Canada-wide. Having said that, we know that the more foster parents we have, the better able we will be to match the needs of kids. Those efforts are ongoing. As well, this year we're putting in an additional $350,000, so we're actually looking at $650,000 that will be committed to recruit more foster parents and aboriginal caregivers for the children in government care.

The other comment that I wanted to make. When I talk about the increase to $7 million, just to let you know, the ministry and the Alberta Foster Parent Association negotiate on an annual basis the foster care compensation rates and allowances. In meeting with that organization last week, it appears that it's a very positive relationship that we have. Certainly, they are very enthusiastic people about the work that they do, and they have a positive relationship with this government.

The last question, regarding out of school care. Again, I know that I've talked about this lots in the House, but very simply right now we do not have the mandate to deliver services for out of school care for children ages six to 12. We do have the mandate for zero to six. We do license zero to 12, and that is the extent that we are currently involved with out of school programming outside of the fact that we fund FCSSs. In fact, this year to the tune of $71 million we are funding FCSSs. If they determine that out of school care is a local priority, they can deliver that service, and many of them do. I think that out of close to 300 FCSSs, we have 45 programs in the province.

Having said that, we also just finished an FCSS review, that was conducted throughout the year last year, and have just taken it through the approval process. The good news with the review is that it identified for us that FCSS is probably one of the best examples of partnerships in this province, a very well-respected program. Hundreds and hundreds of locally driven, really good preventive programs have come out of that program, and it is certainly one that we will want to continue to support. In the review we are following through on all of the recommendations. There was one that we pulled aside for further review. They had identified that the out of school program needs to be looked at.

The out of school programs across the province are experiencing similar difficulties that the zero to six programs have, and the FCSSs and the municipalities where the FCSSs are have been asking for us to take a look at the out of school program. So I have committed, actually, to all Albertans and in this House that I will work with all of our stakeholders, whether it be businesses, municipalities, the child care community, and take a look at what's working well, what isn't, and see if we can come up with some solutions.

The Chair: Are there others? Seeing none, I will now invite the officials to leave the Assembly so that the committee may rise and report.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(c) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the departments of Education; Employment, Immigration and Industry; Seniors and Community Supports; and Children's Services relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the ministers tonight faced some gruelling questions but conducted themselves most admirably, from my perspective, particularly in terms of being efficient in the time allocated to the answers. So I would move that the Assembly do adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

[Motion carried; at 9:32 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Title: Wednesday, June 6, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant us daily awareness of the precious gift of life which has been given to us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly His Excellency Werner Baumann, ambassador of Switzerland, and his charming wife, Susanne; Mr. Walter Deplazes, the consul general from Vancouver, and his wife, Siegrid; as well as Mr. Andreas Bayer, the honorary consul from Calgary, and his wife, Yolanda. It was my pleasure to meet them all at lunch and earlier today to welcome them to Alberta.

Two-way trade between Alberta and Switzerland averages about $200 million per year, so we have a bonding relationship with them. The Swiss have also had an important role in building Alberta. The town of Stettler in central Alberta was founded in 1904 by Carl Stettler, a prominent Swiss immigrant, and the Swiss mountaineers were crucial in the development of Banff as a world tourism destination. I would ask that all the honoured guests who are seated in your gallery today please rise and receive the traditional and warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Roberta MacAdams

The Speaker: Hon. members, just a bit of background before I call on the next member to do an introduction. In 1916 in this Assembly an act called the Alberta Equal Suffrage Act was passed. That act did two things. One, it provided for the first time the opportunity for women to vote. As well, it also offered an opportunity for women to run for political office. In 1917 a second act was passed that's relative to comments being made now, an act called the Alberta Military Representation Act. Remember, Canada was at war in 1917. That particular Military Representation Act indicated that in the next provincial election in Alberta two seats would be available for men or women of military background to earn a seat in this Assembly.

The provincial election of 1917 was held on June 7. The first woman in the history of the British Empire, one of the first women anywhere in the world, Louise McKinney, was elected as an independent in the constituency of Claresholm. At the same time servicemen and servicewomen had the right to elect two members of this Assembly. They were all located, of course, in northern France, in the trenches.

A lieutenant nurse by the name of Roberta MacAdams was in London, England, in the summer of 1917, and she visited a lithographer, who took a picture of her. The picture to my right, your left, is a painted portrait of the original picture. She then went and had a campaign poster printed with a very interesting slogan. It would turn out that there would be 21 people contesting this election in the trenches in northern France for these two seats in Alberta. Her campaign slogan, very skilful, said, "Give one vote to the man of your choice and the other to the sister." At that time "sister" referred to a nurse. Twenty-one people contested that election in the trenches in northern France: one woman, 20 men.

Under the slogan, "Give one vote to the man of your choice and the other to the sister," Roberta MacAdams became the second woman to be elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. She received 4,023 votes, which was almost 700 votes ahead of her closest next competitor on the list. The other 20 competitors, of course, were men. Ninety-plus per cent of the people voting for Roberta MacAdams in the summer election of 1917 in northern France were men. So she joined Louise McKinney as one of the first two women ever to have been elected anywhere in the British Empire.

When she returned to Alberta, she became the first woman in the British Empire to have a piece of legislation introduced and passed. The bill that she introduced and passed was on the War Veterans' Next-of-Kin Association. This is a remarkable part of the history of this Legislative Assembly and a remarkable part of Alberta's history as well.

Little has really been known about Roberta MacAdams until now. Last evening a book was released in co-operation with the University of Calgary press. I'm now going to call on the Minister of Public Security and the Solicitor General for the appropriate introductions.

I might add one thing. This picture was commissioned in 1967 as a centennial project here in the province of Alberta. It's a painting. It then rested in the archives for years. It has been retrieved, and we're now going to place it on permanent residency on the 5th floor of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta so that all people in the future can come and see it. It'll be accompanying the Famous Five in the gallery.

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, last evening in the Legislature rotunda we jointly participated in a book launch for Give Your Other Vote to the Sister: A Woman's Journey into the Great War, a story of Roberta MacAdams, one of the first two female members elected in 1917 to the Alberta Legislative Assembly. I'm very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly family members of our former colleague, Roberta MacAdams, and also the author of this work and her family. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery.

I would ask our guests to rise as I call out their names: Robert Price, son of Roberta MacAdams; granddaughters Nancy Long, Jane Price, and Cathy Price; great-grandchildren Phoebe Price, Lucy Marsden, Brittney Price, and Kelby Price. With Roberta MacAdams' family is Debbie Marshall, author of Give Your Other Vote to the Sister, who happens to be a constituent of mine in Stony Plain; and Monica Newton, daughter of Beatrice Naysmyth, Roberta's campaign manager. There are also a number of Marshall and Newton family members sitting in the members' gallery. They are Monica Newton, Jr., Rosemary Heidinger, Heather Marshall, Rachel Culbertson, and Tom Davey. I would ask all members to offer their warmest traditional welcome.

The Speaker: All members will soon receive a copy of the book Give Your Other Vote to the Sister. It makes wonderful reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much. It's a pleasure for me today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of youngsters and parents from Rosemary school. Twenty-four students are here in the Assembly along with 14 parents, and accompanying them are two teachers, Mr. David Blumell and Mrs. Lenora Dyck. Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would ask them please to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of children and adults from the Lacombe Christian School. This is one of the 10 private independent schools in my constituency. There are 41 exceptionally bright young children in grade 6 and 15 adults. The teachers accompanying this group are Mr. Tim Van Doesburg, Mrs. Stephanie Littel, Mrs. Trudy Veenema, and Mrs. Noella Van Doesburg. The parent helpers are Mr. Herman Scholing; Mr. Martin Folkerts, who is also the principal, but he is accompanying one of his children; Mrs. Darlene Kleinjan; Mrs. Anita Zuidhof; Mrs. Marja Van Dam; Mrs. Lisa Bailey; Mrs. Lin Luymes; Mrs. Sandy Ubels; Mrs. Vivian Kooyman; Mrs. Teresa TenHove; and Mrs. Gwen Luymes. I believe there's a bus driver with them, Mr. Nick Den Oudsten. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them also to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had the pleasure of being introduced to representatives from the past in this Legislature. I'd like to now take an opportunity to introduce to you and through you some of the future of this Legislature. It's with great pleasure that I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two grade 5 students who are challenging the best of us in their roles as minister and deputy minister for the day. Today Mr. Eric Taylor of Calgary is Alberta's Environment minister, and Miss Briana Raffael of Lac La Biche is Alberta Environment's deputy minister.

These students are in Edmonton as part of the minister-for-the-day program to brief me about their environmental concerns. I had the pleasure of meeting with them as well as 10 of their peers, who are serving as Alberta Environment's assistant deputy ministers today. With these students are their teachers. They have some strong ideas on what should be done to protect our environment and how each of us can take action in our own homes, schools, communities: lessons we all take to heart this Environment Week. These are our future environmental leaders, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some special guests representing one of the crown jewels of Alberta's cultural sector, the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra. Now, this is a particularly personal introduction for me because I have a very long-time connection to the orchestra. My sister has played in the symphony since she was a young child in the 1960s, and she continues to play in the symphony now. I'm also a long-time season ticket holder along with my wife. The symphony is Canada's fifth-largest professional orchestra. They have represented Alberta in Ottawa and at the Smithsonian in Washington, and they have always done this province proud. The Edmonton Symphony Orchestra plays a vital role in music education in this province, mentoring thousands of talented young musicians.

Today the people I am introducing are here to celebrate the appointment of a new managing director, Mr. Jay Katz, who is a new arrival to Alberta and to Edmonton. He brings many years of experience, and we wish him well. I would ask Mr. Katz to rise in the members' gallery. Joining Mr. Katz is the musical director of the symphony, otherwise known as the conductor, Mr. Bill Eddins, who I think has completed his second season and does a very exciting job leading the symphony. With Jay and Bill are a number of others, and I would ask them to rise: Steven LePoole, vice-chair, Edmonton Symphony Society; Marc Carnes, fund development manager; Melayne Shankel, publicist; Nora Bumanis, harpist; Susan Ekholm, viola; Stefan Jungkind, viola; John McPherson, trombone; Donald Plumb, French horn; Colin Ryan, cello; Chris Taylor, bass trombone; Jan Urke, double bass; and, of course, my sister, Rhonda Taft. Please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special students that are joining us today from St. Joseph's high school in my fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre. There are seven visitors today. They're accompanied by their teachers and group leaders, Ms Gerry Dawson and Mrs. Cheryl Place. I would ask my constituents and the students from St. Joe's to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of people who are gathered today with regard to the seismic testing and activity on and around Marie Lake. The people here are Bethany Bekolay, Nickara Bekolay, Pat Bekolay, Hal Bekolay, Don Savard, Charlene Bekolay, Sheldon Bekolay, Roger L'Abbe, Genevieve L'Abbe, and Sebastien L'Abbe. I'd like them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituent Chris Goss, who raised the issue of seismic activity in and around the Marie Lake area, which is known to be the nesting ground for the American white pelican and blue heron. He's seated in the public gallery with a large group who has the same issue. I want to thank them all for coming to the Leg. I request him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions this afternoon. Firstly, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two people that I'm very proud to be associated with: Mr. Nigel and Mrs. Helen Asplet. They are volunteers at the Heritage Senior Stop-in Centre in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, and I can assure you that that fine facility would not operate without the hard work of particularly Nigel. Nigel, it's interesting to note, was a recent nominee for the minister's seniors' service awards. Unfortunately, he wasn't one of the successful winners that were announced today, but he was very well deserving of being nominated. I would ask them both to please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I did indicate that I have a second set of introductions as well.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you.

I also have a group of concerned citizens that are here today to hear their concerns raised about Marie Lake, and I would like to have them each rise as I name them and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Ms Sarah Murphy; Mr. Josh Brown; Ms Debra Pelechovsky; Ms Irene Thompson; Mr. Jim Thompson; Mr. Leon Lechasseur; an old friend from my days of making rubber stamps for the bridge branch at Alberta Transportation, Mr. Ian Lawson-Williams; Gail Cunningham; and Brandon Cunningham. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the following guests who have come to express their concerns over Marie Lake. When I've called all their names, would they please rise to receive the customary greeting from the hon. members of this House: Leila Darwish, Don Heigh, Robin Haugen, Brett Finch, Harold Faerriit, Joanne Douchet, Dean Woods, Anke Feifried, Neil Goeson, Hilda Goeson, Robert Gibeault, Joan Ross, Roy Bibeau, and Robina Sobey. Please rise and receive the greeting.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three strikers from the Palace Casino. The strike is now in its 271st day due to this government's refusal to pass first contract legislation. The names of the individuals are Marnie Kenworthy, Madelyn Tamag, and Daisy Hernandez. Marnie has been a dealer at the casino for three years. She is originally from the Philippines and came to Alberta in the year 2000. She's newly married and has spent most of the first year of her marriage on strike. She is also a guitarist. Madelyn has been at the Palace Casino for three years as a dealer. She is the mother of two boys who enjoy singing. Daisy has been at the Palace Casino for two years in the maintenance department. She has been married for 23 years, and she and her husband have two children, a 21-year-old boy and an 11-year-old daughter. Accompanying them is UFCW representative Don Crisall. I would now ask that Marnie, Madelyn, Daisy, and Don rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Environment Week

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For more than 30 years Canada's Environment Week has taken place the first week of June to coincide with World Environment Day. We should all have the opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to take action for a healthier environment. Everyday actions make a difference, and Environment Week is the perfect time for Albertans to learn more about their environmentally sustainable practices. The more we understand environment issues, the more environmentally minded decisions we make.

Communities across the province are doing their part in hosting Environment Week activities, activities such as nature walks, community cleanups, recycling and hazardous waste roundups, and wetland education, Alberta's theme for Environment Week. There are many more activities that I can mention. The end result of each is a better understanding of environmental issues. Albertans are encouraged to contact their communities to find out how they can take part.

Protecting and conserving our environment starts with all of us in our own backyards, neighbourhoods, schools, offices, and communities this week, next week, and all year. We are all stewards of the environment. No action is too small to make a difference.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Minister's Seniors' Service Awards

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to several outstanding Albertans for their volunteer service and dedication to Alberta's seniors. More than 100 nominations were received for the 10th annual minister's seniors' service awards from across the province.

At Government House this evening the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports will recognize the six individuals and two organizations who have been selected as this year's award winners. They are Neva Brierley of Rocky Mountain House, who supports seniors and their families with chores by helping them in times of illness and grieving; Edward Eschak of Mannville, who makes his town a great place for seniors to live by fund raising and helping to organize recreation activities; Swati Fernando, who helps senior immigrants in Calgary with completing forms, going to appointments, and learning about health issues; Robert Thompson of Claresholm, who visits hospital patients and helps seniors at the local seniors' centre; Rose Hayes of Keoma, who was instrumental in obtaining funding for a seniors' club and who plans and invites town residents to events; and Gordon Heaton of Evansburg, who volunteered nearly a thousand hours to renovate and convert an old seniors' lodge into self-contained suites.

The two organizations receiving awards are Pioneer House Club 50 of Fort Saskatchewan, which has been supporting seniors through recreation programs, health clinics, and other activities for more than 30 years, and the Seniors Outreach in Brooks, where seniors can access specialized services such as Meals on Wheels, Lifeline, home supports, and transportation to appointments.

I'm proud to recognize the 2007 minister's seniors' service award winners for their commitment and service to Alberta's seniors.

More information about their accomplishments and the awards program is available on the Seniors and Community Supports website.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Chancellor Richard Davidson
Dr. John Gogo
Dr. Terry Royer

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, last week in Lethbridge, Thursday and Friday, we celebrated the convocation at the University of Lethbridge, and there were three people that were honoured over those two days that I would like to point out to all the members here in the House.

First, Richard Davidson, a lawyer in Lethbridge, part of the oldest law firm in Lethbridge, by the way, Davidson & Williams. Richard was inducted as the new chancellor for the University of Lethbridge.

Then on Friday afternoon it was a special event for me in the sense that two friends of mine received honorary doctorate degrees: John Gogo, a friend of many of the people in this House and a former MLA, and Terry Royer, a businessman currently out of Calgary but, of course, who grew up in Lethbridge.

I met Terry when I first moved to Lethbridge many years ago. In fact, we played hockey together. Terry went on to a very successful business career and also had a couple of terms as the chair of the board of governors of the University of Lethbridge.

John Gogo was a friend and a mentor as the former MLA for Lethbridge-West, first elected in 1975 and here until 1993. So we're very, very proud of John, and I believe that we'll hear a little more about him shortly.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that in these three men we have a lawyer, a politician, and a businessman all receiving honours, and despite what American pop culture might say about these professions, these are very honourable men in very honourable professions, and I want to say congratulations to all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, then.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also congratulate Mr. Richard Davidson as the new chancellor for the University of Lethbridge and the recipients of the honorary doctorates but most specifically a former member and Deputy Speaker of this Assembly, John Gogo.

John was conferred with a doctorate of laws honoris causa from the University of Lethbridge on June 1, '07. Mr. Speaker, no candidate has been more deserving. John was honoured for his extraordinary service to humanity. John served his country as a sergeant in the Canadian forces from 1949 to '62, serving in the Korean War and Germany in the airborne artillery.

John served his province as an MLA from '75 to '93. His responsibilities included chair of AADAC, Deputy Speaker, minister of advanced education, and Deputy Government House Leader. His Bill 207, the Remembrance Day Act, was assented to on May 31, '84. Bill 207 ensures that Remembrance Day is observed in all schools.

John served his local community through his participation in many community associations. He was an adviser to community boards as well as to the average person on the street. John had a soft spot for the military cadet corps in Lethbridge.

John served his family. He is the father of five – Susan, Stephen, Sandra, Sharon, and Shannon – and is grandfather to 14 grandchildren. Every step of the way he has had the support of his wife, Joyce. She is a strong, self-sustaining, talented woman, a great mom and grandma.

His work ethic was to be emulated. His integrity was to be emulated. He shared his knowledge, he listened, and he cared deeply. John was a political mentor to the present sitting members from both Lethbridge-East and Lethbridge-West, and I am very privileged by his friendship.

I ask this House to recognize one of ours, Dr. John Gogo.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Contribution to Premier's Leadership Campaign

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The unethical donation solicited by the Premier's top fundraisers is at odds with provincial regulation 75/92 and raises doubts about whether government decisions on funding and regulatory matters will be made fairly and objectively. There are critical public policy issues at stake, and Albertans have a right to some credible answers. To the Premier: on Monday the Premier claimed that the unethical donation was returned "upon receiving funds from this commission." Let's be clear. Funds were unethically solicited in August 2006. Funds were used to help the Premier get elected . . .

The Speaker: I'm afraid we're now to the response side.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, again I'm going to repeat: after Christmas when the campaign was complete, I had directed a team of volunteers – and, again, these are professionals in terms of being chartered accountants – to review all the donations. They found this one. They sent the money back. It went back. It's over and done with. In fact, I also said that if there were any others that were sent back – there was one other one that was brought to my attention. That was an offer made by a tobacco company, and of course that was rejected as well.

1:30

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, on Monday the Premier claimed, "I'm sure that the money was sent back. We didn't accept any money," which he has stated here today. One out of two may not be bad, but it's not good enough for a matter of ethics. The money was sent back, but the truth is: it was accepted, cashed, and used during his campaign. Is the Premier willing to correct the record of this House and admit that he did accept the money and that he used that money to help him win the leadership?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, it's not like there were hundreds of volunteers every day in the office watching every donation coming through. It was a small group of volunteers that assisted me but after the campaign made sure that the files were reviewed very carefully. This one in particular, although – and, again, I'm not a lawyer – it was said that it was legal, it was considered to be unethical, and the money was sent back.

Dr. Taft: Half a year passed between receiving the money and refunding it. On Monday the Premier tried to suggest that he was somehow required by FOIP to not disclose who his donors were, yet the commission has confirmed that they did not request their donation to be kept secret. To the Premier: if the commission did not ask for it to be kept off the books and covered up, can the Premier tell us who did ask for this to be kept secret? It was used.

Mr. Stelmach: There were no donations as I said before. I said that I'd have the committee review if there were any donations from municipalities or other commissions. There are none that we would be not disclosing under FOIP because there weren't any donations received, period.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's explanations for unethical fundraising from a body established by this provincial government and subject to provincial regulation are simply not credible. The Premier is attempting to claim it was returned because it was unethical. The letter from the campaign team simply says that they no longer needed it. The Premier's desire for this issue to go away is getting in the way of public accountability. To the Premier: which is it? Will the Premier admit returning the money had nothing to do with ethics and everything to do with expediency?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, and to all the people watching, the process here is that I have media availability Tuesdays and Thursdays, and the two opposition leaders sit in there. They listen to the questions asked by the media. There were a few media members running around with a letter that they had. Again, very public. This was given to them by the Beaver regional association. It was a letter that was sent back. It was a very polite letter not saying that this is unethical, but you know: "Thank you so much for the donation. We've met our goal. Here's your money back. Thank you very much." This thing about six months coming up: that's perhaps been the volunteers' approach to the association.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The commission has revealed that other Tory leadership contenders also approached it for money. The Premier has confirmed that it was unethical to seek funds from a public body since such activity undermines the integrity of government funding and regulation. To the Premier: will the Premier direct his ministers to reveal which of them also approached this commission and any other public body for funds, which ministers and which public bodies, or will we have to question them one by one?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, he just indicated he has the information, so you don't have to question. Just stand up and give the names. You said that you have information from the commission that there were dollars given to other ministers. I'm not aware of it, but stand up and give the names of the ministers, and we'll follow the same policy, but give us the names.

Dr. Taft: They're your ministers, Mr. Premier.

The Premier has again blamed overzealous volunteers for a mistake that he's ultimately responsible for. That's not good enough. Running a government should mean that the Premier takes responsibility. To the Premier: if the Premier really believes soliciting these funds was unethical, why are two of the individuals who solicited the funds remaining on the executive of the PC Party? Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know which officials he's referring to. One of the things that they brought up is a serious allegation. The member says that he has evidence that ministers have received money from the commission. I suggest that he table that evidence right now – right now – because he said he has the evidence, so now's the best time. This is the second allegation that this member has made in the House. First of all, a secret deal, and we've been here now till day 40, I believe, today, still waiting for evidence of the secret deal. Another false allegation made, and he can't present the evidence.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Resource Development in Marie Lake Area

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today concerned residents of Marie Lake have presented a petition with 1,206 names in an attempt to save their pristine lake from harm. To recap, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development very quietly sold the mineral rights under Marie Lake without any consultation and now is considering allowing disruptive seismic testing. This will have adverse effects on the aquatic and the environment. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will you initiate a full public consultation regarding the proposed seismic testing on Marie Lake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I regret to say that once again the hon. member has his facts wrong. Sustainable Resource Development does not sell mineral leases or dispositions. That's done by the Ministry of Energy. But as I've said many times before in this House, we're simply following the process. The Liberals that used to govern this province a hundred years ago understood that. The exploration process comes first. The development process comes second. We're in the exploration process right now. There'll be at least two more opportunities for public participation, intervenor input before the environmental impact assessment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, section 41, requires by law a full environmental impact assessment if "potential environmental impacts of a proposed activity warrant further consideration." This is a law, and it must be followed. You were asked the question before. We didn't get an answer, so we'll try again today. To the Minister of Environment: will you commit right now to conducting a comprehensive environmental impact assessment on any proposed seismic testing or drilling activity on or under Marie Lake?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again his facts don't exactly equate with reality. I've indicated on a number of occasions that should an application for development of the resources under this lake go forward, an environmental impact assessment will be required. As of today's date no such application has come forward, so for that reason an environmental impact assessment is not necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are wondering if everything is for sale in order to get the money here. Recently Albertans have weighed in with their thoughts on some extremely important issues, only to be ignored. On affordable housing, climate change Albertans have been ignored. Marie Lake is a beautiful jewel in Alberta, and industrial activity will have adverse effects that cannot be reversed or fixed. The people around Marie Lake and, no doubt, Cold Lake and Bonnyville do not want this area damaged. To the Premier: will the Premier commit right now on behalf of his government to deny permission for testing or further development on Marie Lake if the majority of affected members of the public are opposed? Will you listen to them, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question was raised April 4 in the House with respect to Marie Lake, and I said that no development will occur on Marie Lake until the questions are answered. That does include any new relevant concerns that are raised either in the House or by members of the public.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bitumen Exports

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. During the Tory leadership race the Premier along with a number of other candidates for the leadership of the Conservative Party promised to do something about the growing export of unprocessed bitumen from this province. In fact, the Premier likened it to scraping off the topsoil on the family farm and then selling it. He promised that he would take measures to reduce the amount of unprocessed bitumen exported from this province, yet there's a dramatic increase, and there's another plan from Exxon and Enbridge to pipe Alberta bitumen all the way to Houston. It was announced yesterday. My question is to the Premier. What have you done since you've become the Premier of this province to reduce the amount of bitumen that is being exported to the United States?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this same question was asked the day before by the same member. We are of course moving in a positive direction in terms of adding value to bitumen. As I said in the same answer to the hon. member, there are many things to consider. One of them is working with the environment. Second is having the people in place to build the plants. There are other considerations in terms of housing. We do process about 65 per cent of the bitumen, and we want to increase that more because the taxes paid on the added value will be paid here in Alberta as opposed to leaving and being paid in some other jurisdictions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, yesterday at the NEB hearings on the Keystone pipeline the vice-president of TransCanada PipeLines admitted that he doesn't even know how much bitumen will be shipped south through that pipeline. He says that that will be up to the oil companies. My question is to the Premier. How much bitumen will be shipped through the Keystone pipeline and the Alberta Clipper pipeline, and does the Premier believe that that's okay? Has the Premier done anything to limit the export of unprocessed bitumen out of this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, his member sitting behind him in this House said: we must have absolute – absolute – reduction in emissions. He is a leader saying: no, we've got to add more upgrading, create more emissions. I just ask: "Where are you as a party? Do you want absolute reduction in emissions?" Fine. If we want to do this in a very pragmatic, thoughtful way in terms of finding the balance with the environment, we have to hold those discussions with the various companies that want to invest in the province of Alberta, look at all the environmental concerns, labour, and housing.

Mr. Mason: You know, I had a little trouble following that logic, Mr. Speaker. The Premier seems to be saying that if we export it and it's upgraded somewhere else, then we don't have to be responsible for the emissions, or something to that effect. But in any event, he completely avoided the question because he has done nothing since he's become the Premier to keep his promise to reduce the amount of bitumen that is exported from this province in an unprocessed form. My question to the Premier is: why haven't you kept your promise?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is one area where we are working very diligently in terms of increasing the amount of bitumen processed in the province of Alberta. I didn't say that I was going to work to decrease the amount. I said that I want to increase as much of the value adding of bitumen as possible. But, again, here's a good example. Here's another member in the House saying that we should now, in order to find this balance in environment, take Alberta money, send it out of this province, maybe invest it in China or in Russia, and buy offsets so that we can keep polluting more in our province. This is the kind of flip-flop on so many of these policies that we've heard over the last number of months. You don't know where they are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. OSUM Corporation has applied for seismic testing on leases they have purchased from the Alberta government at Marie Lake, in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. A large portion of the land area which will use explosive charges for seismic testing was identified as an environmental protection area by a ministerial order back in April 1988. This order restricts activities which may have a negative impact on the surrounding area. To the Minister of Energy: as part of this lease is in the environmental protection area, will he cancel the land purchase agreement with OSUM Corporation?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, no, I won't. The mineral rights that were sold to OSUM were sold in accordance with the province's Cold Lake integrated resource plan, and cancelling a lease at this particular point in time would be inappropriate. The Cold Lake subregional integrated resource plan was approved in 1996, and it directed that Marie Lake be managed for recreation and ecological value. However, the same plan also directs that mineral activities might occur at Marie Lake where environmental issues can be properly addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my understanding that back in 1992 an application for seismic testing on Lake Wabamun was refused by the government of Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister tell me why that application was refused, and can that precedent be used to refuse OSUM corporation's application for seismic testing at Marie Lake?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the application for seismic testing at Lake Wabamun was rejected in 1996 because the company involved did not address all of the concerns this ministry had about the effects of its testing. However, I'd point out that this is very much the exception, not the rule. Since 2002 seismic activity has been approved on 23 lakes, and in fact in one of those lakes, Lake Newell, the fish have done so well that now it's on the draw system for walleye. Sustainable Resource Development is working with OSUM corporation. We've conveyed our concerns to them and are waiting for answers. When we get all the answers we want, when we get the information, we'll make an appropriate decision at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In answering my question on April 4, the Premier assured Albertans that prior to any oil sands development on Marie Lake it was critical to maintain the quality of life for the residents of Marie Lake and to absolutely protect the environment. Scientific evidence would have to satisfy the protection of the environment and the people living around the lake. However, hundreds of scientific questions asked by the residents remain unanswered. My question is to the Premier. Will his government hire an independent seismic research group to review OSUM corporation's seismic proposal and evaluate the risk of environmental damage to Marie Lake if this seismic project is to proceed?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, earlier today I received a petition that was handed to me by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I believe that 1,292 people had signed the petition. I remain committed to the position that I took earlier today, that no oil development will occur in Marie Lake until all of the relevant information is presented. We have two ministers responsible that will bring this information forward. To whatever degree they have to evaluate the information, I'm sure that they'll do it appropriately, and then we'll await those results when that information comes to our government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Calgary Concerns

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As MLAs our first loyalty must be to our constituents. Calgary Conservative MLAs' subjugation to their party has consistently trumped constituents' concerns, as evidenced by their Hansard voting record. Whether it is public transportation, affordable housing, environmental protection, or school maintenance and construction, this Conservative government has failed Calgaryans. To the Minister of Education: why has this government presided over an entire generation of such neglect that Calgary school boards now face infrastructure deficits of over half a billion dollars and 40 communities are without schools?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, shortly we'll be in a position to announce some initiatives relative to school construction in Calgary. I would like to say, however, that I was pleased to see that the Calgary public board last night came forward with a balanced budget and was happy with the funds that they are going forward with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many seniors in Calgary are the most vulnerable to the excessive rent increases some landlords have made. Their fixed incomes cannot stretch that far. This government has been blind to their plight. To the minister of seniors: why did the government refuse to implement temporary rent caps to assist seniors in Calgary on a fixed income who want to maintain homes in the city but cannot afford the disproportionate rent increases?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we had a lengthy debate in this Legislature about rent controls, and we certainly could go into that further, but I would want to point out that this province has one of the most generous programs of seniors' assistance of anywhere in this country. [interjections] We do. You can mention about how we've redesigned our programs to assist those in the greatest of need. They weren't meant to be universal, but we are looking towards those seniors in the greatest of need. How can we help and assist them in the future? We will continue to ensure that our programs are targeted to help those in need as they require.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. On June 12 I'm sure a number of those seniors will be out to vote.

We Calgaryans appreciate the wonder of our location. We also love living in the natural beauty of the Rocky Mountain foothills, but that natural beauty is under government-sanctioned threat in the form of clear-cutting in protected and sensitive areas. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why won't the minister protect our Calgary watershed, wildlife refuge, and recreational areas from the devastating effects of clear-cutting? How does his action or inaction contribute to Calgaryans' quality of life and environmental sustainability?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, my ministry is protecting the inhabitants of Calgary and all of Alberta on a sustainable forestry basis. I'd be happy to take the Member for Calgary-Varsity down to examine some of the forestry plots I've visited in the last week and show him. Where pine beetle sets in, you get the worst reforestation of all. I'd be very happy to take the member and show him with his own eyes, and he would stop making these accusations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Violence in Licensed Premises

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of violence in and around bars and nightclubs has many Albertans concerned. The government held two round-table sessions and released a report with a variety of recommendations. My questions are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. As a result of the round-table sessions conducted by the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission and the Solicitor General, what action is the government taking to address violence?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government takes the issue of violence in and around licensed premises very seriously. The round-table summary report, released last year, included numerous recommendations. We have been working on these recommendations, and I'm pleased to update you on these activities. First of all, we're doing research to identify regulatory and operational best practices that we know will make a difference. We're going to be doing a public awareness campaign aimed at bar patrons. It's being developed. A security/door staff training module will be added to the current Alberta server intervention program this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. You've mentioned a public education campaign to address violence. Haven't we seen similar campaigns from the city of Edmonton and others? How will this campaign be different?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are currently developing a provincial public education campaign specifically targeting young males aged 18 to 24. The campaign focuses on getting people to think beyond the heat of the moment and to be aware of some of the triggers and avoid getting into a fight or other confrontation. We're looking at a variety of materials and ways to best reach this audience, including drinking establishments, liquor stores, TV, and movie theatres.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. The idea of mandatory training for security and door staff in licensed establishments has been discussed for years. Can you tell me more about what is being done on this?

Mr. Lindsay: As I stated previously, the security staff training module will be available this fall. This module will be added to the existing Alberta server intervention program. Since 2004 this program has trained over 18,000 servers about the responsible and safe serving of alcohol. The security training module will cover many topics, including communication skills, screening patrons, crowd control, defusing conflict, and intervening with intoxicated individuals. The curriculum will be developed in consultation with industry, licensees, and police agencies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Electricity Generation and Demand

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The EUB report released yesterday is a testament to the failure of electricity deregulation. It confirms the worst about electricity deregulation. Unfortunately, we are now locked into permanently high prices for electricity due to this government's incompetence. I am very disappointed that the Premier is showing no leadership on this issue, and the Minister of Energy is in a total state of denial. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the government has bragged for years that electricity deregulation would increase our electricity generation capacity, why was there a net loss of 330 megawatts of electricity generation capacity in 2006 in this province?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I am in a state of denial with respect to answering such a ridiculous question. The truth of the matter is that there is no deregulation in the province of Alberta. Every part of the electrical industry in this province is regulated. The systems that are in place with respect to transmission, with respect to distribution, and with respect to the retail part of the electrical business are completely regulated, and there are at least as many or perhaps more regulations on the generation side. What we've done, of course, was to open up the generation of electricity in the province of Alberta to a market-driven system. It has been a complete success. Four thousand additional megawatts . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a valid question but a ridiculous answer from the hon. minister.

Now, the EUB's 2007 through to 2016 outlook notes that "over the next year, very little will be added to Alberta's generation capacity, while demand is expected to increase by 3 per cent." This means that electricity prices will be higher while we struggle to meet our power needs. Again to the Minister of Energy: how many more blackouts will Albertans experience over the next year? Is this a benefit of deregulation?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again a ridiculous question. I don't actually recall where we've had blackouts other than a natural disturbance that took down some transmission systems. There are no blackouts that are relative to the restructured electrical industry.

Mr. Speaker, on the idea that we will have no additional electrical generation in the province of Alberta, we have a program in place, $239 million, in the biofuel/biogenesis piece of the business in the province of Alberta. We're going to have 1,800 megawatts of additional power, hopefully, that people are looking at with respect to hydro generation. We have in front of us, according to the same group of people, 7,000 megawatts of additional power that will come to the province of Alberta soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Am I to assume that the hon. minister thinks that this EUB report is totally wrong and that it's incomplete given that they indicate in there that the average wholesale price for electricity through to 2016 will be over 9 cents per kilowatt hour? How does this minister expect consumers to have that added onto their bill and be satisfied with electricity deregulation?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is not my position as I stand here to allow or disallow the hon. member from assuming anything. If we publish information that's very direct, very concise, and, in fact, accurate, he can assume whatever he likes.

The truth of the matter is that what we've done is we have allowed the people of Alberta to see the cost of energy for what it is. We have absolutely zero, no public debt with respect to our system. This system is: use energy; pay for what you use. That's just a go-forward basis for us. We believe that it's the correct way. We do not want to leave debts to our children and grandchildren on the back of energy that we consume.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Long-term and Continuing Care

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, concerns are being raised about the future of continuing care in Alberta. Some seniors are seeing long-term care spaces in their communities replaced with supportive living. They are wondering what this means for the level of care offered to residents. My constituents are also wondering if this is just the government's way of saving a few dollars. My question is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Why is the government moving towards providing more supportive living and less long-term care?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things that is happening is that seniors are not just growing in numbers but are living longer, healthier, and are more active. It's changing the way we need to respond to the services we provide for seniors. We shouldn't just provide a one-model, hospitalized type of nursing care facility. We're responding to what seniors are asking for. How can they, first and foremost, live in their own homes? How can we provide the services to where they are, not just build them a different place where they'd rather not be? In respect to assistive living, not everybody wants to be in an institutional hospital setting. They can provide different levels of care in a different facility without it having to be called long-term care.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: what is the government doing to ensure that long-term care will remain locally available to those seniors who have high health care needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should be said that the article that I think the hon. member is referring to was written by a member of Public Interest Alberta. I really appreciate people who want to engage the public interest in discussion of necessary issues, but they should get the facts right, and they did not in that particular article.

Let me be clear. There's no move to change the structure of funding of continuing care services. Albertans who require continuing care services will get the services that they need in the most appropriate setting. This includes long-term care where necessary. As the minister of seniors said, there is a spectrum of continuing care which goes to supporting seniors in their own home if that's their choice and, if that's appropriate, in lodges, assistive living, and yes, long-term care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My last question again is to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Are there plans in place to privatize Alberta's continuing care system?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, this isn't about a change in direction: privatizing or not. We do support what seniors really do want: to own their own private home, to stay in their own private home, support services in their own private home. When it comes to other facilities, we've always supported a mix of public and private facilities. Since 1999 we've supplied funding that built over 4,200 additional units of supportive living. It's because of both the public and the private sectors that we're able to supply the spaces for the seniors when they need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Protection for Persons in Care

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Abuse of vulnerable Albertans is a serious problem. The 2005-06 Protection for Persons in Care annual report reveals that the overall number of complaints of abuse increased by 5 per cent to 818, and complaints of bodily harm increased by 22 per cent over the last year. There were almost a hundred complaints from nursing homes and hospitals that facilities were failing to provide the necessities of life. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: will the minister legislate a resident bill of rights outlining the treatment and care that residents should expect from Alberta's continuing care facilities?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of work. The hon. member has worked also on the continuing care standards. We've implemented much work this past year, effective April 1 of this year, to implement new standards, a higher level of standards to ensure that there is an appropriate level of care. But it's also been, the facility has mentioned, that complaints can – sometimes there are mistakes. We want to ensure that there is a facility for people to come forward, that there is enforcement of some type if there is any abuse. None of those things will be tolerated. We want to ensure that seniors and all people are cared for, and if there are mistakes and we hear about them, then we'll enforce those mistakes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister almost answered my second question as well, but I'd like to put it to him again. Often the investigations result in recommendations, but there's actually no enforcement to make sure that those recommendations are met. Would he put measures in place so that the protection for persons in care office actually has the authority to enforce compliance with the recommendations?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the protection of persons in care, the enforcement: a very valid issue. We have to ensure not only that we have standards and laws but that we have the ability to enforce infractions when they do occur. Those are things which we are looking at. There are many ways that we can cause enforcement, not just through that piece of legislation. There are many other laws and many other ways that we can ensure that people are protected and safe.

Ms Pastoor: Results of the satisfaction survey indicated that there was a very low level of satisfaction with the time that was taken to complete the complaint and the investigation process. Given that the budget for the protection for persons in care office did not receive an increase this year, how is the minister going to reduce the length of the process?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. I'm not certain of any of the specifics. As to the length of time increasing, that is something that I'd be happy to follow up and ensure that there is timeliness. That's one of the other aspects that I would fully support. We have to ensure that when people bring forward complaints, they can get a timely response and a timely investigation to ensure that their issues are attended to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Public/Private Partnerships for School Construction

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, we have an infrastructure deficit dealing with schools. We hear that there are going to be some announcements about new schools, especially in Calgary, but we know from the Nova Scotia experience with P3 schools that they result in nothing but problems: poor custodial services, less money for field trips, less access to gymnasiums after hours, you name it. The P3 school scheme put in place under a Liberal government in Nova Scotia was so bad that even the Conservatives had to shut them down. My question is to the Minister of Education. [interjections] I've got them moving here. Given the sordid history of P3 schools in this country, why is this minister . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would agree that probably if it was implemented by the Liberals, there would be a lot of problems, so we won't follow that method. I would just ask the hon. member not to jump to any conclusions as to what we're going to announce. When we do, I will have that discussion with him.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, after the announcement is a little late for the discussion. We're trying to help you from making a major mistake here.

A P3 school will be run like a private business. One of the first things they'll do is contract out services. There's a study here in the Edmonton public that shows what a disaster that would be. Again to the same minister: why is he so determined to push through P3s when all the evidence indicates that they don't work very well dealing with schools?

Mr. Liepert: I can only repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is making some assumptions, and I don't know where he's getting his facts from. I haven't said any of what he's just been talking about. I'd ask him to wait till we come up with a plan, and then we'll talk about it.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I've seen this minister in this House talk about P3s. Is he now saying that he's seen the light and he's moving away from P3s and that we're going to do it by traditional funding? Is that what he's saying?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I've consistently said in this House that we're going to look at innovative, alternative, creative ways of getting schools built where kids live, and that's still what we're going to do. When we unveil what we have planned, then we'll be happy to have that debate. I'm not going to get into a debate on a bunch of hypothetical garbage that may or may not be true.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Calgary Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the population of Calgary grew by a record 36,000 people. That's about 100 persons a day. And last July Calgary joined the club of cities of 1 million. From a small town called Cowtown to a metropolis of 1 million people in less than 10 decades. Now, I've been told that the cities of Paris and London took 1,800 years to get to that level. In 2006 Calgary also broke the record for construction values, more than $1 billion, higher than Toronto and double that of Edmonton. My question to the minister . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry. That's it. [interjection] That's it. Please. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm very much anticipating what he was going to ask me today. It was about funding to help Calgary deal with their infrastructure. The city of Calgary will receive about $95 million this year, which is based on the city getting 5 cents per litre for road fuel sold within the city limits. The city can use this funding for public transit capital purchases if they wish. Calgary will also receive $177 million this year . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Now we'll go on to part 2.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. From the usage of the light rail transit in Calgary, the boarding every day is 260,000 persons. To follow the answer from the minister: what is our provincial funding to help light rail transit in Calgary?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, there are a number of different levels of funding that we have: the $95 million from the transportation fund, the $177 million for the municipal infrastructure program. The city may use this funding for capital purchases, whether it's for C-Train systems such as a new rail line or new cars or new stations. What's key is the city's decision on how much of this funding it wants to use for a light rail transit system. There's also $71 million that comes from the new deals for communities . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps due to a misunderstanding of mixed messages some of my constituents expressed concern about the construction of the existing LRT extension in the northeast and northwest of Calgary that they started a couple of years ago. They had to stop because of lack of provincial funding. Can the minister clarify that?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, despite a lot of talk lately about strings attached to provincial funding and grant programs, all of the programs I mentioned earlier have very, very few strings attached, if any. Really, we've always tried to help all municipalities, but never have we gone out and planned or said we would pay for their internal transit systems. We do that by way of grants. I just think that Calgary has to decide for themselves what their priorities are, and we support that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government has spent hundreds of millions of dollars on high-tech research facilities at our universities. The University of Alberta has certainly benefited in this regard. At the same time, undergraduate arts and sciences students still attend classes in old, sometimes poorly maintained buildings, not the new shiny monuments that are sprouting up across the campus. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: would the minister agree that arts and humanities students across the province, who make up the bulk of the student population, have been overlooked as the government rushes to build high-tech, high-profile facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It hasn't been in the past the department's responsibility to set the priorities at each institution for their capital expansions or the needs-based analysis that they're doing individually. What we are doing right now – and the hon. member heard me say this in estimates – is that we are preparing a province-wide needs analysis for all of those academic and those curriculum areas based on what the student requirements are, based on what societal and industry requirements are as well as where Campus Alberta needs to go for infrastructure and capital. We're preparing that capital plan as a total provincial plan.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, most students do not get access to the high-end research buildings. They do, however, pay the indirect costs of the operation because universities and colleges have to pay for maintenance from base funding, the funding intended for facilities and programs for all students. In 2005-06 the shortfall at the University of Alberta alone was an estimated $110 million. Will the minister commit to funding all of the indirect costs of the research labs at Alberta's postsecondary institutions so that base operating funding is not used to make up the gap?

Mr. Horner: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we don't set a lot of the priorities within the individual budgets of the institutions. I might also add that it may be a little bit off to say that the students are subsidizing other areas of the university when we're paying 70 per cent of what it costs to educate those students in most of those fields.

Dr. Taft: Baloney.

Mr. Horner: Well, do your math, hon. member.

The other thing that I would add to that, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor, and this is not a grocery store where we're asking the meat clerk to provide something.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, on the funding formula side I've said in this House in the past that based on the roles, responsibilities, and mandate framework that we're bringing forward collaboratively with all of the other postsecondary institutions, we intend to take a look at the funding.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a desperate need for improvement in the student/faculty ratio at the U of A. Again, because of insufficient base funding over too many years, this ratio has steadily increased. In the early 1980s the ratio was 12 to 1. Today it stands at an overall average of 24 to 1. In the social sciences and humanities it can be as high as 40 to 1. To the same minister: does the minister believe that a university student is getting a quality education with a student/faculty ratio of 40 to 1?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the faculty ratio is one aspect of quality in our institutions. I would suggest to the hon. member that the quality of our postsecondary institutions is very, very good. That would be referenced by many of the studies and reports that have been put out by national accreditation agencies.

As it relates to the ratio, Mr. Speaker, again in our roles and responsibilities framework that we're putting forward with all of the postsecondaries in a collaborative fashion, we're talking about how transferability within the total system may allow some of those institutions to increase that ratio. Some of the students have better opportunities in other institutions. We're going to look at it from the students' perspective to ensure quality, accessibility, and managing the growth pressures that we have in the system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Deer Overpopulation

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Some of my constituents and, in fact, people that I've talked to from other areas of Alberta as well are concerned about the excessive deer populations in specific spots in the area and the problems they bring with them. In fact, my wife, who is probably my most important constituent, is extremely upset, having to continually chase them off our property after they've eaten her flowers, her bulbs, and her vegetables. What is your ministry, Mr. Minister, going to be doing to help curb these higher than normal deer populations in this and other areas of Alberta during this hunting season?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I recommend that the hon. member, when it comes to his own backyard, perhaps assist his wife in dealing with that particular deer. But for the rest of the province I'm happy to report that the number of deer licences that are being issued is very high. We estimate last year 78,000 general licences and another 29,000 special draws. Some of these are accompanied by multiple tags. We haven't done the final deer count this year, but we anticipate something similar this year. If we see excessive populations in a particular area, we can give multiple tags.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. In southeast Alberta there used to be a three-week season that quite some time ago was changed to four weekends of three days each. There has been some talk of changing this back to a full season again. Mr. Minister, will you be looking at expanding the three-day hunting seasons, as I mentioned, to allow hunters more time for their hunting trips?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the three-day hunting season, which is common for the deer hunting season in the southern parts of Alberta, was brought in to strike an appropriate balance between the interests of the deer hunters and also the agricultural landowners. Striking this balance is critical. On the three days, we don't have any intention at the moment to change that. It strikes an appropriate balance. It gives ample hunting opportunities for the hunters and ensures that landowners for four days of the week don't have . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is also to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. There was a recent announcement of Sunday hunting this year in the Cold Lake and Bonnyville areas. What about Sunday hunting opportunities for hunters in other areas of Alberta?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, there are already ample Sunday hunting opportunities in the province. Most of northern Alberta for many years has had Sunday hunting. This coming season we have added the WMUs 501 and 258, that are adjacent to Cold Lake and St. Paul, to the Sunday hunting areas. These changes were based on information and feedback we got from the local fish and game associations and also the MDs and counties. At the moment we don't have any intention to expand Sunday hunting in southern and central Alberta, but if this is of interest to landowners and hunters in southern and central Alberta, they should let us know.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 84 questions and answers today.

We are now going to revert to the Routine.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: Today is June 6, a very important day in our history. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

D-Day Anniversary

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today, June 6, marks the anniversary of a pivotal event in world history, the D-Day invasion of occupied Europe by Allied forces. Canadian troops joined the Allies from Great Britain and America in the greatest seaborne invasion in history. In the early hours of June 6, 1944, Canadians assaulted Juno Beach, one of the five Normandy beachheads. Over 14,000 valiant Canadian soldiers from all parts of Canada attacked Hitler's fortress Europe, assisted by 10,000 sailors of the Royal Canadian Navy. Another 450 men were dropped behind enemy lines by parachute and glider.

The attack on Juno Beach was a brilliant success but not without cost. In the first six days of battle 1,017 Canadian men died. Canadian casualties in the next 10 weeks of the Normandy campaign were more than 18,000, including over 5,000 dead. Over the following year Canadians, by land, sea, and air, continued to play a major role in the campaigns to liberate Europe from the monstrous tyranny of the Nazi regime. By war's end well over a million Canadians and Newfoundlanders had enlisted in our armed forces, and more than 45,000 had died in the gallant service of their country.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate for us to remember on this anniversary of D-Day all those who have served and those who continue to serve in Canada's armed forces in defence of our values of freedom and democracy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Youth Emergency Shelter

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to celebrate the Youth Emergency Shelter. April 20, 2007, marked the 25th anniversary of the Youth Emergency Shelter Society, or YESS. In that time the organization has assisted over 20,000 youth in crisis.

Their mission is to give youth at risk a chance and provide opportunities for youth and families to become confident and self-reliant. YESS provides residential care, support services, education, and training to those youth who, for various reasons, don't have the benefit of a warm and secure home. Otherwise, these children would have to fend for themselves as they face the perils of the street.

Despite the enormous challenges that the staff and volunteers face in delivering these programs, the Youth Emergency Shelter manages to raise almost half of its $2.4 million annual budget through various fundraising activities and events, such as Homeless for a Night, their annual golf tournament, and their annual winter campaign, which usually runs between December 1 and January 15.

This year the Edmonton-McClung constituency team is proud to support the Youth Emergency Shelter. On June 24 our third annual McClung community barbecue will be held in partnership with the Willowby Community League, with all proceeds going to support YESS and its important work. Representatives from YESS will also be on hand to answer questions and to collect cash donations. We will also help them collect items such as clothing, toiletries, and sports equipment, which are always in high demand.

Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that services such as this are needed, but we should be proud of the great work that the Youth Emergency Shelter Society does in assisting these youth in crisis. As we all know, being a teenager can be a difficult and confusing time, and when it seems like no one is there to help, the Youth Emergency Shelter has been a comforting resource to turn to. They have been extremely successful in helping young people to reach their full potential.

I would like to congratulate the board members, staff, and volunteers on reaching this important milestone. Happy 25th birthday, sincere thanks, and best wishes for another quarter century of commitment and service.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 1,206 signatures from residents of Alberta.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to immediately conduct a comprehensive environmental impact assessment and initiate full public consultations regarding the proposed seismic testing on Marie Lake, and to deny permission for testing or further development if possible adverse effects are identified or the majority of affected members of the public are opposed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ninety-four more signatures on the petition which reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition that I'll submit here. It's signed by residents of Strathcona and Sherwood Park constituencies as well as others in the capital region. They're urging the government to introduce legislation to suspend a graduated driver's licence if the driver is involved in a serious accident.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3.1) to advise the Assembly that we will be accepting written questions 15 and 16. I give notice that motions for returns 7 and 8 will be dealt with on Monday, June 11, 2007. There being no additional written questions or motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings concerning Calgary infrastructure and transportation, which I will briefly summarize. The first is a letter from Bill Wilson of Wheatland Developments Ltd. expressing concern over the lack of public consultation regarding changing the design criteria for the Calgary northeast link of the ring road. Among a series of specific transparency and accountability failings Bill notes that transparency and accountability . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, let's give the name of the person, three words describing it, table it, and we're moving on.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. My second tabling is a detailed letter from Rob Lerouge expressing concern about Calgary's worsening affordable housing crisis. Rob emphasizes that "leaving the supply of housing to market forces does not work when many jobs remaining open do not pay a living wage."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling seven more letters from Albertans who are angered by this government's unwillingness to sit down and negotiate with teachers to resolve their unfunded pension liability.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of a letter from Bob Borreson. Mr. Borreson is very concerned about the export of raw bitumen to be refined outside of Alberta. This plan, he feels, does not benefit Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of tablings from my constituent Chris Goss. He's concerned about seismic testing in and around Marie Lake and damage to the habitat and food stock of a variety of fish, mammals, and birds.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Insurance Act the Alberta Automobile Insurance Rate Board annual report for the year ended December 31, 2006.

On behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-

McClung on May 28, 2007, Department of Justice and Attorney General 2007-08 main estimates debate; responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for West-Yellowhead on May 30, 2007, Department of Justice and Attorney General 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, response to a question raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly Clareview on June 5, 2007, Department of Infrastructure and Transportation 2007-08 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During question period – and I'd like to have it on record – we had the opportunity to see a group that came from the Holy Family school in Grimshaw. They did come in. They observed question period and now have left. They were 10 visitors from Grimshaw. Grimshaw is a community in my constituency that's 500 kilometres northwest of here. They were accompanied by Charlie Bouchard and Mrs. Tracy Zweifel. Certainly, I just wanted to acknowledge that they were here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you six bright and shining representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who I see in the members' gallery today. They are serving two years on a mission. They interrupt their education. They work and pay for their own missions and go all over the world. These particular missionaries could be from anywhere in the world. I know, I've had three sons serve missions. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-North West has also had a son serve. I'd like to introduce you to them. If they come to a door near you, remember that they like to eat. Their names are Elder Ruiz, Elder Johansen, Elder Parry, Sister Boren, Sister Walker, and Elder Walker. Could I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: 2:30 Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Chair: The time allocated: the first hour and a half will be to the Official Opposition, the next half hour will be for the ND opposition, and the last hour will be for any member in the Assembly.

Executive Council

The Chair: We will start by inviting the hon. Premier to give his opening presentation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's once again a pleasure to be able to present estimates. I missed it last year because I resigned from cabinet, but it's great to be here presenting the estimates for Executive Council.

Mr. Chairman and all hon. members, I'm pleased to appear before this committee to discuss the 2007-10 Executive Council budget estimates and business plan. I'd like to first introduce from my office the staff who are with me today, the small team of political staff, who are led by Chief of Staff Ron Glen. Though he's unable to be with us here today, I'd like to recognize Ron Hicks, who is our Deputy Minister of Executive Council, who oversees the public service. On the public service side of my office and with me today are Paul Whittaker, deputy secretary to cabinet; Marcia Nelson, deputy chief of policy co-ordination; Leanne Stangeland, who is the managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau; and, of course, Elaine Dougan, executive director of corporate services. Some of my staff are also up in the gallery, including Jordon Copping, my executive assistant; Paul Stanway, director of communications; and Tom Olsen, director of media relations.

Before I get into some of the details on Executive Council's estimates and business plan, I'd like to touch on what I see as my role as Premier and how crucial it is that Executive Council help me fulfill that role.

I've said before and will repeat today that governing is a privilege; it's not a right. It's a privilege that I take very seriously. As Premier of Alberta, I lead a government that has wide-ranging responsibilities. I see my role as threefold, and those three pieces are the cornerstones that make up Executive Council. First, as a government we need to identify what our agenda and priorities are for government. Second, I need to manage the machinery of government, so to speak. It's vital we have a good decision-making process in place. Third, we need to communicate those decisions and priorities back to Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks today will include a brief fiscal overview of 2007-08 followed by some details on upcoming initiatives from the business plan. Executive Council spending for 2008 is forecast at $23.2 million. When the transfer of corporate internal audit services to Treasury Board is taken into account, this represents a $1.6 million increase from last year.

The increase is dedicated to three main areas: $1 million, the larger part, will cover the cost of the board governance task force and supporting team, $500,000 in additional funds will allow the policy co-ordination office to meet the increased demand and need for strategic policy development and co-ordination, and salary increases matching those allocated across government make up the balance of the increase.

I'd like now to offer an overview of Executive Council's program areas and priorities as outlined in the business plan. My offices here in the Legislature include communications and correspondence and the McDougall Centre in Calgary; the deputy minister's office, which provides advice and support to the Premier on policy and organizational issues and leadership to the Alberta public service, cabinet co-ordination and support; the policy co-ordination office; the Board Governance Review Task Force Secretariat; the protocol office; and administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council and the Public Affairs Bureau.

Executive Council has outlined the following strategic priorities in the '07-10 business plan. The first is to establish a board governance review to provide recommendations on how the government can improve its transparency, its accountability, and governance of its agencies, boards, and commissions; develop democratic reforms that include opportunities for all-party committees to work together; strengthen policy support and facilitate enhanced policy development capacity; implement a strategic communications plan for government; and implement a corporate communications policy for government.

These priorities are in line with Executive Council's focus on promoting government-wide achievement of the five priorities I set out when I became Premier. For example, we have made great strides on the priority of governing with integrity and transparency. We now regularly post ministerial expenses and flight information on the government website. We have implemented democratic reforms, which include fixed sittings of the Legislature, a fixed budget date, and all-party field committees. We still have much more to do, and we will continue to move forward in the next year.

Another important commitment that I made was to conduct a review of government agencies, boards, and commissions. As you may know, there are about 130 agencies, boards, and commissions in the province that manage over 50 per cent of government spending. This review, conducted by three task force members, is focused on helping these entities provide better governance, fiscal responsibility, and accountability processes for the programs and services they provide Albertans. The budget for carrying out this important review is estimated at a million dollars to cover staff expenses, remuneration, travel, and other associated costs.

Now, the policy co-ordination office is the next piece of Executive Council that I would like to talk to you about. It plays a key role in providing long-term strategic planning, promoting effective co-ordination of cross-ministry initiatives and other strategic initiatives. This year their mandate has expanded to support the identification and implementation of government policies, support decision-makers by ensuring that they have the best possible information on which to make decisions, and to promote a corporate cross-ministry approach to policy development that is aligned with government priorities. The funding increase of $500,000 for the policy co-ordination office will allow it to expand and fulfill its mandate.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to touch briefly on our protocol office. It's a very busy office. As you know, this office is responsible for provincial government ceremonial events and visits from senior international dignitaries. The staff also provide protocol advice to government offices, community groups, the private sector, and individuals for special events. In fact, next week the Prime Minister of the Netherlands will be visiting our great province.

Mr. Chairman, the final piece of Executive Council I'd like to highlight is the work of the Public Affairs Bureau. The bureau supports all five of the government's priorities through external communication activities and provides internal communications leadership and support to government ministries. We need to communicate with Albertans. It is vital that they receive clear communication about the programs, the services, and directions of their government. It's also important that Albertans are given a way to provide feedback. Something new this year has been the development of a strategic communications plan that is being implemented across government to enhance the quality, co-ordination, and consistency of government communications and provide Albertans with improved avenues to access information and provide feedback.

We have recently redesigned the government website, which is becoming an increasingly important means of communication. We've refocused the site to improve user access to government services, ensuring that Albertans have the best information they need as quickly and as easily as possible.

The PAB has also developed a new corporate communications policy for government. This policy will clearly define what Albertans can expect in terms of communicating with their government. We have a strong commitment to two-way communications with Albertans, and we want to make that clear. The policy will provide government staff with guidance in conducting communications-related work. The PAB has also led the responsibility for public communications with the various emergency response plans in place for the government of Alberta. As I mentioned before, the bureau has taken on responsibility for internal communications. Of course, we can't forget our internal audience. It's important that we keep our own public service employees informed about government policies and directions.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that concludes my introductory remarks. I welcome members to ask any questions they might have.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to rise and discuss the budget of Executive Council with the Premier. I congratulate the Premier on his first presentation in his capacity to the Assembly. I hope we can have a constructive discussion here.

An Hon. Member: More, more.

Dr. Taft: There may well be many more. Time will tell.

The amount of information provided is fairly limited in the government estimates book. In fairness, it's a very small percentage of the overall provincial budget. One of the striking things that comes out as I look at it and, I think, the kind of question that anybody's going to ask is just about the nature of the increase. Right now I'm on page 154 of the '07-08 government estimates. Over the last two years, as I'm reading the figures on page 154, the overall budget of Executive Council has grown from $18,387,000 to what is predicted to be this year, $23,209,000, if the Premier is on the same page as I am on this issue.

That's a growth over two years that has occurred even with corporate internal audit services being transferred from the Executive Council to Treasury Board, I believe. So an explanation of why there's an almost 28 per cent increase – I think it works out to a 27.8 per cent increase – in the budget of Executive Council over two years would be of course appreciated.

That increase actually, turning to page 156, becomes even more dramatic when I look at the first category there, the office of the Premier and Executive Council. In the last two years the budget has increased from $6,214,000 to $8,887,000, the overwhelming proportion of which is driven by the office of the Premier and Executive Council, a very small portion driven by increases in the office of the Lieutenant Governor. If you work that increase out over two years, it is a 42 per cent increase. Again, that draws questions. You know, what's behind such a dramatic increase over the last two years?

Of course, one year to the next, if we only look at one year, there are significant increases. Because it's just one year, it's not as large, but the trend is of ongoing increases despite the fact that some services have been moved out of Executive Council. If the Premier would be able to give some details and explanations of that increase and, frankly, justification to the taxpayer, I'm sure we'd all appreciate that, and some details which could elaborate on the functions performed by the different groups or functions itemized under Public Affairs on page 156. Corporate services is one, strategic communications is another, and then they seem to sort of merge. The two titles merge in the third line, 2.0.3, corporate communication services. What do those services perform? What do those people do? Could you break it out separately and explain it category by category? You know, what's the difference? What does strategic communications do versus corporate communications? That sort of thing would be helpful. Again, why are there significant increases? I know, particularly under Public Affairs, that corporate services have virtually doubled in two years, and it's a pretty dramatic rise.

The very first thing, I think, that any taxpayer or voter is going to want answered is an explanation of the significant increases in expenditures. I note on page 160 that those increases are occurring despite a very limited increase in the number of full-time equivalent employees, going up a very small percentage over the last year. My page doesn't include a figure of full-time equivalent employees from two years ago. That would be interesting to have, but we don't have it here. So where's the money going? What's being done for that increase? I'm assuming, Mr. Premier, that a lot of that is going out through contracted services, maybe. If we're not seeing an increase in the number of staff or, well, exactly what – I don't know.

Once we get through some details on that, then a number of other questions will arise. Having, as I have had, a concern with the function and nature of the Public Affairs Bureau for over 10 years now, I will have a number of questions specific to the Public Affairs Bureau but will save those for the second round of questions if we can do that, if that's okay, Mr. Premier. Back and forth.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can't speak for the years prior, but I can certainly inform the House about the budget for this year.

Now, the first questions were, I believe, with respect to page 156. In terms of what we get for the expenditures in that particular area, there are various components. This is by element. First, office of the Premier and Executive Council. It's 55 FTEs, $8.4 million. These are staff salaries and support services for the Premier's offices in Edmonton and Calgary, the deputy minister's office, the cabinet co-ordination office, which provides organizational and administrative support to cabinet and its key committees.

Mr. Stelmach: It's 1.0.1. I'll cover all those on page 156.

The policy co-ordination also supports the implementation of government policies, works with departments to ensure that decision-makers have the best information to make the decisions, and promotes a corporate cross-ministry approach to policy development that is aligned with government priorities.

Now, the board governance review secretariat that has been established – and it is a major part of this increase, a million dollars – is to assess the effectiveness and the accountability of all our agencies, boards, and commissions. As I said before, about 50 per cent of our public expenditures are done by these agencies, and we want to make sure that we're transparent. There are a number of provinces – I believe Nova Scotia, Ontario, British Columbia – that have taken this route. Some have established permanent offices. I can't determine what the recommendations will be from this committee, but certainly we're going to take their recommendations to heart.

The committee has met. It's a three-member committee. They have met with our ministers. They have also, I believe, offered to meet with the opposition. I don't know. They were supposed to do it yesterday, according to my information. But it's to build recommendations to make sure that we improve the transparency; you know, how we appoint people to the various agencies and boards and also how they operate, how they make their decisions with respect to spending this fair amount of money.

Now, it may stay in Executive Council if there's a recommendation that we need a full-time agency, or it may go to Treasury Board as part of its work in the future, but we have to wait for the recommendations. The three people know organizational structure very well, and I have every faith in them that they'll bring forward a number of good recommendations.

The protocol office has been busy. There is no question that the eyes of the world are on Alberta. We are receiving at least double per capita the kind of investment coming to Alberta than other provinces. We have so many ambassadors, consuls general, leaders from other countries coming to Alberta just to get to know us better and to look at how they can invest and also the predictability of our regulatory regime, of course, the questions they've been asking.

There's also funding in 1.0.1 for the Alberta Order of Excellence program. It's a very important program recognizing Albertans for their contribution.

The office of the Lieutenant Governor. There was a contracted position there before. Now we've absorbed that position into government, so there is a decrease of $33,000 from that vote line 1.0.2. It was a support position.

Corporate services, 2.0.1: $1.7 million, and there are 14 FTEs. It's an increase of a hundred thousand dollars, includes the office of the managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau, manages the human resource, finance, and administrative needs of Executive Council, is responsible for the business plan and budget preparation, performance measurement co-ordination, annual report development, records management and FOIP administration, includes the central budget for administrative costs, Service Alberta support services, training for all Public Affairs Bureau staff, general office equipment and supplies. In that $100,000 the reason for change is the salary and benefit increases that apply to staff. Again, it's the same raise that is applied across government.

Strategic communications, 2.0.2: $9 million, 81 FTEs. It's an increase of $22,000. This is communications staff seconded to departments to support two-way communications with Albertans; develops communications for government's long-term strategic plans and priority initiative to support delivery of programs and services; plans, co-ordinates, executes cross-government communication activities – for example, the Report to Albertans is part of their responsibility – co-ordinates government communications to and from Albertans from major government officials, like public consultations and the budget, and of course during public emergencies; plans and co-ordinates government-wide internal communications; and implements a corporate communications policy to enhance the co-ordination and consistency of communications. Again, these are just the salary increases for the 81 FTEs, an increase of $22,000.

Vote 2.0.3, corporate communications services: $3.6 million, 22 FTEs, an increase of $250,000 plus 7 per cent. It manages the government of Alberta website; co-ordinates cross-government standards for all ministry websites; manages the government of Alberta corporate identity and provides consultation for cross-government implementation; provides IT support to Executive Council, Public Affairs Bureau; provides advertising consultation and support to ministries and co-ordinates corporate advertising; distributes government news releases; provides media monitoring to ministries, including electronic access to news of importance to the government of Alberta; provides technical support for major government news conferences and announcements. So that breaks that down.

Now, the corporate services one. There has been a change there because we're also providing support for HR and finance to Executive Council as well as Public Affairs. So there's an increase there because they're doing work for two different authorities.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Premier. I appreciated some of the elaboration. It's obviously impossible to go through the Executive Council budget without really focusing on the Public Affairs Bureau, one of my favourite topics and one of my biggest concerns, frankly, with the state of democracy in this province.

My experience with the Public Affairs Bureau dating back decades is that there has been a marked shift in the way the bureau operates and, indeed, in the purpose and resources of the bureau. Through the first two Premiers of the Conservative Party the Public Affairs Bureau was always a secondary responsibility of some other minister. It wasn't connected to the Premier's office, and it had a very clear mandate to provide corporate communications for the public service, to inform the public about government programs or services or issues. It was not an agency with any political mandate at all. The political side of communications, which I openly admit every government has to do, was contained within the staff of cabinet ministers and the Premier's office.

Well, frankly, around about December 5, 1992, over the period of just a number of days right focused then, there was a dramatic shift in the role of the Public Affairs Bureau under the former Premier, Premier Ralph Klein, and his staff in which the Public Affairs Bureau was reorganized, brought straight into the Premier's office, and was much more aggressively politicized, in my view, to support the political agenda of the governing party and particularly the Premier. I believe that was a dark day for democracy in Alberta that has never been corrected. So I am of the opinion – clearly, the Premier and I will differ – that the Public Affairs Bureau needs to be dismantled, effectively, and that a strong wall needs to be built, an organization wall, between the political work of the people working in cabinet ministers' and the Premier's offices and the public service of the bureaucracy.

The Premier mentioned that there are 81 full-time equivalents under vote 2.0.2, strategic communications, seconded to departments. Perhaps the Premier could elaborate on how those secondments work. The sense I have is that they are effectively assigned to departments by the Public Affairs Bureau. In fact, in many cases these communications directors, although they work themselves for the Public Affairs Bureau, have staff of the department working for them. In other words, there is a multiplying of the effective workforce of the Public Affairs Bureau, although that workforce is concealed because the actual payroll is covered by the department. So, for example, any major department – let's pick just as a random example the Department of Health and Wellness – has Public Affairs Bureau staff assigned, in my term and in the Premier's term, seconded, to the department.

Each of those Public Affairs Bureau employees has department of health employees reporting to them, which is – what's the word I want? – a distortion of proper accounting lines in an organization. In my view, all the employees of any given department, whether it's the Department of Health and Wellness or any other, should report, ultimately, to the deputy minister, not to staff of the Public Affairs Bureau.

That's a long-winded way of getting to my question, I suppose, which would be: of the staff seconded from the Public Affairs Bureau to the various departments, how many of those staff have staff of those departments reporting to them, if I'm making myself clear? In other words, we have 81 full-time equivalents seconded to departments, but my knowledge is that, in fact, the effective workforce of the Public Affairs Bureau is much larger than that, and I'm wondering how much larger. The Premier may not be able to answer right now; if he could have his staff undertake that.

The second part of my question would be: has the Auditor General ever had a look or a review of this particular structure and this particular way of reporting and allocating resources? If not, perhaps I will request that he have a look at it to ensure that proper and accurate reporting is being followed.

I would also ask the Premier to justify his continuing of the model of the Public Affairs Bureau that was brought in under the former Premier, in which the communications functions of all the different departments were handled not by those departments but by the Premier's office. Now, it seems to me a deeply problematic structure, that I had hoped the Premier would bring an end to. Since he hasn't, how does he justify continuing with the model of the Public Affairs Bureau in which all those communications staff report to his office as opposed to the model adopted under Premier Lougheed, in particular, and Premier Getty, in which the communications functions of the various departments were managed through those departments? A justification of that would be most helpful.

The Premier also mentioned briefly vote 2.0.3. Under Corporate Communications Services there are things like advertising consultation and co-ordination. That sort of work has led to huge controversy and, indeed, scandal in some other governments. Particularly, I'm thinking of the government in Ottawa under Adscam and that sort of thing. When lines get blurred, one of the areas they can easily get blurred is under things like advertising and sponsorships and all the related work that goes with that.

I'd appreciate some details, if the Premier could provide them, on what exactly advertising consultation and co-ordination includes. How are advertising and sponsorship contracts issued? How are they managed? How are they accounted for? There was a fairly dramatic case, albeit in the final year of the last Premier, I admit, but I'd hate to see this occur again, where I believe over a million dollars was spent on developing advertising for the third-way campaign, which was never used. How do we as taxpayers and citizens have confidence that that sort of million-dollar waste won't occur under this Premier? How are those contracts managed so that they actually provide some value for the taxpayers of the province?

Perhaps my questions are a bit meandering and long-winded.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Dr. Taft: I have people agreeing with me. Fair enough; fair enough.

I have some really serious questions about the performance of the Public Affairs Bureau: a justification of why it continues to second so many staff to other departments instead of having those departments manage their own communications, an explanation around the function of corporate communication services in advertising, consultation, and co-ordination in management. Any elaboration on that would be much appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Maybe if I could just cover, first of all, the role of the PAB and then, of course, the advertising policy because it is important. It's something that Albertans want to know about. I do have to disagree with the member on one point: when he was questioning the state of democracy in Alberta. First of all, we had a very successful campaign for leader and Premier of the province of Alberta. I thought it was pretty democratic.

The other is that we worked quite closely together as all parties represented here in House. It was something that was important to me, and that was to direct an all-party review, you know, our policy field committees. This is new for Alberta. It's not new to, perhaps, other provinces or the federal government, but it's certainly new to this province. With the co-operation of all, we've come a long way in improving democracy, allowing Albertans input on legislation, on regulations. I feel that we're going to build better policy and better laws for Albertans through this process. Sometimes, you know, it may take a little longer, but that's the way democracy should be done. I feel proud of our accomplishments, and that, to me, is important. It's a step, and we've got a long way to go in some areas, you know, in terms of allowing all Albertans the opportunity.

You know, many times we talk in this House about websites and communicating through the web. Unfortunately, there are many Albertans that are not connected to the web. There are many seniors that cannot really find out more about programs that are available to them without our communicating directly with them through advertising, especially in the local papers, the weekly papers so that people know whom to contact at whatever time.

The role of the Public Affairs Bureau is quite extensive. But there's no doubt about it that this accusation has existed for some time. I think the hon. member even wrote about it in one of his books. There had been accusations that it's really been like a propaganda arm of the PC Party, and I want to be clear that there is no connection between the bureau and the PC Party. The partisan political matters are the domain of elected officials and the party and not government employees. Like all members of the public service our bureau employees are guided by a code of conduct, and they also take an oath of office. They are professional communicators who work very hard, and they work every day on behalf of Albertans.

Bureau staff help plan and implement communications to Albertans on initiatives like safety campaigns. It could be, you know, safety campaigns for workers. It could be government programs for seniors. Albertans deserve very strong, clear communication from the government. The Public Affairs Bureau helps ensure that citizens of this province receive the information they need when they need it and, of course, in the best way possible.

Now, some of the comments made with respect to advertising. Examples of communication programs include – and there are many – traffic safety. You know, when you are driving down the highway, there are a number of programs in terms of the safety of our workers on the highways or speeding through construction zones, et cetera. Those are all advertised in papers. We lost a number of flag people over the last number of years, so that, to me, is a valuable investment in advertising.

Farm safety, workplace safety: we put a huge effort in this area to reduce the number of accidents and fatalities.

In other areas: information for postsecondary students, seniors, families, the Alberta child health benefit, and of course there was a fair amount of information out there in terms of how Albertans can stay healthy, eat the best foods, protect our environment. So that really brings down the cost.

The advertising policy is quite straightforward. The Public Affairs Bureau does provide consultation and support for all government advertising. The cost is covered by the ministry responsible, so each ministry has that included in their budget. In 2005-06 – again, I'm saying 2005 because we don't have the figures for 2006-07 – spending on advertising by departments totalled $8 million, but total advertising for the government is estimated to be about $10.6 million.

Now, all advertising procurement has to be compliant with the agreement in internal trade and the TILMA agreements. We use a single agency of record for media buying, to purchase media space for all of its advertising. So it's print ads, radio ads, TV spots, billboards, online ads. This allows government to take advantage of special volume buying because we consolidate it through one agency. The agency of record for a media buying contract is for a three-year period, with a possibility of one additional year if performance is satisfactory. The current contract is with Highwood Communications, and it will be retendered in 2007, so this year.

There are two additional standing agency-of-record contracts for advertising. DDB Canada is the agency of record for recruitment advertising, and it's also the agency of record for legal and tender advertising.

Now, 2007-08 advertising campaigns principally inform Albertans about a range of topics from West Nile virus to family violence protection to bullying – we've done a fair amount there – to staying safe on the job to wildfire prevention. Although at the beginning of year, you know, we had a fair amount of moisture, these last few days of really hot weather have really increased, of course, the risk of forest fires in the province.

The upcoming campaigns for 2007-08 include the Alberta centennial education savings plan, informing Albertans that there's an opportunity for Albertans to contribute and build resources for their children wanting to enter postsecondary, bullying prevention education and awareness, recruitment of aboriginal foster parents and general foster parent recruitment, climate change, drinking and violence prevention, victims of crime. A lot of work is being done on the land-use framework advertising to make sure that people come to our public events, public consultation, the mountain pine beetle. Now recent and ongoing – and this has been ongoing for some time – the prevention of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, prevention of childhood sexual exploitation, education awareness of bullying. Prevention of family violence will continue, Work Safe Alberta, pandemic preparedness and tactics – again, we're working with municipalities in this case – West Nile virus, and given the amount of work that's out there on provincial highways, more advertising tied to traffic safety, and, of course, wildfire prevention.

Now, secondments from PAB to departments. Some departments have other non-PAB communications staff to meet additional communications needs, and that is up to the department to decide and resource such positions. We'll get back in terms of the number of communications staff because we'll have to ask every ministry their responsibilities, and we'll get back on that.

The Auditor General has never reviewed Public Affairs probably because he hasn't seen a need to. To my knowledge he hasn't reviewed it in the past. I think that reporting to the Executive Council, to the Premier's office, is very important to co-ordinate communications to ensure that Albertans are getting the information they need. Sometimes program information is difficult to get through the regular media. That's why we do the advertising. It's paid for by the departments. Our role there is mainly to play the co-ordination role.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Premier, again.

Continuing with some questions specific to the Public Affairs Bureau. The Premier provided us a considerable list of public information campaigns, which are precisely what governments need to do, whether it's, you know, traffic safety or all kinds of issues. Those are not concerns that we're going to raise at all. I'm sure that we would support the large majority of those and perhaps even extend the list. I don't know. The question I have with those is: how are the costs of those contracts allocated between the specific departments and the Public Affairs Bureau?

To pick an example: traffic safety. If $1 million is spent on a traffic safety public awareness campaign, does that million-dollar cost turn up in the budget of the Public Affairs Bureau, or does it turn up in the Department of Infrastructure and Transportation, for example? Or with the Healthy U campaign, which is quite expensive, does the cost of that campaign get assigned to the Department of Health and Wellness or to the Public Affairs Bureau? I would appreciate some explanation of how the costs for each of these contracts are allocated between the Public Affairs Bureau and the departments. I continue to ask the question for those various campaigns. Why aren't those communications initiatives handled by the particular department as opposed to the Public Affairs Bureau? So it goes back to perhaps the theme of our discussion. Fair enough. There are different views on it.

There is a history with the Public Affairs Bureau and Executive Council of some controversies around some contracts, the agency of record that handles the media buys, in particular. Highwood has a long and intimate history with the PC party – it's a simple statement of fact – has close connections to the chief of staff of the former Premier, Mr. Rod Love, and has the appearance of being a political favourite of this government. My question would be to the Premier. When this contract or when this position of being the agency of record comes up for renewal later this year, what steps will be taken by this Premier to avoid the appearance of political favouritism in awarding that very, very important contract?

The point that needs to be made here is that whoever handles that contract, whoever is the agency of record, has tremendous sway over communications agencies, public relations agencies, advertising agencies, and many, many media, who frankly depend on government advertising to help them meet their expenses. It's a very, very powerful position. It's one that needs to be handled, in my view, with the utmost of care and respect and openness and accountability and an absolute intolerance for any kind of political meddling whatsoever. So my question to the Premier would be: how is that contract going to be allocated? How is that role going to be determined, the role of agency of record, in such a way that avoids any appearance of political favoritism?

Related to that are other controversies around untendered contracts, some of which, I believe, have been handled by Executive Council in previous administrations and I hope will be brought to an end under this Premier. I'm thinking, for example, of an untendered contract to Mr. Rod Love for strategic advice, a contract of some tens of thousands of dollars for which there was no paper trail whatsoever. So we had a contract that was untendered, given clearly to an insider without any paper trail. Actually, I believe it was one of a number of contracts that raised concerns by the Auditor General. My question to the Premier: as a new Premier committed to openness and accountability and a new way of doing public business, can we be sure as MLAs and as citizens of Alberta that that kind of process of handing out untendered contracts without any paper trails will come to an end under this Premier's administration?

I am now going to shift a little bit to specifics around salaries. I'm looking at the annual report of Executive Council last year, which itemizes the salaries of a dozen or so senior officials and executives with Executive Council. I'm on page 33 of the '05-06 Executive Council annual report. The Premier may well not have that at his fingertips. Fair enough. The question will stay.

The page I'm referring to itemizes a number of positions: deputy minister, chief of staff, director of southern Alberta office, deputy secretary to cabinet, managing director of Public Affairs. It includes the three senior positions in the Public Affairs Bureau and the positions of a number of executives in the office of the Premier: the director of communications, deputy chief of staff, chief of protocol, executive director of policy co-ordination, and chief internal auditor. Now, I believe that position has been moved to President of Treasury Board. But otherwise, some details would be very useful to be provided on how these positions have changed. What are the details on the salaries for these dozen or so positions that were itemized in the annual report? They will be itemized again in the annual report, but it would be nice to see what their estimated costs are going to be. I'm sure that was probably compiled somewhere in the construction of your budget, and since it's going to be public information at the end, we might as well make it public information at the beginning for taxpayers of Alberta to see.

That's sort of a logical moment for me to take a break, so I'll again return the floor to the Premier. Thanks.

Mr. Stelmach: There are a number of questions. One of them, I didn't get a chance to answer the last time I was up. In terms of the PAB: no, the advertising is done by departments, and they pay for it; the role of Public Affairs is to play a co-ordination role. It's a co-ordination role with hiring agencies, and of course these agencies are hired through competitions. So somebody has to do it for all departments, and we do the co-ordinating. I think Public Affairs staff have never reported to ministries, the same in that sense since Premier Lougheed in 1972. But, you know, we can have another look at that and get more information.

This one on appearance: this is a good question because the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta has been successful. We've had the privilege of serving Albertans for many years. We go back on a regular basis to earn their respect, you know, through elections and earn their trust. So there are many people that may have a membership in the Progressive Conservative Party. They may have contributed to the Progressive Conservative Party. With respect to the contract, it follows all of the rules in terms of public tender.

If the one agency that is giving us the absolute best price for what we've tendered, but there's a connection somehow to maybe one of the board members, what the hon. member is saying is that we should not accept that tender because there may be an appearance – an appearance – that there is some connection even though all of the rules are followed. I submit to this House that that is unfair. Tendering processes are fully public, and the tenders are public. Whoever wins that particular tender for advertising in this province does so by giving us the best possible price to offer the best service. That to me is the fair way of doing the process.

In terms of untendered contracts, there are rules under AIT, agreement on internal trade. Contracts that are, you know, less than $100,000 can be sole-sourced. I'm not a fan of it. We should make it public that we need this expertise. If they are sole-sourced, there has to be information that comes to the minister, something that the taxpayers receive. I have a certain position that I've taken on it, and I expect the ministers to follow.

With respect to the list of people that are in Executive Council working for the Premier, the amounts are public because it's senior officials' compensation. There's a range for senior officials, and our duty is that the contracts we sign are within that range. That range is public, and maybe we can get it later today and put it in as a matter of record. I think that was all that was raised in terms of questions.

Now, again, this year we will be tendering contracts. The call for tenders will be public, and any agency can apply. In fact, now any agency, really, across Canada that wants to apply and tender can do so, but it will be done under very strict criteria that we follow the agreement on internal trade and also the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement that we have with the province of B.C.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the Premier for his willingness to appear before us today and discuss the supply estimates for Executive Council.

Mr. Premier, I've only got a couple of quick questions, and I'm hopeful that your staff may be able to come up with some answers fairly quickly. The first is sort of a follow-up on the Leader of the Official Opposition and his expressed concern that there's not an awful lot of detail in the supply estimates. You had mentioned earlier the Alberta Order of Excellence, which I believe you said falls under the office of the Premier. I would be curious to know up front how much money is being allocated to that particular program as opposed to having to wait until we see the Executive Council annual report sometime down the road.

Likewise the protocol office. Again, I'm sure there was a major expense during the centennial year when we had the royal visit and a number of other activities. I'd be curious to see whether or not there's somewhat less expenditure contemplated there this year or how, you know, one year might compare to previous years. So that sort of information would be very helpful, and I would submit that perhaps in the future we could have it in the supply estimates. Certainly, this year if some of your staff might be able to provide that now, I would appreciate it.

I also wanted to ask: in the most recent annual report of Executive Council, '05-06, in the statement of financial position it references $191,000 cash held as assets within Executive Council, and I'm curious to know why there would be that much and how much might currently be there. Again, it's not reflected in the budget documents that we have for '07-08, so perhaps you could clarify for me a little bit as to why that much cash is being held by Executive Council and how much it is currently.

Then the last one, I guess, is just a little bit of a frustration that I'm having with the policy field committees, Mr. Premier. Obviously, you're well aware of the fact that this is something that members on this side of the House have been asking for for a long time and very much looking forward to being involved in. I have to admit that I'm a little concerned that we're now very near the conclusion of the spring session, and those committees have been populated, and we've had a couple of bills at least, perhaps more, referred to policy field committees at this point. But there doesn't seem to be any action in terms of even an initial meeting to discuss with members from this side the framework for how those committees are going to work, what sort of a meeting schedule might be contemplated, whether it's sometime before summer – I'm going to guess that there won't likely be a lot of meetings held over the summer – whether or not those PFCs may be meeting in the fall in advance of the fall sitting, which, I believe, begins on the 5th of November, or if it's contemplated that they'll be meeting, you know, during the time when the House is sitting. So I would certainly ask that you might be able to clarify for us where that is at on the government side and how soon members from this side can expect to see some activity in regard to the PFCs.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. First of all, to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, it's my duty to defend the budget estimates, not the willingness. I'm here because I take pride in not only defending the budget estimates but in having an opportunity to communicate very clearly with Albertans what our budget is all about and the purpose of it.

For the Alberta Order of Excellence the budget is $110,000. The Alberta Order of Excellence is the highest honour that the province of Alberta can bestow on a citizen. Members of the Alberta Order of Excellence come from all walks of life. Their careers range from medicine, science, agriculture, engineering, business, law, politics, the arts. All members of the Order of Excellence have one thing in common, and that is that they made an outstanding contribution not only provincially but nationally or even an international impact. We have, certainly, many people in Alberta that have done that. Now, the Order of Excellence is about more than simply doing one's job well. It's about recognizing Albertans who made a difference, who serve Albertans with excellence and distinction, and whose contributions will stand the test of time.

The Alberta Order of Excellence Council considers the nominations of candidates to the Alberta Order of Excellence. It's made up of very prominent Albertans. They're volunteer representatives, and they're appointed by order in council from across Alberta. Presently the chair is Dr. Bob Westbury. The members are Bunny Ferguson, Jack Gorr, Harley Hotchkiss, Walter Paszkowski, and Harold Storlien. Again, I must repeat that these are volunteer positions. They meet to review the applications – you know, the nominations – for the Order of Excellence and make the appointments.

Members are inducted into the order at a special ceremony held at Government House. Of course, the Lieutenant Governor, the chancellor of the Order of Excellence, presents the new members with a medallion and a personalized, illuminated scroll. This is one way of recognizing outstanding achievement, really, on behalf of all Albertans of those that have really helped build this province in so many different ways.

The protocol budget. It's $856,000 with six full-time equivalents. We'll get the comparisons from the previous years. The hon. member talked about 2005 and the Queen's visit. Obviously, it was very busy in 2005. We received many, many visitors during our centennial year. Given, Mr. Chairman, the kind of economic activity and, you know, the fact that Alberta is playing a much larger role on the world stage, we have so, so many visitors from other countries: ambassadors, consuls general, government leaders. We even have opposition leaders from other governments coming to Alberta, looking at our regulatory review processes, our taxation policies, wanting to learn from what we've accomplished in the province of Alberta.

I know that we can get the comparisons, but as I said, just the number of visitors I've had to greet over the last number of months – and, of course, we've been assisted by all members, you know, with respect to luncheons, tours, making them feel welcome in the province because they're representing countries that are making substantial investments in Alberta and in Canada. It's important to build that relationship because we are going to look to many countries for very specific skill sets, to attract people to Alberta to meet the growing demands of human resources but in so many different areas. We've attracted some of the world's brightest minds to do research. We also have to attract people in various trades.

Again, I just recently met with the ambassador for the Philippines. They're very eager to work with us. I met the ambassador from the European Union, Ambassador Dorian Prince, who is very open to working further. I learned a lot in that meeting in terms of how their agreements work within the European Union and how they've managed to reduce costs, especially those barriers at borders to trade.

Now, there was a question with respect to all-party committees and when they'll be meeting. The policy field committees are really matters of the Legislature, not Executive Council. Even though, you know, it's an idea that I want to promote with the other opposition leaders – and we found common ground, and we're proceeding with policy field committees – they are really the creatures, I guess, of the Legislature, so the Legislature will dictate, of course, what they will do.

However, there are four, and they have been established to sort of end the frustration of members and the public who before this change felt that they had very little influence on the development of public policy. They will meet regularly in an open manner. Bills 1, 2, and 31 have already been sent to the committees. This is really new in the history of Alberta, but my own personal opinion – and, again, I can only offer the opinion – is that we could meet as to how the committees agree to meet over the summer and help prepare, hear evidence from Albertans, and then bring that evidence forward. Some of the bills, of course, will be carried into the fall session, and we'll be able to have more information in terms of, maybe, possible amendments and build better legislation and regulation with respect to the three bills that I talked about.

I just think that not only the policy field committees but agreeing, of course, on fixed dates for the Legislature, a fixed budget date – that is really new, but it's good. It's good for democracy in the province of Alberta, and I think that it helps for better policy development. You know, the Committee of Supply – of course, the work is in progress today – is spending more hours than we did before in this House. It's more flexible. Every member of the House has an opportunity to participate, even the independents, and we do have multiple opportunities to speak, to talk about the needs of individual constituencies in terms of the budgets that come before the House. That's what it's all about: representing the member's constituency in this House to bring forward the kinds of needs and, of course, positions and opinions of constituents.

There are, I believe, more democratic reforms to come, and we'll work on those in the future, but I think that in the first few months we have really come a long way in improving democracy in the province of Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and respond to the estimates for Executive Council and to respond to some of the remarks made by the hon. Premier. First of all, I would like to correct a misconception that is out there that this Third Session of the 26th Legislature would be one of the longest sittings ever and that at the end of business on Thursday, June 14, if we do adjourn as scheduled, this sitting would have been the longest and that we have been awarded ample opportunity to discuss things in this House. The first half is correct because we're going to have more linear days, more afternoons, but we are not going to have the same number of hours as we did before. While we welcome the changes that were brought forward by the Premier in terms of the policy field committees and the revised budget sittings and all these wonderful improvements that we have seen as a result of negotiations between the House leaders, really the end result with respect to the number of hours that are available for debate has been reduced.

Now, I have certain thoughts which I would like to put on the record and invite the hon. Premier to respond to. One of the things that I wanted to talk about was, again, the Public Affairs Bureau, but I'm going to submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has covered it eloquently. I would like to capture one comment from the Premier's response to him when he indicated that the Public Affairs Bureau is there for two-way communications with Albertans, two ways meaning to and from. I would register that, in my opinion – and I've been here only two and a half years as an MLA – I have seen this flow to be mostly unidirectional. The flow is mostly from the government to Albertans and not the other way back.

I realize that there is a sales job for the Public Affairs Bureau to convince Albertans that the direction taken by government is good and that the policies are sound, but I would argue that there is an equally important need for the Public Affairs Bureau to solicit public opinion, to seek direction from Albertans. I would actually give you some examples, Mr. Chairman; for example, the housing issue, affordability of housing and escalating rents and all that big concern that this Third Session of this Legislature has been dealing with.

Today, for example, we had these guys, the guests from Marie Lake, who were concerned about seismic testing. You know, Albertans are concerned about the environment, and the government, as indicated in their Bill 3, is talking about intensity targets for emissions versus a hard cap. I would submit that these are examples of situations where this government should have been surveying Albertans and asking them what they think. My question to the Premier is: should we expect in the near future more opinion surveys or plebiscites or other mechanisms where we ask people what they think? Now, I am not asking that this government govern by referendum. This is not really what I'm advocating, but as I emphasized before, two-way communication means back and forth, to and from.

Another observation I made comparing the hon. Premier now to the former Premier is with respect to his availability with the media. I have been brought up knowing that there are four levels of authority in any society: one being the government, or the Executive Council; the other being the Legislature, the elected officials; the third being the legal system, or the judiciary; and the fourth being the media. The media is the fourth level of authority. We noticed that the hon. Premier now only has two days a week of media availability compared to five. My question to him is if this is something that would be changed in the near future again.

Third, I wanted to touch on his promise to govern with integrity and transparency, which is really a noble promise. I commend him on wanting to do this. What I am seeking from him is commitment to translate words into actions.

Take, for example, last year, Bill 20, Mr. Chairman, the amendment that we had before this House with respect to freedom of information and protection of privacy. You may remember that the government – and this hon. Premier was a minister of that government – brought in time allocation, or closure, twice on the debate on Bill 20. I was the lead critic on that bill as the shadow minister for government services back then. The Premier voted twice to bring in time allocation. When questioned by the media, because he by then had declared his candidacy for the Premier's job, he indicated that while he's not hearing a lot of concern from his constituents, this would change.

I argued in Hansard, in this House, that basically the longer that debate continued, the more people became aware of it, the more people would actually start phoning and e-mailing their MLAs, saying: "Why are we making things more secretive? Why are we hiding things from the public, ministerial briefing notes, findings by the Internal Audit Committee, and so on and so forth?" The hon. Premier then indicated that while he's not receiving a lot of those concerns, he anticipated that this might change. Then he also indicated that if this was in fact the case, then whoever becomes leader of this province might actually end up having to deal with this issue.

I'm quoting from an article here which was published on May 17, shortly after the debate on Bill 20 ended. The quote goes: "At the end of the day with new leadership if there's a problem, this will be changed. If it does restrict openness and transparency in some way, then so be it. I'm sure no matter who is elected as leader will find a need to change this legislation." The question now is: is there a need to change this legislation to bring in more openness and transparency?

Another question, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Premier. Again, back in 2006 there was an Official Opposition motion, Motion 502, to end government patronage. The motion was defeated, unfortunately, in this House, and there was a division called. The hon. Premier voted against Motion 502 to end patronage, and along with him voted people who are now on the front bench, people like the hon. Minister of Recreation, Parks, and Culture, Minister of Energy, the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports, Finance, Infrastructure and Transportation, President of the Treasury Board, and the Minister of Justice.

I realize that there is a task force now studying all the appointments to boards and agencies and commissions, but I'm seeking a commitment from the hon. Premier to work with this House to end patronage or at least severely restrain it or restrict it. We should have those appointments and those people put on those boards and commissions based on merit and based on their expertise and their excellence.

I have a few more questions, but I'll take my seat and allow the Premier to respond, and then I'll rise again. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to introduce to you and to other members here in the House this afternoon a former colleague, former MLA from Stony Plain Stan Woloshyn. Stan was elected, I believe, in 1989 and served Albertans not only in his hometown but also throughout the province in many facets with the government. I remember him most as being a very big whip, but he was kind and gentle. Anyway, let's give a warm welcome to Stan Woloshyn.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. I knew that sooner or later, after answering all of the questions in terms of the budget, it would start moving away from, of course, the estimates and start going more political. But isn't it funny how these guys change their opinion? Like, remember, a couple years ago: oh, we just don't sit enough days here. They never talk about the hours we sat. Clearly, compared to any jurisdiction in Canada, we sat more hours. Don't talk about hours; just talk about days. Now we sit days; they want hours. Well, make up your mind.

Mr. Elsalhy: We want both.

Mr. Stelmach: Oh, you want both. Well, we'll have a few night sittings. We'll keep you happy if you want the hours. Geez, it's just this way, you know, that way. You can slip through a knot and still come out straight.

Obviously, on Bill 20 he didn't do a very good job as a critic. But I can assure you that in terms of transparency and those other areas, we're moving very quickly on improving government transparency. We're going to be building on what we've accomplished so far, and we're going to do more.

Now, on two-way communications. When we talk about that it's one way, you know, that's not correct. I was trying to keep abreast of the authorities. The fourth authority was, I think, the media. I didn't know when the media was elected in this province, but I guess that if you take your direction from the media, then so be it. I'm glad they said it publicly.

Obviously, they can't present good policy evaluation without going to the media. I've heard some of the questions that come up in the House. The media asks one day, and then they come up in the House the next day. I could tell you more and more stories about that, but we're not going to drill down. I'm going to try and stay in Premierland with this group.

Two-way communications. I disagree; it's not one way. We very much value Albertans' opinions and, of course, their ideas, and I do listen. It's one of the reasons, you know, that this government has been successful and continues to be successful. We flow information to Albertans, but we also hear from them as well. One way is through Alberta Connects. It's via the Internet, their phone. Albertans can ask questions. They can also submit to us their ideas. I get e-mails all the time, and so do my colleagues. We respond to them. In fact, in our office we respond to the e-mails that come, and you know how many e-mails you can get in a day. That's one of the reasons why our correspondence branch is busy. We want to get back to them, whether it's a letter or an e-mail. We do some public opinion research.

Then on public consultations. You know, we're holding a number of public consultations. They just said that they need the public consultations. That's what they support. Yet in the House the other day, or maybe a couple of days, we were criticized by the opposition for having these public consultations. So, you know, obviously you can't satisfy everyone. Our job here is to satisfy Albertans, and no matter what we do here as a government, we will be criticized because that's your job. I go to bed every night realizing that that's your job. That's part of democracy, and democracy is very strong in the province of Alberta.

With respect to media availability we do two media scrums a week in the media room here, but many others are in Calgary. We had two media scrums not only at the opening of seniors' week, but we had one following the presentation I made earlier that morning. So there were two times that the media approached me in a single day plus when we got back here to Edmonton. I do one-on-one interviews. Many times various media representatives will approach me one-on-one and say: can I do an interview on a specific topic?

Some of those interviews now are spilling out in the various papers and articles. Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, as you know, they may do a media interview at the beginning of the month, but it may not be in a paper or a magazine until the end of that month or maybe even two months later. But we're certainly doing my part and our part as government.

Everywhere I go, you know, media follows. We appeared in Tofield early Saturday morning to support their rodeo and the breakfast, had media there. I was interviewed. There was an article in the Journal. From there I went to St. Michael. All the churches in the county of Lamont opened up their doors. It was an event just for part of their tourism plans. The media was there. I went to the final review of Air Cadet Squadron 341 in Mundare. The media was there.

The only time the media wasn't present was at a private event on Saturday. I went to a wedding, and some found it a little different. You know, before you can go to the washroom, security walks in first and checks, and then you can walk in. I mean, life has changed, but so be it. You have to realize that you will have media everywhere. I certainly have been always open and talk to them. You know, difference of opinion, but so be it.

Public opinion research. We do conduct public opinion research, of course, especially in our Report to Albertans, our annual report. We do that. All governments – provincial, federal – do that. We use this research to get unfiltered feedback from the public. The research helps provide valuable information on the views and opinions of Albertans. Overall research shows that Albertans are very happy and that they are happy with this government. We're continuing to build the policies based on that research. Will we be doing more? We probably will because there are new ideas that have come forward from this government, and we're going to ask Albertans for their opinions.

Just getting back to the public consultations, one of the key principles this government operates by is, of course, working with Albertans. A number of task forces have been set up and are gathering input from Albertans on everything from safe communities to the royalty regime. Safe communities are very important: huge participation. The royalty review has garnered a lot of attention, the land use framework as well. The public consultation on the environment has been very successful. We've had people in all parts of the province contribute. This information that comes forward is very valuable and will be inputted into the kind of policies that we'll put forward. I just think that we're doing well on the public consultation side and will continue, irrespective of the kind of, perhaps, criticism that we may receive from some members of the opposition, saying that it's too much consultation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and participate in the estimate on Executive Council, the Premier's office. I have a few questions, Mr. Premier. I'll start with the electoral reforms. During election 2004 I found out that there were some irregularities in the special ballots. I complained to the Ethics Commissioner, and it took about six months. After the investigation he said that I should have complained, I think, within 90 days or something. My point is, you know, I tried to. First, I talked to the Ethics Commissioner right away and the election commissioner, as well, but I didn't get any reply. Then I phoned him. Then he started the investigation. It took some time. An investigation was done, but still there was no action. Finally, I received a letter from the election officer: maybe the next time we will improve the election system.

I have seen the electoral systems in Europe, India, Pakistan, and some other countries which are not democratic countries. We have a better system here. But I was surprised. How come we don't do some, you know, thorough work on this system? Anybody can still go to the polling station and vote on behalf of somebody who's not even in this country. This is what happened during my election time. In one of the ridings in Edmonton the difference was only three votes, and that was after . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but the time allocated for the Liberal opposition has elapsed, and I will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The Premier can perhaps respond in writing to the questions that were asked.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's, indeed, an honour to be here opposite the Premier in his first set of estimates. I want to start off by saying that the Premier said he was at a wedding. I, hopefully, outdid him. I was at a wedding that I officiated on Saturday. I didn't have any problems with the washrooms, though, Mr. Premier.

In the limited time that I have in the give-and-take, I'm not going to worry about every budget item. I do want to talk specific in one area, a broad policy thrust. First of all, as the House leader of the New Democrats I was involved in some of the negotiations. I congratulate the Premier. I think this has been a very important first step, the changes that we've made. We'll see how they work down the way. But it would not have been made unless the Premier was behind changes. I know enough that if the Premier of a province doesn't want to do something, it's not going to happen. It's that simple. So I do congratulate the Premier for moving us along somewhat in democratic renewal and openness and transparency. I would say that we will have to see how these go.

I mean, I think it's pretty clear that the policy field committees, at least three of them, will have to meet sometime because they have to report back, in my understanding, in the first week of the session. So they are going to have to meet here in the summer sometime to be able to do that. You know, they're a work-in-progress. We'll see how they go.

I also want to congratulate the Premier – and we'll see how it goes in the policy field committees – about bills 1 and 2. I was on that committee. We've been pushing for a lobbyist registry. In fairness, the committee advocated it, and, you know, on the conflict of interest, an increase to what we thought was reasonable. I hope the policy field committees will look at what I consider some loopholes. We'll see where that goes, and we'll know in the fall. I'm going to be optimistic that they will come out even better bills as we go along.

I want to continue, Mr. Chairman, with the thrust towards more openness and transparency. I believe I heard the Premier correctly when he said that we'd be looking at some more reforms as we went along. I think I heard him saying that in terms of discussion. I want to have a discussion here today about electoral reform. I know that the Premier has already talked about looking at some reforms in terms of leadership races in the future, and I think that's good and proper, and we'll see where that goes.

I want to say that I think we can begin to catch up to some other provinces in terms of electoral reform. You know, I wouldn't be the last one in the world to say that the Progressive Conservative Party has been very successful over the years and has governed, and that's certainly their right. The people put them there, Mr. Chairman, over these number of years, and we accept that. But I think it must be troublesome to all of us that in the 2004 election the voter turnout dipped from 53 per cent to 45 per cent of eligible voters. I suggest that that should be very concerning for all of us, regardless of whether we're in opposition or whether we're in government. Added to that, I think we're in the right direction by the reforms that we're trying to do in the Legislature and the lobbyists registry and these sorts of things because there's a great deal of cynicism out there, and again nobody wins with that cynicism. I think we even have to move beyond, certainly in electoral reform.

I might point out to the Premier – and I'm sure he's well aware – that other provinces are moving on in looking at reforms of the electoral system. There are five that I'm aware of. First of all is British Columbia. As the Premier is aware, they set up a citizens' assembly that went around the province. They had a vote on it. They didn't like that particular model, but they're coming back with a different model.

In New Brunswick in December 2003 a Commission on Legislative Democracy was established. It's my understanding that they've released a final report. They've now had an election, a new Premier. We'll see where that goes, but clearly some pressure there.

Ontario announced the creation of a Democratic Renewal Secretariat. It's scheduled now to submit its report to the Legislative Assembly. It's my understanding that it's coming forward immediately.

Prince Edward Island has gone through a process. It was defeated, actually. They had a referendum, decided to stay with a similar system, which is fair enough if that's what the people want.

In March Quebec brought out some reform of democratic institutions, and I understand that the citizens' committee rejected the draft bill and recommended a two-ballot system.

The point that I'm making is that they're feeling the same sorts of pressures, I think, with the cynicism and lower turnouts. We even see them talking federally, at least about some reforms. As you know, Prime Minister Harper has come out with fixed election dates, I think, if they last that long, some time in 2009. Highly unlikely, but at least they're moving in that direction.

I don't expect things to happen overnight when a new Premier comes in. I think that's unrealistic. I think we moved through this first stage. My question to the Premier would be: is he actively considering looking at what's happening in other provinces and looking at addressing the pressing issue of electoral reform? Along with that, if we could make those changes and if we had a citizens' coalition start to involve themselves, the bottom line, I think, is that that would encourage greater voter participation, which has to be a worry for all of us. I mean, I think we should have a similar thing as B.C. did, a citizens' coalition to look at different options without deciding: should it be proportional rep, first past the pole, fixed election dates? You know, there are a number of different things that we can do or a mixture or whatever. But if there was a citizens' coalition that went around the province, I think it would create some interest in our electoral system, and hopefully they might recommend some changes so that people would want to participate.

Now, I also understand – and this is the real dilemma, I'm sure, for any government – that the system has worked pretty well for the Progressive Conservative Party. To their credit, that's the system that was there, so it becomes harder to get people to change. It's true of an NDP government, and it's true of a Conservative government when it works well for them. It's not a matter of politics. Things are working well as long as we're the government.

If I may say so to the Premier, we've started with the all-party committees and what we're doing here in the Legislature. A great legacy to leave would be an electoral system that had people excited, that had them involved. Regardless of the political stripe that we hold, I think that would be doing a big service to people. I'm not expecting an announcement here today, but I wonder if the Premier might comment – and I'll come back on it – on what he sees the future here in Alberta as compared to what's happening with other provinces vis-à-vis the citizens' assemblies, all of these sorts of things, if the government and the Premier as the leader would be prepared to take a look at doing something similar here. I'll come back on it after.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Well, I do have to thank the hon. member for his very kind words. I do agree that, you know, collectively, all parties, we brought forward some steps in terms of democratic reform in the Legislature. From what I get when visiting many corners of the province, Albertans are quite happy with the changes.

Electoral reform. Of course, talking first of all with respect to the leadership race, the leadership race for the Progressive Conservative Party was hotly contested. We weren't in the position – perhaps in some parties it's like, you know, you look behind you and say: "Do you want this? Do you want this?" No. This was a long leadership campaign, and through that leadership campaign we learned a few things that we can bring forward to this House in terms of legislation, work with the other parties in terms of building the rules and the regulations, however we put that together. I mentioned to the media the other day that it may be something we can discuss and at least have a framework ready for fall and start from some place. At least it's worthwhile to proceed because these questions will keep coming up in such a way as not that there was anything done wrong but always twist and turn and give a different kind of perception that something was done without Albertans knowing about it. So we'll have those rules in place. We'll learn from other jurisdictions that have gone through similar issues.

Voter participation. How do we work with Albertans to increase voter participation? Well, first of all, by treating each other with respect. There are roles for the opposition, obviously, and they're critical roles in a good democratic system. But when you look at how Albertans look at politicians, I believe that in the last poll that was done, we were at the bottom rung of the ladder. The first, of course, were firefighters, nurses, farmers, and then politicians. I feel good because if we, you know, get the average of where a farmer is and a politician, I'm still about 50 per cent, so I'm okay there.

How do we improve our behaviour in the House? How do we improve the way we treat each other as elected officials? There used to be pride. There would be pride in serving the public. It was a responsibility given to you by the power of the vote. It's not only here but in many other jurisdictions that today the voter participation is shrinking. School board representative, the hon. member knows very well, very important, public education in this province. Look at the low voter turnout. If you do not have an election for a municipal councillor at the same time as a school trustee, very few people come out to vote for a school trustee. In fact, if I remember correctly – I stand to be corrected – in Fort Saskatchewan in the by-election 15,000 residents, so 4,500 could vote or maybe 6,000; I'm not quite sure. Eighty-eight people. Eighty-eight people.

How can we improve that? That's something that we could do collectively. But if we constantly nibble at each other's ankles on a day-to-day basis and make allegations and hope to destroy a person's integrity and not debate policy, that doesn't do any of us good.

Albertans may be looking at it and saying: you know, what's the use if that's the only thing that political parties concentrate on?

Well, I can tell you that we're not going to concentrate on that. We're going to concentrate on the future. We're going to look at how, during this period of boom, which is unprecedented – there's no library that you can go to and pull a book off the shelf and read about somebody else's experiences. This is groundbreaking. It's groundbreaking in Canada. It's groundbreaking for many jurisdictions around the world. Yes, there are some countries like China that have the same rate of growth, but they do not have a democratic system. That makes a big difference in terms of how people are treated, how decisions are made. We've got to focus on managing growth. Decision-making, of course, at this time if we start looking at the kind of reforms that maybe the hon. member alluded to: we can certainly talk about them, but right now we need stability in the decision-making process.

I believe the hon. member talked about proportional representation. Well, in the little bit of review I did – and it's just very preliminary because I know that this topic is going to come up from time to time – voter turnout necessarily doesn't improve because of proportional representation. But it does kind of create an impression that kind of brings out the extremes of the political spectrum, and they do have greater support and influence than the parties that have, you know, the larger representation in the Legislature or in Parliament. It may lead to further division rather than uniting around some very important goals.

Speaking to other provinces over the last few months, the one meeting we had in Toronto with the Premiers, many shared their experiences, the kind of consultation that they've had. It has really been polarized, but that doesn't mean that we can't look at what information they've got so far from their people and use that in our decision-making.

The other is, as I said before, in terms of fixed election dates: if our party, the Progressive Conservative Party, was to put it on the table and discuss it at a policy convention, I'm certainly open to it. If somebody in another party goes for that, fine. I don't want to mention names, but the government member that I talked to that was in opposition before but now is in power is really scratching and saying: oh, geez, why did we push for fixed election dates, because now they have a fixed election date? Here it wouldn't trouble me, but it is something that we have to move forward collectively, talk to Albertans, and bring the information forward to the House.

Voter participation is important. It has dropped, and it continues to diminish. That's something that we can collectively talk about in this House and bring about more respect in the Legislature for its members and do a better job. That in itself will get more people out there to vote.

I don't think there was a question on any of the specific budget items but just in reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. There's no doubt. I mean, politics should never be personal. It's about policy; there's no doubt about that. I think we all should remember that the best we can. But within that, there's a debate. In this country, at least, we can do it across the way here rather than, if we want to change the government, having to go out and get the guns and everything else as in most of the world. Democracy is messy; it's no doubt. I think it was Winston Churchill who said that it's the worst possible system that you can devise until you look at every other one. I think that's where we're at.

I don't disagree, you know, with the tone and the rest of it. Mind you, the school board probably has the lowest participation. When I was a school board trustee, people tended to know who I was, but they didn't know what I did because of just the lack of knowledge. The rates of return at the civic level, where we don't have as much partisan politics, are worse, far worse than federally and provincially, as the Premier is well aware, in terms of the turnout.

I do say that the democratic system has to be looked at from time to time. Can we make it better? I agree with the Premier: when you're in power, that's why it's difficult to get changes because, obviously, the system works well for you because you're in power. But that shouldn't ultimately be the sole criterion of why the system is working properly. The Premier has acknowledged that we do have a concern with the participation rate, with the cynicism, and these sorts of things that are going on.

Proportional rep: is it the way to go or not? Prince Edward Island decided not after going through a commission. They had a by-election. I tend to think that it's better to have those extremes that the Premier talked about if you get a certain level, participate in the Legislature rather than outside. I think that's probably healthier over the long run. That may be a difference of opinion, but at least you see your vote counting. Now, it has led to a cynicism of strategic voting often, you know: I don't like either one of you, but I'm going to hold my nose and vote for one party because I don't like the other one worse. It's the least of the alternatives, as we have in the United States.

I would remind the Premier that in the so-called democracies, the lowest participation rates – I'm not talking provincially; I'm talking federally now – are in the United States, the worst. Canada has the second worst, and the United Kingdom has the third worst participation rates. They don't have proportional rep.

I think we should back up from there. That's the point I was trying to make, to see if the Premier would be interested in it rather than prejudging what the citizens may say. They may definitely go out there and say: "Well, we've taken a look at it. We believe that the first past the post that we have is the best system." Great. Or they may have two or three alternatives. I guess that's what I'm saying. Rather than prejudging even fixed election dates and the other things that people are talking about, I think it would be a very encouraging step, and I think it would go some way to even dispelling some of the cynicism that people have if there was an actual citizens' assembly or coalition or whatever we want to call it that spent a little bit of time as they are doing in other provinces. They did it in P.E.I. and rejected certain things. But it would create that interest.

I guess that's all I'm suggesting, Mr. Chairman: not prejudging proportional rep or fixed election dates. It's probably too far down the way. We should allow a citizens' coalition. If we really believe in democracy and openness and transparency, as we've started to do with the all-party committees and the other things we're working on, it seems to me that this is a logical next step along the way. Again, I'm not foolish enough or naive enough to think: "Oh, what a great idea. The Premier is going to get up and say, yeah, there's going to be a citizens' assembly announced here." I'm just trying to see if there's some interest in pursuing it. Without laying out what they do, allow them as a policy field committee here, but a citizens' committee, to take a look at this and report back over a period of time, be it a year or whatever, to look at the low participation rates, to look at maybe differences that there could be in our electoral system, and maybe lay out some ideas. That's all I'm suggesting to the Premier.

You know, this idea, too, I think, of the instant sort of things that happen has led to some of the cynicism. I've served in public life for longer than I probably should, but here I am anyhow, Mr. Chairman. I say to people that I think there's some responsibility on the public, too, to not just take the flippant answer that all people are crooks or that they're all this or that. Whatever one's political philosophy, most people run for parties because they want to do public service. I've said to people many times, you know, that politicians are only as good or as bad as the people that elect them, because they're just people. There has to be some move, too, by the public to involve themselves more.

I think if we could do something like a citizens' assembly, it could be a basis for at least taking a look at it, looking at the participation rates, looking at the cynicism. I think it couldn't hurt. I don't think we should prejudge where they would go, whether it be proportional rep or the other things. They may well come back and say, "Hey, this works well the way it is with a little tinkering here and there," but I think the process would be as important as the end. That's why I'm asking the Premier if he might be amenable sometime in the near future to looking at a citizens' assembly.

Mr. Stelmach: One of the challenges of being a Premier is listening very carefully to the questions and the way they're structured. In my response earlier, just talking about what other elected officials had mentioned, had said in the past with some of the electoral reforms – and you're right; there were these discussions in other provinces across Canada – my comments were not in prejudgment of anything. It's simply what I've heard from other Canadians – other provincial leaders, provincial elected officials – in terms of the kinds of discussions they've had.

You know, no matter what the system is, we've had good wisdom in the electorate in this country and in this province. It's without a doubt the best country and province to live in in the world. From time to time we might have some disagreements, but the system has worked well.

With respect to the comment made that perhaps he has served in public life too long, maybe the hon. member will be able to tell us if he's planning on retiring.

Mr. Martin: Well, that's a good way around the question anyhow. The answer is no.

Again, you know, we don't have a great deal of time, but as I said, I'm aware that I'm planting in here, hopefully, a seed that the government and the Premier will take a look at the citizens' coalition. I think it is a serious matter that none of us are going to win down the way if things keep going the way they are with the public. I mean, in politics there are going to be people that agree and disagree. That's the nature of democracy, right? You know, some people are going to be mad some of the time and others mad at the opposition, and that's democracy. As I say, it's messy.

I really worry, Mr. Premier, about some of the younger people not participating in the system. Some of them are even activists. They think what we do here is irrelevant and that they have to go out on the streets to have a say, and I think that's dangerous, too. I'm not saying that people shouldn't participate and rally and demonstrate. I'm not saying that. But if they think that's the end in itself – and that is true of some very bright, active young people – I think we're facing a problem. I guess I would just leave it at that, Mr. Chairman, and say that I really hope that the Premier would down the way consider setting up some form of citizens' participation to look at our democratic system.

I'm not sure how much time I have; I don't think much. I'm not going to spend a lot of time on the PAB. I guess the only thing I would say is that part of the problem – and it's a difficult one – is what is government information and what could be seen as being partisan. Often that's in the eye of the beholder, of course, so the question I might ask about the PAB is: what mechanism is there to oversee and control the use and to determine what is partisan?

In our constituency offices, as the Premier is well aware, there are certain rules that we have to follow in terms of what is partisan and what is not partisan, what we can do with our communications budget. I'm wondering if there is something similar through the PAB that sort of monitors what might be seen as too partisan – therefore, they would pull it off – and what is government information, similar to what we have at the constituency office.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, the time for this has elapsed, and now it's time for any members. I have an extensive list, and I will read that off: Calgary-Lougheed, Edmonton-Rutherford, Airdrie-Chestermere, Edmonton-Ellerslie, Calgary-Foothills, and Edmonton-Manning. There are more speakers than the allotted time. If you're brief, we'll probably get them all in. We'll start with Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. A big day, Premier. Congratulations to you.

We're so fortunate – and you know this very well – to have many, many hundreds of boards and agencies and commissions doing great work right across the province. My questions for the Premier are on board governance review, upcoming here. Two questions. What can you tell us about the three individuals that have been appointed? And can you shed a little light on whether they will review and make recommendations on the ongoing training for board members? We're living in such an interesting time, where there are all kinds of possibilities but all kinds of responsibilities, and we want to get our people as prepared as we can. So the two questions: what can you tell us about the individuals? And what do you expect when it comes to recommendations for ongoing training?

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, and thank you to Calgary-Lougheed. The questions raised are with respect to the board governance review secretariat. As I mentioned earlier, the numerous boards and agencies do allocate about 50 per cent of government expenditure on various programs, so it's important to have not only good policies in place but good people on the boards of the agencies and commissions to make the big decisions because they are multibillion dollar decisions.

Now, the process is written/verbal consultation coming to the members. The members are: Linda Hohol, who was the president of TSX Venture Exchange in Calgary; Neil McCrank, the chair, who has spent many years not only as a deputy but was the AEUB chair, years of experience; and Allan Tupper, from UBC, someone that actually was my professor at one time. He did spend some time here at the University of Alberta. I think he was the one that wrote on the Fulton-Favreau formula – remember? – on how to amend the Canadian constitution. I memorized it, but I forgot what it was.

The board will continue the task force and consultations. They'll bring recommendations to us by September 2007, and then we'll work through implementing those recommendations so that we also look at the people that we appoint and the interview process, the open transparency, and also look at the background of people, the kinds of skill sets they bring to the appointments and, again, how to do it in an open and transparent manner.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much. I will be brief because I know that you have a lot of questioners. Mr. Premier, in 2005 a three-member panel made up of government MLAs and chaired by the current Education minister reviewed the operation of the Public Affairs Bureau, and its findings were never released. I'm wondering if in the interest of openness and accountability and transparency you would commit to releasing the findings of that panel.

Mr. Stelmach: There was a report in terms of the PAB. I don't know if it was an external review. All I know is that it was reviewed internally, and there was a discussion that was led by an MLA who is now the Education minister. It was an internal review, for internal purposes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Premier, for this opportunity. I wanted to talk to you a little bit about the managing growth side of your mandate. The issue in my area is high growth, lots of it. For example, in the city of Airdrie we have an annual growth rate of 10 per cent, and we're on about year 5 or 6 of that kind of a growth rate. In the Chestermere-Langdon areas we're dealing with up to 20 per cent – it's between 18 and 20 per cent in both communities – and it's been like that for the last five years. So the issues in my constituency, for example, are based on this huge growth rate, whether or not we can build schools fast enough, supply any type of health care, deal with high traffic-density issues, the underpass/overpass situation at the south end of Airdrie, where if you happen to be driving out of Calgary on any evening during about a two-hour block when it's rush hour, you would discover that there's traffic lined up on highway 2 trying to exit for sometimes up to three or four kilometres.

Mr. Goudreau: Go in the ditches.

Ms Haley: Yeah, go in the ditches. Thank you, Mr. Minister.

The truth is that it's supposed to be a freeway system on highway 2, and this is clearly not a freeway when you run into that kind of traffic volume or the problem with getting people off the road. I raise this not to try and lobby – although, I could do that – but, rather, to ask this kind of a question in this framework, Mr. Premier. When you're looking at managing growth – we all know that a lot of this growth has captured everybody's attention – is there a role through your Executive Council leadership on setting up, perhaps inside municipal affairs, for example, a high-growth commission or committee? I don't know what the proper terminology is, but a focus of that department that would anticipate some of the growth issues. I believe there are 28 communities in Alberta that are dealing with over 5 per cent annualized growth. For me and for all of them coming back and asking for more schools, please, and “Could you fix my overpass?” and “When are you going to build me a clinic?” you know, is frustrating because it's always like it's a surprise. It isn't a surprise because we've got a track record now that shows that this massive growth is occurring.

So it seems to me that rather than just dealing with a granting basis from a municipal affairs point of view, perhaps there's an opportunity here to set up some expertise inside the department of municipal affairs that could help municipalities in their planning for the kinds of growth that they're dealing with. Maybe there's an opportunity there for your leadership to help us in the Airdrie, Rocky View, Chestermere, Langdon areas on planning for where we are going to get our water. How do we deal with the traffic issues that are evolving and getting worse every day? So that's one spot.

The other spot, of course, is that in my area the whole area is dealing with water issues, whether it's the Kneehill water commission coming down from the current Red Deer River pipeline into Irricana and Beiseker, which it already does, but now we're dealing with water quality issues because there's not enough flow right in that pipeline.

These are not in your portfolio, Mr. Premier. I recognize that. But these are real issues that we're dealing with in some of these higher growth areas. I would love to have your views on how you see government reacting to that kind of growth pressure and maybe a more concerted effort on looking at how we deal with these problems in an anticipatory way rather than sort of a reactionary way.

The other comment would be, I guess, on the Water for Life strategy. Under managing growth do you see the Water for Life strategy taking on a much greater importance in making sure that we have reservoirs set aside that can capture some of the runoff waters that are going through now on some of the high-stream flow advisories? Is there an opportunity here for us to try to even work with irrigation districts or other partners to try to develop a more sustainable water reservoir system that could help us deal with that? I'm sure that by the time summer comes around, in August we'll be having water restrictions for everybody trying to water their lawns or their gardens at that point. So is there part of your managing growth where you're looking at that type of an issue?

I'd just appreciate your input, sir.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Managing growth pressures is one of the five government priorities. This is one area that is very important no matter what we talk about. An issue was raised with respect to roads and water, and we do have so many communities that are facing unbelievable increases in population and are putting pressures on the existing infrastructure.

The first thing, of course, is to move on the review that was done in Fort McMurray because that is something that we have to address immediately. The next step, again, is through Executive Council in terms of reviewing policy, looking at all of the ideas that are coming forward and starting to draft those policies for consideration. One of them is Water for Life, definitely. You know, will we be able to move to water storage? It is critical. It will do a number of good things, of course, not only provide water. It will improve some of the issues tied to flooding in some cases in terms of having water reservoirs and also will improve the quality of water considerably.

With respect to the roads it was visionary on behalf of the government very early, more than 30 years ago, to buy property for the transportation and utility corridor. So we're very fortunate that we have that property purchased, and we're building the ring roads. The question is: where is the next outer ring road for some of these communities? We have to do that planning now. That's looking at the future, and that's why it's imperative that we have the kind of planning with respect to the greater capital area and Calgary and area. What will the city of Calgary look like with two million people? Where will those borders be? Will they incorporate the city of Airdrie? How do you get from Airdrie, then, to downtown Calgary? Given the traffic volumes, at a million, know that if you double that, you won't be able to do it by car unless you want to take the whole day. Again, the transportation systems.

Then we look at something else and, again, not necessarily Calgary and the communities around but the capital area, you know, LRT, public transit. How do we look at: can we do something with waste management together rather than in each municipality? Can we pool the resources, again with water and then planning of roads? There is a lot of attention paid on the upgraders that are coming. Of course, Leduc has a number of advantages of having a container port. Again, improvements to highway 2.

But the population has doubled. In the first part of this year, in the first three months, another 11,000 people migrated to Alberta just from other provinces, not including other countries. Those pressures will continue because there are job opportunities. As more people come to this province, how do we encourage more housing development? Even though we're building many single dwellings and building a considerable number of spaces for seniors, it's low-income, affordable housing, low-income rentals that we have to encourage.

Part of that planning will be to work with the federal government, maybe through tax incentives, and the other is to look at perhaps even some zoning bylaws, that municipalities have to encourage this development. But I'm sure – in fact, I'm positive – with the additional money going into housing, $285 million, into affordable housing, that will spawn some new ideas and new spaces.

If you look at the projections and the type of investment that's coming into the province, if it's going to be $40 billion just on the Industrial Heartland, on the petrochemical side and upgrading side – we look at the number of new people that will be in the province, and that's where planning is critical. This is part of the reason that, you know, with the planning and the policy evaluation we need help to evaluate all the information that's coming forward because, as I said before in the opening remarks, there is no library you can go to and learn from someone else's experience. This is groundbreaking, and it will continue. I know that we're going through a number of policy reviews, but the one most important is that we've got to plan for more people, housing, roads, and water.

If we plan it well, even for recycling of water, we could probably, you know, if things work out, use some communities' lagoon water in the settling ponds for the petrochemical industry. Rather than drawing water from the river, use it from a source that's already there and then just ensure that it has been processed before it finds its way back to the river. There are a whole bunch of possibilities to use the same litre of water many more times.

The Water for Life strategy. The only comment that I can make, though, is that we can do a lot individually, you know: a shorter shower, less heating of water. Different jurisdictions have applied different rules. We're not in as critical a position as some other countries are, but we don't want to get there. If we triple our population, which could possibly happen, then the policies that we implement today will ensure that we have enough water for future generations. Storage is a critical component of that, and it has been in the Water for Life strategy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for giving me the opportunity once again to ask a few questions to the hon. Premier. Mr. Premier, one of your priorities is honest, transparent, accountable government. The Member for Edmonton-McClung mentioned the FOIP bill, Bill 20, which this government passed last year. According to that bill, we can't have ministerial briefing notes for five years and internal audit reports for 15 years. You know, if you don't get all the details of what the government is doing for 15 years, how can we find out some things which are not done according to the rules and regulations? By the way, I'm going to table a bill in which I'm urging this government to reverse this motion, so will you help me to pass that bill, which is maybe coming in this session, maybe in the next session?

My next question is about the big blue book for the general revenue fund. I tried to find a few things from that book, but we don't find the full details about the $30 million or so that the government spent on that. If the government is serious about transparency, how can we improve? How can all the members find out if, you know, the money, the total budget of the general revenue fund is prudently or wisely – I mean, the full details on that. Also, how can the government improve the website on all the lottery funds? On the website it's not clear how the tonnes of money have been awarded. Every time we have to go through the FOIP, it takes lots of time and we don't find lots of details. It's very difficult for the opposition to play the right role in the democratic government. If you still really believe in a democratic, transparent, honest, accountable government, I'm sure you will look into that.

My next question is about the committee and task force recommendations, as somebody else mentioned. I know that the government has spent tonnes of money on wages and time, but if the government is not implementing most of the recommendations made by the task forces and committees, first of all, how much extra burden is that on the taxpayers? If you don't implement those recommendations, why do we have those task forces and committees? I know that it's very important in the democratic process, as you said, but still I want you to assess whether it's worth spending that much money. Now we have 18 ministries instead of 24. Work it out. Because we have so many chairpersons, deputy ministers, is that worth spending that much money? I know that your intention was really good because that's the reason you reduced the number of ministers. The same money you saved in the small ministries, I want to make sure that money is worth while.

Another question is: do you believe the leader should be decisive? When the time came for the affordable home issue, you said that you will talk to the PC caucus and PC membership during your annual general meeting. Do you prefer to take decisions made by the party or decisions made by Albertans? That's my question.

My last question, Mr. Premier, is about political favouritism. How can we improve on that issue? Maybe some members don't agree with me, but I have heard lots of stories about favouritism. They are saying that this party's in power for a long time, 36 years or so. If the MLAs from the government side interfere, if they approach the right department, they get the grants. If the opposition members are involved, they try to, you know – I shouldn't say that they are trying to stop that, but it's hard for them to help those communities. So I just want you to answer, if you can, some questions. I'm sure that your intention is good and that you will try to address those issues in the future.

Thank you.

The Chair: Before I recognize the Premier, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's indeed a great pleasure to rise and introduce someone who would be well known to several members here in the Assembly and perhaps might be a new face to others. She distinguished herself with many years of dedicated service to Albertans. I had the pleasure of being a bureaucrat in the system, as they say, when she was an MLA. It's my pleasure to introduce on behalf of our Premier, who's asked me to make this special introduction, Shirley Cripps, a former MLA from the Drayton Valley area. Welcome and thank you for being here.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you. This gives me an opportunity to answer a question from the previous opportunity the hon. member had to rise, and that is with respect to election irregularities. Obviously, it must have been successful because you're here. What you're asking about is with respect to officers of the Legislature, and that's within the authority of the Legislature and not the Premier's office. Certainly, dealing with irregularities is important so that we do improve the confidence of Albertans in the electoral process.

There was a question with respect to task forces. The purpose of a task force is to provide options. After hearing evidence, ideas, opinions coming from people, the task force collates those ideas into options and may make recommendations to this House. It's really the elected people that are responsible to sort out all those options and recommendations that come forward and then make the decision. Yes, the task forces are important in gathering information. It certainly reduces, you know, the workload for us here while we're in session. They come out, hear the evidence, collate it, bring it here with recommendations, and we then debate them here in the Legislature.

With respect to the website I can speak to the website for the government. The website was redeveloped, and it's working quite well from what I hear. The approval rating is extremely high. I think it's 85 per cent or 86 per cent or something like that. So the government website has been accepted extremely well. A lot of people rely on the website. It was redesigned this year, 2007, after extensive research and looking at websites across Canada. It does focus on government services, which is the purpose of it. It flows the information out in terms of all programs. They like the clean layout, from what the feedback has been. The next step is to have a sort of consistent look to the websites of all ministries so that we, you know, deliver the messages of the government of Alberta.

There was a question with respect to the blue book. Under transparency and openness, of course, we brought about a lot of changes, Mr. Chairman, first of all, making public the manifests on government-owned airplanes and the people that travelled on them. It's now a matter of public record. You don't have to go to the library, don't have to go through FOIP or whatever to receive them. It's there, and I think that has helped a lot. You know, the media has it; the opposition has it. Usually the questions opened up: Well, through documents recently obtained by the opposition. Well, the documents are there.

The other is, of course, making public ministerial expenses, executive assistant expenses. Those are on the web. We just did those, I believe, this week. They are on the web. That's a giant step forward. Again, it will bring down a lot of the costs for the taxpayer because many times the opposition is FOIPing them. Rather than paying for all of that, all we're saying is: "Here. It's available. We're not hiding anything." That, to me, has gone a long way in openness and transparency.

With respect to the blue book, that blue book is an interesting piece of information. I remember after the nomination when I was running for office as a nominated candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, I saw a lot of this blue book in many coffee shops. Remember, Mr. Chairman, in those days we used to have the Crow benefit offset, you know, the fuel rebate program, and all those things. They used to trudge that book around and take it to the coffee shop and say: "Look, there's Stelmach. He's running for the PC government, and look, he got some money from the Crow offset benefit program." We had a lot of hogs. We were feeding them. We qualified for the program. It was a real focus, and they'd say: it's patronage because you're a PC member, you're running for office, and look, you're getting paid by the taxpayer.

But, you know, it was interesting: you flip a little further and pick out other names. They happen to be very good Liberals, and – guess what? – they were in the book because they also received a Crow benefit offset and some, you know, fuel rebates. I remember that there was a 40-some dollar a ton fertilizer rebate. All of those were in the book, so it was very open and transparent, and information worked both ways.

But the opposition just raised a good question. Very secretly, the opposition has billed the Alberta taxpayers for an expense, and that was the expense of running radio ads earlier this year. I'm wondering if that's going to show up in the blue book. Will it be part of the blue book and identified as an expense for that purpose, or will it be in a bigger budget in the blue book, a bigger item?

You know, we have an opportunity to improve the blue book. I'd like to hear today, you know, in terms of openness and transparency, what the amount was that was billed so that all Albertans know. We're talking about perception. We're talking about appearance. We heard a lot of that today earlier from the opposition. Here's a very good opportunity to remove some of that perception and appearance, and give us exactly how much has been billed to the Alberta taxpayer for the radio ads that ran earlier this year.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You caught me off guard. It was indicated to me that I wouldn't have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. Rodney: You do now.

Mr. Webber: I do now. So thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to stand and ask the Premier a couple questions. Mr. Premier, first of all, I just want to say that it's an honour to be able to sit so close to you, behind you every day, and learn from you.

Anyway, I just want to talk a little bit about a report that I got in the mail the other day, a Report to Albertans. It was a report that had a message from you, Mr. Premier, in there, and it also had some details on the budget along with an update on the government's five-priority plan and also information on access to programs and services. It was an excellent, excellent piece of work, I thought, because what it also indicated in here was what Calgarians will be receiving with regard to investment in this year's provincial budget.

Nearly $5.5 billion will be invested in delivering services to Calgarians. I think that it is very important to indicate to my constituents and others in Calgary the amount of money that is invested: $22.6 million will help with policing, crime prevention, and victim services; $684 million in funding for research and postsecondary institutions; $2.2 billion to provide health services through the Calgary health region; and also $1.3 billion for kindergarten to grade 12 education. This was in your report, Mr. Premier, and I thought it was excellent that we share this information with Calgarians.

Included in this document also were more grants: $514 million in grants will be sent to the city of Calgary, including $126 million for affordable housing and other grant programs, $95 million for the 5 cents per litre gas tax, and also $293 million for municipal infrastructure programs. Further, $2.7 billion is being injected into Calgary infrastructure over the next three years. I don't know if this was clearly communicated in the past, but it certainly did with this document. I applaud your staff, Mr. Premier, for getting this out to my constituents and all Calgarians.

One thing that I would like to ask you, Mr. Premier, is that I hope you continue to send out this type of information to Albertans because it is so informative. I hope you do, and if you can indicate to me that you will, that would be wonderful. But also I'd like to know if you can advise us of the cost of this, the cost per household of the production of this document and the distribution of this document.

I'll leave it at that, then. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, and thanks for the support of our staff, the people that work very hard not only, of course, in Executive Council but in all ministries and all different roles and responsibilities throughout the province of Alberta. I've always taken huge pride in the quality of our civil service. They're outstanding. Compared to others, I know that in terms of policy formulation, ideas, bringing forward options in terms of policy, they're simply outstanding. They have served the public of Alberta very well and continue to work at encouraging more people to join the Alberta civil service. Just like in any other public or private sector we have to renew. We have many that will be looking towards retirement soon, so it's another task that we have assigned to ourselves as government to ensure that we interest young people in serving the public of Alberta. It is a responsibility, and it's also one that all those working in the Alberta civil service should do with pride.

With respect to the report, earlier this year we said that we'd do the Report to Albertans on a quarterly basis. It's to get information out on various government programs, information in terms of what's available to a particular, you know, group of Albertans, whether they be seniors, our youth, some of the programs available, let's say, under AADAC or Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, all of the government programs.

This time we have three reports. There'll be one designed to deliver the information to Edmontonians in terms of what's available here, what's going to Edmonton in terms of infrastructure grants and programs available; one for the city of Calgary, which will itemize the investments; and also a general one for all of the province of Alberta. Within the Alberta report there will be, of course, information with regard to infrastructure and programs available but general infrastructure on provincial highways and, of course, improvements to some infrastructure in many of the municipalities.

The cost is $200,000. It's about 16 cents a copy, and that's going out to all Albertans. It's a very effective, very efficient way of getting information out to Albertans, and we'll continue to do that because as in our business plan we're going to do it four times a year.

Thank you for the question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased, indeed very honoured, to be able to rise here today on the very first occasion of our new Premier answering questions from the Assembly on supply. I'm sure that when we reach the year 2027, on the 20th time in a row when you're up facing this Assembly on supply, Mr. Premier, we will be facing a much more vibrant and strong Alberta. I'm sure that we won't be seeing the same Leader of the Official Opposition. Maybe – maybe – he'll be working on his radio program that he's picked up. I do welcome the dedicated, experienced, and qualified public servants with you today. I'm pleased to see the reforms that have allowed them to sit here and advise in this process.

This is supply, Mr. Chair, and Executive Council is one of the most crucial arms of government and in our province of Alberta. The priorities set out by the Premier for our Alberta government are correct and focused to the priorities of our times. Communicating these priorities and, indeed, all of the functions of government is a key responsibility of Executive Council and, in particular, the Public Affairs Bureau.

On page 161, performance measure 2.a of the Executive Council business plan 2007-10 states that public satisfaction with government communications sits at 62 per cent. I really do wonder if that is good enough. The Executive Council annual report 2005-06 states that this figure of public satisfaction with government communications in priority areas has never risen above 65 per cent, but the target in every one of these years has been 75 per cent and has never been met. My question on this is: how does Public Affairs aim to improve its score on this performance measure so it does not fall short again?

Mr. Chairman, I also think that credit should be given where credit is due. The fact that Alberta Connects e-mail questions have had a target response time of 72 hours with the goal to reach 95 per cent in that target in '05-06 and reached 98 per cent, which is a near perfect score, is amazing for government. This is not one that one usually hears about in terms of response time from government and must be commended highly. Mr. Premier, I ask that you pass that along to the Alberta Connects people.

A couple of specific questions to the Premier on board governance review. I've had the question asked of me when we will see the reports come forward in a comprehensive manner on board governance review and if the form of these reports will be consistent and comparable. I've been asked specifically also on one of those: when will we see the report on the Alberta Labour Relations Board, and what consultations have been made or are planned with stakeholder groups to improve the transparency, accountability, and governance of this particular board?

In a wider view of government, which, of course, is the Premier's responsibility, I am concerned that there seems to be a clear push in some quarters, from the Official Opposition really, to create an artificial rural/urban split in Alberta. Now, I often wonder: what is rural and what is urban in our province in this modern day and age? I have trouble thinking that Grande Prairie or Red Deer are rural, but I have heard them described as such.

My riding of Edmonton-Manning is the largest rural riding in the city of Edmonton. Market gardens, seed potato production, and all manner of agricultural pursuits actually form the greatest percentage of the area of my riding. Much of it is, indeed, rural, but it's defined as urban. You know, this is one of the problems we see. Again, agriculturally speaking, Edmonton-Manning, my riding, has a lot of people employed in the equine industry. There is a huge number of people in northeast Edmonton, indeed in all of Edmonton who work in horse racing, rodeo, jumping, training, recreational riding, in all manner of jobs associated with the horse industry. Other agricultural pursuits and support functions for agriculture are crucial for our Edmonton city economy and for local jobs. I'm very surprised that the Official Opposition has had such an attack on the horse industry, on the equine industry. They have in this House laughed at agricultural issues and generally don't seem to understand their importance to our city and the economy of our province as a whole.

I would ask the Premier to comment on how we can communicate to Albertans that there is not really a rural/urban split in our province right now, that in fact we are one province, that we are working to ensure the benefit of all areas, and that agriculture benefits the cities, too, and indeed creates a lot of jobs.

Again I commend the Premier for the many new changes and initiatives he has brought forward. I thank him for being here today, and I look forward to his answers.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To the Member for Edmonton-Manning, thank you for the very kind words with respect to our staff, and I will extend those congratulations to them all.

I'm, of course, no guru when it comes to the business of communications and how you score success or no success or little success or lack of success in communications, but I'm told that a goal of 75 per cent in communications is like 100 per cent because they say that about 25 per cent of the public on average will disapprove of whatever government policy there is. We're at 62 per cent. We want to work towards 75 per cent. I think that we could increase that support with the Report to Albertans because it will be focused, and Albertans then will have that information in their own home in a very, I believe, cost-effective manner.

The hon. member brings up a very important point on this issue about rural/urban. You know, Mr. Chair, there are 3.4 million Albertans. We're competing against economies that are much larger than Alberta's, obviously. We're competing against economies and populations that are 10 times, 20 times, 40 times, 100 times larger than the province of Alberta's, and when we start tearing at the fabric of this province, trying to split, build divisions between urban and rural and north and south and east and west, that's not good. It takes away from the effort and the focus that we need in global competition.

If we can't co-operate locally, how can we compete globally? Here we are within the province. Some are trying to drive these wedges, you know, on a regular basis. Yet as a government we've made great steps in the last five years working with the Liberal government of B.C., a very visionary government led by Gordon Campbell. We're removing a whole bunch of trade barriers. We've moved on the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement. We're going to work further, like with the MOUs that we signed on working together on disaster services. We worked on, of course, wait-time guarantees. How can both provinces work together? Perhaps it might be in the area of oncology. I mean, that is groundbreaking. Nobody has been able to accomplish it before, but here this government, working with the government of B.C., has been able to do it.

I'll give you one example. In one of the first meetings, you know, the two Premiers of the day said: okay; give us some quick ones. Well, one of them, of course, was in transportation. On the highway today we have one vehicle inspection station. You know, it's on the B.C. side – it's towards Golden – but so what? It's an imaginary line as a truck travels. I'm sure that that kilogram is still the same on this side of that imaginary line or on that side. It was jointly constructed, Alberta and B.C. Now it's jointly staffed, and it's saving us millions of dollars in operations. Most importantly, it reduces the cost of shipping our goods and services to the coast. And that's just one example.

Rural/urban. Many Edmontonians, many Calgarians have rural backgrounds. They still remember the communities, and many of them could have been brought up in a rural community not even in Alberta. It could have been in the Maritimes. It could have been in Ontario. It could have been in any other province. It could have been in any other country.

Again, as a government I'm committed together with all our caucus members to make sure that we work as a unit, work with municipalities, work with Albertans so that we don't create these shifts. We don't need division in the province. We need co-operation, whether it's intermunicipal planning, whether it's interjurisdictional, interprovincial. I can tell you that just with intermunicipal, the kind of growth that we see is in the billions of dollars in investment attracted to this province if we can deal with many of the intermunicipal issues. If we don't, we will lose some of that investment because then the investment climate will be unpredictable, and it won't be stable. Clearly, it's in the best interests of all Albertans that we work together. I can assure you that we're going to pursue co-operation, collaboration in all areas and are not going to allow anybody to drive these wedges between and amongst Albertans. I make that promise in the House.

The other is also working together in terms of broadening our tax base because, yes, the rural has so many strengths. If we look at the contribution to our economy from rural Alberta, it's outstanding because it's not only agriculture based, of course, like raw production. It's value-added, and you'll find that some of the companies that work in the oil and gas industry are rural based. They contribute to small communities immensely. That's of great help to Albertans. As we grow, with more population, we know that we'll have to of course deliver more government programs like health and education. That is the balance between our responsibility of ensuring that there are enough people in the province to deliver those programs, that we have the housing for them, that we have the infrastructure and, most importantly, build on the co-operation.

The private sector will continue to invest, create jobs, and that's what really pays for the government programs but also secures the future for our children and their children. It's just the direction we're taking as a government. We'll continue to take that direction no matter how hard some may want to throw us off the rail.

The Chair: Are there others? Seeing none, I'll now invite the officials to leave the Assembly so that the committee can rise and report.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.02(9)(c) the Committee of Supply shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The committee has had under consideration certain resolutions for the Department of Executive Council relating to the 2007-08 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour, I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:25 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, June 7, 2007

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly officers of the Salvation Army in Alberta. Active in this province for well over 100 years the quiet commitment, dedication, and good work among those in need in our society by the Salvation Army is well known. Our six visitors are here to mark significant milestones in their lives.

After serving as divisional leader for Alberta, Yukon, Northwest Territories, and Nunavut for the last few years, Major Robert Ratcliff and Major Shirley Ratcliff will retire next week after 40 years of devoted service. Major Brian Venables and Major Anne Venables have been for 16 years residents of our province, Alberta. They will be moving to Regina in July to start a new ministry to give oversight to the Salvation Army's activities in Saskatchewan. Envoys Andy and Janet Kwak recently celebrated 20 years of service. They are responsible for the Salvation Army's community and family services. Andy has served international disaster relief secondment in Kosovo, Chechnya, Malawi, Ground Zero in New York City, and Mississippi.

The Salvation Army is unique and has served Albertans for over a century without favour or reservation and deserves our recognition.

Mr. Speaker, our guests are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names once again, and I'd ask the Assembly to recognize them as well. Major Robert Ratcliff and Major Shirley Ratcliff, Major Brian Venables and Major Anne Venables, Envoy Andy Kwak and Envoy Janet Kwak. Hon. members, kindly afford them the traditional warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize. There's one additional guest in the gallery as well. I didn't have the name earlier: Karen Diaper. She is with public relations for the Salvation Army. Could you please rise and be recognized as well.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly this year's municipal internship program placements. This award-winning program offers an excellent opportunity for postsecondary students to transition into the workforce while contributing to the sustainability of Alberta communities.

Mr. Speaker, each year my ministry places interns in municipalities across the province to help address the succession planning and training of future managers to contribute to operating efficient local governments. I am confident after meeting this fine group over the lunch hour that Alberta municipalities will be well served by this enthusiastic group which is eager to learn and assist in local governments.

Mr. Speaker, there are 25 interns that come from Alberta and other provinces across Canada – and I won't name them all – plus ministry officials in attendance. I would ask them to please stand and receive the official warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a very special constituent of mine. Jennifer Baker recently came home with a gold medal in senior girls singles five-pin bowling and is now the 2007 national champion. Jennifer not only can say that she's a national champion; she can also say that she is a back-to-back national champion, having taken home the junior girls singles gold medal in 2006. Jennifer is joined by her mother, Kelly Cornelius, and coach, Ernie McLellan, and his wife, Diane McLellan. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure and my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very important people. Seated in the members' gallery and visiting from Willowdale, Ontario, is my assistant's mother, Mrs. Molly Georgina Oliver. With her is her son-in-law Guy Gosselin. We know how important family is to all of us to encourage us and support us in our daily needs. That's why these are two very important people, and they're here to see us today. I would like to ask the entire Assembly to give them the warm welcome of the Assembly. If Molly and Guy could please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour and pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. James Sexsmith, accompanied by my constituency assistant, Darlene Treder. Jim is a veteran of World War II, and he's active in federal and provincial politics. He advocates for the underprivileged and low-income people. He is here today again to voice his concern on the issue of rent relief. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the following visitors who are here concerned about high rents. They have actually sought help from the government and have been turned away and have got no results for their own lives. I would like to introduce Cora Davis, Shayne Tymkow, Danielle Boudreau, Lena Siben, Nicole Kuiken, Bernadette Thomas, Mary Ladouceur, and Norma Baker. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of wonderful people who represent the diversity of the population of Mill Woods and who are concerned about housing issues for people wanting to rent or buy. I would ask that these people please signal their presence at the end: Pastor intern Reece Retzlaff from First Mennonite Church; Pastor Donita Wiebe-Neufeld, First Mennonite Church; Pastor Mike Magnus, South Edmonton Alliance Church; Pastor Damien Lee, South Edmonton Alliance Church; Pastor Dale Irving, Mill Woods United Church; Father Martin Carroll, St. Teresa Catholic Church; Pastor Larry Lindoff, Evangel Pentecostal Assembly; Pastor Wayne McNeilly, Evangel Pentecostal Assembly; Reverend James Hendericksen, St. Paul's Lutheran; Reverend Kathy Bowman, St. Patrick's Anglican Church; Pastor Debbie Kunst, Evangel Assembly; and Pastor Adam Andritz, Evangel Assembly.

In addition, I have individuals here today from the Canadian Paraplegic Association who are also here to express concerns about housing issues for the disabled, and I'd like to welcome Edgar and Sheena.

Would you all indicate your presence, and would you please give them the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Rhonda Starkel, a constituent from St. Albert who is anxiously awaiting to hear from the Department of Municipal Affairs and Housing regarding housing concerns. She is a single mother with a child, and it's a difficult time to handle rent increases. I'm hoping the minister or someone in his office will call her. I wish to have her stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three UFCW members from the Palace Casino strike, which is now in its 272nd day due to this government's refusal to pass first contract legislation. Their names are Roxanne Draudson, Sheri Panas, and Susie Krajancic. Roxanne is a poker dealer and has been in the gaming industry since 1998. She is working towards a bachelor of science degree to work on medical research. Sheri has been a server at the casino for five years and has recently completed her studies in human resources. Susie has worked for seven years at the Palace Casino and works as an acting pit boss and dealer. She's married with two boys and enjoys taking her kids to soccer and ball hockey. I would ask them now to all please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure and an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the senior policy analyst of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Janine Halbesma. She is here today in the public gallery to witness and support first reading of Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act. In layman's terms that could be called the red tape reduction act. Janine, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

90th Anniversary of the Election of the First Female MLAs

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today feeling very privileged to speak to this Assembly as an elected official, as a woman, and as a representative on behalf of our government on the status of women.

In the early 20th century you picture a time when women wore bonnets and long dresses, travelling in horse-drawn buggies and down dusty roads. This may have seemed like an easy life, but in actuality it wasn't. I remember my grandmother Rose Laing, who in 1923 wrote of her experience to the Calgary Daily Herald of travelling alone, the first woman ever known to do so as a white Caucasian, with her horses through the Rocky Mountains and Radium Valley, through Sinclair Canyon to Fort Steele, and ultimately to Westbank, B.C., encountering a bear, lightning storms, mosquitoes, and no lodging along the way.

That pioneer spirit was evident in many women in those early days in our province. Two such women who encompass this spirit were Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams. These women were political pioneers who were the first women to be elected to a provincial Legislature in Canada, on June 7, 1917.

Louise McKinney's interests included social services, immigrant work, and the negative effects of alcohol and smoking. She was interested in legislation to aid people with disabilities, and her major initiative was the improvement of the legal status of widows and separated wives. During the June 1917 election Louise McKinney was chosen as the country's and British Empire's first female representative.

Roberta MacAdams, proudly recognized this week, became the first woman to introduce and successfully move a piece of legislation, the Act to Incorporate the Great War Next-of-Kin Association. In 1916 she was enlisted in the Canadian army medical corps, and during that time two pieces of legislation were passed in Alberta. The Alberta equal suffrage act extended the vote to the women of Alberta, and the Alberta Military Representation Act separated Alberta soldiers and military nurses overseas into a separate constituency. Roberta MacAdams was elected overseas by the Alberta soldiers and, as we've learned, by the nurses as a representative at large for Alberta for the soldiers. She was appointed to the Alberta Soldier Settlement Board with responsibility for the needs of those women, and her work in the Legislature led to the establishment of a teacher training school in Edmonton.

Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams undoubtedly left behind a political, educational, social, and military legacy that Canadians continue to benefit from today. Mr. Speaker, in this House all women elected represent their constituency and the modern-day Roberta MacAdams and Louise McKinney.

I would like to select a few others that are beyond this Legislature who have either been elected or provoked important political action: women like Colleen Klein, Shirley McClellan, Anne McLellan, Jan Reimer, and our own Premier's wife, Marie Stelmach. As women they are responsible to society and generate much in the way of interest and provide leadership for all Alberta women and for future generations. I am proud and honoured today to recognize all as we celebrate the 90th anniversary of the first election of women in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to commemorate the 90th anniversary of women voting in an Alberta election for the first time. While Alberta was one of the first provinces to grant women the right to vote in 1916, it was 90 years ago today that Alberta women actually voted in a provincial election. Most notably, Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams were the first two women elected to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and, indeed, any Legislative Assembly in the British Empire.

Without the determination of this province and key women in the suffrage movement young women today would not have the opportunity to legally vote and participate in politics. As you can see in this House, Mr. Speaker, although this province took the lead 90 years ago to ensure the democratic equality of women, participation in politics is still unequal.

I am passionate about getting more women elected, and I mean to every party. So I went and talked to some younger women when I knew that I'd be making this statement. They told me that while they consider themselves political, they will not participate in electoral politics by running in a future election. It is not that they do not have the desire to participate, nor do they find themselves unqualified to do so. In fact, a couple of years ago one young woman envisioned herself as the Premier of the province and then Prime Minister.

For these young women electoral politics is less attractive and less feasible than when pioneer suffragettes such as Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams fought for women's franchise, access to the Legislature, and access to equality. These women explained that the nomination and campaign process exposes the economic disparity of women. To become a viable candidate and get elected, women must raise thousands of dollars while executing their primary care duties. Women are still the primary caregivers for their children and aging parents; thus, the lack of adequate child care, long hours, and extensive travel deter these women from participating.

Legislatures are still described as old boys' clubs, and this affects women's interest in participating in politics. For these young women they see women who are elected being sexualized in the media and channelled into traditional women's areas such as the portfolio of Children's Services rather than Infrastructure and Transportation. Moreover, these young women believe that they are restricted by an electoral glass ceiling in which advancement is narrow.

While they've made it clear that they do not discount the Legislature's ability to effect change, this younger generation requires that such social and economic barriers be redressed. Until the government and the Legislature initiate on-site child care, ceilings on expenditures for nomination and election campaign financing, and a demonstrated political will for women being elected, these young women will continue to be underrepresented in this government and this Legislature. But in following the example given to us by Roberta MacAdams and Louise McKinney, I know that we can prove them wrong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: We'll need unanimous consent to recognize a representative from the third party.

1:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems odd now that until 90 years ago, within the reach of living memory and history, women were struggling to be recognized not as equals in every way but simply as persons.

The Persons Case of 1927 and its subsequent conclusion in 1929 find their roots with Emily Murphy and the Alberta Supreme Court ruling in 1917 that declared that women, too, were persons in matters of rights and privileges. Without this challenge, that which we take for granted now, our inclusionary civil society and notions of rights and responsibilities for all, might have looked completely different. It was action, not hollow words, that dislodged the entrenched norms of a patriarchal society disenfranchising over 50 per cent of the population on the basis of gender. As the Lord Chancellor of the Privy Council in 1929 stated: Yes, women are persons, and "the exclusion of women from all public offices is a relic of days more barbarous than ours."

Mr. Speaker, here is a sample of a few more examples of relics from days more barbarous than ours. In a Legislature of 83 members there are only 11 female MLAs sitting here today. There still exist substantial wage differentials between men and women in the workplace. The famous glass ceiling, that ensures that the numbers of women in top corporate positions remain a small minority, still is in place. And let's not forget that Alberta has one of the highest rates of domestic violence in Canada even today.

Ninety years ago have passed since this journey began, and we have come a long way. However, Mr. Speaker, clearly we have miles to go. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Federation of Canadian Municipalities Conference

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Calgary hosted the Federation of Canadian Municipalities National Conference. Close to 5,000 attendees and their spouses enjoyed our hospitality. I attended a number of receptions where I met some municipality leaders from across Canada. My office also set up a booth at the night market in the Olympic Plaza in front of city hall. My staff and myself distributed Alberta government information from 4 to 10 p.m.

I want to thank Sandy Wilson, Sandy Matthews, and Jesse Kline for doing a great job at our booth. We met many local people as well as visitors and conference attendees. All those from outside Alberta that I met were so impressed with Alberta and the city of Calgary. They wondered why we talk negatively about our problems. They all wished to have our problems instead of theirs.

Alberta has the highest per capita public spending in health care, education, social support, infrastructure, municipal grants, and the list goes on. One delegate said to me: I just don't understand why there are people complaining about not having enough when others outside Alberta are starving. Realizing that I am a government MLA, another delegate said to me: "You guys have been doing very well. Your government policies are leading. I wish our government could do the same."

Indeed, my father once told me: when we live at the foot of the mountain, we don't realize how high the mountain is. Listening to the community leaders from outside of Alberta, I feel fortunate that we live in Alberta. Our children do not have to go make a living somewhere else. I also appreciate the freedom that if I don't like the way Alberta is going, I can always move to where I like it better. Paraphrasing an ancient Vietnamese saying, "Good land, birds nest," my Caofucius saying is: good government, people come. Last year in Calgary alone 36,000 people added to its million.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Lac La Biche Watershed Steering Committee

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past six years the Canadian environment awards have recognized exceptional individuals and groups who are working to develop sustainable strategies to protect Canada's biodiversity. Earlier this week the Lakeland county's Lac La Biche Watershed Steering Committee was presented with the silver environmental health award for what Canadian Geographic describes as the community-based water quality champions.

In 1999 it became apparent the Lac La Biche lake water quality was deteriorating. In 2002 Lakeland county struck a multistakeholder group of citizens who set out to develop a strategy to protect the lake and environment. Public education, school-based programs, and a transparent decision-making process were key to earning the community support necessary to launch a study of the watershed. Since then volunteers and scientists have worked together to develop regulations and policies to balance environmental values and development.

Mr. Speaker, Lakeland county is located in the scenic Lac La Biche area of northeast Alberta. With a mix of oil and gas, forestry, and agriculture as well as an abundance of recreational and cultural amenities the region provides endless opportunities for visitors in an area rich in cultural diversity and heritage.

I would ask members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating Lakeland county and the Lac La Biche Watershed Steering Committee on this tremendously successful initiative and most deserved and prestigious award. These visionary Albertans are an inspiration to us all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Volunteer Organizations

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I love our voluntary sector, also known as the NGO or nongovernment organizations or charitable agencies. To me they are all that is good with this society, from Meals on Wheels to Big Brothers Big Sisters to arts festivals to faith community programs to youth soccer programs to parent and teen mediation services to emergency shelters to trail grooming for cross-country skiing and everything in between. The willing donation of time and money by the citizens support a range of activities and services that make all of our lives better. Volunteers get a chance to learn new skills, socialize, make a meaningful and helpful contribution to their community, and many, many people work in this sector, including those who provide services which the government itself used to provide and now contracts out.

But I have a few observations about the long-term health and well-being of these organizations, their staff, and volunteers. The change in the nature of government support from core funding to project-based or contract funding has had a long-term impact. It is affecting the ability to recruit, train, retain staff and to successfully manage staff succession planning. Few organizations can afford to fund development staff, yet they need to raise additional money to pay for the capacity of the organization to deliver the service. There is no flex or fat, and it has compromised the ability to recover from disasters, emergencies, or anything unanticipated. Their organizational capacity has been hollowed out. Advocacy and service are getting lost in crisis fundraising.

We are losing our institutional memory as we lose long-time staff to better paying and sometimes identical jobs in the corporate and government sector. The fundraising arena now includes educational institutions, hospital foundations, and health programs: tough competition for those other charities and voluntary based groups.

Higher rents, electricity and utility costs, and insurance are additional financial issues they have to face, plus the ethical issues surrounding an increasing reliance on competition for gambling-generated dollars. Volunteers increasingly spend their time working casinos and bingos, not on the agency's main activities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Kentwood Place

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, when a private assisted-care facility came up for sale, a local businessman, pharmacist, and board member for the Red Deer chapter of the Schizophrenia Society jumped at the opportunity to buy it in order to provide housing to individuals who have a severe mental illness. Pharmacist and philanthropist Mike Tweedy engaged the David Thompson health region and the local Schizophrenia Society in a partnership that would result in 24-hour staffing of the facility, providing an unprecedented level of support for the clients. The health region, with the provincial innovation funds, has agreed to provide support with staff and program resources. The David Thompson health region also entered into a partnership with the Red Deer Schizophrenia Society to provide specialized supports. All three partners work together in planning and supervision.

Kentwood Place opened on June 1 in Red Deer-North to provide housing and support to 23 individuals. The majority of these individuals, who will leave Centennial Centre in Ponoka, would traditionally have found it very difficult to live in the community as the support required was not easily accessible until now. The Kentwood Place P3 partnership reinforces that all sectors in Red Deer are willing to work together to ensure a high level of service in a more cost-effective manner. Traditionally Red Deer has shown leadership in the areas of partnerships, housing, and supports. This new initiative is another example. Kentwood Place is an example of how the community can work together through a P3 partnership.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my sincerest thanks to Mike Tweedy and his partners. Mike is another shining example of good people doing great things for the people in their community. Please join me in congratulating Mike and his P3 partners for their visionary and outstanding initiative.

Contributions to Leadership Campaign

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The chief administrative officer for the Beaver waste management commission has stated publicly that this commission was approached by other PC Party leadership campaigns for funding in addition to the Premier's. Albertans have a right to know the details. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Will the minister tell the people of Alberta if the Beaver waste management commission or any other public body under his authority was solicited for funds by the leadership campaign for the Member for Foothills-Rocky View, who is now the minister for sustainable development?

Thank you.

1:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I was asked the question, I believe, two days ago, I had said that I would look into it, and I am asking for a review of the commission's audited financial statements. At this time I believe my staff will be meeting with the commission's CEO next week.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not the question I was asking.

Will the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing tell the people of Alberta if the Beaver waste management commission or any other public body under his authority was solicited for funds by the leadership campaign for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who is now Minister of Finance?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, sometimes some of their questioning goes from the ignorant to worse. For anyone there to suggest that any minister of this Crown has time to question, to call, to talk to all the commissions, to all the entities in Alberta on what they may or may not have done over the period of the last year during the leadership race for our party is, quite frankly, of very little interest to this House. To suggest that the minister of municipal affairs would have that information is simply being done to try and cast aspersion on the other leadership candidates that ran for the position of leader of this party and, quite frankly, has no place in this House.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The commissioner of the Beaver waste management commission has said that his commission was solicited by other leadership candidates. It is, as I'm sure you know, a commission formed under regulation of this government and under the authority of this cabinet. Again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: will he tell the people of Alberta if the Beaver waste management commission or any other public body under his authority was solicited for funds by the leadership campaign for the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, let me make this very clear. I have said that I am going to do a review of the Beaver waste management commission. I have also said that my staff are meeting with the CEO of that commission next week. We have asked for the audited financial statements of that commission. We will look at all of the financial statements that are presented to us, and, yes, at that time we will see what's there.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Beaver regional waste management commission was commissioned by this government to provide its municipal shareholders with waste management services, to run a regional landfill, period. That's what the regulations of this government say. Yet in defending the unethical donation to the Premier's leadership campaign, the CAO of the commission said, and I quote: there is nothing in the legislation that says we can't. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: is the minister okay with the CAO's attitude and his refusal to abide by the provincial mandate of the commission?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is very lucky that we have large landfills in Alberta to hold that garbage. If he has any information of any kind that any municipality, that any government commission contributed in an inappropriate or illegal way to anybody on this government side, bring it up, put it out, and let's check into it. To stand there day after day and continually make allegations of something that may not happen is irresponsible and should end up in the Ryley landfill soon.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Treasury Board knows well that we did bring a $5,000 unethical contribution public, and we have the head of the commission saying there were other requests. Many, many questions remain. Why did the CAO of the commission recommend a huge donation of $25,000? What reasons did the Premier's campaign team give to the commission to sell them on the donation? To the minister of municipal affairs: will the minister do the right thing and commit to a formal, independent inspection of this commission?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I have commissioned a review, and I am sure that that review will reveal where there were contributions. Possibly the party of the opposition may have gotten some contributions from that commission. Next week we are looking at the financial statements, and you never know what it could reveal.

Dr. Taft: I doubt it will reveal much, Mr. Speaker. We have a commissioner who's close friends and a supporter of the Premier reporting to a minister who's a supporter of the Premier on an unethical donation to the Premier by that commission. You, Mr. Minister, are not going to get to the bottom of this. What's needed is an independent inspection. Will this minister do the right thing – the right thing – and call an independent inspection into this situation under his authority?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea who is friends with who. The Leader of the Opposition seems to know better who is a friend of the Premier, how my relationship is with the Premier. I am a minister of the government of Alberta. There was an issue that was brought forward. At that time I looked at the situation and have said that I am going to do a review.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Western Irrigation District

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. This government stumbles from cover-up to cover-up, Mr. Speaker. In their desperation to push through the water transfer for the megamall and racetrack at Balzac, the Western irrigation district is now being asked to provide irrigation water for the project. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. How is it that a giant shopping mall, a hotel, a casino, and a racetrack qualify for water from a public body set up to provide irrigation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that I can't particularly speak for the WID's motives or what they're going to do, but they certainly have an accountable process that they have to go through under these circumstances. It's up to the WID to consult their stakeholders through a public meeting. It's required by legislation. The public meeting is going to be held on June 21 in Strathmore. It's due process.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Irrigation water is not potable. It will need to be treated. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Can he confirm that millions of public dollars will be used to build a water treatment plant for this mega-mall development?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know what I can confirm? I can confirm that this government has taken the strategy of Water for Life very seriously. We have worked for decades to build regional water support systems for many, many communities across Alberta because we truly believe there are opportunities in rural Alberta that need water, and they need our help to get it, as with all of the major cities. Everyone understands the importance of water. Is there a secret deal to put water in Balzac? Absolutely not. Only in the opposition leader's mind, and he wants to continually stand up and do it. Bring forward the information. He makes an allegation. He then pretends it's true and throws the allegation on all the decent, hard-working people who are trying to provide water systems to all the corners of Alberta.

Dr. Taft: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, to the President of the Treasury Board: how does he justify spending millions of taxpayer dollars on a water treatment plant for a project financed by a major pension fund, the largest mall developer in this country? Why doesn't he allow the businesses to cover the cost of their own water treatment instead of taking the irrigation water for the farmers of this province and treating it for private developers at public expense?

Mr. Snelgrove: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how he thinks West Edmonton Mall gets water. They deal with the municipality that they're in. They apply; they get water. They do it. How does every darn business in Alberta? We join systems, municipal systems, with the exception of some farms that have their own wells. The fact is that we are not supporting with millions of taxpayers' dollars the racetrack, the entertainment centre, and all the rest of his imaginary development out there. That is a business development on its own merit which has the right to work with the municipality that it is in to apply for water in the absolute normal course of business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

1:40 Teachers' Unfunded Pension Plan Task Force

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems determined to create labour chaos with Alberta's teachers. The latest provocation comes in the form of the government's choice for the so-called task force dealing with the teachers' unfunded pension liability. Allan Scott is well known in labour circles for all the wrong reasons. His actions during the Shaw Conference Centre strike in 2002 needlessly extended the strike and cost the city of Edmonton close to $2 million. His appointment is yet another instance of the Minister of Education waving a red flag in front of the teachers.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear a question there. However, I would like to say that Mr. Scott is one of the finest businessmen in Edmonton, and I think the hon. member owes him an apology.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, he ran the Shaw Conference Centre in 2002, when he was the head of Economic Development Edmonton. The Labour Relations Board found that Mr. Scott and Economic Development Edmonton failed to bargain in good faith. They ordered him, and I quote: to cease and desist discriminating against union supporters. Now, my question is to the minister. Is this the type of individual you want dealing with the teachers? As I said, it's like throwing a red flag in front of them.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, he's not dealing with the teachers. The idea of the task force is to go out and talk to Albertans. The hon. member can make a presentation if he so chooses, to find out what is a fair ask of the Alberta Teachers' Association from the taxpayers of Alberta for us to assume a $2 billion liability. Mr. Scott will have nothing to do with the teachers and nothing to do with labour negotiations. So I have no idea what this guy is talking about.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this is a person that's going to be giving this minister advice, and this is a person that the Labour Relations Board said to stop discriminating against union members. Now, why would you put this person on a board when you're dealing in labour relations? He is going to have a say on the teachers' unfunded liability.

Mr. Liepert: This process has absolutely nothing to do with labour negotiations. I keep trying to tell these guys over here that there are two separate issues. Labour negotiations are between school boards and the local ATA – school boards and local ATA. On the other hand, we have a task force that's going to go out there and hear from Albertans as to what is a fair ask of the Alberta Teachers' Association on behalf of us as taxpayers to assume a $2 billion liability. There is no connection, and the hon. member is just raising a red herring that is just garbage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Support for Seniors

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's Seniors' Week. I spoke at Londonderry lodge this morning to the wonderful seniors there. They always give me lots of ideas. There were about 30 lovely ladies there and Bill. Bill gets lots of attention. We talked about the growing numbers of seniors. Everyone here knows that the percentage of seniors will increase dramatically in coming years. The postwar baby boom and our first-rate Alberta health care system are reasons for that. We talked about the need for dignity and respect for our elders. We talked about the need for safe streets. But we talked the most about kids and the future and connecting children to the values of the past. My question is to the acting minister of seniors and such. What is your ministry doing to harness the creative power, the energy, and the wisdom of seniors in helping to involve them with children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly would like to meet the 30 beautiful ladies that the hon. member met. But that's a good question. I will take it under advisement and pass it on to the minister of seniors and get back to him.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the same minister. Sweat-equity helping organizations, like Habitat for Humanity, have worked to help those who want to own a home work to achieve their goal. Many seniors are concerned about their rising housing and other costs. Seniors' skills would be valuable to add to many community pursuits. Will your ministry examine the concept of encouraging community organizations to establish seniors' sweat-equity credits that could be transferable to housing costs in the future, and what is the potential for this idea?

Mr. Groeneveld: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I certainly listen to the seniors minister, and he has very eloquent answers, much better than I can give, so I will have him get back on this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Renters' tax credits were a popular measure in the last great Alberta boom. Will the minister examine this as a relief measure for rent-stressed seniors, or could this be expanded to all renters?

Mr. Groeneveld: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I will take that under advisement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Beef Export Regulations

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta the cervid, buffalo, and beef industries are a very, very important component of the agriculture industry. Ever since BSE was discovered in Alberta, the industry has been under siege, but thanks to all the support from the provincial government, they did survive. Moving forward to something that's near normal, it looked like it was about two steps forward, one back, but it looks now as though it's going to be two steps back since the value of the dollar has been increasing, and now I hear that there are new federal regulations coming into force. To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: what are the new regulations, and what is going to be impacted by them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good question. The Canadian Food Inspection Agency is enhancing the existing feed ban by requiring the removal of all specified risk materials from all animal feed, pet food, and fertilizers. This ban is to come into effect on July 12 of this year. SRM tissues have been shown in infected cattle to contain concentrated levels of the BSE agent. This includes the brain, spine, and nerves surrounding the spine, to name a few. The new regulations affect cattle of all ages to some degree but more so over 30 months of age. One of the more frustrating aspects of these new regulations is the significant amount of meat that can be lost from each animal in removing these materials.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the most choice parts of the animal now are going to have to be disposed of under the classification of an SRM. I have heard that there could be anywhere from 400 to 600 pounds of the carcass of the animal having to be disposed. Could the minister tell us how they are going to accommodate this much waste?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the hon. member's numbers are quite correct. In many cases new infrastructure will be needed to properly dispose of these materials. Rendering, of course, is one of the viable options for disposal at this point in time, but we have invested in funding to find new ways not only to dispose of some of this material but also gain value from it.

It seems that every time the animal carcass loses a bit of value, that loss always works down to the producer. We have to ensure that these costs are not passed down to the producer.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know exactly how this all works. The fact is that it is passed down to the producer. Eventually it ends down at the cow-calf operator. Basically, they're right at the limit currently as far as their expenses are concerned and their returns. Is there going to be any assistance from government as it relates to this very, very disastrous position that we're finding ourselves in? Not only are we going to suffer a big loss on the sale of the best part of the animal, but we've also got to now dispose of all that waste.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, of course, he's indeed right. In March of this year Alberta made a joint announcement with the federal government committing up to $40 million in our province to help our beef industry comply and adapt to the federal government's enhanced feed ban. This funding will help alleviate the costs of complying with this enhanced feed ban. As a province we've gone over and above what was required of us in ensuring that our producers are not on the hook for these disposal costs. I certainly continue to press the federal government to ensure that the necessary funding is available in order to comply with the federal regulations that they're imposing on us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Affordable Housing

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The housing crisis in this province is hurting Albertans all the way along the housing continuum. The crisis goes beyond impacting people with very low incomes. The price of prosperity also means that home ownership is unattainable for our young families. Last year alone the average price of a resale home in Edmonton increased by 50 per cent. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. What advice do you have for hard-working young families who now find that home ownership in this province is unattainable?

The Speaker: Well, let's deal with policy.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a very difficult question, and it's not a black-and-white answer. Last year we had approximately a hundred thousand people that moved to Alberta. They didn't come with teachers, they didn't come with doctors, and for sure they didn't come with housing. This year in January, February, March we had, I believe, 11,500 people move in. Most of the people that move to this province move during the time that their kids are out of school, so the high months are June and July. We have tried to address the issue of housing for all individuals.

The Speaker: We'll go to the next question, please.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, some municipalities have publicly funded home down payment assistance programs, as does the Real Estate Board, that help some first-time buyers. The housing task force recommended that a new Alberta home ownership assistance program be developed within six months, and your department just rejected that recommendation. Why, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the policy of this government is to try to address the needs of people in need. We're trying to help individuals that need support for affordable housing. We're trying to address individuals that are homeless. We are trying to address individuals that don't have the ability to pay for their own lodging. Last year we had 50,000 homes that were built. In essence, that also provides support and lodging for individuals from the affordable housing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplementary is for the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Average home prices are starting to exceed $450,000. Teachers, nurses, artists, musicians, daycare workers, writers, restaurant workers, and many, many more Albertans can't afford to live in our home province anymore. Our sons and daughters are being forced to leave, including my own. Maybe the minister of employment is unwilling to do anything to keep Albertans at home because she knows there will be temporary foreign workers to fill the gap. My question is: given that the high costs of living in this province are forcing Albertans to leave, why has your department not made housing a labour force issue? Why don't you demand that your government do more?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes an interesting point about the need for housing when we're attracting workers and so much economic development. It is, in fact, something in the broadest sense of the word, needs that we are evaluating when we look at the development of the Heartland, for example. It's not only about roads. It's about housing; it's about infrastructure. I think the point is well made, and it is a part of economic activity to make sure that you have the capacity to deal with housing. So, in fact, it is something we look at.

I don't want to overlook the point that was made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing because even if our anticipated average growth this year is 47,700 housing units, we'll have housing at an average of three people per home for over 143,000 people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mount Royal College

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A week ago it was my privilege to attend the graduation of the first graduating class from Centennial high school in my riding. As I spoke to the graduates, one of the things I asked them was to not let that be their last graduation, to ensure that they got further education. One of the ways that as government we've helped to facilitate that is by giving new degrees to Mount Royal College. So my questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. How is your ministry providing for and supporting both the college's growth and its role in meeting this important need for these graduates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a very good question. We want to ensure that all of the students in Calgary that want to move on to postsecondary education have the appropriate pathways for them to achieve their life's successes. The government has taken significant steps to address the needs of Mount Royal over the past several months, including, as has been mentioned in this House, the announcement of extended nursing spaces. We intend to add more as the years go on. But it means more nursing spaces for Calgary. Mount Royal will be enrolling 260 nursing students in '07-08, which will grow to 980 students by '10-11. We're looking at expanding spaces in other postsecondaries in Calgary as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the same minister. Mount Royal's capital requirements also need to be considered in light of this growth. What are you doing to ensure that the college has the facilities that it needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we expand the number of spaces at the college, we obviously are going to have to expand some of the infrastructure that's there, but it should also be noted that in July of just last year the college opened its brand new $94 million Lincoln Park campus, which included the learning centre. That was just completed and opened in 2006. We are aware of Mount Royal's current capital needs and some of the needs that are going to be occurring based on the expansion of spaces that we are going to have to do for them over the coming years, and we are working with them on some very innovative ideas.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Renter Assistance

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. One month ago Jim Sexsmith, a constituent from my wonderful riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie, visited the Legislature to appeal to this government to take action to make housing more affordable. After three weeks the minister finally told Jim that his only option is to get on a waiting list. Does the minister think it's fair to put a disabled senior on a two-year waiting list for an affordable place to live?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. I don't personally know the details of the individual. All I can tell you is that approximately three weeks ago we had two visitations of groups of individuals that came in. There were approximately 25 the first day, and I'm not exactly sure how many the second. Anyway, nine individuals stayed to have discussions with our staff to see if we could support them. Out of those nine we did have eight that we had made contact with. I'm sorry; I don't know the details. But I will say . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. When presented with Jim's situation last month, the minister claimed he would look after it. Was putting Jim on a waiting list the best option the minister could offer?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, when we look at support for individuals that need affordable housing, we do look at the individuals that need help the most. There are criteria. The staff has criteria that they do use. If there is something that was overlooked, we will have my staff look at it again.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again. Jim came here again today to advocate for affordable housing measures. Jim is lucky, though, because his building has a new owner, who will not be increasing the rent by 20 per cent, as he had expected. To the minister of housing: what about the rest of Alberta seniors on fixed incomes who want to maintain homes in this province but can't afford double-digit rent increases?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes a very good point. I think it's increasingly apparent that it is necessary to have housing continually being built in order to accommodate individuals with affordable housing or individuals that need housing. That is exactly what we're trying to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Calgary Bow River Weir Project

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Bow River irrigation weir has been in place in Calgary for over a hundred years. The existing structure was built in 1975, and plans to reconstruct for safety and renaturalization has been under way for the last six years. Like any other construction, this Harvie Passage project is subject to rising costs. The original estimate was $6.4 million. It has risen to $11 million. My constituents and I are very grateful that the project has received an additional $2.5 million from lottery funding.

The Speaker: I'm afraid I'm going to have to ask. I'm sure there's a minister who anticipates the question. The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hon. member was kind enough to indicate to me that he would be asking me a question. I want to say that we're very pleased that the Alberta lottery funding could provide the additional funding to support this worthy project. The weir diverts water to farmers in the Western irrigation district, and the reconstruction will maintain this particular purpose but also increase the safety and make it possible for humans and fish to travel from one side of Calgary to the other. I understand that construction can't begin until this fall in order to accommodate fish habitat. But if costs continue to rise, then the partnership may be able to raise their funding privately or may need to make a case for additional funding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly the answer I need.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same minister. Could the project apply for the major community facilities program if additional support is required?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, we're very pleased to indicate that our ministry was able to initially fund this project under the other initiatives program, as the member stated, for an additional $2.5 million. The weir project partnership, if costs continue to rise, could apply for additional funding under the major community facilities program. I want to indicate that $70 million has been allocated to projects in Calgary over the next two years, which is a quarter of the dollars that were approved under the major community facilities program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the project is completed, Calgarians can float down the river from Bowness park to Carseland, which is about 20, 25 kilometres in length, and the fish can rejoin their families after generations of separation by the weir. My question is to the same minister. Will the minister promise that he will attend the opening of the Harvie Passage when it's completed?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, it would be my pleasure to be part of those ceremonies. We recognize the importance of that river project. Certainly, it provides a tremendous service to not only Calgarians but everybody else downstream.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if it's determined that there will be a fish fry at the opening, then you will have defeated everything that you've advocated for today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

AltaLink Electricity Transmission Line

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The hearings into the proposed AltaLink 500 kV transmission line have been a kangaroo court from the start. Residents have not been properly consulted. There have been allegations of threats from land agents, bungled needs assessments, and in April the EUB decided to allow only written submissions and to force interested parties to watch via video feed. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Given that there has been a string of serious errors, serious breaches of protocol, and a complete lack of transparency in this process, will the minister commit to calling a public inquiry into this proposed line?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear that this government, under this current Premier, has a plan to make Alberta stronger. Part of that strength comes in the form of a stronger backbone to deliver electricity around the province. There is a process in place. That process has been constructive, and it has been very positive for many, many years. The issue that's in front of them right now will be properly addressed, and at the end of the day the results will speak for themselves.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, on top of the stress and hardship that this process is causing for landowners, delays and fumbling around the planning for electricity transmission could potentially cause system troubles down the road. The solution isn't just to slap together a plan and try to push it past the EUB. Proper planning was needed from the start, and that's why we see these delays. Why hasn't this happened, and why won't the minister now allow a public inquiry to find out what's going on and what's gone wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very interesting, the comments that are here today. I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member would want to get in touch with somebody today in Lake Louise. They have a single transmission line into the town of Lake Louise, which went down because of flood waters in one of the mountain creeks. They now have no electricity available in Lake Louise. They would have probably been very well served by additional transmission. What we have here is an NDP individual that's suggesting that we shouldn't do anything. No damn progress: that's what it stands for.

Mr. Eggen: Well, if the Minister of Energy did his job properly and if the EUB did their job properly and the systems operator, then maybe we would have electricity flowing. But now we don't. We see in the newspaper that we're going to have a shortage, and that's going to be passed on to the consumer. At the end of the day I'm very concerned that we don't know much of the cost of this transmission line. Is it going to be stuck onto Alberta taxpayers' bills every month? Will the minister commit right here, right now to ensure that people who stand to profit from this line will foot the bill and not regular consumers?

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will stand here today and say that in the province of Alberta under the current regulated transmission system – and it's been in place since 2003 – the consumers of the province of Alberta pay for transmission that delivers electricity for their consumption. Let us not forget, again, that the consumers are 85 per cent industrial.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Affordable Accessible Housing

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all the talk of rising real estate prices and rental costs it is extremely important we remember that this crisis is about real people who face real challenges to the quality of their lives. For example, this crisis has meant that people with disabilities are unable to find housing that is both affordable and accessible. When this type of housing is unavailable, people with disabilities may be forced to try to function in situations where it is difficult for them to complete even simple daily tasks. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: what is being done to help people with disabilities who are forced to sacrifice their independence and standard of living because they cannot find appropriate housing?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I very much recognize some of the challenges that individuals have in regard to housing. I want to say that we have supported programs and housing initiatives that do support individuals that are handicapped, individuals that have other challenges, and we are going to try to continue to do so. As well, in the new municipal sustainability initiatives there is funding in place for municipalities to make those choices, for them to decide what they believe are the priorities of the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the minister does find the situation unacceptable, surely he will help two of the people here today. The first person, Jocelyn Tremblay, is currently living at the Glenrose hospital. Jocelyn finished her rehabilitation program over two months ago, but her inability to find accessible housing has forced her to stay there. Jocelyn tried to apply for the innovative housing program but was told not to bother, that the wait was too long. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Now Jocelyn is on the Capital Region Housing wait-list, which we all know is over two years long. She just cannot live in a hospital for two more years. What advice do you have for her today?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would very much like her to contact either my staff or the staff of EII. We will definitely look at her situation, as we try to do with others, and try to address her needs as well.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sheena Alexis is a single mother with two children who receives income supports and is currently living in Capital Region housing. Her housing is not completely accessible and is in very poor condition. Her complaints about problems with mice have gone ignored. This house is located in an unsafe area, and in the last six months her home has been broken into twice. Sheena put in a request to transfer last year but has not had any response. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Sheena desperately wants to move to a better environment for her children, but she has run out of options. Can you help her today?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I would suggest that she contact our ministry or the Ministry of Employment, Immigration and Industry, and we will look at her case and see if there's any way that we can support her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Glenbow Ranch Provincial Park

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer an exciting agreement was announced by our government to acquire land on the Bow River west of Calgary to create a new provincial park, to be called the Glenbow Ranch provincial park. The area consists of over 3,000 acres of spectacular landscape and will provide major recreational opportunities for the people of Calgary and visitors from elsewhere in the province. My questions are all for the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. What progress is being made on finalizing the transfer of land and converting the ranch operations from agricultural use to park use?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Glenbow Ranch provincial park spans 14 kilometres of the Bow River valley between Calgary and Cochrane. Its size is roughly equal to Fish Creek provincial park. Our first priority is to preserve this beautiful landscape and sensitive ecosystem. Since the land agreement was announced, a broad planning exercise has begun, including a detailed land survey. The land transfer, I may add for the hon. member, was completed in March of this year. Biophysical and inventory work is under way prior to developing a plan which will identify the types of visitor opportunities that may be provided.

Dr. Brown: Given the initial commitment of $40 million to acquire the land, can the minister give assurances that the necessary funding will be in place to build the facilities to allow visitors to enjoy the park?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, budget approval so far has been only for the land acquisition. The department will request developmental and operating dollars once our necessary planning is completed. Let me add that the Harvie family has committed $3 million to the development of that particular provincial park as well.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise Calgarians and other Albertans when they will be able to enjoy and access the new Glenbow Ranch provincial park?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, presently access is prohibited to protect the landscape and ecological balance during the transition from ranchland to parkland. Access is at least one year away. We expect to be able to open the new park to the public in late 2008 or early 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Urban Campus Partnership

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians are desperate for more postsecondary education spaces. It's a sad fact that every year, thanks to years of government neglect, too many well-qualified young adults are turned away from institutions in Calgary. We're in danger of failing an entire generation of students. Calgary institutions came together over two years ago and offered the Campus Calgary plan to create these much-needed extra spaces. They need the full commitment of this government – real, tangible assistance – to achieve their goals. My questions are to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Does the minister believe that the government has any chance of creating the 20,000 extra spaces by 2010 – that's just three years from now – that these institutions are asking for?

Mr. Horner: Actually, Mr. Speaker, we have a very good working relationship right now with the urban campus concept, which I believe the hon. member is referring to, but I might point out, too, that not all institutions in Calgary are actually involved in that urban campus proposal. Secondly, individual institutions have been providing the department with individual plans for their capital expansions. What we're suggesting is a regional approach to this based on the needs analysis, which I've said many times in this House is what we're doing, based on the roles, responsibilities, mandate framework, which we believe will be completed sometime late August. We also have meetings scheduled with the University of Calgary and the other proponents of the urban campus for early July, to sit down and just see if there's a true need for the urban campus in addition to all of the other capacity or if we just need to do something on a regional basis.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals are looking forward to Mount Royal College achieving a greater degree-granting status, which we've been asking for for some time, but in order for Mount Royal graduates to have their baccalaureate degrees recognized all over Canada, these degrees need to be acknowledged as adequate by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. Currently that body considers Mount Royal library to be insufficient to the purposes of a budding university, and this will impact the national recognition of their degrees. To the minister: when will Mount Royal receive funding for the library it needs so that undergraduate education is recognized across the country?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, partly the facts are right; partly the facts are wrong. First of all, the accreditation of the courses is not based on what AUCC accreditation will give. We have the Campus Alberta quality control council, that reviews our degrees and the course loads. The institutions between themselves are the ones that decide which ones will be accredited for their individual institutions.

In Alberta, based on the Campus Alberta approach, we want to have a very transparent, transferable ability for students to create their own pathways within our system. Other institutions across Canada are recognizing that system and are saying: we want to be a part of that, too, because of the pool of students that we have. To say that there is one institution that is being penalized because they're not getting degree-granting status is probably wrong, Mr. Speaker, but we are giving Mount Royal a pathway to their success in their roles and responsibilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Tougas: Nothing else, no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Biodiversity Opportunities

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent reports have highlighted efforts in British Columbia to turn waste wood which is directly resultant from mountain pine beetle infestation into green energy. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is this province doing to take advantage of this new bioeconomy opportunity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is developing bioeconomy initiatives through two different strategies: the life science strategies and also the securing tomorrow's prosperity strategy. We are exploring the full range of biorefinery possibilities offered by this emerging field, including bioenergy, biofuels, and bioproducts. This fits with the Alberta government's commitment to realize greater value-added from all our natural resources, and it also meshes with our support for a globally competitive forestry industry in Alberta that embraces new technologies for the pulp mills, the strandboard plants, and the lumber mills.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: The first supplemental to the same minister. I realize that 45 seconds is a short amount of time, and it's great to hear about the interest of turning, you know, bad news into good news, but I'd like some more practical terms and some specifics on the actual opportunities and how they can be turned into realities.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has two principal sources of feedstock for our bioeconomy: agricultural products and the forestry industry. SRD is working with Alberta Agriculture and Food and also with Alberta Energy to advance a nine-point bioenergy strategy that was announced last fall. This government has committed to a five-year, $239 million investment to promote biorefinery initiatives in the agricultural and bioforestry industries. We're also working with Alberta Energy and Advanced Education through the Alberta Research Council to support research into the technology that drives bioeconomies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: No. I'm okay. Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Continuing Care Standards

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are no provincial definitions outlining the health services, level of care, and personal costs residents can expect in each kind of continuing care facility, including long-term care, assisted living, and supportive living. The Auditor General pointed out over two years ago that without these standards "residents may not be receiving an appropriate level of continuing care, housing or personal care services." My question is to the minister of health. When is the minister going to establish clear, province-wide definitions to clarify what services and level of care can be expected in each continuing care setting?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that's a very important question, one that is the subject of ongoing work. I'll be working with the minister of seniors with respect to that continuum of care: how we define the particular care areas and, most importantly, how each is appropriately paid for. I've said, I think, a number of times in this House that we really want to focus on patient-centred care, on the individual being able to make the right choice for that individual with the health support that that individual needs either to live in their own home or to have assisted living in the community or, if necessary, to be in a long-term care centre, and not fund just based on the name of the institution.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister. Well, Mr. Speaker, many Albertans faced with choosing a continuing care facility have trouble understanding the basket of services and level of care available in each facility and in each region. What is the minister going to do to ensure that all facilities outline in unambiguous terms who is responsible for the cost and delivery of services so that families can choose the facility that best meets their needs?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is actually a very complex question because depending on where you are, what the size of the community is, and what the nature of the facility is, you may be actually offering different levels of services. I'm aware, for example, of an excellent facility in one of our smaller communities in northern Alberta where we have exactly this issue, where we have an individual whose care need has changed but there's no desire to move to a place that would actually support that care need. So it's not as simple as it may sound, and the important thing is to have the structure to allow families to know what they can get and where they can get it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Again to the same minister: given that more and more dependent seniors are being reclassified into assisted living settings in which they are responsible for more cost, what protections are in place to prevent price gouging in these settings?

Mr. Hancock: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, a very important question and not one to give an easy, simplistic answer to. Again, in many communities you don't actually have either the ability or the need for a number of different facilities, so we have to actually redesign the system to focus on the patient or the person in need of care, make sure that the funding is appropriate to the care need on the health side, make sure that the housing costs are appropriately handled by either the family or the community, and make sure, as the hon. member asks, that there's not gouging involved but that we have the appropriate level of care and the appropriate choice for the family and the person who needs the care.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 90 questions and answers today.

Before we proceed with the remainder of the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I am proud today to introduce to you a large group of guests from the St. Francis of Assisi school in that remarkable and beautiful city of Red Deer. I would like to introduce all the students by name, but I don't have their names. I would like to introduce the teachers and the parents and the helpers that are accompanying these students, and I apologize in advance if I mispronounce some names. I'd like to introduce to you teachers Miss Patricia Marques, Mr. Brian Munro, Mr. Brad Diduch, Mrs. Cara Joyce, Miss Sandra Heisler, and parents and helpers Ms Tina Diplacido, Mrs. Marlene Slipp, Mrs. Kerrie Jobs, Mrs. Patty Elkins, Mrs. Eileen Bantjes, Mrs. Candy Fertig, and Mrs. Debra Marcoux. I would ask all of these guests to rise and receive the warm welcome not only from myself and my colleague from Red Deer-North but all members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're also very blessed today to have 28 of Alberta's brightest and best students from the glorious village of Thorsby. From Thorsby high school we have 28 students as well as three teachers and helpers. They are Kim van Steenis, Sam Kobeluck, and Lorraine Kuzio. I would ask all of the guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Royalty Revenues

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The central question in the royalty review is: do Albertans receive a fair share? Current royalties are not meeting the government's own modest Crown revenue share target of 20 to 25 per cent. This failure cost Albertans $16 billion in lost revenue over the past six years.

I have some suggestions to bring us up to the 25 per cent fair share. When conventional crude oil prices were a fraction of what they are today, the government introduced various royalty holidays. In his annual report the Auditor General notes that these holidays reduced Crown royalties by $1.5 billion dollars in the last two years.

At a time when commodity prices are at high levels, the government should consider amending or removing these programs. The generic royalty regime for oil sands has outlived its utility. The allowed costs that are outlined in the oil sands royalty regulation should be changed. For example, royalties should not be reduced in order to give the CEO of an oil sands company his $2 million annual corporate bonus.

With regard to the conventional natural gas, the U.S. calculates royalties on the Henry hub gas price to project what they get in natural gas royalties. The Henry hub price should be used to calculate the royalty rate also in this province. Doing so would give us a more accurate assessment of the value of our natural gas production and higher royalties.

In Alberta the coal-bed methane royalty is calculated on the productivity rate of the well. The majority of the gas production from coal-bed methane wells is subject to the normal low-productivity well allowance. The EUB notes that coal-bed methane production will represent 13 per cent of total marketable gas production in Alberta by 2016. A coal-bed methane royalty rate of 12 and a half per cent should be introduced and subject to review annually. In order to ensure that Albertans receive a fair market value for their resources, the government should conduct a full public review of the royalty regime every five years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Water Management

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Despite the numerous warnings concerning the future of our water supplies, this government continues to approve projects whose ecological impact is still unknown. One instance of this dubious style of development is the megamall and racetrack project in the Balzac area, that hit the planning board without any confirmation that there would be enough water to sustain the project.

Our water security is threatened from many fronts, including tar sand development, population growth, increasing demands on agricultural practices, and global warming. More people need potable water and an expanded sewer system, and it is the government's responsibility that population growth is ecologically sustainable.

One trend of economic expansion that is particularly worrisome is the hasty approval of tar sand projects without a proper assessment of their combined impacts on water resources. At present it takes approximately between two and five barrels or more of water to produce one barrel of bitumen. In other words, we need to multiply the 2,700,000 barrels of crude produced every day by a factor of four or five to understand the amount of water that is required for daily bitumen extraction in the industry. As a result, over the long term the Athabasca River may not have sufficient water to meet the needs of all the planned mining operations and still maintain adequate stream flows.

Climate change and economic growth will make water scarcity an even more pressing problem. The current housing crisis has demonstrated how this government deals with pressures of growth. Mr. Speaker, we need to plan for growth in this province in a manner that is more ecologically sustainable. It is time to seriously consider extending to other watersheds the sorts of restrictions that the Bow and Oldman systems have and ensure proper monitoring and enforcement of existing rules. It is also necessary to quicken the implementation of environmental management frameworks before more projects are approved.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Bill 213

Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 213, the Regulatory Accountability and Transparency Act.

The purpose of Bill 213 is to reduce the burden of excessive regulation on all Albertans to reduce red tape. This will ensure that our Alberta advantage remains that way and that our economy is focused on productive work, not excessive regulations.

[Motion carried; Bill 213 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table responses to questions raised during Committee of Supply for Ag and Food on May 30, 2007.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter that I wrote on September 13, 2006. It's to the former Minister of Finance, indicating that if we are going to give a lot of money to golf courses, we should find a few dollars for Edmonton public schools who had to cancel a program.

I have another one. This is also a letter. It's dated May 24, 2007, to the hon. Minister of Energy, and it's questions I have regarding "the high pressure steam pipeline rupture that occurred earlier this month involving MEG Energy [Corporation's] Christina Lake Regional Project." I have yet to receive an answer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry I'm tabling the requisite copies of a letter to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview with respect to a commitment she made to him in Committee of Supply regarding reviewing the issue of a living wage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling documents that show another loophole in the government's hastily passed Bill 34. I have a letter from Midwest Property Management Ltd. that was sent to constituents of mine. The renters were told that an initial rent increase has been temporarily suspended, but renters will now be responsible for paying for the cost of heat in addition to the rent. It's not technically a rent increase, but they'll still be paying more.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of a letter from Susan Meyer. Susan and her family recently moved here from Manitoba, and she supports rent guidelines as they have in that province. She feels that there is a need to consider fairness for working families from this government on this issue here in the province.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today with one tabling. I am tabling the annual report for Catholic Social Services. Their annual meeting and luncheon was held yesterday, and I was pleased to attend. Dr. Christopher Leung and Father Ron Rolheiser gave moving words, and we were also honoured with greetings from the Catholic Archbishop of Edmonton, the new one, the Most Reverend Richard Smith.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Service Alberta responses to the question raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on May 29, 2007, departments of the Treasury Board and Service Alberta 2007-08 main estimates debate.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader if he could share with us the projected government business for the week of June 11 to 14.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, June 11, just for the advice of the House we anticipate introducing for first reading Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, 2007, and Bill 44, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

On Tuesday, June 12, under Introduction of Bills it would be anticipated that we would introduce Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 42, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. Under Government Motions it is anticipated that there would be Government Motion 28, which would be with respect to the adjournment of the spring sitting, and Government Motion 29, which would anticipate a motion to ask the House to suspend its normal routine on Thursday of next week so as to allow the Lieutenant Governor to attend at approximately 1 o'clock to provide royal assent. We would then proceed to government business: for second reading Bill 43, the Appropriation Act; Bill 44, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act; Bill Pr. 1, the CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act; and time permitting, third reading on Bill 26, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 32, the Animal Health Act; Bill 33, the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act; and Bill 39, Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act. In the circumstance of those bills being dealt with, we would deal with other bills as per the Order Paper in consultation with the opposition House leaders.

On Wednesday, June 13, under Introduction of Bills we would introduce Bill 46 for first reading, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act. Under Government Bills and Orders, Orders of the Day, we would be again in Committee of the Whole on Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, 2007; Bill 44, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill Pr.1, the CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act; and third reading on Bill Pr. 1, Bill 44; I would anticipate asking the House for unanimous consent to proceed with third reading of Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, in order that it might be available for the Lieutenant Governor to give royal assent on Thursday before we do government business – that would be, obviously, at the pleasure of the House – and other third readings as progress is needed and other bills on the Order Paper should we deal with those third readings that I mentioned for Tuesday.

Thursday afternoon, if it's the pleasure of the House, we will have the attendance of the Lieutenant Governor at 1:30 for Royal Assent and then third readings as per the Order Paper and such other business as we may be able agree upon with opposition House leaders.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2007-08

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Order the first hour and a half is set aside for the Liberal caucus, the next half-hour is set aside for the New Democratic caucus, and the last hour is set aside for any private member. Before we proceed, I just wanted to check with the Liberal caucus whether the 10-minute allocation system is what they would prefer, or would you like a 20-minute back-and-forth question and answer session?

Mr. Bonko: We can go 10 minutes.

The Deputy Chair: Ten-minute slots. Very well.

Energy
Sustainable Resource Development
Municipal Affairs and Housing Environment

The Deputy Chair: For opening remarks we'll call upon the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to introduce his officials. To the officials I'd like to say that should you require a glass of water or a coffee, please raise your hands. A page will come by and provide you with that.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm here today with the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Environment, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. With your permission I'll make some introductory remarks about the Stelmach government's plans for land use, and then I and the three other ministers . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I think this has happened one too many times. You know that we do not mention names of current members of the Assembly. Please proceed.

Dr. Morton: I'll make some remarks about our government's plans for land use, and I and the three other ministers will be happy to answer the questions of all the hon. members with your permission.

The challenge facing Alberta today when it comes to land use is simple but daunting. What steps do we take? What new policies or programs do we need to put in place to ensure that life in the province of Alberta in 2030 is as good as life today? We must recognize that everything we do in Alberta takes space. There are more and more of us, and we are doing more and more things.

The unprecedented population growth that we've seen in recent decades: in 25 years our population has grown to 3.4 million from 2.3 million, an increase of nearly 50 per cent. If this rate of growth continues, we'll pass 5 million people living here 25 years from now, and much of that growth will be along the Edmonton-Calgary-Red Deer corridor.

This greater number of Albertans are doing more and more things. When it comes to drilling activity, drilling activity has quadrupled over the last 20 years. Twenty years ago the annual number of wells drilled was less than 5,000. Last year there were more than 20,000 wells drilled in Alberta. Much of this is due to the increase in coal-bed methane drilling. Just seven years ago there were fewer than 50 coal-bed methane wells drilled in Alberta. Last year there were over 10,000. It's the same story up north in the oil sands. Oil sands production has more than doubled since the 1980s, from a million barrels a day to now over 2 million. It's expected to double again by 2015.

So there are more and more people doing more and more activities but on the same piece of land. Everything we do takes space. If we allow ourselves to try to keep doing everything in the same space at the same time, there'll inevitably be conflicts. Let me take a simple but telling example. Take your backyard as an example. Most of us in our backyard would have space for a patio, a swing set, a garden, maybe a dog kennel, and a compost pile. If they're all in their right place, the backyard works, but if all of those things are on top of one another, things don't work at all. Similar problems, of course, if we transfer back into the real world. For example, if we sell subsurface rights on land where we've said that we don't want any surface disruption, such as special places, then we have a conflict.

In addition to industrial use, of course, and all these new people, we have more and more recreational use. People expect to be able to go onto public lands for hiking, hunting, fishing, horseback riding, yet often these same lands are also used, have multiple uses, in the area of forestry, oil and gas, grazing, tourism, and settlement. Just several weeks ago we saw the problems that occurred when too many people tried to camp in the same area in one of our natural areas, and particularly the use of off-highway vehicle users on the May long weekend, another interesting point in time in terms of increase. In terms of off-highway vehicle ownership, this ownership has quadrupled in the past 10 years, from 20,000 to 80,000. In short, once again, more and more people trying to do more and more things on the same piece of land. The outcome is less than optimal for everybody.

Another way of capturing this issue of land use is to think in terms of our agenda shifting from quantity of life issues, economic issues, to also including quality of life issues. Not by coincidence, I would suggest, just on Monday of this past week, June 4, there was a poll reported in the Calgary Herald that said that Calgarians are more concerned about the falling quality of life in their booming city than the residents of any other city in western Canada. Almost half of Calgarians said that their quality of life had deteriorated in the past five years, and 36 per cent expected it would deteriorate further.

Now, we all know that Calgary is not Alberta except, perhaps, for Dave Bronconnier. But still this attitude captures why we need a land-use framework. To put it differently, the purpose of a land-use framework is to avoid not having to say this to our grandchildren in 20 years. We don't want to look our grandchildren in the eyes and say: I wish you could have seen Alberta 20 years ago. That's what we don't want, and that's why we're going to have a land-use framework.

Some unfriendly interpreters have suggested that our call for a new land-use framework is a criticism of the Klein government for not attending to this, but nothing could be further from the truth. Premier Klein in his four consecutive governments met the challenges that faced Alberta in the 1990s, restarting the economy that had been devastated by Pierre Trudeau's disastrous national energy policy, reversing a chronic structural deficit in government spending that had run up over $24 billion in debt. The bold leadership of Ralph Klein met these challenges. Indeed, the challenges we face today are the result of the success of Ralph Klein's government. Premier Klein did what had to be done on his watch, and now it's our turn to do what needs to be done on our watch.

That's what our Premier and leader of this government is doing: meeting the new challenge, the challenge of unprecedented growth and prosperity. The Premier has made meeting this challenge a mandate, a priority of his government and also of his ministers. He has assigned the land-use framework to me as the lead minister on this in my mandate letter. But the land-use framework is more than just a government priority. For me it's a personal priority. Like many others I moved to Alberta. I'm not native; I moved to Alberta. I came here to make a living, but I've chosen to stay in Alberta to make a life because I don't want to live anywhere else in Canada or anywhere else in the world. I believe that my cabinet colleagues in the six other lead ministries share this view, and we're committed to working together to collaborate to make it happen.

We will be busy in the coming months. We plan to have a draft framework available by December 2007. We think, obviously, that this is a challenge but also a great opportunity, an opportunity for Alberta to show national and even global leadership on sustainable resource management, an opportunity stated, quite simply, once again: to assure that life in Alberta will be as good for our grandchildren as it has been for our generation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we still have about two minutes and 24 seconds. Would the other ministers like to introduce their officials to use up the two minutes? Hon. Minister of Environment, just an introduction.

Mr. Renner: Well, sure, I'd be happy to introduce although this is the fifth time we've been here, so we're all getting quite familiar with the place. I have with me my deputy minister, Peter Watson, and assistant deputy minister John Knapp.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, do you have any officials to introduce?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce Brian Quickfall, who is the assistant deputy minister in my department.

The Deputy Chair: Very well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll lead off with the cross-ministries. We talked about Environment, Municipal Affairs, Energy, and SRD. I may as well start off with Sustainable Resource Development as he was the first one to lead off as well.

This is almost the same as we were talking about during our estimates here. The ministers talk about more and more people taking up space. Well, that is true when you have more and more people here, but you've got to talk about just taking up space or using smart space. There's smart growth, and there's just dumb growth. We've had, you know, poorly planned growth – and I'll just call it dumb growth – for the last 10, 15 years because we haven't had a land-use framework policy, something to be able to guide the municipalities, something to be able to guide Albertans over the next 20, 30, 40 years so that we can assure our grandchildren that the Alberta that we're looking for is the Alberta that we grew up with.

I'm a native Albertan. I've been here all my life. I can tell you that it has changed since I was a younger person going into the outdoors compared to how it is now. We're already seeing that change. Whether that change will continue to take effect, where we can tell our grandchildren, "You know, it has changed, but it hasn't changed quite as much," that's yet to be determined, but it already has changed. When you call it smart growth, as you say, over the Klein years, I beg to differ. Jeffrey Simpson, who was addressing the Alberta Congress Board up in Banff, called it the bozo years because there was absolutely zero and no direction up there. It was just basically: run by the seat of your pants, with no plan. That's exactly what the Premier had admitted: that they didn't have a plan. So to go there and say that there was smart growth and we had a plan and we developed it strategically I think is a crock.

Anyways, getting on to the whole point of this debate, we're talking about the growth. We've got many competing interests for our lands. We've got economic with regard to drilling, urban sprawl, recreation as well. We've got to be able to manage those, as I said earlier, smart.

We've got the competing interests with the economic and drilling with regard to our overall environment. Our animals are constantly under threat. The ministry has talked about it being a 90 per cent success rate so far with regard to our species. Right off the bat, he's already saying that 10 per cent are in fact suffering. I don't think that's an acceptable number. Why would you already discount 10 per cent of our species? It should be a hundred per cent, and we should accept nothing less than a hundred per cent. The fact is – you know what? – there might be a slippage, but to acknowledge that 90 per cent is acceptable or satisfactory, I think, is completely unacceptable for this government, that's charged with the stewardship of maintaining the integrity of our lands as well as protecting our species at risk and endangered animals.

I'm concerned about just our overall urban sprawl. We might as well go down to the south, where the minister resides. You go out there with Cochrane, Canmore, and all the other areas out there. More and more people are seeking to have the bigger lots, and it's evident as you drive from Calgary going out towards Banff. You see the sprawling acreages, and it's beautiful. Who wouldn't want to be out there in the midst of the mountains? But you know what? It's just not sustainable for you to have six and 10 and 12 acres for one family. We've got to be able to cut back a little bit because that's prime land, and that's going to be where a lot of our people come to see the natural wonders of Alberta. We talked about being a natural tourist draw, but if we continue to have urban sprawl, who wants to, you know, travel for an hour and just look at houses vastly spaced throughout the entire landscape before you get to the mountains?

Recreation. The minister talked about off-road vehicles or off-road use. During our deliberation with Sustainable Resource Development I asked if the minister would in fact put some of that land aside. I think that would be prudent, and that would be a good measure to be able to see some of this growth. People always want to be able to go out there with their off-road vehicles, their quads, and, you know, rip it up a bit. I know that they do it up in Cadomin, and there's a lot of devastation up there on some of it because I don't think it's been adequately monitored. Depending on the week that you go up, you might find the officers checking for licences and making sure that people are on the paths.

I think that if we designate down to the south or at least halfway in the province, about four quadrants would be great; you know, 10 square miles. Wherever you find that land, you've got to find it sooner than later to allow these off-road vehicles their opportunity to be able to have their own space so that they're not competing with or running into the animals that are out there in the great wilderness. To have something that's set aside, specifically designated for off-road vehicle use, I think would be a step in the right direction.

You'd be looking well in advance, and then they know where they're allowed to go. You don't have to worry so much about them doing any off-road, off the paths, or running through the streams and that because they've got that land that's already been designated, set aside. You've already checked out with all the checks and balances for the department and made sure there's nothing fragile that's going to be damaged, and let them have their piece of it. Setting something aside, I think, would be far, far more visionary than we are right now in just letting them go willy-nilly, wherever they choose to go. That's part of my concern with the piece as it is right now.

The minister talked about quality versus quantity, and I think that's a very valid comment. Quality versus quantity. You said that, you know, Calgarians maybe aren't so concerned or that at least in all of Canada maybe they're less concerned with their quality than they are with their quantity. I would prefer to say that we'd be more with our quality of life than our quantity, but maybe that's just splitting hairs in that particular piece.

We talked about recreational use a little bit. The urban sprawl: again, this is one of the highly contentious issues. We've got counties as well as cities vying for the same spaces. Obviously, the larger cities such as Edmonton and Grande Prairie or Fort McMurray are at a disadvantage because they've been at the brink of their space right now for a number of years, so they know that they have to go up or make the lots tighter and tighter. Some of the counties are able to continue to expand, with little or no space with regard to the same ones that we have to compete with in the cities. They're making the lots that much smaller, whereas in the county – I guess that why you move out to the rural areas is to be able to have the larger areas. Eventually we know that we're going to be running into the same tightness there, and we've got to have some real land-use specifics there.

I'm hoping that the minister will be able to comment with regard to economic viability and drilling versus the environment itself. We talk about the plan that we're talking about and getting a number of stakeholders to come forward with their plans for the land-use framework, but I didn't think the minister had answered, during my debate there, whether oil and gas are going to be completely on the table with regard to the land use or are going to be off. Certainly, that's a big deal with regard to the competing interests of the land use. In fact, if it is detrimental, is that going to be slowing the economy?

I mean, we all realize that up to 50 per cent of the people directly and indirectly earn their income from the oil and gas sector. The Liberals don't want to see the economy slow down in any way, shape, or form, but what we do want to ensure is that there is smart development, smart growth, that takes effect that would consider all those particular pieces. We've got to make sure that if we're going to continue to allow expansion into some fragile areas – and we'll talk about Marie Lake – at what point do we say that we're going to draw the line? Is everything for sale?

There are some areas – and people have been coming and giving petitions for the last few weeks since this was in fact introduced or the permit was given for this exploration or testing for the seismic. At what point are we going to put our feet down and say: "You know what? There are some areas that just aren't worth going in and destroying because of the beauty and the overall value that Albertans have for it." You can't, you know, do directional drilling and expect no ill effects from it.

I've nailed a number of specifics there. I know that I have about another minute, but I'll stop there, and maybe we'll get some answers, then. Thank you.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, I identify about five distinct questions there, and I'll try to quickly answer several of them. On the question of oil and gas and land use, I might ask the Minister of Energy. Then on the question of urban/rural competition, I'll also ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to help answer.

To begin with, you talked about smart growth over the past 10 years, complaining that you thought the good old days had already been lost. Normally, I'd say to the Member for Edmonton-Decore that I envy his relative youth compared to most of the ministers on this side of the aisle, but with youth comes a lack of memory of certain things. A lot of your members have talked about the current housing crisis. If you want to see a housing crisis, you should have – well, you were here, but you wouldn't remember the 1980s, when people were losing their houses left and right for a dollar. That's what a real housing crisis is. That's what Premier Klein dug us out of.

I'll give you a little free political advice: if you want to win elections in this province, don't rely on Jeffrey Simpson and the Globe and Mail for analysis of Alberta politics. Calling Alberta bozos when the province of Ontario elected an NDP government that went in debt a billion dollars a month for 50 months, $50 billion in 50 months, when this government, the government of Ralph Klein, was paying off a $24 billion debt – the bozos were back in Ontario.

Coming back to the topic of urban sprawl, I'll simply let the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing answer most of that, but I'll just say that I have met with and have also participated in or sat in on the Calgary Regional Partnership, one meeting, and then I've sat in on one of their two-day workshops. I'll be attending their annual general meeting in Banff tomorrow, in fact addressing it. I've read all their materials. I think it's a good example of what I want for the future of our larger metropolitan areas and I think what you want, too, in terms of co-operation. I'll let the minister of municipal affairs say more on that in a moment.

On off-highway vehicles I'd simply say that no government was set to deal with the increase from 20,000 ten years ago to 80,000 now. Nobody could have predicted that. In terms of dealing with off-highway recreation, I would point out that in a number of areas we have brought in access plans or forest land-use zones, in the Bighorn and in the Ghost. As far as the area down south I don't want to get ahead of myself, but watch what we'll be doing there in the coming months, for the July, August, and September long weekends. I agree with you or maybe you agree with me that a designated area, a bog area, for the larger trucks and the boys with toys is a good idea, and we're pursuing that too. But I can assure you that it won't be on sensitive public wetlands the way it happened on the May long weekend.

With respect to whether or not the oil and gas issues and the question of land sales will be discussed as part of the land-use framework, the answer is obviously yes. Yes, it will be. But I'll repeat what you know: this government is in the business of managing growth, not stopping growth. So any recommendations there will be progressive and proactive, but I'll leave it to the Minister of Energy to elaborate on that.

Finally, with respect to species at risk our business plan actually does establish a target of less than 5 per cent, not 10 per cent, of our wild species being at risk, as you see on page 302 of the business plan. Our last actual assessment in 2005-2006 indicated that about 2.2 per cent are at risk. I think your 10 per cent figure was referring to the report that was released in January.

Mr. Bonko: February.

Dr. Morton: February. Okay. It was a slightly different calculation.

That finishes my remarks, Mr. Chairman, and I'll turn it over to some of the other ministers, as I've indicated.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. ministers, we have about four or four and a half minutes, so if anybody wants to add on any response, you may do so now. The hon. minister of housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Maybe I will start off from the aspect of saying that the focus when we talk about municipalities is not so much the disputes between municipalities, but we try to look at the co-operation that municipalities should and could have. I want to say just in answer to the question that when mediation doesn't work, we have the Municipal Government Board that will deal with any disputes in areas like annexation. We continue to encourage intermunicipal co-operation through planned development and also through funding, as the municipal sustainability initiative I believe has done. Our ministry has looked at the recommendations from the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability and is going to provide responses to recommendations, and one of them, of course, is the dispute resolution.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, in relation to sprawl, sprawl for sure is a concern. When we talk about competing municipalities, I believe that co-operation needs to happen. We need to have regional planning. We need to have intermunicipal planning. We need to reduce duplication. But I think most important is that we need to work together so that we reduce the footprint where not necessary.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just quickly to add to the comments that the hon. minister made with respect to the land-use framework and tenure in the province of Alberta. There is, you know, a relatively robust process in place. What I'd like to say is that if a request for posting comes forward, there is an interdepartmental committee that reviews each posting. It's the mineral disposition review committee, and they would allow only posting of appropriate parcels.

Mr. Chairman, I think it's also fair to say that the tenure system that has been in place in Alberta for a number of years and the bonus bid system and posting arrangements really are the cornerstone of the success of the energy industry in Alberta. They are looked at from outside of Alberta as models that other people would certainly like to be able to achieve. So I would agree with the minister that tenure and the successful bonus bid system will most certainly come up for discussion with respect to the land-use framework, and I believe that it would be appropriate to include those discussions and continue to allow those discussions openly with Albertans. With a degree of caution I would suggest that . . . [Mr. Knight's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in this cross-ministry discussion. We've got a lot to talk about, and we don't have that much time. Hopefully, we'll get some additional time later on.

Certainly, I would like to start with Sustainable Resource Development. The department was recently before the Public Accounts Committee. There was a rather robust, vigorous discussion that I enjoyed listening to. It was interesting, and questions from all sides were addressed and answered. I was very interested in the questions concerning the grazing leases. I found that quite interesting. Taxpayers are always discussing grazing leases. They don't understand how they work, how much money is involved, and why, for instance, the owners of the grazing leases in some cases can have surface rights or access rights.

However, I feel compelled at this time to correct the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. He's talking about the work that was done by the former Premier, the former Member for Calgary-Elbow, and I would have to remind him that he was also part of that government. In fact, he was Minister of Environment when we had this spending spree. It wasn't the New Democrats or it wasn't a government in Ontario or a government in Ottawa that put this province in debt. It was this Progressive Conservative government that put us in debt. It was no one else. So if we're going to talk about history, hon. Mr. Minister, read the entire chapter. Just don't pick little bits of it and make a speech.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm looking at volume 1 of the Auditor General's report and specifically page 5. There are some audit objectives and some conclusions and findings to those audits and some recommendations made by the Auditor General regarding the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. In the absence of the minister at Public Accounts I would really appreciate his take on this page from the AG's report, page 5, specifically key recommendations 13 and I believe 15 as well.

Now, the Auditor General asks this question:

Does SRD have adequate systems to regulate reforestation?

Its regulation activities include:

- developing and maintaining standards
- monitoring and enforcing compliance
- reporting its performance
- evaluating results

In the conclusion to this question – does Sustainable Resource Development have adequate systems to regulate reforestation? – this is what the Auditor General states:

Although SRD took three initiatives to improve its regulatory activities, it must still do more. Currently, SRD does not know what results it achieves. Lack of performance information is a critical problem.

To their credit Sustainable Resource Development

- implemented a reforestation monitoring program.
- emphasized to forestry operators the importance of their reforestation data.
- is developing public reporting information on reforested areas satisfactorily restocked.

Now, the AG's recommendations, there are five to the ministry:

1. Produce timely performance reports to confirm results.
2. Strengthen quality control process that produce performance information, and re-examine if its target for the reforestation rate performance measure actually measures reforestation.

3. Strengthen monitoring of reforestation.
4. Sign agreement with forestry association to clarify accountability expectations.
5. Improve controls over seed supply used for reforestation.

Now, these are some of the Auditor General's concerns, and I would really appreciate during the course of this afternoon's discussion and debate if the minister could respond on the record to how these things are going.

Also, I have an additional number of questions. Now, I'm looking at the budget, and I don't know where all this would fit into the budget, and hopefully the minister can clarify all this for me. I apologize; I can't recall the date, but I recall in the Alberta Gazette recently where there was an order in council put through where there was an extension to the lease of the Canmore golf course. There would be provincial Crown land involved in this. I even forget – I apologize, Mr. Chairman – how many years that this lease had already been in existence, and it has been extended for a period of time, I think for another 30 or 40 years. I'm not sure, but the lease still had a long way to go. There were 22 years, hon. minister, left in this lease, and I would like to know why at this time the lease was extended. Why did it not expire and then get into negotiations?

I would also like to know if there was an increase in the amount of money received from this golf course through to the department and through to the general revenue fund, hopefully, for this lease, all the details surrounding the extension of this lease at this time for that golf course just outside the Banff park gates. I would appreciate that. The money that is collected in that lease, where do I find it in the budget?

Also, I see under element 3.0.3, nominal sum disposals, that there is an estimate of $4 million there, and this gets me to my second question, Mr. Chairman, and it's around Elinor Lake, up in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area.

Mr. Danyluk: Lac La Biche.

Mr. MacDonald: Lac La Biche. I stand corrected. Pardon me. I always get you and the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake confused, and I apologize, hon. minister.

Now, this Elinor Lake, there was a couple hundred acres at least sold. This is just west of the lake that we're contemplating naming after the former Premier, as I understand it.

Mr. Danyluk: I didn't know that.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I've been reading the local papers up there, and there's quite a discussion on whether we should name a local lake after the Premier. I hope there's good fishing there, and he and the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater can go there and catch some pickerel.

Anyway, I was reading in the same newspaper, and I noticed this smaller parcel of land, and it's west, as I recall, of Elinor Lake. It was sold, I think, for $500,000, and I would like to know all the details surrounding that sale. How many other properties are there like that around the province that the department puts up for sale? Are they advertised publicly? I think I would have made an effort to come up with some money. I think it was around 2,500 bucks an acre for this prime recreational land. I would have talked it over with my family if I thought I could bid on that competitively and if that would be the highest price that one would have to pay in order to acquire this land. Not only around Elinor Lake but around the entire province what inventory of land do you have that you sell in this manner? Who makes the decision to sell it? Does the public have access to all the information prior to its sale? When it's sold, where do I find it in the report?

Now, Mr. Chairman, those are some of the questions that I have regarding Sustainable Resource Development. I certainly have more questions for the hon. Minister of Environment and, particularly, the hon. Minister of Energy. If I could have answers to those questions at this time, I would be very grateful.

Thank you.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, I'll address first the question on reforestation, then the Canmore golf course, and then the question about Elinor Lake and land sales. Are there any other ministers that want to get involved in this round?

On the reforestation issue, the hon. member is correct that the Auditor General did identify this as a concern, but I'm happy to report that we have responded to those concerns in a very proactive fashion. Actually, the province of Alberta, the government of Alberta, has some of the most rigorous reforestation standards in Canada. We initially developed a performance measure in 2004-2005 on reforestation with a target of an 80 per cent reforestation rate in harvested areas based on a new reforestation performance survey. After this target was established, the ministry recognized that more data was required to assess the proposed 80 per cent target to determine if adjustments are required. So following discussions with the Auditor General, the target was removed from the business plan and will be reintroduced based on actual performance survey results.

The Auditor General reported that the SRD reforestation policy is sound but that more rigour is needed to manage information and interpret the initial 14-year performance survey information. SRD responded to last year's AG report by developing an action plan that improves reforestation monitoring and management. As the hon. member indicated, our forestry operations management has been increased and looks after that.

On a personal note I'll just add that last month I spent an afternoon in Kananaskis in some of the areas that have been subject to Spray Lakes Sawmills' logging and forestry in that area since the 1940s. I visited reforestation areas that were five, 10, and 20 years old and was suitably impressed by the success of that reforestation.

Just last week I had an opportunity. On Saturday I was down in the West Castle area, just in the very southwest corner of the province. There's some forest down there that's considered some of the most important wilderness area now in the province, and there's a big push on to create a new provincial park down there. At the very centre of this is an area that was harvested in the 1950s and, again, has reforested so well that, as I said, it's considered almost a wilderness area now.

A second question has to do with the Canmore golf course. The Canmore golf course is a public course, and I'd be happy to take the hon. member there to play. We'd pay the fee like anybody else. As a general rule for these types of leases that assist municipalities with public recreation facilities, we have a long history of these types of leases, and they're seen as contributing, certainly, to the quality of life of Albertans and also in areas like Canmore have an economic benefit to the community because, of course, they're available to tourism as well.

Now, the specifics on the Canmore golf course. The question is correct: its lease has been extended to 2054. The original lease was given in 1979 for a golf course. It was a 50-year lease. The reason that the course, the club, which, again, I point out is a not-for-profit, public club, requested an additional 25-year extension to the term of the lease to provide for certainty of the facility due to the increased demands for private recreation development in the Canmore area.

I think that translated, that means that they wanted to do some capital improvements to enhance the facilities there, but they didn't want to do it without the assurance that they would keep the lease for an appropriate length of time.

The club pays an annual rental fee of $809.63 pursuant to the Sustainable Resource Development schedule of charges, and you wanted to know where in the budget that's reported. If you go to page 343 and look under Premiums, Fees, and Licences, the third line under Revenue, that's where it's recorded. Do you want me to repeat that, or will you get it from the Hansard?

Mr. MacDonald: No. I'm right there. Thank you.

Dr. Morton: You're a sharp fellow, sometimes.

Now, there was some question about land sales, Elinor Lake and land sales more generally, and concern about whether or not the government of Alberta is receiving fair market value. Certain land sales have occurred such as the Elinor Lake Resort where a land developer purchased the land. I guess that this left the impression with some people that fair market value was not paid. That's not the case, and I'll explain why.

There are two kinds of sales. To current disposition holders and municipalities: these are referred to as priority sales or private sales as they do not go through a public auction process. The second is to third parties through public auction. All sales, I would emphasize, though, are based on fair market value assessment by qualified third-party appraisers.

The process is as follows. A land disposition request application comes in, generally from individuals or an application to purchase received from individuals, corporations, or often municipalities that are looking to purchase Crown land. They initiate the request. Public land suitable for sale and held under a long-term lease for commercial or recreational purposes with substantial improvements may be sold to the leaseholder at current appraised value without competition. These are referred to as priority or private land sales. Also, municipalities may purchase public land. This would be a public municipality, obviously. They may purchase land for $1 if it is to be used for public works, and they enter into a sell-back agreement that if the land use changes, it comes back to us, back to the government of Alberta. Sustainable Resource Development must charge the nominal sum disposal budget with the difference between fair market value and $1. Land that's deemed suitable for sale is appraised by an independent, accredited appraiser. I think I've already said that.

I think that probably covers most of your questions there, so unless there are any other additions, I'll leave it at that.

The Deputy Chair: We have about a minute and 50 seconds. Any minister want to supplement any of the questions there?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister of municipal affairs was concerned that he was going to be left out of the whole process. Well, I assure you that he wasn't, and we'll start with him next, then.

How will the minister convince municipalities to buy into the provincial land-use strategy? The government has defended the complete autonomy of municipalities by allowing them to make their own decisions. As evidenced clearly by their opposition to Bill 211, that was proposed by the Member for Calgary-Currie, I believe, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act, the government clearly believes that municipalities making their own decisions in isolation, as the Municipal Government Act permits, is the best way to plan.

However, a provincial land-use strategy will have to take precedence over the municipal authority as they do right now.

Municipalities will have to conform to the land-use planning decisions within the framework of the strategy. How will the minister address the conflicts that are going to be arising, I guess, between the Municipal Government Act and the provincial land-use strategy? Will he amend the MGA to ensure that municipality bylaws conform to the framework that the province sets? Without this, the provincial land-use strategy will basically be meaningless unless we have this sort of agreement that's going to occur.

Different municipalities have different pressures facing them. The provincial land-use strategy must consider this. The pressures facing the capital region may obviously be different than those of Medicine Hat or Lac La Biche-St. Paul. How will this be addressed in the formation of the land-use strategy? Will the natural person powers granted to the municipalities in the MGA be altered in any way to facilitate the objectives of the provincial land-use strategy? Will municipalities be given full input into the development of the strategy? At what point will they be sitting down and be able to hammer out when it gets down to the completion part?

There are many factors that must be included in a provincial framework. Elements contained within these integrated growth plans could be population projections and allocations; policies, goals, and criteria relating to an issue such as intensity and density; urban sprawl; location/density of industries; as well as the protection of sensitive and significant lands, including agricultural lands and water resources; infrastructure development and community design. With all these factors being included in the provincial land-use strategy, I'm hoping that they in fact will include that. That's a large area to encompass and contemplate within that whole framework.

We talked about Bill 211. Essentially, you know, it's a provincial land-use strategy, but it could encompass much more. It would protect agricultural lands, preserve watersheds, forests, and rivers. It would address the air quality issues, promote healthier living by Albertans by encouraging open spaces and parklands. It would also set limits where urban boundaries can expand to and cannot expand to. I'm hoping that those are some of the specifics that would be addressed. That would also be able to guide the development of Alberta well into the future. However, the government was absolutely opposed to this bill and what it represents with regard to second reading. Can the minister tell us how we can have any faith in the ability of the government to deliver a truly effective land-use strategy when they are so opposed to the concept of growth areas and plans with regard to regional planning in high-growth areas?

Subject to any other areas with regard to the rivers, streams, and water courses right now, I think that's controlled with regard to the municipality. Will that ability be taken away from them, where they're going to be under the land-use framework? Like I said: "within the municipality, including the air space above and the ground below." Is that going to be included in that? Will the minister amend the section of the MGA to bring it in line with the provincial water objectives under the Water for Life and the provincial land-use strategies?

Now, I know there are just a couple. I don't know if the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar wants to take over on some of this, or do you want me to continue on this?

3:30

Mr. MacDonald: You go ahead.

Mr. Bonko: Okay. I just wanted to make sure you got a fair shot on that too.

There are other areas of the MGA that give municipalities significant control over their own development, and maybe I'll quote those for the minister. Maybe he'll be able to answer me with regard to those. The Municipal Government Act, part 17, section 617, planning and development: "The purpose of this Part and the regulations and bylaws under this Part is to provide means whereby plans and related matters may be prepared and adopted." We want to make sure that they achieve an orderly, economic, and beneficial development of the land and patterns of human settlement. We want to make sure that the urban sprawl doesn't continue, as I said in the earlier piece there, because we want to have smart growth, whereas we're going to have to start going up and reducing our footprint on the land. I think we all agree within all the ministries that that is, you know, first and foremost. The most paramount thing that all municipalities as well as Alberta is facing right now is to lessen that footprint.

We've seen it not only just as a pressure here for Alberta municipalities but throughout Canada, where we know that the large centres, in fact, are being very much conscientious of their growth patterns and their effect. Now they've got some of the municipalities, large cities such as Toronto, where they're having to issue warnings with regard to the smog. I'm hoping that we're a long way from that stuff as in L.A., where they have a number of days in the summertime when it's so polluted that they have to issue advisory warnings for its citizens.

Like I said, I'm hoping that we are a long way away from that particular piece with regard to our competing interests when we have our industries just outside our larger urban areas. We've got the competing interests, and the municipalities certainly have raised some issues with regard to Upgrader Alley, just outside the northeast quadrant of Edmonton. Fort Saskatchewan: there are a number of proposed upgraders out there. How will those compete with the province's plans with regard to smart growth? Certainly, Edmonton has raised the issue as to its concerns with regard to the environmental impact as well as the use of water and how that affects the Edmonton area.

I know that there are probably a number of questions. I'll let you answer some of those. There will probably be time, and I'll get back up on that one again, then, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Let me first start off with talking a little bit about what was and what is and what we hope could be. First of all, what was prior to 1995 were regional planning commissions.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah, and we should bring them back.

Mr. Danyluk: Pardon me?

Mr. MacDonald: Now that Steve West is gone, bring them back.

Mr. Danyluk: With Steve or without?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, first of all, go through the chair. Currently the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has the floor.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As I stated before, the regional planning commissions were in place prior to 1995. There were some challenges with that form of planning as the planning was predominantly by population. What did occur was that urban centres had, I would say, maybe more voice. At least that was the perception of rural municipalities, for sure. What did happen when you looked at the planning commissions, sometimes it curtailed growth – or I guess I can say muzzled growth – to the point that it eliminated growth.

Mr. Chairman, in 1995 this government got rid of the planning commissions and gave municipalities complete autonomy. Complete autonomy I think in some instances worked very well, but what it did do was eliminate some planning and especially what I would say was the co-operative planning. Without having that co-operative planning, what took place was that there seemed to be and there was an overlap or duplication of services, of infrastructure. With the recent growth pressures that our province has, municipalities, this government cannot really afford duplication. It's very important that municipalities work together. It's very important, as I said earlier, to have municipalities work together, to work together in co-operation so that we eliminate some of those areas.

[Mr. Eggen in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, this government has looked at municipalities: some of the challenges that they have, some of the issues that they have brought forward, and especially some of their requests for having initiatives and incentives to work together. Through the municipal sustainability initiative I know that these initiatives have provided those incentives to help municipalities work together. I think that is very progressive. There needs to be co-operation. The land-use strategy is not a strategy that is going to take one ministry to guide the future of where this government is going.

As you see here today, upon the request of the opposition and the third party you have four ministries before you. These four ministries have one main, common focus, and that is to work together towards a land-use strategy, to make and have an effective development of land, to work simultaneously, and, as I said previously, to have less of a footprint. The land-use framework is exactly that. It is a framework that is intended to be adopted by this government of Alberta as an overarching strategic policy that will provide provincial-level direction and guidance for land-use planning and management. It will define a vision for future land use, an approach to address balance. And I stress to you, Mr. Chairman, balance because I think that is what is very necessary: balance, the various demands of our lands, and our natural resources.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development would have any more to comment, especially, maybe, one of the questions that was asked of waters and streams and what support he may have to those questions.

Dr. Morton: Well, on water and streams I will defer to the Minister of Environment.

I will just reaffirm what the minister of municipal affairs just said, that certainly there'll be no proposal for an all-powerful land-use czar sitting in Edmonton trying to solve all the problems of the urban/rural conflict in Alberta. It's very clear from everything I've seen so far that with successful regional planning initiatives, the key factor is that it's driven from the grassroots, that it's community based. I think to the extent that we succeed in addressing issues of co-operation and co-ordination and planning in the metropolitan Edmonton and metropolitan Calgary areas that the key will be that sort of locally driven commitment.

I'd refer the hon. member to take a look at the report that will be tabled tomorrow in Canmore by the Calgary Regional Partnership as an example of a report that talks about respecting the autonomy of municipalities but, at the same time, achieving co-operation and co-ordination. What it says, if I can paraphrase, is that the government of Alberta should not coerce co-operation but facilitate co-operation and co-ordination by means of appropriate financial incentives and other appropriate policy tools. I think that's a nice way of stating it, and that's an approach that I think you'll see more of as the land-use framework develops.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We still have about a minute and 50 seconds. Does any other minister want to supplement? The Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that the member brings out a reality that we're all dealing with on this file, that there is overlap. There will always be overlap. The land-use strategy deals with issues of conflicting interest of land and deals with big pictures. There are municipal interests, there are individual interests, there are corporate interests, and there are government interests. Overarching all of that is the protection of the environment and the protection of rivers and streams in this particular case. There's nothing that is going to be negotiated into a land-use strategy that is going to allow for discretion on setbacks from rivers and forestry management and those kinds of things with respect to maintaining the ecosystem and maintaining the health of our water bodies.

I think we need to be clear that there is a great deal of work to be done on the issue of land-use strategy and conflicting interest of land, but there are some overarching principles that have to remain clean in that entire process. I don't think that I would get any argument from any of the other ministers that are involved in the strategy that those kinds of principles that protect our water, that protect our air would not be subject to the discussions and perhaps negotiations that would be involved in developing new land-use strategies.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The majority of my questions this time, if you don't mind, please, would be directed to the Minister of Energy. But before that – because I'm apt to run out of time – I would like the Minister of Environment's opinion on this, please. It is the EUB's 2007-2016 supply/demand outlook. It was released publicly two days ago, and it is an interesting snapshot of not only oil and gas development and production across the province, but it also for the first time includes details on electricity supply and demand.

It has been discussed many times in this House how we need to enhance or encourage more renewable power sources. The EUB maintains that about 5 per cent, Mr. Chairman, of Alberta's current electricity capacity is classified as renewable power that includes biomass and wind energy. They go on at length here to talk about some of the new wind projects that have been connected to the electricity grid in Alberta last year. They indicate here that Alberta's wind farms and turbines have the potential to supply a maximum of 387 megawatts of electricity to the grid.

You go a little further along, and they state that in 2006, coal-fired power plants generated 63 per cent of the province's electricity . . . natural gas and hydro accounted for 31 and 3 per cent respectively. The remaining 3 per cent of electricity was generated by wind and other renewable sources.

You flip the page, and the EUB has a very interesting bar graph that goes out through to 2016. Alberta's electricity generation is going to be in four sectors: coal, natural gas, hydro, and other. The "other," of course, includes renewable sources, and it doesn't seem to be growing at an anticipated rate. In my opinion it certainly doesn't satisfy our policy directives. I would suggest – and I may be wrong – that it doesn't meet the Minister of Environment's standards either.

I think we need to do a lot more to encourage and to incent the development of renewable forms of electricity. I know the limitations and restrictions there are on wind power because of the reliability issue, but certainly there are other forms of renewable energy that I think we should develop in this province. There's no percentage here, Mr. Chairman, that I have found to indicate that eight or nine years from now we're still going to only have 5 or 6 per cent of our electricity produced from renewable sources. I don't think it's good enough. If the minister could comment on that, I would be very grateful.

Certainly, there is a lot of work to do, and I think the Minister of Energy and his department will be instrumental in cleaning up our power plants, our coal-fired, baseload power plants through the development of CO₂ sequestration. I think this is a very good policy for the government to pursue whether it's with CO₂ sequestration from the oil sands or with our baseload coal-fired electricity plants. I think it can be done. We certainly need more research and development, but I think we should be going ahead with that. If there's such a thing as a fast-forward, I think we really should be implementing a fast-forward on the research and development of our CO₂ sequestration.

I read with interest in the paper today where the province of Quebec is implementing a carbon tax. Well, I considered your initiative, hon. minister, earlier this session to be a carbon tax. If that money that is to be collected, starting at $15 a tonne, is to be perhaps put into research and development on CO₂ sequestration, it would be very, very worth while. The report didn't mention your bill, the newspaper account that I read this morning, and I thought it should have.

But, certainly, now with the Minister of Energy, you spoke earlier in question period about 85 per cent of the electricity use in this province being industrial. I would really appreciate if you could have a look at the EUB because they're quoting a different statistic. They give us a different number in section 9.2.3, electricity demand in Alberta. There certainly are industrial and commercial needs that would come up into the 80s there, but I think to say that 85 per cent of all electricity consumed is for industrial purposes is an amount that would include commercial users as well.

Now, the land. The hon. minister talked earlier about tenure. How much land is left to sell in this province for oil and gas exploration? I know that some always is coming back into the system, but how much is left? Is the patch going to slowly migrate further west to northeastern B.C. or over to Saskatchewan? How much land exactly is left that could be sold for oil and gas exploration?

I'd like to talk a little bit more, if you don't mind, about the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The current approval process that the EUB uses when looking at project applications does not contribute to a sustainable land-use plan. When he announced his retirement, the former EUB chairman, Mr. McCrank, called for a single-window regulation and oversight of Alberta's oil sands development. The new process would include cumulative, environmental, and societal impact assessments for past, current, and future developments. Has the Department of Energy considered these changes? Why weren't these changes considered in the past?

Can the Minister of Energy tell us why the government has pushed forward so aggressively on oil sands development without a comprehensive land-use strategy? Has the Minister of Energy consulted with his colleagues the Minister of Environment, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, and municipal affairs to discuss recommendations made by Mr. McCrank? Given that the former chairman only spoke out publicly about his concerns after announcing his retirement, can the Minister of Energy tell us if the former chairman raised these concerns with the minister privately at an earlier date? What do you call those conferences you have with employees? Exit conferences, exit meetings, or whatever they're called. If the Minister of Energy had an exit meeting with Mr. McCrank, was this discussed?

Certainly, members of the oil patch have suggested to me – and I know that he's staring at me crossly, but I'm going to say this anyway – that the Department of Energy, the Department of Environment, and the Department of Sustainable Resource Development should be made into one. There are some oil patch people that feel that is a good way to improve the regulatory process. This is a suggestion that they've made to this side of the House.

Mr. McCrank also called for regional hearings for major energy projects. Has the Department of Energy considered regional hearings? Does the Minister of Energy agree that approving project after project without considering the impacts on various regions of the province leads to significant problems? Has the Minister of Energy discussed the issue of regional hearings with the minister of municipal affairs? Does the minister of municipal affairs agree that regional hearings would be beneficial for the future development of Alberta's energy resources? We've seen the impacts of rapid development without a plan when we examine the Fort McMurray region. The mayor of Fort McMurray has been very vocal.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: You've got 10 minutes between ministers to respond.

Mr. Renner: Actually, I will be relatively brief. The questions that were directed my way had to do with the member asking me to comment on the AEUB report. Given that the AEUB report is the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, and he was asking me to comment on renewable and alternative energy, which is also the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, I really don't have a whole lot to say other than that report is the result of a reflection of existing technology, existing government policy. At present we are just in the midst of updating government policy with respect to climate change.

The issue of alternative and renewable energy has been a matter of much discussion at our public meetings, at our stakeholder meetings, and there seems to be an impetus for the government to have a look at existing policies in that regard. I would suggest to the hon. member that should the government find it reasonable and responsible to change that policy, that would reflect a different outcome in any kind of report that the member refers to that would be written by EUB.

With that, I think I'll just leave the balance of the time to the Minister of Energy.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the member opposite for some insightful questions because he comes to the core of some of the business that we have in the province of Alberta going forward. Most certainly, the situation with respect to renewables and the fact that the member looks at EUB's graphs as not being necessarily very productive on the part of the Alberta government attempting to get more renewables into the grid with respect to electricity generation: what I would say is that one of the things that we're engaged in now is a wind study that we're doing with the wind energy people, and we'll have that completed, we hope, within one year. We're looking at about eight months from now. At that point what we would expect is that there will be a large increase in the amount of wind generation that will come into the grid in the province.

Of course, our cap right now is causing some nervousness in industry with respect to investment in wind power, and we will address that in a timely manner. We're very conscientious, and AESO has done very good work here with respect to being sure of the amount of wind power that we put into the system. It's nondispatchable, so when we put that type of generation into the grid, we must maintain the security of the grid in total. This will take us a long ways in being able to increase wind power.

I do have to also say that in the EUB's most recent publication with respect to the issue, if you go farther than the graph and start to actually look at the wind that's coming forward and even the things that'll come forward in '07, I think it's relatively robust. I mean, we've got 80 megawatts from Enmax, 54 from Benign, 14 from Wind Power Inc., Alberta Wind Energy with four. We move into the '09-10 time frame, and there's quite a bit of wind: 77 megawatts, again, with Benign on the out years. I believe that TransAlta is looking at 52 megawatts, certainly Alberta Wind, again, with 47, West WindEau with 100 megawatts, and Windrise with 100 megawatts. These things, you know, are there in the projections. They don't show up as strikingly in the graph format, but most certainly they're there.

Besides that, Mr. Chairman, we're moving ahead very aggressively with a program on renewables. As the member would know, we've got a $239 million program in my department to encourage biofuel and biogeneration.

The situation with respect to what we are going to do to get things under control on the carbon side: again, excellent questions. I would like to suggest to the member that we're putting pretty good stock in what he's talking about with respect to carbon capture and storage. We've got in conjunction with NRCan a fairly major blue-ribbon panel of experts that are looking at where the best opportunities are for Albertans with respect to carbon capture and storage.

Of course, there are two pieces to that business. One of them on a value-added side would allow for enhanced oil recovery and also the possibility of enhanced gas recovery. These pieces will be certainly studied, and I think we can come forward with something very positive with respect to that. However, that probably takes the place of somewhere in the neighbourhood of a quarter or maybe 20 per cent of the CO₂ that we will need to attempt to deal with. We have opportunities also for straight sequestration, which is not as good an opportunity from the point of view of economics. There are some differences with respect to what we need to do with the CO₂ and where we're going to put it, but again Alberta is very, very fortunate because under us there's an ocean, so we have some deep saline aquifers that will really accept CO₂ graciously. We think that there are some opportunities there for Albertans as well.

On the coal side I'd just like to answer that question again by saying to the member – and, again, I know that he's on top of these situations – that Sherritt has an application coming forward not strictly to do with electrical generation but on the coal side, the product basket that we can derive from coal, that's beneficial across the board. We look at coal to give us hydrogen, coal to give us some syngas, coal that then would allow us in the process to gather CO₂ economically and sequester it. So some very good information, I think, and very good projects will come forward out of that, and of course regular gasification of coal to produce electricity will also certainly be looked at in the future to do a replacement of plant retirements that are now fairly intense with respect to carbon emissions.

The load. Again, I did say industrial load, and I have to apologize to the member for not splitting it because it's kind of generally accepted when we discuss it that the commercial/industrial load is sort of a piece of business that's different from the domestic/residential load. So absolutely right: you need to take the industrial load and the commercial load together to get to the kind of numbers that I was discussing.

The land remaining for development, Mr. Chairman, is something that's very difficult to put a number on in acres or hectares or whatever because, of course, with every piece that we sell, you go from surface and a long ways down. You may have sold a piece of real estate that has rights at 3,000 metres, but there may be somebody that's interested below that, so that same piece of real estate can be sold again. Also, if somebody goes to 3,000 metres, decides that that's not an economic piece of business, and removes themselves from the play, it releases all the real estate above that, and it can be resold again. That real estate goes in and out of a basket, and it's very fluid. It's not easy for me to give you a number with respect to how many acres you could actually sell because it changes, and it's a robust business. The way it operates, of course, as the member knows: our bonus bid system generates revenue for the province, and that's part of it.

Chair's Ruling Dress Code in the Chamber

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I call upon the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, a question has been raised to me for clarification purposes. As you all know, we are currently sitting in Committee of Supply. When we are in committee stage, there is a little latitude for informality, and members are allowed to take their jackets off. What we do have also is officials present here today, and they have been sitting here throughout the estimates process. The permission for removal of jackets: as far as I'm concerned, heat applies to everybody the same way. You know, it's not only members who feel warm, but anybody else who is sitting beside them will also feel warm on a hot day. So I have no difficulty with officials being able to remove jackets during the estimates while we are proceeding with this matter.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm hoping that that explanation doesn't cut into our particular time with regard to the cross-ministry.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bonko: I will go on to the Minister of Environment. To the minister: I wanted to know if he will assure us that water protection will be a prime factor in any land-use strategy. He talked about some of the setbacks with regard to waterways, I believe, under the NRCB, and that would be under Sustainable Resource Development.

Confined feedlots have a competing use with the land, and where a lot of towns and municipalities have concerns is with regard to the runoff as they spread the manure. That manure not only impacts that particular operation but the majority who use that body of water for their drinking, not just the one person but that whole municipality. If we get rains like we did just a couple of days ago, that would be an awful lot of flooding that it would in fact take into that lake, and it would be polluted just from that one operation. I know that we've raised this as a concern, and we've got ongoing concerns with this, but that would be one concern that we'd have with regard to the runoff.

The other one. When we talk about forests and setbacks with regard to lakes and/or streams, again, if we have some of the clear-cutting or the logging too close to the banks, when we get that downpour, that huge downpour, we're going to get so much of a runoff that all that silt will in fact have to be absorbed or dealt with by the downstream municipalities such as the one out in Calgary. When we've got the Spray Lakes, if they cut too close to the riverbanks, we're going to have all that runoff.

So there's where we're talking about some of the setbacks and concerns with regard to the bodies of water. Maybe there could be some specifics with regard to the setbacks or how far an activity or a business can in fact be from the bodies of water because of the concerns that we've raised not only in this session but ongoing in other sessions. Obviously, our land and water are closely connected, and as such it's essential that any strategy considers the implementation of the protection of our natural environment.

Can the minister tell us exactly how his ministry will ensure that a provincial land-use strategy provides the maximum protection for our water and our air? Can the minister tell us if the effects of climate change will be considered in the formation of the land-use strategy? Has the minister admitted the effects of climate change? They're undeniable. He's already said that as well, and the scientific evidence is irrefutable. Given that he has admitted this, how will the climate mitigation be adapted into the land-use strategy?

Water use is a massive concern, and I'll give you an instance. NOVA Chemicals draws more water per year from the Red Deer River than the city of Red Deer itself. The city of Red Deer, however, returns much of the water into the system. NOVA Chemicals returns far less. This type of practice, as we know, is unsustainable. What will the minister do to ensure that companies who have large water licences per year are required to return more than they currently do now and safely return it to the river from which it was drawn?

What mandate will ensure that the percentage of water licences must be returned? Are these some of the considerations that are going to be proposed within the development of the land-use strategy for the province? Will the minister ensure that the land-use strategy will always take the path that provides the maximum protection for the environment if there is a conflict with any act, plan, or law? Albertans have spoken loudly and clearly that they see environmental protection as one of the top priorities not only here in Alberta, but that's a concern that's starting to develop right through Alberta and Canada. In other words, will the minister ensure that the interests of the industry and the Ministry of Energy do not trump environmental protection? Will he guarantee a balance between often competing goals?

The provincial land-use strategy will be key to ensuring that the air that we breathe is clean. What role will the minister play in ensuring that the location of industry or the density of industry, such as the Industrial Heartland, that I mentioned earlier, will not have an adverse effect on the air quality? Obviously, 10 upgraders in a concentrated area of land will affect the air quality, so the location of these industries is critical. What plan does the minister have in relation to the Industrial Heartland to ensure that the air quality and water quality are protected and will not suffer adverse effects? How has he worked with the ministries of Sustainable Resource Development and Energy to ensure that the environment is protected from the adverse effects of the high density of industry in Sturgeon and Strathcona counties?

Now, I know I'm getting close, so I'm hoping that you'll be able to get up and give me a little bit of the answers to some of the questions.

Mr. Renner: I will attempt to do so.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you have about 39 seconds left in this segment.

Mr. Renner: I can't exactly give two or three minutes to the Minister of Energy, who asked for some extra time.

Let's talk about the last issue because I think that's the most critical issue that the member brought forward, and that is – and I'll paraphrase – will industry trump environment? The answer is: absolutely not. How are we planning to do that? I've been talking about cumulative impact. I've been talking about having an opportunity for us to turn our environmental legislation and regulation upside down so that rather than getting on a prescriptive basis and saying, "This is the way things will be done," instead we talk about . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but the one and a half hours that were set aside for the Liberal caucus have now elapsed.

We now have the next 30 minutes set aside for the New Democratic caucus. I would call upon the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. If we could proceed with the system we used before, with five minutes and five minutes, that would probably be the best.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak on this cross-ministry day, and I will try to cover, with perhaps some breadth and with brevity as well, a number of issues that are important. Of course, this all is an assembly around the land-use framework, and SRD has been given that responsibility. As the Minister of Environment pointed out, it's ultimately for the retention of a sustainable environmental use of the land and to hopefully leave the land in a reasonable way or even an improved way from the way we were given it in the first place, so my first sets of questions are sort of centred around that idea. Certainly, the land-use framework is absolutely essential to bringing all of this together.

My first question is to the Minister of SRD, to ask him when we might be able to see a draft of the framework. We're very interested to see it. I know that we were meant to see it sometime late this spring, but, you know, it seems to be delayed. In the interim, because we have so much unprecedented growth taking place, I think it's incumbent upon us to perhaps slow the pace of resource development until we have some decisions that are made that can determine how we use our urban and rural land and transition land into the future because, of course, you only get one parcel of land.

You know, it's like building the LRT system in a city. Once you lose corridors to build an LRT system through a place, it becomes unimaginably more difficult to build a framework for a train system. That same analogy can expand to other urban issues or suburban issues or rural issues. Once we've already committed, whether or not we've made a plan, that's the way it is. I know that you know that our position is certainly to move ahead with our economy, and we are happy to have a robust economy but not at the expense of making unplanned decisions for the land that we have available to us here in this province.

With that in mind, I just wanted to ask something about the consultations that are being held. How many people have you been actually interacting with thus far in person, online, and by mail? I would be curious to know that, again, from SRD. You know, there is always difficulty in these consultations, and there never is a good time of the year, but certainly the consultation process during the spring, during the busiest time of the year, I think provided some problems for people to access that procedure.

When the Premier stated that he wouldn't tap the brakes on energy development, in effect, in our view, he undermined to some degree the value of this land-use framework and gave Albertans reason to believe that, you know, regardless of what our input might be, it's ultimately going to be business first with energy calling the shots. Again, I'm asking if the government is willing to slow energy development, particularly in the tar sand sector, if it is revealed to be necessary to protect the environment and to make way for other land uses, or are we going with the status quo on the tap the brake thing as the precedent that overrides other things and thus devalues the process of going through building a consultation for a land-use framework?

There are just so many questions that come to my mind in regard to land use and how the decisions are made by default, whether you make a decision or not, just because of the pace of development. You know, I found it interesting when I was following the news on the long weekend. The minister, of course, was aware, as I was, of the incidents that took place at Indian graves and other areas where there was a lot of environmental destruction from long-weekend partying and mud bogging and violent activity of all kinds. I was glad to see the minister there to at least have an impact on that and to hopefully make some decisions about that.

However, you know, when I fly over different parts of this province or I'm travelling on the ground in northern Alberta particularly, there is far greater damage taking place through resource exploitation. I'm sure the minister is aware that, say, for example, probably more bush is cut down by exploration of oil and gas than by forestry.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. ministers, just to remind you once again, the ND caucus had requested five-minute time slots. So we only have five minutes for response.

Any minister who wants to respond? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Although these may be slightly unrelated answers, I would like to just quickly address the situation with respect to the EUB. The EUB, as you know, is undergoing change now, and recommendations that have been made with respect to some of these issues and former employees in positions there are more musing about potential things that could happen rather than recommendations. On the idea that under the land-use framework we could have, perhaps, a better way to manage some of our hearings and that type of thing, I would suggest that that is in fact going ahead. The regional hearing framework, as a matter of fact, is in the pilot stage now.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other minister? We still have three and a half minutes.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are several questions that apply to me, I believe, from the hon. member.

When should he expect the draft of the land-use framework? December of this year is our goal. That's a postponement of about six months. At the December '04-05 stakeholder meeting in Red Deer the stakeholders themselves recommended that if it took more time to get it right, take the time because it was more important to get it right than to rush and make mistakes.

In terms of moratoriums or slowing things down, that sounds simple in theory, but if you actually begin to think about it in practice, how you do that and the implications it has for all sorts of players and investors becomes a bit of an administrative nightmare. I think that given the fact we're still moving with relative dispatch, getting a draft out by the end of this year is practical. In terms of slowdowns the Premier has made it pretty clear that there's not going to be any policy the intention of which is to slow down the economy. But as far as the land-use framework goes, it's certainly possible that there could be a recommended policy that, if adopted, would have the effect of slowing things down. I think that's a fairly important distinction, between a purposeful policy and a policy that has the intention of, say, enhancing protection of water in the north that might have the secondary effect of slowing things down.

Finally, in terms of consultations, there were 17 public consultation sessions. I don't have the exact figure – but those will be published – of how many people attended, how many workbooks were turned in, or questionnaires were turned in at those. There are two other sources also. The questionnaire/workbooks can be mailed in, and they also can be done online. All that information will be made public when it's collected and collated.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We've still got another minute and 10 seconds. Any other minister?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, if I could, I think there are a couple of things that I might be able to help clarify a bit. There was a suggestion that if you overfly the province of Alberta, you see a lot of environmental damage created by the energy industry. I would like to clarify that what you see if you overfly the province of Alberta may be, in certain circumstances, where harvesting is taking place with respect to the fibre industry. I think we have relatively robust systems in place to reforest. I know that the companies that are involved in that are very prudent with respect to what they do in that area. The other thing, of course, that comes up when these comments are made are situations with respect to the mining operations that take place in oil sands production.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I guess that it always comes back to being willing to assume best practices. I think, certainly, we have to have a strategy in place but to adopt best practices at every turn. You know, when I'm talking about the flying over thing, you see a lot of remnants of the historical exploration for oil and gas, with the outlines and the wellhead sites. I know now that the industry is moving to not having to cut so many lines. So it's just a question, when you have that technology available, for us as legislators to implement it on a province-wide basis as soon as possible. I think that's what's incumbent upon us here when we're building a land-use strategy and making legislation in general. We are once again looking to augment and to enforce a strong economic policy at the bottom line – I mean, that's what makes the province turn – but at the same time to ensure that we're not selling out for the future.

I know that five minutes is very short, so I'm just going to touch on a couple of areas that I would like to invite discussion and perhaps reflection on as well. One is the Upgrader Alley and the new bitumen upgraders that we expect to see northeast of Edmonton, starting now and into the next decade or so. Certainly, as you know, we've been encouraging the local upgrading of bitumen to finished products here in the province of Alberta but in a balanced manner. If we say that we have a certain limitation with the water and the land and the energy inputs that are required to do bitumen upgrading, then that becomes a natural limiting factor, we believe, to tar sand development and the mining and extraction of the raw material as well.

Now, one area that I would like to just point out here: where is the water going to come from for the bitumen upgraders? I read in the paper with some interest this morning – and I've of course heard this before in the Fort Saskatchewan plans and the Tofield plans with Sherritt – to use the municipal waste water to supply some of the water needs of the bitumen upgraders or the coal gasification plant in Tofield and so on and so forth. You know, we have to remember, of course, that you must put that water back. Part of the expectation is to have municipal waste water from Edmonton or the equivalent going back into the North Saskatchewan and into the river system.

We have to be careful that we're looking at the whole process. Of course, if you are taking that water out and it doesn't get back into the North Saskatchewan water system, then in fact we are ultimately shortchanging the whole water hydrological cycle that is necessary in the big picture to fulfill needs downstream, including other provinces downstream. So that's one issue I'd like to invite comment on. Where is the water going to come from for the bitumen upgraders, and are we going to impose a limitation based on how much we can sustain the water use of the Industrial Heartland projects and still maintain downstream flow?

Another question, again, in a similar area northeast of Edmonton but certainly around the province, is a glaring lack of protection for agricultural land. You know, within the land-use framework it's absolutely essential that we have written in stone that good agricultural land has to be protected in some managed way, certainly not in some blanket way, once again, but in some quite decisive way.

Let's say, for example, northeast of Edmonton, again, which has some of the very best land in the province and has some of the longest growing seasons – well, I think the longest growing season – in the whole province. You know, areas like that in other jurisdictions, in other provinces and countries, are absolutely off limits in terms of development because we know that's where food production takes place; that's where our future food production takes place. Considering the situation with energy and CO₂, we want to produce food inside the province as much as we can. It's just a wise thing to do. Is the land-use framework going to have some very solid and indisputable protection of prime agricultural land built into the whole thing?

Then my last comment and question is in regard to intensive livestock operations. I'm always getting complaints about intensive livestock operations and their inability to deal with the waste products that they produce. You know, there just seems to be a singular lack of interaction or even just practical analysis of intensive livestock operations. There's simply too much manure . . .

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There's no doubt that land use, especially the concerns around quality land, is an issue. It's an issue for agriculture producers and, I would also say, should be an issue for this land-use framework and this government. You know, as a farmer I definitely have a lot of passion about farmland and . . .

Mr. Knight: You sure don't show it.

Mr. Danyluk: I sure don't show it?

I would say that the development of urban centres all started out surrounding the land that was of best production. The expansion of urban centres, really, revolves around those centres, and the expansion of those centres covers some of our best farmland in Alberta. We very much need to be cognizant, and we need to be stewards of that land. I know that it's a cliché, but they're just not making any more good farmland. We have to protect it.

We do have, I believe, very good policies in place in regard to manure management, intensive livestock operations, and we need to make sure that that criteria are adhered to, that we protect the environment, protect the water, which is so critical, and also protect the land. We know that we have individuals and families that are coming from Europe and from other parts of the world, and their appreciation for what we have and their appreciation of the conservation of land is primary.

I just want to say that some of the comments that you have brought forward are very much near and dear to this ministry.

The Deputy Chair: We have another two and a half minutes.

The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, first of all, the hon. member talked about the longest growing season, northeast of Edmonton. I guess that it kind of proves the point the folks down my way have, that people in Edmonton don't see much past the horizon. In fact, the longest growing season is in the Medicine Hat area, not the Edmonton area. [interjections] Most hours of sunshine? All right.

I want to talk briefly about the whole issue of municipal waste water being used for industrial feeds. This is a genuine win-win situation. While the member is right that at present most of the municipal waste is returned into the river system, it doesn't have to be that way. I think everyone needs to understand that in many ways it's not preferable that it be that way. If we can find alternate uses for that waste water and not return it into the stream, a couple things are accomplished. We can reduce the number of other industrial licences that have to be given out because we're reusing water that's already been through the system once. More importantly, we're increasing the quality of water that's in the river. We're not adding nutrients to the river. As good as we are able to treat industrial waste water and municipal waste water, there still is phosphorus and there still are some other chemicals that are left in that discharge. They don't pose a health risk, but they do create the opportunity for a decrease in the overall quality of water in the river.

When we talk about in-stream flow needs, it's a balance. Sometimes we don't need as much water flowing in the river to maintain that ecosystem if it's good quality water as we would if we had compromised the quality of that water in one way or another. So it really, truly is a win-win situation, that we see municipal waste water being used at industrial sites. Most of the time it's used for cooling, so it ends up going into the atmosphere in the form of steam and goes back into the hydrological cycle. It doesn't necessarily come back into the river, but certainly it's not lost. It's not like injecting water underground.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of, obviously, quick points. I would just refer back about the land use and specifically about densification around our major cities. Land use comes back to how municipalities operate around each other. Certainly, I'm talking about the city of Edmonton. I notice that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing was talking about farmland, and I notice that from the Journal of, I think, March 29, we see that a whole "new city with highrise apartments and pedestrian-friendly streets is going to be built in Strathcona County." It says, "The city will be built from scratch on farmland west of Highway 21 and north of the Yellowhead Highway. It could eventually grow to 200,000 people."

Now, that worries me that out of the blue on the north end of the city this could happen. At least, they're looking at it. I think that we have to really begin to deal with this problem. It's a broad problem. It's densification within the city itself, it's how we get the municipalities to work together, and it's land use. I'd like some comments about that from the minister to see if there is an update on that.

I know that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing would be extremely disappointed if we didn't have a brief discussion about the housing. Obviously, the economy depends on housing. If we can't get housing on the market fast enough, well, you know, it's going to be very difficult to maintain the boom or anything else. Some would argue that that's not a bad thing, but that's reality. I just want to refer the minister to the latest rental market report from Canada Mortgage and Housing. I think it tells the picture very quickly. The Alberta apartment vacancy rates across the province: Wood Buffalo, 0.2 per cent; Grande Prairie, 0.9 per cent; Edmonton, 1.1 per cent; Red Deer, 2.1 per cent; Calgary, 0.5 per cent; Lethbridge, 1.3 per cent; Medicine Hat, 1.7 per cent.

That doesn't surprise us. Again, we can get into the arguments about rent guidelines and the rest, but I raise this because, actually, when we look at what's being done about apartments, we notice in Calgary and Edmonton that we've actually lost apartments from the spring to now. It's worse than it was before. There's been a slight improvement across the province, roughly a thousand units, but really not enough to have much impact. In our two major cities there are actually less apartments now than there were in the spring. I expect it's, you know, condo conversions, the rest of the things that we've talked about. I think, to the Minister of Energy and the others, that if we want to bring people in and we want to continue with the vibrant economy that we talk about, this is going to continue to be a problem.

In view of these latest figures, what contingency plans? We've obviously had the debate here in the Legislature, Mr. Chairman, about rent guidelines. We've said that we need to bring more affordable housing on, and we're talking specifically here about rental units. In our two major cities there are actually less apartments now than there were before. I guess I'd like the minister to comment on this. Is there a contingency plan? If this keeps going the way it is, you know, we're going to have this debate four months from now, six months from now.

I just would conclude with the remaining time in the minister's discussion, myself, about affordability. It's one thing for the government to say that we can help, and some help is being given on an individual basis with the eviction fund and other things. But there is a growing population, a growing number of people, that are just above that, and I don't know what we're going to do about them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. We do have roughly about three minutes left.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to be fast. I can assure the hon. member that I have the same concerns about the development that you spoke of, the expansion, maybe not so much on the development side but very much on the land side. It is good land in that area, and there is a concern.

Mr. Chairman, just a short discussion about housing and the low vacancy rates. As I have mentioned many times, it is a concern when you have people moving into Alberta, trying to have increased housing. I really believe that we need to maintain stability as far as the investment into units. I think we need to encourage the building of secondary suites.

I want to say that the Municipal Government Act currently has provisions for municipalities to outline future development in their area with the creation of municipal development plans, and that is critical. It deals not only with housing, but it deals with issues of municipalities such as the comments that you made about Strathcona and Edmonton. It also encourages municipalities to undertake intermunicipal development plans with neighbouring municipalities. The recent recommendations from the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability on such issues as regional co-operation and dispute resolution are being reviewed at this time, and the government response is expected later this month.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, the new municipal sustainability initiative also provides, I would say, substantial financial support for intermunicipal initiatives to help municipalities cope with those growth pressures. I believe everything helps. We need to work together.

The Deputy Chair: Does any other minister wish to supplement? We still have about a minute and a half.

Hon. member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, you may use the balance of the time.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. Very briefly. I'll just finish what I was talking about. The reality is that affordable housing is getting, especially in the two major cities, worse rather than better. We're going to have to deal with that, I believe, especially if we want to maintain or not put the brakes on in terms of the development. How are we going to deal with this?

To the minister. What I'm finding – and I'll be very brief – is that we're dealing with some of the most serious cases through the eviction fund, but there's a whole group of people. We used to say affordability – we've had this discussion – was that no more than 30 per cent of your income should be going to accommodation. What is that new affordability? I expect now that it's probably 50, 60 per cent. The government refused that, but there's a whole group of people – and this will have a serious impact on our economy and all the rest of the things we're doing – that are around that level. They're finding it harder and harder. They're working, finding it harder and harder to live, and the major reason is accommodation. I think we're missing a part of it. Hopefully, we can bring more housing on, but that will take time. I guess I'm asking if there's a contingency plan down the way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the time allocated for the New Democratic caucus has now elapsed. The balance of the time, which is about one hour from now, is assigned for private members. If you would like to participate, please advise me, and we will recognize you.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Can I answer his questions?

The Deputy Chair: What I can do is I can recognize you as the first person to bring remarks, and you can answer some of those questions therein. But we will be enforcing, again, the 10-minute rule from here on.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

4:40

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It definitely brings me to a comment when we're talking about housing. I'm so happy to hear the New Democratic Party member talk about not putting brakes on development – I've been waiting for those comments – and making sure that our development continues and we try to continue to grow in this province. If I interpret his words right, my interpretation of his comments says to me that the hon. member is making sure that we do not have any sort or type of rent controls so we can continue in the development direction and development focus so that we are able to continue to have more units that are provided for individuals that need affordable housing, for individuals that are in need. So I thank the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm very pleased and honoured to rise today in this Assembly to debate and bring forward questions on this cross-ministry. My questions will be primarily to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the Minister of Energy, but I welcome any answers from the other ministers.

One of the first is that people in my riding want every effort to be put forward to maintain processing of petrochemical resources, petroleum resources in our province, especially bitumen. I guess the question on that particular item is: has the Department of Energy encouraged looking at the development of bitumen processing in the southern Alberta area, especially in the Medicine Hat area, given that there are many, many workers from Calgary, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge that travel all the way to Fort McMurray on a regular basis to work in similar types of facilities and we may be bringing them to work in facilities in the Heartland region? Given that the piping of bitumen works to break it down and crack it somewhat the greater distance it goes, going to southern Alberta may be of economic benefit to Alberta if we develop there. That's the first question.

The second one is an item that I've talked about a number of times in this Legislature, and that's regarding geothermal power. What efforts has the department given forward to support the Alberta Geological Survey and the Alberta Research study on low and medium geothermal resources? For example, the May 2006 issue of The PEGG – that's the engineers' magazine – presents estimates of the potential energy locked in Alberta's geothermal waters at 2 trillion to 5 trillion barrels of oil equivalent given present technologies.

Now, another issue that I think is important in terms of the economics of oil sands development is the energy necessary for processing. One potential matter for developing that has been put forward is the idea of nuclear power generation. I've had some scientists come to me and say that in order to do it in a viable economic manner, this would take many, many smaller nuclear plants in the tar sands area. My question is: have there been any estimates put forward by the department, or has this question been looked into as to the number and size of nuclear plants necessary to be viable heating sources for oil sands production? Some of the scientific sources have said that it may make no economic sense for that particular industry.

I'll get back to geothermal a little later. But in looking at my 10 minutes, I'd like to just bounce back over to Sustainable Resource Development. I'm looking at the strategic priority 2 in, I believe, the business plan, the biodiversity strategy, which looks to conserving biological diversity and enabling "sound management of Alberta's natural resources on a sustainable basis." This is an important goal. In many ways forest management agreements, or in the short form FMAs, are charged with maintaining forest health by those forest industries enjoying access to these FMA areas. One of my primary concerns in the management of FMAs is the prevalence of monoculture replanting schemes for harvested areas, mainly monoculture replanting schemes.

If one looks to the government priority of managing biodiversity, indeed, maintaining biodiversity, I am very concerned that forestry companies, especially in difficult economic times for forestry, are not looking beyond monoculture to any large degree. A question to the minister is: how is the ministry ensuring that forestry companies maintain diverse planting schemes in difficult economic times for the industry?

Another concern with the biodiversity strategy and also linking with priority 3, which is sustainable resource and environmental management, is the planting and harvesting of species that are from western Canada but nontraditional for western Canadian industry use. For example, we've rarely utilized birch for much more than firewood. Mr. Chair, I have personal experience in the past of seeing valuable sawlog-quality birch being buried or wasted in other ways when pipeline rights-of-way or other resource industry needs and even the logging of other species are the priority. Now, birch sawlog of, say, 24 inches at the butt, once processed, cut, and kiln-dried, produces finished product from that sawlog of furniture-quality hardwood lumber worth thousands of dollars. Yet we often see this species wasted. I've seen it buried.

One of the problems is that we've never established a true finished hardwood industry. Producers have often tried to deal with these logs as if they were softwoods like spruce or pine, but hardwood is not handled in its drying or storage processes in any way that is at all similar to softwood production. What happens is that producers just throw up their hands and say that the species is useless and too hard to handle and it's warping, and they end up wasting even their finished product or what they attempt for a finished product. But it is very possible to do so if we follow the traditional practice that has been developed for hundreds of years in eastern Canada, in Europe, and other areas.

I submit, Mr. Chair, that the real problem is that we've not adopted these proper hardwood handling and production processes here in western Canada, especially Alberta, for the most part. There are a few producers, but we have obviously not been successful. If one just goes to the supply stores, you see that we are importing birch from eastern Canada and hardwoods from as far away as the Congo, while we are burying hardwood that could be used for similar uses. There is little economic incentive to replant birch if there is no use for it other than fireplaces, yet it is an important natural species for Alberta.

Mr. Chair, the birch species is just an example, but it leads to the question: is the ministry doing all it can to ensure that species such as birch are being used to maximum economic value? A second question in this area is: is the ministry doing anything to develop the nascent hardwood industry in Alberta for finished furniture products? A third question is: with little development in species such as birch, does this mean that we are limiting biodiversity and the replanting of this and other similarly dealt with species?

I return to geothermal now. I'll give some quotes from articles on canada.com, the Toronto Star, the Edmonton Journal, and other sources.

Like nuclear and unlike solar or wind power, geothermal provides a constant, predictable source of energy in the form of heat – used directly or to generate electricity. Another benefit is that geothermal energy releases virtually no airborne pollutants and there are no waste-disposal and security concerns like with nuclear power.

It's also Kyoto-friendly. According to Natural Resources Canada, new geothermal facilities emit 0.1 kilograms of carbon per megawatt hour of generated electricity, compared with 185 kilograms of carbon for a coal-fired plant. They also outperform coal and nuclear plants in terms of reliability . . . Geothermal power is generated from heat of 80C to 200C, deep in the Earth's crust, and is not the same as ground-source heat pumps or "geo-exchange" systems, which use constant temperatures just a few metres below the Earth's surface to assist in heating and cooling buildings.

Now those are often what we see in the geothermal house-heating business, which are actually quite viable.

4:50

It doesn't take much extrapolation to show that the deeper you go, no matter where you drill, you will encounter 250-degree temperatures . . . [and] the power supply should exist just about any place, if you go deep enough . . . Geothermal fits with our principles of sustainable development, in that there's a potential economic benefit, which is reducing our operating costs and dependence on natural gas, especially for the oil sands, and emitting almost no greenhouse gas emissions.

In northern Alberta, the temperature of the Earth's crust rises by about 30 [degrees celsius] for each kilometre of depth. Wells drilled down six kilometres could encounter rock at temperatures above 200 [degrees].

Heat could be brought to the surface by forcing water down wells, under high pressure, so it would percolate through pores and fissures in the rock, return to the surface through recovery wells as steam, and be used to separate oil from sand . . .

Geothermal heat, rising to the surface . . . has been used [as a source] since prehistoric times . . .

Geothermal heat mining would build on Alberta's oilpatch expertise. The report says it would require improvements to drill bits, casing methods, cementing techniques, downhole sensors and reservoir mapping.

That's a report that's quoted in the canada.com article Greener Oil Sands Would Drill for Heat.

We have Shell. We have others in the oil sands looking at this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thanks to the member opposite for the questions and the interest in a couple of different areas in the province here with respect to the energy industry, certainly the questions with respect to upgrading and refining. As the member knows, the EUB have published their latest figures with respect to where we're headed on the energy front in the province of Alberta, the reserves and requirements for energy for the province over the next kind of 10-year time frame. Just as an overview I would like to let the member know that as we stand now in 2006-07, we're at about a 65 per cent level of upgrading in the province of Alberta. As the member knows, most of that's done in areas now where mining operations are taking place, and the mining and upgrading and, in some circumstances, some refining also are done in proximity, so these facilities are actually joint facilities.

However, as we move forward with respect to bitumen production and upgrading, on the out-years heading to 2014, '15, '16, in that time frame, very interestingly, those numbers actually turn heavily in the favour of Albertans with respect to upgrading. We don't know yet where we would actually land on refining because the situation with respect to refining gets down to an ability to actually deliver transportation fuels out of Alberta to marketplaces where they're required. Nevertheless, the synthetic crude output and use inside the province will account for approximately 75 per cent and maybe even higher in the years 2015, 2016 and about 25 per cent of non-upgraded bitumen, you know, used as product out of the province. We are heading into an area where there will be a lot more bitumen certainly produced and a lot more upgraded. By the way, at that point, about 2016, we'll be in the neighbourhood of 2.8 million barrels to 3 million barrels a day of production. That is taking into account only projects that are before us and projects under construction currently.

The encouragement to process in southern Alberta. Although I understand the member's concept and don't disagree that there are potentials to do these things, the infrastructure around clustering for these projects isn't currently as robust in southern Alberta as it is in the Industrial Heartland. Most certainly, clustering with respect to the issue of upgrading and refining makes a lot of sense. Also, the Minister of Environment pointed out very clearly that water usage with respect to these issues is mainly nonprocessed water, so in fact it is cycled. The constraints in southern Alberta with respect to water would probably make these situations much more difficult in that area.

Geothermal power. Again, alternatives that are going to come into place and into play in the province of Alberta are very, I think, exciting, and geothermal is certainly one of them. I had an opportunity a couple of times recently – the most recent opportunity was yesterday – to meet with two representatives of the geothermal industry in the province of Alberta. You know, interestingly enough, they, again, of course, are very excited. There are about 23 commercial operations installing and operating geothermal systems now in the province of Alberta. I believe that they indicated to me that there are well over 1,000 installations that are operating successfully in the province. Again, you know, we're excited. We think that there are great opportunities here for Albertans with respect to geothermal.

The issue around geothermal and the production of electricity. There are two types of geothermal energy. I think that we need to kind of break this down. The one that most people think of as geothermal, that's used for home heat or, you know, that type of heat would probably be more appropriately described, I think, as earth energy. The actual deep geothermal: there are a few major players in North America that are doing some research projects with respect to deep geothermal, where you would perhaps find some relatively hot spots that would allow for steam generation. That is a different type of geothermal usage. Again, not normally the type of thing that we would see in general use for home heating or building heat, that kind of thing.

Mr. Chairman, again, oil sands energy intensity. There isn't, I know, a player in the oil sands industry today that isn't keyed very keenly on that issue. The energy in for each unit of energy out is extremely important. It does a number of things. Of course, it makes good sense from the point of view of the economy and the economics around a project, but it also helps them on the carbon side. The whole carbon cycle becomes a little better and more palatable if they can reduce the energy intensity.

Nuclear was brought up. Now, the question is: have we actually done work with respect to, you know, what size of a nuclear plant would fit what piece in the oil sands industry? I'll repeat that the province of Alberta is neither a proponent nor a detractor from any form of alternative energy, including nuclear. However, the proponents that would come forward would come from industry. Of course, they will best assess their requirement for energy, and they would be able to best assess whether or not any current or future nuclear technology may or may not fit a particular facility that they're working with.

Of course, we've had recently in the media and, you know, press releases around some proponents that are looking. The process is in place. It initially under our Constitution is a federal issue, so if people are going to make application, the province would not receive the applications initially. They'll go to the Canadian Nuclear Safety Commission. We would certainly be involved from that point forward in the best interests of Albertans.

What we are doing is we're working on bringing forward a concept paper around the use of nuclear in the province of Alberta. It will be well discussed in public over the next few months as this thing unfolds. I'm looking forward to the participation of the public in the discussion to determine what it is that Albertans would like us to do with respect to the issue around nuclear generation. Given, you know, the environmental concerns and given the constraints that we have to produce electricity in Alberta by other means – and we do have lots; of course, clean coal and hydro come to mind – nuclear will be an interesting discussion.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few comments I want to make about land use. I'm going to start off by addressing my comments to the minister of municipal affairs. This is on land use for affordable housing. I think that somewhere along the way we got into the habit of thinking of affordable housing as being actual single-family dwelling or multi-family dwelling concepts as opposed to something that we may actually require just on a shorter term basis, for between five and 10 years, which would be more of a trailer court concept in or adjacent to some of our urban municipalities.

The reason I mention this is because it is something that perhaps on public land we could work on water and sewage services. People would be able to move trailers or winterized RVs into some of these areas for six months or a year while they're here working. A lot of people are coming from other provinces, not with the intention they'll necessarily stay but, rather, because there's a job that they can do here for six months or a year, and then they really want to go home. I have a number of people like that in my constituency, Minister, and they actually don't have a place to put things like RVs.

Today breaking in the news is a story from just outside of Chestermere. There's a small trailer park that was never really set up for overnight stays, nor was it ever set up for longer term stays. But today the Calgary health authority have expressed concerns, and there's now a court order to shut this place down because there are a lot of people in tents and small campers that are there. It's not safe. It's not properly sanitized. There are issues in that area – and it's not inside an urban area, but it is, in fact, inside Rocky View – with the private landowner who has developed this. Understanding their problem, they now have to find another place to go to, and the campgrounds are basically full.

So the real portion of my question, Minister, is this: have you guys considered when you're looking at this problem that we are dealing with today – and it is, I believe, a short-term issue – some of the quicker fix solutions that can be put together and then taken apart in five to 10 years, when they're no longer necessary? Then the land could be reclaimed and used for other purposes. I ask you that on your land-use side.

On the energy side I wanted to talk about biofuels for a moment,

Minister. When we're talking about land use there, we're talking about cropland, some forestry products that can be used in biofuels. When you're looking at that, can you please tell me the breadth and scope of the impact that you see that actually having on agricultural uses for land? Are we doing things on a fuel side, on a land-use side that will detract from forestry or detract from agriculture, or is this just a win-win for everybody? Will we be changing – and this is SRD – the scope of what we're trying to grow by way of trees for cellular consumption for biofuel concepts?

I know that you probably don't have a quick answer for that, but it is an issue that I think will grow in importance as the biofuel sectors continue to develop. Will it be impacting food sources for some countries, making it more difficult for very, very poor countries to actually supply food for their nations? I know that's probably way outside the reach and scope of what you're doing, Minister of Energy, but I think that it's an important consideration. We need to make sure we have proper answers for it.

On the land-use side I would like some assurance from one of you that when we're talking about our land-use strategy, we are not talking about shutting down industrial development in our province but, rather, working through a land-use strategy that will allow people to participate in recreation but also respecting that businesses and agriculture can continue to coexist on this land. I think that once in a while we get a little bit myopic on the size of this province, perhaps not necessarily understanding the immensity of it, that it is larger than most European countries, that in fact it is about the same size as California with 35 million people in it, and we have 3.4 million. We still have to be able to develop this province to the best of our ability, and that means there has to be room for economic development as well as environmental sustainability.

So whatever assurance you can give me on that side that says that we're not going to shut development down in our province while we try to be the great stewards of the world here. I do believe in land-use management and good stewardship, but I think that from the whole, as a person that grew up in the energy industry and then was involved in agriculture for 20 years, there was no part of it where I didn't see people that cared about our province and wanted to do the best job they could. I want to make sure that we don't lose sight of that.

My last comment is for Energy, and it's this. There are way less rigs working today than there were a year ago. The latest report that I've heard is that about 3,500 workers that have been drillers and rig workers are not employed this year. In a province that's short of labour, has anything been done to work with some of the oil sands companies or the big construction companies to make sure that these people, with all of their expertise, do not fall through the cracks somewhere but, rather, we utilize their skills and their energy to make sure that they're employed today on other things that we as a province need to get done?

So just your comments on any and all of those things would be greatly appreciated. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We have two ministers rising. I'm wondering who wants to go first. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to make my comments very short. I want to say that the affordable housing funding that is available is in conjunction and co-operation with municipalities. I do want to say that the trailer court proposal is a very good proposal. To give you an example, we have had discussions with the city of Edmonton, and the city of Edmonton is doing exactly that.

If the municipality has funds and they feel that that's the direction that they should take, that is a very good direction. If it's a municipality that didn't get funds because they didn't fit into the criteria of the three categories, they can apply to our ministry for a project like that. I will say that that is a very positive project because it is to get people some sort of lodging and quick lodging. It's a very good solution.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Danyluk: You weren't even ready.

5:10

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In fact, I was. I was actually born ready.

The member brings up some very good points. With respect to biofuels, of course, the member knows that we have a program in place to encourage biofuel in the province of Alberta, and I'd mentioned it earlier. The points around, you know, the agricultural land and forestry land that may be involved in the biofuels industry eventually most certainly brings with it some challenges. There will be impact on agricultural land. When you look at some of the opportunities going forward, particularly in cellulosic ethanol, some of the agricultural crops that are only absolutely zero food value – they're only to be grown for things like cellulosic ethanol – will it become perhaps more economic for an agricultural producer to do nothing but cater to the fuel business? We certainly are cognizant of that.

Again, it's a critical thing that we maintain enough of our agricultural base in the food industry that we don't subject ourselves to total import of all the food products that we need in the province. So I certainly take your point seriously, and we have had an opportunity to look at it. It's a little early for us because, as you know, biofuel in Alberta is a very, very small piece of business. As it grows – and we hear, you know, the 400 million and so litres, infrastructure intending to come into the province. At those points in time we will certainly need to be prepared to address that.

On the forestry side we're already into this to a degree, although it's not on the cellulosic side or forestry issues around fuel. Most certainly, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne will be very familiar with hybrid trees that we're experimenting with. We have them in my riding, and I've been and visited a few in Whitecourt-St. Anne. I think that we would, again, want to be extremely careful that we do not allow a situation that would replace our mixed wood stands or the boreal forest stands that we have with, you know, a type of reforestation, a type of tree that would only be useful for the fuel industry. Certainly, your comments are well placed and will be considered.

With respect to food costs, it's already happening. I don't know about internationally, but I can certainly tell you that in studies that have been done recently in North America, the United States particularly, anything that is using corn starch and corn syrup for sweetening, the price is already going up. Foodstuff will certainly take a hit when the biofuels industry gets into full swing – there's no doubt – because the competition for that product is there.

The rig count, I think, was the last issue. Most certainly drilling indications that I got today – and probably the same ones that the member is aware of – would indicate that we're at about 30 per cent.

The Deputy Chair: A couple of things I just want to bring to your attention. First, for Hansard to pick up your voice, it would be appropriate for you to speak up front.

Secondly, the camera that's capturing you is right in front of you, and I'm sure that the audience that's watching you intently right now throughout Alberta doesn't want to see the other part of yourself.

You may now proceed.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is probably my best side.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to the rig count and the workers involved, again, the member brings up, you know, a very important discussion around what we would do with 3,500 people that are actually very well trained and highly skilled with respect to operating oil well and gas well drilling rigs in the province of Alberta. Most certainly, those numbers of people that would want to engage themselves in other sectors of the industry will find opportunities there. We're very hopeful that we would not lose these individuals.

The way the cycle actually works, they're drilled ahead quite a bit, so there will be number of these wells that require tie-in. So although the labour for the drilling force would decrease, there may be, certainly, opportunities for those individuals to be taken up in the secondary process where these wells would be put into gathering systems and tied into the production facilities. That's where we will hope to concentrate our efforts: to have these skilled workers remain at work in Alberta, still, you know, in the energy industry and engaged but in a different part of the industry.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We still have about two minutes and 40 seconds.

The hon. Minister for Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I believe the hon. member had a fourth question that had to do with the land-use framework process. She was concerned about whether it was just about recreation and ignoring the importance of continued economic and industrial growth. I just want to reassure her that I'm confident that that's not what will come out of the land-use framework, that it will strike an appropriate balance between environmental protection and recreation on the one hand and economic growth and industrial development on the other.

I think it's not a question, as the Premier has said, about stopping growth; it's a question of smart growth. I think you'll see a lot of discussion not about stopping drilling but about drilling practices. What are the best practices? Same thing with pipelining: are there better ways to do pipeline that are less intrusive? Similar best practices discussions around agriculture: when it comes to conflict of interest in some of the recreation areas, instead of prohibiting things, maybe sequencing who does what, when. I think it's obviously an important concern, but I'm confident that the land-use framework will strike an appropriate balance.

The Deputy Chair: Any other minister who wants to supplement answers? Very well.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have a couple of items that I'd like to talk about, one with seniors' housing and the other dealing with the forest sector. You know, it's no secret that the lumber industry in Alberta has been in a very major slump. A recent report from the Alberta Forest Products Association provides numbers that show that the situation's likely to get worse before it gets better. Year-end product value of $3.2 billion: the industry in Alberta suffered a $569 million decrease over the previous year and was down dramatically from '04, which was $4.3 billion.

You know, Minister, in the past 12 months a number of developments have occurred that provide signals to which scenarios are emerging that are very concerning to communities like Whitecourt and other forest-based communities. The pine beetle infestation is without a doubt accelerating in Alberta. Environment: the increased public concerns about water, climate change, greenhouse gas emissions. The biofuels: a major policy thrust in the U.S. to increase ethanol and biodiesel production with effects on grain and land prices. In industry increased competition and reduced profitability are leading to mill closures and consolidation in the industry. Questions raised about legal ownership of forest slash and carbon credits will rise.

Most of all what concerns me and other members of this government that have forest-dependent communities: we know that further loss of forest jobs, you know, are about to come. It may not be this year; it may not be next year, but we have some pretty strong signals that are being put in front of us.

So, minister responsible for SRD, I would ask, you know, that you respond to these issues. What in your budget are you doing to get ahead of the curve? What scenarios, what strategies are your department using to help industry, to help our forest-based communities? What do we have in the future to make sure that this industry stays alive, stays healthy? It's an important industry to Alberta. It's an important industry to our forest-based communities.

Next on the housing issues. I'd ask the Minister for Municipal Affairs and Housing to think about a couple of scenarios, one of which concerns me and the job that I presently have as the chairman of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. I'm hearing a lot from seniors just lately, especially since they've been receiving their municipal tax bills. You know, old age pension went up 1.9 per cent this year, 1.9 per cent. I saw my mum's tax bill go up 28 per cent. I saw from all over this province calls and the letters I'm getting from seniors about the ability to stay in their homes because of the rising municipal taxes.

You know, the department of seniors has done an admirable job understanding that the education portion of the taxes were going up. They left 2005 as a base year, and for the years after that seniors are able to apply and get a rebate, so it freezes their municipal taxes back to '05. But on the municipal side we haven't received that. Only one jurisdiction – the city of Edmonton is the only one that I know that has recognized senior homeowners in a rebate program. I have to acknowledge the mayor and the council for doing that. They have partnered with the department of seniors. They have identified those who get the Alberta seniors benefit program, and they offer a rebate.

As we all know, it's much cheaper to keep our seniors in their homes than for you to have to find money in your budget to provide seniors' housing. I'd like to know: in your budget, Mr. Minister, on your communications plan what are you doing to get this message to municipalities across this province about what the city of Edmonton is doing? Are there other great news stories like what the city of Edmonton is doing to share with Albertans and Alberta communities?

I think we have a joint responsibility: yours being the gateway to all the municipalities; mine being the ears and eyes and voice of seniors that can't be here to talk to you directly. So I'd like to know: in your budget have you allocated extra dollars to communicate to municipalities about how they can help and how they can step up? You've offered hundreds of millions of dollars in your budget this year to help municipalities with their infrastructure needs. I think a small, small portion of that that has gone to municipalities could easily be allocated to seniors of this great province.

I'll sit down and hear from both of you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Some very good comments and questions by the hon. member. I would suggest to the hon. member that the municipal sustainability initiative is trying to do exactly what some of your suggestions are.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, just earlier on I had made my comments to the Minister of Energy for two matters. One, for Hansard to pick up your voice, it would be important for you to speak through the microphone, and secondly, the camera is catching you live, as thousands of Albertans are watching.

Mr. Danyluk: It doesn't like the side view.

The Deputy Chair: Exactly.

You may now proceed.

Mr. Danyluk: Okay. Well, I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman. I'm not sure what the best profile would be.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that what has happened is as you see today. Hopefully, we're at the point that we can pass this budget. From the point where we have announced the budget until today, there has been communication. There have been different ways that municipalities feel that they can support their communities in affordable housing, helping seniors. I think very good points have been made by the hon. member as to how we communicate what other municipalities are doing, how we communicate what is possible to help address some of the seniors' housing and the challenges that seniors' housing have, and the comments that were made about the pensions going up 1.9 per cent, and the tax bill going up 28 per cent. I would hope that, you know, some of the funding that came from MSI would support that exact tax hike.

We are going to take that into advisement, and we are going to have communications with municipalities. I think that's an excellent idea that was brought forward by the hon. member, and we will bring that forward.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There's no question. The hon. member is right that the forestry industry has been hit with the perfect storm: the rising value of the Canadian dollar has hurt, rising energy and transportation cost here in Alberta, high cost of labour from the oil and gas economy, lower cost of off-shore producers, and then, of course, the impact of the softwood lumber agreement. We are working hard with the industry to mitigate those factors. We have adjusted the lumber dues cost as we promised to do last fall. We've also kept our commitment not to impose new cost without consultation. We're working with the industry on trucking and infrastructure issues. We'll be shortly reviewing a competitiveness report with the industry.

I would also point out that we've expended both last year and this year significant amounts of money to try to stop or arrest the spread of pine beetle: $46 million last year and an estimated $55 million this year. To the extent the pine beetle infestation spreads, we are positioning ourselves to work with the industry for new opportunities in terms of biofuels and products such as wood pellets that could be derived from beetle kill.

We also will be exploring the possibility of carbon credits for certain forestry practices or new forestry opportunities. Also, by taking the lead on the biodiversity monitoring program, we hope to save the industry some of the costs that used to be put on industry in terms of meeting some of the requirements of their forest management agreement. So in all those ways we are working in a broad spectrum of ways to assist the forestry industry in these difficult times.

The Deputy Chair: Any other minister wishes to supplement any answers? Any questions? Hon. members, is there any other private member who hasn't participated as yet, who has any burning questions to put on record?

There being none, the chair will recognize the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to participate in the discussion, in the debate, this afternoon. Now, Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act, which was introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, calls for the establishment of growth plan areas along with an advisory committee for each area. I believe that this one strategy could lead to a more effective land-use policy.

5:30

Now, I don't want to get one ministry there working against the other, but has the Minister of Energy considered such a strategy, given the controversy and concern surrounding sour gas developments near highly populated areas, Compton's proposed sour gas well outside Calgary, for example? Why hasn't the Department of Energy developed a plan to deal with the inevitable clash between potential dangerous industry development in residential communities? Does the Minister of Energy believe that sour gas developments near highly populated areas are responsible and safe? Would the Minister of Energy, again, be willing to have sour gas wells close to his home? I would assume that up by Valleyview they're probably within sight of the kitchen window, but I don't know. And they would be sour gas wells.

Why hasn't the government established a land-use policy that would prevent potentially dangerous developments from threatening residential communities? We have the Compton application, for example, and if we look at this Public Safety and Sour Gas Final Report from March 2007, that the EUB just issued, there is a lot written here; there is a lot discussed. I'm not sure if we've done enough with the emergency zones. Certainly, we've had some sour gas leaks in the past, and I don't think the rules were followed. Just looking through that, I don't think that this is going far enough to provide a measure of public safety.

Now, there's the whole issue of industry, again, versus agricultural land. We don't have a comprehensive, effective land-use policy in this province. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was developing one, and it's the best plan that we have to date, a land-use policy. But in the interests of Alberta we see landowners and we see industry, and there seem to be continuous clashes between landowners and industry. Landowners certainly don't have confidence in the regulatory process. Every public meeting I attend, public member after public member stands up. Their issues are valid, and they're not being addressed.

Industrial development is going to continue. Tensions between industry and landowners will also continue. Rural landowners in this province are dealing with unprecedented growth levels, growth that often involves projects that infringe upon their lands, whether it's water issues, whether it's access issues.

Mr. Chairman, one example that illustrates the need for a comprehensive land-use policy is the proposed 500 kV line between Edmonton and Calgary. I'm still not satisfied from before, the questions I had in regard to this 500 kV line, but why has the Department of Energy specifically failed to ensure that landowners who are affected by this proposed line are fully informed? Landowners are telling us that they have never been fully informed. Does the Minister of Energy agree that the entire process regarding this line has been flawed from the start, resulting in tense confrontations between landowners and the EUB? Does the minister agree that an effective land-use policy like the one that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview developed—a land-use policy like the hon. member's—would help to prevent such problems? I'm sure he agrees with that.

What process does the government currently use to weigh landowner interests against those of industry, and, again, why does the government favour industry always in these situations, as is apparent when looking at the land agent licensing process? You can't hire a friend or a relative or a family member to negotiate. You must negotiate with the industry representative. That's a bad law. That's a very bad law.

As this worked its way through the court system in Vegreville this winter, it was quite evident to everyone that that was a bad law. It still hasn't been changed. I would stay here until July and debate that legislation if the hon. minister is quite willing to change that—take a bad law and make it into a good law—because landowners are not happy. They're not happy with that. The courts did what they could, and hopefully the hon. minister of municipal affairs is going to change that law this session.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with a comprehensive land-use strategy we could avoid many of the problems that arise between rural landowners and oil and gas companies. We've also seen problems arise due to the flawed legislation, as I stated earlier, relating to the licensing of land agents and the inability of landowners to hire a representative who has their interests in mind. Does the Minister of Energy agree that the clash between industry development and rural landowner rights is an important issue that needs to be dealt with more effectively by this government by changing the Land Agents Licensing Act? Does the minister agree that an effective land-use policy would help to mitigate some of these problems, for instance by designating certain land as exempt from mineral exploitation?

Now, with the lack of planning with the upgraders, I would like to ask the hon. minister in the time that I have left about the CHOPS report, which is Cold Heavy Oil Production with Sand in the Canadian Heavy Oil Industry. This was an issue that we brought forward in question period earlier. This was done by the department, I realize, before the hon. minister's time as Energy minister, but the bitumen industry is the Rodney Dangerfield of the oil patch. It doesn't get the respect that it should. I think that in the next 10 to 15 years we're going to see a significant shift, and bitumen production and bitumen upgrading are going to take more of a prominent role in this province.

We have bitumen shipped to upgrading and refining facilities in Chicago and Minneapolis; Kansas City; Billings, Montana; and several other smaller facilities that have been redesigned over the years to accept a heavier feedstock. I for one think that there should be a different royalty structure here for a number of reasons. I almost think there should be a royalty structure on the viscosity, but also there should be a royalty structure on where it's upgraded. If it's upgraded south of the border, I'm sorry, you're not going to get it at a bargain basement price because the margins are so significant.

This is the Department of Energy's own research. This is using older figures, that are four years old. Assuming that the upgrading facility needs $8 Canadian a barrel to be reasonably profitable, and assuming that 300,000 barrels a day of heavy crude go to the U.S.A., and assuming a differential that averages $15 Canadian a barrel over the year, this is a difference of about $760 million per year. That difference makes the upgrading of this bitumen extremely profitable for the Americans. I know the hon. minister did the right thing today when he pointed out the differences in the New Democratic Party policy. I couldn't agree with him more on that, but there has to be a long-term strategy by this government to deal with bitumen upgrading, and it has to be done in this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. ministers, we have about five minutes left. Does anybody wish to respond to the questions that have been raised so far? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, there are a number of issues that the member opposite has brought up. Five minutes is probably not enough to really give you the full answers to all of these questions, but I will answer them all nevertheless.

Sour gas development near other developments, particularly residential developments, is a very serious concern in the province of Alberta. Most certainly, we do have in place a very good system with respect to the development, the application, the permitting, the requirements for emergency response. Those issues are all taken very seriously into account. The minister indicated the area of the world that I come from. Indeed, there are sour gas developments very close to my residence. It's been that way for well over 30 years. Certainly, the safety record in that particular area is impeccable. We have to my knowledge had no serious incidents with respect to the production and processing of sour gas as it relates to difficulties with residents.

The issue around not informing landowners with respect to developments and why isn't the department informing landowners. Again, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that we have quasi-judicial boards in place to do exactly that. We do not want to politicize those types of issues, so there is a process in place that keeps that from happening. The EUB is certainly tasked with operating that, the application and hearing process, and most certainly under most circumstances they have done a very stellar job of doing exactly that.

The question around effective land-use policy and do I agree or not agree that this may alleviate some problems. Most certainly, I believe that over the years we have had fairly effective land-use policies, but the framework that's being discussed currently has potential, indeed, to help lay a path forward for the development – and orderly development – of the land use in the province of Alberta, not only with respect to energy but most certainly with respect to other industry, the general use of land for recreation and relaxation for Albertans. I believe that it is positive.

The report that the member speaks of with respect to bitumen refining. Certainly, we're headed down that path. Mr. Chairman, as I had indicated earlier to another member, the percentage that we upgrade currently, around the 65 to 70 per cent range, is headed well beyond that between now and 2016. There is a solid plan in place to do the upgrading. We have actually come forward with an incremental ethane extraction program, and that is going to incent additional upgrading and the use of the off-gases from that upgrading in the petrochemical industry. So the answer to that is that we are working; we have a solid plan to move ahead.

He asked about the royalty structure. Certainly, we are looking at being able to tie upgrading in the bitumen area into the royalty structure in some manner that would address the concerns that the member has brought up.

Vote on Main Estimates 2007-08

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but momentarily we will be proceeding with the votes. At this time I'd like to ask all the officials to leave. I want to thank them also for their participation today. I'd advise all the members to please return to your seats as we begin the voting.

Hon. members, I also want to advise you that as per our Standing Orders should we have division, the first division will be for 10 minutes, and any subsequent division will have a one-minute gap between the bells.

With that, hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 59.04(5), which requires that the estimates of the offices of Legislative Assembly be decided without debate or amendment prior to the vote on the main estimates, I must now put the question.

Agreed to:

Offices of the Legislative Assembly

Expense and equipment/inventory purchases $94,642,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

We now get to the ones that have been split up. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.04(1)(b) and in accordance with notification provided to the chair and the Clerk on June 5, 2007, I will now put the following questions.

After considering the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the Department of Education for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $4,248,416,000, and nonbudgetary disbursements, $1,000,000, are you agreed?

[The voice vote did not indicate agreement]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:47 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Those members in favour of each of the resolutions for the departments not yet voted on for the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2008, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed, please say no. The motion is carried. Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The Committee of Supply shall now rise and report the 2007-2008 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund.

6:20

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2007-2008 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2007-2008 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, June 11, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask for renewed strength in the awareness of our duty and privilege as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. We ask for the protection of this Assembly and also the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, in the Speaker's gallery today is Mr. Paul Lorieau. I'm going to invite him to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all others to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Loughheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a person who is no stranger to this House. In fact, he was the second person ever to speak from the floor of this Legislative Assembly who was not an elected member. I'm talking about Mr. Rick Hansen, the chairman and CEO of the Rick Hansen Foundation, who is here today for a special announcement that was made in the rotunda. Accompanying him is Dr. Laura May, who is with rehab medicine and is also at the Glenrose hospital, and Teren Clarke, the executive director of the Canadian Paraplegic Association. They're in the Speaker's gallery. I'd ask that the members recognize them with their traditional warm welcome.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of individuals I recently met at the Edmonton Super Cities Walk for MS. This group is led by 16-year-old Courtney Kieser, a grade 11 student from Bev Facey high school in Sherwood Park. Her dad, Chris, was diagnosed with MS in 1993, just six weeks after her brother Riley was born. Courtney and her family have been participating in MS walks since 1994, and this is the third year that she has organized a team to assist in raising pledges for the cause. This year Courtney and her team raised close to $5,000. The Edmonton walk raised $581,000.

Courtney is a constituent in the constituency of Strathcona, but I was so overcome by her enthusiasm at the walk that I promised that if she ever found time to bring her team to the House, I'd love to introduce them to this Assembly. Accompanying her today is her team from Bev Facey high school, her parents, Chris and Susan Kieser, and two representatives from the MS Society of Canada Alberta division, Darrel Gregory and Daniella Sabo. I would now ask the group to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Catherine and Dr. Michael Bullock, grandparents of Helena Zakrzewski, a page in the House and a constituent of the hon. minister of health. Mrs. Bullock is a graduate of Stanford University in California and Dr. Michael Bullock completed medical school at the University of Alberta in 1960. They reside in Saratoga, California, and have been married for 42 years. Mrs. Bullock enjoys gardening, and Dr. Bullock has an extensive car collection. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce two guests visiting the Legislature today. It's their first time to the Legislature, and they're visiting the capital region. It's Darwyn and Dorothy Larson. They reside in Stavely, Alberta. Stavely is celebrating its 95th anniversary as a community this August 24, 25, and 26 of the year 2007. The Larson family has been farming in Stavely since 1902. Darwyn's father emigrated from Sweden and set up the ranch and the farm in Stavely. It originally was a cattle farm; however, today they grow grains and hay and have landscape horses. The Larson family received their century farm award in 2004. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very good and long-time friend of mine Mr. Murray Buchanan. He's here today in his capacity as copresident of the midstream division of Provident Energy, but I know him best as a friend who's worked with me in the PC Association for our area for well over 20 years. He gets me into a lot of trouble. It's not hard to imagine, I know. He's just an absolutely wonderful person to work with. He's been a mentor of mine for, like I say, over 20 years. I'm very, very delighted to be able to introduce him to our Assembly, and I'd ask Murray to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Loughheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also in the galleries today are other people that attended the announcement earlier this morning. In the public gallery is Larry Pempeit, who works with the Canadian Paraplegic Association. In the members' gallery is Dr. Gary McPherson, formerly the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities; Marlin Styner, a member of the Premier's council; Barry Lindemann, who works with CPA. He's from Calgary. Accompanying Marlin is his wife, Diane Gramlich, and his parents, Roy and Nora Styner. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a very bright, talented, and dedicated young woman, our STEP student this summer at the constituency office of Edmonton-Riverview. Her name is Anna Hopkins. She's in the public gallery. I'll ask her to rise. Anna has just finished her second year of university, pursuing a double major in political science as well as in Middle Eastern and African studies. She's a third year counsellor with a remarkable organization called the Seminar on the United Nations and International Affairs and is an active member of Equal Voice, which supports increased involvement of women in politics. I should also note that last year Anna served as a page in the Parliament in Ottawa. Clearly, Anna has a great deal of passion for politics. Her experience and enthusiasm have already been a great asset to my constituency office. I look forward to hearing remarkable things in the future of this fine woman. Please, everybody, give her a warm welcome.

Thank you.

1:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of seniors visiting today from the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. These individuals are friends and mentors, and I'm glad to have them here today. First is Mary Tucker, Martha Tisher, Doug Lyons, Don McCrank, William Bohachyk, Vera Dziwenka, Elaine Shinbine, Doreen Maguire, Gordon Dedols, Rita Belterive, Mary Stephons, Mickey Paterson, Marie James, Helen Glatl, Doris Harasen, Marguerite Jacques, Melonie Vincent, and Ted Bale. I would ask them all to rise and please accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you a number of guests. These individuals from across Alberta participated in a rally today at the noon hour on the steps of the Legislature. The rally was organized by a number of organizations, including the Disability Action Hall, the Self-Advocacy Federation of Edmonton, the disability action force, and the Calgary housing action initiative. These citizens are calling on the government to guarantee them affordable housing, particularly for those on fixed incomes such as AISH recipients. Some of those who attended the rally include persons living with serious developmental and physical disabilities. These guests are seated primarily, I think, in the public gallery, but there may be some on the other side in the members' gallery. I would now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I'm delighted to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Kyle Toles. Today Kyle is beginning his two-week internship with our caucus office in office support. He was born in Three Hills, Alberta, and has lived in Edmonton for the past 12 years. He graduated from W.P. Wagner high school in 2005 and has since achieved certificates in hospitality supervision and the office assistant program this year. I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction is Lisa DeMoor. Lisa graduated in 2006 from The King's University College with a BA in politics, history, and economics. She has worked as a researcher with the Canadian Peacebuilding Coordinating Committee in Ottawa, and she recently returned from seven months working in child rights and protections in Gambia, West Africa. In September Lisa will be returning to Ottawa to pursue a masters in international affairs from the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs at Carleton University. We're delighted to have Lisa in our caucus office as our STEP assistant. She has already been of great assistance this legislative session. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two guests from my constituency who are sitting in the members' gallery. Laurie Huolt is in charge of my constituency office and has been for the last five years, does a great job. Laurie is accompanied by Jeff Behrens, who is a summer STEP student working in my constituency office. Jeff is a student of the University of Alberta at Augustana in Camrose. His parental home is Edson, in the West Yellowhead constituency. So I'd like to ask Laurie and Jeff to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to also greet the rest of the seniors that are in the group today up in the gallery, and it would be Pat Bale, Kenneth Marts, May Fine, Reggie Knowles, Dorothy Blace, Winona Walker, Edith Spenier, Marge Koss, Ruth McFarland, Yvonne Hardiney, Betty Lindsay, Mary Marks, Annie Rittie, Carol Lockert, Tennesie Hieppner, Dawn Maskell, and Olga Henka. I see that they've learned already and they're all standing, so would we give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly one of the bright stars from the aboriginal community here in Edmonton and my good friend. He's the author of Patches the Beaver: Welcome to Harmony Woods, the first in a series of children's books. He has a bachelor of education with distinction and a master of education in educational psychology from the University of Alberta and is currently pursuing his masters in liberal arts and management at Harvard University while working. He has worked as a research communications manager at Métis Settlements child and family services authority and is currently the aboriginal senior policy analyst for the prevention of family violence and bullying division of Alberta Children's Services. He is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that Mr. Shane Gauthier please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Spinal Cord Injury Initiatives

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had the honour of attending a very special announcement regarding research services and supports for persons impacted by spinal cord injury and other neuromuscular conditions. The hon. Premier along with the ministers of Health and Wellness, Seniors and Community Supports, with the support of the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture, announced a $12 million contribution to the Rick Hansen Foundation. This investment will support initiatives to assist Albertans with spinal cord injuries and other mobility impairments to integrate back into the community. As such, these initiatives will work to improve the quality of life of those with spinal cord injuries by increasing their independence and self-sufficiency.

Today's announcement helps to highlight the great work of the Rick Hansen Foundation that it does in support of people with spinal cord injuries. Since 1988 the foundation has distributed over $200 million to spinal cord injury research and programs to improve quality of life. The foundation connects the people doing innovative research to the resources they need. The foundation is able to conduct such great work thanks to the leadership of someone who is no stranger to this Assembly.

Rick Hansen set out on a journey in his wheelchair from 1985 to 1987 that led him through 34 countries and raised $26 million for spinal cord research. Since then, Rick has been a very visible spokesman for spinal cord research. He has received numerous accolades, including the Order of Canada and several honorary degrees. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Rick was inducted into Canada's Walk of Fame.

Rick has been an ambassador for a fully accessible and inclusive society, and thanks to his work we are reaching that goal. Thanks to his foundation's work we are getting closer to finding a cure for spinal cord injuries. This new investment transcends the full continuum of research and support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

1:20 Leduc No. 1 Oil Discovery

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we come to the close of the spring session, I would like to make my colleagues and the Alberta public aware of an event taking place in my constituency this summer. This is a celebration of a major turning point in Alberta's history, something which forever changed our province and continues to drive Alberta's economy today.

That event is the discovery of oil at the Leduc No. 1 site on February 3, 1947. That bitterly cold day Imperial Oil's Vern "Dry Hole" Hunter, based on his success to that point, drilled his 134th well and tapped into what is now the Leduc-Woodbend field. Since that day, Mr. Speaker, more than 1,000 wells have been drilled, and the field has produced over 300 million barrels of oil.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there was already a celebration held on February 13 at the Canadian Petroleum Discovery Centre in Devon, which was attended by our former Premier, Mr. Klein, and the Minister of Energy. That event was the kickoff to the centre's diamond anniversary year and the unveiling of the Ralph Klein Learning Lab.

This summer, on August 11 and 12, during the town of Devon's Discovery Days the Canadian Petroleum Discovery Centre will be wrapping up the 60th anniversary year of the Leduc No. 1 well discovery. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to invite all my colleagues to attend and to help commemorate this most important Alberta milestone.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Patches the Beaver Book Launch

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. May 29, 2007, was a delightful day not only for me but for all the children and friends present at Norwood school. It is indeed a rare occasion for anyone to be invited to witness the launch of any book, but this was not just any book. Patches the Beaver: Welcome to Harmony Woods, written by author Shane Gauthier, whom I introduced earlier, is targeted at educating grade 3 children about diversity and multiculturalism. The book is based on research showing that without diversity programs our children's appreciation of diversity may actually decrease.

I witnessed first-hand the wonderment of the children present at the storyline as Shane read page after page. The book not only entertained but captivated their interest and sparked in them an awareness of the importance of accepting those that are different than we are. All the people present were charmed by the characters Mr. Gauthier had created. This author ingeniously brought the reader into an endearing world made up of loveable animals such as Patches the Beaver, Star Squirrel, Feather Goose, Duke of Cannot, Speedy Tortoise, and Lucky Rabbit, all based on true characters.

His writing is clever enough to hold the attention of any child long enough to teach children that we are all patched together by friendship no matter where we are from, who we are, or what we look like. It is infinitely clear that Mr. Gauthier is passionate about bringing the teachings about ethnocultural education and awareness to all children as this is the first book in Patches the Beaver series. As the Hippy Hop Herald stated: Amazing; no other book has captured the heart and soul of beavers and beyond; this book is for the whole animal kingdom.

Congratulations, Shane, for your dedication to supporting and working towards bettering the lives of all children, youth, and families and to the importance of ethnocultural education awareness. I look forward to reading the next antics of Patches the Beaver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Canadian Work Skills Competition

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Calgary will be hosting a World Skills competition in 2009 and a national and provincial skills competition in 2008. These competitions test and recognize the outstanding skills of hundreds of our secondary and postsecondary students across the province.

In preparation for these upcoming competitions almost 700 of Alberta's most talented high school and postsecondary students, including apprentices, recently competed in more than 35 different areas of trades and technology a few weeks ago at the provincial skills competition right here in Edmonton. Fifty-one of our high school students and postsecondary apprentices qualified for the national competition in Saskatoon last week. The Canadian Skills competition brought together 550 youth from across the country to participate in 42 different areas of skills competence.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that many young talented Albertans have done an outstanding job of representing this province. Four of these remarkable individuals took home gold medals: James McNeice, a student from Lacombe composite high school; Matthew Hebert, a student from Notre Dame high school in Calgary; Lloyd Van Maanen, a postsecondary apprentice from Picture Butte; and Garrett Pearman, a postsecondary apprentice from Allied Projects in Calgary.

Alberta also did very well in the silver and bronze categories, Mr. Speaker. Fifteen participants won silver medals, and six took the bronze. This is an extraordinary achievement, and the success of our students is a clear demonstration of our strength in the area of trades and technology education in every part of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very, very pleased to rise today and honour all of the students who participated in this national competition. I'd like to recognize the parents, volunteers, and educators who support them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Contaminated Sites Cleanup

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are increasingly anxious at the pace and scope and financial liability of growing oil, gas, and industrial development in this province. A growing number of contaminated sites are leaving a massive financial liability to future generations for remediation. Part of the problem is the ambiguous responsibility for contaminated sites resting with two ministries: Alberta Sustainable Resource Development and Alberta Environment. There are also serious regulatory deficiencies reflected in, one, the lack of will to make polluters pay; two, the lack of enforcement of legislation requiring immediate spill cleanup and timely reclamation; and three, the lack of adequate monitoring to ensure that the land is returned to, quote, equivalent land-use capability, end quote, as required under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act.

Bill 29, passed last year, allows companies to, quote, manage and, quote, monitor contaminated sites forever rather than clean them up completely. This has created a multimillion dollar business to transfer responsibility for pollution from the offending party to the orphan fund and in many cases to the public purse. Current liability management programs and financial security deposits in the upstream oil and gas sector are not sufficient to ensure reclamation and prevent transfer of liability to the public purse. In the downstream oil and gas sector there's still no orphan-style fund to cover the cost of an industry that walks away from its responsibility, again left to the public purse.

The existing level of environmental fines issued by this government is small and rare. Fines and the cost of cleanup are allowable deductible expenses from corporate income tax and royalties. The legislative requirements to immediately clean up a spill have not been enforced, resulting in the persistence and migration of contamination to thousands of sites throughout Alberta.

Finally, it's our understanding that a proposal is being developed by this government for parties responsible for causing contamination to self-evaluate a remediation process specifically designed to terminate their liability. Is this the Alberta advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Respect for Seniors

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two mistakes we can make when we talk about seniors. One is to assume that we know what we're talking about when we begin. The other is to assume that talking with or about seniors is about the past.

The first mistake is evident in predictions we made about population. For decades we said that our pensions and health care were unsustainable with increasing seniors coming of age. It hasn't happened. Seniors are working longer, living longer, in better health, taking new courses, and undertaking new challenges.

The second mistake was the youth fixation of the '50s and '60s. Youth are the hope of tomorrow, we heard, and waited for them to save the world. Fixation with youth is a reactionary trend, for it has adults looking backwards. Adolescence may be full of energy, but it is not free. Teenagers are tyrannized by peer pressure and a market that exploits us.

It's no accident that the most reactionary regimes of the last century seduced the young as a path to success. Hitler Youth and Mao's Red Guard enforced conformity by cutting ties between generations. It is in intergenerational contact that maturity evolves. Societies in continual revolution are in perpetual adolescence. It's as we calmly evaluate our experience and learn from it that progress is made.

It was not under younger braves, hot to prove themselves, that the west was developed but under Crowfoot. Crowfoot was a brave and fearless warrior, so fearless that he didn't need to prove anything. He could see where continued warfare would lead and chose peace.

It is not ultimately in their needs, real or imagined, that seniors deserve our attention. We need them for balance and wholeness in our lives. We need to recognize them not on the basis of past achievements any more than we recognize children on the basis of future potential but simply for their being here among us. Our First Nations are rediscovering strength through the wisdom of elders. We would do well to follow the example.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Contribution to Premier's Leadership Campaign

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The matter of the donation to the Premier's leadership campaign from the Beaver waste management commission has raised some serious concerns, and no adequate investigation has been undertaken by this government. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier admit that having a minister who supported his campaign sitting down with the CAO who supported his campaign to investigate an unethical donation to that campaign by the very commission headed by the CAO does not meet any reasonable standard of accountability?

1:30

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this matter, that the member brought up the other day, is very clear. In fact, after the leadership campaign was completed and we were preparing for the disclosure, this donation came forward. I said: "Send it back. It's the perception issue, even though, apparently, the legal interpretation was that this is what the commission can do. So just send it back." We sent the cheque back, and the matter is completed, period.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday in this Assembly, if you turn to page 1615 of Hansard, you'll see that the President of the Treasury Board said that this government's ministers don't have time to investigate this issue. My question, then, is to the Premier. Given that his ministers don't have time to investigate issues like unethical donations, will the Premier refer this matter to the appropriate policy field committee?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, the member reads very selectively. But just setting that matter aside, whatever money was donated went back to the commission. I have asked for the co-operation of both leaders of the opposition to work with our government in preparing rules, legislation with respect to leadership campaign donations and how we should handle it, and I hope they come to the table and offer their suggestions. Like I said, I'm not in any hurry to leave, but maybe on the other side they may have some other intentions, and that's why I'd like to put those rules in place as early as we can.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that there are serious environmental issues with the Beaver waste management commission and the landfill it operates and that the commission is up for review and renewal of its licence, the credibility of the whole licensing and review process has been tainted. My question is to the Premier. What is the Premier going to do to restore the credibility of the environmental approval processes relating to this commission's landfill?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, the words that the member used earlier are wrong. If there is proof of some environmental damage, then bring it forward. Don't make allegations in the House and try and have this House protect. Present the proof here.

Secondly, I don't give the approvals. There are certain processes that the government has in place. They're very strict. I believe they're the strictest in Canada in terms of environmental approvals. The people that best know how to make those decisions, reviewing all the evidence that comes forward from various engineering studies – that's the kind of information that goes into the approval process, not what some person may feel is right or wrong. It's the information that comes forward. The safety of the residents around that site and everywhere else in Alberta is paramount to this government.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems to take convenient holidays when it comes to ethics. Double standards abound. This government continues to invest heavily in tobacco companies through the heritage fund, yet the Premier said that his leadership campaign did not accept a donation from a tobacco company because it would be unethical. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier do the right thing and end this government's practice of investing the heritage fund in tobacco companies?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe this question was answered the other week with another member, but I'll ask the Minister of Finance to report on what we do.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we do have some investments in tobacco companies. We have about $18 million or $19 million – million, with an "m" – out of $16 billion directly and about another $30 million indirectly. We have to ensure that we get the best benefit for the taxpayers, and that is the mandate that has been given to the heritage savings trust fund: to ensure that we get absolutely the best bang for the buck.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. The Premier's leadership campaign has publicly said that it developed policies in advance to protect the anonymity of donors if the donors wanted it, but no policies to protect ethics were ever developed. As a result, the campaign was caught soliciting and accepting donations from a public commission and only months after the fact returned the donation. To the Premier: when double standards on ethics abound, will the Premier admit that his office is setting a poor example to other provincial agencies when it comes to ethics and money?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, Mr. Speaker, this gentleman across the way refers to always bringing in some sort of legislation. It hurts every day when you get up in the House and you listen to these kinds of allegations. I go back to October of 1986, when I was running for the position of municipal councillor in the county of Lamont. I will say that I forgot to mention to my dad and my mom that I'd be seeking the position. Well, of course, the advertising was out in the mailbox, so my dad over coffee one morning looked up from the paper and said, "So you're seeking public office." I said, "Yes." He said, "Well, whatever you do, don't ruin the family name." That's the kind of ethics I follow, not what the Liberals raise in this House.

Dr. Taft: Well, it's a great story, but soliciting donations from public bodies, bodies subject to the regulatory authority of this government, is unethical. The Premier has admitted that, yet he and his ministers have refused to disclose which other PC leadership campaigns solicited money from this commission. The CAO himself said that they were approached by others. Albertans have a right to know. To the Premier: will this Premier finally do the right thing and tell this Assembly which other PC leadership contenders approached this public commission for money?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've done the right thing. Upon review we sent the money back. If there is any other, even the biggest conspiracy that the Liberals can ever put together in this House, if there are any members that have approached, they're all in the House, and they can answer to it. I trust them day in and day out. But, of course, here's the Leader of the Opposition, that is running on ethics. Perhaps today – today – he could rise in the House and inform this Assembly how much he billed, very secretly, the Alberta taxpayers for his radio ads. I didn't see on the bottom of the radio ads saying how much he asked the taxpayers to pay. Come on. Tell.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Affordable Transportation for Seniors

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the greatest extent possible seniors want to remain independent and take advantage of opportunities to participate in the community and meet their own needs. For many seniors, though, including many of my constituents, finding accessible, reliable, and affordable transportation is difficult. To the minister of seniors: what is the minister doing to ensure that seniors have affordable transportation options that allow them to preserve their dignity, maximize their independence, and protect their quality of life?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we have long since agreed that the best thing we could do is to ensure and facilitate that seniors can stay in their own homes as long as they possibly can, stay in their own affordable housing facilities, and transportation becomes very key to that. Accessibility is very instrumental. We work with the municipalities. It is a topic that I want to continue to encourage, that between the province and municipalities we work. How do we ensure that all people have access? Sometimes it's beyond just the seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When seniors are no longer able to drive, they face a difficult transition that includes a sense of loss and dependency due to limited mobility options. This may jeopardize the physical and mental health of seniors since they now depend on assistance for things as simple as doing their own shopping, going to see their grandchildren, or travelling to appointments. Will the minister consult with seniors about what actions this government can take to ease this transition?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, in that respect we have the Seniors Advisory Council, chaired by the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, who with a council for seniors goes around the province literally for that aspect: to consult with seniors to ensure that we have the design, the right programs to meet the needs of seniors. They do exemplary work in that regard, and I'm very proud of the ideas that they bring back. Transportation, accessibility: those questions are part of what they are providing.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Will this minister commit to working with health regions and local municipalities to design a co-ordinated, user-friendly transportation system for seniors who require assistance accessing services?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we'll continue to work with our Seniors Advisory Council in looking at those things that we assess to be the greatest priority. Thus far, really, what we have done is ensure that our programs are targeted to those in the greatest of financial need. Our Alberta seniors' benefit program was designed for that. How do we improve some of the financial capacity for them to take care of what their unique circumstances may be rather than a universal program per se?

That said, transportation is a very good issue, and we'll be happy to continue to follow that up.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Provincial Labour Legislation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Friday's landmark ruling by the Supreme Court recognizing the collective rights of people is an unprecedented step forward in recognizing the rights of working people. This government's own former Bill 27, which removed the right to strike for mental and community health workers and threw dozens of collective agreements out the window, may well now be considered unconstitutional. But this government's long history of antagonism towards working people extends beyond Bill 27. Alberta is well known to have the worst labour laws in the country. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Given the Supreme Court's ruling, will the minister commit right now to a comprehensive review of all of Alberta's labour legislation to identify and remove all provisions which violate the workers' Charter rights?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I do take some exception to the hon. member's observation about the labour laws in Alberta. Be that as it may – and I will respect his right to be wrong on that issue – we have a 99 per cent record of no strikes or lockouts in this province. We have better labour peace in Alberta than anywhere else in the country. So be that as it may, we are doing outstandingly well.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Justice is looking at the decision of the Supreme Court, and when it's appropriate to make comment, no doubt we will. There are many implications with a decision like this. It's important that we look at it thoroughly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would like to ask the Premier, then: if aspects of Alberta's labour legislation are found to be unconstitutional given this ruling, will the Premier commit to bring forward amendments to this Assembly to make sure that Alberta's labour laws are constitutional?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the member says "if." It's speculation. Of course, we wouldn't want to break any laws that are set in the country, so the issue would come forward, and recommendations will come to our government from the Minister of Justice after he reviews all of the relative information.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In May of 2005 this government gave a special deal to CNRL under division 8 of the labour code which allowed the oil sands giant to bypass agreements negotiated between construction trades and sign a sweetheart deal which required no vote with the employer-friendly CLAC, the Christian Labour Association. This is to the minister. Will the government admit that it was an unconstitutional intervention into the process of good-faith bargaining and act to rescind CNRL's division 8 exemption?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, this is before the courts. It would not be appropriate to make comment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Municipal Taxation

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So many problems, so little time for questions. To paraphrase Einstein's thoughts, that the people who create the problems are usually unable to solve the problems, rings out loud. We have a major problem in our communities: conditional funding, or micromanagement from Edmonton. This government is addicted to power and control, and their policies and programs are eroding the quality of life of our families and communities. To the Premier: will he do the right thing and keep his promise and return the equivalent $1.4 billion education tax to the community of origin and do it without conditions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we are. The 2010-2011 budget will have the full $1.4 billion in the budget for municipalities. There will be some accountability for the funds. You don't send out $1.4 billion to municipalities without knowing where and how the money is going to be spent. It is by far the most generous support to municipalities ever, not only in this province but, of course, in Canada. Some mayors are saying that it's something like four times per capita more than other provinces have offered. So it's a good move. Now we work with all municipalities to ensure that they use these funds as best as they can.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, to quote from the Premier's campaign web page: I firmly believe that municipalities must receive more and more foreseeable long term funding; I will provide municipalities with an annual amount equivalent to 100 per cent of the education property tax; this fund will be fairly distributed based on an equalization assessment formula. The Premier promised a formula, not a partisan gift or a grant to apply or beg for. If there is a formula, it must be worse than the federal equalization formula that no one understands though it is great for partisan payments to buy votes. To the Premier: if your government has a formula, which I question, will you restore a little faith with municipal leaders and taxpayers by releasing the formula for all to see? Be honest. Be open.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the $1.4 billion is going to municipalities based on agreements reached. All of the CAOs met, I believe, now two weeks ago: better clarification of the funds and how they'll be distributed to municipalities, the ramp-up time. Everybody is really excited in terms of the $1.4 billion. Now they can plan. It's sustainable funding. It's predictable. Now they can really tackle the issues with respect to each and every municipality. Every municipality is different. They have different needs. Some have more maintenance to do. Others will be spending more on infrastructure. I mean, it's up to those individual municipalities to bring forward their plan, and the money will be there.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, it's a phony partisan formula, and it's not open for the people to see.

Mr. Speaker, if this government is going to continue with its chokehold on our communities and micromanage them, will they at least be open and honest about it? To the Premier: will the government admit that they don't have a 10-year plan for communities across the province and commit to make one and release it so municipalities can know when the money is coming and make real plans for the citizens? Again, be open. Be honest.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the $1.4 billion is there, a full $1.4 billion by 2010-11. I don't know what the word "partisan" is. It's an agreement reached with municipalities. They all share in the $1.4 billion. It's a formula, an agreement that was reached with the CAOs and the elected officials, and we're just eager to go ahead. This year it's $400 million, next year $500 million. Like I said, by 2010-11 it will be $1.4 billion. That's a considerable amount of money, and that $1.4 billion was exactly the amount of money paid for the purpose of education through property tax last year in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Affordable Housing for Seniors

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday at our Calgary-Varsity seniors' appreciation tea held at the Dalhousie Community Centre, an 85-year-old constituent approached me. He was concerned with a very heavy-handed condo conversion that he and other vulnerable fixed-income seniors were experiencing. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. When this constituent approached one of your ministry's offices, he was left with more questions than answers. What advice are the EII outreach offices providing for fixed-income or otherwise vulnerable seniors facing serious housing troubles?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've actually been very pleased that this hon. member has taken advantage of following up on many of the circumstances his constituents have. I know that our staff have been working with his office to make sure that we're working in a co-ordinated fashion. Relative to everybody that comes in, as I've said in this House, it's on an individual basis. We'd be pleased to find out exactly what the circumstances are. To date we've given out over a million dollars to about 1,200 people and households. If the hon. member would care to provide me the information, I will do my due diligence and find out exactly what are the circumstances. There is not a blanket circumstance for seniors in these situations because homelessness and eviction is something that we are not going to be tolerant of.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Seniors have weathered a number of storms in their lives, from the Great Depression to wars. They shouldn't have to continue to battle with the Alberta government. They're a proud lot and reluctant to ask for a hand up, heaven forbid a handout. To the minister of seniors: my constituents would like to know why this government forces seniors to apply for subsidies which just translate into extra profits for landlords rather than temporarily controlling rent increases.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would say that we are very proud of the heritage that our seniors bring to this province. They're the ones that have brought the great principles of hard work, industry, self-reliance, independence: all of those things that have made this country wonderful. They've looked always to themselves first, to their families second. Certainly, the government was never meant to be the provider of first resort for everything. That said, we have always built our programs to assess those in the greatest of need. That's why the Alberta seniors' benefit program is there: to supplement those federal and provincial programs to help those seniors to be able to sustain their living.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Again to the Minister of Employment, Industry, and Immigration: can the minister explain what co-ordination exists between her ministry, Municipal Affairs and Housing, and Seniors to ensure that vulnerable seniors trying to keep a roof over their heads aren't punted back and forth between ministries? I'd like to know, and so would my constituents, who is in charge.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in the case of Municipal Affairs and Housing we've done a lot of collaboration on the committee framing the terms of reference for the homeless and eviction and have worked together in the offices with staff complementary to each department, working in the same office relative to seniors currently with the seniors' ministry on a number of issues, not only housing and income supports but on those supports for people with special and unique abilities to engage in the world of work. Our staff at the administrative level of assistant deputy minister are working well together. It seems to me that the hon. member is making a case, raising questions about co-ordination. Again, if there is some particular issue affecting a resident, especially a senior, we'd like to follow up on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Disaster Services

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The storms of last week caused considerable damage in central and southern Alberta, including flooding, damaged roads, and a possible tornado touching down. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Is the government and your department prepared to help people in the storms' aftermath?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's no doubt that last week's storms had a major impact on several municipalities in Alberta, and noting the hon. member from Calgary, there were severe storms that took place in his city. We do understand the urgency, and we're working as quickly as we possibly can to respond to the emergencies of residents of the city, working together, trying to compile the data that's necessary for support for those individuals and municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, minister, for that positive answer. Now, my only other question to the minister is: could the minister inform the House and Albertans as to how a disaster recovery program would assist affected municipalities, individuals, and small businesses?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the disaster programs are very much that: to support municipalities, residents, small businesses that have been affected by uninsurable damage that has been caused, for example, by overland flooding. If I can say, I was in Calgary over the weekend to see what damage did occur. Our department is very much looking to see how quickly we can expedite the process, making sure that those residents aren't facing undue hardship.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative candidate in the Drumheller by-election stated that deregulation is a failure. He went on to say that it did not produce lower power bills. Everyone seems to know this but the government front bench in this province. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Will the Department of Agriculture and Food continue to support permanent high electricity prices in Alberta or will it finally admit that deregulation is a dismal failure and adopt the Alberta Liberals' low-cost power plan?

Mr. Groeneveld: This is quite a decision, Mr. Speaker. However, I think the hon. Energy minister has answered this question adequately so many times that I'm not going to follow up. Alberta farmers do not pay more for their power than anyone else. It's a mistaken belief that they keep coming back to and coming back to and coming back to on deregulation. It's not hurting us. We are doing just fine, thank you very much, in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister is telling us that the candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party in the by-election is wrong. Now, Alberta consumers paid 15 per cent higher prices in 2006 than in 2005 for their power. As recently as last Wednesday the hon. Minister of Energy claimed that electricity deregulation has been a complete success. To the Minister of Energy: is the minister willing to admit that he was wrong in claiming that deregulation has been a success, or again is it the Tory candidate for Drumheller-Stettler who was mistaken? Which one is it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell this House is that I am not a candidate in any by-election, so I don't have to go and make ridiculous claims about anything.

What I can tell you is that the statements that I made last week are the statements that I'll make this week. They'll be the statements that I will make next week. They still remain true today. This government – this government – has a plan to build a stronger Alberta, and the restructuring of the electrical utility in Alberta is part of that plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that – and I will reread this quote for the Premier's benefit – deregulation is a failure, and the candidate goes on to say that it did not produce lower power bills, does the hon. Premier consider that the Progressive Conservative candidate's description of power deregulation is ridiculous, like the Minister of Energy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have a very good candidate in Drumheller-Stettler in the person of Mr. Jack Hayden, who not only served as municipal councillor; he was president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and also participated tremendously in the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. Every candidate brings forward their opinions on various issues. In this particular case we're going to see movement in terms of new sources of energy in Alberta from bioenergy. The hon. member mentioned: follow the Liberal plan. If we followed their plan, unfortunately, in this province electricity would have quadrupled, given their environmental plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Criminal Justice System

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The families of young people murdered at the hands of other youth in the Edmonton area have been rallying together and circulating petitions to call for tougher sentences for violent crime. Their loved ones' lives were cut far too short by the senseless violence of strangers. Their petitions highlight the concerns many Albertans have about lenient sentences for young offenders and the perceived increase in violent youth crime. My first question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister tell us what his department is doing to ensure that young offenders receive stiffer sentences under the law?

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the hon. member and, indeed, all Albertans that the Alberta government is concerned about youth crime and appropriate sentencing. It is our belief – and we've been saying this for some time – that the federal legislation which governs this particular matter, the Youth Criminal Justice Act, needs to be overhauled, needs to be reviewed in its entirety, does not appropriately deal with violent crimes or chronic offenders. As a matter of fact, I had an opportunity to say this to my colleagues across the country last October in Newfoundland, when we met at an FPT, or federal/provincial/territorial, meeting at that time.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister tell us what his department is doing to reduce youth violence in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, this government is committed to providing safe and secure communities for every Albertan. We are definitely concerned about youth crime and the violent behaviour of some young people in this province, and when I say “some,” I mean a very small minority. However, preventing this behaviour is a joint responsibility of government, law enforcement, the community, and family. This year we are providing nearly $1 million in grants for crime prevention, restorative justice initiatives, including programs aimed at drug and alcohol awareness, youth activities, and mentorships. We are also providing $350,000 to 122 youth justice committees. These committees partner with the community to give back to these young lives . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What services does the department provide for families of homicide victims to ensure that they get the support they need before, during, and after court proceedings?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta believes victims of crime should be heard, and we continue to develop programs and services that ensure that victims are treated with compassion and respect. In April we unveiled the very first step-by-step guide ever developed in Canada to help victims of crime through the criminal justice system. The Victims of Crime Protocol also lets victims know what their role is, the type of information they can receive, and what services they can expect from the time a crime is committed to when an offender is released. Our department also provided over $4 million in grants to victim assistance programs across this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Confined Feeding Operations

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A month ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture and Food whether he was concerned by this government’s weakening of the regulations regarding minimum distance setback of confined feeding operations. His response was disturbing in its lack of knowledge of this portfolio. He said, and I quote: I’m not familiar with the specific regulations. End quote. These changes matter. They matter very much indeed to those living next to confined feeding operations. To the same minister: has he studied the regulations regarding reduced minimum setback distances from public buildings, and could he not answer the question now why this government allows this relaxation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the regulations are set out by the AOPA and are governed by the NRCB, but these regulations are not necessarily relaxed. There are some that are grandfathered in. But at that time he was talking about churches and schools and whatnot, which are generally in urban areas. Of course, we’re not going to have these institutions closer than the regulations would permit. If they’re not good enough, there is a dispute settlement committee that you can report it to, and they will take care of it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two months ago I went to visit a number of landowners east of Airdrie, including John and Laurie Harnack. They have been affected by a confined feeding operation, the Thorlakson feedlot, which withholds surface water and whose waste manure has on a number of occasions passed onto their land and into public ditches through flood irrigation. Letters of complaint to the NRCB over many years have had little or no lasting solution but symptomatic coverage, and the letters to the Minister of SRD have gotten no meaningful response for these folks. They’ve asked serious questions about what this ministry is doing to protect their interests. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why is the government and the NRCB, in particular, being so lax in enforcing the property and health rights of neighbours of confined feeding operations?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I’m afraid the hon. member is simply not right in his assertion here. The Natural Resources Conservation Board has inspectors throughout the province who respond to concerns, such as the ones he’s indicated, about livestock operations. The Natural Resources Conservation Board works closely with other agencies like Alberta Environment, Alberta Agriculture, and the regional health authorities, and it’s the experience of the Natural Resources Conservation Board that the vast majority of operators are responsible and doing their best to comply with the environmental standards that govern this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several weeks ago I was contacted by the McCullochs who farm next to the AAA feedlot near Didsbury. They and several of their neighbours of the feedlot have been concerned about the cattle feedlot, which has appeared to be abandoned, leaving both live and dead cattle on the site along with vast amounts of manure. The waste ponds were overflowing when the McCullochs called, and I have pictures, which I’ll table in the House today, of filthy water pouring off their land next to the feedlot. But, again, letters to the NRCB and the government since March have gotten nothing, no accountability. Will the minister accept that something is not working with the licensing and monitoring and enforcement of confined feedlots in this province?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, what I’ll accept is that I think the hon. member is grandstanding in here. If Albertans have concerns, they call up the NRCB. Inspectors will be sent out. There was a successful prosecution with a very significant fine, $50,000, just in the last few weeks. The system works. These are serious allegations. I appreciate that. But the place to take them is to the NRCB, not to grandstand in here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative housing policy has created absolute chaos for renters. Desperately needed workers are being forced to live in Edmonton's river valley because of the lack of affordable housing. Thousands of people are vulnerable and facing rent increases that could make them homeless. The new fastest growing industry in the province is the food bank because of rising rental rates around here. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. What is the government prepared to do now in the short run to help out thousands of vulnerable renters?

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you dwell completely on the short term, if you think that putting a band-aid as the solution in the short term is the right answer, then you do what the Liberals and the NDs want: you put in rent control, and then you create a much greater problem down the road.

This government has taken the approach that we will work with all the related industries to try and develop the long-term solution, which is more housing. We have in place many, many programs that are based to support those in need to get them through these tough times. This government has a great deal of compassion for those in trouble right now, but we also know that the problem is solved in a long-term solution and not simply forgetting all of your principles and selling out for the short-term solution.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that they're glad that the minister is compassionate because there are thousands of them being hurt out there right now. The reality is that in Canada Mortgage and Housing's April figures there are less rental units in Edmonton and Calgary than there were last October. Things are getting worse before they get better. I guess I'd say to the minister: when is he going to take off his ideological blinkers and do the right thing for thousands and thousands of Albertans in this province?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a problem to be stuck with ideological blinkers as opposed to ideological blinders. Canada Mortgage and Housing has indicated that nearly a full quarter of the houses in Canada were built in Alberta. These houses are not sitting empty. Albertans that have come here or Albertans that are trying to improve their housing lots move into these homes, and it opens up other homes. For them to suggest that our blinkers have stopped us from doing what's right is simply wrong. The solution is in more housing. That is from a stable market, from working with the private investment groups, from working with the government departments, and putting a long-term solution to this issue.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's an absolutely ridiculous answer because it's going to take three to four years to bring on housing. Surely, the minister is aware of that. What do we say now to thousands of Albertans – thousands, literally – that are paying 50, 60 per cent of their income on accommodation? What do you say: wait for three or four years till things get better?

Mr. Snelgrove: No. Mr. Speaker, we pick up the magic ND wand and wave it. Apparently, that's what they think is a solution to this problem.

It's a real problem, and we know it, but the problem is dealt with on many aspects. We support those who qualify for our programs. We've brought the departments together to make it simpler. We tried very hard to meet with those affected individuals who need our help both temporarily and long term, and we're working with private investment and with government departments and municipalities towards a long-term solution to this temporary situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:10 Crop Insurance for Seeding

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Due to the cold, late, wet spring and the inability of farmers to get their crops seeded on time, many producers in many parts of the province are concerned about potential losses. Many have already invested significant dollars in chemicals, rent, fertilizer, seed, and equipment. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Will the current crop insurance be enough to cover these basic input costs if these acres don't get seeded in time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly aware of how the weather has impacted seeding this year, and the AFSC has already taken some proactive steps. Last month we extended the 2007 seeding deadline for crop insurance to June 5 for a number of crops and to June 15 for barley, spring triticale, spring rye, and Polish canola. As a result the farmers continue their seeding as planned, and thanks to recent good weather most are almost complete now. The extended deadlines have also helped those who may have had to reseed because of the extended flooding.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that these adjustments have been made, but I'm not quite sure they're going to be enough. From what I understand, there'll be some smaller areas of the province that won't be seeded at all due to the weather. To the same minister: what's being done for those farmers?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, I'd like to point out that this province has the best crop and production insurance in the country. The unseeded acreage benefit under production insurance will compensate producers up to $60 per acre depending on their input amounts. As well, producers with unseeded acres who have production insurance will also be eligible for an additional $15 per acre from the federal cover crop protection program.

Mr. Marz: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: is the minister proposing any further changes to the Alberta crop insurance program to address these late-seeding issues?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, as already noted, our programs are very responsive and either enhance or are enhanced by the national programs. For example, producers with lower than average seeded acres and high input costs also benefit from the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, better known as CAIS. The provincial government will continue to monitor the seeding progress across the province and the effectiveness of our agriculture insurance programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Not-for-profit Sector

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has neglected the labour issues in the voluntary sector for too long. In the next five years Alberta's not-for-profit organizations are expected to lose 80 per cent of their executive directors as they are lured away to corporate and government work. The loss of this institutional memory and leadership will be devastating. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. The ministry's plan to release a not-for-profit labour force strategy later this year is too late. What concrete action is this minister prepared to take now to prevent these people from being lured away?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, with our 10-year strategy on building and educating tomorrow's workforce, there are many sectors which we realize are really struggling to retain staff, principally because there are so many jobs available that they tend to move on to other enterprises. So one of the strategic things that we're trying to evaluate is just exactly what the needs are in the various sectors and how we can do better with employers to ensure that there's some sensitivity around labour mobility. If I may, I had the same degree of difficulty when I was minister of health watching nurses go to cook at camps. When people choose to move, we just simply try . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Workers in Alberta's not-for-profit sector have become accustomed to being overworked and underpaid, but now the funding, labour, and housing crises have pushed staff in the voluntary sector to the breaking point, and even some volunteers have had to return to work to offset housing costs. My question is to the minister of housing. What specific housing actions have been developed to work in tandem with the strategy from EII that will open opportunities for those working or volunteering in the charitable NGO or voluntary sector, particularly for live/work artist spaces?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we continually try to look at providing spaces and housing for all individuals that need that support. As was mentioned previously by the president of the Treasury, the work that is being done in order to try to increase the number of units available is critical to the focus that this government has in order to provide units that would be available for seniors, for those that have special needs, and for students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the current definition of a charitable or voluntary organization is based more on how the charity spends its money than on the services it provides. This has long been regarded as an unsatisfactory and overly narrow approach. My question is to the President of the Treasury Board. When is your department going to come up with a made-in-Alberta definition of a charitable sector, and what actions have you taken to work with your federal counterpart to create a definition other than the one used by Revenue Canada?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, as Treasury Board president we work with all of our departments to develop consensus around issues like this. We've brought forward the community spirit program, we are working with the minister from parks, culture, and recreation, and we understand how completely important to this government the volunteer association is. I've had no discussions with any member of the federal government with regard to this issue. I would wonder what the hon. member's had.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

International Trade

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday I had the privilege of taking part in the government of Alberta's hosting more than 65 members of the consular corps at the annual consular briefing. These ambassadors and high commissioners and consuls general and honorary consuls are important to Alberta's economic prosperity. Our efforts attract highly skilled people to our province. My question today is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What is being done to ensure that Alberta maintains and enlarges good relations with the consular corps and their countries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's exactly events like this that build the bridge from the rest of the world to our province. I might say that at the meeting on Friday – I thank the many ministers of government and MLAs that attended, but many consular representatives have told us relative to the government of Alberta that they enjoy greater access to the government of Alberta than any other government across Canada. That truly speaks of the open and transparent approach of our government in terms of what we're doing in building relationships with the rest of the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's in the news that there's another important delegation visiting Alberta tomorrow. It is the Prime Minister of the Netherlands. So my question is to the same hon. minister. What is planned for the Prime Minister's visit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a very busy day, and I'm very pleased to say that the Prime Minister of the Netherlands chose our province to visit. I think it really speaks of the role that our province and our government plays with the rest of the world. I want to also thank so many Edmontonians and others. The Premier will be hosting tomorrow a special luncheon at Government House but also will be meeting with the Dutch Canadian Club tonight with the Prime Minister as well as Mayor Mandel tomorrow and many others because of the important relationship we've had over the many years, from the liberation of the Netherlands to the important role that Canadians played with Allied troops towards that end.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the same minister. Alberta's strong economy depends on tourism. To increase guided group tourists to their countries, other jurisdictions have created guided tour group visas, which we don't have. We only have the normal, lengthy, more difficult to obtain visas for visitors, even if they're guided tour visitors. So my question is: what are you going to do to help Canada to implement tour group visas to increase tourism in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much. I'm working closely with my colleague the minister of immigration and employment. Essentially, the United States did have tour group visas, but since 9/11 they cancelled them as well. We are working very closely with the federal government. We'll continue to do so because of the tremendous tourism opportunities we have right here in our province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 82 questions and responses.

head: 2:20 Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table a petition with 105 signatures on it. The petition notes the Conservative government's continued refusal to protect Alberta families from rent gouging and urges the government to immediately introduce temporary rent guidelines. This brings the total signatures on this petition to 287.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions. The first one has 20 signatures, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to work with the City of Edmonton to ensure that the traffic noise from the Edmonton Ring Road near our neighbourhood of The Woods is evaluated immediately and again in six months, and that if the noise levels measured are found to exceed acceptable provincial or municipal thresholds, that noise attenuation and reduction measures be implemented as soon as possible.

The second one has 38 signatures, and this one reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Edmonton, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to complete, as soon as possible, the overpasses and interchanges at the locations where the Anthony Henday Drive (Edmonton Ring Road) intersects Lessard Road, Callingwood Road (62 Avenue), and Cameron Heights Drive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition with roughly 120 names from Tanya Woodruff, Cindy Iverson,* and Wendy Hugh* of the Tomahawk area of Alberta, requesting the government of Alberta to take the lead in protecting the quality of life for us and future generations in the climate crisis in relation to sour gas development near schools in that area.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and in accordance with Standing Order 42 I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time I intend to move that the Assembly refer the matter of the unethical donation from the Beaver Regional Waste Management Services Commission to the Premier's campaign for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party to the Standing Committee on Managing Growth Pressures, constituted under Standing Order 52.01(1)(c), for a full and independent inquiry.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 43
Appropriation Act, 2007

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, 2007. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, from the delivery of the budget back on April 19 by the Minister of Finance the Assembly has spent a lot of time, 60 hours, debating the budget, by far the biggest thing we've done, except for, of course, our one-night stand on rent control. I want to congratulate the members of the Assembly on both sides for not only the patience but the courage to take on a new approach and to try out different things to try and understand our budget better.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll give it to the page.

[Motion carried; Bill 43 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 44
Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce a bill being the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

This particular piece of legislation typically comes in at this stage of the proceedings in the Assembly, and in this spring session there are two bills that will be impacted by this Bill 44: the Forest and Prairie Protection Act and the Public Service Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table five copies of the 2006 Climate Change Central progress report. Climate Change Central, known as C3, is one of the foremost organizations in Alberta. It is concerned about the environment all year long. It has solar heating community programs, on-farm, and car heaven programs as well as biodiesel research.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of questions and responses on Bill 29 from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I'd like to table these at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is an article from the Calgary Herald from Saturday, June 9 of this year, and it's to back up my question today in regard to the distancing of the candidate in Drumheller from the PC Party on electricity deregulation.

The second tabling I have today is a letter that I received this morning from the hon. Minister of Energy. It's dated June 6, 2007, and it's a partial explanation of the steam line rupture which occurred at MEG Energy Corp.'s site on May 5, 2007.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of information released by the Alberta Liberal caucus on March 19 around the radio ads that the Premier was inquiring about, outlining various policies and procedures as to the financial accounting that was done in accordance with the rules that are set out for caucus expenditures through LAO.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, do you have one?

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of photographs of the AAA feedlot operation near Didsbury that I referenced in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter from Edmonton-McClung constituent Barbara Hollman complaining about the noise from the traffic travelling the Anthony Henday Drive, which she can see and clearly hear from her house. She wants the overpass at Callingwood Road and 62nd Avenue made a priority. But until that project is again looked at, she asks that something gets done in the interim to intercept or reduce the noise, something like a berm.

The second tabling is a set of 13 pictures, Mr. Speaker, taken from Barb Hollman's deck and backyard showing how flat the landscape is between her neighbourhood and the Anthony Henday Drive. You can clearly see the traffic and can probably imagine the constant, unrelenting, and intrusive noise that Ms Hollman and her neighbours have to endure. She doesn't want to leave her home but hopes Infrastructure and Transportation delivers on their promise to attenuate the noise as promised.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, did you want to proceed today?

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll proceed later.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from my constituent Chris Goss. I'm tabling five copies of e-mail letters on his behalf. Chris is concerned about seismic activities in Utikuma Lake causing fish kills and not using that information in relation to plans for seismic activities in Marie Lake.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of e-mail letters from my constituent Glenda Murphy. Glenda is also concerned about seismic activities in Utikuma Lake causing fish kills and not using that information in relation to plans for seismic activities in Marie Lake.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling documents from 37 low-income Albertans. All of them support rent guidelines and have experienced significant rent increases. They are of course finding it very difficult to make ends meet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a document with 512 signatures. The signatories are urging this government to take effective action on the housing crisis that's hurting tens of thousands of Albertans, particularly the problem of skyrocketing rent increases.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling one document here today. I'm very pleased to table an explanatory document from the Canadian Association for Disabled Skiing. I'm pleased to do so on the day of the visit of Rick Hansen. We got this at the abilities lodge meeting on Friday.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, Workers' Compensation Board, Alberta, 2006 Accountability Framework Report.

On behalf of the hon. Minister of Education, memorandum dated June 7, 2007, from the hon. Minister of Education to the hon. Member for Strathcona regarding grade inflation in Alberta's kindergarten to grade 12 education system.

On behalf of the hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on May 28 and 29, 2007, Department of Advanced Education and Technology 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy, a response to a question raised by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead on May 30, 2007, Department of Energy 2007-2008 main estimates debate.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition with respect to a Standing Order 42 application.

Contribution to Premier's Leadership Campaign

Ms Blakeman on behalf of Dr. Taft:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly refer the matter of the unethical donation from the Beaver Regional Waste Management Services Commission to the Premier's campaign for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party to the Standing Committee on Managing Growth Pressures, constituted under Standing Order 52.01(1)(c), for a full and independent inquiry.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The province is indeed facing tremendous growth pressures, and managing these is supposedly one of the Premier's top five priorities. Now, certainly, regional planning and service delivery is a critical piece of this. There are approximately 50 such regional service commissions in this province, and the issue of whether they're operating effectively and whether there's clarity about their mandate and adequate accountability measures is critical. The stakes are very high.

Mr. Speaker, I'm mindful of the urgency test from Marleau and Montpetit found on page 584.

The Speaker: Hon. member, there is no urgency test. Please sit down. Under Standing Order 42 the member gives a very brief explanation. The chair then asks if there's unanimous consent. There's no urgency. It's simply that you get a shot for a minute or two, then I ask the question.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed. The minister of municipal affairs has had the power to call for an independent inspection of the commission. He has refused to do this. He said that he would do his own review and that they would be looking at the financials. But this minister was very public in his support for the Premier during the leadership race. The CAO of the commission is a personal supporter of the Premier.

We need something that is more rigorous and definitely more independent to ensure that the citizens of the member municipalities can be confident that their interests are protected. The issue is broader than the Beaver regional waste commission and looking at their financials. The policy field committee would be able to look at this issue in the broader context of the accountability and clarity of mandate of these public bodies.

The government has indicated that the Assembly is likely to rise this week. I believe it's important that the Assembly refer this issue immediately to ensure that there is time and accommodation over the summer to look into both the specific example of the donation but also whether other public bodies were targeted, donated, and what needs to be done to fix that problem.

As well, last week the President of the Treasury Board indicated that ministers of the Crown didn't have time to even call commissions or public entities on what they may or may not have done. Granted that, then this is the opportunity to do it, with a policy field committee, where adequate accountability measures could be suggested to be put in place.

Indeed, the time is possible to do so. Policy field committees have now been constituted. They have been staffed and peopled. They are up and running, and some of them have already been charged to meet and report back before the fall session. So this is within their mandate, given the standing order.

The Speaker: I think, hon. member, please, let's move forward now. If the House agrees to it, we'll have the debate. Then the member will be recognized for X amount of speaking time. Right now we do have a question, and it requires unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent denied]

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Energy and Utilities Board Hearing Costs

Q15. Mr. MacDonald asked that the following question be accepted.

What was the total departmental cost for staff time, legal fees, and consultative services to prepare the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for his presentation to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board 2006 hearings on Suncor Energy Incorporated's Voyageur project?

Rate of Recidivism for Sexually Exploited Children

Q16. Mrs. Mather asked that the following question be accepted. What is the rate of recidivism for sexually exploited children apprehended under the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act since its implementation?

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Wednesday, June 6, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns 7 and 8 be dealt with today. There being no additional motions for return appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Meeting with Fort McMurray Mayor

M7. Mr. Chase moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents, including briefings, letters, memos, policy proposals, cabinet minutes, talking points, faxes, correspondence, and discussion papers, relating to the minister of infrastructure's meeting with Fort McMurray mayor Doug Faulkner on July 27, 1999.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason for requesting this information is the problems that Fort McMurray has been facing for years with lack of support for their infrastructure and which are compounded by the speedy approval of developments in the oil sands.

We would like to have this information. Mayor Blake had twice previously requested funding, $1.2 billion, when she first came with a delegation in 2005. That amount was extended to $2 billion in 2006. We're trying to get a handle on how many mayors' requests have been dealt with over this time period because it seems to be a rather sad underfunding circumstance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have reviewed the Motion for a Return 7 from the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

The hon. member's request, including extensive documentation related to a meeting between the minister of infrastructure and the mayor of Fort McMurray in 1999, included a number of documents that are covered under FOIP, including draft documents. The list of remaining documents requires a manual search and will take several weeks to retrieve, and the request cannot be fulfilled within the time frame requested.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I recommend that the Assembly reject MR 7.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close the debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I would be pleased with whatever information the minister is prepared to release in the name of the foundations of transparency and accountability, which his government states and will, hopefully, uphold.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 7 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

2:40 Racing Entertainment Centre Project

M8. Mr. Chase moved on behalf of Dr. Swann that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents, including studies, reports, and environmental impact assessments, relating to the effects on water levels and water quality of withdrawing water from the Red Deer River to service a project in the municipal district of Rocky View that includes a major retail mall, a horse-racing track, a casino, an industrial park, and an equine centre from fiscal years 2003-2004 to 2005-2006 and for the period April 1, 2006, to April 10, 2007.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Environment assessment of impacts of diverting water from the Red Deer River to the Balzac development is what MR 8 is calling for. We were told that there are some 1,700 pages related to this request, but we received less than 500. This proposed amendment will not add further information to this question and is therefore not supported. It may add paper but not substance.

Of course, the amendment that has been circulated to all members, suggesting striking out “effects on,” striking out . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think we’re ahead of ourselves here. The chair doesn’t know that there’s an amendment, so just move the motion. We’ll see what happens.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for the qualification. I so move, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the enthusiasm that the member obviously has for the amendment, maybe we should just vote on the question as it stands. I won’t do that.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose an amendment. All members are in possession of the amendment, and I will read it into the record. The amendment reads:

- (a) by striking out “effects on”;
- (b) by striking out “of withdrawing water from the Red Deer River to service a project in the municipal district of Rocky View that includes a major retail mall, a horse-racing track, a casino, an industrial park, and an equine centre” and substituting “in the Red Deer River”.

The motion will then read:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents, including studies, reports, and environmental impact assessments, relating to the water levels and water quality in the Red Deer River from fiscal years 2003-2004 to 2005-2006 and for the period of April 1, 2006, to April 10, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, as the member has indicated, what the opposition seek with this return is information regarding reports, studies, and corresponding reports of environmental impact resulting from the application in the Balzac area. I’ve indicated on a number of occasions that this particular application was received by Alberta Environment and was subject to the normal procedure for approving documents. There were not specific reports, environmental impact assessments, and studies related to the effects on water levels and water quality of withdrawing water from the Red Deer River. There are, however, a number of reports and studies related to the overall issue of the Red Deer River. Leaving this motion as it exists would result in virtually no information being provided for the opposition member because there would be no reports thus identified. By amending the report, there will be a number of pieces of information made available to the opposition, and that’s why I suggest that we support this report.

I might also add, Mr. Speaker, that there was a FOIP request on this particular issue. All of the relevant information that was requested under that FOIP report has been provided to the applicant. So combined with what was received through the FOIP report and what would be made available through the amended motion here, there should be more than adequate information to serve the needs of the member.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we’re now on the amendment. Go.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It makes me think of 1984: he who controls the past controls the future. We’ve just had a large eraser or whiteout taken to our original motion for information. The fact that there is no government information on environmental impact assessments despite the fact that millions of dollars of the Rocky View municipality have gone out, millions of dollars of the local contractor and the United Horsemen have all proceeded and been spent without the required environmental assessments is indeed surprising; however, I do appreciate the minister’s willingness to provide whatever enlightening information that will help us to see the justification of this project. Therefore, I accept the amended motion.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, if you wish to conclude the debate, fine. If not, I’ll call the question on the motion as amended.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for again giving me the opportunity to close. We have to get past just the words “accountability” and “transparency.” FOIP is preventing information from being received by taxpayers as well as members of the opposition and the independent members. You’ve got to not only talk, but you have to walk that talk. Hopefully, with the committee format, the field committees, this discussion will reach greater heights and true sharing will occur. I look forward to the field committees, but I am grateful for the crumbs that have been thrown my way.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 8 as amended carried]

Second Reading

Bill 211
Planning for the Future of Communities Act

[Debate adjourned June 4: Ms DeLong speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. members, there remain 34 minutes of debate time. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise to discuss . . .

The Speaker: Sorry, leader. Did the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow choose to continue? Well, I'm sorry then. She still has eight minutes remaining. Please continue, and then we'll recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for letting me continue with Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act.

Growth has taken competition over land use to new heights. These developmental plans can naturally coexist, but sometimes land uses are conflicting, and different groups want access to the same area. Sometimes there's a need to exercise caution when locating certain developments next to each other. For example, Alberta has seven major watersheds which need to be protected. The government has taken steps to prioritize these competing demands, and as a government we must provide a road map for the orderly development of homes, cottages, roads, cities, facilities, and industries and decide which areas are going to be reserved for recreational purposes and animal sanctuaries. Furthermore, the better we plan development, services can be delivered more efficiently and effectively.

Now, co-ordinating these demands is a large undertaking, but it can be done. In order to achieve harmony while growing, it's necessary to have a plan and vision in place. A land-use framework provides the approach needed to better manage public and private lands and resources to meet the long-term economic, social, and environmental goals of Alberta. Alberta has 164 million acres of space which needs to be managed, and if the government of Alberta has a comprehensive approach to deal with land demand, all Albertan land uses will be balanced. With a very organized layout everyone can make the most of our vast geography.

While Bill 211 has good intentions, I assure the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie that the government of Alberta is taking every step necessary to attain sustainable land use for all of Alberta's communities. In order to be well executed, the Department of Sustainable Resource Development has taken the time necessary for the preparation of a comprehensive land-use framework. Development of this framework has been in progress since 2005.

Now, in the spring of 2006 the Alberta government began land-use stakeholder consultations. The Department of Sustainable Resource Development gathered information on a development framework, land-use principles, and identified challenges that Alberta is facing. From the beginning of this process Sustainable Resource Development has been constructing a road map for development decisions supporting strong leadership, educating Albertans, and promoting responsible decisions. These principles are guiding the development of the land-use framework.

Because of the important nature of this issue, the hon. Premier placed this project at the top of the list of priorities this government would accomplish. The completion of the land-use framework is one of the key actions this government is taking to help manage growth pressures in Alberta. At the end of last year the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development was mandated to complete the land-use framework. This framework is of utmost importance to the department, and they're working diligently to complete it in a timely fashion. I believe this framework accomplishes what Bill 211 is calling for, and I thank the hon. members opposite for their support of these efforts in land-use planning.

When the land-use framework is complete, it will provide clear steps for development, and it will address conflicts over the competing use of land and provide a vision for an integrated, sustainable land-use approach. This vision will help ease development by adding clarity to the process. The land-use framework will alleviate concerns about growth because Albertans will be confident that there is a plan for growth. They'll know that projects are guided by a vision of Alberta, and they're not just constructed anywhere.

How Bill 211 differs from the land-use framework is that this framework was not formulated behind closed doors. All Albertans were invited to give their input on the future of land use in this province. Because Alberta's land belongs to all Albertans, their vision of land use is going to be represented in this framework. Input was gathered through 15 public sessions across Alberta and through a workbook questionnaire that all Albertans were encouraged to submit. Albertans were asked to provide input on guiding principles to indicate which land-use issues are of most concern to them, which direction they would like the framework to go in, and what kind of outcomes they want. The land-use framework will be Albertans' framework.

Mr. Speaker, knowing that public consultation would be more successful if Albertans had the proper tools and background information to address land use, the Department of Sustainable Resource Development published two resource guides to increase public awareness of land-use issues. Understanding Land Use in Alberta and the land-use workbook ensured that Albertans could provide knowledgeable input.

The department also held focus group sessions where sectors affected by land groups were also given a strong role in the development of a land-use policy. In order to get a precise picture of land-use needs, input was gathered from agriculture, transportation, recreational users, oil and gas, mining, conservation and environment groups, aboriginal communities, municipal representatives, and academics.

A draft of the land-use framework is expected to be completed by the end of this year, and the government is working towards its future implementation. It will provide the context, overall direction, and decision-making framework which will govern and manage land use in Alberta. Once the framework is released, it will apply to all private and public lands in the province except for federal lands. Therefore, municipal development and intermunicipal co-operation will fall under its scope.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, the land-use framework is a comprehensive and detailed approach to co-ordinating land use in Alberta. As far as I'm concerned, not only has the government met the goals of Bill 211, but it has also surpassed them. It's quite clear that this government is working diligently to meet Albertans' long-term social and economic goals based on good land-use management.

I thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for his work on Bill 211, but the government of Alberta and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development are currently working on a land-use framework that will enhance our planning and co-ordination requirements well into the future. The land-use framework will be another tool to support regional co-operation and municipal development. Therefore, due to the redundant nature of the Planning for the Future of Communities Act I urge the hon. members of the Assembly to vote against Bill 211.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and hon. members, under Standing Order 29(3)(a) the hon. leader has a maximum of 20 minutes should he choose to use them.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, out of respect for everybody's opportunity to speak here and realizing that there are only about 20 minutes left, I'll keep my comments to, say, 10 minutes or so.

In our view Bill 211 is a very important bill. It confronts head-on some of the really challenging issues that this province is facing, and they're problems that are being faced across the province, from north to south and east to west. Those are the challenges our municipal governments face in working together and resolving issues in a constructive, timely, and co-operative manner.

Certainly, there are any number of successes. As I travel around the province, I meet with municipal councils, and they'll speak about how well they get along with their neighbours and how they're able to strike all kinds of different understandings on recreation and transportation and housing and whatever. But equally there are all kinds of communities where that kind of harmonious, neighbourly relations do not exist and are really strained. As a result, a lot of serious problems are piling up for the people of this province.

When I talk about areas where there are strains, I think about my travels; for example, Grande Prairie city and Grande Prairie county and some of the local municipalities there that have unfortunately got a long history now of friction and trying to resolve inter-municipal issues. Red Deer city and Red Deer county, I think, recently have made some headway, but frankly there's a lot of strain there and a number of development challenges that are taking years to address instead of months. Of course, we all know in this Assembly, as an example, the conflict between Calgary and Rocky View on water transfers relating to the Balzac project. Peace River. Lac La Biche. That doesn't even include the area of greatest concern, which is the capital region, in and around Edmonton, where there are 23 municipalities trying to cope with some of the most rapid growth in the history of the province and no mandatory structure with which to address that.

It at times feels like there are several chapters of War & Peace getting played out right here in our capital region, and it's an epic that I'd rather not see continue. I think we need to end the conflict that is arising and has become, frankly, systemic and sadly and in some ways most disturbing: it's become personal. As I go and I meet with different councils, these are all decent people. They're all public-spirited, well-intended, capable people, but when they get in these conflicts, it ends up becoming a very personal kind of conflict in which you hear people describing each other in ways that just don't make sense and don't reflect the real value of each of those publicly minded people. We need to replace the structures or the lack of structures that have created that conflict with structures that bring about a culture of co-operation.

That's what this bill is intended to do. The bill, I think, as everybody knows who has read it, will require mandatory inter-municipal planning in areas that are designated as high-growth areas and will put the provincial government in a position of real leadership, give the provincial government the legislative basis to bring the different players to the table, and require that common issues be addressed. And there are no shortage of common issues, Mr. Speaker.

Water, ironically, or perhaps as a great example, is actually a subject on which the Edmonton region works very well. The municipalities surrounding Edmonton by and large depend on EPCOR, an Edmonton city-owned utility for water, and they get the water. The structures are in place, and the contracts are there, and there are no particular conflicts around water. So that's an example of how things could work if they were required. Unfortunately, in Calgary it's quite the opposite. Water is a source of huge conflict in Calgary. Water is one of those topics that needs to be addressed, and fire services, emergency services, police services.

Economic development. We have in the Capital region any number of different economic development agencies, and some of them co-operate, and some of them are pursuing different kinds of agendas. That's a real problem that has to be brought to an end. If our economic development agencies can't get their act together, then the businesses who look for structure, who need common rules, who need a consistent plan are going to take their business somewhere else, and frankly I can't blame them.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow spoke about the land-use planning requirements of this province. They are overwhelming, and they've been piling up for years and years. This government, I think, is on their third round of a land-use strategy. We're still waiting for any serious and substantial results from that. The Alberta Liberals put forward our own discussion paper on the need for a land-use strategy close to 18 months ago, and still we await. Land-use issues are immense and intense. Whether it's conflicts over industrial use of land, residential use of land, land that could be used for transportation and utility corridors, land that should be set aside for environmental protection and left in its natural state, land for agriculture, unfortunately, it's the same piece of land that's being burdened with all these conflicting demands, and we need a plan. We need a plan to address those, and this bill, Bill 211, would help address some of those land-use plans.

Similarly, on something as basic as taxi service, Mr. Speaker, there is a sharp, specific conflict in the Edmonton region over taxi service to the airport. When there are intermunicipal conflicts over taxi service, you know that things have broken down. You know that the system is out of control. Something as simple as taxi service is becoming a victim of a lack of planning and intermunicipal co-operation.

Housing and the need for affordable housing. In St. Albert, in Edmonton, and all over the province housing issues and social service issues are not getting appropriately addressed.

Of course, environmental issues where we have concerns with environmental contamination or pollution or all kinds of other environmental stresses being imposed on lands in some areas where other municipalities think there should be housing as in northeast Edmonton where there's outstanding microclimate for market gardening, yet the pressure is on nearby for heavy industrial development. There's a whole host of problems.

I've spoken briefly about the problems. We could fill hours just itemizing those. What we are looking for through Bill 211 are solutions. The Alberta Liberals in this bill are bringing forward a proposed solution. The intent of this bill is to have certain areas of the province designated as high-growth areas and then require all municipalities in those high-growth areas to work together to develop a growth plan: no more relying strictly on optional participation, no more opportunity for a municipality who doesn't want to co-operate to opt out and go its own way.

The provincial government needs to establish, through this bill, a requirement that all the municipal governments in a designated growth area co-operate and work together and produce a common plan for the common good of all the residents of that area. Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, there must be a mandatory structure. This is a time and this is a province where that mandatory structure is required.

I'd urge all of us in this Assembly to vote favourably for Bill 211 to get it through second reading and into committee where we can discuss it at greater length; we can go through it section by section; we can bring forward amendments. We are open to amendments as we just demonstrated in a motion for return. We're open to improving this bill or to compromising on the bill so that it gets forward, but the fact of the matter is that this province needs action on this issue. It needs solutions on this issue. Bill 211 is the solution that we believe is needed.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 211, the Planning for the Future of Communities Act, is aimed at establishing growth plans, areas to support municipal development, and intermunicipal co-operation. The Alberta government is already supporting municipal development and intermunicipal co-operation with the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability and incentives that encourage collaboration and sustainability such as regional partnership initiatives. Through the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, AAMD and C, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the AUMA, and the cities of Edmonton and Calgary are working with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to come up with solutions for issues affecting Alberta municipalities.

All Alberta municipalities are represented on the minister's council, the urban municipalities through the AUMA, rural through the AAMD and C, and Edmonton and Calgary through their mayors. The urban and rural municipalities can contact their associations to provide concerns and other input to be discussed at the minister's council meetings and also to receive feedback on these issues once they have been discussed. The minister's council examines options for strengthening partnerships between the provincial government and Alberta's municipalities and for enhancing the long-term sustainability of municipal governments in the province. It is a provincial/municipal forum that was established to address municipal sustainability issues.

Four working groups within the council were formed to address important issues. The AUMA leads a working group to examine municipal roles and responsibilities. Calgary leads a working group to explore options for new municipal revenue sources. Edmonton leads a working group to explore intermunicipal relationships and other issues related to municipal growth challenges, including better co-ordination of land-use planning near municipal boundaries. The AAMD and C works with the AUMA to review how the proposals of other working groups would affect smaller urban and rural municipalities.

The role of the minister's council is to collaboratively work towards a consensus on how to deal with issues that affect all Alberta municipalities and what involvement they would like to see from the province. Once a consensus is reached, a report is provided to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who will then submit it to caucus for their input and consideration. The minister's council submitted a report to the government in early 2007. Following the submission of the minister's council report, Budget 2007 committed $1.4 billion to municipalities by 2010-11 as part of a 10-year funding commitment to help municipalities move towards a more sustainable future. The government is considering all of the other recommendations in the council's report and will be providing a formal response.

Bill 211 seeks to support municipal development and intermunicipal co-operation. The Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability is already doing great work in this area, and because recommendations are from Alberta municipalities, partnerships are collaborative instead of obligatory. The aim of the minister's council is to help municipalities address local needs over the long term. This includes reaching an agreement on how to address the provincial municipal fiscal envelope, clarifying roles and responsibilities, finding new revenue sources, and improving intermunicipal relations. Alberta municipalities want the freedom to work with each other as they know what the individual needs of the communities are and how they can work together to best fill those needs.

Previously, municipalities were subject to regional planning commissions. Municipalities within a region would co-ordinate development, but the commission was empowered to be responsible for the regional planning. The regional planning commissions were viewed as favourable towards urban areas and were using rural municipalities as land banks. This was part of the reason the regional planning commissions were eliminated.

In 1995 municipalities were given subdivision-approving authority under the new Municipal Government Act. As well, municipalities were given the option to co-ordinate planning through volunteer intermunicipal planning agencies to replace regional planning commissions. Municipalities are now able to conduct planning activities in-house or hire consultants. This can lead to cost savings for municipalities and sustain smaller municipalities as they can afford more cost-effective services. Municipalities know what their communities want and are able to negotiate agreements without feeling like their efforts are stifled by overarching legislation like the regional planning commissions or Bill 211.

The government of Alberta provides incentives for municipalities to work together on projects that are beneficial to many communities. The regional partnership initiative provides funding support for municipalities that wish to explore regional opportunities and for implementation of regional projects. These opportunities include shared service delivery, expanding cost-effective services, developing regional forums, strengthening municipalities, improving quality of life, and planning for growth. Collaborative approaches can create economies of scale and scope which provide the advantage of reduced per unit service delivery costs. Cost savings will in fact transfer to municipalities and their rate payers. Regional partnerships can be an effective way to leverage resources, support innovative ideas, expand service choices at lower costs, which will promote and improve quality of life in Alberta communities.

Alberta has many success stories regarding regional partnerships that have greatly enhanced the lives of the people who live in those municipalities. One example is the partnership between the county of Wetaskiwin, the city of Wetaskiwin, and the town of Millet. They produced a joint economic development initiative, JEDI, consisting of a cost- and revenue-sharing agreement that encourages industry to locate or expand in the region. It was selected from 36 submissions to receive an honourable mention in the minister's award for municipal excellence in the partnership category for their cost- and revenue-sharing master agreement in October of 2006. All three partners worked co-operatively for the benefit of all people in their communities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not support Bill 211 as the Alberta government is already accomplishing the desired outcome of growth plan areas by working with the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability and RPI funding. Encouraging municipalities to co-operate and collaborate on projects will allow them more flexibility in choosing what that co-operation looks like and how it will be the most beneficial to their individual communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleague from Calgary-Currie for proposing and bringing forward this private member's bill, Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act. Bill 211, designating specific geographical areas in Alberta as growth plan areas and outlining the establishment of regional planning commissions, is exactly what we need to be able to cope with the growth pressures in this province.

This legislation, focusing on specific areas, proposes regional planning commissions with broad-based participation of the provincial government and municipal governments within the region, including shareholders and the public. So it's not something coerced; it is something that involves everybody. This bill is directed to the future. We can't afford not to focus on planning in respect of our regional economies.

We hear a lot today about globalization and international trade and continental trading blocs. This new reality means, in effect, that regional economies emerge as more and more significant. Attention is shifting from the national level of government to the local, so cities are the new units of global economic competition, and cities must be understood in terms of the region in which they are located. Only the region has the scale and diversity to compete globally. It is the region that comprises the totality of social and economic and environmental assets that make up a healthy community.

Bill 211 has this comprehensive view in mind. If we look at the list of items in section 4 of this bill, which refers to a growth plan that may contain policies, goals, and criteria in relation to – and there's a list of all kinds of items, including intensification and density, land supply, location of industry and commerce, nonrenewable resources, conservation of energy, transportation planning, municipal waste management planning, affordable housing. All of these items of course have to be considered in any kind of regional planning. Now, of course, there will be disagreements and conflicts between municipalities and regional districts about all of these items, but we can't afford any longer to have regional planning set aside, not if we're going to compete globally.

Now, the document Growth Plan for the Greater Golden Horseshoe, 2006, states – and this is the Premier's viewpoint: I'm not afraid to enter into the necessary debate about regional planning, provide true leadership, and sort out the disputes between neighbouring communities; without a regional plan we'll have a disjointed patchwork that will create additional problems in the future. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what Bill 211 tries to do: overcome that disjointed patchwork that's present now so that we can make sure that regional planning is going to take place. Bill 211 outlines the mechanism for promoting needed regional planning.

I've read the debate in Hansard, and frankly I don't understand the point of most of the criticisms that were expressed. This is not about forced amalgamation or imposing plans on municipalities, but it is about providing a mechanism that will enable those involved to move beyond their conflicts and sort out a compromise and articulate common goals for the future. That's what we need, especially in an area like Edmonton. The government has been arguing that a land-use strategy is important for regions. Well, this bill is outlining just such a strategy, enabling regions to decide where all the items should go, where industry should go, where affordable housing should go. If you are in favour of a land-use strategy, how can you vote against this bill?

Mr. Speaker, my feeling is: why do we have to wait until this whole land-use program, this consultation process is finished when we can just accept Bill 211 and move ahead? We need regional planning right now, especially if you look at Edmonton. The hon.

Leader of the Opposition mentioned the Edmonton region and how complex it is, how important it is in terms of competing globally, yet here we have an Edmonton region . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I must unfortunately advise that the time allocated for this item on our agenda has reached the point where we must now vote. The hon. mover of the motion is the only one under Standing Order 25 permitted to close the debate, so the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has moved second reading of Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:18 p.m.]

Bill 212

Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand today and be the lead for Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

Bill 212 provides an additional tool to help combat crime in neighbourhoods by holding property owners accountable for threatening activities regularly occurring on their property. Bill 212 will relieve neighbourhoods from the adverse affects of activities such as purchasing or selling intoxicating substances, prostitution, or drugs by targeting the location where these activities are continually occurring. This is a proactive approach at stopping and preventing disturbing and dangerous activities in our neighbourhoods.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Bill 212 proposes to create a new safety agency fuelled by the observations of disruptive behaviour in communities and subsequent complaints by residents.

Bill 212, although new to Alberta, is actually in Manitoba and has been for some five years, in Saskatchewan for approximately three years, was implemented in Nova Scotia in January of 2007, and implementation in the Yukon in 2007.

Bill 212 seeks to address illegal activity identified within the communities. Individuals voice their concern through the director. This Bill 212 is civil legislation. With civil legislation the balance of probabilities is the test as opposed to criminal legislation, in which the test is beyond a reasonable doubt. When a complaint comes in, if it is found, the director can then choose to send an investigator or inspector to the property being misused and either start an investigation or advise otherwise. The options could be to require more information from a complainant, issue a warning letter, resolve the complaint, apply to a court for a community safety order, or other action.

If an owner or tenant chooses not to comply with the request of the investigators, the agency will present the investigation to the Court of Queen's Bench for a community safety order. The person charged also can apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for an appeal. The serious crimes such as meth labs, huge grow ops, and other criminal activity are still dealt with by the police. This, again, is civil legislation, and this still only will deal with issues that can be dealt with in the community.

If an order is granted, tenants would have the right to appeal.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I think you're leaving papers on top of the microphone. That's why we're receiving all that echo.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The community safety order holds property owners accountable. The owner speaks to the tenant to curtail activity. If the property owner is aware of ongoing criminal activity at a property, they must work with the director or designate to eliminate the problem or face forfeiture.

Bill 212 would help redirect misguided individuals such as youth from entering into drug activity or related criminal activity. I saw an example of the safe communities and neighbourhoods at work in the Winnipeg area when I visited there in the fall of 2006. There was a 14-year-old in a home that was selling drugs when the single mom was away at work. The safe community and neighbourhoods director was called, a complaint was laid, and this was dealt with by way of a warning. So there were no charges laid, no court attendance, and the problem was dealt with in that way. This also helps alleviate pressure on police so they can deal with other matters.

Bill 212 also addresses excessive fortification such as bulletproof material designed to be resistant to explosives, protective metal plating on the interior of buildings, or armoured doors. After an investigation an inspector can designate a fortified building as a threat to public safety if it impairs emergency workers' access to the building, impairs the ability of people inside the building to escape in an emergency, or has fortifications that are unreasonable given the purpose of the building. If a building is found to be excessively fortified and a threat to public safety, the director can issue a removal order. If the fortifications are not removed, the director could issue an order closing the building for up to 90 days. This, of course, can be appealed through the Court of Queen's Bench.

As mentioned, this legislation has been very successful in other jurisdictions such as Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Nova Scotia and the Yukon this year. Bill 212 has the ability to be effective at getting disruptive activities out of the communities in a very quick manner.

As a retired police officer I'm very supportive of this piece of legislation. I think it will empower communities at a time when our population is growing, and it will assist police services, addressing time constraints and the lack of manpower. I look forward to hearing the debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and respond to the hon. mover of Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. First, I would like to thank the hon. member for sponsoring this bill and commend him on his initiative and his effort in bringing it to the floor of the Assembly for discussion. It's an area where he's not going to be met with any opposition from this side of the House because we agree with him that any initiative we take, any support we offer to citizens and to neighbourhoods and communities to bring them into that fight against crime is a commendable and advisable direction, and we agree with him that empowering citizens to take that active role in helping curb or reduce crime in their immediate neighbourhoods is a good direction we should all be supporting.

I'm also a little envious of him because he actually beat us to the punch. We were actually planning the very same idea as part of the Official Opposition's slate of bills for this legislative session. Initially we were hoping to introduce it as Bill 218, but because he drew Bill 212 in that random draw back in the fall, he beat us to it. I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie was hoping to sponsor a very similar idea. That's why we are supportive on this side of the House: it's an idea we agree with.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, when we were debating the Police Amendment Act this year, 2007, I put in my remarks that in my opinion every citizen is a police officer, and all police officers are lay people. They're citizens as well. It's a partnership between the community at large and the law enforcement community to try to curb or reduce crime. We all agree that there has been an escalation in crime. Be it the magnitude or the size or the damages actually caused, the financial damage that it actually leads to, and crime and the criminals getting more sophisticated and more resourceful, if I can use that word, we need to actually rely on everybody – we're all in this together – to try to stem this systemic problem and to try to mitigate the adverse effects that communities suffer as a result of crime.

It's another tool in the arsenal in our fight against crime. People need to be allowed to take that initiative, and we need to empower them and tell them that once you make that decision to report an activity or to report an individual or a group that looks suspicious, then there's a place for them to go. There is an agency that would listen to them. This bill does just that. It basically creates an entity under the Department of the Solicitor General. People who have reason to believe something untoward is happening or unsavoury elements are moving into their communities or are doing things that should not be done in their communities now have a place to go. They have an agency that would listen to them and then would take some action based on the seriousness and the significance of the claim or the report.

Why don't we go to the police immediately or all the time? Well, the police have the resources to handle some of the workload, but unfortunately, be it for funding or be it from a human resource standpoint, they cannot really handle all the calls and all the reports coming from citizens as well as from their own intelligence as well as from other law enforcement agencies or services, and so on and so forth. So maybe this parallel mechanism is a good thing to have now under the Solicitor General, where people can report unsavoury property activities to that agency. We are keeping the police for more serious stuff. The police might actually be engaged at a latter stage if that agency now deems it appropriate that there should be some police intervention.

Examples. People say, you know, okay, give me an example or two about a situation where a citizen or a resident in a community can pick up the phone and talk to someone at the Solicitor General's department and report an activity that he or she doesn't think should be taking place. Well, we've all heard of crystal meth. It's a drug that people can make in their own homes. I saw a bulletin from my power company. They actually sent me a little brochure that says: look for the following if you suspect that your neighbour's house is actually being used for producing crystal meth. I found that bulletin very informative and very useful. So if I have reason to believe that my next door neighbour is doing something like this, then I have an agency to go to, and I can actually report it to them.

Drug trafficking. Child abuse. We've heard about situations where children are lured into a house, trusting the person who took them there, only to find out that they're being photographed or videotaped, and that stuff ends up on the Internet. We've heard those stories before.

Illegal liquor sales and other criminal offences. You know, we have a few examples, and we've all heard about them. At one point we've probably even suspected that some of the houses in the neighbourhood look suspicious or should be investigated or should be checked out, and we didn't know who to turn to because sometimes it's intimidating to phone the police. What if my information is not accurate? What if what I'm telling them is not correct?

I think this is a very sound approach to have this mechanism in place to allow people to really tell us, tell the government and tell the law enforcement community, that this place needs to be checked out, that this place needs to be monitored. Again, it's taking an active role in our own safety and security and in the safety and security of our neighbourhoods and communities.

This bill also allows us to put more pressure on the criminal. Any deterrents we can think of, any mechanism we can bring in to tell people: "You know what? You are not going to go unnoticed. And you know what? Everybody's watching. I'm watching you. My neighbours are watching you. The person down the street is watching you." It's the same philosophy as Neighbourhood Watch but now with a mechanism at the end where there is a result. There is a product. There is an outcome, Mr. Speaker.

The reason I'm supporting it and I'm urging other members of this House to support it as well is that it has been tried in other jurisdictions. Different governments from different sides of the political spectrum have tried it, Mr. Speaker, and they've all had success with its implementation. There hasn't been any criticism of this model where citizens are empowered to partner with the law enforcement community. I know that this particular bill is drafted very similarly, almost word for word, to the same legislation that is in Saskatchewan. We've asked a few stakeholders what they thought about it, and again we have not received any negative remarks with respect to this bill and its implementation and the results which ensue. It's really a good bill, and it's worthy of support in this House, and I would urge all hon. members from both sides to afford it that support, that I think it deserves.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I think this should not be the end of our initiative to make our communities safer and to make our people safer and more secure. This should be one mechanism in that bigger approach to reduce violence, to reduce violent crime, and to actually deter those criminals from moving into our communities.

I know that in the cities it's going to be very useful and very effective. I am hoping to see it also be as effective in the rural communities, where distances between neighbours are slightly bigger. We should really adapt this model to the rural communities because we all know that some of the gangs, some of the illicit drug organizations are moving into rural Alberta because they see it as being less monitored by police agencies.

So I support it, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would give credit to the member for bringing this forward. I'm always interested when the Liberals take credit for things. I was going to do it in Bill 218, but I guess we can say, if we really want to get partisan, that it was the NDP government that brought it in first. I know that the Liberals will take credit for that.

I want to say that this is an important tool. It is only one of a number of tools that we need, but it's an important one. I think the fact that we have some experience with it in Manitoba – the member talked about it. He mentioned, I think, that Saskatchewan and the Yukon now have it and that Nova Scotia is just in the process. So I think it's timely because it has become a serious problem in Alberta. I think we're all aware of that.

The history. As I understand it, in Manitoba the act was first established in February of 2002. Under the provisions of the act a unit of six investigators was introduced. The unit has grown to eight officers, has received roughly 1,470 complaints, and about 1,330 involved alleged drug offences to date. The unit has shut down 214 operations and 190 of those for drug offences. As mentioned, other places like Saskatchewan and Yukon are following.

I think we can't underestimate what happens in a community. I've had experiences, complaints in my own constituency when a drug house is set up, the havoc that that absolutely creates in the neighbourhood. People feel very powerless. What do they do? They can't necessarily prove it. The police don't have the time to deal with it because there are a number of other ones. So people feel very frustrated and very helpless in their community, and they know what's going on around it. So I think it's important because if we can deal in another way with what we call drug houses, we certainly would make our communities much safer and much better. I think it's another important tool that we need because we can't have enough police to do all that work. They just can't keep up to it.

I want to say, though, that the complaint that you hear in other places when these bills are brought in – many people said that the act criminalizes poverty, and they also said that alternative housing for people with addictions was a necessity. Absolutely. I mean, the fact is that they can move drug houses around. They still have the same ability to move into another community, and we still have to deal with that. I think the important point here is that we're making an important step to deal with the supply, but we're also going to have to try to deal with the demand.

Mr. Speaker, when I was talking to Edmonton's police chief, he said that if the police force could begin to deal with the addictions – 60 to 70 per cent of the things that we deal with, our crime, are directly having to do with addictions. So, I mean, this is certainly a step in the right direction, but I think we have to start dealing with young people at an earlier age. It's probably not a quick fix here, but that's what startled me, those figures, when he said that addictions are what is creating the problems. With the booming economy, of course, and more people moving in, those problems become more immense.

While this is a useful step – certainly, as I say, I compliment the member for bringing it forward; it certainly will have our support – I think that in the broader perspective of dealing with crime, Mr. Speaker, we're going to have to deal with all sorts of other issues that tie into it. If the police chief in Edmonton – and I expect it's true in Calgary and other places around the province – says that 60 to 70 per cent of the things that they do to are directly related to addictions, then we have to look, as I said, at the demand side of it too, and in the long run that's probably going to be more effective.

I also want to say that this works well when we have community policing. I think that's the key thing. It's police working with the community because it's the community that generally knows what's happening, and if they have the police working there, now they have another tool, not necessarily the policeman's or policewoman's time, but another unit can begin to do something. This becomes an extremely effective way of policing, I believe, and a bang for the buck rather than just driving around. I think we can begin to deal with those.

But I would say, just in conclusion, that with our growing economy, it's like everything else. You know, we talk about housing. We talk about health care, education. I think our policing needs a bump up, too, with the amount of people that we see coming, especially to our two major cities but other places in Alberta too. I think that for police to be effective, they can't be so over-worked that they can't begin to deal with some of these problems. As long as we have this overheated economy, the police are always going to be playing catch-up.

Again, I stress that this is a very good tool. I think it helps the police. We need more police. I think that community policing is the correct model, but I say that in the long run, if we're really going to deal in a significant way with crime in Edmonton or Calgary, we're going to have to try to get a handle on the addictions problem. We're going to have to try to get a handle on the younger people and their society. That's just the reality. We're always going to be playing catch-up.

I would hope that we could move ahead with Bill 212. Again, I know that the member has had experience in dealing with this, so he's coming at it with the experience of what he thinks would work, and he's checked into it. Certainly, he has our support on this side of the House to bring forward Bill 212.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in the House to speak in favour of Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. This is an excellent piece of legislation which emulates highly successful measures already enacted in several other provinces. I commend the member for proposing a proactive measure which furthers this government's ongoing efforts to ensure that all Albertans live in safe and secure communities.

Our communities are the most important places in Alberta. They're where we live, sleep, raise our children, grow old, and enjoy our province's prosperity and high quality of life. The vast majority of Albertans contribute positively to their communities, living in a responsible and law-abiding manner. Some people, however, choose not to contribute to Alberta's prosperity and legitimate ways. They come into our communities to conduct unsafe and illegal activities, tainting our way of life.

As legislators it's essential that we do everything in our power to safeguard our communities from these people. Mr. Speaker, Bill

212 would empower citizens to confidentially report unsafe and illegal activities which continually occur on properties in their communities. If the complaints are merited, reported properties may be investigated by the director of law enforcement. If a balance of probabilities indicated that illegal activities were in fact occurring, the director could warn property owners. Failing that, the director would be able to place restrictions on properties with the consent of the Court of Queen's Bench. These restrictions could go as far as banning people from occupying the property.

A member of the community may easily see that something wrong is taking place on a property. However, it may not be easy for authorities to use existing legislation to close it down. While the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act could conceivably be used to deal with the toxic waste that drug houses produce, the fact that drug producers operate illegally makes it difficult to apply environmental regulations to them. Moreover, environmental protection orders apply only to people, not to locations, and as such they cannot be used to close properties or evict tenants. Similarly, the Public Health Act is typically used to evacuate properties where grow ops have been found and closed down by the police. Municipal zoning bylaws mandated under the Municipal Government Act principally apply to concerns with the aesthetics of buildings.

Bill 212 provides a way to address the issue more directly. It will also be effective in situations where the Public Health Act or the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act do not apply. For instance, if a property is being used only to sell drugs and not to manufacture them, it could be sanctioned under the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. The point of this bill is to prevent criminal activity from occurring, shut it down quickly when it does occur, and prevent it from reoccurring. It is imperative to have the proper tools available to authorities to shut down properties that threaten public safety. While everyone relies on walls to protect themselves from the elements and to establish private space, walls also enable criminal activity by sheltering it from public view. This bill balances everyone's right to privacy with the need to halt criminal activity.

Bill 212 is commendable because it proposes an entirely community-based answer to crime. Citizens in our community are suitably placed to know when illegal activity is taking place. They know when something is out of the ordinary, and they have a personal stake in ensuring that crime does not happen in their neighbourhoods. Some examples that already exist are Neighbourhood Watch, crime watch, and Citizens on Patrol. Mr. Speaker, as a society we should use every resource available to combat crime, and our citizens are some of the best resources.

The prevention and interception of crime is everyone's responsibility. Adding more police officers is not and cannot be the only answer to this problem. We've recognized this in Alberta already and are using innovative programs to produce results. For instance, training sheriffs to patrol our highways has freed police officers to handle other more serious crimes. In a similar way, this bill would enable the closing of locations where crimes are probably taking place without requiring the use of police resources. The police would then be left available to deal with emergency lights-and-sirens calls and other more complicated investigations. Police officers are a valuable resource which should be focused on crime-fighting efforts that have the most effect.

Inspectors working under this act would be an effective way to address crime. We can look at the example of Manitoba, which has a law quite similar to what this bill proposes. In the five years since the Manitoba law was enacted, four investigators shut down 200 drug dens and prostitution houses. These same four investigators also uncovered and addressed 60 cases of children being sexually exploited. The reason for the great success in Manitoba is, as I've said, that citizens in the community are law enforcement's best resource. Drug cultivation/activity can be spotted easily by neighbours, whether it's covered windows, odd smells, little outdoor maintenance, or unusually loud electrical humming noises. The sooner drug sites are shut down the better. Preventing illegal drugs from being produced is one way we can help remove them from our communities.

Drug production sites themselves are also dangerous. Methamphetamine labs are potentially highly explosive. Mould growth and the structural deficiencies caused by grow ops present health hazards to people in and around these sites. A study of grow ops in British Columbia found that fire was 24 times more likely to happen in grow houses because of the unsafe, substandard wiring. Furthermore, the chemically induced paranoia of those running illicit drug operations can cause them to deploy booby traps or other antipersonnel devices in and around the operations. No one wants any of these activities in our communities, and Albertans certainly don't want it in the house next door.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is also about addressing the root of criminal activity. Most of our current efforts to fight crime are targeted at individuals who are breaking the law. Comparatively little effort is targeted at locations where the law is broken. Illegal activities have to take place somewhere. Drug and gang activity don't cease when a person is prosecuted and subsequently removed temporarily from the community. After serving a sentence, a person convicted of a crime may return to where they broke the law and continue the criminal activity. In this way Bill 212 is complementary to current police antigang efforts. By closing down meeting points that are perceived by gang members as secure, the bill helps the police end gang activity.

Another provision of this bill helps keep our emergency responders safe. There's no need anywhere in Alberta for people to fortify or barricade their homes to military-type specifications. Bulletproof, reinforced, and armoured materials are all completely unnecessary. These materials prevent police from gaining access to buildings to serve warrants where probable cause exists to suggest that the occupants are armed and dangerous or likely to engage in the destruction of evidence. Criminals cannot be permitted to sit in fortified homes and houses and be immune to the law.

Fortifications prevent other rescue workers from accessing or leaving buildings in an emergency. If they so need, firefighters should be able to easily gain access to buildings without having to grapple with absurd obstructions. Fortifications also slow the egress of occupants from a building in the event of an emergency.

Community organizations like the Victoria Park community association in Calgary are trying to cleanse their neighbourhoods of prostitution and drugs. One big problem that these associations have to deal with is absentee landlords who do not care what condition their property is in or what takes place there. Mr. Speaker, property owners must be held accountable for the activities that take place on their properties. This bill provides a mechanism for accountability which recognizes that property owners may not be engaged in criminal activity even while their tenants are, but property owners have an obligation to ensure that the tenants are not breaking the law. This bill draws illegal activity to property owners' attention and gives them a chance to end it. If there is crime repeatedly taking place in the building, that building should be shut down.

Bill 212 offers a way for our citizens to take ownership of their communities and to say to criminals: you're not welcome in my backyard. I ask that all members of this Assembly join me in voting in favour of this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I, too, support Bill 212 and thank the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing it forward. I would like to speak briefly on the role of youth in creating and maintaining safer communities and neighbourhoods. Of course, I'm going back to my past 34 years as a teacher, school and community coach. I'm very aware of the importance of involving students, engaging and empowering children.

One of the key first contacts beyond the teachers is the role of the school resource officer. Unfortunately, with the number of additional duties that are put upon police, the number of school resource officers has dramatically been reduced. For students to see police authority individuals in a positive light as their friend and their supporter is extremely important, not only for children who have the luxury of being born and living in Alberta, but it's especially important for immigrant children, who do not necessarily have that climate of respect based on their refugee status from countries where police officers were not viewed in a positive light. So having a school resource officer, not just at the high school level but at least on a visiting weekly basis to both elementary and junior high schools, is extremely important. That role model of a friend and protector is extremely important.

Being proactive and preventative is, to me, considerably more effective than simply having stiffer sentences. I would rather invest in youth than just simply punish them. I don't believe the way that south of the border is headed in terms of building more jails and larger jails than schools is the way to go. What we need to do in terms of connecting with kids is involve them in the schools and in recreational activities. We need to keep kids connected and positively involved.

Children are the eyes and ears of the community. Whether they have the good fortune of having someone at home and they can go home for lunch in the traditional role or whether they're in that latchkey necessity due to the economic drivers within this province and the need to maintain a household, kids are out and about to a greater extent. That can be either positive or negative. But kids certainly are probably the first ones to know what's going on in their community, and if they can communicate their knowledge, then that's of tremendous benefit.

In my 34 years as a teacher I've been involved in a number of youth leadership programs, such as school council adviser within teams, within clubs. I've also been involved with peer leadership programs, where you recruit not only your most positive leaders, but you recruit the kids who are perceived as the negative leaders, and you enlist their abilities to involve students in a positive manner. We need to counsel kids on their strengths, but we also need to recognize their limitations. When I was an adviser for a peer leadership program at Sir John A. Macdonald junior high school, in the northwest, we provided students with supports and counselling, but we also indicated to them what their limitations were. We would never ask them to or expect them to put themselves in a position of risk, whether it be approaching a particular drug house or trying to go beyond their capabilities in terms of counselling before turning it over to an adult professional.

I'm also very aware in a limited number of cases of the possibility of negative leadership. I've personally experienced working with a parent whose daughter was very much mesmerized by a young man who advertised his drug dealings and some soft porn on a nexopia.com website. It's very hard for the police and school officials to deal with a student when they've reached that state of negativity. Therefore, by involving them in the positives, whether it be on the wrestling team, whether it be in community soccer, whether through the police officer, this keeps kids on the straight and narrow. As I say, we should never underestimate the power and importance of children and recognize that they have the tools and the capabilities if we support them in making a positive difference in maintaining and creating safer communities and neighbourhoods.

We need to counteract negative peer pressure, obviously, and we need to reward positive peer pressure, moving towards doing the right thing, being involved in your community. In the leadership programs I've run, students were required as part of their mark to volunteer 30 hours within a year, or 10 hours per term. The students weren't told what activities to engage in. It could be as simple as keeping their garage clean, walking the dog. But I had report after report after report from members of the community on how much their activities were appreciated.

So my message within Bill 212 and in Motion 510, that I'll be bringing in later this afternoon, is to recognize the positive potential of students and to encourage it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a whole decade or more since I did stand before you and share my thoughts on any bill as a private member. I am really pleased to do so on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

To the Member for Calgary-Hays: thank you for presenting this legislation before the Assembly, and I want to say thank you for a number of reasons. One, it is a priority of the government of Alberta to provide safe and secure communities. Our efforts to reduce crime and the degradation of our neighbourhoods are essential to providing a great quality of life for Albertans. Second, Albertans have always valued the family-oriented atmosphere that is present throughout this province. This government aims to continue this strong tradition by ensuring that Albertans feel safe on their streets and in their homes. Third, my constituents have articulated many times the need for more to be done to rid communities of illegal activity, especially known illegal houses.

The government of Alberta, through its various departments and agencies, places emphasis on crime prevention and protecting our communities from illegal activities because our objective is to ensure that Albertans are living in an environment which is conducive to a healthy lifestyle.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 212 offers a new alternative to approaching the criminal problems that are affecting communities throughout this province. The act aims to improve the safety of our neighbourhoods, which is commendable and will complement or enhance our current crime reduction efforts. The alternatives proposed in Bill 212 would assist and expand the current mechanisms that are in place to help protect our communities. We have well-trained and resourceful police services. There are also several active community-based crime prevention organizations within our province. As well, the Department of Justice is legally capable of enforcing laws that pertain to criminal activity, and municipal governments are within their authority to implement bylaws regarding unsafe or hazardous properties. However, I have a few communities which are having some difficulty even though we have these great programs.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that Bill 212 will build upon the current government framework and existing associations, supporting their concentrated efforts to address the problems of criminally active houses in Alberta. I believe that we are currently doing an admirable job; however, as with most issues there is always potential for improvement. I would encourage the present departments and organizations that are relevant to crime prevention to continue to work together. I believe that if they use their resources efficiently and effectively, they will continue to produce successful results.

Alberta's police services are working tenaciously to improve on these results. Several accredited municipal police services exist throughout Alberta and are continuously engaged in the effort to provide safe and secure communities. The provisions under Bill 212 would serve as a tool to assist municipal police services and, hopefully, community organizations. Building on our strong foundation of municipal law enforcement is the RCMP. Although these policing branches may be separate in theory, practically they both share similar goals, which are focused on community-based crime prevention via intelligence-led and integrated policing.

Mr. Speaker, it should also be noted that all over Alberta we have a great number of organizations that concentrate on ensuring the prosperity and well-being of their respective communities by advocating against criminal activities. These organizations would greatly benefit from the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

Bill 212 fully supports and engages citizens who demonstrate a passion to better their respective town or city by establishing crime awareness and prevention organizations. It is important that I acknowledge a few of these valuable associations which are presently making significant contributions to mitigating crime in Alberta. Organizations such as the Alberta Community Crime Prevention Association, the Alberta Provincial Rural Crime Watch Association, and the national strategy on community safety are just a few of the groups that help Albertans create safer communities by increasing communication and enhancing citizens' knowledge about crime prevention and making a difference in their communities.

The Alberta Citizens on Patrol Association is an organization that works to provide safer communities across Alberta by involving its citizens. Members of ACOPA are volunteers who serve as the eyes and ears of their community. They take an active role in the safety of their communities by patrolling and liaising with local police agencies, performing surveillance, conducting research, executing checkstops and traffic safety programs. The association, in fact, recently received a special honour during this year's Crime Prevention Week. ACOPA had the distinction of receiving a Solicitor General crime prevention banner in High Prairie.

At this time I would like to acknowledge the efforts of ACOPA's president, Brian Holmberg, and the strides that he has made. This High Prairie man should be proud because this banner is usually given to bigger centres, but because High Prairie is so involved with crime prevention, the Solicitor General chose this community as a place to hang the banner. So to ACOPA: keep up the great work, and continue to do the things that I believe are going to make communities safer.

Albertans will continue to receive support from the currently established authorities when they suspect that there are illegal actions taking place in their neighbourhood. Mr. Speaker, I encourage citizens to access and use the many programs and mechanisms that are currently available to them. Although strong communities require individuals who will actively clean up their neighbourhoods, like my ACOPA, Bill 212 would not support citizens that may not comprehend the restrictions of their participation and in certain cases exceed the limits of their authority. But we welcome the work that they do and continue to do. The bill would not promote excessive citizen vigilance that could possibly interfere with the proceedings of important police investigations or conflict with the privacy rights of other individuals.

Alberta Justice will have the capacity to deal with derelict housing, drug houses, and fortified houses. Currently there are several statutes that enable the appropriate authorities to deal with unsafe properties. We have empowered our municipalities via the Municipal Government Act to establish bylaws that pertain to properties. For example, the Safety Codes Act allows accredited municipalities to investigate unsafe houses and take action accordingly. There are also sections in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act and the Public Health Act that provide detailed guidelines for dealing with unsafe and hazardous buildings when it is applicable.

Alberta's police services can work within the legislative framework to address unsafe property concerns. It is important not to create silos between the various police departments, community organizations, and Justice branches. I suggest that we continue on a course that further co-ordinates the efforts of all the respective parties. I believe that we should reduce obstacles that impede the sharing of information. It has been very beneficial to continue to use effective communication and exchange criminal intelligence. The knowledge of criminals and where criminal activity is taking place should be conveyed to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure that communities recognize that the government of Alberta will continue to support an aggressive offensive to negate illegal activity. The safety and security of Alberta's communities are of utmost importance. The appropriate authorities need to be persistent and utilize all their capabilities to address the issues that arise from hazardous houses. As a province we must diligently focus on crime prevention because it is integral to ensuring a healthy and vibrant quality of life for all Albertans.

It is without question that criminal properties are affecting neighbourhoods throughout Alberta, in my area as well, creating feelings of fear and insecurity, something that I believe all Albertans don't want to have to feel. We must do everything we can to mitigate these feelings and improve the well-being of our neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, not only do people come to Alberta for economic opportunities; they also come here because Alberta offers a great lifestyle for all people of different backgrounds, creeds, religions, and ethnicity. Our communities are a reflection of peace, cooperation, and respect. We must continue to advance this reality. If criminal properties are adversely affecting our neighbourhoods and decreasing Albertans' quality of life, they must be dealt with and dealt with swiftly. I wholeheartedly support the initiatives that concentrate on the government of Alberta's priority to provide safe and secure communities.

I believe that we can continue to deter criminally active homes by supporting community crime prevention organizations, using our extremely competent police departments, and prosecuting criminals through Alberta Justice branches as well as ensuring that the bylaws are followed by the municipal communities. Bill 212 will expand our capacity to do that job, and that is why I am offering my support. To the member: thank you for making sure that all communities do feel safe and that we have communities that can continue to thrive.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

4:20

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak in support of Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act.

I must commend the Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing this forward – it's a very important and timely bill – and for, you know, putting his extensive knowledge and experience into this bill. It's obviously very thoroughly thought through. It obviously goes through in detail many of the bases that would be necessary to make this a bill that could be passed by this Legislature this year. I think the timing allows for anybody in the public, in the break until the fall sitting that's scheduled, to come forward and bring forward any concerns on this bill. I think that my neighbourhoods in Edmonton-Manning would very much appreciate it if Bill 212 could become law by the time the year is over.

It is a comprehensive bill. For example, it respects the confidentiality of whistle-blowers. Remember that in some neighbourhoods where we have these types of activity established – you know, where there are gangs, where there are drug dealers, where there are some of these problems in a comprehensive manner, or where we have some new immigrant communities that might be a little bit more susceptible to pressures – this allows for whistle-blowers in the neighbourhood to let it be known that there are drug dealers, to let it be known that there are gang leaders operating out of houses, and to let it be known that they can do so in a way that's confidential and in a way that would not bring harm to them in a way that these drug dealers or gang leaders or whatever might choose to do if they knew.

In the way that the bill is written, you know, it speaks to specified uses. It looks at "the manufacturing, import, purchase, sale, transport, giving, possession, storage, consumption . . . of liquor." That's in 2(e)(i). Clause (ii) basically speaks to bootlegging, and (iii) speaks of a controlled substance under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act of Canada. It speaks in (iv) of "child sexual abuse or activities related to child sexual abuse." This is an area that needs tremendous surveillance and an ability to find out the activities of these criminals. "Prostitution or activities related to prostitution" is (v), and (vi) is "the commission or promotion of a criminal organization offence." Clause (vii) is "the accommodation, aid . . . or support of any nature of a gang or criminal organization." It does leave openings for others that may develop in (viii).

But the fact that it specifies these areas – and these have been areas in a lot of communities in our province. Certainly drug houses, certainly crack houses, certainly some of these fortified houses, which are spoken to specifically in the bill as well, have been a matter of great difficulty for our police in trying to control. Now, the use of surveillance as one part of that is important, and it has been getting much greater and widespread use by law enforcement authorities in the whole world.

I'll speak a little bit about the description of it from, actually, the Privacy Commissioner of Canada, some information they put out.

The use of video surveillance to detect, deter and prosecute crime has increased significantly over the last few years – in Canada and abroad. Police and law enforcement authorities increasingly view it as a legitimate tool to combat crime and ward off criminal activity – including terrorism. Recent events have heightened the interest of public authorities in deploying video-surveillance in public places. It is widespread in the United Kingdom and increasingly used by law enforcement and anti-terrorism authorities in the U.S. and Canada, particularly since September 2001.

Here at home, police and public and security agencies monitor public parks and streets. Some cities have put in place video surveillance systems for specific festival periods. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) use cameras to monitor high-security areas such as Parliament Hill. Cameras are used to survey Canada-US border crossings. They are very extensively used in airports, and port authorities are becoming increasingly interested in using video cameras to monitor [activities].

We don't want to have a Big Brother society, certainly, but in looking at these specific criminal activities, to begin to use video surveillance on some of these properties I think would be an important tool as this whole act is an important tool for our law enforcement agencies.

There are other types of technologies that can come into play, and many of them are new and developing and could develop over the next four years. You know, the importance of heat-detecting equipment: a couple of years ago, I think, the Supreme Court ruled on the allowability of the use of heat-detecting equipment to peer through homeowners' walls without violating the constitutional right to privacy. This type of activity by our police does not look to violate any constitutional rights, and I think that is clear. Some comments from the court: "Safety, security and the suppression of crime are legitimate countervailing concerns." That was from Justice Ian Binnie. "Patterns of heat distribution on the external surfaces of a house are not a type of information [which could give rise to] a reasonable expectation of privacy."

You know, the court was careful. "The nature of the intrusiveness is subtle but almost Orwellian in its theoretical capacity," the court wrote in a decision that ordered police to obtain search warrants for such surveys. It was the lower court that said that, but the Supreme Court disagreed, disputing the lower court's evaluation of the extent of the privacy breach. That shows that this type of technology is important and can be used.

There are many new technologies that may develop. I think it's important that we have a tool, a bill, a power that's given by this Legislature to our law enforcement agencies and officers to go forward and to deal with this very important area of making our communities safer and secure. Many of the other provinces are looking at it. Certainly, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and the Yukon Territory have already passed legislation and have had great success with this type of law. It would behoove, be important, and good for the government of Alberta to move forward on this type of approach.

I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that the demand problem in drugs is very much a difficulty and a problem that has to be looked at too. I believe that this does, in some senses, look to the demand problem as well because it could restrict the gang leaders, the drug dealers in trying to bring people into addiction, in trying to influence them into the use of drugs by being in their communities, by being in their neighbourhoods, and by having a readily available distribution potential.

This bill is very important, Mr. Speaker. I do support it. I hope it does go forward as soon as is reasonably possible or that a new government bill would come forward which would incorporate its ideas.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join in the debate on Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for introducing this very thought-provoking piece of legislation. I support the intent of Bill 212 because it presents members with the opportunity to empower Albertans in procuring the safety of our communities. I cannot stress enough the importance of safe and secure environments for our families. Not only is this a priority for this government and this Assembly; it is a priority for all Albertans. Unfortunately, no single piece of legislation can deliver wholesale changes to the safety and security of our neighbourhoods. The fact is that there is no quick fix for dealing with crime. However, Bill 212 is a tool in terms of providing communities with what they need to address crime prevention in their neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, by supporting a concept that strengthens community safety, this House is enabling individuals to protect their communities in a proactive manner. Albertans place a very high level of importance on family values and compassionate communities. With Bill 212 it is hoped that we will foster this ethos as Alberta leads the country as a bastion of safe environments to live, work, and raise our families in. While Albertans already have a profound sense of ownership and pride for their communities, this act reflects the sense of pride that so many individuals have as second nature. I'm pleased that this piece of legislation intends to address potential criminal activity through an avenue other than immediate criminal legislation. It represents the fact that Albertans are willing to work through the process of civil law to resolve matters of importance in their communities if it means expediency.

There is no shortage of questionable activities that threaten the safety and well-being of our communities. Mr. Speaker, residential crystal meth production, gang activity, and theft of personal property are challenges that all levels of government and law enforcement are continually dealing with. Bill 212 will provide a new community-based avenue to address these harmful behaviours.

These sorts of socially unhealthy activities are exacerbated as Alberta's population grows at an unprecedented rate. Between 2006 and 2011 Alberta's population is expected to grow 1.7 per cent annually, increasing the total population to nearly 4 million residents in 2011. With population growth so strong this Assembly owes it to Albertans to be open to the idea of new and innovative measures in strengthening our communities. With increasing development in commercial and residential areas it is no secret that these sorts of properties can serve as protection for criminals and gangs as a means of sheltering their activity from plain view.

Although Bill 212 is a proactive measure in dealing with these sorts of concerns, it is still important for this Assembly to give credence to the structural framework that we already have in place, a framework that is doing a fine job and one that has the capacity to continue to improve upon its mandate.

Mr. Speaker, in response to concerns from the community level this province funds a variety of grant initiatives that support and empower communities in addressing their respective crime issues and concerns. The Alberta community crime prevention, or ACCP, grant program is available as a part of Alberta's crime prevention strategy, founded on recommendations arising from the 1999 Alberta Summit on Justice. This grant, along with others, focuses on addressing the social and economic factors that may place individuals at risk to commit crime or be victimized, issues that threaten the safety of our communities. Situational crime prevention approaches like this are designed to deter criminal behaviour or make criminal acts more difficult to commit. This approach focuses on reducing the opportunity for crime to occur, increasing the risk of detection and reducing the rewards resulting from criminal acts. These sorts of organizations go to the root of the problems that often lead to instability in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, the government also supports a variety of other community networks that serve as the first point of contact in helping us understand some of the safety concerns that are emanating from communities. For instance, the Alberta Provincial Rural Crime Watch Association maintains a detailed network of partnerships that promotes an ever-vigilant, watchful eye on our rural communities. I'm in favour of supporting these entities through every appropriate measure. These groups do an excellent job in providing community awareness and set an example for public awareness. They deserve to be supported in whatever capacity necessary. When action must be taken against threats to community safety, it is in our best interest to work with these sorts of valuable mechanisms.

All three levels of government are granted a variety of enforcement mechanisms to protect our communities from social disruption and criminal activity. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that our municipal and national police forces are endowed with the legal powers to investigate and provide the first level of safety management. I'm also confident that our hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security will agree that we are always working with our partners in law enforcement to address concerns of community safety that are expressed by all Albertans.

While the fight against organized crime, Mr. Speaker, is addressed in this bill, budget 2007 included $1.5 million allocated to the Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force. Funding initiatives such as this project support a dynamic framework designed to deal with drugs and gangs, among other social ills. In addition to last year's 4.8 per cent increase to municipal policing, budget 2007 included another 7.6 per cent, or $11.5 million, for provincial policing.

Engaging your neighbours in dialogue and keeping a studious eye on activities, commonplace or questionable, are important parts of being a contributing member of one's community. Although this bill is ambitious and would require more consultation, it is important that we move forward and engage in meaningful discussion. Albertans currently have several channels to report suspicious activity. The provisions offered by Bill 212, if adopted, would provide another implement in the safety tool kit. Given our new government's resolve to provide safe and secure communities, I am pleased to see legislation of this nature. I support and encourage individuals to demonstrate concern for the safety of their communities.

Albertans should not rely on a false sense of security when dealing with the safety and security of their families and communities, but they should also not be spurned into feeling unsafe. This Assembly owes it to Albertans to discuss the strengths and weaknesses of a piece of legislation that will have a significant impact on the channels by which neighbourhoods deal with questionable activity in their neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support this bill and the positive role it will play in Alberta's communities. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to again add my voice to the discussion on Bill 212, Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act, brought by the Member for Calgary-Hays. It is interesting that reports in the various papers today about people's perception of crime in their community find that the gap between perception and reality is increasing because people generally think that crime is on the increase. That has been the prevalent attitude of most people across Canada. The reality is that much of the crime statistics are actually declining, especially in areas of crimes like robbery and so on. But the gap between perception and reality is increasing. It's also important to note that there is a great deal of confidence expressed by the general public in our local police and the RCMP, which I find quite gratifying.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, what this bill deals with is not the general perception of crime but actually something very concrete; namely, the perceptions that people have about crime in their local communities. Of course, it's people in local communities that can best monitor and detect what is happening in their own communities.

I had a personal experience with this in my riding of Edmonton-Glenora. When in one particular community there were reports of suspicious cars and strangers coming from outside the neighbourhood and entering into a particular house, a committee was formed of citizens within the community. This committee then contacted the police and also the MLA and also a member of city council, and we all met to discuss what we might do. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish that we would have had this kind of legislation in place because this would have provided another tool for people in the community to be able to deal with situations which they see are really suspicious.

In general, I'm supportive of this kind of response. It is refreshing, actually. The usual response to crime these days, especially on the part of Conservative governments, is to focus on tougher sentencing and ignore crime prevention. Now, this isn't exactly crime prevention in the sense that it's dealing with programs that deal with young children to prevent crime, being able to anticipate crime in the future, and emphasizing programs that deal with education, and so on, but still it is in the area of raising the community awareness to try to detect where crime is taking place. It's another tool that people can use.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very empowering. Many members have already mentioned that. It's a question of empowering citizens in their own war on crime in the local community. Anything that empowers citizens to be more aware and to take back control of their own neighbourhoods by reporting problems that they see is really important.

This bill outlines a whole process in which a person can engage in making a complaint when residents see something that concerns them. There is a process of making a complaint to the director, and the director initiates an investigation. Now, it really would be important that that complaint be confidential. I don't know whether the Member for Calgary-Hays would like to respond to this issue. I searched in the bill for some assurance that such a complaint would be confidential. I mean, it would have to be held in strict confidence because of the possibility of recrimination on the part of people engaged in crime. So the complaint would have to be kept strictly confidential.

Then, once the complaint is received, the director launches an investigation. I suppose it's using some sort of team. In Saskatchewan it's the safer communities neighbourhoods investigation unit. I suppose what is in mind here is a similar kind of investigative team. After the investigation is made, the director has several options, including issuing a warning letter to the property owner, resolving the problem out of court, or applying for a community safety order through the courts.

The director. The definition of "director" in the bill is that this is the "Director of Law Enforcement appointed under the Police Act." I assume that that's the same director who has the oversight of all peace officers and sheriffs in the province. So it seems to me that the role of this director, the powers of the director, are increasing. I noticed also that in this act, in part 3, there's a reference to the use of peace officers. My question, I guess, to the Member for Calgary-Hays is that again peace officers and their role seems to be extended, broadened here.

It seems to me that peace officers were mainly going to be used for traffic control on the highways of Alberta. They weren't going to be used in an investigative way. I mean, it's the RCMP, it's our municipal police that are trained to do investigations. So I have a real question around the investigative power of the director and who the director is going to use in the way of investigators. Is he going to use retired police officers? Is he going to use civilian investigators? Is he going to use peace officers, who may not have very much training at all? How does the investigation happen in relationship to the local police? They are obviously the ones that have the training to do these kinds of investigations. Are we going to have peace officers getting in the way of the local police? I think these are important questions in terms of putting this kind of bill into practice. Those are the questions I have right now.

I certainly approve of the intention of this bill. It's really important that we have safe communities in Alberta and that people be empowered to raise the awareness and to help each other locate where crime is taking place and to be able to have a mechanism to report and get some action. I compliment the member for bringing this to us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to speak to Bill 212, the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays for bringing such an excellent bill forward for debate.

The bill lives up to the expectations of nearly every Albertan, and that is, quite simply, to live in safe communities and safe neighbourhoods. I don't think any bill could capture its objectives any simpler. Bill 212 allows citizens to confidentially report activities that would threaten the safety of neighbourhoods and communities in Alberta. This bill aims to hold property owners and tenants accountable for unsafe activities that occur on their properties.

In examining this piece of legislation, it appears to me a very proactive tool which allows communities to take matters of safety into their own hands. This bill is not intended to place fear in the hearts of communities, and I do not think that Bill 212 is intended to feed paranoia between neighbours. We should perceive Bill 212 as a positive move to eliminate threatening and unwelcome activities such as drug houses, gang hangouts, or brothels from our communities.

I think all Albertans would appreciate that this Assembly is considering the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act. Albertans value the ability to live in communities free of obscene activities. They want to raise families in a safe and loving environment. If activities that impede these desires from becoming reality are occurring in their neighbourhoods, it is incumbent upon us as legislators to protect individuals and their families. Bill 212 sends a clear message to criminals that their activities will not be tolerated in our communities.

There is no doubt that if criminal activities such as the manufacturing of crystal methamphetamine are occurring, these acts would be handled through the criminal process. Bill 212 answers the deeper concern of what occurs to the property where the illicit activities were taking place. Too often homes where gang activity or prostitution occur turn into incubators for ongoing criminal or illegal activities. There is a need to deal with this problem, to clean up or place restrictions on such properties, to put an end to what can quite simply be constituted as acts of depravity. Some may think that placing restrictions on a property owner as a result of another party's actions is unfair. Although there may be merit to that, it ultimately falls to the property owner to take the necessary precautions when renting out properties. If there appear to be suspicious activities being undertaken by a tenant, the landlord must be vigilant and not allow those individuals to occupy their property.

Landlords have a role in ensuring that communities are safe even if they do not live in the neighbourhoods where they own property. Mr. Speaker, placing the burden of responsibility on the property owner for undesirable situations is quite acceptable. Just as it falls to members of a community to take leadership in the success and vitality of the community, it should fall to those who degrade the quality of community life to remedy its pitfalls.

The quality of community life is critical in maintaining a high quality of life for our entire province. If people feel that they are struggling with the scourge of illicit activities in their communities, how can they be expected to contribute fully to the life of their province? How can they feel that their children will grow up in safe and healthy communities? How can they go to bed at night knowing that drug dens or prostitution are taking root in their neighbourhoods? Mr. Speaker, no Albertan should have to put up with answering such questions. That is why it is critical that we empower Albertans through Bill 212 to take action in their communities.

Crystal methamphetamine is one example of what we are trying to counter. Last year a task force on crystal meth, led by our government, concluded that broad and co-operative community action was required to counter the impact that crystal meth is having on certain Albertans. Among its recommendations the task force asked government to get tough when it comes to the enforcing of the law as it pertains to crystal meth. They recommended that additional resources be put in place to get crystal meth labs and pushers out of the communities to end the impact it is having on children. Bill 212 lives up to that goal quite effectively by putting in place measures to remove drug labs and the great harm they cause from the community.

Mr. Speaker, I think Bill 212 would also find support from municipalities across Alberta. For example, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association requested that the Alberta government create more initiatives to further address the manufacturing of illicit drugs as well as their distribution. Although this example deals specifically with illegal drugs, municipalities have to bear the brunt of unrest in communities as they offer policing and other types of community support services. There is no doubt that municipal leaders care deeply about the quality of their communities and the ability of their residents to live in a safe environment. I am certain that they would be appreciative of what this act will accomplish.

Bill 212 also allows for the removal of fortifications such as bullet-proof materials or materials designed to be resistant to explosives from a door or window should they exceed acceptable security requirements. It seems self-evident that for those committing illicit acts, there should be no such thing as an acceptable security standard. This provision of the bill is critical in ensuring not only the safety of individuals but of law enforcement officials as well. I shudder to think about how drug dens or gang hangouts could be fortified to such an extent that it would be beyond the normal capacity of law enforcement officials to access the occupants of the property if illicit and criminal activities were occurring inside.

How could we as a society possibly tolerate the establishment of criminal fortresses in the midst of neighbourhoods and communities? I certainly cannot. Mr. Speaker, I doubt that many of the hon. members present at the moment would either. It is critical that homes or other types of properties are secure, and there are reasonable features available to permit people to be secure. But there is no room for security features that open the door to the types of fortifications that would put an individual beyond and above the law. If there is nothing else we can support in this bill, certainly there would be merit in ensuring that these provisions go forward.

Certainly, in looking at Bill 212, we may consider some of the reasons why certain forms of illicit activity are more prevalent at this time. I've addressed the rise of and the scourge of crystal meth. We are also aware of an increase in gang activity in different corners of the province, which has led to an increase in the availability of different types of drugs as well as a rise in theft and vandalism. It's unfortunate that some of the increase in illicit activity is the result of the good economic times we are experiencing. It is sad but, regrettably, true. That is why Bill 212 presents part of the answer to combat crime.

There are other responses needed to make our communities and province a safer place to live. I for one am proud that I serve with a government that wants to provide safe and secure communities for all Albertans. Our Premier has emphasized the importance of safe communities, and he wants to find practical ways of reducing crime across the province. For a safer and crime-free Alberta to materialize, we have to keep in mind that the most effective way to bring this about is through local community measures. That's why I believe that the Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods Act will bring about results for Albertans by allowing them to hold property owners accountable for illicit activities occurring on their properties.

Bill 212 quite effectively recognizes the need not only to punish criminal activity but also to ensure that secondary impacts resulting from the crime are addressed as well. Bill 212 closes off the cycle of crime by ensuring that properties housing illicit activities in one instance do not end up housing illicit activities again. The result of these two principles will be better and stronger communities.

Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting Bill 212, and I hope that my hon. colleagues will join me in doing the same. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, but the time allocated for consideration of this item has now elapsed. Thank you.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Minimum Age of Electors

510. Mr. Chase moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to the Election Act to lower the minimum age of electors in provincial elections from 18 years to 16 years.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You might find my sources of inspiration somewhat surprising, but one of my motivating forces is actually the policy of the Alberta provincial Conservative Party, who saw, in their wisdom, the capabilities of youth and allowed 16-year-olds to not only purchase party memberships but to make the ultimate leadership decision in voting for our Premier. I'm hoping that the same sort of enthusiasm and appreciation of the capabilities of 16-year-olds will allow them your support to vote for their Member of the Legislative Assembly as well as the leader of the government.

The core principle of citizenship is enfranchisement, having the right to vote. Other aspects of citizenship include public service of some kind – working in public office, serving in the military, the police, et cetera – but for most Albertans voting is often the only aspect of citizenship that they experience.

The current participation rates in elections are low. Voter turnout in the 2004 election was 44.7 per cent, the lowest in over 30 years. It is, therefore, impossible for a political party in this province to claim a strong mandate from the electorate because the majority hasn't even voted. Increasing the proportion of the public that votes should therefore be a priority.

One way of doing so is encouraging that engagement early in citizens' lives. If one starts voting when young, then one tends to carry on voting all throughout one's life. One would hope that the enthusiasm of engaged youth would be contagious, and perhaps family members who may have lost interest or never formed it in the first place may be more motivated to explore issues and candidate positions and cast an informed vote. Youth are capable, ready to be engaged in the political process but need the system to be accessible to be relevant to them. Some may try to argue that youth are not interested in politics, are not mature enough, or don't have an adequate knowledge base to make informed decisions. However, one could accurately say that of many adults. We don't have an intelligence test or a means test that prevents adults from participating.

My first-hand experience with youth as a public school teacher of 34 years has permitted me to witness the energy, the enthusiasm, and the desire to explore current affairs, the solid grasp of issues and political process. Students have a thirst to participate, a thirst to be heard.

One example of the incongruity of the situation in which those below the legal voting age find themselves is demonstrated by the disparity between voting rights and financial contribution rights. The provincial Conservative Association is happy to take your money for a youth membership if you are 14. For $5 you could vote last winter for the next leader of the PC Party and the next Premier, but come the next election you couldn't vote for your MLA. So a 16-year-old young PC in Vegreville could have paid for Ed Stelmach to become Premier, he could pay for his next election campaign, but he couldn't go and mark an X next to his name.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, before somebody rises on a point of order, I hope you have realized that we do not use names in this House.

Mr. Chase: Yes. I apologize for the use of the Premier's name. It was not out of lack of respect; it was getting caught up with the information. I apologize.

5:00

Of course, it isn't just the Progressive Conservative Party who allow memberships and attendant financial contributions younger than the voting age. The Alberta Young Liberals membership also starts at 14 as does the federal Conservative Party and the federal Liberals. Sixteen-year-olds can join the reserve forces and can get a driving licence. They can work too. In fact, the Alberta government briefly proposed but then swiftly aborted a move to allow children as young as 12 to work in bars and restaurant kitchens.

The province has some of the most liberal work regulations with regard to age in the country. In response to the uproar over this move, the Premier stated in the Legislature that with respect to young people working in restaurants, sooner or later in this province, Mr. Speaker, younger people have to learn the value of hard work, work for their parents or maybe their relatives in a safe environment under good supervision. There is nothing wrong about people learning the ethics of work.

That comes from Hansard, March 20, 2007. Page 225 is the reference.

If there is nothing wrong with younger people learning the ethics and value of hard work, then surely the same logic should apply to the act of voting: the ethics and value of citizenship itself.

In 2005 Liberal MP Mark Holland, from Ajax-Pickering, introduced private member's Bill C-261 in the House of Commons. It was a nonpartisan, cross-party initiative that proposed to lower the federal age to 16. The fact that it was a Liberal who proposed it is only a historical reference. The bill was supported by both the NDP and the Bloc because they, like I, believe that anything that gets more people interested in elections and interested early in voting is an important addition, in this case to Alberta's democracy.

Young people are often derided as cynical and uninterested in politics. Cutting them out of the political system doesn't help with that perception. Furthermore, lowering the voting age to 16 would allow schools to engage their students much more constructively over issues of voting and elections. All of a sudden these classes would become more real than they would be otherwise. The way to get young people involved in politics is to treat them with respect. The mark of respect in a democracy is the right to vote, and those over 16 should have that right. The Premier believes that young people should learn the value of hard work. We believe that young people should be respected as full citizens.

In preparing this motion, I had the opportunity to talk with young people. Through newsletters and direct send-outs to high schools I asked for student feedback, and I was pleased that I received a considerable amount of feedback. When I attended a social studies class at Sir Winston Churchill, one of the students asked: did I think that by allowing students aged 16 to vote, any party would be more likely to receive the benefit from student participation? I said that that, I believed, was highly unlikely. The worth of the candidate, the importance of the party's policies should trump any particular popularity.

I sincerely hope that my colleagues, regardless of their political affiliation, will support the intent of Motion 510, which recognizes youth's commitment, willingness, eagerness, maturity, and intellectual capacity to participate in the democratic process. For 34 years of my life I've witnessed first-hand the quality of students and their abilities to make important decisions whether they were in life or in classroom circumstances. I hope you support my enthusiasm and will support the motion to lower the voting age to 16.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to address Motion 510 regarding the proposed reduction of the provincial voting age from 18 to 16 years of age. I appreciate the hon. member's intention to involve more young Albertans in the governance process, but several steps have already been taken by the Alberta government which accomplish that goal.

In a democratic system voting is one of the most important civic responsibilities we have. All governments benefit from the guidance provided by the voting process. It is a reflection of the wants and needs of our constituents and tells governments how they should act in order to properly represent the will of their constituents.

As a province we benefit from an involved electorate. When Albertans are aware of the issues, we can all make more responsible decisions to address them. Because of the importance of civic involvement we instill democratic values in our children at a very early age. For example, we teach them history and about current events to better equip them with the knowledge necessary for the responsibilities which await them when they turn 18 years old.

In another attempt to involve Alberta's youth in our parliamentary system, Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta announced the formation of the Youth Secretariat in the spring of 1999. The secretariat was established to involve and further represent young Albertans. Some of the responsibilities and duties of this body are to identify key issues which affect youth and build on existing initiatives and partnerships to provide a mechanism through which issues impacting youth at risk can be identified and addressed.

Mr. Speaker, in June of 2000 a Youth Advisory Panel was established to provide an ongoing youth perspective on the work done by the secretariat. The Youth Advisory Panel, or YAP as it's affectionately known, plays a critical role in providing the Youth Secretariat with a youth perspective and helps the secretariat identify important issues facing youth in Alberta. The panel provides the chair – and that is myself – and staff of the Youth Secretariat feedback and advice on proposed strategies, recommendations, and findings. The youth are available to comment on current initiatives and have an opportunity to propose improvements or new ideas to improve the quality of services for youth.

The Youth Advisory Panel is comprised of 16 to 18 youth from across Alberta ranging in age from 15 to 22 years old. Each panel member serves a one-year term. Panel members represent a variety of backgrounds and experiences, including members who are aboriginal as well as members who have received intervention services. The group also represents both rural and urban perspectives. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the Youth Advisory Panel may be invited to provide advice on other youth-related initiatives within the Ministry of Children's Services or other ministries.

With the creation of this panel Alberta is the only province to provide youth with the unique opportunity and privilege to be involved in government advisement. These are two of many initiatives which involve Alberta youth in the governance process.

Mr. Speaker, this government takes many steps like the Youth Secretariat and the Youth Advisory Panel to involve youth in the democratic process. I urge the hon. members of this Assembly to vote against Motion 510 because Alberta youth already have various avenues by which to get involved within the government process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing in support of Motion 510. Although I have great regard for the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, I couldn't disagree more with his position on the formal structures of government as being a way to introduce young people to be attracted to, to get involved in politics, and also to want to vote. So I'm going to take a different approach and look at this from why I think it's so important that young people get the right to vote at 16.

I had the experience in my constituency of door-knocking last summer, and I happened to meet some new people from Yugoslavia who had come into my constituency and lived in the community. One of their daughters was just starting, I think it was, her second year of political science. She now works in my office – she has just graduated in political science – and is a wonderful example of getting someone involved in politics at a very young age and the right to vote being very, very important.

Also – and maybe it's because of my age and needing lots of assistance – I've noted in my work with student councils and in my constituency office that there's a fair amount of interest from the young people in St. Albert. I hate to say this, Mr. Speaker: most of them are young ladies. In fact, we had eight of them out at our constituency breakfast the other morning, all talking about postsecondary education around a table. I wish the hon. minister of advanced education was there to solve some of these problems that they were raising.

Mr. Horner: You didn't call me. Why didn't you invite me, Jack?

Mr. Flaherty: Well, you were busy. I checked your schedule.

Anyway, the one thing that they wanted to ask the minister was about the 70 per cent of the dollar that comes from the government to go to universities. They want to know what's happening to that.

The point I'm trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that it's essential, I believe, to contact these people through informal kinds of situations. Again, I'll talk about Java with Jack, which we've had every year right after the session, in June. It's a wonderful way of contacting people and hearing about their concerns about government. One of the things we talked about this year was the whole question of getting involved and doing something about some of the conditions that students are faced with at university and school, doing something about that. The point is: at 16 why shouldn't they be able to vote and be involved?

I think, for example, some of the things I'm seeing at graduations this year – the number of women that are planning to go into medicine and law is just great. I think that one way to capture more people is to get them at a younger age and get them involved.

One of the things that I learned from my father – my father was a railroad conductor. I was very proud of my father. He was chairman of the railroad conductors. In fact, he got very involved with John Diefenbaker during the Canoe River train wreck, and he found Mr. Diefenbaker a very inspiring person. I think, again, that's another way of getting to know people, through travel, where you get to meet people and experience contacts and see them in action, see the different people. My father used to tell me how many people he would meet on the railroad that were in politics from across Canada and the impression that they made on him. I think that overly structuring things and not getting to see these people at a different level sometimes clouds a mystique about them.

Lois Hole to me is another perfect example of a very grassroots politician. As a trustee, as a member of the St. Albert community, as Lieutenant Governor what an impact she had on us. I can remember – and I probably shouldn't say this, Mr. Speaker – when she was meeting about 95 of us retired teachers in a room; I was chairing it, and she said: are there any press here today? I said: no. We sort of barred the doors, and she gave us a fairly Lois Hole insight into what the problems were in Alberta Education at that time, which we found very enlightening.

My approach to this and why I support it is that I think young people should be able to vote at 16. Sometimes the way we have to get to know young people is through getting them involved very early and letting them experience contact with the many of members of this House who are wonderful people. I think we should open the doors, where they can meet people and find out what they do and allow them to take part in their ability to vote in elections at the age of 16.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I just would like to make a few comments on this motion because I think it is a good one to debate in this House. It may surprise the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, but I happen to support this motion. I think that the Progressive Conservative party of Alberta showed tremendous foresight a number of years ago when it opened up voting for our leadership to 16-year-olds. We just went through a tremendously exciting leadership race where 16-year-olds were allowed to vote for our Premier. I think that the 16-year-olds brought a refreshing viewpoint to that leadership process. One of our problems in this province and, frankly, throughout Canada is that we simply don't have enough eligible voters who participate in the process. So my view is that if those of us who are over 18 are not going to exercise what I think is the responsibility of all of us, then maybe we should consider lowering the voting age to 16, and we might be surprised at how many of those 16- to 18-year-olds actually do value the fact that they have that incredible honour.

We have two by-elections tomorrow in this province. I'm not familiar with the by-election in Drumheller-Stettler, but I'm somewhat familiar with the by-election in Calgary-Elbow, and I would be very surprised if we had a very good turnout in that particular by-election. It wouldn't surprise me if the turnout was somewhere in the range of 20 or 30 per cent. We will have municipal and school board elections this fall, and again traditionally the turnout is very, very low.

I would suggest that if we can try 16-year-olds in adult court, we should let them have the right to vote, and if we can allow 16-year-olds to work in a workplace, I would suggest that giving them the right to vote is something that this Legislature should consider.

Mr. Speaker, I would support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Motion 510, proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. The motion caused me to look at the debate that ensued following the attempts on the part of two young girls in Edmonton, high school students, teens, who were grade 10 and grade 11 students at the time, in 2001. Any time we can draw the attention of the electorate, the citizens of this province, to the whole question of the electoral process, the importance of elections, the importance of our right as citizens to vote is a good thing, and this motion I think serves that purpose. I should say at the very outset that I certainly am in support of this motion, as I was in support of the attempt in 2001 by these two high school students to seek the right to vote as a youth turned 16.

Mr. Speaker, just a reference to the history of the right to vote. The extension of the right to vote to more and more people in regard to the so-called universal suffrage was replete with resistance to the idea of expanding the right to vote because it was seen as a threat to the integrity of the electoral system. We in this House last week were paying tribute to a woman, an Albertan, who in 1917 took actions which then led women in Canada to have full citizenship rights, and the election of women to this Legislature resulted from her efforts. We need to keep this in mind. There's always this kind of resistance. We need to pay attention to that. We shouldn't put unnecessary roadblocks in the way of expanding the right to vote. We had similar laws prior to that, you know, which disenfranchised people based on whether they owned property or not or had educational levels that met the standards of the time or if they belonged to a particular ethnic or racial group. All of those matters have to be kept in mind when debating a matter as serious as this one, which constitutes consideration to extend the right to vote to young people at 16.

Having said that and having expressed my support for the motion, I want to just again caution ourselves with respect to our expectations that simply lowering the age would necessarily increase participation. More will have to be done. This is not a sufficient step; it's a necessary step towards reforming our electoral system. In one of the recent federal elections the participation rate for voters between 18 and 20 years was one of the lowest: 20 per cent. So the assumption that simply entitling a new group of citizens in our province to vote would necessarily lead to an increase in participation in voting either of that group or of all of us in general is something that we should take a hard look at.

We need to do a lot more. We need to improve the integrity of the legislative process altogether. We need to make this House a lot more significant in the lives of Albertans than it has been over the last dozen years at least or more. We need to encourage a much greater role for the Legislative Assembly in the process of governance in the province. What we have seen over the years is a decline in the relative importance of the role of the Legislature vis-à-vis the executive, that is. We need to strike a new balance between the powers of the executive and the powers of the Legislature.

We are beginning to take some steps in that direction, but we need to go a lot farther. I think we need to also make sure that every vote that's cast counts and counts equally, and some sort of proportional system of voter representation would be a sure way of achieving that goal. If you take a variety of steps in tandem, I think we will likely achieve the result of both, making our whole system more democratic, more open, more participatory, and also one that people pay attention to. As people pay more attention to a system and find its activities meaningful to their day-to-day lives, they tend to become participants. So increasing participation in elections will require expanding the universe of those who can vote, surely, but in addition to that, other steps. Call a citizens' assembly. Put this matter as one of the items that should be debated at that one. So this motion, in fact, allows us, then, to open up the opportunities for all of us to engage each other in debate to improve upon the electoral system that we have.

Funding for elections, funding for political parties, funding for our leadership campaigns of political parties: all of these matters are vital to the goal of strengthening and broadening our electoral system and democratic system so that more and more citizens feel engaged and want to involve themselves in its workings. So, Mr. Speaker, I support this motion and certainly urge other members to do the same.

When those teenagers took their matter to the court to seek entitlement to vote, it really did open up some new opportunities for people to think about. I remember that in 2001 and 2004 I visited many high schools in the province. I remember my visit to Aberhart high school in Calgary, a very good school, and I was amazed how these high school students were most interested in what was happening here, their questions to me. They interrogated me and rightly so as a politician, and when they were engaging me in debate, that showed to me that they are in fact, indeed, honestly interested in being participants in the system in a meaningful way.

We have high school social studies curricula which focus on citizenship, rights and responsibilities, and opportunities to change the things that we don't like, to improve things from the way they have been. Young people usually have a lot more enthusiasm for these things and a lot more energy as well. But we need to acknowledge that they have the capacities. We need to make sure that they have the rights in order to be able to exercise those capacities and invest in those capacities in improving our democratic system. Similarly, I visited several schools in Edmonton and the same thing.

The interest of students at the high school level is stimulated by this court action taken by the students at the time. So what we need to do is to find ways of stimulating interest among young people and mature citizens as well in the question of how to make our democracy stronger, how to make it more representative, how to make it more responsive, how to make it more effective, and how to use this engagement to improve the democratic governance to which we are all committed.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll close my remarks. I do support this motion for the reasons given.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-Varsity for presenting this motion to lower the voting age to 16, and I appreciate the remarks of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. He has a great background in education.

I have the same experience in dealing with high school students, and I just want to give one example. During the last election I had the opportunity of participating in a forum at Ross Sheppard high school, which is located in Edmonton-Glenora. At first I thought: well, this is not going to be that important because there are not too many voters in the crowd, a few 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds who are still making their way through high school. So at first I wasn't sure how seriously to take it.

When I went to the forum – it was held in the gymnasium – there were between 2,000 to 3,000 students gathered there. The whole experience was just simply electrifying. All the candidates were up on the stage. At first we were grilled by the students, who had just extremely intelligent, interesting questions which really pressed us to answer and respond to the issues. It was like a leadership convention. There were students with signs for the various candidates up in the bleachers on both sides of the gym. It was just a most exciting time.

They also had a vote amongst the students in the high school – they didn't reveal their vote until after the general election – and the results of the vote were exactly the same as the general election in our riding, fortunately for me, which shows that there's the same level of intelligence and deliberation about the candidates as there was amongst the adult population.

So, you know, it's wrong for us to think that among the young people there are people who are too cynical, not interested, and not mature enough. I mean, frankly, Mr. Speaker, that's paternalism. There are just as many people who are too cynical and not interested and not mature enough among the adult population. Probably the percentage is about the same.

In fact, among students, especially at the high school age, you have some highly informed students who know about the political process. One example of this highly informed component of high school students is the TUXIS Parliament. The TUXIS Parliament is a long tradition in Alberta of having students come from various high schools throughout the province to spend time, usually here in Edmonton, to form a parliament and to become acquainted with parliamentary democracy. They really prepare hard. They understand the party process and the British parliamentary system. They form the government; they form the opposition. Somebody is the Premier; somebody is the Leader of the Opposition. They have debates on the same kinds of issues that we debate here in the House. It's quite amazing to watch them in action.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in terms of principles our youth are the future of our province. They are the foundation upon which our province will be built in the future. It's important for us to involve them in the political process as soon as possible. I'm just very impressed by the work of our social studies teachers in high schools that engage the students in becoming more knowledgeable about politics.

5:30

It's true, Mr. Speaker, that generally 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds may not know a lot about party politics. Most adults don't know a lot about party politics. But ask young people about such issues as globalization, climate change, the war in Iraq, or AIDS in Africa, and they have clear opinions, and they'll debate those issues quite eloquently, referring to all kinds of evidence and so on. So I think it's a mistake for us not to engage them in the political process and enable 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds to vote.

I think there's considerable literature on psychological and moral development. I think of the famous psychiatrist Erik Erickson, who illustrated the stages of growth. Young people who are at the age of 16 and 17 are in a stage of psychological and moral growth where they begin to discuss the big issues of our time, the universal issues, not just personal ethical issues but ethical issues that involve the whole of humanity. So that's why they're quick to engage in discussions of things like climate change.

Mr. Speaker, I really support this motion to extend the voting age down to 16. I think it would be great. I hope that in the future I will face a similar crowd at Ross Sheppard high school, and I'll know that among the 3,000 students there half of them will be voting in the general election. That'll make a huge difference in terms of the way we approach politics, getting our youth involved.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to rise to voice my support and my gratitude for my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity, who introduced this motion lowering the voting age for Albertans from 18 to 16, Motion 510.

I'm going to start by putting two arguments on the record. One argument, which has been briefly touched on, is the participation rate, the voter turnout rate that we have seen in this province and which we have seen drop in this province over the last 30 years. Take 2004, for example, Mr. Speaker. The voter turnout was at an all-time low of 44.7 per cent, the lowest in over 30 years. You know, whether people stayed home or whether people actually intentionally chose not to vote in 2004 is beside the fact. The fact is that more people did not vote than who did. It is, therefore, impossible for any political party in this province to claim a strong mandate from the electorate because the majority did not vote. They chose not to.

Increasing the proportion of the public that votes should therefore be a priority, and it should be a priority for everyone involved in this House. One way of doing so is by encouraging the engagement early on of Albertans, people in their late teens, you know, 16, 17, and 18. If one starts voting when they're young, then the trend is likely going to continue, and they're probably going to exercise that franchise every time the opportunity arises.

Young people are often derided as being cynical or uninterested. We've heard examples from different sides of the House that, indeed, they are interested and they are connected. They're trying to learn, and they're trying to ask questions. They're trying to be active participants, not just bystanders or observers. Sometimes they do this with more energy and more interest than their parents, for example. So cutting them out of the political system doesn't help that perception. I think we should do the opposite. We should really say: "Okay. If you are really this much into it and you're really that interested, here is a tool for you. Here is our way of empowering you to make your voice heard, to participate." It's all about participation, Mr. Speaker.

Lowering the voting age to 16 would also allow schools, as mentioned by my hon. colleagues from Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Glenora, to engage their students more and more constructively over issues of voting and elections. All of a sudden, Mr. Speaker, you're going to have classes where these students are talking about something that is real, something that they can actually feel and take ownership of, something they can participate in instead of something that is just theoretical or something they hear about second-hand.

Now, one of the other reasons why I'm approaching this is the angle of democratic renewal. Voting and elections and people registering their voice is one component of democratic renewal, but there are many more pieces to this puzzle. Democratic renewal is an area which I care about, and it's an area that I'm really interested in.

We've heard some remarks from hon. members, in particular the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, who listed some of the initiatives and some of the agencies or directorates or secretariats that are there in the government to engage youth, and that's all wonderful. My argument is that it shouldn't really stop there. If we engage youth in government operations and government decisions, that's one way to do it. The other way is to give them that franchise which I spoke about.

I can also give an example of the Youth Environment Summit, which was actually held in Kananaskis last year. It was sponsored by the then Minister of Environment, and all MLAs in this House were invited to nominate or delegate young people to go and discuss issues surrounding the environment. I was really pleased and quite impressed that I had many applications from people that wanted to go, and instead of just sending one, I actually sent three to that youth summit. The condition which I imposed on them, Mr. Speaker, was that they come back and report to me what they learned. I said: "There has to be an outcome; there has to be a result. You guys go, learn as much as you can, interact, talk to other delegates, and then come back and tell me what you learned." I was really impressed with the report that they gave me, and in fact I actually ended up putting it in my newsletter, saying: here are the three young ladies which I sent, and here's what they learned, and here's what they're sharing with their community. It was amazing, and I think we should do more of that.

Take my own campaign, Mr. Speaker. The youngest person on my campaign in 2004 was 12 years old, and then we had everybody between 12 and 83. The oldest was 83. They were equally energetic. These guys were equally effective and instrumental in getting me elected to this House. I had many people who were under the age of 16 who were door-knocking, and they were on fire. They were amazing in their style and in their effectiveness in reaching out to people. I was so impressed with their work during my campaign. Unfortunately, they could not vote themselves. They couldn't wait for that opportunity when they turned 18, so I know I'm speaking for them.

I also had an election promise, Mr. Speaker, where I said: elect me, and I'm going to engage young people; I'm going to talk to young people. I started an initiative called Young McClung, which basically meets once a month. We try to meet once a month. The only two times a year when we don't is basically during July and August because people go away, so we have a hiatus. Like my hon. colleague from St. Albert, who calls it Java with Jack, I call it Mocha with Mo. We actually meet nine or 10 times a year, and in September it's going to be my fourth season. Something I promised; something I kept.

Now, what do I gain from meeting with the young people? We actually gain a lot. The young people chair the meetings. The young people attend the meetings. They do the talking. They do the hosting. I just sit there and take notes, and I answer the odd question. It is tremendous. These people invite guest speakers. They actually look after reservations with the local coffee places in my constituency. They even held two all-candidate forums in the federal election in 2006, and they invited all the parties to be represented. They actually did that, and it was tremendous. We had some of the parents commenting: "You know what? No one else is doing this." None of the parties were interested. It's good that a nonpartisan youth group did that on their behalf, and they were particularly appreciative.

They also volunteer in the constituency. They do outreach. They do fundraising for charity and a whole gamut of initiatives that they come up with and they chair. All I require of them is to come back and report to me, and they put a little article in my newsletter talking about youth outreach and what they do and what they learn. Actually, it's quite contagious, too, because every youth brings their friends and their siblings, and it keeps growing, Mr. Speaker. It is really heartwarming and gratifying that we have this dedicated block of citizens that are so far untapped. I think we should really allow them to exercise that franchise which I mentioned.

The other thing that they did on my behalf is that they added me to a new online tool now called Facebook. I'm not sure if you know about it, Mr. Speaker, but I really urge you to go on Facebook and see how many friends you make in your constituency and across Alberta and even across Canada and the world. You would be surprised, and you would be surprised at the quality of these young people and what they know and what they hope to learn.

Take this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. It is no secret that the youngest member in this House is the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who is 34 – he's really young – and then myself being the second youngest. I'm 36. I think we should really have a 20-year-old in this House. We should have an 18-year-old. You know, there is nothing to prevent them from seeking public office. I think one way to encourage them to jump into that fray, to take that first step is to allow them to vote. If we argue that cynicism sets in between the ages of 18 and 24, I think we should bypass that troubled time and start at 16. If they start early, they're likely to continue.

Seniors vote. I think the second block after that would be young people who are really likely to vote. I think we should grant them that opportunity and not deny them that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to take my seat because I'm interested in hearing other speakers and, you know, listening to where they stand on this issue. I thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to close debate.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to acknowledge and thank the Minister of Education and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for their support and recognition of the capabilities of young people. I'd also like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for using as an example the students of William Aberhart high school, which just happens to be in Calgary-Varsity. There are several wonderful teachers there, but a teacher by the name of Martin Poirier teaches history and also is a debate coach. A number of his students have gone on to be very successful. Of course, I would like to thank my Liberal colleagues from St. Albert, Edmonton-Glenora, and Edmonton-McClung for their support.

In my career as a teacher one of the subjects that I taught was social studies. I required my students in my social studies class each Friday to present a current event. I didn't say what their source had to be. It had to be some form of media source. Some students, because they got to choose their own topic and a topic of interest, would choose entertainment. Other students would talk about hockey. But the majority of students – and these were grades 8 and 9 students – chose to talk about political events. It didn't change their mark. There were no extra benefits for choosing political concerns. That was their own natural choice.

I believe that Alberta's future and most important resource is our youth. I believe that by engaging youth at an early age, engagement will continue into later life, and that is why I proposed the lowering of the voting age to 16 from its current 18.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 lost]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, given the hour I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:45 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, June 12, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of introductions today, so if you'll bear with me. First of all, I'd like to say that as a proud parent I know the pride that all parents have in their children, and grandparents as well. So today it's a particular pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the proud mother and the proud grandparents of our head page, Jennifer Huygen. I'm sure that all members of this House will agree with me that Jennifer has done an absolutely outstanding job as a page in this Legislative Assembly, and we, too, consider ourselves as proud parents in that sense.

Jennifer is attending the University of Alberta faculty of arts program, and last year she received the University of Alberta scholastic distinction scholarship, the millennium excellence award, and the Governor General's award for highest academic average in grades 11 and 12. Jennifer also enjoys figure skating and Pilates and is a University of Alberta Gateway news writer and a member of the Red Cross youth group.

Mr. Speaker, seated in your gallery is Susan Huygen, mother of Jennifer and a constituent in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Susan is a research assistant with the department of medicine at the University of Alberta hospital. Accompanying Susan are Andy and Marge Bourgeault, Jennifer's grandparents, who I'm told are very much enjoying retirement. I know that they're proud of Jennifer as our head page, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two special guests. Mr. Chris Gowers is a constituent of mine and also the international service director for Rotary Club of Edmonton West. With Chris is Mariana de Leon Moreno, a 19-year-old Rotary youth exchange student from the city of Zapopan in the metropolitan area of Guadalajara in the state of Jalisco in Mexico. Mariana is here on a one-year student visa attending Ross Sheppard high school since August of 2006. I had the pleasure of meeting with Mariana today. She likes public speaking, arts and crafts, and design and hopes to pursue studies in communications and work in radio and television. While here Mariana has done hiking in the mountains near Nordegg, travelled to Yellowstone and flown over a caribou herd in the far north and built an igloo. She's also flown over the city of Edmonton, gone to an Edmonton Eskimo football game, an Oilers game, and Stars on Ice with Jamie Salé and David Pelletier, and many more activities. She's experiencing our food, our language, our culture, and is sharing with us what her country of Mexico is all about. I would ask Mariana and Chris to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have the singular privilege today of introducing to you and through you to the Assembly 17 key stakeholders who every day make an immeasurable contribution to public health in Alberta and to the wellness of people across the province. Our guests come from many diverse backgrounds, but all have been invaluable in the advancement of a province-wide tobacco reduction strategy, and they're here today to mark the introduction of Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007. Albertans support and indeed demand that we as policy-makers take resolute action in protecting the health of the province.

Our guests are seated in the public and members' galleries, and I'd ask that the House hold its applause until all visitors have been introduced. Dr. Tony Fields, vice-president of medical affairs and community oncology, Alberta Cancer Board; Dr. David Johnstone, clinical director, Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute; Dr. Roger Palmer, dean of the School of Public Health, University of Alberta; Mr. Greg Eberhart, registrar of the Alberta College of Pharmacists; Dr. Darryl LaBuick, president-elect, and Mr. Mike Gormley, executive director, Alberta Medical Association; Mr. Joe Rodgers, board member, and Ms Barb Davis, vice-president, provincial services division, AADAC; Ms Ingrid Meier, board member, and Ms Gina Smith, vice-president, health initiatives, Lung Association of Alberta and the Northwest Territories; Dr. Ian Montgomerie, chair, board of directors, and Ms Angeline Webb, cancer control analyst, Canadian Cancer Society, Alberta and Northwest Territories; Ms Kay Olsen, second vice-president, and Mr. Ken Kobly, chief executive officer, Alberta Chambers of Commerce; Dr. Roger Hodgkinson, honorary chair, and Mr. Les Hagen, executive director, Action on Smoking and Health; and Mr. Ken Chapman, policy consultant with the campaign for a smoke-free Alberta. Heather Jubenvill, a teacher with Nellie McClung who won an excellence in teaching award, and 12 of her students of the BLAST team had hoped to be here, but they had to stay at school and prepare for exams. I'd like all of my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thanks from our Assembly.

A final introduction, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly six students from Bosco Homes' smoking cessation and education program who are here to mark the introduction of Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act. Accompanying the students are Dr. Milan Njegovan, addictions clinician; Kathy Clarkes, Bosco jurisdiction vice-principal; Jarret Mymko, teacher; and Jody Zacharkiw, smoking cessation project teacher. The guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you didn't miss anyone?

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have but one introduction to give you this afternoon. It is an honour, though, for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of grade 6 students from Greystone Centennial middle school in Spruce Grove. There are 138 visitors in total, with two groups in the members' gallery and two groups in the public gallery, a very bright group who participated in the mock Legislature this morning and had some very interesting debate, I might add. The future of Alberta is very well represented in our two galleries today. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. St. Amand, Mrs. Scanga, Mrs. Papp, and Mrs. Steigel. I would ask all of the students and their teachers and parent helpers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we're accompanied by Muriel and Arthur McMurdo. Mr. McMurdo is an example to all of us that no matter how late in life, we all can change and improve. He spent most of his life in Saskatchewan, where he was a staunch NDP supporter, was educated by Tommy Douglas, became the province's first full-time Crown prosecutor, and in 1960 the NDP government appointed him to the provincial bench. His cousin on the other side Agnes Macphail was Canada's first female MP, elected in 1922. However, he now resides in Edmonton and at the age of 82 has purchased his first PC membership. See, there is always hope. Both of them are accompanied by my muse, Stacey Brotzel. I would ask them to rise in the public gallery and receive the warm traditional welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka it's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly five members from the Lacombe action group. Seated in the members' gallery are Sandra Abma, Bob Doherty, Nick Nibourg, Trevor Taylor, and Tracey Oliver-Forbes. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As part of my ongoing celebration of Edmonton being named the cultural capital of Canada in 2007, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Kerry Mulholland. Kerry is the acting executive director of the Writers' Guild of Alberta. The Writers' Guild of Alberta is a provincial arts service organization that represents nearly a thousand professional and emerging writers from across the province. Their mission is to promote, encourage, and support writing and writers in the province and to safeguard the freedom to read and to write and to advocate for the well-being of writers. They offer a number of programs, including a summer camp for kids age 12 to 18 who love to write, and an annual conference. This year that will be in Grande Prairie and culminate with the 2007 Alberta literary awards. I would ask Kerry to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, I have pleasure today in introducing to you and through you to this Assembly my constituency STEP student, Mr. Rob DeSandoli. He is in his third year at the University of Lethbridge, studying political science, and is interested in international policy. Rob is from B.C. and has enjoyed comparing how democracy is practised in B.C. and Alberta. He is a marathon runner and has competed in the Vancouver marathon every year since '05, having won his age category in '05 and '06. Rob is capable of a seven-minute mile. He must enjoy speed because he drives race cars as well. Many of us have had the opportunity to introduce our STEP students and their accomplishments. If these young people are an indication of our future, we are indeed in good hands. I would ask Rob to stand and receive the traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and members of the Assembly Chris Samuel. Chris has been with the NDP caucus for the past three years and is currently our director of research. Previously he worked for the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona as his constituency assistant. Chris has been a long-time NDP activist. He and his partner, Cory, have been involved in the GLBT community for a number of years. He was also the cohost for CJSR's Gaywire. Chris is very dedicated and has contributed immensely to our day-to-day work in this Assembly. We appreciate his hard work and support. I would now call upon him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Margaret Siemens and Betty Welch. Margaret and Betty are constituents of mine in Edmonton-Calder, and both are members of the Calder Seniors Drop-in Centre. They are here today to add their voices to a growing number of Albertans who want the government to implement rent guidelines. Margaret grew up in Edmonton before heading to Winnipeg, but then she loved her home province so much she returned in 1976. Betty was born and raised here in Edmonton and has lived here all her life. Betty has worked for Goodwill Industries for 37 years, and she's a wonderful guitar player and musician. I would now ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the House a visitor from India, Poromesh Acharya. Poromesh Acharya is a noted scholar and highly respected public intellectual in India. He has served as a member of the Education Commission in the state of West Bengal, on the Indian Council of Historical Research, based in Delhi, the government of India Curriculum Review 2005 National Steering Committee, and the National Literacy Mission Authority. He's a retired India councillor, a historical research fellow in education, and an accomplished author in Calcutta. Poromesh has also worked with UNESCO as an education researcher. He is seated in the public gallery, and now I'll request him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is of Wayne Moen and Henry Maisonneuve, both members of the Old Strathcona Foundation. Wayne serves as the past president of the Old Strathcona Foundation, while Henry is the current president. The Old Strathcona Foundation is a volunteer-run, not-for-profit organization. It was founded in 1974 to support the ongoing evolution and enrichment of the area's character. The Old Strathcona Foundation's main objective is to oversee the development of the Old Strathcona heritage conservation area while trying to balance the needs of the residents, businesses, and visitors. This year the Old Strathcona Foundation is celebrating Strathcona's centennial along with its traditional events, like the Silly Summer Parade and the art walk. I've been honoured by the foundation this year to be appointed as the lord mayor of the Old Strathcona area. I will now ask that Wayne and Henry please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Reynolds-Alberta Museum

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The preservation of our cultural heritage is critical for future generations to understand the past. Our province's centennial celebration in 2005 reminded us of Alberta's rich history and the need to keep history in the forefront of people's minds. The Reynolds-Alberta Museum, in my constituency, is an award-winning museum which attracts thousands of tourists each year. Last year the museum presented the Life and Times of the Motorcycle, which attracted 100,000 visitors. This past weekend I had the pleasure of attending the opening of a new exhibit, Showin' Off, a unique display of 50 of the museum's rare, unusual, and one-of-a-kind vintage cars. The display runs all summer.

The elements are in place for the Reynolds-Alberta Museum to be a landmark museum in North America. The automobile, agriculture, and transportation artifacts are outstanding educational tools for future generations. It is also the home of Canada's Aviation Hall of Fame and has a collection of 86 vintage aircraft, the second-largest collection in Canada.

The Reynolds-Alberta Museum is also well served by the fact that the city of Wetaskiwin has embraced an active program of historical restoration. Notably, the city refurbished the old Wetaskiwin courthouse into a new city hall, which will be opened on September 15. The combination of Wetaskiwin's historical theme and the Reynolds-Alberta Museum presents a strong case for using tourism to boost the economic potential of that region. As a result of this potential, the Friends of Reynolds-Alberta Museum are spearheading a regional tourism study to map out the future of the museum.

Knowing our past is critical to understanding our future. The Reynolds-Alberta Museum presents a unique opportunity to this province to educate both young and old on the mechanization of Alberta. We have the means to support the preservation of our history and attract tourists to this world-class destination. Now is the time to build a lasting legacy.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Volunteer Organizations

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday I did part one of a member's statement on the status of not-for-profit agencies in Alberta. I expressed my concerns over the change in funding from core to project or contract and the resulting erosion of capacity of the agencies. I also talked about the extreme circumstances being faced by many, many organizations as their top managers are lured away. Higher costs from choices this government has made in electrical deregulation, the wide-open insurance market, and a refusal to bring in temporary rent caps have also restricted the capacity of charities, their staff, and volunteers.

I ended up speaking about the increasing competition for fundraising dollars as smaller groups go up against schools and other academic institutions and against hospitals and health foundations. Added to this is the distaste or even the ethical crisis that many organizations feel in pursuing gambling dollars in order to subsidize a service which may well be extensively used by those very same gambling clients.

Mr. Speaker, these are resilient, resourceful, determined people working and volunteering in this sector, but they are struggling with a lack of understanding by government about how they work and what they need to survive. Charities, not-for-profits, and organizations run by volunteers are not free. They are extremely cost-efficient, tight with a penny, and very well managed, but they are not free. The choices this government continues to make in under-resourcing this sector are showing their toll. This is a great part of our society. They deserve to be treated as the valued partners that they are. Please study carefully the reports and recommendations of the Canadian volunteerism initiative and listen to your local organizations for their suggestions and advice on how to achieve better partnerships.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Wyatt Broughton

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to honour the story of an incredibly inspiring Albertan. Wyatt Broughton, a five-year-old boy from Red Deer, represents a modern-day miracle. Just two weeks before Wyatt was due, his parents, Shelley and Todd Broughton, discovered that Wyatt would be born with some health problems, the extent of which they were unsure. Following his birth, the doctors informed his parents that Wyatt had bladder exstrophy, two holes in his heart, and a missing valve in his pulmonary artery.

Mr. Speaker, Wyatt's first surgery occurred when he was only nine months old, and he has had 16 more since. Add to that over 150 X-rays, Botox injections, tests, scopes, blood work, and numerous other scans. Wyatt has congenital heart disease, chronic lung disease, and severe reflux. He cannot swallow and is completely deaf as well as blind in one eye.

Mr. Speaker, with Wyatt meaning "little fighter," it is truly a fitting name for him. Even while presented with such tremendous adversity, Wyatt remains forever enthusiastic. He continues his intense passion for life, inspiring all those who interact with him, and persists to embody a modern-day miracle. I invite all those who think they are having a bad day or week to hear Wyatt's story. This young boy remains in good spirits through the toughest of odds every day of his life. What a pleasure it was for me to attend a fundraiser in his honour on June 2 in Warburg, where 650 people from the Drayton Valley-Calmar constituency and surrounding areas came together to help this little fighter.

Mr. Speaker, both he and his family highlight the aspects of life which we should all hold most dear. For his continued enthusiasm through adversity which he cannot control, I would like to honour this young man in this House. In fact, I ask all those present today to duly recognize Wyatt's miracle story and inspiring journey through life.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Farm Safety

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to remember the life of Kevan Chandler. Almost a year ago, June 18, 2006, Mr. Chandler was killed while working at a feedlot in southern Alberta. His death was tragic. It was unacceptable and has had lasting effects for his family.

All Albertans deserve the security of knowing that their loved ones will return home to friends and family at the end of the day no matter what they do for a living. Mr. Speaker, let us dedicate ourselves to prevention. This is perhaps the single most important thing we can do because legislation alone cannot eliminate workplace or farm injuries or fatalities. Getting good, valuable information out to producers and families and farmers about safety practices is key to eliminating injuries and fatalities. That's the goal of the government's farm safety program: to address farm safety awareness and workplace safety best practices. The more we can raise awareness of workplace and farm safety, the more people will return home unharmed.

Alberta is striving for a culture of health and safety that is commonplace regardless of where people work or what they do for a living. I encourage all members of this Legislature and all Albertans to do their part in helping to create this culture.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. At a time when Alberta is experiencing unparalleled economic growth, this government has saddled Alberta's school boards with rapidly shrinking budgets. For months school boards have been voicing their concern over budget shortfalls. Last night the Minister of Education confirmed what public education is up against. The minister stated: the budget is the budget; education in Alberta is adequately funded. It is ironic that the minister made this comment on a night when the Catholic school trustees in Edmonton approved an operating budget with a shortfall of a full $15 million. Clearly, the minister is either out of touch with funding realities facing school boards throughout Alberta or he just doesn't care.

The Catholic school board announced last night that the funding shortfall has forced them to cut their infrastructure and maintenance budget by 55 per cent. The school board will also experience significant challenges stemming from a mere 3 per cent increase in their operating funding. This increase falls short of the 8 per cent school board funding required and will provide significant hardship in curriculum updates and special-needs education.

Beyond providing challenges to the school board, this funding shortfall also demonstrates a lack of foresight on the part of this government by failing to provide adequate funding for labour settlements. The contracts of 90 per cent of Alberta's teachers, including those in the Catholic system, are set to expire by August 31. The rising cost of living in Alberta requires 5.5 per cent pay raises for these teachers, something that is unaffordable for the Catholic board budget and other boards across the province.

This case of the Edmonton Catholic school board is just another in a long line of examples of this government's consistent failure to recognize the importance of education in the lives of Alberta's children. By failing to adequately increase the funding to school boards, this government has in essence cut education budgets, let down students, teachers, and parents, and created an adversarial situation that is bound to get worse before it gets better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there an additional government member who chooses to participate today in Members' Statements? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to do a tabling, but I'll take advantage of this.

Shamsher Singh Sandhu

Mr. Shariff: On Saturday, June 9, 2007, I attended the 2007 outstanding Calgary seniors' awards. One of the award recipients was Mr. Shamsher Singh Sandhu, who is a poet having published four books and is a regular contributor to Alberta Darpan, Sikh Virsa, Punjab Guardian, Desh Videsh, Desh Pardesh, and Punjabi Sahit. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Sandhu has translated the Canadian national anthem into Punjabi as well as the Alberta official centennial song. Later on today I will table those in this Assembly.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition signed by 34 residents of southeast Alberta that petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "introduce legislation to ban resident trapping within 5 miles of the Cypress Hills Interprovincial Park and in areas where species at risk are known to be present."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions here. The first one is signed by 40 Albertans that are concerned with the ongoing rent affordability crisis that contributes to Alberta's worsening homeless situation, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

My second one is from 178 people and reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to immediately conduct a comprehensive environmental impact assessment and initiate full public consultations regarding the proposed seismic testing on Marie Lake, and to deny permission for testing or further development if possible adverse effects are identified or the majority of affected members of the public are opposed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsahy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm continuing with submission of signatures on the housing petition, this time 269, and the petition reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I will table a petition signed by hundreds of residents of the capital region. It urges the government to introduce legislation to suspend a graduated driver's licence when the driver is involved in a serious car crash.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 60 signatures on a petition. The signatures were collected at a town hall meeting in Britannia-Youngstown in Edmonton urging the government to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, in light of the time, I would ask the House for unanimous consent that we immediately go to Introduction of Bills.

The Speaker: No. We're right now in petitions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table a petition with 84 signatures on it. The petition notes the Conservatives' refusal to protect Alberta families from rent increases and urges the government to immediately introduce temporary rent guidelines.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before proceeding, we'll recognize a request from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to allow for Introduction of Guests. Is that okay?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Rev. Abbott: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. That was Introduction of Bills so that the people in the gallery could watch . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. We're not into Introduction of Bills yet.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Governing effectively and responsibly is about choices, about getting the priorities right. The Edmonton Catholic school district revealed that they need an extra $850,000 to continue delivering full-time kindergarten for at-risk children and will have to pull funds from other programs to keep this one going. Under an Alberta Liberal government this program would be fully funded. My question is to the Premier. The Premier boosted the budget of his own office by over $1.2 million this year. How can the Premier justify increasing the budget of his own office when Edmonton Catholic schools are struggling to maintain a critical program for at-risk children?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition was here when I defended the budget of Executive Council, and I explained that in this year's budget we have, you know, an allocation of $1 million for a total governance review that we're doing. That's all the boards, agencies, commissions. These boards, agencies, and commissions spend about 50 per cent of the Alberta budget. We want to make sure that they are accountable and that their actions are open and transparent. That's why the review is being conducted.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the cost of that could be found somewhere else in the budget.

Parents in the Edmonton Catholic school district will have to pay more than $300,000 extra in transportation fees to make up a funding shortfall. Let's look at the Premier's priorities again. This increase could be easily covered by the budgetary boost the Premier gave to the Public Affairs Bureau. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why all this extra money went to the Public Affairs Bureau when parents in Edmonton are being forced to pay even more just to get their kids to school?

Mr. Stelmach: I know that I defended the budget last week, but I can answer this question the same. When he's talking about finding places in the budget, the part of it being open and transparent is a very clear answer to the questions raised by the opposition last week in terms of defending budget. So for every increase, whether it's increases due to staff increases or increases due to the annual pay increases or specific tasks that we are undertaking as members of Executive Council, those were clearly identified in the defence of the Executive Council budget last week.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Spin doctors should not take priority over schoolchildren.

The priorities of this government are way off. The boards are doing their best to prioritize despite the confusion of this government. School boards around the province will be faced with tough choices in the coming weeks and months. In a province this wealthy delivering the basics should not be this difficult. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why his government is forcing school boards to do more with less when he's also chosen to funnel $56 million this year alone in subsidies to the horse-racing industry?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, the allegations there are totally untrue. It's the money that the horse industry can raise providing that people participate and use the slots that are available in the horse-racing facilities in Alberta. So if people participate, that's how the horse-racing industry gets its support. If they don't, well, then, they don't get the money administered.

You know, in the interests of openness and transparency I raised this issue during the defence of the budget, and I'm going to raise it again. The Liberals very secretly billed the Alberta taxpayers for their ads. They have not come forward yet to be fully public and tell this House exactly what they are billing. What budget is it coming from? Let's be open and transparent vice versa. Come on.

The Speaker: Okay. We have a point of order that will be dealt with at the end of the Routine.

Let's all recognize as well that we're continuing budget debate this afternoon with the second reading of the appropriation bill.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Teachers' Salary Negotiations

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last evening myself, the Minister of Education, and a number of my Liberal colleagues attended a public meeting of the Edmonton Catholic school board. Unfortunately, the minister had to leave; he had another appointment. Had he stayed, he would have received an earful, I can assure you. When Edmonton Catholic school district teachers head to the bargaining table later this month, they will likely ask for at least a 5 per cent salary increase. If you consider the size of inflation, which was about 5.5 per cent this year, MLA pay increases at 5 per cent, and the skyrocketing costs of housing, 40.5 per cent in Edmonton this last year, this number is actually quite low. My question is for the Premier. If teachers and other staff in Edmonton Catholic are able to negotiate for the same pay increases that MLAs including this Premier received, the district will need at least another $5.1 million. Where will this money come from?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the school boards are responsible for bargaining and negotiating with teachers. We don't do it in the venue of the Assembly. Public education is very important to this province. In fact, it's part of the long-term plan to look at how we can further move to a knowledge-based economy, and that's why there is significant investment not only in postsecondary education but primary education as well. It's all part of the longer term vision for the province of Alberta to reposition this province on the world stage, especially in a knowledge-based economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier can try to argue that salary negotiations are just between the teachers and the school boards, but the fact is that this government has set the stage for widespread labour disruptions in the fall by failing to make adequate operating funding for school boards a priority at a time when 90 per cent – 90 per cent – of Alberta teachers will be renegotiating their salaries. Again to the Premier: who should parents and students hold responsible for lost class time this fall if fair agreements can't be negotiated?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have a tremendous amount of confidence in our teachers and also in our school boards in this province of Alberta. They have worked extremely well in terms of working out various innovative solutions to the issues that come forward to a negotiation table. They're very good at what they do. Again, I have great faith in the Alberta Teachers' Association, the teachers, and also the school boards. They'll find ways of dealing with various issues. They have in the past. Quite frankly, in the province of Alberta we have the lowest days of labour interruption, period, compared to other jurisdictions in Canada. We're very proud of that, and we'll continue to work in that positive . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In trying to explain away his fumbling efforts to divide teachers on the unfunded pension liability issue, the minister stated that he had decided new teachers would see the largest part of the new $25 million because he was worried – he was worried – that the still unresolved pension issue would deter young people from entering the profession. My question is for the Minister of Education. How will forcing teachers to fight every few years just to maintain their standard of living and prevent salary cuts attract young people into the profession? How is this going to work?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, that's precisely one of the reasons why we put forward the initiative of the $25 million: to remove that as a deterrent for young teachers. But I think we need to also reflect back to the fact that, as I've said in this House on numerous occasions, over the last 10 years funding for school boards – let me repeat – has gone up 86 per cent. Teachers' salaries in that same 10-year period have gone up 45 per cent. Enrolment has increased by 5.9 per cent and inflation by 28 per cent. So we can tie a particular fearmongering to whatever number we want, but I have a great deal of confidence that the school boards across the province and ATA locals will reach agreements.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Inadequate operational funding especially impacts northern Alberta cities where growth pressures and inflation are particularly high. Last week the Grande Prairie school district released what it called, and I quote, a difficult but balanced budget, which contains plans to operate with 16 fewer teachers. This means that the school board will not be able to meet the class size recommendations established by the Learning Commission. To the Minister of Education: given that inadequate operational funding means that school boards will not achieve the target class sizes, are you recommending that these standards be lowered, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, there's been no question that over the past three years the department has funded class size initiatives to the tune of a half a billion dollars. The recommendations of the Learning Commission were that within five years we reach class size objectives. We've reached them for the most part within three years and fully funded them. There are some areas – and it's primarily due to infrastructure situations with the smaller class sizes with K to 4 – where we may be outside of the recommendations of the Learning Commission on class sizes, but for the most part we've met the objectives in three years as opposed to the recommended five years.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has advised school boards to exhaust any and all operating reserves to make up for funding shortfalls. Grande Prairie public does not have built-up reserves to fall back on. The only solution for them is to make cuts, Mr. Minister. Asking school boards to rely on any operational reserves to make up funding shortfalls creates inequality across the province for boards that lack reserves.

An Hon. Member: What's the question?

Mr. Flaherty: Yes. Thank you very much, colleague.

Does the minister's recommendation mean that he's prepared to accept that some Alberta students will receive a better education than others in other parts of the province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, budgeting is always a tough process. School districts are going through a very diligent time right now where they are making some choices relative to the funding that's available. Contrary to what the opposition is referring to, we've had a number of settlements. We had a settlement recently by Pembina Hills school division. We've had a number of school districts, including the largest school district in the province, Calgary public, which are coming out with a balanced budget. There are always going to be anomalies in certain areas of the province where it is more difficult because of growth pressures and other issues, but I again have great confidence in our school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti has suggested to constituents that their school board may receive some extra help from the province yet because Grande Prairie represents a unique situation, but the Minister of Education has told this Assembly that there will be no more money for school boards this year. To the Minister of Education: who should parents, teachers, and trustees believe, you or the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member has frankly twisted around what people have said on so many occasions. I'm not going to verify what he's saying were comments by other members of this Assembly, but what I will say is that it's been very clear from the outset when the Finance minister delivered his budget several months ago that this government will have a policy going forward that the budget is the budget is the budget. We will not be coming forward with additional funds unless there are some circumstances around the unallocated surplus going forward. That policy has been very clear. Operating dollars are what is in the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's economic policies have created a perfect storm in Alberta's housing market, and it's getting worse. New home prices in Edmonton have increased by 40.5 per cent, the highest in Canada. In Calgary new home prices have increased by 27.4 per cent, the second highest in Canada. There are less apartments in the market in Edmonton and Calgary than there were last October. People are getting hosed at both ends. They can't afford to buy a new home, and they can't afford the rising rents. My question is to the Premier. As leader of the government in the province of Alberta what is your advice to the thousands of Albertans that are being crushed by rising rents and housing prices?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is a pressure that our government identified a long time ago, and this is with respect to housing. That's why we put, well, more than a quarter of a billion dollars into affordable housing. That money will be distributed through the minister of municipal affairs, that will go to various municipalities. We're also working with municipalities and the federal government, looking at how we can create more spaces and available land. We just had a good meeting with Calgary in terms of some options. I've also met with the mayor of the city of Edmonton, that has come forward with some very innovative solutions. We are moving ahead. More units are being built, but just in the last five months or so 36,000 more people moved into the province of Alberta.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the Premier can make all the excuses that he wants. The reality is that there are less apartments now than there were in October, and we have these rising rents and housing prices. The other things he's talking about are going to take three to four years.

The definition of affordable housing is that no more than 30 per cent of one's income should go into accommodation. Now thousands of Albertans are paying much more than that. My question is to the Premier. What would the Premier's definition of affordable housing be in the new Alberta? Is it 40 per cent, 50 cent, 60 per cent, 70 per cent?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have a policy in place in terms of qualifications for affordable housing, that was clearly articulated by the minister of municipal affairs. If the hon. member needs the answer again, then I can ask the minister to reiterate the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When we look at rent supplements for individuals, we try to have a guideline that will help individuals so they would not spend over 30 per cent of their income on housing.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, it's not working. That's the point. There are thousands of Albertans that are paying a lot more than that, and you can't begin to take it all under the rent supplement program. The minister is well aware of that.

My question, though, is to the Premier. You've rejected rent guidelines. You've also rejected the new home ownership assistance program, that would have had an impact on young people buying their first homes. Again to the Premier, and I'd ask him to be specific rather than generalities. What short-term measure is the government proposing to deal with the rental and home ownership crisis? All the stuff he has talked about is in the future. What's he going to do now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, we're increasing supply. That's the only way of bringing down the prices. You know, they always talk about guidelines – guidelines. They try and sneak that in: guidelines. There is no such thing as guidelines. Just be very honest and say: rent controls. That's what they want. I'm supposed to tell someone in the province of Alberta: oh, please, if you want to buy a house, don't spend more than 30 per cent of your income. What if they want to spend 40 per cent of their income on buying a house? It's not the role of government to dictate to individual families in terms of how much they want to spend on their mortgage to buy their own living accommodations. We're not part of that socialist thinking from that side of the House. I can tell you that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Political Party Donations

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard repeated assertions that volunteers for the Premier sought donations from a public body during his leadership campaign. Further questions have been raised in this House about other solicitations of the Beaver River waste management commission. Can the Premier tell us if he's aware of solicitations characterized by members opposite as improper?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, every day for the past two weeks the Leader of the Opposition has risen in this Legislature to attack my integrity. I want to quote from a letter dated October 3, 2006, to the Beaver regional waste management commission.

To be effective, political parties need both money and support.

That's why I'm asking you to write a cheque to the Alberta Liberals today. In fact, I hope you'll consider making the maximum annual donation of $15,000.

That letter has been signed by the president of the Alberta Liberal Party. I have the copies to table.

The Speaker: At the appropriate time that document should be tabled.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, Mr. Speaker, we'll see if the Leader of the Opposition still believes that those who mistakenly solicit donations from public bodies are guilty of heinous crimes.

To the Premier: is this an issue that this Legislature should clarify? Does this happen often?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that many, many volunteers, even very intelligent people like lawyers, didn't recognize the ethical issue at play. I have copies of a letter dated March 31, 2006, from an official of the Alberta Liberal Party asking the Beaver regional waste management commission to pay $350 a seat, or $2,800 for a table of eight, for the Liberal leader's dinner. Now, that sounds familiar, Mr. Speaker. I believe they put the city of St. Albert in the very same predicament by sending them a letter, knowing very well that that was improper. I also have copies of letters to table with that as well.

1:50

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, so not once but twice.

My final question is to the Premier. What is this government going to do about this?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly clear, no laws were broken. That also includes the members opposite, who have gone repeatedly to the same commission for dollars. I am committed to open, transparent government. I have promised legislation on leadership campaign funds, and I'm going to ask the members opposite to work – here's an opportunity for the opposition to rise and tell Albertans how much they have billed the Alberta taxpayers for the radio ads they ran earlier this year. [interjections] As much as he wants to holler, the people of Alberta can still hear me. He can give the exact amount of how much he billed secretly the Alberta taxpayers for their radio ads, and he can do it right now.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you rose on a point of order. We'll deal with it at the end of the Routine.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's own recent grizzly bear inventory of unit 5 between highways 1 and 3 makes for very sad reading. The number of grizzly bears in the southern half of the province is estimated at about 177 bears, and that population is in serious trouble. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why hasn't there been any action under the grizzly bear action plan?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad it's the last week here. I don't think I could bear another grisly week with this crowd.

This government's priority has always been to ensure that grizzly bears not just survive but thrive. That's why we cut off the hunt two years ago. We have a three-year moratorium. There were no grizzly bears hunted last year, none this year, none next year. We're doing a scientific count, and when we have the numbers in, we'll make an informed decision.

Mr. Bonko: When asked about this issue a month ago, the minister responded with the following: "The hon. members on the other side always hit the panic button and want to make a decision before all the facts are in. We'll wait until the end of the three-year study and make a decision then." Well, it's clear now that waiting any longer would be completely negligent. The grizzly bears in Alberta are endangered. Does the minister expect that the situation will be any better in two years when he is ready to act?

Dr. Morton: As I said – and the hon. member is correct – they do like to hit the panic button early. We've undertaken any number of policies already. In addition to the moratorium on grizzly hunting, we've undertaken the DNA census, we've introduced the BearSmart program, we're mapping bear environment, we have the Karelian dogs, and we have the grizzly bear intercept program. There are many activities under way as we speak to protect and enhance grizzly bear habitat.

Mr. Bonko: This minister, this Tory government is casually watching over the steady extinction of Alberta's grizzly bear. This minister was appointed the task of protecting Alberta's wildlife, and he isn't doing his job. What's it going to take for the minister to do his job, or will he stand aside and let someone else do it?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had paid close attention to the news that was released this week, he would have seen that in the southern part of the province there were 12 grizzly bears for every 1,000 kilometres. That's a 36-kilometre diameter circle. So if you're standing in the middle of the forest with an 18-kilometre radius around you, there are 12 grizzly bears within that 18 kilometres. If you walk down a straight path and by chance all 12 bears are lined up, you're going to run into a grizzly bear, hon. member, every 1.5 kilometres, every 1,500 metres.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Off-highway Vehicle Use

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There seem to be growing numbers of irresponsible off-highway vehicle users in Alberta. Unmitigated OHV use can create significant damage to our public lands and could ultimately spoil this form of recreation for responsible OHV users. My questions are for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is his department doing to protect Alberta's public lands from this type of damage?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. The number of off-highway vehicles has increased dramatically in Alberta. Sales have doubled in the past six years, and the number of registered vehicles has actually gone up by four times. There are many more users out there looking for a place for recreation. Our focus is threefold: education, regulation, and enforcement. I'd be happy to elaborate on any of those.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. I understand that you recently met with an OHV organization that promotes responsible use of our public lands. Is it true that these groups have told you about possible damage done to public land near Indian Graves after the May long weekend? If so, how can we stop this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I did go back to Indian Graves on June 2. I'm happy to report that the area was in much better order, and I observed many users enjoying the area for camping and off-highway vehicles in a responsible manner. I'd like to make it clear on the record that many Albertans who use off-highway vehicles do so in a very responsible manner and care about Alberta's public lands. These groups were just as upset as I was and many Albertans were about what happened on the May long weekend. These responsible off-highway vehicle users don't want to be tarnished by the irresponsible behaviour of others.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree wholeheartedly.

Again to the same minister: given that we want our public lands to continue to be used by both motorized and nonmotorized users, what are these responsible OHV groups doing to demonstrate or aid stewardship?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, these groups have very active and positive programs in our schools that deal with both safety instruction and also with the respect the land message that's been developed by Sustainable Resource Development. On my June 2 tour I was in the Crowsnest Pass. I had the opportunity to work with the Crowsnest Forest Stewardship Society and also the Quad Squad. They were building a bridge as part of their Ed Gregor Memorial clean-up day. Another group put up a bridge in the Ghost-Waiparous area. Here are two great examples of good Albertans, responsible off-highway vehicle users, out there giving their volunteer time to improve recreational opportunities and protect our natural reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

School Security

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the wake of bomb threats called into Archbishop O'Leary, arson, and later a mentally ill individual forcing a lockdown at the Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts, and incidents of attempted child abduction and assault several months ago, the issue of school security has again come to the forefront. This is in conjunction with school shootings in Toronto and the United States. To the Solicitor General. There is no doubt that this is a complex issue. Has the minister had any discussions with his colleagues from Education and Advanced Education to discuss strategies to enhance school security in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member opposite mentioned, security in our schools and education facilities is indeed very important to this government and to this province and to all those who attend those facilities. When these incidents unfortunately do come up, yes, we do discuss these with our colleagues to ensure that we have the best plans possible to ensure that we can alleviate these situations.

Mr. Elsalhy: School officials do an excellent job, Mr. Speaker, with their limited resources, but too often when it comes to deciding between security considerations and instructional spending, a school is most likely going to choose teachers, textbooks, and technology. However, the issue of school security cannot be ignored for results can be tragic. Solutions could be as simple as a school using a private security person to conduct patrols of the grounds, installing video cameras, or even utilizing available parents to walk around the school yards during recess, for example. Will the minister commit to providing a dedicated funding envelope specifically for the enhancement of school security, that schools can access if they choose, based on need? We're not asking for much, and we don't want them to have to choose between competing goals.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm not sure who's asking for what, but I can assure the hon. member that we will work with the departments of Education and Advanced Education to put together whatever programs and procedures we believe are necessary to ensure that our students remain safe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safer communities task force cost taxpayers $1.5 million, and I argued in this House that it wasn't likely going to hear anything new as it toured the province. To the Minister of Justice: if you were okay spending $1.5 million on yet another public relations exercise, would you relinquish the same amount of money or half or even a third to the Solicitor General for his department to assist those administrators who want to enhance security in their schools and take action as compared to just talk?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, all hon. members of this House have been invited to a symposium of this task force being chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek next week in Calgary on the 19th and 20th. I think the hon. member should make a point of attending. I know that many of the people on this side of the House will be there. He will find out that the nine members of the task force have felt that the 14 days that they have spent going throughout this province listening to Albertans about their concerns about public safety, about safety in their communities, is of the utmost importance and is of the utmost value to this government. It should be also to the hon. opposition in understanding what we're trying to do to make our communities safer.

Driver's Licence Photos

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, a sampling of comments I've got in my constituency office lately: an abuse of religious freedom; only 11 family surnames in all of Alberta would be provided this provision – what a joke; individual and group pictures in the newspapers are okay but not on a driver's licence; if hotel operators can deny a young person access with all forms of ID except a photo driver's licence, I hope the same privilege will be extended to members of this church. As of 2003 Alberta required that everyone obtaining or renewing a driver's licence be photographed. Now, I understand, and the reason that I mentioned these comments, people heard about a recent decision by the Alberta Court of Appeal which struck down this requirement. My question is to . . .

The Speaker: We're out of time for this. Forty-five seconds is over, hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: I have a sense of where the hon. member was going with this, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member indicated, this has been the subject of a court decision, so my comments will take that into account. The driver's licence is now the primary form of identification in our society, and new abuses such as identity theft and creation of false identities pose a serious risk. With a digital photo of every licensee and facial recognition technology we can protect Alberta operators' licences from being used for identity theft and other such purposes. The Hutterites of Wilson colony near Lethbridge challenged the regulation that the hon. member referred to.

The Speaker: I'm afraid we're going back to the hon. member now.

Mr. McFarland: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Wilson colony is but one of over 170 colonies that make up two sects of one church, not all of which object to this ruling. What is Alberta doing in response to this court decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This past May the Court of Appeal upheld a Queen's Bench decision that Alberta's mandatory driver's licence photo is invalid because it impairs the Wilson colony Hutterites' freedom of religion contrary to the Charter of Rights. At this time we're advising the hon. Minister of Service Alberta about Alberta's options. We must decide whether to seek leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada or whether to amend the Traffic Safety Act. Two of the three justices found that a regulation made under the Traffic Safety Act could only be used to address traffic safety and not as a means to prevent identity theft. However, there was a dissent.

Mr. McFarland: My last question, Mr. Speaker: will Alberta use the notwithstanding clause or allow all individual Albertans to use the freedom of religion excuse not to have their pictures taken?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point in time the government has no intention of using the notwithstanding clause as indicated previously. We are considering two options. We're considering whether to seek leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada and whether the amendments are required to the Traffic Safety Act. The question of security is very important. We will take the necessary steps to maintain the integrity of the licensing system in Alberta, but at this time this government has no plans to use the notwithstanding clause.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Employment Standards Review

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Employment standards dealing with such basic issues as minimum wage, hours of work, overtime pay, parental leave, and statutory holidays are supposed to offer a basic level of protection for all workers, but Alberta's Employment Standards Code is about 20 years out of date. In 2005 we in the Official Opposition welcomed the employment standards review. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. It's been two years now, and Albertans are still waiting. When can we expect to see the results of that review?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, previously in this session in the House relative to employment standards, I did respond to the question, saying that I had asked for yet further consultation. Let's look at the situation in Alberta. We have considerably more workers, a more active economy, an expanding workforce. We have new federal regulations on a number of fronts that address employment standards. I'd remind the hon. member that we added 72 staff members to Alberta Employment, Immigration and Industry to protect the workers' rights, to look after the workers, to assure that the current standards are being met, and to do their due diligence to make sure workers are safe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister's communications staff has been on the record as saying that the review is being delayed because the Tory caucus has taken issues with some aspects of the proposed amendments. To the same minister: can you tell us what part of your proposal was rejected or sent back for reconsideration by the Tory caucus?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, no, it would be totally inappropriate. There were areas of concern relative to the updating of the standards. I think it behooves me to be prudent and do further consultation and further work. I will be undertaking that work throughout the next few months ahead and paying very close attention to what we're learning with the new workers on-site to make sure that we're making appropriate amendments when we come forward, not bringing forward something in a half-baked form. Also, as we negotiate the annex to the co-operative agreement with Canada relative to immigration, I'll be looking at many suggestions made in this House relative to the monitoring of the foreign workers. It's another area we're examining.

Dr. B. Miller: We've heard from several sources that the results of the employment standards code review are so abysmal that the government has buried the report and has no plans to release it. When the Liberal caucus put in a request for the results of the public consultations through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, we were told we would have to pay over $117,000 to see it. To the same minister: is the government afraid to release the results of the employment standards review? If you have nothing to hide, will you agree to release the information immediately to the people and stakeholders who put time and effort into this review? When are we going to see it?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the items the hon. member has referenced. We had responses from more than 5,500 Albertans, including employees, employers, industry, and labour organizations. I'm not aware of this particular request, but I can assure you of one thing: nothing is buried.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Designated Assisted Living Facilities

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a long history of using Orwellian language around health care and service provision. Privatization has been called a third way, it has been called deregulation, and now it's being called aging in place. Albertans are not fooled. Privatization is privatization, and the cost of privatizing long-term care services will continue to be borne by seniors and their families. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How can the minister justify off-loading the cost of long-term care privatization onto seniors and their families?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's premise is exactly wrong. In fact, I had the opportunity yesterday afternoon to be in Pincher Creek at the Vista Village centre where seniors in that community can age in place. What happens at the Vista Village in Pincher Creek, which is a wonderful facility, is that someone who needs assistance with their living accommodation or with their ability to live independently can move into that facility. They don't have to be institutionalized. They can go for meals whenever they wish to; they can prepare some meals in their own rooms if they wish to. As their care needs grow, they can stay in the same location and have their care needs attended to in that location. What could be more appropriate than that? What could be more appropriate than that instead of, as the hon. member would have, changing your social structure every time your care needs change?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, totally contrary to minister's spin, seniors from across the province are finding their residences being redesignated from long-term care centres to assisted living. Their health needs don't change. Their diet and personal care needs don't change. The only thing that changes is the cost that they have to bear. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: how many seniors will be paying more out of pocket because they find themselves in assisted-living facilities rather than in long-term care facilities?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, first off, this is an issue of ensuring that the appropriate level of health care is provided to the right person. People's circumstances aren't always static. They sometimes improve, and many of them might even be able to be put assisted living. What this does allow is choice for seniors to be in facilities that would best meet their needs. That's what this is all about. It's not about trying to save the dollar by taking from a long-term care to an assisted living. It's about trying to match that they are in the right place at the right time for their needs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another Orwellian spin.

We anticipate long-term care facilities in Grande Prairie, Jasper, and other communities closing and being replaced by assisted-living lodges where the same residents will simply have to pay more. Residents in Hinton have already gone through this. To the minister of seniors again: what are the estimated additional annual costs to all those seniors whose residences will be redesignated from long-term care to so-called assisted- or supportive-care facilities? How much is the Conservative government going to save on the backs of frail and ailing seniors?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I've had the opportunity to go around and tour and visit a number of different facilities, and we have such a range of descriptions. Ultimately, the seniors themselves gave feedback that they would prefer to live in their homes. They would then prefer next to have a facility that most approximated their living conditions in a home, and less of them wish to have the institutional approach. It is very much in response to the seniors' request to have the facilities and then provide the health care where they are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Property Taxes for Condominiums

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Condominium owners in my constituency have written to me about the ability of municipalities to adopt a separate property tax class for condos. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Do municipalities have the authority to set different tax rates for condominium properties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities do have that ability to set different tax rates for different groups or classes of residential property. Municipalities do provide different services for different classes of residential properties, and this government feels that municipalities know best how that distinction should be made and how those property taxes should be assessed.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister. Condominium owners often have to provide for the maintenance and repair of infrastructure such as water mains, sewer lines, roads, and snow removal. Why should these owners pay the same rate as single-family properties?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, owning a portion of a condominium very much involves the sharing of the responsibility for the maintenance of the common property. It's really, considering, akin to a single-family dwelling, where an individual has the responsibility of snow removal, driveway maintenance, yard maintenance. Those condominiums have that responsibility. But I will say that there is some overlap in the condominium fees, and property taxes cover a much wider range.

Mr. Johnson: My final supplemental is to the same minister. Since many seniors live in condos and some seniors on fixed incomes are experiencing financial difficulty in paying their property taxes, is the provincial government providing any assistance to these property owners?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the provincial government does recognize that property taxes can provide a burden and especially provide a burden for seniors who are wanting to stay in their homes. Starting in 2004, the Alberta seniors education property tax rebate program began, and that provided an annual property tax rebate to assist those seniors. The program provides senior owners with a rebate for an amount equal to any education property increase from 2004. So that is some support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Physician Supply

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is currently short over a thousand physicians, and that number is expected to rise to 1,500 in the next three years. This shortage of health workers is contributing to lengthy wait times in emergency rooms, to see a family physician, and for surgical procedures. Albertans in need of a family physician, especially in rural Alberta, are the hardest hit by this shortage. My first question is to the minister of health. PARA, the Professional Association of Residents of Alberta, has recommended a variety of recruitment incentives to attract residents to practise in Alberta. Will the minister take their advice and introduce a signing bonus for family physicians?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to say that I don't like to argue the numbers as to how many we are short of anything in the province. We do need more of a health care workforce. We need to rebalance our workforce so that we use health care professionals to the full extent of their capability and expertise. We need to implement more policies such as the primary care networks, that physicians and health authorities in the province have embraced so that there are in excess of 19 primary care networks serving more than a million Albertans now. What we know, again from my trip to southern Alberta yesterday to meet with the regional health authority, is that in certain circumstances if you empanel persons to physicians, have 1,500 people to a physician, we might have exactly the right number of primary care physicians in the province.

The amendments to the Smoke-free Places Act which are being introduced will change the name of the act to the Tobacco Reduction Act; remove exemption provisions which currently permit smoking in public places and workplaces where minors are not permitted – that will ensure that public places are smoke free – prohibit smoking within a prescribed distance from a doorway, window, or fresh air intake; prohibit the retail display, advertising, or promotion of tobacco products in any place where tobacco is sold; restrict the sale of tobacco in health facilities, public postsecondary campuses, pharmacies, and retail stores; and add offence provisions.

Mr. Speaker, this is a momentous day for health in Alberta. I would ask members to give Bill 45 first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 45 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 41 Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

Amendments to the Health Professions Act and the Medical Profession Act will provide for greater accountability to Albertans about the consistency of health care standards of practice, require the reporting of public health issues despite any other confidentiality provisions in the respective acts, and provide for professions to be regulated under the Health Professions Act with government support in instances where professions may not have the resources to fully self-regulate.

I'd ask the House for permission for first reading of Bill 41.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 74.1(1)(a) I would move that Bill 41, the Health Professions Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, be referred to the Standing Committee on Community Services for its review and that the committee report the bill back to the Assembly in the first week of November 2007.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Bill 42 Insurance Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move first reading of Bill 42, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2007.

The purpose of this bill is to update the legislative provisions for insurance contracts such as life, accident, and sickness, as well as home and business insurance. The bill will provide a modernized legislative framework for insurance contracts, strengthen consumer protection, and address legislative issues that have been identified by consumers, industry, and the Ministry of Finance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 42 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition that was from 500 Alberta residents – namely, the Calgary communities of Rocky Ridge and Royal Oak in Calgary-North West – to urge the government of Alberta to “keep up with the Calgary Board of Education’s recommended capital plans for new school construction.”

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, earlier today I had a member’s statement on Mr. Shamsheer Singh Sandhu, recipient of an outstanding Calgary seniors’ award. As I indicated, Mr. Sandhu has translated Canada’s national anthem, O Canada, and the Alberta centennial song into the Punjabi language. I am tabling five copies of Mr. Sandhu’s translation for the official records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is a copy of correspondence between the administrative manager for the Alberta Liberal caucus and the director of financial management and administrative services, senior financial officer for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. At the beginning it’s asking for permission and payment okay for the radio ads, and it, in fact, is answered by the director of financial management, saying that he sees “no party references in the ads that would cause concerns regarding processing related expenditures.” So the expenditures were okayed. I’ll table that.

As well, I’ll table the appropriate number of copies from Rod McConnell, who’s expressing concern about the potential privacy violations associated with government-contracted companies having access to health records. He would like to see his personal health records removed from these contracted databases with any third party and have Alberta Health immediately terminate all contracts and return all the data to Alberta Health and Wellness.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Premier it’s my pleasure to table for the House the requisite number of copies of two letters written on behalf of the Alberta Liberal Party in which they reference that they’re asking the Beaver regional waste management commission for their maximum “annual donation of $15,000 or exceeding your 2005 donation.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings this afternoon, all related to the public meeting of Edmonton Catholic schools last evening. The most important, probably, is a copy of the agenda from last night, which highlights a number of teachers who were either nominated or received provincial teaching awards.

I also have a copy of their news release from last night indicating that a balanced budget would be approved and that there are serious concerns about provincial funding.

Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of a document entitled The Impact of the 2007/08 Budget on Students, Staff and Parents. Again, it outlines some of the difficulties they had and the need for what they described as creative budgeting in order to reach that balanced budget.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, a copy of a document entitled Three Year Strategic Education Plan 2007 to 2010, published by Edmonton Catholic schools, and it has the title United in Heart and Mind: Growing, Learning & Loving. I would hope that not only the Education minister but all members of this Assembly read through these. They're very important documents.

Thank you.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table five copies of a workbook now available for all Albertans to give their input on the government's proposed community spirit program. This program will encourage and celebrate Alberta's charitable giving. The workbook will be available online, through the local MLA offices, or by mail. It will also be available through public libraries by the end of June, and submissions are due by July 31.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is from Kathy, who lives in Cameron Heights, in my constituency. She finds the noise emanating from the Anthony Henday ring road becoming louder as each month passes, and it is not unusual for her to hear brakes from semis and motorcycles at all hours of the day. She hopes that the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation will do something to attenuate the noise.

The other tabling, Mr. Speaker, comes from a young constituent, Alex Bernier, who has issues with the graduated driver's licence program, especially that people are required to take an advanced road test two years after they've received their class 5 licence regardless of their driving record. The cost is usually around $120, depending on the registry, and then you add $64 for the new card. As a student he finds it extra expensive, and he can't afford it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituent Eric Finley. He is a businessman in the nanotech sector. He would like all MLAs to read the report I am tabling five copies of, a report called Taming the Tempest: An Alternate Development Strategy for Alberta. The report offers several forward-thinking alternatives for economic development in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter that I'm tabling today from Eric Musekamp, president of the Farmworkers Union of Alberta. He wishes to remind the Assembly that August 20 will be the third annual farm worker day and urges all Albertans to think about the men, women, and children who toil unprotected on farms, ranches, and feedlots.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It is the program for the supreme kickoff of City Farm. Now, City Farm is in Edmonton-Manning, the largest rural riding in the city of Edmonton. City Farm is a unique place where children and youth and adults can learn about growing food, animal care, and our natural habitat. I invite all Albertans to visit City Farm and learn a little bit about farming in the city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head:

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on May 28, 2007, Department of Solicitor General and Public Security 2007-08 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two members who have risen with respect to points of order. The first we'll deal with is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to an exchange during the first question between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Premier, which was actually a question on Catholic school education. During it the Premier referred a number of times to making allegations – and therefore my citation is 23(h), 23(i), and 23(j) – that somehow a series of radio ads done by the Alberta Liberal caucus is out of order.

I did table earlier copies of correspondence in which the director of finance gave our caucus the okay to proceed with these, indicating that the cost was within the guidelines allowable by the Legislative Assembly Office to make payment. The Premier seems particularly exercised about this, and I don't know why. Yesterday I tabled additional information on these radio spots, but he seems determined to somehow cast an allegation upon the Liberal caucus that this is not in order.

Under 23(h) these expenditures are clearly in order; they were okayed according to the documents that I've already tabled. Under 23(i), imputing a false motive, that somehow we were attempting to get away with something that clearly we weren't: this has all been done above board. And 23(j), using insulting language: I would say that that's certainly the case in trying to make it out that the opposition caucus has done anything but follow the rules.

As the Speaker well knows, our caucus has no ability to write its own cheques. They have to be written by the finance department from the LAO. All the payments come from the LAO, and I doubt very much that the hard-working staff there would breach any rules on our behalf whatsoever. The Official Opposition has been under intense scrutiny. All of our public documents and utterances are reviewed. Our newsletters, our ads, our truck decals, our policy documents, every one of them, Mr. Speaker, has been gone over with a fine-tooth comb to make sure that we are in order, and that is evidenced by correspondence like the tabling that I made earlier. So I'm surprised that the Premier would disparage the staff of the LAO in somehow insinuating or making an allegation that they have been improper in their service in any way, and I can tell you that they certainly have not. They hold us to account, and when we have followed the guidelines and are operating within the rules set out, our expenditures are processed.

The Premier is trying very hard to make something out of nothing. We have followed the rules, and the Premier insists on misleading this Assembly, making allegations against us, and certainly provoking a great deal of disorder in the House by using insulting language and imputing false motives upon us. So I would ask that the Premier please withdraw his comments, refrain from making them in the future, and apologize to this caucus and to the staff of the LAO, who've done a good job.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Who should I recognize? The hon. President of the Treasury Board or the hon. Government House leader?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, if making false allegations . . .

The Speaker: On the point of order.

Mr. Snelgrove: On the point of order.

. . . is inappropriate, then I would dare say that most of the questions that the opposition leader has put to the Premier in the last two months should have been called immediately on the spot because they were far worse and based on nothing.

2:40

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Centre is far too sanctimonious on this point. In fact, the hon. Leader of the Opposition has over the last number of weeks tried to call into question the integrity of the Premier by raising issues about the Beaver regional waste management commission only to discover when pressed to review with the Beaver regional waste management commission whether anybody else has solicited political donations that the Liberal party has solicited donations from that organization. They can't have it both ways.

However, with respect to this specific point of order, as I heard the exchange, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was asking why the government would have a budget for the Public Affairs Bureau when the Catholic school board needed money. I think it's perfectly appropriate for the Premier, in response to that, to point out that the Liberal opposition uses taxpayers' money to advertise, which is – I don't know – perhaps what the Public Affairs Bureau does. The Public Affairs Bureau is advertising on behalf of government, is communicating with Albertans what government is doing, whereas the opposition is advertising – yes, perhaps, if she says so – under the rules of the House and the rules of the Legislature and scrutinized undoubtedly by the Leg. Assembly but still for their partisan caucus concerns. What is more important to the public of Alberta and the taxpayer of Alberta, spending public money communicating to the public about what government is doing on their behalf and finding out what the public needs or advertising for partisan political purposes?

So in the context of the question about the Edmonton Catholic school board and whether or not their budget should be higher or school budgets should be higher instead of money going to the Public Affairs Bureau, it's absolutely appropriate for the Premier to point out that money is spent on advertising on both sides of the House. The money they were questioning was, of course, a budget for government, which has been held to account through the long process of Committee of Supply and which we're going to be debating later on in the House, or the money spent by the Liberal caucus, Legislative Assembly appropriated funds, also voted by the House but with respect to a Liberal caucus. I fail to see the point of order.

The Speaker: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre certainly has the right to raise a point of order with respect to this whole matter, as it would have been an opportune time for members of the government to raise points of order over the last several weeks as well should they have chosen to do that. They made their decision with respect to how to deal with that.

Today there was a series of questions led by the Leader of the Official Opposition which included the Public Affairs Bureau, but essentially I think that the remarks that caused the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to rise had to do with the horse-racing industry and the prelude with respect to the Blues with respect to all of this. The Premier did respond to the question about slot machines and are they available in the horse-racing facilities. Then he goes on, and he says the following:

You know, in the interests of openness and transparency I raised this issue during the defence of the budget, and I'm going to raise it again. The Liberals have very secretly billed the Alberta taxpayers for their ads. They have not come forward yet to be fully public and tell this House exactly what they are billing. What budget is it coming from? Let's be open and transparent. Vice versa. Come on.

Well, in the last several weeks it would strike this chairperson that there was a whole series of questions that had a whole series of allegations and innuendo and other kinds of leading statements with respect to this whole matter. The chair also recognizes that this is something like day 42 of this particular session, and the chair also recognizes that there's a by-election going on today, and the chair also recognizes that it's coming to the end of this session. So if you take all of these sorts of things together, you come up with a kind of a fatigue factor that comes into hon. members, where basically, after 3,300 questions and answers in the question period, oftentimes it's easier to let some of these words that we wouldn't normally use in our daily living and our daily practice come into the discussion. So oftentimes you'll get things like ethical, unethical, misleading, leading, that lead to innuendo and everything else. That's been kind of more frequent in the last several weeks than it would normally have been, so the chair will recognize that all of this is part of the heat of the intensity of the battle on this particular Tuesday of June and say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre certainly had an opportunity to clarify.

What the chair is concerned about, however, is that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta is brought into this debate.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Exactly.

The Speaker: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brought it into the debate.

All members have to consider this. If members are going to table documents that come out of the Legislative Assembly Office or my office in this House as part of the debate that they want to engender and engage in, you're setting a very dangerous precedent. There are a lot of documents that are not tabled, and hon. members would not want to see them. I will not allow them to be tabled. They'll stay in the confines of the Speaker's office and the office of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. If you want the Speaker to get involved in the debate by saying, "Well, somebody in the Legislative Assembly said this, or somebody said that," you may find that some knees will be cut out from under the hon. members with respect to that.

In this case, for the openness and transparency and clarification, the Liberal caucus is afforded a budget as the government caucus is afforded a budget. The Liberal caucus used some of those funds to buy radio ads. Some members of the Members' Services Committee take great exception to that. At an upcoming meeting of the Members' Services Committee the matter will be on the agenda, but there has not been a meeting of the Members' Services Committee with respect to this particular matter. In terms of the interpretations that were provided at the time, they were an acceptable utilization of caucus dollars for these ads. The Speaker is not going to reverse anything or take any exception to that. That was the rightful exercise of those dollars at that time.

Now, secretive: it may be a question that it wasn't made public, I suppose. I don't know what press release was put out saying who paid for the ads, but it's the taxpayers of Alberta who pay for these ads.

The government caucus has, you know, a million bucks. If they want to go and spend money on ads, presumably under the current situation they would have the right to do that. I would suspect that there would be questions in this Assembly if that were to happen, but at the moment that's certainly acceptable. In the last number of 10 days, I guess, there could have been all kinds of ads in Calgary on by-elections and what have you on behalf of the government caucus. That didn't happen.

Anyway, there's clarification now with respect to this matter. A lot of this has to do with the mood of this particular House, and a lot of this has to do with the utilization of language. We'll have an opportunity now over the next number of months, I do believe, to basically study the rules of what words are acceptable, and we'll have all this new money that all caucuses have to hire researchers to pen better answers to better questions. I'm sure we'll see a tremendous improvement in the fall in the quality of the question period because of these new additional dollars that we have.

Now, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you have a point of order.

Point of Order Interrupting a Member

Rev. Abbott: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order with regard to the exchange between the Premier and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. What happened is that the Standing Orders were breached during that time of questions and answers. I have several citations, but I'll start with Beauchesne's 333, which states that "a Member speaking shall not be interrupted except on a point of order". Then if you go down to 334, at the end it says: "If the interruptions are excessive, the Member speaking may appeal to the Speaker for help, which will be forthcoming. In extreme cases the Speaker may intervene without such request to restore order in the House."

Mr. Speaker, as you'll recall, the Premier was answering the Member for Whitecourt-Ste Anne about, again, some political donations that were being solicited by the Liberal Party, and for some reason the Leader of the Official Opposition felt that he had the floor, that he could just butt in and start talking and start intervening between that question-and-answer period. I didn't see any questions whatsoever that were directed towards the Leader of the Opposition, yet for some reason he felt that he could get into this exchange. He was talking excessively. Other members in the House were trying to admonish him to be quiet and let the two members have their exchange, but the Leader of the Opposition absolutely refused.

I want to cite from Marleau and Montpetit, Mr. Speaker. Marleau and Montpetit says, "When a Member is addressing the House, no other Member may interrupt except to raise a question of privilege which has arisen suddenly or to raise a point of order." If you go over to 503, this is a key citation in Marleau and Montpetit. It says:

One of the basic principles of parliamentary procedure is that proceedings in the House of Commons . . .

Or in this case the Alberta Legislature.

. . . are conducted in terms of a free and civil discourse. In order that debate on matters of public policy be held in a civil manner, the House has adopted rules of order and decorum for the conduct of Members towards each other and towards the institution as a whole. Members are to show respect for one another.

Mr. Speaker, I felt that this interruption by the Leader of the Opposition was an absolute disrespect for the Premier of this province. He did not let him answer a question from a private member when we know in this House that the private members of the opposition get to ask many questions every day and are expected to get answers. Therefore, the private members from the government side should also be allowed to ask questions and to get answers.

A final citation, Mr. Speaker, is from Marleau and Montpetit 513, which says: "Any Member participating in debate must address the Chair, not the House, a particular Minister or Member, the galleries, or the television audience." In fact, it goes on to say, "If a Member directs remarks towards another Member and not the Speaker, he or she will be called to order."

Mr. Speaker, I think there is a point of order here. I think that the Leader of the Official Opposition should apologize to the Premier, to yourself, and to all Albertans for interrupting a very important discourse between the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and the hon. Premier. In fact, in our own Standing Orders if you look at Standing Order 13(4)(b), again it refers to how there should be no interruptions when we're conducting business in this House.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have studied the books, we do know the rules, and all we're asking is that they be kept in this House.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you can either choose to participate, or I can give a ruling.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I choose to participate in that I don't see that, in fact, either member engaged in this resumed their seat or stopped speaking or gave up on either the questions or the answers that they were engaged in. There's a fair amount of heckling in this House, Mr. Speaker, as you often point out to us, but I didn't see anything interrupted. The process of give-and-take between the questioner and the person giving the answers in that particular exchange continued on through three questions and three answers.

Certainly, if we're going to talk about disobedience, we could look at the number of times that the government caucus has chosen to totally drown out speakers from this side of the House by continuing to thump their desks and yell and scream, by which effectively, in fact, an opportunity to ask a question or give an answer has been cut off. I didn't see that happen today. There is no point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Peace River, do you want to get involved in this point of order?

Mr. Oberle: Actually on the last one, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, we've had the last one. Done it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on this point of order.

Dr. Brown: Yes, sir. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. He raises a valid point respecting this point of order under Standing Order 13(4)(b) and under the citations which he gave in Marleu and Montpetit and in Beauchesne's. I would also add to that group of citations a citation from Erskine May, the 23rd edition, page 445, where it says:

Members must not disturb a Member who is speaking, by hissing, chanting, clapping, booing, exclamations or other interruption. On 22 January 1693, it was resolved that Mr. Speaker do call upon the Member by name, making such disturbance, and that every such person shall incur the displeasure and censure of the House.

Well, Mr. Speaker, a certain amount of interjections are certainly to be tolerated in the House, and well they should be. For the most part they are jocular in nature, and they don't detract from the ability of members to enjoy the excellent conversation which takes place in the House. But I think that with the quantity and volume of interruptions that were occurring today, particularly on the part of the Leader of the Official Opposition in response to those various questions, it was difficult if not impossible to hear what the Premier was saying on those occasions when those interjections were happening. I heard some various interjections, which I understand were in the nature of, "What are you afraid of, Ed?" and so on, which I think are completely inappropriate in the House.

In my respectful view, Mr. Speaker, the interjections by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition were excessive. They were worthy of a sanction of the House by way of, certainly, your finding that there was a valid point of order there.

The Speaker: Are there others? Peace River, are you getting up on this point of order?

Mr. Oberle: No.

The Speaker: Well, lookit, hon. members. I'm going to repeat what day this is. I'm going to repeat where we are. I'm going to repeat where we are in this session, the month and the mood and everything else. Okay?

Now, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, you should be commended for doing outstanding research with respect to this. When you can dig back into citations coming from 1693, this is just really good. I apologize to you if, in fact, because of a lack of my interjections when all the members of this Assembly were being so enthusiastic – and I say all members of this Assembly were being so enthusiastic. I very clearly can relate to the question period when the hon. Premier cited from a certain letter, and all members on the government side erupted with glee and pounding desks and everything else. I can recall that. Then I can recall another occasion when someone else said something absolutely correct. Virtually all the members on the other side of the House erupted.

So we had a good day today in terms of thunderous applause and enthusiastic participation. Maybe that is good, hon. members. Maybe it's good to see people who are alive. They have blood flowing through their veins, and they're really taking their work to heart. They're into it.

Look. This is not a normal reflection. There were some, I guess, bullets today. Some people would say that. I think there were some bulls' eyes, maybe, today. That raised the excitement level with a little more enthusiasm.

Hon. members, if you want me to rise every time any hon. member was offside with a rule, I would be up for the whole question period. The only person anybody would ever see on television would be me – it wouldn't be anybody else – and you'd all be thundering in the background, and the public out there would be saying some wonderful things.

I have to tell you a little secret, though, that you should all know. Those mics are live in front of the hon. member. So even though all the hon. members in the Assembly are pounding their desks in an attempt to drown out the speaker, that mic is live, and that television camera is only on the person who's talking. So the hon. members in here may be drowning somebody out, but the vast television audience that we have hears it all very, very clearly. They're not missing a thing. The only people who are missing something, perhaps, in this exchange are the hon. members. Any skilled parliamentarian in this Assembly knows that, and they will continue to speak into that mic and look enthusiastically into that television camera, and that will be the tape for eternity. Hansard will not report this thunderous drowning out of people in this particular Assembly.

Again, I'm not standing up here every time somebody is offside a bit. That takes away the ebb and the flow of the Legislative Assembly. But by the same token there's a responsibility on all of us to be honourable, and that's really the key.

Adjournment of Session

28. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the spring sitting of the Third Session of the 26th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until November 5, 2007, as per Standing Order 3.1(2) or until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

[Government Motion 28 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

3:00 Suspension of the Routine

29. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that on Thursday, June 14, 2007, the Assembly suspend its daily Routine under Standing Order 7 for His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to attend upon the House for the purpose of Royal Assent, with the daily Routine to continue after His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor retires from the Chamber.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a bit unusual. We anticipate June 14 being the last day of the spring session. We've requested the presence of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to give royal assent to such bills as may have been passed by that time. His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has a standing commitment that he's had for some time which precludes him from coming later on in the day while we're in session, which would be our normal procedure. So although it's unusual, I would ask the permission of the House for us to invite His Honour the Lieutenant Governor during daily Routine and that we suspend daily Routine for that period of time until he is able to attend, give royal assent, and retire.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this motion is debatable. Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 29 carried]

The Speaker: I take it that by the decision made here by the Assembly, we would have the prayer on Thursday, and then the Lieutenant Governor would be invited before we start the Routine, after the prayer.

Mr. Hancock: That's my anticipation, yes.

The Speaker: Okay.

Point of OrderExplanation of Speaker's Ruling

The Speaker: I'm going to call on the hon. President of the Treasury Board momentarily, but hon. Member for Peace River, you rose several times. Do you have a point of information that you want to rise on?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I do, and I apologize if the timing was inappropriate, and I interjected on what was a creative and thoughtful point of order from over there.

Mr. Speaker, during your ruling on your first point of order you said that the Conservative caucus could purchase radio advertising, and that would be consistent with the rules of this House as they stand today. I wish to clarify that in actual fact the Conservative caucus does not purchase radio advertising with their caucus funds nor will we do so. I don't want the taxpayers of Alberta to think anything different. We will not purchase partisan radio advertising with our caucus funds.

Thank you for the opportunity to clarify.

The Speaker: So I take it that the hon. member was rising under Standing Order 13(2), which requests, basically, a further explanation from the Speaker with respect to his statement. Okay.

Second Reading

Bill 43
Appropriation Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all these numbers flying around, I guess that it's appropriate that it is my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, 2007.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The second reading of Bill 43, Appropriation Act, 2007. There's been quite a lot of debate through a number of weeks on all different parts of this bill, yet it's important also to look at it as a whole.

You know, my economics training, brief as it was, taught me to pay attention to history. History teaches us that when the economy is slow or even in a recession, it is wise for governments to spend money on capital projects so that workers have jobs and employment rises, but when there is a hot economy, as we have now, it is wise for governments to invest and save for the future.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Where's the wisdom in a $33 billion provincial budget as we have before us here in Bill 43? This can only be a budget that will increase the overheated economy. It will do nothing to decrease inflation or slow down our overheated economy. I mean, it's obvious that we are at a special crossroads in Alberta in terms of our hot economy today. GDP increased one-third from 1991 to 2003. GDP growth in Alberta in 2006 was 6.8 per cent, more than double the national rate. Inflationary pressures grow. The consumer price index was 5.5 per cent in March. The government would prefer to refer to this growth as bringing about growth pressures, but the more we listen to ordinary Albertans, the more we realize that the growth pressures are actually growth crises, especially when we look at people's individual lives and how they are struggling to cope with our overheated economy.

This especially is obvious, Mr. Speaker, in the area of housing. I have a special interest in this area. We removed that part of the budget of Municipal Affairs and Housing to vote separately on it because we were not happy with the response of the department to the Affordable Housing Task Force. I was a part of that task force. It was an amazing opportunity to go out on the road and to hear Albertans all across the province in all sorts of different cities.

The pressures are just amazing. The population increased by 109,000 in 2006. There has been a 10.4 per cent increase in population since 2001, so you have the pressures of increasing population. House prices in 2006 went up 31 per cent, in Edmonton 52 per cent, so you have tremendous pressures on families because of the high cost of housing. The rental vacancy rate is at .9 per cent. The overall vacancy rate in rural Alberta in 2006 was 1.4 per cent, a 10-year low.

The Affordable Housing Task Force concluded when they looked at all these statistics and listened to people throughout Alberta that this makes for a perfect storm. You have tight supply, not enough housing of any kind. There's not enough housing for people who are homeless, not enough emergency shelter space. There's not enough transitional housing. There's not enough subsidized housing and not enough affordable housing. There's not enough market housing for people coming to Alberta with high-skill jobs. There's tight supply, and there's high demand given the tremendous increase in population. Then there are labour shortages with the high cost of construction. All that amounts to a housing crisis in Alberta.

We were not happy with the Municipal Affairs and Housing response to the Affordable Housing Task Force. They proposed to support . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Were you disappointed or just not happy?

Dr. B. Miller: Well, we asked for $480 million a year for five years to build 12,000 units of affordable housing, and the government response was half of that, $240 million. So the numbers weren't there. Most of all, we were unhappy with the fact that the government didn't respond to our suggestions about reorganizing the government to have a more concentrated focus on housing, to have a secretariat of housing or a ministry of housing where there is a concerted effort to pull the pieces together from all the different silos within government to focus on housing because it is a huge crisis.

Mr. Speaker, the effect of this, the appropriation bill, Budget 2007, on Albertans to me raises the question: who shares in the Alberta advantage? Where is all the money from resource revenue going? Obviously, that money is not going to people with low incomes. Income support rates through Alberta Works programs have remained virtually the same for the last 15 years, but buying power has for those people dropped. The Edmonton Social Planning Council produced a document in which they state that after adjusting for inflation, the real value of monthly social assistance benefits since 1980 has dropped by over 50 per cent for families with children and, even worse, a 60 per cent drop for single adults.

People on social assistance are obviously falling further and further behind because the money that they get and the rates haven't changed considerably, appreciatively, in the last 10 or 15 years, yet they are not able to purchase as much with those meagre monies that they get. They fall further and further behind. This budget really doesn't have anything that's good news for people living in poverty, people on low incomes.

The Edmonton Social Planning Council points out that in this year's budget, which refers to, for example, people expected to work or not expected to work or learners, that effective July 1 those clients not expected to work and those clients temporarily unable to work will receive a 5 per cent increase in their monthly benefits. Learners will receive their 5 per cent increase. This leaves the remaining Alberta Works recipients who are expected to work with no increase in their benefit levels, meaning they will keep falling further behind as living costs rise.

Mr. Speaker, the issue is really serious because if there's nothing in this budget, no appreciable increase in rates for people receiving income support, especially for the housing component, then these people are the near homeless. In the housing task force we decided to invent a new term, not just homelessness but the nearly homeless: people who are one rent increase from being homeless. That's the situation we face with people on low income.

With the huge increase in rents, monthly rents have increased close to 60 per cent in the past decade, but recently they've just gone through the roof. They're skyrocketing. So it's not surprising that in 2006 there were 8,900 people in Alberta who were waiting for subsidized housing. Alberta's homeless population is growing: 32 per cent of an increase in Calgary over the last two years, a 19 per cent increase in the homeless population in Edmonton over the last two years, a 24 per cent increase in the homeless population in Fort McMurray over the last two years. Five years ago the number of Albertans in need of core housing was 106,000. What is it now: 150,000, 200,000, 250,000? It's just incredible the number of people that can't get the kind of housing that they need for their families. We're hearing that.

I had a town hall meeting a few weeks ago in the Britannia Youngstown area of my riding, and I have another one tonight in the Inglewood area of my riding. I'm sure I'll hear the same story tonight as I heard at the first town hall meeting: that families with low income cannot cope in this hot economy. This budget doesn't help them.

This budget, an all-time high of $33 billion, is certainly going to just exacerbate the inflationary hot economy that we have. It's not going to slow the economy down. It's not going to slow the inflation down. Those who are on the bottom end of the rich and poor scale are just in a worse and worse situation all the time. On that basis it's really a moral issue. If this government is not going to help considerably and effectively people on low income, then I raise an ethical question about this budget because every budget is a work of ethics.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to talk just about poor families and families with low incomes, but it's also an issue for families with middle incomes. I mean, with the GDP going up and up so rapidly and huge profits being made by oil companies, we have to ask the question: what about middle-class Albertans? It's obvious, I think, that the wages of middle-class Albertans are not going up as rapidly as the GDP. So we can ask the question: who benefits from this hot economy? It's not low-income Albertans. It's not even middle-income Albertans.

I think that we're going to see middle-income families squeezed more and more as time goes on, and 2007-2008 will go down in history as a time of tremendous labour unrest as more and more people – teachers, construction workers, people in all areas of life – try to catch up by asking for higher wages. Thanks to an inflationary budget like this and uncontrolled economic growth, all the costs are being driven up, and middle-income people are being squeezed as never before. People are becoming restless, and we hear about this all the time at our town hall meetings or in our constituency offices.

Mr. Speaker, one area of Alberta working life that I want to especially focus on is the people who work for not-for-profit organizations. We're really in trouble when it comes to supporting people who are in the service sector or in the hospitality sector, people working in hotels and restaurants, people working in hospitals, the staff at universities and colleges, people involved in the helping professions, the care professions. Those people are being hit big time. There's a huge turnover of employees. People can't manage to survive on $10 an hour or $12 an hour or even $15 an hour. It's especially distressing when you go to daycare centres or go to institutions that look after disabled children, and you realize that the most vulnerable children in Alberta are being affected.

A hot economy means that people working in those, even if they have a sense of calling, that what they're doing is really giving of themselves, they still have to survive. They still have to pay the rent. They still have to buy food. They can't manage on $12 an hour or $13 an hour. It's just impossible. Jim Gurnett of the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers says that the best of times produced by the boom results in the worst of times for many. He should know because the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers works with all kinds of people who work in the social institutions and the social agencies in the inner city. It's a shame that these people can't afford to live now in our cities in Alberta.

Now, New York City came to that point a number of years ago when they realized that their public service people, the police and those who work in the fire companies, couldn't afford to live in New York. New York had to adopt new strategies to build affordable housing. My understanding is that the mayor of Calgary and members of the staff of the city of Calgary went to New York to find out what their best practices were so that we could be in a position to be ready to take action here in Alberta because we've come to that point, Mr. Speaker. Many people working in the service sector can't afford to live in Alberta. They're making choices like: "Should we move to Saskatchewan? Maybe we should go back to Nova Scotia. Maybe we can't afford to live here at all."

It affects our own sons and daughters. I have two sons. One has moved to London, Ontario; one is moving to London, England. Part of the reason is that – they are in the arts field; one is a writer, and one is a pianist, a musician – given the rent costs here in the city, they can't afford to live here, which is a shame for me. I mean, I'll enjoy going to London, England, to visit them, but still it's a shame that they have to move away in order to make ends meet. So, Mr. Speaker, I was upset that the government's response to the Affordable Housing Task Force did not take into consideration the whole package of suggestions that the task force put forward, the variety of sticks and carrots, of incentives and also guidelines that would help to move us ahead to provide affordable housing in Alberta.

Well, those are my remarks. I want to conclude by stating that I agree with the Edmonton Social Planning Council that on reviewing the Budget for 2007, "it is clear that fighting poverty and addressing the needs of its most vulnerable citizens is not the government's top priority." Spending on capital projects is up by over one-third, and overall spending is up by 10 per cent, but there are no increases for vulnerable Albertans dependent on income support. Five per cent just for some, nothing for others. Mr. Speaker, I think that's deplorable.

I just want to conclude by mentioning, again, that it's community agencies that contract with provincial government to take care of our most vulnerable children, providing child care, child protection, family support for the developmentally disabled, continuing care, home care, all of those services: the people working in that sector are the most affected. Those institutions cannot find staff. They have trouble recruiting and retaining staff in the hot market that we have right now. That is really unfortunate for this province. It raises the question about whether we can maintain the kind of quality of life that we've had in the past. The bottom line is that it's not just about money. It's about being able to maintain the quality of life that we all want for Albertans.

Those are my remarks about Bill 43 and about the budget in general. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to participate in debate on the appropriations bill in second reading, Bill 43. The appropriations bill, as you know, sums up the deliberations that we've had in the Assembly with respect to the Executive Council and all the ministries which fall under the provincial cabinet. Today I am hoping to state some aspects with which I was disappointed in terms of the provincial budget this year.

Now, I will start by talking a little bit about the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation. In Edmonton-McClung, my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we are waiting for three overpasses to be built on the Anthony Henday Drive. The Anthony Henday, as you know, is the Edmonton ring road. Initially, there wasn't a lot of traffic on it because it wasn't finished. It is still not finished, but there's a lot more traffic now than six months ago or a year ago because more legs of the Anthony Henday are opened. There is traffic that stretches between the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud to Edmonton-McClung to Edmonton-Meadowlark to Edmonton-Calder and St. Albert even and Edmonton-Castle Downs. It is growing. The Edmonton ring road is growing, and so is traffic that is taking it.

The government decided to use cement for sections of the Anthony Henday instead of the traditional treated rubberized asphalt. They did their research and apparently came up with the idea that cement is less expensive, and it lives longer. Now, I am not an engineer, and I don't know if that is true, but the end result is that there is a lot of noise emanating from the Edmonton ring road, Mr. Speaker. Many people who live close to the Edmonton ring road are complaining that the noise is unrelenting, the noise is intrusive.

You know, at any hour of the day you can actually hear trucks and vehicles gearing up and gearing down. You can hear them when they brake. You can hear them on the ring road. My challenge to any of my hon. colleagues who think that these people are maybe extra sensitive or maybe they're a little on the whining side is for them to go and visit. I would actually be honoured to receive any of my hon. colleagues from this House who are willing to come and tour these areas of my constituency in which the noise is unbearable.

Now, how would the overpasses help? The overpasses are going to even out, or smooth, that traffic so people don't have to brake and then accelerate again. Having traffic lights on the Anthony Henday, Mr. Speaker, is, to me, not the right thing to do. I think it is wrong to have traffic lights on a major speedway – you know, the average speed limit on the Henday is 110 kilometres per hour – and for somebody to be travelling at that speed and then slam on their brakes because 50 metres from here there is a traffic light.

The congestion is another issue, Mr. Speaker. Cars are backed up for long periods of time. We're not talking two or three minutes, as is customary and as is acceptable. We're talking 20, 25, and 30 minutes at times. Then, when you look at other sections of the Henday, for example 100th Avenue or Stony Plain Road, you're talking 45 minutes to an hour. I think this is unacceptable.

In this House I've stood up on a few occasions to table petitions from concerned citizens who have come together to sign a plea, a plight, directed at the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation to finish those overpasses and interchanges. I don't know how far we are from completing these interchanges and overpasses, but this budget did not offer me any assurance that this was a priority. I know that the government prefers to keep opening new legs of the Anthony Henday because, quite frankly, it is a media opportunity. It's a photo op where the hon. minister and his colleagues would put on the hard hat and wave at cameras and give a speech. I think we should finish what we start.

Mr. Rogers: It's coming. It takes time.

Mr. Elsalhy: When? That's the issue. We don't know when. There's nothing in this year's budget. My hon. colleague from Leduc-Beaumont-Devon says it's coming. Well, I hope it is, because commuters and motorists are asking for it, and so are the people who live close to the Anthony Henday.

The other thing is noise attenuation, as I mentioned. Noise attenuation is not difficult, and it shouldn't be expensive. People don't have huge expectations. All they want is a berm, for example, or some trees to be planted. I know at least two of my constituents who attended every open house and every information session that was put on by the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation before the Anthony Henday was constructed. They were promised: "Don't worry. Your berms are going to be in place to attenuate the noise. We don't want you to be troubled or disturbed in your own residences, and we also don't want your property values to drop."

In this market, Mr. Speaker, these people are now concerned that the promise which was made six years ago has not been kept. When they approach ministry officials, they're told that those ministry officials don't know the answer. They don't know when those berms or those noise attenuation measures are going to be brought in. Again, this budget doesn't offer that assurance. These people are starting to contemplate leaving their dream homes, the homes they bought with their hard-earned dollars or that they actually built. It shouldn't be that way.

I'm hoping that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation will take this issue to heart. Again, if he's really interested in touring my constituency, I would be honoured to take him along and to introduce him to some of these residents, who can actually offer him a cup of tea or some coffee or whichever other beverage he prefers, and they can actually make him stand in their backyard or make him stand on their deck, and he can actually see that.

The other thing I would draw his attention to are some pictures which I tabled in this House showing how flat that landscape is and how flat that terrain is. You know, all is we're asking for is some dirt. Six or seven truckloads per location should do the trick for now, until those overpasses are built. That's one thing.

The other thing is with respect to Municipal Affairs and Housing, as echoed by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora. We know that the government was not prepared for the housing crisis, to their credit or in their defence, maybe because nobody could have predicted that it was going to be this big this quick. However, they had an opportunity when they were deliberating internally to come up with the figures for all the different ministries to say, "You know, housing is going to be a crisis. We should not only focus on the lowest 10 per cent of those people who are in trouble. We should expand that because 10 per cent," as my colleague from Glenora indicated, "captures only a small portion of that class of citizens that is in trouble now."

We talk about seniors. We talk about people who are on fixed income, pensioners, people on assistance, people who are having difficulty making ends meet. We talk about the definition of affordable housing and affordability for rent or accommodations. There was the arbitrary number that 30 per cent of your income should be the maximum anybody has to pay for accommodation, be it rent, be it mortgage, and that anything over 30 per cent warrants intervention, warrants action by the government.

We know that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing kept talking about $285 million which were added to fix a whole bunch of problems. My argument is twofold. The first part of that argument is: throwing money at the problem after the fact can help a little bit but not a whole lot. Using band-aids and using temporary treatments does not treat or fix or take care of the underlying cause or the underlying problem.

The other component of my argument is going to say that we need a plan, and we need a plan not only for housing. We need a plan for investments. We need a plan for education. We need a plan for health care and so on and so forth. The plan has to be not one year, not two, not three. It has to be five and 10 even, Mr. Speaker. Beyond the $285 million that the hon. minister of municipal affairs keeps talking about, what else is there?

I'm going to switch gears, and instead of just talking about people who are currently suffering, I'm going to reiterate a request which was given to me by one of my constituents who is really excited about the opportunity for him as a landlord to be part of the solution, not part of the problem. He asked me and he asked my staff what programs there are. The government keeps talking about incentives and carrots for developers and landlords to bring in affordable housing to the market, increasing supply, as we all talk about. My staff phoned three of the government ministries, Mr. Speaker, and they didn't get a satisfactory answer. Every time they asked those officials, "What are those programs that we heard about in the House, and what are those programs which were promised by your hon. minister?" oh, it's still being worked on. I think this is unacceptable if we are asking developers and landlords to be part of the solution, and we're promising them that there is some financial incentive, you know, be it tax credits, be it money up front, be it assistance with their mortgages or their bank loans or whatever. I don't know what the programs are, and apparently neither do the government officials.

I am hoping that there would be like a one-stop shop for MLAs and for constituents alike to go to and say: "Okay. We have the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation. We have the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing. We have the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports. There is Finance. There is the Treasury Board." The issue is so stretched out and so diluted that we don't know who to go to. So my question today with respect to this budget and with respect to the appropriation: who should I talk to and where do I go if one of my constituents wants to build 60 units or a hundred units or however many? Where do I take him, and who should he speak to in the government? If we're serious about getting these people to partner with the government, to be part of the solution, as I mentioned, then we shouldn't give them the runaround, and honestly, MLAs should not be given the runaround as well.

Mr. Speaker, education is my third concern because, as mentioned numerous times in this House, giving school boards 3 per cent is not adequate. I was speaking to the chairperson of the Edmonton Catholic school board, and she mentioned that school bus drivers are going to receive a 9 per cent increase this year. As a layperson: how is that possible? If I give you a 3 per cent raise but I ask you to do something that would cost you 9 per cent more, how are you going to reconcile both sides of that equation? Financial charts have to be balanced, and rightly so. School boards should be accountable, and

I agree, but we should also empower them to deliver the services that we ask them to.

Given that inflation is 5 and a half per cent and given rising labour costs, transportation costs, and all these other things, I think that 3 per cent actually amounts to a budget cut. If I'm going to be asked to vote on that particular department, you know, Mr. Speaker, I'm inclined to not support that particular budget because I really think it's not fair to the school boards to be asked to do this, and then they're the ones receiving the blame and having to answer to the parents and answer to the constituents. The government of Alberta keeps its distance, and they stay behind the scenes when in fact they're the ones holding the purse strings, and they're the ones that are underfunding and undermining public education.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on and on about what's wrong with the budget, but I'll take an opportunity to highlight some things which are good with the budget. Take, for example, the extra funding for hiring Crown prosecutors. This is an area which I oversee in the Official Opposition, and I thought this was quite a favourable development. The Edmonton Remand is finally being constructed. Again, that's an area which members of the opposition have asked for and asked to see over many years. I'm excited that now we can finally address this seemingly chronic issue.

I'm disappointed to some extent that funding for police services did not rise by as much as I'd hoped, but I know that government agencies and departments all compete for pieces of the same cake and that we have to make concessions somewhere for other areas to be looked at more vigorously, which is fine. I'm hoping that next year my concerns with respect to police funding would be addressed and would be addressed more equitably.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I would seek unanimous consent of the House that we could work for the rest of the afternoon without jackets.

The Deputy Speaker: As I understand, the hon. Minister of Education has asked for unanimous consent for the male members to not wear jackets. Is that correct?

Mr. Liepert: That's correct.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Any others under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the comments of the member opposite he seems to have bought into this fallacy that education is underfunded. I wonder if he understands that seven-tenths of a school year is funded in the previous year's budget. For example, for the current school year seven-tenths of that was in last year's budget and three-tenths in this year's budget. So for him to constantly parrot the messages that we get from certain interested parties on this particular issue and to say that education is underfunded, I wonder if he really understands how it is funded.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if you wish to respond.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, this is the divide that we have. Members of the opposition think that education deserves to be given more attention. We think that education is an investment in the future and that school boards should be given at least the amount of money that basically allows them to cover their rising costs and to also pay for inflation and so on. The government doesn't factor that in. Now, whether in fact 60 per cent or 70 per cent was paid for last year versus this year, the issue is chronic because the underfunding continues.

Mr. Herard: Ten per cent, not 3.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, they keep talking about 10 per cent and 15 per cent, and then the minister says 80 per cent since 1992 or whatever. They forget sometimes that they actually severely butchered the funding for education when they brought in their cuts in 1992. They reduced it to almost nothing, and then they increased it. It's almost like, Mr. Speaker, you drop a nuclear bomb on a city and then pretend to rebuild it. Well, what you've done is severely undermined education. [interjections] Now all of a sudden they're starting to talk. I think, you know, they had the opportunity, when we were debating those programs, to defend them.

Anyway, the question is that after you cut those budgets that severely and then you tried to give 2 per cent this year, 3 per cent next year, 4 per cent the year after and so on, there is no systematic approach for those school boards to be able to budget properly. Sometimes, depending on when the provincial budget is delivered – and, you know, Mr. Speaker, that this year the provincial budget was late – their ability to budget and their ability to forecast what's going to happen in the future is restricted. We've heard stories and situations where school boards are now laying off staff, and then they'll see what will happen in the fall. So we don't know . . .

Mr. Liepert: Where? Name them.

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, haven't you heard in question period today that the question from the hon. Member for St. Albert mentioned 15 people being laid off? Grande Prairie, Mr. Speaker: here's an example.

They choose to ignore these facts, and it's a government that's in denial, Mr. Speaker. If educators, parents, and school boards, all of them, are agreeing that education needs to be funded in a better way and that more resources should be allocated to school boards to be able to deliver those essential services that we ask them to, then 3 per cent really doesn't cut it. Three per cent doesn't match inflation, doesn't match the rising costs of labour, transportation. Books even cost more. How can the Ministry of Education expect a school board to change curriculum, for example, and buy new books when, in fact, their costs cannot be met?

Well, the reliance on parents' fundraising and the reliance on school fees and casinos should really stop, Mr. Speaker. This is a government that should really live up to its responsibility. We elect governments, and we pay them taxes to deliver those services. We don't elect them to say: "Here, dear school board, take 3 per cent. You take the blame. We'll stay behind." This is unacceptable to me.

Mr. Liepert: Campaign on a sales tax next time.

Mr. Elsalhy: Oh, the Minister of Education would like to impose a sales tax for parents to be able to afford their kids' education.

Education is public, Mr. Speaker, and should remain this way. We should not really off-load that provincial responsibility and abdicate it onto the backs of parents and onto the backs of school boards, which are undermined.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I notice that the member over there that was just speaking was talking about adding more money to education. I guess I have a simple question in my last 15 seconds. How much more would he add, and where would he get the money? I heard the minister say in QP today that we've raised education spending by 86 per cent over the last 10 years. Well, inflation only went up about 29 per cent, and enrolments only went up about 5 per cent. I'm just wondering: how much is enough, and where would he get the money?

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time for Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Others on the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 43 this afternoon. I've been listening with a great deal of interest to the discussions so far. When we look at the budget this year and we look at the budget 10 years ago, it has certainly more than doubled. There are many reasons why we need this sort of instant infusion of cash. We are spending a lot of money. The government is certainly hoping that voters will forget that this is the same government who did very little to maintain our existing infrastructure, and now as a result of that, we have the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation digging into a big black bag over there because there are so many outstanding projects that need immediate attention.

Certainly, whenever we look at this budget and we look at this bill and we look at the current state of education, education cannot be neglected. I know public education is not respected by some members of the government caucus, but it cannot be neglected. If we need more money, hon. members, I would say that the first place we should look is Horse Racing Alberta. [interjections] Oh, yeah. I hear all these sorts of callous laughs over there.

Surely, the current minister of advanced education knows this better than anyone else. Why would an outfit like that need any government subsidies or any lottery grants? In the public accounts book it is a grant. It is listed as a grant in the blue book. Subsidy has been a little bit kind with that line item of over $50 million. They can certainly afford to pay millions of dollars in cash, hon. minister of advanced education. You should know this from your past as the minister of agriculture. They can spend millions of dollars for land in Balzac. I think the total, Mr. Speaker, is close to $15 million in land. They paid cash for this land.

An Hon. Member: Who?

Mr. MacDonald: Horse Racing Alberta or their corporate affiliates: that's who, hon. member.

Then whenever the department of agriculture is going to give them a grant for some waterworks, well, they can come up with another $5 million or $6 million of their own money for that portion of it. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation is listening to this with a great deal of interest, and I'm sure it's not the first time that he's heard this. But if they can come up with that kind of money, surely they can do without any grants or subsidies from this government, and that money could be transferred into the Department of Education.

Now, if that is not enough, I was sitting listening to the budget discussions last night at the Edmonton Catholic school board, and I was listening to the discussion of the $15 million shortfall. I reminded myself that in the last three fiscal years this government has granted to golf courses across the province over $7 million. These are golf courses that, I think, can stand on their own.

Mr. Liepert: Name them.

Mr. MacDonald: I can name them if you wish, hon. member, and I can start with one in Calgary called Inglewood, which has, Mr. Speaker, a substantial fee before you can join that club as a member. Vegreville, for instance: the golf course in Vegreville got a $200,000 grant. Now, if we can afford and if our priorities are to fund lavishly all these golf courses, why on earth can we not fund public education?

The balanced budget approved for the 2007-08 year for the Edmonton Catholic schools is close to $300 million. It's as close to $300 million as you can get. They state – and this is in their own press release – that “the 3% increase to the Basic Education Grant does not meet the increased costs of educating today's child, so creating a balanced budget for 2007/08 was a very difficult process filled with extremely difficult decisions.” That is a quote in the press release from the board chairperson, Debbie Engel.

Now, certainly, a shortfall of $15 million may not mean much to a group of Progressive Conservatives who are gathering around discussing a $33 billion budget because if there's one thing we know for certain, it's that you're quite used to spending a lot of money. Whether you spend it wisely, that's another matter, but you're used to spending a lot of money. You guys spend more money than . . . [interjection] No. The New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan would be perhaps the most fiscally prudent government in the country: balanced budget. This would be on a per capita basis the most extravagant government in this . . .

Mr. Horner: Make up your mind, Hugh. Do you want us to spend more, or do you want us to spend less?

Mr. MacDonald: No, hon. minister of advanced education, I want you to spend it wisely. There are certainly places in this $33 billion budget where it is being spent unwisely. As chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee I see ministry after ministry come through there on a weekly basis, and I'm not convinced that all the money that you are spending is being spent wisely. I just gave you two examples of where you could improve.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this $15 million shortfall. If we look at Edmonton Catholic schools' severe special-needs funding, in 2006-07 Alberta Education funded the district for 907 students even though the district serves 1,000 special-needs students, and this created a funding shortfall of approximately $1.5 million.

Infrastructure maintenance renewal funding. This funding has been reduced by 55 per cent, from $12 million to $5.4 million.

Now, the negotiation process. I hope everything works out very well this fall for the government, for the minister, for the parents, for the students, and for the teachers. The Edmonton Catholic school district is negotiating with the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta union of public employees, and those contracts expire on August 31, '07. In addition, the district has just ratified a new two-year contract with the Edmonton Catholic Support Staff Association and will give staff a 4 per cent increase a year in each year of the contract.

Transportation. Costs for providing student transportation continue to increase. The budget increases by almost 8 per cent for 2007-08. Parents through the purchase of bus passes will also need to contribute an additional 10 per cent, or over $320,000, in 2007-08.

The curriculum. The new curriculum costs for 2007-08, Mr. Speaker, will be in the range of $1.5 million.

So those are some of the issues that Edmonton Catholic schools have.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here are some of the examples of the funding shortfalls the Edmonton Catholic schools will experience. In instructional programs, special needs: we talked about that. I would remind all hon. members of the House that funding in this area for 2007-08 has increased by only 3 per cent. With more students being served, allocations to schools remain at the same levels as 2006-07.

Full-day kindergarten – and we all know what the Learning Commission said – is offered at 17 schools, serving approximately 300 students considered at risk for failure because of socioeconomic status, language, and social/emotional factors. Now, the program was previously funded through the Alberta initiative for school improvement; however, as a second cycle of AISI projects concluded at the end of 2005-06 school year, the district is required to fund this much-needed program through other sources. Recognizing the benefits of a full-day kindergarten program, the district – and good for them – is committed to the educational benefit of the program and continues to fund the program even without dedicated funding. Surely we would be better off spending money on a full-day kindergarten program than direct grants to golf courses. Let's get our priorities right.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there's one thing I do have to say on the record, and I don't know how much time I have left. I certainly admire the Minister of Education. It's not the first time I've seen him out and about without an entourage. He comes. He talks to the people. He talks to the officials, the public at large, the teachers that are there, and he's not like, you know, an aristocratic Conservative with an entourage. He comes alone, and he goes alone, and he does a very good job communicating with the citizens. I would urge all hon. members of the front bench there to take a page from his playbook and perhaps get out and meet the people alone without this crew of executive assistants and communications people and whatnot. You should follow his actions and speak directly one on one with the citizens.

I saw him at the Edmonton Catholic school board's meeting last night. It's not the first time I've seen him there alone, and I hope it's not the last. I admire him for that because he speaks with parents and teachers and trustees, and there's not this sort of ring of protection around him like I see with other ministers. Yes.

Mr. Rodney: What are you trying to say?

Mr. MacDonald: I'm trying to say, hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, that some of these front-benchers are out of touch with the citizens of this province, but not the Minister of Education. No way.

Infrastructure maintenance renewal funding. Now, this funding is provided to school districts to upgrade and/or replace building components that have failed or pose problems in order to meet health and safety requirements, to extend the life of a school facility, and to maintain the quality of the school environment. This funding, I would remind the hon. minister of infrastructure, has been reduced by 55 per cent, again, from $12 million to this year's anticipated budget of $5.4 million. Alberta Infrastructure has indicated that the infrastructure maintenance and renewal funding for school districts should be 2 per cent of the value of all buildings, or about $12 million for this specific school district, the Edmonton Catholic school district. In 2006-07 the district received $12 million, but in this year funding will be reduced to $5.4 million, or a reduction of $6 million, of 55 per cent.

Now, why is this? If this is such a great budget and we're funding public education the way it should be funded, why is this? We know what happens when there is a lack of planned infrastructure spending: the bill gets bigger later on.

With transportation and transportation fees one has to recognize that the price of gasoline is going up, and that's another issue. But costs for providing student transportation continue to rise due to the high cost of fuel and rising operator costs. That's the maintenance of the buses and the drivers' wages. Transportation grants have increased by 3 per cent, and as a result we're asking parents to pick up the tab again. Parents are required to pay the additional costs of providing transportation for their children. In 2007-08 parents will contribute 3 and a half million dollars towards getting their children to school, an increase of 10 per cent. In 2006-07 it's interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that according to the Edmonton Catholic school board this rose to approximately $3.2 million, an increase of school bus passes of 33 per cent. In September of 2007 bus passes for elementary, junior high, and high school will increase by $3 per month.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available again if anyone wishes to participate.

Mr. Bonko: Well, I was curious as to if the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was going to finish. He was cut off there, so I wasn't sure what he was going to say. I'd appreciate him being able to finish his little piece there.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you have some more comments?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore: in September of 2007 bus passes for elementary, junior high, and high school students will increase by $3 per month. It may seem like a very small amount of money. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora met many of these individuals when he was on the housing task force, but that amount of money may be significant for some families who have been forced to pay megabucks for rental accommodation. One of the reasons why they're forced to pay these megabucks is because there has been an absence of planning – a complete absence of planning – by this government in the last five years.

Edmonton city council, Mr. Speaker, displayed their commitment to affordable bus transportation this spring when they reduced the original bus pass increase of $7.75 per month to only a $1.25 increase per month. We should note the commitment from Edmonton city council.

In conclusion I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker, that by attending that budget meeting last night, I learned a great deal, and I'm more convinced than ever that we have our spending priorities wrong in this government. Public education and public health care should be our priorities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there others that wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate having the opportunity to speak to the Appropriation Act, Bill 43. It makes one feel that we're approaching the end to be able to sum things together here to some degree. I'm sure that there's a sense of relief although a sense as well certainly in the New Democrat caucus that there are so many things that have gone unlooked after that there's a degree of anxiety as well.

You know, we have a proper economic and social service mandate responsibility in the Legislature here. The management of the economy and the services that we provide through the provincial government have to keep pace with the rapid changes that we're experiencing here in the province of Alberta at this time. The most general sense with this budget is that while the government has boosted its expenditures to start addressing some of the difficult problems that we're all facing here in the province of Alberta, the inflation as well as labour and resource shortages ensure that the government has a difficult if not impossible task to be able to meet the needs of the growing economy.

You have a classic situation where you have rapid expansion and the inflation and shortages that accompany that rapid expansion, and as a result it limits our capacity to deal with growth pressures in the province of Alberta at this time. Although others might look from the outside and consider it an enviable position – certainly, if I look around the large economies around North America, there is none that is growing quite as fast as Alberta – looking from the inside out, we realize, of course, that there are many serious problems that accompany such rapid growth as well.

My comments here this afternoon are just going to go around those basic ideas. Let's just take a look at a quick snapshot of the problems that we do have to face here with this budget. The provincial inflation rate in the province of Alberta is at least 5.5 per cent. This is the highest that it's been in 15 years in this province, and it's certainly the highest in the country. We have a labour shortage that's grinding away the productivity capacity of the province. We have a housing and construction industry that's looking at 25 per cent increases in building costs at least. That's not counting the cost of property, which is included in the sticker price for individuals and families looking to buy places to live. We have staff shortages in such critical areas as health care and in certain professions, engineering and construction.

Rents are increasing at twice the rate of inflation, which is even more troubling considering we have this 15-year high for inflation. Contributing to that but compounding it are these galloping rent rate increases, which of course cause no end of difficulty for people in their individual monthly budgets. We have an infrastructure deficit which we as New Democrats have calculated at being at least $20 billion and counting, and that's not accounting for that inflation that's increasing that bill by the month.

We have a K to 12 education sector that certainly is very good, but we seem to have some structural problems financing that K to 12 education budget. I'll make more specific comments on that later.

We have postsecondary institutions around the province that have limited spaces and are requiring increased standards to apply to those institutions. As a result, thousands of students are being turned away from postsecondary institutions due to shortages of space.

Finally, I would like to point out as well that we're losing quite literally millions and millions of dollars every day through a royalty structure that's not capturing the value of our resources that everyone in this province owns. As I said, every single day, I would suggest, we are losing millions and millions of dollars. If we had one of those little clocks that they have that counts off some sort of countdown to the Olympics or something like that, if we had something similar that might demonstrate the money that we're losing from an outdated royalty rate, perhaps that would turn the balance in terms of people being concerned enough to have immediate action on the royalty rates rather than waiting months and months like we have been recently.

In our estimation this budget that we've seen before us in the last month or so makes two things very, very clear. Number one, the economy, despite budgetary surpluses that we have, is clearly overheated, and number two, only now is the government and its various departments waking up to what a formidable task we have ahead of us to put things back into balance.

The $2 billion surplus in the government's pocket does not mean necessarily, Mr. Speaker, more money into the citizens' pockets. More money is better paid with lower costs for working Albertans; however, such is not the case as we've seen the spiralling costs that Albertans have to pay. So with these circumstances together the problem with the budget was that while the government has boosted expenditures to start addressing these problems, inflation is well above the absolute. As well, the labour and resource shortage will ensure that the government will have a difficult time dealing with this whole situation.

I would like to just look specifically at some areas here, and one area that I would like to talk about just briefly is infrastructure. The budget in infrastructure is reflective of, I think, an ideological basis to use P3s at every opportunity. Certainly, you know, we have seen kind of some luck in regards to P3s working to the advantage, but the thing with the P3 is that you have a deal over a long period of time, so at some point you're going to have to pay the piper; otherwise, the business that has signed into the P3 will either have to pull out because they're losing so much money or will have to renegotiate the terms of the contract. It's a hit-and-miss situation at best.

The evidence that we've gathered from around the world and across the country and, indeed, from our own experiences such as in the courthouse in Calgary shows that P3s are problematic. We have to at the very least watch them very closely over a long period of time to see if they, indeed, work the best for public monies being spent.

Now, infrastructure in general. The minister admitted that only a third of the roads that are required to be repaired at this time are in fact scheduled to be done, yet even with an increased allocation in roads and highway maintenance of approximately $100 million, the construction industry has publicly stated that there are not enough people to even take on these additional projects. So while we might have the best of intentions, again, the whole different tentacles of an overheated economy come to lay waste to our best laid plans that we might have.

The minister has consistently shortchanged Alberta's cities and municipalities, still claiming to give municipalities extra money for capital projects, but conveniently tied at least half of these projects to provincially mandated priorities. That makes it difficult for municipalities to execute their long-term plans for, say, rapid transit and other projects if they have the money earmarked specifically for other things.

Despite an additional expenditure of $600 million through the budget, Mr. Speaker, Alberta faces a $20 billion infrastructure deficit, and that's conveniently similar to the amount of money that had been cut over the preceding years from expenditures here in this Legislature, so there you go. It's not as though you can avoid those expenditures over time. Eventually it comes back like karma, as I said before, to lay waste to one's plans for the future.

In terms of education I think that we see, again, an unwillingness to look at the long-term development and growth of this province, and education is a good example of that. We have $508 million set aside for capital projects in the education sector. This is actually a 5.8 per cent decrease in money from last year and will continue to decrease over the years. This is something that seems to be hidden within the budget somehow. The approved projects will be a quarter of the actual number of projects requested as of December 2006 so, again, not meeting the infrastructure needs of education. Just in one city, Calgary, by my count there are at least up to 40 communities that require schools but don't have them. This is not something that you can continue on forever.

The educational need of students is paramount, and it's very time sensitive. As we said earlier this afternoon, perhaps Edmonton Catholic school board's budget is a harbinger of things to come for many other school boards finding some problems with their capital budgets. Edmonton Catholic schools is saying that they've experienced a 55 per cent decline in their capital budget.

In regard to program expenditures certainly we've used up a fair amount of energy in the last few weeks talking about the program earmarked increase at 3 per cent here in the province. You know, this is, of course, out of sync with even the rate of inflation here in the province of Alberta. I still have not had explained to me adequately how exactly we are going to divide up those fishes and loaves to pay the 2 or even 3 or 4 per cent differential between what the program expenditure needs are and what school boards are being given to work with.

As, again, we talked about earlier today and previously, negotiations are coming up with the Teachers' Association. The school boards will be in a very difficult situation indeed. We really are not in a position to require this sort of strife here at this time. I just really question the utility of it. Why are we stirring up the public education system, which we all agree is a very, very excellent public education system and deserves to be reinforced and buttressed and not shaken and turned upside down?

You know, we often dispute figures. This is something that commonly comes out, but I beg to differ that we do spend the most money on students here and from across the country. There are other jurisdictions that do indeed spend more money and with less utilities available to them. So it's a question of how you say what their spending is. I think that we deserve to do better here in the province of Alberta. The main thing is to make sure that we are meeting the cost of delivering education here in the province of Alberta, which is expensive because of the very hot economy that we are functioning under.

The unfunded liability issue. Certainly, we've expended lots of energy on that as well. It's important that we do go and sit down at the table here as soon as possible. Now is a good time to do so and not delay that decision as well.

The last short bit of comment that I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is in regard to the environment budget. Once again, I'm just reiterating some of the things that I've said before. You know, I really believe – and I'm sure the minister would agree with me in his heart of hearts – that the environment budget in this province has been down by at least a third or a quarter from what it should be. The environment sort of underscores so much of our other economy that we participate in here in the province. If we are not investing in sustainable industry and reinforcing and using the Department of Environment to regulate and to police a sustainable unfolding of our economy, then really we're just living on borrowed time. Without an adequate environment program that is dedicated, then I think we're just living on borrowed time.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder just a few minutes ago indicated that there are other jurisdictions that spend significantly more money on education. I'm wondering which jurisdictions those would be.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, it depends on how you define it, but certainly the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, and Yukon spend more. I'll have to check on it, but in terms of per-student funding for a certain category, I think Manitoba spends more by $500, as well, from the 2004 figures.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Yes. I'd like to ask the hon. member to clarify the amount of the infrastructure debt that he spoke about. Can you give us a little more information?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks. I appreciate that question. It's something we've been working on for a number of months, and we will continue to unfold it as the summer progresses. What it is is that we've taken an accumulation of not just education and infrastructure but also health care, building long-term care facilities, lots of projects that have been deferred over time and that we now require. What our preliminary investigations revealed is that this infrastructure deficit is in excess of $20 billion, which happens to coincide, very interestingly enough, with the budget cuts that we've seen over the last few years on these same projects.

You know, it's like you can't hide these things over time because, of course, the province's needs have actually been expanding exponentially with upwards of 100,000 people moving here, say, last year. We're supporting all of these new people and new enterprises and an expanded economy on the same infrastructure that might have supported 2 million or even less than 2 million people here in the province.

It's a classic case that we've seen. You see it all around the world. You might see a city like Mexico City or Lagos, Nigeria, or Bangkok, Thailand, you know, where you have a city that's designed for, let's say, a million people, and suddenly you have 10 million people living there, so everything is that much more strained. It's always prudent to spend a dime wisely when later on you'll end up having to spend considerably more. I was just astounded at the symmetry of the deficit that was paid down years before and now what we have to pay the piper. It's almost exactly the same. Isn't that interesting?

The Deputy Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder would elaborate on which particular departments' budgets have been cut in the last 12 years. I think he made reference to that, saying that there had been a number of cuts. I personally haven't seen a single cut. All I've seen are consistent increases, but perhaps he has some information I haven't seen. If he does, I'd ask him to share it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Well, sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. The departments that I've been following – and let's not forget to take into account inflation and increased jurisdiction. The Environment budget is a perfect example of this because you have an increased responsibility and an increased expectation, but the numbers are almost equal or very, very similar from 2007 and 2006, even 2005. You don't have, you know, any significant, real increase. Rather, you have just sort of holding the line, so to speak.

Another area that we've now started to see some small increase, you know, is in the area of arts and culture. When you're dealing from a deficit situation, when you're dealing from an underfunded department budget for quite a number of years, you know, when you put in some dribs and drabs of money, then in my estimation that is the definition of just holding the line and not increasing.

Thanks.

Bill 44

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move Bill 44, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, for second reading.

The act is very straightforward. It deals with, as miscellaneous statutes acts do, basic amendments that are not changes in policy and direction but usually corrections of statutes or changes of names. I'd ask the Assembly to approve it for second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wish to participate in debate?
Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 44 read a second time]

head:

Private Bills
Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1

CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act.

This is a groundbreaking, proactive bill, and I commend the members of the Standing Committee on Private Bills, a multiparty committee, for their extensive consideration and visionary recommendation of this bill to the Legislature. In turn, I ask all my colleagues to support Bill Pr. 1.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to respond to Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol, in second reading. I want to indicate that I'm a member of the Private Bills Committee, which met on a few occasions to discuss both Pr. 1 and Pr. 2. While Pr. 2 didn't make it onto the floor of the Assembly, Pr. 1, in fact, did. I wanted to use this opportunity to highlight why it's important to be dealing with the rising incidence of Internet crime and cybercrime.

Now, let's start by talking about the definition of cybercrime, Mr. Speaker. These are crimes which involve things like child pornography, financial fraud, threats to infrastructure and intellectual property, identity theft, and so on. I was looking on the Internet for a more concise definition, and I actually ran across one from Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada. They define cybercrime by going through an overview of situations which would be captured under that definition. They say:

Cyber crime consists of specific crimes dealing with computers and networks (such as hacking) and the facilitation of traditional crime through the use of computers (child pornography, hate crimes, telemarketing/Internet fraud). In addition to cyber crime, there is also "computer-supported crime" which covers the use of computers by criminals for communication and document or data storage. While these activities might not be illegal in and of themselves, they are often invaluable in the investigation of actual crimes. Computer technology presents many new challenges to social policy regarding issues such as privacy, as it relates to data mining and criminal investigations.

The RCMP has been dealing with this for quite a while. Provincial agencies and departments have been dealing with this for quite a while. It's an issue that is not new, but it's an issue that is on the rise.

In the Committee on Private Bills the petitioner who brought forward Bill Pr. 1 gave us a brief overview of cybercrime and the reasons which he listed for the province of Alberta to support the establishment of this privately run centre for securing cyberspace. The petitioner talked about the population on the Internet, you know, how many billions of people are on the Internet. Basically, he took the numbers from 2005, and then he extrapolated to 2010. He also talked about Internet usage in Canada, that 64 per cent of Canadian households had at least one member who used the Internet regularly in the year 2003, and that this number has probably grown since then. He also mentioned that 90 per cent or more of Canadian Internet users are between the ages of 18 and 24 years, and in 2005, another statistic, 67 per cent of Canadian adults used the Internet.

He also demonstrated that cybercrime seems to be on the rise, whereas, in fact, physical crime seems to be on the decline. Many reasons could be attributed to why this might be transpiring. Some of it might be explained easily, Mr. Speaker, by the fact that cybercrime is new, or at least it's newer than physical crime. Law enforcement agencies are getting more efficient, and their intelligence and their mechanisms and their tools are getting more sophisticated to catch physical crime or to mitigate its damaging effects, whereas their efforts to curb cybercrime are still in their first steps. He also talked about hacking and denial-of-service attacks, and he talked about terrorism and child porn as some of those examples.

You know, we've even heard of a situation where Russia as a country has used cyberterrorism against other smaller countries, members of the former Soviet Union, for example Moldavia. It's a small country, one of those small nations which separated from the Soviet Union. Russia, itself, brought them to their knees, brought them to a freeze, to a standstill, by targeting their government computers, and they didn't recover till about 36 hours after the attack when they actually resorted to engaging their backup systems and stuff like that.

It could be used on a global scale as well. Are we concerned in Alberta? Yes, you bet. Should we be concerned nationally and internationally? Yes, we should be.

Many of us in this House have received some e-mails and letters from concerned parents who approached all the MLAs in the House and urged us to support Bill Pr. 1. Now, we shouldn't really dismiss this because of the fact that these parents are under the impression that Bill Pr. 1 strengthens laws and toughens penalties for things like Internet child luring and child exploitation, for example. These parents are under the impression that Bill Pr. 1 achieves that. In responding to them, I explained: "Here is the text for the bill. You can read it for yourselves. It only establishes a physical presence, a building where agencies, governments, and individuals even from Alberta, from Canada, from the international community are going to come together to talk about Internet crime, to study it, to research ways to curb it or to reduce it and so on and so forth, but this bill in particular, as it stands, doesn't really toughen laws or make things harder for criminals." They were under the impression that we're doing something to increase penalties, for example, for child luring and child exploitation online and things like this, child pornography, but really the bill doesn't do that.

I also argued both in committee and outside that this should have been a government initiative. I would have much rather seen this brought by the hon. Minister of Justice or the hon. Solicitor General, for example, introduced in the House as a government initiative, as part of a bigger government approach to cybercrime. Now, am I against a private citizen bringing forward an idea like this? No, not necessarily. But, you know, I think a private citizen would have had other opportunities to establish this centre, be it through the Societies Act or the charitable organizations act or whatever mechanisms exist in the statutes.

I also briefly touched on the fact that Interpol operates a high-tech, top-of-the-line centre in Ottawa which basically focuses on things that are being discussed here and that maybe Alberta could have collaborated more with Interpol and, you know, not have the need for a stand-alone, privately run centre to be established in this province.

Now, in deliberations in committee, Mr. Speaker, we also had the opportunity to ask some questions of the petitioner. For the most part we got some answers back, but I'm going to put on the record some of the other questions which I don't feel have been adequately answered. Take, for example, a question of whether, in fact, the petitioner approached the provincial government with this idea prior to introducing it to the Private Bills Committee. The answer was that, yes, some presentations were made to high-level government officials, that the overview of the bill was introduced to them.

One of the remarks in that answer, Mr. Speaker, indicates that the private objectives of Bill Pr. 1 may in the future be combined with public objectives, which I find vague. The petitioner's legal counsel goes on to say that this will only happen when a minister of the Crown, responsible to the Legislature, chooses to do so. Well, why don't they choose ahead of time? Why wait for a private citizen to bring this forward and then choose or not choose to engage this centre in government work?

Another question which was given to the petitioner asked if this centre would duplicate or interfere with some of the work currently being carried on by existing government departments and agencies. Examples were given as in the policing and community safety branch of the Solicitor General and Public Security ministry or the special prosecutions branch, technology and Internet crimes division of Alberta Justice. So we do have the mechanisms and the agencies in-house to handle things like this. You know, the integrated child exploitation unit is another example and so on and so forth. Why not use our own tools and facilities?

The answer which was given back to the committee reads, and I quote: due to cross-jurisdictional issues, limited capacity, and cost it would not be feasible for such a project to be carried on by an existing government department. I think this is a little judgmental, you know, for the petitioner to indicate that, in their opinion, government would not be able to undertake such an initiative. I think that this needs to be looked at more carefully.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Another question which was given to the petitioner was asking about the information that is gathered or stored in the centre and whether, in fact, the government of Alberta would own this information and if fees are going to be charged for access. The answer basically came back saying that information gathered through the CyberPol centre would not be shared except where required by applicable law or treaty. With all due respect to lawyers and members of the legal community this is lawyer talk, and I don't understand what it says. Information is going to be shared as required by applicable law or treaty. The questions were: are you going to charge fees for access, and who owns the information? Those two questions were not answered.

Another question is asking the centre what its reaction is going to be if it receives a subpoena or an order to release information from a court of law in a foreign country, or from a foreign government for that matter. When can the centre say yes, and when can the centre say no? What are the criteria? Again, as in the other question the answer came: information gathered at CyberPol would not be shared except where required by applicable law or treaty.

What about the PATRIOT Act? You know, we've heard about situations like the Maher Arar case where Canadian authorities regretted releasing him to Syrian authorities because of the ill treatment he was subjected to and ended up, in fact, in a lawsuit and a financial settlement to compensate him for the damages that he sustained when he was in prison overseas. So how are they going to react to a subpoena or an order under the PATRIOT Act, for example, or anything similar to it from other governments across the world?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There's another issue, but it's not really that major, Mr. Speaker, with respect to directors and governors receiving remuneration. In my limited experience as an MLA I've come to the conclusion that typically with nonprofit centres and nonprofit agencies, you know, when you have directors or governors, they would be volunteers, for the most part. So, again, it's not really a major thing.

I just find it puzzling that somebody who is hoping to establish something of this magnitude doesn't go through the other avenues but chooses instead to come before the House. What if their objectives change? What if their mandates change? They would have to come back to the House again through the Private Bills Committee and ask for an amendment or ask for changes to their constitution. It could have been much simpler for them and for this House to come through those other avenues which they have available to them.

Mr. Speaker, again, just to emphasize, I would have much rather seen this as a government initiative, part of a bigger piece that this government is serious about Internet crime rather than allowing, you know, private people to come together and do this, even with the promise that it's going to be nonprofit. I'm really interested in hearing why the former Solicitor General is so enthusiastic in his support for this particular idea.

I invite further debate, and I thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am really glad to have the opportunity to speak to Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act. I have had constituents contact me asking me to vote in favour of Bill Pr. 1. They express concerns about our high-tech world. They feel that it is vitally important to increase public safety against high-tech crime. There's a lot of fear. I think some of it, perhaps, is because of ignorance about what is actually the potential of high-tech crime.

At the same time, there's evidence that there's an increase in identity theft, hacking mischief, and child sex predators are a great threat to the citizens of this province. There need to be stronger laws and stiffer penalties for these types of crimes. I am concerned about cybercrime in general. As a parent and a former teacher I am really concerned about the luring and exploitation of children in particular. We need to be clear that Bill Pr. 1 does nothing to toughen penalties or to make laws stronger. What it does is establish an independent liaison centre for intelligence gathering and information storage or sharing but without the law enforcement mandate that I believe should go along with it.

I like the direction and intent of Pr. 1 and congratulate the citizen for bringing this forward, but I really would have liked to see this as part of a cross-ministry government initiative where Justice, Solicitor General, Education, and Children's Services could work together because all areas are concerned with crime in general and certainly with cybercrime. This bill is about intelligence gathering on criminal activity. It would be about individuals who are stealing identity and exploiting children. So I see it as working in conjunction with the RCMP or CSIS or the FBI or CIA or MI6, and this is all regarding, then, the ability of the policing or the law enforcement communities to work together to combat crime throughout the world from a centre. This makes good sense.

It would provide a centre in Alberta that would provide the type of law enforcement and/or law enforcement response or working with law enforcement throughout the world. We all know that our world has gotten smaller over the years partly because of high tech, and it only makes sense that we're looking at steps to be on top by using high tech. Certainly, this is something that we should be discussing. Internet crime is on the rise. Identity theft, financial fraud, child exploitation, and luring, all online, are significant concerns.

The agency resulting from this bill, as I understand it, would have the full weight of the law behind it, but it's still just a private entity attempting to do good. I wonder, as a colleague this afternoon mentioned, if it might be duplicating some of the work that has already been done or that, perhaps, it could interfere because we do have departments and agencies of this government that work in the area.

I have a number of questions too that I haven't found the answers to. One that I don't understand is: will there be fees charged for access, for the release of information? I understand, certainly, that many nonprofit agencies and centres might need the information. I'm wondering if the charge of fees will be based on necessity and merit. Will this become a revenue-generating mechanism because it will be private?

It's important to note that this legislation will not usurp provincial legislation or the Criminal Code of Canada. Those laws are in place. It's the law for the whole country regarding criminal activity, so they can't usurp that authority. That's very important.

It will provide the partnership of law enforcement agencies throughout the world working together regarding child exploitation, identity theft, and all the other issues related to fraud over the Internet. We don't have that kind of centre in Alberta. I know that we have the ICE unit that was formed. I believe there are about 21 officers that work related to Internet child exploitation, and I understand that their backlog is incredible with the amount of investigations that they have to work on. This bill is much bigger than that because it's working with individuals throughout the world that are setting up these sites.

As I said, cybercrime is on the rise. It presents many challenges for law enforcement because it is so new. The extent of the potential for cybercrime is frightening. We must be concerned, and we must act. I think this bill is very important, but as far as I can see, it does not do enough in terms of what the public expects. The individuals getting in touch with me are actually thinking that we're going to be toughening up the laws and that law enforcement, as a result, will better protect us against Internet crime. I'm interested in hearing what others have to say about this.

Again, I certainly do support the intent. I feel that the need is very great. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any comments or questions.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very interested to rise on this bill. It's a visionary bill, and I must commend the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this forward. The nature of cybercrime and cybercriminals is changing constantly as technology changes, and to establish a global centre for securing cyberspace would provide some very welcome ways to try and deal with a huge problem and a growing problem in our society.

I'd like to state some statistics from a study centred at the University of Alberta focusing mainly on the child pornography problem that we see in Internet usage. It looks at a lot of statistics from the U.S. Of those arrested in the U.S. for the possession of child pornography between 2000 and 2001, 83 per cent had images involving children between the ages of six and 12, 39 per cent had images involving children between the ages of three and five, and 19 per cent had images of infants and toddlers under the age of three. That was from a report in 2006 by the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in Virginia entitled Child Pornography Possessors Arrested in Internet-Related Crimes: Findings from the National Juvenile Online Victimization Study.

Another point is that more than 20,000 images of child pornography are posted on the Internet every week. That's from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Another point is that "more babies and toddlers are appearing on the net and the abuse is getting worse. It is more torturous and sadistic than it ever was before. The typical age of children is between ages six and 12, but the profile is getting younger." That's from Professor Max Taylor, Combating Paedophile Information Networks.

On child sexual abuse there's a New Zealand Internal Affairs study that suggests that there's an association between viewing child pornography and committing sexual abuse. That's from New Zealand's Department of Internal Affairs, Internet Traders of Child Pornography: Profiling Research, by Caroline Sullivan in October of 2005 and January 10, 2006. Another point is that Internet pedophiles are increasingly adopting counterintelligence techniques to protect themselves from being traced. That's from the National Criminal Intelligence Service, and that's back in '03.

Another point is that 40 per cent of people charged with child pornography also sexually abuse children, police say, but finding the predators and identifying the victims are daunting tasks. That's from an article in Reuters in 2003. Another point is that 1 in 5 children who used computer chat rooms have been approached over the Internet by pedophiles. That's from Detective Chief Superintendent Keith Ackerman in the Telegraph, UK, in January of 2002.

The statistics go on and on. The quotes go on and on about this increasing and terrible crime. Another point is that 4 per cent of all Internet users in 2005 said that online solicitors asked them for nude or sexually explicit photographs of themselves. That's from the Online Victimization of Youth study in 2006 from the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children. Another is in a survey conducted by The Intelligence Group. Dateline questioned 500 teenagers across the U.S., aged 14 to 18, about their computer habits. When asked if someone they met online had wanted to meet them in person, 58 per cent said yes, and 29 per cent said they've had a scary experience online. That's from the study Most Teens Say They've Met Strangers Online, MSNBC interactive, April 26, 2006.

Another point: 23 per cent of youth were very or extremely upset by exposures to sexual content online. That was K.J. Mitchell, D. Finkelhor, and J. Wolack, Victimization of Youths on the Internet, New York, 2003. Another point is that 31 per cent of 7th to 12th graders have pretended to be older to get onto a website, which can lead to other things.

The statistics, the studies go on and on. Mr. Speaker, this is a tremendous and ongoing problem. I hope this bill can be funded as soon as possible to establish such a site in Alberta. I think it is visionary. I think it is important. I think it is something that we must and should move ahead on. You know, there are people that have been in major stories, even close to this Legislature, being charged with child porn. I think it is something that is necessary for this Legislature to look at, to deal with, and to try and eradicate as much as we can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

head: 4:50 Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 39
Engineering, Geological and Geophysical
Professions Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to first say that I appreciate all of the discussion that we've had on this bill in second reading and also, of course, in committee.

I might note that we have a couple of guests in the gallery. I appreciate that the minister may have wanted to introduce them. Neil Windsor from APEGGA and Barry Cavanaugh from ASET are here to be part of this historic event, and I thank them for coming.

Just to recap very quickly, Mr. Speaker, Bill 39 will reflect a new governance model: one act, two associations to regulate professional engineer, geoscientist, and engineering technologist practice. This model was agreed upon by both of the associations, and of course the proposed changes will continue to ensure the highest standards of public safety are met both by APEGGA and ASET.

Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to move third reading of Bill 39, the Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to respond and thank the hon. member for introducing this bill. This has been waited upon by many, and a lot of work has gone on in the past and in coming up with a memorandum of agreement, and both associations, ASET and APEGGA, have worked together to make this possible.

I don't have anything further to add from my comments during second reading. This model of one act, two associations will indeed better protect the public interest by assuring the competence of engineering and technology professionals across the spectrum of their practices. I would like to wish them all the best in the future as they continue to work together.

This is all about professionalism. As I mentioned in second reading, it's all about moving forward, and I commend them for the focus, especially on the ethics of the professions. It's really important to have an ethics code, and it's a question of providing the discipline, the processes of accountability for the members of the profession, so they can raise their heads high. This is a good day in the life of Alberta and especially for engineers and technologists.

I would support third reading of this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a third time]

Bill 26

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007.

The purpose of Bill 26 is to confirm the use of the minister's guidelines and to ensure the stability and integrity of the property assessment base. The minister's guidelines have been and will continue to be developed in consultation with assessors, municipalities, the taxpayers, and their associations. One important point is that Bill 26 does not take away the right to appeal assessment. There have been a number of challenges to the minister's guidelines, and these challenges are not about the content of the guidelines but merely about how they were put into place.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to express my gratitude for the work of the staff and the time and the effort that they put into this bill. I am, indeed, very grateful.

I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support the passing of Bill 26. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a third time]

Bill 29

Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007.

As mentioned previously, Bill 29 will provide Alberta farmers with access to more sources for leasing farm equipment for their operations. I'd just like to say that I do appreciate the support received from all hon. members and anticipate their continued support at third reading. I'd also like to thank all of those behind the scenes who helped with this bill, and I'd like to thank the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food for giving me the opportunity to carry this important bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. Certainly, Bill 29 is, I think, a step in the right direction. I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for his work on this legislation. Any questions that we did have earlier, he made every effort to provide an answer. I certainly see no reason or concern to hold up this legislation. I would hope that all farmers and farm implement dealers are satisfied with this legislative initiative.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a third time]

Bill 32

Animal Health Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Food I'm delighted to stand up as an expert on this topic and move third reading of Bill 32, Animal Health Act.

The provisions in Bill 32 will allow Alberta to better prepare for an outbreak of highly contagious livestock disease and respond to emergency situations quicker and more effectively to protect animal and human health. During Committee of the Whole review of Bill 32 concern was expressed for the paramouncy over section 17(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. On behalf of the ministry I can assure all hon. members that the bill is appropriately balanced to provide access to information when required to protect public health and also to provide the appropriate level of privacy protection for individual animal owners.

On behalf of the minister of agriculture I move third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, when we look at this legislation, there are some very good reasons for supporting it. Unfortunately, I cannot be satisfied with the explanation as to why we need to override the view of the Privacy Commissioner regarding this legislation. The Privacy Commission was consulted. I appreciate hearing from the minister of agriculture on that. As far as I know, he does not agree with the proposed paramouncy provision in Bill 32. There is this issue of differing legal opinions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. The Ministry of Agriculture and Food believes one thing, and others have a different view.

When you consider this, I am disappointed to say that I cannot support this legislation at this time in third reading. There have been some discussions about changing it, but that's not going to happen. I can see right now where the majority is going to rule.

Whenever you look at the disclosure harmful to personal privacy under section 17(2) and 17(2)(b) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, we have brought this up. We have put our concerns on the table. We have asked why this is necessary. There has not been to date, in my opinion, an adequate explanation as to why we need these paramouncy provisions.

So I'm sorry. There are other parts of this act that are very worth while, but on the record I think this is going to come back to haunt us. I hope it will not come back in some sort of trade sanction with our American neighbours and give R-CALF a reason to promote further restrictions or limitations of our cattle exports to the American market. I just hope we're not walking into something that we will regret, and I sincerely hope for all the ag producers and for this Assembly that I am over the course of time proven wrong.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to speak about Bill 32, the Animal Health Act. The Livestock Diseases Act was created in 1946, and it's therefore outdated. The purpose of Bill 32, the Animal Health Act, is to repeal and replace the Livestock Diseases Act with a more modernized piece of legislation. This act will more appropriately address the issues related to animal and human health that have been discovered in recent years. The idea of this bill is that it will facilitate a more effective and efficient process for dealing with animal health emergencies.

We know that animal health issues have gained national and international attention over the last several years, most notably for Albertans the discovery of BSE, or mad cow disease, in our cattle. The discovery of BSE in Canadian cattle has led to severe trade restrictions that have had an enormous detrimental impact on Alberta's beef industry. Other animal health issues that continue to garner national and international attention include avian flu, chronic wasting disease, et cetera. So we do require a modern piece of legislation that empowers the province to deal effectively with the animal health issues that may have human health or economic trade implications.

As I look at this bill, I'm certainly willing to support it in principle, but I have questions regarding the inclusion of the paramouncy provision over the FOIP Act, section 17(2)(b).

Agriculture and Food . . . believes the proposed paramouncy provision is required to provide an increased degree of assurance to animal owners. Release of information will occur, as required by Section 32 of FOIP, when it is clearly in the public interest to do so.

The Privacy Commissioner was consulted, and he did not agree with the proposed paramouncy provision in Bill 32 being necessary. The Privacy Commissioner does not see the need for the extra secrecy, but due to differing legal interpretations of the FOIP Act, Agriculture and Food insists on hiding information from the public. That's what it looks like to me.

The minister states in a letter dated May 14, 2007, that "Agriculture and Food . . . believes the proposed paramouncy provision is required to provide an increased degree of assurance to animal owners." So what is the effect of this? Why are we doing this? Why do animal owners need an increased degree of assurance? Is it the minister's position that animal owners would hold back information, basically lie, if this provision is not included? Which animal owners has the minister consulted with to make this determination? Has the minister spoken with animal owners who say that they will not share information even though the law requires it? Are there a lot of animal owners in Alberta, in the minister's opinion, that will break the law if they don't have increased assurance in the form of secrecy provisions? I'm wondering who the minister has spoken with specifically.

If this paramouncy provision is, in fact, about protecting animal owners, why is there, then, only a five-year limit on the release of that information? Can the minister tell us why he believes it's necessary to continue with this government's tradition of being secretive, hiding information from Albertans? Can the minister tell us why he is ignoring the Privacy Commissioner? Does the minister believe that the Privacy Commissioner is wrong? Why does the minister need to be secretive? What does the minister hope to hide from Albertans? Can the minister explain what the point of consulting with experts is if we then ignore their advice?

In his letter dated May 14, 2007, the minister states:

The Privacy Commissioner was consulted. He does not agree with the proposed paramouncy provision in Bill 32 being necessary. Because of differing legal interpretations of the [FOIP Act] Agriculture and Food . . . believes the proposed paramouncy provision is required to provide an increased degree of assurance to animal owners.

Can the minister tell us who in the department is interpreting the FOIP Act, demanding that this statute be more secretive than is necessary according to the Privacy Commissioner?

In his letter dated May 14, 2007, the minister states: "Release of information will occur, as required by Section 32 of FOIP, when it is clearly in the public interest to do so." Can the minister tell us who determines whether or not information is clearly in the public interest? Doesn't the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner play some role in that determination? Why does the minister insist on moving backwards in terms of openness and accountability? How can we justify this decision to support a bill that increases the secrecy of this government? This hardly seems to be the idea of openness that we hear so much about.

Another concern that I have is that although this bill's intention is very, very good, I think that these concerns are not being answered. I would like to state publicly, I guess, that I think this intention is great, but because the issues are so important, not only here in Alberta but throughout the world, I think that we must address the issues. But the concerns I have prevent me from supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there others that wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports wish to close on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food?

Mr. Melchin: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a third time]

Bill 33

Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to conclude debate on Bill 33 on behalf of the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and to move third reading.

During Committee of the Whole I was very happy to hear that so many members of this Assembly would support this important piece of legislation. I'm also happy that all members recognize the importance of providing the village of Ferintosh a safe, secure, and long-term water supply by building a regional waterline that would transfer water from the town of Bashaw. I know that the residents of Ferintosh appreciate the support and understanding of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've had quite a discussion on Bill 33 to date in this Assembly. Now, we're allowing another interbasin transfer between the South Saskatchewan River basin and the North Saskatchewan River basin. I understand that this transfer cannot exceed 55 cubic decametres annually. There has been a discussion about the surplus water and what it could or could not be used for. It seems that we are frequently passing these stand-alone bills, and it indicates to me that this is like a canary in a coal mine, that we are not using our water resources prudently. I think this is a warning to all hon. members of this House that we better take our water management seriously, and I think we should do a better job of monitoring our water supply.

You look at the purpose of this bill, and you can understand the predicament that the town of Bashaw and the village of Ferintosh are in, but we need to examine more closely the process of allocation of water. That's why I would support this bill, but we have to recognize what we're doing to our water supplies. I know that this area has seen extensive changes to groundwater. I do not know at this time if that is the result of coal-bed methane development. I suspect not, but coal-bed methane development may be one of the reasons why the aquifer has been depleted.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge passage of this bill, but I will be very disappointed if next year or the year after members of this Assembly are debating similar legislation because this tells me that we have a lot of water management issues, particularly in central Alberta. We have to be better stewards of our most precious resource.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. Normally I would be opposed to interbasin transfers because in a number of circumstances they're interfering with the natural process. But this situation that we're talking about in Bill 33 is not the result of any fault of the citizens of Bashaw or overuse by too much industry or pollution of existing systems, so this transfer of treated water for people I see as necessary. I have great concerns, as does my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, when people all over this province – I'm talking about Stettler, Trochu, Drayton Valley, Ma-Me-O Beach, Nanton, and Ponoka – hundreds of people, turn out to meetings and express concern about how groundwater is being used or abused. There is great concern also in the community of Rosebud because of the unnatural movement of coal-bed methane into the water systems there.

I'm concerned about the effect of clear-cutting on the watershed in the Bow and Elbow and the Bragg Creek, Ghost-Waiparous, Sibbald Flats areas and about the potential EUB approval of exploration on our southeast slopes, where fracking could very much interfere with the town of Nanton's water supply as well as the ranchers and individuals who live in the southeast slope area. The water table is a very fragile circumstance, and we need to take that into greater account.

But because of the immediate need for these people at Bashaw, knowing that it will not be used for anything but drinking water, washing, and day-to-day activities of life rather than industry or irrigation or other developments, I support this bill, and I support the need for aquifer mapping, for baseline testing, for the protection and conservation of water, our most important resource. Growth has to be sustainable, and without that sustainability limits have to be applied. We need careful planning. Any need for interbasin transfers indicates a failure of water management and planning. The province's water strategy should be directed at eliminating the need for such transfers.

A major failure of Alberta Environment is that there's currently insufficient data in Alberta to determine how much water is actually being used each year. There are records kept by Alberta Environment of how much water is allocated to different users from the licensing process, but much less is known about how much of that water is actually being used. It is impossible to create any water conservation plan without knowing how much water we actually have, both surface and groundwater. Lack of data and information on the total supply of groundwater and surface water and the lack of data on the actual water use by all sectors makes it very difficult to make informed decisions.

Lack of information on demand and management are barriers to advancing water conservation. This government has failed to identify a vision that will state future economic development goals and the role of water conservation in achieving those goals. There must be a clear policy directive that identifies whether the goal of the water strategy is to benefit the ecosystem or to enable economic growth and expansion. The lack of a clear management plan for water resources creates this need for interbasin transfers.

Caution must be exercised to ensure that water problems in the future are not always solved by transferring water between basins. This is very poor water management. Most stakeholders agree that interbasin transfers are not a sustainable mechanism for water conservation. I recognize the need for the village of Ferintosh and support this bill, but I am concerned that the practice of interbasin transfers is becoming routine in Alberta. We have to implement better conservation measures so that in the future there is no need for interbasin transfers. We need mandatory watershed management planning for all of our seven major river basins, an inventory of water supplies in the province, and an understanding of how much is being used. We need ongoing monitoring and conservation of water use in all sectors: industrial, commercial, and domestic.

There's a great need here, but also there's a need in the village of Ferintosh. As a result of that, I support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five minutes of questions and answers under Standing Order 29(2)(a) if anybody wishes to participate.

Are there others who wish to participate in the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: I might as well take the opportunity. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this bill was introduced, Bill 33, the Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act, I had a chance to actually drive out to the area just to check it out to see exactly where it was located and what may be some of the, I guess, invisible problems that might occur for a town to be able to supply itself and its growing residents with water. I was pleasantly surprised. I think it's in a great little location. It's in a pocket of rolling hills and that in the midst of Alberta, just north of Stettler. I'm just still kind of surprised because it does look like it does have, on the surface, some adequate water within its basin right there, but I guess in the heart of it it doesn't, to be able to supply for the long term. For the short term perhaps it's able to supply its residents with water, but as with every town and municipality that's thriving and would like to expand, this is the case that's before us. They won't have enough of the supply right now to be able to expand.

I share the concerns, like my colleagues from Edmonton-Mill Woods and Edmonton-Gold Bar, about the interbasin transferring and am sympathetic towards the town's plight with regard to not having it, and it wouldn't have it unless they are able to in fact come before the Legislature and put this bill to allow such transferring. Normally, like I said, I wouldn't support something like that as I think it's occurring far too often, but in this case I would certainly support the interbasin transferring, with this exception: that we do in fact closely monitor ongoing efforts to be able to reduce and reuse as much as possible, especially in towns where it's becoming apparent that it's becoming very much a fragile resource. We continue to say on and on that within the south water is our number one resource or, as the previous Minister of Environment used to call it, blue gold. We recognize that that's going to certainly be a commodity that may at one point be traded back and forth across the border. I know that there are talks on the south side of the border as to being able to transfer this on a large scale as they are running out in the south – that's the Americans – and this is where the abundant supply is. At least that's what we consider it to be: an abundant supply.

I would support the bill, like I said, with some concerns. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: Again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate in the debate?

Does the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose wish to close?

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 30
Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 30, Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007.

The primary purpose of this bill is to facilitate the establishment of the Alberta emergency management agency. Creating the agency is a component of the government's response to the Environmental Protection Commission's recommendations following the CN Rail derailment at Lake Wabamun in 2005. We started building the framework for the agency last year, and this bill will allow us to complete the process. The agency will assume responsibility for provincial emergency management and as the senior agency will undertake a comprehensive all-hazards approach to emergency, disaster, and security issues management. This will lead to better co-ordination as well as preparation for response to and recovery from a wider array of disasters and emergencies.

The agency will include the fire commissioner's office and Emergency Management Alberta, both currently part of Municipal Affairs and Housing. The inclusion of EMA is obvious, and given the critical role that municipal fire departments have as first responders in most emergencies and disasters, we're making the fire commissioner's office and its community-focused approach to risk management one of the pillars of the new agency as well. This move will allow for closer co-ordination and an enhanced profile for fire service needs for training, support, and public education. Reflecting the importance of the agency, Mr. Speaker, the act will see the agency headed by a managing director with direct reporting channels to the minister as well as the Deputy Minister of Executive Council. This will make it easier for rapid decision-making in times of emergency.

The act will also allow for Alberta's summer villages to become full players in preparing for emergencies and disasters. Currently summer villages are not included in the definition of a local authority. This means, for example, that they cannot declare a state of local emergency. This is vital because declaring a state of local emergency provides a local authority with specific powers necessary to resolve an emergency.

The act would further give summer villages the opportunity to enter into a memorandum of understanding with neighbouring municipalities. This would allow for co-operation and assistance if the disaster or emergency is larger than what the summer village can deal with on its own. Summer villages are also currently not eligible for grants that other municipalities receive to enhance their emergency response capabilities. This puts them at a disadvantage when compared to surrounding municipalities, Mr. Speaker, and this doesn't serve the interests and needs of their residents.

This act will also see the name of the act itself changed from the Disaster Services Act to the emergency management act. Renaming the act will bring it more in tune with current terminology and better represent our expanded focus on prevention and mitigation.

Overall, this act will help Alberta live up to its reputation of being at the forefront of emergency management, and I'd ask all members to support this very important piece of legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be supporting this. I know that there are just a couple of minor changes in this. You know what? I think it's important. I think everyone needs to make sure that they're prepared. There needs to be a larger role that the province plays in the development and co-ordination of disaster and emergency plans. Then it's the responsibility of the local authorities. We cannot leave the entire responsibility of responding to disasters exclusively, as it was pointed out, with just municipalities. That's simply not fair. It's not an excuse, but it's just not fair. The province has far, far more resources and thus should play a more central role in developing the plans. This bill would help create that position, and then it has the exclusive mandate to be able to work with the local authorities to assist in the development of the plans and also co-ordinate the overall provincial response for emergencies. These would be good steps because in the case of Wabamun it just showed that the province was not prepared. It was caught off guard, and clearly we're still trying to respond to some of the reports on that.

The authority that now resides with the managing director used to reside with the deputy minister. By transferring the authority to one person with one mandate, it would allow them to have the position to focus on that one task instead of the many tasks that the deputy minister has to do and attend to. So this is a good step. It clearly centralizes that one focus. Ultimately any move to enhance the ability of the government and a local authority to respond to disasters and emergencies is a positive move. While there's still much to do, I think this is a very good move, and I certainly applaud that one.

We just had an awakening early, early in the year with the emergency response bulletin coming over the news about the funnel clouds or the supposed funnel clouds. Now, this certainly was a concern right off the bat, early in June. It shows that, you know, not only do we need to make sure that that system is alert to warn the citizens, but we've got to be able to in fact not only be on guard as a province but provide that service to the municipalities.

When I watched that as it did come over the television, I was a little bit concerned because it looked like the individual who was giving the response was clearly, I guess, rattled. It didn't give me confidence when I was hearing and listening to this person speaking about this. I was looking outside, and it looked like the clouds were definitely going to be bringing us something. The voice was concerned, but the message was mixed. So I think that would certainly be a spot to take on. It was like an April Fool's Day, someone was saying here. I was definitely concerned.

We have high flood warnings throughout the province in various communities that reside around some of the high rivers where the spring runoff could occur. This is certainly where this bill could help the municipalities plan short term as well as long term. We've been talking about the midst of climate change. I think we're at the beginning of it, and we're going to be seeing a series of concerns throughout the years to come with the extreme cold and the temperatures that are bringing all the snow, the spring runoffs, and the rainfalls. I think we're going to be seeing an unprecedented weather change over the next few years, absolutely, so I think that to have this position created to be able to give municipalities and the government more of an opportunity to have co-ordinated services is definitely a plus because we're looking out for the benefit and the well-being of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and voice support for Bill 30, Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007, as introduced earlier. I listened with interest to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore, and I agree with him with respect to that emergency announcement broadcast system that was tested last week when we had that hailstorm and the severe rain throughout the province. One listened to that announcement, and as you're listening to it, you hear the concerned voice of the broadcaster, and you think that there is something severe that is coming your way. Then at the end of the broadcast they said: by the way, there is no emergency. You know, some people had a good laugh, but it really underlined the need for a more co-ordinated and a more thorough approach to how we handle emergencies and also how we communicate emergencies to the citizens of this province. I think communication is probably 50 per cent of emergency response. You know, you need to communicate effectively and quickly with the citizens of the region or the municipality or the province that is likely going to be the most affected.

5:30

A while back we had the Wabamun incident, Mr. Speaker, and it created a lot of interest in how ready and how prepared our province is. We know that different agencies and different ministries, even, have different pieces on how to handle emergencies. We know that Infrastructure and Transportation has its own arm that does that. We have a ministry like the Ministry of Environment which also does that. The Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security has that function under his authority. Different levels of government – federal, municipal, and provincial – also have different agencies, and theoretically and ideally all of them should be talking to each other. They should be connected and, you know, on that hotline for when something happens. The municipality and the province and the federal government and, if need be, an international component should be brought in. All of them should be talking within minutes of that emergency occurring, and the plans have to be in place to handle the emergency and minimize the impact on people, livestock, wildlife, the environment, and so on and so forth.

One can argue that in terms of the Wabamun situation the province didn't appear to be as ready or as prepared as one would have hoped. The Environmental Protection Commission was struck right after to analyze what the province and local authorities needed to do to deal effectively with disasters. One of the key recommendations was the creation of a senior agency that is responsible for an all-hazards approach to emergencies, disasters, and security. This is the role that will be fulfilled by Emergency Management Alberta, which this bill is hoping to establish. Having a dedicated managing director with the authority to drive this commitment is really critical to the success of this agency. As I indicated, this is an agency which I support being established. This is a good step, but we definitely have to ensure that more is done in terms of effectiveness and in terms of swiftness in that response. Disasters and emergencies should be dealt with as quickly as we can, and communication, as I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, is an integral component.

The commission actually issued some recommendations and findings, and they don't only pertain to the Wabamun situation. I think they're to be extrapolated and to be expanded to all other emergencies and crises in this province. One of the recommendations – and I'm reading from the commission's report – says that "the Alberta Government needs to adopt a comprehensive approach that can respond to any emergency, whether caused by nature or man." So that's one. The other one is that "the response to an incident has to be swift. It has to be the right response. It has to be there as long as it takes to deal with the disaster. And it has to be scaled to handle the worst-case scenario."

I'm hoping that this is the direction that this bill is taking, and I am hoping that this body is going to be there. I hope it's like insurance, where you pay into an insurance plan and you hope that you never use it, but in the time when you do need it, you want it to work. This is exactly the same. We hope that these people sit there and are never activated, that they're never invoked, that they're never asked to react but that in those remote and unlikely situations where they need to be activated and invoked, then they would do a good job. Only time will tell.

Other jurisdictions have similar agencies, Mr. Speaker; British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, to name a few. As I mentioned, also the federal government has an arm that is entrusted to deal with emergencies and situations which arise as such. The rationale for this type of dedicated response organization is that Alberta, due to the scope and volume of resource extraction and the subsequent transportation of toxic materials, is in a unique situation. There has to be a mechanism to continue to monitor and to react to and deal with emergencies arising from things like dangerous goods spills, for example, or fires or toxic fumes and things like that.

Mr. Bonko: This has all happened before.

Mr. Elsalhy: That has all happened before, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Decore indicated.

Provincial responsibility is paramount. Implementing plans and procedures for a co-ordinated provincial response is timely, and I commend the sponsor of the bill for introducing this.

Providing co-ordinated assistance and leadership to local authorities engaged in emergency operations. Now, whether in fact it's to deal with individual losses or remedying some of the side effects that individuals are subjected to or, dealing with the bigger picture, if it's a municipality dealing with a big toxic spill, for example, the environment, property, people, and so on are important.

Advising, assisting, and taking over, if there is need, the implementation of local authorities' emergency operations, including evacuation and re-entry. These are areas where I see this new agency being powerful or empowered enough to handle situations as they arise.

The safety and health of workers and citizens involved in emergency situations; you know, making sure that people that we send to react to a local emergency are equipped and that their gear is up to par and that we're not putting them or putting the citizens in that vicinity at any risk.

Assuming direction and control of an emergency at the direction of the responding environmental officer or health officer. If it's a health issue, the health officer is involved. If it's an environmental issue, the environmental officer is involved.

One last thing, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this is the whole issue of emergency funds. You know, we have situations where people apply for emergency assistance. I'm not sure if this agency is going to maybe look at some of those areas or adjudicate some of these requests, but I'm hoping that in the event that they don't and in the event that this agency is not going to handle requests for compensation or assistance, there should be a mechanism so that it's not left up to the minister in charge to make these decisions. People argue sometimes that they are subjective: which ones qualify, how much assistance people qualify for, and so on. We should have, really, criteria in place. I'm hoping that this agency might actually consider these requests or adjudicate these requests.

Mr. Speaker, this is timely, and I urge all my colleagues from this House to support it. I'd listen to more debate if more speakers are interested. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone.

Seeing none, anyone else? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. I rise in support of Bill 30, the Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007. It is important, I think, to bring in line the naming of this service and to bring into being the Alberta emergency management agency.

What I want to speak to specifically is the empowering of summer villages and including summer villages in this act. I have some members of the summer village executive that live in Edmonton-Manning, and I've spoken with them on a number of occasions. Sometimes they feel like they're, you know, a kid brother, a little overlooked and all the rest of it. Ensuring that this level of government has the ability to access funding for disaster services in the same sense as other municipalities, to include them in the act, is important. I applaud this move, and I think it is very important. I support this bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also support Bill 30, the Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007. This is a very important act. I realize that the main outcome of this act is to rename the Disaster Services Act the emergency management act in accordance with the creation of the new department of the Alberta emergency management agency in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

It also creates the position of the managing director, who will have the same authority to administer this act that the deputy minister used to have for the Disaster Services Act. I like the responsibilities here for the managing director, which will be to ensure that local authorities create and maintain effective emergency management plans. The director will work with local authorities to assist them in the development of their plans and to make sure that these plans are responsive and adequate.

It's important to make sure that all of our communities are prepared to respond to disasters and emergencies. I would hope that this role would ensure co-ordination between the province and the municipalities so that disaster plans are clear and that there is the support that's needed to actually fulfill those plans. There needs to be a larger role that the province plays in the development and the co-ordination of disaster and emergency plans. We cannot just leave it to local authorities because it's just beyond their capacity. The province has far more resources and thus could play a more central role in the development of plans. I'm glad to see that consideration and that move because this is a good step, but let's ensure that more is done to ensure quick and efficient response to disasters and emergencies. We must help local authorities develop and maintain response capacity, and we must have a provincial response capacity as well. These have to be integrated.

I know that the Environmental Protection Commission had many recommendations because there has to be a provincial capacity to respond to emergencies such as Wabamun. In order to accomplish this, we must have a provincial capacity that can respond as part of an initial communication structure in an integrated approach. The province should take the lead in all communication efforts along with local authorities, the company involved, and possibly the federal government. Alberta should have 24-hours-a-day, year-round, dedicated emergency response teams, which include trained environmental officers, public health officers available around the clock. This would ensure that there will always be a trained representative of the provincial government to respond immediately to a spill or any other type of possible disaster.

I really do support this bill. I think, though, that if we are truly committed to protecting the environment and public health we must consider incorporating all the recommendations of the commission. We must show leadership and take strong action to protect the public safety, the public health, and welfare of the environment from the devastating possible effects of hazardous releases. We haven't done enough in the past. We've learned, and I think that this is a good step in the right direction.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much. I'd just like to make a couple comments to not only the member opposite who made comments but maybe to a couple of other comments. I think that the hon. member very much understands the focus and the direction of this agency. That is very much not only to encapsulate the government who will work together with different ministries but also to work with municipalities, to work with the fire commission, who will in turn work with the individual fire departments, whether they be voluntary or salaried, but most importantly also to incorporate industry. I think that when we're in a disaster, we need to be in a situation where we are co-ordinated with all of the different elements to make sure that whatever that disaster is it becomes nullified. There are some very good comments that you had made in that focus, and I appreciate them.

I want to say that this agency is under this ministry and not under Environment. I suppose it could be under any other ministry, but it's for ourselves to look at the best umbrella that we could possibly make, and that is with municipalities and with other ministries. It is a co-ordinating position as much as it is anything else as well.

Mrs. Mather: I just want to say thank you for that explanation. I think that makes this bill even better. I'm happy to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to close?

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour and the good work that has been accomplished this afternoon, I move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 5:47 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, June 13, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/06/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature four members of a delegation from our sister province, Heilongjiang. They are Mr. Zhang Chunguang, member of the Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection Committee; Mr. Pan Zhong, who is the deputy director general of the Heilongjiang department of science; Mr. Zhao Yiqiang, who is the division director of the Heilongjiang Department of Education; and Ms Liu Hongmei, who is the deputy division director, Europe and America division, Heilongjiang Foreign Affairs Office, and an alumna, I might add, of the University of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, this is the 26th anniversary of the very strong sister province relationship between Alberta and Heilongjiang. There are more than 108,000 Albertans of Chinese descent in our province, and it makes that bond very, very strong. We have exchanges in a number of areas in postsecondary and research and technology, and we have several co-operative agreements. We are following up with both offices and officials from both jurisdictions to ensure that those agreements generate win-wins for both jurisdictions. This delegation is in Alberta for only a short time, but it is building and strengthening that relationship. I would ask that the delegation please rise in your gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce 57 grade 5 students from a school in my constituency, Webber Academy. Last week the Fraser Institute released its findings on schools, and while that should not alone be a judge of a school's performance, it is one of the things that should be considered relative to quality of education. I must say that Webber Academy came out tied for first place in the Fraser Institute rankings, and I'm pleased to introduce today three teachers that are accompanying the students – Dan Mondaca, Jason Ash, Janet Adamson – and a parent, Elaine Butler. They've just arrived on the bus from Calgary, and I'd ask them to all please stand and receive the recognition of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce some of the brightest and best young students in my constituency and probably all of Alberta. We're joined today by a group of 18 students from the Cornerstone Christian Academy in Kingman, which is located in the east end of my constituency. They're seated in the public gallery, and they're led today by their teacher, Mr. Rob Bowick. I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to rise and introduce two very special people in my life. First would be my former legislative assistant who is back visiting, Cheryl Koss, and also my current leg. assistant, Berenika Kalista. If they would please rise and enjoy the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two groups of visitors today. First of all, from my constituency are Bill and Beryl Bale. They're here today from Lacombe. Bill moved to Canada from England in 1959 and has spent the last 40 years in Lacombe. Joining them are two daughters: Hazel Chastell and her husband from Lincolnshire, England, and Susan Bale of Leeds, England. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

It's also my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two individuals from Lacombe that are also seated in the members' gallery. Sandra Scott and Shannon Sears are here today from Lacombe. Hon. members should know that Sandra also happens to be the daughter of the hon. minister of agriculture. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you two employees of Children's Services. Jamie Reid is a Grant MacEwan student and is currently doing her practicum in our communications office while she studies for her public relations diploma. Bobbi Klettke joins us from the Capital health region and brings her years of experience to Children's Services communications, working with our prevention of family violence and bullying program. Bobbi will join an already successful program that has seen great strides in bringing family violence and bullying the attention it needs to ensure that Alberta's children and families live in safe and caring communities. I ask Jamie and Bobbi to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly an honour on behalf of the minister responsible for the personnel administration office to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature seven individuals from PAO who are here as part of the public service orientation tour. I would ask Kari Hamilton, Christina Steenberg, Rob Acker, Travis Skriver, Paul Oss, Jason Pomedli, and Dustin Lafleur to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of caring, hard-working, and courageous social workers. They are Lori Sigurdson, Papiya Das, Grace Elliott, Roxanne Dohms, Kathaleen Quinn, Marilyn Jeske, Deb Johansson, and Kathryn Watters. I'd ask that they rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. I think the first group is here, and that is nine adult high school equivalency students who are currently attending CIT college in my constituency. They are accompanied today by their instructor, Joel Heidebrecht. I would ask them to please rise if they're in either gallery and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The second introduction that I have, Mr. Speaker, is part of my continuing celebration of Edmonton being named the cultural capital of Canada for 2007. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two wonderful, absolutely fabulous arts programmers. I'll start with Tony Luppino. Tony, if you would please rise. Tony, of course, is the executive director of the Art Gallery of Alberta. He is largely responsible for the new building that we will be able to enjoy, and it's on track to open in 2009. I know that he wants me to thank all the different levels of government that supported that building plus the private donors and the corporations. Very exciting exhibits are still going on at Enterprise Square, which is the old Hudson's Bay building. It's a super collaboration with the University of Alberta and shows what our city can do. Thank you, Tony.

Joining Tony today is Catherine Crowston, who is the chief curator and deputy director. It's her job to make sure that the programming continues. I think we have her to thank for exhibits like China Sensation, and of course many of you would have been able to take in the free-for-all that happened with all of the professional and amateur artists that came out to the closing show. They've also done things like the Alberta Biennial of Contemporary Art, and currently running is Capital Modern: Edmonton Architecture and Urban Design 1940-1969. Please join me in welcoming these two wonderful additions to our cultural capital.

My third introduction today is also involved in the visual arts, and that is Todd Janes. Todd, if you would rise, please. I've known Todd for an awfully long time. I'm delighted to be able to introduce him in the Assembly. He has been the executive director of Latitude 53 Contemporary Visual Culture for over 12 years now. He is an artist, a curator, and a cultural worker who has worked very hard to raise the profile of contemporary art. I should note that next year is Latitude 53's 35th anniversary, making it one of Canada's oldest artist-run centres and a space that's exhibited thousands of artists in many different disciplines. Welcome, Todd, and thank you very much for coming to the Alberta Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly Mr. Merle Schnee. Mr. Schnee is a lifelong resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar. He is a retired firefighter, and he is very active in politics and a keen observer of all events that are public. He is in the public gallery, and I would now ask him to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 13 individuals who are the pride of my constituency. They have organized hundreds and hundreds of people, including me, to form the Munnky Krunchers, Canada's top fundraising team. They have raised 40,000-plus dollars for people suffering from MS. They have done tremendous efforts to raise the funds. The government should double their efforts to help scientists and researchers to find the cure for this disease. The group is seated in the public gallery. They are Donna Romanuik, Tanys Romanuik, Pat Semrok, Sammy Semrok, Ryan Kew, Alfred Nobert, Denise Nobert, Linda Craig, Olivia Craig, Emily Craig, Patrick Aube, Darlene Treder, Chantell Barone. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the brilliant, creative, hard-working staff of the Edmonton-Glenora constituency office: Jan Millson, Peter Marriott, C.D. Saint, and Craig Miller. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two guests who are joining us here today: Krista Mitton and Richard MacKay, who are both working with the Mira facilitation agency. Both of them came to the House before, and they even participated in a rally which took place on the steps of the Legislature six or seven weeks ago. They're also here to witness me continuing to submit petitions with respect to the people who work with people with disabilities. I would like to encourage them to continue talking to us, and I would invite them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Samuel Baron. Samuel grew up in Vegreville, Alberta, and has been a musician in the local Edmonton music scene for the last four years. He's been a student for the past two years at Grant MacEwan College and will be pursuing his bachelor of arts in political science at the U of A this fall. Samuel has a great interest in progressive politics, peace, and social justice. He has also volunteered in my constituency office and is looking forward to becoming more involved in provincial politics. I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three wonderful constituents of mine who reside in Shepherd's Care in Kensington. They are Mary Coupland, Shirley Murrie, and Jo Eggen. Jo Eggen came to Canada as a British war veteran 57 years ago after volunteering for military service since 1941. Jo is a world traveller, enjoying travelling even today. She has lived in Kensington for 45 years and remains a Calder resident to this day. She also has a lifetime membership at the Calder Seniors Drop-In Centre. Shirley Murrie lived in Kensington for over 40 years as well. She's very active in volunteering for the Calder Seniors Drop-In Centre and for the Castle Downs United church. Shirley is an active social committee member and devotes many hours in her volunteer duties. Mary originally comes from Ireland but is a long-time resident of Edmonton. Mary resides at Shepherd's Care as well, where she spends time visiting with her son and family. I would now ask for all three of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and to all colleagues in the Assembly Todd Lorentz. Todd was born and raised in a farming community in central Alberta and after high school worked for eight years in the oil and gas industry. He entered the University of Alberta in '64, where he earned a bachelor of arts degree with honours in philosophy, a master of arts degree in religious studies, and received many prestigious awards and scholarships for his work in eastern philosophy and quantum physics.

In 2005 Todd had the opportunity to speak in Nairobi, Kenya on global poverty. His subsequent visit to several slums in the Nairobi area brought him face to face with the victims of poverty, and that experience provided the inspiration behind the development of an organization to help alleviate the suffering of children called One Child's Village: A Global Orphans Foundation. He is its current managing director and will be travelling next week to establish the foundation's first orphanage in Kenya. Best wishes on that project, Todd. Todd is sitting in the far corner here in the public gallery. I would ask him to now please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

World Elder Abuse Awareness Day

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Friday, June 15, is the second annual World Elder Abuse Awareness Day, and communities across Alberta, Canada, and the world are coming together to raise awareness of elder abuse. You may have noticed that members of the House are wearing purple ribbons today. I'd like to thank the members for wearing these ribbons and taking a small but significant stand in demonstrating their support for ending Alberta elder abuse and neglect.

It is estimated that up to 10 per cent of older adults experience some form of abuse, and about 90 per cent of that is financial abuse. Seniors in these situations are often reluctant to talk about abuse; however, we can do something about it. We can watch for the signs of elder abuse and neglect, including confusion, depression or anxiety, unexplained injuries, changes in hygiene, or seeming fearful around certain people. We can also report suspected elder abuse to authorities and encourage seniors to get help when they need it. There is help available.

The government of Alberta is working with partners in the community to assist seniors and raise awareness of elder abuse. From 24-hour help lines and shelters to awareness posters and information we are working together to help vulnerable seniors. Government is always working to address abuse or safety concerns for adults in publicly funded care facilities.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act legally requires anyone who suspects abuse to report it to the toll-free reporting lines or to local police authorities. Individually each of us has a role to play. We can watch for signs of elder abuse or neglect of the seniors we know, whether they are our neighbours, our friends, customers, or members of our family, and we can report abuse when we suspect it.

This World Elder Abuse Awareness Day we can continue to spread the message that elder abuse will not be tolerated by Albertans. Together we can make a difference in the lives of seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

1:20 Surface Rights Compensation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to urge the government to take action on an issue of urgent importance to many rural Albertans, that being the issue of surface rights compensation. The current system has not been reviewed for over 20 years, and landowners are still being compensated on an outdated formula using farm commodity prices to pay them for land they're effectively being forced to relinquish for up to 50 years for an industrial purpose. That's correct. You heard it right. Landowners are forced to settle for a price based on farm commodity prices for land being used for industrial purposes.

Even on the open market farmland is traded at market value rates, which have more than doubled in price over the last eight years. That has nothing to do with productivity, but that's the market. However, this has no bearing on surface rights compensation rates.

Since this issue was last reviewed, farmland has also doubled production as summer fallow practices have ceased in most areas of the province. The use of more fertilizers, chemicals, and improved varieties have allowed this to happen. Yet when an energy company comes to negotiate a deal, none of these variables are considered by the Surface Rights Board or the EUB.

Mr. Speaker, we do need development of our natural resources, but we also need to treat rural Albertans fairly. Those who have their land criss-crossed with pipelines and electricity transmission lines are receiving little to nothing in annual compensation for the inconvenience of these forced developments on their property. These developments greatly restrict their future use, the market value, and the enjoyment of their land. Fair compensation would result in costing the end-use customer of the product pennies per month, yet there seems to be a reluctance to deal with this issue.

I'm not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the perception of the EUB and the Surface Rights Board by farmers is that of being totally biased in favour of the energy companies, and that perception will continue until a total review of this issue is done. So let's get on with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Sandra German

Mr. Louheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize an individual who goes sight unseen but is pivotal in helping others see what they cannot hear. Sandra German is a broadcast captioner and real-time translation provider based in Cold Lake, transcribing events and television programming in order that the deaf and hard of hearing can visually read what they cannot hear.

Real-time captioning is not uncommon. For some time closed-captioning has been available on television. Captioning is becoming more widely used at many large-scale events and conferences, both for the hard of hearing and for better comprehension by the general public.

Sandra has been a pioneer in the field of real-time captioning. She has spent the last 18 years as a real-time translation provider and started doing broadcast captioning six years ago. Real-time captioning requires great concentration and skill, and with her years of experience Sandra types 300 words per minute. In the course of her day she captions numerous television programs and provides real-time translation for universities such as UCLA, University of Florida, and McGill. Sandra is able to do captioning from her home in Cold Lake due in part to the availability of the SuperNet, which allows her to make the connection to events around the globe.

Sandra's work is yet another Alberta success story. She is one of the very few people in this country who can teach others the trade. Her work in this field is moving the use of captioning into new areas such as for students learning English as a Second Language. Most importantly, her work is making this province a more accessible place. For that we are very grateful, and Sandra should be commended.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Social Workers

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Social work was one of three traditional occupations for women, after nursing and teaching. It was women, including Alberta's Famous Five, who created the first social infrastructure that helped to turn a frontier society into a community, a house into a home.

Thirty-eight years ago the Social Credit government of Harry Strom renamed our public welfare department the department of social development. This was part of a proactive approach to social issues that included setting up preventative social services, or PSS, committees and offices in each region and municipality.

At that time few public servants in the department were social workers by orientation. Most had previously worked as police officers, ministers, teachers, and nurses. The emphasis inherited from public welfare days was not on serving people as much as dealing with problems, pushing paper, and enforcing policy. A friend of mine who served a few months in the department in 1970 was told: "You're doing too much social work. You're not here to be an advocate for the client but an administrator for the government to tell the client what policy will permit."

Today our official approach is a client-centred one. We hire real social workers, but we don't give them the resources or backing to do the job they trained for. In a society that puts business at the top of the food chain, social work is seen by many as something of an embarrassment. The social workers we hire bounce between putting out brush fires and conceptual models developed by a layer of middle management.

Every day we see stickers urging us to support our troops. Our social workers also deserve that kind of support. If the world had committed and properly trained social workers in areas of need, we would have less need to be sending troops to deal with failed societies. To quote a sticker in a daycare centre: we'll know our values will have changed when every child gets the budgeted funds she needs and the military has to hold a bake sale to buy a bomb.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Low-carbon Fuel

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to draw my hon. colleagues' attention to the fact that, yes, Alberta may not run out of oil soon, having the second-largest oil reserve in the world, but also highlight the possibility that we may actually run out of markets in which to sell this commodity. The world will move on and leave Alberta behind. The greatest market for Alberta oil is the United States. However, it is clear how the language and tone changed from two or three years ago when Canada was highlighted as being next door to the U.S., as being stable and friendly, producing reliable and affordable oil to now being called one of the worst polluters on the planet, to being pointed at as a culprit in worsening America's addiction to fossil fuel.

In his 2006 state of the union address President Bush announced that "America is addicted to oil," and he promised to change that. In an article published yesterday in the Financial Post, there was a quote from Mike Hudema, an Albertan who is now the director of the San Francisco-based Freedom from Oil Coalition. Mr. Hudema says that oil from the tar sands, unlike even conventional oil, is a lot dirtier.

People all over the world, Mr. Speaker, are starting to realize the threat to the planet and that action needs to be taken to preserve the environment. Governments and individuals of all political stripes are coming together in the fight against climate change. Take California's governor, Arnold Schwarzenegger, a Republican who went from an environmental menace with his three gas-guzzling, exhaust-spewing Hummers to an environmental messiah using his celebrity status and political might to reduce reliance on dirty fuels and cut oil imports from places like Alberta. He was in Canada last week signing agreements committing Ontario and British Columbia to adhere to California's new low carbon fuel standard, which will cut the use of petroleum products from sources known to cause high levels of greenhouse gas emissions, sources like Alberta.

Quebec, and Manitoba, perhaps other provinces as well, and at least 12 U.S. states are expected to join the California standard, thus shrinking the market for the fast-growing Alberta oil industry. Is Alberta going to join? Will we be the last province? Is ours the only government that is in denial or that is resistant to change?

There is even an agency in the U.S., Mr. Speaker, called the Natural Resources Defense Council, which labels its 2006 annual report Moving America Beyond Oil.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A mortgage, a personal debt, unfunded liability: is there a difference? I don't think so. A debt is a debt; a liability is a liability. Fancy bookkeeping doesn't change the reality of the situation. Ask shareholders of Enron, WorldCom, Nortel, or Bre-X.

A story may help here. You owe $25,000 on personal credit and $4,000 to a friend. Let's just say he's a teacher. You also have a leaky roof on your home from a hailstorm and no insurance to cover the cost of repair. The first thing you do is you go to the bank and discuss repayments. They agree to a 25-year plan that works for everyone. However, they will not allow you to fix your roof. You say to yourself: it doesn't rain that often. You agree with the bank that they'll okay all expenditures and will get all of your profits.

Luckily, your business takes off, and you have the ability to pay off the big debt early. You celebrate 100 years in business, and you have a mortgage-burning party to which you invite your teacher friend. Then you go on a spending spree and hire new management and spend a lot of time golfing.

In the meantime, it has been raining. You haven't increased or accelerated your payments to your friend. You are content with the deal. He was generous when he made it. He was helping make sure your business didn't go under. Your friend is getting worried, though. He sees your lifestyle as flamboyant and riotous. You tell him how great things are, but he is concerned about your spending and whether his payments will keep coming. He begins to feel a pinch in his lifestyle and asks if you could please pay off your debt. You say that you're doing okay and ignore him. You'll pay according to the 50-year agreement you made with him.

Mr. Speaker, this government does not have a sustainable budget. Spending continues to rise with a fast lifestyle of fine dining and exclusive resorts. We are not receiving good value for our tax dollars. With our surplus top priority should be to pay off the government's portion of the teachers' unfunded pension liability. We must also address the estimated $60 billion unfunded liability that we have to the Canada pension plan. It is way past time to pay off the $4 billion debt to the teachers and opt out of CPP and create our own Alberta pension plan.

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Calgary Concerns

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residents of Calgary, including those in Calgary-Elbow, are frustrated that their voices are not being heard in this government. Like other Albertans they're still waiting for a comprehensive solution to the affordable housing crisis, one that works. Funding for renters is inadequate, and the legislation is full of loopholes. Of course, we're all still waiting for the Treasury Board president's famous website that's supposed to scare gouging landlords. My question is to the Premier. What is the Premier prepared to tell the residents of Calgary, including renters in Calgary-Elbow, who know that this government's affordable housing plan is not working? When can we expect the rest of his plan?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the plan is working. Of $285 million for affordable housing for the province, $63 million is going directly to Calgary in the first year. The other day the mayor, taking a suggestion from what we had talked about, is now moving with city council, looking at how they can provide land for affordable housing. That is one issue that we've got to get our heads around: getting enough land for affordable housing. So the plan is moving.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Expanding the LRT system is another priority for Calgarians. It's critical to managing growth and, of course, to reducing greenhouse gas emissions, but to build it, you need a commitment for sustainable, long-term funding. Calgarians know that the Premier promised one thing during his leadership race and has delivered something quite different. To the Premier: when will Calgary have the funding assurances in place that will enable the expansion of the LRT system to move ahead?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I had promised $1.4 billion for municipalities, and we delivered on that promise. The full $1.4 billion will be in the 2010-11 budget. We said that it would be there for 10 years. We may review it, you know, in the middle of those 10 years, depending on the growth in the economy. It's difficult to predict the kind of growth that may occur and the revenues that flow. But the $1.4 billion is there. I promised it, and it's there.

Dr. Taft: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is developing a bad habit of lowering expectations rather than meeting them. The latest example is the backtracking on the promise of new postsecondary spaces. Calgary desperately needs more postsecondary spaces, and Mount Royal College is prepared to deliver, but this government has not given Mount Royal the support required to meet the needs of Calgarians. Again to the Premier: if Mount Royal College's applications for new bachelor's degree programs in arts, sciences, justice studies, and business are approved, will the Premier commit to funding them and to funding them at the level they need?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister is reviewing where spaces will be added. In fact, yesterday's comments from the University of Lethbridge and the University of Calgary were that they're agreeing with the minister in terms of the direction taken and adding spaces where they're required, so it's further dialogue, planning with the postsecondary deliverers.

Now, with respect to Mount Royal there is a plan in place, and the minister may want to speak further to it.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times in this House, we are in very close consultation with all of our postsecondaries on their role, their responsibility, and their mandate within the framework of Campus Alberta. For the first time that, I think, has been discussed, there is a pathway for Mount Royal to achieve their objectives.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Capital Region Municipal Planning

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals' Bill 211, Planning for the Future of Communities Act, accomplished the very same thing as the Premier's capital region growth management plan announced yesterday, yet in Bill 211 debates the minister of the Treasury Board stated that mandatory regional planning is "code for forced amalgamation." The Member for Rocky Mountain House stated that it's imperative that "we support each municipality in its own endeavours." To the Premier. A minister and a former minister spoke harshly against regional planning. Does the Premier support their statements, or are they both just wrong?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what, you know, the member is bringing forward. All I know is that it's very clear that we're moving quickly by getting all of the 24 municipalities together, focusing on a growth management plan for the capital region. It's going to take into account not only the physical infrastructure but the social infrastructure. I'm talking about policing, ambulance services, provision of services like water and sewer, waste management, and also looking at a governance model once we've collated all this information. If we don't do it, we are at risk of losing a considerable amount of investment. Predicted investment is about $39 billion. If we don't move very positively with leadership, we may lose tremendous investment in the province.

Mr. Bonko: It's taken a long time to get to this point. Bill 211 and the capital region growth management plan both create long-term growth management plans for the region. They both establish regional boards. They both have provincial representation. They both include a land-use strategy, and they both create regional growth plans. The government cannot deny – cannot deny – the similarity. To the Premier: why did your government vote against Bill 211 when they both accomplish the very same thing?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, it's a private member's bill. You know, he's been in the House a few years and still doesn't understand the difference.

Very clearly, all 24 municipalities are onside. They're working towards one common goal. The other thing, which is very important here, is that this may be a model that we can use, perhaps share with other municipalities in the province of Alberta in terms of working together, planning towards much more effective delivery of public services. That's where the savings are, and that's where we can reduce a lot of the tax costs to local taxpayers.

Mr. Bonko: There's no legislative basis for the government to guarantee that regional planning will get things done. Despite the Premier saying that the province will have the partners, there's no mechanism to do this. The Premier does not have a legislative leg to stand on. To the Premier. On affordable housing the best solution your government could come up with to protect renters was a website listing bad landlords to shame them, not exactly a stroke of genius here. Is this Premier going to have the same tactic to force the capital region to come up with a plan if they can't agree: put their names on a website?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one thing I will tell you is that we're not going to use the same kind of strategy as the Liberals and try to hammer the municipalities. We're going to work with them. At the end of the day we said: look, we'll come up with a governance model that's going to be fair. I talked to most of the leaders. They agree that they will come to that governance model. Part of that model is already in the municipal sustainability report.

We have consensus. We're moving forward. We're going to bring this to a close in January of 2008. We'll have all the relevant information, and then we'll be prepared next spring. If we have to change legislation or amend legislation, we'll have all that information with the support of the municipalities, and I would then ask for the support of the opposition.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Safety of Human Services Workers

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta health and social service workers in the human services sector are 12 times more likely to be the victims of workplace violence than workers in traditional job sectors. Too often front-line workers in the Department of Children's Services are punched, grabbed, pushed, and verbally threatened by their clients. Casework overloads caused by staff shortages and increasing poverty issues increase worker risk. While the department has protocols for reacting to an episode of violence, little is done to prevent attacks. To the Minister of Children's Services: when was the last time your staff conducted a province-wide audit of the implementation of the occupational health and safety code in the Department of Children's Services, and what were the results?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of areas in there to address. The very first thing I want to say is that I agree with your member's statement that our social workers deserve our support and also to say to the House that I take this role as Minister of Children's Services – and I know that you would agree – very seriously. I see that my number one role is to ensure that this government is placing as much effort into and value on our social infrastructure as our physical infrastructure, and I can tell you that that is the case. I can also tell you that we value the professionals who are servicing that social infrastructure. In fact, I can say that I'm very proud that most of the initiatives that I have been able to announce since the budget have been focused on valuing and respecting our staff.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What little preventative safety measures and procedures exist in the Department of Children's Services are piecemeal, inadequate, and inconsistent between regions. For example, Children's Services sets no provincial standard on the number of hours and frequency of staff safety and violence prevention training. There are also no standards for workplace security measures like plexiglass barriers, panic buttons, for the location of visitation rooms, or for the safety of human services workers working alone after hours. To the Minister of Children's Services: when will your department develop clear and consistent workplace violence prevention standards that apply to all provincial and contracted social service workers province-wide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second thing I'd like to address is actually the comment about resources. I can tell you that I think that the Children's Services employees do a fabulous job in this province taking care of the interests of children and families. I can tell you that just this week alone I've had the opportunity of visiting staff in three different sites. When it does come to resources, I do think – and I know that you've also been taking a look at this – the casework practice model that we have started to implement in 13 sites across the province, preparing for a rollout, will make a significant difference and improvement on workload issues in this province.

Mrs. Mather: Last year, following the tragic death of social worker Boni Frederick, the American state of Kentucky implemented a new piece of legislation called Boni's bill. Among other things, this legislation included new standards for the creation of secure client visitation centres, provisions for social worker access to criminal records with one-hour turnaround time, and mandatory staff safety training twice a year. Also, recognizing the widespread impact of worker burnout on health and safety, the state hired an additional 100 workers. To the Minister of Children's Services. Alberta, too, has had its share of human service worker assaults and fatalities, yet little has changed. Has your department looked at these measures, and if so, why hasn't it implemented them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, there are a couple of questions there. A couple of things: if there are any particular instances that you know about, because I know that you're good at following up, if you'd like to share the information with me, I'll do due diligence as well. What I can tell you is that safety of staff is of utmost importance to us.

In Children's Services we do have a provincial occupational health and safety committee. It is their job, with representation from management and employee representatives, to recommend solutions that do address the kinds of situations that you're talking about. I understand that the policies and guidelines are on the website. Like I say, I'll take a look at the Hansard and follow up with some information, but if you want to give me more details on specifics, I'll follow up with that as well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Election Finances

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has admitted that soliciting donations from the Beaver waste management commission was unethical. The Liberals did not get any unethical money from the commission, but it was not for lack of trying. We have two parties in this province, the Liberals and the Conservatives, who appear to engage in unethical fundraising. Clearly, we need some legislation to protect Albertans from these two parties. Will the Premier finally do the right thing and introduce comprehensive changes to election finance rules in Alberta to make these types of unethical donations illegal?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, a number of times I rose in the House to say that our government's plan is to introduce legislation. We want to consult with the two leaders to build good legislation. This is more focused on legislation tied to the campaign fundraising for leadership causes. You know, I don't know what the other parties have in mind, but if we do this together, we would have good legislation in place, and we would avoid this kind of situation. It will be very clear-cut.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, these are not exceptions to an otherwise properly functioning set of election finance rules. It's just not the case. With the Liberals taking $103,650 from big oil and gas donors last year and the Tories taking $314,550, it's no wonder both parties have been soft-pedaling the need for royalty reform. Why won't the Premier commit right now to cleaning up Alberta politics and get big money out of politics and limit donations to individual citizens?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we've come a long way this session in terms of opening up this Legislature to greater democracy, more openness, more transparency. Quite frankly, it came with the support of the opposition parties, and I thank them for that. We've got more to do, and we'll definitely move in that direction, again, in partnership with the two. We have the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2007, that's going to be proceeding through the House and lifted, you know, for an all-party review, which to me is an important piece of legislation. There will be other legislation coming through. I want to work together with the other two parties to ensure that we have the best legislation in place.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we saw how transparent the government really was when they got that report from the Affordable Housing Task Force and kept it secret until they made all their decisions.

The province of Manitoba and the federal government have already limited political donations to individuals, and I would say that democracy is doing just fine in the province of Manitoba. There's a basic democratic principle here. The financial support of our political process should depend on individual citizens, not corporations or unions or municipalities or even waste-water commissions, Mr. Speaker. When will this government follow Manitoba's lead on this matter and eliminate big money from politics?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I thought I just heard from the hon. member no acceptance of any money coming from unions. I'm quite sure he's going to bring that forward when it comes to discussion in this House in terms of the regulations with the proposed legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his questions a few seconds ago the Member for Edmonton-Decore clearly shows how clueless he is relative to regional co-operation and how he doesn't mind certain capital residential regions subsidizing the others. I'd love to see him explain his position in front of Mayor Mandel.

Mr. Speaker, the capital region integrated growth management plan is a monumental accord that was signed between the municipalities. I would like to ask the Premier: how will the entire capital region, all residents of the capital region benefit from this plan, which I understand makes all the mayors happy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of components, of course, to the value of the plan to the citizens; first of all, co-ordinated planning, and it's not only for transportation but for waste water, sewer treatment, all of those particular areas that municipalities have a common share in. Secondly, how do we ensure the social side, the social costs like policing, the social needs of the various communities? How will they be affected with this growth? How can we co-ordinate those services, reduce the costs? But the other is of course leading to environment. I believe we can reduce the footprint, certainly, on the environment by working together with all the municipalities. That's part of the action plan and a benefit to every constituent in the area.

Mr. Lukaszuk: My first and last supplemental to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Maybe he can explain to the Member for Edmonton-Decore, who would rather blow out a candle to prove to us that it's dark out there, what we can do as legislators, including the Member for Edmonton-Decore, to make sure that this plan works, works well for all Edmontonians and works well for the entire capital region.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we have had consultation with municipalities. Municipalities and this government very much believe that we need to work together as far as regionalization, as far as working together as regions. I will be meeting with the municipalities as well as an implementation team consisting of the deputy ministers and a project manager and the municipalities and municipal leaders. Industry and the federal government will be at this meeting. It will take a concentrated and a co-ordinated approach to make this happen, and I think that all leaders are committed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Education Funding

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, another day, another school board forced to make really difficult decisions. Last night the Edmonton public school board announced the impacts of inadequate operational funding on their school district. My questions are to the Minister of Education. Does the minister accept that this year's funding shortfalls are undoing the progress that school boards like Edmonton public have made on class sizes? Will this pattern continue across the province in Alberta schools?

1:50

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think I read the same newspaper article that the hon. member read. What I happened to see was that the Edmonton public school board balanced their budget for this year. Here's what I also happened to read. The chairman of the public school board said: we had to use some creative, innovative thinking to balance our budget. I would suggest that maybe that's what we need, some creative, innovative thinking, which we sure aren't going to get from that group over there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you. I'm insulted, Mr. Speaker, terribly.

Edmonton public's budget only contains enough room to expand the teacher compensation package by 2 per cent in this year's negotiations. I will remind the minister that the cost of living in Edmonton increased by almost 6 per cent last year, and therefore a 2 per cent increase will reduce the quality of life for teachers in this province. Does the minister acknowledge that forcing teachers to fight every few years to maintain their standard of living has a negative impact on attracting young people to the profession of teaching? Yes or no, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely incredible that this hon. member would stand in this Legislature and falsely accuse me several times of combining and not separating negotiations from the unfunded liability issue. Now this hon. member wants me to get involved in negotiations. I will remind the hon. member that negotiations will take place over the coming months between the school districts and the locals of the ATA. The government will work with the ATA to solve the unfunded pension liability.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton public did not receive an increase in their maintenance budget this year. This means they will have to continue to defer required maintenance on many of their schools. Deferred maintenance today equals an unnecessary need for new schools tomorrow. To the Minister of Education. We have been down this path before. Calgary and Edmonton need 66 new schools today because your government neglected school infrastructure in the '90s. How can you ensure that we aren't repeating the same mistakes? Do you have a plan, Mr. Minister? Tell us.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think I heard him say that they received no additional funding for maintenance. That's absolutely incorrect, so I'm just assuming that everything else he's saying is equally incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Edmonton Ring Road

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Keeping goods and services on the move and helping people get to their places of work, learning, or leisure and then back to their homes as safely and efficiently as possible requires a sophisticated, well-planned roadway system. It also requires a great deal of co-operation among cities and municipalities as well as several strategic financial and economic partnerships. Population growth and economic growth in and around Edmonton are absolutely phenomenal, and the need for ring roads, overpasses, and so on is absolutely critical. My questions are for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When will your ministry and our municipal partners see the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday ring road completed and at what cost?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the excellent question. The Anthony Henday Drive southeast is a great project that is progressing normally and is scheduled to open this fall. It'll be part of the Edmonton ring road. I'd like to add that the Anthony Henday Drive southeast project is also a very successful P3 project. The total cost over three years for construction and maintenance, which will be like a 30-year warranty, is $494 million total. It will make traffic around Edmonton run more smoothly and efficiently and is also a very good deal for the Alberta taxpayer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is indeed great news, particularly for my constituency because it borders that particular leg. I'd also like to know something about the roadway connections elsewhere. What are your plans, Mr. Minister, for the northern sections of this capital ring road system here in our area?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the 2001 functional planning study for the north ring road is being updated to reflect current traffic projections and provide a plan for 30 years and beyond. When it's complete, the northern leg of the ring road will stretch from the western edge of Edmonton all the way across the top of the city, then across the North Saskatchewan River and link to the Yellowhead near Sherwood Park. The timing for the design or construction of the north ring road is not set, but the 2005 goal was to have it all completed within 10 years.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, it appears some good news is coming.

Yesterday's announcement of good news, in fact, with reference to the terms of reference for the capital region integrated growth management plan is extremely important and is very well supported by all 24 capital region municipalities, as we've just heard. I'd like the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation, however, to please explain how these plans relate to the overall transportation plan for the Industrial Heartland in our area, where about $46 billion worth of construction projects are already planned or under way.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the plans for the ring road fit very well with the overall transportation plans for the Industrial Heartland area because transportation of goods will be done more efficiently around the capital region. The Industrial Heartland area will definitely benefit from the construction of the ring road around Edmonton because of a better access to transportation routes. My overall objective is to make sure that all the areas around Edmonton take advantage of the benefits of the ring road now and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River will follow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who I'll now call upon.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, remember the rule. If you choose to wear an identifiable piece of clothing, logos and what have you, you must provide one to every member of the Assembly. So by tomorrow would you ensure that every member has the right-fitting tee-shirt, compliments of the hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: What's your size, Mr. Speaker?

Arts Funding

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta needs to get serious about diversifying the economy. This government must move away from dependence on the oil industry and take advantage of the opportunities in other sectors, including book publishers and the film industry. They aren't receiving the support they need. The province has already lost six publishers, and only 30 per cent of the remaining publishers received provincial funding last year. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: why isn't the minister doing more to support this very important sector?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly over the last couple of months I've had an opportunity to meet with the book publishers, and I've assured them that through the AFA, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, we would continue to provide them with support. As part of the overall review that we're doing this year on the AFA, we will include the comments that the hon. member has indicated to me, and we're doing that in light of seeing if we can provide them additional support.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Failure to plan for the future has resulted in an extremely high cost of living and in shortages of workers in all areas. Because of this, Alberta is having a hard time remaining competitive with other jurisdictions when it comes to attracting filmmakers. Has the minister considered removing caps on incentives offered to filmmakers?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, we are wanting to also grow the film industry in the province of Alberta. Again, I have met with that particular industry. We did some very specialized funding last year where we gave an additional $12 million to support the film industry. We are presently looking at a couple of pilot projects that we think might come forward here in the very, very short while. They're pilot projects that we're anticipating to be successful and will give us direction as to how we might fund the film industry in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The Alberta Liberals recognize the value of arts and the culture sector. Will the minister adopt the Alberta Liberal plan and immediately increase funding to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts so that cultural industries are able to remain competitive and thrive in Alberta?

2:00

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite will know that in our budget we did increase the funding to the arts community in the province of Alberta. I need to indicate that Albertans and this particular government really value the arts community. We recognize that they are a very important and integral part of the quality of life for all Albertans. We will move forward to supporting that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Critics of forest management and forest harvesting in Kananaskis Country continue to downplay the mountain pine beetle threat to the region. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why not do as the critics request and leave the infestations to manage themselves as they say was done to good effect during an earlier beetle attack in Waterton national park?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of visiting Waterton national park on June 2, and I inspected the pine beetle killed area there. You can see that in the absence of any intervention there has been virtually no reforestation: certainly no lodgepole pine, a few spruce, but mostly scrub willow. The ground is covered with deadfall, which of course will stunt further growth and also put wildlife at great risk. The Waterton solution may work for the national parks, given their priorities, but it's certainly not what Albertans want.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. My first supplemental, again to the same minister: is this just theory or can he point to specific examples that suggest that the current strategy really will result in healthier forests in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By complete coincidence, I can point to a specific example. On that same trip to Waterton I had an up-close view of the West Castle Valley, where pine beetle also occurred in the 1960s. We inspected some blocks that were salvage harvest there, and I'm happy to report that they have been reforested, replanted, and are doing very well. We also had the opportunity further down the valley to see some commercial harvest that was from the 1960s, and it is now prime 40-foot lodgepole pine. As I've said before, if we truly want healthy forest in Alberta, doing nothing is not an option.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, thank you to the minister, and I'm really impressed that he has specific examples that he can just whip out.

My second supplemental to the same minister: how will Alberta's approach to mountain pine beetle differ from what was done in Waterton?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, national parks and the province of Alberta have different management priorities and different management techniques. We manage our forested lands for multiple uses.

Parks Canada has different priorities and has a policy of minimal intervention. What works for them is fine. But, as I've explained in here, what hasn't worked in Waterton, particularly the lack of reforestation after pine beetle, simply is not acceptable in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Speaker's Ruling

Interjections by a Member

The Speaker: But first of all, does the hon. member have any idea what this might be? Can he see this? This is a piece of paper. The first time today that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's voice was heard over everybody else's, I wrote down two. I was going to interject and say: look, let's have some more decorum. Then I went to three and I crossed it off; then I went to four and I crossed it off; then I went to five and I crossed it off; then I went to six and I crossed it off; then seven and I crossed it off; eight and I crossed it off; nine and I crossed it off; 10 and I crossed it off; 11 and I crossed it off; and 12 and I crossed it off. Thirteen times today. If the hon. member has any more energy, use it now with your questions, okay?

Commercial Vehicle Inspection

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At random roadside vehicle inspections the commercial trucking industry fails at a rate of approximately 35 per cent. Commercial truck operators are legislated to have mechanical inspections completed on their equipment annually. School buses at random roadside inspections achieve a pass rate of approximately 95 per cent. School bus operators are required to submit their vehicles to mandatory mechanical inspections every six months. At an additional cost of approximately $1.5 million annually commercial vehicle inspection program administration and audit duties have been contracted to Transtrue Vehicle Safety. This upstart firm is reportedly unable to meet the program and audit requirements due to personnel shortages. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What guarantee do Albertans have that the Ministry of Infrastructure and Transportation and Transtrue are meeting their obligations in CVIP goals?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, this ministry is very committed to traffic safety, as I've been saying all along here. We're always working on innovative things and implementing more things in traffic safety. Just this week I was out at the Leduc safety inspection station. We're using a new image camera that actually can take a picture of a truck going by. It can check their weights, it can check whether their wheel bearings are overheating, it can check whether their brakes are even working, which ones are coming on or not, just by driving by the thermal image camera. That's the type of innovation that we're working on all the time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My unbridled enthusiasm today comes from having a fourth amigo in Calgary.

Although CVIP-related work has been contracted to Transtrue Vehicle Safety, fully capable people remain in the employ of Alberta Infrastructure and Transportation. Will the government commit to an investigation to determine why the CVIP is not administered utilizing government employees still working for the ministry? What's the point of this Transtrue outfit, that can't deliver?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of different private contractors that work through Infrastructure and Transportation on all different aspects of the ministry. We believe that all of our partnerships work great with us together, and whenever they have problems, we work with them to try and fix those problems.

On to his amigo problems: I just wonder. He needs every amigo he can get, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that the minister is aware of the Transtrue section within his ministry, but I'd look forward to his evaluation of them.

Will the government commit to improving the commercial vehicle inspection program, CVIP, by requiring all Alberta-based commercial vehicles to receive and pass mechanical inspections every six months?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, everyone knows how busy we are in this province. We are always looking at innovative ways and better ways to make sure that we have the safest highways in the country. We are always looking at better ways to make sure that everybody is getting their vehicles inspected, and we will continue doing so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This Education minister is robbing our students to please the fiscal hawks. Because of this budgeting, classrooms in Edmonton public schools will be packed to capacity next year, and Edmonton Catholic will have less than half the money they need for maintenance. By starving the education budget, this minister is forcing school boards to think creatively and innovatively, I suppose: should we cut instruction, or should we cut our infrastructure? To the Premier I would ask: what has provoked the government to do this to the province's education system? Why are you putting the bottom line ahead of our children's learning?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education is very important to this government and to all Albertans. In fact, if you look at the last 10 years, the funding to schools has increased by over 86 per cent, and in that same period inflation has increased less than 30 per cent, maybe 28 per cent. So we've more than kept up with inflation.

We have more things in store in terms of the government dealing with the teachers' unfunded liability. We're dealing with that as a separate issue. We want to settle that as quickly as possible. We're always working with teachers and school boards towards improving the quality of education in this province.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks. Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, you have to pay the price of what public education costs in this province. Certainly, a 3 per cent operational budget when we have upwards of 5 to 6 per cent inflation: the two just don't match up. We're losing a lot of good recommendations from the Learning Commission. School boards are having to choose between well-maintained classrooms and proper numbers of teachers. I would like to ask the Minister of Education, please. Perhaps he has some advice for innovative and creative thinking for school trustees. Should they let their class sizes grow, or should they just let their schools fall apart?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've stated on several occasions in this House that when the Learning Commission made its recommendation regarding class sizes, they recommended that we implement it over a period of five years. Well, this is the third year, and we have fully funded class size initiatives. The hon. member doesn't have any idea what he's talking about when he says we're not funding class sizes. Half a billion dollars in three years.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, this budget will result in choices. Maybe schools will try to cut back so that they can maintain their class size, but it will be at the expense of something else. There's simply not enough money to be in keeping with the balance, the cost of providing public education today in this province. So I ask the minister once more. Perhaps I'm not sure what he's up to here, but certainly it feels like it's a razing of K to 12 education. What are we going to do afterwards? Are we going to have another Learning Commission to try to put it back together again, are we going to rely on private schools to come and fill up the gap, or are we going to end up going back to having emergency funding in the fall like we had to do last year?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was a comment made by the hon. member at the beginning of his first question about starvation. I would suggest that there are many departments in this government that would gladly accept a $5.6 billion starvation budget. The hon. member continues to talk about underfunding. The Premier has just mentioned some numbers that – I don't know if the hon. member can't add or what his problem is, but in the last 10 years education funding to school boards has gone up 86 per cent. Eighty-six per cent. They love to tie numbers to inflation. In the same time inflation has gone up 28 per cent. I suggest we do the mathematics.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Railway Safety

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents as well as diverse organizations such as the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association, coal companies, and the Alberta Forest Products Association have expressed concerns regarding the level of service provided by CN in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Can he tell this Assembly what can be done to remediate this situation?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague that there is room for improvement when it comes to CN's level of service in Alberta. I have written to the federal minister of transport to make him aware of Alberta's concerns about all rail service in western Canada. Alberta is a major source of railway shipments, with a total volume of 47 million tonnes, which is 20 per cent of all shipments originating in Canada. These CN service issues include inadequate car supply, lack of timely train service, and the recent strike at CN. That said, I understand that the newly introduced Bill C-44 will address most of Alberta's concerns regarding CN's level of service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Can the minister provide more details about the immediate action that can take place to help ensure CN provides the level of service that Alberta industry has the right to expect?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill C-44, that amends the Canada Transportation Act, will address most of this province's concerns. The intent is to clarify and strengthen the act's current provisions that protect rail shippers from market power by railways. I would also like to remind the hon. member and this Assembly that railways are a federal jurisdiction, which limits the province's influence. That said, my department is currently reviewing the new legislation to make sure that it improves on the situation in Alberta. We will also conduct formal public consultation with our stakeholders regarding this new legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. The American government has recently introduced a piece of legislation that would address railroad competitiveness and service improvements. Is this type of legislation something that the Alberta government should be looking at?

Mr. Ouellette: As I was saying before, Mr. Speaker, our goal is to ensure that goods and products can move effectively and efficiently for the benefit of the industry and Albertans in general. But, again, railways are under federal jurisdiction. My department is aware of the new proposed legislation, which is called the Railroad Competition and Service Improvement Act. I have instructed my staff to review this proposed legislation to see if there are any improvements or aspects of the legislation that the province could provide as input to the federal government. The objective is to make sure that Albertans get the best benefits from the railway industry.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Disorder

Ms Pastoor: Mr. Speaker, to receive government support services, an adult with fetal alcohol syndrome disorder, commonly known as FASD, must fall below a specific IQ level. However, this support system does not take into account adults with FASD who may be above the IQ level but lack basic functioning ability or for safety reasons, theirs and society's, require support. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. Will this government commit to reviewing available supports to ensure that these adults with FASD don't fall through the cracks?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, absolutely correct. When we designed programs for persons with developmental disabilities, they were very much designed to help a certain classification of individuals, and they don't always encompass all forms of disability, FASD being one of them. In that respect we're pleased to be working very closely with Children's Services so that we can look at how we address those needs. They are ones, in particular, that don't fall under persons with development disabilities but are a group of people for whom we are very concerned about providing the right level of service.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that. We've also heard from experts that treatment facilities for addictions require more training to be able to meet the needs of the FASD clients. Again to the same minister: will the minister consult with the FASD experts and addiction agencies to develop appropriate programs that are flexible and tailored to meet the individual needs of Albertans with FASD once they turn 18?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, we do actually, as I mentioned in my last comment, work very closely with Children's Services, who actually provides the lead role on behalf of a number of departments. These cross a number of issues like health from when they are children from one to 18 and certainly to becoming adults. So all of our departments are actively engaged on this issue to ensure that we consult with those other groups that you've mentioned, make sure that we find out what are the right services that should be provided at the right time to the right person in the right place, and we'll continue to do just that.

Ms Pastoor: Recently the Minister of Children's Services announced that $4 million would be awarded for fetal alcohol spectrum disorder networks but has given no indication as to how or where the money will be allocated. To the Minister of Children's Services: given that the ministry recognizes that FASD is a lifelong disability, how much of this money will go towards supporting adults with FASD, and who decides the distribution of these dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you very much. I can tell you that in the next several weeks we'll have more information forthcoming. What I did announce, when I announced the additional $4 million added on to the $6 million that we currently spend on FASD, is that we will be establishing seven FASD service networks, and they will be responsible for providing access to very targeted prevention programs, diagnostic and assessment services, and also offering advocacy and support across the lifespan for those with FASD and for their caregivers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Budget Consultation

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government's budget has been criticized for increasing spending too much, not lowering taxes enough, not providing enough funding for municipalities. Several of my constituents are concerned about the government's saving policy in light of the province's prosperity. To the Minister of Finance: what are you doing to ensure that Alberta's priorities and my constituents' concerns are considered as the government begins planning for the next budget?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in my mandate letter, which I received on becoming Minister of Finance, was the mandate to do a prebudget consultation. Indeed, what I am very pleased to announce today is that we have launched a website, which is at www.budgetconsultation.alberta.ca, which will allow each and every Albertan the access, the ability to put in their thoughts about next year's budget. Despite the fact that we're not voting on the budget until tomorrow, work has already begun to ensure that next year's budget is going to be just as good and just as exciting as this year's.

Mr. Johnson: Well, I'm pleased to hear that the government is asking for input from Albertans for the next budget. Can you assure Albertans that their responses will be considered as you develop the government's next budget and not just to satisfy the demands of your mandate letter?

Dr. Oberg: Yes, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. That's one assurance I can definitely give. We're looking to hear what all Albertans have to say. Not only have we put it on the web, on the Internet, but we also have a toll-free line at 310-4455. Those people who do not have access to a computer can call up and receive the budget consultation document. Our intent is to use this information very much in doing the next budget.

Mr. Johnson: A final question. What plans, then, do you have for the results once the consultation is completed?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, given the compressed timelines that we have for this upcoming budget, with the budget now fixed at February 14, we're going to utilize this consultation, these results by around the end of August, the first part of September as we start to get into the finalization of our budget. They will first go to our cabinet policy committee, and that information will be made available to those committee members. It will then go on to Treasury Board and subsequently to caucus and will be put in the budget and the budget speech. This is going to be more consultation than any budget has ever had in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 82 questions and responses.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions today. The first one has 123 signatures, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government . . . to:

1. Ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector, regardless of whether these workers are employed by government or community-based or private providers;
2. Ensure these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive with other sectors . . .
3. Improve employees' access to professional development opportunities . . . and
4. Introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

The second one has 260 signatures, Mr. Speaker, and it reads:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and myself to table a petition with 83 signatures on it. The petition notes the Conservatives' continued refusal to protect Alberta families from rent gouging and urges the government to immediately introduce temporary rent guidelines. This brings the total signatures on this petition to 443.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge there are no Written Questions or Motions for Returns on the Order Paper; therefore, no notice should be required.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise and table the package that was given out this morning at the Alberta mental health research partnership program launch, a very successful launch of a program of mental health research that will be provided. I was very pleased to see that and pleased to see this program go forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of a letter from Bertha Clendenning. Bertha has been hit with a $150 rent increase despite the state of disrepair her building is in. She's asking what the government will do about the situation.

I have a second tabling. On behalf of the leader of the NDP I table copies of a letter from Robert McLeod. Robert is a former journalist with CFRN. He is receiving a rent increase of 15 per cent. He's urging this government to introduce rent increase guidelines like most of Canada's other provinces.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of correspondence from a constituent, Nicole Braseth, who's noting that her rent will only go up by $200 if she signs a one-year lease. If not, it's going to go up by $400 a month. She would love to get a mortgage and buy a house of her own, but as a university graduate with a student loan she's required to carry as a result of this government's policy, that isn't a possibility. She notes that Saskatchewan is starting to look good.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a petition with 20 signatures urging the government to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I'm pleased to table five copies of the annual report, 2005-2006.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture responses to questions raised by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on May 30 and 31, 2007, in the Department of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture 2007-08 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness a response to Written Question 9, asked for by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on May 7, 2007.

On behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security pursuant to the Horse Racing Alberta Act the Horse Racing Alberta 2006 annual report.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we will call the committee to order.

Bill 43 Appropriation Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to briefly address the Appropriation Act, 2007. This is a really big budget: over $30 billion under the expense and equipment/inventory purchases line. I like to do my own analysis of things, and with a great deal of help from my assistant Bartek – well, actually, he did the review of revenue and expense changes over the years that I've been in the Legislature. I thought it might be interesting to others to hear some of the changes.

In 1993 our revenue was $15.4 billion. This year we've forecasted over $35 billion. Over that period of time revenue has had some really wild fluctuations, but on average over that period of time it has grown by 6.27 per cent per year. Expenses, on the other hand, went from about $16.7 billion in 1993 to about $33.1 billion this year or, put another way, an average expenditure increase between 1993 and 2007 of 4.47 per cent. Inside that number is one number that stands out particularly dramatically, and that is health care. In 1993 spending on health care was approximately $4 billion per year, and this year it's over $12 billion, or a 300 per cent increase. Interestingly enough, I'm not sure that on a day-to-day basis the issues of health care that people worried about in 1993 are any different from the issues they worry about today: mostly wait time issues and hope that new drugs will get coverage under the provincial system.

In addition to health care concerns in 1993 people were also worried about keeping their homes. For those that don't remember, we had an unemployment rate of close to 12 per cent at that time. One of the biggest issues of the day was personal and corporate bankruptcies. We were $28 billion in debt and had a deficit in 1992 of $3.5 billion. We had very high provincial taxes, not just the initial tax rate, Mr. Chairman, but also at least two additional taxes stacked on top, commonly known as surtaxes on high-income earners. It is no wonder that people were leaving our province.

I experienced the boom in the late '70s and the early '80s, when the price of everything went up, and the federal Liberals at that time brought in wage and price controls on a Canada-wide basis. Inflation was running high, interest rates were high, taxes were high, and wages were literally frozen. We had rent controls which froze rents at a high level.

It took years for rent and interest rates to come down despite the increasing rise in unemployment and vacancy rates, that hit everyone hard. There were entire office buildings in both Edmonton and Calgary that were sitting empty, not to mention all the empty homes that were owned by the Alberta Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It took years for those foreclosed and empty homes to be sold and at no small cost to the taxpayers for government intervention in the marketplace. By the time all of the addition was done, there was about $3 billion in losses for Albertans. There was no new construction for almost a decade. That's how long it took for us to dig our way out of a marketplace intervention by both the federal and provincial governments.

One of today's biggest issues is rent increases, not to mention the rise in the cost of housing. I know that everyone would like us to be able to just fix this, but frequently the cure is worse than the illness. According to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, rental vacancy rates are the lowest in Alberta and British Columbia due to strong population growth in both provinces. The average rental vacancy rate in Canada's 35 major centres was 2.8 per cent in April. The lowest rates in April 2007 were in Calgary at .5 per cent, then Abbotsford at .6, Kelowna at .7, and Victoria at .8. All of the major centres in B.C. posted a vacancy rate lower than 1 per cent.

The highest average monthly rents for two-bedroom apartments in Canada's major centres were in Toronto at $1,073. It was $1,051 in Vancouver, $1,037 in Calgary. One exception to the big-city rule was Fort McMurray, and it was the highest in the country at $1,681. It's interesting to note that at the end of April, as opposed to the beginning of April, vacancies went up to 1.8 per cent, and that's no doubt due to the universities and colleges both ending their semesters in Edmonton and Calgary.

In British Columbia when house prices went up like they are going up here now, the pressure to not have houses with basement suites for rent was reversed. All of a sudden people needed to be able to rent out basement suites to help them make their mortgage payments. I believe that the same situation is actually occurring in Alberta and that residents of major centres in Alberta should be pressuring their municipal governments not to ban basement suites but to allow people to renovate and rent out units, a situation that I hope will change soon for the benefit of renters, with more suites available, but also for homeowners finding their mortgage payments a bit of a struggle with the upswing in housing prices.

Another interesting note is that of the 229,000 housing starts between May 2006 and May 2007 in Canada, 46,300 of them were here in Alberta, more than double what it would normally be for our population. One of the innovative things that the British Columbia government has done recently is to buy up some older hotel properties, and they're doing some minor renovations to them and using the hotel rooms to help people who have a problem finding a home or even a bed on a short-term basis. I wonder if there is merit, perhaps, in a Super 8 concept, that municipal, provincial, and federal governments working together on a short-term project idea could alleviate some of the stress that people are under with a short-term rental stay. I admire the people who built the Super 8 motels. They are prolific and seem to have one design, and they build it fast. I think it's an idea worth looking at.

Another interesting statistic is that Albertans have the highest percentage of home ownership in Canada. The average across the country is about 67 per cent, but in Alberta it's over 75. We also have the highest weekly wages in the country at $825 per week, about $70 more than British Columbia, $100 more per week than Quebec, and $200 more than Prince Edward Island. Combine that with the lowest overall taxes in the country, and it makes a little more sense why so many people are moving here. I'm sure it is also why retail sales continue to go up here more than other places, with a year-over-year increase this past year of 11 per cent. While I know that people are feeling pressured right now with rising costs, I also know that most people are pretty happy to be here.

The Conference Board of Canada is forecasting an overall growth rate of 4.1 per cent for Alberta this year, compared to 2.7 for Canada. I hope that we'll all keep an eye on the dollar because if it hits par with the American dollar, I think that there will be major problems in our country, particularly in Ontario. The rising dollar is a wake-up call to everyone to improve their productivity, something many manufacturers in Canada didn't worry about when the dollar was trading at 70 cents. Truthfully, as Canadians we are not very competitive as to where our productivity should be. However, as Albertans we have much to be proud of as Alberta has, by any measure, the most productive workforce in the country.

I think our budget is a reflection of the growth in our province, and I believe that we have tried to address many of the issues created by such a vibrant economy. There is still and, I'm sure, always will be a little bit of fear inside of me of a repeat of the decline that we went through following the imposition of the national energy program. I saw what can happen, and I hope we guard against anything like that happening again.

I think we need to be careful not to get too far ahead of ourselves on program spending. I believe it is time for a thorough review of program line spending to ensure that money is being allocated to the highest priorities. I for one do not believe that the taxpayers of the province can afford to do everything for everyone all of the time. We need to constantly be reviewing programs. When a new idea comes along, I firmly believe that an old one must drop off if we are to keep things in balance.

I do support economic diversification. I think that value-added for agriculture, forestry, and oil and gas is essential. I also support commercialization of technology here in the province. I think, further, that we need to look at using our tax policy to ensure that some of those things get done. A tax credit, possibly, for a family looking after an aging relative, or a tax credit concept for renovating a basement to accommodate a renter, flow-through shares for mining technology, commercialization of technology: these are things that a provincial government can look at, and I really hope that we take the time to do so.

My last comments, Mr. Chairman, would be about the performance measures that we are using. While some of them are very good, I think we missed the point on some to do with health care or education, just as an example. I think Albertans should be able to understand, if we are spending an additional billion dollars on health care, what they are actually getting for it. Will more hips and knees be done, or will we be only paying everyone more? I think it's very sad that statistics about health care are so far out of date, particularly in light of all of the money being spent on computer systems for the electronic health records. How will we ever get to some kind of outcome management of the system if we don't know what we are doing on an annual and rapid basis?

For education I think the dropout rate is something that is important to Albertans. We all seem to know that thousands of young people could not access the University of Calgary last year, but I would hazard a guess that few, if any, know how many kids have dropped out of school at the high school level. I believe that outcome measurements do matter. While we may well indeed have one of the best performance measurement systems in North America, as is evidenced by the Auditor General's comments, I honestly think that it speaks more about the lack of performance measures other provinces or states have rather than how good ours are. But that's just me, Mr. Chairman. I think that when you spend $30 billion, you really should have a better idea of what you've accomplished with it.

Like I said, it's a really big budget, with no end in sight to the pressures that continue to build. But if I had to choose, Mr. Chairman, about going back to 1993 and deal with all the problems that we had then versus what we're dealing with now, I would pick today every day and twice on Sunday.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to put a few comments on the record in regard to Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, which is our budget and outlines a fairly large expenditure. I was very interested to hear the historical vignette that the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere put on the record. Indeed, the first year I was here, in 1997, I think the budget was $17 billion, and now we're looking at considerably more than that. So it's been an interesting time.

Since I mostly concentrated my earlier remarks on the area of Health and Wellness, for which I am the shadow minister, I'd like to take this opportunity to talk about some of the issues in the budget that were there or weren't there that are affecting more directly my constituents in Edmonton-Centre or are flowing from correspondence that I've had from people asking me to raise certain issues or wondering why something can't happen.

Having said that, the very first issue I have to raise is around medical error. I've spoken a couple of times to an individual out of Calgary who raises a really good point in that we're not really learning from our medical mistakes, our medical errors, because they are surrounded so much by the shadow of liability, probably stemming from the litigiousness of our neighbours to the south and what's happened with their health industry and the amount of lawsuits that they have to deal with there and, therefore, sometimes the extreme measures that they go to to try and insulate themselves from that.

But here, I mean, we can cast our minds back. There was, I think, a ruling just the other day on an individual that died from acute appendicitis in a Calgary hospital. That mirrors the Motta case from several years ago. We've had a couple of other terrible tragedies in the medical field that I think everyone truly feels really awful about and would like to see not happen, but we're not really operating with a process right now that allows for a really good, in-depth study without laying any blame. The example that's been raised with me a couple of times now is the air travel industry. They adopted, I guess when they first started out, a no-fault system with air disasters so that it wasn't about laying blame or finding fault; it was about getting to the bottom of what had gone wrong so that they could make the industry safer. I think that that is an area that we need to look to if we could. I certainly think that's still possible.

I mean, certainly, we get pushed into making choices because of our proximity to the United States, but in this case I would prefer to see us take a different route and to be able to study those medical errors or medical mistakes or adverse effects, whatever terminology you want to use, to try and figure out what went wrong and how we can prevent it and make the system better rather than worrying so much about somebody being able to sue somebody else because the basis of that is really a punishment effort in order to have people not do it again. The other way of doing it is to say: let's figure out what went wrong here to make sure that we can correct ourselves and never do it again. So two different ways of doing it, you know, trying to achieve the same end result. I would argue that the punishment route is not really getting us the answers.

The second issue that I would like to talk about. I had raised in the debate for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture the funding of the Winspear Centre and the inequities that are created there by the government's support for the two Jubilee auditoria, placing the Winspear in a position of, essentially, unfair competition because they receive no funding whatsoever for the centre. Now, immediately people will say: "Oh, that's not right, you know. The Edmonton Symphony gets money." That's true, but the Edmonton Symphony is not the Winspear Centre. They're two completely separate organizations. Although one of them certainly uses and has office space in the other, they are separate organizations. I think the government – I hope inadvertently – has created an unlevel playing field here, that I've raised a couple of times in trying to get it addressed.

I'm aware now that there's an additional complication in that situation in that I think the Winspear had been working on an arrangement to apply for a CIP grant and then was recently contacted and redirected that that grant had been suspended or that process had been suspended and would they please now apply under this new facilities program that the government has come up with in this budget. Well, the fact of the matter is that that's going to result in about a $217,000 difference for the Winspear Centre, and I would like to see that difference made up.

So there is an issue here that needs to be addressed in that that level playing field needs to be achieved. I can't say restored because I don't know that it was ever there, but it needs to be achieved. There needs to be some sort of funding agreement in place that will address the Winspear because I can't see the government taking away the support for the auditoria. That's the other way to try and achieve that. But if you've got other brilliant ideas, I'm glad to hear them. Essentially, you know, we have to have a level playing field here, and we cannot disadvantage one of our not-for-profits and, frankly, our best musical space in the province because the government can't figure this out. There are enough brains there. I'm sure they can do it.

The second situation is the one that's been created by asking the Winspear's application to be moved from the CIP to this new facility program and the resulting loss in eligibility. I would propose to the minister that that difference be made up from the other initiatives fund that is at the discretion of, I suppose, the Treasury Board at this point in time. It used to be the minister of gaming. Of course, there's no limit on the amount of money that can come out of that fund. There's no application process. There are no criteria for it. It's entirely at the discretion of the minister, and I would argue that the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture should be pursuing that money to make up the difference for the Winspear Centre.

The next thing I'd like to talk about is around privacy. Increasingly I'm clipping articles out of the paper where protection of people's personal information has gone awry. Ironically, the fail point in all of this is human deliberation, not human error but human deliberation, in that someone decides that they are going to misbehave or use the system in a way that they've been told they shouldn't be using the system for, and at that point no amount of safeguards that are in place is going to make this better. A part of that, of course, is the amount of information that the government is now holding on us and collecting on us. I argue that I think the best set-up for this that I've seen is in the Health Information Act, in which it argues that, you know, the least amount of information should be taken in all cases and that it should be the least invasive information. Absolutely true, but we don't follow that very much.

I was contacted by an individual out of Calgary raising concerns around the Calgary health region, that they have recently contracted out a portion of their human resource department to an offshoot of Telus, the Telus solutions outsourcing or something akin to that name. Essentially, this is, you know, well, obviously, human resources looking after recruiting individuals but then also setting them up with various benefit programs. So that's a lot of very personal information that's being held there. It's financial information. It's personal information, next of kin, medical information. Just about anything you could want to know about anybody is held by that department. So it is causing this individual some concern that we now have a corporation that's been contracted with all of this information.

It seems to be a new field that Telus has expanded into, and perhaps they offered the Calgary health region some sort of a deal or something to get the contract. I'm sure it was a surprise to many individuals to find out that their personal employment and health information was now held by a private company, and they had not consented to it, nor were they particularly informed about it. Perhaps that's an area that should be looked at by the Privacy Commissioner.

I think it is an issue. It's an issue for every single government department. I don't want to see this costing us money, and by that I mean lawsuits. But I think it will cost us money in other areas if either people start to catch on and start to refuse to give us personal information to work with or if it starts to cost us money in other ways. If the systems start to fail us, then that will be equally grievous.

The next issue was brought to my attention by an advocate who had sent me a copy of a letter that was directed to the Solicitor General in January in which she noted that the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act was to be coming into effect. Her point was that she believes that the money that's received through the fine program there would be better put into action going directly to the sex trade workers to help them with recovery and healing rather than – I think it just goes into the province's general revenue. This individual has continued to work on this – this is Sharron Nelson – and I think has been in correspondence with the Solicitor General about this issue.

It's an interesting point because I also met several months ago with Kate Quinn's group out of Edmonton. I'm not going to remember what the initials stand for. It's the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton, I think it is, PAAFE, an excellent group. Now, they get their funding from the John School, but they're also very limited in the money that they're getting and were meeting with me to look for other possible sources of funding.

It is a frustration when we've got a community-based group that's doing an excellent job, that is of great value to the government, and they're out there struggling for funding. That's not to say that the government should fund every single, you know, group that's out there. I'm not saying that, and don't try and put those words in my mouth. But I think this is a group that has proven their worth and has done particularly fine work around the issue of street prostitution. Certainly, these women have immense respect from the police.

They have immense respect from the sex trade workers. I think they've approached with great creativity the whole issue of Johns and how by using education as a tool they can help reduce the effect on our communities.

So I would ask the government and particularly the Solicitor General, since I've got him sitting here, to look at some innovative ways of assisting in the core funding of this organization. The only funding they really get at this point is through running the John School and from the fees there. I'd like to see a better, more reliable source of funding for them because certainly for the work that they're doing, they should have a larger budget to do it.

Okay. The next issue. Rent. There's been a lot said in this spring sitting of 2007 about the rent issue. We've raised dozens of different issues around it from the opposition side, you know, around all different kinds of people: seniors who are having to come out of retirement or postpone retirement because they can't afford their rent, people on fixed incomes like a pension or a social benefit that are really restricted in the kind of housing. The end result of all of this, Mr. Chairman, is that they're ending up in cheaper and cheaper accommodation in more difficult circumstances where their safety is at risk in some of the accommodations they've had to take, and that just causes a whole other set of problems, which usually ends up in the health care system.

So once again I ask the government to look at temporary rent controls. I know that this is against your philosophy, but honestly what your philosophy is getting us today is not working. Having people who are homeless or will be homeless phoning up and being told that they can put their name on a list to maybe come up with accommodation two years from now is just not addressing the problem. I think that when we're at a situation where making $11 an hour can make you homeless because it's not enough money, this is a serious problem. I think we need temporary rent caps in place in order to get us through this anomaly, this failure of the marketplace, this catastrophe or unusual circumstance, crisis, whatever you want to call it. But just digging your feet in and saying: "No. We'll have landlords raise their rents once a year. We'll do a website to punish gouging landlords" – well, that certainly hasn't worked – is simply not working, and we're failing people that we shouldn't be failing.

I'd like to bring up one last issue about two government policies that are in existence that are pitting groups against each other. That's around the policy for new school buildings coming through the Department of Education, you know, given a utility rate or use rate – I can't remember what it's called. Really, it's encouraging the closure of inner-city schools in order to open schools in the suburbs. This pits against the municipalities' planning where in the metropolitan areas they're trying to rejuvenate and densify through in-fill housing the downtown areas. So you've now pitted these two policies absolutely against one another.

We're closing the schools. We're creating literally black holes in the centre of our downtown and inner-city communities in order to try and get schools in the suburbs. There should be schools in the suburbs. There should also be schools and use of those school buildings in the downtown areas. So I need the government to look at a policy that they've set in place on either side of this that is not working, very much not working for our students, and it's not working for our city planners and people that live in the cores of our cities and want to have a vibrant place to live.

Finally, just a word on arts education funding. I'd really like to see a reinvestment in arts education in our schools. I've just had to write support letters for a couple of my schools who are applying for grant programs all over the place, trying to buy band equipment, musical instruments for their students. This should not be happening, Mr. Chairman. This funding should be available through the school program. My constituents cannot understand how this government can be posting multibillion dollar surpluses, and we don't have enough money to buy musical instruments for students. We don't have enough money to buy schools.

You know, people walk out their door and look at the cracks in their sidewalks and the potholes in their streets. They look at their paycheque stub and how much money they're making and wonder why they're homeless or they're going to be homeless on that kind of a wage. They do not see where the financial management of this government makes sense, where the government just seems to be hoarding money, but the people are not reaping the benefit of it. Yeah, some people are, and there's great opportunity out there, and I think that's wonderful. A rising tide should lift all boats, not just the yachts. I keep seeing this government put policies in place where the tide only raises the yachts, and that's not right. It's not right at all. So we need a better government financial policy – we'd just end up with a better society for everybody – because what we've got sure isn't working.

Those are some of the issues that I wanted to raise while we were in Committee of the Whole on Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, which is essentially the budget for 2007. I look forward to additional opportunities to be speaking on this. Thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make some general comments about the appropriation bill, Bill 43, at committee stage. There's absolutely no doubt that this budget is a lot of money. When I look at it, $33.1 billion is a lot of money. Now, the questions that one asks: is it appropriate; is it the right amount; should it be less; should it be more? But the problem is that this government has created a monster. There's no other way to explain it. We have such an overheated economy. The only way the government seems to be able to react – because clearly stated by the Premier is that they will not put the brakes on, that we are going to move ahead with the tar sands as quickly as we can, get it out as quickly as we can. That's the economic strategy of this government. Now, when you have an economic strategy like this, Mr. Chairman, then the reality is that it's not that cheap to be able to do that. We create the overheated economy. As I said before in this Legislature, it's economy on steroids.

Now, this budget. It seems to me that the government finally realizes that we have this particular problem. So what do we do? Well, gee, there's a problem here. There's a problem there. There's a problem here. Let's just grab some gobs of money and throw it at these problems and hope that maybe that's enough. Maybe it'll make the people stop complaining at least.

Again, finally admitted – and I still don't see any difference – the previous Premier said we had no plan. We were having that debate right here in the Legislature when he said it. That's the reality of what we're facing with this budget, and that's why it's hard to get a handle on it. It's catch-up, you know, with the economic strategy of booming ahead.

So what do we do? Well, let's look at some of the various problems. The Member for Edmonton-Centre was talking about housing. This is, perhaps – well, there are so many others that I won't say it's the most drastic example of lack of planning but certainly one of the major problems. Yes, the government has reacted. As they say time and time again, there's $285 million for housing. I was on that committee, Mr. Chairman, and it was a very good committee. When we looked at the figures of what it would take right now, if we actually wanted to do a major job as quickly as we could to bring on more housing, to look at supply, it was over about $450 million that you would probably need.

Now, we recognized that the government probably wasn't going to do that, but we thought they should know the severity of the problem. This problem, as I've said many times, is going to get worse before it gets better. The other thing about it, Mr. Chairman, is that even if we start to use this money, the $285 million, which I hope we do – we all want to move ahead, working with the municipalities as quickly as we can; I think we all want that – it will take time.

That's why the task force at the time said: "Okay. We know that the government can't buy rent guidelines because of their philosophy." You don't need it. To be fair and honest, you don't need it at most times. It's only during the boom economy. So we said two years in that report, Mr. Chairman. Two years would at least give time on the supply side to build some of the infrastructure that's needed, bring on basement suites, whatever else we could do to bring more housing on the market. That would give us breathing space. I think two years is probably overly optimistic, but at least it would be a start.

What was good about that is that for the time being that wouldn't cost the taxpayers any money. We could deal with the problem in the short run without having to spend millions of dollars, to allow us time to catch up. Well, Mr. Chairman, the government, because of their ideology or the influence of landlords in terms of this government, refused that.

Now we hear the horror stories. It's not just the most vulnerable, although it's an important issue for people on fixed income, seniors, the disabled, all the other people that are, as they say, one cheque away from becoming homeless, but now we're impacting thousands and thousands and thousands of people. I said this in the Legislature. One of the other things in the task force that we recommended was to at least look, as they did in the previous boom, at helping people to buy their first house. They rejected that too. We reject rent guidelines. We reject putting money in to help people buy their first home. So the reality is now that it's not just the most vulnerable, but we have, as I say, thousands of people out there, Mr. Chairman, that are struggling.

There's no hope of buying a new home with the rising house prices. We saw in Edmonton over 40 per cent increase, Calgary 27 per cent increase. Calgary was already higher, the highest in Canada, so you're not going to be able to buy a house if you have an ordinary wage. No hope there. At the same time no protection with rising rents, Mr. Chairman. So there we are. The $285 million, hopefully, will do some good down the way, but that's down the way.

We look at the other areas. Health care, Mr. Chairman. Code burgundies in Calgary almost all the time. I don't know what they call it now in Edmonton, but it's the same thing. Emergency rooms are flooded over. They can't keep up. They say that they can't keep up. We need more hospitals. Finally, we're building one in south Calgary that's needed, but it has cost a lot more than it was meant to at the time because of the overheated economy.

Long-term care. We need some help there with some of the problems. It doesn't matter what the minister of health says; they're still out there in terms of long-term care.

We look at education, and no matter how the Minister of Education sums it up, if you're not keeping up to inflation, there are going to be some serious situations in the classrooms.

You know, Mr. Chairman, this could be – I don't know where it sits in terms of the negotiations. The minister of health is here. I know that there are big negotiations right now with the nurses, but I see the potential – and I hope that this doesn't come about – of almost a public service situation that could become extremely serious. The teachers, 90 per cent of those contracts aren't there. The nurses are demanding more money, and rightfully so. These groups are finding the rising cost of living difficult to deal with. We could be into a major public service dilemma with both nurses and teachers in the fall. I hope that that's not the case, but when I look at the funding and the money, I don't know how else we're going to get around it as these groups try to fight for cost of living at least. This is big worry. It should be a big worry to this government.

We look at the infrastructure, Mr. Chairman. Well, the minister admitted that we can only do about a third of the roads that need it, that we have probably over $12 billion in infrastructure deficit. What are we going to do about that? The answer seems to be the quick-fix P3s. The Minister of Education – I think this is going to go into schools – is now talking about some major announcement. I think we're all speculating that there will be a raft of P3 schools, and we all know the problems there.

They're looking for quick fixes because of the problems that they have created, Mr. Chairman. That's the point. When you have a boom economy encouraged by the economic strategy that you are in, there are the other problems that you have to deal with. You cannot do it on the cheap, and that's what this government has tried to do in the past. Now, as I say, they're trying to catch up right now. Trying to catch up, so we throw a little bit of money here, there, and everywhere.

Premier Klein said there was no plan. I would suggest that there isn't particularly a plan that I can see at this particular time, certainly, not from this budget, other than spending more money on it. The other part of the plan is: don't put on the brakes; let things go as the are. So I expect that next year will be even as difficult.

There are some worrisome trends on the horizon. We don't know how it will play out, Mr. Chairman. One is the rising dollar. I think the Minister of Finance said that if it stayed the way it was it would cost the Alberta Treasury $948 million. If it went to parity – and many analysts are predicting that it could go to parity with the American dollar – that would be $1.7 billion. Well, that's a huge dent out of our treasury right at this particular time with all of the needs that we have, all of the needs that I've just talked about.

The other thing is on the royalty review, Mr. Chairman, and I think we're already being set up, saying: well, all these problems are there, and therefore the poor industry can't afford much more. I think the fix is already in on that, so we're not going to get anymore money there. We're told now that natural gas royalties, which have been a big contributor to the Alberta Treasury, have peaked and are going down. So the only alternative, if we want to keep this sort of economic strategy, is in the tar sands; therefore, we will be ploughing into the tar sands even faster and faster and faster to make up for the rising dollar and the other things that are occurring.

What do we do in the budget next year, then? Is it going to be another sort of splattering? Is it $36 billion? Or is it that the fiscal hawks cut back, and then we have more serious problems with the infrastructure, health care, education, you name it, Mr. Chairman? The future, as I see it, looks relatively difficult.

Now, some people are doing very well. No doubt about that. The Alberta advantage for the haves is pretty good. If you're a CEO in Calgary, you like what's happening. If you have some technical skills and you're making big wages, well you're relatively happy.

But the point that I make is that the overheated economy is becoming a huge, huge disadvantage for more and more people, Mr. Chairman. If we're going to talk about the Alberta advantage and what a great economy we have, as this government talks about all the time, surely, surely then everybody, all Albertans, should be participating in the Alberta advantage. It shouldn't just be, as I say, for those that already have. That's a reality of what's happening now, Mr. Chairman.

I don't know where we go from here. I know the appropriation bill will pass. I know that the government, then, will all stand around. They'll pat themselves on the back, what a wonderful job they're doing, just as if they had discovered the tar sands and put it there themselves.

An Hon. Member: Mike did.

Mr. Martin: Mike did. Oh. I thought it was the hon. government over there. I don't know – they've been there, I guess, 35 years or so, so they would have enough time to put all that oil and gas in the ground. Right? Yeah. I think so.

But that's what they will do is say that this is a great economic strategy. We invented it. Aren't we smart? But the reality is that the problems are becoming huge.

Mr. Chairman, I know I'm just about out of time. I'm sure that that disappoints the members on the government side, but I just say that I don't know where we're going with this. We know what this budget is this year. I'll be very interested to see where they're going with the next budget, and see where the clouds start to hover over us even more and more. This fall could even be interesting, as I say.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. There are a number of things that I think are left over from, certainly, our budget discussions. One of them would be the west side school. We have the money for phase 1, but the earth hasn't even been turned yet, and it's absolutely obsolete before we've even turned the earth. We're going to have 400 to 800 students over when this building is finally built. We need the ability to at least get the dollars into the system in Lethbridge to be able to come up with the drawings for phase 2 so that we can see how that's actually going to fit into the community. This is a partnership between public 51, the Holy Spirit Catholic school district, and our public library. The object of the whole thing is that we will have a community, both residential and commercial, being built around this particular complex. We really need to know where phase 2 is going to fit in, and to be able to do that, we need the money for the architects and the discussions that have to go around those sorts of plannings.

Town squares or city squares are sort of where communities are trying to build themselves so that people can actually walk more, ride their bikes more, and have things more available to their homes and be in close proximity. Certainly, the ideal would be – unfortunately, it's not happening – that kids could actually walk to school. I'm sure there are many of us sitting in this House that realize that we have good health because we had to walk to school four times a day. They didn't have lunch programs, and you went home for lunch. So the ideal is that kids actually would be able to walk to school. Of course, the overlay on top of that is that they would be able to walk safely to school.

We don't even know in Lethbridge-West what our increased school attendance would be like because the community itself, the residential part, not just around this new complex but around the whole of Lethbridge-West, is growing, and there will be more demand for these spaces. But the other side of the city, Lethbridge-East, both south and north, is also growing, and there will be these demands. I think one of the things that upsets me is when we see community schools, schools that actually are the core of their community, being closed down and creating megaschools.

I watched a community start to renew itself. People lived in their homes as long as they could. They died. The homes were then sold to younger families just starting out. I also watched that community lose its school, and abruptly the families that were moving into those neighbourhoods didn't go because they wanted to be closer to the schools. We end up with a marginalized society that lives in these areas. It's too bad because eventually, over time, I'm not sure what's going to happen to our communities. I think it's been mentioned that we are creating black holes, and I totally agree with that. We need kids walking on the streets to be able to create a good community.

The point is that we really need a plan, a big plan picture. We need a vision for how our west Lethbridge school will develop, and to do those visionings, unfortunately, you do need dollars. You need the people that can bring in the information. But more so, we have to at least have the footprint, and to be able to do that, you need good architectural planning.

The human services in this province also, I believe, have been neglected. What is human services? Well, I suppose it would depend on who was doing the definition. Really, it could be anybody that I would consider to be front-line workers. They could be teachers, social workers, PDD workers, social justice workers, NGO workers, people that work in food banks, people that work in soup kitchens, people that help immigrants with English as a Second Language or just learning how to actually go into a supermarket and shop. These are all valuable, valuable services that we should be providing as a society to create a better society for all. I don't see it happening.

It isn't just the money that I'm talking about. I think it's an attitude that I don't see that these services are imperative for a civil society. It's about a system that must allow time for human interaction, and that often takes time. Unfortunately, the way we think in this province, time is always money. We have to learn how to put a dollar figure on human interaction so that it can be in a budget and so that it fits into a business plan.

There is benefit in allowing people, particularly young people and particularly old, to be able to develop at a different speed than what the younger generation can handle. What the 25- to 45-, 50-year-olds are handling in their everyday fast lives isn't necessarily good for seniors as they slow down in many ways. Many of them certainly don't slow down mentally, but often there'll be slowdowns in terms of the physical ability to be able to move as quickly. Certainly, we are living longer. We're certainly living healthier, but there are many who aren't blessed to have the benefits that they get by being healthy.

It's a very complex issue, and it's not just something that we can throw money at. I think we really have to do some serious reviewing on how we're spending the dollars that we have. A lot of dollars are going towards preventive health, and I do support that concept. However, I think that we can't negate the fact that people do get sick and people do need care and it isn't necessarily their fault.

I read something in the newspaper the other day that I thought was quite frightening, that surgeons had said that they wouldn't operate on people who are smokers. That smacks just a little bit too much of Big Brother and taking away personal choices and how to live a personal life. I think the education out there is teaching people that they certainly shouldn't smoke. However, there are seniors that have smoked all their lives.

I can use an example of a woman that I know who, granted, had multiple, multiple health problems and wanted to move into a senior citizens' home that had the ability to give her the extra care that she required. But they wouldn't accept her because she smoked, so she did try to quit smoking. I believe she tried to use patches. She had smoked for over 55 years and within two days of the stress on her body actually had a heart attack and died. Can I tie that into her trying to quit smoking? Probably I can't. However, I think the questions are there. So I think we have to have some compassion in terms of what we consider to be preventative measures and what aren't often people's fault. Things happen, and I believe that as a society we should be able to provide, certainly, for those that are vulnerable.

The municipal dollars. Certainly, over this last many years the provincial government has downloaded responsibilities onto the municipalities, many of which are the social responsibilities, without the dollars to compensate. Municipalities have been doing, actually, yeoman's budgeting in terms of handling this. But the better the municipalities do, the more creative they are and the less that they have to do without in terms of the social benefits. It does make it look like they can do the job when, in fact, they're doing a job, but they're not doing the job. They need the dollars that have been taken away, and they have to be increased. More often than not some of the social issues are right on the streets and have to be handled immediately: the normal maintenance of public buildings, public roads, public sewers, public water treatment plants, wastewater treatment plants are put aside.

We have to be able to have a balance. We've lost the balance in this province. Again, as I say, is it money? Yes, money in this particular instance, by having the dollars taken away with increased responsibilities, then, yes, dollars are the answer. I think that many of these processes of how these dollars are passed through from the federal to the provincial and the provincial to the municipal and then the municipal or the health regions, how they pass those dollars along, I believe there's a huge amount of space for review in there.

The school boards. Some school boards have managed to create a surplus, and I believe that they're being penalized because they've created that surplus when I hear comments like: well, they've got a surplus; what's their problem? Where would be the incentive to be able to look forward, to be able to put money aside for buildings that they need in the future? To me that's visioning, yet I believe that they're being penalized to be able to think in that fashion.

Also, school boards have horrendous needs not only in terms of dollars but in terms of trained teachers and trained assistants. We have an increased number of special-needs children. We certainly have an increased number of children with behavioural problems. I think I spoke earlier about FASD and certainly just FAS, children with fetal alcohol syndrome. There are huge behavioural problems, and they require a tremendous amount of support systems.

My belief is that particularly the ones that often come with criminal records or experiences with the criminal justice system, that these just aren't Education dollars. I think Justice dollars should be put in there, I think social services dollars should be put in there, and I think Children's Services should be put in there, not just Education dollars. It isn't just education when you have to work with children with huge high-risk behaviours, not only risk to themselves but risk to the rest of the school population that is trying to learn.

Some of our private schools are doing very well, but they often do not have any of those behavioural problems. So it's not fair that education dollars in some of our more private schools or even homeschooling can go directly to the actual education of the student when, in fact, in our public systems they're struggling with all of these students that perhaps wouldn't be accepted into any of those other schools. I'd like to reiterate that I believe that the other three ministries have to be involved with the education system in terms of dollars that can look after these children that are very, very high social and behavioural needs.

One of the other things that's been drawn to my attention is the fact that the curriculum at the high school level is going to be changed: science, math, and social, I believe. The question that has been asked to me is: where's the money for the textbooks? I find it incredible that I speak to teachers who have said that they've never had a full set of textbooks for a classroom, and they've been teaching for 10 years. Now the curriculum is changing, and where are the textbooks?

I've asked the question, and I've had: they're online. I don't believe that online is a suitable answer. It certainly might be online with teachers who have small classrooms and can help these students. Online may well be for the students that can afford computers, but believe it or not, there are many, many – and this includes high school students – that do not have computers in their homes. Or if they do have computers, they're certainly an older model, and they are definitely behind. So now they're fighting being behind in the instrument, in the technology that would get them the textbook. Why aren't these textbooks available for teachers to use and be able to give out? I'm not sure how these kids do their homework when they don't have the proper computers to work with.

3:30

One of the things that my colleague brought up that to me is a very troubling phenomenon that appears to be going on is the terms of having, actually, your medical records available to insurance companies. If you're trying to get insurance to go across the border to, say, the United States, the insurance companies can have access to your medical records to see what kinds of medications you take, et cetera, to then evaluate what kind of premium or what kind of coverage you're going to have. I think that's certainly a debatable issue in terms of: if you are not prepared to share that information, should the insurance company then be able to say that they won't insure you? I think it's a discussion that has to go on. I certainly know that I'm not very happy with having my personal information anywhere in a system that we all know these young kids in high school can often access just because they're good hackers.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

I have a constituent with a concern, whose mother died of dehydration, and he wants to get the charts because he wants to see exactly how a doctor's order was not followed or that the doctor didn't give the proper orders in the first place. The health region evidently can give permission for the doctor to release it, but if the doctor refuses, apparently his only access to these – and he has been told this – is if he goes to court. Needless to say, with a woman who was older and died of dehydration, often the children are older as well and on fixed incomes, as this particular constituent is. He's appalled that the answer is to go to court instead of actually being able to access these charts. His contention is that the death certificate was actually signed by the brother of the doctor that should have signed it and that he had never actually seen his mother. I believe that he certainly has a legitimate concern and a right to these charts, and I think there has to be a better system than having to go to court.

Some of the cultural activities or nonactivities in this province are really phenomenal. We have a province with incredible talent. We have an amazing school in Lethbridge, St. Patrick elementary school. It's a fine arts school. There's some very fine talent that is being nurtured in all avenues of the arts, print art and certainly within the drama portion of the culture.

But what I see and have actually spoken to before is that the AMPIA awards were given out, and there were huge numbers of nominations. There were 50 categories and five people in each category. This is local talent and these are local dollars, yet we can't seem to be able to get these out to the people in Alberta to even realize exactly the talent that we have. It's an attitudinal shift that I think I would like to see, where we actually appreciate and learn in our economic culture. We have to learn to be able to say to our economic culture, "Look at the dollars that culture does bring in" because for some reason this province has a problem understanding the value of culture to a civil society. If that's the case, then let's try to put a dollar figure on it, and then maybe people would pay more attention. But I would like to see the movies, including the commercials because commercials was an area that was up for an award, distributed to the libraries in our province: the public libraries, the school libraries, the university libraries.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, the background conversations are increasing in volume and making it difficult to hear the speaker. Perhaps we could keep those down.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak on the Appropriation Act, 2007. As we all know, the population increased by approximately 110,000 in the year 2006, and we all know that we have shortages of labour not only in Alberta but all over in Canada. I've talked to a few small businesspeople. It started hurting them. They are still saying that even though we have the provincial nominee program and we have temporary foreign workers, some small businesspeople can't bring some workers from overseas because of some complexities in the system. I hope this provincial nominee program works for them. The main objective for this agreement that the Alberta government made with the federal government recently is to speed up the process in the application for bringing in some more workers from overseas. But they are still complaining.

Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, the workers come to Alberta, and even though they are highly skilled or maybe semiskilled, when they come here as temporary foreign workers, they work with the employer. You know, suppose the employer runs a business like Dairy Queen or any other franchise and that skilled or semiskilled person that I'm talking about works in that restaurant or any small company because they don't come under the provincial nominee program. Sometimes after their visa expires, they have to go back to their country and apply again to come to this country.

I introduced and I'm really thankful to all the members that supported my motion on the expansion of the provincial nominee program, which was badly needed. I'm not sure when they will start, you know, implementing those suggestions in that motion. I would like to know because this is a big issue for small businesspeople nowadays. I want to know from the minister of immigration if she could speed it up a little bit more so that it helps the small businesspeople in Alberta because prosperity of the small businesses in Alberta is prosperity for all of us. We shouldn't be dependent on just oil and gas. We should look after the businesspeople, especially the small businesspeople in Alberta.

My second issue, Mr. Chairman, which is a very big issue, we all know, is affordable homes. People are complaining that they phoned the departments, and the programs are still not helping them. There are some restrictions. If somebody has $7,000 or $8,000 in savings, which is nothing nowadays, they don't qualify for the program which is in place right now. It's very hard for especially the vulnerable people and the people on fixed incomes and seniors. For the time being – I don't know. Some people already have moved. They've started living with their friends or their families, but this is not the right thing. We should immediately help those people.

Another issue in my constituency, Mr. Chairman, is subsidized homes. I know that we all talk about affordable homes. I lived in England for 15, 16 years, and there were lots of subsidized homes owned by the city and the federal government. Lots of people, you know, whenever there's a shortages of labour, move into a subsidized home right away. I know they have a waiting list, but not a waiting list like what we have in Alberta.

One of my constituents came to my office about six months ago. She was nearly crying because even after waiting two and a half years, when her turn came and she was asked to look at the property that the department offered them, it was in such a mess. I mean, that house was not worth living in, but still she said: "Okay. I will move in." She would request some of her friends to renovate that property, and then she would move in. But one of the caretakers – I mean, maybe he didn't like her, but somehow he was the person who said: "No. She can't move in here." Then when he reported to the regional housing, they listened to him, and then they said that that was the only house available at that time. I'm talking about after two and a half years' waiting time.

You know, they put her again on the waiting list, and she is still waiting for a subsidized home. Her income is less than a thousand dollars, and her children don't allow her to live with them. I want to ask all the members and the minister: what should I tell her? How can I, you know, help her? Whenever she comes to my office, she is in tears.

I know that the minister of housing is trying his best. We had a task force and some different committees. Some people are complaining, Mr. Chairman, that out of 50 recommendations the government only implemented eight of them. People started saying that if the government doesn't implement the majority of the recommendations of the task force and the committees, what's the use of those task forces?

My office and the constituency office of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had a town hall meeting. So did some other members in the Official Opposition. We listened to the views. I know that we can't help them directly, but we can voice their concerns in this House. That's exactly what the job is of all the members sitting. You know, some of them came here, they met the minister, and they are still waiting for solutions.

So I request the members and the ministers to reconsider those unfortunate people who cannot afford, you know, high rent. I know that it will take lots of time to catch up with the supply. You know, building the over 11,000 houses that the ministry is talking about will take more than two years. I'm a real estate agent. I know that most of the builders are helpless. They can't find tradespeople nowadays because there is so much construction going on. For the time being, as I said, there are so many restrictions on the program, and they should make it a little bit easier for those people who are vulnerable so that they don't suffer this pressure of the boom in Alberta. We live in a have province, Mr. Chairman. If we can't do it, who else can do that?

The other issue I want to move on to is the Ministry of Solicitor General and Public Security. Mr. Chairman, I've heard the stories in Edmonton. We have around 1,400 police officers. They are working really hard, and we all should be proud of that. I heard that they have received over 1,300 complaints. The total number of police officers is 1,400, and if the complaints are about the same number, this is not a good sign. So I think the main reason for the people who are complaining is because we have shortages of police officers. I think they can't cope with the work. Especially, we don't have many specialized police officers, for example like a special constable for gang-related crime or domestic violence or, I should say, a drug squad. You know, if they are fully trained and we have more numbers, I think we will be able to reduce the crime sooner. But it's not happening.

I want to ask a question of the minister concerned: what answers should I give to one of my constituents? Most of you might have read it in the newspaper. Sangeeta Khanna disappeared more than a year ago, and we still don't have any news about her. Whenever I try to reach the department, you know, they say that they are still working. This is not acceptable for the families and friends of my constituent.

This is a serious, very critical situation happening to lots of people, not only on the south side but all over in Edmonton, maybe all over Alberta. This crime issue is spreading all over Alberta, even in rural areas. Even though we put some money in this year's budget, still it's not working. I want to know why. I want to know what answer I should give to those people.

Like, one of my friends: his brother was working in a Mac's store. That was two years ago. A gunman shot him right away. He's dead, and there's no news about him. Every year they get together and mourn his death. This year I was at their residence, and they were asking me lots of questions: Why is that? Is there racism or something? And some other questions which I couldn't answer at that time. It is critical, a very critical situation, Mr. Chairman, and we should take it very seriously and do something about it.

I'm also concerned about overcrowding at the remand centre. There are lots of complaints. I know that we are building a new remand centre very soon. But how long will it take, and for the time being what are we going to do? We don't know. I'm also concerned about the safety of the corrections officers in that critical situation at the remand centre.

Mr. Chairman, my constituents – when so many vulnerable people are complaining that they can't afford high utility bills, it has started hurting them. If they have gas and heating bills – gas and petrol – and their income is fixed, it's very hard for them to survive on a fixed income. Inflation is more than 3 per cent, and it is hurting them. Whenever they call me, it's very hard for me to answer them, especially the senior people. Some people are on medication, and they don't have a car, and they phone and say: you come to my house; I have to tell you the stories. Sometimes, you know, it's very hard to listen to their very touching stories.

Now I move to the ministry of infrastructure.

Thank you.

The Chair: Unfortunately, the time has elapsed, hon. member.

The next member is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate this afternoon in debate at committee on Bill 43, the Appropriation Act. We had a look yesterday in second reading at this government's spending habits. The hon. Minister of Finance was talking about his next budget, next year, earlier in question period, and there are areas where I believe he could cut spending. There are areas where he has to increase spending. There's no doubt about that. One of them is certainly in public education. But there are areas where there is luxurious extravagance. We have a government that, of course, has been in power for a very, very long time, and over that period of time there has been a culture of entitlement. I think we have to urge the government to be very careful of that culture of entitlement getting further entrenched.

When we look, Mr. Chairman, at this overall budget and we look at various departments, I have to first go to the biofuels initiative in the Department of Energy. Now, this is relatively new. Last year, 2006-07, there was a forecast of $5 million to be spent under resource development and management at the Department of Energy. This year we're looking at $41 million in biofuel initiatives. Earlier in the winter the minister of agriculture was quoted as having a great deal of reservation regarding this program. He thought it was going to turn out to be a windfall for the big guys and the little producers were going to be left out. Now, certainly, I would agree at this time with the minister of agriculture. When you look at his statements and you look at his reference to Cargill and Lakeside Packers and the impact that this market concentration has had on the cattle industry, the minister has every right to be concerned.

Now, what exactly is the minister of agriculture doing to ensure that this $41 million is spent in the right place in a timely fashion? That interests me. It's in the Department of Energy. The department of agriculture had some interest in the past in this biofuels initiative, but it's now in the Department of Energy. It's a considerable sum of money, and I think we have to heed the warning from the minister of agriculture as to who is going to get this money, how much, and why they are going to get it. Are one or two big parties going to get this money, or is it going to be divided so that many small producers can also participate in this initiative? Certainly, this initiative for the development of biofuels is not reflected in the EUB's forecast well into the future.

However, there are other issues that I would like to point out as well in this budget. One of them is in what we used to call the ministry of human resources and employment, which is now EII: Employment, Immigration and Industry. Now, Mr. Chairman, that department has a lot of issues to deal with, but one that I would like to flag is the fact that – and we're going to have to look after these folks. I was listening with interest to the discussion at Public Accounts today when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore brought up the bonuses that seem to be paid out on a routine basis annually to senior managers in Infrastructure and Transportation. Over $2 million was spent in the fiscal year that we were discussing this morning in Public Accounts.

Senior management seems to be well looked after. I don't know who determines whether they're eligible for a bonus or not. I was left with the impression that it was themselves. I could be wrong. I could have a wrong impression, but that's what I was led to believe. The criteria seemed very open. It wasn't like they were hockey players with, you know, 20-, 30-, or 40-goal seasons and depending on what you got, you got a bonus, or if your team made the playoffs or you advanced beyond the first round, you could expect a bonus. It was just sort of: well, we got bonuses, and they came from the general revenue.

But the rest of the civil service is what I would like to focus on here, Mr. Chairman. If you look at the last report from human resources and employment 2005-06, before the name change and, you know, all the money coming from rural development into that portfolio and this focus put on immigration and whether we can handle it or not as a province, when we look at the average age of permanent, salaried public service employees in the 2005-06 annual report, 50 per cent of the entire public service is between the ages of 45 and 59. There are 24,000 staff. That's quite a number.

Now, I would like to know what the government is going to do to recruit as these people retire. We're certainly going to have to have a good pension. We're going to have to have good benefits, and we're going to have to have good wage rates to attract people to the civil service because in these next few years we could potentially see half the civil service retire.

I know this has been a government that has been getting by on a wing and a prayer here for the last five or six years, and there has been no plan. This, in my opinion, is a question that needs to be addressed. We need an answer from the government. If 50 per cent of the civil service is between the ages of 45 and 59, what is this government doing to ensure that we attract younger people into the civil service? What do they plan on offering these young people to come into the civil service?

Certainly, we need people. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that in the civil service there is between the ages of 25 and 34 only 16 per cent. Only 16 per cent of the salaried civil servants are in that age category. Two per cent are under 25. Perhaps they're still getting their university degrees or their other postsecondary training. But we have to ensure that we have people to manage this government.

Now, the location of the public service employees: 60 per cent of them, Mr. Chairman, are in Edmonton – about 14,400 of the public service employees are in Edmonton – 13 per cent in Calgary, 16 per cent in other districts, 6 per cent in Red Deer, 1 per cent in Grande Prairie, 3 per cent in Lethbridge. That's quite interesting, not only where these good people work but the fact that if we don't deal with this problem, we're going to have a huge human resources issue to deal with. Again, it's symbolic of this government's absence of long-term planning that we would have this dramatic concentration of age in our 24,000-plus civil or public service. If I could have an answer to that question during the course of this debate, I also would be grateful.

Now, another issue that's coming up – and the Minister of Energy is very keen to discuss this, I'm sure – is the whole issue of royalties. I heard the New Democrats talking about royalties this afternoon. I'm unaware if they made a presentation to the royalty review commission. I don't know whether they did or whether they didn't, but I would be interested to read it if they did. But we certainly need to adjust our royalty structure in this province.

The last time – the minister is cognizant of this – in 1992, Mr. Orman and Mr. Getty had a good look at royalties and made some changes, and since 1992 there have been dramatic increases in prices for both natural gas and oil. I think it is one of the most important issues facing the province today, and I'm very disappointed that the Minister of Finance seems to have dismissed already the royalty review with: perhaps we don't need to increase royalties. The Minister of Energy has been sort of on the same page on that issue, and I'm concerned. I'm looking forward at the end of August to getting this presentation. Maybe as Energy critic I could get one in advance so I could read it before it is announced. [interjections] They're laughing at me, Mr. Chairman.

Now, do Albertans, the owners of the natural resources of this province, receive a fair share from the current royalty regime? I and many others I talk to do not feel that we do get a fair share. Similar oil and gas producing jurisdictions collect more for their resources than we do in Alberta. For example – and I'm grateful to the minister for providing some, if not all, of the stats on this – Texas collects 25 per cent in royalties. After the conclusion of session tomorrow I'm looking forward to going up to the Department of Energy library – and I hope I don't need a permission slip from the Minister of Energy to get up there – and seeing if there's additional information on various royalty structures.

Current royalties are not meeting the Department of Energy's own modest Crown revenue share of 20 to 25 per cent. The corporate sector of oil and gas is enjoying record-breaking profits, and the public sector here, this government, is failing to meet its own standards, failing to meet its own plan. This failure to attain the government's minimum standard of 20 to 25 per cent cost Albertans at least $16 billion – $16 billion – in the last six fiscal years, and that's a lot of money.

Hon. members across the way were challenging us yesterday about where the spending would end. Well, we know where the spending would end, and we know where the saving would start. The vast majority of this money would be put in the bank.

You could just ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford about that because he's very anxious to make sure that the heritage savings trust fund grows and grows and then grows some more. He has put a lot of effort and thought into a plan. I would encourage the hon. members across the way: if you want to talk to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford or adopt his plan, I'm sure he would talk to you. Red Rover, Red Rover, he'd send it right over. Right?

Mr. R. Miller: I just happen to have it.

Mr. MacDonald: He just happens to have one there.

Now, as I said earlier, times have changed since the last royalty review was done, but the royalty regime must balance two competing interests: those of Albertans and those of industry. We've got to recognize that industry has faced significant financial risks in developing Alberta's resources, but the current royalty regime has been extremely effective in reducing these risks.

In the current international market, Mr. Chairman, an investment in Alberta's nonrenewable natural resources carries far less risk than it did 10 to 15 years ago. I would like to remind people that we are one of the most politically stable regions. Last night's by-election in Calgary-Elbow was an example of that. There was a change there, and it occurred democratically, without any force or without any fight. It was a democratic decision. That's why we're one of the most politically stable oil producing areas on the entire globe.

I suggest that the government of Alberta for once stick to its plan and collect the 25 per cent Crown revenue share that it has set out to do in the first place. If the current royalty regime is incapable of delivering 25 per cent Crown revenue shares, then immediate changes are in order. Here are some suggestions for the Minister of Energy. Now, again, in the 2005-06 annual report the Auditor General notes that there was $948 million in reduced Crown royalties because of various incentive programs. The year before that it was $533 million. So that's $1.5 billion in two years, and this is at a time when commodity prices are at high levels. I would urge the minister to have a good, long look at amending or removing some of these programs.

Now, it's interesting that we can't have a cap on rent increases, but we can put a rate cap on royalties for both oil and natural gas. The minister is chewing on the edge of his glasses there. But there is a cap on that. There is a percentage cap on that, hon. minister. Again, citizens ask me: why should electricity prices be capped?

And the wholesale price, the Power Pool: that's capped at $999. We were right up against that last July in the blackouts. By the look of that Power Pool and the action of it now – we had that hot spell here last week, and wholesale power prices were dancing upwards – I expect the same thing this summer. I hope I'm wrong, but I expect that there will be blackouts again. We can cap electricity prices, we can cap the percentage of royalty rates to be collected but not apartment rents. It just doesn't make sense. I just don't understand this government. [interjection] The hon. minister says that it makes sense, but ideologically, hon. minister, it makes no sense to cap one thing and be opposed to capping another.

Synthetic crude and bitumen royalty. It was just the other day I read in the Globe and Mail where the CEO of Suncor got a $2 million bonus as part of his $15 million compensation package. Now, the generic royalty regime was introduced at a time when bitumen or oil sands were still considered an undeveloped resource. That bonus could have been a reduction under the allowed costs that are outlined in schedule 1 and schedule 2 of the oil sands royalty regulation, 1997. Now, this should be changed. Mr. Chairman, that definitely should be changed.

By adjusting the allowed costs, investors will pay closer to the postpayout rate of 25 per cent as implied in the generic royalty regime. Those bonuses paid, corporate, schedules 1 and 2, section 2(e)(i): there is no need for those. If corporations want to give their hard-working executives bonuses, well, that's up to them, and they can deal with the shareholders on the matter. But I don't think there's any need at this time to facilitate these generous bonuses. If that's how they're calculated through our royalty structure, I'm dead set against that, and this party is dead set against that.

Now, there are a lot of allowed costs. I won't go through it in time, and I'm disappointed that I don't have more time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, it is my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 43, the Appropriation Act, 2007, in committee. It's been interesting debate this afternoon. I have a little more that I'd like to add to it. [interjection] I hear that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is anxiously awaiting my comments, so I hope that he'll pay careful attention and perhaps loosen his tie. I wouldn't want him to choke on anything. There have been a few threats of choking going around lately in this province, and we don't need any of that in here today, that's for sure.

Mr. Chairman, the first thing I would like to discuss is some stuff around schools. As has been mentioned in this Assembly a couple of times in the last few days, both the Edmonton Catholic and Edmonton public schools approved budgets in the last two days, and both took the minister at his word and exercised what both he and they referred to as creative budgeting in order to come up with a balanced budget. But the message from the Catholic school board meeting the other night, which I was in attendance at, was very clear. They asked in no uncertain terms that the message be relayed to the minister and this government, however possible – and I'm happy to do that, and I'm sure that the minister will be hearing from several others as well – that this is probably the last year that they can do that. They have cut as many corners as they feel they can cut. They have shifted as much money away from the general population of students as they can to accommodate the special-needs students.

Let me be very clear, Mr. Chairman. Every time I step into a school, I'm pulled aside by a teacher or a principal who tells me: "We love these special-needs kids. We want them in our schools. We love having them. We want to teach them, but we need more funding in order to do it.” That message was loud and clear the other night at the Catholic school meeting. They’re saying: “We did it this year. We found a way to make it work. But if they ask us to do it again next year, it’s not going to happen.”

In fact, Mr. Chairman, one of the Catholic school trustees, who has indicated publicly that she’s going to be seeking the nomination for the Conservative Party, indicated that the previous year’s budget was one where they felt that they had done the best they could do and that this year stretched them to the absolute maximum, and she’s not sure that they can handle it again next year. I would suggest that if this trustee finds herself elected, the government will have someone on the inside that’s going to be expressing the same concern that those of us on this side have been expressing for so many years.

Now, yesterday in this Assembly in response to a question from the shadow minister for Education, the Member for St. Albert – and it was a question regarding funding in particular to the Grande Prairie-Wapiti region but, I think, in general was discussing funding for education across the province – the Minister of Education’s response was this, and I’ll quote from page 1687 of Hansard. He said, “We will not be coming forward with additional funds unless there are some circumstances around the unallocated surplus going forward.” This is where we get into the same old good-news/bad-news cycle that we’ve seen from this government for so many years.

Mr. Chairman, you’ll know, I’m sure, that I’ve been one of the loudest opponents to the off-budget spending that we’ve seen take place in the two and a half years that I’ve been a member of this Assembly. I’m a strong proponent of making a budget and sticking with it, and I’ve gone on the record as saying that I hope this government does that this year. That, I suppose, is good news if the government sticks to their budget.

The second part to that, obviously, has to be responsible budgeting and making sure that the proper priorities are budgeted for. I don’t think too many people in this province would disagree that the priorities really have to be education and health care. If we’re not budgeting properly for education – and certainly everywhere I go across this province, that is the message I’m hearing not only from teachers and administrators but also from parents and students – then there’s a problem. Now we have a minister who, it would appear to me, is opening the door at least a crack for additional funding off budget, and while I certainly recognize the need in the case of the Education budget, Mr. Chairman, at the same time I have a concern that we’re going to be falling back into old habits.

Here’s a concern that I’ve raised before. I’m particularly cognizant of it given the fact that we had a couple of by-elections last night, and certainly all indications are that we could very well be having a general election next year. That is the fact that the sustainability fund, which, I might point out, is an idea that a former member of the Liberal opposition and a former leader of the Liberal opposition first talked about in this Assembly, is currently mandated by legislation to hold a minimum of $2.5 billion, and it is at this state, I believe, somewhat in excess of $7 billion. I have not been made aware of any public plans that the government has made for using those extra dollars. I would be perfectly happy, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, if the Finance minister or the minister of the Treasury Board were to come forward with legislation saying that we should up that mandatory amount to maybe $4 billion or $5 billion. Given that times have changed and with the rate of inflation and everything else, maybe 2 and a half billion dollars isn’t enough.

But my fear is that we currently have about 4 and a half billion dollars sitting there unallocated, and we’re likely to be less than a year away from a general election. We now have at least one minister talking about using unallocated dollars to address situations like we’ve discussed here, a very clear need for extra dollars in the Education budget.

Ms Blakeman: Off-budget spending.

Mr. R. Miller: Exactly as I had mentioned a minute ago, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is suggesting off-budget spending. Despite the words from some members on the front bench on the other side that we’re not going to see that this year, now we’re starting to see that door open a little bit. You know, in my mind, it’s probably not too long before we start seeing some of that again, and particularly as we inch closer to an election, I’ll be surprised if I don’t see it. Quite frankly, I’ll be surprised if I don’t see it.

Mr. Chairman, I’d also like to just touch on a couple of other things regarding education and, in particular, a school in my constituency, St. Stan’s. The great news – again, another good-news/bad-news story – is that St. Stanislaus has a portable. It was moved onto the property last week, and this is a portable that’s desperately needed because St. Stan’s has been operating for the last four years without a library. If you were to ask me why, I’d be happy to share with you and all members of this Assembly that the reason St. Stan’s has been operating without a functioning library for the last four years is because of a shortage of space. They’ve actually had to put a class of students into the library. The library, then, has been condensed into one little corner of what used to be the library and has not been functioning for four years.

Now, they were slated to have received a portable last year, and of course due to the shortage of portables they got bumped. There was a need, probably a greater need, to send those first 10 portables that were completed up into northern Alberta, and the good folks at St. Stan’s understand that, but what they don’t understand, Mr. Chairman, is how, in a province that was running, you know, probably an $8 billion surplus this past fiscal year and nearly a $10 billion surplus the fiscal year before, it can be that a school in Edmonton has to give up its library space to a classroom because they can’t get a portable. And that wasn’t a short-term situation. This lasted over a period of four years. So a very frustrating situation for the school, and they’re thankful that it looks like by the time schools open in the fall, they’ll have that portable up and running, and things will be back to the way they should be.

The last thing I wanted to discuss during my comments this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, is in fact the savings plan that the Official Opposition caucus put out last fall. We’ve been talking about it for several months at this point, and it’s been very well received across the province. I know I’ve spoken about it in this House before, but I want to touch on it again. The reason for that is because during the supply estimates last month when I was debating with the President of the Treasury Board, he indicated in his opening comments that he was hopeful that we would have time that evening to discuss the Liberal savings plan versus the government’s savings plan. That was a debate that I was looking forward to having. I think it’s a debate that I would like to see all Albertans involved in, so if I can help to kick that off by reminding the President of the Treasury Board and members of this Assembly about the Liberal plan, then I think that’s a valuable thing to do.

Now, this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I know that there was a question from a government backbencher which referenced the government’s savings plan. As you will know from this budget, the government’s savings plan is not really much of a savings plan at all. It is a surplus plan which is not substantially different from the surplus plan that the Alberta Liberals had in our policy in the 2004 election. Certainly, it's better to have some sort of a savings plan than none, which is the way this government has operated for the last many years with literally billions and billions of dollars of surplus over the last several years. Not having had any savings plan, it is a step forward. Unfortunately, the way this is set up right now, there will be no money allocated to savings unless we realize a surplus larger than what is currently predicted in this budget, and then at that, only a percentage would actually be put into savings.

Now, I understand that for the first time in my memory of watching Alberta politics, we have Finance ministry officials, the President of the Treasury Board, and the Finance minister all openly conceding that this government has been overly cautious in the past in its revenue predictions, particularly as it comes to predicting the price of oil and natural gas. I'm on record in the past as saying that it's good to find yourself at the end of the year in a situation where you have a surplus as opposed to a deficit. It's good to find yourself having spent less money than you perhaps thought you were going to. You know, it's a better problem to have than the reverse, so that's fair enough.

But what happens, Mr. Chairman, as we've discussed, is you find yourselves in a situation where you have billions and billions of dollars of surplus with no plan on how to save it and, in fact, leaving that money, then, up to the will of the government and in some cases the Premier of the day. We saw that with the rebate cheques of 2005-2006, where the Premier on a whim and without even the consent of his caucus decided that all Albertans would be receiving a cheque. Although that was certainly, you know, needed for some people and in many cases spent very wisely and invested wisely, to this day I still have people coming to me and questioning whether or not that was the best use of $1.4 billion.

I started out by saying that I was going to talk about our plan, and that's really what I wanted to do, Mr. Chairman. The Alberta Liberal plan is much more than simply a surplus plan. It is, as I've discussed before, an opportunity for us to pay ourselves first, just like your parents would have taught you. Certainly, my dad told me when I got my first job: take a cut right off the top; put it aside. That's what this does. We're certainly not the first that have looked at this, but we've looked very carefully at the numbers using – and this is an important point – the government's own projections in terms of future revenue for the province, which, as we've just discussed, are admittedly very cautious, very small “c” conservative. Using those projections, we've said that we would take 30 per cent of all oil and gas revenues off the top, set them into a series of savings plans, and do this all within a balanced budget.

Now, I know that the Finance minister is listening carefully because he has spent an awful lot of time over the last couple of months reviewing this document. I've noted that he's had it on his desk several days in the Assembly, and he's spent an awful lot of time poring over it. He's probably as intimately familiar with it as I am at this point, so he would know, Mr. Chairman, that the plan calls for a full 35 per cent of all of that money that we set aside, that we take off the top, to go into the heritage savings trust fund. By the year 2021, Mr. Chairman, that fund would have grown to an astounding $120 billion, still only a fraction of what Norway has managed to save in a short period of time but, nevertheless, a significant amount. For the first time since the fund was established, it would really establish a purpose for the fund, and that is to generate revenue that would offset the government's own projections in terms of a downfall in revenue from oil and gas.

A further 35 per cent, Mr. Chairman, would be put into a postsecondary endowment fund, and that fund would grow to $15 billion by the year 2021. I'm sure all members have heard the Leader the Official Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, talk about the need to elevate Alberta's postsecondary institutions to amongst the very best in the world. We believe that with this extra funding that would be provided by that endowment fund, this is entirely within the realms of possibilities.

Twenty-five per cent of that savings would go into a capital fund to address the infrastructure debt. Had things begun when this plan was first announced, Mr. Chairman, we believed we could have completed it by the year 2008. Further monies would then go into the heritage savings trust fund, and the remaining 5 per cent, Mr. Chairman, into an endowment fund to support the humanities, social sciences, and the arts. There were questions asked today about that in this House, about how strongly we believe in supporting the arts in this province.

Just a bit of an outline in terms of reminding people of how this would work. Again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind all members that the work that was done on this in conjunction with economists and businesspeople projects that this could be done within a balanced budget and without increasing taxes. I think that that is a very important point: the only increase in this budget would be based on population growth and inflation growth.

I know that we've been accused by some members opposite, particularly the Education minister, of sucking and blowing at the same time. I would strongly urge the Minister of Education to take up the advice of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar and come sit down and explore this document with us.

I'm not going to suggest for one second that it perhaps doesn't have some anomalies in it. Already changes would be required to the numbers. Favourable changes would be required to the numbers based on the fact that the government's own projections have proven to be more cautious than the reality turned out to be, so this is actually even better today than it would have been last September, when it was first released. I think what that shows, Mr. Chairman, is that the principle here is right.

You know, you could argue – and we talked about this before – about whether or not the percentages into each of the various funds are exactly right. Maybe we should put a little more into the heritage savings trust fund and build it up more. Maybe we should take a 5 per cent cut off one of the other pies and put that into a fund that would sustain municipal funding over the years given all of the talk about sustainable funding for municipalities and the need that we certainly recognize there, the need that was expressed in a by-election in Calgary-Elbow last night.

There are all sorts of ideas. This is not meant to be the final version, but certainly what this is is a document of principle. It is a solid foundation for a plan that could be implemented within sound fiscal policies. All it takes, Mr. Chairman, is a little bit of fiscal discipline, and I do believe that that is what we offer.

Private Bills
Committee of the Whole

Bill Pr. 1
CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Chair. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo I move that Bill Pr. 1 be amended.

The Deputy Chair: Do you have the amendment with you?

Ms DeLong: I do, and copies were provided.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you are moving this on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Is that correct?

Ms DeLong: Well, I'm a little unsure of that because our committee recommended that it proceed as amended, so we essentially amended it in the committee. I'm a little unsure.

The Deputy Chair: Well, it happens to have your name, so we can have it under your name.

Ms DeLong: Okay. It does have my name on it. You're right: Ms DeLong to move that Bill Pr. 1 CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act be amended as follows:

- A The title of the Bill is amended on page 1 by striking out "SECURITY" and substituting "SECURING".
- B The preamble is amended in the first recital
 - (a) by striking out "certain citizens of the City of Calgary" and substituting "Ian Wilms and Kristen Lawson, both of the City of Calgary,";
 - (b) by adding "in Alberta" after "establish".
- C Section 1 is amended by striking out clause (c).
- D Section 2 is struck out and the following is substituted:

2 There is hereby constituted and established a body corporate and politic under the name of "CyberPol – The Centre for Securing Cyberspace" which shall have perpetual succession and a common seal.
- E Section 3 is struck out and the following is substituted:

3 The of the objects of the Centre are to use the funds entrusted to it to promote and facilitate the establishment, construction and operation of an international centre for the research, coordination and advancement of public safety, intelligence gathering and public response related to cyber-crimes such as child exploitation, financial systems fraud, threats to critical infrastructure and intellectual property and identity theft.

4:40

- F Section 4 is renumbered as section 4(1) and the following is added after subsection (1):
 - (2) The Centre shall be operated on a not-for-profit basis.
- G The following is added after section 5:
 - 5.1 The head office of the Centre shall be located in Alberta.
- H Section 7 is amended by adding the following after subsection (4):
 - (5) The founding Directors shall serve until replaced by action of the Board or the appointment of the 8th additional Governor under section 6(6).
- I Section 8(1) is amended
 - (a) by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following:
 - (a) a Director is in a conflict of interest if the Director takes part in a decision in the course of carrying out the Director's duties knowing that the decision might further a private interest of the Director or a person directly associated with the Director or improperly furthers the private interest of any other person, and
 - (b) in clause (b)
 - (i) in subclause (i) by adding "child," after "Director's";
 - (ii) in subclause (iv) by striking out "having not more than 20 partners".
- J Section 9 is amended
 - (a) by adding the following after clause (i);
 - (i.1) manage or supervise the management of the business and affairs of the Centre;
 - (b) by striking out clauses (m), (n), (o), and (p).
- K The following is added after section 13:

14 Nothing in this Act exempts the Centre from the application of any other federal or provincial statute.

These were the amendments which we discussed to great extent during the committee meetings, so they were all individually and as a whole covered quite extensively by the committee. It was quite a bit of work by the committee, by the way, to proceed with this and to recommend it as amended.

I just wanted to again thank the committee – it was an all-party committee – for hanging in there and really doing a good job on this bill in terms of examining it at great length. I encourage everyone to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for the record we will call this amendment A1. The hon. member did read out the entire amendment, but should there be any discrepancy in understanding it, then the official record will reflect what has been submitted in a written format.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. If I could just make a small note that when we get amendments from the Private Bills Committee that are as lengthy as these ones, maybe just as a courtesy if they could have been circulated in advance. I know that the committee has already looked at them and recommended this to the Assembly, and I know that they do good work. I will do my best in accepting that they have recommended this, but it is a bit of a speed read. There are 11 different sections that are being amended. Actually, it's more than that if you look at the subclauses that are being amended in this. It's a lot to be able to react to very quickly. I will accept the recommendation of the committee and not question them on them.

Very quickly, looking through it, some of the major questions I had about this bill have not been answered, and I understood that we would get some answers back in Committee of the Whole to questions that were asked in second reading. In particular, I was looking at the questions put on the record by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-McClung. So I was hoping that we could have had some answers back on that.

Here are the concerns that I have. Now, I notice that under section F of the amending act, section 4 is renumbered, and in fact there is a section that's inserted. It says, "The Centre shall be operated on a not-for-profit basis." But nowhere else in here does it talk about registering under the Alberta Societies Act, or perhaps registering under part 9 of the corporations act. This is looking to me like it's a private corporation that's now said that it's going to operate on a not-for-profit basis, which would mean that any surplus that they had in their proceeds, any difference between their revenue and expenses, in other words, would be reinvested back into the work of the global centre for securing cyberspace, known as CyberPol.

I'm also noting that there is an opportunity here, or at least there's no prescription against paying the directors, which is not done under the Societies Act and is not at all common practice in not-for-profits or charities or volunteer-based organizations, however you want to refer to them, in Alberta. The idea is that those directors are representing members of the public and holding the public's interest first in serving on the board.

I would say, in looking at the set-up of this organization, that they are serving the interests of the organization first or perhaps their own interests first, where we have appointees that are coming from the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police and the Canadian Association of Police Boards. They may well be there to serve the interests of the groups that have appointed them to the board. I'm not saying that that's wrong, but I'm a little cautious about this organization. It's not clear to me. I've read all of the Hansard proceedings. I've read these amendments as best I can. I've read the act. It looks like it's a private company. It's going to operate on a not-for-profit basis. The directors can be compensated. But it's not constituting itself as a not-for-profit as we know it here in Alberta.

Mr. MacDonald: It's under this special one-time act.

Ms Blakeman: It's essentially under a special one-time act, yeah. That's why I think they've chosen the route of coming through a private member's private bill.

Some of the other issues I have that are not addressed under what I see in the amendments are the powers of a natural person. Now, I'm not recalling that it's very common to see that in a not-for-profit or charitable agency's constitution and bylaws, which is essentially what this act is. Maybe the lawyers, of whom we have more than a couple in this Assembly, could explain to me why that clause would be in there. It does raise some issues with me or some concerns about why we would need, in addition to powers vested in the Interpretation Act, to be giving the centre the powers of a natural person.

There's also a lack of clarity around reappointments. It's clear that each member of the board shall be appointed. It's a three-year term. Then it talks about removing people and the reasons for which you can remove somebody, but it is silent on reappointments or even on the number of times someone could be reappointed. In the amending act it does talk about founding directors. Okay. Well, that's the two individuals that are named, but that doesn't help us with the rest of the directors and whether they get reappointed. I'm assuming that if it's silent, they don't. So it's a three-year term, and it's over.

A lot of stuff about conflicts of interest, which is interesting, and their meetings, bylaws, auditing. I'm concerned about whether they're collecting information that could be considered personal information, what they're going to do with that information, how they're going to protect it. For our purposes, off the top of my head, would it fall under PIPA? Likely. But, frankly, as we review PIPA, I would say that it has certainly got some loopholes in it that I'm not too keen on.

I'm really concerned that if we're on the Internet and we're looking at cybercrime and collecting information about that, what kind of information are we collecting exactly? Is this suspicion of people that have been involved in something? How do you check the accuracy of the information that you've collected? How do you monitor it and make sure that it's up to date and relevant? If you've got somebody's e-mail or personal information in there that is five years old and they've moved and changed their name, got married, changed their sex, whatever, what do they do with this information? How are they going to monitor it and make sure that it stays accurate?

Mr. Chairman, I can tell you, from having served on the Health Information Act Review Committee and on the PIPA Review Committee, that one of the key issues that's arising for me is the accuracy of that information that's held and the ability of an individual Albertan to get at that information to verify its accuracy and to correct it. I don't see any of that under this act about what's going to happen with that information.

It may well be, Mr. Chairman, that we're not worried about people's personal information here, but it's not clear to me that I'm not, that that's not part of what will be done by this organization. It's talking about, you know, operating "an international centre for the co-ordination and advancement of public safety," et cetera, related to cybercrimes. But are they only going to deal with people convicted of these cybercrimes? Okay. Then we know that we're dealing with people that, in fact, have a record and have been punished by society in some way. Are they dealing with people who have been charged with it? That's a whole other kettle of fish. You're dealing with people that are still presumed innocent at that point. At what point do you clear those records up and say, "This person was declared innocent" or "They were convicted"? Do you just let it sit in there in a big stew of information going around? Especially when I see those legal beagle terms like "all the powers of a natural person," I start thinking: "Who is being protected here? Is it going to be the public, or is it the directors? Why are they imbuing this organization with so much power?"

Mr. MacDonald: Do you think the Bar Association should have a representative on the board of directors?

Ms Blakeman: Well, my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar is suggesting that the Bar Association have somebody appointed to this board. They may not be interested in doing that, but a lot of my questions are based in legal theory, so I can see why he would be thinking that.

This act is just not sitting right with me. I'm not sure why they're doing this. I'm not sure what they're going to do with it, where their money is supposed to be coming from. A wise member of this Assembly who then went on to serve as a Senator in the Senate of Canada once told me: if you're not comfortable with it, then vote no because your instinct is probably right that there is either something that needs to be fixed or something that's not right with this.

I increasingly read newspaper articles every day about people's privacy being breached, whether it's boxes of health information left in somebody's garbage or whether it's an individual employee who decides to search police databases for information on the home address of a newspaper reporter. You know, these are serious. When you start collecting information that's out there on the Internet, the ability to control it is very, very limited for the individual, and the information can be sent so many places so fast.

I understand that they're trying to deal with stuff that's really important to society, like, you know, luring of children and child prostitution and pornography, horrendous things that as a society we want to deal with, but that's not happening in this bill. For any parents that have been led to believe that somehow this is going to strengthen the laws and the punishments, penalties for Internet child luring and child exploitation, that's not in this bill. So far, all we have is a group of people getting together in an office somewhere in Alberta being funded through a number of sources in a private company. That's what I'm seeing here, and it doesn't ring quite true for me.

There's still an opportunity in the rest of Committee of the Whole or in third for additional answers to be supplied, and I'd be very interested in hearing them. This one is just not sitting right with me.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow rose to answer a couple of questions, and actually maybe I can make things slightly more efficient for her by just tagging onto the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's comments. I listened with care to those comments, and I want to thank the hon. member because it cuts what I was going to say in about half. I'm afraid I share similar concerns here.

I have some questions for the member that I think I need addressed before I could consider support for this bill. First of all, I find this to be a rather unusual avenue by which to establish a society or corporation given the legislation that we have in place in Alberta to do just that. I want to know why. What's different about this society or corporation that prevents its organizers from utilizing the legislation? Even if this is the avenue, of course, these petitioners would understand that any changes to that corporation would require another act of this Legislature. So I find that a very curious approach. I really need to understand why.

Second of all, I am very deeply concerned about the purpose of this organization. You know, the collection of information about crime is something that typically a government or an agency of a government, such as a police agency, would do, which is maybe why it's called CyberPol, which is a strange thing. If it's purely a research organization, then why wouldn't it be established under a university, as a research extension of a university? If this is a private society or corporation collecting information on the commission of crimes, either of accused people or convicted people or on the information about crimes, as in actual child pornography files or anything like that, then I have very grave concerns about where that information is. The storage of it would in fact be a violation of our legislation. I have some very, very grave concerns there. If they're not collecting such information, exactly what is it this organization is going to do?

I'm afraid that I have some very deep concerns here, and I'm unable to support this bill unless those can be addressed. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. I guess the first thing that I need to bring up for both of these members is to point out the final section, section 14, that we're putting in here. That is that "nothing in this Act exempts the Centre from the application of any other federal or provincial statute." So all privacy laws apply. All government laws apply. All laws apply. There is nothing that sort of overrules any of the privacy concerns or anything like that.

I guess the other thing is to try to understand what we're trying to do here. What we're trying to do here is set up something that is totally separate from government – okay? – but that can be used by police forces around the world to work together on things like pedophile crimes using the Internet. There's also a very large problem in society in terms of the banks. Our whole banking system is constantly under attack from around the world by people trying to get money out of the banks.

What we're doing with this legislation is we are just creating a shell. This shell is similar to setting up, say, the UN. The UN is a totally international body, but it happens to be in New York City. We are saying: this is the shell that we are providing in Alberta to be used internationally. The request to actually form this comes from the police services. It comes from the RCMP. It comes from those organizations that right now are trying in their own little ways to be able to fight this international attack, which is essentially coming from all over the world. They're trying to each solve it in their own way, but there is no place to come together like we have with the UN, where we can come together and work together.

Essentially, what we're doing is we're just creating the shell that can then be used internationally. It would not be sort of like a separate organization that would collect information. What it would be is an organization that our existing police forces could use. In other words, the RCMP would be using the shell that we're creating to work with other organizations around the world. I know that it's a very visionary, you know, very unusual, I guess, request to be putting in here, but it's something that really needs to be done. The need has been known for years, that we need to move in this direction, and this is the actual way that we're doing it.

The other thing that I think I should also talk about is in terms of the finances. This in no way indebts or says that the government is definitely going to put money into this. It's totally separate, and there's no commitment on government's part to say that they are going to be even using this facility. But this is something that is being asked for by the police services in Canada and actually around the world.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. This is a very interesting debate on amendment A1 on Bill Pr. 1, and I, too, have reservations about this. I as a member of this Assembly – I'm not a member of Private Bills; I was at one time but not anymore – certainly have not been contacted by any police force or representative of such a force requesting this bill. I know that we have to respect the Private Bills Committee and their recommendations, but the questions that have been asked by the hon. Member for Peace River and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre are very good questions, and I'm not satisfied that they're going to be adequately addressed here.

Now, I would much prefer to see the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice or the Attorney General of this province – I don't understand why they can't perform this function. I'm sorry; I'm not satisfied with the discussions so far. There has been an indication that both federal authorities have been contacted, but I would like to know what Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada stated to the committee in regard to this proposed bill. You know, Alberta Justice has indicated and everyone is aware that cybercrime is a growing concern and that we may require skills or data external to the traditional law enforcement agencies and prosecution, but I think they should consider if taking on the responsibility is necessary.

I've been told that both the Department of Justice and the Solicitor General have no substantial concerns with this bill. We are having this legislative debate, but I'm almost of the opinion after hearing the last three speakers, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps this should be referred to one of our new field committees. I'm not satisfied with our security act federally, but I don't know how this would work with that. I'm not convinced that this is a one-time global centre for securing cyberspace. Can this body that is being created by this special legislation be sold, and if it can be sold, to whom?

Now, who is going to audit this centre? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about this. But who will audit this centre? How much money will be used, and where is it going to come from? You know, we're looking at this new section 3. The centre is to have funds entrusted to it to promote and facilitate the establishment, construction and operation of an international centre . . .

This is not just for Alberta. Cyberspace is an international concern. . . . for the research, coordination and advancement of public safety, intelligence gathering and public response related to cybercrimes such as child exploitation, financial systems fraud, threats to critical infrastructure and intellectual property and identity theft.

These are all noteworthy and, unfortunately, crimes that are on the rise.

I'm just cautious about this. I don't know how this is going to work with the Interpretation Act. Perhaps the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, presenting this amendment, could explain to me the Interpretation Act, certainly section 8, which indicates, "No provision in a private Act affects the rights of any person, except as mentioned or referred to in the private Act." How is all of this going to work, then? I understand that there is reference to the Interpretation Act. Yes, there is in this proposed legislation. That is certainly under powers of the centre, section 5, Mr. Chairman. Now, I have those questions, as do others in this House, regarding this. In my time in the Assembly I cannot remember – and I could be wrong – private bills of this nature.

Before I conclude, I would also like to discuss the issue of having others on this because I'm not sure about the oversight of this board. Now, we're going to see the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police – they're going to have one member – the Canadian Association of Police Boards, but I would be much more comfortable if we had a member of the Canadian Bar Association or maybe of the local bar association here. I think oversight is needed here, and I'm not convinced that we're going to have it with this present structure.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague, but I at this time cannot support this bill. I don't mean to be disrespectful to the Private Bills Committee, but I, too, am going to exercise the caution that I was told to do: if I'm not sure, don't go in favour. That was from a former member of the Alberta Liberal Party for the Redwater constituency.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. First of all, I do want to make it well understood that these questions that are being raised here have been raised previously in the discussions of the committee. We took quite a bit of time with this, you know. In fact, we took extra time with this. We had the presentation, and then the following week we had a discussion. Because of the complexities that you are dealing with here, what we did was we actually put it off a full month, and we then had another special meeting, where we spent another two hours going in great detail, really thrashing out some of these ideas. So I just want to first of all let you know that.

The next thing is the other idea that was brought up. You know, why isn't this going through the Solicitor General's office, or why isn't this going through a government office? The thing is that if the Alberta government were to move forward and set up this centre, then the Alberta government would actually be in control. It would be like the United States taking over the UN, which would make it an unworkable situation. Essentially, all we're doing is just providing the shell, just like providing the shell for the UN. We cannot be sort of heavy handed as a government, coming in and saying, "This is ours," because, then, to get the co-operation just wouldn't work. By the way, the Solicitor General's office, of course, and Justice's office did look at this in detail and gave their approval to it. They knew that if they did it, it just wouldn't work.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, sorry. I just missed the last part. I was distracted here. Were you moving an adjournment to this?

Ms DeLong: No.

The Deputy Chair: Oh. Okay.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll try to keep my remarks short. I thank the hon. member for her comments, but I'm afraid you've heightened my concerns rather than soothed them. First of all, the stated purpose of this organization is to collect intelligence. Now, I'm somewhat soothed, I suppose, by clause 14, which says that "Nothing in this Act exempts the Centre from the application of any other federal or provincial statute." That's good, except that effectively prevents them from collecting intelligence. They cannot store or disseminate any information relating to private individuals, nor can they under our criminal legislation collect any information about child pornography or store any information, download, intercept communications, or anything like that. So this organization is dead in the water by the application of clause 14.

Now, the member insisted that the police forces are clamouring for this. Well, then, I would suggest that this is an entirely inappropriate use of the private bills process. If they're clamouring for it, they should be going through ministers to get it established. But the member makes the point that there's a need to be independent because if Alberta were to take over this thing, then it would become unworkable. I would suggest that the public has always been responsible for law enforcement in all of its aspects, and to this point it's been rather workable. Furthermore, I would suggest, considering that this is some kind of international cyber thing, that really this is the responsibility of the federal government, who holds responsibility for international relations, international policing, co-operation with other governments, co-operation with other police forces, which further really confuses the issue.

Finally – and I'll say this in all due respect – the description of this thing as a shell is not at all a comforting one. I really believe I'm at the point where you're not going to be able to address my concerns. I'm not going to support this. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I think that the hon. Member for Peace River's concerns and suspicions are very well warranted. I, in fact, was and am a member of this committee. There were a number of us who voted against this private bill, I'll let you know. I believe there were government members as well that voted against it.

You know, the confusion that we've seen is the separation between the intentions of this group and the edifice, so to speak, that we're building through private bills that they are seeking approval from this legislative body. You know, in their presentations the gentlemen that want to set up CyberPol made no bones about it. They said: this would give us some legitimacy for our institute that'll help us to, you know, sell this in different places and different jurisdictions. I thought to myself: that is not necessarily the mechanism that we're providing as a private bills committee or as a Legislature, for that matter, so in that instance I was somewhat critical of this proposal.

Another issue that brought me to be suspicious were the very tepid letters from police forces in regard to putting together this cyber centre. The letters were very tepid, indeed. You know, it made me think that there was some jurisdictional problem, really, why these gentlemen were going to start this and somehow duplicate, certainly, what the Edmonton police force does with their ICE unit and other units as well.

The whole idea of private intelligence companies is not new. We have many examples of this around the world. They can be hired by corporations to gather intelligence and to somehow do the bidding of their clients. When I see a nonprofit organization coming here for some legitimacy to do something similar in that way, I find it, again, not in keeping with the spirit or the letter of what we're intending private bills to be.

Also, I have had registered to me serious reservations and concerns by lawyers about this bill, people who have looked at this bill and had serious reservations about the governance of the nonprofit organization and, you know, the collecting of information, as was pointed out by the Member for Peace River. There's just a whole range of unanswered questions that led me to vote against this in our committee. I'm now expressing my reservations here publicly, as a number of other people have, and other members of the committee did vote against this as well.

At this point, I think it's incumbent and useful for us to adjourn debate on this issue, and we will reflect on it as we spend our evenings. Thanks.

Bill 30
Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to thank all members that supported this bill yesterday as it went into second reading. This is good legislation. There were a few comments and a few questions yesterday that were asked. I believe that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing was able to give clarification to some of these issues. I would ask all members to support this and call for the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of my colleagues in the Official Opposition we're happy at this time to support Committee of the Whole for Bill 30, Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Decore spoke to the bill at length. As the shadow minister he is supporting it, and we will certainly follow his lead. We've had an opportunity to run through the stakeholders groups in a stakeholder loop, and it's been fairly positive feedback. It's essentially a housekeeping bill, so at this time we're happy to support it.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

5:20

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 43, 44, and 30.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 43, Bill 44, and Bill 30. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill Pr. 1. Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 45
Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction)
Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move Bill 45, Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, for second reading.

I introduced it earlier this week. Government has agreed to a policy which will change the Smoke-free Places Act to expand the scope of protection from second-hand smoke and decrease access to tobacco promotion. The bill reflects government's belief that we need to support Albertans in improving their health status, and the bill certainly responds to the request from many Albertans. By building on the Smoke-free Places Act to extend protection from second-hand smoke by prohibiting smoking in all public places and workplaces, we advance the opportunity for Albertans to take responsibility for their own health. In order to ensure that that happens, of course, it's necessary to make sure that there's a space from windows or doorways or fresh air intakes, so that is included in the act.

The tobacco reduction act also purports to ban power walls. That's something that we know has been a very effective method for tobacco companies to promote their product and particularly promote their products to young people. I was chagrined through the whole process of putting this together to learn just how much is paid in product placement fees by tobacco companies to convenience stores and others who have power walls, particularly, as I understand it, if they're close to schools, which tells us just exactly who these products are being marketed to.

Mr. Speaker, suffice to say smoking kills. It kills 3,400 Albertans every year. We spend millions of dollars to treat disease caused by tobacco use. It's not just lung cancer; it's cancers of many forms. It's certainly lung disease. It's heart disease. It not only costs in productivity, it costs in health status and the cost to human life. And it's not as if it's a quick end to life; it's usually a very miserable end to life.

Pharmacists have long requested that we act to ban the sale of cigarettes in pharmacies, and this bill will purport to do that. Under the regulations there will be an opportunity to exempt certain places from the provisions of the act so that in a community where there is only a single source, there's an opportunity to deal with those anomalies.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important piece of legislation for health status in Alberta. We're at that time. Municipalities have asked us to level the playing field. Many others have asked us to do this. I would ask the House to support it for second reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Oh, my gosh, I didn't think we were going to get here, to this day, so I'm darn glad to see that we did.

Mr. Renner: Gosh, Laurie, all those days when you guys used to go out on the balcony and smoke.

Ms Blakeman: I'm being gently chided by one of my colleagues from across the way about the days when we used to go outside on the balcony and smoke. Indeed, that's true. When I first started, you could actually smoke in the rotunda around the stairwells. There were ashtrays and everything, with little nice imprints on the top like they do in the fancy hotels.

We've come a long way. I managed to quit smoking. Thank you to whoever invented Zyban; I really appreciate the help. I think it actually was the inconvenience of smoking that got me to take that extra step. There was so much time in planning where to go and how to smoke and how far outside the building you had to go. It just became too much work for my little administrative brain. It just bugged me how much time I was wasting trying to figure it out. It certainly was a factor.

Let's not kid ourselves; that wasn't easy. I'd smoked for 32 years. I started smoking as a 12-year-old. That's the time that tobacco companies are most successful in hooking young people to smoke. Once you get someone really young to smoke, boy, is it hard to break them out of that.

I think we as a society have come a long way in understanding the harm that smoking can do to individuals and the harm that it does overall to the workplace, to our productivity as a nation. This is the government showing leadership finally. Certainly, the Official Opposition was happy to support the other original smoking bill that was brought forward a couple of years ago. We were very disappointed in the amendments that, basically, had the effect of banning people or banning children rather than banning smoking. It was a very odd twist on things.

I'm pleased to see that there is a complete ban on smoking in public places and particularly in workplaces. Now we can protect all the workers, including the workers who work in bars and in bingo halls and in casinos because those workers have not been protected over the last couple of years. I'm pleased to see that we can protect a worker no matter where they are working. I think that's important.

For my purposes, I talked about becoming a smoker at a very young age, so to me the whole issue of power walls is a really important one. I think the government really has shown leadership on this one because they got out ahead of it. Bringing forward legislation that combines a smoking ban in public places and in workplaces, the banning of the power walls, and limiting where the tobacco products can be sold is indeed leadership. Putting them all together should actually catapult us ahead of many other places in Canada now for looking at the whole package, and I'm really glad to see that.

5:30

The Speaker is aware that I have worked very closely with a group of young people from one of my schools in Edmonton-Centre, and that is the Nellie McClung program for girls that is situated in Oliver school. They developed a BLAST team and started to work on the whole idea of whether they could get their hands on smoking products. Indeed, they even did a little video. They taped themselves being able to get hold of tobacco products in a local store. They also got very involved in the idea of getting power walls banned, and they've really worked hard on this. I think they deserve a piece of the credit for helping to convince the government to take this seriously and to include banning power walls in this legislation.

They did a postcard campaign in which they went to different places and got their friends and family and others to sign postcards and send them through to the previous minister of health asking that power walls be banned. They did a conference at which they invited BLAST teams from other schools to come and join them in having a learning conference. This past winter, a couple of months ago, they came and did a rally on the steps of the Legislature. I've introduced them a couple of times in the House and tried to bring their message forward.

I'm really, really proud of those young women for sticking with this. You know, to somebody that's younger the idea that it might have taken a couple of years to change public policy just seems like forever. To me, the fact that we managed to turn this around in less than two years is very fast public policy. So I really appreciate those young women staying on this one. Special credit to their mentor and instructor Heather Jubenvill who was recognized for her work doing this with an excellence in teaching award from the Edmonton Public school board just recently. It really was very fine leadership, and I'm very proud of her and the work that she's done with those young women.

Now, is the bill perfect? Very close. The two things that I'm interested in – and maybe someone will be able to give me the answer for this. There's no proclamation date given. It comes into effect on proclamation, and that's undefined. I'm wondering if I need to bring in an amendment that actually sets a hard date on it or if there's a reason why the government doesn't want a hard date. For example, January 1, 2008, sounds darned good to me, but maybe there's a reason why there isn't a date that's given, so I'm happy to hear the reason on that.

I'm also aware that there is still a desire on behalf of people that have worked long and hard in this area, like the folks associated with the Action on Smoking and Health group, to expand the prohibition on where tobacco products can be sold. Right now the act is contemplating health facilities where anyone under the Health Professions Act would be providing services, the campus of a public postsecondary institution, a pharmacy or a retail store that has a pharmacy in it or where a pharmacy is directly connected by a hallway. Those are the places under this act where you can no longer sell tobacco products. There is a suggestion that it go further and prohibit the grounds and premises of primary and secondary schools, for example, the grounds and premises of child care facilities, and amusement establishments and facilities. That would include arts and cultural venues, theatres for example, and sport, recreation, and cultural events.

Now, for the most part in Edmonton, for example, because of the city of Edmonton bylaw we've had smoking prohibited in those places for a very long time, but this is also contemplating prohibiting tobacco sales. Somebody this morning said to me: do they still have cigarette vending machines? I haven't noticed them, but I bet you they're still out there. It would seem a little odd, I admit, to have a tobacco vending machine on a child care facility premise, but stranger things have happened.

An Hon. Member: There's a federal law.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, there's a federal law. Well, good on them.

There was a suggestion from them that we look at actually spelling that out in the bill. It may not be necessary, and I look forward to hearing from anyone that would like to supply an answer to that, as to whether it's just an oversight or, in fact, whether they are covered through other legislation.

I know that there are a number of people that want to get on the record with this, and I would like to see second reading happen this afternoon. So, although I would like to spend more time talking about this, I'm not going to, Mr. Speaker.

I am pleased to see the ban on smoking in public places and particularly in workplaces to protect workers, the result of a lot of hard work on banning the power walls. But I think that's particularly important if we're going to potentially convince young people to not take up smoking because it's really, really hard to knock that addiction once you start smoking when you're young.

That's, frankly, why tobacco companies spend so much time and money and attention on trying to convince younger people that smoking is cool. That's why we have power walls. Yeah, it's to remind the grownups of the colour of their pack of cigarettes, but it's really about getting the kids, to normalize smoking for kids. The fact that they could do studies and find children who had never smoked who could tell you the colour and the design of a Player's package of cigarettes tells you how pervasive and invasive that kind of tobacco advertising like power walls is. So banning the power walls and the advertising in the stores is incredibly important, and limiting where people can purchase I think is the final piece of this fairly comprehensive plan.

I'm very happy to support it at this point. I will let others speak to it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we will support this bill. I would give the minister of health absolute credit because two years ago we know what happened in this Legislature. This bill goes further than that bill did, and we couldn't pass it two years ago. I would have rather seen it happen two years ago because, you know, we may have saved some lives in those two years. But I think it's important, and I give all due credit to the minister and to the government members that we are coming forward with this bill today.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of simple reasons that I'd like to put on record. I won't go on long. One of the reasons is an economic thing. When Edmonton did it, the patchwork didn't make much sense because I had bar owners in my constituency say to me: well, it's not fair; people can go right over to Sherwood Park, you know, in 10 or 15 minutes. It never made much sense to me, the patchwork. It was much more important to do it at the provincial level, and thankfully this is happening now.

I just want to put on record a couple of things on why we need a bill like this, Mr. Speaker. First of all, according to the Lung Association, in areas where similar rules have been placed, consumption decreased by 20 to 40 per cent. Such measures denormalize smoking and prevent new smokers from lighting up. Well, a 20 to 40 per cent drop is significant. It's significant for our health care system. It's significant for what the Member for Edmonton-Centre was talking about, young people starting the habit. The bill has the potential of reducing or limiting potential new smokers from taking up the habit, curtailing serious diseases, improving the quality of life for Albertans, and reducing premature death: all the things that the minister of health was talking about.

Then the figures are startling. They got this from doing a little bit of research. From 1998 to 2004, Mr. Speaker, lung and bronchial cancer rates in California declined at a rate four times that of the rest of the U.S.A. to decreases in cigarette consumption. In other words, after California brought in a similar bill, these are the figures. Now, those are big, startling figures. That came from the California Department of Health Services, tobacco control section, 2002. They also go on to say that in addition, 58,900 heart disease deaths were prevented during the first nine years of the California tobacco control program. Same source. These are big figures. It shows you exactly how important this bill is as the minister of health said.

The other figure that I think is interesting comes from AADAC. It says that in 2002, approximately $470.6 million was spent in Alberta caring for tobacco related illness. Additional societal costs arise from lost income due to premature death, disability, worker absenteeism, reduced productivity, and tobacco subsidies . . . Tobacco is often responsible for substantial loss of life and property damage accounting for one in four fire deaths in Alberta.

Again, this is a lot of money. If we're looking at saving money for the health care system, this shows that this is a very significant step forward.

Additionally, according to the Review of the Quality of Studies on the Economic Effects of Smoke-free Policies on the Hospitality Industry – that's where you get a lot of the complaints – virtually every scientifically sound study on the economic impact of smoke-free laws demonstrates that while there may be an initial adjustment period, there is no – and I repeat – no lasting negative impact of smoke-free laws on the hospitality industry.

Those are the reasons we need a bill like this. Again, Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP opposition gladly support second reading of this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by Calgary-Nose Hill.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did want to get on record with this, and I will just make a few remarks on Bill 45, the tobacco reduction act. This is a good bill, and I think it really reflects what the majority of Albertans want and certainly believe in, but further than that it also reflects the majority of Canadians' feelings on this concept of a smoke-free atmosphere.

I just would like to make a very quick remark about what I feel is something that has to be looked at that has to go in tandem with this bill, and that's the fact that we – “we” being Albertans, the government of Alberta – own tobacco stocks, and I believe that we must divest ourselves of those stocks. The reason that I'm saying that is because I have travelled in Africa, Tunisia, and spent a lot of time in Turkey and other countries where I actually saw children as young as five and six smoking. It hasn't started to show up in statistics yet where the industry actually has seen their product sales go down. Unfortunately, it isn't happening fast enough, but it will. To make up for those losses, they are going to all of these countries. They don't need a power wall. They basically just give out free cigarettes to these young kids because there really are no laws to protect them.

That is the main reason, because I've seen what's happened, that I really believe that we have to divest ourselves of the tobacco industry stocks that are in our heritage trust fund.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to speak very briefly in favour of the passage of Bill 45, the Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, in second reading. I believe it's a very progressive measure. It shows leadership on the part of our province. Eliminating the sales of tobacco in places that include pharmacies I think is a very progressive step. For many people it means that they'll no longer be able to purchase cigarettes when they're getting their groceries. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre pointed out, when we make it less convenient for people to smoke, we often reduce the incidence of smoking, and in some cases we cause people to quit altogether. I think that's been illustrated by the experience in some very large office buildings where people have to go down the elevator and go out to the back alley in order to indulge in their habit, and in many cases they have actually quit the habit because of the inconvenience. Similarly, by prohibiting smoking in all public places and near entrances throughout the province, it makes it uniform. As I said, it will also make it more inconvenient for people to smoke in those public places and will thereby reduce the frequency and the incidence of smoking. I believe the provisions regarding the reduction of display advertising for tobacco products is also a very good measure.

I would urge all of my colleagues in the House to support Bill 45 in second reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you. I just want to briefly address Bill 45. I am in favour of it and pleased that we're making steps forward on this, but my concern, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the tobacco reduction bill really is just a ban on public smoking because of the effects that smokers have on those people that they're around or people that are wanting a job not having to work in that atmosphere.

I feel like we're missing out on the most vulnerable of our society. We still have passed no laws regarding smoking around children. That's my biggest concern, that there are still many parents and grandparents in other areas, where people smoke in their own homes and kids come in there. I've said this before in the House, and I'll continue to say it. We're not allowed to drive to town without putting our kids in a seatbelt; we get a fine. We're not allowed to ride our bicycles with our kids; we get a fine. Yet it's just fine for a grandparent to smoke around an infant, and the parents say: I really can't say no to my parents or grandparents.

If we were to pass a misdemeanour or a fine to say that if you're smoking around children, it's $150, and you can't say: “Oh, who's going to enforce it? How are we going to do it?” Just by putting it in place, people can say: “Hey, you're not supposed to do that. You could get a $75 or a $200 fine.” We're missing out on the most vulnerable of our society: those who can't protect themselves, those who can't get away from a vehicle with their parents smoking in it or whatever else the situation is.

We need to step up the bill one more step and have an amendment to protect those who can't get away from smoke. We have lots of good steps forward here. The purpose of this is to take it away, to make it more inconvenient, to make it tougher. The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill just referred to a lot of those things, going down the elevator and having to go out in cold weather. All of those things are good, but how does a child in our society get away from an adult who's smoking a legal substance and says, “It's my right to do it in front of them,” and we have nothing in place? I feel that we need to put an amendment in there to make it an offence to smoke in the presence of children, regardless of where they are, your own home, wherever else. We should not be allowed to be smoking around children.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure just to speak briefly in support of this very progressive legislation. I congratulate the government. I think all of us in the House feel that this is progress. It's been called for by the citizens of Alberta for over a decade. I congratulate ASH, the people of Action on Smoking and Health, and all the tobacco groups, the health groups, the Lung Association. All have been active in trying to get us to move towards a stronger commitment to prevention, and that's what this really is.

The tax on tobacco has been an important influence. How to make the healthy choice, the easy choice, becomes the real question, and this is another layer on that to try to improve the health status of our population and reduce the impacts on our health system. There are only a couple of areas left, some of which are federal and some of which may be assisted by a provincial bill to look at more restrictions on sponsorship and a stronger commitment to education in school systems and beyond. I with my colleagues will stand in support of this Smoke-free Places (Tobacco Reduction) Amendment Act, 2007, Bill 45.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will be very, very brief. I would like to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for his work on this and thank him. This is long overdue. I, too, as we discussed in caucus earlier today, had concerns about the implementation of this bill. I would like to see this bill proclaimed and be in force by the new year, 2008.

Thank you.

Bill 17
Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 17, Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. This legislation is intended to clarify the law for Albertans and avoid unnecessary litigation in two areas. I have spoken quite extensively on this, but to add further clarity to the bill, I'm proposing one House amendment, which I have before me and I will ask the Clerk to circulate.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The House amendments are with respect to section 74(1) and section 106(1)(c) of the Land Titles Act. This House amendment to those two sections will ensure that the sections continue to operate as intended under the former Limitation of Actions Act and the current Limitations Act.

The clarification that's being made has come by way of a recommendation from the Alberta Law Reform Institute, and it was done as a result of consultation with both the Alberta Law Reform Institute and Service Alberta. I believe that there's general agreement that this does not change the intent of the bill but just simply clarifies the application of those provisions.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would urge the approval of the amendment to the bill.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I have conferred with my colleague the shadow minister for Justice and the Attorney General on this House amendment from the government, and he has been in discussions with both the hon. sponsoring member and the minister and, I think, staff. There's been a fair amount of talking about this. He had no objection to the proposed amendment, and I believe he had enough time to study it. So at this point I'm happy to support amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 17 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 18
Judicature Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to bring this matter before committee, Bill 18, the Judicature Amendment Act, 2007. I have one small House amendment to propose to the House with respect to this, and that is with respect to section 23(2) of the act. I will ask the pages to distribute the amendment proposed.

Mr. Chairman, section 23(2) states that "for the purposes of this section, instituting vexatious proceedings or conducting a proceeding in a vexatious manner includes, without limitation, any one or more of the following." The word "section" should be replaced with the word "Part." Bill 18 creates a new part 2.1 in the Judicature Act containing two sections, sections 23 and 23.1. The provisions in section 23(2) are applicable to the whole of part 2.1. In other words, we want to be clear that the provisions apply to both of those sections.

The second House amendment relates to section 23(2)(d), and it states "inappropriately using previously raised grounds and issues in subsequent proceedings" is a factor indicative of vexatious proceed ings. This is directed at a tendency of some vexatious litigants to bring grounds and issues forward into subsequent lawsuits often against the lawyers who acted for or against them in earlier actions. The report on vexatious litigants done by the Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia included this factor as an example of vexatious behaviour, and we interpreted the word “inappropriately” to include some level of persistence.

Now, in light of the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we believe that this should be clarified, and we would propose to amend section (23)(2)(d) to state, and I quote . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the committee has to now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 17. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 18. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a member seated in your gallery, Mr. Jack Hayden, MLA-elect for Drumheller-Stettler. Jack has a long history of service not only to his community but to all people in the province of Alberta. His honesty, integrity, and commitment will be a very welcome addition to this Assembly. It's a very special privilege for me to ask my good friend and new colleague Mr. Hayden to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff members from the government of Alberta intern network. These individuals are here today as part of the public service orientation tour. It's obvious in this government that these people could do their job without us, but we could never do ours without them. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to introduce to you and to all Members of the Legislative Assembly special guests from the Gateway Christian school, which, of course, is located in the heart of Alberta, Red Deer, Alberta. I'd like to introduce their teachers that are with them – Carolyn Stolte, Jim Driedger, Tracy Beingessner – and parents Cathy Nicolay, Christine Hopkins, and Chrystal Lloyd. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to make two introductions today, again. First of all, a school from Satinwood. Satinwood school is a small school out in the county of Lacombe. There are 31 students and two teachers: Mr. Ted Jardine and Mr. Chris Kooman. With them are six parent helpers: Mrs. Liana Walters, Mrs. Toni VanLanduyt, Mrs. Marlene Capton, Mrs. Bev Knopf, Mrs. Nancy Barnhill, and Mrs. Shauna Case. I would ask these visitors to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have a further introduction to you and to all members of the Assembly, and that is my youngest sister. I have three brothers and three sisters, and my youngest sister, Laura Prins, is with us today. I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce my executive assistant, Dr. Carol Anderson. She literally runs my life. Also joining her today to my surprise – on May 11, as we know, our Premier celebrated his sixth 50th birthday, but today it's my pleasure to introduce for the first time our new son, Marc, who was born on the Premier's birthday, and my lovely wife, Gail.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, several months ago we needed to fill a staff position in our office, so the minister of advanced education and I jointly got together and stole Ms Lauren Parker from the minister of agriculture. She has been working as the receptionist jointly for the two offices. Lauren is about to leave public service. She's travelling to the Czech Republic, where she's going to become a teacher in early childhood education. I would ask Lauren to stand and receive the welcome from all members of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members in the Assembly Miss Sim Khehra, who is a constituent of mine and who is currently completing her second year of accounting at NAIT. Thereafter, she hopes to go on and complete her chartered accountant designation at the University of Alberta. Meanwhile, she's working and helping me in the constituency office as a STEP student. I'm grateful for her help, and I would ask Sim Khehra to now please rise and receive the warm welcome and thanks of our Assembly. [Remarks in Punjabi] A million congratulations. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What a distinguished pleasure for me today to introduce some volunteers, and if I listed all of their accomplishments, it would take longer than the time allotted. These are community members that unselfishly give of themselves for all kinds of causes, sometimes political ones but very frequently for charitable works, for good works that help out in our community. They really are the backbone and strength of my community. Allow me to introduce with great pleasure Anna Gnyp, Rick McDonald, Thomas Lo, Ted Tennison, Paulette Coburn, and Maria Kuhrt. If they would rise – they are in the members' gallery – and if we would show them the warm appreciation that they so richly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my guests are not here right now. I may request a later introduction. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three groups of introductions today, and I'd like to introduce them all individually.

Firstly, it is my great honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you Darlene Hasinoff, the mother of Maureen Hasinoff, who is an accomplished young lady and a valued page in our Assembly, also a resident of the Hairsine community in Edmonton-Manning. Maureen's mom is a customer service representative for our great Edmonton Eskimos. Darlene is here today in the Speaker's gallery. Darlene, please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is of Todd and Brenda Molineaux, who also live in Edmonton-Manning and who have been actively involved within their community as coaches and community activists and many things. Todd is the unofficial mayor for rural north Edmonton and is a leader in many community activities, as is Brenda. Todd is a firefighter in Edmonton, and Brenda is with the Edmonton Police Service. I would also like to make a special note that on July 2 of this year Todd and Brenda will be celebrating their 25th anniversary of marriage. Todd and Brenda, please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Last but certainly not least, Mr. Speaker, is my good friend Oliver Lepps. Oliver is an accomplished heavy hoisting expert, long known as a master in his trade all over western Canada and in the north. Oliver is a leader in the Guyanese community in Alberta and is well known as a community activist to many political leaders, both past and present. Oliver and his wife, Mavis, have raised a tremendous family, many leaders in their own right. I ask all members of this Assembly to give a very warm welcome to this great Albertan, Oliver Lepps.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Pascal Ryffel. Pascal was born in Switzerland, moved to Canada with his family in 1993. He has a degree in sociology from the University of Alberta and enjoys the constantly changing political environment of Alberta. I don't know who wrote this. He was president of the University of Alberta Amnesty International chapter in 2004-05. Pascal joined our NDP caucus team this May as our sessional outreach assistant. Before joining us here at the Legislature, he spent a few years overseas travelling and working in various countries, including Russia, Kosovo, and Iraq. I would now ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Mathieu Roy. Mathieu joined our NDP caucus team in mid-May. He's a participant of the Quebec/Alberta student exchange and is currently a caucus assistant in the NDP opposition. Mathieu is from Drummondville, Quebec, and is completing his honours degree in political studies at Bishop's. He is a recipient of the millennium excellence scholarship and the Florence May Foreman scholarship. Mathieu has been of great assistance this past month. We appreciate all of his hard work and enthusiasm, and I would now ask that he please rise.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Alejandro Pachon. Alejandro originally hails from Bogotá, Colombia, where he completed a bachelor of arts degree in sociology. After finishing that degree, he moved to Ibagué, a smaller city in Colombia, and worked as a teacher for the SOS-Kinderdorf International organization, an NGO focused on neglected and abandoned children and orphans. He arrived in Canada five years ago to study English and French and decided to stay here and has since completed another degree in political science from the University of Alberta. In his free time he works on a research project about armed conflict and peace in his native Colombia, and whatever time remains he spends with his young son Sebastian. We are pleased to have Alejandro join the NDP caucus team as a sessional policy field analyst. He's done an amazing job over the months that he's been with us. I will now ask Alejandro to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three exceptional individuals that I'll call political Sherpas as they help me try and climb this political mountain under extreme conditions and thin air and all the other conditions they might suffer. I've got Steve Ellingson, Jonathon Iverson, and the third one, David Strong, here that help me out a great deal, the Alberta Alliance caucus. I'd like them to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? Then, hon. members, let me do some introductions as well. On June 12 of this week two by-elections were held in the province of Alberta, but seven years and two days ago, on June 12, 2000, elected to this Assembly was the now-serving Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Tomorrow, June 15, is the 14th anniversary of the election of 1993. At that time, elected to the Assembly for their first terms were the following individuals: the hon. gentleman who now serves as the Premier of the province of Alberta, the hon. Minister of Environment, the hon. Minister of Finance, the hon. Member for Calgary-East, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. Fourteen years ago tomorrow.

Members' Statements

Tribute to Fathers

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, this is a tribute to fathers. The humour belongs to Phil Callaway. The sentiments are mine. When I got married, fatherhood was not the first thing on my mind. In fact, kids can be disgusting. They stuff peas in their ears and corn down their diapers. They blow things out their noses, and then they want a kiss. With little money at my disposal, I believed that poverty was hereditary. You get it from your kids. But then one night my beautiful wife stood before me in some rather expensive lingerie and said: honey, let's have kids, tons of them. It seemed like a good idea at the time.

Twenty-eight years ago I met the first two of my four children. Yes, twins. I would hold them like two little footballs, one head in each hand, and stroll down the mall proud as can be. Then came my daughters. I tell you, girls are sweet on their dads. They can manipulate your heart like no one else. I've taken my kids into the wilderness and pushed them up mountains. Character building, I told them. They whined the whole way. Now I whine while they push me. I taught them to skate and play hockey. Now I can't match their strides. I've learned that having adventures and experiences with your kids is more important than buying them stuff. It has been an awesome ride.

Sunday is Father's Day. I want to thank my heavenly Father for the privilege of being a father and now a grandfather. I thank Him for the wonderful father that I have. God understands that not every kid has a good father and declares Himself to be the Father to the fatherless. I want to thank all fathers and encourage you in what you do with and for your kids. It is the most important and most rewarding responsibility you will ever have in life. Happy Father's Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Climate Change

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently climate change has become a movement popularized by pop culture and media bombardment. The reality is that climate change is a real issue affecting all members of the globe equally. To combat climate change, Albertans do not need to slow our unprecedented rate of growth or our broad, powerful economy. Rather, we must take realistic and efficient measures to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and live more environmentally conscious lives.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to draw your attention to Climate Change Central. This Alberta not-for-profit organization was established in the year 2000 to incorporate the views of the public and private sectors to address the challenges our resource-based economy has on the environment. As the vice co-chair in the executive I have witnessed practical solutions in working towards the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

The sunniest city in Alberta, Medicine Hat, was the first of 20 municipalities to sign up for the lasso the sun program. This program involves the use of solar modules on rooftops which connect to the power grid. It is expected that this program will reduce 25 megawatt hours of electricity and reduce CO₂ emissions by 22 tonnes every hour. In Lethbridge the waste-water treatment plant replaced its coarse-bubble aeration system with a more efficient fine-bubble system. Just by changing the size of bubbles, more oxygen transfer was achieved and savings of about 2,000 megawatt hours of electricity per year.

As of last year the projects administered by the government of Alberta through Climate Change Central resulted in $2.8 million in energy savings and reducing greenhouse gas emissions by 39,600 tonnes annually. Mr. Speaker, these are only examples of a couple of successes of Climate Change Central, and with progressive thinking like this, we can achieve more without compromising our growth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ukrainian Shumka Dancers

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, Edmonton's exciting Ukrainian Shumka Dancers have been described as outstanding artistic ambassadors for Edmonton, as a jewel in the crown of Alberta, and as a Canadian cultural icon. Since 1959 Shumka has preserved, promoted, and presented Ukrainian arts and culture through dance, music, costume, and folklore. They have evolved and developed enormously over 48 years and have performed throughout Canada, the U.S.A., China, Japan, Africa, Russia, Ukraine, and many, many other locations, including command performances for Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, for Prime Ministers and Presidents, and special performances alongside great artists such as Anne Murray, Julie Andrews, Christopher Plummer, and others.

Ever mindful of their roots, however, Shumka has always presented most of its concerts right here in Alberta: in our cities, in our towns, and in dozens of rural communities. To date, about 400 dancers count themselves as former Shumka dancers, and I'm proud to say that that number includes myself, my wife, our son, and our daughter. We are all Shumka alumni.

This past weekend the Ukrainian Shumka Dancers Alumni Association unveiled the Shumka stage in the heart of Louise McKinney park in Edmonton's beautiful river valley. The Shumka stage is a truly marvellous performance venue that will be available to local performing groups and visitors and to service clubs through the city of Edmonton's community development department. I want to congratulate the Ukrainian Shumka Dancers Alumni Association on completing this legacy project, and I wish to thank the city of Edmonton, the government of Alberta, the government of Canada, and numerous private corporations and individuals for their contributions and/or support.

Thank you also to the founding artistic director, Chester Kuc, to subsequent artistic directors Orest Semchuk, John Pichlyk, George Chronik, Gordon Gordey, to associate director Dave Ganert, to the Shumka alumni president, John Eshenko, and to all Shumka alumni who helped make this project a reality.

Well done and congratulations, Shumka and Shumka alumni.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Assistance for Low-income Seniors

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council I'd like to congratulate the mayor and council of the city of Edmonton for running a program that helps low-income seniors. The city and the province each have programs which help senior homeowners to get financial relief on their municipal taxes. The city of Edmonton has the seniors' homeowner grant program, which gives a payment to 9,400 low-income senior households. This year city council set the payment at $63. This is the third year that the city has offered the program. The government of Alberta's education property tax assistance program provides funding for senior homeowners to offset any increase in the education component of the property tax. More than 24,000 households in Edmonton receive an average of $95.

Governments helping seniors is not unique. However, this partnership is unique because governments are working together to help seniors better. The city of Edmonton funds their programs, and they identify homeowners. The government of Alberta determines which households are seniors through the universal education property tax program. It determines which are low-income seniors by using information from the Alberta seniors' benefit program, and it produces cheques which reflect payments under both the city and the Alberta programs. Because the governments work together to administer this program, seniors do not need to fill out two sets of forms. They receive one cheque, and taxpayers save on the administrative and mailing costs.

I want to congratulate the mayor and council for the city of Edmonton for being so thoughtful and caring and helping so many Edmonton seniors deal with rising living costs. I challenge other municipalities in the province to introduce efficient programs like this one to help out their senior residents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's 504 parks and protected areas are a priceless resource. They contribute hugely to our quality of life, they improve the economy through tourism, and they support the protection of our precious natural environment. But according to a report released yesterday by CPAWS, this government must do more to ensure that our parks are properly protected and maintained. The report is quite critical of this government, noting that our parks are understaffed and that protected areas must be expanded to shield a much larger percentage of the environment from development.

As those protected areas expand, this government must ensure that funding can adequately keep up with the increase, as it has failed to do in the last 15 years. The report notes that Alberta has the weakest parks legislation in the country. This is a dreadful shame and an appalling truth, considering that Alberta is the steward of some of the most precious and beautiful wilderness on the entire planet.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as stewards of Alberta's environment this government must do its part to protect the integrity and diversity of the province's wildlife. The General Status of Alberta Wild Species 2005 report shows that over 10 per cent of Alberta wildlife is at risk. The loss of so many species would be catastrophic. The government must act now to address this serious threat to our environment.

As Albertans we have a sacred duty to take care of the land and wildlife that we have been so fortunate to inherit. I would ask this government to take its duty seriously and to strengthen its commitment to our parks and protected areas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Multiculturalism

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are winners, not whiners. That is why so many want to move to Alberta, to live in our Alberta, and to become Albertans. It is not only because of oil and other rich resources that people want in. It is because of the can-do, make-it-happen attitude that has grown from our rich tradition and history.

Part of that rich history is our aboriginal heritage. National Aboriginal Day is on June 21, and Alberta will again let that rich basis of our heritage shine. That week will see many celebrations and will also see widespread recognition of our First Nations and Inuit and Métis communities in the media and in our minds. I urge all to attend one of the celebrations and to honour our aboriginal heritage in Alberta.

Another crucial part of our Alberta heritage is our multicultural strength and diversity. Alberta is a model for the world on living in harmony. All nations are becoming multicultural as the world becomes smaller, but in the 49 countries that I have seen in my short time on this Earth, Canada and especially Alberta are certainly the safest and most secure area on the planet, especially for those who want to raise a family.

June 27 is Canadian Multiculturalism Day. In Edmonton we have heritage days on the August long weekend. It is the most well-attended festival in Alberta. We have the wonderful diversity of dance and culture that has grown from our multiculturalism. We have the safety that grows from Albertans understanding the cultural background of others while at the same time celebrating that we are all Canadians. We even have great artists like Cheremosh going on a trip to China to showcase one of Alberta's great cultural heritage expressions, that of Ukrainian dance.

Even the effort to have multiculturalism in our Canadian Constitution was led out of Alberta, with the great former mayor of Edmonton, Laurence Decore, leading that charge. I am sure he'd be proud of the continued efforts for multiculturalism today in Alberta. I am sure he would be a supporter of our new Premier and his government.

Please attend all multicultural events on June 27 and at other times this summer. Let's grow Alberta and our understanding of others.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Kristen Lawson from the law firm Miller Thomson, one of the petitioners for Bill Pr. 1, CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act. Though not up for debate today, the bill is currently before the House. Now, if Kristen would please rise in the members' gallery, I'd encourage everyone to give her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very exciting day for me and for all members of the Alberta Liberal caucus because I rise today to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a new colleague, the MLA-elect for Calgary-Elbow for the Alberta Liberals, Mr. Craig Cheffins. Joining Craig is his wife, who worked so hard on the campaign, Jocelyn Barton-Cheffins, and their son Sam Cheffins. Please give them a warm reception. Thank you.

Joining them are a number of other candidates, in particular the candidate who worked so hard for us in Drumheller-Stettler without success – and we all know that can happen – Mr. Tom Dooley, who is here with his wife, Dani. They worked incredibly hard. Win or lose, we all know how much participation is needed in the democratic process. Thank you so much.

We also have several other people with us. I believe Tom and Dani's son John Dooley is here – he managed their campaign, a recent grad of a political science program – and several other candidates for the Alberta Liberals: Aman Gill from Edmonton-Mill Creek; Keith Elliott and his hard-working wife, Gwen Elliott, from Wetaskiwin-Camrose; Bill Fraser from Stony Plain; Dawit Isaac, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview; Carole Oliver, Calgary-Fort; Bill Kurtze, Calgary-Hays; Jim Kane, Edmonton-Calder; Sandeep Dhir, Edmonton-Manning; Nancy Cavanaugh, Edmonton-Whitemud; Darshan Kang, Calgary-McCall, and one of his close assistants, Avinash Khangura, from Calgary-McCall as well; Pat Murray, Calgary-North Hill; and with them the executive director of the Alberta Liberals, Kieran Lablanc.

Ladies and gentlemen, this is the competition. Please give them a warm welcome. Thank you very much.

Royal Assent

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Assembly approved a motion earlier this week which would see the Honourable Lieutenant Governor call upon the Assembly.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[The Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the absence of the Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms I'm going to do something that's never been done before. I've received a letter from the pages who are retiring or leaving, and I was so impressed by the letter that in this interim period I'm going to call upon the head page, Jennifer Huygen, to come forward, stand on the Speaker's dais, and read to you her letter.

Ms Huygen:

Mr. Speaker, as the Third Session of the 26th Legislature comes to a close, we would like to take this opportunity to share our gratitude for the amazing opportunity that has been bestowed on us through our service to the province of Alberta as Pages.

Firstly, we would like to thank you Mr. Speaker, all Members of the Legislative Assembly, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Table Officers, the Legislative Assembly Security Staff, the rest of the Pages, and all those in and around the Legislature who have contributed to this unforgettable experience.

In an article published in the Edmonton Journal on Monday, February 10, 1913, the Alberta Pages are described as "bright streaks of mischief". Some things never change. On the other hand, from our humble vantage points at the front and back of the Chamber, we have witnessed growth and transformation within the Assembly and each Member who works so hard for the betterment of our province. We have also noticed a remarkable change within ourselves – we entered this building as teenagers and now leave as young adults, ready to tackle the world.

Whether we were here for one year or four years, we learned that politicians don't operate in black and white. Rather the experiences and ideas that we have seen emerge in this Chamber have opened our eyes to the human nature of politics.

Not many people have had the opportunity to walk this floor and serve the distinct people that make up the Legislative Assembly, and as each of us leaves this Chamber today we will be able to take with us vivid memories of all night debates, visits from members of the Royal Family, inspiring speeches, jokes and new friendships. This is why the Page Programme truly is more than mere employment.

It has truly been an honour and a privilege to work on the floor of this Assembly, and for this, we simply say, thank you!

Yours sincerely,

Maureen Hasinoff, Jennifer Huygen, Samantha Johnston, Taddes Korris, Kaley Pederson, Adam Pisani, and Danielle Wiebe.

[Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Isn't that marvellous? She was given no warning. That's the Alberta kid of today.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and the Premier entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne]

His Honour: Hon. members, please be seated.

The Speaker: May it please His Honour, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta has at its present sittings passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request your Honour's assent.

The Clerk: Your Honour, the following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

- 26 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007
- 29 Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007
- 30 Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007
- 32 Animal Health Act
- 33 Town of Bashaw and Village of Ferintosh Water Authorization Act
- 39 Engineering, Geological and Geophysical Professions Amendment Act, 2007
- 44 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

[The Lieutenant Governor indicated his assent]

The Clerk: In Her Majesty's name His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour and the Premier left the Chamber]

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, while we await the return of the Premier and the beginning of the question period, I'm going to call on the hon. Deputy Speaker for some words.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Deputy Chair of Committees and myself and, indeed, all the members of the Assembly I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all the pages for their wonderful service to the members of the Assembly this past session.
