Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll come back to the housing task force. Those of us that were on that task force heard numerous and often heart-wrenching personal accounts of people struggling to deal with our housing crisis. I said the other day that it is a crisis affecting thousands of people in this province. This task force: there were big expectations. The government set it up with a lot of fanfare. I'm now asking the Premier: in retrospect would the government now reconsider and release this publicly as soon as possible rather than waiting to put a political spin on it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we recognize, of course, as a government that critical shortage of housing is a real issue for Albertans. It's a quality of life issue, and we're going to work very quickly. We've got the report. We have to build the recommendations. The minister has to bring those to government caucus, to our cabinet policy committee, and in the end to cabinet. We're working very quickly. The minister said May. We'll try and do it even earlier than that.

But, you know, let's not lose sight of the fact that it's the first time that we have members from both sides of the House working on a committee. [interjections] Saying there's something secretive: there wasn't. They were there. The Liberals were there. We were there. Let's work co-operatively together toward one common goal.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, that's all well and dandy that the opposition was on. We appreciate that. But we have calls coming into our office: a 71-year-old woman having to go to work to pay her rent. Rents are going up $500 in some cases. It's happening all over the province. My question to the Premier is: what do I say to these people? Just hang on; we've had a task force, and we're going to review it; don't worry about anything: is that the statement that the government is giving us?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member can say is that this is the first time that this House got together on a very important issue. We're collectively working toward the response to the report. Some of these solutions will not be overnight. There's a critical shortage; I agree. But we're going to have numerous recommendations to determine how it will be approached: working with the private sector, the public sector, trying to find the most efficient, cost-effective way of delivering more housing in the province.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the simple truth of the matter is that this is not operating in an open and transparent manner. This report is there, ready to go. The government can respond to it when they want. People want to know what's in that particular report, Mr. Premier. My question to him is simply this: is this the new idea of government transparency, that we wait to put a political spin on a report that should be out to the people of Alberta? Is this what he means?

Mr. Stelmach: One of the things about having an all-party committee is that he'll know if there's a political spin because he was on that committee, unless you can't remember what's in that report. What a stupid question.

Funding for the Calgary Health Region

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary, with a population of over 1 million people and over 30,000 people moving to it in the last year alone, is facing tremendous pressures in health care. Yet for every resident Calgary health region receives $1,064 while Capital health receives $1,174, over 10 per cent more. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. How can the minister justify this significant disparity in funding between Calgary and Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very important to keep in mind that funding for health is not as simple as counting up the number of people and allocating the dollars on that basis. It's much more complex than that, and it's important that it is much more complex than that. Population growth rates of course are factored into the funding formulas, but attention is also paid to demographics and health services provided. Calgary has a relatively young population, a well-educated population, and we know that health status tracks education. But regions that have a greater number of seniors, for example, get relatively more resources because medical care for seniors costs more than medical care for young people.

The Calgary health region was allocated in excess of $2 billion in the 2006-07 budget, which is an 8.2 per cent increase over the '05-06 budget. Calgary and surrounding communities . . .

Dr. Brown: My supplemental question is for the same minister. Mental health care services have a tremendous impact on quality of life in our communities. The Calgary health region receives about 20 per cent of mental health funding in the province but is expected to serve the needs of over 35 per cent of its population. How can the minister justify that disparity?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, funding is done not just on a question of counting up people; funding is done on a basis of allocation for the services provided and based on the demographic modelling that is done with respect to the area.

For the details with respect to mental health funding I'll talk with the Mental Health Board and determine, again, whether that's being done on an appropriate basis. But it's not as simple and it's intellectually dishonest to take a look at funding strictly on a basis of numbers divided into dollars. You need to look at the people you're serving, the services you're providing, and what is absolutely necessary to be done.

Dr. Brown: My second supplemental is for the minister of advanced education. Over the past 10 years the Calgary health region has predicted and is continuing to predict that over the next 10 years we will need approximately 3,300 physicians. With the government in its present program what is it doing to ensure that adequate resources are put in place at the University of Calgary to train these physicians that'll be needed in southern Alberta?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times in this House, we're working with all of the postsecondaries to get an approach that is a Campus Alberta type of approach to the health workforce plan, the workforce plan in the province. We're working with the three ministries that are involved in providing regional health authorities with the trained staff that they need. As it relates to the University of Calgary, we are in discussions with the University of Calgary for other health care professionals, just as we were with Mount Royal College.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Foster Care

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Providing care for children is an essential and noble task, and foster families provide an exceptional example of this. However, current circumstances are putting children and foster families at risk. Following the death of a child in foster care in January, social workers have spoken out, telling Albertans that there are too few foster families to care for the number of children in need and too few front-line staff to provide the support and monitoring essential to protect children's safety. To the Minister of Children's Services: can the minister please tell us if this labour shortage has affected the amount of monitoring and support available to ensure the safety of children in foster care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd start out by saying that we have thousands of foster parents that are doing a terrific job in this province. Our number one priority will always be the safety and the well-being of our children in care. So what I can tell you is that that's one of the reasons why we have a rigorous screening process that continues today, including home studies, reference checks, criminal record checks, medical references, first aid training. We also know that every child is unique. Every family situation is unique. We do continue with stringent guidelines on the number of children within each foster home.

Mrs. Mather: We have heard that overloading, the practice of asking foster parents to take in more children than they should be eligible to take, is increasing due to the shortage of available foster homes. To the Minister of Children's Services: do foster families have the right to refuse to take in additional children if they believe that they will not be able to provide the necessary care for those children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that they do have the right. Just to give you a little bit of information on the guidelines that we do have: new foster parents can have a maximum of two foster children in their home; experienced foster parents can have a maximum of four foster children in their home. Sometimes we have exceptions if we are trying to keep siblings together. In those cases both the foster parents and the caseworkers would agree on that placement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been reported that because of Alberta's current shortage of foster families children in need of care are sometimes housed in hotel rooms to wait until a family is available. Can the minister tell us how often this is happening and how long these hotel stays usually last?

Ms Tarchuk: I'll get the information for the member. I do know that several weeks ago I had looked into that. It's very, very small. I think that in very unusual circumstances, with the proper individuals to stay with the children, we looked at 12 cases for very short periods of time last year. But I'll follow up with that information to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Affordable Housing Grant Program

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are hearing daily from Albertans about the lack of affordable housing in Alberta. In Red Deer-North we are very fortunate to have a beautiful apartment complex that has 26 affordable housing units and 20 transitional housing units along with some market rental rate units. This building is now being sold, and it has come to my attention that as long as the affordable housing grant money is paid back to the government, a new owner is able to remove all affordable and transitional housing rental rates and charge full market rental rates. This leaves many of the present tenants with anxiety and fear about where they're going to live. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: does an owner of an affordable housing property who has received government funding have the ability to sell the property provided he does not intend . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very aware of the concern throughout the province and housing being very much a priority. Yes, the owners do have the right to sell. If the property is sold, if that individual who buys that property maintains the same purpose for the property, the conditions will continue. If the property is sold to someone who wants to change its intent, then it's pro-rated over 20 years. If that individual sells the property in a shorter time period, then it's pro-rated, and the money has to be paid back.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: is there any way that we can make adjustments to these agreements, where the new owner would agree to honour the existing terms and conditions that would keep these facilities as affordable housing units?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, what happens is that we have to abide by the same rules that an individual who is the proponent does in the terms and conditions, so if the building is sold, then we have to assume the agreement as well. If we put too many restrictions on an agreement, that will also reduce the level of participation.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can find a way to fill that gap. Can the minister of municipal housing advise what this government is doing to increase the number of affordable housing units that are available?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you are aware and have heard many times, we have brought forward a task force. The hon. member from the third party mentioned his valuable input. I want to say that the work that the task force did is very critical to the direction that this government goes. The integrity of the work is important, and we want to make sure that we have the right responses and the right directions because the work was very valuable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

School Closures

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier suggested that he would listen to any Albertan that came forward with advice about how to improve the province's school closure policies, and I'm happy to provide that advice. To the Minister of Education. Yesterday I tabled a petition signed by a thousand people that suggests that it would be a great move to amend the School Act to allow the school closure process to be 18 months instead of the short timeline it is now. Would the minister like to take that advice?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, closing schools is a tough decision. I know it's foreign to our friends across the road, but some of us are elected to make tough decisions. The public school board is elected to make tough decisions, and they are making those decisions. There is a process in place, and I believe that it is serving well. Decisions have to be made, and they are making them.

Dr. B. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, other jurisdictions in other provinces provide an appeal process on school closures, for example, so that school board decisions can be reviewed impartially if it seems that the correct procedures are not followed. This appeals process can give parents, educators, and students a voice when they feel that the system lets them down. Will the Minister of Education accept my advice and implement an appeal process for school closures?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, what is the right time? Is it 12 months? Is it 18 months? Is it five years? Sooner or later decisions, tough decisions, have to be made, and that's exactly what the Edmonton public school board is doing: making tough decisions.

Dr. B. Miller: And the whole community is in an uproar.

The Edmonton school board is meeting tonight and will be making a decision on the closure of High Park school and other schools. If the minister refuses to call for a moratorium on school closures, as the Alberta Liberals urged the Premier to do yesterday, will he at least commit to an open and public review – you like task forces – of the closure process to make it more human and in the interests of community vitality?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, under the School Act the decision whether to close schools or not is in the hands of the public school boards. If we start meddling in what the school boards are elected to do, these would be the first people who would be telling us that we should be staying out of the decisions of the local school boards. So you can't have it both ways.

The Speaker: There were 90 questions and answers today.

head: 2:20 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I sent to the Premier requesting a public inquiry into the recent events at St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table several documents from Mr. Paul Pomerleau, a union member with IBEW. Mr. Pomerleau is very concerned about the use of temporary foreign workers, particularly when there are numerous people in the building trades who are looking for work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is from a constituent of mine, Robert Murphy. He's concerned about the lack of spaces for apprentices at NAIT – his son has been trying to enrol for his fourth year for over two years without success – and that there is a great shortage of tradespeople at this time, and a large number of students would like to finish their apprenticeship programs.

My second letter is from another constituent, Neil Evans, calling on the government to take action to deal with global warming and carbon dioxide emissions: "If as a province, country and society we fail to act, and the experts prove to be right, what will we say to our grandchildren?"

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to table a number of individual letters with the appropriate numbers of copies that call on this Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt be sentenced and tried as an adult due to the nature of his crime, his past criminal history, and that he is close to the age of 18 years.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Goudreau, Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture, responses to written questions 20, 21, 22, 23 asked for by Ms Blakeman on behalf of Mr. Tougas on May 15, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, responses to written questions 24 and 25 asked for by Dr. Miller on behalf of Mr. Taylor on May 15, 2006.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader?

Well, there being no question, perhaps the Government House Leader would like to respond to the phantom question that we all know what would be.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would anticipate that the opposition and all members of the House would like to know what the projected government business might be when we return after the first of our constituency weeks, in which members will be able to return to their constituencies and touch base with constituents.

On April 3, anticipating the adjournment motion later this afternoon, under Orders of the Day the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, day 10, which of course will then result in the motion to engross the Speech from the Throne. Following that, Government Motion 14, which for members that may not have looked at the Order Paper yet, is a motion to continue Alberta Treasury Branches. It's a motion which needs to come forward every five years. Then under government bills for second reading Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007.

On Wednesday, April 4, under government bills for second reading Bill 8, the Vital Statistics Act; Bill 9, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act; and Bill 12, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007.

On Thursday, April 5, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 13, Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 14, Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 15, Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007; Bill 17, the Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007; and Bill 18, the Judicature Amendment Act, 2007.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, there is a question from the chair for information with respect to the schedule. As the hon. members will not be sitting next week and the hon. members will not return for a number of days, is the Government House Leader in a position to speculate as to when the subsequent motions might be presented to the Assembly about changes in the procedure of the Assembly? It was silent in terms of that first week.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are in discussion with the House leaders and with the table with respect to drafting those motions. I would hope that they would be available during the week that we return. I had hoped that we'd be at a place where we could put them on notice now and deal with them when we return, but it will take a few more days to get that done, and hopefully we'll have that done by the time we return. We'll put it on notice for that week.

The Speaker: Okay. As a subsequent follow-up to that from the chairman of the Members' Services Committee to the members in the House who are members of the Members' Services Committee, normally there are 10 days' notice given by the chair for a meeting. I would like to put all members of the Members' Services Committee on notice that when these motions are in the House, when these motions are approved, there will have to be a Members' Services meeting essentially the next day, so if you would anticipate some time towards the end of two weeks from now for these motions and block some time out in your schedules. The discussion may be early in the morning as a result of all your schedules.

Third Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, should I call the question, or would you like to participate?

Mrs. Mather: I want to participate.

The Speaker: Absolutely. Proceed.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. It's a good opportunity now to take a look at the estimates that we have and what the intent is. One of the things that I wanted to make sure is emphasized is that Albertans have the environment on their minds these days. Everywhere I go, people are talking about it, and I would really like this government in its upcoming budget to seriously look at doubling the funding for Alberta Environment. I don't see any indication that there's going to be an increase there.

We need a doubling so that it can truly reflect this high priority for Albertans, indeed all Canadians, because all the people that I am aware of are placing a very high priority on this in terms of protecting and enhancing the environment and thinking about our future generations. I know that right now the Environment department has a shortage of staff. I think that we're looking at concerns with climate change and the tremendous and somewhat unpredictable devastation that is coming as a result of that climate change: extreme weather events, new infectious diseases, droughts. Clearly, we have to show significant vision and leadership in this area.

Continuing, I'd like to go on with my concerns about Children's Services, and I'm hoping that the effect of this bill will be that we will actually take a look at some of the serious concerns I raised in the last few days. One of these concerns is about the not-for-profit agencies losing staff to government positions or other businesses because they can't compete with the salaries. They can't increase the salaries to offer any kind of competition to these other agencies. They're barely getting enough money for salaries and benefits.

There's no consideration for heat, food, clothing costs, and maintenance costs. So I'm hoping the effect of this bill will be to take a look at these things more seriously in the upcoming budget.

I also want to talk about the serious problem that we have with addictions. We have more and more young people who are in group homes and various agencies who have severe behaviour concerns and often have addictions, yet we don't have enough beds for detox. We don't have enough beds for treatment. There are agencies other than AADAC who could provide help with addictions. They have the training. They also know how to handle severe acting-out problems, serious mental illness, and violent behaviours, which should be considered along with addictions treatment.

I'm wondering why it seems that AADAC is often pulling agency staff from these other areas because they are trained, yet these other agencies that could well provide the kind of treatment and services that is needed are not getting contracts. We need to look at this problem. We need to get more beds so that we can help individuals so that when they finally decide that they will go to detox and treatment, they don't have to wait weeks to get a bed, weeks that may lead them to change their minds and get involved again with negative behaviours that don't help them move forward.

Another area in terms of Children's Services is that, you know, we have another case model coming out now. It seems that the old Alberta response model, ARM, is becoming obsolete. That was implemented a few years ago, when you had two divisions of staff: family enhancement workers and core protection workers. That's becoming obsolete. I think that we're finding that there are many more high-risk court-bound families, and social workers are having to deal with far too many files, so these files then are being brokered off and then contracted out.

The model for the youth enhancement and family act was eight to 10 families per worker, where the reality is 22 to 25 on average. So front-line staff's ability to protect children continually goes down because of constant changes within the department. It's no wonder many of them are quitting after very few years of service. The new model even requires mandatory training, so again social workers will be in training for three days at a time and not working on files.

So we're implementing a new service delivery model at the front end through this new casework model. It's going to give assessors who were formerly investigators more time, actually 45 in total, to do full safety assessments, more complicated than previous investments, and detailed assessments on guardians, caregivers, and all children that might be involved, and then mandatory case conferencing before these files are transferred to a caseworker. But they have no more resources, yet they have the same number of cases or intakes coming through. So families often have to wait for family support workers to come to help them when they're feeling desperate with difficult situations. Children with addictions, often with traumatized parents, have to wait for detox because there are no beds available.

A shortage of foster parents is a growing concern. Children are apprehended and placed in hotels with one-to-one workers because of a shortage of foster homes. These children need safe places to stay. They need the very best possible because of the trauma and stress caused by an inadequate home situation in the first place. Then they're removed from those parents, which further traumatizes them, and they're sometimes left sitting for hours in offices waiting for placement. How are we addressing the foster parent shortage?

I am hoping that this reading will open up some thought toward increasing support for front-line workers and foster parents. What are we doing to recruit, and what are we doing to improve support to these parents? I'm wondering: are you going to increase funding for the implementation of this new model? Are we going to hear that in this budget that's coming up?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, there are apparently champions' sites, which are pilot sites, that have received 15 additional workers across the province. So once this new casework model is implemented, what resources will be added to cope with the work that is at least double that which was required previously?

I'm also very concerned about social worker safety. Social workers can't double up as often as they used to be able to when they make home visits. Stress is higher, hours are longer, and we're putting them at risk at times. For example, they're expected to go into homes, sometimes alone, and have limited access to information that sometimes turns out to be that the parents have assaulted police before or, worse yet, have firearms offences.

I've recently talked to a social worker who told me he has been called at home and told not to show up to court the next day because someone with the means was planning to kill him when he would be trying to serve apprehension papers. Social workers should not be expected to serve legal documents. This should be contracted to process servers.

There was a case in the United States in October of 2006 where a 15-year veteran of the Kentucky Cabinet for Health and Family Services was killed while facilitating a visit between a Henderson resident and the woman's 10-month-old son. The state had legal custody of that baby. It's a terrible shock, and it's interesting that the reaction of that state was to increase the number of social workers by a very large number.

I think that we need to be looking at the situation here. I know that social workers now have cellphones and may have bulletproof vests if they are on the CART teams – that's the child at-risk response teams – but what else are we doing to protect these front-line workers? What are the safety procedures? Are they realistic? You know, we can't expect them to be teaming up when the workload won't allow it. I'm asking that we look seriously, hopefully in this upcoming budget, at providing resources so that we can have more front-line workers to improve the safety but also to improve the resources available to our foster families.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly in appropriation bills there's a wide degree of latitude in speaking, but the bill before the House today is supplementary supply Bill 20. Supplementary supply Bill 20 has votes in it for Advanced Education and Technology, Agriculture and Food, Finance, Health and Wellness, Municipal Affairs and Housing, not Children's Services. So under Beauchesne's 459, relevance, I would ask that you ask the hon. member – important as it is to talk about the budget, there will be time to talk about the budget. The hon. member has referred to the budget several times in her speaking. This discussion is about Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, and whether or not the funds that were outlined in that act ought to be voted. While one normally would ask and allow a wide degree of debate when voting money and supply, this debate that has been happening is clearly, as the member has referenced herself, about budget.

Mrs. Mather: Can I respond?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I appreciate that advice. My point is that this has not been included in supplementary supply, and I am wondering why? I know I said a number of times that I'm hoping that it will be in the upcoming budget, but I wanted to stress the importance of these issues. I mentioned environment. I mentioned foster parents. I mentioned addictions. I mentioned safety of social workers. Why aren't they being looked at?

The Deputy Speaker: Well, 459 is speaking of relevance, and as it points out, the minister is right. It's difficult to define, but I would ask the member to focus her comments on the task at hand, which is the supplementary supply bill before the House. Could you please carry on?

Mrs. Mather: I'm finished anyway.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I just advise you that you're not the first and certainly not the last to confuse me with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. In fact, it happens on almost a daily basis. I get his phone calls; he gets mine. I get his appointments; he gets mine. If I might just say, there was an occasion when my phone rang, and it indicated that it was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora calling. When I answered the phone, he said, "Yeah. Bruce, is that you?" I started to laugh, and he said: "Did I just call you Bruce?" So, please, do not feel bad. Yes. I will get to the point.

The Deputy Speaker: We were just speaking about relevance, so if you would focus.

Mr. R. Miller: I will get to the point of the matter, which is third reading of Bill 20, the supplementary supply, No. 2, and we always must be cognizant of the fact that this is the second time this year that the government has asked for supplementary supply.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned in earlier phases of debate on this supplementary supply bill my particular concern over the two line items that are being requested by the Department of Finance, and I have yet to hear anybody from the government side offer any explanation as to those two items. I'm hopeful that, perhaps, the President of the Treasury Board may enlighten us today with a little bit of information on those two. It would certainly be helpful in terms of my knowing whether or not to support this bill at third reading.

So for a reminder, we have in excess of $7 million that is being requested to address losses by pension funds, some endowment funds, and a number of other smaller funds. My question previously has been and remains: how could these funds lose money in an economic environment where most funds are generating tremendous returns? We know that the heritage savings trust fund annually returns somewhere between 6 and 8 per cent. Other funds are up around 11 or 12, and there are examples of funds that are doing even better than that.

Here we have, apparently, a number of funds that lost a total of $7 million last year, and I'm wondering which funds those were. I'd like to know if any action has been taken against either the fund managers or the overseers of the investment. I think, also, a relevant question, in light of the fact that the government has now introduced Bill 22, is whether or not the losses suffered by those funds have any correlation to the introduction of Bill 22 and the establishment of the Alberta Investment Management Corporation.

The second item that Finance is requesting – as I've mentioned before and everybody knows by now, I believe – is $40 million in a lump-sum payment to address the unfunded portion of the management employees' pension plan. This is an awful lot of money being dropped against one unfunded liability when the government has several other pension plans that they're involved in to which they owe a portion of the unfunded liability, not the least significant of which, in fact obviously the most significant of which, is the unfunded teachers' pension liability. There are others, as well, that total altogether in excess of – I shouldn't say in excess because I can't remember exactly what the entire number is, but it's somewhere in the order of $7 billion for the teachers' pension plan and approximately another billion dollars for all of the others combined, approximately $8 billion altogether in unfunded pension liabilities.

So here we have a situation where the Department of Finance is asking for $40 million which, as near as I can determine and, in fact, was confirmed for me by a board member of the MEPP yesterday, virtually wipes out the government's share of that unfunded liability. When I spoke to this board member yesterday, he told me that he didn't really understand why they were being chosen to have their government's share of that particular plan addressed. He wasn't going to complain, of course. They were quite thrilled when the call came that the government was going to address their unfunded liability to the tune of $40 million. He flat out told me that he really didn't understand why their plan was chosen, not the others. He acknowledged that there would probably be a number of people looking at the teachers' pension plan, as an example, wondering why there was no redress for that unfunded liability.

So my questions to the President of the Treasury Board simply are: why this particular plan, and why this amount? We've yet to hear any mention from anybody on the government side in answer to that question. I think it's only fair that all members of this House have that information in front of them before we support an expenditure of $40 million.

My last comment, Mr. Speaker. I know that I said this before, and I risk repeating myself. But since we are in third reading, it is my last opportunity to say that this is just a reminder that the government, particularly the new Premier early on in his mandate, has indicated that supplementary supply would be a thing that would be used only in emergencies from now on. As I have suggested the other day when we were debating in committee, the President of the Treasury Board seems to have backed away from that position a little bit. I'm going to be a hound on his trail, and I'm going to make sure that we do our very best to keep them to their word.

Hopefully, supplementary supply will be used for what it was originally intended to be used for, and that is emergency situations only. We've discussed them before, whether it be flood relief or firefighting purposes or, you know, another outbreak similar to BSE. There are legitimate emergencies where a government could justify moving away from their planned budget. But some of the items in this particular supplementary supply certainly do not appear to qualify as a genuine emergency, in my mind, and several others have made that statement as well.

So we're going to be watching them carefully, holding them to their word that supplementary supply will only be used in the future for genuine emergencies. Beyond that the government will be held to account to the very best of my ability to stick within a budget that this House passes sometime later this year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thanks. The hon. member kind of posed a question: that they would like to know more about the $47 million.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you closing debate?

Mr. Snelgrove: I'd love to.

The Deputy Speaker: This is third reading.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the minister is anxious to get this over with, but I just want to make a couple of comments following through with some of the same concerns. I've talked about it, and I think that the minister is aware of it, that supplementary estimates have become a way of really abusing the budget process. You know, we talked about the fact that we're going to move earlier and that there shouldn't be the same demand. But when I look at these supplementary estimates, maybe the minister might comment about them. We are in – and we've talked about this – a very overheated economy. It's somewhat of a guess to know, if we keep the same pace of development, what sort of money we need for social and physical infrastructure.

For instance, Health and Wellness, Mr. Speaker. We know that there's $147 million. We know what that's for. It's for the recent settlement with the doctors. But we also know that coming down the stream there are – and the minister of health is here – a lot of other negotiations going on.

I look at the housing. Well, it's a big increase in supports for the homeless. We talked about this task force. The needs are immense out there, Mr. Speaker.

So I guess my question is to the minister. I want to know how serious we are in terms of anticipating some of these expenditures coming up. If we're sort of lowballing it going into this budget, then we're going to be back, faced with the same situation again, with supplementary estimates. I think we all agree that this is not particularly the greatest procedure. I talked about it before: bring a budget in in March, pass it in June, and then come back in July with, you know, millions of dollars. I take it that's one of the reasons with the House leader, that we are attempting to stop that abuse somewhat by having, well, certainly, interim supplies but having the budget and the set days.

I guess that I'm not asking what's in the budget, but I'm saying that knowing something about housing, knowing something about the health care, you know, the crisis that's out there, how serious are we in terms of this budget and really focusing on these problems with the economy that we have? I've called it an economy on steroids. Or are we going to be back in the fall saying, "Well, these problems have increased," with another half a million dollars in supplementary estimates? Then we're defeating the purpose of it.

Supplementary estimates – I think the minister would agree – are not really supposed to be part of the budgeting process. They are there for emergencies. That's what they were there for in the past. Forest fires were often one that we'd have to come back and deal with before. I suppose that if there was a pandemic or something like that, you can't anticipate those things, so there's a necessity to have them. But I'm worried – I'm worried, Mr. Speaker – that we're not going to be realistic enough in terms of this budget, and we'll be faced with the same thing come the fall. I'd like the minister, if he has time, just to comment about that.

Thank you.

2:50

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available if anyone wishes to rise under that. Anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

The hon. President of the Treasury Board, to close debate.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all the hon. members who have participated not just in third reading but in the other readings. I take very seriously their suggestions that we should not be back here middle of the year redoing funding, and I think this government will commit to that unless there are extreme emergencies or situations that are far beyond any government's ability to project, that we will try to stay out of here.

To the hon. member before: there is no connection to the supplementary supply estimates around Finance in Bill 22. I think Alberta has matured as a province to the level that we need to ensure that we have some of the brightest minds available to look after our – I say collectively "our," all Albertans' – investments to ensure that they are prudently looked after yet returning a good return and that our pension funds and all of our investments are getting the best return. So I think it's a positive step forward.

The hon. member asked about the $40 million and, obviously, already knows probably more about the investment in MEPP than many other members, but I think it was prudent to take funds that were available at that time in the budget and address a need. Yes, it wasn't enough to address the teachers' pension fund, but it was enough . . . [interjection] Well, you know, every now and then you have surplus or you have to reallocate from within a department.

The Auditor General and the government's rules are strict enough that even the amount we simply move from Infrastructure and Transportation to Service Alberta to pay for the exact same thing – nothing changed in the world. The plane was bought. It didn't get paid for in the time that a new department was created with different responsibilities, and we had to come back here and show you that. So it's no new money, no different money. Yet to satisfy, I think, your concerns and Albertans' concerns and the Auditor's concerns, it's back here.

A lot of what is done is simply to ensure that if there is a reallocation from operations to capital or vice versa, that's addressed here because you voted on it or we voted on it as capital or operational dollars. These changes happen in the course of a year, and that, I think, is appropriate to come back and bring forward into the House.

I'm glad to hear that they don't want to speculate on the budget, but I am terribly afraid – and I've made our Government House Leader very aware – that I didn't really want to still be here debating it in July, but we may well be. If we have to be, so be it.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to close debate on Bill 20.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is again my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 25, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is so that the different departments of government can continue to operate uninterrupted until the budget is expected to be passed. This covers the time from April 1 to July 1, 2007. I can appreciate that it's difficult to answer some questions about supplementary supply without delving into the actual budget and what they will do. I will take under advisement the questions that the hon. members pose, but obviously I think that they and we both agree that the government must go on. We will have ample time to debate the budget when it's presented on April 19.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm not going to belabour the point because I think that as the President of the Treasury Board has indicated, we all recognize that the government must go on. However, I think that it is important that I reiterate my comments from earlier phases of this debate, and they are twofold.

One in particular that I really look forward to is the adoption of new House rules that will give us firm sitting dates, a firm date for the introduction of a budget, which is certainly not a guarantee that the budget would be passed by the end of the fiscal year. But I think that having seen that agreement and knowing the amount of time that it would normally take to have a budget move through this Assembly, there is a pretty darn good chance that in the future, if that agreement is to be adopted, we will not find ourselves here debating interim supply. That is my sincere hope. I know it's the sincere hope of the House leaders, and I think and I pray that it's the sincere hope of all members of this Legislature.

The second point, which I made earlier and, I think, bears repeating, is a reminder to all members that the government is in complete control of the agenda. The fact that we're not seeing a budget until the 19th of April and won't have it passed until sometime in late June or, as the President of the Treasury Board said, perhaps not even until sometime in July is certainly something that was within the government's control and the control of their political party. Had there been some prudent planning on the other side, we would likely have seen a leadership race in advance of December 2 and the House coming back at its normal meeting time, sometime in mid-February, and we would likely have had the budget passed in time for the fiscal year end and would not have had to have the introduction of an interim supply bill at all.

So that is my hope: that we won't be back here again next year having this same debate. I would implore all members of the Legislature to support that House leaders' agreement when those amendments do come forward so that, in fact, that will become a reality.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. President of the Treasury Board to close debate.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. members for their understanding today. It being Thursday, I'm very happy to close debate on Bill 25.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading
Bill 1
Lobbyists Act

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Chase]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and speak to Bill 1, Lobbyists Act. First of all, I want to commend the Premier for introducing this bill, which was long-awaited. I know something is better than nothing, but I think there needs to be a little bit more amendment to this. But as I said, this bill is in the right direction. That's why I commend his efforts. He dared to introduce this bill after maybe 20 years' struggle from different parties, including this present government.

Mr. Speaker, the first thing that stuck in my mind when I saw this bill was: why now? I mean, when you see the history of this legislation, even the federal government passed legislation a long time ago, in '86, '89. Ontario had their own registration act in '98, Nova Scotia in 2001, British Columbia in 2001, Newfoundland in 2005, and Quebec in 2002, very similar acts. In Alberta a lobbyists registry was one of the key recommendations of the '96 Tupper report's review of Alberta's conflict-of-interest rules. He recommended the inclusion of a registry in an integrity in government and politics act. The Alberta Liberal caucus supported this report.

Then the Alberta Liberal Party campaigned on the lobbyists registry in 2004. In 1996 another Liberal MLA introduced Bill 223, the Lobbyists Registration Act. Even at that time this government knocked down this bill. Again in '97 one of their own MLAs introduced Bill 212, the Lobbyists Registration Act. I mean, the question that comes to my mind suddenly is: why does this government introduce this now after a long, long time? In a democratic country like this one, especially in Alberta, why has this government failed to introduce this bill for a long, long time? I think this government is trying to give Albertans the impression that they are different than the last government, but in reality it is the old wine in a new bottle. They are one and the same.

Mr. Speaker, lobbying is not a bad thing. It's an important part of democracy. In a democracy people should have the right to meet and discuss their issues and concerns with their elected representatives, like MLAs and MPs, and most people do. That's why we get some input from our constituents, and we raise their voice here in this House. This is a good thing. But the problem is that sometimes, you know, when the government is in power for a long, long time, they make some really good friends and then they take advantage of their friendship and try to play the foul game. Lobbying, as I said, is legitimate, but it should be and must be public.

I didn't go through this bill, you know, from page 1 to page 20, but I'm still confused on the definition of lobbyist. It's not clear yet, especially in this bill. I have a few questions to ask after reading this bill. First of all, what if the lobbyist fails to disclose intentionally? Suppose that we have a lobbyist and he or she or the organization – it may be public; it may be private – says: “No. We don't want to disclose something”? Where do we stand? I know that there's a mechanism in this bill that will impose some penalties. How are they going to judge whether this person is a registered lobbyist and disclose? I don't understand this mechanism like the one that we have in the federal government.

Another thing comes to mind, a question I ask myself: if we pass this bill, will the public office holder tell us that they were lobbied, what the subject was, and what decision was made? I mean, it's between the two, between the government and the lobbyist. How would we find out what subject they talked about? This is a serious thing that we should discuss before we pass this bill.

A question about the public lobbyist is that sometimes we have nonprofit, nonpolitical organizations. Most associations need to convince the elected official on certain concerns, certain issues in their area, but what if they are a paid director in an association? I know that some nonpolitical, nonreligious associations are working for the betterment of their people, but sometimes their directors are paid. They get paid. So where do we stand? I mean, how would we deal with those people?

There's another scenario. If the lobbyist meets this Premier, well, they can say: yeah, we are registered. That's okay according to this bill, but what happens if the Premier called that lobbyist? How will we get the record that the Premier called that lobbyist and solicited information or advice on any subject. It's not clear in this bill. You know, after discussion or after all other members speak on this bill, maybe we'll find the solutions. I want to see this bill be really the best bill in Canada, even better than the federal government's. We should work really hard to find and not leave any loopholes in this bill and make sure that we amend certain things and discuss this again and again and make sure that we prepare such a document that we can lead Canada on this lobbyist registry act.

Mr. Speaker, it's important to remember that it's taken years, as I said before, of lobbying by the Alberta Liberals to finally get through to this Tory government on the need for this. Alberta Liberal MLAs pushed very hard in the past. I discussed the lobbyist registry as part of the review of the Conflicts of Interest Act last year. This is something the Alberta Liberals have been pushing for years. I mean, when we've introduced any motion or any private member's bill since I've been here, I've never seen any motion or bill passed that has been introduced by the opposition members. I don't know what's happening in this House. We are all elected members.

I mean, it's the same thing. The Alberta Liberal Party introduced this bill a few times, and some of the members from the PC Party introduced this bill. They think it's not a good idea. But suddenly now they think that, yes, we should go ahead. That's why in the beginning I appreciated the Premier. At least, he dared to introduce this bill. This is something really good that I'm pleased the government decided on even though they stole one or two pages out of the Alberta Liberals' ideas. We don't mind. I mean, there are still some loopholes in this bill that have to be filled. Those problems have to be solved before we pass this bill.

This bill brings Alberta to where it should have been 11 years ago if they had really thought about the people who elected them. We are all here working for Albertans. The Liberal Party introduced a few bills with different numbers, and they didn't go through. Now this bill will go through because it's introduced by the Premier. They have the majority. This government always talks about openness, transparency. I don't understand. Why not then? Why now? I would really be happy if somebody from the other party answered my questions. What's the problem if any motion or any private member's bill comes from the opposition party? Why don't they co-operate? Maybe they can add some amendment and pass the motion, pass the bill. Maybe they are allergic to this. I don't know.

I'm struck by the fact that this government rejected the need for a lobbyist registry because the existing one was weak, or sometimes they said that the existing one was bad. Now, after 11 years, 12 years, it's the same bill. They changed the subject a little bit on this one. I still think this bill is not exactly what we even have in the federal government. I want to see this bill better than what we have federally, to ensure that all the members sitting in this House make sure that we work hard and add some new ideas if we really want to be open and transparent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) does anyone wish to provide a comment or question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on the debate.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me first of all say that this is certainly a step in the right direction. I want to give credit where credit is due, to the committee that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and I served on, in terms of the final recommendation coming for a lobbyist registry along with some other things that are coming forward about cooling-off periods. In fairness to that committee I think there was a fair amount of scepticism on the side of the government MLAs. Again, this is where I think the committee worked well. We got information from other parts of the province, and eventually it was brought forward that a lobbyist registry did make some sense. So I was pleased when the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill told me that Bill 1 would be the particular bill that the Premier was going to bring forward. I think, though, that we do have to take a look at the bill and make sure that we do it right.

I compare it to Ontario and some other bills, and I would make some suggestions at this particular time if it's going to be a flagship bill. I remember that the flagship bill last year was the smoking bill, and we had to bring in an amendment, that the government accepted, about not investing in tobacco companies. So, hopefully, in that spirit we can even make this particular bill stronger, Mr. Speaker.

Some things, I think, need to be looked at – and I think they're fairly serious – to make this a better bill. Contrary to the previous speakers, it wasn't Alberta Liberals that discovered lobbyist registries. They have been in parts of Canada for many, many years, and all of us have advocated for it for many, many years, Mr. Speaker. But I notice that there are two categories in Alberta under the lobbyist definition: a consultant and an organization lobby. In Ontario they have three. The only one that's different, I think, is probably worth looking at. There's a fair proliferation of nonprofits, too, and I think we should be fair, as they are in Ontario. They probably should be included if we're having a lobbyist registry for people. That's a minor point, but I think it's one worth looking at.

We can go into the fines. I notice that Ontario has much stricter, heavier fines than Alberta. That's something we could probably look at.

The big thing, though, is exemptions, Mr. Speaker. It seems from research we've done that they do not allow government request exemptions in Ontario. But we know very clearly that this bill at this stage – we will wait and see if the government does – does allow some exemptions, and I think they're serious exemptions, that really would water down the intent of a lobbyist registry.

The one that we look at that seems to be the one that's really a big potential for abuse has to do with government request exemptions. That is not the case in most other lobbyist registries. You could drive a truck through that loophole. What that means is that people do not need to register as a lobbyist if they've been approached by the government for information or consultations.

Well, Mr. Speaker, let's say that I'm a lobbyist, but I'm a good friend of the government. If I don't want to be registered, I'll just get them to make a call. Then I don't have to register. The government doesn't have to tell us who they're talking to. Now, that is a very, very serious shortfall in this particular legislation, and I'd hope that the government would take that back – we're going to go through Committee of the Whole – and really take a look at that because I think it has the potential to really make this particular registry meaningless. The potential for abuse is immense in that particular case.

I don't know about the monitoring, if that's going to be serious. I think we have to look at that.

The other thing in this business: we've had a one-party state here for many years. The government has been in power for a lot of time, so there are a lot of what I would call unpaid lobbyists who held public office. It seems to me that they have access to a lot of people in government, especially if it's people that have recently retired, and I think they could fly under the radar of the lobbyist registry. They might be the most effective lobbyists you could find because they know the people opposite.

Now, I'm going to go on the assumption at this particular time that the government does want this, in fact, to be the Premier's bill, that he can be very, very proud of. So in second reading I'd like to put them on notice that these specific things – there are other things in there that we could perhaps look at and refer – are serious, serious omissions in this particular bill.

Certainly, when we were in the committee, an all-party committee, we made the general principle that we think a lobbyist registry should be there and that we could probably learn from it. We don't have to reinvent the wheel but look at other places. I'm not sure where this came from, this idea of the government getting on the phone and saying, "Come on in. I've contacted you; therefore, you're not a lobbyist." That's a serious flaw, and I would think that the Premier, Mr. Speaker, would want to see, in the nature of transparency and openness – we have plaques and his news conference now – that that is a major, major flaw and at least would do that and the other loopholes that I've talked about.

So, Mr. Speaker, we'll look forward to this going through to committee, and we'll see generally how serious the government is in terms of closing some of these major loopholes I'm talking about.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to comment on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. Of course, this is something that is overdue, and it's appropriate now for the government to bring it. I'm supporting the intention of this act as an example of a number of kinds of legislation that Legislatures are putting into place throughout Canada, North America, and other countries because it's time to deal with the issue of ethics in the public order. Now, lots of other jurisdictions have dealt with this before this Legislature, so before we clap ourselves on the back, we should acknowledge that there has been a momentum in the direction of dealing with these kinds of issues for some time. In fact, our federal government has already had a lobbyist registry in place for a while, and so have other provinces. Nevertheless, I think this is still a good move.

For a long time I think many people who have been students of ethics have lamented the fact that there seems to be a bifurcation between public ethics and personal ethics. In fact, when I was a student many years ago, we used to talk in those terms, that there are personal ethics, that have to do with family, marriage on the one hand, and then there are social ethics on the other hand, that refer to wider issues of justice within the institutions of society, like political institutions. So I think there was a tendency many years ago to make a distinction and separate the two spheres as if our ethics in our personal life are qualitatively different from the ethics of public life.

I remember that back in the 1970s and '80s, when I was involved with churches and making criticisms of corporate life, there were a number of interfaith coalitions that were very critical of multinational corporations and the actions of corporations in regard to the Third World and so on. The response you often got from people, even CEOs who were running these companies, was a kind of righteous indignation – you're attacking my integrity as a person – in order for them to kind of: well, I'm a good person. Well, I think we've come to realize that, you know, good persons can become part of systems that are questionable and that it's not enough to make that distinction.

The book and the movie about the Watergate incident are a good example. I remember an incident in the movie where the two Washington Post reporters come to the home of one of the Watergate individuals who was involved in the break-in – I think it was Jeb Magruder – and they knock on the door of the home. Magruder's wife comes to the door, and in a very defensive way she says: this is a moral home. But that movie and that whole incident illustrated the fact that people who thought they were good persons, having personal ethics, were going to work in the public sphere, and it was dirty tricks as usual. There was lots of corruption. That has led, Mr. Speaker, to a lot of cynicism about politics.

So I think that through the '70s, '80s, and '90s we've come to accept the fact that you can't make a distinction between personal ethics and social ethics, or you can't distinguish your personal life from public life. We are all human beings, and whatever we do, we are moral beings, and we are acting out, making decisions, and we should be held accountable morally for our actions. So when we talk about attributes like honesty and integrity and mutual respect, those are not just personal virtues; those comprise, really, an ethical code for public life.

We should have such an ethics code for us as legislators, as MLAs. I mean, businesses, corporations, educators, all kinds of professional organizations have developed ethical codes for their professions. It's time that we took a stand and said: "Look, we are going to abide by a high ethical code. We're going to raise the bar high." In fact, that's what the federal government did in its Accountability Act, its first legislative act presented in the present Parliament. So it's time that we attended to this issue of ethics. I mean, we've been given a trust by the people who elected us, a fiduciary trust, so we must care for that trust. We must be good trustees of the trust that they have placed in us.

Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of cynicism in politics. As the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview pointed out, he was a member of the Select Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, and I, too, was a member of that committee. When we began our deliberations to look at the Conflicts of Interest Act, we had a discussion of that very issue of cynicism, that so many people in the general public have a cynical attitude about politicians. On any list of people that you trust, politicians are way down the list. So we have a lot of work to do to raise the awareness of people, to reinstall the confidence of people in us as politicians. Having this kind of bill is a step in that direction, to have a lobbyist registry.

If you ask the ordinary person on the street what they think about politicians, they will say something along the lines of: well, isn't it true that all politicians are corrupt or at least are forced to be in a system that is corrupt? Isn't it a truism that many people think that power by its very nature corrupts? That's a widespread opinion in the public. So we have to do whatever we can to counter that cynicism, to pass legislation that embodies the very best ethics that we have. I think there is evidence that democratic governments that do act and base their decisions on the best ethics available – respect and integrity and honesty – are actually the most satisfactory governments in the world. So it's time that we melded together politics and ethics.

That brings me to the specifics of this bill. One of the things that really bothers ordinary people when they are thinking about the actions in politics and expressing their cynicism is that they see too often that there is undue influence on politicians. Now, whether they see limousines pulling up to the front of the Legislature to take people away, or whether they read about helicopter trips up to the tar sands, ordinary people ask the questions: "Well, who is influencing politicians? Are decisions being unduly influenced by people who have privileges, have power, have money?" So, for the ordinary person the field is not equal. There's inequality because people who have privileges, have advantages, have more influence on government than ordinary people.

I think the lobbyist registry is a step in the direction of trying to establish an equal playing field for everybody so that people know who is trying to influence government decisions. Mr. Speaker, I think that's the main basis for supporting this kind of legislation: the principle of equality, that it creates a situation in which people can be aware of what kind of influence is being imposed or is trying to persuade politicians in terms of their decisions.

Now, lobbying, of course, is not to be dismissed as something bad as the lobbying is trying to influence politicians to make a decision based on information that a lobbyist can provide. That in itself is not wrong. It's important, then, that such people who want to lobby the government and influence government should be included on a list, a lobbyist registry.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview raising the issue of paid and unpaid lobbyists. The distinction in this bill is basically that there is a "consultant lobbyist" who is "a person who, for payment, undertakes to lobby on behalf of a client." There's also an "organization lobbyist," who is "an employee, officer or director of an organization who receives a payment for the performance of his or her functions."

It's clear that those who have to register in a lobbyist registry are those who in their job are being actually paid by a company to be a lobbyist, or they're representing a client and being paid for their services. That excludes unpaid lobbyists. I'm not sure that I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I think that we need to discuss this more, perhaps.

I am glad that this excludes people from volunteer organizations and from the not-for-profit sectors of society. For many years before I was elected to this House, I helped organize church people to lobby government. I was part of an organization called the Quality of Life Commission, and none of us were paid for anything; we had no budget, actually. We managed to organize people like Lois Hole and Douglas Roche and so on to be commissioners of our Quality of Life Commission and actually write a report on poverty and then present it to the government. We met with ministers of the government to present the findings of our report.

That's a kind of lobbying. We were trying to influence government opinion, trying to get their attention, and trying to say: look, people who are poor in this province need some help, need more attention than they're getting. This was in the early '90s. Well, we were unpaid lobbyists. So I don't think that people from volunteer organizations, the volunteer sector of society, should have to sign up in a lobbyist registry. I think I support the idea of just focusing on paid lobbyists.

When I met with the Special Conflicts of Interest Act Review Committee, I saw right from the very beginning that there was great support for a lobbyist registry, so we didn't have a lot of arguments, discussion about it. We did meet with representatives from Ontario to see the model of a lobbyist registry that Ontario had already in place, and I think that was very helpful. I realized that members on the government side were very much in favour of a lobbyist registry, so we had some good discussions, but we all agreed that their lobbyist registry was a good idea and that it's time to adopt it.

The exceptions under 3(2)(c) have been raised by other members. I don't recall any discussion of those exceptions, especially the one that has already been noted, 3(2)(c). We'll have a chance in committee to discuss this further and to even, perhaps, entertain amendments. It is an exception to the whole lobbyist registry; namely, that if I as a politician, as an elected official, approach somebody who is a paid lobbyist, then whatever we discuss is somehow exempt. That person doesn't have to register as a lobbyist because I approached them rather than they approached me. I mean, that's a huge loophole, and I'm not sure why that is here. I look forward to the debate in committee to find out why this is here. This kind of undermines the intention of the whole bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any comments or questions? Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and participate in second reading on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. This is a flagship bill for this government, and I believe the intent that's being discussed is both timely and important.

Lobbying is important because people need to be able to have access to their elected officials. Lobbying is basically an integral part of democracy because elected officials were elected to be conveyors of ideas, to represent the ideas that they hear from their constituencies to this Assembly.

However, there are challenges to democracy with respect to lobbying. One deals with openness and transparency. Governments are and should be held accountable to their citizens, and their accountability dictates that we have a certain degree of transparency. So I'm wondering if this bill will allow citizens to evaluate the performance of their representatives and their government and to know who has the government's ear at any one point. Who is talking to whom in any particular or given department or agency? They also have to know if taxpayers' money is being spent properly, who is gaining or winning government contracts and why, how much they're paid, why they're being paid that amount of money and for what work. What are the outcomes of these decisions?

I was looking at preamble 5, and I'd like to read it. "Whereas it is desirable that the public and public office holders be able to know who is contracting with the Government of Alberta and Provincial entities": you know, that is just one small part of what we need. We need to know who is a lobbyist, certainly, and we need to define that, but we need to know who they're talking to. So we need to know who is talking to the government, but who in the government is being approached? Who are they actually talking with? That's missing here. Again, this doesn't get into the kind of transparency that we're looking for. Having the name of the person who approached the government without knowing the details of what was being discussed doesn't provide the openness or accountability that we're hoping for in this government.

I'd like to think that the information that was discussed with the minister or deputy minister or some bureaucrat within the infrastructure would be available, that the actual discussion would be in notes, and that people could actually find out what was being said and what was being suggested.

I also have a concern with respect to keeping things in regulation and allowing the minister or the Ethics Commissioner or whoever is going to be in charge of this piece of legislation to put things in regulation. This could be restrictions on the application of the act.

To which areas does this act not apply? We added members of the House of Commons. We added employees of municipalities. We've added members of Métis settlement councils, diplomatic agents, and others. After this very extensive list we also say, "any other individuals or categories of individuals prescribed in the regulations." I know that the idea of regulations is that it helps keep flexibility, and I think that, yes, we probably do need a certain degree of flexibility but not if it's going to limit the strength of any piece of legislation itself. I'd like to see this legislation strengthened, and I'm looking forward to amendments.

I commend the government for taking this initial step, but I think that simply having a lobbyist registry that indicates who approached government is not enough. I look forward to the strengthening of this legislation because it is absolutely necessary to take things out of regulation and put them into legislation. I think the assumption that we need to trust in the benevolence of a minister and that that is sufficient to make decisions behind closed doors is archaic. It's not acceptable these days, and it's not being transparent.

I'm going to conclude by saying that I look forward to further amendments. I'm also looking forward to working with this government on standing policy committees because I understand that the minutes of those meetings will be available for public viewing and will demonstrate the kind of transparency and openness that we have been asking for.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments brief because I think both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and now my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods have made some very good points in terms of the goodwill that the Official Opposition has for parts of Bill 1 and, certainly, the need for some legislation that would see lobbyists registered.

My colleague from Edmonton-Glenora raised the most valid concern that I've heard expressed anywhere yet, and that is regarding section 3(2)(c), which, I think I mentioned in here the other day, is leaving such a big hole in this legislation that you could literally drive a truck through it. I know for certain that I cannot support this bill as it sits right now. I'm hoping that the government will share our concerns over that particular section and, when we get to committee stage and have amendments brought forward, that we can either have that section entirely eliminated or at least dramatically amended so that it would be much tighter than it is right now.

The other comment that I would like to make – and I think my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods touched on it – is that this is a very good first step, a very good baby step, but so much more is needed. Mr. Speaker, I think members of this House are aware of the fact that Bill 2 has sat on the Order Paper now for – I think we're in day 9 of this Legislature sitting, and it has not yet been introduced in this House. I can assure you that I am eagerly awaiting the introduction of Bill 2 because, clearly, there's a need for complementary legislation to Bill 1, and I'm hoping beyond hope that Bill 2 might provide some of that. I do find it curious that we're into the ninth day of the spring sitting and that bill has not yet been introduced. We haven't seen any explanation as to why, although presumably there's still some work being done on it. I hope that that work will go a long ways towards addressing the concerns that members of the Official Opposition have expressed in the past regarding the need for tougher conflict of interest legislation.

As I say, a good start in Bill 1 with the one notable exception. It's certainly something that is long overdue and that, in fact, pretty much puts us light years behind other jurisdictions, not having had any sort of a lobbyist registry. I'm looking forward to supporting it with the appropriate changes that would address the concerns that we have. Hopefully, that takes place in committee stage.

Hopefully, shortly after our return in 10 days' time we'll see the introduction of Bill 2, and we'll have a better sense as to whether or not the government is addressing not just this one particular concern that we've had regarding openness and transparency and integrity of government but, in fact, several of the other concerns that we've raised in the past as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again on Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two good friends of mine. They are sitting in the public gallery. They are Mr. Wade Izzard – he's involved in the Edmonton-Riverview constituency – and Mr. Rory Koopmans. I request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Lobbyists Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased that I get an opportunity to speak in second reading to the principles that are put forward in Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. I am pleased to see that the government has acted upon years and years of requests from members of the Alberta Liberal opposition, the public, and in fact their own commissioned reports. I remember that just before I got elected, there was the Tupper report, in which exactly what is being considered, although not as completely, was in fact suggested, and that report had been commissioned by the government.

In fact, I find it interesting that all the reasons that over the years the government has had for not bringing in a lobbyist registry, many of those things I now find inside the legislation here because I think it's mostly modelled on the Ontario version. That was the version they were most vehemently opposed to. So it's interesting how things come around, Mr. Speaker.

I was very fortunate to attend a COGEL conference. Now, what does that stand for? Something about government ethics and law. Council on Governmental Ethics Laws, I think. It encapsulates conflict of interest, Ethics Commissioner duties, lobbyist registry, and also financial disclosures, which, of course, is a big deal in the States as they have no laws against financial disclosure, and there's no top limit amount on it, but, boy, everybody's got to fess up to it. They spend a lot of time trying to ferret out the people that are not fessing up to having made what amounts to a political donation.

When I attended that conference, I was really struck by how much time and effort other provinces and various states spend on monitoring and enforcement of the various acts that are being talked about here, and that would include something like a lobbyist registry. So a big part of what's being anticipated here is the monitoring to make sure that it happens and the enforcement, very vigorous enforcement if it doesn't. They had lawyers on staff that chased people down and took them to court and whupped them, and those companies ended up paying a heck of a lot of money for their indiscretions. That's a really important part of what we're doing here. And a mistake that I see this government often making is that they come out with the legislation, but it is very weak on monitoring and enforcement embedded in the legislation, and then they also don't fund it. As a result, we end up with problems in a number of areas, that I could go into at length, but I won't. For the purposes of today's debate I'll stick to talking about the principle of what's in the bill.

So the idea that we the public, the people, the citizens, and in fact the members of the opposition and interested parties, stakeholder groups, would be able to see who is talking to the government, particularly if they are paid. I think that in this case only if they're paid do they actually have to register as a lobbyist. But who's talking to the government? Who in government are they talking to? Is it a particular minister? Is it a senior bureaucrat? Who are they talking to?

To me, I want to know what they're talking about. That's one of the areas that I have an issue with because when it talks about the communication, it seems to be restricted to legislative proposals, regulations, or orders in council, policies, directives, guidelines, grants, Crown financial transfers, outsourcing, and for the consultant lobbyist the awarding of contracts and setting up of meetings. Well, those are sort of very broad categories which don't tell me much. If a lobbyist, you know, A. Guy, is speaking to the deputy minister of health about a legislative proposal, and that's the only information I get, it's not telling me much. I probably could have figured that out by hanging out in the rotunda and watching who was going by and going into whose office.

I think it's important that this be spelled out enough and it be clear enough that a citizen or any interested party can find out exactly what's being discussed because it makes a lot of difference. If A. Guy, the lobbyist, is talking to the deputy minister of health about, you know, changing the strategy for the blood-borne pathogens, that tells me something much more in depth than saying that they're talking about a legislative proposal. I think that's the level of detail that we need to be seeing come forward out of this lobbyist registry, or really it will have been a lot of puffery about nothing. Frankly, I'm sick of seeing that. I want the real goods delivered here. I want to see the action actually delivered and not a bunch of communication spin that never resolves itself into any action that you can take home or take to the bank. Just to crowd my speech with clichés and euphemisms here. I think that's what really important about that. So, that's one area that I have as a concern around what's being contemplated with this bill.

I think there are also some loopholes here, and from 10 years I can tell you that this government is famous for loopholes. Just off the top of my head, we've got the FOIP legislation. The two biggest loopholes are third party and government policy. Well, you can make almost anything disappear by using one of those two in that, you know, there's a third party mentioned in the documents, and they won't give their permission to release the documents, so that's the end of that. Well, I think you'd be hard pressed to find a document that didn't mention somebody else, but that's often used as an excuse for shutting things down for us completely.

The other example is government policy. Well, just about anything we talk to the government about could be government policy. Policy advice, I think, is the way it's actually put. So there's another example of legislation that was meant to open up things for the public and, in fact, has been used by this government to close it down and make it more restrictive and more difficult and, frankly, more costly to get information from the government. So when we're talking about a lobbyist registry, I want to make sure from the get-go that this is about supplying real, substantive information, easily accessible without a high cost or a high red tape factor to the citizens.

Now, I've often raised in this House and with the media about the Wednesday night soirees, I used to be successful about once a year in getting the media interested in it. Sure enough, there would be, you know, film at 6 of a bunch of MLAs getting into a little van and being driven off to the Royal Glenora for a wine and dine by some group. As far as I can tell, that kind of activity would not be captured inside of what is in this lobbyists registry act. I think that's an omission, Mr. Speaker, because when I actually did inquire from the whip of the day a listing of who was organized to be the sponsors of the wine and dine evenings, and I compared that with legislation or changes that had come through over a number of years, there was a definite correlation between who had been on that list and actions that were taken by the government. That is very clearly to me a form of lobbying. You know, there was money expended there. A group of people were brought into a room. They were given very specific information, and, lo and behold, that resulted in a change in government policy. I think that kind of activity needs to be covered under what we're anticipating here as a lobbyist registry.

That's around the definition of the lobbyist, but there's an activity that's ongoing that has been identified by many members of the public as something they consider a lobbying activity that, in fact, is not being picked up under what's proposed under Bill 1. So already there's an omission there, or a loophole, if you prefer. And I've identified a couple of loopholes.

Now, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am supportive of a lobbyist registry. I want to see this work, but I want it to be meaningful. I'll be interested to see if the government brings forward any amendments to address the issues that have already been identified or if this is the government's final offer on the table. I think there's an opportunity here. If this government really means it when they talk about openness and transparency, then they will be bringing forward amendments that would seal off some of the loopholes or omissions that are apparent in this bill already. If not, then I'm sure we will be happy and are probably already prepared from the official Liberal opposition to do that. I mean, let's face it. I'm up here without any notes at all, and I have just managed to identify some fairly serious loopholes in this bill already. If I can do that with very little preparation, it's not going to be hard to find a number of other omissions in this bill that should be addressed to make it as strong as it could be.

I don't understand why Alberta, with all of its opportunity, with all of its riches and its resources and its intellectual power from its people, can't be out front on some of these democratic renewals, why we are always behind, why we have gone backwards from the status that we held that made us, you know, in second or third position, and we fall back.

A number of the things that we've just done to strengthen the Assembly: excellent, excellent things. I'm glad to see the support of people in some of the changes we've brought forward already, but, you know, that brought us into the early 1990s. If we want to come up to 2007, there's a lot more work to do.

I'm seeing the same tendencies with what's in this Lobbyists Act. It's really going back and starting where everybody else was as they brought their acts in. You know, Ontario, I think, came in in '95, and then we've got some of the other ones coming in in '99, in '98, in 2001. So we're way behind the pack, for starters, and we're starting back where they did. We haven't even learned the lessons, or we're not willing to pick up the lessons of what they had learned in the meantime. I think that Ontario's has now been in place for, probably, 10 years, if not more than that, and they have already revised their bill.

There are lessons that we could be learning from what's already rolling. I know that the federal legislation has been in place for quite a while, and they have amended it a number of times. Again, we could be learning those lessons and incorporating them. What do I see us doing? Going back to where they all started. So it's not picking up on those lessons. It's repeating the same problems, and I'm disappointed in the government for doing that.

There are some other issues that I'm sure my colleagues have raised, particularly around the cooling-off time with contractors and lobbyists. Interesting that the bill prohibits people from lobbying the government and contracting with them at the same time. I'm glad to see that in here. I would accept that as a given and would have expected to see it in here, but I think there's no cooling-off period that actually is anticipated in here for these paid advisors. I think that's an area of caution that we need to look to. Perhaps it's appropriate to preclude registered lobbyists from contracting with the government altogether to make sure that the idea of being a contractor and being a lobbyist stays separate.

There's also an opportunity for unpaid lobbyists because the defining line is about whether or not you're paid. I'm guessing here that they were trying to protect the smaller charitable sector, the NGO sector, from having to take on an onerous task of registering as a lobbyist. On the other hand, what's coming through that would be retired senior officials from any number of sectors who are unpaid but come in to see their old chums on the government side and are in fact performing the same services and tasks that any lobbyist would be doing. But because they're unpaid, they're not going to be registered. I see that as another large loophole and, I think, a lesson that's clearly been learned in some of the other jurisdictions that, again, we're not taking advantage of.

I thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to rise and bring my observations to second reading on Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act. I look forward to continued rigorous debate on this bill, and I do look forward to seeing if the government is going to be bringing forward amendments to close these loopholes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there are questions to be directed to the last speaker.

There being none, who should I recognize next? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, which is the flagship piece of legislation of the new government of Alberta. As such, it indicates that it is a high priority for the government and a piece of legislation that they want to have associated with the government in order to show that they are at last beginning to close the democracy gap that exists in our province or, as it's often known, the democratic deficit in our province.

There are many aspects to the democratic deficit in this province, Mr. Speaker, which the New Democratic Party and opposition has long been critical of and long offered constructive solutions towards. The particular piece with respect to this piece of legislation has to do with lobbyists, of course, and people who are attempting to influence the government. So in that sense the government is to be commended for at last addressing this issue after many years of pressure from Albertans, from the New Democrat opposition, and from other opposition parties as well.

I think the act is pretty clearly based upon a piece of legislation in Ontario. That would be the Lobbyists Registration Act of 1998 in the province of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, as far as the legislation goes, it's fine. It does require lobbyists, both paid and unpaid, both working in private practice and working for different organizations, including corporations, nonprofit organizations, and so on, to be registered. In that respect it is a step forward for the government.

There are some significant loopholes in that aspect of the bill that I want to call attention to. Paragraph 3(2)(c) is a very large loophole that would allow lobbyists to escape disclosure on the registry as long as they have been invited to lobby by the government. Mr. Speaker, the provincial Tory government is not original on this loophole. This loophole has actually been copied from the federal Liberals, who introduced this loophole into the federal law in 1995. When it was finally deleted 10 years later, registrations of lobbyists increased by eight times. It's clear to me that this loophole is very significant and may well be deliberate since it is based upon something that the federal Liberals did in the year 1995.

It's not the first time that we've seen the provincial Tories mimicking the federal Liberals, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, they only mimic the federal Liberals when it comes to the bad things that the federal Liberals do and not some of the occasional good things that they do. One example of a good thing the federal Liberals have done is bring in legislation to eliminate the big money from politics; in other words, to eliminate corporate and union donations from funding political parties. That was a good thing that the federal Liberals did in the closing days of the Chretien government. It was based on something that was done by the Manitoba NDP government of Mr. Doer, and I think that it is rather fundamental to the entire democratic issue in this province.

Unless you get the big money out of politics, politics is not and cannot be entirely in the interests of the people themselves. It is in the interests of powerful organizations who have financial means to pursue their political goals, and it sets the individual citizen at a significant disadvantage.

To come back to the bill, Mr. Speaker, paragraph 3(2)(b) is a large loophole as well, which will allow lobbyists to escape disclosure on the registry when they are lobbying to be let off the hook by enforcement agencies. Sections 6(2) and 6(3) should be changed to prohibit registered lobbyists from working for the government or any politician in any capacity or from having a business relationship of any kind other than as their lobbyist with anyone or any organization that's working for the government. For example, if a lobbyist is working for the Premier, then it would be unethical for the lobbyist to work for any other cabinet minister's department because the Premier chooses and controls all the cabinet ministers. So it would be a conflict of interest. If a lobbyist is working for a cabinet minister and lobbying the Premier or another cabinet minister, the same conflicts of interest would be created.

We believe that a new section should be added prohibiting lobbyists from working in senior positions on the campaigns of any candidates for office, and I would hasten to add that that should include working on provincial leadership campaigns. Such work creates clear conflicts of interest as lobbyists do favours for candidates, and the candidate may feel obliged to return them if they win. I think that we need a section that would require lobbyists to disclose approximately how much in total they're spending on each campaign.

Mr. Speaker, the conflict-of-interest law must also be broadened so that it covers the staff of ministers and politicians and senior government officials and bans them from becoming lobbyists for a period of a number of years, perhaps a sliding scale, one to five years, depending on the importance of the position that's involved. Certainly, our recent former Premier's involvement in the private sector would be covered by such an amendment to this bill.

The lack of a cooling-off period is perhaps the largest single flaw in this bill, Mr. Speaker. When you have a situation such as the case with the former Premier, who has intimate knowledge of the intentions of government, the strategies of government, and the thinking of government and then takes a position in the private sector, it always raises the question as to whether or not the information that that person has acquired in the public service is then being put to the benefit of his employer for commercial reasons. That's why a cooling-off period is fundamental.

Mr. Speaker, those are my comments, primarily, with respect to this bill. It's an example of the government getting it half right. We've seen this with respect to the task force on housing, where the government gets it right by involving people in the housing business and the nonprofit community and putting members of the opposition on the task force but doesn't get it the rest of the way in terms of disclosing the report publicly so that there can be public debate before the government makes up its mind.

This government has taken a half-step forward. They get part of this, but they don't get the whole thing. This bill, in my view, is another example of that imperfect understanding on the part of the new government of dealing with the democratic issues in this province, and it is a seriously flawed bill as a result. I think it could have gone much farther and actually become a significant contribution to improving the state of democracy in our province, but in doing that, it has failed.

Mr. Speaker. Those are my remarks. I thank all members for their kind patience, and I'll take my seat.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

That being the case, who shall I recognize next?

The hon. Government House Leader to conclude the debate, or shall we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

Bill 3 Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. R. Miller]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to continue.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My comments will be very brief this afternoon, and it's nice to know that members opposite appreciate that. You would almost think it was Thursday afternoon and that people wanted to go home.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I want to get on the record is that about two and a half years ago, shortly after the November 22 election, when I found myself elected as a member of this Legislature, my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View told us at a meeting – perhaps it was the first meeting of the Official Opposition caucus – that climate change in particular and issues around the environment in general would be the issue of the next election. I have to confess that I wasn't so sure that he was right, but when you look back now nearly two and a half years later, it is quite clear that issues around the environment have risen pretty much to the top of public consciousness.

Whether you talk about water and the diversion of water from one basin to another, whether you talk about the Water for Life strategy and the fact that the government hasn't funded it, whether you talk about the transboundary issues facing Albertans in relationship to our neighbours to the north, as we saw with members of the public in the gallery today, or transboundary issues involving Albertans and the people of the state of Montana as was referenced by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, or whether you talk about issues of transboundary water with our neighbours to the east in Saskatchewan, this is a common theme almost wherever you go in Alberta.

Certainly, issues around carbon emissions have risen to the fore. In fact, surprisingly, this government is now introducing the first carbon tax law in the country. I hear members opposite applauding the fact that they're introducing a carbon tax law. Let us be mindful that this is the same government that only a matter of months ago would have scoffed at the idea of instituting a bill dealing with carbon tax. In fact, undoubtedly – undoubtedly – we on this side of the House would have had all sorts of taunts thrown at us about our federal Liberal cousins if we had suggested that they should do so. So how times change; how times change. It really is in some ways refreshing to see the foresight and the intuition that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View had when he made those comments two and a half years ago. I think he might well prove to have been entirely bang on with his comments when the next election does come around.

I know that there are many members wanting to speak to this today. If you were to review the comments that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View gave during his remarks in second reading of Bill 3, I think he probably said everything that there is to say with the exception of one thing that I will indicate I have to learn more about. But on the surface it certainly looks to me as if the idea of keeping the offsets within Alberta is something that I can support. I'm not a big fan of the offset program, as a general rule. It's not something that I like the idea of. I know that isn't necessarily in agreement with all of my colleagues, but I have to learn more about it before anybody could convince me that that really is going to be effective. But in my own mind I will say, Mr. Speaker, that if there are going to be offsets and trading, if we can keep that in Alberta and benefit industries in Alberta and benefit the people of Alberta first, on the surface that looks to me as if it would be the way to go.

So we'll continue to have that conversation in our caucus. I'll continue to read and attempt to learn more about the offset program and how it might work here as opposed to some of the ideas that others have espoused, whether it be trading on a national level or, of course, on an international level. But that is one thing in this bill that certainly has attracted my attention.

As was said earlier when we were discussing the lobbyist registry, there is no question that this is a good first step. It may not be everything that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View would have hoped to see in this bill, and it may not address all of the concerns that any number of people that are concerned about our environment have, but certainly it is a step in the right direction, a step that's long overdue, and ultimately, I'm going to guess, a step that will likely have the support of the Official Opposition in this House. Even though it may not go near far enough, it certainly is a step in the right direction, and I'm going to suspect that in the end we will support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

There being no one, then I shall recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to rise and speak to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. The government's plan for climate change has a distinct clause that makes it less effective in reducing emissions in an absolute sense. Their reliance on emissions intensity as their measure to reduction instead of focusing on moving aggressively to absolute reductions makes this bill and the accompanying regulations ineffective.

Mr. Speaker, "absolute emissions" is the term used to describe the total volume of emissions from a particular source, whether it is an exhaust system of a vehicle or a stack from an industrial facility. Emissions intensity is the amount of greenhouse gases released measured against another factor such as GDP or a barrel of oil. A more fuel-efficient car will have lower emissions intensity than a less efficient model, but the two cars may still have the same absolute emissions if the more efficient one is driven farther.

If the current rate of economic growth in Alberta continues, the province's emissions could rise to 72 per cent above 1990 levels by 2020, so our absolute emissions would rise dramatically even if the government's target of achieving a 50 per cent reduction in emissions intensity by 2020 is achieved.

What is the outcome of these new regulations? They will jeopardize our ability and Canada's ability to meet the Kyoto commitment, jeopardize Canada's commitments to achieve much deeper emissions reduction targets for post-2012 commitment periods, that will become more necessary given the ultimate objectives of the UN framework convention on climate change, and will create a burden for the rest of Canada by transferring responsibility for emissions to the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, the outcome is that industry will be faced with the prospect of trying to achieve two different sets of regulations: one provincial and one federal. If the federal government regulations are more aggressive, the provincial government will not negotiate a new position unless it is for the federal government to match Alberta's plan. This is not in the spirit of co-operation and could jeopardize industry because they will have two different sets of standards and could possibly face two different sets of carbon taxes or penalties paid if they exceed an emission target. This is certainly not in the best interests of industry.

There is also an issue with Bill 3 in that it's not consistent with federal legislation in the form of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. In certain areas such as limitation period or confidentiality of information there are differences.

Mr. Speaker, we should not be supporting this bill for the simple reason that it will continue to rely on emissions intensity rather than moving toward absolute hard caps on emissions. An Alberta Liberal government would establish an absolute emissions limit by 2012. This is absolutely necessary to achieve any real reduction and to have any impact on climate change in the near future. It seems that while the rest of the world is moving quickly to tackle climate change through aggressive measures, the Alberta government refuses to move away from allowing pollution to increase without firm action. Alberta could be at 70 per cent above 1990 levels by 2020 with no end to an increase in absolute emissions in sight.

Mr. Speaker, some of these measures have merit in principle. At least some action is being taken, but it's nowhere near enough. For instance, allowing the purchase of offsets to encourage industry to become more efficient is a good step, but limiting this system to within Alberta borders is not necessarily the best way for industry to purchase offsets.

The world is moving toward a global system. In fact, it's up and running, but Alberta will be left behind due to these regulations. A problem with a carbon trading system only within Alberta is that it is very limited in size, which could limit how many players enter the market. The price could become distorted, and companies could end up paying a very hefty price for credits to offset their emissions. There's no need to rely on an Alberta-based carbon trading system when there are other established markets to buy credits from Alberta. We'll still see an economic gain as we become more efficient and have more buyers of our credits.

As well, it seems that allowing new companies coming online to be excused from the emissions intensity reduction of 12 per cent immediately is not necessary. New facilities that come online after 2000 have no requirement to reduce their GHG emissions intensity until their fourth year of operation, at which point they will be required to reduce their GHG emissions intensity by 2 per cent and increase that level yearly, up to 12 per cent in the ninth year of operation. There should not be different standards depending on the year an operation began. All emitters should be – should be – on the same level playing field in the interest of fairness. There is no substantive reason why new emitters should be exempt from the regulations for four years.

Mr. Speaker, the government's decision to implement the 12 per cent reduction starting July 1, 2007, and forcing compliance at the end of 2007 is something that industry is unhappy with. There is absolutely no way that the large emitters can make the changes necessary to avoid paying into the technology fund, and the reaction of industry is not something we can easily ignore. The government needs to plan better and allow industry time to get prepared to comply with the new rules when technological change is required.

A more balanced approach would be to set out a time frame for industry to comply realistically with new targets and then move them toward absolute reductions. If it's the government's job to provide regulations that can foster lower carbon dioxide emissions, industry needs to know that regulations are in place to reduce the negative environmental effects of production and use. Unless government and industry work closer together to move faster on carbon capture and storage, for instance, implementation of such proven technology will crawl along, and future generations will pay the price.

Mr. Speaker, we are very disappointed that at this critical time in the future of Alberta, of Canada, and indeed the entire world our government has failed to take the necessary steps to really fight climate change. There was an opportunity here for this government to talk to industry and to our federal government and come up with a real plan for real reductions in absolute emissions. This is what Albertans and Canadians want, but what we have received is a bill that will do nothing to stop our GHG emissions from increasing. While everyone else is prepared to make real changes and governments show real leadership, we are stuck with the same old, tired government that hasn't really changed its position from the year 2003. Fifty per cent reduction in emission intensity in 2020, the same goal as in 2003, will do absolutely nothing to stop the effect of climate change. This government refuses to listen to the science, to the people, even to the industry, who are prepared to move on climate change, and have stubbornly refused to deviate from their old and tired plan.

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents exactly the same old Tory government, stuck in the past and refusing to do what needs to be done for the future of Alberta and the world. At a time when government leadership is vital, especially in Alberta, our government does not know whether to lead or be cheerleaders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should there be participants.

There being none, then might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to be able to introduce three guests today. They decided to stop by and see how we work here in the Legislature. It's those three up there. First of all, I'd like to introduce to you my niece Rebekah Oudman from DeMotte, Indiana – she's studying education at Dordt College, Iowa – and her friend Joanna Esselink from Emo, Ontario. She's studying fine arts, also at Dordt College. Now, most kids in college on a spring break go to Cancun or Miami or some nice place, but these kids have actually come to Alberta to see how we do things here. We're glad to have them here. The third one is my son Lorne. He is attending NAIT at the Souch campus. He is an apprentice welder at Syncrude in Fort McMurray, and he's taking some time out to upgrade his skills at the Souch campus, which is the NAIT campus on the south side of the city, and enjoying himself there with about 200 or 300 other welding apprentices. I ask them all to stand up and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, we're indeed honoured. Such an invigorating afternoon we're having here this afternoon that it should just inspire the members to even be that much more articulate.

Second Reading
Bill 3
Climate Change and Emissions Management

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise and make some comments on Bill 3, the climate change act, and I'm very pleased to have this opportunity to lay out some of our views on the bill and on the broader issues dealt with by the bill.

We will not be supporting the bill, primarily because it's indicative of some very fundamental misunderstandings the government seems to have about climate change, greenhouse gas emissions, and how efforts to fight global climate change have to be integrated with other economic measures. We need to make sure that our province participates in what has rapidly emerged as a global effort to reduce global climate change, and this is an effort in which this government has not taken part in a meaningful way up until this point.

Last week the Minister of Environment launched another round of consultations on climate change, which tells me the government isn't too sure about the issue. It was interesting to note that they used the same logo, the same news release, more or less, and the same shtick generally as the previous Environment minister used five years before, and that tells me, Mr. Speaker, that the only thing this government is interested in recycling is environmental policy.

We know that Canada is the eighth-worst contributor to greenhouse gases in the world. Alberta was responsible for nearly 40 per cent of those emissions. In fact, seven of the top 10 industrial emitters of greenhouse gases are located in Alberta, so we have a problem. Canada produces about 2 per cent of global greenhouse gas emissions but only represents .5 per cent of the entire world's population. Greenhouse gas emissions rose 40 per cent from 1990 to 2005, and that was very significant.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Pembina Institute the newly approved Kearl oil sands mine project – they say that Imperial Oil failed to develop a plan outlining how they would reduce greenhouse gas pollution from the Kearl oil sands project. This is very troubling, considering that this project would emit about 30 per cent more greenhouse gas pollution per barrel of oil compared to a similar project. Oil sands operations are the fastest growing source of new greenhouse gas emissions in Canada, and new oil sands projects could account for up to half of Canada's projected growth in business-as-usual emissions between '03 and 2010.

Mr. Speaker, we need tough regulations in place to force the major emitters to change their ways. These megacorporations have no incentive to go green without a strong push from the government. The AEUB has consistently failed to consider the cumulative environmental impact of tar sands projects and expansions. Examples that I have used already: the Kearl oil sands project, the Voyageur project, and so on.

Mr. Speaker, electricity is Alberta's second-highest emitting sector and has increased its emissions 31 per cent over 1990 levels. Our electricity comes from coal-fired plants, which are significant contributors to greenhouse gases.

The Pembina Institute estimates that at the current rate of economic growth – and this is very significant; this is really the nub of the argument here against the government's plan for emissions-based CO₂ reduction – the government's plans will allow emissions to rise 72 per cent above 1990 levels by the year 2020. Mr. Speaker, that's a 72 per cent increase in real emissions even if this bill is passed.

The dangers posed by climate change are very well documented. Alberta is particularly vulnerable to changes in water supply and the effects of severe weather on crops. Just look at the problems we're facing now with the pine beetle, Mr. Speaker. That is directly a result of climate change because it takes 40-below winters for a sustained period in order to kill back the pine beetle infestations. These are a normal part of the ecosystem in these forests, but we haven't had those kinds of conditions in northern B.C., where this has spread, for a number of years, so the infestation has just continued to grow because the winters required to kill back the beetles no longer exist. That's why we're faced with this.

So the economic cost in another industry of doing nothing about CO₂ emissions is enormous, and these kinds of costs will spread from industry to industry to industry. If the government continues to put all its eggs in the basket of the oil and gas industry, they're going to cause some very, very serious problems.

Mr. Speaker, the root of the issue is not just about emissions. They're just one measure of the relationship between our economy and our environment. Every day this relationship is becoming increasingly clear to Albertans. Every barrel of water that is sent down a well to bring up a little more oil is a barrel of water that can never be used for drinking, for agriculture, or to support wildlife. Every megaton of pollution that's poured into the sky increases the rates of respiratory illness, cancer, and other illnesses. To put it in the starkest terms: we may live by the economy, but our children may die by the environment. The current pace of development is having enormous costs for average Albertans. Huge sums of money are flowing out of Alberta, but the pollution stays here.

The second really important point that I'd like to make is that notwithstanding the approach of the government of reducing emissions intensity, which is like telling someone that they can have as many cupcakes as they want as long as there's a little bit less sugar in each batch as they go along, you know, we're not going to make real differences. The Liberals want to wait 10 to 20 years before they put in place some hard caps. [interjections] Well, I have some clippings here quoting the Liberal leader as saying that. What neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives realize is that unless you manage the growth in the economy, particularly the tar sands development in this province, you can't affect emissions.

You have to have some plan for growth and for managing the pace of development in the tar sands, and we can do that to maintain full employment in our province, to keep the economy humming along yet prevent disastrous impacts in the environment, in the area of social changes, shortages of labour and shortages of housing, difficulties dealing with infrastructure and so on. That's the approach that we favour. This is the approach also that former Premier Peter Lougheed has talked about. He said: why should we have more than one tar sands project under construction at a time? He said: we have to start thinking like owners.

We own this resource. We don't have to dig it up as fast as the Americans want us to so that we're exporting raw bitumen and the jobs with it or that we're importing major plants from China instead of building them here or that we're only getting 1 per cent on most of the tar sands development or that we're going to be faced with enormous problems with CO₂ production, that we're going to have to pay for carbon offsets when a carbon market comes here. We have to start thinking about the people who own this resource, which is the people of Alberta, and we need to make sure that the development takes place according to a staged plan so that we can catch up on the infrastructure needs that exist in this province.

But the current government's direction, as far as I can see, is to not touch the brake on the economy. That's what the Premier has said: we're not going to touch the brake. Well, at the same time, the United States is saying that they want us to increase our production out of the tar sands by five times. So if George W. Bush is pressing his foot right down to the floor on the accelerator and the Premier is afraid to touch the brake, then you know where the province of Alberta is going to end up, and that's in the ditch.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we need to be real about climate change. It's a real, serious issue. It will affect not just us but our children and our grandchildren. We have to get serious about it, and I'm of the view and our party is of the view that unless you address the pace of growth in this province, you will be unable to put any meaningful measures in place that will control the output of CO₂ from this province. This province has become a serious player in CO₂ emission in the world. It's a big player. We produce a lot of CO₂, and if the plans go the way the government seems to want them to go, we're going to be even bigger still.

Mr. Speaker, the whole approach of emissions intensity is a false approach. It allows massive increases in the output of CO₂ into the atmosphere, which affects the climate. The climate doesn't care whether the emissions intensity is reduced or increased or anything like that. The climate only cares about the total amount of CO₂ that's put into the atmosphere. This bill doesn't deal with that in any meaningful way, and as a result it is absolutely irrelevant to the whole question of climate change, which it claims to address. Therefore, our party and, I'm sure, hundreds of thousands of Albertans will be rejecting this bill and rejecting the approach that the government is trying to foist on Albertans.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to speak to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. We appear to be scrambling to catch up to both the science that has been there for decades calling for action and the public, who are increasingly vocal, anxious, and angry that this government has often put industry and other interests ahead of the long-term future of Albertans and our ethical responsibility on the planet. It's interesting that we're choosing to rush ahead of the federal government and put something out that will give the impression that we are really with it and that we're concerned and that we want to take a lead. But in order to really take a lead, we must align ourselves and find some common ground and work together with others in this country and, of course, the international community, which we have already made a commitment to through the Kyoto protocol.

If we are serious about addressing climate change, we must talk about two general areas. First of all, of course, reducing emissions clearly is a priority. The second whole area though is about action and adapting and paradigm shifts, that our public are now paying for the results not only of weather events that are occurring at an increasing rate and the droughts that are increasing but also the results of health costs, which industry is imposing on all of us as a result of the decline in air quality and impacts on human health. We must look at our global commitment to the ethical action and leadership that we need. Clearly, we need to fit in with other countries and, in particular, our federal government's initiatives. I think our public is looking for leadership.

We live probably in the richest place on earth and probably the most technologically progressive country in the world and do know that we are addicted to the income from industries just as much as the public is addicted to fossil fuels for all of our activities. We have to be part of the solution. The people of Alberta want to see strong leadership on this issue. It has exceeded health care in interest and support in this country, and it's not being truly reflected in Bill 3. A 2 per cent reduction annually in intensity for these newer emitters is not going to result in real progress in this province.

If we are serious about smart growth, about sustainable growth, then we have to look at putting measures in place so that we understand what sustainability really means in terms of preserving and protecting the social, the environmental, and the economic values. I think that industry is looking at us too for some more clarification on fixed targets. They need these in order to do their business plans and to actually make clear commitments to new developments. There's a lack of clarity with this bill, and many businesses and industrial developments are unsure of what to do with this bill.

This bill needs to be integrated with other aspects of our land-use planning, agriculture, forests, and, in particular, water use, and urban development. It is disappointing that this bill deals with intensity targets rather than caps on emissions. Many members on this side of the House have spoken with knowledge and passion about the need for fixed targets.

Will there be changes now as a result of the federal plan? Was it because we want to be seen as a leader in addressing the issues on climate change that there is a rush to put forward this bill that is flawed? Will we be a leader by harmonizing and working with the entire country?

We have a global and ethical responsibility for our planet, we are interconnected, we must be trustees of our planet, and we have the potential to be world leaders.

The basic principle of carbon causing greenhouse emissions has been validated by the scientific community for over two decades. Unfortunately, politicians and media have given it a spin that has caused confusion for the public. The role of government is to do the right thing. We are supposed to be stewards of our land and resources. The right thing to do is reduce incentives for fossil fuels and increase incentives for the clean, renewable energy. It is disappointing that these essential steps are not addressed in this bill.

Albertans are increasingly aware of the tremendous business opportunities in conservation as well as the value of carbon in enhancing agriculture, capturing methane, solar, wind, and geothermal power for our world. It's time to give these options, along with distributed electrical generation, the same incentives that fossil fuels have received for decades in this province.

Thank you.

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available again.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on the debate.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to talk for a little while on Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. As other speakers have indicated, this is probably the most serious issue that humanity has ever faced. We've known about it for a long time, so this kind of bill, even if it is considered by some to be a step in the right direction, is overdue. We should have been dealing with this kind of issue decades ago.

The scientists have been studying climate change for many, many, many years. Many, like James Hansen, a NASA scientist, told the U.S. Congress that human beings were dangerously heating up the planet through the use of fossil fuels. Actually, when he presented his findings to the U.S. Congress, it was in 1988, so that was a long time ago. At first he tended to be marginalized, and there were many naysayers, and there were people who were posing as pseudo-scientists wandering around North America trying to deny that there was a serious problem with climate change. But that has changed, as the accumulation of scientific data has been gathered, and the public now is, obviously, really onside, and it's convinced that there is a serious issue here to deal with.

The United Nations, for example, has set up an organization called the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, the IPCC, to collect the information from scientists to bring it all together, to collate it, and to publish their findings, their judgments about where we're at in regard to understanding climate change. In 1995 in their report they said that the balance of evidence suggests that it is human beings and their activity that is increasing the planet's temperature, and it is a really serious problem. Human beings, we're burning far too much fossil fuel. So that warning was taken seriously by lots of countries, and that led to the negotiations leading to the Kyoto treaty. That was a big step forward, and Canada was a party to that treaty. Unfortunately, the United States was not.

In 2006 the same organization, the United Nations' organization Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change issued its latest report, which really startled the world even though it wasn't saying anything basically new because it was based on accumulation of scientific findings up to that point. They said that they were more certain than ever that global warming, which is so far only about one degree Fahrenheit in the average global temperature, is caused by the activities of human beings.

They went on to document that by talking about the amount of carbon that is in the atmosphere. It's increasing at a far greater rate than ever before. We can expect further rises in temperature throughout the world. Almost all frozen areas on earth are melting, including the Arctic ice cap, so that will lead to the rise in the levels of the oceans, and we all know that.

As all Albertans, we go on a regular basis to the mountains, and we see how the Athabasca glacier has receded through the years, and it's quite startling. Even in the 30 years that I've been in Alberta, it has receded to quite an extent, and a lot of people are worried. You know, glaciers are the origin of most of our rivers as they flow across the prairies. To what extent will that be a problem in the future? When you listen to authorities like Dr. Schindler at the University of Alberta, we should be alarmed. We should be alarmed about the future.

The same report, the IPCC United Nations report, talked about changing weather patterns, hurricanes, tornadoes, heavy rainfalls, heat waves around the world, and that all the strange weather patterns will get more extreme in the future as climate change has that kind of impact on the world.

The most disturbing comment in that report though – and this brings us to this bill – is that even if we cease the increase in coal and oil and gas burning that is going on now, cease to have it rise, the temperature of the world will continue to rise. There are a lot of scientists who are now saying, very pessimistically, that it may be too late to stop the climate change that has been going on for some time, so just holding things at today's levels will not really turn things around. What we should have done – and this is decades ago – is we should have been more aggressive about cutting back greenhouse gas emissions.

What we need is to talk about a reduction in emissions, and we need to be aggressive about that and do something drastic now. The Democrats in the U.S. Congress are bringing a bill to Congress calling for an 80 per cent cut in emissions by 2050. That kind of move is to look at an actual goal, setting a goal of reductions, not an emissions intensity approach, which is the emphasis of this bill.

I have real problems with this bill. It doesn't really do what we need to have done. The emissions intensity with a staged-in approach and the ability of companies to buy offsets from other industries and so on: it seems to me that that's not aggressive enough. I like a quote from the Pembina Institute, which is the government's favourite institute on the environment. Their response to this bill is that, really, it's a joke. There's nothing here that is going to lead to a reduction in emissions, so what is the point? I'm glad we're considering this issue, but this bill doesn't seem to go far enough at all.

We need to set out a time frame for industry. We need to set out definite goals and targets, and industry has to know what our goals are. Of course, they have the technology; they have the know-how. They are moving fast to put the appropriate technology in place, such as carbon capture and storage. What they need to know is: what are the actual goals of Alberta? When the playing field is levelled and all the companies know what the goals are, then they can be busy trying to deal with the issue because everybody recognizes that it's a huge, huge problem.

The problem is that in Alberta there's not enough political will to deal with this issue. Companies are ready to deal with the issue, and industry is, but the political will is not there to take the leadership. And that's been a problem in the whole of the modern western world.

Mr. Speaker, I've been dealing with the issues in a broader way in terms of ethics and ideological positions on understanding nature and the created world and how human beings have dealt with it, and it's been especially in the west, not in the east because in eastern countries they've had long traditions of caring with compassion for the earth. You only have to think of religions like Taoism. The ancient Chinese had a long tradition of being able to deal with the harmony of human beings with the world around them. That's basically what Taoism was all about.

But it was especially in the west – and I'm ashamed to say this, but it came out of Christian teaching – that we felt that we were mandated as creatures under God to control the world, to dominate the world even, to subject the world, to subdue the world, and we have become really successful at that. In fact, the traditions in the west, the mythologies of the west have led to a kind of ideology of domination of the world. Now we look back and say: "How did we get to the position that we are so powerful that we can destroy the planet that we live on? How can we now turn that back and recover other values, like the idea of stewardship of the earth, caring with compassion for the earth?" In order to do that, Mr. Speaker, we have to have a more aggressive approach to dealing with climate change than we have in this bill.

Alberta has to take the leadership because Alberta among all the provinces is producing the most greenhouse gas emissions in Canada. So surely it's here in Alberta that we have to take the most creative and aggressive position to deal with greenhouse gas emissions. Alberta's greenhouse gas emissions have continued to increase to 40 per cent above 1990 levels even as early as 2004. Our energy sector, electricity sector, new coal plants, the mining sector, especially the tar sands, are contributing to greenhouse gas emissions as never before, and we have to take some leadership.

Most of us, Mr. Speaker, have seen Al Gore's movie, An Inconvenient Truth. It was very well received. I hope that members on the government side have all seen it. If they haven't seen it, then they have to update their knowledge of the current science. It even received an Academy Award, I believe. I think that the public is going to put more and more pressure on governments to deal with climate change and deal with it in a much more aggressive way than this government is doing.

Those are my remarks. They're fairly general remarks now, and I hope that when we deal with the bill, we can look at a lot of the specifics.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, [some applause] and thank you, hon. member. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 5, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

I'd like to begin by requesting the support of all members of this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, Bill 5 is an omnibus bill. It amends five health statutes.

Amendments to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act will improve access to practitioner records so the department can confidently verify medical claims and will strengthen the committees used by the Minister of Health and Wellness to review health care claims.

Currently the department's ability to review practitioner records is limited and requires practitioner consent. Amendments will enhance the department's authority to fully audit practitioner records to ensure that services have been provided as they've been billed. This is a response to the Auditor General's recommendations and the public's expectation that government be accountable on how public funding is being spent.

At present the minister may utilize reports and recommendations of a committee established in the act when reassessing health care claims. The current committee structure is inflexible. Membership from some professional associations and colleges is mandated. Other professional associations, as well as members of the public, are excluded. We're addressing these structural problems by providing for the establishment of a roster of health professionals as well as public representatives. From this roster committees will be established as required. Committee composition will vary. Members will be selected based on the requirements and complexity of the review.

Proposed amendments to the Health Insurance Premiums Act will reduce the administrative burden for the small number of Albertans who choose to opt out of the provincial health care insurance plan. Residents will be able to exempt themselves every three years. Currently residents are required to file a declaration every year and can only opt back in at the beginning of the next year. Changes will enable residents to opt out at any time and opt back in following a 90-day notice period. This will provide for a more customer-friendly approach to the administration of the health care insurance plan.

Other amendments are more administrative in nature. For instance, the Pharmacy and Drug Act and Public Health Act are being amended to clarify the department's legislative authority to adopt regulations, standards, and guidelines, as well as drug schedules from other resources. The amendments allow for these schedules and standards to be amended from time to time in order to ensure that regulations remain current. The definition of "guardian" in the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act is being broadened so that it's consistent with definitions in other provincial legislation, and a typographical error which references a section number erroneously is being corrected in the Health Information Act.

In conclusion, these amendments will facilitate and strengthen the effectiveness of the day-to-day operations of the Health and Wellness department. Therefore, I ask support of the House.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I was going to move to adjourn debate, but I was just handed a note suggesting that at least one person would like to speak to that.

So with that I will take my chair, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that I was able to listen to the sponsoring member provide his opening remarks on Bill 5, the Health Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, and I'm pleased to be able to provide some feedback to what I see in front of us today.

I'll start with a brief historical vignette, and that is that prior to the Standing Orders being changed in 2003, I think, it used to be that when we had an omnibus bill in front of us – in fact, Bill 5 covers five different statutes – members would have 30 minutes to speak to it because it was capturing more than two pieces of legislation. But after the change in those Standing Orders that provision was taken out. That can be problematic if you've got a lot of changes that are being made in the different statutes. So there's the historical vignette for this afternoon.

Now specifically to Bill 5. I'm finding this a very interesting little bill for a couple of reasons. It appears on first reading to be, sort of, a number of minor housekeeping changes that are being brought into various health acts, but let me just go through some of what's being proposed here.

As the sponsoring member indicated, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act is amending a couple of different things but specifically expanding ministerial powers to be able to select members of a committee that reviews claims submitted to the Alberta health care insurance plan. So I note that the reason behind this was that currently there are very rigid criteria for who is on committees like this. It mandates some professionals to appear but excludes others or, rather, is silent on others, which amounts to them being excluded.

The intention here is to make the committee more flexible. Well, I note that it actually puts more power in the hands of the government minister responsible for this department, who now has, you know, total control over who they would appoint to this committee. Although the member says, "Well, you know, we're going to pick from a roster," nonetheless, it is more restrictive than what we were operating on before, which did mandate representation from certain groups even if that list was too finite. But I find it interesting that that, in fact, is moving more power into the hands of the Health and Wellness minister. So I'm wondering what other options the minister considered for trying to make this committee more expansive and why we didn't just add to the list of groups that were included on the original review panels rather than setting up a whole other committee.

Related to that, I'm interested in what we can expect to see the minister put in place to ensure that there's more impartiality. If he's in total control of who goes on to these, well, you know, people tend to appoint people that they know, so there ends up being quite a bit of institutionalized patronage, that happens with this government. If you've been around for 35 years, you've got a lot of friends. You know a lot of people, and those people all tend to turn up on these various committees. So I'm wondering if the minister, in this new age of enlightenment that they are trying to achieve, has considered what other protocols or methods he could put in place to ensure that there is some additional impartiality that is brought into this process.

There's also a section that removes the requirement for a practitioner or physician to provide permission to the department to examine their medical records. This is part of auditing to verify that billing services had been done correctly. This is interesting because you would have thought some of this would have improved as we end up with all of these computer links between the doctors' offices and the department, and the billing on the plan would have been smoothed out a bit. But I agree that it's always useful to go back to source documents. So I'm wondering why there was a decision. What caused this that it was felt that it was necessary to remove the requirement that physicians give permission? Because, in tandem with this, there will now also be the establishment of a penalty for any practitioner who refuses to give that permission. So this is a stick, not a carrot, that's being put in place here.

I'm aware that part of this as well is around the review of how physicians provide services, and I think it's a good thing that we're looking at the auditing of anything that requires an outlay of hard-earned taxpayer money. I think those audit systems should be in place, and I'm a big fan of that, but I'm just wondering if we could get a bit more detail on what led to this or what circumstances led to it. Did we have a number of cases where there was some concern around the computer auditing that's available, or did we have a number of physicians that were refusing to let us look at their records for this kind of an attest audit? How many: 100, 500, 50, 10? What is the proportion that we're dealing with here?

My concern when you start talking about health records, of course, is always patient confidentiality. So I'm wondering if patient confidentiality has been impacted at all by this change or if that's anticipated. Are they made aware in any way, shape, or form that their records are being released to the department to check a physician? It's still their information that is now going to be looked at, and I'm assuming that this information has not been stripped of identifying factors. It is their name, their health insurance number, their gender, their Canadian citizenship status, and various other health issues that are obviously part of this billing process. So are they aware that their information is going to be looked at by the department?

I'm pretty sure that it's in the act that they're not aware, but it's one of the things that I protested because I think they should be. You know, there's a discussion that could come about whether or not they would have the ability to stop that, but they certainly should be made aware that their information has been seen by more than just their doctor.

I'm also noticing that there's a provision that required consultation with the college or an organization representing the practitioner. The provision requiring consultation has been removed, and I'm wondering what's behind that. Does this remove a significant responsibility that the college currently maintains, or is it just a matter of changing legislation to reflect what's currently in practice?

The minor typo is fine. I understand that, and I don't have a question about it, obviously. Yeah. You've got to fix those typos, Mr. Speaker.

But I am really curious about this change to amend the Health Insurance Premiums Act to make it easier for Albertans to opt out of paying Alberta health insurance, especially when we're talking 255 people. A couple of things occur to me. Out of all the issues that are happening around health care in Alberta today, this is what needed to come forward in the fifth bill that we're debating in this spring Legislature? I would have thought there were other issues that were really pressing, top-of-mind, that need to get in front of the Legislative Assembly that would have trumped needing to facilitate 255 people's desire not to be in the health care insurance plan.

So I'm really curious about what prompted this. I appreciate that we're trying to remove red tape and make paperwork less onerous. Indeed, if it helps to streamline administration and save some money there that can be spent in other places, I think there's a good argument to be made in support of that, but we're talking paperwork for 255 people, and we now have let them off the hook for three years instead of one year, but we'll let them opt back in at any time instead of at the beginning of the year, as was held previously. This just struck me as a very odd thing to be spending important time on at the beginning of our Legislative Assembly, so I'm looking for a bit more explanation on that one.

In particular, I would like to know what some of the reasons are for people opting out because I think that's an important piece of public information that we all need to know about. My concern around this – and I would love you to disprove them, actually – is that we end up with people who have enough personal financial resources to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me, hon. members. We're not in committee. We have to remain in our seats.

Ms Blakeman: Ah, yes, that minor matter of parliamentary procedure. Thank you.

I would like to know if the reasons are connected to people who have enough personal financial resources to purchase health care anywhere in the world that they want and likely are doing so. Are they, then, refusing to pay into the public health care system because they just don't want to? They don't use it, and they don't want to pay into it. I'd be interested in what the reasons are behind that. In fact, does the plan or does the protocol require that somebody state why they're withdrawing or why they wish to withdraw? I think that's very useful information.

What provisions are in place to make sure that they don't opt back in just when they need coverage, that they can't go for two and a half years with no coverage and then they discover that they need some kind of treatment, so they opt back in on 90 days, and then they're in. That's an opportunity for abuse of our system and reflects on the rest of us. So what's in place there?

Amending the Mandatory Testing and Disclosure Act to capture the definition of guardian is appropriate, particularly as that should be bringing in the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act. I do want to make sure that we don't repeat the same mistake and put any kind of gender or familial position definition attached to that, or we'll end up with the same problems with not being Charter proof on our legislation.

The Pharmacy and Drug Act. Well, we wish that this, in fact, would be a pharmacare program, but it's not. It seems to be to clarify the authority of Alberta Health and Wellness to adopt the national drug schedules as they change over time. Strategy to come, I'm promised. Well, we're on the record now, Mr. Speaker, that there's a pharmacare strategy to come, and I'm looking forward to that.

Finally, we have the Public Health Act, which is to bring the act in line with the current policy of enabling the adoption of documents that change over time. That avoids a regulatory amendment each time a new version of standards are in place. That is a type of administrative correction that I think is exactly what we should be doing. Of course, it's always got to meet the test of public accountability and not moving more things behind closed doors.

So I'm looking forward to having those questions answered for me, but at this point I'm satisfied enough with what's being brought forward that I would be happy to support Bill 5 in second reading, and I'm happy, if there are no other speakers, to call the question on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has outlined a number of questions. I'm very happy to respond to them. Of course, the member may expect that I'm happy to respond to them in Committee of the Whole. I'll consult with the professionals who deal with this on a daily basis and give an even more thorough response.

I would certainly like to call the question at this point, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 20: Mr. R. Miller]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much. It's a pleasure to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor on March 7. The Speech from the Throne lays out a plan to adjust to growth pressures facing the province. It also addresses the need to preserve our prosperity for future generations. Albertans want their government to act on the issues that are important to them. They expect government to act in a way that is fiscally and environmentally responsible. The Speech from the Throne laid out five priorities: govern with integrity and transparency, manage growth pressures, improve Albertans' quality of life, build a stronger Alberta, and provide safe and secure communities.

As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission it's my responsibility to ensure that Albertans, young and old, achieve freedom from the harmful effects of addiction to drugs, alcohol, and gambling. By tackling these issues head on, we will improve the quality of life of Albertans and provide safe and secure communities. These two priorities laid out in the Speech from the Throne are of great importance to me.

Mr. Speaker, under the topic of improving Alberta's quality of life, the throne speech mentioned sustained focus on wellness, injury reduction, and disease prevention; assistance to people living in the community with serious mental illness and providing their families with improved access to support services and treatment; a new pharmaceutical strategy which will capitalize on opportunities to improve the range of drugs available and reduce or avoid prohibitive costs; improving the quality of life in First Nations and Métis communities; ensuring that government policies better reflect the needs of persons with disabilities; and establishing a community spirit program for charitable giving and donations.

On the government priority for providing safe and secure communities His Honour the Lieutenant Governor discussed working with communities to make neighbourhoods stronger and safer – a community that works together has a much better chance of defeating crime and ensuring a safe environment for our children to live, learn, and grow – and working with community leaders to establish a crime reduction and safe communities task force, that will consult Albertans on how to reduce crime and improve public confidence in the justice system, building on the work being done by 13 government ministries to develop an integrated crime reduction strategy.

The government has also committed to invest in advanced education, including university, college, the trades, and occupational training.

Mr. Speaker, managing growth pressures is another key priority for this government. We will address pressures on housing, labour, infrastructure, and the environment. I'm pleased that the Premier has asked me to sit on the Calgary committee to end homelessness. As the government representative to this committee I am thrilled to be part of this initiative. Our goal on that committee is not to reduce but to eliminate homelessness from the city of Calgary within the next decade. The successful implementation of this program could set the standard and be the template for cities across Alberta, throughout Canada, and throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to briefly speak about the objectives of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission. We will provide information and develop current and accurate information on the abuse of alcohol, drugs, and gambling. Knowledge is key in tackling these monumental problems. We will work towards prevention, offering community-based programs and services designed to prevent substance abuse related problems. We will provide treatment, ensuring a broad spectrum of programs and services that assist Albertans in their recovery from substance abuse and gambling problems. AADAC has been in existence since 1970 and provides 30,000 Albertans with treatment and 90,000 Albertans with prevention services and information every year.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to make a presentation to the Affordable Housing Task Force, chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West, I believe it is, to provide AADAC's response and/or submission to the Affordable Housing Task Force. Now, some of you may be wondering: what does the treatment of addictions have to do with affordable housing? In fact, the two are very closely linked, which is why I wanted to mention this in this response to the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne.

At AADAC our mission is to make a difference in people's lives by assisting Albertans to achieve freedom from the harmful effects of alcohol, other drugs, and gambling. We accomplish this by providing information, prevention and treatment programs and services in 51 communities across Alberta. While our reach is wide and our programs and services are comprehensive, we know that the treatment of addictions is complex and multifaceted, that it's not enough to treat just the addiction itself.

Our research tells us that housing shortages and homelessness have serious implications for addictions prevention, treatment, and recovery because socially and economically disadvantaged groups are particularly vulnerable to the effects of addiction. Studies show that youth living on the streets or in unsafe housing are at an increased risk to engage in substance use and abuse at an early age. The Canadian Medical Association reports that 10 to 20 per cent of shelter residents are chronically homeless and have high rates of alcohol and drug addiction.

From AADAC's perspective what can Alberta do in the areas of homelessness and affordable housing as we work towards our goals in the prevention, treatment, and recovery of addictions? Well, AADAC currently funds a number of shelters that provide detoxification and treatment as well as transitional housing for adults in early recovery from addiction. All of these facilities are operating at capacity.

In the short term AADAC recommends that the number of these shelters and transitional housing sites be expanded by allocating additional resources to contracted partners and providers. This will provide more Albertans with safe places where they can recover from their addictions. Also in the short term additional funding needs to be directed to hiring dedicated staff to provide support services for individuals living in these shelters and transitional housing. Many of these individuals often require mental health and ongoing addiction counselling services that they may have difficulty accessing. Providing it onsite helps them become self-reliant sooner.

In the long term Alberta needs to ensure that housing solutions are partnered with what we call wrap-around services. Services like case management support, mobile health care, and partnerships in smaller communities are the types of things individuals in these shelters and transitional housing need as they recover. These wrap-around services are important parts of our addictions treatment continuum.

Mr. Speaker, also in the long term we must ensure that our housing options match the housing and support needs of the clients moving through the stages of recovery from addiction. This system should be tailored towards the needs of specialized groups, like young adults, women, and aboriginals. Without a safe place to live and other transitional supports, there is a high risk that AADAC clients will relapse. These recommendations would not only help prevent addictions but would also ensure that our clients could move from our treatment services into a safe environment and continue on the road towards recovery and a healthy lifestyle.

AADAC remains committed to continuing to work with the task force as it goes through its final steps and, as the minister has the report, towards new solutions in addressing homelessness and affordable housing in Alberta. We remain committed to continuing to work with all levels of government, community groups, health agencies, and our many other partners in prevention and treatment of addictions because all Albertans deserve a safe and affordable place to live. They deserve our help when they need it, and they deserve to receive the best quality care available.

Thank you very much.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is again available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to respond in this tradition at a stage that marks the debut of a new Premier, a man I respect for his decency and dedication to our province. I wish him well, both as a worthy opponent and as a fellow citizen. I applaud his intentions to see a greater measure of decorum in our debate and to restore a measure of democracy to the workings of government. I support his efforts and hope to see these goals achieved in the life of this Assembly.

The Crown in our system stands for more than the person who wears it and the throne is far more than the person who sits on it. The Speech from the Throne, therefore, is more than the speech by the Lieutenant Governor who reads it, the Premier and his staff who write it, or the government for which it is guiding policy. It speaks to the values we enthrone as a society, which is why it is short on specifics as some critics complain. I would rather hear a throne speech that sets out solid principles with particulars to follow than a list of legislative specifics without any explicit principles. I appreciate knowing truly where an administration is coming from. When we know that, the citizens of this province may allow time to get there if those principles are adhered to. So it is on the question of vision and values that I intend to focus here.

First, I'm pleased to note that the environment has moved to the number one place this year from third place in the last throne speech and that economic issues that took up two-thirds of the last speech now share the stage with other issues. The words economy and ecology come from the same root, which means management of a household. Environment and economic growth can no longer be looked on as separate or opposing concerns. One can add to a house at a rapid rate – a new room, a deck, a second storey, or basement suite – but if the roof is leaking, the foundation is crumbling, or the air inside is unhealthy, all the expansion is pointless and counterproductive.

It is my earnest hope that the showcasing of environment in this throne speech represents a foundational improvement and not simply a lean-to added to the front end of the house for political correctness. If this is a real effort at management of a household and not simply business as usual where business runs the front and family lives in the back, a further question follows. What is it that makes a house a home? What makes a society a community or our fastest growing province a good place to live?

Quality of life is one of our new Premier's stated priorities. This must be accessible to all, not only the well-heeled and competitive or even the average Albertan but the most vulnerable among us. Children are canaries in the mine of our industrial society. There is asthma and allergies. There are learning disabilities. The challenges of gangs and latchkey kids are by-products of rapid growth. It is only fair that the benefactors of growth help to ease the growing pains. A sustainable society must be a child-friendly society. This is one quality that makes a house a home.

I was surprised and disappointed that children are not mentioned in the throne speech: surprised because the government took an important step in the funding of child care a few weeks ago, a step I thought it might use as a springboard to the other needed initiatives for children; disappointed because children's well-being is second only to the environment that sustains us all. I can't help but speculate why children were not mentioned. Was it because children's issues are seen as spending ones, and funding having been pledged in advance, they must now wait till budget before we hear about it again? Was it because the crises for children and teenagers are not seen as high profile in contrast with other choices we face? It is not enough to look on children's issues as problems in need of solution when children are an ongoing and vulnerable part of our humanity.

The preamble to the throne speech lists compassion for others as one of the values of Albertans. I commend the reinclusion of compassion as one of our fundamental values, one that has often been neglected in the past decade. I urge the government to consider where past cuts have not shown compassion and to consider putting those wrongs right.

What is the type of society we choose to build in Alberta? There are many words and phrases that we use without thinking, and we need to look at them more carefully. Self-reliant, for instance; we usually take it to mean independent or paying your own way. We've used that value in the past decade to bus welfare recipients out of the province, to prosecute panhandlers, to deny support for farmers' co-operatives, and to roll back collective bargaining rights of unionized working men and women. We supposed that depending on a co-op or collective was of less value than every man for himself. We don't do this with our families. We recognize that they deserve our love and support simply for being here. As children grow up, they want to become involved in the world and self-supporting, and we encourage them in this. But it's a rare parent that needs to kick their kids out of the house.

What about the spouse who chooses to work at a manual job to support the other through university or trade school and who ends up earning much less than the one she worked to support? What about the stay-at-home parent whose cash flow is limited? Is the other partner who works outside justified to claim self-reliance and to walk out on family support when he finds an alternative more interesting and attractive?

This is the market mentality: maximize your income and cut your losses. What about those who for reason of infirmity, accident, or other reason depend on public support? What about the businesses that make their profit and then leave others to clean up the mess? As we look at these examples, it becomes apparent that self-reliant or independent are no longer adequate measuring tools on a planet where we are all interdependent.

Another word we use easily as a value word is market-driven. Does that mean that anything that can command a market is okay? Apparently not. Slavery, child pornography, and the drug trade have all enjoyed a thriving market. What about products that cause accidents and allergies? By the time the market catches up with scams and con artists, innocent people have suffered. Do we blame the buyer who should beware, or do we hold responsible those who produce and distribute tainted goods and services? Clearly, there is a place for regulation and monitoring, much as we may dislike the words.

Let's look at the generations before us, the pioneers that we say we admire. They regulated days and hours of business not just for religious reasons but because they believed people should not have to work seven days a week. They limited entertainment they believed was not of value to the community. They supported education not as a return on investment but because they believed it was good in itself. In the biblical creation story we read seven times, "It was good," not it was profitable or lucrative or economically viable. A civilized society is one that supports the arts and education simply because they are good.

Our families may be dysfunctional and even neurotic in doing the same things over and over and expecting a different result, yet we don't shut them down or disown them according to a balance sheet. We recognize that they need acceptance, compassion, and forgiveness. Why don't we extend the same attitude to our society? Some say that the two should be different. We look to families for love, to society for justice. You can't run a society on principles that encourage freeloaders. But what about those who have no families, whose homes are the street, or those who have spent their lives in institutions and suddenly find that they have to fend for themselves when these are shut down?

Earlier I spoke about foster parents, whose families are bigger than DNA. They are the bridge between kin and community, a step beyond a survival society and into a civilized one. We need to support them more and follow their example. We can begin by recognizing the principle of the good Samaritan that being a neighbour is about acting with compassion.

In 1936 William Aberhart came to power in Alberta using this slogan: Poverty in the Midst of Plenty. Poverty was more evident then. Today it is kept invisible. Poverty was understandable in the Great Depression. Today it is inexcusable in an economic boom. Premier Aberhart and his followers believed in self-reliance and tempered this with a belief in the biblical command to plead for the fatherless, tend the widow, and share the harvest with the poor.

Let us look to the dispossessed in our society as an opportunity to lead in the abolition of poverty. Let us look to the vulnerable as an opportunity to show tenderness. Let us look to strangers as an opportunity to show friendship, and let us look to the struggling as a chance to offer strength and encouragement.

With the enormous wealth that comes from great growth there also comes accountability. May we not be like the rich man in the parable who hoards his goods and to whom the Almighty says: you fool. Let us rather build the kind of society which is not an advantage of some over others but where all can say: it is good.

The shield of the Alberta coat of arms, which is also on the provincial flag, is a visual value statement. Most of the crest is a landscape, a prairie field with a backdrop of the foothills and the Rocky Mountains against the sky. Above is a cross of St. George, symbolizing both old-world connections and spiritual values, values that now encompass many traditions built upon those of our First Nations, for whom the land was sacred. It is the land in its natural state that stands out. If we add the blue background of the Alberta flag, we have the colour of the planet as it appears from space. The only things on this shield that are not natural are the cross on top and the crop at the bottom. These blend into the natural: the cross into the sky and the crop to the earth.

This spectrum of earth and sky has been an Alberta feature for a long time. It inspired the Marquis of Lorne, one of Canada's first Governors General, who named our province after his wife. When he visited the west in the 1880s, he set the 121st psalm to a hymn, Unto the Hills Around Do I Lift Up, a bit of Alberta heritage that's sung around the world. Canadian singer/songwriter Connie Kaldor has written a later version called Hills of Salvation, with the words: there is power comes from money and fear; oh, see what men can do, but the power that rests in those God-given hills is a power I know to be true.

There are many things that do not appear on the Alberta shield: our industry, our cities, and our resources. But the things that really matter are there: transcended spiritual values and the magnificent landscape with the sweep and sense of awe that we may be losing as we become more focused on our own sophistication and achievements.

Five hundred years or in another millennium from now there may no longer be an Alberta or a Canada as political entities on the face of the Earth, but there will still be the land. Will it still inspire awe and hope, or will it be pockmarked and disfigured by tailing ponds and strip mines, landfill sites and concrete ruins of civilization? Will the aboriginal words "as long as the rivers flow" still have meaning? Will our surpluses and low taxes matter?

Two things will matter: how we leave this land we've been blessed to live on and how we treat those with whom we share it. This government in this throne speech is taking baby steps to answer the first question of the environment. It still has to face the second challenge of building a truly compassionate and human society.

I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I call on the Government House Leader, I'd just like to remind everyone that there will be a Youth Parliament in the Assembly during the constituency week, so if you could remove your computers and all papers off your desk, that would be very much appreciated.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to temporary Standing Order 3.1(1) I would now move that we adjourn until Monday, April 2, at 1 o'clock and encourage all members to work very hard in their constituencies during the first constituency week of this session.

[Motion carried; at 5:45 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday, April 2, at 1 p.m.]

Title: Monday, April 2, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/02

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, kindly join in now in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, sir.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly the ambassador from the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, His Excellency Nguyen Duc Hung. With Ambassador Nguyen is the first secretary of the Vietnamese embassy in Ottawa, Mr. Nguyen Viet Dzung. I had the opportunity to have lunch with these two gentlemen today. In one of life's little coincidences I actually first met Ambassador Nguyen in Vietnam in a meeting I had with the Prime Minister of Vietnam a little over a year ago. Ambassador Nguyen is here today to explore trade opportunities with the province of Alberta, which, by the way, have doubled in the last two years, as well as to look at labour relations with Alberta for the potential of supplying labour to Alberta for our workforce needs. I would ask Ambassador Nguyen and Mr. Nguyen Viet Dzung to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud to introduce four people from my staff who are either brand new or relatively new policy analysts. The first is Chris Tyrkalo. He is the person that does our action requests in our branch. The second, Brandon Lundy, is newly appointed to our ministry, responsible for the building and educating tomorrow's workforce strategy. The third, Sylvia Lepki, has been a policy analyst since November, and she's also working on the 10-year labour force strategy. Finally, Sheila Harrison, from the workforce development branch, has previously worked as an adviser and worked for contract service providers in career services. She is also working on many of the areas where we complement Children's Services and Persons with Development Disabilities. I'd ask them to please stand and be acknowledged by this Assembly.

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some employees of Children's Services who worked on a successful and award-winning campaign on the prevention of family violence. The Advertising Club of Edmonton, or ACE, is a nonprofit organization that through networking, professional development, and competition assists Edmonton's advertising community to strive for excellence. Each year ACE honours the best work by local agencies on regional, provincial, and national campaigns judged by a panel of senior advertising experts from across North America.

The prevention of family violence campaign called End the Silence, Stop the Violence won a number of ACE awards on March 3. Fight Circle won the public service broadcast ACE award, the television single award, and the people's choice award. I want to add that the people's choice award is selected based on a survey of Albertans. The one called Postcard won the public service print award of distinction. Finally, the entire campaign won the advertising campaign award of distinction.

Mr. Speaker, family violence is a dark mark on society, and we know that education is a key to bringing it to an end. This campaign is a big step towards bringing the issue of family violence out in the open, where we can optimize opportunities to help victims and break the cycle of violence.

I'd like to ask the people who helped develop this award-winning campaign to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Sheryl Fricke, Keltie MacPherson, Desiree Magnus, Lisa Nisbet, Tom Fowler, Deborah Hurford, Jackie Katan, and Shane Gauthier.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four esteemed members of the Alberta pharmacy community who are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that you join me in welcoming them when they've all been introduced. All of these guests are working hard on behalf of Alberta's pharmacists to ensure that Albertans are provided with outstanding quality of care. They're here today to commemorate the enactment of the pharmacists profession regulation, which came into effect yesterday, April 1. This regulation widens the scope of practice for health care professionals and is a key component of our workforce strategy. From the Alberta College of Pharmacists we have Greg Eberhart, registrar of the college, and Mr. Jeff Whissell, president of the college. From the Pharmacists Association of Alberta we have Mr. Cam Johnston, acting CEO, and Mr. Jeremy Slobodan, board president. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have 31 students from the St. Joseph school in Whitecourt. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Marilyn Wright and Mrs. Penny Bell as well as parent helpers Colleen Matvichuk, Michelle Pederson, Kyla Rose, Ken Podulsky, Bryan Retzliff, Ken Westling, Tom Jackson, Sonya Lavalley, Kathy McIvor, Sheila Stuckless, Bea Samson. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe my guests may not have arrived yet, but I would like to introduce them to you and through you to all members when they arrive later during question period. They're a group of 21 political science students from The King's University College here in Edmonton. They'll be accompanied by their political science professor, Dr. John Hiemstra, and they'll be spending a couple of hours in the building here today studying how we do government in Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce a family friend and dynamic young political science student from the University of Alberta, Ryan Fontaine. I'll ask him to stand up and receive the welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a trusted friend, a valued supporter, a fellow Rotarian, and the past president of the Edmonton Gateway Rotary Club, Mr. Patrick Slinn. I would ask Patrick to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three guests today. They are Janet Gibbens, Hellen Shiloff, and Don Crisall. Today is the 206th day of the strike at the Palace Casino. Janet has worked at the casino for 14 years as a dealer. She is one of the leaders of the strike and has been a powerful voice for workers. The union has just won a victory against the employer's attempt to refuse the right of workers to wear union pins, and Janet's testimony helped win this battle.

Hellen Shiloff has worked at the Palace Casino since the summer of 1991 and is a pit boss. Hellen grew up in Cambria, Alberta, and has lived in Edmonton since 1966. She has been a very strong picketer on the line and since the strike began has been appointed to the union's bargaining committee. Despite the length of the strike she remains as resilient as ever.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, they are joined by one of UFCW local 401's organizers, Mr. Don Crisall. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Lexi and Brad Golinsky. Lexi and Brad are from Leduc, where Brad is a constable for the RCMP and Lexi is an elementary school teacher. They are also avid baseball and hockey players, and last but not least Lexi is my first cousin. I'd ask Lexi and Brad in the public gallery to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm especially delighted today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly five guests seated in the public gallery. Akashya and Prabhat Sharma are visiting our wonderful country and province from my home town of Jalandhar in Punjab, India. Akashya Sharma is a physician specializing in Ayurvedic medicine, and both he and his wife are proud parents of two lovely children, Priya and Pavithar.

Accompanying them are their hosts, three long-time Edmontonians, Kamni and Shakti Goutam and their son Nauneet. Kamni Goutam is one of the pioneers in the Indo-Canadian community, having come to Edmonton in the late 1960s, and has been a long-time local businessman in Edmonton. His wife, Shakti, has been serving our community for the past 30 years through her work with seniors at Extencare Holyrood. Nauneet, their son, is a student at NAIT studying business and marketing. I will now request my guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure and honour to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this great House of democracy three visitors to our Assembly today. They are Michael Janusz and his lovely wife, Irmie, as well as Catherine Obacz. Now, Michael is a former French foreign legionnaire, who distinguished himself in battle and was a 33-year engineer with CN Rail. Irmie was, of course, the executive director of the Whitecourt chamber of commerce in the past and was also the president of the executive directors across the province for chambers of commerce. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Alberta Legislature, and please welcome them.

Opportunities for New Canadians

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is the home of approximately 40,000 Vietnamese Canadians, many of whom came to Canada in the 1980s as political refugees. If you were to ask these individuals what they value the most in Alberta, the answer would resoundingly be the freedom that they enjoy, followed closely by the respect held for human rights in our province. Vietnamese Canadians are provided the same opportunities as every other Canadian to reach their full potential, and as a result many of the first and second generations are highly successful. They have become doctors, lawyers, CEOs, engineers, and scientists. They have made their dreams reality, and our society is richer because of their contribution. These same people would have probably ended up on the street or in jail had they not left Vietnam.

When people are not allowed to reach their full potential, all of society loses. It is not a coincidence that poverty usually walks hand in hand with a poor record of human rights. Take North and South Korea as examples. North Korea has everything that South Korea has, but their human capital is grossly underutilized and not allowed to fulfill its potential. As a result, North Korea is much poorer than South Korea.

In the United States following the American Civil War, Robert E. Lee, the general-in-chief of the south, was treated with respect and dignity by the north. When asked why a general of a defeated army was treated with such respect, the reason provided was that they were all Americans, and if one was humiliated, they were all humiliated. I believe that this is the correct way to rebuild a country, and I hope that all war-torn countries can learn from that lesson.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Dr. Thaddeus Demong

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me today to draw to the attention of all Albertans through the hon. members of this House the incredible works of Dr. Thaddeus Demong, a hero of mine and a constituent of mine in Calgary-Lougheed. Thad was born and educated in Sarawak, Malaysia, on the island of Borneo. He's one of nine children of a tribal chief, and as a young man he was a top-tier Colombo plan student who fought hard to pursue studies in medicine at the University of Alberta. Afterward Thad returned to Sarawak, where as a medical officer he promoted development of a new rural hospital and public health policies in TB control and sanitation.

Dr. Demong immigrated to Canada in 1974 and began an ophthalmology residency at the U of A. He went on to obtain a fellowship in corneal surgery and then established his extremely well-respected practice in Calgary. Thad has worked extensively in establishing the Lion's Eye Bank of southern Alberta for the procurement and timely distribution of corneal tissue and has been recognized for his work by the Lions Clubs International Foundation as a distinguished Melvin Jones fellow.

In addition to all of this, Thad has participated in the Canadian vision care program, which operates in developing countries such as Jamaica and in Dr. Demong's native Sarawak. Thad has also taught medical students and residents at the University of Kuala Lumpur.

Mr. Speaker, in 2005 I was honoured to offer Dr. Demong an Alberta centennial medallion, and last month he received the 2007 immigrant of distinction professional award from the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society.

I have the utmost personal and professional respect for Dr. Demong and his wonderful wife, Carol, who have worked on so many organizations and have provided the priceless gift of sight to thousands around Alberta and around the world. I trust that members of this Assembly will join me now in expressing admiration and gratitude for the miracles that the Demongs work every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Building Leadership for Action in Schools Today

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize an outstanding group of young women attending the Nellie McClung program at Oliver school in Edmonton-Centre. These young women formed a BLAST team, building leadership for action in schools today, in their school with the help of the Alberta Lung Association and AADAC. They have done an undercover investigation, a video, a media event and public presentation, a postcard campaign to the previous minister of health, and have worked with me as their MLA. Last year I hosted this BLAST team here in the Assembly during the debate on the cancer legacy act, and this year I am bringing forward Motion 523 to support their campaign to ban power walls.

These Nellie girls have been awarded a blue ribbon champion award by the Edmonton and Area Tobacco Reduction Network for their work in banning power walls. Now they're taking the next step in organizing a half-day conference for their peers at a rally on the steps of the Legislature tomorrow at noon, April 3, and we have asked again for a meeting with the minister in the hopes that we can convince him to join us and ban power walls. These power walls are the large tobacco displays that are a fixture in every gas station and convenience store showing the packages of most tobacco brands. This feature is why our kids know what the colour a package of du Maurier is and what the logo for a Camels pack of cigarettes looks like.

I'm very proud of the work that the Nellie girls have done over the past two years. Some members of the BLAST team have moved on but all have learned important lessons about working for the issues they believe in, how to conduct research, organize public and media events, including conferences, and how to lobby politicians to influence policy change. Supported by their teachers, parents, friends, and schoolmates, they've done a great job. My thanks to everyone involved.

Please join us on the steps of the Legislature tomorrow.

1:20 Standards of Practice for Pharmacists

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the pharmacists profession regulation and new standards of practice which came into effect on April 1, 2007. Under these new regulations pharmacists, in accordance with their standards of practice, are permitted to continue or adapt a prescription written by another prescriber, prescribe drug treatments, and administer injections such as vaccines.

To ensure the highest standards of patient safety, pharmacists who choose to prescribe must complete training established by the Alberta College of Pharmacists. Pharmacists will only prescribe for those conditions that they are competent to assess. Community- and institution-based pharmacists will still need to maintain their continuing education requirements to keep up with new drugs and therapies.

Expanding the scope of practice of pharmacists is an example of our health workforce strategy in action. By leveraging the expertise of pharmacists, we are enabling them to work better as part of the health care team, along with doctors and other health professionals, to provide a better level of service in the community.

Pharmacists are drug experts. We rely on them to answer our questions in order to maintain our health. After a minimum of five years of university training, four of which are in pharmacy and pharmaceutical sciences, pharmacists are able to take on more responsibility in providing advice, assessing patients, and prescribing and dispensing drugs.

The Health Professions Act is enabling legislation that allows all health professionals to use their skills and training to their full extent. Pharmacists now have that opportunity. The pharmacists profession regulation came into force April 1. Services offered depend on the expertise of the pharmacist. Each pharmacist will choose the expanded services they will add to their practice.

Mr. Speaker, for generations pharmacists have been a trusted source of advice and knowledge about drug products, associated supplies, and complementary therapies. We are looking to pharmacists and other health care professionals to take on a larger role in providing primary health care in our communities and neighbourhoods.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Federal Barley Plebiscite

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the results of the federal barley plebiscite, that were announced on March 28. The federal barley plebiscite results show that a strong and clear majority of Albertan and western Canadian producers have chosen to have the option of selling their barley in an open market. Sixty-two per cent of western Canadian barley farmers and 78 per cent of Alberta barley farmers have voted for choice. These results confirm what the Alberta government already knew, that a strong and clear majority of Alberta producers are ready for more competitive options to maximize their grain marketing opportunities.

It is now time for action on this matter. We are pleased that the federal government will open the market by August 1 of this year. With the results in, it's time for the government of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board, and the industry to work together to strengthen the barley marketing system.

The Canadian Wheat Board must now translate their extensive experience into success in an open market. Alberta's position has always been that there is a role for the Canadian Wheat Board in an open and competitive barley market. We are looking forward, as I know all Albertan producers are, to true marketing choice in the marketing of barley for all Canadian producers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Patient Safety in Hospitals

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve to know that their health care system is safe and that when they visit a hospital, they won't come out sicker than when they went in. Albertans were understandably concerned when the government announced serious problems with infection controls at St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville. The minister of health assured us at that time that this was an isolated incident, a claim that was brought into question by revelations about problems in Lloydminster and in Canmore.

There's clearly a need for an independent, system-wide, and public inquiry. The inquiry should start by getting a complete understanding of the impact of the drastic cuts to health care in the '90s and the chronic underfunding that followed. By consistently starving the health system, this government has forced many regions and facilities to simply make do. We know, for example, that St. Joseph's hospital has been requesting a surgical washing machine for a number of years but has never been provided the funds to obtain one.

The second issue is the failure of the Conservative government to support a province-wide system for monitoring and enforcing standards in hospitals. They have asked local hospitals to do more with less and then turned a blind eye to the pressures this approach brings.

The Health Quality Council is not the appropriate body to investigate this concern, and the self-evaluation the minister requested last week is just not good enough. The minister's review will not be independent and will not be public. Neither review will seriously assess government responsibility for this crisis.

In response to the numerous e-mails, letters, and phone calls received by my caucus, today I released a petition on behalf of the NDP opposition that we will be circulating among Albertans. The petition urges the government to immediately establish a public inquiry into the failure of the health care system to protect the safety of patients in its care and provide recommendations to correct the situation. I invite all Albertans to visit www.ndpopposition.ab.ca for more details on this petition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. chair of the Select Standing Committee on Private Bills, the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Presenting Petitions

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I beg leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 98(2):

- (1) the petition of Ian Wilms for the CyberPol - The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act, and
- (2) the petition of Dan Reinhardt for the CREST Leadership Centre Act.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am tabling a petition with the required number of copies from the residents of Monarch Place in Red Deer-North. The petition respectfully requests a formal inquiry into the reasons for the demise of this affordable housing complex before the impending sale.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from Leona Laddish, Olga Eliuk, and Emily Palynchuk, who are the nieces of the late Dr. Myron Shewchuk. Dr. Shewchuk was admitted to St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville and subsequently passed away, apparently because of complications arising from MRSA. The authors of the letter, like the Alberta NDP opposition, are calling for a full public inquiry into our health system's infection control programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is the appropriate number of copies of British Columbia's Bill 17. B.C. is debating and passing legislation regarding the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, unlike the Alberta government, which has virtually been silent on this important issue.

My second document is an e-mail from Zelma Hardin. Ms Hardin's 83-year-old mother had a fall last year, and while she was in the Royal Alex hospital, she contracted a superbug. The letter vividly describes the agony she and her mother went through.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter sent to Dr. Erik Wasylenko, who is responsible for patient experience within the Calgary health region. In her letter regarding the changes to home care, Anne Lyon, on behalf of her husband, Richard Morris, notes that "whatever problems the region was trying to solve . . . the implementation appears unplanned and uncompassionate.”

My second tabling, entitled Turning the Key, celebrates the opening of the fabulous new Ronald McDonald House adjacent to the equally wonderful, new children’s hospital in Calgary-Varsity constituency. I would encourage the government to consider supporting Inn from the Cold in acquiring the old facility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two tablings today. The first is from constituent Rosalee Galper. She is a woman with a progressive disability who lives independently with the assistance of caregivers using the self-managed care program. She notes that the dollar values that were satisfactory for this program in the ‘90s are far behind what is needed to both attract and retain workers today. So that’s her letter.

The second tabling. I’d like to table the appropriate number of copies of correspondence from Betty Gamble, who was very concerned with the Premier’s comments on the old Holy Cross hospital. She feels that it’s time the government cleaned up their act and put citizens first and feels that this is nothing except for entitlement by some very prominent Calgary businessmen and their slow pressure toward privatization.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

St. Joseph’s General Hospital

Dr. Taft: To the Premier: when did the Premier first become aware that there were serious problems with health care delivery at St. Joe’s hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I was made aware of the issue with respect to sterilization Thursday, I believe, March 15. That was the day.

Dr. Taft: Very interesting, Mr. Speaker. Connie Marcinkoski, whose father died of MRSA-related pneumonia, has phone records proving that she contacted the Premier’s constituency office and had a 16-minute conversation in October 2003 relating her concerns about her father’s safety and care at the hospital. She never heard back. To the Premier. The Premier committed 11 days ago to look through his archive to find this information. Has the Premier followed through on his commitment to find these records?

Mr. Stelmach: This member got up in the House the first time he raised it and said it was a letter, so we were going through all of the records. You asked a question, so we’re checking to see if there was a letter written through the archives because this goes back to 2003. Subsequently that afternoon we heard one of the media interviewing the lady, and it was a phone call to my constituency assistant at that particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: has the Premier returned that call yet? It’s three and a half years overdue.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the lady had called. She had spoken to our constituency assistant at that particular time, raised what I believe was an issue with respect to a health service in the hospital.

My constituency assistant thanked her for the call, and that completed that particular issue.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds, actually, like the Premier knew about this problem years ago. The Premier previously questioned whether there was any documentation to support the claims of problems at St. Joseph’s hospital. A November 2003 letter from East Central health region indicates that Robert Bruce “most likely [was] exposed to MRSA while in Acute Care at St. Joseph’s hospital in October 2003.” Further, a 2004 investigation under the Protection for Persons in Care Act recommended that St. Joe’s hospital in Vegreville “ensure all staff are trained and consistent in MRSA protocol.” Will the Premier admit that there was a serious breakdown in health care delivery at St. Joseph’s hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the follow-up the minister of health will answer.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this is no secret. It’s been talked about before. In fact, I mentioned it when this issue with respect to the sterilization was first mentioned two weeks ago. St. Joe’s hospital has had a problem over the years with MRSA. It’s not an unusual problem. Other hospitals, other places not just in Alberta but right across North America have been dealing with a superbug issue. There is a level of superbug and other bacteria. People would not be surprised to know that there are bacteria and viruses in hospitals right across North America and around the world. So this is not new, and the fact that there are incidents and that there were incidents at St. Joseph’s is not new.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the residents of Vegreville and, indeed, Alberta have questions about the safety of their health facilities and the ability of this government to protect them, yet the Premier has still not made it a priority of his to meet with the residents of Vegreville on this issue. What was more important on the Premier’s agenda in the last 10 days than arranging a public meeting on this life-and-death issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, my agenda, where I’ve been in different corners of the province, is very public. I’ve been in very close contact with my constituents, and I can assure you I will always do a much better job of serving the constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville than that person will ever do. [interjections]

Dr. Taft: Prop him up, folks. Prop him up. Clearly, this Premier needs to be propped up by his backbenchers here, Mr. Speaker.

Again I ask: what was more important on your agenda than meeting with your own constituents on this life-and-death issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the other reasons why I’ll better serve the constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is because I tell the truth. That’s very important to this House and to all other Albertans.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I ask you: where is the truth in the Premier saying he only learned about this issue 10 days ago when there's a strong paper trail indicating that his office knew about this three years ago? Where's the truth?

Mr. Stelmach: The truth, Mr. Speaker, is that there was a phone call to the constituency. He's talking about a paper trail, a strong paper trail. One phone call to the constituency, and that's raised by the Official Opposition.

But on the other hand, you know, with respect to being in Vegreville, because this seems to be a real issue for the Leader of the Opposition, the CBC had a program right out of Chin's restaurant. Our minister was there to take the calls with respect to a very specific issue with respect to health delivery. The people there were satisfied that we were doing a good job in terms of representing those constituents and the safety of health.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's not going to wash with the people of Alberta. They want a government that responds.

It's clear that cuts to the health care system have dismantled strict government oversight and left us with a patchwork of organizations trying to enforce and monitor events. Who, Mr. Premier, is responsible for protecting Albertans? Each facility? Is it the regions? Is it the Health Facilities Review Committee, the Health Quality Council, or some other organization? Who is responsible for the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: The minister of health, who reports to me.

Dr. Taft: So, again, Mr. Speaker, why won't this Premier take responsibility, admit that this problem has been in place for years? His office has been informed. There is correspondence from the East Central health region. There is correspondence from the Protection for Persons in Care Act. There's a long set of records. Will the Premier finally take responsibility, meet his residents, follow through, and protect the interests of Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is more than just about meeting residents. This is critically looking at what had transpired in the hospital. Remember, there are two issues here. It's the lack of protocol, or protocol was not followed with respect to the sterilization of equipment, and of course the other issue was with respect to the superbug. With respect to the superbug, all we have to say: please wash your hands.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Medical Safety Standards

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the Premier would love to wash his hands of this issue, but I think that's not going to solve it, Mr. Premier. Albertans are worried that the problems at St. Joseph's hospital in Vegreville and the women's health clinic in Lloydminster are just the tip of the iceberg. They're worried that when they go into a hospital or their loved ones go into a hospital, they might come out sicker than when they went in, and the government still refuses to allow an independent, system-wide inquiry. My question is to the Premier. How can the Premier reassure the people of Alberta that our health care is safe when he refuses to appoint an independent commission of inquiry to look into this matter?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have health professionals who have been in Vegreville for some time. These are people very respected in the profession. They are of course studying the situation and will bring recommendations forward to the minister. If there's any requirement in terms of legislation or any other thing we could do as the government, we will move immediately on it.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there's no centralized enforcement of safety standards in medical facilities, including hospitals, in the province, and there hasn't been one since the early 1990s, when this government saw fit to eviscerate the health care system by cutting funds, nurses, and doctors, led by the Deep Six, of which the current Premier was a member. Will the Premier finally admit that this is a province-wide issue and ensure that structures are put in place that will guarantee proper inspections and a follow-up of safety standards across the province reporting to the ministry of health?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the third party talks about massive cuts. In 1993 to '94 the budget for health was about $3.2 billion, $3.3 billion, and I believe at that time the government took about $200 million out of the total budget. Most of that was of course reducing the number of hospital boards we had across the province. So most of the substantial amount came in the reduction of administration throughout the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Alberta New Democrat opposition is starting a petition calling for an independent public inquiry. We invite all members of this House to visit www.ndpopposition.ab.ca to sign that.

I'd like to ask the Premier why it was the province has failed to provide money to St. Joseph's hospital for a surgical washing machine despite their request, which is outstanding for a number of years? Why has the government failed St. Joseph's hospital in this matter?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the government has not failed anyone.

With respect to the administrative matter the minister of health will respond.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the piece of equipment in question is on back order, has been ordered and been approved a long time ago.

This type of equipment is not something that's approved at the level of the province but, rather, at the level of the regional health authority. The regional health authority has responsibility to make sure that appropriate sterilization processes are in place for their facilities, and if they don't have it in that one facility, they can sterilize equipment at another facility, but they have dealt with this request. They've ordered the equipment in question. That is not the issue with respect to the problem, the failure in following the protocols, which happened at St. Joe's.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The unfunded pension liability in the teachers' pension plan has been a significant issue for a number of years now, and it's becoming more of a detriment than ever before to teacher retention and teacher recruitment. I'm very aware of previous efforts and of the difficulties involved in resolving this. Nonetheless, the time has come. I feel that a formal process ought to be put in place. So my questions are to the Minister of Education. Mr. Minister, will you implement a formal process to address, perhaps to recommence, or to renegotiate this matter as soon as possible? [interjections]

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it needs to be put on record that there is an existing agreement in place, that was signed in 1992 between the government of Alberta and the Alberta Teachers' Association, to address the unfunded liability issue. However, we also recognize that that liability now stands at some $6.4 billion, $2.1 billion of which, it should be noted, is the teachers' responsibility. We also recognize that this unfunded pension liability is a detriment to recruiting new teachers, so we will be addressing it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among all of the wrongful cries from opposition members, I would like, please, to have a little bit of silence for this next question. Perhaps we could get their attention to support this important issue and resolve this matter instead of just catcalling against it. So my supplemental question is: what roles would the minister foresee being played by the ATA and by the Alberta School Boards Association in addressing this complicated matter?

Mr. Liepert: Well, it should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the issue of the unfunded liability is between the government of Alberta and the Alberta Teachers' Association. To that end, I had a meeting last week with the president of the ATA to start these discussions, so that will be continuing. We would be seeking input from school board trustees as we would with any citizens of Alberta. However, this really is an issue between the ATA and the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I think it bears mentioning that there are other jurisdictions who have faced similar issues, and one of particular interest lately, in addition to several others, is the jurisdiction of Manitoba. I'm wondering if the minister has had a chance to look at that jurisdiction's resolution to this issue, and if not, will he proceed post-haste to take a look at it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba government last week decided to refinance their portion of the unfunded liability, and that's something that we are considering looking at, but that really doesn't address the unfunded issue that the teachers are facing, where 3 per cent of a teacher's salary today goes to paying the portion that in many cases young teachers had absolutely nothing to do with. That's the part that we're going to try and address.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

St. Joseph's General Hospital (continued)

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the situation at St. Joe's hospital seems to have led to a number of deaths. It is requiring at least several hundred tests to be administered around the province. It has now spilled over into Saskatchewan, where they're having to undertake tests as well. There have been problems in the East Central health region, particularly St. Joe's hospital, for years. The Premier mentioned his schedule. On Monday, March 26, no scheduled engagements were listed. Why was he not able to meet with the residents of Vegreville, in his constituency, at a public meeting on this issue on March 26?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've said this before in this House. I've said it to the media. This is again being driven by the opposition in terms of why I'm not conducting some sort of a public meeting in Vegreville. This issue, of course, is a medical matter; it's not a political one. This issue is very important to me as the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and I've also said that we'll do whatever we have to do to ensure that this does not happen again not only in Vegreville but in any other health facility in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in Vegreville and people around this province are concerned when one of their hospitals is closed. This is an issue of accountability. This is an issue of leadership. Why was it more important for this Premier on Wednesday, March 28, to go to Lac La Biche to address the Alberta Association of Colleges and Technical Institutes round-table than to meet with the constituents in Vegreville over the closure of their hospital?

Mr. Stelmach: First of all, the hospital is not closed. So that's wrong. Secondly, to me as Premier of this province the aboriginal and the Métis are very important. We were there to see how we can include them further in job opportunities that are available in this province of Alberta. We had a joint conference with leaders from British Columbia sharing their experiences with our college leaders in the province of Alberta, trying to find, of course, new ways of providing opportunities for First Nations and Métis to be involved in not only job opportunities but to see how we can further include them in the education system.

Dr. Taft: Again to the Premier. The Premier's schedule indicates that on Friday, March 30, no appointments were scheduled. Can the Premier indicate to the people of Vegreville and the people of Alberta why he couldn't take the time to have a public meeting on the crisis in the hospital in his own constituency?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there wasn't a crisis. Friday morning I was on my way to Fairview. I spent the whole day in Fairview meeting with NAIT. We met with a group of farmers with respect to the issue of transportation. We met with a whole myriad of different individuals.

With respect to the public meeting the minister himself was there. It was a CBC-sponsored – I forget what they called it. He gave a full explanation. You know, for something that's been advertised and is supposed to be a crisis, like the leader says, the café was only about half full, and the people were wondering why the CBC was taking up so much room. They wanted to have their cup of coffee in peace.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Peace and Police Officer Training Centre

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The 2002 report of the MLA Policing Review Committee recommended a single-site centre for policing excellence for the training and ongoing professional development of police and peace officers in Alberta. In August of 2006 Fort Macleod, within the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod, was announced as the preferred site for the proposed Alberta police and peace officers training centre, but since then nothing has happened, and we have not heard of anything. My question is to the Solicitor General and the Minister of Public Security. Can he update the House on the current status of the project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and let me thank the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod for the opportunity to shed some light on this very much-needed project. This training centre is an important part of our commitment to provide safe and secure communities in which Albertans can live, work, and raise their families. I can assure the hon. member that in the time since Fort Macleod was selected as the preferred site last August, a lot of work has already been done to make this centre a reality. But there's still a lot more to do before we can put a shovel in the ground. At the moment they're working with Alberta Infrastructure and the town of Fort Macleod to determine building requirements. Once this process is complete, we will release a request for expression of interest . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: in keeping with the Premier's comment about safe communities, what are the advantages of a single-site facility such as this centre compared to the current training practices?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, training and professional development for law enforcement officers currently take place in a variety of locations across our province, and standards and practices are not always consistent. The new centre will help set and maintain a superior standard of training for all police and peace officers in Alberta. It will deliver basic training and professional development of police and peace officers, including special constables, corrections officers, private investigators, and security guards in Alberta. It will offer regular, recertification, and specialized training for all Alberta police and peace officers.

Mr. Coutts: My last supplemental to the same minister: will law enforcement stakeholders have an opportunity for input to the planning and to the curriculum developed for this centre?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me say that few people are as passionate and dedicated about what they do in our community as those of law enforcement and security communities. Their feedback and input are critical as they move forward with this initiative and many others to ensure safe and secure communities. We will continue to seek their input on the design and development of the centre both on an individual basis and through these provincial bodies which represent policing. We have already received much valuable input. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that all of this input is being very carefully considered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the leadership campaign the Premier publicly stated that it's absolutely shameful that Canada's most prosperous province cannot take better care of the people who are not able to care for themselves. Over the weekend my colleagues and I here in this Legislature were awarded an automatic salary increase of 4.9 per cent. Given that the Premier himself has stated that the government's support for our most vulnerable citizens is absolutely shameful, will the Premier commit today to giving AISH recipients the same raise that we have received?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the amount of indemnity, the increase to all of us was done by the Members' Services Committee. This is done based on a formula that was agreed to by all parties – all parties.

Now, with respect to the other question on AISH and others in the province of Alberta, we are working through how we can best support those in great need. These are, of course, AISH, and our seniors in the province, that really are of great importance to this government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing how the Premier has given me an inch, I'm going to go for the yard. Increases in the cost of living are affecting all Albertans, and many have not been able to keep up. Now that the MLAs' salaries have been increased, can the Premier tell us when the salaries of PDD workers, social workers, child care workers, and emergency shelter workers will receive similar salary increases?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there has been some movement recently by the minister responsible in terms of closing the gap. There is a gap between those that are working for volunteer organizations, not-for-profit, and also those working for the government. We'd like to close that. The other is to ensure that we do support the not-for-profit organizations, and that's why we have a consultation in place to see how we can increase the charitable tax credits, see how we can match out of nonrenewable resources the funding going to charitable organizations, that do such a good service in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those are good words to hear. However, I'm really sort of a time-frame kind of person. So I'm willing to donate half of my increased salary to a related charity in a show of support for having AISH benefits indexed and will table a letter to the House monthly with the details of that. Given the Premier's statements of concern on the issue, would he join with me in that pledge?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I am of course quite happy, in fact privileged, that both my wife, Marie, and I have the ability to donate to so many charitable causes in the province of Alberta. Whether it will increase by whatever the percentage was, probably much more than that because I do have great warmth in my heart for the not-for-profit and charitable organizations in this province.

You know, everybody on that side, including now the Leader of the Official Opposition, got an increase. In fact, it says this morning that for the first time the Premier of Alberta has a bigger increase than the Premier before. Well, I guess so has the Official Opposition leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Calgary Industrial Sites Cleanup

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our Calgary-Fort constituency covers the largest industrial area in Calgary and our living environment is very important to my constituents, my question today is to the hon. Minister of Environment. Given that the Lynnview Ridge contamination cleanup work in my constituency has been going since last summer, can the minister update us on this file as to when it will be done?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, this remediation agreement has been in place since 2005, and Imperial Oil is continuing to clean up residential properties to Alberta Environment's very strict requirements. We continue to oversee this cleanup operation and will ensure that ongoing soil samples meet our standards before approving final remediation and issuing appropriate certificates. I can't give the member a specific date, but I can assure the member that the community involvement is and will continue to be a key component in any final plan for the future in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given yet another situation in the northeast corner of my riding, an industrial park where a demolished oil recycling plant was located, can the minister update us on this cleanup as to when the remediation plan submitted by the property owner will be decided on so new development can take place?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, Hub Oil is not posing any significant threat as it stands today, but I understand the concern of the community in that they would like to use the site for alternate uses. The member is quite correct. The company has submitted a draft plan, and our staff are currently reviewing that plan. It's the intention that that plan will be presented to a multistakeholder committee and the public for input. Once we're all satisfied that Hub Oil's plan meets our environmental standards, work can begin to remediate the site.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Given another situation in the southeast corner of my riding, in Ogden, where the seepage of cleaning liquid from the railway shop was discovered three years ago flowing into underground water, can the minister update us on this file again?

2:00

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, when we're dealing with old industrial sites, these are the kinds of contamination issues that have to be dealt with. In this particular case there is ongoing monitoring. Again, CP Rail is responsible and will continue to be responsible to clean up the site in an appropriate manner. Indoor air quality monitoring in homes and in the Ogden school is ongoing. Where necessary a vapour control unit is installed, and that has proven successful in protecting indoor air quality. The committee that's ensuring that the indoor air quality and all air quality in the area is handled appropriately is a joint committee of Alberta Environment, the Alberta health region, and the city of Calgary, and they continue monitoring on an ongoing basis.

Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility

Mr. Bonko: Yesterday the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, TILMA, came into effect in this province. There will now be no laws, measures passed in this House that may operate to restrict or impair trade or investment or labour mobility between this province and British Columbia. My questions are to the Premier. Will he publicly release all regulatory and legislative changes required to implement TILMA?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have till 2009 to work through various authorities, municipalities, academics, et cetera, as we work towards fulfilling the agreement. You know, it's 2007, and in this country we still have to bring about changes to trade rules that were put in place many, many years ago actually to impede the movement of goods and services. In fact, we had in this province two vehicle inspection stations to measure the weight of a truck, and to me, in this country I think a kilogram is a kilogram on this side of the border and on that side. Today we have one vehicle inspection station. The truck stops once.

Mr. Bonko: Many Albertans are concerned with TILMA's impact on the province. Many support the agreement, and there are many that disagree with the agreement, yet even on its face the government refuses to bring this before the House, the democratic heart of Alberta. It prefers press releases and backroom deals to democracy and debate. When will this government bring this agreement to the House for open debate in front of the people of Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I do have to give credit to the Premier of the province of Alberta – of B.C. . . .

An Hon. Member: Well, sure.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, to me as well.

. . . to the Premier of the province of B.C. for his vision in moving forward. This now makes us the second-largest market force in Canada. It's of great importance to future generations in terms of future wealth creation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is already having to send a letter to municipalities trying to fill a hole in this agreement. They say it was not their intention for municipalities to lose their ability to set zoning bylaws. They even promise to speak up for municipalities when these problems appear. Given that this letter holds absolutely no legal weight and TILMA now does, will this Premier commit to changing TILMA so that these problems do not arise?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I've spent considerable time with municipal leaders. In fact, I had a good chat with the president of the AAMD and C, spent some time with the two city mayors. They have not raised a concern at all with respect to TILMA. If there are further issues that come forward – like I said, we have till 2009, and we'll keep working on any issues that are raised by those authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will continue the same discussion. The trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement came into force on April Fool's Day, and Albertans have virtually been told nothing, absolutely nothing about this agreement. There's been no debate, no consultation, yet this agreement could have huge ramifications not only for business but for school boards, municipalities, health regions, and even farmers. As I say, the government has been virtually silent on this. My question is a simple, straightforward one. To the Premier: why have there been no public hearings or consultations with all the people potentially affected by TILMA?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, this is a very good agreement for both provinces. It builds the second-largest trade relationship, between Alberta and B.C. As I said before, we have till 2009 to work out any kind of differences that there are. The member says, "no consultation." We've had consultation with all of the groups, from engineers to – well, I'll have the minister next time list all the groups that we met with over the last couple of years.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, frankly, if you would ask people what TILMA is, they wouldn't understand or even know about it. They've never heard of it. My question to the Premier is simply this. The B.C. government brought this forward in legislation so that people would at least know about it. Why has the Alberta government not done the same thing?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have met with all those individuals, authorities, organizations that have anything to do with respect to the agreement. There were some issues in the beginning in terms of further dialogue. We worked through a lot of them. If there are any from now until 2009, then we'll continue to work with those groups, but this is a good agreement for Alberta. It's actually, quite frankly, going to help farmers because it's going to reduce the costs of transportation from Alberta down to the coast.

Mr. Martin: That's all you'll say. Mr. Speaker, if it's such a good agreement, why hasn't it been brought forward in the Legislature here like they've done in B.C.? If it's such a good agreement, then we'd all accept it. Why haven't we done it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to TILMA, the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement that we have, it frees up organizations on both sides of the border to do good work. We're going to continue to work with those organizations to ensure that it does improve not only today's economy in the province but puts in place and secures a better economy for the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Standards of Practice for Pharmacists

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have expressed concern over the new regulations that will give pharmacists prescribing power. They feel that this is potentially unsafe given that pharmacists are not trained as doctors. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why are we moving the responsibility of prescribing drugs from doctors to pharmacists?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We value all health professionals: physicians, pharmacists, nurses, right across the board. Changes to allow pharmacists to prescribe based on the outcome of their patient assessments is not intended to replace the physician's role in diagnosing and prescribing drug treatment or to limit other health care providers' expanded scope of practice. Pharmacists will only assess and prescribe based on their recognized competencies. They'll provide prescriptions when needed based on the outcome of patient assessments completed by them. This deals with one of the core values of the Health Professions Act; that is, to allow health care professionals to practise to the full extent of their experience, training, and expertise.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how can we ensure that pharmacists have the clinical expertise needed to prescribe drug therapies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The College of Pharmacists sets the standard of practice that determines the level of practice which can be provided by all pharmacists and any given pharmacist. Before assessing patients or prescribing drugs, pharmacists must meet the requirements established by the college. Pharmacists wishing to specialize will be required to demonstrate their competence in that specific area of practice. The public of Alberta will be assured that pharmacists who are prescribing have the competency to do so.

Mrs. Jablonski: My last question to the same minister: is it a conflict of interest to have pharmacists both prescribing and dispensing drugs?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, pharmacists prescribing drugs based on their patient assessment is similar to other medical services where health care professionals provide advice prior to providing medical treatment. We will rely on the College of Pharmacists to enforce the ethical standards under which pharmacists will practise. Pharmacists will be joining other professionals, such as registered dietitians and nurse practitioners, who have also had an expanded scope of practice, including prescribing and dispensing of drugs. This will be well under control, and the College of Pharmacists will make sure that ethical practice is followed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

2:10 Resource Development in Marie Lake Area

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Marie Lake, located just north of the city of Cold Lake, in the Alberta context is one of the few pristine lakes left with exceptional water quality. I've heard strong concerns from many landowners in the area that the lake is being threatened by a new and experimental project, already seeing considerable seismic activity, a two-kilometre tunnel from a mine shaft, and potentially up to 100 SAGD directional wells under the lake. To the Minister of Environment: can the minister tell us what effects the intense seismic activity, let alone the SAGD extraction over the next few years, will have on the aquatic environment? Can he guarantee that there'll be no adverse effects on the lake and the ecosystem?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, geophysical activity is really the responsibility of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, so he may want to supplement my answer.

What I can tell the member about my understanding here is that the discussion regarding seismic activity is something that will involve air guns and would not involve any dynamite or explosions. Any activity that would involve fish-bearing water from a geophysical perspective would require application under the Water Act. No such application has come forward.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is still playing the same old tune when it comes to maximizing resource development at any cost. SAGD operations are notorious for causing hydrocarbon migration into both groundwater and surface water, in the Lloydminster area specifically. The EUB mandate is for responsible development in the public interest. To the Energy minister: is it in the public's interest to proceed with such a project, with the potential to permanently damage this pristine water body?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, no project with respect to oil sands, heavy oil, conventional oil, shale oil, deep tight gas, or any other project that we would consider for development in the province of Alberta would go ahead without the very stringent requirements that we put in place and adhere to in the province of Alberta with respect to these developments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Water for Life strategy clearly states that "healthy aquatic ecosystems are vital to a high quality of life for Albertans and must be preserved." The government's strategy then makes the guarantee that "the province's aquatic ecosystems [will be] maintained and protected." To the Environment minister: will the minister tell us whether the Water for Life strategy will take precedence over an approval by the Minister of Energy? Whose competing mandate is going to be respected here?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly the responsibility of the government and this minister is to ensure the well-being of our water systems. I indicated that no application to date has been made. No studies have taken place. No approvals have been made. So I would suggest that the question is somewhat hypothetical, to say the least.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Health Regions Board Governance

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency has been well served by the board members of Aspen health and Capital health. Since these regional boards were designed, very little board renewal has occurred. My questions are all to the health minister. What are your plans to introduce new memberships to health boards across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very important question. One of the mandates that I have is to look at the effectiveness and the efficiency of our health system, and part of that is looking at board governance and making sure that we are using the resources that are applied to the system very effectively. I can tell the hon. member that I have met with board chairs on two occasions to talk about board governance, and one of the specific issues is: how do we do renewal of boards? How do we make sure that there's appropriate succession planning? We'll be coming forward with either three-year terms, perhaps two terms of three years each, or if not that, some other appropriate mechanism to make sure that there's succession planning and orderly renewal.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, again to the same minister: with the substantial growth here in Alberta are we planning to add any members, especially to the growth areas of this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The size of the boards is mandated. There is an opportunity for expansion to the size of the boards upon request. But I think it should be clearly stated that there's an optimum size for board operation, and the optimum size of the board is not necessarily impacted by the size of the population that they serve.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given the first answer, that you've had meetings with regard to renewal, when will this renewal happen? When will we see a plan? Will it be weeks, months?

Mr. Hancock: The process is unfolding, Mr. Speaker, over the course of the next few months. As members will know, there was a task force on board governance struck, which is meeting now and will be reporting I believe in June. We're doing our board review with respect to the regional health authorities on that same time track. So I hope that by the time this House meets again in the fall, any legislation process that we might need with respect to boards will be available for the House by then. That's my anticipation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Affordability of Postsecondary Education

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his 2005 taxpayer-funded fireside chat to the province the former Premier made a vow to the people of Alberta. He said, "Alberta will define a new tuition policy . . . It will be the most innovative, entrepreneurial, and affordable tuition policy in the country." With no signs of a downward trend in tuition, my questions are for the Premier. Will the Premier now reaffirm the previous Premier's statement that Alberta will have the most affordable tuition policy in the country?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as we look forward the next 20, 30, 40 years, we know that education is going to play a very key role in terms of building a knowledge-based industry here in the province of Alberta. There are many steps being taken today and into the future to ensure that we're competitive and to attract many young Albertans into postsecondary – it's not only university, but it's colleges and technical schools – and, of course further, not only with the education but additional research and also commercializing that technology in Alberta.

Mr. Tougas: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a difference between being competitive and being the most affordable, so I'm going to ask the question again. Will Alberta have the most affordable tuition rates in the country, as the previous Premier promised?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, approximately 70 per cent of university tuition is today paid for by the taxpayer. We're looking at ways of reducing the cost to individual students by furthering use of technology, pushing out the education into smaller centres so that we can get, of course, at least the introductory courses online. That will further reduce costs. These are all proactive steps taken in terms of increasing the number of students involved in postsecondary.

Mr. Tougas: Well, still no promise from the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, affordable means different things to different people. To the family of an oil executive with a high six-figure salary, tuition in Alberta would be considered affordable, but to a struggling wage earner in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark, $5,000 a year tuition plus hundreds more for books may be anything but affordable. To the Premier: for the record how does the Premier define affordable tuition?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the minister respond in terms of the amounts of bursaries and remission policy that we have in this province because, quite frankly, it's outstanding compared to other provinces.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of affordability really isn't just about tuition. As the hon. member pointed out, there are different needs in different circumstances. Our program is among the most generous in the country as it is needs based. As we roll things out under the affordability framework, stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Forest Protection in Kananaskis Country

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was suggested at a meeting last week in Bragg Creek that Kananaskis Country is threatened by a clear-cutting plan which was approved by the minister of sustainable development. My question, obviously, is to that minister. What is the minister doing to protect the recreational and watershed functions of K Country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to remind all members of the Assembly that clear-cutting hasn't been allowed in this province for several decades. The current practice of block cutting respects important structural features such as watersheds, riparian areas, trails, and sensitive biological areas. I'd also remind all members that block cutting is better than the alternative, which is beetles and wildfires, which respect none of the above.

Mr. Speaker, 58 per cent of Kananaskis Country is already protected. Of what's left, only a third is available. Less than one-quarter is subject to any logging . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Further comments from the meeting last week in Bragg Creek suggested that pine trees in Kananaskis Country are too small to be threatened by mountain pine beetles, that the beetles only attack large-diameter pines. I'm wondering if the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development can comment on how accurate that statement might be.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, that's half true. It is true that the beetles prefer the larger diameter trees that you find in British Columbia. But if they can't find the wider diameter trees, they're happy to take the smaller ones. I want all members to know that our forestry models use 15 centimetre diameter for our predictions, the same statistic that is used by British Columbia, a province that's lost 9 out of 10 of its pine trees. Following the B.C. model, we predict similar potential losses here. We've already found isolated incidents of smaller trees being infected. The eastern slopes are at risk, and we intend to manage that risk in a responsible manner.

Mr. Rodney: To the same minister. Perhaps I'll be just a little bit more direct. The suggestion has been made that this government is using the threat of pine beetles as an excuse to allow timber harvesting. What is the minister's response to that accusation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, this is a simple question of risk management. You can look at what's happened in British Columbia, where they've projected to lose 90 per cent of all their pine trees by 2010 or 2012, and you can see what doing nothing does. We believe that responsible logging, responsible forestry is the answer. This is trying to balance long-term environmental health versus short-term aesthetic values. We will make the responsible choice, which is the long-term environmental health of our forests.

Thank you.

The Speaker: We were at the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to provide a sufficient number of copies of material relating to St. Joseph's hospital for tabling: a report under the Protection for Persons in Care Act, a copy of a phone bill, and various other information on the St. Joseph's hospital situation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to table 123 letters and the relevant copies to call upon this Assembly to "try the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt as an adult due to the nature of this crime, his past criminal history and that he is so close to the age of 18 years old."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others on tablings?

Hon. members, I have a tabling today with respect to a new brochure that we've put out called the Alberta Legislature Grounds: Self-guided Tour, which points out some 27 monuments on the grounds of this Legislature. I invite all members to go out for a walk one of these days when it gets heated in the Assembly.

Secondly, I provided to all members earlier today some information with respect to the changes as a result of a Members' Services' position on MLA remuneration that went into effect April 1, 2007. All citizens of the province of Alberta can access this information at www.assembly.ab.ca. The adjustment of 4.92 per cent follows the average weekly earnings index in the province of Alberta.

Thirdly, before we left, prior to the little break we had, I advised members of the Members' Services Committee to be on standby for a possible Members' Services meeting this week because the normal practice is to give you 10 days' notice. I'm giving you notice now that we'll probably try to meet on Wednesday night at 6 o'clock. Now, I'm assuming that one thing is going to happen: the three House leaders are going to have a motion in this Assembly to go forward because if we don't move it, we won't make the budget process. If we don't make the budget process, well, then, what sense are the reforms?

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Education, Alberta Education School Jurisdictions audited financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2005, sections 1, 2, and 3, and pursuant to the Teaching Profession Act the Alberta Teachers' Association 2005 annual report.

The Speaker: There being no further ones, we'll deal with Orders of the Day.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that written questions stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that motions for returns stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 203
Service Dogs Act

[Debate adjourned March 19: Mrs. Forsyth speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to continue.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I may, because of the time last time, start again.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mrs. Forsyth: I am pleased to have been given the opportunity to join the discussion on the Service Dogs Act. I fully support Bill 203 because it allows for a wider cross-section of citizens to be fully integrated within Alberta. Bill 203 would guarantee that people who use service dogs are legally and adequately protected from discrimination. This bill would clarify and strengthen the rights of those with physical disabilities who need service dogs to assist them.

Bill 203 calls on Albertans to move towards greater understanding of diversity within our province. It eliminates the current confusion regarding people who use service dogs and makes them feel more comfortable about carrying out their daily routine, such as going for coffee, grocery shopping, picking things up from the ground. And, yes, Mr. Speaker, I recently read about a dog that can even put his owner's ATM card in the ATM bank machine. A service dog can make all the difference in the world for someone with reduced mobility. Certain chores which are essential components to leading independent lives are not equally accessible to all Albertans. While these things are essential, they are also taken for granted by most Albertans.

Personal stories are always nice to share, and I would like to share one that affects one of my constituents. It's called 4 Paws 4 Matthew. As a child with autism, Matthew is a little boy who many of my constituents in Parkland would recognize. He's a fair-haired little boy who likes to run and who many will recognize at his visits to Park 96. Matthew has many safety issues which could put his life in danger as well as various communication and social difficulties.

Matthew's family has recognized the need for a highly trained service dog and how these wonderful dogs have come to the aid of many children suffering from the same disability as Matthew. In January of 2006 the family asked for help from our community, their family, and their friends. The response, Mr. Speaker, has been overwhelming and helped raise a whopping $13,200. Since the training of service dogs is quite expensive and predicted to take as long as two years, they hope to receive their dog at the end of this year or early 2008.

Although the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act includes protection for those using service dogs, often the general public is unaware of it. Mr. Speaker, blind persons are no longer faced with speculation concerning their rights to use guide dogs in public places. With the help of legislation the use of guide dogs has become an accepted and commonplace practice throughout our society. We have come to understand and appreciate the need blind people have for their guide dogs. Unfortunately, similar knowledge concerning service dogs is not as widespread due to the current ambiguities surrounding this issue.

The Blind Persons' Rights Act helped Alberta's visually challenged people gain access to the benefits of Alberta's quality of life. The same allowance should be extended to those with other disabilities. There have been numerous instances when people with physical disabilities who depend on the aid of service dogs have been excluded from social settings due to the confusion the general public has regarding the admittance of their service dogs into these areas. Bill 203 presents us with the opportunity to help all Albertans live happier and more fulfilling lives no matter what their disabilities. There is no doubt that people with physical disabilities stand to gain with the help of their service dogs. Mr. Speaker, for the Matthews of the world and many other Albertans who have or are waiting for a service dog, I urge members of the Assembly to support Bill 203.

I will leave you with the story of Riley, who suffers from autism. A cute, precocious seven-year-old, Riley likes trucks, tractors, and any other kind of heavy equipment. But he loves his best friend, Yogi, a golden retriever. Riley had a history of bolting but not anymore. His family waited three years to get Yogi, but it didn't take long for the dog to have a huge impact on their lives. When Yogi first came into the house, it was like ducks to water. It was just so unbelievable. The bond was instant, said his mother.

Bill 203 will help fulfill an environment where many Albertans would be able to participate more fully in society. Bill 203 is a step towards making this vision a reality. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I rise to support my colleague's Bill 203 on service dogs. I have worked extensively at the University of Calgary trying to improve the lot of disabled students. I have met with them with regard to examination rooms and accommodating schedules to recognize the fact that depending on their disabilities, they may require extra time when taking an exam. Disabled students have had quite a bit of difficulty over the years having their disabilities recognized, not to the point where they are singled out because of their disability but for the need for their disability to be supported.

I worked with one young lady in particular over the past year who had a service dog because she had the misfortune of having been run into while driving, so her spine had suffered some damage. Then on top of that she suffered from an industrial accident while working for a lumber company that didn't have proper saw guards. She had injuries to her back, and she also had severe injuries to the tendons in her right hand. As a result, she had a service dog that basically did the lifting for her, that carried her books from class to class.

Initially at the University of Calgary she was received in sort of a mixed way in certain areas. For example, she wasn't allowed into Dinny's Den. Some of her professors had a degree of discomfort with the dog, so her access was very much prevented. With all the other difficulties that she had in terms of having her disability recognized and having tuition support and funding for books and so on, just paying the daily rent was extremely difficult for this young lady. Fortunately, because everybody was willing to work in a collaborative fashion, the solution came through the recognition of the dog's qualifications.

I would like to thank a young lady that I worked with when my wife and I ran the Cataract Creek wilderness campground. Nokia, the young lady in question, trained dogs as well as being a conservation officer. While she loved working in the forest, she found that the salaries that were paid to conservation officers could not begin to compare with what the city of Calgary was offering with regard to their canine service work. In fact, her salary basically doubled that of the individual responsible for managing the Sheep River ranger station. He was sorry to lose her but realized that she had to be thinking about her financial future. Anyway, this young lady intervened on behalf of the university student and assisted the university student in receiving recognition for the qualifications and the training of this particular dog to carry the load.

Service animals basically are the links between people with disabilities and the world around them. We're more used to the idea of a dog for the blind, but the reality is that there are a large number of dogs that are performing a great variety of functions. The member opposite noted one actually being able to access an ATM, and I noticed that same article. It's amazing what animals can do.

The comradeship of an animal is also extremely important. I know that when my grandmother was in a seniors' home, the Sarcee auxiliary, there were visits by dogs that were brought in. For a senior who, depending on their family situation, may not be subject to having that many visits, these dogs perform a valuable service just in terms of their friendship and their openness. Of course, all the seniors along the route would have special treats for the dogs, so I'm sure that by the time the dog got home, there was no need to feed it. There is no doubt that this is a wonderful bill.

Another example that happened this past fall with the Calgary board of education was a young man who required the support of a service dog. Initially there was quite a bit of fear and trepidation within the school from administration, from classmates as to this dog. You know: how well was it trained? Was it friendly? Was it thoroughly cleaned? And so on. There were a whole series of issues, but again due to collaborative effort, information, and education these initial concerns were overcome, and the young gentleman and his service dog have been allowed access. He no longer had to stay at home, but he could receive the full support of the service dog.

One thing that Bill 203 must have is a large portion of education and information support. There are a number of individuals – and I gather it runs sometimes with regard to ethnic backgrounds – that have a severe fear of dogs, and that fear might cause them discomfort. What we need to do is provide the education and information for people to realize that these service dogs are not a personal threat and that they serve a very special function.

There is another concern that we have too. This young lady who I helped at the University of Calgary had a large poster draped over the saddlebags of her dog saying: "Please do not pet. This dog is a service dog." I know the number of times I tried to drag a stray dog home and claim that it had followed me home. We have to treat people and their service dogs with respect and recognize that this isn't your regular pet, that this animal has a specific function to perform.

Therefore, I hope that as part of making Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, successful, there will be a great amount put aside to inform the public on the role of these dogs, not just taxi drivers who may question whether or not this dog can be admitted or individuals in apartment complexes who may not realize that this is no regular pet. This is the equivalent of a human companion and needs to be treated with and awarded the same degree of respect that we would provide to a person who is serving as an aide to an individual with disabilities.

I want to pass along my support for Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, and to please ask that the education and information parts of this bill along with the follow-up in terms of allowing the access to occur take place.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in strong support of Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, 2007, and I would like to congratulate and commend the Member for Strathcona for bringing this bill forward. It's a very timely and a necessary bill as the need for service dogs develops to a higher degree in our society. This bill does clarify and strengthen the rights of service dog owners and it does ensure that things like occupancy, accommodation, service for people with service dogs is properly recognized. The need for service dogs is as clear as the need for guide dogs for the blind.

You know, the ways that we deal with problems that arise for people who are disabled are things that change over time. I remember when we started to change the nature of the corners of our sidewalks and make ramps. I talked to some folks who had vision problems. They found that their cane no longer was good for them to deal with coming to the corner because they couldn't use it to find out where the road started anymore. Now, the fact was that they needed those guide dogs. The same is very, very true for service dogs in many, many circumstances in our society. I've had many people in my constituency call me about this particular bill, and it's very interesting that there is such support for legislation of this nature.

There are savings for the province in that there are not adequate numbers of people to work with the disabled right now because of shortages in our labour market. Service dogs – and a number of my constituents have brought this forward to me – provide an alternative to realistically helping the disabled operate within our society. The savings in not having people do that I think is clear. The need for this bill is important.

I commend the arguments of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and also the Member for Calgary-Varsity and what they have said in terms of the importance of the comradeship, the partnership that these animals provide. I support this bill, and I support it very strongly.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Strathcona. The efforts the member has put forth in the sponsorship of this bill are commendable and should be applauded.

I want to acknowledge that this act benefits all persons with disabilities who need to use service dogs. Persons with disabilities who need service dogs currently lack sufficient protection. The Service Dogs Act will enable service dogs' users to lead lives free of discrimination. This act defines the use of a service dog for the betterment of every individual who relies on them throughout their daily lives.

I want to draw attention to other jurisdictions where similar legislation has been a success story. British Columbia, Quebec, Manitoba, and New Brunswick are provinces that have enacted legislation that permits service dogs, allowing persons with disabilities who need service dogs to have unrestricted access to public accommodations and facilities. These jurisdictions have recognized that persons with disabilities and their accompanying service dogs should not face intolerance.

It is imperative to outline that in the Service Dogs Act an accredited service dog will be used by individuals who are affected by a range of physical disabilities. It is important to provide persons with disabilities who need service dogs an opportunity to live and interact in their community free of bias. We should strive to recognize, as other jurisdictions have, that service dogs for persons with disabilities are an essential part of their lives. For many individuals service dogs become indispensable and are required to perform day-to-day errands and responsibilities. Service dogs are a necessity. They assist the individual to reduce some of the complications that a person with a disability faces. Service dogs provide these individuals with the capability to perform basic tasks that persons without disabilities take for granted.

I'd like to take this opportunity to refer to the example of British Columbia and this province's Guide Animal Act. This jurisdiction recognized the importance of service dogs and the useful purpose that they serve. Service dogs provide a necessary service to their dependants. We need to ensure that a person requiring a service dog is not discriminated against when they attempt to access public accommodations and facilities.

In Quebec they acknowledge that their dog guides are equivalent to a prosthetic device. Equating the service dog to a prosthetic device communicates their importance very effectively. This description makes it possible for fellow citizens to comprehend the legitimacy of service dogs and the purpose that they serve for those who use them. The Manitoba Human Rights Code acknowledges that a person with a disability is someone who relies on the use of a guide dog or other animal assistant.

I want to emphasize that Bill 203 does not reduce the legitimacy of a guide dog. It is intended to strengthen the understanding that both guide dogs and service dogs are relevant aides. This is an important distinction, and one that Bill 203 will further and sustain. New Brunswick has legislated the right for a person with a disability who needs a dog guide to have fair access to rental, residential, and commercial properties as well as the purchase of real estate. Newfoundland and Labrador also recognize that persons with disabilities who need dog guides should have equal access to housing accommodations. Bill 203 provides an opportunity to demonstrate that we care about and acknowledge the complex life of a person with a disability.

We have an obligation to acknowledge the personal challenges that persons with disabilities face. A service dog should not be perceived as a barrier. Those who can better their lives by using accredited service dogs should be allowed to do so. Service dogs for persons with disabilities serve to benefit their wellness and improve their overall quality of life. Service dogs empower their companions, providing them with the ability to actively participate in society. We have to realize, as other jurisdictions have, that persons with disabilities feel as though they have limited capabilities because they are not comfortable and need the assistance of a service dog to go anywhere. The public perception assumes that service dogs are not permitted into public areas. For persons with disabilities, this restrictive atmosphere contributes to feelings of apprehension and isolation. We must recognize that service dogs provide a potential to alleviate these feelings, ensuring that persons with disabilities can live the best possible life.

A problem that has been documented in Alberta and other jurisdictions is that people who need service dogs were being denied access to restaurants, businesses, and other public places. We need to address this issue so that Albertans, both those with and without disabilities, will understand the necessity and legitimacy of a service dog. For most citizens it is common knowledge that the visually challenged are allowed to be accompanied by a guide dog into any public setting. The intention of this bill is to establish that persons with disabilities who need service dogs are permitted to access public places without discrimination. It is Alberta's turn to recognize that the use of a service dog can only serve to better people's lives. Bill 203 will communicate to businesses and other public venues that service dogs are equal in purpose to guide dogs. We need to allow the disabled the full advantages afforded to all Albertans. It is in the best interest of everyone.

This act will also ensure that a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog will have equal access to housing. Persons with disabilities should not be discriminated against when they attempt to purchase or rent an available housing accommodation. Any potential vacancy that would be available to a person without a disability should be available to a person with a disability and their accompanying service dog. There should be no discrimination. If a person with a disability can meet the financial requirements, they should be recognized as a qualified candidate for a housing vacancy.

Bill 203 will clarify any discrepancies that are currently occurring with persons with disabilities and their accompanying service dogs. It is important to establish that the rights of persons with disabilities and their accompanying service dogs will be protected. This piece of legislation will allow a person with a disability who needs a service dog unrestricted access to all public facilities and accommodations. A distinction is especially important because of the potential conflict that could arise if a person, with or without a disability, is not aware of their rights and how to treat the situation.

Not only will these individuals be allowed unrestricted access to public areas; they will also be able to fully participate in the workforce. It is a necessity that persons with disabilities are not discriminated against when they are seeking employment. If the person with a disability is employed, their need for a service dog must be respected. The employer must recognize the reliance on the service dog and in no way limit the potential opportunities of the individual. This will allow a person with a disability to live a more fulfilling life, which cannot be achieved if they are restricted from working. The rights established in this act will enable those individuals who need a service dog to be in a better position to contribute to our society. They'll be able to improve their social status and advance their personal aspirations.

Other jurisdictions have concluded that service dogs have a minimal impact in day-to-day life. The expectations are that the service dog will be kept obedient in a manner that would be solely, in a public area, for the assistance of the person with a disability.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to applaud the intent of Bill 203. It serves to improve the lives of individuals who need service dogs. This act offers the potential for persons with disabilities to gain the respect and dignity that they deserve. Those of us who are not familiar with the struggles of physical disabilities can surely realize the comfort and useful purpose that a service dog provides. This act addresses a problem that has been well documented in the province of Alberta and several other jurisdictions. It's time to offer those who face disadvantages a chance to improve their lives. It is in the interests of our province and will benefit many.

Bill 203 will demonstrate that our government is continually trying to assist persons with disabilities by allowing them the right to be accompanied by an accredited service dog. I believe that this is a commendable piece of legislation, and it is in our best interest to pass Bill 203.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the next four speakers that have advised me of their desire to participate are the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, then the Member for Red Deer-North, then the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. If there are others, kindly advise.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be short because there are other people who want to participate in this debate. Again, like others I would congratulate the Member for Strathcona for bringing forward this bill. It's certainly designed to eliminate discrimination based on the fact that a person is dependent on a service dog. We know this can be problematic for certain people. There are bylaws in condo associations and others where you can't have pets. There are rental places – especially now, with the rent increases and lack of vacancies, this becomes an even more severe problem for people that need service dogs. So it's a good bill.

I just want to say that there could be an unintended loophole, though, that I'd like the member to think about because it allows for the minister to issue identification cards as proof of a service dog's qualification. My worry there is that, knowing how bureaucracies work sometimes, it may take a long time to get these service cards. People lose them. It seems to me that this could allow some leeway for those that might want to do it to discriminate in case the proof of a qualification isn't immediately available, and I know that's not the intention of the act.

I would say that this is a good bill, but maybe the member would take a look at what I'd call a friendly amendment stating something like this: at no point shall the lack of identification issued by the ministry abrogate the rights and responsibilities under section 3. It seems to me that if we did that, even if they didn't have the card – it was coming; with the bureaucracy they'd lost it, but it was still coming – that would still not stop the grounds for discrimination. I just throw that out to the member to consider. Other than that, we certainly will support the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, then followed by the members for Red Deer-North, Cardston-Taber-Warner, Calgary-Hays, and Calgary-Fort.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to acknowledge that animals contribute tremendously to all of our lives. Our dogs, for example, aid us on our farms, help us retain our independence, offer us comfort in time of need, find missing people, and partner with the police in canine units. It's time to reward the contributions of our animal population and give them the protection and recognition that they deserve, so I thank the Member for Strathcona for bringing Bill 203, Service Dogs Act, to us.

I'd like to share a dog story that's important to our history, not purely a Canadian dog story but one with a Canadian connection. It took place in 1867, a year that has a certain significance for Canadians and a different significance for Brits. The British, as you probably know, have a reputation as dog lovers, and 1867 was the year a new dog tax and registration were introduced in Britain. In Canada, with our three plus levels of government, such a measure would come in the form of a municipal bylaw. In Britain, where there are no provincial governments except in Northern Ireland, and where dogs are really important, the new dog tax came in a bill introduced in the Mother of Parliaments, at Westminster. Dog lovers all over the country had strong opinions on this proposed law. They were writing letters and lobbying their MPs, and many of them showed up in the visitors' gallery the day the bill was to be debated.

Now, the same day there was another bill on the Order Paper, for the passage of the British North America Act to join a number of colonies in the New World into a dominion called Canada. The terms of Confederation had been debated back and forth for a long time. There had been arguments over the name of the new entity, arguments over the division of powers between the central government and the provinces, and arguments over the makeup of an upper House to be called the Senate. Does this sound familiar?

With more than three rounds of bargaining behind them, the Canadian Fathers of Confederation who made it to London for the final reading of the bill were hoping that this would be the final reading. With Canadians' penchant for debating constitutional proposals, they were hoping that some backbench member would not throw a monkey wrench into the process by coming up with some new proposal or variation. The Canadians sat, worried, in the gallery with fingers crossed and bated breath. They needn't have worried. With all of the spectators crowded in for the next bill, on the dog tax, the parliamentarians wouldn't dare begin any new discussion that would come between British dog owners and their dogs.

So Canadian Confederation passed in a matter of minutes. The MPs yawned as the bill was read, shuffled as it was explained, gave it perfunctory agreement, and saved their speeches and energies for the real business of the day: the dog tax bill that followed. Mr.

Speaker, we owe the existence of Canada to British dog lovers, and today I would like to return that favour.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

In my earlier member's statement on this topic I talked about the way dogs, working with humans, mirror and enhance our humanity. They draw our attention to moods we barely sense and accept us as their leaders with an unqualified loyalty. In providing finely tuned supports for persons with many kinds of disabilities, they have extended awareness to the ways we all are differently abled. They show sensitivity to others' needs in their gentleness to young children. We use the expression "dog eat dog." It better describes the business world than the canine one. Dogs show greater loyalty than many employers do to their employees and suppliers.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for dogs who work with humans to be able to do their job more effectively, without hindrance, and so helps to limit discrimination toward people who depend on them. Our passing it puts us on the road to a more human society.

In my earlier member's statement I referred to an Ode to a Dog by Albert Payson Terhune, author of the Lad of Sunnybank stories. Here I'm going to read a part of that poem about canine qualities.

Staunch friendship, wanting neither thanks nor fee
Safe privilege to worship and to guard:
That is their creed. They know no shrewder way
To travel through their hour of lifetime here.
Would Man but deign to serve his god as they,
[The Kingdom would] dawn within the year.

Mr. Speaker, by passing this bill, let us let service dogs do their jobs that they do so well, and let us do the job we need to do: the building of a human society that brings us closer to the kingdom.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to speak to this private member's bill, and I, too, congratulate the hon. Member for Strathcona for his efforts over the last five years.

People have come to love their dogs so much that some of them have a hard time understanding why anyone would not be willing to welcome a dog in their homes. As the old saying goes: love me, love my dog. Harry S. Truman also thought that dogs were very important. He said, "Children and dogs are as necessary to the welfare of the country as is Wall Street and the railroads." Emily Dickinson ranked dogs right up there with human beings. She said, "They are better than human beings because they know but do not tell."

As loving and as important as my dogs are to me, they do not serve in the same way that a service dog serves its master. Whether the master be a young, autistic child, a person who is blind, or a person who is deaf, dogs joyously serve our needs in ways that are amazing. We have all heard the incredible stories of how dogs have saved the lives of family members who would have otherwise slept through a raging fire or a burglary, and we can see in our own communities guide dogs that safely lead those who are blind across busy streets and through crowded sidewalks. Dogs are amazing, and well-trained service dogs are essential to help meet the needs of their masters with disabilities.

I have a constituent in Red Deer-North who has been very active over the last few years working to help people in our community to understand why service dogs for those with hearing impairment require equal rights. Liz Craig often walks in downtown Red Deer with her beautiful, well-trained dog, whose name is Rain, by her side, protecting her and giving her warnings from sounds that he hears that Liz cannot hear. In one sense Liz asks that all service dogs be given the same rights as guide dogs. I would like to sincerely thank Liz for all that she's done to help bring legislation forward to recognize these service dogs. She asks that service dogs be given the respect and rights of guide dogs as recognized under the Blind Persons' Rights Act.

Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, will do just that. Bill 203 will enshrine the human right of mobility for those with disability into the laws of our province. Bill 203 is about ensuring that persons with disabilities can succeed and not be discriminated against. This government has made a commitment to Albertans to consider the needs of the disability community when developing legislation and policy. Bill 203 upholds this government priority. Bill 203 will create legal recognition for service dogs and extend rights to those who rely on service dogs for assistance with everyday tasks. The Blind Persons' Rights Act guarantees that those who rely on guide dogs are protected from discrimination. The vast majority of Albertans and Alberta businesses recognizes the value of service dogs to the disability community and are amenable to their use in public places. Entrenching the right to use a service dog in law will ensure that this right is applied consistently and systematically.

Bill 203 contains provisions to ensure that the use of service dogs in Alberta is effectively regulated, and the potential for abuse of the system is minimal. Also, very importantly, Bill 203 would allow the minister to regulate training schools for service dogs. The regulation of training schools would be beneficial not only to the disability community but to the general public as well. Regulating training schools would provide an assurance that the animal is properly trained to meet everyday needs. These regulated training schools could enhance public safety by ensuring that service dogs are prepared to meet the challenges of interacting with people in a variety of settings. They would assist in making sure that service dogs are trained to deal with issues such as public transportation procedures and emergency scenarios. Bill 203 will help to clear up any confusion regarding the acceptable use of these animals.

Some groups have raised concerns about this bill. There is the possibility that this legislation could cause some confusion due to overlap with the current Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. These concerns are valid, but it would be a real tragedy if this legislation did not proceed for this reason. The beauty of legislation is that it is adaptable to changing conditions. If we see a need in the future to improve this legislation, we are able to do that through amendments and changes to regulations.

An open, inclusive, and just society is something that we as Albertans highly value. I urge all members of this Assembly to strongly consider giving their support to this bill. After all, dogs are a person's best friend, and as my husband often says, they're the best kind of people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to get up and to talk on Bill 203. I applaud the intent of this bill and the many accolades that have been given to dogs. I'm a dog lover. I'm a dog owner. I understand and really appreciate the value of dogs in our society.

It helps in many ways. For such things as the border there are many things where the dog is the most efficient and the best that we can use for finding drugs, firearms, money that's being smuggled.

Then there is the positive aspect in society. For many people that are sick, there's nothing better than a loyal companion like a dog to help them to recover, and many seniors in their homes place great importance on their dog and the comfort that they give them and also the safety. The list goes on and on.

Many members here have spoken to the benefits of dogs, but due to time shortage and to try and be quick, I'll use my remarks brief and talk about the other side, where I have a few concerns and think maybe we need some friendly amendments in order to protect the rights of all Canadians. Our freedom and rights as individuals generally end where they infringe on other people's freedoms and rights. We always need to look at that and be careful when we want to entrench a so-called new right that we think someone has been neglected in having.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is for people with allergies. There are many people that have allergies to dogs. I'll use the example of a restaurant owner. Perhaps his whole family works in that restaurant, and they're allergic to dogs. If we entrench this to where they cannot protect their own rights, what's going to happen in a situation like that? If a dog comes into a restaurant like that, then all of a sudden the owners and the workers are put in a situation where they're having a terrible attack, and they can do nothing about it because this law is written such that they have no rights.

So my concern is that there needs to be some sort of little amendment in here that would address the rights of owners, workers, and other areas that are allergic to dogs and could have perhaps even a life-threatening situation in the presence of one. Somehow there needs to be a balance where that courtesy, that respect, that understanding is extended out, and people's rights are protected. It's not that we want to stop service dogs from going everywhere, but there are those rare occasions when there are circumstances. If this law is passed and written in stone such that they now have the absolute right to go anywhere and everywhere they desire to go, we are infringing and perhaps putting other people in danger because of that.

So I would like to see a little bit of softening of the wording on where they can go, like I say, for businesses and owners to be able to have a little bit of courtesy and respect for their rights for those things that are affecting their health. But on the whole, like I say, I love dogs. I'm a dog owner. I think the intent of this bill is excellent, but we need to look at those who it maybe isn't excellent for in the way the wording is and respect those people.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to join the discussion on the Service Dogs Act, 2007, introduced by the hon. Member for Strathcona. I support Bill 203 because it clarifies the ambiguities concerning the rights and responsibilities involved in the utilization of service dogs. No legislation specifically addresses the use of service dogs by physically disabled persons in need of assistance. Many people who use service dogs have been faced with uncomfortable and avoidable situations stemming from the vagueness of the rights of these people.

People with disabilities face additional, unnecessary burdens due to the general public's lack of knowledge regarding the nature of service dogs. People seem to be less informed about the myriad of daily tasks service dogs help the physically disabled complete. Albertans are fully aware of the extent to which guide dogs assist blind persons. There is a need to clarify the rights of those who use service dogs in order to allow the physically disabled to utilize service dogs so they, too, can receive help in completing essential tasks throughout their days.

Since there is no clear legislation addressing service dogs, the public has not come to a consensus on which protocols to follow. Each situation appears to be dealt with on an individual basis with no set standards. Mr. Speaker, if Bill 203 is enacted, it would no longer be unintentionally left in the hands of the general public to determine if persons accompanied by service dogs can enter certain establishments. Bill 203 would empower those of us who use these dogs as they would have clear and solid documents to present if their rights were being contested.

Clarification of the rights of persons with service dogs is important as it will strengthen their rights; for example, renting an apartment, entering grocery stores, or having equal access to public spaces. The Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act is intended to provide protection for physically disabled individuals who need the use of service dogs. It is currently the only protective measure set in place to safeguard the rights of physically disabled persons who use service dogs.

Provisions are often unclear regarding the recourse if the right to be accompanied by a service dog is denied. Protection under the act has proven to be insufficient. Local police currently lack a standard for enforcing the provision of the act, and more cases go to the human rights court because of the lack of clarity. It often takes extended periods of time for the courts to rule on complaints filed under the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. Bill 203 would ensure that persons with disabilities have the legal right to be accompanied by an accredited service dog in all areas open to the general public, free of discrimination, no questions asked. Mr. Speaker, with the enactment of Bill 203 it would be clearly against the law to ask someone accompanied by a service dog to leave a public area. Confusion would be eliminated, and their rights could not be denied if they were explicitly outlined in legislation.

The Blind Persons' Rights Act clearly establishes the rights of blind people and prohibits discriminatory practice against persons accompanied by guide dogs. Most people and organizations understand that guide dogs for the visually impaired are protected under the Blind Persons' Rights Act, but most do not necessarily understand that the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act does the same for persons with disabilities accompanied by service dogs. The Blind Persons' Rights Act sets the precedent for explicit rights regarding use of service dogs for all the physically disabled community.

Provisions in Bill 203 include references to service dogs themselves. This provision would make it illegal to ask someone to keep their service dog outside while in a public area. The bill would identify who is legally entitled to the use of a service dog. Only those defined under the Service Dogs Act as having a physical disability would be entitled to use a certified service dog.

Bill 203 strictly stipulates the standards of the service dogs. In order to be classified as service dogs, the animals would have to meet safety and training requirements to ensure their reliability. Service dogs are trained in such a way that while they are assisting those in need, they act as though they are on duty and are fully attentive and on task. Service dogs are used to avoid hazards, assist the deaf or hard of hearing, assist with mobility disabilities, assist with seizure response, and otherwise compensate for a disability.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 would provide more freedom and enhanced quality of life for the physically disabled. Persons who utilize service dogs would no longer have to worry about confrontations while they go about their daily chores and activities. We as Albertans want to create an environment where those with service dogs can fully participate in all aspects of the province's activities.

Bill 203 presents an opportunity to enhance social cohesion and Albertans' quality of life. It is our duty as legislators to correct this unacceptable situation and to ensure that all Albertans are treated in an equitable manner.

I urge my fellow members to support Bill 203. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak on Bill 203, Service Dogs Act, 2007, and I must commend the Member for Strathcona for bringing this excellent bill forward. He's certainly giving this House an opportunity to put stock in the commitment to doing what's right for all Albertans, including taking action on behalf of Alberta's disabled community.

Mr. Speaker, I echo the sentiments of Alberta's disabled community when I point out what a progressive piece of legislation this is for so many disabled citizens. In this piece of legislation we are continuing to ingrain the fundamental principle that all Albertans will have the opportunity to partake in our society. Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act, is a positive measure in assuring that Alberta's disabled population would be afforded the opportunities necessary to excel in their communities.

As members of this Assembly it is our responsibility to ensure that the rights and the needs of all individuals are secure as per the ever-changing needs in our society.

Mr. Speaker, this bill fits well with the priority aiming to improve Albertans' quality of life. That is our government's priority, improving lives by creating policies that reflect the varying needs of disabled Albertans.

All Albertans are unique, including those with a disability. We are consistently looking at various ways that we can facilitate the ease of inclusion of all Albertans. Assistance for disabled individuals is a priority that is always undergoing fine-tuning. This includes making infrastructure improvements, with the installation of ramps and elevators, lifts for the physically disabled, and offering TTY service via telephone for the hearing impaired. The general use of dogs assisting the disabled in Alberta has been facilitated by the Blind Persons' Rights Act and the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. They have justly served both the blind and the visually impaired by making it illegal to discriminate against individuals with guide dogs. The former provides the necessary framework for regulating the use of dogs as a form of visual assistance.

As social norms continue to change, this Assembly is being presented with opportunities to ensure that our laws reflect what's right and fair in this community. The important role of the service dog is in no doubt. A specially trained service dog is one of the means available to aid in everything, from safely performing day-to-day tasks to even obtaining an education and developing a successful career. Some of us might not be aware that the use of a highly specialized canine friend is not limited to the scope of seeing eye dogs, Mr. Speaker. Other functions include assisting the hearing impaired, providing timely seizure response, aiding in the completion of day-to-day tasks, and generally enriching the lives of disabled citizens.

I'm touched every time I hear yet another heartwarming story involving Albertans, regardless of age and affliction, being better equipped to contribute to society as a result of their loyal service dog. The opportunities for service dogs to help disabled individuals are as varied as those who require the support and are often for activities that many of us take for granted. For example, cerebral palsy is a neurological disorder and causes serious physical disabilities in posture and movement. For individuals with cerebral palsy, this particular dog is able to do things such as pick up dropped items, open doors, and even press the necessary speed-dial on the phone in case of emergency.

When the majority of Albertans see an individual with a service dog, they are happy to afford the dog and the handler common courtesy and the space necessary to do what they must. That's why I'd like to think that this piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, is very proactive in empowering disabled persons rather than restricted to instances of discrimination, considering the hardship that can arise when viable members of our society are discouraged from doing what they need to do as a result of a service dog, especially in a culture that so openly accepts guide dogs for the blind.

I'm sure that the members in this Chamber are comforted by having a certain dog in their lives although I don't think that any of our four-legged friends are performing on quite a scale as these other service dogs.

So, Mr. Speaker, this very important bill strengthens our social infrastructure, affirming our commitment to all Albertans. When we call dogs "man's best friend," let's treat our best friends the way we treat ourselves, particularly those friends who not only play with us but also seriously work with us to help our vulnerable citizens. For this reason I call on the whole House to support this bill wholeheartedly and with every vote that you can draw on.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief, but I just want to make sure that I'm on the record for having spoken to this wonderful bill that my colleague from Strathcona has brought forward. It has been many years since this has been discussed, and good on him for bringing this forward and actually getting it to the point where we're creating legislation. Certainly, in my mind, it is something that should be passed at this point.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Ms Pastoor: Perhaps I should ask my hon. colleague a question.

One of the experiences that I had where I learned the difference between a guide dog and a service dog was quite by accident with one of my constituents. I was making a presentation for a 60th wedding anniversary. When I was invited into their home, they had pictures of many dogs. Then we got into the fact that the man was deaf but also had a depth perception, in fact, that he was prone to falling. The dog that he had used for many, many years would, when he was going towards steps or if there was an incline, actually step right in front of him to warn him. I just thought that that was really wonderful, and I found this, as I mentioned, quite by accident.

One of the things that I can't believe is that the general society is still not aware of the value of these animals in our lives and that they don't realize that this is what helps these people live to their highest potential. I think of the horses that are used in our Handicapped Riding Association. I think it's been mentioned about the ability of dogs to bring out the very best in autistic children. I've also seen that work with horses.

I think that we really have to value and understand the quality of life that animals bring to our lives, not just in terms of service and in guides but also in my particular area of geriatrics, the wonderful bringing out of some people, in particular Alzheimer's, when animals are around. They love bunnies, and they love animals, and they love the cats that will come up and cuddle with them. Animals are very, very important.

In the regulations that would go along with this legislation I would like to see a very, very strong educational component put in so that we can educate the general public. I think the general public, in fairness to them, are probably no different from the rest of us. Unless something sort of really affects us personally, we often aren't aware of it. I believe that a good educational program would make general society a lot more aware. In the awareness and in the understanding I also think that we create acceptance so that at some point in time this conversation that we're having right now would be absolutely an obsolete conversation because everyone would understand and appreciate and accept that animals are important in our lives.

Also, for us that are not disabled, I think we really have to be able to have the opportunity to learn. In the learning, as I've said, and also in the acceptance I believe that it would create an empathy for people less fortunate than us and certainly an empathy for people who want to be a part of society that probably never had the opportunity to be a part of our society before.

So I stand here and, like my colleague ahead of me, ask for full support of this House for this very, very important bill for those of us who are less fortunate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona. His work for disabled people as the chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities is commendable.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 is a very meaningful way of recognizing the needs of disabled people in Alberta. People who have challenges or burdens need to have the tools and the means to lead meaningful and productive lives. We all know the importance of having a strong economy and a healthy business climate. None of that is sustained without ensuring that we have strong and healthy Albertans.

Our government has made it a priority to improve the quality of life of Albertans. Bill 203 comes at a time when our government is focused on making sure its policies and directions reflect the needs of the disabled community. All Albertans are a critical component of a strong and successful province. Lifting up those Albertans who need help allows the province to meet its full productivity. The Service Dogs Act will help disabled people participate fully in society and the economy free of discrimination. It will help all Albertans to gain a greater understanding of the needs of disabled people. This bill addresses how a disabled individual can have a service dog and use the dog as a critical support to daily living.

The Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act does not provide sufficient recourse to individuals who face discrimination as a result of using a service dog. The HRCMA does protect persons with disabilities, but there are no provisions in the act that support individuals with service dogs if they are refused access to a restaurant or are not allowed to travel on a bus. Individuals should not be restricted in their day-to-day goings-on because they lack the necessary legal protections. Individuals should not be denied access to public places or transportation because of an ambiguity in legislation. As such, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 serves to build on the HRCMA by prohibiting discrimination towards disabled people who have a service dog and putting in place fines to send a message to those who act in discriminatory ways. Albertans recognize how a Service Dogs Act represents common sense.

The Blind Persons' Rights Act has been very effective in protecting blind people and allowing them to participate fully in society. Guide dogs play such a valuable role in the lives of their handlers.

Albertans understand the role guide dogs play in supporting the visually challenged. The role of the Blind Persons' Rights Act is well regarded and respected. The BPRA was amended in 2004 to strengthen its provisions relating to enforcement and identification. It is a strong piece of legislation, and it will continue to be a stand-alone piece of legislation. Through a Service Dogs Act we have an opportunity to extend the provisions of the BPRA to all other disabled people. Bill 203 also levels the legislative playing field between provinces. British Columbia has similar legislation.

Bill 203 is the right thing to do. We are giving the opportunity to persons with disabilities to get around in their communities in a way that they may have been prevented from doing in the past. Bill 203 allows for greater self-reliance. Persons with disabilities can lead more independent lives in doing their groceries, going to medical appointments, visiting family and friends. It can improve their self-esteem and confidence, and it allows caregivers and service providers the ability to try new approaches in assisting persons with disabilities and attempting new types of care.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 will protect individuals with service dogs from discrimination in accessing housing. We must ensure that they are not discriminated against if they want to rent a house or an apartment. There's a great deal of pride for an individual in his or her place of dwelling, and without protections in place for people who need service dogs, they can be limited in where they could live on their own.

Bill 203 can serve to increase the opportunities available to individuals with disabilities who seek employment. There is no better way to increase a person's self-worth and self-esteem than the opportunity to be employed. There are meaningful opportunities for persons with disabilities to participate in the workforce. If barriers exist for individuals, it is incumbent on us that they are removed to allow people to lead independent lives.

Bill 203 allows individuals with disabilities to lead improved lives and I believe is moving in the right direction by giving disabled people the rights as outlined in the bill. Our responsibility, Mr. Speaker, as MLAs is to ensure that Albertans have a great quality of life. Our government is moving ahead to improve the quality of life of Albertans, most importantly, making sure that disabled individuals can participate fully in the life of this province. I think Bill 203 is a step forward towards fuller participation. Legislation allowing people to lead active, independent lives is legislation we should be keen to support.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill is the latest step in continuing efforts to protect the human rights of Albertans with disabilities. It reflects government's priority of ensuring that our policies reflect the varied needs of the disabled community.

It is a basic principle of fairness that everyone enjoy a full life regardless of what their abilities or possibly disabilities may be. No person should be deprived of the opportunity to participate fully in the social, economic, and cultural life of the province. For some a trained service dog provides the opportunity to live independently. It enables the successful completion of an education. It also opens the possibility of holding a job.

In Alberta more than 350,000 people, about one person in eight, live with some form of disability. Many people are quite capable and not in need of a trained dog, but a trained dog can perform more than 100 different tasks.

Service dogs raise the standard of living and the quality of life of their handlers. Research has found that within six months of receiving a trained service dog, people with ambulatory disabilities showed a significant improvement in self-esteem and psychological well-being. They were more integrated into their community, they increased their school attendance or hours of part-time employment, and they required fewer paid and unpaid hours of assistance.

Trained service dogs raise self-esteem and psychological well-being. Participants in one study reported nearly a threefold increase in their self-esteem on a standardized psychosocial status questionnaire one year after being paired with a trained service dog.

Trained service dogs help their handlers integrate into their communities. Service dogs also have a positive effect on marital status, helping separated or divorced handlers reconcile with their spouses. There is evidence showing that people are less awkward around individuals with disabilities who are accompanied by a trained service dog.

Having a trained service dog can reduce by more than two-thirds the number of hours each handler needs assistance and aid. Disability support workers can focus on enabling additional activities and have more time to assist their clients. After factoring in training costs over the course of its lifetime, a trained service dog can mean dollar savings in the tens of thousands. The province has a shortage of well-qualified staff in all facets of the health care service, and they have a hard time finding people to help individuals with disabilities. The burden also falls on family members, who cannot always offer their services all the time.

Trained service dogs are well qualified to do the demanding work of assisting people with disabilities. They're loyal, obedient, and spend their entire day helping their handler. A trained service dog becomes part of the handler's family. Those dogs can do things that people cannot. There is some evidence that some dogs can sense impending seizures and warn their handlers, and other dogs can sense low blood sugar and remind their handlers to eat.

British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, Ontario, Quebec, and the entire United States already have legislation protecting service dogs.

Now, this bill is designed to emulate the very successful Blind Persons' Rights Act. Many private organizations have had success training seeing eye dogs, also known as guide dogs, to assist the blind and the visually challenged. The success of these training programs has come in part because of the legislation recognizing the unique service seeing eye dogs provide.

All persons with disabilities are protected by the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, and blind persons are also protected by the blind persons act. This bill is complementary to the blind persons act, and it affirms that dogs who are aiding a person with a disability deserve the same recognition and protection of the law. Service dogs benefit both society and those they serve.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certified service dogs are an excellent way to improve the quality of life of persons with disabilities as well as supplying security for people that are in the service industry and people that are their customers. In other jurisdictions certified service dog programs have been successful because these dogs have been held to the highest standards. In Alberta guide dogs, otherwise known as seeing eye dogs, have been successful. I know from our restaurant experience in our family that we have seen some of those successes.

They're due in part because of the protection they're afforded by the Blind Persons' Rights Act, which protects certified dog trainers and dogs in training and allows an identification card to be issued for a blind person/guide dog team. The Service Dogs Act will extend these advantages to people with other disabilities, and that's the security that is needed in the service industry today.

Training standards for guide dogs are high. Dogs can only be certified as guide dogs after going through a careful selection process and several months of thorough training and testing. High standards have been set for service dogs prior to certification. Assistance Dogs International, ADI, as it's known, is an umbrella organization of not-for-profit assistance dog training schools. Sharing best practices for training, placement, and utilization of service dogs is one of their highest priorities as well as upholding the highest ethical standards for their members and having well-established and well-regarded training standards for both guide dogs and service dogs.

Most service dogs programs have a two- or three-year apprenticeship training program intended to ensure that the trainers are well acquainted with a variety of dog temperaments and are knowledgeable about a broad range of disabilities. People who are training service dogs must have the knowledge and experience to offer the highest standards of service to people with disabilities, including a selection of clients and canines, training, team matching methods, and follow-up protocols.

Relatively few dogs meet the very basic criteria to be service dogs. Breeds like golden and Labrador retrievers are good breeds to be service dogs because they tend to have the right balance of behaviour, temperament, and energy. First-rate service dogs are not overly active, yet they are still people oriented and confident.

Potential service dogs must be physically screened to ensure that they are disease free, physically capable of taking the tasks that are required of them, and not prone to chronic health symptoms. A service dog must not be aggressive, should not be protective because that is not their job. Over time dogs may begin to sense their owner's vulnerability and be protective when it's inappropriate. Service dogs are not permitted to bark aggressively, only in situations that they have actually been trained for. The point of this rigorous selection process is to find effective dogs.

Dogs that are put through this comprehensive, individualized training program are well-trained service dogs that are trained for an hour or two each day over a period of six months. At least a quarter of this time is roughly scheduled for public exposure training.

Service dogs are taught to remain within their handler's control at all times. Service dogs fail the training process if they show aggression, bark inappropriately, bite, snap, growl, jump inappropriately on strangers, beg, or sniff people. Service dogs are taught a set of basic commands including sit, stay, come, heal, and return on command when off leash. There are over 100 tasks that a service dog can be trained to perform. The exact skills each service dog is taught depend on the needs of the person they will be eventually paired with.

Training processes are conducted to the highest humane standards, and the welfare of each dog is of critical importance. Accepted training methods ensure that the physical and emotional safety of each dog is given the highest priority, and each dog is allowed to learn at his or her own pace. They're not paired with a handler until they're sufficiently physically or emotionally mature, and pairing must consider the needs and abilities of both the handler and the service dog. They can be paired with people of a broad range of ages. Personal and physical characteristics of a dog that enable it to assist with an active toddler may be much different from that of a dog being able to assist a 60-year-old businessperson.

Service dogs need attention and affection, so they are placed only with persons who are able to interact with them. Recipients of a service dog must be able to provide a physically, emotionally, financially stable and secure living environment as well.

Handlers and service dogs undergo several weeks of training together, including dog handling skills and an orientation on canine health and obedience issues. After the formal training there are regular follow-ups with handlers, with additional training to provide for handlers' changing circumstances.

A service dog team will only be legally considered a service dog team once its members have been issued identification cards by the responsible minister or a designate. That will provide the minister with a way to ensure that all service dogs meet the highest qualifications. This bill is concerned with service dogs, not service animals. There is no certification for any animals other than dogs.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides, certainly for restaurant owners, store owners, and people that are out in the public, that for an individual entering that premises, a dog is absolutely necessary. Myself and my family, having been 38 years in the restaurant business, recognize and know that having a well-trained, licensed, and certified dog provides comfort to your customers, knowing that it is a working dog and it is safe in a crowd. It also provides security and a quality of life for persons with disabilities. This is a win-win for everyone.

I urge everyone to support Bill 203.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Strathcona for recognizing the needs of Alberta's disabled community through this bill.

The challenges of stress, injury, illness are typically temporary inconveniences which can usually be overcome with treatment and time. However, some diseases cannot be cured, and some injuries cannot be fully healed. Genetic predispositions, such as epilepsy, can result in a disability that can present a real and pressing impediment to mobility, daily function, and quality of life. Modern medicine is just one component in the larger goal of overall wellness.

The government is committed to wellness, an integral part of which is the development of policy that allows all Albertans to live full, healthy, and productive lives. When conditions prevent an individual from reaching their potential, we must consider and facilitate alternative means of enabling and enhancing their overall state of wellness and quality of life.

Bill 203 proposes an example of this facilitation and builds on Alberta's past innovation and success in fully ensuring that opportunity and prosperity are attainable for all. The government is committed to enacting policy that reflects the needs of the disabled community. Extensive legislative and policy framework are in place and are augmented by a series of publicly funded programs. They work in conjunction to provide opportunity and security for Albertans with disabilities. Examples are AISH, PDD, and distinct legislation which allows the use of guide dogs for visually challenged individuals. This legislation has evolved over time, resulting in unrestricted access to amenities enjoyed by the visually impaired who utilize a service animal. They can experience freedom and independence, that would otherwise be unavailable. This is an example of proactive public policy inspiring equality and reinforcing the basic moral principles of fairness and justice.

This Assembly has more than once recognized the challenges of the disabled community and provided legal protection not previously enjoyed. Examples of how this Assembly aspired to make life more enjoyable for the visually challenged include The Blind Persons' White Cane Act in 1955, The Blind Persons' Guide Dogs Act in 1977, and the consolidation of these two acts into the current Blind Persons' Rights Act in 1980.

We are presented today with an opportunity to carry on this evolution of policy and build upon a strong foundation of inclusion with our support of this bill, Bill 203. There are Albertans with disabilities whose lives would be enriched with the assistance of a service dog, individuals who do not currently enjoy the same opportunity and legal protection as the visually impaired, groups with potential to be refused access to an establishment and could benefit from access to a service dog. This includes epileptics, those who are hard of hearing, those who are mobility impaired, and any individual suffering from a disability of any kind, such as a brain injury. There are many establishments that disabled persons could access with the help of this legislation, including restaurants, theatres, recreation facilities, schools, and of course various businesses.

The Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act provides extensive human rights protection to all disabled individuals, including those who use guide animals. This legislation has set Alberta apart as a leader in the promotion of human rights and is in theory both comprehensive and sufficient to protect those individuals addressed by the provisions of Bill 203.

There have been cases where this protection has not been sufficient. The issue of access for those using service dogs presents a definite problem which needs immediate attention. The problem is not with the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act; the problem is with public perception and understanding of the role played by guide and service dogs. A visually impaired person with a guide dog is quite acceptable, whereas an epileptic individual with a response dog may not be.

The legislative evolution of blind persons' rights in Alberta has not only provided legal protection; it has served as a function of raising public awareness of the visually impaired and their use of guide dogs. Alberta's human rights legislation provides equal protection for all individuals using service dogs. Problems with public perception is due to the fact that we do not have stand-alone legislation providing and promoting specific protection for the persons with disabilities who are not visually challenged. The provisions of Bill 203 obviate these concerns. More importantly, they take nothing away from the existing legislative structure; rather, they complement it.

In conclusion, the legislation, then, upholds the government's commitment to general wellness and the needs of the disabled. Bill 203 can meet the objectives that this commitment aspires to. Through Bill 203 there is a great opportunity to reinforce our dedication to the protection of Albertans and the future well-being of our province as a whole. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all members of the Assembly support Bill 203.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 203, the Service Dogs Act. This act will ensure that persons with disabilities have the legal right to be accompanied by a service dog in all open areas in the public and to do so free of discrimination. This new act will complement the Blind Persons' Rights Act. Bill 203 extends the rights and protections available to the legally blind and to all other persons with disabilities who need a service dog.

Mr. Speaker, while the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act provides protection to those persons with disabilities who require a service dog, there is a lack of clarity surrounding the provisions for recourse. Bill 203 will remedy this situation. Individuals who require a service dog will require identification as proof of their need for this service dog. Matters relating to the certification of service dogs and the qualification of service dog trainers will be dealt with through regulation, not unlike the process used through the Blind Persons' Rights Act. Fines will be in place if individuals claim to be disabled persons when they are not in fact so for the purpose of gaining the benefit of a service dog.

Bill 203 can also assist individuals who have faced stressful situations as a result of the general public not having sufficient understanding of the purposes of a service dog. This will enable individuals to have the opportunity to participate fully in the economic, social, and cultural life of our province. The government is committed to ensuring that its policies reflect the varied needs of the disabled community in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 builds on the mandate of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. It also advances the Alberta disability strategy by eliminating barriers and allowing for greater inclusion of persons with disabilities. I commend the Member for Strathcona for his work in this area, and I would urge all hon. members to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? Does the hon. Member for Strathcona wish to close?

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to offer a few closing comments with respect to Bill 203, Service Dogs Act. In the public gallery is Larry Pempeit, whom I'd like to welcome to the Assembly, and perhaps at this time we would ask the members assembled to give him the traditional warm welcome. We appreciate Larry's presence here.

Larry is with the Canadian Paraplegic Association and is one of many people who offer from time to time insight and advice about the challenges that people have when they have to get around the community in a wheelchair, those challenges and those barriers that exist. We're trying to do what we can with the help of the Canadian Paraplegic Association and other organizations like the Alberta Disabilities Forum and also through our work with the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Those insights are important as we develop bills like this Bill 203, and their work at the Canadian Paraplegic Association is important to help eliminate those barriers that exist. So, Larry, on behalf of persons with disabilities and on behalf of the Premier's council as well I'd like to thank you for your contributions and your support. Thank you very much.

It's been mentioned several times by several speakers that Bill 203, Service Dogs Act, will parallel the BPRA, the Blind Persons' Rights Act. If one takes the two acts and puts them side by side, there is a great deal of similarity there. I really appreciate the notes that several people have sent over to me mentioning different things that they see as questions or challenges about the bill. Some things will have to be answered, and we'll answer those questions as best we can during the committee stage if we're favoured with your positive response in the vote here in a minute or two.

I'll just mention briefly one other thing that's important, and that is, as was mentioned as well by several speakers, that education and awareness are going to be very important for this bill. It's been critical for the Blind Persons' Rights Act. It's critical that the public understand and recognize the issues and, well, what kind of work those dogs do. Currently there are often challenges that pop up with the guide dogs, that are fully legislated and regulated today, yet people sometimes don't know what the circumstances are. If this bill passes with your support, then we would see at that time some awareness being brought forward, and that will help with both the guide dogs, that are currently legislated and regulated, as well as the new service dogs, that would fall into that new category.

ID cards were mentioned, and certainly there would be an intent to have ID cards, much the same way as seeing eye dogs, or guide dogs, are used currently.

There was mention of allergies and what's going to happen in circumstances where somebody is allergic to dogs. In all of these things, certainly, there is a balance of rights that has to be considered, and accommodations have to be made in circumstances no matter what they are currently, and it will be the case with this legislation.

Again, I would ask for your support. The disability community has indicated to me and indicated to many of you who spoke today that this is important to them. It's not going to affect a great many people, but it will affect a few people very significantly.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I thank those who have offered their support in speaking and have spoken positively about this bill. I would ask all members assembled to please support this bill, and I would call for the vote.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Bill 204
Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan
Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007/
Loi modificative de 2007 sur les emblèmes de l'Alberta (reconnaissance du fait franco-albertain)

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the first speaker, I'd like to point out that this is the first private member's bill in the history of our province to be introduced in French, as we understood, when it was introduced by the hon. member in first reading. The first government bill to be introduced in French was the Languages Act of 1988.

With that, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for recognizing that I introduced that bill in French.

Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007.

The official recognition of this symbol as a provincial emblem is a way for us to acknowledge the many unique contributions that Franco-Albertans have made to our province dating back to the fur trade in the mid-1600s and recorded settlement dating back 260 years ago, to when Pierre and François de La Vérendrye, the first in a long line of French pioneers, came to our province. In 1751 French settlers from Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, established a fort on the Bow River near present-day Calgary. From these humble beginnings, Mr. Speaker, Europeans of all descent have come to our province. Then as now Alberta's wide prairies and striking rivers beckoned, offering a new beginning and a chance for prosperity.

Those same prairies and rivers form the basis of the emblem that this bill proposes to recognize, Mr. Speaker. This emblem is composed of blue and white diagonal stripes that represent the waters and the roads travelled in Alberta by francophone explorers and colonists. The fleur-de-lys in the blue field in the upper left represents the francophone community, while the wild rose in the white field in the lower right is emblematic of the Alberta that we all know and cherish.

As European settlers arrived in Alberta, they gave their new settlements names characteristic of the countries they had left. The names of many towns around the province reflect the French background, places like Beaumont, Grouard, Lac La Biche, Morinville, and St. Paul. My corner of the province, in the northwest, is home to very healthy and thriving francophone communities in Girouxville, Marie-Reine, Donnelly, Falher, and St. Isidore. The French legacy in these towns is very strong. Some have even designated themselves as officially bilingual.

Our French history is not only found in towns first settled by French settlers. Today in Alberta there are over 334,000 people of French descent, more than 1 in 10 Albertans. Sixty-six thousand Albertans are native French speakers while over 205,000 Albertans are able to speak some French.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most distinctive traits of the country in which we live is the fact that we are officially bilingual. The number of Albertans who are conversant in French is, in part, a reflection of this. Officially recognizing an emblem of the Franco-Albertan community demonstrates to the rest of Canada that we believe that the French and English cultures can collaborate and coexist. The two solitudes need not be so lonely.

Other provinces have recognized the role that francophones played in their history with similar legislation, Mr. Speaker. The Fransaskois emblem has been included in the provincial emblems of Saskatchewan while Ontario has passed the Franco-Ontarian Emblem Act, 2001, that makes the Franco-Ontarian emblem the official emblem of Ontario's francophone community. This is exactly the same thing that Bill 204 proposes. I am certain that we can count on the same warm reception here that Ontario and Saskatchewan's francophone communities gave to the passage of their respective pieces of legislation.

However, Mr. Speaker, the advantages of recognizing the symbol go beyond mere symbolism. Because of our belief in a bilingual Canada, Alberta is a signatory to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which recognizes Canada's unique linguistic duality. The Charter gives parents a legal right to educate their children in either official language. Granting official recognition to the Franco-Albertan emblem will help promote the many advantages of being educated in both of Canada's official languages. Fluency in English and French is an increasingly valuable skill both here in Canada and in the globalized world. Thousands of Albertans have taken French courses in school or simply for their own interest because of the doors that bilingualism opens. Bilingualism is good in and of itself as there is ample evidence showing that it is an excellent way to keep one's mind healthy and well exercised.

Mr. Speaker, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007 is also an excellent way to recognize the contributions of l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta in the promotion of French history and culture in Alberta. This organization works tirelessly to educate Albertans about the significance of the francophone contribution to our province. In fact, the emblem that we are discussing today came about because of the efforts of the ACFA in March 1982, 25 years ago. The Francophonie jeunesse de l'Alberta, the francophone youth of Alberta, held a contest seeking an emblem for Alberta's francophones. Jean-Pierre Grenier's winning entry has been the symbol of Franco-Albertans in the 25 years since. I can think of no finer way to celebrate the anniversary of this symbol than to grant it official recognition as the emblem of Alberta's francophone community.

I understand that there are concerns about the appropriateness of granting this recognition. However, there is nothing new about this Legislature recognizing an emblem representative of a specific cultural group. Since 1961 Alberta has recognized its proud Scottish heritage with an official tartan, and in the year 2000 we passed Bill 205 to give Alberta an official dress tartan. The emblems of this province are not static but are updated to reflect the changing composition of our society. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is appropriate that we grant special recognition to a symbol of the Franco-Albertan community because Franco-Albertans have had such a special impact on the course of Alberta's history.

Mr. Speaker, it is also the job of MLAs to exercise discretion in deciding what symbols are worthy of this government's official recognition. Needless to say, official recognition of a provincial emblem is not granted on a whim and is subject to debate, exactly like the debate we are having here today.

I think it is also essential to understand that the passage of Bill 204 will not in any way alter the nationally recognized flag protocols that govern the display of our provincial flag and the emblems of other organizations. Pride of place will always be given to the flag of Canada and to the flag of Alberta. Bill 204 will not change what flags are flown here at the Legislature or at any other public location around the province. The emblems of organizations are always assigned the lowest precedence in flag protocol even if they have been granted official recognition. Mr. Speaker, the experience of Ontario and Saskatchewan in recognizing their own francophone emblems is illustrative. The same flags continue to fly on government buildings and in public places in both of those provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the French influence in Alberta ranges back to the great fur trade, which opened this country nearly 400 years ago, and the first settlement back 250 years ago, before we even became a province, to today and the excellent work done by the ACFA and many like-minded organizations. The 25th anniversary of this emblem of Alberta's francophone community is a perfect time to recognize our province's rich French heritage and the continued role that French culture plays in our lives.

I hope all members will join me in approving this bill and granting official recognition to the Franco-Albertan emblem by voting in favour of Bill 204. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Les membres du Parti Libéral apprécient beaucoup les contributions des francophones dans la province de l'Alberta. Cet emblème et ce drapeau reconnaissent leurs efforts. Vive les francophones de l'Alberta. En levant ce drapeau, nous célébrons les cultures diverses des groupes de l'Alberta.

The members of the Liberal Party appreciate tremendously the contributions of francophones in the province of Alberta. This emblem and this flag recognize their efforts. Long live the francophones of Alberta. By raising this flag, we celebrate diverse cultures which make up this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to join my colleagues in debate on Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, sponsored by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my remarks by acknowledging the tremendous contributions that the francophone Albertans have made to the history of our province and also to the development of our country of Canada. The great explorers Jacques Cartier, Samuel de Champlain, La Salle, La Vérendrye, Radisson, Des Groseilliers: these are the names that illuminated the history of our country.

Canada's oldest city, Quebec City, was founded over 400 years ago by Champlain. Francophone involvement in Alberta, as the hon. member for Peace River has mentioned, began with the fur trade, which was really the first industry in what is now our province of Alberta. The establishment of the fur industry by French Canadians and the Métis culture helped pave the way for the development of this province.

The fusion, as I mentioned, of the French culture and the native culture in Métis is also a part of Alberta which we celebrate today. I think this serves to illustrate a broader point, Mr. Speaker: that the francophone culture is, in fact, very deeply ingrained in the history of our province.

Franco-Albertan settlement, as my hon. friend has mentioned, helped to shape the province by virtue of the fact that we have many French names of places in our province. Everyday life in these communities continues to be very heavily influenced by francophone culture. Everything from architecture to literature to education draws a great deal of inspiration from the ideas that the French-speaking people have brought to our province. While it's doubtlessly true that francophones have played an important role in our history, I don't believe that making the Franco-Albertan emblem an official emblem of the province is necessarily the best way to extend that recognition.

According to Statistics Canada data 15 per cent of Albertans were foreign born; 329,000 Albertans, or 11 per cent of the population, identify themselves as visible minorities, and 16.4 per cent of Albertans identified themselves as allophones, or persons whose first language is something other than French or English. In our urban centres there is even greater diversity; 17 and a half per cent of Calgaryans and 15 per cent of Edmontonians identify themselves as visible minorities, and those are, respectively, the fourth- and fifth-highest percentages in the country. For Edmonton and Calgary 20 per cent of the population self-identify as allophones. In both of those cities Chinese is, in fact, the leading nonofficial mother tongue, accounting for about 4 and a half per cent of the population in Calgary and 2.9 per cent of the population in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's likely that the multicultural nature of Alberta is going to continue to increase in the future. At the present time the government is working hard to attract people from around the world to Alberta. It appears that, in fact, this strategy is working because nearly 16,000 people came from abroad, outside of Canada, to Alberta in 2006. So people from a wide variety of backgrounds, with origins stretching to all parts of the world, are striving to make our province the best place to live, work, and visit.

It's important, Mr. Speaker, in my submission, that we recognize the many contributions that numerous cultural groups have made to our past and continue to make to our communities on a daily basis. There are many ways that we can recognize and celebrate the cultural diversity of our province. We have designated days, designated weeks, dinners, speeches, tributes, and statements in our Legislature, and we also have more lasting and permanent monuments, statues, and memorials to various cultures. One example would be the tribute to the Ukrainian community as recognized on the grounds of our Legislature here in Edmonton. Another would be the Sien Lok Park, which is a tribute to the Chinese culture in the city of Calgary.

So I do have some reservations, Mr. Speaker, about the content of this bill and the fact that it refers specifically to a flag, and flags of course are items which sometimes cause divisions in society. It's not simply a pragmatic matter to officially adopt flags for the many cultural groups that contribute to our province as official emblems of Alberta. There are several hundred different official emblems which are possible if we should proceed down that road. I believe that there is great significance, as my hon. friend has mentioned, in the Alberta flag. For 40 years this flag has been a unifying symbol for Albertans, and all Albertans, regardless of their language, their religion, their ethnicity, can look upon that flag with pride because it symbolizes unity, and it also symbolizes strength, tolerance, and compassion, that the people of this province stand for.

We also have a number of other symbols and emblems and songs and other items of cultural significance which we recognize here in Alberta. We have an official fish emblem. We have an official grass emblem. We have an official gemstone, or rock. We have an official bird. We have an official mammal, an official tree. What all these emblems have in common is the fact that they are commonly applicable to all Albertans. They unite us. They are something that all Albertans share, not simply one cultural group or another.

Mr. Speaker, another concern I have with Bill 204 is that it might lead to future controversies or divisions based upon what cultural groups are represented in the future under similar legislation. Would Chinese Albertans, for example, take offence to the inclusion of a distinctive Tibetan-Albertan flag as an official symbol? Would Russian descendants object to a distinctive flag for Chechen Albertans or Ossetian Albertans? Would the people of Darfur and the rest of Sudan agree on an appropriate symbol for Sudanese Albertans? Would the Kurdish people of Turkey agree with the symbol proposed by the Turkish community in Alberta? Would people oppose the adoption of an Alberta gay community flag as a distinctive symbol of our province? The problems that could arise are quite considerable.

So while I support the intentions of the hon. Member for Peace River, I'm not prepared to support the bill in its present form. I do look forward to working with him and members of the francophone community to examine other meaningful and significant ways of recognizing this important cultural group and recognizing it here, specifically in our Legislature, for all Albertans to celebrate and enjoy. I look forward to hearing the views of my other colleagues respecting this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Peace River will be glad to know that there are some people on this side that are going to support the bill. I point out that I think the previous speaker is a bit of a red herring. This is Canada. We have accepted – other provinces are moving ahead in terms of recognizing – what is the reality of our history with the Franco-Albertan emblem recognition.

I mean, when we look at the history – and I think that the member mentioned it – francophone history stems back to the 1700s, when French explorers came here. We see the legacy by the names of cities and towns around Alberta: Lacombe, Brosseau, Bonnyville, Girouxville, to say a few. Over 500 French names identifying rivers, lakes, and places can be found in Alberta. Frankly, as I understand it, French was the first European language spoken in what is now Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this may be ancient history, but I would like to go to more modern history, something that happened right here in this Legislature, to show you how far we've come. In the early '80s there were 16 of us on the NDP side, and we had an MLA named Leo Piquette. Now, some people would remember. He got up and alerted a member across the way who was bilingual, a cabinet minister, that he was going to ask a question. He was ruled out of order. He created not only a storm in Alberta but a national storm, as this went across the country.

That was in the early '80s, and now, of course, I think it shows you, at least somewhat, how far we've come, that we can at least be debating and, I'd hope, passing that we have an official flag of the francophone community to be called the Franco-Albertan flag. As a result of that, just recently Leo has written a book about francophone rights and the fight for francophone rights. So I think that the francophone community would be very happy to see this Legislature at this time coming forward with this emblem. I don't think it takes anything away from other cultural groups. This is in fact Canada, and this is in fact Alberta, and we're recognizing the obvious, Mr. Speaker. As I say, when we think that that was just in the early '80s and that it created a national storm here in this Legislature, I think it does show somewhat how important that this particular bill come forward at this time, and it shows you how far we've come.

As I say, we will certainly support it on this side of the House. I'm speaking, of course, for this caucus. I would say that we still have a ways to go because we had the debate in this Legislature not that long ago about the number of people coming in and doing the tar sands. You may recall that a francophone worker in the tar sands was basically fired because he couldn't speak English well enough. That seemed to us rather ironic as we're bringing people – I think that the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill was right, that we have all sorts of people up there that couldn't speak English, but all of a sudden a Canadian, a francophone from Quebec, was fired for his lack of English. While we certainly recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this is a step in the right direction, the Franco-Albertan flag, I think that we still have to go some ways to protect francophone workers' rights if what's going on in the tar sands is any indication.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly commend the Member for Peace River. You'll notice that I didn't try to speak French because I can mangle the English language well enough without trying French. I think that this is a step that's especially important for this Legislature in view of the history going back with Leo Piquette and what happened in the Legislature at that time. I think this is a good step forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am indeed very pleased to have this opportunity to speak in support of the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, and I want to express my sincere thanks and gratitude to the hon. Member for Peace River for bringing it forward at this time.

M. le Président, j'aime beaucoup la culture française, la langue française, toutes les chansons françaises, les traditions, et sans doute tous les membres de la communauté francophone aussi. Donc, je suis prêt en ce moment à supporter ce projet de loi en deuxième lecture.

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 formally acknowledges a lot of important things to our community in general and to the French-speaking community in particular. It addresses, I suppose through the symbolism that it portrays, the incredibly important role that French Canadians have played in our province, going back centuries literally. Through this recognition of the Franco-Albertan emblem we can certainly stand proud with our francophone community members and salute them as well.

We've heard some eloquent testimonies already today with respect to the role that francophone explorers played in helping settle our province and discover it and so on, the cities that are named after famous French individuals, the communities we have, and so on and so on. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this particular emblem which is of debate today has been utilized by our francophone community since about 1980 or '82, somewhere in there, so it's not a strange emblem to any of us. Alberta is such a wonderful and beautiful place with such an enormous and rich cultural heritage. Why wouldn't we take this opportunity to salute one of those at this time?

M. le Président, j'aime beaucoup ces choses, comme j'ai déjà dit. Ici en Alberta nous avons beaucoup de cultures et beaucoup de peuples qui ont choisi notre belle province, et cela inclue les francophones, plusieurs qui sont de nos premiers pionniers de l'Alberta. So it's fitting at this time to in fact honour and recognize them in this way.

Francophone heritage, as we all would know, can be traced to the earliest days of the fur trade, when the Montreal peddlers came out to the northwest region of Canada, specifically here to Alberta, in search of adventure, business opportunities, and what have you. Métis communities soon became very prevalent, and they were Alberta's first francophone communities. Of course, these were established when the voyageurs married Cree women. Now, while Alberta's most common official language is English, it is interesting to note that French was the first European language spoken in Alberta. That is a fact. This is due, of course, to the additional fact that the first settlers to the province were of French-Canadian origins, joining in with our aboriginal friends of the day.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we have over 330,000 Albertans who can trace their ancestry to French descent. Specifically, there are about 66,000 Albertans who are classified as francophones, and I'm very proud that Alberta has the fastest-growing French-speaking population outside of l'autre belle province, Québec. Francophone Albertans live everywhere in our province. As we would all know, Edmonton and Calgary certainly have very large concentrations, but there are many other communities that you've heard of in northern Alberta: the Peace Country, St. Paul, Falher, Girouxville, et pas loins d'ici nous avons Beaumont and . . .

Mr. Ducharme: Bonnyville.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Of course, Bonnyville. How could I forget that? And so on.

I also want to emphasize that there are a number of communities with very large groupings of French speakers now in the southern half of our province as well. I encountered this particular wonderful fact just over the past couple of years when I was minister of education, and I had the opportunity to travel there and meet with them. In addition to that, our Francophone Secretariat would tell you very proudly that Beaumont, Legal, and Falher are even officially bilingual communities. It's a wonderful story to tell.

Mr. Speaker, French education in Alberta, that I've just referenced, is also a phenomenal success, and part of the reason for that success is because the number of Franco-Albertans and French-speaking Albertans is increasing very significantly. I can tell you that the enrolment in our francophone schools, run by our francophone school authorities, has quintupled over the last few years – quintupled – and it's a testament, I think, to the incredible strength of second-language learning and third-language learning and official-language learning and so on in this province, as bolstered by an outstanding education system.

We also have a significant issue with respect to immigration and interprovincial migration and a growing popularity of our francophone, our French immersion, and our French second-language programs, all of which I know that members here support, and so do I with a great passion. Mr. Speaker, these education programs receive government funding and promotion as a vital component of our multicultural reality in Alberta. Nous sommes très fiers d'offrir et d'avoir ces programmes, et je vais toujours donner mon appui pour assurer leur succès.

The French culture and language are also legally recognized in Alberta, as has been recognized, and I won't go into that any further other than to say that that, too, is a wonderful thing. So whether you're taking French as a second language or you're involved in the immersion programs or you're involved in some other form of cultural and linguistic enterprise that features the French language, the fact simply is that it's a good thing for this province, and it's equally important that we recognize that growth and development. We have a number of French programs with a very large economic impact that are aiding our population to become more competitive in our Canadian labour market as well as internationally.

Just as I wrap up here, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the interests of our large francophone community are also represented by more than 200 regional and community organizations. That's a phenomenal statement to be very proud of. Adopting this particular Franco-Albertan emblem as an official emblem would certainly increase our awareness of this large cultural community, that is so vibrant in our province. Bill 204 would help further the idea that Alberta is indeed a very progressive place in which to live and in which to support the various cultures that are here as well.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, our Francophone Secretariat, that I alluded to earlier, also wishes to formalize, I'm sure, its commitment to Franco-Albertans. This of course is a special committee that liaises between the government and Alberta's francophone community. It represents to government the needs of the francophone community, and it supports initiatives aimed at promoting French language and culture. Our chef de mission là, Mr. Denis Tardif, et son assistante, Antonine, do a phenomenal job promoting that and working with them.

Enfin, M. le Président, je voudrais encourager tous les membres de notre Assemblée à donner leur appui pour ce projet de loi.

That having been said, I will take my seat, Mr. Speaker, merely to say that this a good move. I'm hoping that it will be supported, and if for whatever reason it might not be, perhaps some other form of recognition equivalent to this can be pursued.

Merci beaucoup.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak in support of this bill, which recognizes a reality of which many Albertans may be unaware. When we look at a provincial map, we cannot escape the francophone influence. Second after aboriginal names there are probably more names of French origin in the northern half of our province than from any other source. These reflect the voyageurs who travelled together with the First Nations and Scots, opened the west, and travelled its lakes and waterways. We see this influence in the Jasper area in Lac Boisvert and Maligne, Annette and Trefoil Lakes. We see it in Grande Prairie and Grande Cache and in Rivière-de-la-Paix, the original name of the Peace River.

Then we have settlements named after missionaries, saints, and homesteaders. North of Red Deer we have Joffre, Lacombe, Leduc, Beaumont, Breton, and north of Edmonton we have Morinville, Picardville, Legal, Vimy, up to Falher and the Peace River country, where French names predominate.

Before our province and Saskatchewan were created in 1905, there were alternative plans to create two provinces one atop each other, like North and South Dakota in the U.S. Each would have had one transcontinental railway and one branch of the Saskatchewan River, so they might have ended up being called north and south Saskatchewan. Under that plan the northern province, where a majority of the French names in both provinces are clustered, would have been bilingual or French-speaking, like the lower territories had been before our two provinces were created.

That plan lost favour in the wake of the second Riel-led uprising, the Northwest Rebellion of 1885. Anglophone reaction, some of it outright bigotry, said: no more French provinces. And the scheme was dropped about the same time as French language rights were revoked in Manitoba, which was created as a bilingual province. Mr. Speaker, think what a difference it would have made to Canada had that rebellion and that reaction not taken place. We would have had four of our 10 provinces either French-speaking or bilingual: Quebec, New Brunswick, Manitoba, and northern Saskatchewan. There would be no fortress Quebec mentality because francophone Canadians would not be limited primarily to one province but spread more widely across the country.

We can't turn back time or redraw the map now, but we can give credit to an influence and heritage where it is due. The French community has a rich history in this province. The French community plays an important role in our province. The members of the community contribute a great deal to our province, and as Albertans we are proud to recognize their heritage.

Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, is an important recognition of their history and contribution to our culture and history, and for that reason I am happy to endorse the Franco-Albertan flag as one of the emblems of this province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to join the discussion regarding Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007. There is a long tradition of multiculturalism in Alberta, that has enabled the province to build one of the most prosperous and progressive societies in the world. People want to move here. Things are good here in Alberta. Real estate values are rising. There are plenty of jobs. It's just a great place to live. People from other countries and other provinces are moving to our province every year.

Mr. Speaker, through the celebration of diversity and the encouragement of cultural identity, we have become more unified as a whole. This is something we see reflected throughout Alberta, not only in our progressive government policies but also in the sense of co-operation that results from increased tolerance and understanding. In almost every town and every city across the province we see the proud heritage and traditions of various cultures reflected in a variety of ways, from monuments and architecture to parades, festivals, and celebrations. Even in my own community of Calmar we have the Zirka Ukrainian dancers, that not only perform in Calmar but all around the province and even in other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to provide increased recognition of the francophone heritage with our support of Bill 204. I understand that the purpose of Bill 204 is to include in the official emblems of Alberta the Franco-Albertan emblem as created and adopted by the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, or ACFA. I would remind all members of this Assembly that the ACFA is officially recognized by the Statutes of Alberta as the official representative of Alberta's francophone community, and they have advocated on behalf of the Francophonie in this province since 1926.

Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that this emblem similarly be given official, legislated recognition. It has been used as an unofficial symbol of the province's francophone community for the past quarter century. The Francophonie has been an integral part of this province for over 200 years. Their achievements, their language, and their culture have deep roots here. More than 1 in 10 Albertans is of French descent. That is a significant number, which I believe deserves to be better reflected in the official emblems of our province, which carry with them great significance. They are designed to paint a picture of Alberta's past, present, and future by giving official recognition to the symbolism which makes our province unique. This symbol includes adjacent fields and diagonal bands of blue and white along with the wild rose and fleur-de-lys.

Speaking of symbolism, Alberta would not be the place it is today without the contributions of its francophone citizens. They are justifiably proud of their heritage. This is why the ACFA saw fit to encourage the creation and subsequent adoption of a banner to recognize these contributions in 1982, and this is why the Franco-Albertan emblem has been used consistently by the francophone community these last 25 years. What better way to express cultural pride than through the display of a banner whose symbolism describes it so well?

The ACFA has not been alone in its creation of an emblem symbolizing French culture and achievement on a provincial level. They've been joined by the francophone communities in almost every other Canadian jurisdiction. The francophone communities in almost every province or territory in the federation have created emblems with the same purpose as the Franco-Albertan emblem; namely, to symbolize and commemorate the historical and cultural achievements of the jurisdictions' Francophonie.

Other jurisdictions, like Saskatchewan and Ontario, as has been mentioned, have done what we are doing today. They have debated the matter of officially recognizing the emblems of these groups in their respective Legislative Assemblies. The outcome of both discussions, Mr. Speaker, was positive. Members of the Legislative Assemblies of Ontario and Saskatchewan decided in both instances to adopt such an emblem as an official provincial emblem. Now, it has been over six years since Saskatchewan officially recognized the Fransaskois emblem and nearly that long since the Franco-Ontarian emblem was given a similar honour.

Mr. Speaker, there may be those who feel that Bill 204 shows undue favouritism to a particular group, such as my seatmate, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. However, there have been no hard feelings that I am aware of in either Saskatchewan or Ontario. In fact, if anything, there's been an increased sense of belonging and accomplishment in each francophone community. So the intent of Bill 204 is to promote inclusion – inclusion. We are all united by our diversity, a point which I think bears reiteration.

The portrait of our province today is different than it was in the time of our parents and grandparents. Likewise, it will be different in the time of our children. This reality requires a degree of flexibility in all areas of public policy. It requires that our province's official emblems remain open to change so as to accommodate present and future recognition of those groups who have contributed and continue to contribute so much to our identity as Albertans.

I think that the Alberta government is more than willing to show such flexibility. We have demonstrated it repeatedly in the past. Proof is the constant evolution of not only our official emblems but our entire framework of legislation and policies aimed at promoting and enhancing cultural development and tolerance. Mr. Speaker, they have evolved as Alberta has evolved, and I believe that the proposals advanced by Bill 204 represent a desirable and necessary next step in this evolution. They illustrate the government's commitment to developing a cultural policy which will encompass Alberta's historical and cultural heritage and will improve Albertans' quality of life.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to offer their support for the adoption of a symbol recognizing the contribution of Alberta's Francophonie, joining the provinces of Ontario and Saskatchewan. I support the principles of inclusion and the celebration of culture which have been so instrumental in our collective growth and for Bill 204.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. C'est avec une fierté franco-albertaine que je supporte le projet de loi 204, Loi modificative de 2007 sur les emblèmes de l'Alberta (reconnaissance du fait franco-albertain).

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a pride of being a Franco-Albertan that I stand today in support of Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Peace River for bringing this legislation before the Assembly and providing a unique opportunity to expand Alberta's framework of cultural recognition.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 proposes to include in the official emblems of Alberta the emblem adopted by the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta in 1982. Bill 204 captures the essence of multiculturalism that Albertans treasure and continues the tradition of private members' legislation that adds to the composition of our official emblems. We're all Albertans, regardless of heritage or background. We are privileged to live in a society that recognizes the importance of celebrating and paying tribute to the cultural contributions of our forebears.

There is some concern that this bill may promote the emblem of the francophone culture to the exclusion of others. The idea of recognizing a specific cultural group through the adoption of an official emblem is not new or revolutionary. For example, I recall Bill 205 in 2000 proposing an official Alberta dress tartan. The passage of the Emblems of Alberta (Alberta Dress Tartan) Amendment Act, 2000, added a second official tartan to Alberta's official emblems. This dress tartan, in addition to the existing tartan which was adopted as an official emblem in 1961, gave recognition to the Scottish heritage which comprises a large component of Alberta's cultural landscape. There are direct parallels between these tartans and the Franco-Albertan emblem. They are distinctly similar and their adoption equally beneficial to the common good.

The francophone community has consistently used the francophone Alberta flag for over the past 25 years, displaying it at cultural events and functions in accordance with national flag protocol. National standards of flag protocol dictate how any flag may be displayed in relation to other flags or banners. The Franco-Albertan emblem as a banner of the organization occupies a very definite place of precedence in the universally accepted Canadian flag protocol.

This protocol will not and cannot be changed by Bill 204. This means that on any occasion when the Franco-Albertan emblem is displayed, it will be displayed in exactly the same fashion as it has been displayed since 1982. It means that the national flag of Canada, the flags of other sovereign nations, the flags of the provinces and territories of Canada, and the flags of municipalities and cities will continue to take precedence over the proposed Franco-Albertan emblem. It also means, of course, that the Alberta flag's order of precedence will not change. It does not mean adoption of the Franco-Albertan emblem as an official emblem which will result in mandatory display on any structure or at any event. Bill 204 is not about forcing the culture of one particular group on Albertans. It is about providing recognition to that group through the official adoption of an existing emblem.

When considering the adoption of a Franco-Albertan emblem, you must also consider the extensive recognition that has already been granted to Alberta's francophone community. As far as legislation and policy in this area go, there is a great deal of precedent. French is an official language of Canada. Parents have a recognized legal right to educate their children in either official language, and government ensures that services available to English-speaking Albertans are also made available to those who speak French.

We have legally recognized l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, the organization responsible for creating the Franco-Albertan emblem, as an official representative of Alberta's francophone community. In this capacity we have empowered them to advocate on behalf of the Francophonie and to advance their interests.

In 1999, as was mentioned earlier by some speakers, the Francophone Secretariat of Alberta was established to recognize the commitment of Alberta francophone citizens. Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of serving as the first chair of the Francophone Secretariat, until December of 2006. The Secretariat acts as a liaison between the government and Alberta's francophone community in addition to ensuring that their specific needs are reflected in the forms of policy and services. In addition to these forms of recognition, we also look to the Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a celebration honouring Alberta's French community, which takes place annually here at the Legislature rotunda. At this ceremony, since 1999, we raise and recognize the Franco-Albertan flag, so the flag is not new to this building.

Alberta has a long-standing tradition of offering recognition to a group which has contributed a great deal to the social, cultural, and economic prosperity of our province. Recognizing this emblem, Mr. Speaker, is in keeping with our past and ongoing recognition of francophone culture. It enhances the comprehensive and inclusive nature of our province's official emblems, a step forward not only for the 334,000 Albertans of French descent but for Albertans of all backgrounds and cultures. This represents a natural evolution of our official emblems. It reflects the significant impact of a group that has been integral in forging our collective destiny.

Consideration of Bill 204 shows the openness and flexibility of our democratic society in advancing the cause of multiculturalism. It embodies the essence and reflects the purpose of our official emblems. It reflects the commitment of this government to the ideals of tolerance and acceptance that have made Alberta the best place in the world to live. Bill 204 has potential to improve the quality of life of all Albertans by enhancing the government's priority of promoting a culturally and historically encompassing cultural policy.

M. le Président, je demande à tous les membres de cette Assemblée de supporter la loi 204. C'est pour reconnaître certainement les contributions qui ont été faites par les franco-albertains pendant des siècles et des siècles dans cette province.

Merci beaucoup, M. le Président. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Mr. Speaker, thank you. M. le Président, je suis très heureux d'avoir l'occasion de parler de la loi 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, présentée par le membre pour la Rivière-de-la-Paix. J'ai applaudi sa participation et édification en avançant la culture et la langue franco-albertaine.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the involvement in recognizing and advancing francophone Albertans' culture and language by the Member for Peace River. Bill 204 is an opportunity for the province to acknowledge the cultural role and the heritage of Alberta's francophone community by including as an official emblem of Alberta the Franco-Albertan emblem.

The francophone community is strongly represented throughout Alberta. Over 334,000 Albertans are of French descent, with over 66,000 considered native French speakers and over 205,000 able to speak some French, like myself.

Prominent cultural groups have helped to lay the foundation for the great multicultural society that we enjoy and live in today. Alberta is a growing multilingual society. Nationally there have been considerable increases in the number of multilingual Canadians. Multilingualism can help reduce feelings of isolation and marginalization and also increase understanding by all of us as Canadians.

Looking into the past, the history of Franco-Albertans dates back to the early days of exploration in Canada as Europeans of French descent charted expeditions across our great country and, in fact, across the North American continent. The ancestors of Franco-Albertans were among the first to settle on the vast prairie, along our rivers and lakes, and these explorers and voyageurs came to Alberta and established communities in the hope of a prosperous future.

It should be noted that many historians conclude that Pierre and François de La Vérendrye were among the first European explorers to reach the Rocky Mountains, in 1741. Less than 10 years later 10 Frenchmen from Portage la Prairie in Manitoba travelled up the Bow River to Alberta and eventually settled and built a post on the site of what is now Calgary.

Back to the present. Franco-Albertans are participating in over 200 regional and community organizations. As you heard before, Mr. Speaker, the Francophone Secretariat, one of the organizations very important to our government, co-ordinates initiatives to promote French language and culture to ensure that francophone citizens are provided culturally and linguistically appropriate services in essential areas such as education, justice, and health.

I just want to name a few. For example, l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, ACFA, operates as a leader, providing resources and direction for many francophone organizations and community initiatives. Le Conseil de développement économique de l'Alberta, CDEA, facilitates economic and tourism development, strictly working for the interests of francophone business, and provides a francophone Albertan with resources, advice, consultation, and networking between Alberta and Quebec and the French in France.

Also, we have the Centre d'accueil et d'établissement d'Edmonton, or CAE, an immigrant-serving agency helping immigrating francophones from all parts of the world. It assisted in the development of the French version of the Welcome to Alberta guide, which provides basic information about Alberta for new immigrants. Services are consistent with our government priority of providing a made-in-Alberta immigration strategy. Also a group called Regroupement artistique francophone de l'Alberta, RAFA, recognizes the government of Alberta's Foundation for the Arts as a provincial art service organization and provides services and assistance in the francophone arts and associations.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been universally enhanced by the cultural, social, historic, and economic contributions of francophone Albertans, and acknowledging the Franco-Albertan emblem is an act of gratitude and appreciation historically which will strengthen the solidarity of Albertans.

Now, Alberta signed Canada's Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms accepting and supporting the linguistic duality of Canada. There are many members of the Assembly who represent Franco-Albertan constituents, so granting official emblem status to the Franco-Albertan emblem will be perceived as a sincere thanks to those constituents which have a historical . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, but the time limit for consideration of this business has now left us.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Mr. Flaherty: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Teachers' Unfunded Pension Liability

503. Mr. Flaherty moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the unfunded liability in the teachers' pension plan as a public debt that should be addressed as soon as possible in order to reduce the unfairly high contribution rates of Alberta teachers and increase the resources available for classroom services.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An unfunded liability is the amount by which liabilities exceed assets. The Alberta teachers' pension plan had a $7.1 billion unfunded liability as of August 31, '06. Put simply, an unfunded liability is a pension account funding shortfall. In 1992 the government committed to paying two-thirds, $4.6 billion, and the teachers committed to paying one-third, $2.3 billion. According to the ATA, at present, based on this funding scheme, the unfunded liability is expected to increase each year until it reaches about $14 billion in 2045, after which it will rapidly diminish until it is eliminated by 2060.

Teachers now pay approximately 4.25 per cent, and the government pays 7.25 per cent, meaning that the teachers are paying a much higher proportion than most recent agreements that have been laid out. The problem with the 1992 deal is that, one, the province is not debt-free. The current unfunded liability is $7.1 billion. Two, teachers, particularly after 1992, are paying for an inherited debt. Three, according to the ATA, in 2005 Alberta teachers paid 12 per cent of their salary for a pension plan, compared to B.C. which is 8.1 per cent, Saskatchewan which is 7.7 per cent, and Ontario which is 7.8 per cent. Four, teacher contributions to the fund have not been met because the government reduced teachers' salaries and the number of teaching positions.

If you look across Canada, we see that in 2005 the government in Newfoundland and Labrador paid the entirety of the teachers' pension plan unfunded liability, totalling $2 billion, in exchange for a four-year collective agreement which included a wage freeze in years 1 and 2, and 3 per cent increases in years 3 and 4. In March Manitoba put $1.5 billion towards the unfunded liability in the teachers' pension plan, covering 75 per cent of the liability. The province took out a loan to cover the amount, which was calculated as saving money in the long run.

What is the government's position on the unfunded liability? Well, the Premier has looked at this and said that it should be resolved and has asked in a letter outlined to the Minister of Education that he initiate negotiations on options for a reasonable, long-term solution to the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue. This is very promising.

During the recent leadership campaign the now-Premier wanted to resolve the issue of the unfunded liability in the Alberta teachers' retirement fund through a framework agreement similar to those established in other jurisdictions. He said:

I have clearly stated that the Teacher's Pension Fund unfunded liability is a matter for the Government and the ATA to negotiate a final, fair and lasting resolution. I would never use such an emotional matter as a bargaining chip in the heat of a labour dispute. It doesn't matter any more how we got to this point, I have always bargained in good faith and know that solutions can always be found if we don't create unreasonable deadlines or prejudice negotiations before we've even sat down at the table.

The now Minister of Finance examined an indexed increase in teachers' salaries and an assumption of an unfunded liability in the teachers' pension fund in return for a 10-year moratorium on labour action.

In the campaign the present minister of health in an interview at the ATA said:

The Alberta government should take responsibility for all of the pre-1992 unfunded liability regardless of how it arose. The unfunded liability is a burden on young teachers, who will never benefit from it, and a disincentive to people entering and staying in the profession. Government needs to work with the ATA and school boards to reach an agreement under which the government would take immediate responsibility for the teacher portion of the liability. Government should pay it off over a five-year period, and it should be clearly identified separate and apart from monies budgeted for the current education system.

This government has also included $40 million for a lump-sum payment for a portion of the government's share of the management employees' pension plan unfunded pension liability in the 2006-07 supplementary supply. The Liberal caucus position is this: the unfunded liability is a problem that will only get worse if action is not taken.

There are three major reasons to resolve this unfunded liability problem, we believe. Fiscal responsibility. The unfunded liability will only increase if action is not taken now. It is predicted that the unfunded liability, if the current rate is left in place, could reach up to $45 billion in 2060. Strengthen the education system is part (b): difficulty recruiting and retaining new teachers. Currently teachers in Alberta are contributing to their pension plan at the highest rate in Canada. This rate has increased significantly since a deal was reached in 1992. The Alberta Teachers' Association and the former education minister have pointed out that the unfunded liability discourages new teachers from entering the field. It is also reported to affect the retention of new teachers.

Increased funding for education. Currently spending on teachers' unfunded liability is housed within the education budget even though this funding has no real impact on learning outcomes. This both skews the amount of funding that is provided to education and potentially also represents money that could have been spent elsewhere within education and areas that would have directly impacted students and learning.

The third aspect is improved labour stability. The unfunded liability has led to tense labour relations between teachers and the provincial government, which may lead to strikes, stalled negotiations, et cetera in the months to come. A previous resolution to the unfunded liability was offered to teachers in exchange for 10 years of guaranteed labour peace. This was viewed by some as coercive.

Fairness. Teachers are paying for benefits they won't receive. The percentage of the pension payments that is put towards the unfunded liability is paying down a problem that new teachers had no part in creating and from which they will not benefit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Motion 503, which seeks to address the unfunded liability issue in the Alberta teachers' pension plan, or what's formally called the Alberta teachers' retirement fund, I guess. I'd also like to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for raising the issue because I know that both of us would like to have this matter addressed and resolved, and I'm sure that virtually all members of the House would feel somewhat similar to that.

I hope it wouldn't be the case, but as worded, I suspect that the motion might well fail. I'm not trying to be presumptuous and foretell the votes in the House, but just looking at it, it suggests to me that it might be at risk of failing. Yet I know that the hon. member is very sincere in having brought it forward, so in that particular vein of thought I would like to propose an amendment. I would like to move that Motion 503 be amended by striking out "as a public debt that should be addressed as soon as possible in order to reduce the unfairly high contribution rates of Alberta teachers and increase the resources available for classroom services" and in their place substitute "and immediately initiate negotiations on options for a reasonable long term solution to the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue."

Mr. Speaker, the amended motion would then read as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the Government to recognize the unfunded liability in the Teachers' Pension Plan and immediately initiate negotiations on options for a reasonable long term solution to the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue.

I would then like to speak to the amendment.

The Speaker: To the hon. member and to all members – please continue with the circulation of the amendment – this amendment is to a motion of a private member, Motion 503. If hon. members take a look at the document in front of us, hon. members will note that there are no signatures of either Parliamentary Counsel. In other words, as part of our tradition Parliamentary Counsel is expected to look at the proposed amendments, and if they choose because of the practices of our Assembly to advise the chair, they advise the chair by not having their initials on the amendment.

The chair was aware of this earlier today, and there's reason for us to do this. First of all, the absence of their approval does not mean that the proposed amendment is automatically out of order, but it simply means it is drawn to the position of the chair. Hon. members know that this is a private member's matter. The chair has looked at that, heard the words, and basically is of the view that the amendment does change the intent of the motion.

In keeping with tradition, particularly since 1997, while I've had the privilege of being your Speaker, a great deal of deference is shown by the chair to the position of private members and the business of private members. There's limited opportunity for members to have their motions considered by the Assembly. Even prior to the arrival of my position in the chair in 1993, when major amendments were made to the Standing Orders, there was a spirit of those amendments that the work and the advocacy of private members was to be paramount in the Assembly. Successive Speakers have limited the scope of acceptable amendments to private members' motions so that their intent is not substantially altered.

I particularly refer members to page 273 of Alberta Hansard for March 2, 1999, for an example of a purported amendment to a private member's motion which was ruled out of order. By ruling it out of order, it could not proceed.

In this case the proposed amendment would remove any reference to "unfairly high contribution rates of Alberta teachers," which seems central to the motion.

The chair would also like to note that there is a spirit of co-operation that has developed in this Assembly since we have arrived here in the spring of 2007, and the chair would work in accordance with the mood, the new mood of the Assembly, to see whether or not we can find a solution to this.

The solution that the chair would suggest would be that the chair would ask the member for St. Albert, the sponsor of the motion, to advise whether he is of the view that the amendment is in keeping with the intent of his motion. If he agrees and advises the chair that the amendment is in keeping with the intent of the motion, then the chair would be inclined to allow the amendment to be moved, and it would be subject to debate and subject to a vote on the floor. If the member doesn't agree, then the chair will enforce the ruling that the purported amendment is out of order and cannot be moved.

So to the hon. Member for St. Albert, would you be supportive of the amendment? You may advise me by standing and saying yes or no.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat uneasy here in the sense – can I go through you and ask a question about the amendment? Am I allowed to do that? I'm not clear on one part of the amendment, and that's the word "options." Maybe I'm out of order here but anyway: "immediately initiate negotiations on options." That's like a picture with only . . .

The Speaker: I think, hon. member, we have a greater difficulty now because the chair cannot be involved in the debate and the chair is not in a position to know what the word would mean by a person with the intended amendment. Clearly, what I need to know in keeping the process moving is whether or not the member for St. Albert would say yes or no to the proposed amendment.

Mr. Flaherty: Yes.

The Speaker: Then that being the case – you may sit down now – the House has before it an amendment that it will now consider. The debate now is on the amendment. That is the subject: not the motion, it's the amendment to the motion.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, would you like to proceed then?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for St. Albert. I'll start by immediately addressing the question that he has put forward. The word "options" simply means that we shouldn't try and preclude some clever and possibly brilliant solutions and methods and so on that might still form part of the discussion process because, as we know, this is a very complex and complicated issue and numerous attempts have been held in the past to one way or another try and address it. So all I'm trying to point out here is that the word "options" is a friendly word there, hon. member, and I don't think that it will be a difficulty whatsoever. The spirit here is to address this liability and put in place a mechanism to have it resolved.

With that, I'll go on for the other eight minutes I have. Perhaps I won't. I would just ask for the question to be called.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, that would be an impossibility. There are a number of speakers who would like to participate this afternoon, so I'll proceed in this immediate order: the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and a number of the members have advised me as well. If there are more, please advise me.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in the spirit of a new mood – I find that intriguing – perhaps we can pursue along that line. I certainly expect the mood to be always consistent in looking for what's best for the population and using debate constructively. If that's the case, then certainly I'm happy to participate with that.

I have before me the amendment to which I'm speaking to. Whilst it seems to perhaps capture some of the intention of the hon. Member for St. Albert's original motion, I think it sort of serves to somewhat emasculate that same motion that he put out there, so I find it a little bit difficult. But then a tool from my own teaching career came back to me, which is the Venn diagram, right? The Venn diagram seeks to find some commonality inside of two perhaps divergent thoughts. So by using this amendment and drawing a Venn diagram around that and then with the hon. member's original motion, we do find some common ground; that is, to at least have an acknowledgement that there is a problem.

It's an education problem only to the extent where it limits the capacity for our profession to attract new teachers and perhaps puts some constraints on labour recruitments. But, essentially, it is a financial problem. You know, when we're looking to ensure, Mr. Speaker, that we in fact close our debts off, which I believe that the Conservative government has endeavored to do and made their first priority for many, many years, then this is a glaring problem that has escaped notice, or it's just been neglected for so many years.

As I said, in the spirit of finding something in common, the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek does perhaps at least send us in the right direction, so I would in fact support this amended motion.

It's as though you're looking for some direction, and the direction is that ultimately we have to address the unfunded liability problem, not just for the teachers in this province but for the economic well-being of this whole province and the well-being of our public education system. So if this motion is an intention to move forward – and I'm looking for direction from not just our Education minister but from the Finance minister and the Treasury Board president, of course, hon. sir – then, you know, I think we'll all be better off for trying to address this somehow.

The only question or quibble that I have with this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is using this "long term" as part of the language. It says, "options for a reasonable long term solution to the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue." I guess that technically we do have at present a long-term plan, but it involves a ballooning debt and, you know, quite an imposition, a cloud over the profession for many, many years. So I think we need to ensure that long-term in fact doesn't mean the rest of the careers of these teachers that are just now entering into the profession, but we deal with this in a most expedient and immediate sort of manner.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the Minister of Education, then the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, is it my understanding that we're speaking to the amendment now and not to the main motion?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. R. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would actually wish that we could dispense with this question as soon as possible so that we could deal with the actual issue at hand, so I'm going to save my comments, and I would ask the indulgence of all other members to save their comments for the actual issue. If we could get to that debate, that is what I would wish we would do.

The Speaker: Is the hon. Minister of Education choosing to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Liepert: No.

The Speaker: Is the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on the amendment? No.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment?

Mr. Chase: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed on the amendment?

Mr. Rodney: No.

The Speaker: Okay. Then shall we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Okay. So now we have a motion that's been amended. We will proceed, then, with the debate on the motion as amended.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, you want to get back in?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. I'd like to start.

The Speaker: We're dealing with time here now, and I don't think that's appropriate anyway. You've already participated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Motion 503 as amended. I thank the members of the House for allowing us to move forward with this. The most important thing, I believe, is that we discuss the issue, and just how it's described in the motion, as you'll know from the comments made earlier, isn't the most important thing. It's actually the issue.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague from St. Albert made a number of references to the importance of dealing with this unfunded liability as soon as possible. He pointed out that there are two very important aspects to his Motion 503, the first being the educational component; that is, involving the attraction and retention of teachers, the freeing up of hundreds of millions of dollars for front-line educational services, and the possibility of improving labour stability given the number of agreements that are up for renewal this summer and fall. But there is also another aspect to this motion which is in my mind equally as important, if not more so, and that is the fiscal responsibility aspect of the unfunded liability.

Mr. Speaker, for the past two and a half years I have been asking questions in this House of the Education minister and the Finance minister, trying to have this issue addressed. It's no secret anymore, I don't believe, that the total unfunded liability at this point is nearly $7 billion, and this will grow to some $45 billion over the next number of years if it's not addressed now and before it is eventually paid down by the end of the agreement, which was already mentioned to be in the year 2060.

One of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition was willing to go along with the amended motion, which removes the dreaded "d" word that the government is so afraid of, the "debt" word, is that, in fact, this is already recognized as a debt in the government's own accounting. Whether or not government members recognize it as a debt, whether or not they like the word "debt" really isn't the issue. The bottom line is that on page 25 of the consolidated statement of financial position from last year's annual report, under Liabilities there is a line item that shows $5.435 billion in pension obligations. So there is absolutely no question, no ifs, ands, or buts that this is a debt.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, nearly $13 billion all together in debt is currently held by this government, and by far the largest portion of that is the pension obligations. So for anybody, whether it be a member of this government or somebody else, to go around and talk about Alberta being debt free is simply, categorically wrong. We have a debt. We have many debts: $13 billion in total. But as I say, the largest by far is the pension obligations at nearly $5.5 billion this year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the fact that by addressing this debt, we could free up literally millions of dollars that could be used for funding front-line services. I know that that was in the original motion, before it was amended. Whether we're talking about the original motion or the amended version of it doesn't change the fact that in the 2004-05 year actual dollars spent to fund the unfunded portion of the teachers' liability were $124 million. That's forecasted to have been $145 million in 2005-06. The estimate for the 2006-2007 year, which ended on Saturday, is $152 million. Those are numbers out of the budget documents, directly out of the educational portion of the budget, and those are numbers that would be freed up were this government to address the unfunded teachers' pension liability in its entirety.

Now, I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that the debt will grow and accumulate a total cost to Alberta taxpayers of $45 billion over the remaining 53 years of the agreement as it currently stands. One indication I think of just how bad an agreement this is in today's fiscal reality is that a child born today who 22 years from now becomes a teacher will pay for this unfunded portion of the pension their entire career. For an agreement that was put into place in 1992, 15 years before they were born, and they become a teacher 22 years from now, they will pay the equivalent of a car payment every month for their entire career. Sounds rather ludicrous to me.

Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague from St. Albert mentioned that just two weeks ago in this Assembly the government passed supplementary spending, which approved $40 million to address the government's share of the unfunded liability in the management employees' pension plan. That was off-budget spending, I might remind all members. There's an example of the government recognizing that they had a share of an unfunded pension liability. They recognized that they had money in the bank, and they recognized that in the long run it was the best thing to do for taxpayers to pay off their portion of that fund. All we're asking is for them to take the same principle and apply it here with the unfunded teachers' pension liability.

To put it into terms, Mr. Speaker, that the average Albertan can relate to: when you get your monthly credit card statement, you have the option of paying a minimum monthly payment, or you can pay the balance in full, or you can pay some portion thereof as long as it meets the minimum. What we've been doing in this province for the last several years is paying the minimum monthly payment. When you've got money in the bank to the extent that this government has, it does not make fiscal sense to sit on that money and continue to pay only the minimum monthly payment.

Relate it to a mortgage: same thing. We've got a $7 billion debt. We have, Mr. Speaker, in short-term savings alone approximately $14 billion in the bank today. I just can't imagine how anybody could make a reasonable argument for fiscal responsibility not to be addressing at least a portion of this debt. Pay down that principal, and save us some money down the road.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it's time that we had that debate. I would encourage the Finance minister, the President of the Treasury Board, and the Education minister to look seriously at dipping into the sustainability account as an example. Everybody knows that in the Fiscal Responsibility Act the section that refers to the sustainability account literally refers to making balance sheet improvements. If we've got in excess of $4.5 billion more in that fund than what legislation requires us to hold in that fund, here's a perfect opportunity to address balance sheet improvements. My fear is that if we don't do that, with a general election looming some time either later this year or in the year 2008, we're going to see a spending spree like we've not seen before. Here's a perfect and legitimate reason to be using some of that money now.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think it's legitimate to point out the concerns that many people have expressed to me over the last several days. Once I became aware of the fact that the government was going to move this amended wording, I was busily consulting stakeholders, whether it be teachers, members of the ATA executive council, and so forth, and their question is exactly that which the hon. Member for St. Albert asked: what does "reasonable" mean? There's no question that the will of this Assembly this afternoon appears to be to move this forward, to move the yardsticks and get us along the path to addressing this most serious issue. Obviously, with the amended wording "reasonable" is open to interpretation, as is "long-term."

The Member for Edmonton-Calder mentioned the fact that we do – and it's not just technically, I would say to the Member for Edmonton-Calder, but it is a fact. We do have a long-term agreement in place right now. It extends another 53 years. I would implore the government that if, in fact, they're going to vote in favour of this motion as it's amended, 53 years doesn't cut it. Forty-three years doesn't cut it. We have to address this, and we have to address it now and to a substantial extent, not just throw a little bit of money at it in the budget and hope that it will make teachers happy and make fiscal watchdogs like myself happy but some serious commitment to addressing the reality that this unfunded liability places in front of us.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that there's been any time since 1992, when this agreement was first reached, where we've been in a better position to address the unfunded pension liability.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to make a few comments. First of all, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for moving an amendment that I think more clearly recognizes the issue before us and the Member for St. Albert for agreeing to that amendment. Unlike the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who has just been speaking, I want to talk about the possibilities that exist here in dealing with this and not politicize the event.

If I heard the hon. member correctly, I think I heard him say that we've got $14 billion in the bank. Is he suggesting for a minute that we should take money out of the heritage fund? This is the same group that is standing there talking about putting 30 per cent of nonrenewable resources in the heritage fund, and now you're saying that we should write a cheque for $7 billion from the heritage fund. You can't suck and blow at the same time, member.

Mr. Speaker, this particular issue is all about recruitment and retention. It's all about encouraging our best young students to enter the teaching profession and keeping them there. That's why we're going to address this issue. We're not going to address it for political reasons, as this hon. member keeps talking about.

As we stand here today, Mr. Speaker, we have an agreement that was signed in 1992 by the Alberta government and by the Alberta Teachers' Association in good faith. We're going to try and improve upon that agreement, but at the end of the day, if we don't get improvement on that agreement, we have an agreement in place, and if that's the resolution, then we'll stick with it.

What we have before us, Mr. Speaker, is an agreement that will be negotiated. It will take some time, and we will do it fairly, and it will be done with the Alberta Teachers' Association. There was some mention about school boards. We would be happy to have input from school boards, but let's make it clear that school boards' responsibilities are to negotiate salaries with ATA locals, to negotiate contracts with their ATA locals. The unfunded pension liability is an agreement between the Alberta government and the Alberta Teachers' Association, and that's how it will be addressed.

I want to just very briefly touch upon some of the comments that were made relative to somehow, because we've got this unfunded liability, it's taking money out of the education system. Well, that is just – well, I won't say what that is. We spent in this province over $5 billion in this budget year, and I suggest that it'll probably increase when the Minister of Finance brings down his budget on April 19. That's some $27.9 million per school day on education in Alberta. So to somehow leave the impression that students' education is not being served because we have this 1992 agreement in place is just not correct.

I just wanted to make those few comments, Mr. Speaker, to set the record straight. This government will address the issue. We will not politicize it. We will get a deal that is good for teachers and is good for the taxpayer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand up and to speak to the amended Motion 503 and the problem that we're facing here in the province for some 15 years on this unfunded liability, the teachers' pension plan. There are a few points, I guess, that I'd like to bring forward. It's always about economics when we're doing things: what we can and what we can't afford. We need to look at things and put our House in order.

But to go back to 1992, when this deal was signed, I believe the number was approximately $2 billion, between $1.9 billion and $2 billion. Had the government at that point put it into their plan on reducing or eliminating the debt, I believe that we would have been out in 2005.

The debate has continued – who's going to do it and what portion? – and there has been far too much politics involved in it. I agree with the hon. Education minister that it's time that politics get pulled out of this and we start in a fashionable and an economical way of addressing this.

My biggest concern with the motion is the "options for a reasonable long-term solution." I think it has been a long-term problem, but I'm asking the Finance minister and the hon. President of the Treasury Board: it has been long-term already, and it's time to address it with a much faster and appropriate method, especially in times of surplus right now. We have the means to address it.

Newfoundland, which is not in such a good position, has addressed their unfunded liability, and I would urge the government that when our budget comes out, this is addressed in a major way. The reason why it needs to be, in my opinion, addressed in a major and quick fashion – I would hope that within five years at the very longest this would be addressed – is that what happened by not giving that fund the $2 billion in 1992 has really damaged the long-term, I guess, size of the fund.

When we look back to the Ontario teachers' fund, the Quebec pension plan, and those other ones, it's been a boom time. Had that money been in there, then even their one-third portion perhaps would be made up and they wouldn't be in such a terrible situation now. But having no money in there definitely has been to the detriment of the teachers' pension fund. So I would hope that we would address it quickly, fairly and realize at least our share and put in the $5.1 billion and let them start investing it in a major way.

The other area that I would like to address, though, with the teachers' pension fund – and this concerns all Albertans – is that their pension fund is 2 per cent over 35 years, so 70 per cent of salary after 35 years of service to our good youth in this province is addressed. But .4 of that 2 per cent comes from the Canada pension fund, and the problem that we always seem to forget in this is that the Canada pension fund is also an unfunded liability. Last year I believe the Finance minister spoke of an extra $60 billion-plus to that. In order to truly secure the future for all Albertans and the ATA, we need to look at having an Alberta pension fund that is funded and not left unfunded. The Quebec pension plan is very well funded at over a hundred billion dollars, I believe now, and their future is secure. But we don't want Albertans and teachers to lose possibly 15 per cent of their 70 per cent because of a failing Canada pension plan.

Once again, last year the Finance minister talked about the Canada pension plan and our possible necessity to look after that, and I'd say that that also is where we should be funding our future liability, an Alberta pension plan as well as making sure that we fund our share of the teachers' pension plan. Therefore, the future will remain bright. We'll have an opportunity. I hope, like I say, that for this amendment the long term will only be looking at the past and the short-term future and that it'll be addressed in this coming budget. We don't want to continue the lost opportunity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I would like to begin by correcting the Minister of Education's false financial assumptions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford never suggested using any of the money from the heritage trust fund. In fact, a Liberal government would build up the heritage trust fund to the point that by 2020 the heritage trust fund would have risen to $120 billion given today's economic reality.

However, I would like to point out both to the Minister of Education and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek that you can paint a white horse with black stripes and call it a zebra, but that doesn't make it so. You can stick a horn on its forehead and call it a unicorn, but that doesn't make it so. The fact that the unfunded liability is still a debt whether it's taken out of this amendment or not – Albertans have the intelligence, especially those from the constituency of Calgary-Varsity, to know when a debt is a debt.

We have an unfunded liability debt approaching $7 billion just within the teachers' unfunded liability. Let's add another billion and a half of other public unfunded pensions to that amount, so we're getting closer to the $9 billion mark. The former Infrastructure and Transportation minister can correct me if I'm wrong, but I would say that lowballing the infrastructure deficit – and I'm not talking new construction – would probably be in the area of $10 billion. So guess what? We're close to $19 billion now of dedicated debt.

Now, the Education minister and the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation think that P3s are the next best thing to sliced Wonder Bread. Well, guess what? They're debt too. So let's throw on the cost for just the portion of the Anthony Henday that's under a P3. That brings our debt up to closer to $20 billion. The Conservatives can say all they like, they can manipulate words, but Albertans are smart enough to know when a debt is a debt.

However, I do agree with the Minister of Education's assumption or statement – I shouldn't say that it's an assumption; it's a statement that I agree with – that we've got to stop politicizing. We've got to stop using teachers as pawns. We've got to look at the future, and the teachers and parents and grandparents are the ones most responsible for forming the young minds and establishing a successful future for the province of Alberta.

So we've got to address the debt. Weasel words like "options," "reasonable," and "long-term" don't truly address the debt. We don't need long-term solutions that are going to cost us upwards and exceeding $50 billion if it doesn't get resolved in the next 53 years. We need smart short-term solutions. We need to work together both as government and opposition to get this right. We cannot continue in this conflicted mode and teachers and new teachers in generations to follow be saddled with this debt.

Two-thirds of this debt, which will continue to grow, belongs to the government. Premier Klein, the individual who liked the idea of being on autopilot, made the statement that we need to foolproof our government's solutions so that in the event of a Liberal government being elected, they couldn't screw it up. Well, let me tell you: that advent is coming sooner than you might think, and I would love to work with you to resolve this one of many debts.

Thank you.

5:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

If additional members want to participate, please advise.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad we're not overpoliticizing here today. I am pleased to rise today to speak in support of the amended motion as presented by the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Creek. But, first a clarification: the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity wanted to clarify a few numbers. I thought I might have clarified that one-third of the debt is actually the teachers' portion. I know this because this is an issue that's close to home for me. Many of my relatives, including my dad, are educators. I was a teacher and an administrator for 13 years, as well, at each level.

Now, in that time I learned very, very well that Alberta's future is in the hands of our students and it's in the hands of our teachers and administrators who are ensuring these students have rich, rewarding learning experiences. It's in the hands of all of us who are working together to shape our education system to be the very best in the world.

We have a lot of parents in this fine House, and they know very well that education has an incredible influence on children's daily lives and on their future hopes and aspirations. They care very deeply in this House, and they care very deeply across the province. I also know that staff down the road at Alberta Education strive daily to keep ahead of the curve, and they understand what demands will be placed on our children and youth when they leave school. They care very deeply as well. Every day we see teachers in our classrooms showing that they are also very, very concerned.

I think we've all seen first-hand the dedication of teachers to children and youth in their classrooms. When students are enthused about learning, they develop a hunger to learn more and they develop an ability to think critically for themselves, and that's certainly something worth celebrating. We celebrate because it took a lot of effort, more than the student will probably ever know unless, of course, they themselves become a teacher one day. When we celebrate, because our society is better for every student who develops these attributes, we celebrate the great education system we have.

An Hon. Member: What's the relevance?

Mr. Rodney: The system works because of the great teachers, because of the world-class curriculum, because of the standards and assessments that are in place. It works, and it will continue to work as new and innovative ways to enhance and deliver education together are explored. How do we accomplish this? Three ways: keeping lines of communication open, recognizing a shared, common goal when it comes to educating our children and youth, and working together to find solutions that serve in the best interest of the student. Really, that's what this is all about.

We have one such solution presented to us today in the amended motion. As the hon. Minister of Education has suggested, it serves no purpose to politicize this issue. It really comes down to something quite simple. If students are to continue to achieve their best, whether it's graduating from high school into the job market or pursuing postsecondary education, this can only be accomplished with qualified, quality teachers in the classroom every day.

As the hon. Minister of Education stated, it's all about recruitment and retention. So you ask the relevance: in order to attract and keep the brightest and most creative teachers, we need to make it attractive for them to come to work in Alberta and to stay working in Alberta. One way to do that, very simply, is to address the unfunded pension liability for our young teachers in the classrooms now and in the future. It's simply for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I support the amended motion.

I would like to thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't really planning on speaking to the motion today, but certainly the debate has intrigued me and drawn me in. First of all, I'd like to say that I would like to speak in support of the motion as amended, and I certainly would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for putting forward that amendment. I know that he has done a lot of work on this as the former minister of Education, now as a very, very hard-working MLA, working on behalf of his constituents but also on behalf of all teachers in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that this is an issue that we as a caucus, the Progressive Conservative caucus, have been certainly concerned about and working on for, I would say, a number of years now. It's something that we have brought forward. We've sat down with the local ATA presidents. We've sat down with representatives from the ATA, and we've discussed this issue, I would say, in great detail. We've received packages, handouts, letters, et cetera. We've received in-depth analysis from paid professionals with regard to the best course of action to deal with this issue, and certainly it is an issue.

Mr. Speaker, we know that if we deal with this sooner rather than later, it will be beneficial to the taxpayers. It will be beneficial to the teachers. It will just be a better thing to do. That's why I am in support of this motion.

I think that it is unfortunate, some of the rhetoric that's happened today from the other side of the House: finger pointing and this kind of thing coming from the opposition, one member calling his fellow member a weasel for accepting certain amendments. It's just unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, because, quite frankly, I think that the motion as amended is a good one. This amendment is something that I think we as the government side of the House should support, and certainly I would urge my colleagues to do that.

Mr. Speaker, as I read the new motion, it says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the unfunded liability in the teachers' pension plan and immediately initiate negotiations on options for a reasonable long-term solution to the teachers' unfunded pension liability issue.

I think that that is the key right there: negotiations. We find that negotiations do work. As we all sit down around the table, we talk about the issue. We bring these issues out. We get all the facts, the real facts, the real figures on the table. Then I think that we can reach an agreement on this.

Again, I have to reiterate that I certainly support the ATA's position that this is something that we could and should deal with in the near future rather than allow it to run its full course. Certainly, the teachers are prepared to bring something forward in negotiations. Obviously, we as a government need to be prepared to bring something forward in negotiations. I think that our new Minister of Education, that spoke so eloquently earlier, is certainly the right man for the job to do this.

I am certainly wanting to lend my support in any way when these negotiations begin. As one who's followed this for a few years now and certainly wants to see it resolved, I would just like to urge this Assembly to support this motion and to get on with the business.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm going to take a little bit of a different tack on this, and I think it comes right back to my personal experience. I think we do most of the teaching profession a disservice when we say that if we just give them more money, we're going to have better teachers. The teachers that I know that I respected the most, that taught me the most, wouldn't have done it better if you had doubled their salary. Some of the teachers that tried to teach me and others couldn't have done it better if they had doubled their salary. Most people enter teaching because they love it. Most teachers are doing something, quite candidly, that they know they don't intend to get rich at. It's a little bit like being an MLA.

But, you know, it's not just teachers. Most firemen, most policemen, most nurses go into the job they do because they love doing it. We measure their salaries, and that's how they measure, I think, what you do at coffee time and see what you can get. I don't begrudge anybody in this world trying to get all they can when they sit at a bargaining table to do it. That's an age-old tradition that we all use. Some use it better than others.

But I will say this to the Bob Bachmans of the world and the Phil McKerihans, the people that taught for years in Vermilion that did have a huge effect and, I think, universally go through the classes: the Dean McMullens, the Angus Smiths. The teachers that literally spent their lives doing it really never cared much about what was in it for them. I think Dean got a little more after he retired and went to work for the ATA. But, I mean, there was a guy that was one of the best teachers, one of the most respected people in our community. So I think we're kind of not being fair to the teachers to sit here and say that if we just look after this pension fund, all of a sudden we'll have a whole bunch of better teachers, because we won't. It will make their lives easier.

It will make it easier to determine what we have for liabilities down the road to even get it looked after. I don't think for a minute that we understand how much our liability into these pension funds really is. Where we may think we have a funded pension in some areas now, we may find years from now that we don't. We'll have to address these things as we move along. The critical thing here is to take the opportunity we've got as a government because of some prudent financial management years ago, that gives us the opportunity now to be a partner in this discussion with the ATA about what's in the best interests of the students of Alberta, of the teachers, and of the taxpayers. The Rotarian creed would say, you know, that it's got to be fair for both sides. From my personal point of view, I think the accountability in the classroom is as critical as any of the other accounting we do with the pension plan.

So, I mean, I would like to see, and I hear many times in a row: "We don't mind paying the teachers a fair thing. We don't mind that. But we'd sure like to be able to get rid of some of the ones that make many of the good teachers look bad." Now, that's horrible to say, but ask your kids. I'm not sure how many members still have children in school, and the way my 17-year-old acts we might not have children in school on any given day. But ask the kids what they know. They know more than we give them credit for. Some teachers deserve twice as much, and some should maybe go to Fort McMurray. But that's a different debate. [interjection] Well, they could make a lot more money up there, and they'd be happier.

So the debate around the pension fund has to be put in the context of: this isn't going to give you better teachers; it's going to give us a better idea of what we all owe. If you tell me that giving somebody more money all of a sudden makes them better, I don't buy it. I look forward to the minister and to the ATA representatives talking about this, being open and honest, and keeping in mind that it's about the student, that it's about the taxpayer and also about the teacher.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you. I just have a few minutes here, but I would like to make a couple of comments if I might. Again, the words "reasonable" and "long term" are the two that I'm having problems with on this one. I like things a little bit tighter than that.

One of the other things is that there is no question in my mind that a debt is a debt, and this is a debt. The Minister of Education was very theatrical, and I'm sure that the people in the gallery to whom he was probably playing appreciated it. One of the things that has been brought up is the fact that we are politicizing the issue. The question is: why is it being politicized? Why is it being politicized? It's being politicized because it hasn't been handled. Had it been handled in the proper manner between the government and the ATA, all of the teachers and everyone else that has been complaining about this would not have tried to bring it to the political people to have it brought out in the open. The problem is politicized because it's not being handled. It hasn't been handled properly from the very beginning.

The other comment that I heard about: teachers and nurses go into their jobs for the love of doing it. I'm a nurse. Absolutely, I went into the job to do it. However, money is absolutely not the issue. I have said time and time again that the reason that people are leaving part of the social areas of our lives is not because of the money but because they're not being allowed to do the job that they know they should be doing. We are getting burnout, and I don't think that some of these teachers are any different than the ones you were pertaining to.

The Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but we've now arrived at the point in time where I'm going to have to call on the hon. Member for St. Albert to close debate. Prior to that, might I just call on the Minister of Education for an introduction of guests.

(reversion)

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to take the opportunity for the House to recognize a former member of the Legislature and the gentleman who I will be spending a fair bit of time with in rooms, arriving at a fair and equitable solution to the unfunded teachers' pension liability. I'd like to introduce the president of the ATA, the newly elected president, Frank Bruseker.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: I now call on the hon. Member for St. Albert to close the debate on the amended vote.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the other side for helping us to get this done. I think it is fair and beneficial to all concerned, and I mean that specifically in terms of the parents, the kids, and the teachers. I'm looking forward to the minister – I didn't realize the Minister of Education had a temper. Loved it. I used to be able to play football, too, so you and I might get into a fight yet. So anyway, it's good, it's fair, and I think it's wonderful to see it get on the road. I hope we see an agreement as soon as possible, and I'll call the vote.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader, do you want to reply.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned]

Title: Tuesday, April 3, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibility laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 53-plus great rising stars of our education system from Blessed Kateri school. They are accompanied today by teachers Mr. Ray Brooks, Mrs. Darlene Payne, Mrs. Krista MacGregor and, I'm pleased to add, by two student teachers as well, Mrs. Karon Dragon and Miss Gina Lowther. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the warm applause of the Assembly. Thank you for coming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am so honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful group of young citizens who are joining us today from the Nellie McClung program at Oliver school. These are the BLAST team members that just held a rally outside hoping to convince the government to ban power walls. The students that are with us today are Eyerusalem Ghebremusse, Marissa Giroux, Shanice Morris, Jolene Paul, Shelby Fowler, Jessica Deschambeau, Janessa Hidber, Crystin Kilmarnock, Samantha Vaillancourt, Vivian Poon, Jule Silver, Taryn Pohl, Kat Fuller, Haylee Fortin, Alex Hyska, Amanda Annett, and Taylor Pinch, and they are joined by their teacher, Mrs. Heather Jubenvill, who has led them all this way. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Brian Clelland and Rory Marusiak. Brian and Rory are members of UFCW local 401 and are on strike at the Palace Casino here in Edmonton. They've now been on strike for 207 days due in part to this government's unfair labour legislation. Brian has been working at the Palace Casino as a dealer for a year and a half. Prior to working at the casino, he worked full time at Canada Post and was a member of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers for 18 years. Rory Marusiak has been at the Palace Casino for five years and also works as a dealer. Rory is a dedicated trade unionist and advocate for all workers within the gaming industry. He has played a key role throughout negotiations as an advisory committee member. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that they rise and receive the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Shalini Puri. Shalini is a social work student at Grant MacEwan College and is doing her placement in my constituency office. She joined us in September and has been extremely dedicated and has demonstrated a high level of competence in handling casework and in assisting the people of Edmonton-Strathcona. Shalini received her bachelor of arts in sociology from the University of Alberta with a minor in anthropology. She's very active in the community and has helped develop a nonprofit youth organization called Jagriti, which roughly translated from Hindi into English means awakening. She's also an organizer for a biannual community-based conference on seniors' health issues called Matters of the Heart. Shalini is sitting in the public gallery. I would now ask her to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have six members who will participate today.

Just an alert to all hon. members of the Assembly: on Thursday of this week we will acknowledge and remember Vimy Ridge and that historic event in the history of Canada, so perhaps members who would be wanting to participate in Members' Statements might wish to use that as the theme of their statement on Thursday of this week.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Primary Health Care Renewal Initiatives

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about primary health care here in Alberta. We are always seeking ways to improve patient care, producing better health outcomes faster and with lower costs. In my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod a group of health care professionals under the leadership of Dr. John Rottger from the Associate clinic have been able to do exactly that through a program called the good health initiative. This program changed the way some kinds of health care were offered, including chronic disease management, mental health wellness services, health promotion and screening, and surgical services. A good health team composed of a nurse, a registered social worker, a pharmacist, and a dietitian have been able to better educate patients to dramatically reduce hospital admission rates and doctor visits.

By combining a medical clinic under the same roof with home care, public health, and mental health services, patient convenience and communication have also been improved. By collaborating with community partners, the good health team, as it is called, is also carrying out a promotional campaign to draw attention to screening for a number of preventable health conditions. This same group of professionals is now working on a project called advanced access, that has managed to reduce wait times significantly.

I commend this group of health care professionals in Pincher Creek for their efforts, and I hope that all members of this House and all regional health authorities will look to their example as the kind of innovation the Alberta health care system needs at this time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Wild Rose Sports Arena

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This fall Camrose will open a new sport development centre, a major project of the city and county of Camrose, the University of Alberta, and the province of Alberta. This past Sunday was a special occasion for the community to gather at the old arena, the Wild Rose, to say goodbye. The Wild Rose is the oldest operating arena in the province and the third oldest in Canada, having been built 81 years ago. Sunday marked the end of its fascinating history of service to sport in this community and in this province.

A figure skater and a hockey player are painted on the south wall of the arena, symbolizing the activities of 81 years. They represent athletes and teams who grew and excelled in their sports; the exhilaration of victory and the disappointment of defeat; the strain of injury and the patience of healing; the coaching, mentorship, and encouragement of parents and teammates; the value of respect for opponents and teammates; the dedication of the icemakers, the caretakers, the scorekeepers, and all the volunteers; the appreciation of the fans who cheered these athletes on to greater heights of success; and those who just skated for the fun of it.

At Sunday's event the community gathered one last time to see their favourite Camrose Maroons hockey team of years gone by gather as alumni to play the younger Augustana Vikings, who also played a role in the history of this arena. In the intermission the Rusty Blades precision figure skaters team performed to perfection to a large, nostalgic crowd. At the conclusion Stu Bailey, who was born shortly after the arena was built and now still plays hockey for the old old-timers, a hero of the Maroons era, skated one more time around the ice to end a glorious 81 years of sport at the old rink in Camrose.

To all involved in sport history through the Wild Rose Arena, I say: thank you, and may the great memories and friendships last forever.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Bessie Roffey

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. High Prairie, Alberta, has a great distinction that no other community has; that is, being home to Alberta's oldest and wisest person. To quote the Spotlight paper of March 14: it took all her breath, but Bessie Roffey, Alberta's oldest person, managed to blow out two of the three candles on her cake. That's pretty good. The supercentenarian celebrated her 110th birthday on March 2, 2007.

Born in London, England, on March 2, Bessie lost her father in 1904 at a very young age. Her mother put her two brothers in grammar school in England while she took Bessie on a journey in 1906. They travelled across the Atlantic Ocean in what she says in those days weren't the big ships they are now; they were just tubs. They survived those tubs and made it all the way to Quebec.

Both Bessie and her mom began their new life from there and subsequently moved all around North America. Although she mostly grew up in Fort Macleod, she also lived in such places as Fernie, Lloydminster, Florida, Sunnyside, and finally settled in Kinuso, where she met and married her husband, Bill Roffey.

Mr. Speaker, when asked what her secret to a long life is, she giggles with a twinkle in her eye and says: the good Lord doesn't want me, and the devil won't take me, so I am still here.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Roffey, as you can tell, is still lucid, recognizes people, and sure can tell you off when you need it. I've received a few of her barbs.

I'd ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Alberta's oldest resident, who I fondly call Queen Roffey.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Closures

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the movie Fahrenheit 451 a fire brigade torches a pile of books, and a boy asks: Daddy, is it true that firemen used to put out fires? As neighbourhood schools continue to close, I imagine a child asking: did all schools used to be community schools? The answer to both questions is yes.

As the west was settled, each town and village had three structures: the grain elevator, schoolhouse, and church, food for the body, mind, and soul. There was a choice of grain companies and religious denominations. Schoolhouses were common to all, the original community centres. Work bees, public meetings, dances, and parties took place there, and the local school board sponsored or approved them. To talk of community schools would have been redundant.

Though Alberta provided separate education for Roman Catholic students, our forebears recognized that these, too, were public schools, publicly funded and intended for all who chose to send their children and direct their taxes there.

Then came busing. Schools became plants and facilities, factories for delivery of educational products and services. Nonproductive lines were discontinued, underutilized outlets closed.

In the 1970s Alberta Education designated community schools to be specially funded and maintained to serve their communities. Then idealism died and bottom-line thinking took over. Government cut funding and stripped school boards of the power to raise their own revenues. Now every year families wait to see if the neighbourhood school will be on the chopping block.

With our province in the flux of rapid growth we need neighbourhood schools more than ever and not just in the boom communities. If building strong communities is a priority, then let us understand that schools are cornerstones of strong communities. I suggest that we can bring these together without sacrificing fiscal responsibility if we choose to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Trade, Investment, Labour, and Mobility Agreement

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Premier said that the government has "met with all those individuals, authorities, organizations that have anything to do with respect to the agreement," talking about TILMA. But the fact is that this government is only now planning to consult Albertans, when the agreement has already come into force and our hands are tied by it, and we can prove it. For starters, we know that the government put a request for proposals to do the TILMA consultation on the Alberta Purchasing Connection on March 26, 2007. The deadline for proposals was yesterday at 12:30 p.m., about an hour before the Premier assured us that everyone had been consulted.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there's this notice from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association to their members. The headline is AUMA Wants Full Consultation on New Alberta-B.C. Trade Agreement. Clearly, they don't think that they've been consulted. The notice goes on to say that they asked "last year that municipalities be consulted on any initiative to implement TILMA." The municipalities haven't been consulted. They were told to wait for the consultation, which will occur sometime this spring, well after the agreement has come into force.

This agreement will affect all Albertans, not just businesses. Farmers, school trustees, nurses, health regions, and municipalities will all be affected by this agreement. All these individuals and organizations deserved to be consulted before this government signed this agreement. The Premier has promised to govern with integrity and transparency. The way TILMA is brought in shows a total lack of integrity and transparency.

Curling Events in Lethbridge

Mr. Dunford: Well, now for something completely different. Mr. Speaker, I know that you appreciate this, but I'm not sure everybody in the room appreciates just the hotbed of curling that Lethbridge happens to be in. Let me give some examples. In February we hosted the Scottie Tournament of Hearts, and I want to say congratulations to Jody Meli and all of those volunteers. According to all of the feedback that we have received, it was a very, very great event, and people just fell in love with Lethbridge.

Let me secondly, then, talk about the junior world championships, and of course the team from Alberta were the winners. The skip, I believe, was originally from Grande Prairie, but the third, Brock Virtue, is Lethbridge born and raised, a Lethbridgite. We're very, very proud of him. We know that his dad, George, is. A personal friend of mine, his grandfather, Charlie Virtue, unfortunately is no longer with us, but Charlie will be watching somewhere and, I'm sure, will be very, very proud of his grandson.

Now, the third one is that in the senior women's Canadian championships a team skipped by a woman from Calgary had three Lethbridge curlers on it, and I want to mention their names. There were Chris Wilson, Shirley Kohuch, and Shirley McPherson. Now, they've won this tournament. They will represent Canada at the world's in 2008. We don't know what the site is yet, but knowing Chris Wilson as well as I do, given the choice I'm sure it will be Provenca or Tuscany.

So, ladies and gentlemen, that wild, windy, warm Lethbridge hotbed of curling.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that I presented on Monday, April 2, 2007, and I can advise the House that the petitions are not in compliance with Standing Orders 90 to 94.

The committee has considered the petitions and recommends to the Assembly that Standing Order 94(1)(b) be waived for the petition of the CyberPol – The Global Centre for Securing Cyberspace Act, and for the petition of the CREST Leadership Centre Act, subject to the petitioners providing proof of advertising in accordance with the Standing Orders before the committee hears the petitioners.

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to present a petition from a group of Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to “urge the Government of Alberta to hold rent increases to no more than the rise in the average monthly wage until December 31, 2010,” all gathered at one tanning establishment in my riding.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 1,062 signatures that read:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to add the drug Elaprase to the Drug Benefit List approved by Alberta Health and Wellness in order to ensure that those suffering from Hunter's Syndrome, including Jordan Miranda, Riley Miranda and Tyler Chauhan, get the care they need to reduce their suffering and live full lives.

head: 1:20 Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 23 Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 23, the Unclaimed Personal Property and Vested Property Act. This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a primary repository and claims system for the unclaimed or abandoned personal property of Albertans consistent with the recommendations of the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. It will also establish a clear process for managing and resolving issues relating to property that vests in the Crown when a corporation is dissolved.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to table six copies of the Choosing Child Care booklet, which is a guide to licensed and approved child care in Alberta. This helpful tool was designed by Children's Services to provide parents with the information they need to make an informed decision about the different child care options available in Alberta. This booklet also provides parents with a telephone interview planner and a checklist they can use to determine which type of program is best suited for their child's needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling from my constituents Gordon and Karin Daniher. They are concerned about shortages of beds, long waiting times for detox. Thousands of people and their families are paying a horrific price, and they are urging this government to act fast, before it's too late.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from constituent Jennifer Semeniuk, who is raising the issue of rent controls. She feels that she's "an educated overworked individual who is sadly one paycheck away from being homeless." She is "disappointed in this government for not taking care of its 'average' persons and [holding] out for big business instead."

The second is from constituent Paola Guasp, who is writing with her concerns about the teachers' unfunded liability. She feels that the cost of the current generation of retirees is being passed on to a generation of teachers not yet born, and she would like to see this situation resolved.

Thank you.

Mrs. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings. The first is from Jean Luke, called foster care, in need of care. She's talking about the stigma attached to foster care. "Losing children to care or a breakdown of a family can happen to the best of us . . . We need to provide this child with a family that not only cares for them but cares about them."

My other tabling is from Debbie Goeseels asking for support for child care that is safe and affordable. She's concerned about the lack of options available for both daycare and out-of-school care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table two groups of documents. One is the annual report and strategic plan from the Institute of Human Development, Child and Youth Health plus supporting documents. I recently spoke at their conference.

Also, the second group is a hundred letters from good Albertans petitioning our Alberta Legislature to support that the accused killer of Joshua Hunt be sentenced and tried "as an adult due to the nature of [his] crime, his past criminal history and that he is so close to the age of 18 years."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It was the hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Taft: Oh, the third party. [interjections]

Mr. Mason: I love these moments, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] Patience, please.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to table copies of 10 different letters that my office has recently received. The signatories to these letters are all urging the government to provide funding for the cancer-fighting drug Avastin. A constituent of mine, Dr. Jerrard, and his family pay $1,750 every two weeks for Avastin treatment. The drug is already covered by the cancer boards in B.C., Quebec, and Newfoundland. The following individuals have sent letters: Sandi Halliwell, Rod Layton, Omari Lewis, Sue Williams, Brooke Rothwell, Bob Lowry, Gerry Hunt, Colleen McLeod, Linette Smith, and Hans Van Ginhoven.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table copies of e-mails from two very concerned Calgary citizens, Laurie Fuhr and Alexander Kurth. On April 1 a temporary homeless shelter in Calgary was closed. Unfortunately, as we know, the temperatures in Calgary remain sub zero, leaving Calgary's homeless in a very dangerous position. Laurie and Alexander are urging the city and the province to consider the situation a state of emergency and to immediately provide a temporary shelter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise and table the following seven letters and the appropriate copies from Albertans concerned about the cancer drug Avastin's ineligibility for coverage by the Alberta Cancer Board. Letters were written by Norm Dyer, Cathy Thornell, Laura E. Lewis, Bob Lowry, Pat Stevenson, Maggie Bullen, and Doug Frend.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Sterilization Equipment for Hospitals

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week this government spent $200,000 sending out a brochure listing its five priorities. They are painfully obvious, things like "improve Albertans' quality of life" – well, yeah – "build a stronger Alberta," and "provide safe and secure communities." As if anybody wants otherwise. My question is to the Premier. Which of his government's five priorities covers buying adequate sterilization equipment for Alberta's hospitals?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all five priorities are important to Albertans. This is really part and parcel of what I heard on the campaign trail for the leadership. Given the kind of support that I've been receiving in terms of visiting communities, again members of communities, Albertans, reiterating those priorities, showing support for them, I know that in partnership with Albertans these are the priorities this government supports and Albertans as well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is getting pretty predictable in dodging the questions. I'm sure, for example, that the people of Claresholm would like a better answer. Last weekend the people of Claresholm had to hold a fundraiser to get donations – donations – to buy something as important to their hospital as equipment to sterilize medical equipment. Probably the people of Vegreville would like a better answer too and the people of Canmore and of Didsbury and of who knows where else. To the Premier. Will the Premier tell us which is a bigger priority for his government: medical sterilization equipment or $200,000 worth of meaningless brochures?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the confidence of Albertans in the public health system is very important to this government, and we will do whatever we can to restore that confidence in the health system, to ensure that we learn from what has happened in the community of Vegreville. But the $200,000 that the member is talking about is 20 cents per household. That's less than half the price of a stamp, and it got to households right across this province, so over a million households. So it's one way of communicating with Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would cost about 3 cents a household to put in adequate sterilization equipment in hospitals. The old sterilization machine at the Claresholm hospital had broken down and was beyond repair. It had been out of service for over a month. A new one costs $30,000, a tiny fraction of the cost of the Premier's mail-out. In an age of antibiotic-resistant bacteria sterilization equipment is not an option. To the Premier: will the Premier cancel subsequent propaganda mail-outs and put that money toward essential sterilization equipment in hospitals instead?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader is not giving us the correct information with respect to Claresholm. I'll have the minister of health respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It boggles the imagination that the hon. member would want to confuse and scare Albertans in that fashion. What happened at Claresholm was a business decision made by the regional health authority to regionalize their sterilization at the High River hospital. There was never any danger to anybody there. It was an operational decision appropriately made by the board. What the board has said to the foundation and to Claresholm is that if they would like to have sterilization, that's a nice to have but not a need to have, and if they want to raise the money for it, they will operate it. But sterilization equipment is operating in High River.

The Speaker: Second main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

1:30 Monitoring of Health Delivery

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of health: sterilization equipment is a need to have.

A letter from the United Nurses of Alberta to the East Central health region raises serious concerns that residents lack confidence in the health care system and are afraid to use local health facilities. Leadership is about communications, and this Premier is failing to communicate. If residents with chest pains are too afraid of infection to go to the hospital, it is the Premier's responsibility to provide the community with the facts they need. The Premier claims that residents in this community aren't concerned. To the Premier: has the Premier considered the possibility that Albertans don't actually want this issue swept under the rug?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, actually, opposition scaremongering in this province undermines public confidence in the health system.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, leadership is about accountability. The Premier is failing to be accountable, as he demonstrates every day here. The Premier's only response about the government's role in providing infection control in the public health care system is "All we have to say: please wash your hands." Well, will the Premier be accountable to the residents of East Central health region and his own community and commit to holding a public information meeting where all the facts can be laid on the table?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said that this is a medical issue, not a political issue. Quite frankly, I feel for the many thousands of health professionals in this province, professionals that work in the public health system, and this kind of continued attack by the opposition really undermines their confidence.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Leadership is about good management, and as we see, this Premier is failing to provide good management. Albertans are in this situation because of cuts to the health system spearheaded by this Premier as part of the Deep Six. These cuts included eliminating the government's own hospital monitoring and enforcement branch. The Premier refuses – refuses – to take responsibility for creating this mess. When it comes to protecting public health, the honour system is not good enough. Will the Premier restore the hospital monitoring and enforcement branch to the department of health?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition must be getting the questions from the third party. I think that's why he got mixed up earlier today in terms of who you called. This question was asked by the third-party opposition last week. I said that we're going to listen to the advice given to our minister by the Health Quality Council. We'll listen to their recommendations, and whatever follow-up they recommend, we will do.

Provincial Labour Supply

Dr. B. Miller: Alberta will reportedly face a shortfall of over 100,000 workers within the next 10 years, and by 2025 that number could grow to 330,000. It is clear that Alberta must catch up or get left behind. Now, Manitoba's provincial nominee program brought about 6,600 skilled immigrants into that province last year whereas Alberta's program brought in only 546. We could have a stronger program. My question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Could she tell us why this government failed to make better use of the provincial nominee program in previous years?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to get a question about the provincial nominee program because we have been accelerating our efforts over this past year, and we will deliver more provincial nominees in the program this coming year. We will continue to work with the federal government on the temporary foreign worker program. The bottom line is that we have been working very aggressively for the past two years under our previous Premier's leadership, under previous ministers, to aggressively put together a made-in-Alberta solution that takes advantage of the federal government's supports in assessing public security but assures that we select the right worker for the right place and the right job at the right time. A great part of this is contingent on working with our partners at the university and college level.

In the case of Manitoba, Mr. Speaker, they aggressively were pursuing targeting provincial nominee candidates from the colleges and universities so that, in actual fact, if a college or university had not written in an agreement to keep that student for the benefit of the community that they came from, they could . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to statistics provided by the Department of Employment, Immigration and Industry, only 48 per cent of Alberta's recent immigrants were able to find a job in their intended occupation. More than half do not find a job in their intended occupation. That's not good enough. What is the department doing to overcome barriers such as finding Canadian work experience and, more importantly, the transferring of foreign credentials?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I completely agree with the member opposite that asked the question, that we haven't been doing as well as we are going to do. We have to do more because, in fact, we not only have immigrants that come to Alberta that need successful placements, but we have to unlock some of the barriers. The foreign credential program, a made-in-Alberta solution, will attempt to do that.

Further, Mr. Speaker, for the immigrants that come through other ports, like Vancouver, Montreal, and Toronto, we have to make sure that there are settlement programs that help benefit them even though currently that isn't a part of the federal funding for our made-in-Alberta strategy.

Dr. B. Miller: Mr. Speaker, between 25 and 30 per cent of immigrants coming to Alberta actually abandon this province after living here for a while, compared to only 10 per cent in B.C. No wonder, because when they come here, they can't find enough housing. There's no affordable housing. There are inadequate health services, child care. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: will the minister admit that the failure to keep up with Alberta's growth in terms of services and infrastructure actually has a negative effect on our ability to address the labour shortages of Alberta?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we cost share the programming for integrated settlement services with the federal government. It's my understanding that they intend to increase those supports this year.

Quite frankly, a lot of the issues relate to the lack of preparation by the candidate coming to Alberta, not getting proper knowledge in the first instance. We're working on both web page tutorials and other means to make sure that people know that they're not likely to get a job placement and not likely to get services if they don't know what they're coming to or what they need to be prepared for. We're working to increase our supports here, but we're also working to increase the supports of . . .

Health Care Funding

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, even as the Premier and the health minister failed to take responsibility for not providing funding to Vegreville's St. Joseph's hospital, news was breaking of another hospital, this one in Claresholm, that has been asking for years to get funding in order to buy this essential equipment. This government's failure to take responsibility is being shifted to those who are not to blame. Alberta's nurses and other front-line workers are feeling the brunt of Albertans' anger because the government continually avoids taking responsibility for this mess. To the Premier: why is the government refusing to take responsibility for the health of Albertans in respect of hospitals and the sterilization procedures in those hospitals? Why are you letting the nurses take the blame?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, in an earlier question I supported all of the dedicated health professionals in terms of this unwarranted attack on health professionals in this province. When it comes to responsibility, I said that whatever recommendations come forward from the review in Vegreville and from working with all health professionals in terms of how we can further improve the system, the minister of health will bring those recommendations forward to our caucus. If it requires legislation or whatever is required we will do in order to ensure that similar situations don't happen again in the province.

Mr. Mason: The Premier seems to believe that words in this Assembly are going to comfort the health care professionals who day after day after day have to put up with poor working conditions, antiquated equipment, huge waiting lines, patients that don't get seen in emergency rooms. When will this Premier commit to taking responsibility for improving our health care system and improving the lot not just of the people who need to use the health care system but the people who have to go to work every day in that system?

Mr. Stelmach: You know, Mr. Speaker, as I was listening to the leader of the third party, I was thinking: how is it that listening to him absolutely sounds like this is the worst place in the world, yet our Capital regional health authority is consistently recognized as the best health authority in the world, right here in the city of Edmonton? You're a representative of Edmonton.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, once again this Premier thinks that words are enough. What Albertans need and what the health care system needs is real action. Can the Premier, then, tell us how often code burgundies occur in Calgary? If our health care system is as fine as he thinks it is, how long do people have to wait in emergency rooms in Edmonton or in his own constituency? Can the Premier stand up and tell us the facts rather than just say that everything is great?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, the hon. member is trying to put words into my mouth. I didn't say that it's all great, great, great. It requires improvement. We are spending the most per capita here in Alberta, yet we know we can improve the system by encouraging all health care providers to work together with government to reduce, of course, the waiting lines, to look at other ways of how we can create a much less, you know, bureaucratic system, to create seamless access to health in this province.

On the other comment I heard from that side in terms of Saskatchewan, the hon. member should actually ask the Premier – it might be your Premier from Saskatchewan because you're on the same side – to come here and ask how many patients actually access service here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility Agreement

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. British Columbia, our partner in the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or the TILMA, has already tabled legislation to implement this important agreement. My question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Can the minister tell us when Alberta will follow suit and table legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, yesterday a member in this House made a comment. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview indicated that there was "no consultation." That is simply not true. I quote here from the Hansard. He did make reference to the fact that no one was consulted. I find it interesting that the Association of Registered Nurses, who they're very familiar with, Mary-Anne Robinson, said that this is a model that other governments should follow. So it's very obvious to me, the hundreds that we've consulted with. We will continue to be consulting with them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. The minister just pointed out that yesterday there were claims by members opposite that the TILMA is a secret deal and that Albertans have been left in the dark about it. We know that's not true, but I'd like the minister to explain if and when the government consulted with stakeholders about this agreement.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, that's what we've been doing for the last three years. It just so happens that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is not aware of that. But even more interesting: it's so secretive that all of Canada knows about it. We have Premiers calling our Premier about it. You know what I find interesting? The hon. member made reference to April Fool's Day, and you know what I say to that: if the shoe fits.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is again to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Companies on the border already doing business in the other provinces say that the TILMA won't affect them, so what's the real benefit of this agreement, and how will it help businesses, say, in my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I want to once again say that both our governments, in British Columbia and in this province, have always agreed that this will be in the Legislature, and that is what is happening. Consequently, as we move forward: 7.7 million Canadians from both our provinces as customers. The NDP may want to have higher prices for their voters. We don't for all of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Community Initiatives Program

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The community initiatives program, CIP, application guideline states very clearly that if a group cannot raise matching funds up to $10,000, it will be considered on a nonmatching basis. However, documents tabled in this Assembly show that this government is breaking its own rules. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: why has this government in three years awarded not one, not 10, not 20, but 43 nonmatching CIP grants over $10,000, totalling over $2 million? Why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, with CIP we try as much as possible to provide equitable funding to all towns and all villages and rural areas, including the urban centres across Alberta. We recognize that at times there are some organizations out there that are providing a great service that are having some financial difficulties. CIP has been built to respond to our volunteers to provide a one-time, nonmatchable funding of up to $10,000 if the need is there, and that need comes across through our staff.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier, Minister of Finance, Minister of Health, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development all have secret donors to their leadership campaign. Can this minister assure this House that groups receiving this special treatment are not secret friends of top Tories?

The Speaker: We have a point of order that we'll deal with at the conclusion of the Routine.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the question is really worthy of a response. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister again: given that FOIP documents show that a frat house blew a CIP grant on high-end furniture, how can Albertans be confident that they are receiving value for these specialties? Why are you not accountable?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, all of our applicants have to be registered societies, and all of our applicants have to provide financial statements as to how and when they've spent their money. I need to identify the fact that there are probably hundreds if not thousands of CIP applications going through, so when the hon. member talks about 40 applicants receiving some support, they're an extremely small percentage of the total amount of groups and organizations that we support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Métis Hunting Rights

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta entered into interim harvesting agreements with the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Métis Settlements General Council in 2004. Those agreements were in response to a Supreme Court of Canada decision called Powley, and it gave the Métis a right to harvest food for subsistence. My question is for the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What is the status of these agreements, and are there negotiations under way to replace them with long-term agreements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question. Yes, the ultimate goal of this government, working with our stakeholders and all Albertans, is to in fact reach a long-term agreement. The Alberta government recognizes and respects the Métis right to harvest. The negotiations have been ongoing. We've made some very good progress since May of 2006. Now, I will say that negotiations have been working very closely with the principals of an MLA committee relative to protecting the interests of all Albertans and our important stakeholders. It is ongoing, and I'd like to say that we're making excellent progress and will continue to do so in the spirit of good faith in working with these important Albertans.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: can the minister advise the House what timelines have been put in place to ensure that these agreements do come to fruition?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, in actual fact I'm meeting with Audrey Poitras, the president, and also Eldon Armstrong from the settlements. I want to say that we have an agreement, a 90-day timeline that has been established to negotiate a long-term agreement. The decision to set a timeline was based on, of course, the Alberta court ruling the hon. member has mentioned regarding the enforceability of the existing interim harvesting agreement. We are very optimistic. The expiry date is July 1. Working together and looking at our positive energy that we have had to date, we can protect the interests of all Albertans.

Dr. Brown: My further supplemental question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In view of the imminent termination of the interim Métis harvesting agreement can the minister advise what the consequences are on the enforcement of your department's fish and game conservation laws?

Dr. Morton: The consequences are very good indeed, Mr. Speaker. It means the end of the current Métis harvesting agreement and the beginning of a new agreement, an agreement that strikes a better balance with protection of Alberta's fisheries and wildlife. Our caucus has said that the substance of the current agreement is not acceptable. The courts have said that the process used to create the current agreement is unacceptable. It's clear to all that this is a dog that cannot hunt and needs to be replaced, and that's what we'll have in 90 days: a new deal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Foster Care Delivery

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The vast majority of Alberta's foster families are doing an incredible job, but occasionally there are exceptions. The shortage of foster families in this province means that sometimes children are being placed in homes that are not in the child's best interest. To the Minister of Children's Services: what background checks and monitoring practices are in place to make certain that children in foster homes are safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that the safety of the children is our number one priority here. I know that last week we had a similar question. I had shared some of the same information. But I can tell you that what we do have is a very vigorous screening process, and that does include home studies. It includes reference checks, criminal record and child intervention checks as well as medical references. We also have face-to-face interviews. I also mentioned last week that we have guidelines to specify how many children are appropriate for the experience of the foster parent.

Mrs. Mather: To the Minister of Children's Services. Social workers are doing the best job they can with the resources they have, but a number of the workers I have spoken to are afraid to go public about this issue for fear of repercussions. These are conscientious people who want to do the right thing. What protocols does the department have in place to ensure that workers who blow the whistle on unsafe practices will be protected?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I guess what I would say there is that I also want to do the right thing. So if, in fact, this hon. member has some information that I should have or can encourage someone to come forward to me, I would appreciate that.

Mrs. Mather: This problem is largely due to the severe shortage of foster families that we face in Alberta. What is the minister doing now to ensure that Alberta has enough foster families to meet the needs of vulnerable children?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that we're always recruiting foster families, so those efforts never do stop. Just to point out something of interest, though, our ratio of foster children per foster parent is actually lower in this province than most other provinces in Canada. But that's not to take away from the fact that we are always looking for more foster families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary health region has been moving residents out of the Holy Cross long-term care centre after learning that the building did not meet the fire and safety codes. Last week I heard from the family of a 90-year-old infirm lady who received a 48-hour notice to vacate the place and be transferred to a site that the family referred to as a dungeon. This stress had an adverse reaction about the health and well-being of an infirm lady. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What type of communication strategy was used to communicate the transition plan with the residents in the long-term care centre program at the Holy Cross site?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early March the Calgary health region advised all residents and families that they would be moved as soon as a new facility could be found for them. The CHR's objective was to move residents as soon as possible to have all of them moved by the end of April. The region began working with families immediately, providing facility options and the opportunity to visit facilities so that they could make the best choice available for their loved ones. Families made decisions about their loved one's moves as soon as they viewed the facilities. Some families felt that they needed to see more options, and that request was respected. The goal was to move as many residents as possible to a facility of choice, and the region paid for moving residents' personal belongings. Some families chose to do this themselves and hired moving companies, but I'm assured by the region that everyone was given ample notice and no one was rushed into making a decision.

Mr. Shariff: My first supplemental is to the same minister. What assurances can the minister give this House that the move is being handled in a caring and compassionate manner?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious situation. I'm satisfied that the Calgary health authority has done everything it can to do the move of these residents in an appropriate manner, to give them appropriate notice, to give them appropriate choice where possible, and to respect their decisions where possible, but they also wanted to make sure that the residents were moved on a timely basis. The goal was to move them by the end of April. In fact, the region moved the last two residents last Friday. But even prior to that, I want to make sure that Albertans know that the Calgary health region did the right thing by making sure that there was clinical care in place in the facility during that period of time and that there was a fire watch in place so that no one's health or safety was in danger in that process.

Mr. Shariff: My final supplemental is also to the same minister. Is the minister willing to make a commitment to this Assembly that he will review the policy pertaining to transferring Albertans in long-term care and make it humane, caring, and compassionate?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very happy to say to this House that I will work with the Calgary health authority. They've been keeping our department and this minister informed of the process, but we will be reviewing the process that they undertook to make sure that it was done in an appropriate manner, and we will be reviewing the protocols that we have in place with respect to long-term care residents and how they're treated in this province. There are good standards in place, there's good training coming, good things happening, but we can always benefit from experience and learn from those experiences, and we'll do so in this case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Health System Pressures in Grande Prairie

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In order to support and encourage its growth, Grande Prairie needs an accessible, reliable health system, and the current system is under massive pressure. My questions are to the Premier. The health system in Grande Prairie has been operating at breaking point for months. The region will even be losing its last psychiatrist this month. Aren't the residents of Peace Country health region entitled to the same level of mental health care as residents in Edmonton, Calgary, or southern Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it builds on the priorities that we have established as a government that all Albertans should share in the same quality of life no matter where they live in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Grande Prairie is growing faster than Fort McMurray: 27 per cent since 2001. The increasing rate of growth in Grande Prairie was entirely predictable. My question is to the minister of health. Exactly what action was taken by the ministry over the last two years to prevent a health staffing and infrastructure crisis in Grande Prairie?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's no secret that Alberta is growing, that all regions of this province are growing. Some regions are growing faster than others. Fort McMurray, of course, had a long-term sustainable growth at high levels, but areas like Grande Prairie are growing rapidly as well. It's a good problem to have, but it comes with its stresses. So we have a workforce strategy coming to ensure that we can attract and retain the health workforce that we need. We're supporting the health regions with the support that they need, the financial support that they need, to make sure that they can deliver the services they have. I understand that the Peace health district is recruiting new psychiatrists.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier take the advice of the Alberta Liberals and members of his own caucus who support the project and commit to funding a new hospital in Grande Prairie and the redevelopment of the QE II hospital into a community health centre? Your own caucus supports it.

2:00

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't have to take their advice.

In fact, we're a lot further ahead than where the Liberal caucus is today with respect to the hospitals. In fact, there has been a significant donation of land given for the hospital by a very good citizen of Grande Prairie. Work is under way to ensure that as the housing is developed around the hospital, there's proper drainage in the entrance to where the hospital will be located, the proper roads will be in place. All that work is currently being done, so we're a little ahead of where they are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Climate Change

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like most Albertans I was shocked when the Environment minister mentioned a $5 billion sticker price for the Tory carbon dioxide pipeline scheme. This pipeline is destined to divert massive public resources into a technology that even the Prime Minister, Stephen Harper, admits is unproven. My question is to the Premier. Why would the government even consider throwing away taxpayers' money on a multibillion dollar boondoggle that would even dwarf the Ottawa failed gun registry?

Mr. Stelmach: I think part of the gun registry was a lot of CO₂ or maybe methane.

However, this is an issue where here is the only jurisdiction in Canada to bring forward legislation to not only measure greenhouse gas emissions but also put limits. Those who cannot meet those targets will actually through regulation pay offsets to ensure that we do reduce the amount of greenhouse gas emissions in this province, about 100 or so major emitters.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, recently federal and provincial Conservatives announced a task force to kick off the carbon dioxide pipeline dream. Days later a task force member, David Keith, said that the pipeline is designed to allay political concerns about growing CO₂ emissions from all the new tar sand projects, and in fact there are more cost-effective technologies available. The government has not done its homework, just like with their intensity target approach, and they're trying to bamboozle the public into believing that something is being done. Why hasn't the Premier or his minister produced evidence that carbon capture is even going to work in the first place?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the facts are that the fund that the member refers to is a $156 million eco trust fund. The same kind of dollars went to Ontario, went to Quebec – of course, more than we received in Alberta, but $156 million to start working together on options on how we can reduce the greenhouse gas emissions, deal with other contaminants in the air like methane, sulphur dioxide. Really, quite frankly, we're way ahead of other provinces in this area.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, carbon capture is very, very expensive. It requires massive amounts of energy and materials, and worst of all it's not even a proven technology to reduce climate change. With this same $5 billion we could invest in conservation, public transport, sustainable energy and realize actual carbon savings and build a better quality of life for Albertans to boot. Why should we throw away $5 billion or more on what amounts to CO₂ landfill when so many more common-sense alternatives are available?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I think I made it clear on a number of occasions when addressing this issue in the House that carbon sequestration is really just one of a number of alternatives that are available and that the government is exploring. This task force that the member refers to is going to be looking at the economics of sequestration, and it's going to be providing both the federal and the provincial government with some advice as to whether or not this is, in fact, something that is feasible.

I do need to correct the member when he talks about $5 billion. Yes, I did bring that number forward, but that's not a number that creates expectation that the government is going to be involved. That's the estimated cost for not only the pipeline but the ability to actually capture the CO₂, much of it borne by . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. MRSA, or the superbug, is not new to Canada or to Alberta's hospitals. MRSA emerged soon after the invention of penicillin. It is usually considered a hospital-acquired organism, but now strains of MRSA are appearing in our community as well. It is clear that MRSA is here in Alberta, and it's here to stay. Since we now know that the bacteria is no longer just in hospitals, my questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the province doing to contain this bug?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is important to point out that MRSA is not localized to Alberta. It is an issue that's being dealt with right across North America and in other jurisdictions as well. We are not unique in this circumstance. With the advent of penicillin and other antibiotics some drugs have become resistant, so we have to take extra steps to make sure that they're not transferred. Those extra steps, Mr. Speaker, are very straightforward and very simple. It's washing hands, it's proper hygiene, so preventative measures. We need to educate Albertans about the necessity to do that. We have a provincial health office which is informing Albertans through their work with the Alberta hand hygiene strategy. There has been a Do Bugs Need Drugs? program, and they're working on . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. Should Albertans be concerned about the possible outbreaks of MRSA in their communities or their hospitals?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I can't say that you didn't warn me about the 45 seconds idea.

MRSA outbreaks are a potential issue for all jurisdictions. Albertans should be aware that infections can be prevented if they take effective and proactive measures to protect themselves. Twenty to 40 per cent of healthy Albertans carry a bacteria that can develop into MRSA in our noses without causing any health problems at all. It's spread by person-to-person contact. Washing hands is very important.

The Speaker: Well done.

The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can you tell us how Alberta's cases compare to the rest of the country or the rest of the world?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the number of MRSA cases is increasing throughout Canada and internationally. A report that was developed by the Public Health Agency of Canada in 2005 indicated that the highest increase of MRSA since 1998 was in central Canada's hospitals. In the United States MRSA is also present in hospitals and the community, and it has been prevalent there for many years. Here in Alberta we saw the first case of community-associated MRSA in 2004 in Calgary. So it's both in the community and in hospitals. It's something that we know about, that we're dealing with. Again, I have to emphasize, even when the opposition makes light of it, that the most important thing we can suggest to both health care workers and to Albertans is that the way to prevent spreading is to wash your hands.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

St. Albert West Regional Road

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government needs to clarify its position on the west regional road with St. Albert constituents. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: is the minister committed to designating the west regional road as part of highway 2?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker – thank you for that question, by the way, hon. member – I've had a meeting with the mayor of St. Albert, and we've discussed that road. They're going ahead and doing some preliminary work on it. We're also waiting to see, when the report comes back, if it will meet all our specs, and we'll address it at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister provide a written funding commitment for the west regional road, please?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the mayor is happy with the situation that's going on there. We're doing an alignment study further to the north. We understand the traffic problems coming through the city of St. Albert, and we'll address it at the time when they finish the studies.

Mr. Flaherty: I was hoping for a yes, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister give the St. Albert residents and businesses any indication when and how the road will be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as I said, it's actually the city of St. Albert building the road. We're going to look at a later date at whether or not we will assume it as a provincial highway.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

2:10 Affordable Housing

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last few months in Red Deer residents of two large apartment buildings have received notification that their apartments are going to be converted into condominiums. Many of these residents are fixed-income seniors, people with disabilities, and low-income families. They are very concerned about where they will live when they are evicted. Affordable housing is a major concern throughout the province. One area that's having a significant impact on the supply of affordable housing has been the conversion of apartment complexes to condominiums. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing tell us what this government is doing to help Albertans who can't afford to buy condos and want to continue to rent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do want to say that we have had unprecedented growth in the province. With the rising cost of construction developers are finding it more profitable to convert rental units into condos. I also want to say that at the same time that those individuals sell the condos, a large percentage of them in return rent them back.

Mrs. Jablonski: Can the same minister advise if this government has plans to deal with this issue?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, on March 19 we did have a report presented to us. We had 1,400 presentations, whether they were in person or through a letter. Those recommendations have been brought forward to us, and we are going to respond to those recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. My final question is for the minister responsible for Service Alberta. What are the requirements of a landlord when they want to convert an apartment to a condominium?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that someone's loss is someone else's gain. In fact, the conversion of an apartment may become an affordable housing unit for someone else.

The fact is that 180 days' notice is required to do a conversion and, unfortunately, only 90 days for a rent increase or for a renovation. I think that with many landlords it would be naive to suggest that they're not using the 90-day opportunity to get people out. I look forward to the minister's housing task force to see if there isn't a way to align the days involved.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Calgary Northeast Ring Road

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the increase in Calgary's population, a ring road is absolutely essential to ensure traffic mobility. Visionary planning is equally necessary to avoid the problems which occur in trying to redesign or retrofit an existing major artery as has been the case with both the 16th Avenue portion of the Trans-Canada highway and Glenmore Trail. Planning involves consultation and collaboration which take into account both future needs and present stakeholders' reality. Provincial consultation on the ring road to date has been clearly substandard. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what active consultation was undertaken before the northeast portion of the ring road P3 contract was signed?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's been a considerable amount of consultation on the northeast ring road. It started back in '04. We've had extensive consultations. We had a March open house. We had more in '05. We just had another open house the other day. We've worked together with all the different stakeholders. We've talked with the different municipalities. We've dealt with the municipality of Calgary and the municipality of Rocky View. There was lots of consultation.

Mr. Chase: Calgary residents, landowners, and local businesses have raised serious concerns about the redesign of the northeast ring road, which no longer provides access at McKnight or 32nd Avenue. With their access cut off, these people are effectively walled in, costing them millions. Again to the minister: what plan does the government have to compensate these groups, or will you commit to altering the project accordingly?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, after the consultations in '04 and '05 we made some minor adjustments and made some changes, and there will be an emergency access built at Chateau Estates to give EMS some quick access to the community. There'll be an alternate access at Country Hills Boulevard from 84th Street, that will be just east of the new interchange, 100th Street NE will be paved, and a new access will link 84th Street at 32nd Avenue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering that negotiations with the Tsuu T'ina First Nation regarding the Weaselhead crossing have been stalled for more than 40 years, what backup plan or alternate route for the ring road to cross the Elbow River does the government have under consideration?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, there are negotiations going on right now with the Tsuu T'ina nation. We have no reason to believe that we won't get a deal with Tsuu T'ina. In fact, the Tsuu T'ina are just getting some of their appraisals completed, and our negotiations will continue. That's a very important link for Alberta highways and for the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: That basically concludes question period. Yesterday there were 96 questions and answers; today there were 90.

Now we have to deal with a point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Reflections on Members

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During question period today in a series of questions brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the hon. member, I would suggest, offended rules 23(h), (i), (j), and (l) of the Standing Orders in that he made allegations against another member, he imputed false and unavowed motives, he used abusive and insulting language likely to create disorder, and he introduced a matter into debate that offends the practice and procedures of the Assembly. But he did more than that, Mr. Speaker. What he did was tantamount to a breach of privilege. I would refer you to 24 of Beauchesne, at page 11, and to 64 of Beauchesne, at page 19.

The most important characteristic of a Member of this Legislative Assembly is their personal integrity: their honesty, their integrity. Whether the hon. member did it intentionally or whether he was just reckless makes no difference. In his second question, when he asked the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture about CIP grants, he impugned my integrity as a member of this House. He also impugned the integrity of at least two other members of this House: the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks and the hon. Member for Foothills-Rocky View.

The three of us were candidates in a leadership process last fall. The three of us did fundraising.

Mr. Martin: Did you win?

Mr. Hancock: No, I didn't win. Actually, I did win. I get to do a really great job, and I don't have to spend all my time travelling. But that's not the point.

The point is that when the hon. member raised a question about CIP grants, he asked the question about whether or not any of the CIP grants were used to fund election campaigns. In doing so, he insinuated that government money was improperly funnelled through CIP grants to my leadership campaign. There is nothing more important to me than my integrity, nothing. The hon. member may have had a point about CIP grants, but you don't make points about CIP grants by calling into question the integrity of hon. members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member is an honourable member, has honesty and integrity, and I know that he will, if prompted by you and perhaps on his own volition, get up and apologize to this hon. member and to the two other hon. members of this House that he maligned and to the members of this House.

The operation of the political process and governance in this province, Mr. Speaker, is something that we ought to hold dear. We engage in partisanship on a daily basis, and that's fine. We engage in banter. We sometimes call into question whether people are telling the whole truth all the time. We engage in a lot of this type of discourse. But we should be very cautious not to go to the point where you call into question the integrity and the honesty of another member. It ought never to be done without proof, without something to suggest it, other than just a drive-by smearing. It ought not to be raised in that fashion.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not asking for a breach of privilege in this matter. I think the hon. member didn't intend what he did. But he did do it, and I would ask him to rise and apologize to myself and to other members of this House who he maligned and to all members of the House because by raising questions in that manner, he drags all of us into disrepute.

The Speaker: Now, I take it that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre as the Opposition House Leader is going to speak to this point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, if I may.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that the allegations made by the Government House Leader are not in order and are not substantiated by the questions that were asked by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I understand the points that have been made with such enthusiasm and a great deal of heat by the hon. Government House Leader, but in fact the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie named individuals using their proper form in this House as members of a group that had an identifiable or common association; that is, they were members that are sitting in this House that were also all leadership candidates. They were not singled out, directed for them for . . . [interjections] They were referred to specifically as a group of people for which there is missing information for this House.

There are two facts that we're dealing with here, Mr. Speaker. One is that there were a number of donators to the leadership candidates who sit in this House who were not disclosed. This has been widely reported in the media and has been discussed in this House.

The second piece of that is that 43 grants . . .

The Speaker: Hold on here. Please, stop for a second. Political party activities have no business in this House. This is not a question of competence for a government. Now, the hon. Opposition House Leader may proceed, but we're not getting involved in something that already violates Beauchesne. Political contributions have nothing to do with the point of order as far as I can understand. We're dealing with a question. We're dealing with a response. Please stay on topic.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you for the advice, Mr. Speaker. The member was asking a question. He was asking a question directed for a group of people that are sitting in this House. The question was not, as the hon. Government House Leader put it, on the record. It is available in Hansard, and perhaps the Speaker already has a copy. I have a copy of what the member was reading from. He was asking if the groups that were receiving the grants – I'm paraphrasing here – were receiving this special treatment as being friends of top Tories. That was referring to the donators, not to the members.

So I understand that some offence was taken here, but it was not what's in the question, to be perfectly honest about it. An insinuation that has been put on the floor by the hon. Government House Leader simply wasn't made. A question was asked, however, and when we look at a number of the other citations that were made, 23(h), (i), and (j), no one was imputing anyone's motives. It wasn't even raised.

The other sections that were quoted as citations by the minister: there were no allegations made, particularly against a member. There was information sought about why these grants were being allocated outside of the criteria that the government had set forward. There were no motives talked about at all in the language of the questions, and I would argue that there was no abusive or insulting language used at all. The questions are pretty straightforward, Mr. Speaker, and there was no abusive language or descriptive language that was used. I'm referring to Beauchesne 484. Again, there were just no motives that were being imputed in this question.

So I would argue that although I regret it if the question was misheard, it certainly wasn't delivered that way. It was a pretty matter-of-fact question. I argue that the tests required for the citations that have been brought forward by the Government House Leader have not been met.

The Speaker: Are there others who wish to participate? Nobody else?

Well, you know, hon. members, we were actually making pretty good progress till today. The question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the first one, which wasn't dealt with, basically says, "If a group cannot raise matching funds up to $10,000, it will be considered on a nonmatching basis. However, documents tabled in this Assembly show that this government is breaking its own rules." Well, that wasn't even contested. There were no rules that were broken. This chair is very familiar with the rules of the community initiatives program and was an author of some of them in years gone by. It very clearly states that if a group does not have the matching portion, the $10,000 can be allocated, so that's just a bunch of nonsense, hon. member.

Secondly, we come to the brunt of the whole business. "The . . . Minister of Finance" named, "minister of health" named, "Minister of Sustainable Resource Development" named, not part of a group as far as one can read this, named individually, "all have secret donors to their leadership campaign." Well, the chair has already pointed out that what that has to do with government business, the chair does not understand. Beauchesne clearly points out that political party matters are not the subject of the question period. Then the question: "Can this minister assure this House that groups receiving this special treatment" – now, the question is: what special treatment? – "are not secret friends of top Tories?" Boy, if that isn't innuendo, you know, you know, I must have just arrived. I've been here 28 years, and this is blatant innuendo.

This is a point of order. This is not dealing with the integrity of members of this Assembly. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie can do better, and I expect him to do better, and I ask him to withdraw his words, please.

Mr. Agnihotri: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to apologize.

The Speaker: Well, hon. member, I'm going to point out the consequences of you not abiding by my request, and the consequences are not very nice. So I'm going to do this three times just so there's no misunderstanding, and the third time the hon. member will be named.

Now, this has happened before in the history of this Assembly when people have tried to make a point. Once they're named, they lose salary and everything else. Please remember that. People have done that to showboat in the past. This has happened. I was here once with one hon. member.

So I'm going to ask the hon. member to accept the ruling of the chair and withdraw his comments. That's my first request. I'm going to ask the hon. member to accept the ruling of the chair and withdraw his comments. First time.

Mr. Agnihotri: Mr. Speaker, as you said, the rules were not broken. If you read the guidelines . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down. I asked a few minutes ago if any other hon. member wanted to participate. I looked around. I waited. The hon. member did not move. The member was given a chance to participate. We've had under our process a submission provided by one, a submission provided by another. A ruling is then given. The chair has given the ruling.

Now, for the second time the chair is going to ask the hon. member to withdraw his comments. The hon. member can either withdraw his comments or not. If he would just put on the record that he doesn't want to, that's fine.

Mr. Agnihotri: I didn't do anything wrong, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to withdraw my comments.

The Speaker: Fine. The hon. member was given an opportunity to participate; the hon. member chose not to take an opportunity to participate. For the third time: will the hon. member withdraw his comments?

Mr. Agnihotri: Mr. Speaker, no.

The Speaker: That's perfectly fine, hon. member. I will now name you. This is the first time in nine years that I've actually done this. This is not a good day. It's not a good day for the member. I'm sorry, hon. member. Please leave.

Hon. members, the hon. member cannot return to the House until approval is given by the House.

Alberta Treasury Branches Act

14. Dr. Oberg moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate taking time for this very important motion after the ruling you just gave.

Mr. Speaker, section 35 of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act requires that once in every five years a motion be introduced to facilitate a debate on whether the Alberta Treasury Branches Act should be repealed. The purpose of this clause is to assure Albertans that the government will review their investment in the Alberta Treasury Branches to ensure that it continues to serve a valuable purpose. Prior to opening up this motion for debate, I would like to take this opportunity to discuss what the ATB has provided and continues to provide to Albertans.

In 1938 the members of this Assembly made the unprecedented decision to create a financial institution headquartered in Alberta for Albertans. The government invested $200,000 in the Treasury Branches, and the first Treasury Branch started taking deposits in September of 1938. While the Treasury Branch started as Alberta's piggy bank, its purpose was quickly expanded to promote a voucher system designed to also encourage Albertans to support Alberta-made products and services. Throughout its history Treasury Branches have been supported by Albertans all over the province, and today the Treasury Branches, now ATB Financial, provide full deposit-taking, lending, and wealth management services to all Albertans and throughout the province.

I'm proud to say, Mr. Speaker, that this initial investment of $200,000 has grown considerably. At December 31, 2006, ATB's equity was $1.6 billion. More importantly, ATB continues to serve over 600,000 Albertans who have chosen ATB to provide them with some or all of their financial services. It operates in 245 communities throughout Alberta through 154 branches and 134 agencies. It finances roughly $16.5 billion in loans to Albertans and their businesses.

Albertans have indicated in the past that they would like the government to consult with them before any fundamental changes are made to the status of the Alberta Treasury Branches, and we will continue to honour that request. I have been and remain very confident in ATB's ability to continue to provide excellent service to Albertans, in their ability to ensure that access to core financial services will be available throughout the province, in their ability to attract and retain highly skilled labour within Alberta, and most importantly, Mr. Speaker, to operate in a financially responsible manner.

Therefore, as per section 35 of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act I move that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuance of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is debatable. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure this afternoon to rise in debate on Government Motion 14, the continuance of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

I was prepared, Mr. Speaker, to run through some of the highlights of the performance of the Alberta Treasury Branch recently, the number of branches and so forth, but the minister has done a fine job of encapsulating some of the good work that they do. I would, however, like to also point out what a great corporate citizen the Alberta Treasury Branches have been. I've just recently been reviewing their annual report, and there's a long list of community organizations and annual events that they contribute to either through sponsorships or donations. In particular, 11 different United Way associations across the province benefited from an annual corporate fundraising campaign last year, as did STARS air ambulance, the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation, and the Alberta Children's hospital. So, clearly, not just in terms of providing financial services but in many other ways as well, Alberta Treasury Branches contribute daily to the lives and success of citizens of Alberta.

Since 1997 the Alberta Treasury Branches have been a wholly owned government corporation. In preparing for today's debate, I went back to May of 2002, the last time that this Assembly debated this particular motion, that is required, as the minister said, under section 35 of the act. I suppose that there are a couple of things that come to mind immediately when you look at that. The first one is whether or not it's sufficient under the act to only have this discussion in this Assembly once every five years. Given the tremendous amount of flux in financial markets and the changes that take place, not just locally, but if you look at, as an example, the number of amalgamations of credit unions that have taken place over the last five years, if you look at the move towards consolidation of banking services nationally and globally, it's perhaps arguable that it would be good to have this debate more than once every five years.

I also note that the minister of the day, Mrs. Nelson – of course, to put this into context, Mr. Speaker, there was an awful lot of debate in 2002 as to whether or not the Treasury Branches should be privatized – indicated in her remarks: "Before we make any decisions with regard to this institution, we must have a thorough review of the financial services industry in Alberta." I don't know whether or not there'll be an opportunity to hear from the minister today, but I'm certainly wondering whether or not that review was ever undertaken by this government and, if it did take place, in fact, whether or not the results were made available to the public, or do they sit on a shelf somewhere, as, unfortunately, we know does happen more often than anybody would likely care to admit with reports that this government receives.

Mr. Speaker, also relevant, since we're discussing the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act today, is the Auditor General's most recent report, from last year, where he outlined some concerns, none of them major. To the credit of the Alberta Treasury Branches most of the concerns that have been identified by the Auditor General over the last several years have been addressed, but I think this is an appropriate time to point out that there are still some areas of concern for the Auditor General.

One of those that he identified was lending policy compliance. He indicates that, in fact, there has been satisfactory progress toward addressing his concerns although this is a concern that he's repeated in at least the last two if not, I believe, three annual reports. So this is an ongoing concern from the Auditor General. He indicates that improvements in the processes have been made but that improved compliance results will take time, and "ATB must continue to reduce breaches of key internal controls to meet its appropriate targets for acceptable performance."

The Auditor General also identified some concerns around the branch operations compliance. Again, he's indicated that while there has been progress made, there is still room for more improvement and that this would take time. To use his exact words, he says that "although significant improvements have been made in underlying processes, further positive results will take time."

Lastly, he had a concern around the enterprise risk management strategy and again indicates that he's made a recommendation to the Alberta Treasury Branches that they "implement an enterprise risk management (ERM) strategy to assist it in identifying and managing all significant risks." So the Auditor General has some minor concerns, not major ones but certainly, as I said, relevant to today's discussion, I believe.

Lastly, I think I'd just like to point out some comments that came from a very respected banker and a very well-respected Edmontonian, Mr. Harry Buddle, at his recent retirement. For those of you who aren't aware, Harry was the president and CEO of Servus Credit Union, which was formerly the Edmonton savings and credit union. He has been very public over the years arguing that Alberta Treasury Branches have an unfair competitive advantage against local credit unions. Larry Pollock from the Canadian Western Bank also has made similar comparisons.

The concerns always have been that Alberta Treasury Branches doesn't pay provincial taxes, being a fully owned Crown corporation, and the fact that they don't return their profits to their shareholders. In that case, of course, we're talking about, you know, the government of Alberta and specifically the taxpayers of Alberta. They do not have a need to participate in the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation because their risk management is held by the Alberta government. So those are concerns that have been well expressed in the public in the past.

Harry Buddle made a specific point of pointing out to MLAs in the audience on the night of his retirement – in fact, there were three of us in the audience, myself and two members from the Conservative caucus, so I'm hoping that the Finance minister may already have heard these comments from his caucus members – that he had complete confidence that the new Premier and the new Finance minister would be taking steps to address these inequities, as he and others see them. So we'll look forward to seeing some sort of a response from the minister in that regard.

It's interesting now that we're into April and the TILMA agreement is now into effect. It's been in the news a lot the last couple of days, and there has certainly been some discussion in this Legislature about TILMA. Mr. Buddle also commented that although there has been a grace period extended to financial institutions, which I believe goes until 2009, he believes that TILMA will affect the operations of the credit union. He said that they will be allowed to do business outside of Alberta, and other credit unions from other jurisdictions will then be allowed to be doing business inside Alberta. So there were some very profound comments made by Mr. Buddle on his retirement.

I think, as I've mentioned, that with TILMA now being in effect, even though there is a grace period, there may be some relevant questions there as to the impact that TILMA will have on the operations of the Alberta Treasury Branches. Again, under the current legislation we would not be reviewing the Treasury Branches Act until the year 2012, which is at that point going to be three years following the full implementation of TILMA as it affects the operation of financial institutions. So I think that is a very relevant question for the minister to be considering today as he asks the House to support the continuance of the Treasury Branches Act.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and look forward to hearing the comments of others. If there is an opportunity for the minister to respond prior to the calling of the vote, I would be interested to hear his comments. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think all of us that grew up in rural Alberta know the reason why we have the Treasury Branch. It always seemed ironic in free-enterprise Alberta that we had an institution like the Alberta Treasury Branches, but clearly – I think the minister alluded to this – in 1938 there was no choice. Other banks were not serving rural Albertans particularly well during those times, so there was a need, and it's been a very successful institution ever since. Rather, when I looked at the facts, it's not a small institution anymore. I think – the minister can correct me – that they have about $18.8 billion in assets, and that's very significant in this province to have that sort of money. That means, frankly, that they can at least compete with the banks because they have that sort of total number of assets.

I think the key thing is that always with the Treasury Branches there was some speculation that sometimes they weren't arm's length away from the government. That's been an accusation before. I'm not sure if the legislation, how that particularly works. You know, I know that that's how the Crown corporation legislation, say, in Saskatchewan works. But they have to be seen to have nothing to do within the government. I think the minister would agree with that, although there have been times in the past, whether they were right or wrong, where there was a feeling that that wasn't arm's length, the institution from the government, which the minister could tell us what actually makes that, in fact, the case now and if there have been some changes.

The member for Edmonton-Rutherford, though, I think did raise a fairly important point about TILMA. We're in the unknown here, and that's a point that I've been trying to raise: that we've signed into an agreement that has implications not only for private business. We understand trying to get rid of some of the red tape, but a lot of our public organizations, like I mentioned, AUMA and others, just don't know where it's taking us. This is probably a good example that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has mentioned: how does TILMA affect how ATB is going to be doing its business in the future? I think that's the concern that we have.

Probably, there are a lot of good things about TILMA, but it's a fear of the unknown, not knowing how it is really going to operate. I don't think the government, frankly, has done an adequate job. They're now going to set up consultations after we're into it, Mr. Speaker. I think that it would have been nice to have had these discussions before so that when we're talking about the ATB, for example, we'd have a better idea of just what the implications are. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is correct that, you know, we won't be looking at this five years with a whole – everything could be changed by then, five years from now, because of TILMA.

So, again, as the member said, I would hope that the minister could at least give us some idea how he at this point sees TILMA and the ATB working. I know he'll say: well, they can compete in

B.C., and they can do all this and that. But I think we need to have a little better idea. Mr. Speaker, the ATB is an important institution in Alberta, and we're certainly quite pleased to participate and support Government Motion 14.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional members to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to speak to this motion. Actually, I found it quite interesting. Typically, when there is a statute or a law in the province of Alberta and it's time to review that statute or that law, there is usually some sort of a committee that is put together to go through it and see where improvements could be made or if changes are necessary or warranted. But, then, this is the first time after I became a member of this esteemed House that something of this nature is placed on the Order Paper, and I have to admit that this is the first time I see it.

A section in the act that established the Alberta Treasury Branches requires the Assembly to concur every five years to its continuation. So I thought this was quite unique and an interesting use of language, that, you know, we're basically saying: do you agree that this should be continued? And I ask myself: what should I base my decision on? How am I going to either concur or decline? Are people required to maybe ask their constituents or ask the people who use the services of ATB to rate the operations or basically evaluate the usefulness and the service levels of ATB?

ATB is a wonderful institution, Mr. Speaker. It started in the old days to help rural Albertans, to help people in smaller communities and in agricultural communities because other banks and other financial lenders were not willing to take those risks and were not willing to come to the aid of those smaller communities. So the ATB was conceived out of a need for, you know, help and assistance and also out of a vision that these smaller communities might actually simply wither and die and disappear if no assistance was afforded to them.

On the one hand, I have confidence and tremendous pride in the usefulness and the heritage of the Alberta Treasury Branches, but it's also a question of: how can members of this House either agree or disagree to the extension of the operations and the law that governs the Alberta Treasury Branches? So we need more information: if the government is hearing from Albertans whether, in fact, they're happy with the Alberta Treasury Branch network. If they're not, why not? What this government is hearing might actually persuade me to support this motion or might persuade me to decline and not concur.

The other thing which I was discussing very briefly with my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford is that it seems that the Alberta Treasury Branches are experiencing more growth in the urban centres now than they do in the rural centres. It's basically a shift or a change in the philosophy of the Alberta Treasury Branches. More new branches are being established in the bigger centres, which are already quite well served by the ATB and other institutions; they don't need any more. And more growth in terms of transactions and the work done is experienced in the urban centres. I am just concerned that this might signal a shift, where the ATB is going, basically, where the good buck is, and it might signal the start of maybe abandoning where everything started: the rural base. So that's one concern.

The other concern which I had is, basically, if there has been any review in the last five years since this Assembly concurred before, or 10 years. Let's take two times when the Assembly was presented with the question to evaluate all of the financial services in this province. People are concerned, and quite legitimately, with service fees and, you know, banking charges and things like this. How does the ATB as a state-owned institution compare to other institutions that do the same transactions? Are they better? How about their service? How about their fees that they charge, the dividends that they give, and the interest that they afford, and so on and so forth.

If the hon. Minister of Finance can actually tell the House if, in fact, there was a study or an evaluation or an assessment of financial institutions and financial services in this province, that would be quite useful. If not, is he willing to undertake one in the near future? Again, this industry has grown, and it's an industry that affects everybody. Some people might argue that it's even an essential service. As an essential service, as we do education and health care and long-term care and things like this, everybody uses banking. Everybody needs a bank account. We all carry debit cards. We all have accounts. This is basically something that is not like the old days when it was sporadic and far between.

Just two simple things. I am inclined to support the extension of the ATB for the continuation of the excellent work they do. But, you know, minor things to really shed light on this issue, and I'm approaching it as a layman, as I always do: why do we need to do this every five years, and why can't it just be in legislation, that is reviewed in committee where people can ask more questions and seek more information?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll be brief. It's a privilege to stand up and speak to Government Motion 14 on the continuance of the Alberta Treasury Branches. I'm very much in favour of it. From rural Alberta and just to comment to the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung: it is very much alive and serving Albertans, especially in the small, rural areas where there are no other banks. That's where the roots are, where it started. It's still very much there.

I have to praise the management of the Treasury Branches that they are able to continue those services in rural Alberta and to expand and to give those benefits in the big cities as well. The banking business is very competitive in Alberta. There's lots of banking going on, and there have been lots of amalgamations, whether it's the credit unions or in other areas, but I'm very pleased to stand up in this Assembly and to concur with the Alberta Treasury Branches Act. It does benefit Albertans, especially rural Albertans. I appreciate the fact that it's brought here every five years to be addressed and to have the concurrence of this Assembly, and I very much support it.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance to close the debate.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all the colleagues for the comments. A couple of the issues that were raised during this debate had to do with TILMA, had to do with the potential on the credit unions.

First of all, TILMA will essentially have no effect on the Alberta Treasury Branches as there is no similar entity in British Columbia. So it will have no effect. When it comes to the credit unions, there is some issue. For example, the credit unions in British Columbia and Saskatchewan potentially have other opportunities to sell insurance, to do several other things that our credit unions do not by statute, so that is something that we are working on. We do not want other credit unions coming into Alberta and having services that ours are not mandated to give, so that is something that we are considering.

Mr. Speaker, more importantly, I do want to draw the Assembly's attention to exactly what this motion says. What this motion says is that if this motion is defeated, then the Treasury Branches Act will be repealed, and the Treasury Branches will be no more. So this is a very important vote that we have here today, and I would certainly urge all members to concur with this motion, that states: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act." If we vote this one down, that act is thereby repealed, and the Alberta Treasury Branch as an entity is finished. So I would certainly ask the Members of the Legislative Assembly to agree with this motion.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Second Reading

Bill 3
Climate Change and Emissions Management
Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate March 22: Dr. B. Miller]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to participate in debate on Bill 3, which is the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, as sponsored by the hon. Minister of Environment. The environment, of course, is the buzzword now. Everybody is talking about the environment, and everybody is trying to jump on the environment bandwagon. Why is the environment so important, and why do people worry about the future of the planet and what impact we are having on Earth?

People talk about climate change, Mr. Speaker, and they talk about things like global warming and things like that. Climate change is an array of things. It's a group of phenomena or a group of certain things that are happening right now that people are becoming more anxious about and more worried about, all related to the consumption and production of fossil fuels. It's not a new phenomenon. It has been occurring, but it's been intensifying and getting worse.

Now, as a layman myself, I did a little reading into climate change to see where I stand on this issue. I reached the conclusion that it means more than temperatures rising. It means more than global warming. When people talk about temperatures and they say, "You know, this has been one of the worst winters we've experienced; winter doesn't want to leave us, and we've had snow for six months," they're oversimplifying the issue. They say: where's global warming when we need it? The issue is not just rising temperatures, but that is a main thing as well. We're talking about ice caps melting, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about deforestation. We're talking about certain species that are going extinct and habitat changes or destruction.

Now, the argument that you hear again being oversimplified in certain news media is whether it's man-made or whether it's a natural cycle. What if it's both? Or what if it's only a natural cycle, but man is not helping? Man is contributing to the acceleration of climate change either by being an active participant in causing climate change or being a passive bystander that is letting climate change happen. Either way, man has a responsibility to protect the planet. You can't really put a price tag on saving the Earth and ensuring that it's available for our children and our grandchildren in as pristine a status as possible. We're talking water, Mr. Speaker. We're talking air quality. We're talking soil, pollution, food production, and food safety. All of these things come to mind.

With this realization I also came to another realization, that anything we do is better than nothing at all. I know that this bill as presented doesn't achieve what myself and many of my colleagues in the Alberta Liberal caucus would hope it would. Again, do we agree with something that is a half measure, or do we not do anything at all? My approach is to offer conditional support, or offer qualified support, for this bill although my preference would be to implement what we in the Alberta Liberal caucus have advocated for quite a long period of time now with respect to absolute caps on emissions instead of intensity targets.

Now, if you allow me, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to walk through some of my arguments. Absolute emission is basically the term used to describe the total volume of emissions for a particular source, whether it's an exhaust system from a vehicle or a stack from an industrial facility. Emission intensity, on the other hand, which seems to be the preference of this government, is the amount of greenhouse gases released that are measured against another factor, such as GDP. It's actually a ratio or a proportion, so GDP of a barrel of oil or whatever other choice you make. A more fuel efficient car, for example, will have lower emission intensity than a less efficient model, but the two cars may still have the same absolute emissions if the more efficient one is driven further.

Let's talk about GDP, for example. One plant is spewing garbage into the atmosphere. If it's allowed to operate at three times the capacity or three times the volume that it used to before, now it's making a ton more money. In fact, its intensity targets are lowered, so basically it's either matching the requirement or even bettering it. Now we can give them an award for having reduced their intensity targets, but the end result is that they have actually caused more pollution. That's one example.

The other thing is the current rate of economic growth in Alberta. If it continues at this pace, then we are likely going to see a lot more pollution happening. We have to remember that the province's emissions actually rose by a large percentage. Analysts are saying that between 1990 and the year 2020 this could really amount to about a 72 per cent increase. So we can implement intensity targets all we want, but the end result is more garbage and more pollution.

It seems like this province is actually in a race against time to exploit every drop of oil and every tonne of bitumen that we can extract. Yes, it causes prosperity and, yes, it creates a lot of opportunities for Albertans, but we also have to be aware of the consequences.

Now, I am under the impression that my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View might be contemplating moving some amendments to this piece of legislation, and I keenly await his ideas and thoughts on this subject.

The other thing, too, is that there's also a consumer protection angle. In the second week of this Assembly reconvening for the Third Session, Mr. Speaker, I introduced Bill 202, which was calling for strengthening consumer protection in this province. It was unfortunately defeated in a division.

I'm also concerned about, you know, asking industry to pay for having not met their intensity targets. They then are likely going to off-load that increased cost in their operations onto the consumer. If there is any way we can ascertain that no unfair price increases are passed on to the consumer, that would be something I'm definitely going to be extremely interested in. There is no incentive for companies to do anything because if it costs them $15 extra per tonne of waste, they're just going to quite easily pass the $15 on to the consumers. The environment is no further ahead, and the consumers are no further ahead. The company is not really forced to do anything versus an actual hard cap that comes with penalties for failure to comply.

Alberta is also the reason behind 40 per cent or so of the total industrial emissions in this nation, the highest in Canada, Mr. Speaker, higher than any of the other provinces and territories. Being the worst culprit, if you will, I think it's the only responsible thing to do to be vanguards in environmental protection in this country. If we're causing the most damage, we should be taking the lead in trying to alleviate what we can and mitigate some of those negative effects. It just defies common sense that you're going to exploit and produce and create waste and create pollution, but then you're not really worried about the future. I think that if we are accused of being the worst polluters, we should also be commended, hopefully in five or six or 10 years, for being vanguards of environmental protection and being leaders in environmental reclamation and cleaning up, basically. We need to clean up what we have destroyed.

Another argument, Mr. Speaker: are we here on a pilgrimage, basically just moving through, or are we custodians? I think we are custodians of our planet. We are allowed to use some of it, but we are also expected to save most of it. The Alberta Liberal caucus is actually advocating absolute emissions versus intensity targets, as I mentioned, and our plan, as sponsored by my friend from Calgary-Mountain View, calls for the introduction . . .

Mr. Eggen: You have friends?

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. He is actually my friend, and I'm proud to be his friend, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. He has what it takes, and he understands the implications of not acting on environmental issues now. He doesn't want to wait.

In his plan he's talking about hard caps by the year 2012, which are absolutely necessary to achieve any real reductions and to have a positive and lasting impact on climate change in the near future. That's one thing, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing is leaving things in regulations. Again, this is a trend with this government, that everything is not left where it should be, in the statute itself or the law itself or the act itself. It's moved into regulations. One of the regulations in this is the specified gas emitters regulation, which has set out some new emission intensity targets and three options to achieve them for the largest industrial emitters, for the worst polluters, basically.

Regulations change. Ministers change and department heads change and deputy ministers change. So those regulations, the list of 100 or the club of 100, might be changed later to the club of 50 or the club of 25 or the club of 10. What assurances can we get that instead of just focusing on 100 now because it's sexy and attractive and people are expecting it, five years from now with certain pressure and certain lobbying this club might be shrunk to only 10? I think it should grow, and I think it should not be limited to just the worst emitters. Everybody from intermediate and up should be included in here because they all have an equal responsibility to clean up their acts.

Working with industry. I think it's necessary that industry is on board, but industry has also indicated that they are willing and ready.

The government has to offer the incentives and the carrots and then potentially also show the stick and wave it for those industries to start to comply. Industries by far are good corporate citizens within the framework of the laws and the statutes of the jurisdiction they work in, so I think we should create the environment for them to be exemplary. We should really create the environment for them to take the lead and show other people and show other jurisdictions and show the world what can be done in Alberta and how Alberta is unique.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will retake my seat. I look forward to participating at the latter stages of debate. Thank you for your indulgence.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any comments or questions?

There being none, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in support of Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. Bill 3 builds on Alberta's leadership position on the management of greenhouse gases. I think we should be very proud that in 2002 Alberta was the first province to introduce climate change legislation. We were also first among the provinces to initiate the reporting of greenhouse gas emissions by large industrial emitters.

This act balances the growth of Alberta's economy with environmental sustainability by requiring industry through regulation to reduce their emissions by 12 per cent starting July 1 of this year. To achieve this target, industry can make improvements to their operations or buy an Alberta-based offset to apply against their total emissions or contribute to a new fund that will invest in technologies to reduce greenhouse gases in Alberta. These provisions were laid out in the specified gas emitters regulation. This is the right direction for an energy producing province, I believe. Alberta's overall emissions are obviously higher as a result of its energy production.

To push for an absolute cap or cut on emissions at this time would cause grave economic consequences. Cutting emissions intensity allows industry the capacity to invest in the development of technological solutions to climate change, and that is where the real solutions to the control of greenhouse gas emissions lie. The development of such technology will have the impact of getting long-term reductions in greenhouse gases as opposed to transferring wealth out of Alberta to purchase carbon credits in the world market.

Now, developing technology at home creates jobs in Alberta and uses Alberta expertise from universities and research facilities to its fullest potential. Alberta is in a very good position to move forward with new research and innovation. Innovation is a strong pillar in the government's 20-year plan, and we have research agencies such as ASRA, the Alberta Science and Research Authority, various research institutes, the Alberta Research Council, Alberta Ingenuity, and strong research programs at our universities. We are strategically organized to move ahead, and I will push for government and industry to invest more in developing new and better technology to control greenhouse gas emissions and, therefore, global warming. Without this emphasis, intensity reductions alone will not be enough to address greenhouse gas emissions and control of temperature.

Finding real solutions to greenhouse gas emissions was one of the goals of the COP 12. That is the committee of parties 12 environmental conference, that took place in Nairobi, Kenya, this past November. I had the opportunity to attend the conference on behalf of the government of Alberta. The conference was an excellent opportunity for Alberta's position on climate change to be promoted on the world stage. That position was one of research and new technology to reduce greenhouse gas emissions into the atmosphere and capture and storage of carbon dioxide before it is released into the atmosphere.

During the conference I learned about the progress of other countries in handling climate change. In particular, Japan encouraged all countries to think about adding new tools to the Kyoto climate change tool box. Using new approaches allows the world to think beyond the Kyoto protocol of close to 10 years ago. One example is the Asia-Pacific partnership on clean development and climate change involving China, India, Australia, Japan, South Korea, and the United States. This agreement focuses on working with the private sector to develop ways of mitigating greenhouse gas emissions without destroying or severely impacting the economy. It also encourages investment in the development of clean energy technology. In that regard the direction of the Asia-Pacific partnership is similar to Alberta's approach to managing climate change as outlined in Bill 3.

The COP conference also showed that Alberta has an opportunity to develop technologies, such as carbon capture, that can be sold to other countries. I think that is why Bill 3 along with a specified gas emitters regulation will place Alberta at a real advantage. If we can develop climate change solutions in Alberta, it allows us to be in a leadership position here and abroad. It's rather interesting that the recent California climate change plan builds on the principle of technology export to other countries.

I was very pleased to attend the COP conference and, frankly, believe that Alberta's position on advancing technology options to mitigate or control the real impacts of climate change was well received and of interest to many delegates.

In closing, I believe that Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, and the specified gas emitters regulation build on Alberta's proud tradition of leadership on climate change. By embracing intensity reductions and increasing our investment in research and innovation relative to technology, we have the best chance of maintaining a strong economy and using the resources from it to attain in time absolute reductions.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I just have been hearing so often this same refrain of Alberta being the first province, la-di-da, to put in some legislation in regard to carbon dioxide emissions. You know, if you're putting together something that, in fact, is deliberately . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, are you rising under Standing Order 29(2)(a) for comments or questions?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I was referring to the comments made.

The Acting Speaker: You were wanting to ask a question of the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose?

Mr. Eggen: Yes. That's right.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Proceed.

Mr. Eggen: If you're making intensity targets as the guide, I would like to ask the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, respectfully, if he,

in fact, expects that to be converted into absolute reductions and how? You know, my understanding is that as the intensity targets increase, the absolute emissions increase as well, so it becomes a difficult if not impossible thing to put those two together, and I would suggest that this, in fact, is deliberately deceptive.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you. I think that if the hon. member was listening, and I assume that he was, my point was that the end result should be absolute reductions. I believe that to be the case, but to get there, I believe that we must embrace intensity reductions along with putting a lot of resources into technology research and new technologies in order to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. If we don't do that, we have no resources to put into research and technology.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, respectfully, it's as though you want to go on a diet by eating more somehow. You know, you create the situation where you want the public to believe that they are getting reductions, but in fact you're getting intensity increase. You're getting absolute increase. So I would just expect and ask if we could have clarity from now on that this is only intensity reductions; it's not absolute reductions. I share the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose's desire to have absolute reductions, but then why don't we just do it?

Mr. Johnson: I believe that I've made my point. Once again, I believe that absolute reductions is the end result, but perhaps we would travel down different roads to get there.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, of course we're all interested in having an absolute reduction, but I wonder if the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose would agree that there should be some liability with the end user. What's currently happening is that the province of Alberta got the liability for the exploration, the drilling, all of the manufacturing of the gasoline and diesel fuel, yet it's exported to another location, and then a lot more emissions are produced. Wouldn't it be fairer if, in fact, the end user was taking a lot of the liability for the emissions, not just us in Alberta as we produce the product?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Johnson: Yes, that is a very good question. Frankly, I don't know why there hasn't been more attention drawn to what the member has just stated. I believe that there should be much more attention paid to the consumer in the end, and I don't think it's fair that Alberta should be penalized just because we are the producer. So I think you raise a very, very good point. I hope that there'll be more discussion around that very point as we move on to committee and third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, did you want to rise on questions and comments?

Mr. Cao: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just want to ask the member or maybe get some idea – let's say that I have a plant in production and my emission is at this level, and now there is an intensity reduction because my production capacity is already at 100 per cent. Then when the law asks me to reduce intensity, that becomes absolute reduction for my plant. Is that perspective correct? Can you comment on that?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you have about 30 seconds.

Mr. Johnson: Well, yes. I guess that would be the case if you were at the maximum, but I imagine that there would be opportunity to improve your plant or change your plant so that there would actually be ways of producing more. If that were the case, then I think that the intensity reductions would apply.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a few comments about the rate of development. It seems to me that this is what the crux of this debate is about. I mean, clearly, when we're talking about intensity, I think that we would all agree, even the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, that for the time being if we're just controlling intensity, it's clear that the amount of CO₂ going out is going to be greater. I don't think there's any argument about that. He may think that down the way all this technology will come forward. It might not. We're talking about a long ways down, even if we do get the technology.

The one thing that we do control is the rate of development, and that's what's causing so many problems in the province today: the overheated economy and, as a result of the overheated economy, more oil and gas, more tar sands to get in the American market as quickly as we can. Obviously it has implications for the environment, but it also has implications for all of the other things that we've been talking about in the Legislature in the last few days while we've been here; i.e., housing, health care, you name it. It's all part of this overheated economy.

The only thing that we can control, that we have authority here to do – I believe and many others do that we need to slow down this pace of development for the time being. We've called in the short term for a moratorium on development so we can catch up with our social and physical infrastructure. If we control the pace of development, it certainly will have some impact on how much CO₂ we're putting out. I think the bill says about a 50 per cent intensity reduction based on 1991 emission levels. At a 4 per cent growth rate, say, the total emissions will rise by 66 to 83 per cent above 1990 levels in the next little while. I mean, that's the reality of what we're facing.

I don't think, you know, that overnight we can stop it all, but certainly we can take a look – and the Minister of Energy is over there – at the new projects coming on, not the ones that are there. We move ahead. People are beginning to ask: well, who is benefiting by this? We're hurting the environment. Our rents are going up. Health care is in trouble. We can't keep up with the social and physical infrastructure. So what's it all about? Clearly, the Americans want us to do this, and I expect the federal government does. But that's what we can control right now: that pace of development. I think that's the major thing that we should be looking at.

In terms of the intensity reduction – and I don't know if the minister is here – this bill may be redundant, depending on what happens federally, because we're aware that the parliamentary committee, much to the chagrin of the federal Conservatives, has passed a bill. We don't know what's going to happen with that, whether it might trigger an election or not, or whatever, but if that bill came forward and was passed in the House of Commons, our bill would probably be redundant or superseded because of what they've done. So that'll be an interesting development as we go along in terms of debate on this particular bill that we're facing. If that bill is passed ahead of this one, this probably doesn't mean much, then, because federally they would be controlling it.

Again I would say, regardless of that, just to conclude, that I think that it's the pace of development that is a concern. It's a concern with the environment, as I said, with our social and physical infrastructure, making it very difficult for ordinary Albertans right now.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to ask questions of the hon. member about where he thinks the government's role is in providing incentives and appropriate disincentives that would help move us more quickly along the line to absolute reduction in emissions.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a combination, I think, a combination of things. I'm talking, first of all, about the pace of development. We have to recognize that we have to do something there. Then if we're going to take the technology rather than some of the pipe dreams about pipelines and CO₂, I think alternate energy. We should be giving tax incentives. We've called for Alberta to maintain its role, if you like, as the energy capital but to start to move towards alternate energy as quickly as we can. So I think there are a lot of things that we can do, but as long as we're keeping this pace of development, even if we're giving the money for alternate energy, we'll still be falling behind with CO₂ emissions. So it's a combination of both things, I think, hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to join the debate on Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. I want to provide, first of all, some historic work that Alberta has done to show that Alberta is a leader across this country in trying to address climate change and greenhouse gas emissions. This bill in itself is another first for Alberta and for Canada, and I don't know if everybody really realizes that. Certainly, I've heard some comments that the federal government may be coming out with their own emissions and greenhouse gas legislation or targets or whatever might be coming from them. But, you know, Alberta has always been a bit of a leader, knowing full well that a lot of the emissions and our economy are based on the oil and gas industry and what we provide all across North America.

In view of this, 10 years ago, in February of 1998 Premier Klein, a former Premier of this province, named Canada's first cabinet committee on climate change, which consulted with stakeholders from the academic, environmental, industrial, and business communities about Alberta's response to global warming. In October of 1998 Alberta announced its strategy for action on climate change, a plan that was well received throughout Canada. Then in 2003 the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act passed by this government made Alberta the first province in Canada to set out a legislated framework to implement our climate change action plan. We were the first province to require large industrial emitters, who produced about 70 per cent of our industrial greenhouse gas emissions, to report those emissions. The bill that we are discussing today would not have been possible if we had not taken the initiative and led the country on this issue.

I commend the minister for his approach with this bill. It balances what is technologically and economically achievable for our large industry emitters with the need to protect our environment. This bill will allow all Albertans to enjoy both a clean, healthy, natural environment and the benefits of continued economic prosperity. Because of this government's planning and progressive legislation like Bill 3, I think we can all at least say a very good start is being made in Alberta's future.

I have another reason to be confident of that as well, and that is the government's record of environmental stewardship. As co-chair of Alberta's Climate Change Central I have seen first-hand how the government's leadership on this issue has already made a difference in our environment. I'd like to just point out a few of those programs that have been put in place by Climate Change Central that show that we have been leaders for quite a while.

Climate Change Central, or C3, is a uniquely Alberta way of responding to global climate change and its impacts. It's a public/private partnership of government, businesses, and other stakeholders who are interested in pursuing greenhouse gas reduction initiatives, that has been operating since 1999. C3 has financed feasibility studies for innovative projects like using waste heat from a new power plant to heat buildings in Grande Prairie. Projects like this one cut fuel consumption and ultimately greenhouse gas emissions.

In 2001 Climate Change Central hosted western Canada's first greenhouse gas emissions trading simulation, allowing industry, government, and environmental groups to experience a simulated greenhouse gas trading environment. Exercises like this have helped these groups prepare for initiatives like this bill that we are discussing today.

Since 2003 the ME First, a municipal energy efficiency program led by Climate Change Central, has invested $30 million in interest-free loans to 60 municipalities. Projects like retrofitting traffic signs and recreation centres and upgrading heaters and furnaces in municipal facilities to energy efficient models have saved municipalities $2.8 million annually but, more significantly, have reduced those municipal environmental footprints.

In a similar vein, Climate Change Central's Alberta Plus initiative gave over $600,000 in grants to Alberta municipalities for pilot projects exemplifying energy efficient design and construction. From 2004 to 2014 these projects will pay for themselves five times over, saving municipalities more than $3 million in energy costs and cutting greenhouse gas emissions by 24,000 tonnes.

In the past four years Climate Change Central has also partnered with the government of Canada to offer the pilot emission removals, reductions, and learnings initiative. This innovative program uses a competitive auction process to allow potential bidders to propose, for instance, reducing their greenhouse gas emissions by 100,000 tonnes between 2003 and 2007 at the price of a dollar per tonne. If this bid is successful, PERRL will pay the seller $100,000 over the five-year period.

For a modest total investment of $15 million, this program has explored ways to reward climate change action in sectors that may not have a financial or regulatory reason to reduce their emissions. It has helped us test four strategies that Bill 3 will encourage on a much wider scale, including capturing and combusting gases from landfills, capturing CO₂ and storing it in geological formations and biological sinks, and developing renewable energy sources.

Climate Change Central has allowed Alberta to lead the way on climate change with innovative local projects as well, including a student/teacher initiative at Cochrane high school that has installed solar panels and a wind turbine at the school to provide electricity. The Mow Down Pollution event, that was sponsored in part by Climate Change Central, helped get polluting lawn mowers off our grass. This sounds like a small measure, Mr. Speaker, but in fact they have told me that a typical two-stroke, 3.5 horsepower gas mower produces as much pollution in one hour as is produced by a new car being driven 550 kilometres. Events like these have helped show Albertans how simple changes can make a significant contribution to reducing greenhouse gas emissions and improving air quality.

At Climate Change Central we've also carried out several education campaigns to raise Albertans' awareness of the emissions their vehicles produce. Vehicle emissions are one of the largest sources of greenhouse gases and smog. They have an effect not just on our planet but also on our health because at high levels they can cause asthma attacks, bronchitis, chest pain, and decreasing lung function.

In our homes Climate Change Central has offered rebates to people who upgrade to more efficient appliances. We have offered rebates of up to $300 to homeowners who replace their furnaces with Energy Star qualified models, which are about 30 per cent more efficient and can save consumers about $400 a year. We've also offered rebates of $50 to upgrade washing machines to Energy Star qualified models. For an average family of four, these models will reduce the utility bill by about $150 and water consumption by 33,000 litres and greenhouse gas emissions by up to one tonne.

Mr. Speaker, I think the record of Climate Change Central demonstrates how this government is committed to helping Albertans, our municipalities, and industries address greenhouse gas emissions. We clearly recognized years ago that greenhouse gas emissions were a problem, and because of this recognition, today we are well positioned to address it with initiatives like Bill 3.

Climate Change Central is also proof that public/private partnerships work. Our partners in industry, business, municipal governments, and the federal government have contributed funding and expertise that have made our projects a success. Individual Albertans have also been key partners, willing to try innovative solutions to the problem of greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Speaker, while Climate Change Central has done a lot to help address emissions across Alberta, this government is also making a number of efforts to ensure that its operations are energy efficient and sustainable. For the past two years 90 per cent of the electricity used in government facilities has come from green power sources, including local sources like wind power from Pincher Creek and biomass from Grande Prairie. New government buildings are constructed to the leadership in energy and environmental design, known as LEED, silver standard. When you go look at a LEED building, you know and understand that the construction has been done under certain standards. As a matter of fact, the MLAs from Lethbridge, both east and west, and myself were in the latest LEED building at the University of Lethbridge, where their aquatic centre and their physical education centre is now a LEED building. This is a widely recognized and highly regarded standard for sustainable buildings. Other government-owned facilities have been retrofitted under the energy retrofit program, saving Albertans $5.8 million and reducing our annual greenhouse emissions by 58,000 tonnes.

We're also finding a number of initiatives that have the potential to offer us huge payoffs both in money saved and in greenhouse gases not emitted. Last year Alberta Agriculture dedicated $239 million in funding to help develop bioenergy in Alberta. Alberta Energy is now offering up to $200 million in royalty adjustments to find innovation in energy technology. Alberta Environment and our pioneering Alberta Energy Research Institute are leading a $25 million project to evaluate the long-term reliability of storing carbon dioxide in geological formations.

Mr. Speaker, addressing climate change requires strategies for emissions reductions, adaptation, energy efficiency, and conservation. This government and C3 are leading the country in all of these areas. I've seen the great work that they've done with Climate Change Central, and I'm so pleased to support Bill 3 today in second reading. This will help produce the next step in our climate change strategy.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any comments or questions?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak for a few moments on Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. Mr. Speaker, I had a rather eye-opening conversation with one of my sons the other day on the topic of climate change. He asked me if I was at all concerned about all this climate change stuff. I was a little surprised and almost a little hurt by his question. Now, to my way of thinking, what he was saying was that by the time the full effects of climate change are felt, I'll just be a grumpy old man in a seniors' centre, running out the clock while the whole world crumbles around me.

An Hon. Member: If you're lucky.

Mr. Tougas: If I'm lucky. Thank you. To live in a seniors' centre?

An Hon. Member: To get to run out the clock.

Mr. Tougas: To get to run out the clock. Okay.

So I told him that despite my obviously advanced age – and when you're 22, everybody over 30 looks very old – climate change is a great concern to me. It's his primary concern, not health care, not the economy, not crime but climate change, as it is with a lot of people his age. He knows, as I know, that everything we do today – everything – will have an impact on the Earth. I'd like to leave this Earth in robust good health. After years of heated argument over whether or not climate change is caused by human activity, even the most stubborn flat-earth types now admit that climate change is happening and that human activity is most certainly the cause.

Now, a landmark United Nations report released a couple of months ago reported that it is very likely that global warming can be directly blamed on the increase in greenhouse gas concentrations and that it is extremely likely that climate change over the past 50 years can't be blamed on anything else. That's very compelling evidence, and except for a handful of far right wing media types who see some sort of shadowy conspiracy to rob us of our SUVs, climate change has become the issue of the 20th century. That was for you, Dave.

Mr. Taylor: No. That was for the other Dave.

Mr. Tougas: Yes. Somebody named Dave will appreciate that.

With that in mind, I must compliment the government on actually addressing this vital issue. Despite the government's official statements I have no doubt that the ruling party harbours a number of climate change doubters, so I'm glad that they have actually tackled this issue.

Am I wrong on that?

Mr. MacDonald: Which party?

Mr. Tougas: The ruling party.

Now that we've all agreed that climate change must be addressed, the question becomes: how do we best approach this crisis? Clearly, real reductions are the route to go, as my friend and colleague from Edmonton-McClung has already so capably pointed out.

Albertans are blessed to live on one of the wealthiest pieces of real estate in the world. Our wealth comes from the earth, whether it is farmed for food or drained of its natural resources. Our economy is based on hydrocarbons, which when used as fuel, release carbon dioxide, which is the leading contributor to climate change. Clearly, there is a lot at stake for Alberta, more so than for any other province in Canada.

Now, does Bill 3 address this problem? Well, no single piece of legislation will address the single most important issue of our time, but clearly we have to start somewhere. The people of Alberta want to see strong leadership on this issue, because it has truly exceeded health care in public concern right across the country, but I don't think Bill 3 is going to calm the fears of Albertans.

I do appreciate hearing from the Member for Livingstone-Macleod his rundown on Climate Change Central and what's been going on there. That was quite informative, although how much the public knows about Climate Change Central is an interesting point. A lot of what he was saying was news to me, and I've been paying attention to this. So perhaps the government should start putting more effort into letting people know what is available for the Marthas and Henrys of Alberta to get out there and help on the climate change problem.

Now, as I said earlier, I'm happy that the government has chosen to address this issue. Now that the truth about global warming has been accepted, which is in itself a giant step forward for this government, it is up to all members of this Legislature and the public to help put in place the best possible plan to address this problem. At heart, however, is our view that genuine reductions are the only correct way to go. Clearly, we cannot hold steady. We have to see real reductions in greenhouse gases, not a lot of paper shuffling that makes everyone feel good, as if they're doing something worthwhile.

As we've heard from previous speakers, we need to become aggressive on this issue. The climate change issue did not arrive fully formed overnight. Concerns have been raised about climate change for many, many years, and unfortunately those years are now lost to us. It's time to get aggressive on climate change, not passive. In the United States, for instance, the Democrats in Congress are bringing forward a bill calling for an 80 per cent cut in emissions by 2050. Now, the United States, which is the largest economy in the world, has the courage to consider real targets with real goals. We're talking reductions, not an emissions intensity approach, which is the emphasis of this bill.

Bill 3 calls for emissions intensity with a staged-in approach and the ability of companies to buy offsets from other industries and so on. Well, frankly, I'm a little suspicious of offsets, Mr. Speaker. It's a little like going to confession. You can commit your sins, but as long as you confess them, the slate is wiped clean. Now, the bottom line on Bill 3 is that there is nothing here that is going to lead to real reductions in emissions.

I think that overall the government is actually playing catch-up with the public and industry. Industry is ready to go with aggressive strategies to reduce greenhouse gases. The public is most certainly on board. The only player in this scenario who is not fully on board is the government. Alberta has to be the nation's leader in greenhouse gas reduction because Alberta, among all the provinces, is producing the most greenhouse gas emissions. So surely it's here in Alberta that we have to make the most creative and aggressive position to deal with greenhouse gases.

Now I'll admit, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not a scientist, and a lot of this is very difficult to grasp, but I have to ask the one question that we have to ask ourselves: is this the best we can do? Is this bill the absolute best that can be offered up to this House?

Now, during the coming weeks there will be a lot of debate about this bill, and it will no doubt be intense and genuine and, hopefully, civil. But, Mr. Speaker, simply put, this is probably the most important bill that we'll see in our time in the Legislature, and we have to get it right.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for any questions or comments. The hon. member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the remarks of my colleague and especially his comments about his son and the future. I wonder if his son had any suggestions. What would he consider to be responsible action from this generation to protect the environment and his future?

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to respond?

Mr. Tougas: If I could come up with a good answer, I would, yes. I haven't talked to him at any great length about his plans for it or what he sees as the possible solutions to climate change. I'm sure, though, that like a lot of young people he's looking at just about everything he does in daily life, as are a lot of people in this building right now. We start thinking about whether we should be driving the car to the store or whether we can walk, whether we can ride a bike, whether we can do a lot of the little things and start cutting back.

It's important, as I mentioned earlier, that we start to engage the public in this debate. Industry, of course, is a major contributor, but everyone in this building today and everyone in this city makes a contribution to global warming. I think we really have to push further, not so much just the industry angle and the legislation, but we have to get the public more involved in this issue. I hope that the government will push that a little bit further. As we've heard earlier, there are some very good programs in place. We just have to let people know that they are actually happening.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on 29(2)(a).

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark's comments, I wonder whether he's aware, first of all, that Ontario, in fact, is by a considerable margin the largest emitter of carbon dioxide in the country, not Alberta as he had proposed.

Secondly, he spoke about the question of absolute reductions. I'm wondering what sort of a decrease in our living standards here in Alberta he would be prepared to tolerate if we were to shut down the oil sands or to cap them off and stop producing greenhouse gases. What sort of decline in living standards would be acceptable in order to achieve a zero increase in emissions?

Mr. Tougas: Well, first of all, if I got the information wrong regarding Alberta's emission rates or something, I apologize. [interjections] Yeah. If I'm wrong, I'll apologize.

I don't think that we have to look at it as shutting down all industry in Alberta in order to bring about real change. I mean, industry is clearly prepared to do a lot of things. They're very knowledgeable, and they have ideas that they can do things too. I don't think we have to shut down the province. For every action there's another reaction, so to speak, and if we can make some positive changes here slowly – I'm not saying we have to do this overnight. We do not have to shut down industry in this province to bring about real change in real climate change problems.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others?

Others wishing to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've not yet had the chance to speak on Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, in second reading. I know that many of my colleagues on all sides of the House have already spoken to it, and they have covered off a number of important points. I don't intend to go on at great length about this today. I think we will have ample opportunity to do that later on in committee. I understand that there will be some amendments coming forward, and I'm sure that they will be subjected to full and rigorous debate.

There is, of course, a great deal in this bill that we could debate. But I do need to speak to this concept of intensity targets as opposed to absolute emissions. Emissions intensities need to be spoken about regardless of who puts the most greenhouse gases into the atmosphere, whether it's Alberta, whether it's Ontario, whether it's the oil sands, whether it's coal-fired generating plants, whether it's consumers spending too much time in their automobiles, whether it's the cows in the field, although that theory has certainly been somewhat discredited, I think. Regardless, it's a shared responsibility, and we share a responsibility as legislators, as citizens, as consumers, as Albertans, as Canadians to do something real about reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Emission intensities really aren't real. Emission intensity targets are really illusory. Emission intensity is the amount of greenhouse gases released measured against some other factor. It could be GDP. It could be a barrel of oil. It could probably be anything you wanted to pick, actually, although you'd have to have some general consensus, I guess, from economists, which in itself, we're told, is an impossibility to get.

There's a good analogy to be drawn here, I think, between emission intensity targets versus absolute emissions and the automobile, which is the source of a significant amount of greenhouse gases across this country, across this continent. The automobile, for all its problems, all its sins, is a considerably cleaner, more efficient, less polluting critter than it was 30 years ago. We've made great strides in the automobile industry in energy efficiency, emissions of all sorts out of the tailpipe, that sort of thing, so that if you were to take the car that you're driving today, Mr. Speaker, and compare it to the car that you drove in 1977 or, certainly, 1967, there would be no comparison. The car you're driving today is much cleaner, has much less negative effect on the environment. Even the SUV you drive today, I would submit, has less of an impact on the environment than a big gas-guzzling V8 Ford LTD or Chrysler Newport or something like that from a generation ago.

The problem is not, though, that that individual vehicle that you drive today is so much cleaner and so much more efficient than the vehicle you drove a generation ago or the vehicle your father drove. The problem is that there are so many more vehicles on the road today than there were in 1977 or 1967. Especially here in Alberta, there are so many more vehicles on the road today than there were in 1997 or 2002. Every day more people and more vehicles move into this province. So many of us now own two or three vehicles or, in the case of some, perhaps many, perhaps whole fleets, as opposed to a generation ago.

A generation ago cities like Edmonton and Calgary took up a lot less real estate, a lot less space. Their ecological footprints, the actual footprints that they make on the land, were much smaller, so it wasn't as difficult to get around. In many cases you could actually get around on public transit if you lived close enough to the core. You still can. The problem is that so many of our citizens in both Edmonton and Calgary live so far from the core, and they come into downtown every day to go to work and turn around every evening and go home.

You all saw, I'm sure, on the front page of the Edmonton Journal or the Calgary Herald, or perhaps both if you looked at both papers the day after the latest national census figures came out, the coloured maps that both papers did to show how populations have grown in metro Edmonton and Calgary since the last census. You would have noticed that in the inner city, in the core communities, populations have increased substantially in the last five years. In the extreme fringe communities, the absolute suburbs – we joke down in Calgary: the places where you need Montana or B.C. plates, they're so far from the core – populations have gone through the roof. Of course, you're measuring a brand new community of 10,000 people against a field that was there a year or so ago. Interestingly, in between the two there's this ring of mature suburbs, mature suburban communities, not quite inner city yet but getting there, where populations had been decreasing.

It's those new communities on the fringes that are so far away from the core that we haven't yet figured out a way to make public transit work in a sustainable, predictable, reliable fashion for those people. We haven't yet been able to figure out how to get the jobs to where the people live when the people live out in the fringes. They're the ones who need the two and three and four cars to get every member of their family who has a driver's licence back and forth from where they live to where they need to be. So we put a lot more vehicles on the road, burning collectively a lot more fossil fuel, emitting individually a lot less, whether it's in terms of harmful air pollutants or greenhouse gases, than their counterparts of a generation ago, but because there are so many more cars, emitting collectively a good deal more than the total fleet in Alberta or Canada or North America used to.

It's a bit like emissions intensities. You can even make an absolute emission in one of your plants or in one area of your plant, but as the plant has grown, as the company has grown, as the industry has grown, as the economy has grown, especially if you're going to measure your greenhouse gas releases against GDPs or a barrel of oil, then suddenly while you've achieved this illusory kind of artificial kind of made up Alice-in-Wonderland emissions intensity target, you're actually in absolute terms making things far worse.

You know, if the current rate of economic growth in Alberta continues from now right through 2020 – and, of course, we know that it won't. This is for example purposes, okay? That's kind of like saying in 1979, based on the number of people who had become Elvis impersonators since Elvis died, that by 1985 the entire population of North America was going to be Elvis impersonators. Okay? We know that that didn't happen. But let's just say for a moment hypothetically that we stay on a steady rate of economic growth in this province right through 2020. The province's emissions could rise to 70 per cent or higher above our 1990 levels by then even though we could still achieve the target of a 50 per cent reduction in emissions intensity. So we need to think in this House very seriously about that.

I'm sensitive to what members on the government side have said about the need to proceed on climate change legislation in such a way that we don't grind the economy to a halt or we don't even slow it down dramatically. It needs to be done with care and consideration and a lot of thoughtfulness. It needs to be done carefully, but it needs to be done. The rest of the world is starting to do it.

Industry always responds, I won't say better but I'll say less badly, to clear regulations imposed by government and imposed on all than it does if government says: well, you know, you've got the technology, so why don't you just volunteer to do this? Company A may be led by a CEO with a real social conscience who really would like to do that, but if he does that, if he uses his technology or the best available technology to meet voluntary targets, and the CEO of company B, who has no social conscience whatsoever, says, "Voluntary; I don't have to do it," then the CEO of company A has caused his company to pay a financial penalty, a voluntary carbon tax, if you will, for doing the right thing.

You shouldn't have to pay taxes for doing the right thing. You should have to pay taxes for doing the wrong thing if the nature of the tax, as I think we would probably all agree in this House a carbon tax would be, is essentially punitive to incent people to do something so that they don't have to pay the tax or to tax them if they don't.

So I'm sensitive to what members opposite are saying about the need to be careful not to throw the economy of this province into a tailspin by imposing restrictions or requirements that are too onerous on it, but it doesn't change the fact that we need to pursue absolute emissions. We believe on this side of the House that we need to be pursuing those absolute emissions by 2012, and emissions intensities are not going to get us there, not that I can tell.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder under Standing Order 29(2).

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I appreciate the member's comments in regard to the pressing necessity to deal with carbon emissions in absolute terms. The bottom line is, of course, as the hon. Environment minister has pointed out and yourself as well, that we're looking at perhaps a third increase in our carbon dioxide emissions within the next 10 years, and then you could see a 65 to 70 per cent increase with these intensity targets even imposed. The underlying reason for this is that we have a fivefold increase projected for the tar sands projects in Fort McMurray. So I would just ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie if he would be willing to support a moratorium on approval of new oil sands development to try to realize the absolute reductions that he would like to see.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time, no, not an absolute moratorium. I do think that we need to consider very carefully all the things that need to be in place before additional large-scale oil sands developments are approved. That is certainly something that the residents of Wood Buffalo and their municipal government have made very clear in the last several EUB hearings in calling for a moratorium or in calling for that particular development up for consideration not to be allowed to go ahead until this government puts in place the environmental, social, and infrastructure requirements to support that kind of development.

I guess, hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, that I see this almost over the short term as more of a capacity issue around what Wood Buffalo, what Fort McMurray, what other oil sands producing regions of the province can absorb in terms of the growth pressure. Ultimately, I do tend to support the notion that oil sands development should go ahead in what I would call a responsible, sustainable way. We probably don't have time right now to debate what that means necessarily, and I'm not sure that we all would agree or necessarily know exactly how to define that right now.

Another thing that we very definitely need to seriously consider is that as we develop the oil sands because there is a demand for that product world-wide now, and I am suggesting that we not continue to go flat out, gold rush mentality like we have, we need to be taking some of the proceeds, I think, from oil sands development – financial, economic, and otherwise, knowledge-based – and channelling that into the development of a renewable resource industry, a renewable energy industry, renewable alternative forms of energy not only for our own benefit and for the good of the planet but, you know, there's money in that, too, quite frankly. And I don't mind making a buck from time to time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering if the Member for Calgary-Currie could tell us. He has referred to the move to absolute emissions reductions, I presume is what he meant. What is his plan, and how do we achieve that? It's a laudable goal, I would certainly admit, but are we going to turn off all the coal-fired generating plants? Are we going to park all the cars and trucks? Are we going to turn off all the gas heating to our homes? Are we going to shut down the oil sands? Those four things together make up the vast majority of where these emissions are coming from, so which one of these four things are we going to do to reduce our emissions?

The Deputy Speaker: In 20 seconds or less, hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, and the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill – sounds to me a bit like one of my former callers – no, we're not going to do those things, and we're not going to be alarmist either. A very short answer: best available technology should be three words that drive us going forward. So we're not going to shut down . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. The time for Standing Order 29(2)(a) has elapsed.

Are there any others who wish to participate in the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

head: Consideration of His Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Ducharme moved that an humble address be presented to His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To His Honour the Honourable Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 22: Mrs. Mather]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to respond to this year's Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne typically tells us where the administration wants to take us and which plans it has to achieve the outcomes it desires. This year's speech was titled The Future Is Now: A Plan for Alberta. Nice try. Albertans know that this government did not have a plan for at least the last decade, and it still doesn't. It may want to have a plan, it's likely scrambling to develop what looks like a plan, but so far it doesn't actually have one.

There is no plan to manage growth and ensure sustainability, there is no plan to save for the future, there is no plan to protect Alberta consumers, there is no comprehensive land-use strategy, and there is, certainly, no plan to protect our planet or to minimize damage to the environment. This government has ideas or projects, but they're all loose pieces with no glue holding them together. Former Premiers Lougheed and Klein even confirmed and admitted this openly.

The Future Is Now: well, at least that's a start, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, this administration is finally getting its head around the notion that good governments plan and that they plan more than a year ahead. They actually plan for 10, 15, 20, and even 30 years or more. The speech tells us that the government will act thoughtfully and decisively on behalf of Albertans. The government of Alberta will govern with integrity and transparency, manage growth pressures, improve Albertans' quality of life, provide safe and secure communities, and build a stronger Alberta.

So let's see now: integrity and transparency. Mr. Speaker, that's a joke, except that it's not a funny one, and people can see right through this. This is the same government which just less than one year ago in this House forcefully passed its outrageous and disgusting secrecy and opacity piece of legislation called Bill 20.

This is the same government which stuffs potentially damaging or embarrassing documents and other things into what they loosely call a "ministerial briefing binder" to hide things from Albertans. This is the same government that hides these things for five years. Even our Privacy Commissioner didn't like this and commented on it.

This is the very government which now conceals the findings of internal audits for 15 years, which, I have argued previously, is like three or four government changes. So, yeah, some openness.

This is the same government which invoked time allocation twice last year during debate on Bill 20 when they felt that the public was starting to question their motives. Closure, or time allocation, Mr.

Speaker, is a sign of despair, and this government was desperate in its need to stop the criticism and kill the debate. It was particularly frustrating that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, who was himself an opposition member at one point, volunteered or was 'volun-told' to defend the government's position and try to explain away its embarrassing decision.

You know, thinking about this, the current Premier, his Minister of Finance, his minister of health, his Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, all of whom talked the talk about openness and transparency as PC leadership candidates during the latest Tory race, chose not to walk the walk. They all voted to shove Bill 20 down our throats and pretended that it was business as usual. Actually, this entire cabinet, with its 18 ministers, either stayed quiet or spoke in favour of Bill 20 last year.

This is not a surprise to me, Mr. Speaker. This is a government which wins cloak of secrecy awards. The audacity is unbelievable. So spare me the that was then and this is now argument, and please don't refer to yourselves as Alberta's new government because there is nothing new about you. The only thing that is new is new letterhead and business cards advertising who does what. Otherwise, it's the same old deal.

What about patronage, Mr. Speaker? Didn't we Alberta Liberals ask to have an appointments commission or a board to oversee public appointments and to offer the transparency and the safeguards required? Why did this very government – and there's nothing new about them – reject this idea? I will tell you why: because they think they can get away with it.

What about the lack of accountability? What about refusing to share with the voters, you know, who voted for whom during that race? It was mentioned in this House that this is a party matter and it shouldn't be brought up, but in the essence and in the true definition of accountability and openness this is something that people are asking about.

What about the trend to prefer verbal over written, from paying for verbal advice from people like Kelley Charlebois and Rod Love to making verbal promises to break environmental law and to carry on interbasin water transfers just because a megamall and a racetrack asked the right government person at the right time? What about the exorbitant and outrageous access to information fees and the unnecessary blacking out of information so that once citizens or the media or the opposition get back what they asked for, little of it makes sense?

Mr. Speaker, my advice to the government members is: please don't kid yourselves. Please know that Albertans are not going to buy this brand that you're trying to sell us. You had your chance, and you blew it, so move on.

Managing growth pressures. Yeah, like getting 12-year-olds to work in restaurants and bars. Now, to be fair, kudos to the Premier for killing this idea dead in its tracks, but the fact of the matter is that the right hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing. The Alberta Liquor and Gaming Commission was, in fact, contemplating and planning, and you know they were really surprised that the government didn't go along. I find this quite puzzling and alarming.

Like importing temporary foreign workers to work here without first trying to find employment for Albertans and other Canadians. Even with those foreign workers, they're not true immigrants. Most of them come alone and leave their families behind. Most send the bulk of their paycheques back to their home countries, and they're sometimes mistreated or taken advantage of. When the employers are done with them, they're shipped back where they came from.

Also, I am really annoyed at the fact that the government's so-called plan seems to be, in essence, a make-work scheme to appease some government backbenchers, former ministers in particular, by giving them stuff to do and creating committee or task force opportunities for them to make some more money on the side. Take the Treasury Capital Planning Committee announced on March 22, 2007, to be chaired by the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Creek and with at least four ministers on it. Don't you guys sit in the same caucus room? Do you need another committee to be talking to each other, a committee that meets and has expenses and has staff? How much extra taxpayers' money will this translate into to compensate the former Minister of Education, who lost his cabinet post in the latest shuffle?

Improve Albertans' quality of life, the number two thing. What does it really mean, exactly: more consumerism, higher inflation, more pollution? What about social assistance programs and minimum wage? Ontario just this last week announced that their minimum wage was going up to $10.25. My question is: are we planning a similar move in this province?

Mr. Liepert: No.

Mr. Elsalhy: The Minister of Education is saying no. So he probably has inside information that we're not privy to.

This government talks about intensity targets, as was discussed earlier in the debate on Bill 3, to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, but the fact is, as we mentioned, that intensity ratios are based on GDP or other factors. So if these companies make more money and profit, they can match or exceed their intensity targets. The end result would be that more garbage is spewed into the air and lasting damage to the environment would ensue. Is this better quality of life for our children?

How about better quality of health care services? We have come to discuss many instances where less than adequate health services are talked about and incidents where the opposition and the public are defining what's happening as a crisis and the government is denying that it is and saying that everything is fine. How does that reconcile the government's claim to be trying to improve the quality of life for Albertans?

Typically, I would try to look for positive elements in any throne speech to try to not be completely critical, but today I'm finding this extremely difficult. It's a speech full of clichés and platitudes. You know, it might have been appropriate, it might have been something that was suitable for the '60s or the '70s, but this is the 21st century, Mr. Speaker, and it's time that we show leadership and offer better government. Albertans deserve nothing less.

Now, another example. Another make-work committee was announced on March 27, 2007: the community spirit fund committee, to be chaired by the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, who was formerly the minister of gaming and lost his cabinet position when the new Premier picked his team, and with seven Tory MLAs on it. Wasn't he the minister just a few months ago? Does he need to be recruited to a new committee to chair it to tell the new minister of gaming, which is now under recreation, parks, and culture, that he needs to do A or B or C? He can give that advice free of charge, and I don't think he should get paid to unseal his lips. Again, a prime example of waste and redundancy.

Providing safe and secure communities. The answer is simple in my mind, Mr. Speaker: more resources and better funding for our police officers to do their job and to start thinking about things like community asset building, which is something that the police chiefs are talking about, particularly in cities like Edmonton and Calgary. If we're only funding police services at about $16 per capita and everyone tells us that this figure needs to be at least doubled, then something needs to be done.

However, this government – and you probably agree – has a trend, and the trend is growing. It decides instead to strike a Crime Reduction and Safe Communities Task Force, as announced on March 21, which will cost taxpayers $1.5 million and – surprise, surprise – will be chaired by the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek, who was formerly the Minister of Children's Services and, again, lost her cabinet post in the latest shuffle. But she was also the Solicitor General at one point in the past, so she can offer this advice to the minister for free, I think.

We all know about drugs. We all know about alcohol, prostitution, domestic violence, gangs, knife crimes, et cetera. I don't think that this task force is likely to hear anything new, and I think that instead of saving this MLA and some of those committee or task force members money, we should have instead invested this in the recruitment and training and paying of the salaries of up to 15 more police officers to patrol our streets. It's priorities, Mr. Speaker. We don't need any more task forces.

Lastly, to "build a stronger Alberta." I don't know. It's a vague statement, sort of motherhood and apple pie. On March 20 the government announced the creation of the Alberta Investment Management Corporation and told us that it will give us improved organizational governance, increased flexibility, and opportunities for greater investment returns for Alberta savings, for public-sector pensions, endowments, and other funds. Now, isn't that already the work that is being done under the Minister of Finance? Is it needed? How much extra will this cost taxpayers? Who will be appointed to the board of directors? Will they be patronage appointments? How will these directors be recruited? Mr. Speaker, it's either common sense or the lack thereof.

My concerns and comments reflect a growing sentiment that this government has grown to be too bureaucratic and big on make-work task forces and committees instead of actually taking action and showing leadership. It's a government that's all out of ideas and tired.

Communications and propaganda arms of this government are currently the busiest of all agencies and departments. They're the only organs showing residual activity in this ailing, failing body. The Alberta Liberal caucus has a plan for this province, Mr. Speaker, and it does not involve the Public Affairs Bureau. Instead of spin and trying to explain to Albertans that we have a plan to have a plan, as demonstrated by the Premier's latest and first of three $200,000 brochures, we would instead implement our policies one by one, and people can see for themselves the kind of work ethic that the Alberta Liberals have.

Our first 100 days in office, Mr. Speaker, are going to set the stage for this province to have a sustainable, rewarding, and environmentally and people-friendly future, a future where homelessness is eradicated, dignity for the disabled is restored, social assistance and minimum living wages are indexed, taxes are kept permanently competitive, and public services are delivered at the best level in Canada. Albertans can have it all, and the Alberta Liberal caucus has the map to chart this future for them. From affordable housing to health, from quality child care to top-notch seniors' and long-term care, from superb K to 12 education to state-of-the-art postsecondary, from airtight consumer protection to real environment stewardship, we have a plan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments? The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: I just would like to ask the hon. member. This new, big Liberal machine that's going to sweep Alberta: at their convention in Calgary how many people attended?

An Hon. Member: They couldn't count.

Mr. Snelgrove: I can believe that.

Mr. Elsalhy: I thank the hon. minister of the treasury – President of the Treasury. You see, you guys have many names now, and nobody knows what exactly he does versus the Minister of Finance, for example.

Anyways, that's an interesting question, Mr. Speaker, because this is the same, you know, front bench that argued that party business is not to be discussed in this House. But I'm going to make the hon. minister extremely pleased to know that we had 29 incumbents and declared candidates who were there.

An Hon. Member: That's all?

Mr. Elsalhy: Well, we're better than the Tories. We're better than the NDPs. You guys are scrambling to find candidates. We have contested nominations. We have had the pleasure of the company of political scientists, people from all corners of the province, rural and urban, who were there to cheer us on and to wish us luck, some of whom were long-term Tories.

4:30

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Elsalhy: We have had 200-plus, yes, and it's a force to be reckoned with. Stay tuned.

An Hon. Member: Did you count the children too?

Mr. Elsalhy: There were no children.

Mr. Snelgrove: I just want to apologize for even bringing up their party in the House, Mr. Speaker. Sincerely apologize.

Mr. Taylor: We didn't even move a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister wishes to rise on (29)(2)(a)?

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. The hon. President of the Treasury Board is obviously so far ahead of his time, a visionary, that he had already anticipated that a point of order probably would have been raised, so he was able to counter that beforehand. That's why he's looking out the windshield rather than looking in a rearview mirror. We're moving ahead, this government, with our plan.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other participants, we'll move on to the next speaker. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to begin by thanking the hon. Lieutenant Governor for his commendable work this year since the last Speech from the Throne. I'm always impressed by his constant humour, style, and charm despite what must be a very taxing job. He is truly an example of the best that Alberta has to offer.

I would also like to offer my heartfelt thanks to everyone in my constituency, West Yellowhead. The past year has been a good one, though we had been tested by many challenges. The patient and hard work and community spirit of my constituents have done wonders for West Yellowhead. A thousand heartfelt thanks are due to the staff and the volunteers who have helped me with my work and to the many constituents who approached me with their concerns and their feedback. I look forward to another year serving with you and for you.

One more acknowledgement is due to our new Premier of Alberta. I'd like to join everyone in the House in offering my congratulations on his new role, and I wish him the best of luck in the coming years.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne set out a new direction for this government and for this province. It is an exciting direction that will ensure that our province continues to be a clean, safe, attractive, and prosperous place in which to live. The government's five priorities reflect the determination of all Albertans not to squander the opportunities we have today. I'm happy to see that many of the initiatives promised in this year's Speech from the Throne will have significant beneficial effects for all Albertans, especially those in West Yellowhead.

While we face many of the challenges as other areas of the province, we also have distinct challenges of our own. I believe the Speech from the Throne demonstrates this government's resolve to address these problems while also promoting local solutions to local problems. By committing to govern with integrity and transparency, this government has committed both to listening to Albertans' concerns and to improving the operations of government for all Albertans. This will in turn make government more responsive to Albertans' current and emerging needs, allowing our province to be prosperous in a sustainable manner for years to come.

The government has also committed to managing growth pressures. This is a particularly significant commitment for my constituency, West Yellowhead, where we are enjoying the benefits of our current prosperity while doing our best to ensure that no one falls behind. An excellent example of how this government is managing growth pressures is the Affordable Housing Task Force, which recently commenced its work. This task force held a session in my constituency in the town of Hinton. An impressive 70 people turned out to give their input, with 11 presentations being made to the task force. A turnout like this shows how much Albertans welcome this government's commitment to operating transparently and consulting with them. I'm looking forward to the release of the task force recommendations so that the affordable housing problem can be addressed as quickly and as efficiently as possible.

Hinton, like other communities, has faced difficulties in acquiring Crown land for expansion, but like other towns in West Yellowhead it's facing many greater difficulties because of their location in Alberta's green zone. Similarly, in Grande Cache high demand and fast growth has led to a shortage of industrial land. I've been working with both towns to obtain more land for expansion.

I'm also pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne that this government recognizes how our current economic growth is placing great pressure on our infrastructure. Having a long-term capital plan to address infrastructure needs and inflation costs will help our province expand in a prudent manner. However, while a long-term capital plan will be most welcome, the government is already doing much to help build and maintain our infrastructure. Just recently $13 million of funding was dedicated for development of the Edson health care centre. The government of Alberta also gave $3 million to the town of Hinton to upgrade three kilometres of town water mains, a grant that was matched by the federal government through the Canada/Alberta municipal infrastructure fund.

Reflecting Albertans' desire to develop their province in an ecologically sensitive manner, the Speech from the Throne has committed the government to an unprecedented set of environmental policies. Given that my constituency, West Yellowhead, is located in an area of the province that is particularly environmentally sensitive, I am happy to hear that Water for Life and the land use framework will be updated and completed.

My constituents are already working hard to protect the environment. Elk Valley Coal recently received the Alberta Chamber of Resources major reclamation award for its effort to reclaim the Sphinx Creek mining area. Those hundred reclaimed hectares will allow the channel to permanently sustain native rainbow trout while providing year-round habitat for grizzlies, elk, sheep, mule deer, and wolves.

Similarly, the Hardisty Creek restoration project was just awarded a forest stewardship recognition award from Wildlife Habitat Canada for its four years of effort to restore a fish passage from the Athabasca upstream to the Hardisty Creek. The Alberta government was one of the major financial contributors to this initiative through the community facility enhancement program.

Another priority the government identified in the Speech from the Throne is improving Alberta's quality of life. I'm glad that the government of Alberta is going to work hard to improve high school completion rates and increase access to secondary education programs. This will be beneficial to the students of West Yellowhead, where graduation rates have risen in recent years but are still below the provincial average.

Initiatives like registered apprentice programs will allow students to complete their academic education while working on their apprenticeship training and make a real difference in keeping some students in school until graduation. Having apprentices in training while they are completing their academic education also helps alleviate the shortage of skilled labour that is presently being felt across the province.

In my constituency, one company in particular has done an exemplary job of embracing apprenticeship training. A few weeks ago Edson's own Daniel's Welding Ltd. received the Alberta apprenticeship employees of the year award, sponsored by the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board and Alberta Advanced Education. Daniel's Welding received this award for its exemplary support of apprenticeship programs. Since 1986 this company has employed between five and 12 active apprentices while including two special-needs apprentices. It is companies like Daniel's Welding that will help make Alberta's education program a success.

Our economic success is not to be taken for granted, so government has committed to building a stronger Alberta. That we cannot take our prosperity for granted is clear in many areas of West Yellowhead where the mountain pine beetle has had a profound effect on our forest. The infestation hurts more than the lumber industry. Tourism draws thousands of people a year to my constituency, particularly to the town of Jasper. Should our beautiful forests be devastated by this blight, many businesses that rely on tourists will suffer. Within the Foothills area around Hinton, there's an estimate of almost 100,000 infested trees. The establishment of the institutes of agriculture, forestry, and the environment will help develop solutions to environmental sustainability challenges such as the mountain pine beetle and, therefore, are most welcome.

The Speech from the Throne also recognizes that we can improve our natural resources. Our coal is a serious business in West Yellowhead and, as part of Alberta's coal, is some of the cleanest in the world. Coal generation produces half of Alberta's electricity. I'm delighted that the Speech from the Throne committed the government to further address climate change, in part by developing a comprehensive energy strategy that will make full use of innovations such as near zero emission coal. Developing technologies like near zero emission coal will allow us to continue to develop our natural resources while protecting the environment.

The Speech from the Throne states that the "government will build on Alberta's traditional strengths, which include energy, agriculture, forestry, tourism, and the people of this province." West Yellowhead exemplifies all of these strengths. Coal mining, natural gas, timber, cattle, beautiful scenery, and hard-working people all make the region prosperous. My constituency is an excellent example of prosperity despite the challenges we have in Alberta today. With the plan for our province set out in this year's Speech from the Throne, I'm confident that we will succeed in addressing those challenges and continue to prosper for many years to come.

I look forward to the hard work with my government colleagues and my constituents to fulfill the promises made in the Speech from the Throne. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. I appreciate the commitment of that area to coal and its support for that region over the years. I guess that given the government's commitment to improving our impact on the environment and the climate change initiatives, I would like to hear from the hon. member how he views the approval of a new coal facility without carbon capture capacities. Is that appropriate given what we know about the future?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the coal in West Yellowhead, especially at Coal Valley Resources Inc., has some of the lowest carbon in the country, very little. The main reason it was built was because we used to ship it to Ontario Hydro. Since then Ontario Hydro has built mines in Pennsylvania that produce coal with a high sulfur content. Of course, there's lots of emission there. Then when you look at the property of the Cardinal River Coals operation, the other aspect with them, they had some of the highest coal content that they could ship across the world to all the coking plants in Japan and Korea. They were at a high level all the time with very low sulfur content.

Now with the new laws that the previous Minister of Environment in the last regime had brought in, we're doing that out in the area of Genesee and that, so we have very low content of CO₂. We've got scrubbers in there, so a lot of it right now the way we have it has less CO₂ emissions or the same as natural gas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's once more an honour to rise in this Assembly on behalf of the citizens of the Calgary-Nose Hill communities of Beddington Heights, Huntington Hills, Thorncliffe, Greenview, and North Haven. I thank them for entrusting me to be their voice in this House.

I wish to begin my remarks this afternoon by acknowledging the retirement since our last session of the former Premier. The government of Premier Klein over a period of 14 years accomplished much for the people of Alberta by eliminating the deficit and the provincial debt, by having the lowest personal taxes in the country, and by creating a business climate which has attracted people from far and wide to our province.

Mr. Speaker, on December 2, 2006, members of my party chose a new leader, who was sworn in as Premier on December 14, 2006. I congratulate the hon. Premier on his victory and on his government's first Speech from the Throne. The Premier has already demonstrated tremendous energy in giving Albertans and government members and, indeed, all members of this House an enhanced role in determining Alberta's future. He has also been accessible and available to Albertans in all parts of the province and engaged them in renewing our government's vision for the future.

Mr. Speaker, many challenges remain for us in the coming year. We need to preserve and improve the quality of our public health care, to improve education and training for our young people, to address the needs of our senior citizens and of those less fortunate, to sustain and enhance our environment and wildlife resources, and to manage the challenges of a rapidly expanding population and economy.

Just as public expectations of what public health care can and should do are increasing, so are the costs of providing those services. Changes in delivery of health care are necessary. We should continue to innovate in order to optimize both value for taxpayer money and health and wellness outcomes. However, we must ensure that whatever changes are made, we continue to ensure that timely access to quality health care is never dependent on financial means. Changes in the way we fund public health care are also inevitable. We need to reform a system of health care premiums which, despite the exemption of low-income earners and seniors, continues to be a regressive form of taxation.

Mr. Speaker, this government's priorities include managing growth pressures, improving Albertans' quality of life, and building a stronger Alberta. The key to these three priorities is to invest in education. To quote Aristotle, the fate of nations depends on the education of youth. Aristotle was right. If we build on our excellent education system now by recruiting and retaining excellent teachers and by ensuring that our students succeed to the fullest of their ability, we will help create a society and a heritage of which we can all be proud.

I urge the government to implement legislation already passed by this House, but which remains unproclaimed, making school attendance mandatory until the age of 17 years. This is one of many measures to ensure that young Albertans have the basic skills required for success in our knowledge-based economy. At the same time we can help young people who are at risk of failing through programs which support them and through providing enhanced learning and career choices appropriate to diverse individual aptitudes.

Mr. Speaker, in the field of postsecondary education and training we must continue to work towards the ambitious goals of increased access, which the government set out in its Speech from the Throne two years ago, of 60,000 new spaces by 2020. We also need to meet the demands of the workforce for educational capacity in certain critical fields, including health care providers, engineering, and skilled trades.

However, despite the immediate needs of industry we should not focus narrowly on those fields of endeavour which are only of immediate economic benefit. Our government should continue to support research and education in pure sciences, social sciences, the arts, and humanities, all of which make important contributions to our society.

Adequate and affordable housing for seniors and lower income Albertans is emerging as a priority for our government. In a tight marketplace some landlords have given tenants unreasonable increases in rents. Other constituents of Calgary-Nose Hill, faced with market values increasing on their homes, face steep increases in their property taxes.

Mr. Speaker, given inflationary pressures of over 5 per cent year over year in the city of Calgary we need to ensure that our health care and support systems respond to the needs of our aging population and allow seniors to live an independent lifestyle where possible. We must assist those who require home medical care and those who provide in-home care for spouses or other family members who are unable to care for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans rightly expect us to ensure that our natural environment is preserved and enhanced. What better way to serve the people of Alberta than by ensuring that public lands of our province are protected for the benefit and enjoyment of their children and future generations. By keeping our inventory of natural public lands intact, we preserve the beauty and splendour of our province. Resource exploitation from public lands must be done in ways that minimize long-term damage to ecological integrity inside and outside of our provincial boundaries. Land use and forestry plans and headwaters of our river systems must take into account the cumulative effects on forest ecosystems which help to retain water, reduce flooding, enhance water quality, support diverse biological systems, and provide esthetic and recreational values. Resource extraction should be restricted in some areas of special ecological value, including the Suffield national wildlife refuge.

Our water resources should be protected through a comprehensive, integrated policy of sustainable watershed management within the proposed land use framework. Such a policy must build on the Water for Life strategy. It must also recognize the cumulative effects of all land uses in the riparian, adjacent zones of our major watersheds from which we draw our drinking and irrigation waters. These integrated policies must regulate agriculture, forestry, industry, and development. These changes will not be without opposition because they will affect the rights of landowners regarding many aspects of land use.

New policies must recognize that the effects of land use may extend far beyond our provincial boundaries. Of special concern is the necessity to ensure that oil sands developments do not cause deleterious effects on downstream waters of the Athabasca River, the Slave River, the Great Slave Lake and the Mackenzie River. Future generations of Canadians will not forgive us if we do not preserve for them these irreplaceable natural treasures.

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to address some issues regarding the growth pressures which face us in the province of Alberta. While it is generally conceded that growth and population increases are good things, there may be limits upon which we are constrained, and therefore it may be reasonable to ask not whether we should be putting the brakes on increased development but whether we should perhaps take our foot off the accelerator. I would like to propose a few ideas which may help to sustain the prosperity of the province in the longer term.

First, I would suggest that the government should exercise restraint in infrastructure capital spending and set priorities in areas where bidding is competitive while maintaining the priority for building urgently needed hospitals and other health facilities.

Second, the government should restrain sales of Crown mineral rights and regulate the timing of further oil sands megaprojects in order to spread out and sustain oil and gas exploration, drilling, and oil sands construction activity in the province over the longer term.

Third, tax cuts may be deferred until such time as the economy has slowed to a more manageable pace.

Fourth, Alberta should not attempt to meet its shortage of professionals and skill trades by simply increasing salaries and recruiting workers from other jurisdictions. Those who are newly arrived in our province do not bring roads, bridges, hospitals, and schools with them. Increasing education and training opportunities for Albertans will provide long-term benefits to the province without the added infrastructure burden resulting from immigration.

Fifth, a major portion of nonrenewable resource revenue should be invested into the heritage fund. This endowment will ensure that the children of Alberta have a bright future.

Finally, Alberta must encourage growth and diversified economic development in the rural areas of the province. Expansion of industries such as tourism, alternative energy, and value-added agriculture would enhance the sustainability of rural Alberta and help relieve the pressures on our large cities.

Mr. Speaker, a combination of these solutions would reduce inflation, provide greater value for taxpayer money, and create more stable employment and industrial capacity, thus creating longer term prosperity for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the economic prosperity and resulting growth pressures which we face will continue to provide great challenges to Alberta, but despite these challenges we have a beautiful province blessed with natural resources and a standard of living, infrastructure, and systems of education, health care, and social services which are among the best in the world. By managing growth wisely, we will build a stronger Alberta, and I'm confident that from Wood Buffalo to Waterton, from Zama City to Etzikom, from the blue Canadian Rockies to the prairie grasslands Alberta will indeed continue to live up to its motto and be strong and free.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that all of us in this House may have the purpose and the will to work together for the benefit of the people of Alberta now and in the future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the comments of the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. He mentioned the idea, rather than putting on the breaks, of taking your foot off the accelerator. Would he like to comment on what he means by that in relation to the oil sands?

Dr. Brown: Well, I had no specific comments to make with respect to the oil sands. My comments were generally that we should perhaps look at staging some of the developments that are happening over a longer period of time.

The Speaker: Additional questions?

The last speaker I have on my list is the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-eight days ago we were summoned into this House to hear His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor read the Speech from the Throne. Of course, His Honour didn't actually write the speech. It is a long-standing British parliamentary tradition that the Queen or her representative merely read word for word the speech that the head of that particular government, in this case the Premier of Alberta, puts in front of them. I'm sure you've heard His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor speak many times at many events, and you can tell that he had no part in the writing of the throne speech because His Honour's speeches are not only vastly more entertaining than this one was; they also have a good deal more substance.

So what did we take away from that throne speech 28 days ago? Well, that the Premier has five priorities, and as you sift through and drill down and boil them down to their essence, I understand them to be these: mom, apple pie, baseball, sunshine, and puppies. Mr. Speaker, the people of Calgary-Currie love puppies too. In fact, I'd be surprised if there's another constituency in all Alberta with as many pet pooches per square kilometre as my constituency has. Last time I checked, most of my constituents and most Calgaryans, in fact, are pretty fond of sunshine too. We've got a preference for hockey over baseball. You might get some debate over apple pie versus strawberry-rhubarb versus pumpkin, I suppose. And most people do love their mothers. But they want and they expect and they are entitled to more from their government than this.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-Currie is a vibrant, growing, and generally prosperous inner-city constituency. It's probably safe to say that generally my constituents are more prosperous than they were when I was elected although that is due in part to the number of poorer constituents who have been forced out of Calgary-Currie by the housing boom, the real estate boom, and I'll talk about that more in a moment. So if you were a Conservative, I assume hypothetically, never having been one myself, you'd probably look around my constituency and say, "These people are doing great; they're doing fine; they've got nothing to complain about," which probably goes a long way towards explaining why my constituents chose a Liberal as their MLA. While the majority of people in my constituency may be doing pretty well financially – and some are doing fantastically well, beyond my wildest fantasies – they also recognize that there is more to life than money. They know that he who dies with the most toys still dies and that he is more likely to die if he is sick and cannot get into the hospital or be seen by a doctor.

My constituents don't understand and cannot condone a government that in the richest province in the best country on Earth makes us make do with a health care system that has the capacity for roughly three-quarters the population it now serves. My constituents don't understand why there was no commitment in this throne speech around the south health campus in Calgary. They don't understand why this government has dragged its heels on that commitment to the point that construction costs have now escalated hundreds of millions of dollars beyond the original budget estimate, and the opening date has now been pushed back from 2010 to 2011.

Heck, they don't understand why the south health campus wasn't built years ago. We needed it years ago. You could tell that we were going to need it years ago. You could tell we were going to need it when they blew up the General, and that was 10 years ago. You know, they're going to have an even harder time understanding why, when it does open, the south health campus will initially be 100 beds smaller than originally planned, why it'll have to open initially with just 250 beds rather than 350 and then keep adding 100 beds a year until at least 2014. They're going to have a hard time understanding why it has to be done that way: because we don't train enough doctors and nurses and lab technologists and other hospital workers, either in the city of Calgary or the province of Alberta generally, to staff more than a 250-bed facility initially when it opens in 2011, some six months late. They're going to have a hard time understanding that. They're going to have a hard time understanding why we couldn't see that one coming.

My constituents, who care passionately about postsecondary education, as they do about health care, as they do about many things, are pleased that at long last the government has approved the baccalaureate of nursing program at Mount Royal College. But they understand that more, much more, must be done to increase our capacity to educate the health care professionals that we need. The Calgary health region alone will need 37,000 staff, including 10,000 nurses and over 3,000 doctors, over the next 10 years to meet the demands of growth in the Calgary health region and to replace the retiring baby boomers who work for the region today.

My constituents do understand what's going on in Vegreville with the closing of most of St. Joseph's hospital because in 2007 and 2006 and 2005 and 2004 and 2003, apparently, a hospital in Alberta, in the richest province in the best country on earth, has failed repeatedly to properly clean and sterilize its surgical instruments. They understand that this sort of health care scandal is brought about by a lack of oversight directly attributable – directly attributable – to budget cuts and an ideological bent that money spent on oversight is money spent on frills. This is a government that has spent the last decade or more playing the actuarial odds. My constituents understand that. They don't condone it, but they understand it. I don't know if the Premier's constituents understand why he has thus far refused to meet with them face to face to answer their questions about this crisis in his constituency. St. Joseph's hospital is in the Premier's constituency.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents would like to know the government's plan on education, both K to 12 and postsecondary. They would like to know when Mount Royal College is going to become Mount Royal University. They would like to know when the communities that don't have schools in Calgary are going to get them and the communities that do have schools are going to get them fixed. You know, none of that was evident in the throne speech. Like most Calgarians they'd like to know why there are 40 communities in Calgary without an elementary school.

Of even more direct concern to my constituents is the plan, if any, for inner-city schools. Some of my constituents believe the poor physical quality of the school buildings we still have open in Calgary-Currie is affecting their children's health. Others worry about the notion of self-fulfilling prophecy because they've seen a number of schools close already. You know, the government won't properly fund school maintenance. Without the necessary maintenance the school gets run down. Parents see the sorry state of the school and figure: well, it won't be long before they close that one down too, just like they have so many others in the constituency, so I guess I'd better put my children someplace else. Eventually community leaders worry – and, Mr. Speaker, they do worry about this a lot in my constituency – because you need a school to attract young families, and you need young families and, in fact, people of all ages to keep a community vibrant and truly livable. But that school, the last one left in the neighbourhood, will close too.

I've spoken in this House before of Western Canada high school, an absolutely legendary high school not only in Alberta but right across the west. This great institution is falling apart around its students' ears. It desperately needs to be rebuilt, has needed to be for the last seven or eight years, and could have been done back then for a fraction of what it will cost today. For that matter, I guess it could be done today for a fraction of what it will cost by the time this government finally gets around to doing something about it. But, you know, it needs doing. The west block of Western Canada high school is literally pulling away from the centre block, and there's a crack about an inch wide that runs from ceiling to floor on the lobby wall next to the school auditorium. You stand there. You look at that. You don't think you're in a high school in Calgary.

You think you're in a high school in San Francisco or Los Angeles or someplace right after an earthquake. This needs doing, like so many other things in this province that need doing.

Still on education, this one crosses ministries from Education to Advanced Education. A constituent of mine wonders why Alberta's universities continue to insist on pure math 30 as a required course even for admission into arts and social sciences programs, where once admitted, students will never have to take another math class for the rest of their natural lives, when Alberta Education some years ago designed applied math 30 for that purpose.

Now the whole math curriculum is being redesigned. Alberta Education is trying to get buy-in from math professors to, you know, review the curriculum and make sure it works, and they're not even bothering to show up for that review because they know that it doesn't make any difference. I mean, the administrations are just going to do what the administrations are going to do.

They went through the whole dog-and-pony act of reviewing the math curriculum that we have today 10 years or so ago, when it was brought in, and it didn't make any difference. They said: yeah, applied math 30 will work just fine for arts and social sciences and humanities. And still the universities require pure math 30. Sure, pure math 30 is needed for degree programs that require the university student to do a lot of math, but you don't need pure math 30 to understand Shakespeare or to get the strategic concepts behind World War II or for much else in the nonmath, nonscience realm of postsecondary study.

No, the only ones who need pure math 30, other than those in those courses of study, the math and science heavy ones, are the universities themselves. They need pure math 30 as a gatekeeper course, a way to ration limited space, a way to ration access, a way to deny admission to otherwise qualified students for whom there is no room in our postsecondary schools in this province because the government doesn't take education seriously and hasn't done so for years.

While we're on the topic of strategic concepts around World War II, Mr. Speaker, I should mention an ongoing sore point at the Military Museums, formerly known as the Museum of the Regiments, in my constituency. It is currently undergoing, really, a pretty fantastic expansion that when finished will make it, in my view, the finest military museum in this country outside of Ottawa. But about the sore point. The Military Museums does a lot of outreach to school-age children, and they're wondering why our kids are receiving less and less education about this nation's military history. The history of both world wars has been removed from the Alberta curriculum in some of the younger grades where it was previously taught. The teaching of Canada's military history should be, they argue, and I would tend to agree, part and parcel of a broader heritage, citizenship, and social responsibility package. We can't possibly expect ourselves or our children to know where we're going if we hide where we've been.

Oh, and about the housing boom that I mentioned earlier, the average price of a house in my constituency is $635,000, or was last month. It's probably more now, because I know that the average price of a home across Calgary is now more than it was last month. It's now over $400,000 right across the city. Edmonton is not far behind. Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray: we know that they're right up there, probably even ahead of Calgary and Edmonton. Indeed, there's an affordable housing crisis in cities and towns all over this province.

In Calgary-Currie we used to have two kinds of constituents. We had homeowners, and we had renters. Increasingly, the two kinds of constituents we have these days are homeowners and the dispossessed, people forced out of their rental accommodations by skyrocketing rents twice, three times what they were paying before they got their notice. Or condo conversions: they're being forced out of their accommodations into a rental market with about a .2 per cent vacancy rate.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents simply want to know when we're going to get serious about creating affordable housing. By the way, that's not just my dispossessed constituents; that's my constituents who own those, in many cases, $635,000 and up houses, because they see what's going on around them. They see that we are not making the best possible use that we could of the fantastic wealth that we enjoy right now. So they want to know when we're going to get serious about creating affordable housing, because everybody needs a home. There's no excuse not to be doing it, even as we speak.

I wrote the Alberta Liberal policy on affordable housing, and it contains the solutions. I know that because we've run this policy past the people who know affordable housing, and they've told us time and time again that it hits the mark. I know that it was used as a template by the all-party Affordable Housing Task Force the government set up after the Alberta Liberals showed the political will to move the affordable housing crisis to the top of the provincial agenda.

Now the minister is sitting on the task force report, a report prepared by an all-party committee that also included a dozen non-MLAs, members of the public, a report that should be public, a report that should have been presented on the floor of the Legislature the day it was presented to the minister. Then let the minister go off and study it all he wants, till the cows come home if they can find a home to come to, you know, and he can say: "I like this and this clause. I think that idea is terrible, and I won't support it. I want to amend this and this and this." That's fine. That's how it works in a democracy, or at least that's how it's supposed to. But no. He's sitting on the task force report, having it threaten to disappear into that black hole where the Conservatives put good ideas that they want to have go to die as if he's waiting for this to slip back down the provincial agenda.

We need to get on with the task. We need to get on with the task of building and creating affordable housing. We need to get on with the task of building and fixing our schools. We need to get on with the task of building hospitals and training doctors and nurses and so many other people. We need to get on with the task of building a knowledge economy. We need to get on with the task of having a plan and a plan of action. Mr. Speaker, those plans and those action plans are not in this throne speech. As I said at the outset, the people of Calgary-Currie, of Alberta, want and expect and are entitled to more from their government.

Mr. Speaker, you opened the Legislature 28 days ago – and I don't get to say it, unless someone wants to ask me.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm very curious to know what he was going to say.

Mr. Taylor: The President of the Treasury Board might be.

Mr. Speaker, you opened the Legislature 28 days ago with a prayer that began, "Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding . . ." It is a prayer you use from time to time in this House to begin the day's proceedings. From those words, though, as compared to the words in the Speech from the Throne, I can only conclude that the Almighty had no part at all in the authorship of this throne speech.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that answered the minister's question.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Bill 4 Child Care Licensing Act

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act, for third reading.

I think that we've had a good discussion about the proposed legislation and what it will do to strengthen child care in Alberta. I've heard a lot of positive feedback about the act, and for me that confirms that we're definitely moving in the right direction. Good questions have also been raised, which I would quickly like to address.

There has been some discussion around how the act will ensure parental involvement and whether our government plans to develop a provincial child care advisory council. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to clarify. Legislating a requirement for a provincial child care advisory council in the act limits the ability to have informal and varied forms of consultations. By encouraging ongoing dialogue with Alberta parents, child care operators, and stakeholders, we will ensure that this legislation and the programs and services we provide continue to meet the needs of children and families.

I've also been asked if the Child Care Licensing Act will ensure that parents have access to inspection reports, staff qualifications, compliance regulations, and other continuous improvement efforts. The answer is yes. I agree that parents should have access to all relevant information regarding the program so that they can make informed decisions about their child's care and can be an active partner to support the program's continuous improvement efforts.

Operators will be required to prominently post their licence, including any conditions on the licence, monitoring and enforcement documents, and the certification levels of staff. An annual report was an initial suggestion and was replaced with a timelier process of posting relevant and up-to-date information for parents to review.

During our discussions I've stated that the Child Care Licensing Act will allow operators to be innovative and make better use of the spaces that they already have. In some cases this might mean using a space that is licensed for out-of-school care to care for a preschool child when the other child is in school. Will this create potentially unmanageable situations? No. The act is intended to help operators think outside the box and come up with innovative and creative ideas that will ensure that they make the best use of their child care spaces.

Through the consultations on the standards for a new child care regulation, we look forward to hearing from operators and other Albertans to determine what standards need to be in place to support safe, quality programs.

There has also been discussion about the government's plan to monitor family day homes. Family day home standards are set out in policy and included in the contracts between the agency and the child and family service authority. Family day homes are monitored by the agency on a monthly basis.

Questions have also been raised around monitoring programs. To clarify, licensing officers are required to monitor by on-site visits a minimum of four times per year but have the authority to visit programs at any time. If an operator fails to meet the minimum standards set out in the act and regulation, the licensing officer will have a range of enforcement actions available depending on the history, frequency, and severity of the noncompliance. The intent is, where possible, to bring the operation into compliance by providing information on the expectations and helping the operator develop a plan to meet the requirements. However, it is essential to ensure that children are safe, and if necessary licensing officers need the ability to suspend or cancel a licence as a last resort. If children are at risk, a stop order would be issued, which would require the program to close its doors immediately.

When we think of monitoring, we immediately think: what happens if the program does not comply with the act and the regulation? As you know, Alberta is the only province in Canada to offer a province-wide accreditation program for licensed day care centres and contracted family day homes. Child care programs must meet quality standards of excellence to be accredited, and I'm pleased to note that since the accreditation program began in 2004, 30 per cent, or 161, of Alberta's eligible child care programs have achieved this standard of excellence, with many more programs working toward the same goal.

During discussions I've been asked whether I know the current supply and demand for child care in Alberta. We know the number of licensed day care spaces we have in Alberta and how many children are enrolled in these programs, but we need to identify which communities are under the greatest pressure. We are collecting that information right now. Children's Services is surveying all child care operators to find out how many spaces they have, how many are available, and how many are needed to meet the demand.

I've also been asked how the government plans to deal with a determined child care shortage. Our government continues to play a strong leadership role and is working with key stakeholders to identify workable solutions that will best meet the needs of the children and their families. We've just announced increased funding to address staff recruitment and retention issues. This funding is benefiting more than 7,000 child care professionals, and since the introduction of the five-point plan in the fall of 2005, we have seen a 5 per cent reduction in the staff turnover rates in accredited programs.

Increases have also been made to the professional development funding we provide to staff working in licensed day care programs, which is contributing to a skilled workforce. Once we have the information we need to determine the actual demand, we will be in a much better position to plan our next steps. Bill 4 is a step forward when dealing with the shortage of child care spaces because it introduces new categories of programs to increase parental choice and helps existing approved licence holders to have greater flexibility in providing quality child care in both urban and rural settings.

Mr. Speaker, it has also been suggested that government needs to educate families on how best to choose child care. I agree, and in fact the need to enhance supports for parents is part of Alberta's five-point plan. We recently developed the Choosing Child Care booklet, which I tabled earlier today. This booklet is proving to be a useful tool. We have a parent information line, 1-866-714-KIDS, which is available to answer questions, as well as 45 parent link centres, which are effectively helping parents in many parts of the province.

The Child Care Licensing Act is the first legislation in Alberta to focus solely on child care and provide the framework we need to develop program policies, standards, and procedures that will ensure children and families have access to quality child care in Alberta. I'd ask the entire Assembly to support this important piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On third reading, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Congratulations to the minister on a progressive bill that I think there are many positive elements to. Essentially, a good bill with a new emphasis on program quality and staff recruitment and retention is very positive news for Albertans given that we are really under the gun in Alberta to find spaces and ensure quality through good monitoring and enforcement of those standards.

I was interested to hear her comments about the existing analysis showing about 30 per cent excellence, and I wondered if she wanted to make any further comments about that. I'm wondering if I heard correctly, what that means, and how soon we'll achieve the standards that we all want.

Some of the questions that have been raised by constituents have to do with that potential conflict where we're having both older children and younger children trying to converge on the same spaces and whether there have been any specific, concrete ideas about how to deal with an overflow at certain times of the day. I'm sure there are some good suggestions there.

I'm also pleased to see the organization of a standing appeal panel. Clearly, parents and in some cases staff and owners need to be able to hash out differences in a way that's constructive and moves the bar upward.

The posting of enforcement measures is also a positive measure, I think, that will help build confidence in Alberta among all stakeholders.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. If the minister wants to comment a little more on the 30 per cent excellence rate, I would be pleased to hear further comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act, in its third reading. While speaking on the bill in an earlier state of debate in the House, I did express broad support for the bill. The bill has some very good features. I raised several questions that I thought needed addressing by the minister. The minister in the remarks she just made tried to address some of those questions. I'm certainly pleased with the fact that the minister is quite focused in this legislation and in her attempt to respond to questions and inquiries from this side of the House related to various features and provisions of this bill. That, I think, is encouraging, and I want to certainly express our appreciation to the minister for taking the questions seriously and responding to them.

Mr. Speaker, child care, the quality of child care and the provision of child care, is exceedingly important given the labour market situation in the province, given the desire of parents of young children to enter the labour market, and given the research information that we have available, which speaks strongly about the importance of early childhood experiences focused on development of children in child care facilities, how it contributes to their growth, development, and developmental competencies that later become very critical with respect to the degree of success that they have in educational experiences and, subsequent to that, as they become adults and move toward becoming full participants in the affairs of our society, be they political, economic, social, community related, what have you. It is, I think, a bill that does to a degree draw attention to the need for changing the quality of daycare and the scope of daycare to include developmental needs of very young children. That's one of the most positive features of it.

It also provides for experiment with some innovative programs that may be created, particularly, I think, in rural communities where the numbers are relatively small. It's very difficult for parents to drive these very young children to daycare facilities that may be in neighbouring towns or whatever, to develop programs that are innovative and address the needs of children growing up in smaller and rural communities in a situation where parents of such children may want to take advantage of the employment opportunities and labour market entry that they may desire for themselves. It remains to be seen, I think, what kind of innovative programs do arise. I think they will need some direction and, certainly, close monitoring to see that these innovative programs do in fact innovate in a way that best serves the needs of the children as defined in terms of the importance of developmental experiences, their security and safety in these facilities and programs.

The bill does pay, I think, more attention than was previously the case on both compliance and monitoring of the daycare facilities, monitoring of the quality of daycare, the compliance with standards. The minister does concede, of course, that we have a long way to go with respect to making sure that all the daycare facilities in the province, at least the vast majority of them, are fully accredited facilities and that the parents who choose to send their children to daycare do in fact have the assurance that the facilities that they're sending their children to are indeed accredited, and therefore they can expect quality daycare for their children once they enter these institutions or enterprises.

We have only about 31 per cent of daycare facilities that currently are accredited. There are close to 70 per cent that have some way to go before they will meet the accreditation standards and requirements that the daycare legislation and regulations will expect these facilities to meet, so we have a long way to go. We have a lot hanging in the balance with respect to making sure that the quality of daycare that's provided to our children is up to par. It is the quality of experience at this stage in the lives of our children that will I think mean a great deal in later years with respect to the extent to which our children grow up as healthy and competent individuals.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I'm happy to extend our support to the bill. I thank the minister for the questions that I had raised that she has tried to answer. We will wait and see as the budget comes down, on April 19 to be exact, if the provisions in this bill with respect to ensuring quality daycare are in fact supported by resources and commitment of resources on the part of this government.

With that, I close my comments on Bill 4 in its third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there are questions.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, then, to participate in third reading.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to take a few minutes to speak to Bill 4, Child Care Licensing Act, in third reading. I would like to first thank the Minister of Children's Services, the Member for Banff-Cochrane, for bringing this remarkable legislation forward. I would also like to thank the Member for Calgary-Fort for the work that he and his committee did during the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act review. Bill 4 will ensure that parents have access to quality, affordable child care options.

Child care facilities are currently licensed under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. This act covers all facilities, including those for adults and children, and being more than 20 years old, it needs to be updated. Rather than amending outdated legislation that licenses programs focused on its facilities, Bill 4 is designed specifically for Alberta's children. It is the first legislation in Alberta to focus solely on child care. This innovative legislation builds on our government's commitment to continue to support and create quality child care programs and will help respond to the rather complex child care needs of modern-day families.

Mr. Speaker, the child care needs of modern-day families have changed significantly. There was a time when families had the privilege of having one parent stay home to perform the most important job a parent has, which is to raise their children.

In today's world there are many reasons why a family needs to have access to quality, affordable, child care options. My daughter, a single parent, is completing her education in the bachelor of nursing program at Red Deer College, and the choice of placing her child, my granddaughter, in a day home was a difficult decision for all of us. I would however like to express my deepest and sincerest thanks to the three day home providers who looked after my granddaughter in the past five years. The love and care that she received was exceptional. If this kind of care is an example of the care that Alberta's children are receiving in daycare and day homes, then our children are in good hands. Bill 4, the Child Care Licensing Act, increases the opportunities for this kind of quality, affordable care.

When passed, the Child Care Licensing Act would encourage innovative approaches to create new child care programs while placing a priority on the safety of the children. Bill 4 will also provide for effective monitoring to ensure that operations comply with the act.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, this is very good legislation. I ask that all members support Bill 4, which demonstrates our government's commitment to building a quality child care system that will lead to better outcomes for our children.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just be brief. I wanted to add my support to the passing of this bill and, again, as my other colleague has mentioned, congratulations to the minister for bringing this forward. It is absolutely imperative that we look after the children in this province because, from a very selfish point of view, they're the ones that are going to be looking after me when I'm in the nursing home. So I want them well educated.

Another thing that I would like to point out is: thank you to the minister for working with our very hard-working shadow minister from Mill Woods. She is a very, very passionate advocate for children and has worked with the other side to put her voice into the things that she believes are necessary.

One of the things that I think is truly most important is the fact that we need the spaces. I'm thrilled with the accreditation, and I'm even more thrilled with the fact that you're using the word "enforcement." It's like music to my ears because coming out of the long-term care, where I want enforcement, it's wonderful to hear that sort of thinking coming forward.

The area that I'm concerned about, too, is the low economic strata. There are many parents working two and three jobs, and it's these children that we have to worry about, that they manage to get into good child development spaces because often they do miss out. They miss out on sports, they miss out on arts, and they certainly miss out on that extra little academic advantage that they take into kindergarten or grade 1 with them.

We were speaking about the rural spaces and how difficult it is to get them. One of the things that I would like to perhaps see is some sort of distance learning development program that could go into rural areas. That would help perhaps not someone that necessarily had a degree in education but certainly somebody that would have enough education that they could work with a long-distance development program.

Again, I would just like to say thank you to the minister. We'll see how far this is going to go with the budget, but I have some very good hopes. So thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

There being none, the minister to close debate.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation to all of the hon. members, including the Official Opposition, for both your understanding and overwhelming support for Bill 4.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to call the question.

Police Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand this afternoon to move second reading of Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, 2007.

This proposed legislation will allow the establishment of a provincial body to investigate police when someone has been seriously injured or dies as a direct result of the actions of police officers. This team would also investigate highly sensitive or serious matters involving police. The director of this team will be a civilian.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that police officers in our province do an outstanding job every day protecting Albertans and keeping our communities safe. Maintaining transparency, accountability, and the public trust are key to the work done on a daily basis by our men and women in uniform. The proposed investigative body would help ensure that those factors are also part of investigations into allegations of police misconduct. They will continue to consult with police agencies and police governance bodies to establish the mandate and operational model for this new team.

This isn't a new concept in many jurisdictions. We have reviewed similar agencies across the country and around the world and have taken their best practices to develop a model we think will work for Albertans.

The other proposed amendment will give the province the option to take over responsibility for lock-up facilities from municipal police forces. Alberta correctional officers or Alberta sheriffs could be used to operate these facilities. The transfer of responsibility could be an opportunity to make more police officers available for front-line duties.

Mr. Speaker, a key mandate of our new government is to be open, accountable, and transparent. This proposed legislation will supplement that mandate and ensure that Alberta remains the best place to live, work, and visit.

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 16.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 7

Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 7, Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007.

I'd like to point out that all vocational training programs offered in the province by private institutions are required to be licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act, and Bill 7 deals with amendments to this act. As such, all licensees were consulted regarding the amendments included in this bill.

These changes to the Private Vocational Schools Act are designed to enhance consumer protection and update the act so that it is more reflective of the current environment surrounding the licensing of vocational training.

To begin, the amendments included in Bill 7 change the name of the Private Vocational Schools Act to Private Vocational Training Act, and the title of the director is changed from the director of private vocational schools to director of private vocational training. This is being done to reflect that it is vocational training programs and not institutions that are licensed. Amendments included in the bill remove the provision for licences to be categorized as class A or class B based on the program's performance outcomes. From a consumer point of view, students will be better protected if programs are either licensed or not licensed rather than designating a program as class B when performance outcomes are problematic.

Today it is common for licensees to request cancellation of vocational training program licences, but there is no mechanism in the Private Vocational Schools Act to accommodate these requests at present. A licence can only be cancelled under certain circumstances upon giving the licensee 30 days' notice. Amendments included in Bill 7 provide a mechanism whereby licences can be cancelled upon the request of a licensee, subject of course to all of the licensee's obligations to students being fulfilled.

Amendments also included in Bill 7 remove the requirement that licences be renewed every two years. Removal of the administrative burden of renewing licences for over 700 programs every two years will improve administration. Programs will continue to be monitored on an ongoing basis to ensure compliance.

Finally, Bill 7 also includes changes that update the act through the revision of wording used in reference to the information that is set out on licences, the manner in which notices of licence, cancellations, or suspensions are provided to students, and the manner in which notices under the act are served.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to make a few brief comments about Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007. This bill impacts some 140 private vocational schools in this province offering hundreds of training programs from accountancy to hairdressing. Bill 7 changes the licensing procedure for private vocational programs, eliminating different classes of licence and switching from biennial renewals of licences to ongoing monitoring.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is worthy of support. However, some clarification of the government's intentions over the new regulations is required. I expect that we will get some answers for our questions when the bill enters the committee stage. The message we had from the minister was that this was a housekeeping bill changing the wording of the legislation to reflect current practices. That does indeed seem to be the case, but those of us in opposition are always a little suspicious when a bill is pawned off as being housekeeping. Sometimes that's just another term for sweeping things under the rug, so we always have to be alert to these things.

An Hon. Member: Oh, no. Say it isn't so.

Mr. Tougas: It could happen. It's been known to happen.

The intent of Bill 7 appears to be quite straightforward. It is aimed at the removal of the licence classes, which eliminates the current situation of what you might call the second-class institutions. It also, from what we can see, slightly weakens what private institutions must do if a program is found to be unsatisfactory by the ministry.

As it stands, the legislation limits licences to two years in duration. The renewal process for these licences means, at least in theory, that every two years the program is re-evaluated by the director or minister, and this should ensure that standards do not slip. The proposed change suggests a rolling, constant evaluation.

The mechanics of this are somewhat unclear. It places more control in the director's hands, and they are no longer mandated to issue any extension. It appears that once they get their licence, they can go for some time without a formal review of any sort, just a rolling review. I'm not sure if this is exactly the case, but when we get to committee, I will be asking the sponsor of this bill for some clarification on this matter.

With regard to the areas changed by this legislation, currently there are two classes of licence for private vocational schools. A class A licence means a licence that authorizes the licensee to provide the vocational training specified on the licence and signifies that the programs are new or the programs have a student graduation rate and employment placement rate that are satisfactory to the director. A class B licence means a licence that authorizes the licensee to provide the vocational training specified on the licence and signifies that the programs do not have a student graduation rate and employment placement rate that are satisfactory to the director or the director is unable to form an opinion about the student graduation rate or the employment placement rate in respect of these programs. At this point a program can have, as I understand it, an unsatisfactory graduation and employment placement rate yet still have a licence to provide vocational training. This bill would remove that distinction and put all the vocational schools on equal footing. My one concern is the process of evaluating these institutions, and hopefully in committee we can get into some depth regarding that process.

Also currently in place is a term limit for licences of two years. After that time they need to be renewed in the current system. This provides some impetus for oversight by the director, but it doesn't guarantee it. The renewal process is not at all complex. As long as the director is satisfied that the licensee is in accordance with the act and regulations, then the licence is renewed. Yet again it appears that the bill is simply putting into law what has already been done in practice.

My concerns are that students who are paying for these classes get maximum value for their education dollar. While it makes sense that there will no longer be a class A or class B school, we need to be vigilant that very strict standards are being applied to all institutions and that the government is adequately watching over these institutions.

So until we meet again in committee, that's all I have at this time.

The Acting Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 7, Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007. Let me say at the very outset that the private vocational schools in this province, most of them, happen to be not only private but private, for-profit. In my experience with this particular segment of our postsecondary system this segment is highly problematic from the point of student experience, the standards to be maintained, monitoring of the quality of the programs that may be available. So this bill, really, in my view, doesn't address the core issues that need to be addressed, and I was hoping that any initiative in the form of a piece of legislation dealing with these private vocational schools would in fact address the core issues.

In my view the major problems with our private vocational school sector – the problems are systemic to this sector – include: no independent oversight, nonexistent enforcement, payment and refund policies heavily slanted against the student and towards the institution, complete lack of transparency around tuition and other fees for instructional materials, poor quality of instruction, substandard equipment and facilities, almost laughable complaint and appeal procedures, and routine violation and denial of students' individual and collective rights.

These being, in my view, the core problems, the bill really skirts all of these issues and simply engages in some sort of minor definitional tinkering. The bill amends the Private Vocational Schools Act in three ways: by changing the name to Private Vocational Training Act, by reducing the number of licence categories from two to one – and I'll speak to this later – and finally by taking away the two-year time restrictions of any issued licences.

The category A licences are new programs or they have graduation rates deemed satisfactory. Category B licences are ones with below satisfactory graduation rates or programs where the gradua tion rate is deemed irrelevant. The new act for some reason merges the two categories into a single licence. Additionally, licences under the old act were valid for two years. Bill 7 takes off the two-year restriction.

Considering that the government has not put a set of quality criteria on private vocational schools' education, this suspension of the two-year licence requirement in my view is a loosening of the already very poor enforcement standards. If the two-year licence is to be removed, then the ministry has to ensure that the private vocational schools are inspected regularly to ensure that education standards are being met on a continuing basis. So not only are inspections needed, but before that the standards have to be established, Mr. Speaker.

The merging of class A and class B licences combined with the removal of a two-year limitation on licences represents a downgrading of enforcement and oversight at private vocational schools. Although the ministry promises continued oversight of the sector, the current changes fly in the face of the argument. That is so because graduation rates – that is what separates class A from class B licences – and regular relicensing, which ensures that standards are maintained, represent a part of the oversight procedure. They also happen to be two criteria being removed from the act and its regulations. So there's no clear indication of what sort of oversight will take place.

Additionally, certainly, our caucus and I personally, representing the caucus, have had to deal with complaints stemming from poor management of vocational schools. In 2005 the ministry had to deal with a complaint about the private school CCII that dealt with excessive grant funding from the government, falsification of attendance records, course quality dilution, and misrepresenting course hours, et cetera. The school was assessed for penalties in excess of $50,000, but the ministry was not able to collect more than $29,000 from the school.

The questions that I think need to be addressed by this House really are: what kind of oversight is taking place right now within the ministry to ensure that these problems do not pop up regularly? How many private vocational schools have been audited/investigated by the ministry in the last four years? How often does the ministry review the 140-odd private vocational schools to ensure compliance of regulations?

The 2005-2006 report stated that – I'll make a reference to the exact nature of this report, Mr. Speaker, in a moment, but let me complete this observation. This particular statement, which I think is the department annual financial statement on this, stated that $87,000 had been granted to Columbia College. That is a private vocational school. We don't know how much money has been given to private vocational schools in the 2006-2007 year. Will the hon. member check into this and maybe address the question of how these funds got allocated to the private, for-profit schools?

Will the director of the private institutions branch – is that what it is? – be checking vocational schools on an annual basis within the regulations to ensure that the minimum licensing criteria are being fulfilled?

Mr. Speaker, a few other observations here. I have before me a document which was a formal complaint lodged by a group of students who went to the Canadian College International Institute, presumably a private, not-for-profit school for adult students, accredited by Alberta Learning and funded by the former department of Alberta human resources and employment. The sort of internal audit that was ordered by the then department of Alberta human resources and employment came up with all kinds of very serious problems with this particular institution and corroborated the substance of the complaint that was lodged with the department by the aggrieved students.

Yet it seems that there is no intention in the proposed legislation or in changes in regulations that would suggest that the government takes these problems very seriously in this private, for-profit sector and is willing and able to deal with them by way of changes in policy, by changes in regulations, or by, in fact, putting some of these changes in firm legislative language so that enforcement and monitoring of standards are addressed in a way satisfactory to all of us and, certainly, to protect the interests of students who go to these private institutions.

Mr. Speaker, the annual report from which I made a reference to Columbia College and the money that was received was an Alberta advanced education annual report, 2005-06. There's no explanation of what this money is about.

Mr. Speaker, having two categories of licences was in some ways an escape clause. You know, if an institution didn't perform up to some minimum standards with respect to graduation rates or employment placement rates, it was downgraded to B, sort of a conditional licence. It still didn't really solve the problem because much of the reporting that was done to PIB on the meeting of the standards was done exclusively by the institutions themselves, institutions against which we have heard complaints from students with respect to how unsatisfactory they found both their educational experience and the quality of the physical infrastructure and the lab facilities that they were supposed to use in order to learn the skills and competencies based on which they were going to be later on licensed.

With no independent oversight to determine the veracity or accuracy of these reports on graduation and employment placement rates, it was a joke. There was no way that the PIB, which is the private institution branch, could really have an independent source of assessing claims made by these institutions.

I think this bill really does not in my view deal with the real issues pertaining to what needs to be done to ensure that this private sector in the postsecondary education system is accountable in a transparent way both to the students who use these facilities and to the private institution branch of the department of advanced education, that has the formal responsibility of ensuring that these institutions meet licensing and standards requirements.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by simply saying that I have very serious reservations about the ways in which this proposed bill falls short of meeting even halfway the kind of things that need to be done in order to fix the problems in this system. Certainly, as we proceed through the various stages of debate on this bill, we'll have the opportunity to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, from the chair's vantage point it is 6 o'clock. The House stands adjourned until 1 p.m. tomorrow.

Member's Apology

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Clerk identifies the Routine, we do have a matter of business that needs to be concluded, a matter of business that extends from yesterday. Yesterday afternoon the chair offered to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie an opportunity to withdraw certain comments and to apologize. The member has returned today, so the chair will ask the hon. member if he is prepared to do such.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that some of the wording in my questions yesterday was inappropriate for this Assembly and that there were some offending comments. I would like to withdraw the comments made during question period yesterday. I'm sorry if anybody was offended by my question. That was not my intention.

Thank you.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to introduce a distinguished member of our armed forces who has done much for our country and for this province and the Edmonton region. In the Speaker's gallery is Brigadier-General Tim Grant, a cavalry officer who has commanded the Lord Strathcona's Horse. Prior to his deployment to Afghanistan six months ago he was the Commander Land Force Western Area. Here on a brief mid-tour leave, he will resume his duties as Commander Task Force Afghanistan, National Command Element, in Kandahar in just a few days from now.

He is well chosen for what is surely the most challenging operational command in the Canadian army since Korea. His exceptional abilities and unrivalled experience will be put to good use as he is to be promoted to major general this summer to take a key leadership position in the Canadian Expeditionary Force Command. This organization is charged with mounting and sustaining the operations of our forces abroad.

Brigadier-General, it may be of interest to you to know that a former member of this Assembly, Douglas Corney Breton, an MLA from 1926 to 1930, served in Afghanistan during World War I as a member of the British Expeditionary Force.

Throughout his long and varied career General Grant has been supported by his very lovely and charming wife, Sharon.

The Grants are accompanied by the Honorary Lieutenant Colonel of 15 Military Police Company, Sol Rolinger, and his wife, Marilyn.

Brigadier-General Grant, please return safely to Afghanistan and take with you the thanks, the prayers, and the best wishes of the people of Alberta and convey such to all of those in your command. We're pleased and honoured to have you with us today.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, please.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 76 visitors: 66 grade 6 students from Westlock elementary school, who are accompanied this afternoon by teachers Mr. Dan McDonald, Mrs. Sandy Jones, Mrs. Maggie Cournoyer, Mr. Marcel Turcotte, and Mrs. Linda Wallace. In addition, program assistants Mrs. Randi Lethebe and Mrs. Chantal Roberts are in attendance as well as parent helpers Mrs. Donna Turner, Mrs. Lynne Proulx, and Mrs. Rachelle Koch. They are seated, I believe, in both galleries. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Danielle Smith, the Alberta director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, representing over 9,200 Alberta businesses who serve millions of the citizens we represent. She's also accompanied today by Janine Halbesma, the senior policy analyst, as well as Daryl Hanak, the executive director of trade policy in my ministry. This organization represents the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans in serving Albertans as customers and in the work of the trade, mobility, investment agreement that we signed with British Columbia. I'd ask them to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly today.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Truly, the eyes of the financial world are on Alberta, and it is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a number of guests with JPMorgan securities. Their offices are in New York and Denver. Today, we have joining us Vivian Altman, Paul Ryan, and Marshall Crawford. Also visiting the Assembly today are Robert Clare of Sullivan & Worcester in New York and John Burns of Gowling Lafleur Henderson, based out of Calgary. I would ask them to all rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, later on this afternoon a group from Ardrossan high school will be here, and with your indulgence I'll maybe be able to introduce them at that time.

The Speaker: Okay.

Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been approximately two and a half years since I was first elected to this House, and in that time I've never had a visitor. Not until today. Therefore, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three constituents of mine from Calgary-Foothills who have come up here today from Calgary to visit the Alberta Legislature and to get a bird's-eye view of what goes on here in the House. I'd like to thank Mrs. Janice Osgood, Geoff Osgood, and Julie Osgood for coming here today to visit, and I would ask that they please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: And what is the hon. member's office room number?

Mr. Webber: My office is 701, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: All hon. members might want to visit.
The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning in your prayers you thanked our Creator for the bounty of our province. Later this afternoon I'll be having a meeting with a couple of my constituents. I'd like them to rise as I say their names: Erwin Zotzman and Ken Bilou. We'll be meeting regarding their concerns over the management of fish populations in Pigeon Lake and in particular the stocking of walleye and the subsequent low numbers of lake whitefish. We hope that those numbers can change. I'd like these gentlemen to rise and please receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today, in fact. First, it's a great privilege for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Bill and Margaret Kurtze of Calgary. Bill Kurtze is the nominated Alberta Liberal candidate for the Calgary-Hays constituency. Bill brings 30 years of experience in the oil and gas industry to his candidacy, including a stint as manager of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada and another as managing director of the Propane Gas Association. Aply supported by his wife, Margaret, Bill promises to be an outstanding public servant when the voters of Calgary-Hays choose him to be their next MLA. Bill and Margaret, could you please rise and accept the warm welcome of members of the Assembly.

I'm also pleased to introduce a number of visitors from the Battle River-Wainwright area. They're seated in the public gallery: Ken Eshpeter, Jerry Iwanus, Paul Schorak, and Roger Holmes. These fine gentlemen are politically minded citizens, very active in the Alberta Liberal constituency association for Battle River-Wainwright. They've made immense contributions to their communities over the years as public servants, entrepreneurs, farmers, and volunteers. In short, they're simply really good, civic-minded people, and I'm proud to have them join us today. But, Mr. Speaker, I am most proud to introduce Jerry's terrific young daughter Jillian. She's 10 years old, a wonderful young lady. Jillian represents the future of this province, and when we MLAs make decisions in this House, we must always keep people like her foremost in our minds. Would those guests please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Meadowlark I would like to introduce 46 students from Aldergrove elementary school. They're accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Christine Steil and Mrs. Sandy Colquhoun and parent helpers Ms Janet Walker, Mr. Ed Cox, Mrs. Mary Jane Meeker, Ms Tracy Miller, and Mrs. Karen Auger. I'd like to have them stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly members of the executive board of the Operative Plasterers' and Cement Masons' International Association, local 222. In the spring of 1907 a group of tradesmen in the plastering trade formed a local union here in Edmonton and were chartered as local 372 of the Operative Plasterers' and Cement Masons' International Association. For 100 years the members of this union have helped build Alberta as a province, and in 2007 they celebrate their centennial year. The legacy of their contribution and skills as tradesmen is evident today throughout our province in our hospitals, schools, bridges, and refineries. The members of this local are particularly proud of the ornate decorative plasterwork throughout this Legislature Building, which was applied by the founders of this union. Examples of that can be seen in our Chamber today.

In attendance today is the executive board of local 222, who I will now ask to rise as I call out their names: Richard Wassill, the business manager and financial secretary; Ed Arko, the president; James Conway, the vice-president and business agent; Peter Harvey, the vice-president; and Dennis Ossevorth, the sergeant-at-arms. I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my extreme pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ms Tiffany McBride, my executive assistant and the constituency office administrator for Edmonton-McClung. Ms McBride is a graduate of Queen's University, with a degree in psychology and history. She's currently enrolled at the U of A, taking introductory courses towards her law degree. I probably don't keep Ms McBride busy enough. This young lady is going to volunteer with the Habitat for Humanity women build program this summer. What's more, she also finds time to help with her very own family-run, successful mulching business, and at 23 she's also the guardian for her two younger brothers. I invite her to stand, please, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and members of the Assembly David Hohnstein and Richard Konkin. Dave has been at the Palace Casino off and on for 11 years and is currently a pit boss. Dave has made the gaming industry his career and has worked within it for 20 years. Richard is a dealer at the casino and has been there seven years. He is a member of the union's bargaining committee and provides a great deal of knowledge to the process. On any given evening you can come by the picket line and see Richard working hard for his members. They are valued members of UFCW 401, and they're looking forward to the end of the strike. I might point out that it's now the longest strike in UFCW 401's history. They are in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Canadian University Women's Curling Champions

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have yet another Canadian curling success story. I stand today to acknowledge the Canadian women's gold medal winning university curling team. The team consists of four University of Calgary students: Brittany Gregor, the skip; Katrine Fiset; Heather Hansen; and of course Hayley Pattison from the village of Carbon in my constituency. The team qualified to represent Canada by winning the Canadian university nationals in Winnipeg. They then went on to compete very strongly at the 2007 World University Games in Torino, Italy.

These young women demonstrated great poise and confidence coming back from an early deficit in the gold medal match to defeat Russia. The dramatic conclusion saw Brittany Gregor make her last shot in the 10th end to lead Team Canada to victory.

They felt privileged to go abroad and challenge their abilities in an international field. They faced the most elite curlers for their age group, and through determination and great work ethic they accomplished their goal. They represented our country and their university with passion and respect. As ambassadors for their sport they displayed the qualities and characteristics of champions.

I'm sure these young women will have a prominent future in the sport of curling, and I want to take this opportunity to wish them continued success with all their athletic and academic endeavours. Once again, congratulations on their win.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Melvin Crump

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the privilege, along with a number of my colleagues, to attend the Calgary Glenbow Museum's new permanent exhibition, Mavericks: The Incurable History of Alberta. This new gallery tells the story of Alberta through the lives of 48 mavericks whose stories embody the Alberta pioneering spirit, hard work, passion, and can-do attitude. Some of these historical mavericks are still with us, including former Premier Peter Lougheed and Mr. Melvin Crump. We all know of Peter Lougheed, so today I want to speak about Melvin Crump, a friend and a constituent.

In 1910, 160 African-Americans from Oklahoma came to settle in a small community about 100 miles north of Edmonton later known as Amber Valley. Out of this group came a very special individual named Melvin Crump. Melvin's childhood was not an easy one. Melvin's mother died when he was 10, then right after that his older sister died. At a young age his father and older brother left home. He was raised by his grandmother. He had to quit school after grade 8 and find a paying job, from shining shoes to killing chickens and labouring farm work.

Where Melvin really shone was his strong passion for self-learning, for human rights, and equality. He worked as a sleeping car porter on CP Rail, travelling across the country. He stood up for the rights of the black porters, who worked long hours and were paid the lowest wages. He challenged bigotry and the prejudice of those who practise intolerance. It comes as no surprise that he later became the president of the Alberta association for the advancement of coloured people. Throughout his life Melvin Crump sought respect. He received it both for himself and others.

Melvin Crump is now 91 years old and still full of life and energy. About the only aspect in Melvin's life that has slowed down is due to doctor's orders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Farm Debt

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's total farm debt outstanding in 2005 was $10.7 billion. Alberta certainly is not debt free. The total farm debt in Canada in 2005 was a staggering $50 billion. Alberta farmers owe 21 per cent of that debt. Interest payments alone on this debt totalled $491 million in 2005. Alberta farmers owe this money to three major lenders: provincial government agencies, federal government agencies, and our chartered banks. Let's have a look at what has happened to Alberta farmers' borrowing trends in the last 10 years.

In 1996 provincial government agencies held 26 per cent of the debt. In 2005 they held 21 per cent of the debt. In 1996 federal government agencies held 8 per cent of the debt. In 2005 their loans increased to close to 18 per cent. In 1996 chartered banks held 47 per cent of the debt. In 2005 this had dropped to 41 per cent.

Farm income is certainly related to Alberta farm input costs. Fertilizer, seed, fuel, electricity, and equipment costs always seem to be increasing.

I hope interest rates for this $10.7 billion debt continue to be manageable. I urge this government to ensure that the cost of credit does not force more farmers into unnecessary bankruptcy. I know that farmers follow commodity price reports daily. They also follow the rise and fall of interest rates for very good reason.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my sincere pleasure to recognize a very important group of people whose work has a personal and lasting impact on Alberta's citizens. Of course, I'm referring to Alberta's fine teachers. Through their passion, commitment, and encouragement teachers motivate our youth to achieve their individual dreams.

I think of my second son, who couldn't read; in fact, couldn't read through a repeat grade 1 year. Because of the good work of teachers by the end of grade 6 he had read almost every book in the library and is today getting ready to apply to law school. Mr. Speaker, they make a difference.

These significant contributions do not go unnoticed. Each year Alberta's excellence in teaching awards program celebrates the teaching profession by honouring outstanding teachers and principals from across our province. The excellence in teaching award offers a wonderful way to say thank you. In fact, simply being nominated is a tremendous compliment and an honour.

Mr. Speaker, the 2007 finalists were announced today, and I am very proud to say that 22 of the 130 are from Calgary. Soon this year's recipients will be honoured at a special awards ceremony. Since its inception in 1989 over 400 teachers have received an excellence in teaching award and over 7,900 have been nominated.

This program is possible with the support of many individuals who nominate teachers and organizations and who collaborate every year with Alberta Education. The supporters are the Alberta Home and School Councils' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Edmonton Journal, the SMARTer Kids Foundation, and Xerox.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this government and all Albertans and my son I want to say congratulations to all those teachers who have been recognized through this year's excellence in teaching awards program, and once again say to all our teachers: thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Pine Beetle Control in Kananaskis Country

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Friday the 13th for the forest: killing the Kananaskis. On Friday, April 13, the Calgary Liberal caucus will be hosting a rally at the McDougall Centre at noon to draw attention to clear-cutting concerns in the unprotected Kananaskis watershed, that supplies over a million Calgarians with their drinking water. Using the threat of a pine beetle attack as a justification for razing or clear-cutting the forest, the ministry of unsustainable practices with negligible public consultation has dramatically worsened its original flawed forest management agreement by ignoring tree size, age, susceptibility, and biodiversity.

When the cure is far worse than the disease, ignores scientific evidence, and does not take into account the multivalued of a tree standing in comparison to its bulldozed, bargain basement, glutted softwood market worthlessness, then this government has lost the confidence of its electors.

The term “sustainable resources” has become an oxymoron given this government’s mismanagement of our natural capital. The term “multi-use” is in reality a code word, a licence for multi-abuse.

Pine beetles are not locusts that eat every piece of vegetation in sight. Pine beetles are selective of their hosts, preferring wider diameter trees preferably over 80 years of age, which are not typically found in abundance in either the Bragg Creek, Sibbald Flats, or Ghost-Waiparous areas, where the government has relinquished its stewardship to Spray Lakes logging.

Through selective logging and controlled burns pine beetles can be managed without sacrificing our forests, water quantity and quality. A Liberal government will balance both economic and environmental stewardship, leaving a legacy for future generations to value and share.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, I was advised that a government member had switched places for Members’ Statements from today to tomorrow. Is there another government member to participate today?

head: Presenting Petitions

Mr. Graydon: I’m pleased to present the required number of copies of documents containing 1,602 signatures of residents of Beaverlodge and surrounding areas, including Hythe, Elsworth, Valhalla Centre, Rio Grande, La Glace, and Demmitt, pointing out that the Beaverlodge hospital is the oldest hospital in Alberta, and it’s time for Beaverlodge to have a new hospital.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have 1,005 signatures: We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to add the drug Elaprase to the Drug Benefit List approved by Alberta Health and Wellness in order to ensure that those suffering from Hunter’s Syndrome, including Jordan Miranda, Riley Miranda and Tyler Chauhan, get the care they need to reduce their suffering and live full lives.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Orders the government wishes to give notice of the following with respect to written questions and motions for return. On April 16 the government intends to deal with written questions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8. We also wish to give notice that it is the intention to accept questions 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8. We’ll be presenting an amendment to Question 2, and we’ll deal with Question 3 in the usual manner. The balance of the written questions will be moved to stand and retain their places.

With respect to motions for return the government intends to deal with motions for return 1, 2, and 3. We’ll be advising that we will be accepting Motion for a Return 3. The balance will stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 26, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2007.

The bill introduces amendments to sections 322 and 534 of the act.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to file with the Assembly five copies of my letter to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in response to questions raised during debate of Bill 20, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2007, on March 20, 2007.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I’m tabling more copies of letters received by my office urging the government to provide funding for the cancer-fighting drug Avastin. In doing so, I’d like to reiterate that people who require this treatment can expect to pay $1,750 every two weeks and that the drug is already covered by the cancer boards in B.C., Quebec, and Newfoundland. Today’s letters were received from Dennis Koshman, Joanne Nelson, Korean Bennett, Lillian Procter, Barb Falk, Maggie Bullen, Brian Massey, Victor Cerhit, Allison Diebert, and Laura Lewis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Beth Israel congregation 100th anniversary gala program book. This wonderful book commemorates the congregation’s centennial. The celebration took place on January 28, 2007, at the Beth Israel synagogue in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. I attended along with the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Finance, and the MLA for Edmonton-Glenora. It was a wonderful event. All the best to the congregation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: 1:30 Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Before I call on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, I have been notified that there will be a point of order at the conclusion of the Routine by the hon. Member for Edmonton-

Beverly-Clareview, and I think I should alert the hon. Government House Leader with respect to this matter.

First Official Opposition question for today. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Community Initiatives Program

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture was asked why his department is breaking its own rules for the community initiatives program by allowing nonmatching grants over $10,000, but instead of answering our question, the minister dodged it and simply repeated the rules, the very rules that appear to have been broken so often. So my question to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: why is the minister refusing to admit that the granting rules for the community initiatives program were broken 43 times in three years, totalling over $2 million?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very proud to have the first question of question period. I guess suffice it to say, Mr. Speaker, you know, that all of our applicants are reviewed, and certainly our staff go through all the applications to make sure that the group qualifies for funding. Part of the discussions that they have with the applicants is whether or not the particular amount will meet their particular needs, and those applications are adjusted then up and down. It's based on the discussions . . .

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rules are actually written in black and white, although perhaps for this government they're in grey. The culture of entitlement around this government is more obvious every day. The people of Alberta want everyone to play by the rules, especially their own government. To the same minister: what safeguards are in place to prevent political interference in the granting process?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly our workers, our staff members are the ones that actually work with the various groups. They will make the recommendations to the minister, and they will indicate where there's a need for a certain amount of compassion to allow a particular project to move forward. For the most part, you know, those recommendations are made to the minister, and the minister will agree or deny it on the basis of what comes across his desk.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you. This question is to the Premier. There is an opportunity for the Premier to show real leadership here. The rules are in black and white. They appear to have been broken. So to the Premier: will the Premier invite a forensic audit of the CIP program by the Auditor General?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have great faith in our Auditor General. He's done a good job over the years, and if he sees fit to undertake whatever kind of audit he wishes, we're open. We've always followed his recommendations in all the years that I've served in this government. We've always been open and transparent, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a university sorority received an $18,000 CIP grant for posh furniture, the government broke CIP application rule 7. Albertans learned today that this grant was awarded to an organization led by the daughter of a well-connected Tory. To the Minister of Tourism, Recreation, Parks and Culture: given that we only have details of this one grant and it looks highly political, can the minister assure this House that there was no political interference in any of the other grants that violated the rules?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, I did some digging around on this particular one, and I can table that later if you choose. Alpha Gamma Delta is a registered nonprofit organization. It was eligible and met all the criteria for a grant through the community initiatives program. We need to indicate as well that this organization actually does a lot of fundraising for local communities, and to date it's raised and donated money to organizations off the U of A campus. They donate money to Edmonton's Food Bank, juvenile diabetes, and women's shelters, and it was for that reason that we supported them.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. They asked for $10,000 and got $18,000. The volunteers of this province work hard. They're dedicated and honourable, and they expect to play by the rules. They are offended when the rules are broken. To the same minister: under what circumstances does an organization qualify for having rule 7 broken?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I want to share an example that we went through. This is a letter – and again, I'm prepared to table this one – written by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, and the letter says: "They informed me that they are facing a 'grave financial situation' and without short-term emergency funding the society is at risk of having to close its doors." We responded to that particular one, and we did break our rules, if that's what it was, but it allowed this particular organization to stay alive.

Dr. Taft: So to the Premier: will the Premier live up to his words about transparency and openness and the secrecy around these deals and table the details of the 43 grants that were given in violation of the rules?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is another time, you know, that the Leader of the Official Opposition is making allegations. Remember, this House has certain privileges. To all those students sitting here, this House gives every elected member certain privileges, and they are not to bring about innuendo about any particular member in this House. Two weeks ago he said he had some sort of a secret agreement between the government and the horse-racing industry. He made that statement in the House. Today he's still not able to present it. So either stand up and say that you're totally wrong or deliver on that promise that you made to this House.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Settle down. Settle down.

One of the most important issues facing this government is the issue of affordable housing. It affects so many Albertans who are demanding action from a government that has ignored the situation for years. And what a surprise, the government being unprepared for such a serious issue. Now, while hundreds of Calgarians shiver in the street with the closing down of a temporary emergency shelter, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing is blathering about a report that is weeks, if not months, away from seeing the light of day. Will the minister stop prattling on about partnerships and the like and admit that when it comes to providing affordable housing, the buck stops on his desk? If I was the minister, it would certainly stop on mine.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that the government and the municipalities very much have a partnership in dealing with affordable housing and the homeless. As the hon. member across the way suggested, I want to explain that we do have a partnership in regard to emergency shelters. The province provides $23 million, of which $14 million goes to Calgary. The government also supplies money for the homeless, of which one-third goes to Calgary. As well, we have a program that is being brought forward between seven municipalities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the province has got to take leadership in solving the affordable housing crisis. The cities know it; social agencies know it; builders know it; constitutional experts know it; I know it; my colleagues know it; even the third party knows it. It seems everybody knows it except the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. The time for solutions is now, not a few weeks from now. Will the minister immediately release the report of the Affordable Housing Task Force so that we can get on with the job?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I think that for the dignity of all of the members that were on the task force that presented that task force report to the government on March 19, the government is looking at the recommendations, looking at what we can do, and making sure that the job is done right.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is now the captain of this ship, and as he has said, he is in charge. It is time for him to show that he is up to the challenge of making a decision. We need goals, we need targets, and we need timelines because everybody needs a home. When is the Premier going to order his minister to put down the shovel and release the report of the Affordable Housing Task Force?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, managing growth pressures is one of our top priorities of this government. Part of growth pressures, of course, is available housing, housing in different forms for the homeless, for the low-income earners, and those with young families that want to purchase their own home. We had a very good discussion, dialogue, with Albertans, an all-party committee. The report has now been delivered to the minister. He is bringing recommendations to our government caucus. Once those decisions are made, again, we in this House will deliver to all Albertans on those recommendations to ensure that we deal with this critical situation of housing.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Donations to Leadership Campaigns

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Donations to leadership campaigns for registered political parties are not under Alberta's archaic election finance laws. A number of members of this government, including the Premier, have received substantial donations from donors who are shrouded in secrecy. As a result, Albertans are unable to judge whether or not the decisions of this government are fair and free from favouritism. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier take steps to live up to his promise of openness and transparency and introduce legislation requiring disclosure of all campaign donations for leadership campaigns, including his own?

Mr. Stelmach: That is a good question. I said in this House that this is a topic of discussion with our party, the Progressive Conservative Party, in a policy conference, whatever the party agrees to do because this is joint party and government. But the one thing I want to say, though, which the opposition fails to mention and to recognize, is that finally in the province of Alberta we will have a lobbyist registry so that everybody will know who is lobbying government and – who knows? – they may even know who's lobbying the opposition as well.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some members of this Premier's government have still not kept their promises to reveal financial totals and donors for their leadership campaigns. All of this has Albertans wondering who has the government's ear.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down for a second. We're on the edge here. Is it a government legal requirement in Alberta to do so? The member is insisting then – he's talking about individuals. It's akin to saying the question to an MLA. You can't do it in the House, so phrase it in such a way that we deal with policy, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the government introduce a policy and bring in legislation, and will the Premier as a matter of policy direct his ministers to reveal how much they raised in their leadership bids and where it came from?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I hope there won't be a leadership contest at least on this side of the House for a few years. In all fairness I hope there isn't one on that side with the third party as well. We'd like to keep him where he is. As I said in all honesty, this will be a topic of discussion at an annual policy conference, and we'll be bringing that forward.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I noticed that only the front bench applauded that remark. There are many in the back that may have a different idea.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier talks about transparency, but Albertans can see right through him. Will the Premier remove the cloud that hangs over this government as a result of secret and unrevealed campaign donations from the recent leadership campaign and introduce a policy and introduce legislation requiring real transparency in the government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we are going to work in this area, but I know what their issue is. There are a number of very good Liberals and good NDs that contributed to a lot of campaigns here, leadership campaigns, and they sure want to find out who the heck those people are.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Trade Route to Prince Rupert

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The port of Prince Rupert is fast becoming the port of Alberta. The lower elevation of our Yellowhead pass to Rupert means lower carbon emissions, less fuel use, and lower costs. World maritime container traffic will almost triple by 2024, and this is the best route for the booming China trade. This port and connecting facilities must grow for our Alberta economy to continue to thrive. My question is to the Premier. What will the province do to make grow the vital port of Prince Rupert and the expansion of its container-handling facilities?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I've got to commend the member for quite a visionary question in terms of where this province is going in the future. We know that to sustain this economy, we do have to increase trade, and we have to be globally competitive. The other most important issue here, of course, is that with respect to Prince Rupert it cuts a return trip by three and a half days. As well, it provides the city of Edmonton an opportunity to be a centre where we would not only collect containers, but we can also stuff them for export.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm surprised that the Official Opposition laughs because there was none of them at the conference on Prince Rupert last week.

A second question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: what measures will this government take to ensure that railway lines are sufficient, routes are straight and safe, and that rail roadbeds are upgraded to ensure the greatest success of our Alberta Yellowhead route?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the question that the member raised was the topic of discussion in a joint cabinet meeting with the province of B.C. and the province of Alberta on how both governments can work towards securing, you know, a dedicated rail. Some dollars, of course, will go into upgrading the facility. But for agriculture and for manufacturing this has great potential in reducing our costs and getting our product back to global markets. Most importantly, product coming to Alberta, to Canada go back empty to China. We have an opportunity now to stuff them and send them back to China and actually develop the economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, Mr. Speaker: what will the minister and her ministry be doing to make sure that Alberta business and industry maximize backhaul potential to the port of Prince Rupert for Alberta products?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has instructed us as ministers to manage growth pressures as an initiative. Recently we hosted with Edmonton Economic Development, the mayors of Edmonton, Prince Rupert, and Prince George, as well as CN a meeting where we talked about how we could work more effectively together. We're participating in a study as well with Transport Canada, with Saskatchewan, and with Manitoba to look at how we can co-ordinate backhaul efforts. We recognize that this port shortens the travel time to Asia by at least one and a half days out of Vancouver and three days out of Los Angeles. So it is an excellent opportunity for development.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Solicitor General Staff College

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early this morning there was an alarming incident at the Solicitor General staff college in Edmonton when as many as 18 people fell violently ill to the point where paramedics were called in to attend the sick. The college remains shut down, and no one is allowed to enter or leave. My first question is to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can he provide an update on this very serious situation at the college?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays that this is the first time that we've had an incident of this type at any of our facilities. We are working closely with Capital health to determine what caused these 18 people to become suddenly ill. I'm pleased to say that all individuals are recovering, and the staff college will not resume training until we are assured of a safe environment for all of our staff and recruits.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to ensure that this type of incident does not happen again?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, Capital health is at the college right now. They are investigating to determine the exact nature of this illness and its cause, and based on their findings, we will take whatever action Capital health recommends to ensure that an incidence like this does not reoccur.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

1:50 Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Balzac situation has always been a political problem between the city of Calgary and the MD of Rocky View. The government ignored this when someone in the government made assurances, no matter what denials we've heard. Now Drumheller very clearly has said that they will not provide water to this project. They're standing up for their people, and good for them. This government now has no choice but to try and force a deal between Calgary and the Rocky View MD. To the Premier: does the Premier take any responsibility for this fiasco?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, a very craftily worded question: someone in the government gave a promise, but, you know, there's denial, and we don't know who, but somebody in the government. You have the evidence. Stand up in front of all these people, and tell me who the person in government is who gave this commitment. Get up. Now's your opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has hung their hat on the premise of allowing municipalities to make their own planning decisions without a regional process. In fact, the former municipal affairs minister stated in the House last August that every municipality "has the ability to make their own decisions" without any regional oversight. Well the Balzac situation is an example of just how flawed a process this is. To the municipal affairs minister: is this type of land-use planning serving Alberta's best interests?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that the minister's council has been working very diligently for a number of years looking at the best direction for municipalities in Alberta and, more recently, in the last year presented a report to myself. One of the primary subjects in that report is planning, and that's regional planning for municipalities between themselves, and I commend them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Drumheller has voted unanimously to reject the proposal to supply water to Balzac. They quite rightly pointed out that any positive economic benefit to the community does not justify the potential risk. To quote the former minister of municipal affairs in this House, August 31 Hansard, "The people of Drumheller know very well what's going on." Well, obviously they did not know that this government was selling their water behind their backs, and they have stood up and said no. To the Minister of Environment: how does the minister justify this statement in the House?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that the statement that was made at that point in time was as valid then as it is today. The people of Drumheller have made a decision with respect to their participation in this project. No licence has been issued. I understand that the MD, the applicant, has asked that any decision be delayed so that they can explore other options. As it stands, that is the status of this particular licence application at this point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Resource Development in Marie Lake Area

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans are very concerned about the proposed seismic testing in oil sands development at Marie Lake, one of Alberta's few remaining pristine lakes. OSUM corporation has acquired the mineral rights beneath the surface of Marie Lake. Government rules require seismic testing before a development application can be filed. At a public meeting last night OSUM stated that they have evidence that oil sands exist beneath Marie Lake and that seismic is not necessary. To the Minister of Energy. Albertans are fearful of possible environmental damage and aquatic life loss due to seismic. Will you waive the seismic testing requirement and allow OSUM to provide their evidence, therefore not putting Marie Lake at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I must say that under this government and under the leadership of our current Premier we have a plan to build a stronger Alberta. Let me make it very clear that absolutely no – no – resource development takes place in the province of Alberta without a very comprehensive approval process.

With respect to seismic it's critical that adequate resource information is available in order for the proponents and the government regulators to come to the proper conclusion with respect to a permit. It's necessary, Mr. Speaker, to pinpoint the location of the resource. We cannot eliminate this important tool.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: land sales for the right to explore our natural resources occur every two weeks and are conducted under the supervision of the Department of Energy. Mr. Minister, does present government policy allow all lands with the exception of parks and protected areas to be sold to the highest bidder without any consideration to quality of life and environmental sensitivities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, again, this government has a plan to improve Albertans' quality of life, and we continue with that plan. Quality of life and environmental sensitivity are top priorities when any development is considered, regardless of whether it's energy, infrastructure, forestry, the fibre business, agriculture, or manufacturing. The sale of mineral rights is only part of this process, and a number of very stringent checks and balances are in place to ensure that any development that occurs is done in a responsible manner.

Mr. Ducharme: Our new Premier has included improving quality of life for all Albertans as one of the main pillars under his leadership. Quality of life for Albertans is more than financial wealth. It includes amongst other things quality education, safe communities, good recreational opportunities, and a clean environment. By allowing seismic and industrial oil and gas operations on pristine lakes such as Marie Lake, this government allows our quality of life to erode. To the Premier: will you instruct your cabinet to stop industrial development surrounding Marie Lake until the impacts on recreational properties have been addressed to the satisfaction of the residents, who will live with the consequence of this seismic activity?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for the work that he's doing with this file. He has attended all of the public meetings and has been keeping me up to date on how this matter proceeds.

I want to tell everyone that prior to any development it is very critical that we must maintain not only the quality of life for the residents in that area but also absolutely protect our environment. I'm going to make sure that everyone is satisfied that there is scientific evidence and a process that is followed that does satisfy the protection of the environment and the people living around that lake. I'll work with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to ensure that this happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

E-mail from a Government Computer

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is failing to keep his promise of running an open and transparent government. This was proven again when the Minister of Agriculture and Food would only commit to an internal investigation into the vicious, hate-promoting e-mail that an employee sent from a government computer. Now the internal investigation is over, and the Premier and the minister refuse to give the public any details. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: given that section 3 of the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, which deals with discriminating publications such as this e-mail, applies in this case, did the minister or the department take part in this internal investigation?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware at all whether we did or did not. I certainly would have to do some research, and I could get back to the hon. member at that particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. That doesn't surprise me, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Agriculture and Food: the Agriculture and Food employee appears to have violated Alberta's human rights laws. Is it not the minister's position that such violations are worthy of dismissal? Why was this person not fired?

Mr. Stelmach: Openness and transparency means that this government is not violating anyone's rights, especially the employer/employee relationship. Certainly that member, of anybody in this House, should know the rules.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, this time to the Premier. Certainly, the Premier should know the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act if anyone in this House should know it, and the code of conduct in section 3 was violated. Again to the Premier: why was this person not fired?

Mr. Stelmach: It actually saddens me, the fact that the individual will talk about openness and transparency. Here, when we're protecting the rights of an individual – and there is a Public Service Act, and there's a code of ethics involved. This member is not aware of either one of those and is trying to trample the rights of an individual. That, really, I find quite offensive.

Postsecondary Education Funding in Calgary

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, on March 22 the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness justified the disparity in per capita funding for health care between the two metropolitan regions by answering that Calgary region has a relatively young and well-educated population and stated that "health status tracks education." My first question is for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Given the positive correlation between parental education and postsecondary participation rates and the positive correlation between the ratio of young people in the population and postsecondary participation, and given that Calgary is a larger city and has had greater increases in population than Edmonton over the past 10 years, how can the minister justify that there are 11,000 fewer spaces for postsecondary education in metro Calgary than in Edmonton?

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is truly committed to making postsecondary education more accessible – and that means increasing capacity where it is needed – and to building a stronger Alberta overall. We're working with all of our postsecondary institutions on building that capacity, but comparing the enrolment spaces between Edmonton and Calgary is not as simple as just counting spaces. Edmonton institutions tend to serve a broader geographic region that includes all of northern Alberta whereas Calgary institutions tend to serve learners from south central Alberta as well as areas south of Calgary. Students in those areas also have the benefit of the University of Lethbridge for postsecondary university level spaces. So when you take the total south Alberta enrolment spaces and the total north Alberta enrolment spaces, actually they're about equal.

Dr. Brown: Is the minister suggesting that students in Calgary ought to travel to get their education whereas those in Edmonton can stay at home?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary, and the hon. member knows this very well. There are a number of institutions within the city region of Calgary that are serving a number of the students there. We've made a number of investments in the postsecondaries – Bow Valley College, Mount Royal College as well as the University of Calgary – and have actually increased the spaces there considerably, up to 7,000 spaces within the city region as well.

Students make the decisions as to where they're going to go, and sometimes students choose to go to another geographic location for a number of reasons, some of which might even be to get away from home.

Dr. Brown: For the same minister. The University of Calgary's operating grant for full-load equivalent is $10,105, and the University of Alberta's is $11,374, a difference of 12.6 per cent. How can the minister justify this significant disparity, which means that the U of C is shortchanged about $30 million per year in operating grants?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't justify it; the economics do. Certain course loads cost more money to deliver, and the universities would be the first to admit that. In fact, they tell me that all the time. The course loads of medicine or in some cases agriculture, veterinary schools cost more dollars per student to deliver. We fund based on that cost. So to simply say that it should be the same even though you're delivering different course loads is not playing, really, with the truth quite properly. I think the review on equity across the province that we completed in 2005 indeed did bring equity into the system in Calgary, and the University of Calgary actually received an additional well over $2 million to their base operating grant. We continue to monitor the situation, and we'll continue to work with the postsecondaries to ensure that we have a fair and equitable system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Tuition Fees for Postsecondary Education

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I stood with a large group of postsecondary student leaders on the front steps of this Legislature and listened to their concerns about tuition fees. This government has pushed tuition fees up by 275 per cent in just over a decade, the highest increase in the country. These student leaders have brought the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology a message, a message written on over 1,000 postcards. The students have a simple question for the ministry, which I'm happy to relay. This government claims that Alberta is debt free and is swimming in unprecedented surpluses. So why are the students forced to drown in debt?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In consultation with those very students, this government came up with the affordability framework as it relates to tuition and came up with a new tuition fee policy. Indeed, we've rolled back tuition fees to the 2004 levels. This is going to save students in one year – in one year – over $700 on a four-year program, perhaps even over $3,800 for their course load.

I have, actually, one of the cards the hon. member mentions because we are responding to them. We just received them. It says, "I call on you and your government to immediately reduce tuition to a level that is affordable compared to other Canadian jurisdictions leading the way on affordability." We are the fourth lowest in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again today student leaders came to the steps of the Legislature for the umpteenth time to draw attention to the Alberta disadvantage that postsecondary students have been experiencing year after year. Student poverty is their daily experience, debt loads are growing, and their tuition fees remain one of the highest in Canada. Why has this government failed to take concrete action to reduce the crushing debt burden on postsecondary students, and what action is the minister proposing to take to address this serious problem?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we do not have one of the highest tuitions in Canada, and it's a misstatement of the facts to allude to that. We, in fact, have the fourth lowest tuition policy in Canada.

We are working, as I said before, with the student groups. I've met with the presidents of their associations. We're talking about the affordability framework, which includes what it does cost to go to school in the province of Alberta, not just tuition, which is only one factor of that. Capacity is a huge issue for us because even if we lower tuition or make it free, we can't get more students in it because we don't have the spaces. We need to build spaces. We need to make it accessible. We need to manage the growth pressures that we have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked this minister to commit to reducing tuition levels in Alberta to make them the lowest in the country, a solemn promise made by the former Premier of this province not long ago, but I got no clear answer. The government so far has failed to live up to its promise, and students are beginning to fear their government is getting ready to renege on it. My question is simple and direct to this minister. Will his government, will he honour this promise and reduce tuition fees for postsecondary students so that they are the lowest in the country, and when will he take action to meet this promise?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I continue to say in this House and in answer to this question that we are working to make postsecondary education as affordable as we possibly can in the country. I don't believe that when the A Learning Alberta report came forward, the students who were involved in that consultation believed that tuition was the only thing out there. Tuition is a part of the affordability piece. Their living costs are a part of that. Their books are a part of that. The cost of postsecondary is also a part of that, and if we can help work with the cost of postsecondary, driving those costs down, of course we're going to make it more affordable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Tobacco Reduction

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between 2001 and 2005 Alberta retailers received a 49 per cent increase in payments from tobacco companies to prominently display their products on store shelves. These power wall tobacco displays are deliberately located at eye level right above the candy and other products clearly targeted at children. Not surprisingly, teen smoking rates in Alberta are on the rise. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the government follow the lead of most other provinces and the advice of the Alberta Liberals and introduce legislation to ban power walls?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've made it very clear that as Minister of Health and Wellness I put a very high priority on making it possible for Albertans to take their health into their own hands, and part of that strategy is, in fact, tobacco reduction. I'll be bringing forward a tobacco reduction strategy to my own caucus for approval and then hopefully forward to the House and the public in due course. But taking action on tobacco reduction is a very important part of our tobacco reduction strategy, and I was delighted to see the schoolchildren here yesterday as part of the process. I was only sorry that I had a previous commitment and couldn't have joined them on the steps.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. We appreciate that sentiment.

Again to the same minister: aside from the cancer prevention fund this government profits from its investment in tobacco-related companies through the heritage trust fund. Is this the reason that the government is going against the wishes of 80 per cent of Albertans in refusing to implement a province-wide smoking ban?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. In fact, the question of where investment strategy lies in the hands of the Ministry of Finance, and I'm sure he'll be addressing those strategies in due course.

As Minister of Health and Wellness I can say that it's very important that we identify areas where Albertans can help to improve their health. That includes stopping smoking. I will be pursuing vigorously a strategy with respect to stopping smoking, and everything will be on the table when we have that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. On the one hand, this government puts billions of dollars into the cancer fund, indicating that cancer prevention is essential. On the other hand, this government refuses to take simple steps to actually prevent cancer. Again to the minister: why would the government rather put money into treating smoking-related illnesses than legislate a province-wide smoking ban to prevent the illness in the first place?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government does not refuse to take steps. Just a week or so ago I was part of an announcement by the Cancer Board in conjunction with the Capital health authority and the Calgary regional health authority on colorectal cancer screening, which was a leading edge process that we're engaged in. We're very interested in identifying cancer early, in screening processes that are early, and we're working vigorously on those sorts of things. Smoking is clearly a part of it, and I intend to take action on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The United States has requested consultation with Canada to address concerns over some issues related to the implementation and interpretation of the softwood lumber agreement. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Will any measures of the Alberta government be included in these consultations?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the U.S. concerns that led to the request for this consultation have to do with industry assistance programs developed by Ottawa and the governments in Quebec and Ontario. At the moment there are no Alberta-specific trade issues that are involved in this, and accordingly we will not be participating. Of course, we will be monitoring and paying attention to these discussions and to these talks, but the responsibility for that falls primarily to my very able colleague, the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. If the U.S. complaints go to an arbitration panel, what impact would the panel rules have on Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it does go to an arbitration panel, the panel will be asked to rule on several important issues relating to the operation and interpretation of the agreement, but it is important to note that the softwood lumber agreement contains a mechanism to resolve these disputes, and that is the mechanism that is going to be followed. The request for consultation indicates that both parties value the agreement and are working to resolve the concerns that are being mentioned here today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. Can he explain to the House the Americans' allegation that Canada has violated the agreement re the so-called surge mechanism?

Mr. Boutilier: Yes, it's very complex, but simply stated, Mr. Speaker: under the agreement Canada can export freely to the United States when lumber prices are high, but when lumber prices are low, such as now, Canada imposes export restrictions on lumber shipments to the United States from B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec. Now, provinces can choose between two types of export restrictions, and Alberta and British Columbia have chosen a pure export tax, and the other provinces have chosen this hybrid export tax and quota system, which of course is in dispute today but we're very confident will be resolved.

The Speaker: We'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Old-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Alliance-Camrose Rail Line 43.03

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. The loss of local grain elevators has led to massive 30-wheel Super B trucks crumbling down highway 13. A viable sustainable alternative exists in the form of rail line 43.03, which runs in a straight line from Alliance to Camrose. However, CN is threatening to shut down this line, which will result in the further congestion and deterioration of highway 13. Will the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation commit to collaborating with the Battle River Producer Car Group and CN to maintain service on the line?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I want to make clear to everyone here that Infrastructure and Transportation wants to try to make sure that we can keep all kinds of traffic moving in Alberta, but I also have to make clear that the province of Alberta is not in the railroad business. We have private enterprise doing that business, and we will do whatever we can as far as strategies and stuff to try to help them keep business moving and keep grain moving in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Well, thank you. I hope we do lots of good stuff, then. Mr. Speaker, in the mid-80s line 43.03 received $16 million in federal upgrading assistance. With 132-pound rail it has the highest carrying capacity going, easily capable of handling major freight. Does the minister believe that the rails are of greater value ripped up and sold for scrap than offering a ready-made, sustainable alternative to take the strain off an already overburdened highway 13?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm not in the scrap business either, so I'm not sure what he's talking about there. But I do believe that in any capacity to help us move freight to any ports or anything along those lines, we will work towards that goal.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has provided land for just $1 for a cargo terminal in the MD of Grande Prairie. Will this government show similar generosity and support the Battle River producers with regard to this rail line?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is an MD in Grande Prairie; I think there's a county up there. I'm not aware of the exact dealings at the time or the $1 deal. If we have excess land and a municipality can use that land, there are always agreements that can be made, and we will help them out as a province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Maintenance of Secondary Highways

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans have expressed concerns over the condition of provincial highways and, in particular, three secondary highways that are so important to our rural communities. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What plans are in place to catch up with this growing problem?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm also very concerned about the amount of maintenance that we've been able to do on our highways in the past few years. Quite frankly, we haven't been able to do enough, but I can tell you that we are working, and I do have a four-year plan to try and do catch-up and address the back issues we've had. Funding for this program will be coming shortly, and I hope that my friend the hon. Finance minister will help me to be able to do that plan.

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, of particular concern in my constituency are highways 791 and 766. Highway 791 had recent shoulder construction on it, but it was an incomplete job, and it's in a very dangerous driving condition. Highway 766 is very rough, and I've received many complaints about damage to vehicles. Can the minister tell what plans are in place in the upcoming construction season for these two roads?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware of those two roads. In fact, they also run through my constituency. I understand that one of them has been partially repaired, but we need to do some more work there. My department is taking a very close look at and evaluating what needs to be done there, and our next step, I'm sure, will be to upgrade them. Unfortunately, I can't give the exact date, but we are aware of the situation and working on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

2:20 Temporary Foreign Workers

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry stated in the House that the province will continue to work with the federal government on the temporary foreign worker program. If the provincial government is prepared to take responsibility for the benefits of this program, it should also take responsibility for the well-being of workers it brings in. This is an issue of basic human rights. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry: what protocols, if any, does the provincial government have in place to ensure that the basic safety and employment standards are being met for temporary foreign workers?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, temporary foreign workers are dealt with the same as any other worker, and they are entitled to the same rights and protections. So our employment standards, our occupational health and safety standards, all standards that apply to any worker in Alberta apply equally to those foreign workers, whether they're here on a temporary basis or whether they are landed immigrants.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the biggest problems with a temporary foreign worker program is that these workers come here for a year or two years, gain experience, and then go home. Permanent immigration ensures long-lasting benefits for Alberta's economy. Can the minister please tell us if this government will continue to rely on unsustainable solutions like the temporary foreign worker program, instead of sustainable ones like permanent immigration and expansion of our own apprenticeship programs?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, relative to the expansion of the apprenticeship programs the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology can answer that. But let me just say that the temporary foreign worker program has a wonderful capacity to fulfill those obligations that corporations commit to when they entertain contracts for large projects, where the temporary foreign worker goes in, completes the project, and then can return home. Many of the countries that are exporting, if you will, temporary foreign workers have situations where there's a lull in their economy, and they relish the opportunity for their workers to go elsewhere in the world, take on a temporary task, and then return to their homes and their families. So this has a benefit not only to those families but also to the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard from many people working in the immigration field that Alberta is absolutely not prepared for the temporary foreign worker program. Workers are often socially isolated, bound by restrictive visas, and lack the language skills to seek help if they're being unfairly treated. Without strong protections in place more and more workers will come forward with experiences of deception, human rights violations, and abuse. Will the minister please take the initiative to investigate what is actually happening with the temporary foreign workers? The program should be suspended until there's a thorough investigation.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, this is a federal program that we are working in co-operation with the federal government on. The federal government provides monies that we also provide for integrated settlement services. While temporary foreign workers don't necessarily qualify for those funds, many of the 20 nonprofit agencies that run programs for immigrants will tell you that they have among their clients, if you will, temporary foreign workers that are receiving everything from second language programs to socialization skills.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that's worthy of note is that the corporations themselves are active. Although there has been one complaint that's been raised in this House, we thoroughly review any kind of indiscretion by anybody employing a worker in any capacity, either as a temporary foreign worker or as a landed immigrant.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 92 questions and answers for today.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I stated earlier, I'm now tabling the appropriate number of copies of the letter pertaining to an application which the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark submitted on behalf of a community association that received $75,000 of unmatched funding through the community initiatives program. No rules were broken. All of the applications have been processed in accordance with the program guidelines.

The other one is the paper that I referred to on the Alpha Gamma Delta, and it provides the background information on that particular organization.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. My first tabling is from Jim Stallard, a Calgary-Varsity constituent, who is the husband of Marlene Stallard, a brave lady fighting a courageous battle against ovarian cancer. Jim passed along his thanks to me for raising Marlene's struggle in the House and asked me to acknowledge the much-appreciated efforts and support of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Health and Wellness, and his great assistant, Wendy.

My second tabling is from Jerry Iwanus, a constituent of Battle River-Wainwright, who is very concerned about the deteriorating, hazardous conditions of highway 13, in particular the section east of Camrose at the junction of highways 13 and 56.

My third tabling is from Paola Romanelli, who attended the Bragg Creek forum last Thursday, March 29, at the community centre, at which I was a panelist. Paola writes, "Kananaskis is a great forest that residents of the area and Calgarians enjoy all seasons, it would be a great waste for us and future generations to allow this plan to go on."

My last tabling is from David Easton, who is also a Bragg Creek resident. In his letter to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development he urges the minister to "give earnest consideration to the longer term effects and the detriment of the entire community including the residents of Calgary."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to give two groups of tablings. One is from volunteers at the Unity Centre of North East Edmonton, on some personal testimonials of their need for affordable housing.

A second group is another hundred letters from good Albertans, petitioning our Alberta Legislature to support that the accused killer of Joshua Hunt be sentenced and tried as an adult "due to the nature of this crime, his past criminal history and that he is so close to the age of 18 years."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a letter dated October 31, 2006, to the former Minister of Finance, before her retirement, and this letter is from myself as chairperson of the Alberta Public Accounts Committee. I am demanding the release of the blue books immediately, and I'm pleased to say that it was eventually done by this government.

Thank you.

Mr. Graydon: With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, the documents that I tabled earlier with 1,602 signatures from people in the Beaverlodge area were not in a form suitable as a petition; however, they are in a form suitable to be presented at this time.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, Alberta advanced education public postsecondary institutions' audited financial statements, public colleges and technical institutes for the year ended June 30, 2005, and universities and Banff Centre for Continuing Education for the year ended March 31, 2006.

The Speaker: Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests prior to dealing with the point of order?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Louheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members assembled a social studies class from Ardrossan high school. This class is accompanied by their teachers Mr. Paul Schwartz and Mr. T.J. Kennerd. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The second introduction, Mr. Speaker, you will recall from the '94-96 era. Page Carolyn Laird, formerly from Fort Saskatchewan, is here today. These days she works in the U.S. Senate for the Republicans. She's here accompanied by Kenneth Vogel, who also works in Washington. They are in the public gallery as well. I would ask them to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on a point of order.

Point of Order
Projected Government Business

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a point of order that I think is worth bringing up in the House today about the way we're conducting House business. On Thursdays we're given a general idea of what's coming in the following week. I understand that from time to time there are emergencies or we can't get a minister there and there have to be changes, but I think today, at least, shows you that there is no attempt at all to follow what we talked about.

I look at what was on government business for Wednesday, and there are four bills here for second reading. I see that what's actually coming – and we didn't know about this till this morning – are bills that are absolutely, totally different. None of them are the same, Mr. Speaker. What is even more worrisome is that for a major bill, perhaps the most major one that we're going to discuss here, Bill 3, the emissions act, which we just finished debating in second reading, we had no idea that this was coming down again. We had House leaders' meetings and other meetings.

Now, it takes some preparation for the opposition. I'm not going to speak for them, but I'm sure it would be true over here, that we want to prepare for these sorts of things. Now we see that it's tentatively on the agenda along with other bills that were not there. I don't know what will be on Thursday. There's not much point giving us the week's business ahead if it doesn't mean anything, if you're going to change it to where in the morning we find out that the bills are totally different. I think this is a totally unacceptable way to run government business.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I know that emergencies come up, and I understand that from time to time there have to be changes, but when the whole day changes and you don't know about it till the morning, that's not the proper way to do government business as far as I'm concerned.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to address this point. To some extent I agree with the hon. member: it is very difficult for members in this House to plan far in advance on what the business of the House is going to be at any particular point in time. There is, by the very nature of the House, some flexibility that's required from time to time. As House leaders we make an attempt to work as much as possible with all of the party House leaders to discuss what is appropriate business to be dealt with at any particular time.

I do point out, Mr. Speaker, that with the new rules that we're operating under, the time that's available for the discussion of government business is very limited, so it's necessary that we have some certain flexibility.

With respect to Bill 3, that the member brings forward, I apologize to this hon. member because I wasn't aware that he had been advised. Bill 3 is not going to be discussed this afternoon in recognition of the very issue that the member brought forward. We recognize that there are some amendments that are going to be proposed by members, and for that reason we're not going to be dealing with Bill 3.

But I have to emphasize to the member that while there is some room for flexibility, at the end of the day it is the responsibility of the government to move through the agenda as effectively as possible, recognizing, of course, that it's up to the co-operation of all members of the House to do it as effectively. So the government gives its assurance that we will do the best that we can to accommodate the opposition, but there may be times when it simply is not expeditious to meet everyone's time constraints. All I can do, Mr. Speaker, is give the assurance of our House leader and my own assurance in my capacity acting as House leader that we will work with the opposition as best we can to alleviate these kinds of concerns.

Mr. VanderBurg: I was quite aware last week, when the projected government business was announced, that the Vital Statistics Act, Bill 8, would be brought up today. It's in Hansard, page 299. It says clearly: "On Wednesday, April 4, under government bills for second reading Bill 8, the Vital Statistics Act." So, you know, the member stated that none of the bills projected for today was on the Order Paper. I was aware of it, and it was read here on Thursday. It's in Hansard.

Mr. Martin: Well, we didn't . . .

The Speaker: We only get one shot, hon. member. You know that. Okay, hon. members. Anybody else, by the way?

Well, then, let's deal with this matter. This is more a matter of information, I think, and clarification. First of all, let's remember that there are three House leaders, whose job it is to communicate with one another. There's one on the government side, there's one on the Official Opposition side, and there's one on the third-party side. I think the third-party side House leader was the one who raised the point. Incumbent upon all of this is to do some interchange with one another. This is the harmony thing. This is the you touch me, I touch you, we love one another, and we get on with business kind of thing, okay? I'm not advocating it. I'm just reflecting, okay?

Secondly, we have a Standing Order which we didn't have years ago but we have now in the current environment. Standing Order 7(6) says:

When Projected Government Business is called on Thursdays, the Official Opposition House Leader may ask one question pertaining to the order of Government business to be brought before the Assembly in the next week.

There has to be an assumption inherent in all of this that whatever outline is given on that Thursday afternoon is, in fact, going to be the one followed the next week, recognizing the need for some flexibility. Everybody understands that.

Thirdly – and the third point is the most important one, hon. members; the third one, the most important one – is Standing Order 10, which doesn't give any excuses to anybody: "Every Member is bound to attend the service of the Assembly . . ." If you believe that, there's not an issue. You're here. The business will come up. Nobody'll miss anything. And that's the responsibility.

There are 3.3 million people out there. A handful of them will actually want to come here. Some people actually go through nomination meetings and elections to get here. There must be a reason why they've done that. So what's getting here? Obviously, they want to be in this building. They want to sit here and debate and participate. So when the chair looks out, the chair should see, actually, 82 smiley faces working in harmony with one another, conducting the business of the people of Alberta.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Securities Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today and move second reading of Bill 21, the Securities Amendment Act, 2007.

This legislation follows a process that began several years ago when the provinces and territories agreed that they need to work together to inspire high investment confidence and make Canada's capital market more competitive.

In 2004 they signed a memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulations in a historic act of co-operation between provinces and territories. The agreement commits Alberta and other provinces and territories to develop a passport system of securities regulations as well as harmonized and streamlined securities legislation across Canada.

Since the signing of the agreement we have been working hard with our counterparts to meet these objectives. The first phase of the passport system was implemented in September 2005 by all provinces and territories except Ontario. It opened a single window of access to capital markets across Canada. Last month the national rule to implement a second phase of the passport system was released for public comment. Phase 2 will be implemented in stages, beginning in 2008, to further our goal of ensuring Canada's securities regulatory system meets the needs of our stakeholders, including investors and industry. In effect, it opens the single window even wider. The Securities Amendment Act, 2007, supports the passport system and other national rules that update, harmonize, and streamline securities regulations across Canada.

The legislation includes amendments that do several things: first, it will establish a common business trigger for all regulated activities, which is consistent with practice in the United States and United Kingdom; second, this amendment will require the registration of investment fund managers and individuals who perform prescribed functions, such as a chief compliant officer or an alternate designated person; third, replace the current annual renewal system with a system of continuing registration until suspended or terminated; and, fourth, move detailed requirements to the national rule, such as particular registration categories, handling of potential conflicts of interest, and registration status upon individuals leaving their employment or being hired by another firm.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Alberta is one of the first jurisdictions to introduce these amendments. We would expect the other jurisdictions to introduce similar harmonized provisions at their earliest opportunity. We are also continuing to harmonize our security legislation in the area of enforcement. These amendments ensure that our legislation remains modern, streamlined, and harmonized with other jurisdictions. It should be noted that these changes follow significant improvements to investors' protection and enforcement in the past few years, including the introduction of civil liability provisions for investors in the secondary market.

As the second-largest capital market, it is important that Alberta continue to show leadership and keep its legislation as up to date as possible. I urge all members of this Legislature to give their support to Bill 21.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I move to adjourn debate on Bill 21, Securities Amendment Act, 2007.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 22

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I stand today and move second reading of Bill 22, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will establish Alberta Investment Management as a stand-alone provincial corporation. To provide a bit of background, Alberta Finance's investment management division is responsible for managing about $70 billion in assets, including public-sector pension funds, endowments, and other funds. Some of the funds include the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, which is obvious to everyone, but also the public service's pension plan, the sustainability fund, the medical research endowment fund, the science and engineering research endowment fund, to name only a few.

Our investment staff provide exceptional stewardship of these assets on behalf of Albertans, civil servants, and other clients. For example, we added 1 per cent in added value above the policy benchmark in 2006, which translated to about 435 million extra dollars. The heritage fund, Mr. Speaker, in the year 2006 returned a 14.8 per cent rate of return. Well, we know that given the right opportunity, our investment managers can do even better.

Last year a government-commissioned organizational study concluded that Alberta investment management should be moved out of the Department of Finance and set up as a provincial corporation. A stand-alone structure is consistent with the current best practices for the top public-sector investment funds, such as the British Columbia Investment Management Corporation, the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan, the Ontario municipal employees retirement system, and the Canada pension plan. More specifically, the study concluded that a provincial corporation structure would allow for improved governance, operational flexibility, and a much more focused investment culture.

We agree with these conclusions and expect that these improvements will result in a greater investment return for AIM's clients over time. For example, every tenth of a per cent in net value-added investment returns per year would mean $16 million per year net income to the heritage fund or close to $50 million per year on all the balanced investment portfolios AIM manages. Mr. Speaker, in the study they predicted that we would be seeing increases of 100 basis points, which would rise to around a $500 million improvement on a per year basis if we achieve that. We're slightly more conservative, and we're expecting to receive anywhere from 25 to 50 basis points, but even at that we're looking at a potential of $250 million.

I can certainly appreciate that there might be some concerns about putting our savings, pension plans, and other funds in a stand-alone organization, but let me assure the Assembly that this has been foremost on my mind as we developed the plan to create this new corporation and is indeed reflected in the legislation that I am moving today. While the new AIM corporation will have greater operational flexibility, the investment policies for the various funds will continue to be set by the clients, including the government and pension plan boards. I'll reiterate that: the investment policies for the various funds will continue to be set by the clients, including the government and the pension plan boards.

Furthermore, Bill 22 proposes controls and accountability tools. For example, the oversight of AIM will be turned over to a professional board of directors appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The government will have the ability to issue directives to the corporation. AIM will be subject to the Fiscal Responsibility Act, and its budget will ultimately have to be approved and published as part of the government's budget process in the same manner as other noncommercial provincial corporations. The Auditor General will be the auditor for the corporation and be entitled to attend, call, and be heard at all meetings of the corporation's audit committee. A memorandum of understanding between the government and the corporation will specify roles and expectations regarding the corporation's mandate, accountability, and reporting requirements.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it perfectly clear that we're doing this not because we're unhappy with the performance of our investment operations – our staff does a wonderful job – but we truly feel and, certainly, the study has shown us that by putting in the provincial corporation, we will give them more flexibility, that we have the potential of creating an investment centre in Alberta. This investment fund will be the fifth-largest investment fund in Canada, and it will be centred here in Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, I certainly urge all members of the Legislature to give support to Bill 22, which is a very critical bill. With that, I would adjourn debate on Bill 22, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Curling capital of the world.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and move second reading of Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007.

In 2003 the government of Alberta introduced the Post-secondary Learning Act, which consolidated several pieces of legislation to more effectively govern the postsecondary education system. As our government works with the postsecondary system to transform our practices, we continue to find ways to improve the Post-secondary Learning Act while maintaining accountability.

This bill proposes several amendments to the act that will enhance its clarity, flexibility, and responsiveness to the needs of postsecondary institutions. In addition to the housekeeping amendments around the wording of graduate student associations the amendments we are proposing concern expanded regulatory authority for the establishment of alternative academic councils, board terms at colleges and technical institutes, disposition of land, pooled trust funds, and the approval process for private degree programs.

I would like to take the time of this House, Mr. Speaker, to briefly outline each amendment. In regard to alternative academic councils the act allows for colleges and technical institutes, through a regulation, to adopt an alternative academic council model with ministerial approval. The alternative model supports colleges and technical institutes moving to degree granting. It is somewhat similar to that of a general faculties council at universities, where academic staff are more involved in decisions about academic programs. Through the consultation process on the development of the regulation colleges and technical institutes requested that eligibility criteria be reflected in the regulation for transparency and clarity. The current authority outlined in the act only allows for powers, duties, and procedures on establishment. This amendment would allow for eligibility criteria as well.

Now, what was asked for in the consultations, Mr. Speaker, was that to be eligible to adopt an alternative academic council, the college or technical institute must reflect 40 per cent of total credit FLEs, which are full-load equivalents, enrolment in baccalaureate degree programs as approved by the Campus Alberta Quality Council, and that, of course, is the amendment to meet that recommendation.

Regarding boards, currently college and technical institute board chairs may serve for a maximum of two terms as a member or as a chair. This means that a member serving his or her second term and who has gained extensive experience and knowledge cannot serve as chair if the position becomes vacant. After consultation with colleges and technical institutes we are proposing that members, if appointed chair during their second term, have the opportunity to serve one additional full term as board chair. This provides some additional flexibility but maintains the term-certain period.

The next change is regulating the disposition of land at public postsecondary institutions. This demonstrates government's commitment to the autonomous board-governed institution model and the government's role to monitor institution planning and development. Under the existing provisions institutions are required to obtain Lieutenant Governor in Council approval to sell land being used for the purposes of the board and lease land held by the board for leases of more than five years.

Let's first focus on the sale of land component to the amendment. Given that land is an important commodity, it is critical that we maintain approval on land sales at institutions to ensure that we are meeting the long-term needs of the province. However, institutions also have land donated or willed to them. Often this land is not located near the main campus and has not been part of the long-term planning for the institution. In those cases the amendment will provide some flexibility and enable boards to sell the land if that seems appropriate. This amendment also impacts leases, such as leases for coffee shops, food courts, restaurants, and other businesses that provide services to students, staff, and faculty. This legislative change will eliminate the need for institutions to request Lieutenant Governor in Council approval for such routine operational leases.

The pooled trust fund amendment is a change that will ensure consistency with currently accepted practices. The change will allow boards to pool trust and nontrust funds and to encroach on capital. Institutions are given a variety of funds as trusts. There are many that are actually small amounts of money. To help institutions maximize their return on these funds, trust and nontrust funds need to be pooled. The Auditor General monitors institutions' investments, including those of pooled accounts, as part of its annual audit. There have never been any concerns regarding how an institution invests its trusts. In most cases the institutions advise how they invest any donated amounts.

The final amendment deals with the approval of private degree programs. Currently private institutions wishing to offer degree programs must go through a system co-ordination review by the ministry, followed by the Campus Alberta Quality Council review process. Once they meet all of the requirements, they must obtain Lieutenant Governor in Council approval for both designation as a degree-granting institution and approval of the program. This must occur each time they wish to offer a new degree program. Under the amendment private institutions would still go through the examination of how the degree fits with programs offered across the system and the rigorous Campus Alberta Quality Council review process. If the institution is proposing to offer a degree program for the first time, it would still require Lieutenant Governor in Council approval to become a degree-granting institution. However, any subsequent degree proposals would be approved by the minister, which is consistent with the approval process for public institutions.

This process would be more efficient and timely while still ensuring quality and system co-ordination. Campus Alberta Quality Council closely monitors approved degree programs to ensure that they continue to meet quality standards. As you can see, these amendments are designed to enhance the clarity and flexibility of the Post-secondary Learning Act and be responsive to the needs of postsecondary institutions.

I ask that all members support Bill 6. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on second reading of Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the shadow minister for advanced education on this side of the House, and speak to the bill being brought forward to the House today. In general I would like to tell the Member for Lethbridge-West that we are supportive of this bill. We like this bill. [some applause] I hope you didn't bruise your hand with all that table thumping there, but thanks for the endorsement of the endorsement.

We have just a couple of concerns with it, which I'll point out in brief here, and then we can deal with in more detail in clause by clause study in Committee of the Whole. First, let me say generally that we have not always supported all parts of the Post-secondary Learning Act. The Post-secondary Learning Act was introduced back in 2003 as Bill 43, a bill which the Alberta Liberal caucus at the time opposed, a position in line with that of student groups. It was amended in 2005 with Bill 9 and Bill 55 and in 2006 with Bill 40. Bill 40, of course, was the bill that took tuition fee limits out of legislation and placed them in regulations, a move that the Alberta Liberal caucus strongly opposed and continues to oppose.

Bill 55, on the other hand, was something that we very much supported because that was the bill that introduced this concept – well, more than a concept – the alternative academic council. That is, as we talked about in the House at the time, absolutely crucial to making sure that when we grant institutions other than universities in this province degree-granting status, the students get full value for the not inconsiderable amount of money that they and their spouses and their parents and their loved ones sometimes have spent and sometimes that the government of Alberta has advanced them on their education. A baccalaureate degree granted in the province of Alberta that is not recognized by other institutions outside this province is not worth very much at all to someone who wants to go on to graduate study at the institution of his or her choice. Those problems have occurred, and Bill 55 could be accurately described as the first attempt to deal with that in a positive way. What Bill 55 sought to do, of course, was set up these alternative academic councils, which were a way and continue to be a way of achieving the governance requirements of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the AUCC.

Now, every university in this province is a member of AUCC. Colleges and technical institutes have not been, and for those colleges that want to move to a broader degree-granting status if not full out university status some day, membership in AUCC, a national accreditation, is absolutely key. There is no accrediting body per se in Canada. There is some thought that's given from time to time that maybe Campus Alberta Quality Council could grow into that national accrediting body, but it's not there yet. The best option that we have is membership in the AUCC because not only does that confer certain recognition and status on the member institution that's recognized by all other member institutions but it does set certain standards. This is what Bill 55 sought to do. That was why we were so happy to support it, specifically in the case of Mount Royal College, which has ambitions to become a university some day, sooner rather than later, we on this side of the House hope, as they do at Mount Royal, and in the case of any other college or institution not a university in this province at this time, or not yet, that desires to grant baccalaureate degrees that will be of full value to their students.

When we look at Bill 6 and its amendment of section 47.1, we're very much in support of that. On the surface it appears to be placing more power in the minister's hands than normally. Those of you on the government side of the House might expect me to rail on about that to some extent, but I think we understand that what's going on here is just setting out what currently occurs. Proposals for alternative academic councils need to be approved by the minister. This change just means that the minister must set out in the regulations the requirements for that approval. So we're fine with that.

In fact, we're fine with most of the bill, and we're probably going to be fine with all of the bill if we could just get a little bit of clarification on the language in a couple of the sections that are to be amended; for instance, section 67, the one that deals with changes to how land held by the board of public postsecondary institutions can be disposed of. It allows the lease of any land for more than five years without the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council as long as it is "for the purpose of providing support services to the students" – and it puts support services in quotes – "faculty or staff" of the institution. And the support services are to be determined in government regulations.

So all we need to be happy – unless, of course, you give us the wrong answer, an answer we don't like – is a clarification on what will be considered support services. I think that when the Member for Lethbridge-West introduced the bill, he gave some indication of what those support services might be. I would like to get more clarification, and if we can do that at committee stage, we're going to be quite satisfied with where we're going with that unless, of course, there's something in there to be considered as support service that just doesn't pass muster with us. But we shall see, and we'll talk about that more at committee stage.

The other area that we have a little bit of concern about, again in terms of needing some clarification of the regulation wording, is the amendment to section 76, which gives boards the ability to withdraw some of the capital of trust funds in order to be able to withstand fluctuations in the amounts distributed by that fund. You know, trust funds are intended to serve as a stable source of funding through interest, but they can be undermined if you take out capital for short-term gains at the cost of long-term interest. So we should find out what kind of situations the government and the boards have in mind that would require these kinds of withdrawals. Again, as we go through the bill clause by clause, we can probably put those questions to the government, and I think it would be reasonable to expect that we could get a pretty specific answer on that.

So those are really the things that we're looking for. In general, Bill 6 clarifies the language of the Post-secondary Learning Act. In general, it makes legislation reflect current practices. It responds to some of the recommendations made by the Auditor General. It seeks to increase the effectiveness of the approval of degree programs. So those are all changes that we can support, and in some cases they're not terribly significant changes anyway.

So if we could get some clarification of those proposed regulatory changes, I think that this side of the House, or at least this Official Opposition Alberta Liberal caucus, would be quite prepared to support the government on Bill 6.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007. I've been listening very carefully to the speakers, each one of whom spoke on what's in the bill and what's considered desirable, a step forward, what's just routine, what's a substantive change. I think, in general, there are some minor amendments, it's true, that clarify the language of existing legislation. That's fine with us.

There are things that are not in the bill that I would have liked to see. I would have liked for the government to have used this opportunity, for example, to entrench in legislation the cap on tuition fee policy, a cap on tuition fee increases. We were very unhappy, as were the students, with respect to the absence of this legislative commitment on the part of the government when we had the last opportunity to speak to amendments to the legislation relating to this matter. So that's a disappointment. I would have thought that the new minister and the government under the new Premier would have quickly responded to the serious concern on the part of students and us to put back in legislation that matter relating to tuition fees and tuition fee increases.

That being said, there are some other matters. I think that the amendment to the existing legislation with respect to alternative academic councils adds a provision to the existing ones by way of giving the Lieutenant Governor in Council the power to establish the criteria that a public college or technical institute must meet in order to be eligible to apply for approval to establish an academic council in a given institution. This will be done through regulation, as to what those criteria are. I want to return to it later on, Mr. Speaker, because we have received a fair bit of input and representation from the institution most likely to be affected by this change in the legislation, this particular change having to do with academic councils.

We have received representation, for example, from ACIFA, Alberta Colleges and Institutes Faculties Association. I think there are some very constructive suggestions that ACIFA makes with respect to the kind of legislative provisions that need to be spelled out and changes that need to be made in the existing regulations to strengthen the ability of academic staff to play a significant role in the determination of academic matters, as distinct from financial and other administrative matters, which have remained in the purview and under the authority of boards of governors.

Mr. Speaker, some of the provisions in this bill will certainly affect primarily colleges and technical institutes. Many of the colleges are moving towards either expanding the university type of offerings or preparing to move from two-year preparatory university-type courses to offering degrees. Some are already offering degrees. So with the expansion of the university degree programs both currently taking place and anticipated to happen to be able to respond to access challenges that we face, I think it is important to strengthen the role of academic faculties in the decision-making processes of these colleges, particularly decisions that have to do with academic curricula, academic requirements, and other important academic decisions. If we expect these colleges and institutions to in fact be able to deliver degree programs which enjoy a credibility equivalent to the one enjoyed by our universities, then surely it's important that we put in place legislative and regulatory rules which will enable academic faculties to play a requisite role, that faculties now play, within the university structures. That's what I think I would like to focus on, Mr. Speaker, after making one or two more points.

I was looking very closely at amendment 8, which amends section 124. It does in fact repeal section 124(h) to (k) inclusive and is replaced by a number of new provisions and subclauses. The only observation that I want to make about it is a little bit of concern that I developed as I was reading closely the new legislative provisions under section 124, particularly those subsections that replace existing subsections (h) to (k). For example, subsection (i) in the existing legislation reads as follows: "respecting the referral of proposed degree programs to the Campus Alberta Quality Council," and it says explicitly "for review and recommendations to the Minister." This provision is repealed and is replaced by a statement which is vaguer than the statement that I just read, that will be repealed. The new statement reads: "respecting the referral to the Campus Alberta Quality Council of proposed programs of study for which a degree may be granted."

There's not much said about that the quality council will in fact be expected to make a review and, resulting from that review, that it will be expected to make recommendations. That, to me, is perhaps just an oversight. Its absence, the failure to explicitly say that the quality council will be expected to make recommendations to the minister, suggests that the minister may in fact either ignore the recommendations or simply say that no recommendations are needed. I am suggesting that there's some vagueness there. I'm not suggesting that that's what's intended, but there is a vagueness there, and that bothers me a bit. That, in my view, needs fixing.

The other provisions that replace the existing ones certainly do refer to resident private colleges. I have this feeling – and it may be an unfounded concern at this point – that we may be opening the door wider to nonresident institutions, some of which may, in fact, be for-profit institutions from outside of the province or outside of the country that do business in the area of postsecondary education here. Again, this is a concern that I hope can be allayed in our debate, in the discussion, but that certainly is a concern.

The concern that I have on this is not so much about profit, but as you increasingly move some programs into institutions that are private and for profit, I also find that the cost for students to go to these institutions increases very, very dramatically. Going to a private, for-profit institution for the same degree that may be available at a public university or college is much higher. Now, it is true that these colleges and universities don't directly receive any public money, and therefore one can say: "Well, they're in the market. If the price is too high, then they will not succeed. They will not attract students." But we know that given the accessibility problems, many of our students, in fact, have chosen to go to these universities not out of choice but because they have no choice but to go to these degree-granting institutions. And when they go there, they are going there funded liberally by our student finance program.

Students who are in fact going to these private, for-profit institutions to earn a degree for which they can't find a place in the public system pay much higher costs for the same thing. So the issue of equity here is introduced by the expansion and growth of the private, for-profit postsecondary sector, which is allowed to offer these degrees. That's another concern, I think, that I wanted to raise here, Mr. Speaker.

Now, with the limited time remaining, I just want to draw attention to matters related to academic governance raised by the Alberta Colleges and Institutes Faculties Association. Just quickly, I want to first of all draw attention to the kind of concerns that they raise. They support the notion of shared governance, that the academic faculty play more role in the determination of decisions, but they think that the present policy limits eligible colleges or technical institutes to those who have at least 40 per cent of FTE enrolled in baccalaureate degree programs or applied degree programs.

The difficulty with that is that it leaves most of the colleges and institutes out of the possibility to be able to establish academic councils. They hope that this regulatory requirement can be relaxed so that more colleges and more institutes, who in future may be able to offer these academic programs leading to degree programs, can have more academic input in the decisions that are related to academic matters on their campuses. So that's one issue.

The other one is that ACIFA also advocates for the revision of the academic council structure so that academic staff comprise at least a 60 per cent majority of the membership. Now I think it's a 50-plus-1 rule, that they have 50 per cent representation on these academic councils, with a possibility of this going beyond 50 to 55. What they are hoping is to again underline the importance of the academic role in the determination of academic matters, that legislatively or in a regulatory form this representation be increased to 60 per cent so that it approaches close to what the situation is at the universities around our province.

The third matter again, I think, relates to the issue of academic governance, and the amendments in this act deal with part of that. ACIFA advises that the regulation be amended so that the board and the alternative academic councils must each approve appointments to the council made under section 5(1)(a)(v). Presently this approval authority rests exclusively with the board, and ACIFA is requesting that this matter be looked at closely. If, in fact, we think that there's a great deal of value in increasing the role of academic staff making academic decisions in the governance processes, then they should share this responsibility with the board of governors to approve the appointments, that this shouldn't remain exclusively with the board.

One more point they make is that ACIFA urges that the process to elect faculty should be jointly determined by the board and the faculties association. Again, I'm surprised – I wasn't aware of this – that currently the process to elect faculty resides with the board. I think it seems to be very reasonable for the faculties to have some say in the determination of this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate in the debate?

Bill 8 Vital Statistics Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 8, the Vital Statistics Act.

Bill 8 consolidates the Vital Statistics Act and the Change of Name Act and modernizes the legislation in this area. Some of the highlights under the vital statistics provisions include prescribing information required from parents regarding the registration of birth of their child, removing the concept of child legitimacy from the legislation, and accommodating surrogacy births by requiring that the registrar replace the child's birth registration in accordance with a court order showing a genetic donor as the mother.

The provisions allow a child to be named on the birth registration in accordance with the child's cultural or ethnic heritage, subject to the discretion of the registrar. They include providing the registrar with the discretionary authority to refuse to register an improper name, such as a name with profanity. It includes creating provisions to deal with the registration of births, stillbirths, and deaths that occur on aircraft and includes giving the registrar the authority to register a presumption of death where the court determines a death occurred in Alberta. It includes setting out requirements around disinterment and reinterment permits to ensure that a body does not pose a health risk to a community before a disinterment permit is issued.

Some of the highlights under the change of name provisions include allowing minors to change their name or their child's name if they're married, an adult independent partner, or a parent or guardian of a child. The bill includes requiring an individual whose name is being changed and who is 12 years of age or over to submit their fingerprints as taken by a law enforcement agency. This provision will allow for tighter security to ensure that people are not changing their name to avoid criminal charges or past criminal activity. It includes providing the registrar with the discretion to deal with cases where it would be inappropriate to issue change-of-name certificates, such as witness protection cases. It includes providing that consents for change of name must be given by both parents or all guardians unless there's a court order dispensing with any of these required consents.

Highlights under the general provisions include requiring that the type of personal information to be included in a form be prescribed in regulation, that any decision by a deputy registrar or individual authorized under the act may be reviewed by the registrar, and that the majority of the registrar's decisions may be appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench. It includes allowing the registrar to order the return of a certificate or certified copy if the registrar is satisfied that it is being used for fraudulent or improper purposes, and failure to do so will be an offence.

It includes increasing the time periods for releasing information about a birth or stillborn for genealogy research to provide longer privacy protection for people who are living longer. It includes having the penalties for minor offences fall under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and includes providing directions for the court regarding information to be included in a court order for presumption of death and amending parentage on a birth registration document. It also includes allowing the regulations to set out the evidence required to register a non hospital birth, a non hospital stillbirth, and a registration of stillborn one year after the event.

All these amendments will modernize the legislation to reflect cultural changes, improve clarity, and update language and processes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to participate in second reading of Bill 8, the Vital Statistics Act, this afternoon. First of all, I'd like to thank the sponsor of the bill, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, for sharing his briefing documents with myself and my researcher. I always like to take the opportunity to thank a member from the other side when they do that because I do believe that it makes for better debate in this House and, ultimately, better legislation for all Albertans. So I do appreciate that. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose and intention of this bill is worthy of support from all sides of the House, and I'm going to suggest that, ultimately, I will be recommending to the opposition caucus that it receives our support. However, I would like to point out that caution is warranted due to the sensitive nature of the issues themselves. We know that oftentimes attempts to accommodate ethnic and cultural diversity do lead to unforeseen problems, so I think it's prudent to be cautious as we proceed through debate on Bill 8.

I appreciate the sponsor's comments in moving the bill in second reading this afternoon. There are a number of questions that I do have, however, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to run through just some of them and, I suppose, also put the sponsor on notice that when this bill gets to the committee stage, assuming that it passes through second reading, as I'm sure it will, I'll have some more detailed questions in terms of the wording of the bill. Certainly, we know that at second reading the idea is to debate the intent of the bill, so I have some questions now that would be relative to that.

I note in the bill that an awful lot of it deals with the protection or storage of personal information. One of the questions that I would be wondering about would be whether or not the Privacy Commissioner was consulted in the drafting of this bill in order to ensure that none of the changes to the new Vital Statistics Act would violate the province's privacy legislation.

I note that in many cases the term "director" in the old legislation has been replaced by the term "registrar," and I'm wondering if the minister might share with us why that is the case, if there's a specific reason for that change having been made or if it's simply a matter of updating the language. In discussing this with the sponsor of the bill earlier, I understand that the Vital Statistics Act has not really been overhauled in a major way for some 50 years, so it would certainly appear as if it was time to do a major rewrite of the bill, and perhaps that's the explanation there.

I'm wondering if either the sponsor or the minister might share with all members of this House which groups or organizations were consulted in the drafting of the bill and what the primary reason or motivation was for updating the act. As I suggested, perhaps it was just the fact that it hadn't had a major rewrite for 50 years. Perhaps some of the cultural changes that were referred to were the overriding, driving factor. I'm not sure.

Mr. Speaker, there have been serious questions raised in Alberta over the past number of years regarding the security of provincially issued identifications; in particular, drivers' licences. I think many members will be aware of a number of instances where there have been questionable practices around the issuance of driving licences, the renewal of driving licences, and so forth, so I'm wondering whether or not some of the changes to this bill might have been spurred on, in fact, by the need to improve the security measures in regard to private registries that are operating in the province.

It's been stated that this new act will reflect in many ways similar legislation from other Canadian provinces, Mr. Speaker, and again I'm wondering which other jurisdictions were consulted in drafting this bill or if the sponsor might be able to share with us exactly which provinces' legislation this is reflective of.

Mr. Speaker, organized crime has certainly become a real concern for Albertans over the last number of years, and the speaker mentioned sections of this bill that deal with name changes in an effort to make sure that criminals aren't changing their names just to avoid prosecution. I'm wondering if that is the only real threat that the government has identified or if perhaps there are other threats as well in relation to organized crime that this bill might be designed to address.

Several areas in the bill, Mr. Speaker, touch upon fraudulent activities and the need to prevent fraudulent behaviour with respect to vital statistics. I certainly think that many of us have either experienced personally or known someone who has experienced identity theft to some extent, and we've seen the ravages that that can take on individuals when they suffer loss of identification. So I'm guessing that, you know, a lot of this is designed to address those particular situations. I'm wondering whether or not law enforcement agencies were consulted in the drafting of this bill and, if they were, in fact, whether or not the sponsor or the minister might be able to share with us what their involvement was in the drafting of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the government press release notes that the bill is being proposed in large part to recognize cultural and ethnic diversity in Alberta. I'm wondering, again, if either the minister or the sponsor might be able to share with us which groups were consulted to ensure that, in fact, cultural and ethnic diversity is respected, that we're covering all of the various ethnic and cultural groups that are represented in this great province of ours. I'm wondering whether or not the government might have plans to update other legislation that would be affected in a similar way, where there may be any number of cultural or religious groups that would be affected by other legislation and if this piece of legislation, having been fully reworked, is reworked to respect those various diverse groups, if in fact the government shouldn't be doing a review on a broader scale of other legislation and bringing it up to standard as well.

Also referenced in the government press release were remarks regarding section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and I'm wondering if that's in response to perhaps some challenges to existing laws that may have been made in Alberta based on the Charter and if that was the case, if the minister might be able to share with us whether or not that was, in fact, the case and what the specifics of those challenges might have been.

So with those questions, Mr. Speaker, I think I will take my seat and allow others to participate in debate in second reading. As I say,

I've got a number of more specific questions when we get into the committee stage, but certainly those are sort of the top of my questions that I have for the sponsor and the minister at this time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: I'll be very brief, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for this opportunity to make some comments on Bill 8, the Vital Statistics Act. Yes, it's clear that the existing piece of legislation that we have in place probably is outdated, outdated because there have been no revisions either to the language or to the substance of the bill over the last 30, 40, 50 years, and the world has changed. The world in which we live is a very different world now.

Reference is made to cultural diversity, that has increased, and that brings up questions of practices, childbirth, and other rights surrounding it. Sexual mores have changed. I notice in the bill in chapter 4 amendments for records on change of sex. I suppose that this was something that was very, very rare 50 years ago, so that's no longer the case.

But it would have been helpful if the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne had elaborated a bit on the bill in terms of what changes that are made in the bill reflect, in fact, changes in values, changes in cultural sort of practices over the years. So it would be easier to follow the bill and the changes in it, those that are related to or in fact represent a response to specific patterns of behaviour that have changed over the years because of cultural change in general and which provisions of the bill reflect, in fact, the increased cultural diversity, not just change in the same culture but a different kind of cultural pattern being present in today's society that wasn't the case, say, some years ago.

In general, by looking in a very general way, most of the changes seem to be in the form of updating to change the language or to include matters that were not included before, such as the one I just mentioned on change of sex. Others are administrative. There are lots of bills here that will need to be changed, I suppose. The bill repeals the old vital statistics one and amends the Change of Name Act while amending the Marriage Act, the Fatality Inquiries Act, the Cemeteries Act, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, the Adult Adoption Act, the Family Law Act, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, and the Insurance Act.

Yes, sure, there'll be changes required here that reflect changes on other pieces of legislation. Some of those pieces of legislation perhaps weren't even there when the old Vital Stats Act, that this act will replace, was voted on and became a statute of this province. Particularly, I think, because the bill will reflect matters covered by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, I wonder if either now or later we'll get some information on which parts of the act, in fact, are designed to accommodate the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. In general, Mr. Speaker, I think that the amendments that are proposed here are overdue, and in a very general way we are certainly supportive of this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available again.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening with interest to the discussion on Bill 8, the Vital Statistics Act, this afternoon, and I, too, would like to get on the record as supporting this legislation. This is more of a modernization of existing legislation than it is housekeeping, I believe. Certainly, whenever we look at the press release that was issued by the government to alert the public to this legislative change – it's a little over a month ago, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne first talked about Bill 8. In a quick review of this I don't see any problems with it.

We may not notice the importance of this new legislation until we look at the Alberta Gazette. You can see that there's hardly an edition of the Gazette that is not published without a long list of individuals who for one reason or another are either changing their name or amending their name. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that a person can amend their first name if they've been known by a first name that is different than the one shown on their birth certificate as long as they were known by that name prior to their 10th birthday. They can also amend their name if they were never given a first name or were given a first name that was unacceptable to the registrar. All that is required to amend their name is to fill out an application form, sign an affidavit, and provide documentary evidence in support of their application.

Now, as I understand it, and I could be corrected, any person can change their name, their first name or their last name, at any time or at any age. All persons must fill out an application form, again sign an affidavit, pay an application fee. Sometimes I wonder about these application fees and whether or not they're appropriate. I've certainly heard at our constituency office people complain about the cost, the application fee. Again, Mr. Speaker, you have to provide proof of identity and marital status. Individuals 12 years of age or over must submit fingerprints taken by a law enforcement agency with their application. I believe the fingerprints are needed as part of the application to legally change a person's name, but I would like clarification as to what happens with those fingerprints after the process is completed.

Now, I had recently a constituent come to our office with an issue around her name on her birth certificate. She was born some years ago, and she was born on her family's farm. A couple of weeks after her birth her father went to town, I think to the post office at that time, to register the birth, and there was some issue around the name that was actually recorded on the birth certificate. The name that this woman had used all her life, including 45 years as a public school teacher – she had a university degree. She had lots of qualifications. But suddenly her name wasn't right. I was surprised at what it took for this to be corrected, and I was surprised at the amount of money. But if it's any reassurance to this House, I was also delighted at the response that she received from civil servants. They worked quickly and correctly to ensure that her problem with a typo was fixed. It was nothing more than a typo that was made many, many years ago.

So in conclusion, we may look at Bill 8 as a mere matter of housekeeping, but it's more than that. One only has to look at the Alberta Gazette to see the importance of this legislation to so many people across the province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, again Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate in debate?

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to close debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. You know, I think I have most of the questions and some answers for members opposite. But if I run short, I'll make sure to cover them off in the next stage.

Like the last member talked about, this bill is more than housekeeping, and I totally agree. It has some substantial changes and changes that have not been made for many, many years. In response to some of the questions with regard to the protection and storage of information, the Privacy Commissioner was definitely consulted on the fingerprints for minors. The access and privacy branch of Service Alberta reviewed the draft act for privacy concerns as well.

You know, when we talk about the new cultural, ethnic, and religious updating of this bill, the provision is intended to accommodate cultural or religious practices that do not conform with the normal naming restrictions. The courts have ruled that legislation should strive to accommodate Canada's cultural mosaic. The provision will reduce the risk of constitutional challenges, we hope. I can give the members some examples. You know, it's a north African tradition to list the father's name as the baby's last name. It's a Polish tradition to give a baby girl a variation of her father's last name; where the father's last name ends in an I, the letter A is substituted. It's a native American tradition to give the first or last name of a grandparent or a revered elder as a baby's last name. Just some examples.

There's no doubt that many of the provisions in Bill 8 are required in order to deal with modern-day occurrences.

The issue of security: there are provisions in this bill that spell out the requirement and allow for tighter security than is being currently practised under the authority of any further documentary evidence. Fingerprints are required for the police to check that individuals are not changing their names to avoid criminal charges or past criminal activity after a name change has been done. Government services is not informed if the individual has a criminal record. That stays with the law enforcement agencies.

The question was asked about the consultation, and there's no doubt that consultation on this legislation was limited to civil law, family law, constitutional law, court services, and Health and Wellness. There is a long list of stakeholders affected. I can give some examples of the stakeholders affected: hospital administration staff, physicians, midwives, government departments or agencies like Statistics Canada, Passport Canada, Service Canada, Alberta Health and Wellness. There are medical examiners that are affected, adoption lawyers, adoption services, government departments and agencies that deal with that. Of course, on the death side: the funeral homes, cemeteries, medical examiners again, researchers. The legal change and the name issues, of course: registry agents, law enforcement agents will be affected. Documentation issues: courts, vital statistics, other Canadian vital statistics jurisdictions, again physicians, registry agents. So it has a wide impact, Mr. Speaker.

On the driver's licence issue: the motivation to amend the act was to update legislation – again, like I had talked about – to bring it into modern times. The legislation has not been updated for 50 years plus. You know, we did use B.C.'s vital statistics legislation as a guide. It helped us in determining some of the pieces that we needed to modernize and harmonize as well.

I think that pretty well covered the questions, but if there's something that I may have missed, I'll make sure to cover it off in the next piece.

I move second reading.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

Bill 9

Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise on behalf of the Minister of Finance and move second reading of Bill 9.

The purpose of this legislation is to make administrative changes to the Tourism Levy Act that will provide clarity and make it consistent with Alberta's other commodity acts.

You may recall that in 2005 the Tourism Levy Act was amended to reduce the tax rate on hotel accommodation from 5 per cent to 4 per cent. That legislation also included the introduction of a penalty for late filed returns. Well, last year, Mr. Speaker, it became apparent that the penalty unfairly penalized small hotel operators relative to larger operators, and in an effort to improve the equity among these groups, this deficiency was corrected immediately through an administrative policy in the waiving of excess penalties. Bill 9 provides the legislative authority for this policy change.

Also, since the Tourism and Levy Act was introduced, it has become apparent that the levy was being overcharged by some operators. Since there is no mechanism in the act to require or provide refunds to purchasers, Bill 9 also adds a mechanism allowing a penalty for any operator who refuses to refund an overpayment to a purchaser.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007, will provide necessary administrative changes, enhance fairness, and improve operator accountability. I urge all members to support Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 9, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007, in second reading. When this act was first introduced two years ago in this House, it received broad support from not just the Official Opposition but stakeholders across the province. I'm pleased to say that in consultation with stakeholders this certainly appears to be addressing concerns that hotel owners, operators, and such have in mind.

It is addressing some issues that have arisen since the implementation of the tourism levy, which, I might just point out, I did still refer to as a tax in 2005. I will continue to refer to it as a tax in 2007 because if it's walking like a duck and talking like a duck – and if my colleague from Edmonton-Decore were to hear me say, “smelling like a duck,” he would have a little bit of a chuckle. But, certainly, in all respects, if it looks, acts, and sounds like a duck, it's probably a duck, and in this case a levy is still a tax.

Mr. Speaker, just a couple of quick questions for the minister. I'm not sure whether or not the Environment minister on behalf of the Finance minister would be able to answer them today, but perhaps the minister's staff will be able to get some answers to us before we deal with this bill down the road in committee stage.

I'm just wondering whether or not the minister might be willing to share with this Assembly all amounts that were overcharged by operators to purchasers for the fiscal years 2000-2001 to the present time so that we would have a bit of a sense of just exactly how big an issue this is in the industry, if it's happening a lot or if it's a relatively minor thing. Perhaps it could be broken down into small, medium, and large operators so that we have a sense of whether or not this is a difficulty, as an example, for the small operators due to the amount of red tape that is involved.

We've talked a lot in this Assembly about the need for a red tape review commission. Certainly, the small operators find the administration, the collection and remittance of taxes like the tourism levy to be particularly burdensome. That was a concern that I raised two years ago, and it's still a concern, and I'm curious whether or not that might be part of the reason why we have these situations arising in the first place.

I'm wondering whether or not the minister might be willing to share with us the department's administrative costs for enforcing the tourism levy. Just exactly how much is it costing to collect this tax, and is it cost-effective and efficient to be doing so? Those are, I think, relevant questions that would certainly help us in debate of this particular amendment. I'm wondering whether or not we could learn how many people are actually employed by the department to ensure that operators are collecting and remitting this tax appropriately.

Mr. Speaker, in 2005 when we cut the tax from 5 per cent to 4 per cent, the greater Edmonton hotel industry implemented a 1 per cent destination marketing fee. Those who are so inclined and go back and look at debate from 2005 will see that that was one of the concerns that I raised right from the very beginning: while we were reducing the amount of tax that would be collected in the form of this levy, there was absolutely no assurance that municipalities might not move in and institute a tax to make up the difference. In fact, we know that that has happened in a number of places. So I'm wondering whether or not the minister might like to elaborate on the impact of having reduced the tax and then having some municipalities jump in and scoop that up with destination marketing fees or other like taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I'd be curious to know whether or not the minister might like to comment on the report that was issued by the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability that recommends allowing municipalities to collect a tourism tax. Again, this is an issue that's relevant in today's news and with all of the discussion that's going on around municipal sustainability these days. We know that that's just one of several taxes. I think it's eight or nine taxes altogether that are being discussed as perhaps giving municipalities an opportunity to realize some predictable, sustainable funding over the long term. So that would be an answer that I'd be curious to hear from the minister.

I'm also wondering whether or not the minister has been lobbied by the hotel industry for a renewed deal on slot machines and, if that is taking place, whether or not he might elaborate to members of this Assembly on the progress of those discussions.

I'm wondering whether or not the minister would be willing to provide a breakdown of tourism funding levels by province. How does Alberta rank in terms of other provinces when we promote ourselves as a destination not only within the country but, of course, internationally?

The industry itself has benefited greatly from this levy. I'm pleased to see that it would appear to be doing what it was intended to do; that is, put more money into the hands of the industry for marketing themselves. I note that in the last fiscal year $48.3 million was targeted to the industry for that purpose as opposed to $24.3 million two years prior. So clearly there's nearly double the money in the budget for the purpose of marketing that industry and marketing Alberta as a destination, as I mentioned, both nationally and internationally.

But the question, then, would be: how can Albertans be confident that we're actually getting value for that money? What sort of performance measures has the minister done to ensure that the money is being used as it was intended to be used? We know that they're getting more money, which was the whole purpose for passing the Tourism Levy Act in 2005. We know that they're getting the money that was intended for them. Now, how can we make sure that in fact it's being used the way that it was intended to be used and that we're getting good value for those tax dollars?

Mr. Speaker, I think I'll save the rest of my questions for the committee stage, when we get into a little more detail. But, certainly, at second reading those are the questions that I have top of mind, and I look forward to hearing further debate and look forward to responses from the minister or the mover when we get to the committee stage. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to get up and say a few words, I suppose, mostly on clarity when we talk about support for municipalities. First of all, I want to say that presently municipalities in Alberta receive approximately $723 million for support within their communities. That is not including the $600 million that they do get from the Alberta municipal infrastructure program. I want to also comment that that is support that helps municipalities in a direct way, which does not include the support that not only my ministry but other ministries have.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the minister's council for a second. The minister's council is a body of four individuals, which comprises the mayor of the city of Edmonton and also the mayor from the city of Calgary, the president of the AAMD and C, and the president of the AUMA. There were a number of recommendations. In fact, 12 recommendations were given to our ministry. I want to emphasize that they were recommendations to this government and that this government is looking at those recommendations, but clarify that they are theirs.

The Deputy Speaker: May I remind you, hon. minister, that we are debating Bill 9, Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Danyluk: I understand, Mr. Speaker. I was just prompted by some of the discussions by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and his comments, which I thought were led a little astray, so I wanted to make sure that they were clarified.

The Deputy Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) is not available on the first and second speakers. I assumed you were debating the bill.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought the hon. minister was going to go on for some length. I was actually enthralled by it, and I was hoping that he would go on longer.

Mr. Danyluk: I could speak longer.

Mr. Martin: Please do. I, on the other hand, will be short, as usual.

Mr. Speaker, the bill obviously makes total sense. It seemed that some people were, to put it bluntly, getting ripped off and also the Treasury seemed to be getting ripped off, so this bill represents, I guess, a necessity. I think the minister said that they'd had to do it by policy, and now we're confirming it by legislation so that we have a way to deal with this.

I guess that the more important thing is that it looks like overpayments were made by purchasers of hotel accommodations, and then, as I say, the levy was not remitted back to the ministry. I'm sort of interested because I'm wondering if there are lessons here for the Finance department. If this is happening to this so-called levy of money coming in to the Treasury, are there lessons here to be learned on some of the other aspects of what we're doing in terms of the Treasury?

I ask that question because if it's happening in one department,

Mr. Speaker, it seems that it could quite likely, in budgets over $30 billion, be happening in other departments. I'm wondering if the minister, when he's here, could allude to that, whether they see this as just an isolated case, which I doubt, or whether we have some other serious problems, and whether this could be used as a model for dealing with that.

Along with that, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what sort of money we are talking about, if they have any estimation of that. For instance, how many operators have defaulted on levy payments, and how many people have had to be reimbursed for the levy overpayment, and how much money didn't go into the Treasury during that time before the policy came in? Clearly, we had a problem here, and it's hard to tell, you know, how serious a problem it was.

Again, as I say, it'd be hard to say that we wouldn't support a bill when people were being ripped off and the Alberta Treasury was being ripped off. It seems to me that you'd pretty well have to support the bill.

I want to repeat. I wonder if there are some lessons here that we can learn in other aspects of government collection, whether they're called levies or taxes or whatever. Is this really just an isolated incident, Mr. Speaker, or does this show that we have some serious problems in Treasury and in other areas? I'd be interested in the minister bringing us up to date on this at some point.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, Bill 9 is interesting. When we look at this, certainly the highlight appears to be a reduction in the late filing penalty for hotel operators or owners. Now, in some of these cases where there were late filings, as I understand it, the fines were exceeding the actual amount owing.

We are looking at also adding a judicial collection provision so that the province can legally go after companies failing to pay the hotel tax. I don't know what kind of a problem this is. We could look at this and say that it's primarily a housekeeping piece of legislation. I think it's more than that. We only have to look at the consolidated financial statements of the province, and when we do, we also have to be mindful of the fact, as other speakers have indicated, that we reduced the hotel room tax in 2005 with Bill 21, that was introduced by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. We saw the reduction in the hotel tax from 5 to 4 per cent, and according to the hon. member at that time and in the government press release, this change represented forecasted savings of $11 million annually in costs for guests in Alberta accommodations.

When we go forward to the consolidated financial statements for 2005-06, it's interesting to note that for 2005 the tourism levy, or the hotel room tax, collected $61 million. The budget for the following year anticipated that there would be a $10 million or almost $11 million reduction, that there would be $50 million collected, but the actual amount collected in 2006, according to the government's own documents, was $58 million, so the savings were not as significant as we had first been informed. Now, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, it was an increase in the number of hotel rooms sold. That may or may not have been the case, but it's worth noting that the savings that originally were anticipated certainly are not reflected in the budget numbers that have been presented.

Now, that's a lot of money, $58 million, and many people have been promoting the idea of using that money to support a stand-alone ministry, a ministry of tourism. That was a notion that Mark

Norris had in the leadership race last fall, but he didn't win. You know, he didn't even make the cut to the second round of the voting, so perhaps that tells us why he didn't win: there's not a will to have a stand-alone tourism ministry.

A significant pool of this cash – I'm told up to 75 per cent of it, Mr. Speaker – is being used to promote and market Alberta hotels through tourism promotions. I would like to get an update in the course of this debate on whether or not that will continue.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was talking about municipal revenue sources and the fact that there was a drop in this tax. With this Bill 9, what would be the future? If we have a look at the report to the minister of municipal affairs that was presented on March 5, 2007, municipal revenue sources, one of the recommendations, of course – and I think we're going to get some announcements on this in the budget. I fully expect there to be an amusement tax in the budget for municipalities. I'll be surprised if there is not.

Now, on this tourism tax, if we're using it and we're going to continue to use it to promote the industry in Alberta, that's fine. But is there going to be room here for the municipalities? The hon. minister was starting to talk about that earlier, but I wasn't quite sure what he meant. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, when we look at this bill, I think it should be supported by all members of this Assembly. But in review, if we don't need the revenue stream to promote tourism, perhaps it's time that we should have a good look at maybe reducing the tourist tax even further or eliminating it completely.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to speak today on Bill 9, the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2007, sponsored by the Minister of Finance. This, I believe, is a very small piece of a larger problem and actually crosses between two ministries: Finance and Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

There are 17 organizations in this province that market tourism – they're called destination marketing organizations – which appear to be run on grants, not sustainable dollars, from the dollars that are raised by the 4 per cent on the tourism levy. This bill rightly addresses the problems with the fair collection of the dollars owed to the tourism levy. However, I hear complaints that Travel Alberta is insular and autocratic and that not all tourism organizations are, so to speak, in the loop.

In Lethbridge we have one of the oldest and largest destination marketing organizations in the province. It's called Lethbridge/Chinook country/southwest Alberta. They do an amazing job with the little funding that they get, and they have very dedicated staff and volunteers, led by their able general manager, Kimberly Lyall.

It is felt that tourism, at $5 billion, is Alberta's fourth-largest industry, but with a few changes and some attention from this government this could easily be moved into the $10 billion bracket. There is in the world today a particular interest in ecotourism and, certainly, in agricultural learning tourism. Tourism is especially important to our struggling Alberta rural communities. Without changes many current opportunities in this tourism area will be lost.

Apparently, these destination marketing organizations and other tourism suppliers were not the only ones who felt that there was a problem in accountability and the controls within the industry. The government itself commissioned a report to identify the gaps in accountability and the controls that exist in the current tourism framework. The report was to be released to the tourism industry for general discussion and consultation. This report was named the Leitch report. It is finished but, not surprisingly, has remained on a shelf in some secret place and, hopefully, has not been shredded. It has never been released, and the problem still exists.

My questions would be: these housekeeping amendments come from where? Did they come from the Leitch report? If so, again it looks like some backroom decisions were made to bring these amendments forward. As I stated in the beginning, this is a small – and a very small – part of a very big picture. But I believe that until the Leitch report is released to the public and to the industry, we will never know why these amendments came forward, where they were made, and what information they were actually based on. These are questions that I would look forward to the answers to in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate in the debate?

Does the hon. Deputy Government House Leader wishes to close debate?

Mr. Renner: No.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Bill 10

Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act.

This bill will repeal the Horned Cattle Purchases Act. The objective of the act was to promote dehorning of cattle prior to public sale to prevent damage to cattle during transport. The objective has been achieved, and the act is no longer required. Producers no longer need an incentive because current commercial practices and market expectations promote dehorning. Producers now use modern methods, such as dehorning paste, et cetera, to ensure that horns do not grow back.

The Horned Cattle Purchases Act came into effect on March 31, 1938, and levied a $1 penalty on each head of horned cattle at the time it was purchased in Alberta. The livestock dealer incurred this penalty upon purchasing horned cattle from the producer. Nearly all cattle breeds were horned varieties. Polled or hornless cattle varieties were not the norm. The penalty amount was deducted from the purchase price to encourage the producer to dehorn cattle prior to public sale.

In 1939 the scope of the act was extended to persons shipping cattle out of the province. The funds were deposited in the horned cattle purchases act trust account. The trust account was used for various initiatives to improve livestock in the province and any other livestock work that benefited producers directly. The trust account also funded the administration work for livestock improvement.

The penalty was cancelled in February 1972, and the act has been in essence suspended since that time. On March 31, 1972, the trust account contained $1,915,625. Expenditures from the trust account occurred from its inception in 1938 and over the following years. The monies were used to fund numerous programs and services for the benefit of the livestock industry. These programs included a warble fly control program, a University of Alberta feed handling facility, and an Alberta Cattle Commission cattle marketing information service. The funds were also used for research in disease controlling grants to agricultural associations and postsecondary institutions. The trust account, Mr. Speaker, ceased operations on March 31, 1994, and the remaining assets of $1,551 were transferred to the general revenue fund on that date.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that a stakeholder consultation letter and discussion paper were distributed in August 2006 to 87 stakeholders, including industry associations, auction markets, assembly stations, livestock transporters, Saskatchewan and British Columbia officials, and the Livestock Identification Services Ltd. The majority of stakeholders expressed support for the act's repeal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate on Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act. I must say to the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat that that was an excellent overview of the bill at this time. It reminded me very much of some of the historical vignettes that I have heard in this Assembly recently. Certainly, I would like to say at this time that I would support this legislation. Hopefully our cattle industry will continue to prosper, and we will all benefit economically from the cattlemen and the cattlemen's association.

Thank you.

4:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering why a major bill like this wasn't carried forward by the minister of agriculture. Then I looked over and I saw the previous minister of agriculture, and I thought: why didn't he bring this forward? It's under new management, but it's a bill.

Again, thank you for the history lesson. You did an excellent job. You didn't even smile once. You were straightforward. They certainly had the right person bring it through.

Mr. Speaker, the only thing I regret is seeing a bill of this importance not being – it seems to me that this would have been better than the lobbyist registry for Bill 1, and I don't know why the Premier didn't bring it through. Anyhow, I guess we're getting rid of a useless act that we don't need. I know that you've been lying awake at nights worrying about this, but we, too, are going to support the bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to participate in debate in second reading on Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act. I wouldn't want to let this opportunity go by without jumping up and participating.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of really quick questions. I don't think there's an awful lot that can be said about this particular bill, but I do have a couple of questions. I suppose the first would be either to the sponsor or to the minister about how it came to light that this bill would be one that would come forward. I know that it actually did come to us first last year in the miscellaneous statutes amendment act, but I'm curious what the process was that brought this particular one to light because we know for a fact that occasionally we do see bills like this that come to the House that are outdated, that are on the books and are no longer needed.

None of us will ever forget the Vegetable Sales (Alberta) Act Repeal Act, which we had a certain amount of fun with. There was some very humorous debate. I'd like to go back and reread it, actually. It was quite comical, but at the same time it dealt with a very serious issue around the marketing of vegetables in this province. Particularly in the area around Edmonton there's a long and proud history of vegetable sales, growing, and marketing, so it was actually quite important to have had that debate.

And as we all know, of course, there's a long and storied history – and the Member for Cypress Hills-Medicine Hat shared some of it with us – around the Horned Cattle Purchases Act.

Mr. MacDonald: You've never been on a cattle drive?

Mr. R. Miller: I have never been on a cattle drive, in response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but it is on my list of things to do, I can assure you.

Anyhow, that would be my first question to either the sponsor or the minister: what in particular elevated this bill to your attention, that caused it to be before us today? Further to that, then, would be: what steps is the minister taking in his department to identify other bills that might also be out of date or not any longer necessary, not any longer in current use? Can we perhaps see more of these bills in front of the House?

Again, I refer to the need for a red tape commission. One of the really neat things the B.C. Legislature has done with their legislation surrounding red tape is that for every new regulation that the government introduces, they have to eliminate a regulation. At one time, actually, two regulations had to go out when a new regulation came in. Perhaps that's something that this Chamber should consider. Maybe we should have a policy that for every new bill that this Assembly considers, we should be looking for more of these horned cattle purchases acts and dumping those off the books in a spirit of good housekeeping.

So those would be the questions that I have for either the sponsor or the minister in second reading. I certainly hope that there is more of this spirited debate because I am quite enjoying listening to the various thoughts on this act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Groeneveld: Just in response, Mr. Speaker, maybe I could clear up a couple of issues here at the same time and answer both questions from the hon. member too. Some bills are quite onerous, and it's just maybe too much to handle by yourself, so you hand them off. So that's partly my reasoning. I watched my predecessor last year struggle with his bill, and I didn't want to go through that.

I guess, in comment to what you were saying, it's just that these are the types of acts that are there. They should be cleaned up. I suspect that probably every ministry has one or two of them, so just in respect to cleaning up the books a little.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for the debate.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to partake in this very interesting repeal act. I'm really quite – what's the word? – perhaps “disappointed” that this is going through. I do have just a couple of questions. One of them is that if we're doing all this dehorning, where are we going to get the horns to put on the front of our trucks? I so miss some of our trucks with the gun racks on the back and the horns on the front. So it's a question that I would like an answer to.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Dr. Brown: Well, in reply to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, I think the thrust of this bill is to remove a disincentive to having horned cattle. If anything, there should be more horned cattle present in the province to put on her bumper.

The Speaker: Would there be additional speakers on this bill?
Shall I invite the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to sum it up?

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, thanks for all of the fantastic interest in this particular bill. It is a housekeeping bill, and it certainly has not been in use since 1972. The reason it wasn't repealed in 1972 is that it was felt at that time that if for some reason there was going to be an interest in or demand for horned cattle again, perhaps things should be left in place. That's why it was left. It wasn't taken out when it was no longer required in '72.

With regard to the horns, most of the horns now are fake. They're fibreglass; they last longer.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Bill 12

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill on behalf of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry to move second reading of Bill 12, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007.

Last winter the government settled a class-action lawsuit regarding how we handle debts in cases where a person is overpaid their assistance. At that time the commitment was made to take another look at our legislation and policies to see how we could respond to some of the concerns. The changes being proposed in this bill include protections for income supports clients and help ensure that our processes are more transparent. These changes are in line with the changes to the AISH legislation undertaken last session by the Department of Seniors and Community Supports. In addition, the proposed changes align with two of the government's mandated priorities: governing with integrity and transparency and improving Albertans' quality of life.

When the Income and Employment Supports Act was passed in 2004, it was intended to clarify the various ways that the government could collect debts owed by social assistance clients when their assistance was overpaid. For example, a debt could be incurred if a client reported changes in income too late for the cut-off time for their benefit. Although the intent was always clear, the legislation remained ambiguous and does so today. Whether automatic deductions could be made to a person's income support without first getting a court order was not clear. As a result, we need to clarify the government's original intent as well as our current practice, where going to court is not required before a debt can be collected.

Automatic deductions from monthly assistance are the most common method of dealing with debts in almost all other direct-payment programs. These would include all other provincial social assistance programs and federal programs such as employment insurance and the Canada pension plan. This amendment act would ensure that any amounts already collected by cheque deduction under the current legislation would be considered validly collected even though the legislation was ambiguous.

People can go to independent panels to appeal decisions on their income support. For example, if the director of income support determines that a client has been overpaid, the person can appeal the decision, how much they owe, and how fast it has to be paid back.

The independent panels currently cannot decide that an overpayment does not have to be repaid; only the minister currently can. We want to make a change that allows the panels to determine this so that an overpayment does not always become a debt to the government. This would allow for a more independent and transparent process. At the same time, we will determine in regulation the circumstances that would warrant when repayment does not have to be paid. For example, the appeal panels could determine an overpayment does not have to be repaid when someone other than a client such as a landlord has benefited from the overpayment. The minister still has the ability to waive debt under $25,000 when it is in the interest of the public to do so pursuant to the Financial Administration Act.

Some income support benefits are issued on condition that they are repaid; for example, when people get help to deal with an immediate need like a payment on a utility debt. Even though there has been no policy change, an amendment is needed to clarify that money owing in circumstances like these continues to be treated as a debt.

We're also recommending that there be a change to the legislation to make it clear that the government does not start collecting on an overpayment until a client has had a chance to appeal. This is our current practice right now, but it is not enshrined in legislation. Similar changes have already been made to AISH legislation in this respect.

We have also added in this bill a section to make it clear when a right-to-appeal notice is considered received by a client. This will make it easier to determine the beginning of the 30 days that a person has to appeal their overpayment notice. If clients can satisfy the appeal panels that they did not receive their notice, causing them to miss the appeal period, they will still be able to proceed with their appeal. This reflects the current practice.

In the appeal provisions of the bill we are also confirming that the appeal panels have the power to dismiss an abandoned appeal. The current legislation does not specifically address this. In some cases clients may start an appeal but not follow through on it; for example, they may not show up for the hearing. It must be clear when an appeal has been dealt with so that administrators know when to start collecting a debt.

The Income and Employment Supports Act governs overpayments and debt collection from AISH clients until the new AISH act is proclaimed. This is expected May 1, 2007. We've consulted with the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports to ensure that there is a smooth transition no matter which act takes effect first. For example, debts accrued under the AISH program are collected under IESA until the new AISH act takes effect.

In 2004 we brought in a new offence provision to deal with incidents such as fraud, so there is an avenue other than the Criminal Code with which to pursue a case of fraud. That way we don't always have to criminally prosecute our clients. We're already experiencing challenges with becoming connected to the labour force. A criminal record would just put another barrier in front of these people when they try to get jobs.

We're proposing to establish a prosecution time limit of up to two years after the offence is committed or discovered so that fraud investigators have time to investigate and bring a case before a court. Since the act is currently silent on the time limit, a limit of six months is currently applied as a matter of policy, which is insufficient. This two-year time period is consistent with the time periods for prosecuting offences in other acts such as the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

The government has a free service that helps single parents get support. A change to the Income and Employment Supports Act will give the government the legal authority to provide child support services to all income support clients. Previously, apprentices and students funded under employment insurance were not governed under the authority of the act. Now more people will be able to benefit from child support services to help them stay independent.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, these changes to the act will strengthen the legislation to ensure that it will continue to serve Albertans well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in second reading on Bill 12, Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007. I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill for his good summary of the necessity of this bill. I think it's something that needs to be supported. It's mainly to clarify the repayment process and also deal with other issues like the appeal panels and child support and so on.

Of course, it's necessary that the government move to put its house in order in terms of the overpayment process because of the recent class-action suit against the province, as the hon. member has mentioned, when so many millions of dollars had to be paid out for alleged illegal deductions of social assistance and disability payments. So tightening up the process seems to be something that's quite necessary.

Granted, there are problems with people being dishonest about their assets and so on and misrepresenting the facts, so there has to be some sort of process of recovering debts that have been incurred and are owing to the government. This bill deals with that process of overpayments. It deals with the whole issue of child support, which seems to be a good thing, moving in the right direction. It deals with the appeals process, which seems to be important to get clear.

Now, I'll just read some issues that I think need more clarification. You know, in general I find a bill like this quite distasteful to have to deal with because it has a punitive kind of direction to it. I understand that people do not represent the truth and so on, but I mean, we're talking about people who are living in poverty here, who need income support. I think statistics would indicate that as a group they're no more inclined to engage in fraud or misrepresenting the truth than any other groups, including groups of lawyers or doctors or teachers. What we need is to have in place not just a system that's punitive and trying to get back money that's owing but also a system that ensures that people who are living in poverty have all the support systems that they need.

We've heard from stakeholders and people involved in working with people in poverty that the appeal process has been quite flawed.

It's very difficult for somebody who doesn't have the education to enable them to have the nature to go after what they need. The appeal process is very difficult, and in most cases it's important that they have some sort of person go with them to the appeal process to help them. It seems to me that the well-being of the individual must have priority in an appeal process.

When you look at this bill – and I guess we'll look at it in committee more closely – it provides the process where the director's decision concerning a person's right to appeal is communicated to the person in a number of ways, as if this is sort of covering all those possibilities: "if it was sent by registered mail or courier" or "if it was sent by fax or other electronic means." Well, Mr. Speaker, people who are under the income and employment supports are not people who are likely to have a fax machine or even have an electronic means, a computer available to them. If they even have a Hotmail address, they probably don't have access on a regular basis to a computer. In fact, they might not have a regular address too. That's a real problem. So I think that this is kind of legalistic. I mean, it's sort of covering ourselves in terms of the appeal process.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that people working on the front lines are social workers, people in social agencies. They know the people, where they can get in contact with them. There should be some sort of more human process of being able to really reach people to let them know what their rights are. This is basically what this is all about. A person has to know that they have the right to appeal, but if we don't go out of our way through the agencies that exist to enable those people to know what their rights are, then they're not likely to fulfill a 30-day requirement. I don't know. I find the whole thing too punitive, too legalistic.

I really appreciate the fact that the appeal panels are enabled by this legislation to dismiss an appeal. When all the information is received about an individual who supposedly has defrauded the system, after it all comes to light, then the appeal panel could reverse the decision that was made. I find that's an excellent addition and needs to be here.

I think that in most cases this is kind of a housekeeping bill, changing things to bring it in line with the AISH Review Committee's proposals and also the problems with the lawsuit. I regret that we don't receive a bill that really deals with the heart of the issue concerning people living in poverty. It's not the question of fraud and misrepresenting the truth and so on. The problem, if we're going to deal with poverty in Alberta, is having adequate income supports and employment supports.

My distress is that the gap between the rich and the poor is getting larger and larger all the time. The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives reported that the average annual pay of the top 100 CEOs in Canada in 2005 exceeded $9 million, compared to $38,000 as an average for employees. So the average CEO received as much remuneration by 10:04 a.m. on New Year's Day as one of his employees will be paid for the whole year. Mr. Speaker, this gap in income between the rich and poor is getting larger and larger all the time and will have serious repercussions in terms of social cohesion in our society. It's coming, even in Alberta with all our wealth. So we need to take more seriously the whole issue of income support. The income support in this province is just not good enough.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you think it should be increased?

Dr. B. Miller: It should be increased. It hasn't been increased very much at all since the early '90s, when the initial cutbacks to social services took place.

I take with me whenever I can the printout of the financial benefit summary for people who are receiving income support. There are a number of categories: able to work, not able to work, or learners. I mean, look at the numbers. It doesn't matter what you look at, whether it's able to work or not able to work. The numbers are just too low to enable a person to have a living wage, be able to exist, survive in our society. Especially the housing allowance, which is very, very low. I mean, for a single adult it's $100 if you're living with relatives, $120 for social housing, and $168 for private housing. Well, you can't get anywhere in this society with that little money. With our rising rents and lack of accommodation I fear that our lack of attention to income supports just means that we're creating more homeless people in this province.

If we are really serious about helping people in poverty – and I know that the intention of the income support program as it is outlined by the ministry, the reason they tie it to work all the time and have these categories of expected to work or not expected to work, is to move people off social assistance into the work world, where they can earn money and get an income. But in order for that to happen, there have to be adequate supports all the way along the line.

I learned that through my travels with the government Affordable Housing Task Force. Whether you're talking about emergency shelters or whether you're talking about transitional housing or social housing or affordable housing, people need supports all the way along the line if they're going to move through that continuum into the housing market. Mr. Speaker, there's not enough attention to the fact that the supports have to go with the person when they move off welfare into the employment world. Health benefits seem to move, not for everybody but for some. They move as the person finds employment. Housing allowance does not and maybe should move with the person when they move from social assistance to the employment world.

It just distresses me that we are more concerned about punitive action for the few that take advantage of the system or do not report everything they're supposed to report and get punished because of that. We're more concerned about that than we are concerned about people actually being able to live with a living wage in Alberta.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The title of the act, income and employment supports, suggests that we need to actually support these people and move them along. I would prefer to have bills that deal with that. At least we could have a proposal to index the welfare rates, the rates for people able to work and not able to work, a market-basket approach, some way of attaching the rates to inflation and to a changing standard of living so that the decisions would not always be arbitrary.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that's all I want to say about this bill. In general, I think it's a housekeeping bill, and I would accept most of it. Maybe at the end of the Committee of the Whole we'll look more closely at particular parts.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am particularly concerned with this one, of course, because it does overlap into AISH and to all of the people that are presently living in poverty. They speak about the overpayments and that it can happen through the misrepresentation of facts by individuals or through bureaucratic errors. Then further on it says that if overpayments are based on false or misleading information provided by a financial administrator, that individual may be held responsible for repaying the debt. I'm not sure that I understand exactly who they mean by a financial administrator. If it's someone in the government, is not the government responsible for this?

One of the other things that they are speaking of is to have people to go after to get the money that they are eligible for through child support. I certainly agree with that principle; however, in practicality many single moms are just holding their heads and certainly those of their children above water. Maintenance enforcement is backlogged, and often these women are unable to secure the dollars from deadbeat parents. Although the predominant number, of course, is women, there are certainly some men out there who are trying to raise their children minus the money that they actually should be getting from the mothers.

There are mechanisms to gain child support when the debtor is either unresponsive or does not have the financial resources to provide support, but as I've mentioned before, they are notoriously unsuccessful. We need additional support to be provided through this act to help the client come to an agreement with the former spouse or the partner or certainly the parent of the child in question and receive the support that they are owed. However, while that is happening, I don't believe that they should be denied the money that they need to live a life of dignity or, in fact, be able to raise their children properly.

I also believe that an impartial appeal process is very, very essential. It should not be appealed by someone within the department who doesn't necessarily have a vested interest but certainly would be looking at it, I believe, in a different light than someone who really is impartial.

Also, an attitude change on the front lines. I'm not saying that many of the people that work out there are not compassionate and don't feel for these people that they're dealing with, but a really good attitude change would go an awful long way to better co-operation between the government and the clients that are receiving the help. Many of them really do require that hand up. If that truly was the attitude that the former Premier loved to quote – hand up, not handout – then many misunderstandings of form filling-out and the process, which becomes very, very difficult, would be eliminated.

Many recipients feel that they are labelled cheaters before they even receive any dollars. Again, it's an attitude. Are there scam artists within the social system? Of course there are. Of course there are, as we all know. But do you know what? They are in every segment of society. We have an alleged scam artist at the moment at the very highest level, and he's currently in the courts in the United States. Again, he is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

The Nigerian telephone scam: you know that these scams, these kinds of things happen, but it truly is a very small percentage. Unfortunately, the majority often pay for that small percentage, but it doesn't have to be that way. Common courtesy and caring only take seconds, and it goes a long way. Often people have found, when they're dealing with government agencies of many kinds, that if they don't ask the right question, they don't get the right answer. I believe that government employees should be doing all they can to make sure that the right questions are asked.

I, like my colleague, also feel that the tone is very punitive and unfair. It has already been noted that in December of '05 the government did settle a class-action suit which involved $100 million. Again, the government was accused of arbitrarily interpreting its own policies and legislation in order to recover overpayments as far as possible. I believe that it should be an impartial appeal process.

The definition for child and adult support services also makes clear that assistance includes any assistance or benefit included in this act or regulation. Some of the things that I have come across in my constituency are that people on AISH sometimes get an inheritance from a parent or someone who has died, and this is held against them. I think it's most unfair. I don't see that that part, amongst other things that can be sometimes given to people just as a present from someone who would like to help, should be held against them.

With those few words I would like to adjourn debate on this bill, and we'll continue this conversation in committee.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to have the opportunity to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature a trusted friend, confidant, supporter, and someone who is no stranger to the body politic. David Peter Taylor is in the public gallery today. He is also, most notably, a page in the Senate of Canada, and he's home in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford visiting family for the Easter weekend. I would ask David to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 21
Securities Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate April 4: Mr. Pham]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 21, the Securities Amendment Act, 2007, in second reading. I think the first comment that has to be made on this particular Securities Amendment Act is the question of whether or not, in fact, the minister responsible has been sending mixed messages on the position of the government of Alberta with respect to a single national regulator versus 13 securities commissions across the country.

The media was full of reports over the last couple of months quoting the minister as talking about being prepared to dismantle the Alberta Securities Commission, for example, if in fact we were able to come to agreement on a single regulator. He has spoken out about the need for Alberta to compete globally and to be part of a global community when it comes to securities regulations, yet at the same time or very shortly thereafter he was very vociferously supporting continuing to move towards the passport system that this bill enables. So there is, I think, some real question, some real doubt in people's minds as to just exactly what the position of the government of Alberta is when it comes to a single regulator as opposed to the 13 individual commissions and the passport system that this opposition continues to enable.

One of the questions that I asked last year of the then minister and I think is relevant to ask again, Mr. Speaker, is: to what extent are we exposing Alberta taxpayers when we carry on with the development of this passport system and all of the meetings, all of the resources both in terms of time and dollars that are spent towards the passport system? Then what should happen if, in fact, all of this comes to a standstill and we come to an agreement on a single national regulator? How much have we lost in terms of time, money, and human resources preparing for a passport system that might never be fully implemented?

I never did receive what I felt was a good enough answer from the previous minister on that question, and I'm hopeful that this minister will be able to address that because I think it's a very real concern. If in fact we're sending mixed messages as to what the endgame is here and yet at the same time proceeding to spend an awful lot of money developing a system that might never be put into place, then I think that should cause concern to all Albertans and is relevant to be asked in the Assembly today.

Mr. Speaker, I know that we talked an awful lot in this Assembly over the last couple of years about the Alberta Securities Commission itself. When there were serious allegations about wrongdoing at the commission, one of the things that the Official Opposition talked about and pushed for in this Assembly as well as outside of it – and unfortunately we still see no sign of it coming forward – is some sort of whistle-blower legislation to protect employees of the Alberta Securities Commission and, for that matter, all public employees when it comes to identifying inconsistencies or instances of wrongdoing in their workplace. I note with some interest in the Auditor General's report from this past fall several recommendations in respect to the Alberta Securities Commission that the Auditor General has made, some of which the government is in agreement with and accepting and some for which they provide lengthy explanations indicating their reasons for not being in acceptance and reasons why they won't necessarily be complying with those recommendations in the near future.

I think this brings back the whole question of how effective and how efficient the Alberta Securities Commission has been for Albertans historically. Certainly, it would seem as if a lot of the issues that were raised by the opposition and by inside whistle-blowers two years ago have been addressed. I think we're back on track and managing billions of dollars in investment in this province, and that, of course, is a good thing. But clearly those questions haven't gone away in the Auditor General's mind, and I think it's fair to say that they haven't gone away in my mind either.

Mr. Speaker, I think that for the time being I'm going to leave my comments at that. Certainly, I have many questions when it comes to the intricate details of this Bill 21 when we get to it in committee stage. So I think I'll leave it there for now.

As I say, I think that Albertans in general and certainly those stakeholders that I've spoken to are looking for some clarification from this government and this minister in terms of where we're ultimately going with securities regulation in Alberta. I guess that would be my biggest single question: have we made a decision once and for all that the passport system is what we're supportive of? Are we going in the direction of a national regulator? Is this sort of a stopgap measure in the interim? We really don't know. The minister's comments, at least in the media, haven't done anything to address those concerns. In fact, if anything they've actually left the question even more open and caused even more confusion.

So I'm hopeful that we can hear some answers to that and, as I say, get into the details of the bill a little further once we get into the committee stage. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few general comments that I want to make about Bill 21. Certainly, a couple of years ago we had major discussions about how this Securities Commission was operating. I'll come to that, but I understand that the purpose of the bill is harmonization. I understand, having worked under the Securities Commission, that it makes some sense not to have 13 different people doing 13 different things. That's not the way money flows. It flows across borders. As a result, we called a long time ago for a national regulatory body, not a federal body but the provinces getting together and working on it.

But I have some concerns about this particular bill. It seems to me that when we look at it, they're clarifying the investigative power of people appointed by the executor director and other things. I guess that's all well and dandy. But when I start to look at parts of the bill, my analysis quickly is that they're weakening the oversight ability of the executive director. By enforcing oversight based on criminal proceedings in other jurisdictions, the bill effectively enforces and streamlines a passport system, Mr. Speaker. Well, it seems to me that what we're doing here is finding the lowest common denominator among 13 different jurisdictions in dealing with the Securities Commission. To me, a national regulator should not necessarily do that. We should be looking for laws that are fair and have some teeth to them. I see, for example, that the executive director is cut down in the types of things that he can do, I understand, because some other jurisdictions don't have that.

Now, again, I want to stress that I believe in harmonization, but I don't think a race to the bottom to do this is the right way to go. I would rather see the 13 jurisdictions get together with a national regulator and have some standards that make some sense. I'm hoping that if I'm wrong about this, the minister will talk about that. But when I look at the key section that repeals documentation of a registered dealer acting as a principal, repeals section 95, page 7, repeals the invested interest disclosure of the registered dealer on securities being offered for sale, number one, that worries me.

On section 105, page 9, it repeals the executive director's ability to oversee and regulate sales information. I don't understand why we would have to do that. I understand that perhaps some other jurisdictions don't have that, Mr. Speaker. We always say in this Legislature that we're the best, you know, in the country or the best here and there, but all of a sudden we're watering down even standards that we had here with our Securities Commission that admittedly in the past maybe didn't work so well. I wonder about that.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that rather than the group of 13 not being able to get together and the only way they can harmonize regulations is by sort of going, as I said, to the lowest common denominator – it's not what I think people would expect. I just look to our neighbors to the south. I mean, they are going in the opposite direction. They're making, sort of, corporate and business ethics a high priority. They're making their laws and regulations much stricter. It seems to me here that with this particular bill, because we want to harmonize, again, to make everybody happy, we're going the other way. I don't think that's what people really would expect from the Securities Commission.

As I say, with the 13 people rather than harmonizing to the lowest common standard, we should say: okay; let's work and get national regulators, a national group, a national regulatory body, not a federal group but a national regulatory body, and work together, not with the lowest common denominator, but with laws that are fair but have some teeth to them.

White-collar crime is just as serious as any other crime, and I think we can learn the odd thing from our American neighbours. We should be looking, as they are, the opposite way and making sure that the laws and the rules are strict enough that people won't do it because surely that's what people expect if they're investing. They want people that they can trust dealing with their money.

As I say, I'm speaking somewhat from experience, having worked in the financial business under the Securities Commission here for a number of years. We always thought that it didn't make sense to have 13 different jurisdictions doing whatever. So my argument is not to not have harmonization, Mr. Speaker. That's not my argument. My argument is: let's do it right and have a national regulatory body with some laws that have teeth. I worry that this bill seems to be: okay; we can't get agreement, so we'll all lower our standards to the lowest common denominator, and then we can have a national bill. That just doesn't make sense to me.

Unless if I'm fairly off base about this, I'm hopeful that the minister or somebody will indicate that that's not the case. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, "Well, if they're moving towards a national regulatory body, I would be the first one to cheer," but not if it's, as I say, to sort of cut down the rules and to have no teeth, the lowest common denominator.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd be interested from the minister in second reading, before we come to Committee of the Whole, to understand where we are going with this because there are certainly some warning bells there for me that this is not what the public would want, especially after some of the fiascos we've had here in the past. I think people want laws with teeth when we're dealing with white-collar crime.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, are there others who wish to participate in the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 22

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act

[Adjourned debate April 4: Dr. Oberg]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 22, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act, in second reading. On the surface this might seem like an appropriate thing to be doing, consolidating nearly $70 billion in savings into one Crown-owned corporation and controlling the investment of that rather large pool of money. In fact, according to the government's own press release, it would make it the fifth largest pool of money in the country. But I think there are a lot of questions that deserve debate, and I'm not prepared at this point to lend my support, or otherwise, to this bill.

I think it's something that I look forward to hearing a lot more about from the minister and other members of this Assembly over the next several days as we debate it.

Probably the first thing that springs to mind would be issues surrounding the heritage savings trust fund and the management, or lack thereof, of that fund over the last many years, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm on record, as is the Official Opposition, as having serious concerns about the manner in which that fund has been used, the manner in which it's been contributed to, the manner in which it's been invested, and to this day, in fact, the manner in which this government continues to rape profits out of it and dump that money into general revenue. That's probably one of my most serious concerns about it. This bill, unfortunately, doesn't address the fact that in the Fiscal Responsibility Act we still have legislation that mandates that after the fund is inflation-proofed – and that, I might point out, is something that we called for for many years and has only taken place just recently, thanks to the efforts of the Official Opposition, amongst others – and after administration fees are paid, every penny of profit from the heritage savings trust fund is returned to general revenue.

In today's economic climate, Mr. Speaker, I cannot imagine that there is an argument that would fly as to why we should continue to do that. It just doesn't make any sense to me at all. It doesn't make sense to anybody out there in Alberta when I go around the province. In fact, most people aren't even aware of the fact that we continue to do this. There may have been a good reason to do it in the 1990s as the government was charging ahead in its plan to pay off the provincial debt at any and all costs. There may have been a good argument to do it at that time. There certainly isn't a good argument to do it now. In an era of $10 billion surpluses, I cannot imagine – and I don't think there's a member in this Legislature who could convince me of a good reason why we do that. So that is the first comment I would have in regard to the heritage savings trust fund.

Earlier this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, there was debate in this Legislature about the use of power walls in Alberta and the marketing of tobacco. It was mentioned in question period that the government continues to reap large profits and invest large, large amounts of money through the heritage savings trust fund – and I'm going to assume through other funds – in tobacco companies. Now, thankfully, there was pressure put on the government last year, and they agreed not to invest money from the cancer fund into tobacco companies, but that move has not been made with the other investments.

So I think it leads, obviously, to the discussion of whether or not we should have an ethical investment policy as part of this corporation. If this act is to be approved and passed in this Legislature, is there consideration being given for ethical investment policy? I haven't seen any indication of that yet. In the past we've been told that the fund managers' primary, overriding concern is returning the biggest investment return possible to Alberta taxpayers. That's not necessarily good enough anymore. I've raised all sorts of examples in the past as to various investments that might not be appropriate or might not be supported by the taxpayers of this province, and certainly tobacco is one of those.

I think that when you look, Mr. Speaker, at some other funds – the minister, when he moved second reading of this bill earlier this afternoon, spoke of the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan. The Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan regularly outperforms the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Maybe that's a good reason why we should consider doing this. The government talks in its press release about the need to increase the return on our investments, and they're telling us that this will enable us to do so. Well, as I said, we're regularly outperformed by the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the numbers from Harvard University, their fund, which, I will be quick to point out, actually has an ethical investment policy as part of the fund, regularly outperforms our heritage savings trust fund as well. So I think there is good argument for having a close look at the way our funds are invested and managed. I would argue that there's also, not just from a moral point of view but also from an economic point of view, a good argument to look at the idea of an ethical investment policy as well.

Another fund, Mr. Speaker, that has a very strongly worded ethical investment policy is the Norway petroleum fund, which has been raised many times in this Legislature and now sits well in excess of $200 billion, a fund that was started only in 1996. That fund has an ethical investment policy and performs incredibly well. So, again, I think it's time that this government moves itself into the 21st century and looked seriously at where we're investing those dollars, and if this legislation will make that so, then I suppose that would be a good thing.

Questions around the governance of this fund and the directorship of this fund certainly would cause, I think, any reasonable person to look at it and wonder how those people are going to be named. The government indicates in a briefing document to myself that the fund directors would consist of the deputy minister and nine other individuals appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and that the Lieutenant Governor in Council would also appoint the chair of the corporation. Well, we know, Mr. Speaker, that that means cabinet, the Premier are going to directly be appointing these people. What are their qualifications going to be? We don't know. That's not spelled out in here.

I think that it raises a lot of questions about political partisanship. We know that now there is a review panel that's looking at the agencies, boards, and commissions across the province and how people find themselves appointed to those boards. Hopefully they'll come back with some really solid recommendations that will ensure that the people that would find themselves named to the directorship to this corporation would be worthy individuals.

Another issue that is timely in relation to the discussion of incorporating another Crown corporation is the TILMA agreement that went into effect on April 1 of this year. We talked about this in the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when we were debating the government's motion regarding the continuance of the Alberta Treasury Branches. Although the Finance minister didn't speak to it, when I mentioned the fact that the TILMA agreement would clearly have some major ramifications on the operation of the Alberta Treasury Branches, the minister sat there and nodded his head.

So we know for a fact that that is true, and without any question, obviously, this corporation would also be impacted largely by the implementation of TILMA. I'm guessing that that wouldn't take place in this case until 2009, based on what I've learned of the TILMA agreement. Nevertheless, it is a factor. I'm wondering whether or not the minister can share with us his thoughts on that and how prepared we are in terms of developing this legislation to make sure that it will be in compliance with TILMA, that we won't have to be back here in another year and a half debating amendments to this legislation because of the ramifications of TILMA and so forth. So I think those are relevant questions as well.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there are others that are anxious to speak to this bill, so I'm not going to take a lot more time right now. Actually, I am going to take just a little more time. I did ask some questions of the minister in supplementary debate, and I've not heard an answer to those questions yet, so I'm going to ask them again, put them on the record again. I think it's worthwhile to do so.

In supplementary estimates, Mr. Speaker, the government asked for and received in excess of $7 million to reimburse a number of public-sector pension plans, research endowment funds, the scholarship fund, and some other minor funds for investment losses. Now, I asked a question during supplemental supply debate, and it's worth repeating. In this current economic climate, when the heritage savings trust fund is realizing somewhere between 5 and 7 per cent and other funds are returning 8 and 11 per cent and my own RSP fund, thanks to good management last year, I think is averaging 21 or 22 per cent . . . [interjections] Obviously I'm doing a better job than some people on the other side are because they're sounding like they're a little jealous over there. The point is that in this current economic climate we have, by the government's own admission, a number of funds that lost at least $7 million. I asked the question: what were the ramifications? Were there fund managers that were fired? How did these funds manage to lose money in this economic climate? I've not heard an answer to it, but I would like to know.

I suppose an obvious question then is: is this bill in response to the fact that a number of public service pension plans and research endowment funds and scholarship funds were losing money? I've not heard an answer to that yet either. I asked that question last week as well. I think it's relevant for people to know. Why do we have funds that are losing money at a time like this, and what steps are we taking to make sure that that doesn't happen? Maybe this is the answer to it. I don't know, but I think it's a relevant question. I hope that at some point the minister or someone on his behalf will answer those questions because, again, Alberta taxpayers deserve to know. If funds are losing money in this current economic climate, something is wrong. Something is clearly wrong. What are we invested in that's losing money? I can't imagine.

Mr. Bonko: Tobacco.

Mr. R. Miller: I don't think tobacco is losing money. I'm not sure what it is, but it certainly causes one to wonder, and I'm looking forward to some answers to those questions, Mr. Speaker.

So, as I said, I'll cut my comments a little bit short and allow others to speak to this. I look forward to further debate, and as I say I really do look forward to some answers to those very pertinent questions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a few comments with regard to the potential for this bill as it goes through the process. There are a couple of things that I wanted to try and clarify from my perspective as a member of the Endowment Fund Policy Committee with respect to the gentleman's comment that this fund hasn't been earning as much as some others, whether they be from Harvard or the Ontario teachers' fund.

I guess what I wanted to do was point out that the difference between our funds under the endowment policy committee and the AIM group is that these are all taxpayers' dollars. Everything that's held inside under the jurisdiction of the government, whether it be pension plans or the heritage savings trust fund, is all invested on behalf of all taxpayers and residents of our province, as opposed to a fund something like the Ontario teachers' fund, which is invested on behalf of the teachers only. It's a different group of people, and the risk level, therefore, can also be different.

My goal as a member of the endowment policy committee, Mr. Speaker, was to ensure that we don't take needless risk or foolish risk trying to increase our percentage by one or two points compared to what maybe the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan can also do. As well, the Ontario teachers' group have the ability to make direct investments into . . . I'm sorry it's hard to concentrate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the noise level is increasing in here. It's difficult to hear. Let's recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Ms Haley: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I guess that what I was trying to say is that on behalf of the taxpayers we have to be a little more prudent in our investment policies. There are restrictions based on our own current legislation regarding the heritage savings trust fund; that we are not able to directly invest the heritage savings trust fund into the oil sands, for example, or we can't just take, you know, $7 billion and buy real estate in the province of Alberta with the heritage savings trust fund.

If members are concerned that the value that we're creating off the heritage savings trust fund is not high enough, perhaps we need to go back and look at the actual originating legislation for the heritage savings trust fund and make changes to that, once again perhaps allowing direct investment into Alberta, as was the original intent of the heritage savings trust fund. When it was set up, you could invest in things like the Alberta Home Mortgage Corporation, which maybe is not a great example because it ended up losing money at the end of the day. Something else we shouldn't forget about is that when governments determine that they're going to invest directly into various enterprises throughout the province, there is a higher risk that something can go wrong with it. The purpose of the endowment policy committee was to try and ensure that taxpayers' money was protected, which I think is important.

Last year the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview introduced an amendment to the endowment policy investment mix recommending that no tobacco companies be utilized inside the purchasing arrangements of the investors. We asked if it would be possible at that time to make a slight amendment to his legislation, excluding the fact that from time to time when a purchase is made of an entire index of funds there, may well be a tobacco firm in that. The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview agreed to that amendment, and we passed his legislation. So at the endowment level we've been very careful to try and, I believe, be ethical in all of the investments that we're making, understanding that from time to time when a fund is purchased, there may be a tobacco company inside that fund of a thousand other stocks. We have to also be aware that we're trying to maximize taxpayers' return while being prudent and, I hope the hon. member would agree, ethical.

Those were my main points, Mr. Speaker. I think that the concept of moving this to a Crown corporation and giving a board of governors slightly more flexibility in the way they manage these resources can enhance the return for all taxpayers, having the clear understanding, from my perspective, that the most important thing here is that the government of Alberta still sets the policy direction for the investments and that the board of governors will have to implement that direction. We would still do everything we can to maintain the security of the major portion of these investments so as to minimize as many risks as possible while trying to maximize your return. That's always been the goal. I hope that once this is in place, it will achieve an even greater return for the taxpayers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the debate, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's again a pleasure to have an opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 22. I certainly would like to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere for her remarks. She is a member of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund endowment policy committee, as was the current Minister of Energy for a time. As a member of that committee I asked for an update on what policy advice was being provided by that committee. There are a lot of members on the committee, only two members of the Legislative Assembly and, I think, six or seven other individuals, and the advice the committee provides is not available to the public.

I was surprised to be driving down the road the other day listening to the radio – the hon. member may also be quite surprised – and there was a CBC radio interview with two business analysts discussing this bill. The discussion, to say the least, Mr. Speaker, in my view, and I think the hon. member would share that view, certainly was not accurate. There was considerable blame put on performance off the fund and on the committee.

I'm sure these individuals had no idea that members of the committee had been requesting information on policy advice that had been given for investments and that it was not provided. But the discussion went on and on, and it was, to say the least, interesting. I wouldn't call it accurate, but I would certainly call it interesting. Whether they're pensioners or whether they're the taxpayers who own the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the interest of those individuals was not served with that interview.

That being said, this is quite a change in direction. I was astonished to read my briefing notes for the last time the Alberta heritage savings trust fund met to realize that we were going ahead with this. It was the first I had heard of it. I asked for the report that was referenced, the Organization and Governance Review of Alberta Investment Management. This is a report that was prepared for Alberta Finance by Capelle Associates in January 2006. This is the only supporting document that I'm aware of that exists for this major change in direction.

I realize that there have been editorials written on this. I realize that some reporters have endorsed this. But I think we've got to be very, very cautious until we get some questions answered here. It seems to be expected that there's going to be a better return on our money. I would note – and I would be very interested to hear back from other members of the Assembly – that the administrative costs for the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, for the Alberta investment management team or whatever you want to call them, are quite modest. If you look at the quarterly reports or the annual reports, they don't fluctuate. They don't vary a great deal. But when you look at the internal administrative costs, you can see where they seem to be going up and up and up. Just because it goes to the private sector or to another investment advisory group doesn't necessarily mean that it's going to be better.

Now, I look at the bill and I also look at Bill 1, and I have a question for the Department of Finance. When you look at the Financial Administration Act and you look at the definition of a provincial agency, Mr. Speaker, a provincial agency means “a Provincial corporation or a Provincial committee.” This would be our Crown corporation in this case, that we're proposing here with Bill 22.

What would be the scope of the new Conflicts of Interest Act or the Lobbyists Act? We're talking about a pool of money here that some say would be $70 billion. Others will say it's only going to be $50 billion. Would this Crown corporation that's proposed be covered under the Lobbyists Act, or would all the investment strategies that may or may not occur, would the advice or the permission to invest in certain enterprises be outside the Lobbyists Act? Are we introducing one piece of legislation and then taking a considerable amount of money and excluding it from that much-trumpeted Lobbyists Act? That's the first question I would need to have answered before I could consider supporting this bill not only as a citizen of this province and a part owner of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund but also as someone who is very interested in a lot of the pensions that are being administered in this province.

Now, this whole bill, Mr. Speaker, is again based on this report. There were individual interviews conducted, and there was a review of documents. We are talking about $50 billion to $70 billion here, and this bill is based on a study that held two meetings with the Investment Operations Committee, on the evening of December 7, 2005, and the morning of December 8, 2005. Those individual interviews were conducted with the deputy minister, the lead external Investment Operations Committee member, four senior Alberta investment management employees, one Alberta Justice lawyer, and the CEO of B.C. Investment Management.

There was a review of documents. The key documents that were reviewed were the heritage savings trust fund, the endowment portfolio investment policy statement, the supplementary retirement plan for public service managers, the special forces pension plan statement of investment policies and goals 2005, the universities academic pension plan statement of investment policies and goals 2005, and a document called AIM. I believe this is the local authorities pension plan operating protocol for 2005.

I would also like to see letters of support from these various pension funds that indicate that they wish this bill to proceed. I've seen nothing like that, and I want to see what other consultations have gone on with these major pension funds. What we're talking about doing here is incredible, yet there doesn't seem to be much support. Now, maybe there is, and I've missed it. Certainly, I think that is a fair request, Mr. Speaker.

Now, also in regard to the setting up of this Crown corporation – and this is in section 9 – how will the bylaws be drafted, and will they become public? I'm not certain that they will.

The Auditor General and the Minister of Finance talked about this: it's going to be the auditor of the corporation. What role, if any, will the CIA, the chief internal auditor, have in this?

Getting to section 2(5): “The Corporation must maintain its head office and principal place of business in Alberta.” I think it should be in the capital city, Edmonton, Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this gets me back to the Capelle report. I was disappointed to see where the authors of this report were a little concerned – I mean, I realize that it's a long spring here, and the Oilers aren't in the playoffs – about people being attracted to live and work in Edmonton and work for the government, that they may not get a compensation package that would be possible in other situations. This really concerns me. This is a significant amount of money.

If we were to pass this bill into law, is there some way that the School of Business over at the University of Alberta could provide some formal training or some courses to students who are interested in pursuing this as a career? Could this bill and this pool of assets and the investment strategy surrounding them also be connected to the business school at the University of Alberta? If training and recruitment of qualified professionals is a problem for these individuals to maintain, well, perhaps we can fix that.

I'm not saying to offer a portion of this investment pool to graduate students, but certainly graduate students at the U of A business school could be trained to administer this program in a professional manner well into the future. If we've got a problem, let's try to solve it that way. I wouldn't want to see these pools of cash shifted somewhere else because I think they belong in the province, and I think this corporation, if it is to exist, should be part of the corporate culture of the capital city, Edmonton.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other concerns with this bill at this time and other questions that I have. I again would urge all hon. members to have a good look at this and to question just exactly how this is going to work. I've read the newspaper articles and I've listened to the radio interviews and I've read the editorials and I've read the bill and I've read the Organization and Governance Review of Alberta Investment Management company or firm or department of Alberta Finance, whatever you want to call it. I think we need to be very careful, and I would urge caution for the reasons that I have outlined. Again, I am not satisfied with this one report and the direction it is providing. Surely there must be more information available than this.

In conclusion, please provide letters or information that support this bill from the various funds that we are looking at. I think that is reasonable, and it is fair, and again I am anxious to see what the relationship between this bill, Bill 22, and Bill 1, the Lobbyists Act, is. Is all this money excluded from any sort of coverage by the Lobbyists Act? I hope to receive the answers to my questions before we get too far in debate in committee, and I would like to thank the Assembly for their time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with considerable interest to speak on Bill 22, Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act. It's an interesting piece of legislation that just kind of popped out of nowhere, I think, for many individuals both inside and outside the House. Certainly, it's something that has significance not just in the sheer volume of money that it would be representing, this independent Crown corporation that would be created, but also just the significance of where that money comes from and where, in fact, we would be investing it.

The bill itself, in close observation, doesn't seem to be particularly remarkable in any way. The corporation looks as though it would be an entity which a great deal of Alberta's investment wealth would be run through, including some of the other funds that currently exist, like the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, and the local authorities pension plan as well.

We, of course, are hoping that the regulations surrounding this Crown corporation would allow for the independent professional management of the monies, that would ultimately result in high, reasonable, fair rates of return for these various funds and the $70 billion price tag that's being thrown around here. I've heard other estimates, higher and lower, but certainly this would put us in the range of one of the largest investment funds in the country, up there with other investment funds, including the Caisse de dépôt et placement du Québec and the Ontario teachers' fund and the B.C. Investment Management Corporation, among others.

That's up in the big leagues as far as an investment fund which could have considerable clout in money markets not just here in Canada but around the world, and that is also a good thing because, of course, we want to provide a fair rate of return for these public monies. In fact, it's a projection to boost those earnings for this fund almost immediately by $500 million, which is nothing to spit at, Mr. Speaker, by any means.

The corporation certainly looks to be, in the eyes of the New Democrat opposition, a positive step forwards. We certainly do not want to shirk our responsibilities to ensure that the details of this bill and then this Crown corporation are not left out of public scrutiny and legislative scrutiny here especially, so we look forward to looking at each part of this bill in detail. A full analysis, I think, would be appropriate to look at this fund, using the acronym AIM, in relation to how the function of the Quebec provincial fund and B.C. provincial fund have operated and have performed in the years that they have been created. It's always a useful exercise to look elsewhere to see something similar and look to adapt and improve on the experience of others. Those are two provincial funds that do exist here currently, and we can probably learn a lot from their experience.

I hear a number of MLAs speaking about the importance of having an ethical investment component to this Crown corporation, with which we certainly are in agreement. The ethical investment funds that are available privately both here in Canada and around the world have a good record and rate of return. You can put different parameters of definition as to what an ethical investment is, but I think that is certainly within the purview of our legislative capacity here, and I think it's the responsibility of us as well, considering we're dealing with public monies here that people expect to grow but in a clean and ethical and moral manner.

So where we invest this money and how we do so – certainly, I think the intention is to build that degree of separation to ensure that direct political interference is kept to a minimum, which is very important, but also we must establish as a baseline a certain ethical structure that I think Albertans would expect from us. We do have, in my own experience here at the Legislature, a very positive precedent in that regard, where the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, I think, working together with the hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, put together an amendment to a bill, an investment fund that we put together last year or a year and a half ago, to have a restriction on tobacco investment. That seemed to work very well. We were certainly amenable to that amendment, and we appreciated that sort of spirit of co-operation, that I think we can apply again to building the parameters of this fund that we're talking about here.

So we certainly support the creation of this corporation, and we want to ensure that there is proper oversight and reporting of any interest that is earned and what is done with it, especially considering that things with pension funds are being lumped together with other monies. We need to have a close scrutiny of how the monies from investment profits are disbursed back into the various funds that they represent. You know, dealing with pension funds is critical, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that no monies go astray. I would also suggest, as I said before, that we want to manage our risks when we're making such an investment and to optimize our returns but within, I guess, the sort of caveat that we are dealing with public monies here and that we do that ethically and do it in a balanced, long-term manner, and we create a fund that Albertans can be proud to see grow and build for our future.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would move to adjourn the debate for this current session on Bill 22. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, given the tremendous progress that we made this afternoon and the hour, I would like to move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 5:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 5, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/05

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

As we pray, let us also commemorate the 90th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. We give thanks for the lives of the faithful men and women in our military who have defended and continue to defend the freedoms and values we cherish. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. On this day I would ask that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, all others present here, and those observing these proceedings in their homes join together to reflect upon the lives of Canadian military personnel lost in service to their countrymen. May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. God bless.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the Speaker's gallery there are six officers and other ranks from the Canadian army reserves. These men are here to represent the famous four regiments of the province of Alberta. In order of seniority the regiments are the South Alberta Light Horse, the King's Own Calgary Regiment, the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, and the Calgary Highlanders.

These four regiments were at Vimy Ridge on the Easter weekend of 1917. From across the province men of the 31st, the 10th, the 49th, and the 50th battalions, as part of a Canadian Corps, gained a victory at great cost. The plan and its execution was a very model of calculated Canadian ingenuity, audacity, fortitude, and bravery. I would invite each of our visitors to rise as I introduce them: from the South Alberta Light Horse, Captain Shawn Thirlwell and Corporal Kirk Routledge; from the King's Own Calgary Regiment, Warrant Officer Ronald Senior; from the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, Honorary Colonel Sandy Mactaggart and Corporal Ashley Van Leeuwen; and from the Calgary Highlanders, Lieutenant Colonel Tom Manley, commander.

On Easter Monday in Ottawa and in each of our nation's provincial and territorial capitals and on Vimy Ridge in France ceremonies will mark the 90th anniversary of a pivotal event in the development of Canada. Please join me in welcoming our visitors. In so doing, we seek to give just and proper recognition to what their forebears did in the service of their sovereign nation 90 years ago.

The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai le privilège de présenter en votre nom, à vous et à l'Assemblée, des invités spéciaux qui sont d'origine française et qui vivent en Alberta. Ils sont assis dans la galerie pour célébrer avec nous le 90e anniversaire de la bataille de la crête de Vimy. La célébration officielle se déroulera en France le 9 avril prochain et sera marquée par la présentation du monument canadien de Vimy, qui a subi une importante restauration pour l'occasion.

Je suis heureux de vous présenter M. Gilbert Delplanque, qui est originaire de Valenciennes, un petit village à quelques kilomètres de Vimy; M. Eugène Trottier, un homme bien connu dans la communauté française d'Edmonton qui a passé la majeure partie de sa vie adulte en Alberta et qui a contribué immensément au développement de notre communauté franco-albertaine.

Aussi avec le groupe sont des membres de l'Union des Français de l'étranger. Ils sont Mme Germaine Lehodey et M. Michel Lehodey, président honoraire de l'union; M. Florian Rijavec et Mme Yvonne Rijavec, présidente honoraire de l'union; M. Patrick Balthazard, secrétaire; Mme Isabelle Vallée, trésorière; Mme Corinne Arabeyre, vice-présidente et aussi présidente de l'Alliance française d'Edmonton.

Accompagnant ces personnes pour cette journée spéciale à la Législature est M. Alain Bertrand de Patrimoine canadien du gouvernement du Canada. Je leur demanderais de se lever et d'être reconnus par l'Assemblée.

Je vous invite à vous joindre à moi pour leur souhaiter une bienvenue chaleureuse.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to the Assembly a number of guests of French origin who are living right here in Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery and are here to celebrate with us the 90th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. For this event, which will take place officially on April 9 in France, the Canadian Vimy Ridge Monument has been undergoing extensive restoration and its presentation will be at the centre of the ceremony.

I am pleased to introduce Mr. Gilbert Delplanque, a gentleman who originates from Valenciennes, a small town a few kilometres from Vimy; Mr. Eugène Trottier, a prominent member of the French community who spent most of his adult life in Alberta and contributed greatly to the development of our Franco-Albertan community.

Also part of the group are members of the UFE, l'Union des Français à l'Étranger. They are Mrs Germaine Lehodey and Mr. Michel Lehodey, honorary president of the Union; Mr. Florian Rijavec and Mrs. Yvonne Rijavec, honorary president of the Union; Mr. Patrick Balthazard, secretary; Mrs. Isabelle Vallée, treasurer; Mrs. Corinne Arabeyre, vice-president and also the president of l'Alliance française d'Edmonton. Joining them on this special day at the Legislature is Mr. Alain Bertrand, with Canadian Heritage, federal government.

I would ask them to stand up and be recognized by the Assembly. I would invite the members of the Assembly to join me in extending them a warm welcome.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have two introductions. First of all, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature at least 32 students from Fort Saskatchewan's Win Ferguson school. They are accompanied, of course, today: their teachers, Joanne Simpson and Shannon Webb; also parent helpers Chris Temple, Cindie Hughes, Shireen Meehan, Diana Mossing. I had a very enjoyable visit with these fine students, and I would ask everyone in this Assembly to please show our appreciation for their visit. Thank you so much, and Happy Easter.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through to all members of this Assembly an individual that is seated in the members' gallery, Mr. Brian Heninger. Brian is an experienced and accomplished businessman with significant accomplishments in business, sharing a strong work ethic, personal integrity, and also a commitment to Alberta values. He's been married for 38 years with five children, 10 grandchildren – an impressive community worker in Calgary. I want to introduce him as our Progressive Conservative candidate for the by-election in Calgary-Elbow. I would ask Brian to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce in the members' gallery representatives from Transfield asset management. We have today David Videroni, the vice-president of operations, and Rohan May, the general manager. They're going to be of course working in Fort McMurray at the Suncor project, an important project for Alberta and Canada. Also joining them is Mike Buffham, who is president of Buffham consulting and also provides leadership in local 92, many of whose workers work in Fort McMurray as well. I would ask them to all rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you someone who has been a volunteer and a member of my board in Calgary-West but, more importantly, as the past president of the Dental Hygienists' Association of Alberta. Now she's decided to accept another challenge and seek the PC nomination in her constituency, and if successful in that nomination, I look forward, as should all hon. members, to having her join us in this Assembly as the Member for Calgary-Currie. I would ask Patti Wickstrom to stand and be represented.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you and to all members of this Assembly a delegation of supporters and employees from the Bent Arrow Traditional Healing Society in Edmonton's west end. I'd ask that they please rise as I call out their names. They are Brad Seneca, Gregg McPhee, John Morgan, Marion Morgan, Melanie Redshaw, Linda McPhee, Brian McNichol, Marie Kristy, Lovette Ferguson, Cheryl Whiskeyjack, Shalene Jobin, Sherry Fowler, Crystal Arcand, Margo Boyd, Jessie Powder, Dorothy Scanie, Kyra Brown, Francis Bald Eagle, Dave La Swiss, Andrea Watchmaker, Florence Shone, Julie Porter-Anderson, Corey Jewitt, Patsy Conroy, and Christie De Leon. I ask that you please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the House someone who had a very, very busy fall. I know that because I met her on a number of occasions through that process. She works with Servus Credit Union here in the capital, and I also know that she does sell flowers as well because I've had occasion to buy flowers for my wife from her. I'm of course referring to Lynette Stelmach, the daughter of our Premier, who is here today, obviously, to make sure that he's on the job for Albertans. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: I hope the hon. minister knows that he's set every male in this Assembly back 10 years by admitting publicly that he buys flowers for his wife.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, but I buy flowers for my wife.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Joan Harvey. She's a member of UFCW local 401 and has now been on the picket line at the Palace Casino for 209 days. Joan is a widowed senior who is raising two of her grandchildren. She went to work at the Palace Casino four years ago. She's travelled all over the world while her husband served our country in the Royal Canadian Air Force. Joan is seated in the public gallery, and I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Statement by the Speaker
The Battle of Vimy Ridge

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House will not sit on Easter Monday. On that day 90 years ago this country launched what was to be a singular and defining expression of courage, character, and of national will.

On Easter Monday, the 9th of April, 1917, the entire Canadian Corps comprising the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th divisions rose as one for the first time in the first Great War. The day's opening weather, a combination of driving snow and sleet, was not unwelcome on the Allied side. Beginning in the predawn hours 49 battalions of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, numbering over 100,000 men, joined the battle. From Alberta the 10th, the 31st, the 49th, and the 50th battalions were in the thick of the action.

To see Vimy Ridge and to have read the history of the first Great War is to begin to understand the cold enormity of the challenge that faced the Canadian Corps. The ridge's brooding dominance over the plains of Douai and the intractable nature of the allied campaign to that stage pointed to a prospect of dismal failure. How did the battle go? Let me read from the diary kept, contrary to the King's Regulations of the day, by the late Private Adelbert Franklin Brayman of the 50th (Calgary) battalion Canadian Expeditionary Force. He is a great-uncle-in-law to Diane Brayman, our acting head of Visitor Services.

Just as dawn broke clear we were well over Vimy Ridge and digging in for protection. At 9:45 a.m. we had dug in ready for a counter attack which we expected. As we looked back up that ridge in the early dawn we witnessed a scene never to be forgotten. The entire face of the hill was covered with German green and Canadian khaki. Men lay out there in their blood soaked field, some dead some dying. A horrible sight but one quite necessary. All day we seemed dazed and sore and the strain was beginning to show but we were supposed to hold and we held. Vimy Ridge belongs to Canada.

Brayman had captured the essence of the moment and the national achievement. Canadians had gained more ground, took more guns, and captured more prisoners than had any previous British offensive in World War I.

In 1936 France forever deeded Vimy Ridge to Canada. A superb and fitting monument was unveiled. There King Edward VIII gave an address to the thousands of Canadian war veterans who had made in the height of the depression a lengthy and difficult pilgrimage that evoked and stirred deep, plaintive emotion. In the company of the President of France, and having spoken in French, the King said:

All the world over there are battlefields, the names of which are written indelibly on the pages of our troubled human story. It is one of the consolations which time brings that the deeds of valour done on those battlefields long survive the quarrels which drove the opposing hosts to conflict. Vimy will be one such name . . . Around us here today there is peace, and rebuilding, and hope . . . In dedicating this memorial to our fallen comrades, our thoughts turn rather to the splendour of their sacrifice, and to our consecration of our love for them, than to the cannonade, which beat upon this ridge.

Hon. members, we know what the contribution of Canadian blood at Vimy Ridge meant to Canada. His Excellency Daniel Jouanneau, the ambassador of France to Canada, has conveyed a letter to us and the people of Alberta telling us what Vimy Ridge means to France. I would like to read the contents of his letter into our Hansard so that all Albertans forever will know. The letter is dated March 26, 2007.

Honourable Mr. Speaker,

On April 5th, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta will celebrate the 90th anniversary of the battle of Vimy ridge.

I know how important Vimy is to Canada. On April 9th 1917, four Canadian divisions, who were fighting for the first time as an independent corps, showed the rest of the world the great fortitude and military ability of Canadians, in a very carefully planned, and brilliantly executed attack. Two years, and many feats of arms later, this commitment gave Canada the right to sign the Versailles Treaty on its own behalf, and the right to become one of the founding members of the League of Nations.

Vimy was a defining moment for Canada, but it was also one of the most important events of our 400-year common history and friendship. France will never forget these young men, all volunteers, who crossed the Atlantic to fight for the core values of our two countries: democracy, the rule of law, human rights and international solidarity. 3598 young Canadians lost their lives at Vimy, and 7,100 were badly wounded, to help us free our soil. We will always remember their sacrifice, as a token of Canadian immense generosity.

We remember also that Vimy was fought in the context of a large allied attack, with the French focusing on the deadly "Chemin des Dames" a few days after the victory of their Canadian brothers in arms. The French people will always be grateful to Canada, and particularly to Alberta, for its support during one of the most difficult times of our history.

Please convey my warm regards and my respect to all the Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Yours very sincerely,

Daniel Jouanneau

Ambassador of France to Canada.

On Monday, April 9, on Canadian soil in France, at Vimy, our sovereign, Queen Elizabeth II, our Prime Minister, the Prime Minister of France, and tens of thousands of modern-day Canadian pilgrims, including our Sergeant-at-Arms, will rise as one. They will mark the 90th anniversary of the battle, and the rededication of the newly restored Canadian National Vimy Memorial.

We cannot be there, but today let us give thanks for the lives of those who lie there and for what they and their comrades so freely gave to this great dominion 90 years ago. The blood of our very best earned Canada the right to take its place among the nations of the world.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: Mr. Premier.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday in ceremonies taking place across Canada and in France, Canadians will celebrate the 90th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. I say celebrate because in a war noted for senseless loss of life, Vimy Ridge was a rare example of professionalism and success. It also holds special significance for Canadians. Fighting as one unit for the first time, the Canadian corps succeeded where our Allies had failed.

It is often said that Canada became a nation on April 9, 1917, at Vimy Ridge. There is much truth in that. Vimy was a Canadian operation and a Canadian victory, and it was recognized as such in London, Paris, and New York. For Canada's soldiers Vimy established a reputation for competence, organization, and outstanding bravery. As a result, in the famous final 100 days of that terrible war Canada's troops led the Allies to victory with great valour and at terrible cost.

Among them were many Albertans. Almost 50,000 Albertans served in what was then known as the Great War. John Pattison worked for the Calgary Gas Company before he enlisted in the army in 1916 and became a member of the Alberta Regiment. At Vimy Ridge he covered 30 yards under intense fire to destroy a heavily fortified enemy position and was awarded the Victoria Cross. Sadly, this brave Albertan was killed just two months later and is buried at La Chaudière Military Cemetery, a short distance from Vimy.

On Monday another Albertan, Herbert Peterson of Berry Creek, will finally be buried in that same cemetery. A member of the 49th Battalion, later to become the Loyal Edmonton Regiment, Peterson died just a week after John Pattison, but his remains lay undiscovered and unidentified until 2003. On Monday he will be finally laid to rest with full military honours and with several members of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment in attendance. May all their memories live from generation to generation.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. members to join me on the 90th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge to remember and to honour these two gallant Albertans and the many other Canadians who served in the Great War.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Premier for his heartfelt tribute. Just a few days from now, on April 9, Her Majesty the Queen, the Prime Ministers of Canada and France, and thousands of Canadian students will travel to France to witness the reopening of the Canadian National Vimy Memorial at Vimy Ridge. The memorial has been under renovation in preparation for a momentous anniversary: 90 years since Canadian soldiers proved a nation's valour and achieved what people at the time thought would be an impossible victory. But with extensive planning, innovative strategy, brilliantly executed tactics, and the bottomless courage of individual troops, the Canadians seized the ridge and created a moment in history that has helped shape the course of our nation's destiny.

According to some historians the taking of Vimy Ridge was not in itself a hugely significant factor in the overall direction of the war, but others point out that seizing the ridge proved that the long stalemate of trench warfare could be broken, protected the French city of Arras from attack, and had a tremendous impact on Allied morale.

To Canadians the greatest impact of the Battle of Vimy Ridge is upon our collective national conscience. Vimy Ridge is part of the Canadian story now. It can be seen as the day we grew up as a nation to fight our own battles, to prove ourselves on the national stage, but we should never forget that this moment in history was bought at the cost of thousands of precious, irreplaceable lives.

In 1994 my wife, Jeanette, our sons Jordan and Spencer, and I travelled to France to visit the memorial at Vimy. We were greeted there by Parks Canada staff since the French, out of gratitude, donated some of the land at the battle site to Canada after the war. It was a little piece of home, a small, in many ways unassuming patch of hills, one ridge looking much like another, including the famous one where so many lives were lost. Jordan and Spencer explored the Allied and German trenches, which were so close together that the boys had no problem calling out to each other. That's how close those soldiers were, nearly close enough to look one another in the eye. That's how close death loomed for the young men on both sides of the front line. The fear they felt must have been immense, yet when called upon to do their duty to take their ridge, Canadian troops used their hard-won training and experience to do what some had called impossible, and in doing so, they helped both win a war and forge a nation's identity.

So on this 90th anniversary let us all salute those gallant soldiers. Let us honour their memories, give thanks for their sacrifice, and pledge ourselves to continue defending the nation they loved so dearly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party. I'm sure unanimous consent will be provided.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Ninety years ago the Battle of Vimy Ridge was fought with Canadian troops leading a successful attack. As with every battle in war we should remember that this victory was achieved at a terrible cost on both sides. Ten thousand Allies, mostly Canadians, and 20,000 Germans were casualties, all for a few kilometres of ground. With ceremonies across the country honouring the courageous soldiers who fought in the Battle of Vimy Ridge, we must strive to remember the lessons learned from this battle and others so that the sacrifices of our soldiers are not in vain.

The lessons of history should inform our actions today by guiding us as we face the challenges of the future. Ours is not a nation forged in war but in the peaceful development of democratic institutions. Mr. Speaker, the greatest tribute we can pay to our veterans is to build a better world, a world where the words "never again" are not rhetorical but are a solemn vow to pursue peace and deny those who recklessly take up arms.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sure, hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, that unanimous consent will be provided as well.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The greatest act of love is laying down one's life for another. Ninety years ago over 3,500 Canadian soldiers did just that at Vimy Ridge. Why? For freedom. Freedom against oppression, discrimination, pillage, and plunder. They treasured freedom more than life itself, and they treasured it for us and for future generations.

We all have defining moments in our lives: our first step, first word, first day of school. But what defines our great nation is our independence, our freedom. We need to remember our great history in this defining moment. More importantly, our next generations need to know and remember the great sacrifices so that they will avoid a repeat of this tragedy and our families, our communities, and our country will continue to be places of peace and freedom.

But it takes more than remembering. To paraphrase Albert Einstein, the world is a dangerous place to live not because of the people who are evil but because of the people who fail to do anything about it. We must speak out and protect the freedom of those around us. Our defining moments are often remembered as turning points in a big game or in this case the Great War. We must remember and realize that it is the final result or the outcome of planning, preparing, and practising that is really the enabler to great defining moments, those moments of success or failure.

The veterans of Vimy Ridge and all those who fought in this Great War are our heroes, and we are forever indebted to them. May we always honour them by protecting their gift to us: our freedom. We can do this by following the words of Elie Wiesel, a Holocaust survivor, who swore "never to be silent whenever [and] wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must [always remember to] take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the [tormented]."

We in this Assembly thank the veterans of Vimy Ridge and all other veterans for their actions and their sacrifices. Thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Community Initiatives Program

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mismanagement by this government has become so common that I don't think they even know the difference. Not only do they spend more per capita than any other province, they deliver less. It's no wonder, from stag parties in Vegas, the fiasco at AADAC, untendered contracts galore, hundreds of thousands of dollars to friends for verbal advice, and now lottery grants. To the Premier, a simple question, should be a simple answer: is the Premier prepared to defend the practice of handing out millions of taxpayer dollars through the community initiatives program in violation of the rules?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if it does mean looking at the very special application from the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society, that was given dollars above what they could raise themselves so that they can have some support from community initiatives program, yes, I would.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The request didn't even go to that fund. The Premier should do his homework better.

To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: why does this department expect volunteers across this province to follow strict CIP guidelines when the department itself is ignoring its own rules?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Certainly, when I talked to my department staff, they assured me that no rules have been broken. The guidelines allow the minister to use discretion in certain cases, as our Premier has just identified; for instance, the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society from Edmonton-Meadowlark that we supported. Had we not had discretion, that particular organization would have had to close its doors. So we want to use discretion in those cases.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. This minister can't seem to keep his story straight. First his department's published documents say, in black and white, $10,000 limit to unmatched CIP grants. Then the minister describes the same rule in his own words as: a strong guideline we use. Then he gets even more creative and says, quote, well, there's a lot of flexibility that's given to the approval of grants. End quote. Which is it, Mr. Minister: a rule, a strong guideline, or something the minister thinks he has the flexibility to ignore?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, as I indicated, we want to use a certain amount of flexibility to show a certain level of compassion to those groups that come to us where they indicate a strong need for additional support over and above the $10,000.

Mr. Speaker, I need to say that since 2002 we've approved over 4,000 CIP applications. Certainly, the question is on the 43 that were over the $10,000, and we're going to review those. We're going to see if there's any breach anywhere, and we'll follow up on them.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Other Initiatives Program

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this government has another multimillion dollar lottery fund that it has kept as far from public sight as it can. The program has the suspiciously vague title the other initiatives program. It doesn't turn up in Alberta lottery's list of programs on its website. There's no note of it on Alberta lottery's news and events listing. There's no process for the public to apply. One of our members wrote a letter to seek funds from this program, and the request was quietly diverted elsewhere. To the Premier: how does this government justify keeping a program that has handed out over $40 million in three years so far hidden from public sight?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, always in the interests of openness and transparency this government, of course, posts all cheques, payments made to any organization, any Albertan. They're there for the public review. They're there to be open and transparent so that people can question what dollars have been paid to various organizations. There's nothing wrong with that. I think it's just part and parcel of being open and transparent.

Dr. Taft: Nobody knows the rules around that program. The Auditor General's report says that the department has not established eligibility criteria for the other initiatives program and goes on to say that the minister "receives requests for funding either directly or through another Member of the Legislative Assembly." It sounds like there's lots of room for political manoeuvring. Yesterday the Premier claimed in this Assembly, "We've always followed [the Auditor General's] recommendations in all the years that I've served in this government." That is pure nonsense, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why has this government failed to comply with the Auditor General's recommendation for the other initiatives program?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, he said something like: in all the years he has served in this government. I don't think you serve in any government.

The other thing is that if there's any minister that doesn't pay attention to the Auditor General's recommendations for a good reason, then I'll have a chat. But I can assure you that we follow the recommendations of the Auditor General.

Dr. Taft: Well, a chat isn't exactly leadership, is it, Mr. Speaker?

These are the kinds of funds that get governments into all kinds of trouble: no public accountability, the minister setting the rules, access by government MLAs, the Auditor General raising concerns that are ignored. To the Premier: is the Premier confident that every dollar of this program was spent in a manner that would withstand public scrutiny, and if he is, will he table the complete details of all the grants given under this program in the last four years?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, in terms of openness and transparency all grants are listed; they're public.

Dr. Taft: They're not.

Mr. Stelmach: He's chatting across and said they're not. Well, then, if he knows of something, tell me which one isn't there so that we can find out why they're not reported. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is following up on a comment that this member made the other day. He said that he has a secret agreement with the Alberta horse racing association. It's now three weeks, and he still hasn't brought it forward. Now he's making another allegation. When is this going to stop?

The Speaker: The third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Community Initiatives Program Grant

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday during question period the minister of tourism, parks and recreation was asked to explain why the government broke its own rules in regard to the community initiatives program. I was surprised to hear that the minister tabled a letter I wrote in support of a project. The minister said, after referring to my letter, that the government did "break our rules" in response to my letter. My question is to the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Is he suggesting that I somehow broke the rules or that I even suggested that the gaming minister break any rules in regard to funding for this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, my department staff has assured me that no rules were broken. In addition to that, all of our grants are made public, and they're posted. For the sake of the opposition members I will quote our address. It's www.albertalotteryfund.ca, and all of our grants are posted there. Everything is out in the open.

Mr. Tougas: Mr. Speaker, as the minister clearly knew, the association I was trying to help was the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society, which trains guide dogs for the blind. It wasn't a request for fancy furniture for some frat house. I also suggested that the funding come from the other initiatives program, which is a fund of lottery dollars whose distribution was entirely at the discretion of the minister. So why did the minister link this entirely legitimate and above board request as an example of the government breaking its own rules on lottery funding?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the dollars that were assigned to the Western Guide and Assistance Dog Society were community initiatives dollars.

Mr. Tougas: That wasn't what I asked for at all.

Mr. Speaker, clearly this was a deliberate drive-by slur in an attempt to discredit the Official Opposition and myself. I am offended that the minister would attempt to link my perfectly legitimate, worthwhile, above board, by-the-rules request with the government's sloppy and questionable abuse of an entirely different program. This is a new low for this government. Again, to the same minister: will the minister apologize for his actions?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, this particular organization, like any other organization, which includes all of our volunteer organizations that apply, goes through a very serious process of due diligence. You know, we have a lot of checks and balances in place. We make sure that the regulations are followed. Certainly, you know, we want to support our volunteer groups, and this particular group, like all the other groups, goes through the same process.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Homelessness

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Working people come to this province for employment, cannot find affordable housing, and end up turned away from overflowing shelters. Some welcome. The Calgary Homeless Foundation last May counted 3,400 homeless people in their city, half of whom had jobs. Some MLAs were probably born in towns that have smaller populations than that. Calgary's homeless shelters are overflowing, and a couple have been closed. The temperature is forecast to drop to minus 8 tonight, and Calgary will be scrambling again . . .

The Speaker: You know, hon. member, we have a problem now. You made your statement, but I don't know . . . [interjections] No, no. You signed on to the 45-second rule, remember. It's over. I don't know what we're doing with that first one, but go on to your second one.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. So the question, then, to the Premier is: given that these shelters in Calgary have been closed and that there is no capacity for the homeless in that city, what is he going to do about it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, clearly, one of the major priorities of the government, of course, is to address the critical housing shortage, and the critical housing shortage is in many different areas. It's in those of the homeless, homeless because of some health issue perhaps. Then there are also the others in terms of low-income wage earners looking for housing and, of course, families looking for homes. That is why we had an all-party committee meet. We put together recommendations with their help. Help will be coming forward in terms of the report and followed up with announcements.

But with this particular Calgary situation my minister was there; he spoke to Calgary. Calgary said: look, we've got a plan in place to deal while we're closing this particular house. He may respond.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier knows that the all-party committee has given the report some time ago, and his government, despite its claim to be transparent, is keeping the report secret until the government figures out what it's going to do. In the meantime there are more homeless almost everyday on the streets of Calgary and other cities. What are you going to do for them, Mr. Premier, tonight, tomorrow night, and the night after that? Talk won't help.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government moved very quickly. We've provided considerable millions of dollars in help to the homeless across the province of Alberta, to various municipalities. We, of course, worked in partnership with the federal government. We'll continue to do that. This is a serious situation. I know that many people moved to this province in spite of the fact that, you know, we've got a critical housing shortage. They insist on moving here because there are some jobs available, and really they want to move here because they have some hope and opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Provincial Tax Regime

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are burdened with excessive taxes. They're being levied by municipalities, the provincial and federal governments. Alberta families are having a difficult time making ends meet, and it's up to this government to reduce taxes on families. To the Premier: is it the policy of this government to reduce or raise taxes in its coming budget?

Mr. Stelmach: Of course, the budget will be delivered April 19, shortly after our Easter holiday. We know that the province of Alberta enjoys the largest tax exemption for families. Perhaps there's even more we can do, but I would ask the hon. member to wait till April 19 so that we don't violate our own rules.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is awash with cash, but Alberta families are not. Alberta families are asking for a reduction in their taxes. The question, again, is: will this government adopt a policy that it will return a portion of the surplus dollars to the Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Stelmach: The Minister of Finance will be bringing forward a budget. It would be looking to find balance amongst all the competing interests in the province. I look forward to the budget being delivered and will have some answers to the questions. Unfortunately, I can't give those today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Municipalities are having a very difficult time meeting the infrastructure needs of their people. A recent minister's report is looking at levying new taxes or allowing municipalities to levy new taxes. Will this government do the right thing and assure municipalities that they will not ask them to put a new tax in place but will return proper funding to those municipalities from the current taxes that this government collects?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's why this government moved very quickly on the commitment of a new fund of $1.4 billion to be allocated to municipalities. We know that they're facing growth pressures in every corner of the province, and the two associations and the two mayors are working on an allocation formula on how best to allocate that formula to municipalities, which will take some of the pressure off.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Internet Gaming

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Internet gambling is an issue that is staring the provincial government square in the eye, and so far there hasn't been much movement to confront this issue. The Alexander First Nation, for example, has openly stated that they're going to get into the Internet gambling scene whether or not the province approves. The Solicitor General has stated that online casinos are contrary to the Criminal Code, and he will enforce that, but the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission is fooling Albertans, floating the idea of online casinos, and have stated that they're proceeding slow and steady. So what exactly is this government's position? To the Solicitor General: can the minister confirm or deny whether, in fact, his department is considering entering or allowing others to enter the Internet gambling business?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a good question as it's quite prevalent in the news today. I want to assure the hon. member that this government is not considering Internet gambling in any form at this particular time. However, we are obviously reviewing it in other jurisdictions to see what's happening in that particular area, but we have no intentions of pursuing that at this particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First Nations groups have stated that they're sovereign entities and that the province has no authority over them. They're using the Kahnawake example in Quebec to state their ability to operate such a venture under the authority of their own gambling commission. In Quebec their Attorney General has stated that these activities are illegal, but he chose to look the other way, and no charges were ever laid. Legal opinion is divided. The activities are contrary to the Criminal Code on the one hand, but there appear to be legal loopholes around the law. The issue is: how will this government react? To the Attorney General: if groups in this province forge ahead with plans to establish online gambling sites, will the minister declare the activity illegal, or will he tolerate the operation and allow it to continue?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the Criminal Code that determines legality relative to this matter has nothing to do with the rulings of the Attorney General in this province or anywhere else. I can tell you that our opinion is and has been for a considerable period of time that First Nation Internet gaming, wherever it might take place in Canada, would be contrary to the Criminal Code.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the reasons First Nations groups in Alberta are resorting to such measures is to create economic opportunities for themselves. It is no secret that they have some serious problems, and they see these gambling ventures as a way to make positive changes for their people. The real shame is that in this province, awash in cash, none of this money seems to be going directly to help First Nations people improve their quality of life or realize their potential. They have to fend for themselves. So they would go as far as openly contravening the Criminal Code if it meant opening doors, creating jobs, and improving quality of life on reserves. To the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations: what opportunities is this government prepared to provide to First Nations people in Alberta so that they don't have to get into Internet gambling?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Happy Easter to everyone. I think that what is most important is this. We are working very closely with our aboriginal peoples, as we have in the past and as we will today and into the future. I might add that the largest employer of aboriginals in all of Canada, of course, is Syncrude Canada Ltd., very prominent in my own constituency. But let me just say that we will continue to work with aboriginal leaders in terms of tremendous economic stories that are out there. They are role models for young people in terms of what is happening today and well into the future. I do believe that we're on the right track in terms of growing the economic pie, where everyone in Alberta plays an important part in that success.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Agricultural Income Stabilization Program

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Drought, grasshoppers, BSE, and rising input costs have created hardships for Alberta producers over the last five years. Recently Alberta Agriculture and Food announced a $70 million addition, and it would be available to help producers through the Alberta reference margin initiative for the 2006 CAIS program year. This sounds like a good thing. However, some of my constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne have expressed concerns that the ones that will benefit the most on this initiative are packers and large feedlots. All my questions are to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Are packers and large feedlot operators going to get the bulk of the money from this initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, meat packers are not eligible under this program and will not be getting any money under the reference margin initiative. Only farmers and agriculture producers will benefit from this. Feedlot operators are eligible, but our data show that only a small portion of the funds will go to them. This is really an extension of a pilot project that we've offered in the past three years. We've done our due diligence. We've found that the money is going to the sectors that need it most in a given year. Not everyone gets a cheque. This is about individual needs.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you for that answer. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. CAIS applications are at times confusing, and producers complain that high-priced accountants are needed to get through the red tape. How can producers be assured that they receive potential benefits as quickly as possible from this program?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, I would be the first person to agree that CAIS could be simpler, but there are some things that can be done, however. Producers can get benefits sooner if they file their taxes early and if they submit their CAIS forms well ahead of the deadline of September 30, 2007. About 55 per cent of the applications arrived within 60 days of the deadline, and this certainly causes a lot of delays. Turnaround times are also better if all the information on the form is accurate and complete.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government says that they want flexibility, the flexibility to break the CIP rules. The groups who do such good work don't get the same flexibility. Most work hard to play by the rules, and they want fairness, and they want accountability. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. The grants above the $10,000 rule average $50,000. Will this minister admit that this is not flexibility? This is mismanagement.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I need to say that, you know, applications for CIP and CFEP grants are reviewed by our grants officers and our technical analysts to make sure that they meet the eligibility criteria and to make sure that the applications are fully completed. When they do that particular review, the recommendation comes back. Sometimes a recommendation comes back to give that organization more money, and other times it comes back to give them less money. Certainly, we review that. We use our flexibility to accommodate those that need additional financial help.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: what is the purpose of having CIP guidelines if you don't follow them?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we've approved over 4,000 CIP applications in the last few years. We're talking about 43, and I've committed to review those. I want to review the information on the 43, and if there are issues with those 43, then I will address them.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. We have asked this question many times but get no answers, so I ask once again. Will this minister table the details, all the details of the other CIP grants that broke the rules? If you have one, table it.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, all of our grants are posted on the website, and all of the information is there. I've asked my staff to pull the 43 that he's talking about. It will take a few days. It takes time to isolate those individuals from all the rest of the grant applications. We'll review them, and we'll see where it comes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mosquito Larviciding Program

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of Alberta, primarily in southern Alberta, are concerned that the government is no longer funding the West Nile mosquito larviciding program. Twenty per cent of people infected with the West Nile virus develop symptoms that adversely affect their quality of life, and 5 per cent develop severe diseases up to and including paralysis. My question is to the Minister of Alberta Health and Wellness. What is the province doing to protect Albertans against the West Nile virus seeing as even the medical officer of health for Palliser and a registered nurse there have contracted West Nile in southern Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did advise the municipalities in the regions that were affected that the funding for the larviciding program was not going to be continued this year, and we did it because there's no evidence that that was an effective use of resources in this particular circumstance. However, human and adult mosquito surveillance programs continue to alert our department and health regions to changes in the risk level of the West Nile virus so we can advise the public accordingly. Those surveillance programs have been conducted in southern Alberta since 2002. Predictably, every year when mosquitoes start to appear, of course, people start to get concerned. It's important to remember that the species of mosquito that carries the West Nile . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member, please.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and only supplemental. I received letters from the municipalities in southern Alberta expressing regret at the decision not to fund the program this year. Dr. Mark Loeb, a researcher from McMaster University, is doing a study of the West Nile virus and has written that 87 per cent of the mosquito pools were positive for the West Nile virus from August 6 to 20, 2006, from the Palliser health region and the Chinook health region. My question again is to the minister. Why is Alberta Health and Wellness no longer considering funding the larvicidal program?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we still, of course, are very interested in making sure that there's proper surveillance, and people are encouraged to take the proper protective procedures with respect to the virus, and that is the most important place that we can put the emphasis.

With respect to the program itself 25 per cent of the municipalities in the high- and medium-risk zones opted out of the grant program in 2006; 79 of 104 eligible municipalities participated with a budget of about $800,000. Approximately $230,000 of that will be returned. The administrative costs of that program are very high. So, in short, we basically determined that that wasn't the most effective use of the resources. The municipalities now have the equipment and training to do larviciding, and we will provide the other information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Private Registry Service Fees

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans who choose to pay their traffic fines electronically through the Service Alberta website are often surprised to learn that this government charges them the same $9 service fee that private registries charge when paying a fee in person, yet the government of Saskatchewan doesn't charge its citizens a service fee for online fine payments, nor does ICBC in British Columbia charge a fee for payments made over the telephone. My questions are for the minister responsible for Service Alberta. How does this minister justify this $9 fee when other jurisdictions charge nothing for the same service?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have made a long and successful tradition of not patterning our financial responsibilities after Saskatchewan or British Columbia.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to guess that Alberta taxpayers are looking for a better answer than that.

A private registry may charge this fee as a means of generating revenue or for recovering the cost associated with the transaction itself. One would reasonably expect that the cost associated with an electronic transaction, a direct payment to the government, should be significantly less in terms of staffing and processing. Can the minister please outline how this $9 service fee is justified when a payment is submitted by a taxpayer directly to the government?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, that's a fair comment. The fees and charges are reviewed on an ongoing basis by the government, and we not only try not to; we are not allowed to charge in excess of what the reasonable cost of recovery is. So if the hon. member is suggesting that we review the $9 fee as if that may be excessive, I'll attempt to do so; however, I think Albertans expect a reasonable cost for services that they get.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. A recent Supreme Court case, King Street Investments versus New Brunswick, determined that the government-imposed user fees which are not tailored to the cost of service itself do in fact constitute an unlawful tax. Will the minister table in this House documents indicating that this $9 service fee is in fact tailored to the cost of the service, or if not, will he admit that we're unfairly taxing Albertans?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we also don't pattern our stuff after New Brunswick; however, we do show in this House all of the budget, which will be debated here in due course in a few weeks. At that time we'll be happy to debate the entire budget of Service Alberta, and you can explain then what you think we should cut.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that Alberta has a housing crisis. My constituency office is being inundated by calls about rent increases. People are being absolutely gouged, and it's happening not only in Edmonton; it's happening across the province. People are being forced to pay 50 per cent, 60 per cent of their income on housing. Tara Kuchar called my office when her rent jumped $375 in five months. Sherry Inglis's rent increased by 30 per cent. My question to the minister of housing is simply this: what is his advice to these people with these calls when they're getting these exorbitant rent increases? What does the minister say to them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member from the third party knows, as he was on the committee of the housing task force that reported on March 19, that we are looking at that report presently, and we are running the recommendations of that report through the process so we can deal with some of the issues and concerns of people such as the individuals that wrote to you.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the report hasn't been released even. That's not going to help these people right now. They're facing these rent increases right now. Another example: Mrs. Arlene Henderson received a rent subsidy, and the landlord took up most of the subsidy right there, so she's no better off. My question simply to the minister, then: because we're in a crisis situation, would the minister as a temporary measure take action to enact legislation to immediately limit rent increases to, say, the consumer price index?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, as mentioned before, the government is looking through the recommendations. The recommendations from that report have a lot of different implications that we think are beneficial and also have challenges to renters, and we are looking at that at the present time.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, these people can't wait while you're looking. They're one rent increase away from being homeless. I'd add: you can still do the report, and you could bring in temporary measures for rent guidelines in the short run. Why don't we do that right now to help these people?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member mentioned: why don't we release the report? It is not going to help to release the report. We are looking at responses to the recommendations and the concerns that citizens of Alberta have put in that report, and we're dealing with that right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod, and then, hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, you're ceding your spot to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Wind Power Generation

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The wind power industry in Alberta has developed in the province over the last 15 years, providing green power choice for consumers. Our industry is one of the largest in Canada, and most of the production is in my constituency of Livingstone-MacLeod. But wind power generation is being limited in Alberta for two main reasons: first, there's a current cap on the amount of wind power that is allowed into the grid, and second, there are issues related to the process around transmission infrastructure. My question to the Minister of Energy: if we are in a free market system, why is the generation of wind power being capped at 900 megawatts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most certainly, we realize that wind power in the province of Alberta plays a very major role and will continue to play a major role in Alberta's integrated energy strategy. This generation forms a major piece of our plan to build a stronger Alberta. The amount of power that is supplied to the grid at any time needs to remain in balance, and the AESO have determined that to maintain that balance, we need to cap the amount of wind power that we put onto the grid at this point in time at 900 megawatts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Delays in constructing transmission lines to access the grid are actually holding up investment in rural Alberta and particularly my constituency. Can the minister advise the current status of the routing and the timelines for completing this much-needed link in southwest Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, again, this government has a plan to manage growth pressures in the province of Alberta, and transmission is the backbone to our electricity system. The member is referring to a 240-kV line from Pincher Creek to Lethbridge. It's needed, and we agreed to bring additional wind power onto the grid. The proponent of this particular piece of infrastructure is working to address concerns with affected landowners, and we expect steps to be taken with the EUB in the very near future.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Minister. My last question is: since wind power generation offers a viable economic offset for gas emissions, can the minister commit to more wind power generation to assist climate change in Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, as the member has indicated, wind power in the province of Alberta is a success story. We work with the proponents to address some of the issues that have been mentioned by the hon. member. The province supports a major wind study that's being done with proponents, with the Canadian Wind Energy Association, and the study will help us to forecast wind trends and address issues of reliability. We will then have the groundwork for an expanded capacity to put wind on the grid in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Blood-borne and Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Blood-borne infections like hepatitis C, HIV, and hepatitis B have serious, potentially fatal outcomes, and rates of these infections continue to rise in Alberta. There has been a 40 per cent increase in syphilis rates in Alberta over the past year. My questions are to the minister of health. When questioned last spring about why the blood-borne pathogen and sexually transmitted infections strategy has been delayed, it was the then minister's opinion that the ad campaigns about risky sexual behaviour weren't in line with Albertans' morals and values. My question is: is this health minister going to continue this attitude, or will this strategy finally be released?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I haven't seen the advertising strategy, so I'm not sure I could make a judgment call on that, but I can tell the hon. member that it's absolutely important that we make Albertans aware of the problems that we're facing with respect to the increase in outbreaks of syphilis. I made that statement in the House a number of weeks ago. It's important that we communicate that to Albertans and important that we make sure that Albertans are aware of the necessity to be careful with respect to unprotected sex. I'm not shy about saying that.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. All right. Again to the same minister. This government has been sitting on this strategy that would deal specifically with this problem for nearly four years while Alberta's rates of sexually transmitted infections are rising at a greater rate than the national average. Will the minister concede that this government's failure to release the report in a timely manner has allowed more and more Albertans to be put at risk?

Mr. Hancock: Well, no, Mr. Speaker, I can't concede that because I haven't examined it to determine whether that's what's put Albertans at risk or whether it's unprotected sex that's put Albertans at risk. I would presume it was the latter, but I will certainly be interested in looking at the strategy and seeing if that strategy or some additional strategy could help us make Albertans more aware of the risks and what protections they take for them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister. We have been waiting since at least 2003 for the blood-borne pathogen and sexually transmitted infection strategy. Can the minister tell us if there's anything in this strategy about equipment sterilization that could have improved procedures and reduced risk of infections in Vegreville and Lloydminster? Where is the strategy?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the specific strategy that the hon. member is referring to is not something that I'm completely conversant with at the moment. I will have a look at it to see if there's anything in there that would deal with the issue that she's raised, but the fact of the matter is that we have talked to Albertans. We have tried to raise the awareness level with Albertans, particularly in light of the recent information available with respect to syphilis but also the other blood-borne pathogens. It is very important that we deal with these issues, and I will undertake to the member to review the strategy that she's talking about and see whether it could have efficacy today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Flood Preparedness

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every spring the spectre of floods raises fears across Alberta, most certainly in my constituency. To the Minister of Environment: can he inform this House how his ministry ensures that residents of affected communities are protected from potential floods?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment's flood forecasting river engineering team is constantly monitoring river levels around the clock and also works in very close contact with Environment Canada, monitoring weather services. The staff will issue advisories and warnings if they expect conditions will have an impact on streams and rivers. We also work very closely with municipalities to ensure that they have sufficient notification so that they'll be aware of possible potential increases in river levels. When flooding does occur, Albertans are advised directly by their municipality as to what precautions or actions they should take.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the serious flooding in southern Alberta in 2005 I'm wondering if the minister could inform this House if we've learned any lessons that would help us to better prepare and thereby mitigate or avoid flood damage?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent observation, and in fact since the floods of 2005 Alberta Environment has taken a number of steps to ensure that communities across the province have improved flood mapping in high-risk areas. This mapping helps us to much better understand the possible impact of flooding on these communities. Our existing infrastructure performed extremely well in 2005 to mitigate the impact of flooding. I'll use an example of the slow release of water from the Dickson dam, which prevented flooding in Red Deer, Drumheller, and other communities in between. So we will constantly ensure that we can do everything within our means to minimize the loss.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I'm particularly concerned within my constituency and within northern Alberta at heavy snowpack levels in the headwaters of many of the streams and rivers that drain into the northern plains and lowlands of northern Alberta. We're at serious risk of flooding. I'm wondering if the minister could inform us which communities are particularly at risk this spring?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment issued just yesterday a routine water supply outlook. That outlook indicated that given the amount of snow that we have in certain areas, depending upon the rate of melt there could be issues related to flooding. That's what we continue to monitor. These include the communities of Peace River, Grande Prairie, High Prairie, Edson, Slave Lake, Cold Lake, and Lloydminster, but I have to emphasize: this is not an advisory; this is simply an observation that should melting occur at a rapid rate, these areas could be affected. We will be sure and provide adequate notice should that be the case.

The Speaker: The hon Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture and Food committed to an internal investigation into the vicious, hate-promoting e-mail that a government employee sent from a government computer to the Save My CWB website in Manitoba. This e-mail was vicious, it was vulgar, and it was completely unacceptable. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Now that the investigation is complete, the results have not been made public, unfortunately. However, will the minister personally post an apology on the Save My CWB website on behalf of the government and the citizens of this province and the civil servants?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, we took this very seriously. We did have a breach of the code of conduct by one of our employees in the department. I asked my deputy and the department to look into it. They did. They've dealt with it; they've taken the appropriate action. We followed the process as agreed upon by the union's collective agreement. There's been due diligence and fairness in this matter, and it's been dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has any apology on behalf of the department been sent to the folks at the Save My CWB website who were slurred?
Thank you.

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, yes, there has. Obviously, he hasn't been reading the website like he probably should be. The staff member apologized for using the government computer. We respect that people have their own personal opinions and views on things even if they are different from this government. I'm quite satisfied. I don't know if the member opposite is looking for blood or what, but we've dealt with the matter.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: would the minister now apologize on behalf of this government, our fine province, and all of the civil servants for allowing this to happen? Why are you making the employee apologize when you should show leadership and apologize on behalf of the entire government?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, the matter has been dealt with. It's been dealt with properly. End of the story.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Trade, Investment, and Labour Mobility Agreement

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently received a letter from a constituent concerned about the Alberta/B.C. trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, or TILMA. Among the concerns expressed to me is that this agreement will hamstring municipal and provincial governments by limiting their ability to pass laws and regulations. My first question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. How will the TILMA affect the ability of governments to do their job to enact laws and regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to the hon. member that our Premier and Canadian Premiers clearly have indicated that this is to assist our citizens in terms of reducing costs and reducing red tape. It will have no impact at all on municipalities relative to their law-making ability and what they do in serving citizens just like we in this Legislature serve citizens, to the best of our ability in helping them as opposed to hurting them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. To the same minister. In his letter my constituent says that no one is being consulted about the TILMA. Can the minister please explain what consultation, if any, has been carried out on this agreement?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, in my 45 seconds, we have and are continuing to consult. Let me give you a small example: the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Assessors' Association, for those who go to get drugs the Pharmacists Association, for those who want to get their eyes checked the Association of Optometrists, the land surveyors, the Alberta Building Trades Council. We even met with their union people in terms of the importance because this is serving all citizens no matter what political stripe they wear. This is a great deal, and I know this Legislature will support it.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: can the minister advise the House what has been done to publicize this agreement, the TILMA?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly I am part of that publication and will continue to be. I might add that from April 1, when the agreement came into effect, over the next two years municipalities, school boards, and others will continue to be key stakeholders as we in fact look, from 2007 to 2009, at that point, then, what impacts it will have, if any, on municipalities. So from 2007 to 2009 will be an important process of dealing with our municipalities. [interjections] I'm glad to see that some of the Liberals are even getting some of the French emotion that goes on in this House.

The Speaker: That was 91 questions and answers today.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, far away in northern France there is a forested ridge which looks over the green farmlands of the Douai plain. From a distance it might seem a rather ordinary place, but for all of us as Canadians this ridge is hallowed ground, for there in France is a part of Canada, surrounded by a pair of magnificent white marble towers.

On April 9, 1917, 90 years ago this coming Monday, something remarkable happened on that piece of ground called Vimy Ridge. That day marked the start of a battle which, over a period of four days, saw over 3,500 Canadian men lose their lives and 7,000 more wounded. The Canadians attacked where so many previous assaults had tried and had failed and captured what many thought was an impossible objective. The brilliant military victory was the result of meticulous preparation and training, of resourceful and innovative leadership, and of unbelievable bravery, fighting spirit, and devotion to duty of the Canadian soldier.

Yet Vimy Ridge means more than a brilliant military victory in the bloody conflict of War World I. For the first time Canadians from all parts of our young nation fought as one unit, side by side under Canadian command. Vimy won for Canada respect and status as a signatory nation to the Treaty of Versailles. It won from Canadians at home pride in the courage of their soldiers and a feeling of nationhood. Vimy reminds us that Canadians from all walks of life were prepared to serve their country and make the ultimate sacrifice for their nation and for the causes they believed in.

Between those soaring white towers at Vimy stands the figure of a soldier passing his burning torch to compatriots. This soldier, called The Spirit of Sacrifice, commemorates the immortal words of Lieutenant Colonel John McCrae:

To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders Fields.

The Speaker: There'll be five additional members. I just want to keep the theme of Vimy Ridge together in the same unit. We'll go with Calgary-Hays, Lethbridge-East, Edmonton-Manning, and Calgary-Bow.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to speak to Canada's most memorable wartime triumph. Easter Monday will be the 90th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. Although this event happened almost a century ago, Canadians are still learning about the effects the battle had on Canada. As is tradition, thousands of Canadians, young and old, will travel long distances to the fields of Vimy Ridge, where the remains of brave and dedicated soldiers lie. There they will pay tribute to the 11,000 soldiers who gave their lives for the freedom of people all around the world. The visiting Canadians will stand by an overwhelming memorial that marks the soldiers' experience. This monument is Canada's largest piece of installation art outside the country.

Mr. Speaker, the Battle of Vimy Ridge was one of the opening battles of the campaign. It is also considered a major event in our history. To Canadians the name Vimy Ridge has been historically meaningful. It was the first time in our nation's history that a corps-sized formation fought as a unit. The success of the attack, resulting from detailed planning and a variety of innovative tactics, was in stark contrast to what had happened at the Somme only months before. This event sealed the reputations of the Canadians as among the finest troops on the Western Front. The capture of the ridge by the Canadian corps was a turning point for the Allied force. The success of the Canadian forces here and at Passchendaele and Canada's Hundred Days helped earn Canada a place at the Versailles peace negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, some suggest that Canadian unity was fostered. All nine provinces were represented in this battle. But as Pierre Berton pointed out in his seminal work Vimy, the taking of the ridge achieved legendary status very quickly.

In 1917 this event had a tremendous impact on Canadians as a whole. Today this battle still has a large impact on Canadians. All across Canada young students have been united by learning about the battle. They have learned that the young individuals who went to war were much like the young Canadians of today. A little older than them they had families and friends much like they do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today humble and grateful for the freedom that I have to speak my mind without fear of reprisals, a freedom won with the lives of the Canadian men and women who died in the First World War in the battle at Vimy Ridge in France 90 years ago. Forces from each province joined together and did what Allied forces could not do. They stormed the ridge and conquered a long-held German stronghold, that changed the course of the war. This battle created a true sense of unity and became the birth of our nation as a nation.

Mr. Speaker, 3,600 high school students from across Canada will be going to Vimy Ridge for the rededication of the war memorial. Forty-one of these are from Winston Churchill and Lethbridge Collegiate Institute in Lethbridge. Mr. David Fletcher, a teacher at Winston, was the lead on this project, but the students, parents, and the whole community helped to raise the money necessary for this trip.

They will all wear First World War uniforms, and what is fascinating is that the buttons will be exact replicas as they were cast from the original die that is kept in the Ottawa archives. These students will represent one of our fallen who lie in the graves of France. Each student researched the story of that soldier. The research turned into a labour of love, and many managed to track family members still living.

A wonderful story out of Lethbridge is that one of the students managed to make contact with the 96-year-old sister of the soldier represented. She was found living in Calgary and was thrilled for the recognition of her brother after all these many years. The family was tracked in Scotland, and medals that had never been presented for heroism will now be given to the family. A true lifetime memory for these students.

Mr. Speaker: lest we forget. These young people will ensure we must not forget the horrors of war and the love for peace that are shared by the Canadian people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am humbled and honoured to stand here today and speak to the memory of the men and women who won the great Battle of Vimy Ridge 90 years ago. There were those who cried for peace. There were the warriors and the healers. They were all our citizen soldiers. They were there, stood strong together, and went into battle that day. It was the first time that the Canadian army attacked together. Les soldats canadiens du Québec et d'Acadie, proud Canadian soldiers from Quebec and Acadia were there. Ontarians, Atlantic Canadians, and our boys from the west were all there and ready.

At 5:30 a.m. on the 9th of April, 1917, four Canadian divisions, the first 15,000 infantry, backed up by their artillery, stormed the ridge with intense fortitude and courage. Imagine thousands of rounds of hot fire searing the air around you and not turning back. Imagine charging with your bayonet into a machine gun nest and not turning back. Imagine the air turning black as artillery shells blasted craters around you. Imagine your friends, your brothers around you having their legs and arms and heads blown off and not turning back. Our boys did not turn back, and they won the day. It was an incredible sacrifice: 3,598 Canadians were killed; 7,100 were wounded. Brigadier-General A.E. Ross said, "In those few minutes I witnessed the birth of a nation." Albertans were there from Edmonton, Calgary, High River, Lacombe, Morinville, Lac La Biche, Atikameg, and Wabasca, from all over Alberta. Many memorials stand in testimony to the sacrifices made. I salute all those and their families who suffered. We must thank them all forever.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Tartan Day

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were very strong values that were fought for at Vimy Ridge.

I rise today to recognize that tomorrow is a significant day for the people of Scottish descent. It is Tartan Day, an opportunity for people in Alberta, in Scotland, and around the world to celebrate the many achievements of the Scottish people. We celebrate Tartan Day on April 6 because it marks the anniversary of the Declaration of Arbroath, which was signed in Scotland on April 6, 1320. Its most significant claim was that the country was ruled at the prerogative of the people and that the King could be replaced if he did anything to threaten Scottish independence. This highly significant but little known document was one of the first in the modern world to stipulate that government is ruled by the people.

Here in Canada the Scottish influence on our democracy is clear. Alberta was settled by pioneer Scots like the North West Mounted Police's Colonel Macleod and Colonel Irvine. Our Prime Minister John A. Macdonald was a Scot as was Alberta's first Premier, Alexander Rutherford. The first mayors of both Calgary and Edmonton were also of Scottish descent. And it was their comrades, the Calgary Highlanders regiment, fighting for democracy at Vimy Ridge.

I hope all our members will join me in celebrating Tartan Day tomorrow. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Shauna Seneca

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 14 of last year the city of Edmonton and its aboriginal community lost a true champion with the unexpected passing of Shauna Seneca. Shauna was only 49 years old, but in her short time on this earth she touched the lives of thousands of people. In December 1993 Shauna and her husband, Brad, created a youth-focused program called Bent Arrow, that provided services to 16- to 24-year-old aboriginal youths who wanted to find a job, return to school, or were looking for a new direction in their lives.

In 1994 the couple established a nonprofit charitable organization and called it Bent Arrow Traditional Healing Society, basing it on traditional teachings and values. The name of the society perfectly illustrated Shauna's vision and belief in the essential goodness of people. Traditionally, aboriginal people took great care to make sure that an arrow was straight, in the belief that good energy made them fly straight and true. Shauna believed that children in difficult situations were bent arrows, not broken, and that with love and faith they would fly straighter.

Bent Arrow has helped countless aboriginal children, youth, and families. The society operates 14 programs from its offices on Stony Plain Road, employing 83 people. Last year I visited Bent Arrow on what was just a typical weekday. The office hummed with activity, and there was a palpable feeling of goodwill and hope. Bent Arrow is not a mere drop-in centre where people while away the hours but a place where things get done and people help people.

Bent Arrow offers nutrition programs for expectant mothers, help for survivors of residential schools, programs for healthy families, care for pregnant teens, transitional housing, a Head Start program: the list goes on and on. The mission statement of Bent Arrow states that the society is committed to building on the strengths of Aboriginal children, youth and their families to enable them to develop spiritually, emotionally, physically and mentally so they can walk proudly in both the Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal communities.

Sadly, Bent Arrow will have to carry on that mission without their guiding light, but there is no doubt that the spirit of Shauna Seneca will continue to watch over Bent Arrow. Shauna may be gone, but her legacy – and what a wonderful legacy it is – will last for years to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're allowed under our rules to have only a certain number of members provide their members' statements today. One hon. member has conveyed to me a very moving story. With your permission, I'd like him to share with you. Can we have consent to do it?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was sharing with the Speaker that about 20 years ago, when I was in my young 20s, I travelled to France where, in fact, my grandfather's 18-year-old brother was killed at Vimy Ridge on this day. My grandfather said that as a namesake, I was big on flags and I was big on emulating his traits. As a teenager I flew to France to visit Vimy Ridge – I was the only one in my family to ever do that – and I placed an ensign flag, the old Canadian flag, by his gravesite. My grandfather was still living, and I took a photo of where his brother was buried and took it back to him. I just want to say what a smile it put on my grandfather's face to see where his 18-year-old brother who had left many, many years earlier was buried and lies today.

I sincerely say that the respect that French people show for Canadians is truly something I'll never forget.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung first, then Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have eight petitions today. The first one is signed by 476 people, and it says:

We, the undersigned residents of the Edmonton-Castle Downs constituency, hereby urge the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the Government of Alberta to reconsider the location of the new Edmonton Remand Centre and work with the federal government to relocate the new site closer to the Edmonton Maximum Security prison.

The second one is signed by 33 people, and it says:

Whereas the ongoing rent affordability crisis is contributing to Alberta's worsening homelessness situation, we, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to take immediate, meaningful measures to help low-income and fixed-income Albertans, Albertans with disabilities and those who are hard-to-house maintain their places of residence and cope with the escalating and frequent increases in their monthly rental costs.

The third one, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 35 concerned Albertans, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to:

1. Ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is standardized across the sector, regardless of whether these workers are employed by government or by community-based or private providers;
2. Ensure these employees are fairly compensated and that their wages remain competitive . . . to reflect the valuable and crucial service they provide;
3. Improve employees' access to professional development opportunities . . . and
4. Introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today 1,080 signatures, and it reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to add the drug Elaprase to the Drug Benefit List approved by Alberta Health and Wellness in order to ensure that those suffering from Hunter's Syndrome, including Jordan Miranda, Riley Miranda and Tyler Chauhan, get the care they need to reduce their suffering and live full lives.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter that was sent to my office on behalf of my constituent Arlene Henderson. Ms Henderson recently began receiving a subsidy to offset her rental cost; however, shortly after she began receiving the subsidy, her rent increased again. Basically, her situation demonstrates that subsidies are important, but they must be accompanied by short-term rent increase guidelines.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have more copies of the letters which were received by my office urging the government to provide funding for the cancer-fighting drug Avastin. In doing so, I would like to reiterate that people who require this treatment can pay up to $1,750 every two weeks. I would also mention that according to the people signing these letters, Members of Parliament, federal employees, members of the RCMP, and federal judges are covered for this treatment. Today the letters are from Nancy Niederhaus, Allison White, Ron McIntyre, Debbie McMunn, Andrew Gniazdowsky, Elsie Thompson, Doug Friend, Pat Stevenson, and Linda Verenka.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a letter from a member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers who is living in Fort McMurray. Mr. Bluett is extremely frustrated because in the last two years he has faced three rental increases and moved twice to lower his rental costs. To make matters worse, he often finds himself unemployed while temporary foreign labour is used to replace unionized Alberta workers.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to present a couple of letters and the number of copies necessary from volunteers for the Unity Centre of Northeast Edmonton, Geraldine Sutton and Dale Thimer, regarding some personal stories about problems with affordable housing.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. If I could ask the government to please provide us with information on their projected government business for the week commencing Tuesday, the 9th of April.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As all members are aware, the House will not sit on Monday, April 9.

On April 10 we should have second reading of bills 12 and 15 and Committee of the Whole on bills 3, 21, 16, 12, 10, and 5.

On Wednesday we will have Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007; Committee of the Whole on bills 21, 22, 16, 15; and second reading on bills 17, 18, and 19.

On Thursday, the 12th, we'll be into third reading on bills 21, 22, 16, 12, 15, and as per progress on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker, I need to point out that this will be obviously subject to change depending upon the progress that is achieved throughout the week, so we'll work as best we can to keep the members of the opposition advised.

The Speaker: Hon. members, when we return on Tuesday – and I did send a memo to all hon. members – we will have gavel-to-gavel coverage on our website, on the Internet, of the proceedings of this Legislative Assembly, so from about 1 until 6. We're also prepared to provide such coverage if we sit in the evening providing we have notice to make sure that the technical people are in place. But effective Tuesday, 1 o'clock to 6 o'clock, everything will be on the Internet, available to the world, the performance in this Assembly: a first.

Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An influenza pandemic occurs when a new strain of influenza virus emerges with an ability to spread quickly and cause significant sickness and mortality. Currently, global experts are suggesting that a pandemic will occur in the next one to three years. Although the impact of pandemic influenza is unpredictable in timing and severity in the age group affected, we do know that it's likely to come in waves of six to eight weeks, result in significant absenteeism across the sectors, and put tremendous stress on the health care system. Furthermore, because a pandemic is likely to be widespread, the ability of neighbouring communities and jurisdictions to offer assistance will be limited.

As a result, the government of Alberta has developed and will continue to revise response plans. The government is developing their response plans in co-ordination with regional health authorities, municipalities, industry, and other key stakeholders. As a result of planning activities, amendments to four statutes have been identified that will strengthen the province's ability to respond effectively to both pandemics and public health emergencies in general.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

An amendment to the Disaster Services Act will enable the Lieutenant Governor in Council to declare a state of emergency due to a pandemic that would last up to 90 days instead of the 14-day declaration which is currently provided for. The declaration would lapse after 90 days unless it was continued by resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

In addition to amendments that serve to clarify the intent and to update the language used in the Public Health Act, there are five sets of key amendments to this act. The first key amendments would enable the Lieutenant Governor in Council to declare a public health emergency due to a pandemic that would last up to 90 days instead of the 30-day declaration which is currently provided for. The declaration would lapse after 90 days unless it was continued by a resolution in the Legislative Assembly.

The amendments to increase the duration of an emergency declaration under both the Public Health Act and the Disaster Services Act are only for emergencies related to a pandemic. These extended declarations reflect the fact that a pandemic will come in waves and will require a prolonged response.

The second set of key amendments will allow the minister responsible for an enactment or in their absence the minister of health to suspend or modify the application of legislation by a ministerial order in order to facilitate an effective pandemic preparation or response. For example, under the Health Professions Act if a complaint is dismissed, the complainant only has 30 days to appeal this decision. This time limit could be suspended or modified during a pandemic.

The third set of key amendments will improve the enforcement mechanisms in the act by providing for quick access to the courts for medical officers of health. These amendments will ensure compliance with orders that have been issued.

The fourth set of key amendments will broaden the liability protection provision to ensure that all individuals who have been directed to respond to a public health emergency cannot be liable for actions carried out in good faith. Currently the Public Health Act prohibits the termination of an employee because they have been conscripted during an emergency.

The fifth set of key amendments will expand this protection to include anyone complying with an order or certificate during a public health emergency. During a pandemic this protection could also be provided to people who are ill with influenza or to persons caring for sick family members. The amendment to the Employment Standards Code will ensure that recourse is available to people who have been wrongly terminated in contravention of these provisions.

Finally, an amendment to the Government Organization Act will enable the Minister of Health and Wellness to authorize individuals or groups of individuals to perform restricted activities subject to specific terms and conditions. During a public health emergency health resources will be strained, and skilled people may be called upon to apply their skills outside of their normal scope of practice. An example might be paramedics, who are trained to give injections but are not authorized to provide immunization. During a pandemic they could be authorized to vaccinate people.

Ensuring that Alberta is able to respond to a pandemic of influenza supports the Premier's plan to provide safe and secure communities. The amendments to the pandemic response statutes will do just that.

I ask support of the House and move second reading of Bill 14 and adjourn debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 3

Climate Change and Emissions Management
Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to first of all thank the hon. members for approving of Bill 3 and getting it to this the committee stage. I'd like to take just a few moments of the Assembly's time to address some of the issues that were raised during debate at second reading, and then I look forward to further discussion at committee.

Mr. Chairman, I've got a compilation of the debate that occurred at second reading, and without making specific reference to each of the speakers, I'd just like to point out that these remarks I'm about to make refer to comments and questions raised by Edmonton-Calder, Edmonton-McClung, Calgary-Mountain View, and Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think that's it.

So if I could deal with a number of the issues first of all that were raised by Edmonton-Calder. Much of what Edmonton-Calder was referring to had to deal with whether or not carbon sequestration was valid science. The member was questioning why the government would be promoting something such as carbon sequestration and talked about costs that are involved in carbon sequestration. I have to assure the member that while carbon sequestration is a valid and viable option to pursue, it is not specifically part of this bill. As a matter of fact, the task force that was recently named by the federal government is going through a process of reviewing the economics and the viability of sequestration. We look forward to that report.

But I must point out that whether sequestration is done on a very large scale, à la pipelines, CO₂ pipelines, it really isn't a matter of if carbon sequestration could work in Alberta but how. That's very much the question. At the end of the day, though, the management of carbon in one form or another is very much an issue and part of this bill because what this bill is attempting to do is send a clear message to industry that it's the intention of this government and of Albertans that they need to do what is within their power to reduce the amount of CO₂ and greenhouse gases that they emit into the atmosphere.

We also had issues raised with respect to the discussion of whether intensity or absolute targets should be the focus of this legislation, and I want to spend just a little bit of time talking about both of those. This bill, as you know, Mr. Chairman, contemplates bringing forward intensity-based targets. The approach works for Alberta because it reflects greenhouse gas performance improvements independent of growth or decline in the economy. This approach recognizes the huge capital investment that Alberta has made in the past in a number of sectors like forestry, electricity, oil sands, petrochemicals, and so on, and we need to give these companies time to recoup their investment while at the same time ensuring that they take future action to reduce greenhouse gases. In a growing economy like Alberta's absolute reductions in emissions can be achieved, but it's important that the right policies and programs are in place to allow the economy to adjust.

A combination of both approaches could be used so that emissions intensity targets are used in the short term and absolute targets are a much longer term objective. The result of this would be immediate action on emissions, a lesser impact on the economy, and a time for researchers to develop innovative solutions. This is, in essence, Alberta's existing policy, and we've chosen to transition from intensity-based targets to absolute targets by investing in technology.

We had further comments suggesting that this bill, Alberta's Bill 3, may be obsolete given that the federal government is also contemplating passing similar legislation. I'd like to just point out to members that it's certainly not the intention of the government of Alberta to pass legislation that would duplicate legislation at the federal level. It would be ludicrous for us to think that we would put in legislation that would require Alberta industry to contribute to meeting our compliance mechanisms at the same time that as Canadian corporations they would also be required to meet any compliance mechanisms that might be imposed by Ottawa.

But there's something that needs to be noted. While it is our intention to work with the federal government and work with Canada to where possible harmonize and achieve similar outcomes, I'd like to point out two things to members. First of all, the discussion that the federal government is having at this point with respect to climate change legislation is just that. They're mired in a minority government situation. The legislation that they contemplate has not seen broad-based approval in the Commons, and frankly, Mr. Chairman, I'm not so sure that there's reasonable expectation that that legislation will actually come to pass. The alternative that the federal government has is to bring forward regulations under their existing legislation. That being the case, there are very rigid and strict requirements of public notification once the government even establishes and announces its targets. So that all comes down to the reality that any action taken by the federal government is a minimum of 12 to 18 months and more likely 24 months away.

The government of Alberta feels very strongly that we need to act and we need to act now. So if the federal government comes forward with legislation, (a) we will work with them to harmonize our legislation, and (b) in the meantime we will have taken strong action in Alberta and, actually, I would also like to say, perhaps even learned some lessons in the process so that we can assist Ottawa in the implementation of any legislation that they bring forward.

The other important factor, I think, that I want to put on the record, Mr. Chairman, is that Alberta has a strong record of regulating air emissions. We have been involved in regulating our own industry in particulate emissions for some time now. The climate change legislation that this bill, in fact, amends has been in place since 2002. We're simply amending existing legislation that had mandatory reporting, putting intensity targets and the compliance mechanisms in place.

So, clearly, we want Ottawa to recognize that as we have worked together very successfully in the past in joint management of air quality, we see no reason why we shouldn't be able to continue to operate in close co-operation with Ottawa in the future. So there's no need for members of this House to arbitrarily hold up passage of this legislation in anticipation of what Ottawa may do because they're a ways away from doing what it is that they're going to do, and at the end of the day we can continue to work with Ottawa, as we always have, to co-operate as best we possibly can.

Others raised issues regarding the fact that only about 70 per cent of Alberta's industrial emissions are represented under this legislation, and what are we going to do about the other 30 per cent? Well, that, Mr. Chairman, is exactly the process that we've been engaged in for the past week and will continue to be engaged in over the next two or three weeks as we have been holding a number of community consultation meetings throughout the province to engage Albertans in that very discussion.

Where do we go from here? We've closed the loop on climate change legislation. We've introduced the intensity-based targets for large industrial emitters. But where do we go from here? I'm very pleased to report that Albertans are not only actively engaged in attending and participating in those community consultations but are very actively involved in providing input through our website. So I encourage not only members of the public but perhaps even members of this Assembly to be involved in this consultation process. We have a number of community meetings that are yet to be held. Last night we were in Lethbridge, the night before in Medicine Hat, and we'll be in Calgary next Tuesday. So I encourage members to participate in that process, and I think that they'll see that there is active discussion and good, quality suggestions being made by Albertans, and we look forward to that.

We also had questions regarding the issue of the compliance mechanisms and asking for some clarification on the different levels of compliance. I'd point out that this legislation operates under the same principles as the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and its regulations provide for a number of offences that can be prosecuted. There are significant maximum penalties under conviction, but there are also penalties that can be brought forward in the form of administrative penalties. They represent a compliance ladder for steps that would be taken based on any offences under the programs. You start at first on the ladder, and if that doesn't result in compliance, you can constantly move up, and that's exactly the way this legislation is designed to operate as well.

Finally, I wanted to address the issue of industrial emissions. Edmonton-Gold Bar was asking why industrial emissions are excluded and, in fact, asking what industrial emissions are. I'd like to point out that industrial emissions are the types of emissions where there is really no technology fix that's economically viable or efficiency adjustment that could be made to reduce them in the short term. They are part of a set of chemical industrial processes, as opposed to the result of combustion. When you burn something and you send smoke up the chimney, that CO₂ that comes out is the result of combustion. When you, for example, manufacture fertilizer, you have a chemical reaction. One of the by-products of that chemical reaction is CO₂. That CO₂ is captured. It doesn't go up the stack, so to speak; it's already captured. That's the kind of activity that can be much more easily dealt with. We've already got it in a bag, so to speak. We can find ways of managing that type of CO₂ much more easily.

It's also a recognition that as a result of a manufacturing process there already has been a significant reduction in CO₂ on the combustible side since the late '90s and the turn of the century simply from an economic perspective because natural gas is a feedstock for these types of industries. They have made significant reductions in CO₂ simply because of the economies involved. This will allow us to work with the manufacturing sector, recognizing that they have some unique circumstances there, and allow us to deal with that in a reasonable way.

Finally, I want to deal with the issue in section 8 that talks about the question: why is this section being substituted? I can assure the member that the reason is purely administrative. It's an amendment to ensure the consistency of the ministerial order outlined in section 10 of the Government Organization Act. The original wording unintentionally restricted the authority. The intent remains unchanged: co-operation among other jurisdictions needs to be in the shared interest of Albertans as reflected in the expectations under this legislation. This will help us to ensure that a single set of rules applies to Alberta industry.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I think I have covered at least most of the issues that were raised by hon. members at second reading, and I look forward to further discussion at committee stage.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hon. minister's answers to many of the questions that we've posed about what the bill will do, and I guess I'm going to be focusing more on what it doesn't do.

This bill is intended to amend the original 2003 bill, Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. The main changes are in the regulation, the specified gas emitters regulation, which has set out some new emission intensity targets and three options to achieve them for the largest industrial emitters. However, the target of reaching 50 per cent emission intensity reduction by 2020 remains the same in this bill.

It is reliance on emissions intensity that makes these changes more for show than anything else. There will be no reductions in absolute emissions, and in fact by 2020 they could double. That alone tells us that this bill and the accompanying regulations are more a reaction to public pressure and concern than a government that's prepared to show leadership on this issue of climate change that has been scientifically proven and accepted by the international community. You know, it's been validated by scientists for decades now, but the communication over the last few decades has been a problem, in that politicians and media have given it a spin that makes it confusing.

So it's not realistic for us to support this bill at this point because it continues to rely on intensity emissions rather than moving towards hard caps on emissions. This plan has some flaws that make it less effective in reducing emissions in an absolute sense. The reliance on emissions intensity as our measure of reduction instead of focusing on moving aggressively to absolute reductions to make this bill and the accompanying regulations effective are exactly making it ineffective.

Absolute emission is the term used to describe the total volume of emissions from a particular source, whether it is an exhaust system of a vehicle or a stack from an industrial facility. Emission intensity is the amount of greenhouse gases released measured against another factor such as GDP or a barrel of oil. A more fuel efficient car will have a lower emission intensity than a less efficient model, but the two cars may still have the same absolute emissions if the more efficient one is driven further.

Although the hon. member also mentioned the goal to harmonize and to look at the national plan and, hopefully, some global responsibility, there are some questions about how what we're doing here in Bill 3 would actually work with Kyoto commitments. Will it jeopardize our ability and Canada's ability to meet those commitments? Will it jeopardize Canada's commitments to achieve much deeper emission reduction targets for post-2012 commitment periods, that will become more necessary given the ultimate objectives of the United Nations framework?

The outcome is that industry will be faced with the prospect of trying to achieve two different sets of regulations, and I do believe that industry wants to be responsible here. They want some clear leadership. They want some clarity. I think that the fact that they're now looking at two different sets of regulations is going to make this even more confusing.

Finally, I want to again emphasize that this bill is not integrating with any other aspects of our land use planning, our agriculture, forests, and, in particular, water use and urban development.

I mentioned before when I spoke on this bill that it's disappointing, again, that this bill is dealing with intensity targets rather than caps on emissions. Many members on this side of the House have spoken with knowledge and passion about the need for fixed targets.

Now, I'm also wondering again about the global and ethical responsibility that we have for our planet. We are interconnected. We must be trustees of our planet, and we have the potential to be world leaders. The basic principle of carbon causing greenhouse emissions has been validated, as I said, by the scientific community. The role of government is to do the right thing. We are supposed to be stewards of our land and our resources. The right thing to do is to reduce incentives for fossil fuels and increase incentives for clean, renewable energy. It is disappointing that these essential steps are not addressed in this bill.

Albertans are increasingly aware of the tremendous business opportunities in conservation as well as the value of carbon enhancing agriculture, capturing methane, solar wind, and geothermal power for our world. It's time to give these options, along with distributed electrical generation, true consideration and to give them the same incentives that fossil fuels have received for decades in this province. We are not doing that. We're falling far short of it, so this is a very small step and certainly not adequate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, I welcome this opportunity to participate in committee on Bill 3. I appreciate some of the answers that have been provided by the hon. Minister of Environment regarding my questions from second reading. However, I'm going to have to go over Hansard and have a look because I don't think all of my questions were answered. Certainly, when we look at Bill 3 and we look at the definitions and the intensity targets, I don't think the hon. minister was complete with his remarks. However, we'll have a look, as I said.

Now, some people think this is not enough of a start on climate change. Others think it's too much. It's a significant change, Mr. Chairman, for this government. There are still the people that consider climate change to be a hoax. I can't believe that, but there are still people who think that climate change is a hoax. Even last night I was watching the news, and I was looking at how the Australians are having to deal with climate change, and climate change is a reality. Perhaps some people in this province, since we're so far above sea level, are not as worried, but they should be. Every major urban centre in this province relies on water from the melting snowpack in the Rocky Mountains for water. So we have to be wise stewards of our environment, and this bill, I think, if we give it a chance, could be – could be – a good start.

There's no doubt in my mind that this is the first carbon tax in Canada. I was surprised, as I said, to attend the news conference at Government House on March 8, but my surprise was centred around the fact that we talked about the regulation, not the actual bill here. The gas emitters regulation that was enclosed in the package that was provided to the reporters was quite interesting. Again, the actual emissions intensity is what we have to centre on here, Mr. Chairman. What exactly is that going to mean on a per tonne basis? If you can't meet your targets and you pay the money, I think we we're looking at $175 million annually that could be realized. What we do with this money: that's another question.

I, for one, am not nearly as concerned about CO₂ sequestration as other hon. members of this House. I've heard from some members that it won't work; it can't work; it's a temporary measure. Certainly, in Norway, Mr. Chairman, they have been using CO₂ sequestration for a number of years, 10 years to be exact. It seems to be working. We look at the dramatic increase in CO₂ sequestration projects in North America. We look at some in the western Canadian sedimentary basin. We've talked about this before. It's a technology that works. It's made a significant difference, much more than I thought, with EnCana's project in Estevan, Saskatchewan. In fact, the Alberta Research Council is involved in that. The University of Alberta is involved in that, the University of Calgary, the Saskatchewan government. The taxpayers are funding part of that. Hopefully, with this sort of commission that's been set up, all the data will be presented, and perhaps some of the skeptics will give CO₂ sequestration a second chance.

Now, the cost of this supposed pure CO₂ pipeline that is being considered for construction between Fort McMurray and some of the mature oil fields and gas fields around Edmonton of $1.4 billion: I'm a little suspicious of that. Certainly, I have seen costs that are three and four years old, in all fairness, but they're significantly less than that. Significantly less than that. We're talking about a 20-inch pipeline, a fairly big pipeline, and we're talking about, I think, a 2,000 psi operating pressure. So whether it will cost $500 million, a billion dollars, or $1.5 billion, if the $15 per tonne tax was to be used for this purpose, I think it would be a good purpose. It would be suitable.

Certainly, I think the cost of this has to be covered by industry, but we would all benefit from this, Mr. Chairman. It's worth noting that the cost of CO₂ reduction measures with oil sands projects can be reduced from their royalty payments. It surprises me that we haven't done more already, but I'm pleased that finally something is being done. We have to start somewhere. Bill 3 here may not be perfect, but whenever we consider that its main purpose is to ensure that there is a consistency with other major pieces of environmental legislation, specifically the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, I think we have to give this serious consideration.

Now, when we're talking about the options that the government is going to have, options so that they can work with industry for achieving environmental outcomes, in this case specific reductions in CO₂ emissions, I think we're going to have to look, Mr. Chairman, at eventually having absolute targets. This is a first step, and whether we like it or not, we're going to have absolute targets. I think we can have absolute targets and still remain viable economically. In fact, I think whenever the technology is developed, we will be exporting this technology to other portions of the oil patch around the world. I see this as a natural progression of the industry. We cannot continue with our current practices of significant amounts of CO₂ released into the environment. We all know the consequences of that. Every rational person realizes that we have to change our ways.

When we look at industries, specifically the energy industry which is concentrated in Alberta, we've got to also look at other economic sectors, the transportation sector. I don't think we can pin all the blame on the energy sector. I drive a car. People in other parts of North America where we don't have this concentration of energy production drive cars. If we go to a store, a truck probably brought the goods that we are buying from somewhere else to that store. The transportation sector: we have to look also at changing our habits there to reduce CO₂ emissions. We just can't dump all our problems on the energy sector. There are many people. The packaging industry is another example of how we can change our ways.

So if we're going to change our ways and reduce our CO₂ emissions in the energy industry, then the same also applies for the transportation sector and other economic areas. We've got to work at this together, and this is where I think the co-operation has to be encouraged by this government. The government can certainly show leadership with this, and I think they are. I think this may be a small step, but it's a good step. It's the right step.

When we analyze some of the criticism of this, when we look at what other people are saying, they're right. But this is a start, and to think that three years ago this government wouldn't even acknowledge the Kyoto protocol. This is a big step for them. The money that we get on the surcharge, on the carbon tax: let's use it wisely to enhance our environment.

As I look further at this bill, Mr. Chairman, I am most anxious to participate in further debate. Again, it's not perfect – there's a lot that is needed here – but it is a start.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 3 in committee stage. I found it quite interesting to listen to the minister's comments in regard to our debate during the second reading of this bill. Certainly, he provided some illuminating and, I think, quite revealing information in regard to where he would like to go with this bill and, indeed, where he would like to go in regard to regulating and monitoring the carbon dioxide output of the energy industry in Alberta in general. For that, I am certainly grateful to the minister. He is very forthright and takes the time to explain himself in a fairly clear way, which is a good thing.

I just wanted to respond to a couple of comments that he made, particularly in regard to carbon sequestration, and I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was just mentioning this same issue as well. Please understand from the outset, Mr. Chair, that I am providing on behalf of our party a constructive criticism of this process, and truly a constructive criticism is in order for this juncture in regard to carbon sequestration because this technology is very much in its infancy, in its experimental stages. We need to be sure that we are not just hitching our wagon to something that isn't even quite there yet in regard to solving carbon dioxide storage problems. Certainly, we're not as a party opposed to using carbon injection for enhanced oil recovery either because, of course, this would be limiting the amount of fresh water that is currently employed to go through this same process. So it has some merit for that as well.

I've been fighting for months and months now to not mix those two messages together and somehow imply to the public that, in fact, carbon injection for enhanced oil recovery can equate to carbon storage where that carbon dioxide is, in fact, now stored under the ground forever. Those two cannot be mixed together because there are two different purposes, number one. Number two, to expect that the carbon dioxide would in fact stay under the ground is somewhat dubious if you're using it for that enhanced oil recovery purpose. So I suspect that I will be repeating that message many times over the coming weeks and months as well because it seems like a convenient merging of these two ideas together.

You know, the public wants to have some peace of mind on this issue, so if someone tells them that there is a magical cure somehow that will both enrich the province by enhancing our oil recovery from depleted wells and store the carbon dioxide that we've otherwise been producing from our coal-fired electricity plants and our tar sands bitumen upgraders and whatnot, then it sounds like that miraculous thing that will solve all the problems. People do like to want to believe those things, but I think it's incumbent upon the members of this Legislature and responsible government to in fact tell the whole truth on this issue. So that's what I'm looking to be doing as a constructive critic of carbon sequestration.

You know, just to end that particular part of my discussion here, I've been looking at carbon sequestration as many governments and agencies around the world have been doing as well, and certainly, you know, there are some interesting baseline things that we need to consider before we enter into any carbon sequestration projects wherever it happens to be in the world. Number one is to make sure we set up a system in place that will monitor the carbon dioxide that has been injected under the ground to ensure that it stays under the ground. I believe that in Norway they have been experimenting with this process and actually putting some small radioactive isotopes into the carbon dioxide that they inject under the ground and then monitoring by satellite the sites where the injection has taken place to watch if those radioactive isotopes actually leak back out into the atmosphere. I mean, that is, I guess, the experimental version of best practices for carbon dioxide sequestration at this juncture, Mr. Chair, and certainly I hope that we might be entering this possibility with the same degree of seriousness as that experiment seems to be doing.

The second issue that we have to look at very carefully in regard to carbon sequestration is the overall energy that is required to capture the carbon dioxide at the point of combustion and the amount of energy to transport that carbon dioxide: process it first, concentrate it, and then transport it to a safe underground site. You know, I've been looking, Mr. Chair, at some of the percentage figures at experimental sites that are doing the math on a given coal-fired electricity plant. It takes between 20 and 30 per cent of the total energy that's being produced by that generating facility just to capture the carbon. As you can imagine, you're having to build 30 per cent more plants, or for every four plants you have to build a fourth plant, just to produce enough electricity to generate the carbon capture process.

So you see my point: you're entering into some very kind of dodgy ground here in terms of real saving or real value when you are including those costs when you build a carbon capture mechanism in conjunction with a coal-fired electricity plant. These are only a couple of things that I have been reading about in the last few days in regard to this, and I think that each member here should consider these issues very, very carefully.

Another issue that I wanted to bring up is in regard to debating this bill and applying the emerging research and technology that is taking place on carbon capture and sequestration and on setting up carbon tax or carbon credits and all of the things that Bill 3 implies. Really, I would like – and I think it would be an excellent reflection of the new mood, as the Speaker had mentioned before, in the Legislature here – to actually move this bill over to one of the new all-party committees that are going to be struck here in the next short while. That way, Mr. Chair, we would have the opportunity to evaluate this bill – and, certainly, we're not rejecting it out of hand – with an expanded capacity to bring in witnesses, to evaluate new information and research that's being put forward in regard to carbon capture and carbon tax and carbon credits and all of these things.

If I could think of one scientific area of advancement right now in the world, I think this whole issue of carbon dioxide and climate change has to be the most pressing and perhaps the most active. Certainly, taking this bill wouldn't preclude the possibility of its survival; in fact, with some amendments we would be happy to do so. But take this bill to the all-party committee and evaluate it with this whole broader spectrum of things that we might be able to put in place in the all-party committee to make it work, to make it float, to make it a good bill that actually does lead us down the path of carbon reduction here in the province of Alberta.

As I've said before – and I certainly say it completely respectfully but most stringently – this bill as it reads will not reduce carbon dioxide emissions and climate change that it implies here in the province of Alberta but will serve to increase it and even justify it. Neither of those things are in the best interest, I believe, of the environment or of the people of Alberta, and I think that we certainly could do better. As we move through this bill, the passage of the bill, I certainly have lots of research and ideas to put forward to perhaps serve to amend and make the bill function better.

So with that, Mr. Chair, I do in fact have an amendment that I would like to put forward here this afternoon, and we can check it out and see what you think and away we go.

The Chair: Do you have an amendment?

Mr. Eggen: Yes, I do have an amendment.

The Chair: Just submit it to the page, and they'll distribute them. I need a copy here before you speak to the amendment. We'll just wait till they're distributed.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you, sir.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, you may proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. If people would like to follow along, my amendment reads that Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 3 in the proposed section 2.1(1)(a) by striking out "and" at the end of subclause (i), adding “and” at the end of subclause (ii), and adding the following after subclause (ii): “(iii) the measures necessary to effect a reduction in the total specified gas emissions in the province.”

This bill is actually a little bit tricky to amend because, of course, it’s working with previous legislation, Mr. Chair, that was in place. I found this to be a particularly useful area to make this amendment, though.

In general, first of all, a problem with Bill 3 as it stands is that it doesn’t set specified targets over a longer period of time. It sort of puts a benchmark in place in regard to intensity emissions and tries to impose that upon individual large emitters, and then that’s kind of it. When any large or medium or small industrial emitter would like to plan for the future and seek a direction of where these carbon dioxide emission reductions are going, I think it’s incumbent upon us as legislators to send a clear message and to set longer term expectations.

Certainly, when you speak to certain large industrial emitters, they know that the writing is on the wall in regard to having to have absolute reductions in CO₂ emissions, and indeed many large emitters here in the province of Alberta have been purchasing offsets to face the inevitability of the necessity to in fact have climate change legislation and tough climate change legislation enacted in the province of Alberta. With Bill 3, one of my big problems is that it doesn’t set targets that say that we’re going down the road to absolute reductions eventually. My amendment here, in fact, does assist with that and I think is quite illuminating for the purposes of clarification in regard to where the targets are going to go over time.

The central problem with the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, the current amending legislation, and the proposed regulations that are in place is that they only require reductions in the emission intensity. This position is somewhat, I believe, misleading or irresponsible in a global context, where other jurisdictions are taking more significant steps towards enacting absolute reductions in their emissions.

This Conservative government seems to be only recently choosing to acknowledge even the science of climate change. It’s as though we are somehow stuck back in time with this pace of acknowledgment and then actually doing something. Somewhere between ideology and adherence to the markets, to be able to solve all of the problems that everything seems to come across, I think we lose the practical, pragmatic way to actually deal with absolute reductions, to get over the hump of intensity reductions, so I am putting forward this amendment.

This amendment adds a subclause to proposed section 2.1(1)(a), which appears on the second page of the bill if you want to follow along. The section creates an advisory committee which is tasked to examine certain issues, which is all well and good. I do have some degree of skepticism about what sort of experts might be assigned to this committee. Would we find a range of experts on climate change and environmentalists along with industry, which is fine, perhaps members of the Sierra Club, the Pembina Institute, the Parkland Institute, industry people included as well, or will we see, as we have in the past, a tendency towards industry insiders who have a foregone conclusion about, of course, what they would like?

This amendment is intended to provide some further direction to the committee, specifically to move them past certain ideas of intensity into a policy direction that will address more directly the problem of climate change. So I put it forth to the members of the Legislature here this afternoon for their edification. I hope that it might find some support there amongst everybody.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you want to speak on the amendment?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I’m rising to speak in favour of the amendment that has been proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. There are two images that come to mind as I read through the bill and the notes and the background and listen to what the Member for Edmonton-Calder is saying. One is a climate change panel that was sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview shortly after he was elected; I’m thinking in 2002 or 2003, somewhere in there. It was a pretty impressive panel that was struck. It had some long-time members from the environmental movement, some experts from the university – Dr. David Schindler was there – and some others.

Really, I came away from that panel having come to understand a couple of things. One, even back then the energy companies were signalling that they knew that restrictions would be coming on the way they had been operating, and they were prepared to deal with that. Some of them had started to put stuff in place. But it’s a business. No businessperson is going to set themselves out there to be the first one that’s going to incur cost. They could experience a reduction in their profits as they put some of this in place. None of them are going to put themselves at a disadvantage by being first in this case.

I came away from that panel knowing that energy companies were well aware of the situation, had been working on contingency plans for some time, were prepared to go there and would go as needed to establish more stringent ways of doing business that would conform to environmental concerns, but they also wanted clear timelines because they felt that they all needed to start into this at the same time so that it was not a business disadvantage for them and that it had to be very clear what they were trying to achieve.

The second image that came to mind as I was listening to all of this is a parade. You hear parades and politics talked about a lot. You know, we want to be leading the parade, the idea of the politician out there with a great idea, like the parade marshal with the big baton and the high hat and all of that, leading the citizens behind him and forging new paths and new ideas. “Leading the parade” or “in front of the parade” are clichés that we often hear.

The image that I’m getting on this whole issue of climate change and environmental protection laws is that the parade has passed by. It’s that image you get when you arrive too late, or maybe you’re on your way back to the car after the summer parade in your local municipality and you can see where the parade has passed by. There’s nobody left anymore. A few people are folding up their chairs, maybe, and chatting a bit. There’s a bit of rubbish, you know, wafting down the street from a little breeze. There might be some fellow that’s coming along with a litter picker upper, and maybe somebody’s out there with a shovel cleaning up after the horses. But, basically, the parade has passed by.

That’s what I’m seeing with this legislation. This government had an opportunity to lead the parade, to get out in front of the public, to lead them along in what, clearly, needed to happen and what the scientists have been telling us for decades now. Once again, the government is choosing to come behind the parade. Let’s face it, Mr. Chair, the parade that I’m talking about here is essentially the public: the public will to have these measures put in place, the public interest to have them put in place. We have the public, who are actually ahead of the government at this point. They are the parade, and they are far ahead of where the politicians are on this one.

So I'm willing to support this amendment because it does offer some clarity in the legislation. It makes it clear that we are looking for an absolute reduction in emissions in the province, that that's where we're going. I think that's what business wants to hear from this government. If I was a businessperson, I would have been very frustrated with the prevarication, with the obfuscation that's been taking place around this issue. It's a little bit of a strange dance, can't quite be categorized in any of our familiar ballroom definitions. It's sort of a little bit of quickstep, a bit of tango, some rumba thrown in there, and a bit of tap dancing to get out of the room.

Really, what we all want is clarity, we want definitive timelines, and we want absolute reductions. I'm disappointed that the government came as far as it did with Bill 3 and still did not manage to achieve those simple concepts. I think some of that is being achieved through this motion.

I'm also very aware when I read the legislation – and this is appearing on page 2 of the bill – of this whole section that's added after section 2 about advisory committees and experts. I think the public is beginning to tire of politicians who when they don't want to make a decision have another study, another expert panel, another round-table, another task force, another public hearing. The public knows where they want to go. I think the energy sector knows where it's going to have to go. But government doesn't want to come out and commit, so we have yet another round of experts that are presumably paid to try and help the government figure out how to not do what everybody else wants them to do. Here we have this again.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to stop and say, you know: don't misquote me and say that I'm not in favour of public consultation. Clearly, I am, and I think there are very appropriate places for that to happen, but that's not what's happening here. This is about the government gathering more information to support its very slow progress here. It is about advisory committees and retaining experts, about the content and administration of the act, policies, and programs, other matters under the minister's administration, and these functions, including the seeking of input from the public – there we go again – and the manner and the time in which the functions can be performed. Then this particular amendment adds the only clarity that we get out of this, which is: “measures necessary to effect a reduction in the total specified gas emissions in the province.”

I guess that I'm not terribly hopeful that the government members would support this motion, but I certainly think they should because I think history, and not too far in the future, will very quickly reveal that we were dragging our feet at the very moments of a war that's already been won. Really, I was hoping that this government would have been braver and would have just done what needed to be done. Clearly, it's not, so we're going to delay another who knows what – another year – because of these sections that are being amended in this amending act to try and slow down the implementation of what is essentially the inevitable.

I think the amendment that's been brought forward, which I'm assuming would be amendment A1, does something to speed this process along in that it does offer some clarity about where we're trying to end up. It may well be that I can go back and work with my colleagues and our support staff to indeed come up with some of the other amendments that I think should be redirecting this bill in a different direction, with stronger leadership being shown by the government.

So with those comments in support of the amendment that is on the floor, I urge all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support it, and I will take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed my pleasure to participate again in deliberations on this particular bill, Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. Now, this time I am speaking to voice my support for this amendment, that was brought to the floor by the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

In listening to the earlier part of the debate, I think I heard the hon. Minister of Environment signalling a desire for intensity targets to be a step towards bringing in hard caps on emissions. If this is the way I heard it – and I am hoping that this is the way the hon. minister meant it – then that's definitely a positive sign. This amendment would aid in taking this government and this province in that direction.

The Member for Edmonton-Calder is suggesting that the advisory committees which the minister is going to establish would add another task or would look at something above and beyond the two that are already proposed in this act. This third job for those advisory committees would be to suggest mechanisms to bring in a reduction in the total specified gas emissions. So, in a way, if the minister is going to bring in those advisory committees and tell them what he expects them to be looking at and what he expects them to be focusing on, then it doesn't really hurt to tell them that one of those little jobs that he's assigning to them is going to be: please, members of the advisory committee, look at ways where this province can bring in hard caps – intensity targets in the interim, hard caps at the end.

This is like a two-step process, Mr. Chairman, and, you know, the amendment that we're speaking to brings that clarity in. It basically sets the stage for those advisory committees to be more than people who just discuss administration and legislation and regulations, all the dry stuff. We also want scientists and experts in the field – people who understand the environment, who understand emissions, who understand emission control – to sit down and come up with ideas and give those ideas to the minister, who I hope is sincere in his signalling that hard caps are going to be brought in at some point in the future. He would use that information and that advice to look for ways to move toward that goal that we're all aspiring towards. It's, basically, the goal to one day not only arrest or cap emissions but also, hopefully, to reverse emissions and to go from a carbon-positive economy to a carbon-neutral economy and then, hopefully, a carbon-reducing economy. Many people tell us that the damage we do to the environment is irreversible and the only way we can arrest it or even reverse it in little steps is to start right now and if we don't start right now, every day we lose is a generation of damage.

So in essence, I support this amendment. I don't think that there is anything in it that the government side is going to find particularly offensive or objectionable, and I urge all hon. members from both sides of the House to support it. If we're really serious about working together and if I heard the Minister of Environment right in his introductory speech earlier this afternoon, talking about hard caps being a target and an objective of this government but not discussed in that capacity in this bill, what we're hoping to do is to make this bill even better, and I will be more than keen to hear other members of this House speak in favour as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and support this amendment to Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. My colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has moved this amendment. Of course, the amendment focuses very much on the necessary measures to make an absolute reduction in the total emissions – the total emissions – and I really do think that it's reasonable to begin to talk about this question. I know that the government has put all its eggs in the basket of reduction of emissions intensity, and I understand why they've done that. I understand why: because they have a policy that allows unlimited growth in the economy regardless of the capacity of the province to support that growth, and of course any hard caps would interfere with that growth.

The real question that's not being debated here is the government's underlying policy with respect to growth. Now, back in January of 2006, I believe it was, Mr. Chairman, there was a meeting in Houston that was organized by Energy Canada and the United States Department of Energy. I believe one minister from this government was there as well as many executives from some of the biggest oil and gas companies in the world. It was the position of the United States government and, as far as I know, agreed at this conference, which was not known to the public, that they would like Alberta to increase its production from the tar sands by about five times what we're currently producing.

Mr. Chairman, let's consider the impact of the present rate of development that is occurring in this province. We talked this afternoon about housing and the rents that people are being forced to pay, people, even workers in the tar sands themselves, on the verge of homelessness because they cannot afford the housing. We've seen an increase in homelessness, and many people moving to Alberta move back. Saskatchewan for the first time had more people moving from Alberta to Saskatchewan than the other way around simply because of the cost of living in this province. We are in an enormous deficit with respect to our infrastructure, and we can't keep up with the growth that's going on.

There's the other question, Mr. Chairman, about who that growth is actually for and who actually benefits by the growth that's now taking place in this province. Now, we know that the government, in collaboration with the federal government, has encouraged companies to bring in temporary foreign workers, notwithstanding the fact that there are hundreds, in some cases thousands, of qualified unionized tradespeople, highly skilled, highly motivated, born and bred in Alberta or from other parts of Canada, that are being overlooked by these companies because of their access to cheaper foreign labour. So if Albertans aren't getting the first call on jobs, notwithstanding the fact that they're skilled and willing to work, then you have to ask who this policy is for.

Not only that, there are now a number of projects that would increase the export of unprocessed bitumen to the United States. In other words, we dig up the stuff and send it in an unprocessed form in order to create jobs in the United States. There are billions of dollars in investment going on right now in the United States to build the kind of upgraders and refining capacity to refine Alberta's tar sands. So, Mr. Chairman, "who benefits from that?" is a really good question. Not only that, to top it all off, on almost all of the oil that is produced in the tar sands today, we are receiving one penny on the dollar in terms of royalty revenue.

The American oil companies are cleaning up, making most of the money, workers from other countries are doing much of the work at the expense of Albertans, and in fact jobs are being created not in Alberta but in the United States because of the export of raw bitumen. So, Mr. Chairman, the policy of this government is in the interests of the big oil companies and in the interests of the United States.

I happen to agree with the hon. Minister of Education's former boss Peter Lougheed that we should go a little slower on this and build the plants on a staged basis. I agree with the former Premier Lougheed's view that we need to start thinking like owners, that we own this resource. This is a valuable resource, and we are in the driver's seat. We can set the pace of development so that it benefits Albertans, we can set the price so that it benefits Albertans, and we can make sure that Albertans are the first to get jobs. We can set a pace of development that allows us to catch up on our massive multibillion dollar infrastructure deficit, and we can also make sure that we are not leaving our future generations with a massive multibillion dollar environmental liability as the sole legacy of what's happening in tar sands development in this province right now.

Let's come back to the whole question of CO₂. The government's policy with respect to CO₂ is designed, and consciously in my view – consciously designed – to permit massive increases in CO₂ output in this province. It's deliberately intended to be open-ended and allow huge increases in CO₂ production. Mr. Chairman, you don't have to go very much farther than the daily newspaper or the newscast on TV at night to realize the impact of CO₂ on this planet. That's what people don't want to address. They are very proud about reductions of CO₂ on a percentage basis as a result of emissions changes; however, they don't like to talk about the fact that global climate change is occurring at an ever-faster pace, and it is the future generations of Albertans that are going to be left with that legacy. They just don't want to reconcile those two facts in their heads, and as a result we have this piece of legislation.

Now, in my view, if the bill requires people to take a look at what measures are necessary to effect a reduction in the total specified gas emissions in the province, then that's a good thing. Why not at least study it? They may not agree with me about the pace of development in this province. They may not agree that we'll be able to control absolute emissions or that we could ever go to hard caps, but surely they would agree that we should at least be studying how that could be accomplished. That's what the amendment is supposed to do.

So, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I just want to say that the government is sticking its head in the tar sands, when it comes to the whole question of CO₂ emissions and the pace of development in this province. The pace of development in this province and the emissions that will result will damage the quality of life of Albertans and, particularly, damage the quality of life and the economic prospects of the next generation and the generation that follows it. But this government is too interested in the quick buck, is too interested in their friends in the oil and gas industry making enormous profits so they can continue to support the Conservative Party at election time to actually care about future generations. It's this short-sighted policy that I think is going to come back and bite this government in certain parts of its anatomy in the next election.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, it's interesting, and I enjoyed the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highland-Norwood's comments regarding the temporary foreign workers and the labour situation in this province. Certainly, I would have to agree with him that we're providing the tax concessions and the royalty concessions, yet we're not getting the work, which is quite unusual, and hopefully it will change.

Now, specifically, when we look at the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act and we look at the definition of the total specified gas emission – it took a while to find this – I’m going to quote the gas emission target directly from section 3(1) of the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act: “The specified gas emission target for Alberta is a reduction by December 31, 2020 of specified gas emissions relative to the Gross Domestic Product to an amount that is equal to or less than 50% of 1990 levels.”

Now, section 3(2) goes on to talk about cabinet regulations and establishing interim specified gas emissions targets for the province and other items, but if we were to accept this amendment, wow, would this ever be a strong start in reducing greenhouse gas emissions in this province. It would be significant, to say the least, if we were to adopt this amendment A1.

If this was to be accepted – and I apologize to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder because I had other matters to attend to when this amendment was introduced – how does the hon. member propose to do this? Is this just going to be strictly through reductions in the energy sector, or is it going to be in the transportation sector? Is it going to be in the agricultural community with intensive livestock operations? Is it going to include the electricity sector, electricity generation or generation capacity? How is this exactly going to work? This is a substantial reduction.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any others?

Hon. members, we have before us an amendment moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, and the amendment is referred to as amendment A1. We’ll have a vote on this amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 3.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

4:10

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 16
Police Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate April 3: Mr. Lindsay]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and participate in debate on Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, 2007, in second reading in response to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security having introduced it and in my role of shadow minister to lead the debate. First, I wish to thank the hon. minister for meeting with me to provide my researcher and myself with the pertinent briefing points on the contents of this bill. I have to note that his staff were particularly helpful and accommodating, and for that I thank him. Second, I would say that my caucus colleagues are more than likely going to lend our support to this bill but are equally likely to move some amendments to make what is a tremendously good first step an even better piece of legislation.

Now, to start off, I would like to go through what we’re trying to accomplish here today. So what is Bill 16, and what are we hoping to achieve? Very briefly, it has two components. The first one, which is the more important one as well, is that it establishes an integrated investigative unit for serious incidents that involve serious injury or death that may have resulted from the actions of a police officer. So this special integrated investigative unit will conduct an investigation into the alleged incident or complaint and will make recommendations on how to deal with this particular incident and how to deal with the particular officer in question.

The second piece in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to allow for municipal police services to utilize provincial sheriffs to take control of lock-up facilities instead of police officers themselves. So, as I say, the second piece is not as contentious. Anything we can do to free up the time of police officers to focus on more important things is probably a good idea. You know, those provincial sheriffs are available, and with proper training and the proper tools they can be utilized more efficiently, again, with the ultimate goal to free up time for our regular police officers to do more of the work that they’re entrusted to do. So the first piece is, I think, where most of the debate is going to be focusing.

Again, what are we trying to accomplish? The most important objective is to bring in some level of oversight, a mechanism with which we can investigate allegations of serious police misconduct or wrongdoing. Police officers, Mr. Speaker, are hard-working, law-abiding citizens who are entrusted with or given the task of maintaining order and peace and enforcing our laws and statutes. They are citizens just like everyone else, but they are special citizens. The majority of people have faith and confidence in our law enforcement personnel and always view them in a traditionally positive light. They are our neighbours and friends, but more importantly they are the ones we go to when we need to protect our rights and freedoms and enforce our laws.

Sometime they themselves even face serious injury or death in carrying out their duties. Their job is quite stressful, and the risks are great. However, as with any other profession, Mr. Speaker, there is the potential for a mistake to occur, for someone to go too far, for a law to be broken, or for this societal trust to be breached. Take a crop of apples as a simple example. However few bad apples there may be, they need to be dealt with or weeded out to, number one, protect the rest of the crop from corruption or illness, from bad influence basically, and, two, maintain the consumers’ trust that this particular farm produces quality apples that are disease free. This trust is necessary if we are to expect this consumer to continue to buy from this particular supplier. Now, I’m hoping that this analogy is clear. People have to continue to respect and co-operate with our law enforcement agencies.

Law enforcement agencies, on the other side of that equation, have to continue to earn that trust and confidence, and they have to deal with incidents where discipline is warranted and expected. In some cases, though, internal discipline may not be adequate, and even if it were, people need to be assured that wrongdoing is being dealt with efficiently and quickly. Bill 16 is attempting to bring in that oversight component, where people can say: "Something happened. How can we deal with this, and how do we prevent this from happening again?" So there is a lesson to be learned.

Now, two years ago, in 2005, Mr. Speaker, in this very House we were discussing Bill 36, which also amended the Police Act back then. I want to thank, first of all, my honourable colleague from Edmonton-Glenora, who was then the shadow minister for Justice and the Solicitor General, for his work with the then Solicitor General. It was unfortunate, however, that when we were hoping to introduce an amendment to bring in civilian oversight to our police services, this amendment was rejected by the hon. government members. So two years later we have it here in a different shape, a different form, which is not bad. Two years is in some definitions long, but in other definitions – you know and we know that the wheels of government turn slowly – it's not too bad. So better late than never, basically.

Sir Robert Peel, who served as the British Home Secretary during the 1820s, basically the Minister of the Interior, the equivalent back then of our Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, is considered by many people as the founder of modern policing. Now, he had suggested that the ability of the police to perform their duties is dependent upon public approval of police actions. So for them to continue to be effective in their role, they have to always maintain public confidence.

He also said that police at all times should maintain a relationship with the public that gives reality to the historic tradition that the police are the public and the public are the police. That's basically going back to my remarks that they are citizens like everyone else. They have the same obligations, and they have the same rights, the police being members of the public who are paid to give full-time attention to the duties which are incumbent on every citizen in the interests of community welfare and existence. So, basically, it's like we're all police officers, and we're all citizens. Some of us carry on the duties of police officers, and they're paid for that, but in essence we are all in the same boat. So that's what Sir Robert Peel said.

To take it a step further, Mr. Speaker, you have to look at police integrity and police independence. People argue that police can investigate wrongdoing internally and deal with it, which is probably true in most cases. But sometimes the incident is of such gravity or seriousness that an outside, independent agency or body has to be brought in to offer that assurance of impartiality and neutrality. So there is the need for actual independence and impartiality, but there is an equal need for the appearance of independence and impartiality because what we're trying to do here, again, is to maintain that trust and to maintain that confidence from the public in their law enforcement personnel.

Now, we've had incidents in this province where some concerns were raised. I have to admit that they're not too frequent, and that's really a good thing because, you know, it would be a totally different situation if every second day there was a story about some police misconduct. So I'm grateful in a way that they're separate incidents and that they're far between. However, again, it's the gravity and the seriousness of those situations, where there might have been serious injury or death, you know, undue force, or certain sensitive situations where there might have been, like I said, breach of that societal trust.

So it's good to bring in oversight, but I would argue – and I'm hoping that other members of this Assembly might second my sentiment – that it has to be civilian oversight, and I would underline and highlight the word "civilian" because they have to be really in the driver's seat when it comes to that special investigative unit. It's very useful to bring in other officers maybe from other regiments or other services to offer that technical competence. You know, we need to investigate, and maybe we need somebody to do forensic work. We need somebody to do detective work and all that stuff. So in that regard I'm not against having police officers from other agencies join or be appointed to that investigative unit. I don't mind. But they have to have certain credentials and certain qualifications, and we're going to talk about this, hopefully, in Committee of the Whole when it's time for us to discuss certain amendments and enhancements to Bill 16.

I would argue that, maybe, we need somebody from the judiciary, and we potentially need an agent of the Crown, a Crown attorney, to be there, and we would have to request at least two if not more civilians, people who are totally unaffiliated individuals, to come onboard and to sit on such investigative unit. And I would treat this, Mr. Speaker, as jury duty. We entrust jurors to participate in really big trials, and we expect them to conduct themselves with impartiality and to be fair. I think we should treat people who are civilians who sit on this investigative unit as such, as jurors. The way we pick them could be the same way: from the phone book or from the voters list or the tax roll, you know, those databases.

So I am going to highlight and underline the word "civilian" in civilian oversight. That is what I'm hoping this bill would allow us to do. It's one thing to have a special unit to do the investigation and to release the report and to issue, you know, recommendations or to suggest sanctions, but then it's another thing to say: "You know what? It was a fully public review that was conducted, and here are the recommendations." I think the value and the weight is a lot greater that way.

Some people might argue that the public is not qualified and they might not be able to collect or interpret evidence, that they might not be able to work with the parameters. But, yes, you can have people who would give them the expert advice. All they would do is hear the advice and then base their decision on the facts and the evidence that was given to them, again, just like we do with jury duty in any court of law.

The hon. Solicitor General, when he was announcing the introduction of Bill 16, was asked by people of the media and others what the composition was going to be like of this special investigative unit, who is going to be on it, and how much it might cost, things like this. I think the way he came across is basically signalling that at least, you know, four or maybe six people will be on it each time. I'm going to use this opportunity to indicate that they don't have to be the same six people investigating all police wrongdoing all the time. It's not going to be a fixed body; I'm thinking it should be case by case. We might have three or four simultaneous or concurrent cases, so maybe we should have four teams dealing with these, each in their own city or their own part of the province.

He indicated that it must include a former police officer or someone with a law enforcement background, and I agree. But it has to be from a different service, the service that is not being investigated, and with certain credentials and qualifications as in a minimum number of years on the force or, you know, having written the detective exam or something like that.

He also indicated that it might cost between $2 million and $4 million annually to administer. Now, I'm hoping that this number will be in the budget and that it will be a single line item for civilian police oversight. It should be allowed that should there be more cases, maybe we need to investigate them all at once or simultaneously, that there is not going to be a backlog created, where you basically say: "You know what? We only had $2 million this year, and we can only investigate three incidents. We are going to wait until next year's budget because we don't have the money." I think we should be prompt and swift. That's another thing that the public will be appreciative for because, you know, it's the government and it's an agency that is swiftly looking into an allegation and dealing with it. Timeliness is very important as well.

The province's police chiefs and unions representing rank-and-file officers I think are in agreement, and that is one of the tests that we have in the Official Opposition in reaching our positions on the different bills and stuff. We ask the stakeholders, and we ask everybody who's involved in this particular field that is being dealt with in a particular bill. We were pleased to find out that they don't have any serious concerns with this bill. It's a very positive thing that they don't mind being investigated by civilians. They have no issue whatsoever with being investigated by civilians, again going back to my argument that we're all police officers and we're all citizens. In that regard I think that that was a very positive thing. If they don't mind it, I don't think the government should either.

The findings of the review, that's another thing. I think that whenever this investigative unit is invoked, whenever they're triggered, there should be, you know, a time expectation as to how quickly they should conduct their investigation. What happens to that report after? I would argue that the default should be that the report is made public. Only in very select and limited cases should this report be kept within the confines of the minister's office. It should be the default or the norm for all those investigations to be made public because we are trying to learn lessons as to how tempers flare or how people take things into their own hands or how a single incident might escalate, to learn from them and to prevent those from happening again in the future. It's an invaluable tool for us to ensure that those incidents are not repeated. I would urge the hon. Solicitor General to offer the assurance that the findings of those investigative units are always made public and that if there's going to be an exception, it's going to be made on a very limited and very focused basis.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on and on, but I'm going to reserve more of my remarks for Committee of the Whole because I am hoping to introduce some amendments, which I hope the House is going to find very favourable. I am looking forward to other members from my own caucus and from across the way participating. Let's make a good first step and an even better piece of legislation for the benefit of the public and for the benefit of the police equally.

Thank you very much for this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make comments in second reading of Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007. Now, this amendment comes after dealing with Bill 36, which made changes to the Police Amendment Act. It's interesting to see what the changes being proposed here are. It certainly doesn't go as far as we wish it would go, considering all the questions we raised about Bill 36 last year.

I would just like to make some comments about different portions of this bill. Section 46.1 is being amended to add a section. It deals with the chief of police reporting any kind of injury or death and so on or complaints to the minister, and there's an outline here of the different kinds of complaints.

(a) an incident occurs involving serious injury to or the death of any person . . .

Now, of course, any serious matter like that ought to be reported.

(b) a complaint is made alleging that

(i) serious injury to or the death of any person may have resulted from the actions of a police officer . . .

That should also be reported. I have no problems with that.

Then there's a curious statement that what also should be reported is "any matter of a serious or sensitive nature related to the actions of a police officer." Now, that raises lots of issues in terms of definition of what could be considered serious or sensitive. There's no interpretation here, so I guess it's left open.

I received some time ago a document from the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association, which represents defence lawyers here in the Edmonton area and also from other places in Alberta, and they were responding to the whole issue of oversight of police action. Of course, criminal lawyers are involved in that because they have to defend people in court, and they certainly express a great deal of respect for the work that police do. At the same time they are often put in the position of having to go to bat for civilians who feel wronged by police action.

In their submission they mention the fact that there are different kinds of complaints and that some complaints should probably stay within the police force for internal investigation; in other words, issues that are fairly minor like, for example, regulations about arriving for work on time or uniform care, personal presentation, even practices such as note taking, preparation of reports, forms of paperwork, and so on. These kind of issues internal to a police force and their action could even include, in the so-called Overtime scandal in Edmonton, one officer who was alleged to have uttered inappropriate words on a police radio frequency. So that is the kind of behaviour that should be disciplined within the police force. It's an internal matter. That's not the kind of thing that would be sent to the minister in order for there to be an investigation.

But, of course, there are middle-ground concerns that sort of fall between what could be considered a criminal action and what's considered an internal matter. Again, a good example would be from the Overtime scandal in November 2004. This incident involved a number of Edmonton police officers who were thought to have targeted two newspaper journalists, particularly vocal critics of the Edmonton police force, in hope that either of these two would actually be caught driving while impaired, so silenced in this fashion. That kind of concern is sort of in the middle, but it's sufficiently serious and of a sensitive nature to warrant a public investigation. So it's difficult. I mean, I think that would fall under 46.1(b)(ii) in that it would be considered a serious nature. But without any definition here it leaves it open and ambiguous, so I have a bit of a problem with that.

Now, once these matters are reported to the minister, then the bill states that then the minister "may do any one or more of the following," and then there's a list of matters. This amendment is going to add another option to that list, so instead of there being three options, there are four options. But I'm concerned about the "may" do any one of the following. In other words, there's not a necessity to investigate these serious matters. It's left open to the discretion of the minister to interpret the seriousness of the matter and then pursue one of the options. It seems to me that if there is a serious incident involving death or injury, that should lead to an investigation. So I think there's a problem with the wording there.

In terms of the three options the first option is that the police service would itself investigate an incident or a complaint. The second one is requesting another police service to come in and investigate the perceived wrongful action. The third option is to involve members of the public as overseers to observe, monitor, or review. Now it's being suggested – and this is the amendment – that a fourth option is that there be an investigative unit to conduct an investigation into the incident or complaint. I'd like to say a few words about the nature of that investigative unit in a few minutes. As the Member for Edmonton-McClung has pointed out, none of these four options really deals with the important matter of providing for a civilian review, a civilian oversight.

So again I go back to the submission that I received a year or so ago from the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association, which really pleads for public, independent, civilian oversight of police in Alberta. Their summary of that plea is that they want to have investigation and prosecution of allegations of police wrongdoing conducted by a body with no connections to either the individual officers who are at the heart of the complaint or to the police force of which those individuals are members. So there's a whole question of independence and impartiality that is extremely important. When I was dealing with this issue with Bill 36, the information I received from the public, from those who are really interested in these kinds of issues, was that they're not happy with the way such investigations are carried out now in Alberta, that there should be a more independent, impartial investigation.

The Criminal Trial Lawyers go on to say that where investigation of any particular complaint reveals apparent criminal conduct and a charge is laid as a result, prosecution should be the responsibility of an independent prosecutorial agency. If it's only minor breaches of internal policy, as I mentioned before, then, of course, the police can deal with that internally as a question of discipline. But when the form of police misconduct is more serious and has the appearance of involving criminal behaviour, then there needs to be an open and public forum for examining these matters. It's a question of public confidence. The Member for Edmonton-McClung mentioned Sir Peel's principles. The police represent the public, so there has to be accountability to the public.

I find these options that are available to the minister to be, finally, inadequate. I mean, basically there are only two ways to go here. One way is to have an in-house model, and the other is to have a fully independent model: an in-house model, where police investigate themselves, or have another police force come in and investigate actions that have occurred or a fully independent model, where civilians both investigate and adjudicate the complaint.

Mr. Speaker, there is a good model, and I don't know why the Solicitor General has never seriously considered this model. There is a good model in Canada for such an open, fully independent civilian model, and that's the model of Ontario's special investigations unit. So instead of the investigation unit that's being suggested here, which is to "appoint special constables as investigators under the authority of the head of the integrated investigative unit," in Ontario there is a special investigations unit which is fully independent and a civilian oversight model which operates to oversee the police. Their mandate is to investigate the complaints brought to them and also investigate deaths and injuries that have occurred.

Now, this model actually came out of a task force on race relations in 1988 in Ontario in which many people stated that they were actually upset and concerned with the integrity of the process in which police conducted investigations because it was a question of police investigating themselves. So the task force recommended that there be new legislation that would lead to the establishment of an arm's-length, independent special investigations unit. That happened, and it received royal assent in Ontario in 1990. So, actually, in Ontario they've had long experience with this kind of investigations unit, from 1990 to the present.

The question for us in Alberta is: if the Ontario government could do this in response to citizens desiring the creation of such a truly independent civilian oversight, why can't the government of Alberta respond to the wishes of its citizens? It's a question of appearance. It's a question of confidence. I support fully the work that our wonderful police forces do throughout the province, but clearly in the public's mind there's a problem if you don't have a mechanism in place that enables all the complaints to be dealt with by an independent body. So I find this bill quite inadequate, and I don't know why this kind of amendment is being brought. It doesn't go far enough.

I have real problems with an investigation unit that involves the appointment of special constables. Now, we just passed the Peace Officer Act, which recognizes a new role for people in Alberta: to be involved in peace officer activity on the highways of Alberta, handing out speeding tickets and so on. We've seen the special constables on the highway. I'm not questioning the ability of special constables to do that particular work. They have training to do it, and I'm sure they do work very well. But on what basis are they able to participate in an investigative process?

Some of them, I know, are former police officers who have retired and have now come back as special constables. Of course, they would have the training because they were trained as police officers to do investigations. But normally a special constable who has a number of weeks of training does not have a lot of – I don't believe any – training in the area of investigations because that's not the kind of work that a special constable does.

So I'm really surprised at this, and I'm not sure that I understand why this is here, that the minister has the option to appoint special constables as investigators. That's under 46.2(2)(b). I think when it gets to the committee, we're going to have to deal with that.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Ms Blakeman: Sir, I just wondered what it was that the hon. member thought he was going to suggest be dealt with?

The Acting Speaker: The hon member.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you. I think that the least we could do is amend this because it's completely inadequate.

I'm not questioning the ability of special constables to do the kind of work that they're trained to do, you know. That's fine. But to ask them to engage in investigative work to find out whether the particular offence that is being reported is going to lead to a criminal conviction and that there's enough evidence to lead to a criminal conviction: that's not the kind of work that the special constables are trained to do. It's police that do that or former police officers, and there are plenty of civilians out there who have that experience because of their work in the past. So I just find this quite limiting, and I'm surprised to find it here. I'm not sure what the intent was with that.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really take pleasure in speaking to this Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007, because I feel the intention is honourable. Bill 16 takes a step that the government had the opportunity to take in 2005 under Bill 36, where Bill 36 provided the framework for the minister to take three actions in response to any incident that occurs that involves death or serious injury to any person resulting from the actions of a police officer. However, as we know, these three steps are widely criticized for failing to provide the level of public oversight that was necessary in the wake of several high-profile incidents involving allegations of serious police misconduct in the following years.

So the Alberta Liberal caucus would applaud this move as responding to the concerns of the public. It's a step, however, that does not go far enough towards a truly open and accountable mechanism to deal with serious incidents and complaints.

The main problem with this Bill 16 is that the mechanism it provides to conduct independent investigations is permissive. It does not make implementing this type of investigation automatic, and that's a problem because at the very least any incident involving death should automatically trigger an independent investigation.

This is not meant to be critical of the ability of the police to investigate their members, but in real terms there's a conflict when a police officer investigates one of his colleagues, just as it would be the case in any other profession. If they were to take these investigations out of the hands of the police themselves by not allowing police to investigate police – it is critical to not only showing actual independence but preserving the appearance of impartiality and objectivity so that members of the public maintain confidence in their system. The public cannot be left with the impression that bias or favouritism or prejudice had an influence on the outcome of any investigation, especially when the matter involves serious injury or death or trauma to more than just the one victim.

I have heard from constituents who have brought forward complaints about police. It is clear that if they are to believe that the process of investigation is fair, we need to look at two crucial elements. The first is the need for actual independence and impartiality in order to ensure that the matter is being dealt with in accordance with the established procedures and values.

The second is the need to preserve the appearance of impartiality and objectivity so that members of the public maintain confidence in the system and will not be left with the impression that bias, favouritism, or prejudice had an influence on the outcome. It is essential that more serious allegations of police misconduct ought not to be left to the police themselves but, rather, conducted by a separate public body not connected to a part of the service being scrutinized. This is crucial to ensuring that there is neither actual nor the appearance of bias in reaching the appropriate outcome.

Ontario has a special investigation unit which operates to oversee the police who act in the province of Ontario. Their mandate is limited to situations in which death or serious injury may have been caused by police misconduct, but it's established as an independent, arm's-length agency of the government, led by a director and composed of civilian investigators.

So we have to ask the question: if Ontario could respond to the needs of its citizens by creating a truly independent civilian oversight, why can't the government of Alberta respond in kind to the wishes of our citizens? There should be a mechanism in place similar to the SIU in Ontario, that has a broader scope to investigate all complaints of police misconduct and to cause, where appropriate, criminal charges to be laid or disciplinary proceedings to be taken against individual officers who are believed, upon reasonable grounds, to have committed an offence or misconduct.

Having a body which is truly in fact and in law independent and separate from the police services which might be involved in any particular incident or matter would add to the overall credibility of the investigation and the conclusions. I know that I have constituents that have often asked how they can possibly believe that the police chief alone can make an impartial, fair judgment. We need a body that would be free from undue political influence. This would clearly be seen by the public at large to be independent, objective, and impartial.

It's generally accepted that Sir Robert Peel is the founder of modern policing. Sir Robert Peel served as the British Home Secretary during the 1820s, and it was his act, An Act for improving the Police in and near the Metropolis, that was passed through the British Parliament, that resulted in the creation of the first law enforcement agency in modern history. The beliefs and principles of Sir Robert Peel are just as relevant and viable today as when first authored. In particular, these two principles apply directly:

The ability of the police to perform their duties is dependent upon public approval of police actions . . . Police, at all times, should maintain a relationship with the public that gives reality to the historic tradition that the police are the public and the public are the police; the police being only members of the public who are paid to give full-time attention to the duties which are incumbent on every citizen in the interests of community welfare and existence.

Those principles are very important, probably more so now when we've got such a multicultural society and people may come to the country with different ideas of what police are. It is in these principles, which should at all times guide police processes, that we will find credibility. It seems that the focus of police services has shifted from the intentions as outlined in these founding statements to becoming adversarial with the public.

The only way to restore the public's faith and confidence in the police is to realize that the best way for the police to effectively do their job is to work with and through the public, not to perpetuate the perception that the police are a separate entity and do not need any scrutiny in their investigative procedures. I am very proud of the police force in Edmonton-Mill Woods. We have a new police station, and it includes a community hall where different groups and agencies, not-for-profits, can have a space to meet without charge: a real effort to show that they are working to be part of the community and that they need citizens to be part of their work.

As stated in Peel's principles, police are "dependent upon public approval of police actions" to perform their duties. If that public approval is eroded, then it impairs the ability of the police to do their jobs in the best interest of the community. So I think that when a police officer investigates a crime involving a citizen, they enjoy the total independence that they would like. But when a suspect in a crime is a police officer either on or off duty, the public are entitled to that same total independence of the body conducting that investigation.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, 2007. It certainly seems to be heading down the path that we in the NDP caucus were interested in in regard to looking for independent oversight of the police, but by that same token there are, I guess, some problems that I would like to perhaps point out to you this afternoon.

This bill seems to add one section on the establishment of an integrated investigative unit looking into matters where death or serious injury was sustained at the hands of police officers. That certainly is a good thing. The minister having the option to appoint special constables to the head of a unit for the purpose of conducting an investigation seems reasonable as well. The amendments, all told, seem to be fairly minor.

There has certainly been growing pressure throughout the province to implement some sort of independent oversight involving police officers. Under the current regulations police officers themselves conduct internal investigations, which can raise conflict of interest charges from some people, throwing some element of doubt into the credibility of the impartiality of the procedure.

I know that the first attempt at reform was in Bill 36 back in 2005, which tried to outline clearer processes for complaints. Bill 36 as well mandated reports every 45 days on complaints. The police forces outside the immediate jurisdiction are now conducting internal investigations, and this is, again, a step forward, but certainly we could do better.

Among some of the noteworthy complaints that, you know, we've seen recently here in Edmonton were, for example, where quite a number of people were picked up and then dropped off in another neighbourhood, from Whyte Avenue up to somewhere in Highlands-Norwood, I think it was. Another thing comes to mind: the Whyte Avenue riots that we had last spring. Whenever these elements of doubt enter into the public's mind with regard to the conduct of police and their function, it doesn't serve the prevailing function of having a police force, which is to sort of represent the laws that they are meant to uphold and then be a deterrent power for people to actually look after themselves because, of course, there's not and can never be police around every corner. Rather, we rely on the internal mechanism by which people abide by the law because they've made some tacit agreement. That sense of law and order is a good thing, so whenever that gets cast into doubt, you are again casting into doubt the internal mechanism of almost all citizens of the province to abide by the law with that personal agreement that they have with the police and the law.

Looking around the country to see what is going on with other law enforcement legislation such as this, a special investigations unit in Ontario has a civilian oversight body that was established back in 1990 as part of their Police Services Act. In fact, according to that law, they cannot employ an investigator that is a police officer or ever was. So, you know, it's kind of going in the opposite direction from where this legislation might be going. This unit in Ontario is mandated to investigate all police activity where a death or serious injury has occurred, and at the end of an investigation in Ontario, the director can decide if a criminal act was carried out by the police officer or whether charges should be laid.

Now, this amendment does not explicitly state that any investigative unit is going to be formed as a civilian body, and the word "integrated" has not in fact been defined in this bill. So what I'd like to ask from the outset is: does "integrated" refer to a joint police force who is a civilian body, or does it mean to be integrated into the police service? And how does the word "integrated" affect the independence of this said board?

There are provisions for members of the public to observe, monitor, and review investigations, but that's a separate clause that already exists in the Police Act. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that the trick is to ensure that when an integrated unit does come into existence, the head of the unit and the investigators (a) have not previously been and (b) are not currently police officers. It's also important to ensure that the unit remain an independent body, so I would recommend that we look for the clarification on that word "integrated." For sure, I would like to see a commitment for a civilian-driven body. As well, I would like to ensure that this unit operates at arm's length, in an independent manner, and that it is perceived to do so by the public.

There are a number of changes that I see going on in the Solicitor General's department that I have some interest in. You know, this bill reminds me of the evolving use of sheriffs in our province and the evolution of their powers and their duties as well. Certainly, I think that as this evolves and changes – on which I would like to see clarification too – it sort of makes the necessity for an independent commission to oversee police activities all that more urgent, I would venture to say. We saw last year about 40 sheriffs being hired to police the highways, and then we saw over the last few months the powers of those sheriffs increasing quite a lot. These sheriffs are undoubtedly doing a fine job, but again just to have some civilian oversight into their activities I think is absolutely necessary and in the best interests of the public as a whole.

I have been speaking on this when I was, in fact, the Solicitor General critic and saw the need for this independent civilian board way back probably more than a year ago. The circumstances have not changed, and as I said before, with the sheriffs in a greater role, I think that the necessity for an independent civilian board is even more important. So I wrote a letter to the then Solicitor General to seek encouragement towards this last year, and I believe that we are moving in that direction. My suggestion would be to go full bore and put that in as part of this Bill 16. I will be introducing amendments in that very direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

The minister to close debate?

Mr. Lindsay: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Bill 12

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate April 4: Ms Pastoor]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 12, Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007. I appreciate that there's an understanding of the need and necessity of this bill. It has to be supported to clarify the repayment process. It also deals with other issues, like the appeals panels and child support, which are very, very important. With the problem of overpayment it's apparent that tightening up the process seems to be something that's quite necessary. There has to be some sort of process of recovering debts that have been incurred and that are owing to the government, and this bill deals with that process. It's also talking about the issue of child support, which is very important, and the fact that the appeals process is being addressed, I think, is also a positive.

I understand the concern about the overpayment issue. It's important that we support integrity in our citizens and that we have a clear understanding that applications must be honest, but to me the real problem is that we need a system that ensures that people who are living in poverty have all the support systems that they need. There is much work to do in this regard, and this bill does not begin to address this greater need. My work with my own constituents has demonstrated that it's very difficult for somebody who doesn't have the wherewithal or the education to represent themselves and go after what they need. The appeal process is very difficult and intimidating, and in most cases they need somebody to walk them through the process, to help them.

It's good that this bill is providing the process where the director's decision concerning a person's right to appeal is communicated to the person in a number of ways. I know that that's through fax and electronic and postal and so forth, but I'm wondering if we could, perhaps, look at some other ways that would make that process more comfortable and welcoming. The social workers and the people that work in the agencies that already know the individuals, perhaps they could be involved in a process to make sure that the individuals know what their rights are. A person has to know that they have the right to appeal, but if we don't go out of our way sometimes to let them know that, certainly they're not going to fulfill a 30-day requirement. I think that often the bureaucratic part of this can be just overwhelming and intimidating.

I know that this is really a housekeeping bill, which is changing things to bring it in line with the AISH Review Committee's proposals, and that is good. But, again, the real problem, if we're going to be talking about income and employment supports, is the poverty in Alberta; it's having adequate income supports and employment supports. We know that the gap between the rich and poor is getting larger and larger all the time. This gap in income between the rich and poor is growing. It's unacceptable, and it's going to have serious repercussions. It definitely does already have serious repercussions to our society, to our sense of community, to our sense of being valued if we're seeing the gap getting larger and we're at the bottom end.

So we need to take seriously the whole issue of income support. If we're really serious about helping people in poverty, we have to have adequate supports all the way along the line. These supports have to go with the person when we finally get them off welfare and into the employment world. But we are more concerned, it seems, about punitive action for the few that take advantage of the system or do not report everything that they're supposed to report and get punished because of that. We're more concerned about that than we're concerned about people who are actually trying to do their best. They are working and trying to live without a living wage in Alberta.

The title of the act, income and employment supports, suggests that we need to actually support these people and move them along. If so, we should have a proposal to index the welfare rates, the rates for people able to work and not able to work, a market-based approach, some way of attaching the rates of inflation and the changing standard of living that we have in our society in a way that is not arbitrary.

So, Mr. Speaker, I know that this is a housekeeping bill, and I certainly accept what it is intending to do, but it does so little. We need a vision that truly addresses adequate income supports and employment supports for individuals.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak briefly on Bill 12, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out, this is, in fact, largely a housekeeping bill, and it seems to oversee a wide range of income and employment opportunities for marginalized members of our society. Bill 12 deals explicitly with debt recovery along with the integration of the assured income for the severely handicapped program into the same structure. The bill seems to strengthen the government's ability to claim overpayments made to recipients and to their financial administrators.

The government was taken to court, as I recall, on how it collected overpayments to AISH recipients. Based on that application of the old act and the interpretation of the AISH regulation, the government made an administrative mistake and overpaid AISH recipients back in the 1980s. The government ignored, I believe, its own regulations and aggressively pursued debt collection from AISH recipients by cutting back on their benefit cheques without offering a repayment agreement or going through any judicial oversight. The courts ruled against the government in 1999, saying that its actions were wrong. The government, however, continued the practice until 2004.

In 2004 the regulations were amended to ensure that no more than 10 per cent was to be deducted from payments. Then a lawsuit was introduced in 2004 as well by two recipients against the government concerning issues of overpayment and underpayment of AISH income and how that was being dealt with. The government settled the case, paying $2,323 to each AISH recipient, $1,105 to recipients under the Social Development Act, and $698 to recipients under the Widows' Pension Act.

So in 2004 the government revamped its collection payment regulations to make them less onerous to AISH recipients, and this bill seems to be able to tighten up the government's abilities, means, and mechanisms by which it can collect money. This bill is timed to kick in once the current payment time period expires in March 2007.

It seems that the bill is just a way to clean up all of these things, and it streamlines and certainly simplifies the act. The lawsuit, however, was not based on a poorly written act or regulations but on an explicit disregard for the act as well as a misinterpretation of the regulations. So it was made far worse by the fact that the ministry seemed to act without particular concern for people who, I believe, are amongst the very most vulnerable in our society even though the mistake was the ministry's to start off with and the courts, in fact, did rule against it. I believe that it is more symptomatic of dubious management, really, than a poor act. As long as the management remains somewhat dodgy, then the end results will always remain bad regardless of how well written the act or the bill might be and might evolve over time.

So even though the government can collect the whole amount due in whatever amount of time it has, the government puts a six-month limit on underpayments to recipients. Amounts in excess of six months' underpayments need special permission. Okay? So I find that, again, to be somewhat dubious for the government to be acting in this manner. While the government seems to be justified in clawing back benefits, they're doing it against, as I said, some of our most vulnerable people in the province, and I think that that is not necessarily in the best practices of a democratic government.

So we do have some problems with this bill and some questions, that I would like to put forward in the near future, but at this time, Mr. Speaker, I will let that go till later.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

There being none, any other speakers?

Bill 7

Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007

[Debate adjourned April 3: Dr. Pannu speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few words to say about Bill 7. This is a very important issue in a sense because it deals with vocational schools in Alberta in terms of providing eventual employment. We know that we have so many openings in our job force in the province that we need to have strong vocational training in this province in all kinds of areas.

I notice that the act has been changed to refer to private vocational training and not schools, because there are lots of training programs that wouldn't be considered schools. So this is all about approving those programs and the funding for those programs.

I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in his participation in the debate on Bill 7, that these vocational training institutes are for-profit institutes; therefore, there should be special scrutiny of these programs. I mean, I have heard so many examples over the years of job training programs which didn't lead to any particular job. People invested money in a program which turned out not to be a program that was up to the standards that are necessary, that didn't lead to the job that they were intending to find after they graduated from the program. So there really does have to be scrutiny of these programs, and I don't think this bill really does much to further that scrutiny.

The one thing that it does is do away with the classification of vocational training institutes in terms of a class A licence, which refers to granting these vocational training institutes a licence because the programs are new and the programs have a student graduation rate and employment placement rate that are satisfactory, and a class B licence, which refers to vocational training institutes where the programs really are not satisfactory but somehow continue. To do away with this distinction, this class A and class B, would be in the interests of students who are investing their money in these institutes and their programming. It's clear that we have to have the scrutiny, especially the scrutiny to not continue to approve a program that's unsatisfactory. That's, I guess, an important thing to change.

Then there's the question of the licence not being just every two years, but there'll be a kind of rolling review. There are no specifics about that, and it's not clear whether that will be any more effective than what we had before. This is in the area of accreditation. Now, we all know how thorough the accreditation process is at the university level and at the college level. It's very important that universities, if they're going to continue to grant degrees, get the proper accreditation. Usually the accrediting bodies consist of professional bodies quite outside this province, and there is sufficient scrutiny of the programs. There should be some sort of accreditation process for these kind of training programs so that they come up to a very high standard so that when students pay their money – and these are mostly for-profit institutions – they should be able to get what they're expecting, and it should lead somewhere. It should train them for a particular vocation so that they can enter into the job market.

This bill is very superficial, making a few changes here and there, but I'm not sure that it does anything to really effectively deal with this oversight issue: the issue of accreditation, the issue of trying to raise the standards of education in our province.

Mr. Speaker, those are my remarks, and I look forward to more conversation about this bill when it's in committee. Thank you.

5:20

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this is a bill that when one looks at it, at first glance, looks innocent. I have questions in regard to this Bill 7, the Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007, and hopefully they can be answered.

Certainly, when we look at removing a licence distinction between A and B category private vocational schools and removing the two-year term for licences and replacing it with ongoing monitorings, it looks like, you know, business as usual. When we look at what's going on in this province and what's going on outside this province and recruiting workers into this country and province, we have to be very, very careful about what we're actually going to do with this legislation.

Now, certainly, we know that there are many different agents recruiting workers across Canada for Alberta locations. There are also many agents recruiting temporary foreign workers. It is unfortunate that some of the temporary foreign workers are being asked for megabucks, thousands and thousands of dollars to gain access to this province. They're getting here, and they're finding there is very little, if any, work.

Now, there are people in this province that are offering training programs to prospective temporary foreign workers and also to prospective immigrants to this province. My question is: how are these trainers affected by Bill 7, if at all? Do their schools fit this criteria? I realize there are 140-some private vocational schools, and they're offering thousands of training programs in this province, but how is all this related?

Certainly, there are problems around the delivery of these programs. In fact, I'm going to get this investigated, but I was told that some of our red seal, interprovincial trade examinations are being sold to prospective candidates in advance, so they've got a heads-up on that exam. This is very serious, and I hope it proves not to be true. I'm told that the price for these exams is anywhere between $350 and $700. If by changing this training program we are encouraging this sort of activity, I would say that we have to be very cautious with this, and perhaps we should re-examine this. I for one am not convinced, after what I've heard and what I've experienced, that we can afford to have any of our training programs reduced. We certainly can't have confidence eroded in those training programs or those certification processes. This is, unfortunately, what I have been told is happening.

Now, I would like to support this legislation. When I have been reassured that my concerns are not valid regarding this legislation, then certainly I would be in favour of this legislation. But I'm not convinced because there are too many people going around, and for the training programs that have been developed over decades in this province, the standards are being eroded. I'm not convinced that this Private Vocational Schools Amendment Act, 2007, is not a further erosion of our standards and our training programs.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions? Any other speakers?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills to close debate.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. members across the room here for your comments and your questions, and I hope to have answers to some of those questions in Committee of the Whole. I would call for the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 13

Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you can see, I rose a little early. I'm just so excited to get this bill through the House just in time for our Easter break.

It's my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 13, the Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill deals with minor amendments to Advanced Education and Technology's Access to the Future Act, which among other things establishes and governs the access to the future fund. [interjections] I'm hearing members say agreed, but I will continue on with the speech just in case there are any questions.

The purpose of the access to the future fund is to support innovation and excellence. The fund enhances and expands opportunities for Albertans to participate in accessible, affordable, and high-quality advanced education. The access to the future fund is now in its first year of operation based on government-approved parameters. The amendments we're proposing to the provisions governing the access to the future fund will facilitate fully implementing the approved operational parameters of the fund.

The first amendment will expand the ability to make financial transactions from the fund. The scope of financial transactions will be broadened to allow the minister to use the fund to match private donations for scholarships administered through the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, such as the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board family of scholarships.

The second amendment concerns regulation-making powers. Currently the act limits regulation authority to specific initiatives that further the fund's purpose and circumstances for which a grant may be given. When the current regulation was drafted, it was felt that including broad operational parameters would provide transparency for eligible recipients. However, because of limited regulation authority, operational details could not be included. This amendment broadens regulation-making authority so that regulations can include other matters considered necessary to carry out the purposes of the act and fund. This change would mean that future regulations could outline the fund's operational parameters and provide additional detail to the role of the council that provides advice to the minister on the fund.

So, Mr. Speaker, these amendments are minor, but they will enhance the effectiveness and transparency of the operation of the access to the future fund. I therefore ask hon. members to support Bill 13.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a thrill to address Bill 13, the Access to the Future Amendment Act, 2007. I don't know what I can say about a bill of this magnitude. We're looking at an eight-page document, and four of them are blank. Apparently it's a bill of such huge importance that only the Member for Calgary-Lougheed would be entrusted to see it through the Legislature, to sherpa it through.

You know, this is the third time that we've had a bill from advanced education, and all of them have been housekeeping so far. This one is even just a light dusting. This doesn't even qualify as housekeeping.

Ms Blakeman: No Pledge?

Mr. Tougas: No Pledge. Nothing. It's just like brushing off things like this. This bill is so small, Mr. Speaker, I actually read it. That's how small it is.

An Hon. Member: That's a first.

Mr. Tougas: It is a first, believe me. It's a first. [interjections] It's okay. It's 5:30 on a Thursday. It's fine.

5:30

I could go on about the Access to the Future Act and what's happening with it. I don't think anything has actually come out of the access to the future fund yet, and there are still many questions regarding the administration of it that perhaps we'll get to at some other point.

I'd like to read over some of the comments made by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed to see what this bill is all about. Perhaps there's something in here that I don't see. I'm not sure, but I don't think there's anything else in it.

Ms Blakeman: You'd have to be blind to not see it. It's two sentences long.

Mr. Tougas: It's actually 54 words.

Anyway, I'm done. If anybody else wants to tackle this mammoth project here and take it on, I'm sure we could be here for days and days and days, but for now I'm finished.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the usual custom at this point is to suggest that questions will be answered in Committee of the Whole, but since I didn't hear one, I have a feeling we're going to push this through rather quickly in the Committee of the Whole, not just today.

With that, I would ask you to call the question, sir.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 14

Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

[Adjourned debate April 5: Mrs. Jablonski]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak in principle in second reading to Bill 14, the Pandemic Response Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. I know that the sponsoring Member for Red Deer-North had spoken briefly in introducing the bill.

First of all, I want to make note that this is, in fact, an omnibus bill. It is amending four different pieces of Alberta statutes. Prior to Standing Orders being changed in 2003, I think it was, members of this House used to have 30 minutes to debate omnibus pieces of legislation, and I have to say that I do miss that. When you were amending several pieces of legislation at once, it was helpful to have more time to be able, at least in second reading, to go through more in depth. So I'll just note in passing that that's now been reduced. The second speaker, obviously, in the position I'm in right now, gets 20 minutes, but henceforth all others will have only 15 plus that five minutes that is allowed under 29(2)(a).

I want to say that overall I'm in favour of what's being proposed here, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of hesitations that I have, and I will point them out as I get there. Just to put this bill in context, what is being predicted is that in fact we're overdue for a pandemic. What they're expecting is that in the next one to three years we will be faced with a pandemic and that it could in fact be affecting us over a period of 18 months. That is because the infections come in waves, and you may well have some people affected in the first wave, but then there's a second, a third, a fourth, and so on. We could have pretty significant disruptions to our way of life over a period of 18 months. I think that's important to remember when we look at some of the powers that are being proposed as being added in this legislation and the extensions of time limits that are being considered here.

Now, the government is claiming that it needs flexibility, resources, and protections to be able to respond swiftly. The Speaker will be aware that I'm not a great fan of empowering the government with a lot of extra abilities to curtail its citizens, which is what often happens. But I'm also aware that we are pretty naive in this part of the world about how these kinds of pandemics affect us.

I've said before that I've spoken recently, actually in preparation for this bill, with people in Ontario about what they experienced during SARS and in Quebec around the ice storms and just how much that affected what we expect to go on. I mean, the idea that you could continue to get, in the case of the ice storm, you know, cash out of an ATM: well, no; because the power lines were down, they didn't work. So you weren't necessarily able to stock up on your cash and go out and purchase all these things that you wanted. In the case of a pandemic, I mean, the grocery store may not be open. There could be people that are quite ill, and the local corner store has to close down or close down, you know, for periods of time and reopen when everybody is well enough to work.

We just don't have a concept of what that's like. As government we have a responsibility to provide emergency services and, more than that, to attempt to get some resumption of normal servicing back, and that includes resumption of business services. So we want our public services to be restored and working efficiently as soon as possible, and we want to give some assistance or at least not hamper unduly the business sector from being able to resume their business. But this is going to be different, and we, I think, haven't wrapped our heads around what's going to happen with this coming.

Now, the one encouraging thing that I did hear as part of the briefing is that we may well get warning. It may well happen somewhere else first, and we would have some warning that it was coming to us next week or next month, which might be very helpful.

What is an influenza pandemic? I'm very grateful to the Public Health Agency of Canada for providing information. Essentially, a new strain of a virus emerges, and people have no protection against that particular strain, so it spreads pretty rapidly around the world, and this is what's known as a pandemic. It can have minor to severe complications. It can result in death in some previously healthy individuals, but certainly we're most concerned about our vulnerable citizens, who may already be frail or susceptible to pneumonia, for example, which could cause a great deal of damage to people and possibly even death.

We've had three pandemics: in 1918-19, 1957-58, and again in '68-69. So they're saying that we're basically overdue. We're 38 years since the last influenza pandemic, and they're thinking that we're well overdue for this. Nobody can tell us exactly when, but, as I say, they are expecting it in the next year to three years.

The single most important lesson I've learned is that communication is key and particularly communication between all levels of government. So in Alberta, for us, that's going to mean between local health providers, local hospitals for example, the regional health authorities, the municipalities, the provincial government, and the federal government, and that is all going to be really key. Where they have examined where they didn't do well, for example with SARS in Ontario, the single biggest problem they had was poor communication between different levels of government and confusion and chaos in communications around what was supposed to happen. That was the biggest factor in either causing more people to become ill or not being able to prevent others from it or not being able to recover as quickly as they should have.

I think what we need to know very clearly are the roles and responsibilities of the different levels of government and the agencies that have some authority, and I would put that to the sponsoring member to be able to outline that for us. What is Alberta's role in this? How do they fit into that structure? What, specifically, are the roles and responsibilities that the province accepts?

That co-ordination needs to cover things like contracting for vaccine production, creating a stockpile of the antiviral serums, managing that stockpile system – because if you keep it too long, it gets out of date, so you have to be replacing and refreshing it – and support for quarantine services.

I was very surprised to find out how many people could be affected here. I'm still struggling to grasp this, but we are looking at between 11,000 and just under 60,000 people that could be affected in the province. That does seem like a lot of people, but that's what we need to get prepared for. Essentially, it's between 15 and 35 per cent of the population. Of course, with adequate and timely delivery of antiviral drugs, those percentages could be reduced.

There was a working agreement between deputy ministers of health from March of 2001. The roles and responsibilities of the federal and provincial ministers were supposed to have been outlined in that. I think that the minister of health should be co-ordinating – or, clearly, we'll want to hear that they're co-ordinating – with other governments to anticipate problems and, as always, to be able to have an ongoing monitoring in anticipation of additional problems. As always, you know, you've got the plan or the standards in place, and then you need to monitor it, and then you need to enforce it. That is an area where this government has faltered in the past, so I'm starting right now to make sure that those extra stages are built in and can carry along for us.

The provincial governments are responsible for mobilizing the contingency plans and resources, so it does start at the, sort of, health region level, moves to the municipality, and then up to the province, but the province is responsible for organizing all of that and, again, that the lines of communication have to be clear. Everybody's got to know who they're supposed to be communicating with, and that has to be well established prior to a pandemic affecting us.

Mr. Speaker, when I look at the acts that are being amended here, there are four of them: the Disaster Services Act, the Employment Standards Code, the Government Organization Act, and the Public Health Act. Under the Disaster Services Act essentially it's regarding the expiration of the declared state of emergency. Currently it's 14 days. They want to expand it to 90 days or to when it's terminated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, whichever is sooner.

I'm a little interested in why the 90 days was chosen and how many times that can be renewed. The first time out we're saying that the state of emergency ends after 90 days, but can that be renewed indefinitely? If we are looking at something being in place for 18 months, do we keep coming back every 90 days, every three months, to take us through the 18-month period? That may well be appropriate, but I'd be interested in hearing exactly what the government has anticipated.

The Employment Standards Code. I'm actually pleased to see what's in there, and I'm pleasantly surprised. I have not pegged this government in the past as being particularly kind to employees, but what's happening in this is an amendment that allows an employee to make a written complaint for being suspended or laid off or terminated, I suppose, because they weren't performing their job because they'd been conscripted to perform duties by the minister. They may have been conscripted to perform duties that aren't what they regularly do, but nonetheless they're not available for their regular job, and I don't think it's fair that they get fired for helping out with something. So this amendment to the employment standards is, I think, a very good part of what's being anticipated in the proposed legislation.

The Government Organization Act is adding regulation making authority to the minister to basically authorize some people to do certain activities during the public health emergencies. Again, that may well be someone who doesn't usually do them. They might be conscripted to do something. I think we need the ability to do that.

Now, a number of amendments flow from the fourth act, which is the Public Health Act. Some of these I have some concerns with, and some I don't. For example, they're removing the term "physician" because a physician is included in health professionals. They often say: physicians or health professionals. Well, a physician is a health professional, so that's a redundancy. It's being eliminated throughout the act here, and I think that's perfectly appropriate. It actually does start to talk about health professionals as a team and as a sector, putting everybody together as a team, and I think that's a great idea.

There's a very tricky balancing act that comes in one of the sections that I'm going to watch very carefully. Essentially, it's allowing a physician to obtain a certificate of authority for noncompliance on an individual; that is, an individual who is refusing to have a test done. So a physician can get a certificate of authority and perform any test or examination that's required to determine whether the patient has a communicable disease, further detaining this individual, possibly, in a facility until they have the test results back.

I think there needs to be a very careful balance when you are restraining personal liberties. It's easy in times like this to let it get away from you. I think that we need to always be on guard and really work hard to protect people's personal liberties. This is a state of emergency we're talking about. This is a health crisis we're talking about. There may well be people who just don't understand how dangerous this can be for everybody else and that they need to be tested to see, you know, if they've been infected or if they're carrying it. I understand all that, but boy would we need to be vigilant about this because it's so easy to slip down the other side. So I will be persistent in making sure that that is applied in as balanced a way as possible.

There are new powers that are allocated to the minister. Mostly it allows the minister to do it without consulting with anybody. So there are all kinds of extra things that are added: suspend or modify the application or operation of parts of an act that the minister is responsible for if the minister thinks that the application of it may hinder or delay the action that they want done. Again, I think you've got to really work hard to balance this stuff.

The one that I was most concerned about is a clause that allows the changes, any action that the minister orders to not be made public immediately. In this day and age of mass communication and communication by, you know, cybermail, which is instantaneous, I really don't understand the reason for amending the clause so that they don't have to make these new orders public immediately. I think there's some idea that it would be made public eventually, but I think it should be made public immediately. Most of the people know what the new game is, what the new expectation is, what the new action or order is, but also I think there has got to be an understanding that the citizens we are serving are common-sense individuals, and most of them will comply.

This government tends towards secrecy. They tend towards doing things behind closed doors. I do not understand why you would not have that kind of information out in the public domain. So I will likely be doing an amendment to change that clause because I just am not comfortable with it.

There is an additional section that I have no problem with that basically grants the chief medical officer the power to authorize someone to be absent from work if they're helping a family member who is suffering or if they themselves are afflicted so that people, you know, have the required documentation for their employment.

The last thing I want to talk about here is the termination of a public health order, and it may be that this is needed if the timeline is, in fact, 18 months. But it's basically saying that an order declaring a public health emergency expires after 90 days instead of after 30 days. So there are two kinds of timelines that are being talked about here, the first one I referred to and this one.

Finally, there is, of course, another power that's very sweeping that's been given to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, allowing it to make regulations basically regarding anything. For me, again, that always raises red flags. That's basically empowering cabinet to make regulations on whatever they want, and I think that always has to be kept in check.

The last thing that concerned me was removing the ability of individuals to hold the government accountable or responsible for their management and the choices that they've made, because basically there's a protection clause that's coming in here that would protect them from any liabilities. In other words, they couldn't be taken to court for the choices that they've made. I think, you know, most people act in good faith here, but we also as legislators and policy-makers and as government sometimes make whopping mistakes. I think it's important that we can be held accountable for that, so I'm not comfortable in completely protecting people and absolving them from any accountability on issues like that.

The issues I've raised, then, are the clear lines of communication laid out in advance and clearly understood.

I'm looking forward to continued debate in Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker: Any others?

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour and knowing that members wish to get back to their constituents and constituencies to celebrate Easter, I would move that we adjourn until 1 p.m. on Tuesday, April 10.

[Motion carried; at 5:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 10, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

On this day I would ask that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, all others present here, and those observing these proceedings in their homes join together in a minute of silent and personal prayer as we reflect upon the lives of military personnel lost in service to their countrymen.

May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. God bless.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I would ask that all join in in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of 44 grade 6 students from Woodhaven middle school in Spruce Grove. They participated in your mock Legislature program this morning, and I'm told that they passed two bills, one on school hours and the other on year-round schooling. They are a bright, energetic group, and they are accompanied by teachers Ms Jayna Butler and Ms Deb Schellenberger as well as parent helper Mrs. Susan Bonn and educational assistant Ms Joanne Furminger. They are seated in both the public and the members' galleries this afternoon. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of Alberta's government and, indeed, of all Albertans. Some of you would remember him as the former director of the Premier's southern Alberta office among many other accomplishments. Today he joins us as the director of government relations for the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and I'm very proud to have him as a member of my team. I would ask that Mr. Rich Jones please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour today to introduce a group of 66 people. Sixty are students from Our Lady of Perpetual Help school. They are accompanied by teachers Elizabeth Castillo, Paul Seewalt, and Cindy Seewalt and parent helpers Noella Ross, Scott Forster, and Mrs. Tara Hannigan. They are actively involved in studying the unit in grade 6 dealing with government. We'd ask that they please rise so that we can give them the warm traditional welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a good friend of mine and a constituent, Kevin Pizzey. Kevin is a teacher. He's the ATA local political engagement officer. He's the vice-president for the Red Deer-North PC Association, and he's a very active political enthusiast. He's also chairman of our resolutions committee and worked very hard getting a resolution into our PC association. He's married. His wife, Pauline, is a pharmacist with London Drugs. He has one daughter, 13-year-old Eponine, and a lovely young lady she is. Kevin is also a big fan of our Premier. He's in the members' gallery. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a very special group of people, 13 members of Delta Master Beta Sigma Phi. This is an international nonacademic sorority, in existence since 1931. They have been very active in raising money for charities and supporting cultural and community events. I'd like to introduce Beth Corus, Bernice Forss, Myrtle Marks, Jane McIntyre, Mary Meagher, Nan Piro, Maxine Prausa, Bunty Reid, Helen Richards, Jean Robbe, Cleo Schmidt, Natalie Snelson, and Marian Scragg. I invite them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three dedicated workers here in Alberta: Chris Whyatt, Angie Saunders, and Richard Konkin. Chris, Angie, and Richard have been picketing on the front line for the past seven months, as we reach day 214 of the Palace Casino strike. These workers are victims of this government's failure to protect workers in creating a fair workplace for all Albertans. Chris is a brand new employee at the Palace Casino and went on strike early into his job. Angie Saunders has been at the Palace Casino for just over 10 years. She works as a pit boss and dealer and very much enjoys her job. She's deeply concerned over her rights as a worker. Richard is a dealer at the casino and has been for seven years. Richard is a member of the union's bargaining committee and provides a great deal of knowledge to the process. They are joined today by an outstanding new representative with UFCW 401, Shauna Robertson. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Sherry and Logan Inglis. Sherry and Logan are both constituents of mine in Edmonton-

Beverly-Clareview. Sherry is here today to express her concerns around rapidly rising rent increases and is joining us in our call to cap rent increases. Sherry works as a seasonal construction worker and is raising her son, Logan, who is 11 years old. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to acknowledge an indelible part of Canadian history. On April 9, 1917, our Canadian troops engaged in a great battle at Vimy Ridge. They fought valiantly and courageously against enemy forces and, ultimately, emerged victorious. Their success at Vimy Ridge was a decisive event in the First World War and helped propel the Allies to victory. But triumph was costly, resulting in more than 10,000 casualties over the six days of fighting.

The sacrifices of Canadians throughout the First World War helped to accelerate Canada to the forefront of the international community, solidifying our country as a nation that will stand against aggression to advance peace and tolerance. At the conclusion of the war Canada's significant contributions were acknowledged with a separate signature on the Versailles peace treaty. Today the Canadian National Vimy Memorial stands to remind us all of the heroism that was demonstrated by our soldiers. The monument represents their accomplishments, contributions, and sacrifices and also memorializes those lost in the conflict who have no known grave.

I want to recognize the Three Hills and Trochu high school students from my constituency who are over there this week paying tribute to this historic event by laying a wreath at the Vimy Ridge memorial site in France. It's beholden on all of us to never forget the past and the sacrifices that were made to afford us the freedoms that we exercise today. I believe that we owe a debt of gratitude to the Canadian armed forces past and present. We will remember them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Private John George Pattison Vimy Ridge Victoria Cross Holder

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian army captured Vimy Ridge 90 years ago in a fight for peace, freedom, and hope. The victory at Vimy on April 13, 1917, gave our Canadian army absolute command of the entire ridge, which led to the capture of Hill 145, the highest point of the ridge.

I would like to remember one of our own, a fellow Albertan, who achieved a Vimy Ridge Victoria Cross, one of four. Private John George Pattison of Calgary, Alberta, was born September 8, 1875, in New Cross, England. He emigrated to Canada in 1906 with his wife and four children and worked for the Calgary Gas Company before he joined the army on March 6, 1916.

Private John George Pattison earned his Vimy Ridge Victoria Cross for most conspicuous bravery in an attack. His citation reads:

When the advance of our troops was held up by an enemy machine gun, which was inflicting severe casualties, Pte. Pattison, with utter disregard of his own safety, sprang forward and, jumping from shell-hole to shell-hole, reached cover within thirty yards of the enemy gun. From this point, in face of heavy fire, he hurled bombs, killing and wounding some of the crew, then rushed forward overcoming and bayoneting the surviving five gunners. His valour and initiative undoubtedly saved the situation and made possible the further advance to the objective.

Private Pattison of the 50th Battalion, Alberta regiment, Canadian Expeditionary Force was killed on June 13, 1917. He is buried in La Chaudière Military Cemetery in France.

At Vimy Ridge regiments from coast to coast saw action together in a distinctly Canadian triumph, helping create a new and stronger sense of Canadian identity and pride in our province and our country.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

The Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday it was an honour to officially represent our Premier at the 90th anniversary celebration of the battle of Vimy Ridge, along with my colleague from Edmonton-Castle Downs and, of course, Their Honours Norman and Mary Kwong and numerous armed forces personnel and other dignitaries.

As an honorary lifetime member of the Royal Canadian Legion Edmonton Norwood Branch I paid very special homage to our fallen soldiers. As an uncle of Private Nick Faryna, who at age 23 has already served twice in Afghanistan, I prayed for his continued safety. As a former teacher I delighted in seeing several young students also in attendance, including Jessica Strome, who read a special poem, Thomas Rogers, and Monico Oprecio. I highlight them, Mr. Speaker, because they attend Vimy Ridge Academy in my area of Edmonton and because their participation gave added significance to our tribute. These students are studying the horrors of war. They are learning that freedom often has its price and that thousands of young citizens not unlike them have paid that price.

This weekend six brave Canadian soldiers were killed in Afghanistan: Private Kevin Vincent Kennedy, age 20; Private David Robert Greenslade, age 20; Corporal Aaron E. Williams, age 23; Corporal Christopher Paul Stannix, age 24; Sergeant Donald Lucas, age 31; and Corporal Brent Poland, age 37. Two others were seriously injured.

As we remember these fallen soldiers and numerous others who died in defence of democracy, liberty, and freedom, we recall the brave and valiant Canadian soldiers who gave us victory at Vimy Ridge 90 years ago. They succeeded where others had failed, and their victory became a source of eternal pride for Canada and for the free world. Mr. Speaker, we must and we shall remember them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Sustainable Environment Advocacy

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Davids versus government Goliath. It isn't easy being green. When a famous frog named Kermit sang that it wasn't easy being green, he wasn't specifically referring to the province of Alberta, but his theme song certainly resonates here. Advocating for a sustainable environment in the face of government-dominated, immediate gratification greenback greed requires a great deal of fortitude. Fortunately for Alberta, the voices once crying in and for the wilderness are now being heard in the towers downtown, not just those of the postsecondary ivory tower from which their environmental echo frequently originates.

A trio of Dr. Davids is taking on the Alberta government Goliath, armed with irrefutable science in their slings. Dr. David Suzuki, Dr. David Schindler, and Dr. David Swann may differ in how they deliver their missive missile, but the similar message in their slings is scientifically sound. Global warming is real. Its effect isn't just being experienced in far-off Arctic and Antarctic regions portrayed in Al Gore's documentary An Inconvenient Truth. Glaciers in Alberta's Rocky Mountains are disappearing at an alarmingly rapid rate, faster, it would appear, than the Alberta government's snail-like recognition of the challenge presented.

Thanks to the diligence of the Dr. David trio, the water quality and quantity message is starting to penetrate into the most infertile, brain-barren areas of the Alberta government's market-driven mind. Dr. David Schindler's message of moving people to water rather than the government's perverse preference for interbasin, nature-defying transfers, such as the proposed diversion from the Red Deer River to the Balzac race track, is starting to percolate. The government will no longer issue new water leases for the Oldman, the South Saskatchewan, and the Bow rivers. Thanks to Dr. David Swann's persistent intransigence on water monitoring, baseline testing must now precede resource drilling.

If this interim, caretaker Conservative government doesn't catch up with constituents' concerns over mapping aquifers as well as protecting and preserving watersheds, their . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Seniors' Benefits

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise to pay tribute to the senior citizens of our province. Seniors are the most active participants in our democracy and in our communities. They consistently come out to vote, attend town hall and public meetings, and are frequent visitors in the galleries of this Chamber. They support their families by providing child care and are relied upon to act as caregivers when a family member falls ill. Moreover, they participate on boards and in volunteer organizations, community gardens, hospitals, and health organizations.

Seniors do however face serious challenges. In the first three months of this year consumer prices increased by 4.5 per cent. For people living on fixed incomes, this can be a terrible burden. Not everyone is benefiting from the boom, and as the cost of food and utilities increases, seniors are forced to stretch their dollars further and further. Seniors' programs have never been restored to what they were before the deep cuts during the 1990s. I urge the minister to include universal dental and optical programs in the upcoming budget and to eliminate the education portion of property taxes for all seniors.

When it comes to housing, many seniors find themselves in real danger. My colleagues and I have heard from numerous seniors who face rental increases of several hundred dollars over just a few months. Seniors across the province face evictions as rental apartments are converted into condominiums. Many Albertans would benefit from the NDP's proposal to implement rent guidelines, but low-income seniors may benefit from it the most.

I'll conclude by noting that last year's budget promised that $170 million would be allocated for improvements to long-term care by 2008-2009. This is barely half of what would be needed to meet the recommendations of the Auditor General. Recent revelations about problems in long-term care facilities show that this issue is far from resolved. In our wealthy province we have a responsibility to give seniors the support that they deserve and treat them with the respect that they have earned.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Municipal Financing

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current fiscal imbalance for municipalities is wrong and unacceptable. Alberta families and communities throughout our province are suffering from excessive, high taxes and will continue to suffer under this government's current policies and will suffer even more if this government does not toss the idea of forcing municipalities to levy new taxes if they need more money. Our current system is not in the best interests of Alberta families and even worse for our communities. The whole structure is set up for power and control.

This Tory government is literally bringing our municipal governments to their knees and forcing them to stretch out their hands and plead for assistance, forcing them into a dependent relationship as there is no long-term, stable funding. The answers come one at a time, one project to the next, and one year at a time. This is not good government, and the Tory policy is not focused on our quality of life, security of our communities, and certainly not their sustainability.

Last year Gloria Kovach, president of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, called upon the Prime Minister and the Premiers to fix the fiscal imbalance. The FCM report, Building Prosperity from the Ground Up: Restoring Municipal Fiscal Balance, glaringly pointed out that only 8 cents of every tax dollar collected go to municipalities, 50 cents to the federal government, 42 cents to the provincial government. It is critical that Alberta take the first step and lead this country in solving this imbalance.

Mr. Speaker, this needs to change. We need a Premier that is not only aware of the problem but has the political will to solve the problem. Granting municipalities the power to add additional taxes is not the solution. We need a new formula that ensures that a fair portion of the tax revenue is returned to the municipalities. A good start would be to return 10 per cent of the provincial income tax. This would ensure that municipal governments have a reliable revenue stream, enabling them to plan long term, something this government has failed to do even short term.

Mr. Speaker, the fiscal imbalance is a Canada-wide problem. If we really want to fix our country, we'd better fix our province first and lead by example.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 27

Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I rise today and request leave to introduce Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007.

The proposed amendment would allow for any special Alberta symbol to be added to the list of official symbols of our province. Mr. Speaker, the items would be designated as symbols of distinction rather than emblems. The amendment will help us recognize and honour our province's rich and diverse heritage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 28

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to request leave to introduce Bill 28, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007.

This act amends the Provincial Court Act to permit a judge who is more than 70 years of age and working full time to be appointed a part-time judge if he or she wishes. Currently the act permits part-time judges to be reappointed after age 70 but only if they started part-time service on or before their 70th birthday. The amendments also change how sittings for part-time judges can be scheduled. These changes are being proposed at the request of the Provincial Court.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Bill 29
Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 29, the Farm Implement Amendment Act, 2007.

The Farm Implement Act regulates and provides licensing for dealers and distributors of agricultural equipment in Alberta. This bill will provide farmers with more choice in leasing farm implements from financial institutions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to move that Bill 29 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Bill 30
Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 30, the Disaster Services Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill will contribute to providing safe and secure communities for Albertans in a number of ways. This includes formally establishing the Alberta emergency management agency, updating terminology to be in line with the national and international emergency management community, and empowering summer villages to enhance their emergency response capabilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 30 be placed on the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table some more copies of letters received by my office urging the government to provide funding for the cancer-fighting drug Avastin. In doing so, I'd like to reiterate that people who require this treatment can expect to pay $1,750 every two weeks for Avastin treatment and that the drug is already covered by the cancer boards in B.C., Quebec, and Newfoundland. Today's letters are from Janice Kindrat, Myrtle Jacula, Camille Loken, John Tidridge, Sylvia Traynor, Martha Schroth, Mark Balsler, Marj Balsler, Julia Brown, and Alastair Brown.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today with appropriate copies. The first is from Esther von Busse, stating that "every childcare professional working with children age 0-12 should receive wage enhancement and professional development funds."

The second is from Peggy Jones, after school child care worker, who is also concerned about the lack of wage supplements for child care workers who work with children six years and older.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a number of background documents relating to a contract between the former member for Meadowlark and the provincial government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table for the information of the Legislative Assembly this afternoon the following two documents. The first is a letter dated March 28, 2007, and it's addressed to Mr. Kenneth Sigurdson. This letter is in response to an e-mail sent to the website www.savemycwb.com on March 14, 2007, from a government of Alberta computer, and it's signed: "Sincerely, [Mr.] Campbell, Deputy Minister."

The second tabling is also a letter to Mr. Sigurdson, and it is from a government of Alberta employee named Amber, and it is also in regard to the disrespectful e-mail.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and table three letters, all dealing with personal testimonials on affordable housing residence in northeast Edmonton, and two of them are from volunteers at the Unity Centre of North East Edmonton.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Before recognizing the first speaker, the chair just needs to point out to all members, particularly those four that have sent me notes, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity violated the rules of the House on two occasions when he was giving his member's statement. You cannot do through the back door what you're not allowed to do through the front door. You cannot mention the names of current members of the Assembly in the Assembly, and there's a reason for that, a historic reason, which I will not go into right now. But, yes, two violations. Not good. Knows better.

We'll move forward.

head: 1:30

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Contracting Policies

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What's better than simply living in Alberta? Well, living in Alberta as a Tory insider. The Official Opposition has obtained documents showing that a Tory MLA defeated in the last election received a sweetheart contract with the former ministry of aboriginal affairs and northern development. The contract was entered into after the direct intervention of the minister without a competitive bidding process and was effective within two days of the former member losing his seat. To the Premier: is the Premier prepared to defend the practice of ministers directing civil servants to give untendered contracts to former and defeated Tory MLAs?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, since I've been sworn in as Premier, we've taken this government furthest in terms of openness and transparency. We've introduced the lobbyist legislation in the Legislature for discussion. We've also, of course, put all of the government aircraft manifests on the web. We're continuing communicating with Albertans on a quarterly basis on who receives any payment from the Alberta taxpayer and will continue to do so, including the introduction of the Conflicts of Interest Act in this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The usual dodge from the Premier.

Over and over in this province due process takes a back seat to patronage. Department e-mails show that this contract with the former Conservative member was entered into at the personal request of the former minister and that at the time of the request the department didn't even know what services would be provided. There was no competition. There was no advertising. To the Premier: is the Premier convinced that the former Tory member was the one and only person in all of Alberta qualified for this job?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the administrative matter of a contract by a previous minister, I'll give that question to the present minister to respond to.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing about this province is that we expect value for one single cent that we spend. That's why this government is open, transparent, and that's why we're discussing it in here today.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Department e-mails indicate that this contract wasn't even contemplated until mid-December 2004, right about the time the former member incorporated a consulting company under his name. Final department approvals for the contract were given on January 24, 2005, but the contract is dated, and taxpayers were billed for nearly $17,000 starting two months before that. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that backdating an untendered contract with this former MLA breaks every rule about good public management?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll leave that to the minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member across the way failed to mention is that, first of all, this went to the Ethics Commissioner. He was asked about the actual contract. The Ethics Commissioner concluded that there was no conflict of interest. Let me repeat that for the hon. member: there was no conflict of interest. Also, he forgot to mention, Mr. Speaker, that during that year, the Alberta centennial of 2005, that was the celebration of our 100th anniversary. I was told that Mr. Maskell was contracted to ensure that aboriginal Albertans had access and participated fully in the centennial, and that's exactly what they did, serving all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The terms for this contract weren't finalized until two full months after work reportedly began. The job description for this hastily invented position appears to involve lots of liaising and advising and assisting, nothing tangible that we can detect. To the Premier, and I hope he answers this one: given that Alberta taxpayers have already paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to Tory insiders providing nothing more than verbal advice, is the Premier defending the practice of paying a defeated Tory MLA $135,000 over 16 months for little more than being a stand-in for the minister?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the hon. member. He said $135,000. Actually, it was $141,037.27, to be very specific.

Dr. Taft: Impressively, the former member managed to fulfill the requirements of this contract before the contract even existed. Quite a feat. To the Premier: given that billing began long before the contract was finalized or the required services were even worked out, what assurances do Albertans have that the services billed by the former member actually needed to be done? Or was the contract written to justify the so-called services already provided?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I can't provide all the details on the contract that's under question in the House today, but I can assure you that under my leadership perception of this sort will not happen. We'll have very clear rules in terms of whom government enters into contracts with, and the public will know not only the terms of those contracts but what they expect to receive for the payment made to any person, whether they're a former MLA or any person contracting with the government.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the life of a politician can be unpredictable. The inconvenient reality of electoral politics is that you can find yourself out of a job in a hurry. MLAs are provided with a transition allowance to help them move back into private life. Yet this former MLA collected his transition allowance of over $80,000 at the same time that he was collecting on this juicy contract worth more than the basic MLA salary. To the Premier: how – how – can the Premier justify this double-dipping at taxpayers' expense; you lose an election and you double your salary?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's one of the reasons that I talked very seriously about introducing conflict-of-interest legislation. This is going to come up for discussion in the House when the legislation comes forward. Most importantly, I just want to make this statement: that the amount of the relocation allowance is made by an all-party committee; it's not something that's done by the government. All members sit on a members' committee reviewing the relocation allowance. And I believe – you can correct me if I'm wrong – that it's also the only committee in the dominion of Canada that sits totally in public, right in front of the media, making those decisions.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Judicial Council's guidelines on instructing a trial jury concerning direct and circumstantial evidence say that both kinds of evidence are treated equally by the law: one is not better nor worse than the other. The Canadian Judicial Council is composed of the chief justices and associate justices of Canada's superior court. So I think it's safe to say that their interpretation of circumstantial evidence is correct. But just to be sure, to the Attorney General and the Minister of Justice: will the minister confirm for us that this definition by the Canadian Judicial Council is accurate, that circumstantial evidence holds the same weight as direct evidence in a court of law?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Legislation

The Speaker: Well, we have to be careful here. First of all, decisions of the courts are not dealt with in the House. And seeking a definition of a statute or the interpretation of a statute is also offside. So I don't know, hon. minister, if there's a question here that you can deal with.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Mr. Stevens: Well, the only comment I would have, Mr. Speaker, is that I always have the utmost respect for the members of the judiciary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here are the facts supporting the premise that a deal, verbal or otherwise, exists between this government and the developers of the Balzac project. The developers are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars a day without a water licence; the province gave the MD $4.8 million for municipal waste-water servicing for the horse-racing track in August 2006; the MD signed an MOU with the developers guaranteeing water for the project, water they had not yet received a licence for; MD councillors told members of this caucus that the former Deputy Premier guaranteed water for them and have stated that they had many discussions with her about the project; and the existence of over 5,000 pages of documents through FOIP. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that this circumstantial evidence pointing to a secret deal is undeniable?

The Speaker: Well, you know that front door/back door thing I talked about a little earlier? You're asking for an interpretation here of a statute. Now, Premier, you go forth if you wish.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, I asked them, in fact, in front of the media the other day when all of the cameras were there, to bring evidence, and the Leader of the Opposition was unable to present evidence. Today they're – I don't know – like you said, going in the back door. I don't know.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has stood up repeatedly and denied that a secret deal exists. He has challenged the Official Opposition, as he just did, to produce documents. Well, our evidence has just been presented. The circumstantial evidence in this case overwhelmingly indicates the existence of a secret deal between this government and the developers of the Balzac project. You know, if this was a court of law and the people in the Red Deer River basin the jury, the verdict would be guilty as charged. To the Premier: will the Premier right here right now deny that the evidence presented in this House constitutes proof beyond a doubt that this government made a deal with the developers to supply water for the Balzac project? Can he deny the facts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member just proved why he used to be a radio announcer. I guess that's about all I have to say in response to that.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Holy Cross Care Centre

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The termination of the contract with the Holy Cross by the Calgary regional health authority to build seniors' housing comes after a long record of problems with fire safety and care standards. There are 42 long-term care beds and the associated nursing staff that have been lost, and Alberta Health and Wellness admits that it's already short on resources. The question is to the Premier. What steps are you taking to replace these beds and keep these health professionals in the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, obviously, seniors' housing is very important to this government, and we're continuing in our efforts to not only increase the number of spaces but to aggressively pursue more people to work in providing care for seniors. In fact, the minister of health has a good workforce strategy in place, and we'll continue our efforts to attract more people to Alberta to work in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier didn't talk about what's going to happen to the nursing staff at the Holy Cross now that the Calgary regional health authority has terminated its long-term care contract. We don't want vague generalizations, Mr. Premier, about what the government's doing in the future. We want specific answers. There's going to be the closing of a number of important beds, laying off staff. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's an administrative matter, and the minister will deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no question that the need for nurses and other health care professionals in this province is very definitely there. There will be no problem at all for anyone who was employed with the long-term care portion of the facility at the Holy Cross to find other positions, if that's what they wish to do, within the Calgary health region or other health regions in the province. So there is no potential of losing those important health care professionals in this province unless their desire is to go somewhere else. That's not the issue.

The issue here is that the Calgary health region saw an issue with respect to the quality of care and took appropriate steps on a timely basis to deal with it. That's what we should be looking at and saying that this is the system the way it should operate. There was an issue identified with respect to quality of care and safety. There was oversight to see whether or not that issue was going to be fixed, and when it wasn't fixed to their satisfaction, they dealt with it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, we get these long-winded answers that sort of go around the issue. The basic question is that there's a loss of 42 long-term care beds because of this government's fascination and flirtation with private health care delivery. Will the minister tell us what he's going to do to replace those 42 long-term beds, and will he admit that privatized health care creates nothing but problems and headaches?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there is a long tradition of very competent private care as well as public care as well as nongovernmental organization care in the long-term system in this province. All three methods have been proven effective in terms of providing long-term care. That's not the issue. Yes, there are 42 beds that have been taken out of service, but I doubt that this hon. member would suggest that those 42 beds should stay in service. What we really need to be doing and what this minister is doing is working with the Calgary health authority and other regions in the province to make sure that we have the quality of long-term care that's needed for senior citizens in our province and for others who need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Rural Alberta Development Fund

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. In 2006 all of rural Alberta was excited when the province announced the $100 million rural Alberta's development fund. Sadly, though, I understand that to date not one project has been approved under this fund. To the minister: what is taking so long for this fund to be operational?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, this fund has $100 million in it for expenditure over a three-year period. It has had $206 million worth of applications. Recently, in meeting with the members of the fund management team, which is arm's length from government, they advised that they have approved about $2 million worth of projects. The difficulty is that this is not for refurbishment of arenas or parks or rebuilding some of the facilities in Alberta; it is about dealing with new and innovative approaches.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. There have been many expressions of interest submitted. In fact, last month at the AAMD and C convention the very first question during the ministerial forum focused on when rural Albertans and rural organizations can expect to see funded projects from this fund. Can the minister let us know when they can expect further funded projects?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I understand that it'll probably be very shortly. One of the difficulties in reviewing the projects is that frequently they infringe on the perspective of not being able to fund projects in major urban cities, even though they may be benefiting rural communities. It infringes on the issue of capital projects. Many of the projects have dealt with both capital and operating funds. Finally, a very important criteria is that these projects should be able to stand alone, without government departments taking over the fund requirements in future, without them being a pothole filler.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is also to the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. This morning as I met with Brazeau county council in Drayton Valley, I learned that a few applications have recently been turned down. Could the minister please outline the qualifications and expectations desired for an application to be approved under this fund?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, one of the things I could state for all hon. members is that if they have questions, they could consult with the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, who is taking a lead role in liaising with my department on the projects that could be assured to be approved. Several of them include those projects to benefit seniors, to benefit youth, to engage the participation of aboriginals in communities, to support economic development. The criteria further expand to talk about facilitating opportunities to access rural health services and expanding learning and skill development services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Stephanie Butler Homicide

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the city of Edmonton was once again in shock and disbelief at another horrific act of violence, the city's ninth homicide of the year. One young woman is dead, a distraught husband is in mourning, and an elderly cab driver is severely beaten. The culprit, a repeat violent offender addicted to crystal meth with outstanding warrants, went from being in police custody 48 hours prior to committing murder and aggravated assault. To the Solicitor General: given that the accused in this situation was in police custody only two days prior to committing violent crimes, will the minister utilize the provisions of section 46.1 of the Police Act to conduct an investigation into this incident to determine what went wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me say that this is a very tragic event, and our thoughts and prayers are certainly going out to the families involved. The question as to whether this is going to become a 46.1 or not is presently being investigated by the Edmonton city police. This case will soon be before the courts, and I will not make any further comments at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The accused in this tragic case had a very long history of addiction to drugs and mental instability as well as outstanding warrants. That should have been enough to hold him in custody. What is obvious in this situation is that producing $300 in bail and a court order to stay away from his brother's house were not even close to being the measures necessary to protect Stephanie Butler and the cab driver. The actions taken were not adequate. There was clear risk. To the Minister of Justice: will the minister commit to a public fatality inquiry into the circumstances that led the justice of the peace to release the accused on only $300 bail and the said court order when these conditions were so obviously not enough to prevent this from happening?

1:50

Mr. Stevens: Well, as the Solicitor General rightly pointed out, Mr. Speaker, this matter is before the court. It's totally inappropriate for me as Minister of Justice and Attorney General to respond to that question.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a glaring problem in this province, and that is the lack of resources available to the police to enforce the conditions of court orders. Time and again the Official Opposition has raised the problem of inadequate police funding, particularly for Alberta's major cities. The government has failed to respond to these concerns, and they continue to fail to recognize that the funding formula needs to be re-evaluated due to population increases and a dramatic increase and escalation in violent crimes. Everyone knows that the police need more resources, everyone but this Tory government. To the Solicitor General: when will the minister commit to reviewing the funding formula for cities with populations over 100,000 and request raising it from the meagre $16 per capita that it's currently at?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to funding for police agencies, I do want to point out that over the last two years funding has increased by 20 per cent and has resulted in over 200 new RCMP officers out on the street. In regard to cities and those funding formulas, we are currently reviewing that. If we see a need to change, we will do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Barley Marketing

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the federal minister of agriculture announced the results of the federal barley plebiscite. Not surprisingly, almost 80 per cent of Alberta's barley farmers who responded actually voted to end the monopoly currently held on the barley market by the Canadian Wheat Board. Alberta's barley producers have long been advocates for marketing choice when it comes to wheat and barley. My question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: what do the results of this plebiscite mean to Alberta's barley producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. The results certainly show that a strong and clear majority of Albertans and western Canadian producers have chosen to have the option of selling their barley in an open market. These results have given the federal government an even stronger mandate to now move ahead and open Canada's barley market to choice. Farmers can now expect to have the option to move their own barley if they wish.

Mr. Prins: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the same minister. I understand that he recently met with the federal minister of agriculture. Did the federal minister give you any indication of the timeline for which we can expect these changes to occur?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you. Yes, I did have the pleasure of having my first meeting with Minister Strahl last Monday in Red Deer. The minister assured me that the federal government is taking immediate action to work through the regulations to open the barley market for marketing choice. Barley farmers can now expect to work in an open market by August 1 of this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell the House what choices or options will be available to the 22 per cent of barley farmers who actually voted against choice, basically to retain the single desk? What choices do they have?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, throughout the entire process the government of Alberta has always maintained that there be a strong role for the Canadian Wheat Board in marketing choice environment. With the results now in, it's time to work together, I think, and strengthen the barley marketing system. The Canadian Wheat Board must take their experience and turn it into a success for an open market. Those who choose to market their barley through the Canadian Wheat Board will have the opportunity to continue to do so, as they always have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Crystal Methamphetamine

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Youth addictions affect families across our province, yet little has been done by the government to ensure that this critical problem is addressed. The Premier's Task Force on Crystal Meth recommended that the province create 300 new addictions, detox, and treatment beds. This is a pressing issue, yet in the seven months since the report was released, no new youth detox or treatment beds have been announced. Can the Minister of Children's Services tell us why this government has yet to even begin to meet the target set out by the task force?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that we are working with Health on this particular issue. I do believe that this falls under the responsibility of the minister of health.

Mrs. Mather: All right. Thank you. It was recently reported that parents looking for public addictions treatment for their children have to wait a minimum of six weeks before treatment is available. This is an unreasonable period of time for parents to wait to receive help for their endangered children. Can the minister of health please explain why nothing has been done to address these unreasonable wait times?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is indeed an area of very significant concern to this minister and to this government and, I think, to all Albertans. If we want to have a society where our children can grow up in safety, in safe and caring school environments and in safe and caring communities, we do need to be able to deal with the drug-addiction issues.

The scenario that requires a lot more work is the crystal meth strategy you pointed out, but I would say that it's broader than just the crystal meth strategy. It has to deal with the whole use of illicit drugs and the issue of how it impacts our children. I'm working with other departments in a multidepartment process to review the crystal meth strategy, and I'll be bringing forward some proposals relative to what we might do in that area very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Task Force on Crystal Meth made 23 recommendations specifically linked to addictions prevention. Prevention is a critical part of any addiction strategy since it can prevent the negative consequences of addiction that are affecting youth across this province. Other recommendations made by the task force have been ignored, so can the Minister of Children's Services please tell us if the report made by the Premier's Task Force on Crystal Meth is just another in a long line of reports that have been shelved by this government, never to be seen again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I will refer to the minister responsible.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I just indicated in my last question, it's not being ignored. In fact, as soon as it was delivered, a committee of deputies across government was put together to look at the impact of it. That has now landed on my desk, and we will be bringing forward strategies immediately. This is a very significant issue, a very significant concern for this minister and this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Graduated Drivers' Licences

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have expressed concern over the number of young drivers who seem to be involved in serious collisions on our roads. Over the Easter weekend there was tragic rollover involving as many as nine teenagers in a minivan. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. What is the minister doing to make sure that Alberta's graduated drivers' licensing program is effective?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the accident over the weekend was a tragedy, and as a parent my heart goes out to the families of those young people involved.

It's been three years since we started the graduated drivers' licence program in Alberta, and we said when we started it that we would review our progress and make changes as necessary. So we've hired an independent national research company to evaluate our program for new drivers and recommend any changes, and I expect to have the report out by this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a mother from Fort Saskatchewan is calling on the government to immediately suspend the licence of any young driver who is involved in a serious injury collision. Will the minister consider making this change?

Mr. Ouellette: As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, we're reviewing the program and are committed to making whatever changes are reasonable and appropriate. I'm not aware of any jurisdiction in North America that immediately suspends the licence of a graduated driver that's been charged with a serious collision. The registrar of motor vehicles can refer any driver at any time to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board for review of their driving privileges, and the transportation board can suspend, if need be, at any time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Other provinces have set the age limit for acquiring a learner's permit at 16, and Saskatchewan sets the age at 15. To the same minister: will the minister consider raising the age for acquiring a learner's permit from 14 years to 16 years of age?

Mr. Ouellette: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker, that no one is allowed to drive by themselves under 16 years old in Alberta. A 14-year-old can get a learner's permit, but they must have a fully licensed driver in the car with them that is over 18 years of age. I'm not sure, until the report comes in – and we want to look at that report – why this hon. member would not like to have a young driver get more experience before they can drive alone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

2:00 Resource Development in Marie Lake Area

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Marie Lake is a recreational gem in northeastern Alberta but is rapidly becoming a defining issue for Albertans who care about values beyond the exploitation of oil sands. Many of us have had contact from citizens in the Edmonton area and across the province appalled at the poor process which allows land auction underneath lakes, seismic activity at noise levels that could damage fish, and oil sands development that risks not only the water quality but also the entire unique habitat. To the Environment minister: what is the Environment minister doing to ensure that greed does not destroy this unique recreational area and pristine habitat?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've addressed this question in the past from another member. The role of Environment in this particular case is very limited. Our responsibility is to ensure that the ecosystem itself, the lake bed, is not disturbed and that the air quality is not impaired. So from that perspective, if there is no dynamite that's involved, if there's no drilling of the lake bed that's involved, then Alberta Environment is not involved, and it would fall under SRD to make the decision with respect to the fish life in the lake.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Energy minister. Unlike federal lands, provincial lands have no public review before mineral leases are going to auction. How open and accountable is a government when the public have to learn about such developments only after the land is already auctioned?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not exactly the case. The province of Alberta does have a committee, the Crown Mineral Disposition Review Committee, established in the province of Alberta in 1974. It has been in place and active since that point in time, and there is a prereview done of any mineral lease sales before they're actually posted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Environment minister. Your department continues to reassure people that the science is in and that all is safe. The public, however, know that only since last year have you been monitoring groundwater for gas contamination around the province, and everyone knows that you have less than .5 per cent of the provincial budget with a fraction of the staff you had a decade ago. How can Albertans believe that this pitifully funded department can stand up for the environment against such multibillion-dollar investment?

Mr. Renner: Well, it's an interesting segue, I must admit, Mr. Speaker. I fail to see the connection between the first two questions.

The fact of the matter is that, again, I've answered this question in the past. I feel that as Minister of Environment I'm more than capable of protecting the environment. As for the adequacy of my budget, I encourage the member to hold off until we introduce the budget, and we'll deal with it at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Early Childhood Education

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's high school graduation rate is dead last amongst Canada's 10 provinces. This is an embarrassment for Alberta and a deeply troubling statistic for every parent and student in the school system today. There is abundant evidence to demonstrate that an investment in a child's first years of education greatly increases the likelihood of success in high school. I'd like to ask the Education minister when he would acknowledge this fact and institute full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten as an option for all Alberta parents with young children today.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of early learning opportunities was one that the Premier recognized long before the Member for Edmonton-Calder. It is in my mandate letter, and we will be dealing with it. I would ask the hon. member to just hold off till the budget comes out, and we'll see if it's dealt with in a financial way at that time.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, we've seen successive Education ministers use the same excuse – wait for the budget; tune in – and always we're left with nothing.

Two of the highest ranked recommendations in the Learning Commission for effectiveness and value for money were full-day kindergarten and junior-years kindergarten. Alberta families deserve to be able to choose high-quality education for their children, and it's the responsibility of this government to provide them. I'd like to ask the minister: as it stands today, do you think that parents are going to choose between a high-quality, publicly funded junior kindergarten or a private daycare in a strip mall? Is that the choice that you're leaving for them now?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd hardly call $5 billion a year nothing. Let's get it on the record that this government spends more on education than any other provincial government, including the member's socialist government in Saskatchewan. So let's get that straight.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, maybe the hon. minister should go back to social studies and realize that it's not a socialist government in Saskatchewan. Maybe we could pick up some good ideas from them nonetheless.

Full-day kindergarten projects run by Edmonton public schools have been very successful. The trend in all modern, leading jurisdictions around the world is to offer at least two years of early childhood education before grade school. Alberta families should expect nothing short of the best. Doesn't this minister think that all young Alberta students should be offered this advantage, or are the words "modern" and "leading" not descriptions that the minister would use to describe his vision of education?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, our focus is going to be on those children that need the assistance: the mild and moderate learning disabilities. That's where our focus will be. Again, I ask the hon. member to wait for the budget, and I hope he'll be pleasantly surprised.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Regional Municipal Funding

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently entities such as the SPCA, the Royal Alberta Museum, the Alberta Art Gallery, and the Citadel Theatre, who are undertaking large infrastructure projects, have approached our provincial government and the city of Edmonton for substantial funding. These facilities without a doubt provide a valuable service not only to Edmontonians but to all residents of the capital region. However, little if any funding is provided for these projects by jurisdictions outside of the city of Edmonton. As such, Edmontonians pay disproportionately for these projects, twice, through their provincial and then municipal taxes. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Since the issue of regional . . .

The Speaker: Well, unfortunately, that's it.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure what the question would be, but I can tell you that my advice to municipalities, of course, is to communicate, collaborate, and co-operate. The Premier has committed $1.4 billion to assist municipalities with the growth pressures and the infrastructure needs that they do have.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Oh, just to be a Speaker for a minute.

Mr. Speaker, I have two supplementals, which I'm going to use effectively. My first and second questions to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: since the issue of regional co-operation has been studied ad nauseam with little voluntary co-operation from the municipalities, why won't the minister intervene and impose an intermunicipal funding formula for such regional projects as mentioned by me before?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I needed to say before that I think it's very important that there is co-operation between municipalities, and they know best what their needs are. The $1.4 billion that has been committed is very important for the predictability and sustainability of municipalities. I want to say that it is those local municipalities and their choices in the direction of their priorities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will I be able to assure Edmontonians that their municipal property taxes are being spent on snow removal, pothole repairs, public transportation, and on their fair share of their municipal projects rather than subsidizing regional projects?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, it is the local municipalities' responsibility to identify their projects and to work with municipalities. From that, I want to say, as my previous colleague: stay tuned for the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

2:10 Licensing of Land Agents

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Land Agents Licensing Act creates an unbalanced playing field for those who are bound by its provisions. The act creates an unbalanced playing field, favouring the oil and gas industry over individual landowners. This was clear in the Provincial Court decision issued on March 30, 2007, in Vegreville in the case between the province of Alberta and Raymond Strom. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why does this act favour the oil and gas industry over individual landowners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that the act and the land agent issue and the way it had developed in the first instance was to protect landowners from some – some – unscrupulous agents that posed themselves as land agents and were creating a problem with respect to landowners' rights. I think that in the first place the legislation, the act that went forward, was a good piece of legislation that was put in place to protect landowners. As it has evolved, there have been some problems and questions with respect to that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry, who is in charge of the act: what chance do landowners have of negotiating a fair deal with adequate compensation when the act prevents them from hiring someone who has their interest in mind?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, recently before the courts there was an application by somebody who has been denied his capacity to continue in the fashion. I believe there was a fine administered of about $517. That individual has an opportunity to appeal to a higher court. While that appeal period is open, I think it would be totally wrong for me to make any comment at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It just didn't apply there.

Again to the same minister: when will this flawed legislation be amended to allow individuals to advise and represent their friends and neighbours during negotiations for surface rights leases or utility rights-of-way?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, at such time as we have passed the appeal period, I will provide opportunities for caucus to further discuss the issue.

Fibre Road Map Study

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the sustainability of the agriculture and forestry industries is of great importance to economic development in rural Alberta. Both of those sectors are facing very real challenges right now. Last year the government commissioned a fibre road map study to examine new ways of stimulating development of biologically based industry throughout the province. My question is for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can the minister tell Albertans in the agriculture and forestry sectors when the fibre road map study will be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fibre road map study which the hon. member refers to gave some very serious consideration to some innovative strategies to utilize research and the infrastructure that we have in the province for research and the skilled labour force. It was developed over the course of a year with input from more than 200 industry, academia, and government participants, and it was presented to government in January of this year. A cross-ministry team is now giving consideration to all of the recommendations regarding the attraction of research and development investments, regarding the transformation of the pulp and paper sector, regarding transformation of building systems in the sector, cultivating the rural entrepreneurship that we're going to need in feedstock production and the biorefining capacity as it relates to agriculture. Many of these things are ongoing.

Dr. Brown: To the same minister: when will Albertans in the agriculture and forestry sectors begin to see some tangible results from that study?

Mr. Horner: I'd say, Mr. Speaker, that we are already starting to see some of the results coming from this cross-ministry initiative in terms of the research and development. We've already initiated some projects, some policy changes to reduce risk and stimulate the growth of value-added products and other sectors and services in new business opportunities in rural and urban Alberta that are involved in agriculture as well as the fibre industry and the forestry sector. We are also supporting the industry by way of the information and the communication that is going on from this cross-ministry research team. We are focusing our research and our applied research based on the consultation with the over 200 participants.

Dr. Brown: My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. I wonder if the minister could advise the House what plans his ministry has to salvage the mountain pine beetle killed fibre that is present in Alberta's forests.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're looking at improving the utilization not just of the fibre from pine beetle killed wood but from all wood. Enhanced fibre usage is key to the competitiveness of our forest industry. My ministry has been consulting, working with the other minister here on research and development and also with the industry. There's a report coming forward shortly on industry competitiveness, and I look forward to sharing the recommendations in that report with the members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are about early childhood education. I want to just go back to the minister and ask him. He was saying earlier that in his ministry early childhood education was not on his to-do list. I think I heard him say very clearly today that it is on his to-do list, and we will receive money in the budget. Is that correct, sir?

Mr. Liepert: Two things were wrong with that question, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I did not say that there was going to be money in the budget. I said that we anticipate looking forward to the budget. Secondly, I would like to correct the hon. member. I did not say that early childhood education was not on my to-do list. I said that taking full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten back to my caucus was not on my to-do list.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, I'm now confused. Mr. Minister, you have a wonderful background in intervention, and I'm just wondering. There are studies galore by Jenson, Patterson, and so forth that suggest that early education programs will improve achievement testing, which you people are proud of, decrease grade repetition, and that special needs placements will be much better. Is it the position of this government that the costs of funding full-day and junior kindergarten outweigh the benefits that they provide for children getting the program? Does avoiding it provide benefits for the children that are not getting it?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, currently there are a number of school boards throughout the province that have some full-day kindergarten programs in place. School boards are doing this with the intent of evaluating it. I think that will be valuable information when we get it. I'm not convinced – and I believe that that was the feeling of our caucus – that we are ready to move on full-day kindergarten and junior kindergarten at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government often claims that it is up to school boards to figure out how to use the funds they are given, but without adequate funding school boards are often forced to make tough decisions and cut even beneficial programs. The Alberta Learning Commission supports the funding for junior and full-day kindergarten, so why won't the government? Can the minister tell us if he will lobby for adequate education funding so that school boards can afford to implement valuable early education programs across Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I come back to the fact that we spend $5 billion on education, and 97 per cent of that $5 billion flows to school boards. I believe that school boards have adequate resources to provide the services that they're providing. I've said on many occasions – and I think many Albertans agree with me – that we have one of the best education systems in the world, so for this hon. member to say that somehow our education system is underfunded is simply not correct.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Chronic Wasting Disease Control

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been hearing a lot recently about a major action against chronic wasting disease in wild deer along the border with Saskatchewan. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister tell this Assembly what the results are of his department's recent deer cull?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:20

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sustainable Resource Development staff have just completed a major initiative during the month of March along the Saskatchewan border as part of our chronic wasting disease control program. Our research indicated that it would be prudent to reduce the population of deer in two high-risk disease control areas. These areas were where infected deer had been identified during last fall's hunting season. In the control area near Empress our staff removed 449 wild deer and found three positive cases of CWD. In the second control area near Chauvin, east of Wainwright, we removed 1,400 deer and are waiting for the test results from those deer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. First supplemental to the same minister: why are we doing this cull? Is this a communicable disease?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want you to know that I was not happy to order this cull, but it was a question of risk management, and this government manages risk responsibly. Chronic wasting disease affects the nervous system of deer and elk. Infected animals cannot gain weight – they waste away – and an infected animal always dies. In certain jurisdictions where this disease has gotten out of control, 1 out of 3 deer is infected. We need to take drastic action to keep deer populations low in the high-risk areas, which will help prevent the spread of CWD. I repeat: nobody in my ministry derives any satisfaction from this cull, but we must manage this risk in a responsible manner, and we will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. Final question to the same minister: is it dangerous for hunters and others to eat the meat from deer infected with chronic wasting disease?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no scientific evidence to suggest that this disease can affect humans, but we strongly advise against human consumption of meat from infected animals. The World Health Organization advises against allowing any products from these animals known to be infected with chronic wasting disease to enter the human food chain. We are following this advice on the meat from the deer that we have collected, and we will only allow the meat from deer confirmed not to have the disease to be made available for food distribution.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 11 grade 5 students from the Edmonton Khalsa school from my wonderful riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie, accompanied by their teacher, Ravinae Deol. They are seated in the public gallery. I want to thank them for coming to the Legislature. I request them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Gavel-to-gavel Streaming of Assembly Proceedings

The Speaker: Hon. members, might I advise once again that effective today there's gavel-to-gavel coverage, audio and video, of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, so the rest of the proceedings this afternoon until 6 o'clock, as every day until 6 o'clock, will be covered live on the Internet. Television will be leaving us very, very shortly, but citizens out there who may be watching and want to continue watching the dedicated, hard work of their elected representatives in this Chamber may do so on their computers via the Internet.

Second Reading

Bill 15
Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution
Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 15, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Amendment Act, 2007.

Mr. Speaker, in 1998 I stood before this House and talked about the desperate pleas of a woman who was trying to save her daughter from a life of despair, violence, and sexual abuse. Hearing countless stories and witnessing the brutality and injustice that these children endure led me to bring forward the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act.

Since its introduction in 1999 the act has been hugely successful. Over 770 children have been helped to leave the street behind. They have received the support they need to deal with drug and alcohol addiction, histories of sexual and physical abuse, and feelings of worthlessness. Even though the legislation has been extremely successful, it's now time to take what we have learned over the past eight years and update this act. The proposed amendments are a direct result of what we heard from youth who have survived sexual exploitation as well as their families, front-line workers, and the police.

In November 2005 I held a symposium to hear their wisdom, their experiences, their successes, and their challenges. They told us that this legislation was working but needed to be updated to continue to meet their needs. To give you an idea of what this legislation has meant to sexually exploited children, you only have to listen to the stories of those who have been helped.

One young lady, who had been apprehended during the early days of the legislation, told us the heart-wrenching story of how she ended up on the streets at 12 years old. She thought she would be better off on the streets than staying in her abusive home, but it didn't turn out that way. She told us that this legislation had literally saved her life. This was the first time, Mr. Speaker, she had ever told anyone her story. This young lady told us how much it meant to her to be able to look out into the room and see respect and support and not judgment. There was not a dry eye in the house. Her story along with the stories of other children at this symposium outline how important it is for us to make changes to the act.

The nature of child sexual exploitation has changed over the years and so has the language used to describe it. We no longer talk about child prostitution but about the sexual exploitation of children and youth. Youth have told us that they have resisted asking for help because the word "prostitution" is an extremely negative term. They don't see themselves as child prostitutes, and neither do we. We need to change the name of the act to reflect these realities. The renamed Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act reinforces that children are not prostitutes. They are being exploited, and they are being abused.

Sexually exploited youth face a long and difficult road in leaving this abuse behind, and many need more time to deal with the complex issues that many of them face. Youth told us that they fear turning 18 because it means an end to the critical supports they need to protect themselves from sexual exploitation. This fact was driven home when one of the youth at the symposium explained that it was her 17th birthday, and she was scared to death that she wasn't going to be ready to deal with the issues that had caused her to be on the streets. She needed more time to ensure that she would be safe and be able to be safe on the streets. We will address these fears by continuing to provide voluntary services to those who need it until the age of 22. This will allow youth currently receiving services to complete treatment programs and help them end their involvement in prostitution.

We also need to better protect sexually exploited youth from public identification and the resulting stigma. The publication ban would be extended beyond identifying a child involved in court proceedings. Publishing any information that may identify a child who is receiving or has received services under this act would be prohibited. This brings this legislation in line with the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act.

Amending the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act will help us provide better services and support to Alberta children, youth, and families, and I ask all members to support this very important piece of legislation. Your support will mean a safe and promising future for some of Alberta's most vulnerable children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I look at Bill 15, PCHIP Amendment Act, I wonder: how do we deal in law with issues of sexuality in a pluralistic, secular, and market-driven society? Since the federal Criminal Code was amended in 1968, many practices that were once taboo and illegal have been decriminalized and are now readily available for a price. We need only go online or watch television after hours to see the range of polyamorous encounters, photo and video ops, and the opportunity to live one's dream or fantasy without direct human contact and in the privacy of one's home.

These are not the grainy, unsavoury productions associated with pornography in the era in which I grew up. Some even document the family lives of the participants. And the clients and service providers are not the sordid types we once imagined. Many are professional individuals and couples. This appears to be a self-contained, self-regulating market, and we are often led to believe that those who choose not to subscribe to such erotica have no place or right to intrude on its availability to those who do. Morality, we're reminded, is a private matter.

Child pornography is something else. Young and prepubescent children do not choose this milieu themselves. It is inconceivable that those in the trade would subject their own children to it. It is hard to imagine how anyone of decency and compassion would choose to avail themselves of it.

The well-being of children is one area where a common morality still applies and where the full weight of the law is used, with public support, to restrain and punish misdemeanors. However, there is a grey zone where later adolescents who are still legally children are concerned. Although there is ample evidence of coercion in many cases, we cannot simply conclude that all minors in the sex trade are victimized.

Adolescents work in a number of jobs that are not particularly desirable, yet we do not intervene to prohibit them. How, then, can we address the issue of girls and boys, young women and men who are minors in the sex trades on a basis that is rooted in social realities and is not hypocritical or moralistic? I believe there are three bases on which we can approach this issue. The first two are those of risk and knowledgeable choice for the young participants. The third is a heightened level of sanctions for those of legal age who seek them out and patronize them.

On the first count, we recognize that there are certain jobs that entail hazards – mental, physical, emotional, and even mortal – that are not defensible for youth and may not even be appropriate for those in early adulthood. A police force will not send a stripling to work undercover with organized crime. A paint shop foreman would not send a young employee to handle hazardous chemicals. A responsible sales manager should not send raw recruits into a situation where they will be exposed to ridicule, harassment, and other emotional abuse. The fact that these are bonafide jobs from a legal perspective and that young workers do find themselves in these positions from time to time does not legitimize the practice.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the questionable aspects of the three job examples I've just cited – exposure to organized crime, hazardous chemicals, and emotional abuse – are risks to those who enter the sex trade. Unless we are prepared as an Assembly and as a society to intervene proactively to eliminate or at least regulate those risks in all jobs in which they occur, we must at least act firmly to close such jobs to those most vulnerable in them. This is not attempting to legislate personal morality. It is setting a basic standard for public safety, mental and emotional health, and a more humane society.

For the same reason that we justify intervening legally to minimize risks, I believe the case can be made that the young do not have sufficient experience and competence to make an informed choice to enter the sex trades. This is a type of life experience that many of us who are older can be said to lack too. However, by reason of our years and second-hand knowledge of society we are able to seek out and consult with those who are aware and informed and could help us to reach an informed decision. Such networking is not available to most minors other than on the streets themselves. A next of kin or guardian approval is required to give consent to certain medical treatments for both young and old, who may not fully grasp the circumstances of the choice they are making. These conditions may apply to sex trade work for the young as well.

The third grounds for action I propose may not be in our capacity to enact. I'm referring to deterrent measures against so-called adults who seek out and avail themselves of underage sex trade workers. I'm aware that many shame-the-johns campaigns have not been highly effective. I wonder, however, whether narrowly targeted exposure of adults who sexually use the young could be more effective. I understand that such users include those whose social and professional status would be seriously threatened by publicity.

I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that pursuing this line of thought is not intended as much to humiliate as to deter those who may currently be engaged in or contemplating sex with the underaged. To any in this situation that my words may reach, I emphasize that using a minor as an extra in one's private fantasies is not an activity that should be condoned by the free market or permitted under law. Likewise, to any who dispute that those minors in the sex trades are competent to make that choice, I reply that being able to satisfy someone's fetish or fantasy does not make them more qualified.

We need to deal not with fantasies but realities here. It is my wish that this bill and this approach may be a step in that direction, and I look forward to the opportunity to look at it more specifically and in detail.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and if there are additional members, if they would advise.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I commend the member because I think this is an important bill, Bill 15. I know that there has been a lot of discussion with groups that are involved with people in prostitution awareness – I'm thinking of Kate Quinn and others – and they think this goes a long way in terms of trying to deal with a very serious issue.

The statistics are rather frightening to me when we see what's going on. From the Children's Services website we notice that 10 to 12 per cent of those involved in street prostitution out on the streets are children, and 85 per cent of children involved in prostitution were sexually abused prior to becoming involved. The average age that children become involved in prostitution for a female is 15 years and for a male 17 years, so we begin to see from those statistics the reason for Bill 15.

Mr. Speaker, we also notice from the John Howard Society that the factors that lead children into prostitution are sexual and physical abuse at home, forcing children into the streets as an escape mechanism, and the lack of money and work skills. Once out in the streets it's the only viable option. It's often interrelated – which comes first? – but the trade often leads to substance abuse in children, and oftentimes children will engage in prostitution to acquire drugs. It's not only in this area. In talking to the police chief in Edmonton, the bulk of crime in the city, property crimes and other ones, has to do with addictions in the city, so these things are all interrelated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I say, this bill, I think, goes some way in dealing with the issue. Number one, it strengthens the privacy regulations by ensuring that no child or guardian can be identified if they have come under the care of the ministry. This is an important change because previously privacy regulation would only be applicable during legal proceedings. If you don't have the privacy written into the act, it becomes harder to deal with the people there.

It changes the immediate point of contact for the children during detention from legal aid to child and youth advocates, who are better trained to deal with the issues that might arise from such situations.

Most importantly, going by the figures that I indicated in the past – and this was sort of a key provision, I think – the bill extends from 18 to 22 the age up to which children can continue to receive services provided through the ministry. Given that there is no cut-off point at which a child becomes an adult, the extension of these services represents a strong component in the recovery and protection of those abused. We know of cases where kids who are eight or nine are out in the streets, and unfortunately they say in the trade that more and more people are looking for younger kids. So we see the need to extend this because people may be just getting their act together somewhat, and then all of a sudden, whether it be addictions or dealing with the issue, they're 18, and they're cut off. So I think this is a very important part of this act.

I think the name change to the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act is an important point because this is what this bill is all about, Mr. Speaker.

Now, no one is going to say that bringing one bill in, Bill 15, is going to solve all the problems, but I think it is an important step if we're going to begin to try to deal with what is a growing problem. For those of us that work in the inner city or know of the inner city, we know that it is a growing problem. There are more and more young people out there, Mr. Speaker, and we're just basically losing some of them. This bill, I think, is a start in terms of trying to deal with a very serious issue, so certainly the NDP caucus supports this bill in a very strong way and are glad that it's coming forward.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available for questions to the hon. member.

There being none, then I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to pay homage and recognition to my hon. colleague for bringing forth this legislation. I'll begin rather generically and then get into the specifics.

As a father, grandfather, teacher of 34 years, primarily at the junior high level, and it's at the junior high level where the prostitution recruiting usually begins, I have been frustrated at times – unfortunately, not a number of times – trying to get help for children who are being threatened within their homes, whether it's by verbal abuse, physical abuse, or physical abuse of a sexual nature. Unless you can basically provide an example of the type of bruising, either emotional or physical, that is taking place, getting help for that child is often very difficult.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview pointed out previously, a number of these students – well, children; they were students – who find themselves out on the street came from an abusive circumstance at home. They sought escape by getting out onto the street, and that did not provide them with the escape they were looking for. Instead of their father or their mother doing the abuse, they became, basically, servants of a trade that they had no desire to enter into in the first place.

When my Calgary colleagues and I last spring took part in the homeless count, we did come across a number of students, children, in the count, and I know that there are a number of agencies – in Calgary, for example, the McMan group – that try to provide a protective circumstance, a home for children who are potentials for abuse on the street, whether it's sexual or physical. The fact that the government is willing to amend legislation and take on a greater role is very encouraging.

I do have concerns, however, and they are very similar to the concerns I had with regard to the children affected by crystal meth addiction. You can recall in our ongoing debate that the Member for Red Deer-North initially suggested that we have a 90-day treatment. Then, unfortunately, it was amended and reduced to the point where it became five days, and it basically became a voluntary circumstance. We also debated last year legislation for removing children from crystal meth homes. My concern is that these are terrible places, and we definitely want to remove the children from them, but we have to have a secure, caring, regulated environment to put the children into. The hon. Member for Edmonton Mill-Woods pointed out in question period the shortage of treatment beds, for example, for drug-affected children.

We've read horror stories in the Edmonton Journal about a young aboriginal girl who was under provincial protection in a foster home circumstance. We've also had a number of questions brought up about how available foster parenting is in this particular province, which is facing so many demands. I am hoping that as part of this bill there will be funding set aside to establish the type of protective, loving, and secure environment that we would want for our own children. I haven't specifically seen that legislation.

Now to go from the general to the more specific. What this bill does accomplish is better legal representation. Previously the legislation directed basically handing out the number for legal aid. The amendments will instead direct apprehended children and youth toward legal representation for children and youth, a legal body within the office of the children's advocate. The children's advocate website states:

- The LRCY program will serve children and youth from birth to age 18.

I'm pleased to see the extension to age 18.

- The service will be accessible from anywhere in the province.
- The program is focused on providing a youth friendly, consistent service.

That goes to my earlier concern about the consistency of the funding for which the service will be provided. Stakeholders have suggested that this is a positive switch given that legal aid offices often don't specialize in youth issues. This switch will also put youth into immediate contact with the children's advocate's office, which may lead them to seek advocacy and learn more about self-advocacy.

I'm very aware of the different maturity levels of students. I've had extremely mature grade 6 students who could produce magnificent research reports, hold wonderful discussions in class, excellent presentations. They had terrific maturity. But I've also seen the reverse. I've seen grade 9 students who from their outward appearance appeared to be young men and young women, but their judgment capacities were extremely limited based on their false physical outward appearances.

The other positive step that Bill 15 takes and another reason for supporting it is the increased protection of privacy. The amendments to the PCHIP provide the same degrees of privacy protection that are offered under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, so it's drawing it all under that act. This is a positive step, which will protect children's privacy and could potentially improve their chances of transitioning out of prostitution.

There are also provisions that allow publication of personal details if the individual approves them or if it's decided to be in the child's best interest. By publication I'm assuming that it's of a medical nature with professionals for whom the information would be part of the overall treatment.

It also provides increased access to services. The amendment extends services to youth beyond the age of 18 in order to provide better supports during the transition into adulthood. We don't make the assumption that at 18, because of your age, you're now an adult. There is a transition period, which a number of youth will hopefully be able to take advantage of.

Services past the initial five days are voluntary and include such things as addictions treatment, counselling, health services, and training. There is a recognition, in the voluntary nature, that by age 18 you have some responsibilities and that you, with guidance, should be able to make more wise choices.

With regard to the change in terminology, the terminology of the bill will now reflect that children involved in prostitution are sexually exploited. This also is a positive step in the text, but the change in title is somewhat misleading since the act does not assist all sexually exploited children. This is what I was referring to earlier when I talked about children sexually abused in their own homes. We need as representatives of Albertans to foster a much more child-friendly and loving environment. While this will address those on the street, obviously we also need to address where the origin of the problem occurred, and that's within the home itself. The new title, as such, misrepresents the bill.

Inclusion of the terms "sexual abuse" and "sexual exploitation" into the act is a valuable step that recognizes the reality of the children's circumstances, but the title of the amended bill is somewhat misleading. The intention of this bill is not and will not be the protection of all sexually exploited children but, rather, a small subset of sexually exploited children. As I pointed out, the majority of the exploitation occurs in the home, which drives the children to the streets, where they become further victimized. While the name change is likely well intentioned, possibly through an amendment we could have it more accurately reflect its intention.

PCHIP also focuses on apprehending the victim, not the offender. PCHIP has some token punishments for offenders, but the Criminal Code offers much stronger sanctions. At its core this act still apprehends and confines children who are being sexually exploited through prostitution. Within that confinement – and this is at the heart of the issue for me and for my support for the bill – is that we come up with the most positive, protective, supportive environment that we possibly can have once these children are apprehended. Although once they're into junior high school and high school their lives and their courses are to a large degree set, hopefully we can change the course that brought them out into the street and abused them in the first place.

PCHIP is not preventative. It is widely documented that the majority of children involved in prostitution have been previously sexually abused. This act makes services available after the situation is already very severe. Better services for children, family, and communities early on would possibly prevent children from being exposed to even more sexual exploitation through prostitution. That is a matter of going right into the school circumstance and, as part of health programs, explaining to students what type of activities are not acceptable nor should they be exposed to so that they have an opportunity early on in the process to seek help within the school from a teacher, from a counsellor, from a member of the administration.

Further isolation of the target group. It's been reported that PCHIP may have sent children involved in prostitution underground to avoid apprehension. This has meant that those offering supports and services outside of PCHIP can no longer give the support they once could. It's difficult to say how much of this is due to the rise of technology and how much is due to PCHIP. Stakeholders in other provinces have expressed concern that linking apprehension with service provision unnecessarily stigmatizes and criminalizes vulnerable children.

At the heart of the matter, however, is the well-being of the child, and that has to be our foremost consideration. That's why I am supporting the bill but with certain reservations.

The possibility of expanded apprehension. Although individuals who are 18 can now continue to receive services, once they turn 18, they are committing a criminal offence if they are involved in prostitution. It's unclear whether or not accessing services might put one at risk of arrest or prosecution. You would want the act to provide for – sorry, I keep referring to them as students; that's my background – adolescents, the young men and women. If they are apprehended, can they voluntarily, then, appeal for support, or are they automatically charged based on their age?

There are a number of considerations with regard to the bill's intention. My hope is that there will be support, that there will be places, that there will be financial support for caregivers and service providers, that that support will continue from year to year in a definitive manner so that they're not faced, as so many other organizations are, with ad hoc funding, and that the service providers who offer the support for the students or young adolescents receive the quality of training necessary to directly impact the lives of the individuals who have had the misfortune of being sexually exploited.

In summary, Bill 15 is headed in the right direction. With financial support it can be successful in helping Alberta's children. Thank you for bringing it forward.

The Speaker: Hon. members, our five-minute question and comment period is now available if there are questions to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

There being none, shall I call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close the debate?

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to close debate on Bill 15. I appreciate the support from the opposition. This is a good piece of legislation, and we'll continue to listen to what they have to say.

Thank you.

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 3 Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. In formulating our position on this, it was very clear to us on this side how vitally important the issue of climate change is to Albertans. Indeed, across the country people are saying that climate change is the number one issue for the decade. As the richest province in the richest country we have to take very seriously our responsibility to lead on climate change issues and greenhouse gas reductions.

What we see in Bill 3 is fundamentally an administrative bill, housekeeping, harmonization with the existing act, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and the usual issues relating to any act. It has no substance which we can debate in the House. It's disappointing, Mr. Chairman, that we can't deal at all with the issues of limits, caps, timelines, costs, investments. We have in this bill merely housekeeping items that relate to the functioning of the Alberta environment in relation to the large final emitters and the specified gas emitters regulation. All of the substantive issues that we need to deal with in this House are under regulation and cannot be debated in this particular bill. These will have vitally important impacts on the future. The next 10 to 20 years is absolutely crucial to the planet. For Alberta to take a lead on this issue is absolutely fundamental and expected, demanded by Albertans and by Canadians.

It's clear that this particular bill talks about the possibility of making reductions but doesn't require it. There's no opportunity to debate and make amendments to the emissions limits, the intensity targets that this government has articulated. There's no opportunity to debate the price per tonne that carbon exceedance would exact from these various industries. There's no ability to debate and amend the offsets and trade provisions. There's no opportunity to discuss a budget for our climate change plan for this province, and there's no opportunity to debate and amend the financial instruments that could be helpful in moving this province to the head of the pack in reducing climate change.

This is a serious issue for us and, I hope, one that the Environment minister will take to heart. Section 5, for example, enables the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations on offsets, credits, and sink rights and to establish a penalty price, but there's no opportunity to discuss what those are or to make amendments to suggest a stronger or in some cases a different wording.

Section 60 provides estimated limits for specified gas emitters, and again no opportunity because there's no clear identification of what those limits are. This is enabling; it's not an area that we can actually debate. So this is very disappointing for Albertans in general. Albertans care about the issue of climate change. They want to see leadership, they want to see action, and it's going to be a very serious issue for Albertans to realize that this bill, a flagship bill for this government in this new legislative session, does nothing to address the fundamental issues of capping and reducing our total emissions in the province.

The issue for us, Mr. Chairman, is that the international panel on climate change has said that if we exceed 500 parts per million of carbon in our environment, there will be irreparable and devastating damage throughout the world, including Alberta and particularly our north. The Stern report, the important report out of the United Kingdom, called on all countries to spend a minimum of 1 per cent of their GNP on climate reduction activities. That would amount to a billion dollars in Alberta. We have allocated no extra funding for climate change in this province. We have no ability to debate that issue here in the House as a result of this bill. If we fail to commit 1 per cent of our gross national product to this initiative, then according to the Stern report, again, we will be paying 20 per cent of our gross national product in 20 years for the devastating consequences that climate change will wreak on this province and on this world.

We need a government that will stand up to industry, that will set clear targets and timelines and demand a fair process for the public, for nongovernment organizations, and for opposition members to debate the full scope of the implications of climate change in this province, and we have none in this Legislature. It's a travesty of the most important issue facing us in this session. Clearly, Albertans are wanting to see us invest in energy efficiency and invest significantly in renewable energy. We have to move off our addiction to carbon for energy sources.

This opposition party has talked about investing not $15 per tonne for exceedances to the limits specified under the specified gas emitters regulation but moving quickly to $30 per tonne for exceedances to those limits. We've talked about shifting the natural gas rebate program: instead of rewarding people for consuming more gas, shifting that into energy efficiency initiatives and renewable technologies. We've talked about removing subsidies and incentives for oil and gas and other fossil fuels and transferring them to these new economic drivers that have to come, and those are the renewables and energy efficiency technologies.

We've talked about the need for public education, for all of us to play a part in reducing our environmental footprint and our energy consumption. We've talked about energy retrofits, funding, creating incentives for people to retrofit their homes, their buildings, their institutions, and to significantly reduce our carbon emissions over the course of the next four years, to reach a cap, to reach an absolute limit that this province is putting out by 2012 and begin the downward trend that we have to do if we're going to limit the devastating impacts of climate change. It's our responsibility, Mr. Chairman, to lead on this.

We've also talked about investing in public transit and have been promoting an electric train between Calgary and Edmonton as a major contributor. When we hear the experts say that it consumes three litres of fuel per person to travel by electric train from Calgary to Edmonton and 53 litres of fuel per person to travel by airplane between Calgary and Edmonton, Mr. Chairman, it's a no-brainer. We have to move and move quickly on the whole issue of public transit in this province.

We've talked about all new energy development requiring 15 per cent renewable components to its mix. No longer can we accept purely fossil fuel energy. We have to have a mix with at least 15 per cent renewable in that mix, as they're doing already in a number of states in America and in Europe, requiring a certain proportion of renewable in all new development projects. We've also talked about the importance of carbon capture and storage and the important role that industry has in ensuring that all new energy developments, especially with coal-fired electricity plants, have the capacity for state-of-the-art carbon capture and the option for storage.

Mr. Chairman, it's with great disappointment that I stand before you having read some of the Hansard from last week, where an amendment was attempted to try to put on the table some of the key questions that we need to be debating here. We cannot in any way support this bill given that it's a marginal bill with no substantive issues for us to deal with and no substantive opportunity to make amendments that will satisfy our moral responsibility to the planet and meet our responsibility to the citizens of Alberta.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Sometimes we get the sense that it's the opposition's role to take the government kicking and screaming and drag them into the 21st century of climatic reality. The science is there, and begrudgingly a number of members opposite are starting to realize it, recognize it. It was interesting, providing that the Minister of Environment was accurately reported in the Calgary papers. He was suggesting that this bill didn't go far enough because it only dealt with intensity, a 12 per cent decrease, rather than the overall cumulative effect. That gives me hope that government members themselves, both cabinet and caucus, will bring forward amendments, as the opposition will, to strengthen the accountability of this bill. My hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View indicated that hiding things in regulation as opposed to dealing with it in the transparent, open, and accountable fashion of legislative debate is a rather sad limiting of this bill.

My colleague from Calgary-Mountain View has also been a participant around the province in a number of public forums that dealt with climate change. Two of the forums that are upcoming I would like to mention. This Thursday on the legislative grounds climate change, water management, and a number of issues affecting the environmental legacy and quality for Albertans will be discussed. Then this coming Friday, which I referred to in my member's statement last week and again addressed today: Friday the 13th for the forest. It's not just simply for the forest. At noon at the McDougall Centre this upcoming Friday we will be holding a rally with a number of very knowledgeable speakers who will address concerns and provide suggestions from which amendments will be made. In other words, we'll take the word on the street directly to the House, as is our job as representatives for our constituencies across the province.

One of the fortunate aspects of being the representative for the constituency of Calgary-Varsity is having a wonderful research organization at the University of Calgary, and that is the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy, that I have referred to numerous times. They, among the other good things they do, regularly hold a public lecture series on a variety of climatic environmental effects. I'm extremely fortunate to be able to have the opportunity to talk with scientists like Dr. Mansell, who is a member of ISEEE. I also have the opportunity to interact with biology professors such as Dr. Ralph Carter, who is a Bragg Creek resident and will be one of the speakers at the forum at the McDougall Centre this Friday at noon. These individuals have dedicated their lives to research and teaching and informing students and the general public on the various climatic threats and coming up with a balanced approach to dealing with them.

One of the concerns that we have, which has a direct effect on the climate and our quality of life, is the proposed clear-cutting in the Bragg Creek area, Sibbald Flats and Ghost-Waiparous included, which are part of the K Country connection. By connection I'm talking about wildlife passing through the Yellowstone to Yukon corridor. The Liberal opposition has as much concern as the government has with regard to the effects of the pine beetle, but as we've tried to point out with science, clear-cutting or razing the forest to deal with a beetle predator has a much more devastating effect than selective logging, the type of practice that takes place in Europe and that we wish would be adopted here in Alberta.

What we are calling for from a Liberal standpoint is a cumulative assessment: make sure that what you are planning has value in the long term versus just an immediate gratification in the form of dollars right now in the bank account. Of course, with regard to future implications this is why we put out the idea of taking 30 per cent of nonrenewable energy off the top and putting it into a series of, basically, trust funds. Thirty-five per cent would go into the heritage trust fund to ensure that by 2020 we no longer have the dependency on fossil fuels that we currently have. By setting that fund aside now, even at the low royalty rates that we charge foreign nationals, we would see the fund rise to $120 billion. The money that we currently raise through royalties could then be replaced by the interest from the fund.

We've also suggested that nonrenewable energy now be a contributor to postsecondary education. Again, we've suggested an endowment fund based on taking 35 per cent of the 30 per cent of nonrenewables and setting it aside to invest in postsecondary education, which would continue to see world-class postsecondary institutions in Alberta. We would continue to see funding for research that would help us get out of our carbon-dependent predicament that we're currently in.

The Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy looks at a variety of ways of fuelling our economy in the sense that it looks at alternative energy forms: wind, solar, and a type of energy that just has not received much pickup in Alberta, the river run version, where we can take energy from streams with very little effect on them, with no emission or negative effects.

When we take into account raw bitumen and its processing, we've got to look beyond just simple intensity targets; we have to look at an overall reduction of emissions. We have to look at what's already happened in an environmental fashion, such as flying over the moonscape area of the tailing ponds north of Fort McMurray. We cannot leave these as a legacy to our children and our grandchildren. We have to address them. We have to as part of our scientific research come up with methods of rejuvenating the soil and regrowing the landscape.

I had an opportunity this summer, with my wife and members of the opposition, to travel up to Hinton and the Coal Valley area, where, much to my delight and surprise, I saw the evidence of reforestation after open-pit coal mining. What I did not believe was possible was there before my eyes. The steep slopes were cut down. The topsoil had been preserved. What had once been gouges now turned into, basically, little mountain lakes which, because they were deep enough, were stocked with trout. Local vegetation, a variety of pines and spruce, were replanted. That gave me hope that if we looked after our environment, if the wheel of progress also had a backup spare of replant, regenerate, and rejuvenate built into the extraction process, then the balance would be achieved.

Unfortunately, right now companies, with the government's permission, recognizing the fact that the world is starting to question carbon-based fuels as energy sources into the future, are starting to be justifiably worried. So their desire to get out everything that they can, from coal-bed methane to various forms of bitumen extraction, whether through mining or in situ, creates a hodgepodge of environmental destruction. Until we address the cost of reclamation and make it a part of the overall cost of extraction, until we achieve that environmental and economic balance, our children and our grandchildren are going to pay the damage in terms of health effects.

Water is one of the areas that the government has talked about. A former Minister of Environment came up with the Water for Life strategy, and as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View pointed out, it's rather hard to implement that strategy when less than half of a per cent is given over to the Environment ministry for the policing of the Water for Life strategy. You can't implement and you can't police something if there isn't sufficient funding.

Something that we've called upon beyond the baseline testing before extraction is the need for the accurate mapping of aquifers. Unless we know where the water is located, its quality and its quantity, we can't protect it.

3:20

The Alberta government seems to put a very low value on parks and protected areas. We know that for every dollar put into tourism, we get $12 back. These are nondamaging type dollars. It's gravy. All we need to do is maintain our environment to a point where people will want to come and partake in it. We save money on health because people's mental health and physical health are supported by just being out in a pristine wilderness.

I had the opportunity to attend the PNWER conference last year, and I've seen varieties of presentations by Brad Stelfox, who traces the amount of drilling and logging activities from the early 1900s. Basically, we start off with a blank map, and then when you add the various agricultural uses, when you add the different types of oil and gas and drilling extractions, what was once a white map becomes so profusely dotted that there is very little space in the Alberta map that hasn't been touched or affected already. Yet industry is suggesting that they need to go even faster to get out as much product as they can before the world comes up with alternatives. This race leaves any kind of balance in its wake.

We have smart technology now. We know, for example, that North Dakota through a pipeline is sequestering gas in fields in Saskatchewan. The science isn't complete. Keeping that sequestered CO₂ down is a challenge, but it's certainly a challenge that we'd rather deal with than dealing with radioactivity through the nuclear-powered plants that have been considered for use for extraction. The claim is that, well, we won't have CO₂ emissions. No, but we'll have a lot of radiated uranium and heavy water to get rid of. I personally would not want to go in that particular direction.

One of the quantities of resource potential that's almost limitless in this province is coal. While it's not the type of coal that you can simply throw under the stack and burn – and it doesn't produce emissions, as our former Premier thought – there is a process of gasification of coal whereby instead of the CO₂ going up the pipe, the extracted CO₂ goes into the pipe, and the gas goes into the pipe. It burns at a much higher energy efficiency with considerably less emissions. So what we need to be looking at are the coal gasification possibilities.

Because companies are very concerned about their profit lines as well as environmental responsibilities, they are looking at ways of retrofitting existing plants in the tar sands so that they use less water, use less energy, and are able to cogenerate and create a more valuable product by splitting the various gases that are taken off. So instead of trucking them down to Chicago for processing, that can be done through an upgrading process here in Alberta. But we still have to deal with the effects of the emissions from that gasification and utilization.

I don't think anybody will argue that sequestering could provide a terrific solution for us, but we need to work with industry. Industry is looking for rules to play by. Just in the same way that people were reluctant to get into power plants because of deregulation and lack of the government's role in terms of supporting initiatives, energy companies need to know what the government will do in terms of not only setting standards but also providing assistance in the creation of the CO₂ pipelines.

The theory and the practice. We've seen that CO₂ can be pushed down into the old seams to get out more oil and to get out more gas, and I gather it works in the bitumen extracting process as well, but again you need energy to compress the gas, to push it down the line. So it's possible, and it's been scientifically used in Europe as well.

With the research that's happening at postsecondary institutions, that's also driven by industry, we have an opportunity to make real changes, but if we continue to plug along at a snailish pace and deal only with percentages of intensity emissions, the reality of the effects of CO₂ and greenhouse gases and so on will never be dealt with. We have a unique opportunity. We have a very sustainable resource if properly managed. We have an opportunity through the wealth that we have in the form of coal, oil, and gas, not to mention the wealth we have in Alberta's individuals and their intelligence, to make dramatic changes. We could be the leaders in the world because we have the economic basis to be the leaders, but what it takes is a will. We have to get beyond the pennies now and think about dollars later.

Albertans are adaptive. They have risen to every single challenge that has confronted them. We need to provide as a government the support for industry, the support for research, the support for the environment, and the support for the parks and protected areas that states that there are certain areas that we just won't trespass into. Currently in those parks and protected areas . . . [Mr. Chase's speaking time expired]

Just a little over. Thank you. I'll look forward to re-engaging.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have spoken twice before on Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, and I just want to be sure that it's on record that I'm opposed to this bill. My colleague from Calgary-Mountain View has spoken with knowledge and in detail about the directions that we should be taking if we are going to be leaders in climate change control. I have a couple of other concerns I'd like to point out.

To me this plan for climate change has distinct flaws in that it is less effective in reducing emissions in an absolute sense. The reliance on emissions intensity as a measure of reduction instead of focusing on moving aggressively to absolute reductions makes this bill and the accompanying regulations quite ineffective. We need absolute hard caps on emissions.

Another area of concern for me is that although the hon. minister talked about harmonizing with other provinces, what is the outcome of these new regulations? I believe that they will jeopardize our ability and Canada's ability to meet Kyoto's requirements and commitments. It'll jeopardize Canada's commitments to achieve much deeper emission reduction targets for post 2012, commitment periods that will become more necessary given the ultimate objectives of the United Nations framework convention on climate change, and will create a burden for the rest of Canada by transferring responsibility for emissions to the federal government.

This bill demonstrates clear avoidance of dealing with the substantive issues like costs and timelines and targets in legislation. It has all gone to regulation. The world, our country, and our province need clarity and leadership to meet our responsibility as stewards of our environment. This bill does not give us that opportunity. We need to work together on a vision that addresses our responsibilities as stewards. That requires discussion and debate, and this bill does not allow that. It is shortsighted, and it is weak.

With that, I'd like to move to adjourn debate on Bill 3.

3:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: She adjourned debate.

The Chair: Did you introduce an amendment?

Mrs. Mather: No. I adjourned.

The Chair: Adjourned debate?

Mrs. Mather: Yes.

The Chair: Oh. Sorry.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate rising once again on specific details concerning Bill 3. In fact, I have some specific suggestions for amendments here this afternoon. Just to reiterate some of the important issues in regard to Bill 3, I think it's important to remind ourselves that, in fact, the entire nation of Canada is one of the most significant contributors to greenhouse gases in the world, and the province of Alberta is responsible for about 40 per cent of those emissions. So, you know, we have some of the top industrial emitters of greenhouse gases in the province of Alberta. Seven out of 10 of the top greenhouse gas emitters are here in the province, so it's incumbent upon us to not just address the concept of climate change but to actually put in real targets that would involve actual reductions.

According to the Pembina Institute from last fall, for example, the newly approved Kearsy oil sands mine project, in fact, Imperial Oil failed to develop a plan outlining how they would reduce greenhouse gas . . . pollution from the Kearsy Oil Sands Mine project . . . This is very troubling considering that this project [alone] would emit about 30% more GHG pollution per barrel of oil compared to a similar project, [which is] the Shell Jackpine Mine. Imperial Oil is failing to take responsibility for the global warming impacts of the Kearsy [Lake] project.

I bring this to the attention of the Assembly, Mr. Chair, just to I guess provide an example of what happens in the absence of absolute reduction legislation from this House. Industry can only presume what is written on paper, and if the ink is not there in regard to actual reductions, then of course industry, with their bottom line to be concerned about and their investors to be concerned about, will usually defer to the lowest common denominator. It's just the fact of the way things are done. You know, in fact, if a business chooses to voluntarily do otherwise, then probably they won't stay in business very much longer. So my point is that we have to set those standards in place that are strict, that are enforceable, and that are tough so that everyone can play with a level playing field, so to speak, in regard to these large emitters.

Clearly, we need tough regulations in place to force the major emitters to change their ways. Megacorporations have no other incentive to go green otherwise. The EUB has consistently failed to consider the cumulative environmental impact of tar sands projects and expansions, and we've seen that all through this last year: Kearsy Lake, Voyageur, et cetera. You know, even the outgoing CEO of the Energy and Utilities Board stated after he retired that cumulative regional impact assessments must take place in order for us to move forward in all areas of this province. So that's the tar sands section.

In regard to electricity, of course, we are producing most of our electricity through coal-fired plants, and again we have to take a hard look at what is the true cost of having our electricity coming from those sources. The last numbers that we have available, 2004: electricity and heat generation counted for 52,700 kilotonnes of climate change CO₂, and Toxics Watch estimates that at a 4 per cent growth rate, Alberta's total GHG emissions will rise by between 66 and 83 per cent above 1990 levels. These are significant numbers that we have to take into consideration.

The root of this issue is not just about emissions though, Mr. Chair. Emissions are just one measure of the relationship between our economy and our environment. Every day this relationship is becoming increasingly clear to Albertans. Every barrel of water that is sent down a well to bring up a little more oil is a barrel of water that can never be used again for drinking, for agriculture, or to support wildlife. Every megaton of pollution that is poured into the sky increases the rates of respiratory illness, cancer, and other problems, not to mention climate change. In its very starkest terms, we may live by the economy, but our children will die by the environment that we leave them.

It's difficult to talk about intensity or hard caps without addressing the whole rate of growth of the overall economy based on energy and carbon dioxide energy emissions. The Alberta New Democrats have called for a short-term moratorium on new tar sands projects and expansions of existing ones. This is a temporary measure but a significant one and a significant differentiation from what else we're hearing in this Legislature.

Currently there is enough investment in the oil sands to keep Albertans working for a long period of time, in excess of five years. The moratorium would provide Albertans the opportunity to develop upgrader infrastructure not to mention reducing the further demands that are being placed on our health and education and infrastructure as a result of the great population increase we are experiencing in the province today.

This last month the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives released some very important information on the growing income gaps between Alberta and the rest of the country. They have found that most Albertans are working much harder than they were a generation ago without seeing significant gains in real earnings. I mention this because the current pace of development is having enormous costs to average Albertans. Huge sums of money are flowing out of Alberta, but the pollution stays here. While a meagre, penny on the dollar royalty regime boosts the Conservative's short-term political interests, it does nothing to prepare Alberta for the disastrous impacts of climate change or to lay the groundwork for carbon-neutral energy production and usage, which ultimately we must do.

Real progress on climate change cannot be made until we truly come to terms with the connection between the environment, lives of working Albertans, and the pace of growth. So the NDP has a very comprehensive plan for addressing climate change emissions. We support carbon trading in principle, but we are wary of the dependence on this approach and what that could mean.

Albertans must not be left on the hook while huge emitters turn profits. It would be much more preferable if we were in a position to sell carbon credits rather than to buy them. A real plan to deal with greenhouse gas emissions needs, number one, clear targets for absolute reductions in climate change pollution in line with Alberta's portion or percentage of total emissions, number two, fiscal incentives for reducing emissions across the economy, number three, to regulate large polluters with a performance-based regulation allowing companies to invest in and to select their own solutions, and, number four, a vision for a sustainable energy future for Alberta where we become the most energy-efficient economy in Canada and the most carbon-neutral economy as well, with the strongest renewable energy industry, not just here but exporting that technology and incentive right across the country.

Mr. Chair, as I speak about each of these things in a general way, I also have specific changes to strengthen Bill 3. As I had said from the outset, certainly just the existence of Bill 3 is encouraging to myself and to, I think, people who follow climate change because it's the first time we see an admission that there is a problem. To deal with that problem properly, we must make sure that we are allowing for Bill 3 to force absolute reductions in climate change carbon emissions and a host of other things as well.

Now, what I see the substance of Bill 3 to be is a great deal of regulation. This is problematic to me, Mr. Chair, because regulation certainly is the proverbial devil in the details that we speak about. What I'm seeing in Bill 3 here is a great deal of regulation that moves the substance of Bill 3 back to order in council. So there are certain areas here in this section that I would like to make amendments to. I, in fact, have my second amendment here, that I would like to distribute forthwith for the consideration of the House.

The Chair: The pages will circulate the appropriate copies of the amendment to all the members. We'll just give them a moment to do that. We will refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder wish to proceed on the amendment?

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. As I was just explaining to a colleague here, this amendment A2 to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, says that I will move that Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 6 in the proposed 60(1)(q) area by striking out "and the sequestration of specified gas."

Mr. Chair, the reason that I am choosing to do this is that this is a devilishly difficult bill to amend in the first place. It has a tremendous amount of regulatory detail in it. I chose this specific area because, as I've specified before in this House, I'm certainly not opposed out of hand to the sequestering of carbon dioxide gas in the province. I think that it could potentially serve two functions: the first one, the enhanced recovery of oil from depleted wells. Certainly, I do not want to discourage this activity because, of course, it's better than using fresh water to in fact agitate and perhaps revive established wells.

Second, the sequestration of CO₂ gas, which is trying to capture carbon dioxide under the ground, again, has some potential, but there are two problems with it that I see. The first one is that the technology simply is not in place at this juncture to make it a reliable means by which we can store carbon dioxide and actually count it as being captured and not in the atmosphere.

You know, I find it troubling that we might hang our hats so definitively on technology that's not even fully there. It smacks to me of desperation and of, sort of, a blind following of a path, of the status quo: that we will just simply create or hope that some technology will come to allow us to continue to operate in the way that we always have and magically store carbon dioxide under the ground, and everybody can continue on their merry way. It sends a poor message, Mr. Chair, in regard to the other, more important things we need to do in regard to conservation, in regard to setting up alternative, sustainable forms of energy production, and the like.

My second, even bigger, concern about this sequestering is that if industry wants to do this, if they do want to sequester CO₂ – and they might indeed want to do so considering the obligations that we would hope that they would have set out from the provincial Legislature in regard to absolute reductions in CO₂ – then probably they'll look at sequestering, and that's fine. But I am very wary to use through Bill 3 the issuing of public dollars to subsidize the oil and gas industry to build their sequestering infrastructure.

As the hon. minister has pointed out in the last few weeks, a carbon pipeline, a backbone pipeline so to speak, to build a carbon capture system for the province would be in excess of $5 billion, and I would expect it to be considerably more than that, in fact. You know, that's just an estimate of the pipeline structure. Let's not forget, Mr. Chair, that it costs between 20 and 30 per cent of all of the energy you produce in any given facility just to capture the carbon dioxide in the first place. So let's say that if we're building three power plants, you would need a fourth power plant just to do the carbon capture for the other three, so to speak.

I mean, certainly, using our powers of estimation, this is not necessarily the best use of our energy, and I just would like to be the constructive critic of such an endeavour, considering that it would cost, undoubtedly, billions and billions of public dollars, enough public dollars that would make such boondoggles as NovAtel or the gun registry and other remarkable Conservative and Liberal follies pale in significance compared to building this great carbon pipeline, carbon pipe dream, so to speak.

This is the amendment that I would like to put forward. It's simply a means by which we separate Bill 3 from the possibility of sequestration at this point in time. I think it's a reasoned and conservative-minded amendment that I hope everyone will be happy to support.

Thank you.

The Chair: On the amendment the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. My compliments to the Member for Edmonton-Calder for finding a way of amending this bill. I also share to a large extent his concerns about the use of financial instruments for sending the right message to industry, to the public, to all players in the carbon reduction strategies ahead. I can't support the amendment, though, since it essentially denies the opportunity for government to use in a prudent way the financial instruments which we have to have to change the behaviour of the public, to change the behaviour of industry.

Whether it's incentives for energy renewables, whether it's efficiency technology, we have to use the carrot and the stick in various ways to try to get the result we want, which is a net reduction in the emissions from this province. So I can't see eliminating that very key element of Bill 3. While it's not specific enough for us to even debate, it still is an enabling, identified action by government that is vital to getting climate change up on the agenda of every Albertan and every industry to ensure that we make the healthy choice the easy choice through some of these financial instruments.

Now, whether carbon capture and storage itself is at the stage where we can fully support it as a technology or even fund it as a government is another question. But this item, part (q), identifies the important role of government to use its financial and economic instruments precisely to get people to do what they need to do to reduce the impact of the greenhouse gas emissions.

So with that I'll take my seat and look forward to further discussion. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A2.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Specifically to the amendment. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Calder's reasoning in not wanting to stick the Alberta taxpayer with the entire cost of the infrastructure associated with this sequestration. I have a great desire to protect Alberta taxpayers as well. But as my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View pointed out, the government does have a role both in directing what should be done and in encouraging the accomplishment of effective sequestration.

The royalty review is taking place right now. While we're not in agreement with the members who are members of that committee, we do support the need for a royalty review. It may be that when the royalty review is shared with us in this House, a larger amount of royalty or tax will be charged. It would have the effect, basically, of the industry, through a tax form of royalty, paying at least partially the cost of the sequestration. I do want to see more money going into our various savings funds, but protecting the taxpayer is not completely accomplished by giving up on the science associated with sequestration. We need to encourage further development of that process, which, while in its infancy, could hold great value. Obviously, we're not going to invest public funds into an unpractised science, but I think we have opportunities around the world.

So while I respect the Member for Edmonton-Calder's protection of Alberta's taxpayers from funding an industrial, valued pipeline, I believe that the industry will be encouraged by the process for further extraction. A fair amount of this will be a self-evident motivation for companies to involve themselves in this particular process instead of using water, especially if we as a government declare that the Athabasca has limits, as do all other water sources.

As my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View suggested, by both a series of requirements and a series of incentives, coupled with scientific research, we can accomplish our end. Therefore, I speak against leaving the sequestration out. I realize that it's an undeveloped science, but I would rather invest in that development.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others who wish to participate in the debate on the amendment?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the debate on the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I certainly appreciate having the opportunity to again work with Bill 3. You can see that I'm trying to make this work somehow because, in fact, it is important to have some legislation in place that deals with CO₂ reduction in this province, preferably in absolute terms. So I would like to just draw everyone's attention, then, again to Bill 3, climate change and emissions amendment act. I would like you to take a peek at the proposed section 59(1)(c) and the proposed section 60(1)(h) as well because in fact I'm going to propose another amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: We'll circulate copies to all the members, and we'll call this amendment A3. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, would you wish to proceed on amendment A3?

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Thank you. As I said before, this is a very long bill, Mr. Chair, that has lots of detail. The sections that I have pointed out here are section 59 and section 60. These are, sort of, two linked sections of this climate change act. The first allows all prescribed information to be kept confidential. That's section 59.

The second one says that the cabinet has broad latitude to define what is to be deemed prescribed information, and that's in section 60. I would venture to say, Mr. Chair, respectfully, of course, that this government has a long and somewhat sordid record of keeping information secret. It's almost impossible to get information through our FOIP or through written questions and answers and so on. This is just another example of not only potentially keeping information secret but not allowing the Legislature to debate what kind of information ought to be kept secret.

So the first two clauses in 59(1). Everyone is looking at their bill, I'm sure, very studiously here, and those are probably okay. It certainly makes sense that trade secrets not be made publicly available. But the problem is with the broader powers to deem other information to be confidential. The problem with the approach is that it's industry driven rather than driven by any real efforts to reduce emissions. Of course, this is classically evidenced by the intensity reductions as opposed to the absolute reductions. The legislation as written mostly allows almost any piece of information to be categorized as prescribed information.

The New Democrat position is that if there is information that ought to be kept confidential, it should be also thoroughly debated in this House. It would be interesting as a test of these new all-party committees, that we're all looking forward to, to see if the government truly wants public input in these types of legislation. The proof of the integrity of the committees will rest, I believe, on bills such as Bill 3 actually passing into those all-party committees and giving an opportunity for us to look at these things in a more comprehensive way, including bringing in different groups to testify and to give us more information, industry coming in and talking to us so that we get a more balanced idea of what the regulations should actually look like.

If the government does not support this amendment – certainly, I'm not suggesting that they won't – then they should at least commit to bringing any information that's prescribed under section 59 of this bill to the all-party committees with a sincere commitment to listening to those committees and accepting their recommendations about the prescribed information. I would look forward to that litmus test, I suppose, of the change in mood of this Legislature. This would be a perfect example and a projection to show a demonstration of good faith in that regard.

I am going to leave off on this particular amendment. It's a way to cut through the potential secrecy of Bill 3 and information that would be enclosed within an industry's submission of their targets, and I think that it's in the public's interest to see that changed.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The government and the Premier in a variety of mandates given to the ministers and during question period have affirmed the importance of transparency and accountability. What the Member for Edmonton-Calder is proposing does not change the intent or the overall outcome or the efficiency or lack thereof of Bill 3. It simply makes it more accountable, and this appears to be the direction that the government has spoken of. Basically, the members opposite could provide us with a degree of their integrity and their intention in terms of accountability and transparency by dealing with the sharing of the science associated with climate change.

I spoke earlier of the desire to lead, and before we can lead, we have to catch up, basically. We already know, for example, that Europe charges a penalty of $30 a tonne for carbon emissions. In some cases that's a reward for the recipient, the money that's now expended on green technology, so there's a value to it.

This amendment seeks to provide greater openness, accountability, transparency to a piece of legislation that is flawed by regulation. This would be a minor step in comparison to the overall nature of the bill, but it would be a very welcome step in the name of openness and accountability.

I support my colleague from Edmonton-Calder in his attempt to clarify the importance of this bill. Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'll be very brief, Mr. Chairman. I think this is a positive amendment, and I think all Albertans want to see greater transparency, whether it's from government or industry, on this most vital issue affecting all of us and our future. In short, this is an attempt to try to ensure that voluntarily or involuntarily we get the information we need to make good decisions as government and as citizens holding government accountable, that what is reported is accurate, that it reflects the true state of affairs, and that, indeed, we are moving toward absolute reductions in carbon emissions.

I support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on amendment A3.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to participate. Amendment A3 to Bill 3, dealing with climate change, seems to be, as hon. members have indicated before me, going toward achieving more openness and more accountability in government. One of the two sections that this amendment is trying to alter or improve is section 59, which deals with confidentiality of information, which is already quite thorough. I understand and I fully support the government not wanting to divulge information that is sensitive, as in commercial, financial, scientific, or technical information which would reveal or jeopardize proprietary business, competitiveness, or trade secrets with respect to a facility, a technology, or corporate initiatives. Sometimes, as my colleague for Calgary-Varsity was saying, there is also the safety of consumers that's in question.

However, why would the government go as far as giving itself a blanket allowance or a blanket provision to classify any information it deems worthy of being classified and put it in regulations under section 60(1)(h)? I think section 59, if we take out (1)(c), is already thorough enough. I remind the House that it's not only through integrity and through openness and transparency; it's also the appearance of openness and transparency.

I remind this House that in 2006, last year, we fiercely debated similar provisions in Bill 20, which were the amendments with respect to FOIP legislation, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Members from all three parties of the opposition argued quite forcefully that the government doesn't need to hide things from the public and the media and the opposition. We covered things like, you know, briefing binders for cabinet ministers. We talked about internal audits. Today here is an example of a catch-all allowance for regulations to hide things from public scrutiny.

I think it's worthy of support, as suggested by my colleague from Edmonton-Calder. We don't need any more secrecy. In fact, we need to go in the opposite direction. We need to open things up and allow people to see and judge for themselves. It's really not in the best interests of Albertans and even the image of the government to start hiding things willy-nilly and saying: "You know what? The regulation allows us to, so we're going to."

As my colleagues from Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Varsity have indicated, I think that if the government has any reason for wanting to continue to have this section here and not allow amendment A3 to go forward, then maybe an hon. member from Executive Council would stand and tell us why this section needs to be kept or maintained. You know, give us an example of what information might be captured under this definition which should be kept concealed, that no one should be privy to. Until I hear that argument from the government side, I am leaning toward supporting amendment A3, and I look forward to more debate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Are there others that wish to participate in the debate on amendment A3?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Now back to the debate on Bill 3. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I was very disappointed and shocked and horrified to know that that was defeated, but I'm not one to back down in looking for some positive change on Bill 3. Certainly, I've got more up my sleeve here in terms of amendments.

Another section that troubled me considerably when looking through Bill 3 was section 4 in the proposed section 5. I wanted to add something into that section to look for some kind of direction towards absolute reductions. You know, the big part of the general problem with Bill 3 is that it just sort of plucks these things out of the air, a 15 per cent – or whatever it is – intensity target, but doesn't set a program for the next five years or 10 years, which would be the most logical thing to do. Just like if you wanted to make a goal for losing some weight and becoming healthier, then you set targets not just two weeks from now, but you set up a long-term project that is going to include more significant changes over time. Bill 3 similarly fails to do that. It just plunks down this 15 per cent intensity target or whatever. Then where do you go from there?

Once again, even industry certainly looks for long-term planning. It is part of what they can expect in terms of setting up their corporation, long-term plans for their businesses, so leaving them dangling like this, I think, is a problem. As I said before, absolute reductions are important for Bill 3, and it's going to be hard to put them in there.

Also, I have another way by which we can do that, so I have my amendment here for everyone's edification. How about we call it A3? Maybe three times lucky, I'm hoping. Here it comes.

Thank you.

The Chair: This actually would be referred to as amendment A4. Again, we will make sure they're circulated to the members first and a copy to the table.

Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder wish to proceed with debate on amendment A4?

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Thanks, Mr. Chair. I have this one here, and let me just read it for everybody. They can take out their Bill 3s and carefully follow along. I am moving that Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 4 in the proposed section 5 – don't be confused – by renumbering it as section 5(1) and adding the following after subsection (1). My edition goes as follows:

(2) Any regulation made under subsection (1) shall be compliant with the Kyoto Protocol to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, agreed to on December 11, 1997 at Kyoto, Japan, and ratified by Canada on December 17, 2002, as amended from time to time.

I guess, Mr. Chair, I chose this section because of, once again, going back to what the real task at hand is, and that is to employ absolute reductions, not just in Alberta but right across the country, to help us to comply with our international obligations under the Kyoto accord.

The Kyoto accord has taken a lot of negative propaganda over the years. Some people like to call it a tax somehow or that it's voodoo science or that it's a way for the poor to be robbing from the rich, which I kind of like, or it's somehow just this eastern plot that they've dreamed up, you know, a new national energy plan. I mean, all of this is a lot of unadulterated balderdash, I would say, Mr. Chair, because of course we, in fact, went along with the Kyoto accord not under the pain of death or anything that resembled that but in recognition of catastrophic climate change, that has already set upon us here, not just in Alberta but around the world, and it is only going to get worse over the next coming decades.

It has become absolutely accepted by reputable science around the world that we're in the midst of this climate change, and we have to make these adjustments in order to ensure the long-term survivability of not just the human race but life on the planet Earth. So with all of those weighty things behind us it seems obvious that we have to include absolute reductions in Bill 3 in 2007 to at least acknowledge these things that are going on around us. I, for one, will not stand here in the Legislature and just let those things pass by with lots of platitudes about, you know, best province in the best country in the world and happy days and everything is great when, really, they're not that great.

We're building a structure in the province of Alberta here which will increase our carbon dioxide climate change emissions by at least four or five times in the next 10 years. It seems to me, Mr. Chair, that we are doing this not through some sort of debate or some sort of generally agreed upon set of principles that the majority of the population would go along with but, you know, by a few people making these decisions in large oil companies and corporations and making many of these decisions not even in the province of Alberta, making these decisions in places like Houston, Texas, and Washington and other places such as that, looking for a strategic source of oil on the continent of North America.

I think that Albertans are happy that we are an energy producing province and that we have a strong economy based on energy production. I'm sure that the majority of Albertans would like to see that continue to be so in the coming decades for our own children and grandchildren in the future. What we have to do is change with the times, Mr. Chair, and change with the times in the way that we produce energy here in the province of Alberta. Certainly, this does not preclude the continuation of the use of carbon-based energy in the province, but it just means that we should sip that natural resource perhaps a bit more judiciously than we have been gulping it down in the past and look for a means by which we can move into a transition into a sustainable energy economy. We certainly aren't going to do that with Bill 3 allowing for geometric increases in our carbon dioxide climate change emissions. In fact, that would be quite the opposite.

You know, you come to a tipping point, Mr. Chair. I believe that is where we are in the province of Alberta. But we're in a position of strength. It's not like someone is holding a gun to our heads. We are in a position of strength to make that transition if we (a) put a moratorium on new tar sand approvals in the province of Alberta and (b) reform our royalty structure and invest that money in renewable resource energy production, on home retrofits and start to turn the tide of climate change around here in the province of Alberta and ensure the prosperity of our population for generations to come.

That is what my amendment does. Can you believe it, Mr. Chair? All of those very lofty ideals are built into a very simple amendment of section 5(1) and adding a simple provision that we make efforts to be compliant to the Kyoto protocol, to actually reduce our carbon dioxide climate change emissions instead of increasing them as they do under the current language of this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on amendment A4.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise again on the third amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, a very astute consideration given the extreme limitations of this bill for revisions and amendments. Obviously, one of the key reasons that I'm in the Legislature today and have such an interest in the political process in Alberta has very much to do with the Kyoto protocol and my outspoken support of it and my abrupt firing some four years ago now from the Palliser health region as a result of my support for this protocol. It's very close to my heart, indeed. Having attended a few international conferences on the Kyoto protocol, I have some understanding and commitment to it as well.

We've lost a decade, Mr. Chairman. If we had honoured our commitment as a nation, as a province to the rather modest target at the time of 6 per cent below 1990 levels, or roughly 30 per cent below where we are today, we would be well on our way as a nation to achieving the desirable 50 per cent reduction by 2020 and 80 per cent reduction by 2050. Very doable. It was a modest goal at the time it was signed, in 1997. It's now a very ambitious target for us within the next four years to achieve a 30 per cent reduction. That's a 7 per cent reduction per year for the next four years, so clearly a very dramatic difference now.

The sentiments expressed within this are very legitimate. They reflect, I think, all Canadians, particularly now with the latest report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and the dire warnings of tremendous food loss on the planet, water damage to property, and indeed droughts and extreme weather events across the world.

Having said that, in the amendment being recommended, there are so many provisions of this very complex, international piece of legislation that it's difficult to envision incorporating all the dimensions of it into a simple amendment to Bill 3. While I support the spirit of it and the recognition that this is a lost opportunity for Canada and that we have to start making much stronger efforts, much more concrete and absolute targets for our emissions and timelines, I personally can't in good conscience support the amendment in this particular fashion, while applauding the spirit under which it's proposed.

I'll take my seat and listen to the rest of the debate. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Listening to the debate on this amendment, I find it rather interesting because it clearly states that we're going to be in compliance with any regulation, that we're going to be in compliance with the Kyoto protocol to the United Nations framework convention on climate change. I assume that that means that the ND member who presented the amendment plus the Liberal caucus – I see that there's another member planning to rise to speak to it – agree totally with what was being proposed in Kyoto and subsequently in other conventions, which I find very interesting because one of the big reasons that Alberta opposed this protocol was because of the sale of credits.

If you remember, Russia took a long time to come in. Why? Because they were trying to exercise getting as much money as they could for their hot air. Why did they have hot air? Well, Mr. Chairman, the reason they had hot air was because in 1990 there were still a lot of those very inefficient and very much polluting industries working in Russia. Not because of environmental reasons but because of economic reasons, those are not operating today. Of course, they took the 1990 measurement and, therefore, had hot air to sell. What does this mean? This means a redistribution of wealth within the world. That's what it means. It does not reduce the emissions one iota. As a matter of fact, it could increase the emissions.

I had the fortune of being in both Kyoto and Buenos Aires at the COP meeting. Buenos Aires was extremely interesting because the UN bureaucrats took over the whole convention. It was interesting to watch one session dealing with this international trading or selling of credits. The whole idea, as explained by a bureaucrat from the United Nations, would be that if an industry or a country wanted to do something like build a hydroproject in an undeveloped country, then they could get credit for having done that. They were going to increase the emissions, but they could get credit based on the comparison of emissions had it been a coal-fired plant.

Someone from one of the undeveloped countries stood up and said: "Well, why would we accept the project? Why don't we just accept the money? We don't have the infrastructure and/or the need for the electricity. We can't distribute it, don't have electricity in our homes, don't have any way of using it, yet we could get the money." Well, one of the next speakers was a representative of the United Arab Emirates, the richest people in the world per capita. They put up their hand and said: "Whoa, just a minute. If you're going to do that, then you may reduce the revenue that we would get from the sale of fossil fuels; therefore, we want some money as well to offset what you're doing over there in an undeveloped country." This whole thing was about UN domination and the transfer of wealth.

Another very interesting discussion centred around how you would have approval to do something in another country. The bureaucrat from the UN said: "Well, it's very simple. You come to us with your project, and we measure it. We say: what does it do for the local area economically? What does it do for the state economically? Third, what does it do for the environment?" He stressed that their assessment would be in that order.

I heard the two members that have already spoken on it talk about real reduction. No, it isn't. It's anything but real reduction. With what we are doing here in Alberta with this act, you will see some reduction on unit of production. You've got a choice. If you want to keep hammering that you have a total reduction in the emissions, what you're going to end up doing, then, is of course reduce output. That's the only way you can get at it. Does that make any sense?

I have never understood why Alberta, particularly with our fossil fuels, has to take all of the liability for the exploration, the production, the manufacturing of the product. Why isn't some liability going with that product to the end user? If that's in Ontario or the United States, let them take part of that liability.

I can't support this amendment at all. I think it's going in absolutely the wrong direction. I find it very interesting that the two opposition parties want to see the trading of emissions, the buying of hot air. It doesn't work. It's nothing more than the transfer of wealth.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I just want to correct the Member for Rocky Mountain House, who either misheard or misinterpreted my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's remarks. He spoke against the suggested amendment, and I'm sure that part of the reasoning he spoke against it was due to the eloquent historical explanation that the Member for Rocky Mountain House offered.

I agree completely on this occasion with the Member for Rocky Mountain House about the value, or the perceived value, of carbon trading and offsets. I think that he and I would be on record as saying that we would like to see the benefits being achieved within our province rather than, as you indicated, economic wealth transfers. If something is worth doing, then it should be promoted for its own intrinsic value. We should be encouraging less wealthy nations to have forests as opposed to cutting down the forests to create more corn or more grain for ethanol because those kinds of crops don't provide the carbon sink that forests provide.

My main reason for standing up was to indicate that it's said that you can't turn a sow's ear into a silk purse, which is the equivalent challenge of trying to make Bill 3 environmentally functional. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Calder trying to have an impact on the discussion, but as my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View indicated, Kyoto has such wide and broad provisions that taking the whole package and trying to adapt it to a made-in-Alberta circumstance has limitations. Therefore, we actually are in agreement although there is a little bit of confusion.

We support the made-in-Alberta solution, but for the record Bill 3 barely scratches the surface: a 12 per cent intensity reduction, whereas the total emissions are basically ignored. It's a baby step, but we've got to go farther. We have the capabilities and the intelligence within this House and within our colleges and industry to go further. So I, too, speak against the amendment.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Chairman, I must apologize if I misunderstood the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I never heard him say that he was not supporting this amendment, so I apologize if I misunderstood what he said.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Chair. It was certainly an illuminating experience to bring forward these amendments, which I think are all very reasonable and within the general sense that we do have to in fact make some changes to have actual reductions in our carbon dioxide.

I find it very difficult to try to figure out – nor do I ever really want to – where my colleagues on the one side are coming from. They talk about wanting to have emissions reductions, and then they don't, and then Kyoto, and then they don't. You know, the whole thing is that you have to make a stand. You can't run it through any filter that involves oil and gas companies calling the shots, whether they call the shots through political donations, that somehow they are looking for favours – "Well, hey, don't get in our way; you can be sort of progressive but not too much" – or whatever when the public and the population in the world are looking for absolute reductions. You cannot get absolute reductions and expect to surf along with big oil at the same time. I find that a little bit disturbing.

I'm sure that one thing that Albertans are very good at is seeing people for what they are. Bill 3 is a good litmus test for us to see where people are. At least with the members opposite, I know where they are. It's all rock and roll, big oil all the way, and a highway to Hades kind of thing. Right? But then if you are, you know, otherwise in between that – either you're on one side or you're on the other. You can't be in the middle on this issue. It's not physically possible.

Mr. Chair, with that, there's nothing better than getting the last word in. You notice that the Alberta New Democrats are the ones who, working all night tirelessly, brought in four amendments to Bill 3, trying to salvage what they could from some sow's ear/silk purse combination. Right? So there we are, working tirelessly. I would like to thank the very hard-working staff that we have back at the Annex to do that. Albertans appreciate it, and certainly ultimately we will prevail because we are doing the right thing.

With that, I will adjourn debate on Bill 3 for now. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21 Securities Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a pleasure to stand and participate in debate at this stage on Bill 21, the Securities Amendment Act, 2007. This is the first opportunity I have to speak to this bill. I understand that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford has signalled his willingness to support it, and I trust his opinion. He studied this piece of legislation and also received some information from the hon. minister with respect to the proposed changes. In my quick reading of this bill, it apparently attempts to harmonize securities legislation between Alberta and the other provinces and jurisdictions in Canada, and it also allows investors to sue public companies operating in Alberta that issue false or misleading information. Those two areas are positive.

The one area where we think something needs to be done is with respect to the failure of this amendment and, actually, the failure of the current legislative framework to strengthen enforcement. As a layman, you know, I always say that you can have all the guidelines and regulations and standards you have – you can have as many of them as you want – but enforcement is really the bottleneck. It's basically where the buck stops.

There has always been the debate whether, in fact, we need a securities commission in each province or whether we should just use one federal regulator. I have to confess that I'm not clear on the pros and cons of both models: which model is better for our case in this province and which one is more useful. Was it always the way it is now, or did we have different models at different times? I honestly don't know, and I think that this Bill 21 is creating this opportunity for us to discuss these things. Enforcement and people having recourse against companies which commit crimes or wrongdoing or fraud or things of that nature are issues that we should be addressing and we should be addressing, quite honestly, with force.

In 2005 and 2006 the Official Opposition raised many questions with respect to the securities regulator in this province, the Alberta Securities Commission. In the opposition – and this should come as no surprise to you, Mr. Chairman – we hear many complaints from the public talking about, you know, cases or situations where members of the public who were at one point or another shareholders in any particular company lost their financial security, lost their shares, lost their savings and their pensions because someone somewhere committed a crime against them.

Now in particular, when I am the shadow minister of Justice, I'm getting all of these complaints because people think members of this House and particularly members in the shadow cabinet can push a button and get things done. I have one gentleman in particular who has repeatedly approached me with information, you know, where he alleges that he lost in excess of $2.3 million and that his partner lost a similar amount of money. Now, what can I go back and tell this gentleman?

This bill talks about standardizing and harmonizing legislation. It talks about the ability of the public to sue. Well, he's already doing that. He's already suing, and his claim has been through the court, and it's been processed for many years. We all know that court action in terms of securities and shares and companies owning other companies and companies selling other companies and the role of the regulator and the role of the RCMP and all of these different layers – these court cases are not easy to adjudicate. They take a long time, and sometimes members of the public don't have the luxury of time. Someone is well off and financially secure today, and then tomorrow they've lost everything, and they're on the brink of bankruptcy.

So to this gentleman and to the others who approached my office with concerns: I am not sure that this bill actually addresses that. I would hope that in the future this House will be discussing means for people to seek a quicker remedy, something that is more timely. You know, we should be talking about apprehending the wrongdoers. We should be talking about restitution or compensation from the victims of crime fund and things like that.

Now, the other thing that I would like to highlight in my brief comments today is the rules which should be in place or, hopefully, are being put in place now with respect to Alberta Securities Commission employees and board members. These people are, for the most part, responsible and law-abiding individuals. Some are weak, and some might be tempted to work outside of the law. I think we should tighten our rules to prevent employees of the commission and board members from trading in companies that are being investigated.

We should also have regulations in place prohibiting those employees and board members from trading in companies that are listed with the Alberta Securities Commission, a broader prohibition to avoid any conflict of interest or, as I always maintain in this House, the appearance of a conflict of interest. In a way, we're protecting them, too, because they probably don't want to be accused of any wrongdoing. By having a regulation in place that prohibits them from owning shares in companies that appear on the securities commission, we're basically protecting them as well.

Conflict of interest legislation also governs MLAs, Mr. Chairman. You know, when we all joined this esteemed Assembly, we were told: "You have to declare what shares you own. You have to tell us how much is invested and if there are changes, if you acquire new ones or if you sell the old ones" and stuff like that. I think that MLAs should also be prohibited from nominating Alberta Securities Commission commissioners, again, just to increase that distance between members of this Assembly and the Securities Commission and, to a larger extent, members of any board or any commission or any task force that is appointed by this government or by this Assembly. MLAs should distance themselves from this appearance of a conflict of interest.

Another concern – and I'm sure that other members are going to highlight this – is with respect to the passport system, which allows market regulators to pass the buck on enforcement files. For example, the commission may investigate just one piece or one small component of an irregularity but then move the bulk of that investigation onto another regulator. It actually prevents these investigations from being thorough and complete, and it may allow loopholes to exist where, basically, an investigation is severed or interrupted.

So in a way I am voicing concern, but it's cautious concern for this, Mr. Chairman, and I'd be interested to hear what other members have to say. Thank you.

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, hon. members, I'd like to raise a question of courtesy and respect for one another in the House. I know the committee is a more informal part of the activities in the Legislature, but a number of times this afternoon members have interrupted speakers that had the floor by walking in front of them. It's not just a question of respect or courtesy; it's also against our Standing Order 13(4)(a). "When a Member is speaking, no person shall . . . pass between that Member and the chair." So if we could be mindful of that, I think the chair would appreciate it.

Debate Continued

The Chair: I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I'd like to come back to comments I made in second reading. I understand the need, as I said earlier on having worked under the Securities Commission here for a number of years, for some sort of harmonization. It makes no sense in this global age of money that we have, I guess, 13 different securities bodies across the country. It's wasteful, and it just doesn't make any sense.

I would like some comments either from the minister or the member bringing forth this bill because it seems to me that the way they're getting out of this is – and I mentioned this; I hope that the member or somebody will come back to this – that they are actually weakening what we already have here with our own Securities Commission. Lord knows, we had enough problems here with our Securities Commission, with the rules that they had, but by looking at the bill, it seems to weaken the oversight ability of the executive director.

What I see happening here is a passport system that seems to be going to the lowest common denominator: who has the weakest rules across the country? That's how we're going to harmonize, Mr. Chairman, and I don't think that's what we want to do. That's why we've called in the past and will continue to call for a national regulatory body. I want to stress, again, that this is not the federal government. This would be the provinces getting together and putting in together, rather than the lowest common denominator, the best practices right across all the securities commissions. Surely that's what investors, especially small investors who can't be on top of it all the time, want. Obviously, there's a risk when you invest, but they want to know that the risk is legislated and ruled by rules. If it's not, then that's going to impact the economy, especially for small companies attempting to get into the various securities commissions.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, we see, especially in our neighbours to the south, that they're moving strongly the other way. In other words, their corporate and business ethics have left much to be desired there, and they're prosecuting big time, and they see white-collar crime as very serious.

I'm worried, and maybe I'm misreading this, but it seems to me that as we move to the harmonization, Mr. Chairman, it's a race to the bottom: we can all agree on this; therefore, we have harmonization. You know, if we've gone to the lowest common denominator, how does that in fact help that small investor? As I say, it seems to me that rather than, you know, trying to harmonize, why can't the 13 jurisdictions get together and work it out and have, as I say, a national regulatory body and at the same time look at the best practices rather than the lowest common denominator? If I'm wrong about how we're reading this bill, I certainly would hope that the government, either the member bringing it forward or the minister, would clarify what they see happening with this bill. That's certainly how I read it: that we're actually weakening a Securities Act here that hardly has a great record in protecting investors. You know, look at just what happened a couple of years ago.

Even when I was working in the financial consulting business, there was a lot of talk about our Securities Commission here not doing the job. Then when I see that we seem to be even weakening it further to harmonize with the rest of the country, I don't think that's good enough. Unless I'm misreading this bill – and somebody will tell me – I certainly would not support this sort of race to the bottom here that I see happening with the Securities Commission.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

4:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I believe the intent of Bill 21 is to attempt to harmonize securities legislation with other provinces, that Bill 21 allows investors to sue public companies operating in Alberta that issue false or misleading information, but unfortunately it fails to strengthen the enforcement necessary. My questions basically are: who is in charge, and where does the ultimate responsibility lie?

Throughout the spring of 2006, almost on a day-by-day basis, shortcomings and confusion with regard to the Alberta Securities Commission appeared. The former Finance minister was forever put in a very awkward position of trying to defend the actions of the Securities Commission, indicating that an internal auditing examination was taking place on the Securities Commission. When the Auditor General was called in to review the Securities Commission, although they have a direct responsibility to the government, Fred Dunn's attempts to get the Alberta Securities Commission to obey his questions and provide answers were blocked at every step of the way.

The Alberta Securities Commission obviously has to have a degree of independence, but in my mind it is responsible, first, to the government of Alberta and, secondly, to the other securities commissions, and it makes sense to want to have a similar set of rules. But the shadow of doubt that arose over the Alberta Securities Commission has not moved off: the questionable trading practices that were alleged, the fact that there was no whistle-blower protection so that when employees did raise issues with regard to the conduct of members of the Securities Commission, they basically were silenced and fired. That kind of lack of transparency in dealing with individuals, obviously, is frowned upon.

A member of my constituency by the name of Eugene Ewankow – and I have his permission to bring this up – came to me with a long and very convoluted story of an organization entitled Tobe Mines, a.k.a. Stratum Resources. Now, what he was calling for in a letter that he wrote to the former Premier is as follows. He says:

I write to you while you are still Premier, a follow-up to my correspondence addressed to you comprised of a letter dated February 28, 2005, with two enclosures and another dated May 5, 2005. Please be advised that I am seeking the appointment of a liquidator for Tobe Mines Ltd., which is the subject matter of my previously written letters to you and a former Finance minister prior to our last Finance minister, the former minister of finance and energy. I make this request to the government since it is my belief that government ministries and agencies perform certain acts and deeds in a manner which amounts to abuse of power.

He provided 76 follow-up pieces of documentation. I'm not going to go into names and details because this will be the subject of an investigation, but Project Stanley was part of the Enron market manipulation, and the number of individuals who were either fired from their positions or were disbarred over the dealings of Tobe Mines is an unbelievable list.

If we're going to have faith in an Alberta Securities Commission, we have to empower the people that are employees of that commission to hold their own commission to a level of accountability and professionalism that Albertans can have faith in and, transferring that responsibility, that all Canadians can have faith in in terms of investing in Alberta stocks and companies.

There is a need, a definite need, for cleaning up the Alberta Securities Commission. Bill 21 is a start in terms of that cleaning up, but as I say, there are so many shadows of doubt that require investigation that this is far from settled. I'm not sure that Bill 21 will take us as far as we want to go, but it's a step in the right direction, and I give my Calgary colleague credit for bringing it forward. I'm sure other members will want to discuss whether Bill 21 is the vehicle that will achieve the results that it sets out as objectives.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 21, the Securities Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 21 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? It's carried.

Bill 16 Police Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with regard to this bill? The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to respond to the points and questions raised regarding Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, 2007. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung suggested during second reading that civilians and a member of the judiciary should be part of the investigative unit. The director of this proposed investigative unit will indeed be a civilian lawyer. The director could be a defence lawyer, a Crown attorney, a retired judge, or any other lawyer. Some of the investigators will also be civilians, as will the analytical support staff and subject matter experts who have specific knowledge about matters such as undercover operations and wiretaps. Some of the investigators, or subject matter experts, may also be retired police officers from Alberta, other Canadian jurisdictions, or even abroad as these individuals possess the specific skills necessary to ensure the most comprehensive and thorough investigations possible.

I would also like to clarify that the proposed investigation unit is not a panel. It is an investigative agency independent from police services. In this sense it is more akin to Ontario's special investigative unit, the SIU, than to the Law Enforcement Review Board, the LERB, or the Ontario Civilian Commission on Police Services, the OCCOPS, both of which are civilian review panels. So to reiterate, the director of the investigative unit will be a lawyer, and there will be more than two civilians within the unit.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung also suggested that this proposed unit shouldn't be a fixed body but that there should be more than one team doing investigations at the same time if necessary. It is anticipated that the investigative unit will be comprised of two teams, one in northern Alberta and one in the south, and that the teams will investigate multiple matters at the same time. For example, at any one time a team may be investigating a death that occurred in police custody, an alleged sexual assault, as well as conducting an undercover operation of an officer who may be selling information to organized crime, among other files.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung also suggested that the number of investigations conducted shouldn't be dependent on budget. The director of law enforcement in conjunction with the director of the proposed investigation unit will determine which matters require the unit to conduct an investigation. Although there is a limited capacity within the unit, we are confident, based on our review of incidents within the province of Alberta, that two teams, north and south, will be able to adequately investigate those matters that are deemed to require outside investigation.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Glenora raised the point that the wording of "any matter of a serious or sensitive nature related to the actions of a police officer" is not solidly defined. That wording is contained in section 46.1 of the Police Act. I want to assure the member that the policy has been developed to guide the interpretation of "serious or sensitive." That policy is undergoing refinement and improvement in consultation with various stakeholders and based on research from other jurisdictions.

A number of members compared the proposed Alberta investigative model to the special investigative unit, the SIU model, in Ontario. Although SIU investigates matters of serious injury or death, including sexual assault, it does not investigate matters of corruption or allegations of a sensitive nature. The Alberta model, therefore, encompasses a wider scope of allegations than SIU in Ontario. Alberta will be the first province in Canada where an independent investigative agency's mandate would be broader than just serious injury or death and would include matters such as corruption.

It is important to have some discretion involved in the decision of what the proposed unit is required to investigate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder suggested that Ontario's SIU does not employ an investigator that is a police officer or ever was one. With all due respect to my colleague, SIU employs many retired police officers. The qualifier is that an officer cannot be involved in an investigation that relates to someone from his or her home agency.

In Ontario hundreds and hundreds of allegations of police misconduct are investigated by the agency employing the accused officer. The only matters that SIU investigates are serious injuries, deaths, and sexual assaults. In Ontario allegations of police corruption are investigated by the officer's home agency. The Alberta model expands the scope of matters subject to the independent investigation, and in that way we'll be breaking new ground in Canada.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora suggested that he would like some clarification as to the appointment of special constables within the proposed investigative unit. The proposed unit will have some investigators who are not serving police officers. They may be retired police officers from Alberta or any other jurisdiction or other individuals with the prerequisite skills and competencies. However, in order for these investigators to be empowered to do the work required of them, they will need to have peace officer appointments authorizing them to enforce provincial and federal legislation as required.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods suggested that any problem involving death and police should be automatically investigated by the proposed unit. The director of law enforcement, in conjunction with the director of the investigative unit, will determine which matters require that unit to conduct an investigation. We feel that it's important that there should be some discretion involved in the decision of what this proposed unit would investigate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder wanted clarification on the use of the word "integrated." The word integrated refers to the fact that the two teams of the proposed unit will be comprised of a variety of people from various backgrounds. There will be retired police officers from Alberta and other jurisdictions, some of whom have specific expertise in wiretaps, undercover operations, and homicide investigations. There may also be some serving officers seconded from police services to work for the proposed investigative unit under the supervision and direction of the civilian director. The term is not intended to mean integration with police services but, rather, that the proposed investigative unit will be a unit comprised of a variety of people from different backgrounds.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder also suggests that current or former police officers should not be involved within the unit. In order for this proposed unit's investigations to be thorough, comprehensive, and of the highest possible quality, it is imperative that it draw on the expertise of some serving and former police officers. These individuals are from the pool of the best trained investigators and have a highly specific set of skills: interrogators, undercover operatives, wiretap experts, homicide investigators, and others with similar skills and competencies. I described earlier that Ontario's SIU has many retired police officers working within their unit.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder wants a commitment that this proposed investigative unit is a civilian-driven body and wants to ensure that this unit operates at arm's length and in an independent manner from police and that it is perceived to do so by the public. I want to assure this member that this is exactly what this proposed investigative unit will do.

With respect to sheriffs, their oversight and complaint process, as with all peace officers of Alberta, is covered under the Peace Officer Act. While there might be interest in exploring civilian oversight of these individuals beyond what is already legislated, the Police Act is not the appropriate piece of legislation to do this.

Mr. Chairman, a key mandate of our new government is to be open, accountable, and transparent. This proposed legislation will supplement that mandate and help make Alberta a safe place to live, work, and visit.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I believe the hon. members of the opposition are not prepared to debate this bill, so I would move that we adjourn debate until tomorrow.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a bill that puts in place regulations for overpayments and repayments and the process of informing people when the money needs to be retrieved. I have no problems and have already raised issues in second reading, but I think it's work that has to be done. I appreciate the fact that there's an appeal panel now.

Bill 12, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007, outlines various changes. They are mostly housekeeping matters, but there are some improvements, I think. The appeal panel is necessary because, certainly, the circumstances of people living in poverty change so drastically that sometimes they don't know from one month to the next where they're going to be living. It's very hard for the department to get a hold of these people, and the mentioning of things like registered mail, electronic means, and so on is a bit bizarre, in my way of thinking. I guess it has to be done legally, but how can we make it possible through the department to ensure that these people find out about these situations where there's an overpayment?

There have to be some human dimensions here, where people are helped. I was suggesting in second reading that working through social agencies, this could be done. The appeal, too: people have to know what their rights are in terms of appealing, some sort of process of working through social workers and social agencies to ensure that people know that they have a right to appeal when they're required to provide an overpayment. I'm really pleased to see that an appeal panel may waive repayment, because it's important. When they see the circumstances and the whole situation that a person is in, then they have a chance to waive it, and that's good.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, I'm not going to take issue with anything more in this bill. It's just kind of a shame that we're not really dealing with what we should be dealing with, and that is trying to overcome poverty in this province. I was particularly impressed when Public Interest Alberta published their report on making a living wage in Alberta. A living wage. I mean, we used to think about minimum wage, but a living wage is the level of pay that is sufficient to allow workers to support their families and maintain a safe, healthy standard of living in their communities. Of course, what's involved in providing for that kind of safe living wage is that there has to be adequate money to cover all expenses for food and so on. There has to be enough to support housing, shelter.

Now, Public Interest Alberta sent out a survey to Albertans to find out what it costs to live in Alberta in terms of various family configurations. They got all kinds of results. I'll just give you one example: a single parent with three children, ages three, six, and nine. On the basis of the responses they got, they figured that for that family the basic costs in terms of food, housing, transportation, and utilities would be $2,258 a month. That's the minimum.

Well, Mr. Chairman, when you look at the welfare rates, under benefits for not expected to work, three children, a single parent, it's $1,037. That's the most that you can get in our current program through Alberta Works. That's less than half of what Public Interest Alberta is saying that you need for a living wage as a single parent with three children. So it's impossible for a person to live in this province. Impossible. One thousand a month. You have three children. Impossible. No wonder, then, that 1 out of every 5 children in Alberta is living in poverty. I mean, we're actually forcing these people into homelessness by providing them with so little.

Mr. Chairman, this kind of bill, I guess, is necessary. You know, we had that lawsuit concerning the AISH rates, and I can understand why the government is concerned to put something in place that's going to ensure that that's not going to happen again and that there's some way of retrieving the money. But, really, thinking about overpayments to people who are living in poverty: my goodness, if a person is only getting $1,000 a month, and then maybe they got $1,100 instead of $1,000, and we're going to try to get that money back? I mean, that's bizarre.

I really wish that we could rethink and reinvent the whole welfare system so that it would be more human and treat people with dignity and provide the people with what they really need: a living wage. A living wage. That's what all people in this province need. Out of the living wage they can have a home, a place to live. That's what all people deserve.

So, Mr. Chairman, that's all I have to say. I know that I keep repeating that over and over again, and maybe that's my special mission: to come to this Legislature to fight against poverty in this province. It's time that poverty ended, and we can make it happen, because we have so much wealth. So this government needs to take social responsibility to provide for those who are most desperate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak on Bill 12, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007. I would like to respond to some of the comments of the hon. members in second reading and again today in committee.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods both raised some concerns about the various means by which the director's decision is communicated to the client, who might, as the hon. member has pointed out, be disadvantaged by not having access to fax machines or computers or even, as he stated, a regular address. I agree with that, and it was mentioned by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that there might be a better way for a social worker, perhaps, to convey a decision and the right to appeal.

Now, the difficulty that the bill must address is that we now have a new provision proposed to be added for an appeal from a determination that an amount under section 35 is owed by a client and that it must be repaid to the government. The conundrum is this. There must be a definite trigger for commencement of the 30-day appeal period because the new bill proposes that until the 30-day appeal period has expired, the amount found to be owing would not become a legal debt. It doesn't become a debt until after the 30-day period has expired, so we have to have some trigger to start the 30-day appeal period. This is an improvement. The appeal period must go by, and only when that appeal period has passed is there an enablement for a recovery of the overpayment. The trigger to start the 30-day appeal period would start to run from when the client is notified.

Now, I would like to point out to the hon. members that under section 45(1) of the existing act we are still talking about actual notice of both the decision and the right to appeal. We're not talking about constructive notice. We're not talking about faxes or e-mails or registered mail or anything. We're talking about actual notice, so that has not changed.

When we talk about the deemed commencement of the 30-day appeal period, which is the new proposed provision under section 45(3), I would also point out to the hon. members that this is rebuttable. If the person satisfies the appeal panel either that they did not receive the notice or that they did in fact receive it but they didn't receive it at the time that was deemed to be the receipt notice, then there is a saving provision. So I respectfully suggest to the hon. members that there is a saving provision in the legislation which takes care of their specific concerns.

I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora regarding his favourable disposition to the ability of the appeals panel to dismiss the claim for reimbursement. He also brought up some broader issues regarding the adequacy of income supports, which, I think he would agree, are not particularly within the purview of this bill.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East asked about the term "financial administrator" and the provision providing that a financial administrator may be made responsible for repayment when overpayments are based on false or misleading information. That would be provided that the financial administrator knew that there was no entitlement. Only if they knew that there was no entitlement and if they financially benefited from that overpayment: that's the only circumstance in which that would occur.

A financial administrator in those instances, in response to the hon. member's inquiry, is someone who stands in for the client and who is appointed under section 17 of the act, and that would usually be with the consent of the client. In some circumstances, where required, that financial administrator may be appointed by the director.

Some further general comments were made as to the observations by the hon. members that the tone of the amendments seems punitive. Well, I can say that while the amendments do contain some rather legalistic verbiage, some of those technicalities and particularly the legalities regarding the starting and the flow of the appeal periods which are being proposed are actually to clarify the whole period of the appeal, to make it clear when the appeal period starts and when it ends. As I stated, we don't have a legal debt until such time as the appeal period has actually come to an end.

I can say, Mr. Chairman, that the thrust of the amendment, certainly, is to rectify the unfairness in the former procedures. Those particular unfairness provisions were brought to the light of all in the litigation related to the overpayments to the AISH clients. I believe that this legislation does go a considerable way to introducing more fairness into the process. It allows more discretion in forgiving overpayments and waiving repayment when it's appropriate. It streamlines and clarifies the whole process with respect to finding out when the government is entitled to recover taxpayer funds that have been wrongly paid, and above all it provides for an impartial appeal process, the Citizens' Appeal Panel, in order to have a second look at circumstances where overpayments have been made and before those repayments are required.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I really appreciate the explanation given by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. I still have some concerns about the overall intent, I guess, of Bill 12, which is entitled Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2007. I think that as we look at some principles here, there's a discrepancy between what are purported principles and the bill content because the name of the bill implies much more than what is really happening. It suggests that we need to actually support these people and move them along, and I'd like to again mention that we are not doing that. We're not providing enough money for people to live based on basic needs. I once again want to propose that we need to be looking beyond this to index the welfare rates so that people will have a chance to live with some of the dignity that we all choose.

The focus of the bill is a pretty accurate reflection of the attitude that's commonly held towards the helpless in Alberta. In Dickens' A Christmas Carol there are lines that express this well. When he first meets Marley, Scrooge says: I think the world is a hard and cruel place; we must steel ourselves to survive lest we be crushed under with the weak and the infirm. The helpless are equivalent to Scrooge's weak and infirm. Asked for a donation for the poor, Scrooge replies: I support prisons and workhouses with my taxes; if people are in need, let them go there. When he tries to console his former partner that he was "a good man of business," Marley replies, "Mankind was my business."

I believe that Alberta is due for a Scrooge-type awakening. This government should not be above being questioned about the use of our tax dollars. Hiding behind FOIP is not the Alberta advantage. When it comes to spending, I'd rather be conned by a smooth panhandler or by somebody who's received an overpayment than refuse help to someone who needs it because there's a chance he may be bogus. If one of the world's biggest producers of energy can't afford to invest in its own people and especially the neediest among us, then we're morally bankrupt.

Former Premier Ernest C. Manning was a staunch free enterpriser, yet he balanced this with a social conscience. That's what the words "social conservative" mean, and that's what he meant when he coined them in 1968. It wasn't about regulating people's private lives and relationships but about compassion. He took seriously the Biblical commands to tend the fatherless, plead for the widow. That's how he could be a committed capitalist and a compassionate leader. He believed that one had to support the other.

Some say the current government is less right wing because they relaxed the rules for gambling and alcohol. We've got it backwards. The values are about profit. That's why the phrase "the Alberta advantage" should be questioned. It implies that the helpless are on the outside looking in. I prefer to think and speak of an Alberta opportunity we can all share. We need a broader sense of opportunity. It's time for government with a heart.

This bill does not demonstrate the basic principles of concern for the well-being of others in terms of food, housing, and transportation. The money is not a living wage. It falls short of meeting basic needs. Let's take leadership and end poverty, as expressed by my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Certainly, you know, this small change with Bill 12 brings up certain larger issues that I hear other members bringing forward. My biggest difficulty was the impetus for bringing this bill forward in the first place, which was, I believe, a failure of the government to act on what was already pointed out to them as being a continuation of an incorrect practice. You know, we had tens of millions of dollars being clawed back from the most vulnerable members of our society, and then in the very sort of slowest bureaucratic way possible this was finally made amends just very recently.

I know that I've dealt in my own constituency of Edmonton-Calder with many people that (a) didn't quite know what they were entitled to get back when they finally did seek restitution from the government for the money they took from these people and (b) there was always this underlying sense of fear of not being able to get what is due to these individuals who were entitled to get some money back on their AISH payments. I just wanted to speak very briefly on that because, you know, it's that sort of culture of fear and somehow warehousing away people with the most severely handicapped designation and trying to minimize any dime or nickel that these people need to live.

There is a basic sense of human dignity that I think we have to operate under as being publicly responsible for each of the members of our population here in the province of Alberta. That is a sense of dignity that lies with every single individual human being that lives in the province regardless of their circumstances. You know, it's so easy for us to go back and perhaps nickel and dime and make tiny cuts to the most severely handicapped people in our province, but I think that that sense of integrity and sense of dignity should override that. Certainly, one of the reasons that I ended up choosing to be in public office, with the kind support of the people of Edmonton-Calder, was to ensure that every single individual has the requirements that do allow them to live in dignity and with integrity. It at the very least requires a basic income that reflects the cost of living in the community that you live in.

The sooner that I see something like that brought forward in the provincial Legislature here, the happier I would be. Certainly, I think we could all rest easier in knowing that we are doing our responsibility to the people who are most in need in our province because it's only by the grace of God that we might be going in that same direction. You never know what circumstances might pass your way to put you in a position of need yourself or your family, and I think it's incumbent upon us here in the Legislature to ensure that people can live with integrity and with dignity if not without poverty.

I find it a bit rich here. Again, I'm just feeling a little bit annoyed with my colleagues to the one side because, of course, they love to talk about ending poverty and whatnot. Then I saw them voting very recently on a huge corporate tax cut for the very wealthiest people in our province. I can only say that you can't have it both ways, and when you do try to do so, you probably will end up losing on both sides. There is a certain insincerity about that as well, that I find very difficult to swallow.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Bill 12, although I'm sure not intentionally, continues to stereotype or stigmatize poverty. It makes the assumption that people are guilty until they prove themselves innocent, that they have to justify any overpayments or underpayments to them. The onus of proof lies basically on the victim.

Bill 12 doesn't address the root problems of poverty. There are no market-basket measures that automatically come in effect. There's no indexing such as MLAs are privy to, a public-sector wage increase for indexing. There's no automatic increase with regard to inflation.

This government has a very negligent history of dealing with the most depressed Albertans. Our former Premier used to try and compete with Mike Harris from Ontario in who could artificially reduce their welfare rolls to the greatest extent. In the case of Mr. Harris I think he offered bus tickets to Alberta whereas we were so cheap that we only offered them to Saskatchewan. So there is a history of not recognizing poverty.

Of course, with the boom that we're currently experiencing in Alberta, more people are finding themselves on the poverty side thanks to lack of rent controls, lack of market management, lack of affordable housing. Food banks are popping up more so than new industries or new job potential. We've got to deal with that part of it.

My colleague from Edmonton-Glenora spoke of a potential remedy that we should be working on together, possibly in all-party policy committees, which I look forward to, and that's the idea of a living wage, a wage that would allow a person to live an inclusive life in Alberta and have their needs met, at least have a roof over their head and some kind of food allowance that would ensure that they didn't have to line up outside shelters, whether permanent or temporary.

Part of the problem with Bill 12 is the flawed appeals process. Stakeholders have suggested that the appeals process is flawed because it assumes that the appellant is not telling the truth. This is what I indicated at the beginning of the discussion. It must be recognized that while some individuals might misrepresent information, I would say that the vast majority are just trying to struggle to survive, and they need support both in the financial sense and in the counselling sense. The well-being of individuals has to take priority. People should be Alberta's number one resource.

There have been numerous complaints that clients are not given adequate notice of appeal dates. There is a clause in the amendment stating that clients can try to prove they were not aware of the date of the appeal. This comes up time and time again in my constituency office. Finally, we use the address for the individual receiving payments as our constituency address so that we can advocate on their behalf because of the number of erroneous mailings, addresses that haven't been lived at for years. The bureaucracy of the whole process is extremely flawed. The government needs to make every effort to make sure that clients are reached with important information about their cases. I have suggested before that constituency offices could be, to a degree, a little bit of a clearing house, whether it's bus passes or cheque pickups. If we can add to the streamlining of the process, so be it.

Other problems have to do with financial administrators. Some individuals receiving assistance under this act are unable to manage their finances themselves, so someone is allowed to administer their case for them. Under this administrators can be personally responsible for repaying assistance if it's decided that information was misrepresented or concealed or if assistance was misused. What this does is make two people guilty. Somebody who attempts to act on behalf of a disabled, whether physically or mentally, individual is then on the hook if that individual has trouble managing their own finances, so we punish the person who out of, hopefully, good intentions or a family member wanting to support a son or a brother, sister, mother, father. They get dragged into the debt.

Inadequate supports. One of the biggest problems with the Income and Employment Supports Act is that not enough assistance is provided, especially, as I pointed out, with regard to the cost of living. We have to realize that Alberta's inflated economy puts a tremendous amount of pressure on individuals, especially at the marginal living conditions that are now becoming more common in Alberta, particularly in the large cities but also being experienced in rural communities as well.

What we would like to see changed or added to the act would be changing how training options are offered. Right now they're focused on finding immediate employment rather than maximizing employability and skills for long-term success. So instead of taking the first job that comes along and eking by by doing three or four minimal jobs, let's look into education and raising individuals out of their poverty.

Benefits, as I've indicated before, aren't indexed, meaning that increases in the cost of living and housing are not matched by increases in income supports. We could say the same thing with regard to AISH payments. We could talk about PDD support and wages. There should be an annual increase that reflects the Alberta marketplace. The level of support offered is enough to cover only the bare essentials, giving recipients little chance to escape the cycle of poverty. The Alberta government suggests that individuals should not be required to pay more than 30 per cent of their income on housing. Of course, with no measures to prevent unscrupulous increases any number of times throughout the year, these people are preyed upon. Income exemptions are too low to support recipients trying to find employment and leave income support programs. So we're not incenting people to move on; we're basically holding them hostage at these low rates.

With regard to the child support provisions individuals receiving assistance under income and employment supports are expected to get assistance from sources other than the government whenever possible. That's laudable. We don't want to become a welfare state, but we want to encourage people and support them. Because of this, single parents are expected to make every possible effort to get all of the money they are eligible for through child support. Just simply putting deadbeat spouses up on a website does not constitute enforcement.

Mechanisms to gain child support when the debtor is either unresponsive or does not have the financial resources to provide support have been notoriously unsuccessful. I suggest that the government ends up spending more on collection agents than it does on providing support for the individuals in need. Additional support is provided through this act to help the client come to an agreement with a former spouse or partner and receive the support they are owed. That is laudable.

I don't want to take up all the time, but we need in Alberta to recognize that a number of people aren't living the so-called Alberta advantage. Unless we intervene and level the playing field and wrestle with the market, these people are going to continue to be worse off. Calgary tried to deal with a temporary homeless shelter in the form of a Brick. The cities are taking an unfair amount of the financial burden, which should be the province's responsibility. We need to get past the permanent shelters. We need to get past the temporary shelters. But until such time as we accomplish that laudable goal, we have to provide support for people.

Bill 12 has to go farther. It has to deal with the causes of poverty, not just the minimal allowances provided to poor individuals.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 10
Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole to represent Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act. As stated previously in the House, this legislation will repeal the Horned Cattle Purchases Act. The objective of the act was to promote the dehorning of cattle prior to public sales to prevent damage to cattle during transport. The objective has been achieved, and the act is no longer required. The penalty was cancelled in February of 1972, and the act has been in essence suspended since that time.

I'd like to thank all honourable members for their support in second reading, and I request their continued support on Bill 10. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. It's hard to avoid puns like "being on the horns of a dilemma," and "this is a thorny issue," but I don't want to come across as a city slicker, so I'm going to try and understand a little bit more of what's intended. I gather the history, as the hon. member mentioned, had to do with that there was a transport fee of $5 placed on cattle that were horned, which I gather for most cattle is the natural state of affairs. I find it interesting, however, that there wasn't a sliding scale. For example, maybe we should have had $15 for Texas Longhorns because the amount of damage they could do in transit would be considerably greater than your regular Angus or Anjou type of cattle.

I would also like to know if by doing away with this $5 . . . [interjections] Sorry, did I hear a mooing coming from the other side? Somebody load that heifer. Okay. Sorry.

Meanwhile, back to the horned cattle purchases. I gather that the $5 fee is no longer considered necessary. The person transporting the cattle no longer has to pay that $5 fee, and I gather that, from here, it says that the fee would be deducted from the purchase price of any horned cattle, and that $5 would be paid to the minister.

I'm assuming that this wouldn't be proposed if it wasn't a good move for farmers and ranchers, and therefore there's obvious sense to it. But at the risk of potentially casting doubt on my capabilities to recognize agricultural trends, if that $5 fee is no longer considered necessary, will that improve the transportation of cattle both within the province and for export sales? If that is the case, then I have no trouble supporting Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act. So clarification, please, and then I would be prepared to vote.

Mr. Mitzel: I think, for the hon. member's clarification, it's perhaps unfortunate if he missed second reading of that because a lot of that was explained there. For instance, when you talk about the Texas Longhorns, this was for animals 250 pounds and up. As you perhaps understand, a Texas Longhorn really doesn't achieve a three- or four-foot length of horn until they're perhaps 17 or 18 years old, and they're not transporting those. These animals are going to market. For the member's information it was a $2 fee, not a $5 fee, and most of the animals now are polled animals – in other words, they don't have horns, or there are other means of dehorning them – and the act hasn't been used since 1972. The funds that were in place were used to help promote animals' well-being, for instance warble control, and everything else until the fund ran down to $1,500, and then the money was put into general revenue. As a matter of fact, it hasn't been used since 1972, and there haven't been funds since 1974. So it's just housekeeping and cleaning up.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 10, the Horned Cattle Purchases Act Repeal Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 6
Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just quickly on a couple of items that came up in second reading. Support services: the definition was asked for. It will be defined in the regulation as those services that support or meet the daily living needs of students, faculty, and staff, so food and drink, entertainment, household kinds of things.

Then the pooled trust funds. Institutions often receive private donations whereby they establish trust funds similar to an endowment primarily set up to generate revenue for such things as scholarships. Sometimes with the fluctuation of the markets they're not sure which fund is up or which fund is down, so they just want to go ahead and pay out those scholarships, and then of course the markets will do what it is that they're going to do.

The Auditor General's office has noted that the act is silent as to whether an institution can encroach on the original capital to ensure the commitments outlined in the donor agreements, and of course we are interested that they continue to be met. The Auditor General's office also noted that it would be a good idea to clarify this in the act as it is the current practice.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-West for those answers to the concerns that we raised in second reading debate. I think that does clarify the issues for us, and we're pleased to support the bill.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on Bill 6, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2007?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 21, 12, 10, and 6 and report progress on bills 3 and 16.

[Motion carried]

5:50

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 21, Bill 12, Bill 10, Bill 6. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 3 and Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I've been encouraged that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 1.

[Motion carried; at 5:51 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 11, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 2007/04/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and to speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Kelley Keehn, seated in the members' gallery. Kelley was born and raised in Alberta and is a financial expert, author of three books: The Woman's Guide to Money, The Prosperity Factor for Women, and her latest, The Prosperity Factor for Canadian Kids. I think I'll have to buy a copy for sure. She's also the coauthor of the book Mutual Fundamentals. Kelley is also a regular columnist with the Sun Media, the Edmonton Sun, Canadian MoneySaver magazine, Husband & Wife magazine, and the Edmonton Commerce News. Accompanying her today is her mother, Kathleen Keehn. I would ask Kelley and Kathleen to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program. Seated in your gallery are from Priority Printing Ltd. Mr. Tim Downey, president; from CHUM television Mr. Craig Roskin, station manager, and Mr. Eric Rice, manager, creative/production services. From the Rotary Club of Edmonton we have Mr. Jack Clements and from CKUA Radio Network Mr. Ken Regan, general manager, and Ms Terry Kostek, chief financial officer.

Priority Printing, Access and Canadian Learning Television, Via Rail, CKUA Radio Network, and the Rotary Club of Edmonton are community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program. This program gives grade 6 teachers from all over our province an opportunity to relocate their classroom to the Alberta Legislature for a week. Supported by 35 teachers and over 400 parent volunteers in fiscal year 2006, over 800 students from 32 classes attended the School at the Legislature program. We're very grateful for the support we receive from our community sponsors, and we ask our guests now to rise in your gallery and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through to the members of the Assembly a group of 47 visitors from the grade 6 class, students from Woodhaven middle school in Spruce Grove. They, too, attended your mock Legislature program this morning, and I'm told from talking to them in the rotunda that they passed school uniforms and passed later start times for school, about 10:30, I'm told. They are accompanied today by teachers Mrs. Barb Gericke, Ms Tara Issler, Mrs. Mona Holton, by parent helpers Mr. Cam Walker, Mrs. Karen Hudson, Ms Carrie Wiloughby. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a large group of very special guests from the Department of Health and Wellness. While there are a few managers and supervisors with us today, most of the individuals that have joined us are either currently interns with Alberta Health and Wellness or joined the department as interns and have stayed on following the conclusion of their internship. The staff represent business areas across the department, including pharmaceutical policy and programs, workforce policy and planning, research and evidence, continuing care, human resources, and the planning and policy branches. Staff have joined Alberta Health and Wellness from right across the country: from Calgary, from Edmonton, from Newfoundland, Manitoba, and B.C.

Mr. Speaker, these are the people who do great work for Albertans day in and day out, and they represent a whole lot more people not only in the Department of Health and Wellness but in our civil service who do great work for Albertans. I'd really appreciate it if they would stand and receive the traditional warm welcome and thanks of our Assembly.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, today I am thrilled to be joining all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly with two special colleagues, the Member for Lethbridge-West and the Member for Athabasca-Redwater, to introduce a great success story and the principals that represent two associations here with us today.

This is an historic day in Alberta. We are pleased and honoured today to introduce members of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, the president, Dave Chalcraft; the executive director, Neil Windsor; and past president Larry Staples; and from the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta the president, Larry Stone, and executive director Barry Cavanaugh. They are here in celebration of a letter that I received today that effectively joins both associations under one act. Two associations. They made it. They made this happen. [applause] The resounding enthusiasm is well worth while.

They are accompanied today by a member of my staff, the assistant deputy minister, David Wismer, that had a lot to do with helping in this association developing together in this capacity, and Pat Lobregt. I know all members will join me in celebrating as they stand and are recognized for the good work they've done on behalf of public safety in Alberta. Congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce in the members' gallery today through you to the Assembly Mr. Roy Williams. Roy is originally from Newfoundland and has been in Fort McMurray for over 25 years working for Syncrude Canada, the largest employer of aboriginals in all of Canada. I'd ask him to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to introduce to you a group from McKernan elementary/junior high school, a group of 11 students and two adults, Mrs. Karen Jones and Mrs. Corinne Knierim. Now, I must say that McKernan is an outstanding school, having produced at least two members of this Assembly, myself and the House leader of the opposition, and I urge all the students here from McKernan to look down here and maybe someday aspire to follow in our footsteps on whatever side of the House. So, please, everybody give these students a warm welcome.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Maria Radovic and Brenda Campbell. Maria and Brenda are Palace Casino workers who are on strike. They've been on the picket line for the last 215 days while the government has failed to do anything to assist them. Brenda has worked for the Palace Casino for six years as a slot floor person. She's originally from Grande Prairie and came to Edmonton in 2001, where she went to work immediately for the Palace Casino. Maria is a dealer at the Palace Casino and has been there since 2004. She originally hails from Yugoslavia and came to Canada in 1992 and settled in Edmonton. They are joined by UFCW organizer Don Crisall. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

World Women's Hockey Championship

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today to recognize an outstanding women's hockey team in our country. Team Canada regained the women's world hockey championship last night with a convincing 5-1 win against their archrivals, the United States. In front of a sold-out home country crowd at the MTS Centre in Winnipeg they entered the gold medal game as favourites. They did not disappoint. Canada won every game they played, combining for 32 goals scored and only five against.

Calgary's own Hayley Wickenheiser scored in the final and captained the team to victory. Wickenheiser was also named tournament MVP after leading the competition in scoring with eight goals and 14 points in five games. Along with Wickenheiser six other players from Team Canada currently live in Calgary and play for the Western Women's Hockey League's Calgary Oval X-Treme.

With the win Canada has claimed back its rightful place at the top of the women's hockey world. This is their ninth world championship in only 10 tries. Mr. Speaker, I ask the members of the House to join me in congratulating Team Canada for their victory.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

River Valley Alliance

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise to speak about the River Valley Alliance. This organization is united by a vision of transforming the lands within the North Saskatchewan River valley into a world-class integrated urban park. The alliance was formed in 1996 and consists of seven municipalities holding land in the capital region. When completed, the park would stretch 88 kilometres and would link the communities of Devon, Leduc county, Parkland county, Edmonton, Strathcona county, Sturgeon county, and Fort Saskatchewan.

This park has the potential to be a world-class attraction for the capital region. It has been suggested that when completed, an Edmonton river valley park would be similar in magnitude to New York's Central Park or Vancouver's Stanley Park. As such, the park would be a monumental legacy for future generations. Collecting these lands would be akin to placing them in trust, similar to our heritage savings trust fund. The benefits accrued would not be monetary but instead would allow the citizens of the capital region the enjoyment of the river valley for generations to come. There are other benefits to a river valley park, including the promotion of physical activity and the preservation of land.

This type of project would not be possible without the leadership of dedicated individuals, and I'd like to acknowledge Sol Rolinger, current chair of the River Valley Alliance. Sol is the driving force behind the project and is working with the province, municipal partners, and the private sector to put funding in place to complete the project.

Because this project includes numerous communities, the River Valley Alliance is currently consulting residents on the project, and tonight my constituents and other residents of Strathcona county will have the opportunity to have an open house at Millennium Place in Sherwood Park from 5 to 8 p.m.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

North Saskatchewan River Water Quality

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton's two water treatment plants serve about 40 per cent of Alberta's population. This water is removed from the North Saskatchewan River to produce safe drinking water for all. The annual report 2005-06 from Alberta Environment states that water quality in the past year was better upstream of Edmonton than downstream.

Unfortunately, in the past two years there has been a dramatic decrease in water quality downstream of Edmonton in the North Saskatchewan River. Alarming, in the past two years water quality is down 24 points on Alberta Environment's own water quality index. This bad water quality is due to increased bacterial counts, nutrient and pesticide concentrations. Our neighbours downstream on the North Saskatchewan River deserve better. Bacterial counts and pesticide concentrations are too high in the river water. Polluted and poisoned rivers are unacceptable.

Alberta Environment rated the water quality at the Pakan site as only fair. This test site is at highway 855 where it intersects with the North Saskatchewan River. Some of the communities downstream from this site include Saddle Lake, Elk Point, and the city of Lloydminster, which also draws its water supply from the North Saskatchewan River. Have these communities been told that the water quality upstream is listed as only fair? Before we proceed with further development of any kind, we must clean up and protect our water sources. Pure, clean water should be a government priority. We must reverse the downward spiral in our water quality. We must learn from the harsh lessons of Walkerton and North Battleford.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Optimist International Curling Championship

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With winter coming to an end and the puck dropping tonight for the start of hockey playoffs, it might be easy to forget about the other great Canadian ice sport, that of curling. Until you've tried it, you really can't appreciate the challenge and the fun of delivering a rock and sweeping it into the four foot to win the game.

Recently two teams of young Albertans bested a six-team round robin format playdown to qualify for the 2007 Optimist International under-18 curling championships. Held in Winnipeg, this tournament brought together teams from every Canadian province, the North-west Territories, several U.S. states, and Japan. Both teams did exceptionally well, advancing to their respective final games.

From southern Alberta and curling out of the Lethbridge Curling Club our women's team: skip Jessie Scheidegger of Diamond City, third Erica Ort of Calgary, second Jayme Coutts of Fort Macleod – and, yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that that's my niece – and lead Heather Rogers of Calgary finished the round robin portion of the tournament with a 5 and 0 record. The team defeated Ontario in the semifinals but lost the final game to Manitoba to bring home the silver. The members for Little Bow and Lethbridge-West and I extend our congratulations.

From Spruce Grove and Lloydminster our men's team – skip Shawn Donnelly, third Mike Armstrong, second Tyson Armstrong, and lead Bryan Carter – defeated British Columbia in the semifinals and took an early lead in the finals to defeat Manitoba 6 to 4 and bring home the gold.

I'd like to congratulate both of these teams and their dedicated coaches, Don Scheidegger and Rolly Buchanan, for a job well done. These grades 11 and 12 students have done Alberta proud. They will be the future of competitive curling in this province, and I am sure they will bring home many more medals.

Congratulations to them all.

Climate Change

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak about a prominent issue for Albertans and a prominent issue for people around the world. I know that many Albertans are well aware of the report delivered last week by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. The scientists that make up this United Nations group agree that climate change is real and requires action.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been and will continue to be a leader in addressing climate change, but before true leadership can be demonstrated, a clear vision is required. Albertans are helping the government of Alberta create that vision through our climate change public consultation. So far we've had five meetings across southern Alberta, and along with our Environment minister and our MLA for Calgary-Fort I was honoured to attend our meeting last night in Calgary. A hundred and seventy people showed up for a very lively discussion.

Some of the comments included: "Carbon dioxide has everything to do with climate change. It has nothing to do with it. We need absolute caps and intensity targets. We shouldn't even go there. Government must lead the charge and spend a lot of money. Government should stay out of it. It's the end of the world. It's a wonderful new beginning." Mr. Speaker, although extreme statements were made at both ends of the spectrum, at the end of the day people seemed to agree on at least this: no matter to what degree human beings may affect global warming, we need to find the right balance between quality of life and environmental concerns. Everyone has a role to play: government, industry, and individuals. It's a global problem requiring a global solution at the local level.

So, Mr. Speaker, that was last night in Calgary. Tonight in Red Deer we have another meeting. There are five more. These consultations have been very successful. We've received over a thousand responses to our online questionnaire on climate change in addition to the filled-out copies of the printed questionnaire. I encourage Albertans to be part of this consultation to help frame our next steps for a made-in-Alberta solution.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mental Health

Mrs. Mather: Mr. Speaker, some of my fellow members will remember a phrase from the 1970s: when things go wrong, what can I do? That line on pamphlets and posters, billboards, and public service announcements was part of a shift in focus to mental health at a time when care was moving from institutional to outpatient.

1:20

Much has happened since. New medications are available to fine-tune mental and emotional functioning. New therapies have heightened our awareness of diet and nutrition, exercise, and other lifestyle factors. We no longer see the mental, physical, emotional, and spiritual as isolated from each other in the choices we make.

Yet those with emotional and mental disorders still face barriers in their need to be accepted as part of the body of humankind. The barriers they face are in our minds more than theirs. There is the limitation of labels. Until 65 years ago autism was treated as schizophrenia. Today it is seen not as one but as a spectrum of conditions. There are limitations of our ignorance. One whose inner reality is altered can't snap out of it no matter how simple this may seem. Anyone who has been depressed, and most of us have, knows that. There are conditions that arise out of our environment, such as hyperactivity and allergies. Those who respond to high stress and high stimulation with mental and emotional symptoms are like canaries in the mines of earlier times. We may say that they are ill, but they bring us warnings of unhealthiness that affect us all. In the Bible those we would call the mentally ill were often first to recognize the truth. Their speaking it can be off-putting, but our embarrassment must not stand in the way of the acceptance of our fellow human beings. That is the first step in our common healing.

The incidence of mental illness is on the rise in Alberta. Prosperity is no guarantee of prevention. It is likely that someone you know will experience a mental health problem. If we work towards increasing awareness about mental health and illness, we create a climate in which the topic can be discussed without fear, and that's an important step to a mentally healthy Alberta.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm presenting another 55 signatures from concerned Albertans, mostly from the communities of St. Albert, Edmonton, and Morinville, with respect to employees who work with people with disabilities. The petition is asking for: one, pay parity for those employees regardless of whether they work for government or for community-based or private providers; two, to recognize the work they do and to make sure that their wages are competitive; three, to grant them access to professional development opportunities; and, four, to bring into place outcomes-focused level-of-care standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from 24 residents of northeast Edmonton. They petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta “to hold rent increases to no more than the rise in the average monthly wage until December 31, 2010.”

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table a petition with 28 signatures. The petition urges the government to recognize the importance of community schools by amending the closure of schools regulation to provide parents and other community members 18 months to formulate a revitalization plan in response to proposed closures; two, to strike a task force comprised of trustees and members of the public to review Edmonton public’s current school closure process; and, three, to encourage ongoing consultation and partnerships between parents, communities, and municipal and provincial agencies to ensure that public schools continue to fulfill the educational and civic needs of Alberta’s communities.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, given that the House did not sit on Monday of this week, private members’ business was not dealt with, so the notices that I gave last week will also apply to next week with the exception of Motion for a Return 3. I wish to advise the House that the government will be introducing an amendment rather than accepting as was advised last week.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table some more copies of letters received by my office urging the government to provide funding for the cancer fighting drug Avastin. In doing so, I’d like to reiterate that people who require this treatment can expect to pay $1,750 every two weeks for Avastin treatment and that the drug is already covered by the cancer boards in B.C., Quebec, and Newfoundland. Today’s letters are sent from Norm Hotte, Barb Hotte, Ryan Hotte, George Traynor, Judy Mott, Jutta McAdam, Wilma Korhuis, Valerie Scranton, and Barry Bullen.

Thanks very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of two documents. One is a printout of the website of the First Nations, Métis and Inuit Education Showcase, being organized in part by the former Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The other is the details on billings for his work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it is a newspaper article from the Calgary Herald, dated Wednesday, July 12, 2006. It’s in regard to a question later on today in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three letters to table. One is from Stan Leonard in Calgary, concerned about a dramatic rise in his apartment rent this year.

The second is from Nadine Fletcher and Joel Hagen, concerned and opposed to the Horseshoe Lands development of the old Seebe site.

The third is from Lorne Haugen, a resident around Marie Lake, opposed to the development there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is from Ashley Jones, with praise for the government supplementing child care wages but expressing concern that it does not apply to staff who work with children six years to 12 years.

The second one is from Denise Gagne, Red Deer, with concern and dismay about the lack of maintenance on highway 2 and the increased risk to people using the highway.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today. The first is an e-mail from Bob Borreson of Bon Accord. Mr. Borreson has provided an excellent analysis of health care premiums and supports the NDP call for their elimination.

The second is a note to the Premier from Joan Harvey. Ms Harvey is a member of UFCW and is on strike at the Palace Casino. She writes that she was disappointed in the reception she received by government members and says, “Since I voted PC all my life their lack of response to myself and coworkers [is] disheartening.”

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ve got two sets of tablings here. One is from a volunteer at the Unity Centre of North East Edmonton, reflecting a personal story regarding affordable housing.

The other is letters from a group of about 100 Albertans calling on the Legislative Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua Hunt be tried as an adult due to the nature of his crime, his past criminal history, and that he is so close to the age of 18 years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is my pleasure today to table the appropriate numbers of copies of the sixth School at the Legislature report card, 2005-2006. As we heard earlier today, this is a Legislative Assembly educational program for grade 6 students, cosponsored with community partners Priority Printing, Access Media Group, and CKUA Radio, along with Via Rail Canada, and the Edmonton downtown Rotary Club.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Racing Entertainment Centre Project

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The water licence that the MD of Rocky View has applied for to service the Balzac project has been sitting with the Ministry of Environment for months now. They’ve delayed a decision on this application time and again, and we still have no idea as to when this decision will be made. What we are looking for and what many communities are looking for is some clarity and some information that so far has been sadly lacking. My first question is to the Minister of Environment. Can the minister provide a firm date as to when his ministry will make a decision on this water licence?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot provide a firm date because, as I've advised the House on previous occasions, the applicant has asked for a deferral of the decisions so they can explore other options.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A FOIP response received by our office indicates that the government will provide partial access to records on the Balzac project, but they are exempting untold numbers of pages because of cabinet confidences and advice from officials. In other words, the cabinet of this government had discussions concerning Balzac dating well back into the summer of 2006, and they are not going to release the contents of those discussions. To the Premier: will the Premier release the contents of these cabinet confidences so that everyone can see what was discussed behind closed doors?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are long-established rules and traditions with respect to cabinet documents. This is a situation that arose where the opposition had made an allegation that there were some secret deals. They said they had proof. Yesterday they were trying to skirt around it by bringing circumstantial evidence. This has been going on and on and on. All I say is that if you have the names of the individuals, bring them forward here in the House – you have immunity to do that – and also bring forward this alleged secret document. Here's an opportunity.

1:30

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the FOIP material we received, part of the Balzac project was being promoted by the developers as, and I quote: a legacy for the Deputy Premier. The briefing note also states that as a result of prior meetings with the Minister of Finance, the project would have good potential to obtain support from this government through the rural development fund. There is no doubt now that this project was widely discussed by this government in circles at the highest levels. To the Premier: given that part of the Balzac project was being shopped as a tribute to the former Deputy Premier, can the Premier still deny that his government was intricately involved in this project and made assurances that water would be provided?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again I'm saddened by the fact that the member of the opposition would bring this forward in this House, covered by immunity, making allegations against a former member that cannot defend herself, and bringing these allegations forward without any proof. That's not parliamentary tradition, unfortunately. Again, it seems to be the kind of innuendo that keeps being brought up day in and day out by this opposition.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Contract with Former MLA

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's see if we can make progress on another topic.

On May 2 coming up the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, among others, are presenting the First Nations, Métis and Inuit Education Showcase. Up to 4,000 schoolchildren are expected to attend an event both in Edmonton and again in Calgary. This event is being co-ordinated by Bob Maskell. Along with organizing the event for the government, his company is also receiving a registration fee of $10 per child. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that the reason Mr. Maskell has this job is because of the political interference that got him his first sweetheart deal?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in question is of Métis descent, has years of experience not only as a teacher but as an administrator in the school system, has had a very good record of working with the Métis, First Nations, and Inuit communities, and from all indication the conference is going to be very successful. Might I add: all that information was available on the web.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The truth is this: children going to this government-sponsored event are having to pay a user fee to a defeated Tory MLA, who appears to already be generously supported by this government, to learn about aboriginal affairs. To the Premier: why is this government making schoolchildren pay $10 each to this defeated Tory MLA to learn about Alberta's aboriginal heritage?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again, twisting words.

In terms of the contract and the terms of that contract, the Minister of Education will respond.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, as mentioned by the Premier, the Leader of the Official Opposition has been on the website and has taken the information and tabled it in the House. It should be noted that this particular contract also includes the rental facilities that will be required to host these two events, so there's a significant amount of upfront cost that Maskell & Associates will be assuming. I can only add what the Premier said, that this gentleman has a successful history of planning and delivering aboriginal events, including the 2005 Aboriginal Education Showcase.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, yesterday the Premier claimed that these kinds of patronage contracts would not happen on his watch. But it is happening. The same insiders are still profiting. Mr. Maskell has stated that he would happily do this work for free. It seems that there is a clear course of action here. To the Premier: will the Premier commit to immediately ending any contracts this government has with Mr. Maskell?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what other contracts may be held or whatever the issue is. I don't know what he's talking about in terms of: I would have done this for free. Again, mixing words, bringing this forward. You know, he's chipping away there. If you took the time to call him and ask him the information, I'm sure that Mr. Maskell would've given you the full details of the contract, and you wouldn't have to bring it up in the House and ask the minister.

Mr. Bonko: Mr. Speaker, serious concerns were raised over the contract given to Bob Maskell, former MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark. They've been discussed and dismissed as mere perception problems by the Premier. Under that contract Mr. Maskell is required to provide invoices along with reports of his actions so that the ministry and Albertans can see what they get for their patronage contract. The invoice for September 2005 is interesting. On September 30 Mr. Maskell charged 50 hours of work, 50 hours in one day. Can the Premier explain how this kind of invoice was approved?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of what paper they're holding, but full disclosure was made. All this is fully public information. If there's a question very specific to some item that was billed, bring it forward. I'll table that in the House, and we'll have that clarified.

Mr. Bonko: Well, we're not getting answers on that one. Maybe we'll try to move on.

Nothing on the invoice says that Mr. Maskell provided the ministry with any details of any associates who contributed to these hours. There's absolutely no evidence to suggest that the ministry checked up on the bills or queried the hours claimed. The invoices were just signed and the money carried, flowing to Mr. Maskell. Is this standard government policy with all contracts or just for Tory insiders?

Mr. Stelmach: There are checks and balances in terms of payments made to any individual, any corporation. Those are of course approved by the Auditor General. He reviews on an annual basis, brings forward recommendations to the government. Any time that he brings recommendations forward, we do our best to follow up to make sure that we incorporate them.

Mr. Bonko: On January 23, January 25, and February 2, 2006, Mr. Maskell had meetings with the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Each of those meetings was billed as an entire day's work, and the taxpayers are hit with a $600 charge, $600 for two former colleagues to have a chat. Could the minister please show us what real, tangible value this ministry got out of these meetings?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I will not accept this information until I see it. I will check into it, and if there's any legitimacy, I will make sure I answer in the House tomorrow.

However, I would like to make mention that if the information that this hon. member raises at this time is as accurate as what the opposition leader raised about the story in the Edmonton Sun this morning, he didn't even read the story correctly. The former member of this Legislature, Mr. Maskell, said that he'd be happy to serve on the board for free. He didn't say that he'd be happy to pay for the facilities to host these two events. So I don't accept the information as having any factual basis at all.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our major cities simply don't have enough housing to meet growing demands.

Vacancy rates are under 1.2 per cent in many urban centres in this province. Boardwalk Rental Communities control 12 per cent of the rental units in Calgary and almost 20 per cent of Edmonton's market. The company has said that it will wait until the rent for a two-bedroom suite hits $1,600 a month before they will consider building any new units in Calgary. To the Premier: lots of people just can't afford $1,600 a month for their rent. Instead of just sitting around while private landlords jack up rents, will the Premier commit to take immediate action to stop rent gouging now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have taken action. One of the first things that we did, of course, was put an all-party committee to review the critical shortage of housing in the province of Alberta from a number of points of view, not only homelessness but the working poor and those families that would like to buy a single dwelling. The report has been put together. It's now before the minister. It will be coming to caucus, and we will be making announcements, appropriate announcements with respect to how as a government we can work with the private sector and other levels of government to improve this situation.

Mr. Mason: People are being evicted today, Mr. Speaker, and all the Premier can say is, you know: wait for appropriate announcements in due time.

Mr. Speaker, people across the province are struggling to find affordable housing. While the government sits on its Affordable Housing Task Force report, Albertans are paying high rents, and more and more people are at risk of losing their homes. Instead of taking this hands-off approach, telling people to wait for a report that then will take a whole bunch of time to implement, why won't the Premier commit today in this Assembly, in this democratic Assembly, that they're going to do something to stop rent gouging by big landlords like Boardwalk?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one thing I will commit to is to work positively toward increasing the number of units, working with the private sector, working with different levels of government so that we can improve the situation. We critically need more people in the province of Alberta to fill many of the vacant positions, and we're going to make sure that when they move here, there are living accommodations. These are all issues that are under discussion, and we will have a plan to accommodate the issues. Some of that will come forward in the budget, and others will come in working with municipalities in terms of better planning for the thousands of people that continually move to the province of Alberta.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, hopefully the government will see the light and take steps to ensure that the supply of housing is increased in this province both publicly and in the private sector as well, but that will take several years. In the meantime households who are paying more than 30 per cent of their income are in direct risk of living in poverty. Given the target rent of $1,600, families that earn less than $60,000 a year just won't be able to make ends meet. What is the Premier going to do for those families today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize, of course, with the position taken by the leader of the third party. We're very well aware of the kinds of housing pressures that there are in the province, and we're going to work toward resolving that. I agree with the hon. member that a lot of the solution will not be overnight. On the other hand, at least Albertans will see a plan that'll be put in place, working with the co-operation of municipalities and the private sector, to increase the number of units.

Disputes about Seismic Activity

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, recently my constituency office heard from landowners in Little Bow that they're not being compensated by a contracted seismic company for exploratory work that's been done on their land. While they were advised this week that their cheques are in the mail, it's unfortunate that they have to contact a constituency office or maybe seek legal recourse in order to get these outstanding disputes resolved. I have a number of questions for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Minister, can you or your staff assist with outstanding disputes and claims from folks who are otherwise unable to understand the process of how they get some of these outstanding seismic company claims settled in a more expeditious manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Little Bow for that question. It's something that does come up from time to time. It's important to emphasize that access agreements with respect to seismic are strictly between landowners and seismic operators. The government of Alberta is not a party to such agreements. Obviously, Sustainable Resource Development cannot enforce an agreement to which we are not a party. Having said that, though, our staff would be happy to work with landowners that have this problem and see if we can facilitate a resolution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When claims are outstanding for over 90 days, what other options might your staff be able to offer to landowners who are seeking quick resolve and need the money?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we can contact the seismic company and try to facilitate an agreement that way. Another alternative is contacting the Farmers' Advocate, who has some responsibility for mediating disputes between landowners and companies like this. Failing both of those, the only alternative is to hire a lawyer and go to court.

Thank you.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, to the minister: is it possible that the Surface Rights Board might play a role in assisting these farmers and ranchers in their outstanding claims as well?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it is often thought that the Surface Rights Board might be able to help in this matter. In fact, the Surface Rights Board does not get involved in seismic exploration or agreements. The Surface Rights Board only deals with oil and gas developments after – after – the EUB has approved some sort of drilling or pipeline development. So, again, the Surface Rights Board does not involve itself in seismic exploration.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Twinning of Highway 3

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 16 in a speech to the Fort Macleod chamber of commerce the Premier had said, "I'm pleased to confirm that the two lane portions of Highway 3 west of Fort Macleod and east of Lethbridge will be twinned, with timelines still to be confirmed." However, the director of communications for Infrastructure and Transportation stated that the local residents shouldn't hold their breath for this twinning. My questions would be to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Could he clarify this mixed messaging?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I remember reading something about that. We always have said that we plan on twinning the number 3 highway, and we're going forward as fast as we can. There are going to be some passing lanes put on it this year while we're going along, and we plan on twinning it.

Ms Pastoor: Passing lanes are absolutely not good enough.

We know that this Premier understands the need for the twinning of highway 3, and I have a copy of the briefing notes that he had as the minister of infrastructure. They state and show the pressure from the locals to get the twinning done, but it also shows the promises of the previous Premier to do so. That was six years ago. As an alderman and now as an MLA I have been on this file for 10 years. We need timelines and not delays. To the same minister: when will this highway be twinned?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it is not in our current three-year plan right now, but I will say that we are engineering and working on it, and as fast as the budget allows, we will go ahead and twin that highway.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To look at an even larger picture, my knowledge of this issue is that highway 3 needs to be twinned from the Saskatchewan border to the B.C. border. Can the minister tell us just exactly what the government is doing to address the wider concern in, certainly, the larger picture?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I can say that we've hired a consultant. There's a consultant that's working on the long-term plans. I can say that we're dealing with the municipalities in the Crowsnest Pass on where they actually want the highway, if we're going to do a bypass or go through the towns. We've always said that we're wanting to improve all the highways in Alberta as fast as we possibly can, and we have a four-year plan today to do the catch-up on our backlog of maintenance and rehabilitation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

North-south Trade Corridor

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another highway question for the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. Several years ago this government committed to constructing a divided highway called the Canamex highway, or the north-south trade corridor, running from the U.S. border at Coumts to the British Columbia border west of Grande Prairie. Considerable progress has been made on this project. However, there are some parts that remain to be completed, the bypass around Grande Prairie, to be more specific.

Can the minister give the Assembly an anticipated completion date for the Canamex highway?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's portion of the Canamex highway, known as the north-south trade corridor, provides a vital link for movement of goods, and it supports Alberta's growing trade with the United States and Mexico. By the end of 2007 the divided highway in Alberta will be more than 90 per cent complete. The completion of this project will depend on overall provincial priorities and budgets.

Mr. Graydon: My first supplemental to the same minister. I would point out that this highway project doesn't end at Wembley, Alberta, but carries on another 80 kilometres to the Alberta/B.C. border. It's well known that the traffic count between Grande Prairie and Beaverlodge is extremely high. Can the minister update the constituents of Grande Prairie-Wapiti on what plans are in place to complete that portion of the Canamex highway?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the twinning of highway 43 west of Grande Prairie to the B.C. border is not on the department's three-year program. Construction will depend, again, on provincial priorities and budgets. But approximately 23 kilometres of highway 43 are currently twinned between Grande Prairie and Wembley. This leaves approximately 68 kilometres to be twinned from Wembley to the B.C. border.

In the meantime, the department has plans to complete by the summer of '07 the detailed design for the highway 43X bypass between the number 2 highway and 116th Street in Grande Prairie, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. My final supplemental. Within the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency there is an 18-kilometre section of highway 43 remaining to be twinned. When can the travelling public expect to see the section between Mayerthorpe and Sangudo completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, you'll be happy to hear that the government will twin 18 kilometres of highway 43 between Mayerthorpe and Sangudo this year. Another 20 kilometres of twinning will also be completed on highway 43 this year between Fox Creek and Valleyview. This means that by the end of this year almost 400 kilometres will be twinned between Edmonton and Grande Prairie.

The Speaker: Would any member like to rise and advocate for a few miles on my behalf? [interjections] Oh, thank you. Thank you. Lots of takers.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ground Ambulance Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta municipalities that deliver ground ambulance services have been waiting for two years for this government to make a decision about whether the province will actually take over ambulance services through the health regions or whether municipalities will continue to provide the services. The pressure that municipalities are under continues to intensify as population increases, staff shortages get worse, and funding from the province remains stagnant. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is it the minister's policy that ambulance services are the responsibility of municipalities or the province?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it really doesn't matter what the minister's policy is. It's government policy that we are continuing to encourage and support municipalities in providing ambulance services while we deal with the report from the ambulance committee and look at the results from the two pilot projects to determine how to best ensure that ambulance processes form the appropriate part of the front end of the health system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. In April of 2006 a report was expected on the ambulance pilot project prepared by the member from Medicine Hat along with the chair of the Peace Country health region. It's 12 months later, 12 months since that report was due in front of us. Has the minister received the report?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Then what changes to ambulance delivery are being implemented based on this report, and when will you be making those public?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, after having received the report, being newly appointed in December and having had an opportunity to review the report in January, I met with the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I also met with the advisory committee that had put the report together. I've had some discussions with other stakeholders in the area since that period of time. I've asked the department, and they've put out an RFP with respect to a process to get some more costing information. I will be bringing forward within the next few months a policy proposal through the government processes, and we hope to be able to deal with this issue with some finality in this budget year. In the meantime, municipalities will be funded as they have been to carry on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Spring Flooding

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the record snowpack and heavy spring runoff anticipated, my constituents are deeply concerned about potential flooding in the north, and this is exacerbated by heavy snowfall and rain over the last couple of days throughout the region. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Is the government prepared to deal with this potential flooding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say first of all that Environment is the lead on this, but I will say that the Emergency Management Alberta agency is in charge of the cross-government readiness. The government does have a plan. Also, we have run a tabletop exercise that's based on that plan, and we're monitoring the potential flooding on a continuing basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: does the government have a role in advance of flooding, or are municipalities solely responsible for preparation?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the possibility of flooding in northern Alberta is very high. Municipalities have the first-response responsibility for disasters, emergencies, and flooding. I will say that Environment has done an excellent job in monitoring the potential, keeping track of forecasts, and looking at what they see could be the potential of a flood.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, again to the same minister: is the minister confident, then, that municipalities at risk, such as Peace River, perhaps Fort Vermilion, Fort McMurray, are prepared to deal with flooding if and when it happens?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the Emergency Management Alberta agencies work very closely with municipalities. We feel that municipalities are as ready as they could be for flooding, and the government is there for any assistance that's necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. B. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the Affordable Housing Task Force I had the unique opportunity of listening to the presentations and the stories of Albertans about their housing experiences. What I heard convinced me that there is a housing crisis in Alberta. There is not enough housing for anyone, including low-income people, who need affordable housing, and even skilled workers who are making good money in the oil patch. They can't find enough housing. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Does the minister agree that there is a crisis, and if so, why will he not take immediate action? Why is the minister delaying so long in releasing the task force report?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, it is a priority for this government. We did bring forward the housing task force exactly for that reason: to find out the information from people across Alberta, to consult with Albertans in regard to affordable housing and in regard to homelessness. That report is in my ministry right now, and we will have some recommendations very shortly.

Dr. B. Miller: Now, the task force was given a short 45-day timeline to compile the report, which we delivered on time. Now we're told that the report won't be made public until the end of May, and that's longer than 45 days. Does the minister recognize that the longer this government drags its feet and fails to take immediate action on affordable housing, the worse the crisis will get?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I think it is so important what we do and that the direction we go in is right, and I want to commend that task force for the work that they did do. That was a very intensive report, and we are dealing with that report and looking at the implications and how we can assist affordable housing and homelessness in Alberta.

Dr. B. Miller: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. We are receiving constant reports that skilled workers, including new Canadians, come to Alberta to find work, and then they leave our province because they cannot find housing. Does the province's workforce strategy include the huge issue of housing, or are people just left on their own, in many cases having to live in tents and RVs? Where is the planning?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of planning that has gone into the affordable housing issue, especially with the folks that are involved with the ministry in terms of receiving supports, those that are not expected to work, those that are not able to work at the present time. We have had a constant liaison with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing dealing with his task force and working with our officials behind the scene. But we have also in the recent past been looking more at the impacts of growth and encouraging employers to assist us with the onerous task of finding proper housing, and most in Alberta are doing an exceptional job. I would suggest that, in large part, people who leave the province relative to work has less to do with housing and more with their comfort in the community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

2:00 Holy Cross Care Centre

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Homeless Foundation says that rising rents put low-income seniors at risk of becoming homeless. Meanwhile, the cost of a one-bedroom unit and care at the Holy Cross Manor, owned by Enterprise Universal, has recently jumped from $1,800 a month to $2,400 a month, a whopping increase of $600. Despite this deplorable record of rent increases by this company the government has committed $2.2 million for Enterprise Universal to build 130 affordable housing units at Holy Cross. My questions are to the minister of housing and community supports. Minister, can you assure this House that the proposed rents . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I'm not exactly sure where he was going with this question. Sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure this House that the proposed rents of $495 a month for a studio apartment and $590 a month for a one-bedroom unit in this project will become a reality and that these rent levels will be capped until the provincial housing shortage is resolved?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the criteria and eligibility for acceptance into an affordable housing project go through rigorous inspection. I don't have the numbers in front of me, but if that was the commitment, then that's the direction that it will go.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm surprised that the minister doesn't know the conditions of $2.2 million that has been awarded to this company.

To the minister again. The recent termination by the Calgary regional health authority of the Holy Cross long-term care contract raises serious questions about this government's willingness to blindly shove millions of dollars into the hands of private interests. The affordable housing project is now a year old and a year and a half behind schedule. Will the minister assure the House that Enterprise Universal will not receive one more cent of public money until they guarantee that they will finish their project in a reasonable amount of time and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, the 1950s building in the Holy Cross unit is near completion. Just for a little bit of a correction, it is $3.2 million, not $2.2 million. It is going to have a hundred units that are going to be available. Now, I'm gathering that that's the one that he's talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Twinning of Highway 63

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past 24 hours there have been two very serious accidents on highway 63, resulting in four fatalities. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation. When will this highway be twinned?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that my heart goes out to the families of those involved in yesterday's collision. Yesterday the highways were bad throughout Alberta. There was freezing rain and wind, and it was just a bad day to be travelling.

The government recognizes the importance of highway 63 as a vital link to the oil sands and the amount of heavy industrial traffic on the road. This is why we are committed to twinning highway 63. I can tell you that government has begun twinning the 240-kilometre stretch of highway between Fort McMurray and the junction of highway 55 as designs are completed and federal environmental permits are obtained.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you provide more details on the work being done on highway 63?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Work has already begun to clear the trees for the first section of the twinned highway south of Fort McMurray while engineering and planning work continues further south. This year we have tendered the first section of twinning south of Fort McMurray from highway 69 to highway 881. The cost of twinning the highway is estimated to be more than $940 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. What is your department doing to make the highway safer for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These deaths on our highways are certainly tragic. Traffic safety is critical to providing safe and secure communities for all Albertans, and enforcement is definitely an essential element in our strategy to make our provincial highways safer. We do have sheriffs who patrol highway 63, and they work very closely with the RCMP to target aggressive and careless drivers. I can assure the hon. member that we are planning to increase the complement of both sheriffs and RCMP on highway 63 in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate the hon. member from Calgary bringing up the highway 63 concern. The carnage on highway 63, referred to by Fort McMurray coroner Dr. John O'Connor as the Head-on Highway, continues. In the past 24 hours the highway has claimed four more victims. This government, led by one of many former Infrastructure and Transportation ministers, has dragged its feet on the twinning of this highway, which should have occurred 25 years ago. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: considering that highway 63 has the unenviable record of the greatest number of head-on fatalities, will the minister in a year make the twinning of highway 63 his personal priority? An end date, please.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the information this hon. member is giving is absolutely false. The stats that I have on highway 63 show it as one of the safer highways in Alberta to travel on as far as the amount of traffic there and the amount of accidents that we have.

Mr. Chase: Deaths aren't acceptable. That's the bottom line.

Again to the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: given the reality of the time necessary to twin the highway, in the interim will the minister commit to providing more safe passing lanes and roadside turnouts along highway 63 until the twinning is complete?

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are working on that right now. My department is working on that as we speak to find the most dangerous areas, that we plan on putting passing lanes on while we're working on the twinning.

Mr. Chase: To the Solicitor General. Obviously, increasing the number of highway patrol sheriffs on this road has not produced the desired results. Will the minister commit to providing more professionally trained and experienced RCMP to patrol this highway now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very interesting analogy, and I'd sure like to see some facts to back it up because the report that we have with our sheriffs on the highway and working with the RCMP is that the RCMP certainly respect the help they're getting from our sheriffs, and our sheriffs are trained adequately to patrol our highways.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Care Service Wait Times

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the best health care systems in the world is found right here in our province of Alberta, and there are many, many reasons for that accolade, including outstanding doctors, nurses, care providers and others, and several very innovative approaches that our province has ushered in in recent years as well as our attempts to create and implement even more, such as our very successful hip and knee replacement program. My questions are to the minister of health. What guarantees can the minister of health give us that waiting times for radiation therapy will be reduced at least to the same degree that we experienced with regard to waiting times for hip and knee replacements?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to meet with the federal Minister of Health, Tony Clement, yesterday to talk about the new wait times guarantee trust fund that they've set up. Alberta has of course signed an agreement, as all other provinces apparently have as well, to access that wait times guarantee process. We will get some funds from that, about $62 million, to help fund some pilot projects so that we can in fact do for radiation oncology what we've done in bone and joint: reduce the time from the initial time that a patient presents to the time that they actually get treatment. And that's very important. That type of a guarantee, which will be in place by March 2010, will help Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Speaking of the federal contribution of $62 million, I wonder if the minister could enlighten us as to what Alberta's contribution will be to augment that in order to further those guarantees that he's just talked about?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, one of the reasons why I as minister was reluctant to enter into a wait time guarantee project with the federal government is because Alberta is responsible for health delivery and has to pay for the recourse, and nothing has been worked out with the federal government with respect to how we pay for the recourse. After March of 2010, when we have that guarantee in place, we will of course be responsible for ensuring that any Albertan can get the treatment within that period of time. So we're working with the province of British Columbia, for example, on how we can collaborate and share patients when we can't meet the guaranteed time in our own province. But we will also be working between now and then to make sure that we can reach that time.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I think everyone knows that access is the grinding problem. Once you're in the system, it's excellent: the service, the care, everything else. I wonder if the minister has given some consideration to other areas where we could unclog the system insofar as access is concerned. We have examples we can learn from, and I think we'd be anxious to hear where else this same strategy might be applied.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, this of course is the most important part of this wait times guarantee process. Alberta has wanted not just to pick a specific area and focus resources on that but to make sure that we meet clinical benchmarks right across the board. So we can take the learning from the bone and joint project that we had last year and the team approach, the process re-engineering, which made it much more effective for people to get the service on a timely basis. We will have more learning from the radiation oncology project, and we will use that learning right across the spectrum to establish clinical benchmarks and to meet those clinical benchmarks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Internal Royalty Review

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2006 the former Minister of Energy told Albertans that the government had completed a royalty review and that everything was A-okay. In typical Conservative fashion there was no documentation or record of the review for Albertans to see. The current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development publicly stated that the internal review was never completed. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given the confusion, mixed messages, contradicting statements, and complete lack of documentation regarding the 2006 royalty review, will the minister tell the Assembly who was correct: the former Minister of Energy, who claims that the review was completed, or the current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who claims that it was not?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, first of all, if there's confusion here in the Legislature with respect to this issue, it resides across the way. Secondly, with respect to the review of our royalty system and the structures in the province of Alberta, it is an ongoing process. In 2006 there were, in fact, some portions of the review that were completed. There were four different pieces of the royalty structure that were altered, completed in 2006.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance this time: given that the minister is overseeing the current royalty review and therefore should have detailed knowledge of the 2006 review, can the minister please tell Albertans about the process that was used in 2006, the terms of reference, and, most importantly, who took part in the review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Minister of Energy just stated, it was a review that looked at certain elements of the royalty package. What we are going to be doing and what we are in the process of doing is a complete review on everything to do with the royalties on the oil sands, on conventional oil and gas. We're looking at the whole ball of wax, so to speak. What I will say – and I think that this is very important – is that we don't duplicate what was done. All the information that was done in the Department of Energy with their royalty review will be passed on to our Royalty Review Panel, which is an external panel, an arm's-length panel. The previous royalty review was an internal panel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Energy: given that the Department of Energy provides 11 oil and gas royalty adjustment programs, which in the last two years have cost $1.5 billion in reduced royalty rates, are these programs necessary now that we're looking at high prices for oil and gas in our North American markets?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, it's quite obvious that the answer that I just gave moments ago in the Legislature does not satisfy the hon. member. He should understand that in 2006 we completed a review of some of the parts of the programs inside the royalty regime, and we removed nearly $300 million worth of programs from industry at that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Medical School Selection Criteria

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent study published by the Canadian Medical Association Journal suggests that about 10 per cent of physicians that graduate from Canadian medical schools leave to practise elsewhere. My question for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: what criteria are used to select students for Alberta medical schools, and who comprises the committee?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for this aspect of postsecondary education doesn't reside with the government. It resides with the postsecondary institutions themselves. It's important to note that postsecondary institutions establish their own criteria. They establish their own committees and take a broad section of the stakeholder group that would represent that. Medical faculties from across Canada also collaborate on the selection process.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, since commitment to practise in Alberta is not one of the selection criteria, and given that most of the cost of educating the prospective medical grads is borne by the province, is there any way to have prospective medical students enter into a service contract with health care providers?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, like other students medical students pay for approximately one-third of their education. They are responsible for significant costs while completing their residencies. Service contracts are an option that could be considered. We will look at many options. Service contracts have also proven ineffective in some areas, but we're certainly open to reviewing all aspects of the rural physician action plan and those other action plans that are currently under way.

Mr. Lougheed: I'm just wondering if the minister could elaborate further on what kinds of things he's thinking about for retaining grads.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very important issue for government, and certainly my department takes it very seriously. Recently we announced that medical residents do not have to make student loan payments or interest payments while completing their residencies, and that becomes effective April 1. Bursary funding is available through both the Alberta government and the rural physician action plan for medical students and residents who wish to train in rural communities. We are currently working through a cross-government initiative to address the health workforce challenges through Advanced Education and Technology, Health and Wellness, and Employment, Immigration and Industry. This initiative is a very large collaborative effort amongst the departments and also the stakeholders within the industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

High Island Natural Area Webcams

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Protected areas should be protected, period. It seems simple, but this government doesn't seem to get it. High Island natural area in Lac La Biche is being seriously disturbed by the installation of camera towers and equipment. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture. Staff biologists' report on the site stated that the impact on the landscape was deemed negligible. Will this minister make this report public and tell us if any other reports were prepared on the impact to the local bird populations?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, certainly, we're using some technology that offers another way to Albertans to access protected areas. Rather than having a whole pile of people in a protected area monitoring and following bird movement, we are using technology to do that. It's all done in light of minimizing the impact that we have on those areas.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. Local groups who were not consulted, including conservationists, naturalists, and the local birding society, are upset that this government broke its promise to go on with transparency. Is it the minister's habit to make important decisions about protected areas without public input?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, this particular project is conducted by a renowned biologist, and certainly they monitored the installation of the equipment. I need to say that all of that work was done on frozen ground to try to minimize both our plant and soil disturbance. That was accomplished and done in light of trying to minimize the impact rather than have additional impact occur.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. Conservationists who have seen the area believe that the contractors installing the equipment have done considerable damage to the land. Will the minister table the contract so Albertans know what penalties are in place for companies who violate the contract and how the area will be restored?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding from following this particular file that we acknowledge that there were a few willow shrubs that were broken. If the hon. member is aware, under fairly moist conditions those willow shrubs will recover very, very rapidly. Certainly, we're going to keep on top of the contract to make sure that no violations are occurring, and we'll monitor the site as well.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members that was 102 questions and answers.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Cited Documents

The Speaker: We have a little item coming out of what happened today in the Assembly, and as we evolve with the new Standing Orders, I'd just like to draw your attention to it. We have now under the Routine a provision where tablings will occur before the question period. We had a question period. A minister referred to a document. There's no provision to allow for tablings when an answer is being given, but it's our custom that when a minister refers to a document, he or she should table it.

We have three ways of dealing with this. Number one, we can ask the minister to return tomorrow and table the document. Number two, we can ask for unanimous consent, or number three, I can just make a common-sense decision and say: will the minister table the document now? Would that be okay?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Number three. Please proceed, hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table five copies of a document that I referred to earlier today in my answer.

The Speaker: Now, in that procedural decision this does not negate the responsibility of members to table documents in tabling at the appropriate time before. This is not to get in the back door what you should be doing through the front door. Does everybody understand that?

Now, hon. leader of the third party, were you going to rise on a point of order?

Point of Order
Referring to Newspaper Articles

Mr. Mason: I was going to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and it had to do with the answer that the minister of learning gave to one of the hon. members in the opposition in which he read from a newspaper clipping. Under Beauchesne's 428(e) – and I'd like to thank you for helping me find this – it does not allow someone to inquire whether or not statements made in newspapers are true. I would submit that the converse is also the case and that comments on whether the statements made in a newspaper are true or not in an answer is covered by 428(e).

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, it's common practice, hon. members, that we don't refer to newspapers as our source of information in the Legislative Assembly. I suspect that the hon. Minister of Education, having been trained in that discipline, is having a difficult time operating outside of that discipline, where the belief is that everything that's said or printed is absolutely 100 per cent correct. We all know that that's not true, but we'll accept that that's basically the point.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your ruling, but I think it does bear saying that the hon. minister was not actually referring to the newspaper article as to content as to whether it was true or not but whether or not it was being properly quoted by the hon. Leader of the Opposition in the question. That was the important reference, that if you're going to quote a newspaper, which is perilous at best, you should at least do it accurately.

The Speaker: And all would agree with that.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall call the committee to order. I just want to remind every member that as of this week we are covered on the Internet from gavel to gavel, so be aware of that.

Bill 3
Climate Change and Emissions Management
Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise again and speak to Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, with a suggestion for amendment. This is of vital interest to Albertans, and we on this side feel that the government is taking it with a lack of the urgency and seriousness that it requires.

Bill 3 does require an intensity reduction beginning in July 2007 of 12 per cent in carbon emissions over the previous three-year average. Intensity targets are really related to the amount of carbon emitted per million dollars of GDP. Under this regime it is possible to get industry, particularly the large final emitters, to reduce their emissions by significant amounts through this format of intensity reductions, but it's very clear that as a longer term response to the serious issue of absolute reductions in carbon in the atmosphere, this is not going to win the day. Indeed, calculations out of several institutes, including the Pembina Institute, suggest that we will have a 70 per cent increase in carbon in this province by 2020 if we simply follow intensity targets, as outlined in this bill, of 50 per cent intensity reduction by 2020.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, it's time for us to take very much more seriously the responsibility Albertans have placed in our hands. This is the issue of the 21st century. We have to come to terms with limits and tighter timelines and reductions in absolute emissions. This amendment suggests following the good initial regulation that is going to reduce by 12 per cent the intensity by an additional 10 per cent reduction every two years.

In association with these carbon emissions the first amendment that I'm wanting to recommend is that we establish a tax on the excess carbon that's beyond the $15 per tonne that this bill provides. Indeed, it clearly needs to be higher based on the world market for carbon. The European Union charges closer to $30 a tonne, and we are at $15. If we are wanting to send a clear message, if we're wanting real business opportunities to emerge out of the carbon market, we have to advance that.

As the amendment is being circulated, Mr. Chairman, I could go ahead and read it if you wish.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we shall refer to your amendment as amendment A5, and you may proceed. It has been circulated to everyone.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. I'm moving, then, that Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 6 in the proposed section 60 by adding the following subsection:

- (4) Where a regulation under subsection (1)(dd) states that emissions in excess of the maximum levels established under subsection (1)(d) constitute an offence, the penalties . . . shall be not less than
- (a) $15 per tonne, commencing in 2008,
 - (b) $20 per tonne, commencing in 2010, and
 - (c) $30 per tonne, commencing in 2012.

as is already registered,

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm open for further discussion.

2:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the amendment.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's really my pleasure to rise today and participate in debate on this amendment A5, which seeks to make Bill 3 an even better piece of legislation. I'm going to briefly state my reasoning for standing in support of my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View in his moving of this amendment.

As is obvious to you, Mr. Chairman, and to all hon. members today, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is suggesting that we bring in a tiered, or stepwise, increase into the penalty for exceeding emission targets. As he is suggesting, he is basically saying that instead of just a flat $15 per tonne of waste, we would have an increasing penalty structure where it jumps from $15 per tonne in 2008 to $20 per tonne in 2010, and then ultimately to $30 per tonne commencing in 2012.

Now, if you think about this, Mr. Chairman, what we're trying to say here is that we recognize that bringing in targets and requiring companies and corporations, emitters if you will, to adhere to those targets might take some time. Some companies might have the resources to implement new technology or to bring in those solutions immediately or in the fairly short term. Some companies might have difficulty adjusting. But ultimately if you're looking at a year from now to three years from now to five years from now, everybody should be at that same level of competence, if you will, and having the technology in place and the resources in place to do what they're told.

So while we are prepared to live with the $15 per tonne initially, I think we are not prepared to continue to live with that same meagre level of penalty for longer periods of time after 2008. That's why in 2010 we're going to increase it to $20, which is not really an outrageous increase, but then ultimately after 2012 it's going to be $30 from then on. This is going to be putting us at par with other jurisdictions as the European Union, for example, which is really ahead of us by leaps and bounds. We should aspire to being a world leader in environmental stewardship.

As we talked before, Mr. Chairman, offering carrots is one way. Waving a stick is another way. This is basically signalling to companies that emit a lot of that garbage and a lot of that waste into the earth's atmosphere that we are not going to tolerate this. If, in fact, it's actually adding a little bit of a financial burden or a financial disincentive to their operations, I think they would be wise to pay attention to this. One year from now they have to implement something. Three years from now, when it starts to bite them a little more in their bottom line, they would have to be a little more compliant. Then ultimately when it goes to $30, which is not outrageous, which is really like what the other jurisdictions are doing, they would definitely have to think twice before they continue spewing their garbage into the atmosphere without fear of, you know, having to live with repercussions or the government telling them that they cannot continue on that path.

We can use the funds that we generate from those penalties by putting them into a green fund, for example. It's sort of a health rehabilitation fund for the planet where we basically use the money to clean up and to remedy some of the damage we have done.

I was actually watching an old black and white movie the other day, Mr. Chairman. I can't remember the name, but it was fairly old, and it talked about gold prospectors in the old Wild West. One of the characters in the movie was talking to his colleagues, or his comrades . . .

An Hon. Member: Sidekicks.

Mr. Elsalhy: His sidekicks.

Actually, yes, he was sort of the leader of that group. There were three people who were looking for gold in a mountain in the old Wild West. He told them: every day we look for gold, we're injuring the mountain. That was the sentiment in the 1930s, when that movie was produced. When they left that mountain at the end of the movie because they were rich, and they were as rich as they wanted to be – they did not continue beyond what they felt was adequate; they didn't just keep going – he told them: we don't just pack up and leave; what we have to do is fix the damage or try to remedy the damage that we inflicted on that mountain. He actually used the word "injury." They injured the mountain.

Today we are injuring the planet as well through development that is faster than planned for. This is one way where we can basically remedy and apply some sort of healing or a treatment aspect to this growth that we're experiencing. Growth is fine as long as we can manage it. One way we can manage growth is by using some of those funds that we generate with this escalating, or increasing stepwise, fee structure by applying some of those funds towards healing the planet and looking after the environment and restoring the environment to as pristine as possible, as natural as possible a state that we can pass on to our children and our grandchildren.

Impact on the industry? I don't think $30 per tonne is outrageous. As I said, they're making a lot of profit right now, Mr. Chairman, and it's time that they actually live up to their promise and step up to the plate and partner with us in government and partner with the public by showing leadership. If this is going to offer them the incentive or the enticement to do it because they're afraid for their bottom line and they're afraid for their shareholders, then I'm all for it.

I voice my support for this amendment A5, and I commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for supporting it and sponsoring it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to be able to rise and speak in support of the amendment sponsored by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, which increases by a step-up factor the fines or penalties under section 60(3) in (4) and following (1)(dd).

I find this a useful way of working with the private sector here because the private sector is driven by a profit motive: entirely appropriate, a very successful way. I certainly wouldn't do anything to stand in the way of that profit motive. As a matter of fact, I think many entrepreneurs would claim that that's their inspiration and drives them to be leaner and meaner and achieve more. Good. Taking that as the standard, let's work forward from that.

We know that both money incentives and penalties or fines can be quite successful in helping the private sector adapt to public policy driven issues, and that's really what we've got here. We've got public policy that needs to be setting an agenda to reduce greenhouse emissions. That's for the betterment of the planet.

How do we work alongside the private sector? Well, this is one of the ways of doing it, through a series of graduated penalties if you want to look at it one way. The other way is incentives because, frankly, if the private sector is able to achieve the targets that are set out here, they benefit. Their competitors, if they're not able to achieve it, will be paying a fine. Those who did well in achieving these targets will definitely benefit financially, so it's an excellent inspiration for the profit motive. Essentially, it's speaking the same language if I can couch it that way. So I'm very much in favour of what's been suggested here.

The existing bill just suggests the first target, which is the $15 per tonne commencing in 2008.

2:40

Dr. Swann: July 2007.

Ms Blakeman: Sorry. July 2007. I stand corrected.

This spreads out the timeline a bit more. It's $15 per tonne in 2008, $20 in 2010, and $30 per tonne in 2012, which sort of was the end date that we were seeking that's contemplated in this bill.

Why do we need to do that? Well, I think it's pretty clear to me as a citizen but also as a policy-maker that the public rather than the legislators are driving this issue. The citizens clearly want definitive action on climate control, on greenhouse gases. They want to see substantive measures taken by our government. In that I think the policy-makers are behind the public, which is a little unusual but happens every now and then, and this is one of the times.

Why is that? Well, I think that particularly in Alberta – and we often have the finger pointed at us by the rest of Canada, and in some cases that's unfair – when we look at the amount of industrial activity that we have in this province that contributes to greenhouse gas, we rank very high. Actually, we rank at the top. According to data that was produced by Environment Canada, based on data that was in fact filed with them, Alberta accounts for nearly 40 per cent of all climate-warming gases released in 2005. Forty per cent of everything in Canada is coming out of one province, and that's us. Of course, the next largest emitter is Ontario, and it comes in at 28 per cent, so we are substantially in the lead on that and not the kind of blue ribbon, first-prize award that I was hoping Alberta would take. In the ranking of individual industrial sites that are emitting greenhouse gases, we also rank very high because seven of the 10 biggest polluters in Canada are situated here in Alberta. The province, indeed, has five fossil fuel fired generating stations in the top 10. So we really need to take big steps here in Alberta.

I don't want to see Alberta competitively disadvantaged any more than the next person. In fact, I think that the oil and gas sector is ready to step up. I think they've been ready to step up for a long time because we're not just competing with Canada here; we're competing with the rest of the world. I'm about to paraphrase a quote here. Somebody said that there was a war being waged on carbon. I think that's true, and it could end up being waged against us in Alberta. I don't want to see that happen. I don't want to see us targeted by the rest of the world, so I want us to get out front, to take leadership on this.

This is about absolute reductions in emissions. This is not pussyfooting around. We have to be brave and take those big steps, and again I think our oil and gas sector is ready to step out. I think they are perfectly prepared to be number 1 and to lead on this. They just want to know when it starts. They want predictability in when it all comes into play by targets and timelines, and then they're ready to go. They will do it. I know they will because we're playing with the best here in this province. We're not coming out of the backfield here. We've got the top. We've got the top brains, the top innovators in the oil and gas sector right here in Alberta.

I know that we can do this. We just need to be fair to everybody so that they all know when they're going to start, and they know what they're trying to achieve, and let 'em rip. They will accomplish this. In that case, what's considered in this amendment would not even need to come into play because they will achieve it and will not be subject to any of the penalties that are contemplated in the amendment, and that is the additional stepping up of the penalties that are being brought forward in this amendment. Of course, any of their competitors that can't keep up are going to be subject to it, and frankly that gives the ones that got out ahead a competitive advantage, and that's entirely appropriate.

I think this is a good idea. I think we can do well with it. I think that our oil and gas sector can lead in this, and I think they want to lead in it, but as public policy-makers we've got to give them that starting gate to start from and the targets to know where they're trying to get to.

Dr. Swann: Level the playing field.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It's the proverbial level playing field.

But really what it's about is: where exactly is the starting gate, and what exactly are they shooting for? What's the end target?

So with those comments in support of amendment A5, Mr. Chairman, I will urge my colleagues in the Assembly to support the amendment. I will take my seat and allow others to also speak in favour of the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. You'll be pleased to know that I am going to accept the advice of my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre and speak in support of this motion as well. I'll keep my comments brief because a lot of the things that I was going to say have already been touched on by previous speakers, but I would like to just touch on a couple of points.

The first is that I'm long on record personally as not being a big fan of carbon trading and offsets. I have said that one of the things that I like about Bill 3, even though it's definitely not going far enough in my mind and certainly not in that of the opposition caucus, is that these penalties will stay in Alberta and help to provide Alberta solutions, and I am supportive of that aspect of Bill 3. The fact that in this particular amendment we would see those penalties rise in a reasonable fashion over a graduated period of time makes perfect sense to me, and I'm hoping that it will make perfect sense to all members of this House.

So while I support that aspect of the bill, as I suggest, I think it doesn't go near far enough. This amendment, if approved, would take us even just a little bit further, move the goalpost, as it were, just that much further, which would certainly help in terms of garnering support from the opposition for this bill, which, I'll be frank with you, Mr. Chairman, at this point in time does not have a lot of support from the opposition for primarily the reason that I've outlined; that is, it just simply does not go far enough.

Another point that I'd like to make. A number of people have referenced the fact that the $30 per tonne that's currently charged in Europe – and this would put us on a level playing field with what's charged elsewhere – is still competitively favourable to Alberta businesses in that the dollars being contemplated to be charged as a penalty in Alberta are in Canadian dollars. The offsets or the charges that are collected in Europe and elsewhere are actually charged in American dollars. We're all aware of the fact that right now that actually would put us at somewhere around 86 or 87 per cent of what's being collected in Europe. Even though this amendment does take us in the right direction, it's still leaving Alberta businesses at somewhat of an advantage compared to businesses elsewhere. Hopefully, that will help to persuade some members opposite that this is a reasonable amendment and worthy of their support as well.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and look forward to further debate and, hopefully, a swift passage of this amendment by the members of this House. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I believe you have another amendment to bring forward.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We need to strengthen Bill 3. It clearly does not send the right message to industry and the public about the seriousness of the issue before us. In that regard, I've circulated amendment 2.

2:50

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A6.

Dr. Swann: Amendment A6. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

That Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be amended in section 6 in the proposed section 60 by adding the following after subsection (1):

- (1.1) A regulation under subsection (1)(d) shall impose requirements that are at least as stringent as a 10% reduction [in intensity] in each of the 5 successive years following the coming into force of this section.

This is being circulated now. I'll wait just a moment until people have it in hand.

The Deputy Chair: Yes. That's correct. Give it a few moments. They're just being distributed at the present time.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The spirit of Bill 3 is to add a 12 per cent intensity reduction to the large final emitters in this province, and that's a very reasonable decision for year 1 of our next four years of trying to come to grips with climate change and the responsibility to absolutely reach a cap and start reducing carbon emissions.

What this amendment will do is add annual increases to that intensity target such that we'll approach some 50 per cent reduction by 2012, a much more ambitious target, to be sure, than the existing target, which was 50 per cent by 2020. But even moving this amendment would result in us achieving a target by 2012 that others have already achieved in the European Union and the United Kingdom. By allowing this cap in 2013, which the opposition is recommending as a follow-up to our four-part increase in intensity targets, we would then begin to reduce towards the targets that the European Union and the United Kingdom have already achieved; that is, by 2012 a net reduction of 30 per cent in absolute emissions.

Surely it's clear to us in this part of the world that with our advantage financially, technically, and the flexibility we have in our resource base, we have to do at least our share and try to begin to approach by 2012 what Europe is achieving by 2012. We must be able to achieve by 2020 what the rest of Europe and the developed world are achieving by 2012. This will move us in that direction substantially. Our target then must be 6 per cent below the 1990 level by 2020.

As the Stern report, the now famous report out of the U.K. by Sir Nicholas Stern, indicated, we have to start spending 1 per cent of our gross national product now per year, or we're going to be spending 20 per cent of our gross national product in 20 years with massive dislocation of people, loss of life, and loss of land.

So this, I think, tries to move us more actively, more aggressively from a much stronger position of leadership to actually address what Albertans and Canadians have said that they want: a serious commitment to climate change and reducing our carbon emissions. One per cent of our gross domestic product in Alberta would be $2 billion spent annually on carbon reduction technology, carbon reduction incentives in the renewables area, biofuels, all manner of energy efficiency technologies, carbon capture and storage. Two billion dollars is what the report suggested is going to be needed if we are going to seriously commit to climate change reduction. This is precisely what Albertans are calling for.

At present we spend about $5 million a year through the Climate Change Central offices. We spend about $350 million a year through the ME First program to retrofit and develop new energy efficiency technologies in municipalities and save a total of no more than $500 million a year. That's one-quarter of what is deemed to be necessary. With an extra fee on the carbon emissions and with a ratcheting up of the intensity targets, we could have a larger fund to work with, and we could have a much shorter time frame to get absolute reductions in Alberta.

So in the interest of the future and the interest of being shown to be serious about our commitment to climate change, I strongly encourage your support for this amendment which will move us to still far below the levels by 2012 that the European community has achieved and some corporations have achieved, but it would show a serious commitment to absolute reductions in carbon by 2012.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it needs to be stated at the outset that I think every member in this House would consider themselves, whether they're on that side of the House or this side of the House, to be a responsible and dedicated steward of the environment.

Perhaps we have different ideas on the sides of the House; nonetheless, I think that needs to be stated up front. Now, I applaud the hon. member on his tireless dedication to this cause, but I want to point out a couple of things to him. First of all, he talks about reductions of 50 per cent in carbon by 2010. I believe those were the numbers that he was using. Mr. Chairman, it's very easy to bandy about numbers. I think that before we should be talking about those kinds of numbers, somebody had better be talking about what technology is available to achieve those kinds of goals.

Now, the hon. member brought up an interesting point: that we should be setting goals around what Europe has already achieved. That's a very interesting thought, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to point out something to the hon. member. Last week the Prime Minister of Britain, Tony Blair, announced that although their carbon emissions had risen by 3 per cent in the last year, they still felt that they were on track for meeting their Kyoto targets because, including the 3 per cent raise last year, they're currently 15 per cent below their 1990 emissions levels. By the Kyoto measurement year they only need to be 12 per cent below, so they think they're well within the range.

I want the member to consider that for a moment. At the time that Britain signed the Kyoto protocol, they were more than 15 per cent below their 1990 emissions levels, which is why they picked 1990 as a reference date. The same is true in Europe because they had already taken significant amounts of coal-fired generation offline, so they used 1990 as a reference year. They'd already met their targets, and they all gleefully signed the Kyoto protocol. None of them have talked about any technologies that would be available for major carbon reductions, with the exception of production curtailments.

Right now that's the only really serious avenue that we have available to us to meet 50 per cent reduction targets.

So if the member wants to advocate that we should shut down big sections of our economy, then I guess we could probably achieve 50 per cent. Otherwise, I think I would like to stand here and applaud the Minister of Environment for being the first one in Canada, provincially or federally, to table such legislation that has real goals, real targets, and is actually going to do something about climate change rather than blathering on about it. It's a frustrating issue. I think the Environment minister has done an excellent job.

I do not support this amendment, and I'm going to support the bill as it stands. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, you know, I appreciate the intent here of this amendment. This amendment would require a 10 per cent reduction in each of the five successive years. I'm not sure whether or not that can be accomplished, but at least it has the advantage of setting out a plan.

The difficulty that I have with the comment of the previous speaker and, in general, with the whole approach to emissions intensity is that they are only telling you half the story. The other half of the story is that there is a massive and uncontained expansion planned, particularly in the tar sands in northern Alberta, in their production. So even though you bring down emissions intensity per unit of production substantially, when you're talking about massive increases in the total output, then your overall CO₂ emissions will continue to rise and rise very dramatically. That's the problem. I think it's consciously done by the government. That's the problem with their approach: they're not talking about what's going to happen in terms of industrial development in the tar sands in this province over the next 10, 15, and 20 years.

The Premier at his very first news conference after becoming the leader of the Conservative Party – and I attended that news conference – elaborated on his philosophy quite clearly at that point, I thought, and that was that the government's role was to provide services for the economy, the things that they needed. If people needed schools or if they needed housing or if they needed labour force or whatever they needed, then they would get it from the government, but the government would not interfere with the economic development taking place in the province. The government would not interfere with the economy, and in fact the government would not touch the brake, as he put it.

You take that and then also consider the decisions at some of the closed-door meetings that the government has participated in. For example, at a meeting in Houston in January of 2006 organized by energy Canada and the United States Department of Energy and attended by senior executives from all kinds of oil companies and our own Minister of Energy at the time, the decision was made – at least as far as we know, it was the decision – that the output in the tar sands of Alberta should increase by five times, a fivefold increase in a relatively short period of time.

Take what we've got now in this province and the stresses and strains on this province today as a result of this growth, not to mention the impacts of the CO₂ production, and multiply that by five, and you will get an idea of the kind of future for Alberta that this government has apparently agreed to behind closed doors without ever talking to the people of Alberta about that, never expressing a vision for this province that is producing five times as much oil out of the tar sands as is presently the case, five times as many plants on the go, five times as much inflation, five times as much CO₂ emissions, five times the housing shortage, five times the shortage in hospital beds, and five times the shortage in classroom spaces. That's the vision this government has for this province. It's not a vision that they're prepared to honestly share with Albertans; rather, it's a vision that they cook up behind closed doors with the American government and with big oil companies.

Mr. Chairman, given that the Alberta government is going to bend over backwards to assist the American government in its strategic goal of replacing Mideast oil without regard to the interests of the people of this province or of the environment, then that gives us a context for Bill 3. We see an aggressive attempt to reduce the emissions intensity, which is the amount of CO₂ produced per unit of energy or per unit of production, at the same time as that amount of production will be five times as high. So it really, stripped of all of its veneer, is a bill that will allow a massive increase in CO₂ output from this province. Five times as much production with a lesser intensity may mean four times as much CO₂ or, if they're really, really good, maybe three and a half times the amount of CO₂ that we're presently producing. That's what this bill is for, and that's what this bill means. That's why the Alberta New Democrats are opposing this bill. It's not an honest assessment of our future, and it doesn't deal fairly and adequately.

The suggestion that has been made on the other side, that if we implement some sort of real caps on emission or if we find a better way to do it than intensity, we're going to shut down the economy, is simply not true, Mr. Chairman. The economy is humming along. In fact, it's growing faster, perhaps, than it should. We could ensure long-term employment for all the people of Alberta, all our young people plus people from other parts of the country plus people coming from outside the country to this province, at a much lower level of development.

If the tar sands and if the energy resource of this province were developed in the interests of the people of the province as opposed to the interests of big oil companies and the United States government, we could have full employment, get caught up on our infrastructure needs, and substantially reduce the increase, at least, in absolute CO₂ production in this province. We may not be able to level it off entirely, but we could certainly do a much better job if we had a more honest approach from this government.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that I don't accept what the hon. member opposite has said about the impact on Alberta's economy of this amendment or other amendments that have been brought forward. A more rational, staged, and paced approach to development in our province is not only entirely possible but beneficial and rational and something which we ought to be supporting.

Bill 3 is a ticket to wholesale increases in CO₂ production. It's nothing else, Mr. Chairman. It's all wrapped up in an attempt to appear green and environmentally responsible, but it is quite the opposite. It is an anti-environment bill and not one that we will support with this amendment or otherwise.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again. Just to address the remarks of the last speaker, the hon. member pointed out twice in his talk some sort of secret deal or secret plan we have to rapidly expand oil sands development in Alberta. If the hon. member believes that, I suggest that he call Shaw Cable and get television and Internet access because there is no secret about what Alberta's plans are for production of oil. I think it is patently naive to think that Alberta is just going to curtail their production in oil. We have over 80 per cent of North America's oil reserves right here in our province. I just think it's absolutely unreasonable.

Mr. Chairman, again, the hon. member says that he does not accept my assertion that the only technology available right now is production curtailment. If that's true, then I would point out that the hon. member needn't have suggested that we curtail production by slowing down the oil sands development. That's exactly what he's suggesting.

Mr. Chairman, Alberta is a major energy player in the world. We need to develop our resources in an environmentally responsible manner. I believe that's what this bill is attempting to do, and I'm going to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of quick comments in reference to amendment A6, I believe it is. First of all, I find myself agreeing with the leader of the third party, and that always causes me a certain amount of concern.

Mr. Mason: It causes me more.

Mr. R. Miller: In fact, the hon. member says that it causes him even more concern, so I'm not sure what's happening here this afternoon.

I think he made some very valid points, in particular with the frustration that he is clearly feeling, and I certainly feel, with members from the governing party when it comes to this belief that they continue to expound, that the only way to curtail emissions is, in fact, to curtail production. That is just not true. I'm sure the hon. member knows that, and I think everybody in this House knows that. If you incent industry, they will find a way.

In fact, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in her remarks to an earlier amendment referenced the fact that industry is saying that they're ready. What they're looking for from government is some guidelines. I'm hearing that as I tour the province, too. In fact, we know that many of the larger companies are already far ahead of this government in terms of their preparation for dealing with global warming. My colleague from Calgary-Mountain View just mentioned Shell, Petro-Canada, and BP as examples of that.

It's not a question of industry not being able to come up with solutions. It's not even a question of industry resisting solutions. In many cases they're far ahead of that. It really is a question of incenting industry and making sure, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, that all industry is playing by the same rules. I think what the players in the oil patch are looking for is some assurance that when they invest extra dollars into addressing this issue, they're not going to be putting themselves at a competitive disadvantage with their industry partners.

It's very frustrating for me to listen to government members talk about the fact – and I know that yesterday it was the Member for Rocky Mountain House who was saying the same thing – that the only way that you can reduce total emissions is to reduce production. That is simply not the case at all, and I would be terribly disappointed to learn that, in fact, they do believe that because it's simply not true.

I believe that absolute reductions are achievable if we deal with this properly, and industry is saying that they are achievable if we deal with it properly. Yes, it's going to cost some money, but the bottom line is to make sure that everybody is playing by the same rules, make sure that the competitive disadvantage isn't put in place that will harm some companies over others. Give them the reason to do what we all know is right, and they'll do it.

I certainly speak strongly in favour of this amendment. This is the sort of thing that were it in the bill, the government would most likely have the support of the opposition. These are the places where we all know that we have to go. As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood pointed out, simply reducing intensity and not addressing overall emissions does absolutely nothing to address a situation where you could have twice as much or three times as much or five times as much production taking place and thereby three times or five times as much emissions taking place as well. So how are we any better off if we allow that to happen?

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the comments made by the Member for Peace River about Fort McMurray, I think he tried to draw the parallel that the only way that you could control emissions out of the oil sands region would be to not allow the continued expansion and production there, and I've already addressed that argument.

The other part of that comment that sort of struck me as being odd is the realization – and the government members are hearing this, too, from the mayor of Wood Buffalo and various stakeholders up there – that the issues surrounding the growth that's taking place in the oil sands have so much more to do with things other than just simply emissions that come out of that region. I mean, we're talking about health care, we're talking about infrastructure, we're talking about housing. The whole gamut of issues that are faced by communities across this province is evident in the Wood Buffalo region and in some cases to a much greater extent than they are elsewhere in the province. So to simply tie emission targets to expansion of the oil sands projects and suggest that the only way that you can control emissions out of that area, you know, that they're directly related to the increased expansion of projects in that area, that's again missing the point. Whenever anybody talks about the Wood Buffalo region, we're talking about much more than simply emissions. We're talking about community health. We're talking about the need for some managed growth in that region. It is so much more involved than simply emissions, Mr. Chairman. So I had to get that point on the record.

I certainly support amendment A6, and I'm hoping that others will do likewise. Again, as I say, it would be a very positive step in terms of securing support from the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I, too, would like to be on the record for this amendment. I'm not, probably, all that knowledgeable about speaking about the oil industry and all of the emissions and the carbon sequestration and all of these sorts of things. To me that can become a very complex conversation. But what I can't understand is that in this day and age we are still actually arguing about this. We all know that something has to be done, and we all know that it has to be done now, the sooner the better. I also believe that industries, in particular the large industries who have already met targets in Europe, have known for years that, finally, Alberta would have the backbone to actually stand up and talk about it. Well, we are talking about it now. I just believe that these industries are ready to go, and they will never do it unless someone has the strength to stand up and say: you have to do it.

But I also believe that we cannot keep throwing out the words

“intensity targets” if we also don’t tie that into what the production is. If the production of the emissions go up, then the intensity targets have to go up. We have to have them go in parallel, but the intensity targets have to be in front of what is being produced because, otherwise, we’re always behind the eight ball.

I really believe that this is an excellent amendment that would address the fact that we have to have our intensity targets accepted now and start working on them right now. Yes, we can say that we will meet such and such a thing later down the road, but we really have to have high, high targets to aim for so that when my grandchildren are around, they actually will still be able to enjoy Alberta as I know it.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, rise to voice my support for amendment A6, which is seeking to fix a little problematic section of Bill 3, the climate change act. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View explained why we think it is feasible and why we think it is necessary to tighten, or increase, the reduction on emissions as time progresses, over a five-year period.

I was genuinely disappointed with the position of the hon. leader of the NDP opposition. I understand his frustration that this bill does not achieve the hard caps that his caucus and ours would advocate or would prefer. But I struggle with this, Mr. Chairman, because my approach would be that anything is better than nothing. It’s with this amendment that we’re trying to make this anything a little more tangible, a little more useful for cutting down emissions. So while we’d prefer to have hard caps and absolute reductions, this is sort of a compromise to tell those emitters and to tell the industry that in year 1 this is the intensity target, in year 2 this is the intensity target, and so on and so forth.

I would also repeat some of the comments made by my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, that industry is ready. So when the hon. Member for Peace River is saying that industry is not ready and telling me what technology is available, we’re talking to the same industry. We’re talking to the same players. They’re saying that they’re willing to do it. Technology is getting cheaper. It’s getting more readily available. Their proviso is basically that it has to be applied fairly, and it has to be applied across the board. You don’t want to be picking winners and losers. If they have to do it, they all have to do it, and they all have to do it equally and at the same level.

So if it’s a question of technology, it is available, and it’s becoming more available, and it’s becoming less expensive. If it’s a question of readiness or willingness, industry is ready and willing. We just have to make it fair, make it even for all of them to implement those reductions equally and across the board. If it’s a question of benefit versus risk, preference for hard caps or absolute reductions versus intensity, again we’re just working with this government to try to make a poor piece of legislation, a piece of legislation that really achieves nothing, a little better.

From that angle I would voice my support for the amendment as sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I actually urge others to do as well. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, you wanted to speak on the bill?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, we are, I assume, out of amendments on this?

The Deputy Chair: That’s correct. We are back to the bill. Would you like to speak on the bill?

Mr. Mason: Well, I would like to speak briefly on the bill and then adjourn debate, Mr. Chairman. I understand that that’s what I’m supposed to do. Apparently, I’m misinformed.

The Deputy Chair: The chair will recognize you to speak. You can move any amendment or motion you’d like. The membership will vote whether we adjourn or not. You may proceed.

Mr. Mason: Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I will indicate once again that I have difficulty with this bill and think that it deserves more consideration in committee stage at another time, and I will move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will proceed with the debate on Bill 3. Any other speakers?

Are you ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 16 Police Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to participate in debate on Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007, at Committee of the Whole stage. First of all, I would like to thank the hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, who yesterday, before adjourning debate, offered members of the opposition some answers to questions that we raised in second reading. I actually have to commend the hon. minister, who is to a large extent offering more concise and timely responses than some of his colleagues on the front bench. He is willing to work with the opposition, and that’s a very positive move.

Mr. Chairman, the Police Amendment Act as proposed is basically trying to do two things, and we covered that in second reading. The more important thing is that it basically establishes an integrated investigative unit, which is a group of individuals commissioned to investigate serious police wrongdoing. The composition of this commission or this group or this task force and the mandate and the resources given to this group to perform such investigations is really what we’re talking about here in committee.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

In the responses given by the hon. Solicitor General, he talked about the director of this investigative unit, who is going to be a civilian. In the first part of his response he mentioned that it would be a civilian lawyer. Then he went on to say that it could be a defence lawyer, a Crown attorney, or a retired judge, or perhaps any other lawyer. So I just need to seek some clarification from the hon. minister on whether, in fact, it's going to be a civilian lawyer or any of the other three because I just didn't fully understand if it's either/or or if it's going to be a civilian lawyer, period.

He also mentioned that some of the components of those investigations are going to be carried on by experts who have specific knowledge about matters such as undercover operations and wiretaps, but then he said that some of them are also going to be civilians. So I need some clarification there as well. The part about the investigative unit being chaired or being directed by a civilian appears to be a policy promise. Mr. Chairman, it is not in the act. It is not in the proposed legislation. So I would want this promise translated into one sentence, one phrase, in this proposed act.

The hon. Solicitor General also talked about the number of investigations conducted. He was responding to my request that this number of investigations should not be dependent on the budget. In other words, what I'm saying is: yes, it's good, and it's expected, and it's good practice to have a budget for this special investigative unit.

But I'm really interested in getting some information from the hon. minister with respect to statistics or studies when his department was contemplating bringing in this special investigative unit. What is the number we're looking at? You know, are we looking at five to 10 investigations a year? Are we looking at 10 to 20? Is it more than 50? I don't know. But he made a comment that in Ontario, for example, their equivalent of the special investigative unit does hundreds of investigations every year. So how many do we expect to conduct here? I know that he mentioned that there is going to be a northern Alberta team and a southern Alberta team. How many do we anticipate performing? How many investigations are we going to carry out? What is the anticipated budget for it?

Now, the minister also tried to respond to my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora with respect to the wording relevant to "serious or sensitive nature" complaints. My colleague from Edmonton-Glenora was talking about the definition and how we need it to be more solidly defined so that we don't leave it to the interpretation or the will of the minister of the day. We need sort of a set explanation of what really constitutes serious or sensitive complaints.

The minister indicated that the policy is being worked on. It's been undergoing improvement and refinement in consultation with different stakeholders. We need to know, you know, who these stakeholders are and what they are telling the minister in terms of the definition for this.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I indicated in second reading, I am definitely leaning towards supporting Bill 16, and I based my decision on two things. One, it is something that we have asked for two years ago, in 2005. We were then debating Bill 36, which also amended the Police Act. The other thing is that it is something the public expects and is asking for. The public needs to be assured that people who enforce our laws and protect us are held to the highest degree of accountability. As I mentioned in second reading and as was reiterated by many of the colleagues from both sides of the House, it is not only the actual independence and impartiality when you are conducting an investigation into potential or alleged wrongdoing; it is also the appearance of such. So we need to send the message that wrongdoing is going to be investigated and is going to be investigated thoroughly and professionally and adequately.

Now, there is one area which was covered yesterday in the minister's comments, when he was basically responding to the Member for Edmonton-Calder. The Member for Edmonton-Calder was suggesting that former police officers should not be involved within the unit. He's approaching it from the angle that police cannot and should not investigate themselves. While I agree that we should really mitigate this risk and not have police officers investigate themselves, one workaround for this is basically to allow former police officers or even current police officers who are not affiliated with the service being investigated to participate because we need professional and expert advice, Mr. Chairman.

My preference would have been to have civilians comprise 100 per cent of the composition of this special investigative unit, but in reality and in practical terms you can't have that. So I would urge that if we do hire a former police officer or even an active duty police officer to participate in this because we need expert advice and we need forensic interpretation and we need, you know, undercover work or wiretapping and stuff like that, as was mentioned, then they should be from a service that is not being investigated. I think that's common sense, and I think it is straightforward.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have some ideas to strengthen this bill and to make it more amenable, so with your indulgence I would like to move an amendment at this time, and I'm going to ask our hard-working pages here to distribute the first of two.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we need to have that at the table first, please. Just a moment. We will give the pages a few moments to have them distributed. For the record, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To explain to the hon. members of this House what I am trying to achieve here, what I am trying to do is amend section 3 of the proposed amendment act. Section 3, basically, as it's written adds the provision after section 46.1 to establish the investigative unit and to give it the authority to operate for the purposes of conducting an investigation. It provides the framework for this new team or this new group to operate with the full authority of a police service, basically allowing them to conduct an investigation and to look for evidence, to ask witnesses, and to do all of those things that would be integral to conducting a thorough and fair investigation.

Now, in that section 3, subsection (2) is a bit problematic. It really allows the minister to "designate a person as head of the integrated investigative unit," but it doesn't specify who this person is. As I mentioned, the hon. Solicitor General yesterday indicated that this team is going to be directed by or headed by a civilian lawyer. But, again, it was mostly a policy commitment. It's not in the act. So who chairs it is one question. Who sits on it or who makes up the team, if you will, Mr. Chairman, is my second question.

Subsection (b) also allows the appointment of "special constables as investigators under the authority of the head of the integrated investigative unit." There is a bit of a problem here as well because it does not specify that those special constables have certain criteria or certain training prerequisites for them to be able to fulfill that role and carry on those duties. Special constables receive a fair amount of training, Mr. Chairman, but my question is: are they trained and equipped to handle an investigation that is of a serious nature? You know, we're talking murder. We're talking sexual assault. We're talking serious injury. We're talking abuse of power. We're talking corruption.

I would urge that if special constables are recruited, then maybe we should stipulate, you know, a minimum number of years for them to have been working as special constables or require them to have been at one point a member of a provincially recognized police force or to have passed or achieved the detective level of training and so on and so forth.

Amendment A1, Mr. Chairman, is now changing this subsection to say:

- (2) An integrated investigative unit established under this section shall include.

And we're not saying: shall be limited to. We're saying: "shall include."

- (a) a retired judge,
- (b) a retired or former Crown prosecutor,
- (c) a retired or former police officer, and
- (d) not fewer than 2 members of the public . . .

You have these five members.

. . . one of whom shall be designated as head of the unit.

So we're not limiting it to this. The hon. Minister of Public Security can stipulate other members of this team, and he can add to the team, but I'm saying that we have a core of five that we can build upon. That core group of five people includes a judge, a Crown prosecutor, a police officer, all of whom are former or retired, and then two members of the public.

If you ask me, Mr. Chairman, "How are we going to appoint members of the public?" I would say: it's exactly the same way as we can appoint members of a jury in the courts. Basically, we go to the tax roll, or we go to the phone book, or we go to the voters list, and we pick two people at random, just as we do for jury duty. So we have five people as the core group, and then we can add to them, depending on the circumstances and depending on recommendations by the director of law enforcement, for example, or on the recommendation from the hon. Solicitor General himself or herself.

So it's basically setting up the core group. One of those five people is going to be the head because, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, a policy commitment from the minister is not satisfactory for the purposes of this Assembly. Ministers change. Policies change. We need it in writing. We need it to be set in stone, basically, that when this team is activated or struck, they have to be comprised of this particular composition. Now, if the minister wants to bring in special constables, that's fine. We're not saying that they're not allowed to participate. But at least we have this core group of people with core expertise and credentials that we can rely on to conduct thorough and fair investigations.

Now, we also know that the head of the unit is going to be deemed to be a chief of police, to be given the authority and responsibility of a chief of police. Any person who works as an investigator in this framework is going to be treated as a police officer for the purposes of conducting an investigation under section 46.1. It basically gives the unit the authority it needs to conduct an investigation, and it gives it the tools that are required to carry on such tasks. With this authority it will be impossible to do their work if they don't have the proper training and the proper qualifications. Again, this is where we differ from the position taken by the NDP opposition. You know, you can't just have seven total civilians conducting an investigation of this nature. They need expert advice, and they need people who have the expertise.

So to recap, to summarize, what we're trying to do is have that public oversight highlighted and emphasized by having at least two members of the public at arm's length, totally independent from the government – I would treat them like jurors in any court trial – and to add to them a retired judge, a retired or former Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer, and then any other persons as deemed necessary by the hon. Solicitor General of the day.

Mr. Chairman, I'm not going to unduly speak in favour of my own amendment. I invite others to participate, and I thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I have to say that I'm really glad to see the appearance of Bill 16 and even more pleased to see the amendment that has been brought forward by the hon. member.

I'm sorry. Did that make it amendment A1? Yes. Thank you.

Bill 16 is in essence the son of Bill 36, which I debated at the time, and much of what I was trying to achieve and points I was trying to drive home at the time have been realized in Bill 16. The public really is insisting – and they are right to insist – that investigations of the police are perceived to be independent and are independent of the police themselves. This is to satisfy both sides. I saw situations where police officers had been brought under suspicion for some behaviour, and in fact they were cleared and should have been cleared, but their name was never really cleared because the public did not accept that they had been through an independent process. I felt that that was very unfair to the individuals that were involved. They can never get their name cleared.

In other situations – I think there have been a number of them that have been talked about in the House here and that were certainly well known and well discussed in the media – people were deemed not to have been at fault, and I think many people feel that the investigation was biased on their behalf and clearly unfair and that there was not independence. They just don't buy the results of the investigation.

So in moving a step closer to a really independent investigation, that's what we see in Bill 16. I always have some caution when a lot of discretion is left up to the minister to put something in place. Certainly, in this House what we usually end up with are regulations that sort of appear very briefly in the Gazette, and then they're gone. If you're not paying attention, you don't even see those regs go by. They're hard to find. They're not posted on the website.

Now, maybe with the policy field committees coming, there'll be better scrutiny of that, but basically it was very hard to figure out what it was that the minister was actually going to do with something or what they had done. So what we have anticipated in Bill 16 is that the minister would establish an integrated investigative unit and authorize it to act as a separate police service in conducting this investigation. It mentions that it's expecting that the minister would designate a certain person as head of the integrated investigative unit, appoint special constables as investigators, and, perhaps, subject to the terms of this authorization the head would be deemed to be the chief of police or, I suppose, act in the position that the chief of police usually would in one of these special investigative units.

I agree with my colleague that brought this amendment forward. I think this is problematic. I don't know that it would be seen by a person on the street as being sufficiently independent. It's very vague as to who would get appointed to this committee, and I'm uneasy about the term "special constable." Now, I will be honest with you, Mr. Chairman. There have been so many different gradations of police service now and new categories invented and proposed and implemented that I admit that I'm a bit lost on all of this. So I may well be corrected by my hon. colleagues opposite, but I think a special constable doesn't actually exist as a formal position right now.

This is yet a new division of worker. What is their training? You know, where do they rank in the pay scale of things? Are you going to have somebody on this unit as a special constable who would be regarded by the police service that they're supposed to be investigating as a lower rank or a lesser trained individual or not being able to challenge the regular officer? I'm really uneasy about all of these new rankings now because, frankly, I think we had a pretty good system in place with police officers. We all knew what that meant, and we all knew the training that they got, and we all knew what kind of weapons they carried and what their responsibility to the public is and what the public's responsibility to them is.

I live in the city of Edmonton, and I honestly could not tell you what exists now. We've got these sheriffs that are in place, and I notice that they are now out on the grounds here of the Assembly, which used to be a private security system, they call them. Now we have the special sheriffs out there. I don't know if they work for a private firm or not. It's pretty confusing about what's actually going on.

That's my point, Mr. Chairman. I think we need clarity here. The public needs to know that it's a truly independent unit, that it's not subject to any bias, and that who will head it is clearly laid out. I think that's what my colleague from Edmonton-McClung has achieved with amendment A1 in suggesting that the unit would have a retired justice, a former Crown prosecutor, a former police officer, and members of the public.

I want to be clear here that when we say members of the public, this isn't a way to do through the back door what you weren't allowed to do through the front door. These are meant to be members of the public; they're not meant to be more retired police officers or more retired Crown prosecutors. They're meant to be people from the public, as my colleague mentioned, as you would choose a jury. This is a general casting amongst the citizenry to look for volunteers or compulsory volunteers who would serve on a unit like this but not to stack it. I think that it needs to be seen as being fair, impartial, and knowledgeable, because one of the points that's often raised with me when I get into discussions with my favourite people in blue . . .

Mr. R. Miller: How often does that happen?

Ms Blakeman: Well, more often than you'd think.

. . . is that they're really cautious about somebody coming in to judge them that doesn't understand the culture and the climate that they work in. I understand their point. I think that in fact has been captured by the suggestions of who would be on these committees, in that it does have a former or retired police officer, who can help the rest of that committee understand the stresses that they're under, you know, the unwritten codes that they work with, and that's appropriate. You're also going to be able to pick up some of that from a Crown prosecutor because they're going to be quite familiar with, sort of, the insider look at how the police force operates as well as would a judge.

I think it can be argued that there is a level of expertise there that, I hope, would be acceptable to members of the police forces and that they would be willing to have their case investigated by a group of people like that because there is some expertise there, there is some background knowledge there and an understanding of that police culture that is so important to them. So to my friends in blue: I did get that lesson, I understand it, and I think that that's been covered here.

You know, I had the privilege of working with an Edmonton city police officer who was elected to this House in my first term. I learned a lot from working with her. That was the former Member for Edmonton-Norwood. She really brought a lot to our caucus in being able to explain some of what it's like to work as a police officer in a metropolitan area. I remember one night there was some bill in front of us and people were wailing away. She got up and said: "You know, you've got to give us some credit. We're decent human beings trying to do a good job, and we're pretty common-sense folks. Why on earth would you think that we would go haring off shooting people?" Or whatever the accusation was that night, I honestly don't remember. But that really stuck with me, and I've tried to bring that same kind of perspective to other professions when we're talking about them in this House.

It's particularly applicable here because, again, we're talking about police officers. I think you've got to approach this believing – and I do believe – that most police officers are decent, hard-working citizens who obey and uphold the law, who are doing their very best for democracy and safe communities. And in believing that, I want them to have the best possible opportunity to have any situation that goes awry for them be able to be investigated and reported on in a way that gives them some kind of certainty that they can walk out of there knowing that their case has been reviewed and that it's now out in the public and in the media and that nobody is going to be questioning that this was an inside job and that, you know, they weren't really investigated, wink, wink, nudge, nudge. I think this would allow them some peace of mind and some certainty and allow the public some certainty in who is investigating it, how impartial they are, how knowledgeable they are, and how committed to upholding a safe and democratic society as well.

I'm pretty pleased with the way this whole thing is flowing. We've had some very challenging times in the city of Edmonton and, I think, also in some of our other major urban centres in Alberta when it comes to situations between the police and the citizens. I want to see all of these cases resolved to the best of all possible outcomes.

I'm pleased to see that the government did respond to the pressure that I was trying to bring and that many, many others obviously brought against the government to go back and reform Bill 36. Thus, we have the son of Bill 36: Bill 16. There are the baby boomers and the echo – is that how it goes? – so this would be the echo bill.

I think that amendment A1, that my colleague has brought forward, is an excellent fine-tuning of the bill itself. I would highly recommend it to my colleagues in the Chamber and urge everyone to vote in support of this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my great honour to rise and speak in support of amendment A1, introduced by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-McClung. If you see section 3, I think the Member for Edmonton-McClung is right because this is an issue of crime and lack of trust in the police department. Some people are so fearful that they feel threatened, and the public especially should be involved. Public trust is very important, and it must be maintained. That's why, I think, the Member for Edmonton-McClung is asking to add a few things. It's not limited to just four names like a retired judge, a retired or former Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer, not fewer than two members from the public.

I think members from the public are very important to bring the confidence of the people back. Because of recent incidents happening throughout Alberta, I think the trust which the police department had, lots of people have lost. To bring that trust back, it's very important to bring some people in and involve them in the decision-making. I think it's very important to involve those people. As I said, it's not limited to only those numbers, but as long as involving a few people helps to increase the confidence of the public, I think it's a good step. That's the reason I'm supporting this amendment A1, Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007.

Otherwise, you know, I applaud this move as responding to the concerns of the public. It's a step that does not go far enough towards a truly open and accountable mechanism to deal with the serious incidents and complaints. I think, Mr. Chairman, the main problem with this bill is that the mechanism it provides to conduct independent investigation is permissible. It's not a prescriptive clause making implementing this type of investigation automatic. As the Member for Edmonton-McClung mentioned, this is problematic because, at the very least, any incident involving death should automatically trigger an independent investigation.

In other words, the wording of the legislation should read "must" do one of the following instead of "may" do one of the following. This is not meant to be critical of the ability of the police to investigate their members, but in real terms there is a conflict when a police officer investigates one of his colleagues. Failure to take these investigations out of the hands of the police themselves by not allowing police to investigate police is critical to not only showing actual independence but to preserving the appearance of impartiality and objectivity so that members of the public maintain confidence in the system. As I said before, you know, confidence in the system is very, very important, and we should address this issue seriously so that the public starts trusting this department.

If adding a few names helps to increase the confidence of the public, I think it's not a bad idea. I applaud the Member for Edmonton-McClung for introducing this amendment, and I support that. I want to make sure, you know, that in the police system there's no favouritism or prejudice. If the public members are involved or retired or former police officers are involved, at least, you know, they can't complain that their views are not heard.

So, once again, this was just a brief comment from me. I just want to say that I support this amendment A1 to Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, 2007. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to rise today to speak to this amendment. I'd first like to commend my fellow colleague in the House from Edmonton-McClung for writing something that is so obvious and apparent. I mean, we have discussed it many times. It's been discussed in the media and in the public how critical the amendments to this bill are. Specifically, this amendment addresses a lot of the public's attention to the need to have some sort of adequate review process for police.

This lays out and brings in all of the critical elements you would need in an integrated investigative unit, Mr. Chair, and I believe that the amendment that is laid out is incredibly noble. I mean, a retired judge, a former Crown prosecutor, a retired Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer, and two members of the public, minimum, is exactly the combination that you need in order to do an adequate and appropriate review.

But, Mr. Chair, I can't support this amendment. Not because of its intent – its intent is fantastic – but I'm worried that if we set up an integrated investigative unit and laid out these specific criteria that had to be followed and we couldn't find a retired judge to sit on the panel, the only way we could set up that unit is to be in contravention of our own legislation. So I hope that the intent of the minister responsible for this legislation is to follow these guidelines as best he can. But, again, I can't support this amendment because I fear that it might tie our hands, force us to be in contravention of the legislation and not have the proper integrated investigative unit set up. I do wish to emphasize one more time that I hope that the minister follows this set of guidelines and adheres to it as closely as possible in order to make sure that the investigative units will be effective.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, 2007, and specifically as well to the amendment before the House, which would amend section 46.2. Police services are a very important institution. Police provide services that make our communities safe. Police are responsible for making sure that when law enforcement investigation – they do very, very important work to make all of us feel that we're safe and secure and that the laws of the province and the country are respected and that we comply with them, and when noncompliance occurs, it's the job of the police to apprehend those who break the laws and bring them before the courts for appropriate action. So police services are a very, very important part of our daily lives. Work that they do is of critical importance and valued highly by the public.

Unfortunately, the current legislation contained in the Police Act leaves lots of room for ordinary citizens, for hard-working Albertans to express concerns about the internal investigations conducted by the police when a complaint is lodged against a police officer's conduct or the conduct of the police force in a given community, town, city, or village. Conflict-of-interest issues are very much a part of the concern expressed by the public, who appreciate very much the nature of the work that police services are called upon to do. But when they err in doing their work, the processes in place, the procedures in place to investigate that conduct about which particular persons in the public may have complaints or concerns, it's the police that are responsible or called upon to do those investigations.

So police investigating themselves about misconduct of police officers or police forces is one source of concern that Albertans have. They would want to see an independent agency investigating public conduct. I think it's only fair that the police services themselves be relieved of this onerous responsibility because they're always concerned, and they're properly concerned, as we are, that the public have full confidence in the integrity of the work that the police does. When there is an error, perceived or real, or a complaint about the work and the conduct of police services or police officers, I think it's unfair to expect them to investigate themselves because it opens the possibility that the public will not have confidence in the investigation done internally by police of its own conduct.

So independence of investigation and having in place a legislatively created body or entity that has that independence to conduct these investigations about complaints about police work I think is something that's badly needed and overdue. We should as legislators enact a piece of legislation that will provide the public the assurance that we indeed are listening to their serious concerns and that we are ready to act to ensure that there is that independent body or entity that will conduct these investigations.

The pressure on the government in view of growing public perception that there is conflict of interest when some members of the police have seemed to have acted against the very serious nature of the responsibilities that they're supposed to discharge when conducting their work has become a large concern, a major concern. It's been a growing concern. Various incidents over the last few years have fuelled this concern further, so it's time to take steps in this Assembly by way of changing existing legislation, by creating a provision that will show the public that it has now reasons to restore its confidence in the way investigations are done, that they needn't worry about any conflict of interest because there will be no conflict of interest given the new legislative provisions.

The definitions and the procedures already outlined in the existing piece of legislation, the Police Act, obviously have not served to restore full confidence on the part of members of the public in some of the investigations into the alleged misconduct of police services or members of the police services that have taken place in our communities. Recent examples – I don't need to outline them – are there which justify, I think, concern on the part of the public that we need to have appropriate investigative entities independent of the police services themselves, which would create fairness for the police. They'll be relieved of this constant concern the public has about police investigating itself. They have enough challenges as it is, you know, in terms of conducting their work as police officers and police forces that they shouldn't be put in a position where they have to defend themselves all the time with respect to problems that need to be investigated and when they themselves are called upon to take the responsibility and investigate them.

So this bill, Bill 16, Police Amendment Act, I think is very short, a few pages long, and the heart of the bill addresses that concern of the public. Section 46.2 will give the minister the authority, the power to “establish an integrated investigative unit and authorize it to act as another police service for the purposes of conducting an investigation under section 46.1.”

Now, Mr. Chairman, I've been trying to look around to see if the integrated investigative unit as a term – it's a new term, it seems to me – is defined anywhere in this piece of proposed legislation. I don't find it there. So the absence of a clear definition of what this proposed legislation intends this term to mean to me is a serious weakness in the proposed legislation.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, 46.2(2) states that the minister may

- (a) designate a person as head of the integrated investigative unit, and
- (b) appoint special constables as investigators under the authority of the head of the integrated investigative unit.

Now, a very serious question that this part of the bill begs is what is going to be the composition of this integrated investigative unit, even when it's clearly defined. I think there's a need for a clear provision in the legislation to identify the composition in clear terms: its membership, who will chair it, what are the different representatives who are going to represent different segments of our communities, including the law enforcement community, the judicial community, and the regular, ordinary, hard-working Albertans as citizens, to whom the police service is expected to provide services. There's an absence of any attempt to clearly articulate the membership of such an integrated investigative unit, to have a clear definition of such a unit. The provisions in the proposed legislation I think will still leave the public unsatisfied with respect to the representation of different segments of the community which have a real stake in the success of the proposed investigative unit and their ability to conduct investigations which will not only be independent but seem to be independent of the police services themselves.

The amendment before us makes an attempt, therefore, at least to address one of the two concerns that I've expressed. It doesn't necessarily deal with the definition of the integrated investigative unit, but it does in a serious way make an attempt to outline, enumerate if you wish, the various stakeholders in the community who should be represented on it: a retired judge, a retired or former Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer. Here we have the judiciary because of the expertise; a Crown prosecutor, a very important part of the court processes; a retired police officer – it's very, very important that the police be represented, albeit in the form of a retired police officer – and at least two members who are ordinary and regular citizens from our community.

As to the size of this investigative unit it certainly will need to have at least five members, and out of those one of the two regular citizens will be designated as the head of the unit. I think that this is also a good thing. Albertans who are not specialists in any aspect of the judicial system, of the justice system, of the law enforcement system I think have both concerns, legitimate abilities, and capacities to serve as heads. It also in a sense removes it one step further. It really puts this unit at arm's length from any specialists. It gives regular citizens a real presence and ability to influence the proceedings of this in order that the decisions made by this integrated investigative unit are, indeed, independent and seen to be independent and that they, therefore, serve to restore both respect and confidence in our police services.

Will it be really difficult for the minister to find a retired judge to be on such a unit or a retired prosecutor or a retired or former police officer? I don't think so. I think that this is a concern, a legitimate one. I appreciate the fact that the matter of whether or not this proposal is practical is raised, but I have a feeling that it's a concern that really shouldn't be a serious obstacle. This concern does put a finger on something, but there really shouldn't be a problem in implementing this particular proposal which is contained in this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I'm happy to lend my support to this amendment before the House and hope that other members will also give it serious consideration.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to begin by saying that I do appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. As a matter of fact, recently the leader of his party made me an honorary member of the NDP caucus. I thought I would try to use that to sit in on their discussions about question period, but the leader quickly told me that that was not permitted. So I withdrew that membership very quickly.

As much as his arguments are excellent, his arguments to the amendment to Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, and as much as his arguments are convincing, I'm afraid that I'm going to have to side with the Member for Battle River-Wainwright. The Member for Battle River-Wainwright talked about some situations that I think merit further discussion. He talked about the possible impossibility of finding a retired judge, a retired or former Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer, and not fewer than two members of the public. Or least a difficulty. At least a difficulty.

Come on. Let's be realistic. What does the word “retired” mean? I know what it means to me. It means that you're done. It means that it's time to take it easy. It means that it's time to go out and enjoy the big world that's out there. Mr. Chairman, as much as I absolutely appreciate our retired people and wish that they would come back and help us out in this severely underserved workforce that we have, I want to grant them that opportunity to stay retired. I want to let them be retired because that's important. I know that when I retire, I hope that people will just let me retire. Yes, they have lots of skills; they have lots of abilities.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, I have to say, is not one that is going to be supported by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. Again, I appreciate the comments and, certainly, the debate that has been going on, but I will cast my vote with the Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and participate in debate on amendment A1 to Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007. First of all, in response to my colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar, I'd just like to point out that his very own government has a bill on the Order Paper, Bill 28, which would extend judges holding their seats past the age of 70. It looks like rather than retiring sooner, they're actually going to be sticking around longer. So I'll be curious to see how you vote on that bill, hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, not only is it true in politics, but it's certainly true in the case of investigations where police wrongdoing is alleged that perception is reality. Police forces all across North America have certainly come to recognize this over the past several years, and civilian oversight, public oversight into police activities is a trend that clearly has a lot of . . .

Mr. Elsalhy: Traction.

Mr. R. Miller: A lot of traction, the Member for Edmonton-McClung says. It's not quite the word I was looking for, but I think that people understand.

This is definitely a movement whose time has come, and police forces across the country recognize that and are dealing with it. As my colleague from Edmonton-McClung pointed out earlier today, certainly, this is something that those of us in the Official Opposition have been calling for for some time. So we're supportive of the move in that direction.

In speaking to this particular amendment, I really, really do not understand, Mr. Chair, why anybody in this House wouldn't support this amendment. It's a rational, well-thought-out amendment. You know, I think that it would be fair to say there are times when members opposite think that the opposition brings forward amendments just for the sake of bringing forward amendments. Of course, that would never ever happen. There are always good, well-thought-out reasons behind every amendment that we bring forward, but this one might in fact be one of the best that I've ever seen.

As the Member for Battle River-Wainwright pointed out, it's exactly what you need if you're going to have some sort of public oversight. It's exactly what you need: a judge or a retired judge or a former judge. You know what? If government members have their way, we'll soon be electing judges, and there'll be a lot more former judges than there ever were before. So I don't think that we'll have a problem finding former judges. A judge obviously makes sense. A retired or former Crown prosecutor, a retired or former police officer, no fewer than two members of the public: it's almost a no-brainer. It makes so much sense. So I'm really not sure why members opposite wouldn't support this.

The other thing that has to be pointed out is that the minister still retains an awful lot of control and power over the structure of this committee even if this amendment were to pass. It says, "not fewer than 2 members of the public." The minister has complete jurisdiction to add more than that if he sees fit. So I think that it's very well thought out.

The other thing that I would just like to point out, Mr. Chairman, is in terms of supporting this amendment. We've heard now from two members on the governing side who have indicated that they have real concerns about whether or not we could actually locate a former judge or a former prosecutor that would be willing to serve on this committee. What would be the consequences if, in fact, we weren't able to do that? Would we not be able to strike the committee? Is it their fear that we wouldn't be able to do that or that we might be breaking the government's own law if we did strike a committee that didn't have a former judge or a former prosecutor on it? Well, that's not going to happen. In this House the minister, when discussing this bill, said that he was quite prepared to go to other Canadian jurisdictions outside of Alberta to look for the appropriate experts to be named to the panel, and he said that he would even, if necessary, go abroad to find these individuals.

Now, is the Member for Battle River-Wainwright or the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar suggesting that the minister would not be able to find a retired judge somewhere in North America? The minister himself has already said that he's more than willing to look outside of the Alberta jurisdiction, whether it be in other Canadian jurisdictions or perhaps abroad, if necessary, to find these people. So there is obviously no concern whatsoever about whether or not we can find a retired judge or a retired prosecutor.

Given that revelation, Mr. Chairman, I'm sure that now the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and the Member for Battle River-Wainwright will understand that their fears about this amendment somehow tying the government's hands are unfounded and that, in fact, it does deserve their support as well. The minister himself has said that he's willing to look outside of Alberta to find these people if necessary. Their own minister has indicated that their fears are unfounded.

I look forward to this very well thought out amendment receiving the full support of the House. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you wanted to participate in this debate too?

Dr. Pannu: Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, thank you. I'll be brief. One oversight on my part. I wanted to assure the House that I'm not absolutely a hundred per cent satisfied with this amendment. I noticed one absence here, and that is for retired professors to also be included specifically here. At least a retired professor of law should be included in the provisions. I have some reservations about it. But in spite of that, that reservation notwithstanding, I still support the amendment.

Now, I want to just briefly also indicate to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright that, you know, lots of people are retiring these days, including judges and police officers and prosecutors. In fact, there's a concern that there will be far too many retired folks like this around. So I don't think that there is, really, a ground for concern that the minister is going to have great difficulty finding a retired person designated in this amendment.

The last point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is that the objective of this bill is to move towards what we have been pushing this government for a long time. I have in my hand a copy of a letter that my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Calder wrote to the then Solicitor General, dated July 11, 2006, in which he calls on the minister to bring forward a piece of legislation that will ensure civilian oversight of police services and police investigations.

So in principle it seems to be a step in the right direction but falls terribly short in terms of substance of the provision that's made here, and that is to really establish an investigative unit that does in fact qualify as a civilian unit representing, as I said, various stakeholders in the community who appropriately need to be represented on this unit.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to speak to amendment A1 that will be amending Bill 16. I feel very strongly that this is an excellent amendment and really must be carefully looked at by everyone in this House.

One of the things about police, I think, is that we all have been brought up to believe that the police are trusted without question. Certainly, I think that I was taken aback when I heard all of the stories about the RCMP because when I grew up – and perhaps I'm still naive at this age – I really believed that the Mounties were to be trusted, that they had a code of ethics, that they looked after themselves. Unfortunately, it appears that it may well not be the case. But I don't believe that we should ever allow ourselves to be in a position where we cannot trust our police. We have to be able to not only trust the police, but we have to be able to trust the process that the police use to police themselves and that we, in turn, from the outside police them.

I have spoken with some of those that are our finest in blue, and they actually have expressed to me that they do feel better by having an outside influence looking in. They felt that it cut down bias. They also felt that it cut down some of the camaraderie that people don't want to break within the ranks of the people that they work with. They felt that outside oversight and outside questions would perhaps be able to protect them when, in fact, for lack of a better word, they actually wanted to be a whistle-blower, that they could do it in forms that would protect them in a way, although that shouldn't have to happen. They should be able to feel free to be, certainly, whistle-blowers in matters that would be of such importance when it's our police that are involved. But they really did feel that if there was nothing wrong, there would be nothing to hide.

It also would help to open up the process to the public. I think it's very important, as I mentioned before, that the public feel absolutely secure in the fact that their police are honest, straightforward, and totally trustworthy.

One of the things that I think is really important is having two members of the public. The comparison to using two members of the public in terms of a jury, I think, is a very good one. People will step up, and people will do their very best, and people will bring a sense of fairness, particularly to something of this great importance. I think that juries over a number of years have proven that people that you may not think would have, perhaps, the expertise or, in fact, the interest do step up to the plate when they're actually put in a place of responsibility, when they're responsible and have power over other people.

I'm not sure that finding people to serve would possibly be any problem at all. There are many, many people out there. I also heard from one of my hon. colleagues that when you're done, you're done. However, I would like to think that when I'm done is when they've closed the box and not before. I believe that I don't stand alone, and I think there are many, many people out there that want to contribute to society for as long as they can.

One of the other reasons that I would like to see the outside investigative unit is because, in particular, I still have a problem with the sheriffs department actually reporting directly to the minister. I would have preferred that they report to a police force that was not controlled by the minister. I'm just not sure that that's the way it should be going. I understand that it is, but I'm still not comfortable with it. There really must be an oversight outside of the government, particularly for the sheriffs, and certainly outside of all the other forces.

This is a very good amendment. I would like to ask everyone to please really give some consideration on how important it is to have outside oversight.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

4:50

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is with a heavy heart that I rise again and reparticipate in the debate on Bill 16. It should come as no surprise to you that I have another amendment to again try to make this bill even better. I will start by giving it to the hard-working page here to distribute to yourself for your attention and to other members as well.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, make sure that the original copy comes to the table first, and if you wait for a moment, we'll wait until the amendments are distributed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Yep.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, for the record we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

Hon. member, you may now proceed.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I trust that most if not all of the hon. colleagues have received this amendment A2. What I'm trying to do here is basically encourage the hon. Solicitor General, the hon. Minister of Public Security, to activate this special investigations unit in a structured fashion so it's not solely left up to him or her. It would basically stipulate in the act now when and the conditions whereby this investigative unit, this team, is brought in.

As per the amendment, Mr. Chairman, basically in section 2(a), subsection (2), strikes out "may do any one or more of the following" and substitutes instead "shall do any one or more of the following." I have to really pause here for a second and tell you, Mr. Chairman, and tell the hon. members that I'm not saying which of those things under that that I am requesting or requiring the hon. minister to do. I'm not saying which of those he or she has to do, but I'm saying that he must act. Basically, any time we have serious injury or death or those sensitive or contentious allegations, then instead of saying "may," we are now saying "shall." It basically offers us the assurance that this unit is not going to be entirely up to the will of the minister or, you know, the Solicitor General of the day. Now any person occupying that position knows that he or she has to bring in this special investigative unit.

The other is adding a clause (d) after clause (c). Now it would read: "In accordance with section 46.2, direct the head of an integrated investigative unit to conduct an investigation into the incident or complaint, which may include taking over an ongoing investigation at any stage." This is similar to what's already in place. What we're trying to do here is just to replace "may" with "shall." It's a simple change, and it should really not be looked at as very controversial or contentious. What we're saying is that it should be activated all the time whenever there is a serious incident to be investigated.

Now, we don't want the impact of the bill to be left open to interpretation. The way it's worded now, Mr. Chairman, it is not mandatory for this investigative unit to be utilized in an event of a serious incident because it leaves this authority resting with the minister of the day. Discretion is warranted in some cases, but sometimes it's simpler, cleaner, and probably more beneficial for the minister to say: "You know what? Legislation requires me to do it, and I am moving ahead. I am doing it because I'm required to do it by legislation." You know, in some cases we might be leaving the hon. minister to receive criticism by certain people or certain members of the public or certain members of the media or, in fact, even the opposition: why didn't you? We don't want to leave it up to the interpretation. Then we're inviting that criticism: "Why didn't you? You should have."

The other thing is with respect to the mechanism to conduct independent investigations. Again, I have to emphasize that I'm not asking for any one of those clauses that comes after one of the following. I'm basically saying that one of those has to be implemented in all cases where serious police wrongdoing is alleged. You don't want to have a permissive component of this bill. You want it to be prescriptive. You want it to be stipulated. It's solid. It has to be adhered to all the time.

An incident involving death or serious injury or, in fact, as the minister indicated in debate yesterday, if it's corruption or some other serious or significant complaint – and also in reference to my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods. She advocated that in all of those cases this special unit is going to be activated and brought in. So converting the "may" to "shall" I think achieves that. I'm trying not to be critical of the minister because I understand how ministers want to have some discretion and some room to manoeuvre, but as I said, it's probably advantageous to all involved. All parties would probably find this favourable. It's a step in the right direction to say that the minister has options and he or she has different choices to pick from, but I think making it prescriptive, not permissive, is the direction I would be opting for.

As such, Mr. Chairman, and not to unnecessarily prolong debate, I would invite other members to tell me whether or not they agree. I thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to speak to Bill 16, the Police Amendment Act, 2007, and to the amendment suggested by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. In these times, particularly in democratic states, people are looking for evidence that not only is the right thing being done; it is being seen to be done. Issues around conflict of interest, particularly, have to be addressed in a very open and transparent way. I think this amendment tries to take the next step beyond what the bill amendment is already doing, which is positive.

There's no question that the establishment of the integrated investigative unit and the amendment allowing for utilization of sheriffs and provincial protection officers are good changes. This amendment will simply add a degree of objectivity, of transparency, and is going to find the right balance between judgment, which may be considered political at the level of the director, and accountability to the public. I think this amendment does find that fine line and helps us as public to address the erosion of trust in some of our official bodies, including the RCMP in the recent months. There needs to be a degree of distance and objectivity and certainty about the ability to trust decisions that are being made at these levels, particularly in life and death questions around the use and abuse of power and where an unfortunate, serious injury or death has occurred.

So I would stand in support of this amendment and hope we will see some other free thinkers supporting this amendment as well. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.
5:00

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 16 and specifically to amendment A2. I appreciate the hon. members for Edmonton-McClung and Calgary-Mountain View for their desire to amend the Police Amendment Act, 2007 – and we're already going through that amendment – to make it better.

The question that I have here again is all about the trust and being able to know that we have a force out there that's trustworthy and that they're not corrupt. When you look at developing countries, if you don't have a justice system, it's very difficult for peace and prosperity to follow, so I think everybody in the House here very much understands the importance of the Police Act.

My concern is just on having an automatic default. It says in here that if there is a "death of any person that may have resulted from the actions of a police officer," it's going to have to go into this inquiry. Unfortunately, because of the job that they have to carry out, there are deaths, and not all of them need to go into an inquiry. I would have to agree with the present bill – that the minister may at his discretion if he sees there's a problem – rather than an automatic default. We would have many investigations that I feel would not be appropriate or necessary for the public at large to pay for in order to cover these things.

I appreciate the desire that we want an excellent police force. We want one that's totally trusted by the people of Alberta so that we can feel safe in our communities and that it's not being directed by a rogue government, but I don't think that we need to go so far as the amendment. So I would be voting against the amendment that's currently on the table.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill itself. Any other speakers?
Are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 3 and Bill 16.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 3 and Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
 Second Reading
 Bill 17
 Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, it is my pleasure this afternoon to rise on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill and move second reading of Bill 17, the Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill is intended to clarify the law for Albertans and to avoid unnecessary litigation in two areas. The first amendment deals with the recovery of possession of land, and the second relates to cases where there is a conflict of laws between Alberta and another jurisdiction. I'll speak to each amendment separately.

Let me begin by letting members know a little bit about this statute. Generally speaking, the Limitations Act sets out the time in which an individual may bring a claim, the objective being the timely resolution of disputes. The Limitations Act came into force on March 1, 1999, when it replaced the Limitation of Actions Act. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Law Reform Institute in their May 2003 final report No. 89 on the Limitations Act, Adverse Possession and Lasting Improvements, raised a concern as a result of the repeal of the Limitation of Actions Act. That concern was that it may be unclear as to how the limitation period regarding an owner's right for the recovery of possession of land under the Limitations Act now works.

Essentially, the current wording of the Limitations Act does not clearly set out the start point for the 10-year limitation period. This is the period in which the landowner has to take action to recover his land from another. Given that there was no intention to change the law in this area, this amendment is being brought forward to clarify the effect of the 10-year limitation period. It's also being brought forward to clarify when the 10-year period begins and the consequences of the expiry of the 10-year period. As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, these amendments were suggested in the Alberta Law Reform Institute report.

The area of the law dealing with the recovery of possession of land has been part of the law in Alberta since 1870. The law has evolved since that time, but the concept has basically not changed. Mr. Speaker, this is an area of the law that crosses property law, land titles, and limitations law. However, our amendment deals with the limitations law component.

The bill also includes an update to a reference in the Land Titles Act. That act still refers to the former Limitation of Actions Act when it should refer to the new Limitations Act, so the bill makes that change as well. In summary, Mr. Speaker, the covenant didn't intend to change the law in 1999, and the amendment is being brought forward to simply put the law back where it was. I encourage all members of the House to support this amendment.

Now, the second amendment addresses cases where there is a conflict of laws. Section 12 of the Limitations Act applies to cases where a claim is brought in an Alberta court, but because of the facts of the case the law of another jurisdiction must be used to decide the case. The wording of the section is being changed to make it clear that where the limitation period for bringing a claim in the other jurisdiction has expired, the courts in Alberta will not hear the claim. Mr. Speaker, the concern has arisen in cases where the parties are residents of Alberta, but they have a car accident in another province or state.

For example, in the Castillo case, which was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada, the parties were residents of Alberta and brought a claim in Alberta for a car accident that they had in California. Now, our limitations law allows a claim to be brought in our courts for two years from the time of the accident, but California law only allows a claim for one year after the accident. The Supreme Court applied the shorter California limitations law. Since the parties could not bring the claim in California because the one year had expired, they could not bring the claim in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, section 12 is currently being misinterpreted by some lawyers and their clients. The provision has been incorrectly interpreted to allow Alberta limitations law to override the limitations law of another jurisdiction. Therefore, I am recommending on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill that the wording of the section be changed to make it clear that where the limitation period for bringing a claim in the other jurisdiction has expired, the courts in Alberta will not hear the claim. This amendment will not change the current laws decided by the Supreme Court in the Castillo case.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that in August 2005 the Uniform Law Conference of Canada, in its model legislation for limitations, recommended similar wording to the current amendment. I hope the members of this Legislature will also offer their support for this amendment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate that both of these amendments are intended to clarify the law for Albertans with the intention of avoiding unnecessary litigation in the future. I encourage all members to join me in support of Bill 17.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to respond to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar moving second reading on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill with respect to this Bill 17, Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007, in my role as the shadow minister of Justice and to lead debate on this amendment.

First, I wish to thank the hon. Attorney General for providing me with a bill brief on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. [some applause] As signalled by the Opposition House Leader, that's a welcome turn of events, and we really, sincerely appreciate this. It makes our job easier in the opposition, and it creates this atmosphere of co-operation that we're all aspiring toward. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, given his extensive legal expertise, was more than capable of providing that bill brief himself but chose to ask the hon. minister to do it on his behalf, which is fine. That was excellent.

The second thing I would say is that my caucus colleagues and I are likely going to lend our support to this bill, partly in answer to the prayers from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, who urged all of us to vote in favour.

I'm hoping that it's clear to this House that my caucus colleagues and myself don't necessarily hold up legislation when there is nothing controversial or contentious in it, and we don't always just say no or oppose government ideas if they're fair and justified. It is unfortunate, however, that sometimes we feel that the opposite treatment is awarded to us when the government votes against our ideas regardless of how good they are, but we're hoping to change that; as an example, amendment A1 to Bill 16, which was defeated today, unfortunately. I'm still saddened by that fact, my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, but we move on. We have other business to do and attend to, so here we are.

The rationale for our position, Mr. Speaker. Like I said, there are no major concerns with this amendment due to the fact that it's almost entirely based upon suggestions made by the Alberta Law Reform Institute after they conducted a thorough and fairly technical and fairly complex analysis.

Speaking of technical information, Mr. Speaker, it's really a unique experience for me now that I'm the Official Opposition critic for both Justice and Solicitor General that I have to read critically, if I may add, bills that are of an extremely technical nature. We all understand the limitation in doing that because we don't all equally understand lawyer language, but we're getting better at it, and practice makes perfect, as they say.

The portion of this bill on the conflict of laws is consistent with the Supreme Court of Canada. As referenced by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the Castillo case makes that clear. Obviously, the ruling of the highest court in Canada would be the precedent for decisions delivered in all lower courts, and amending provincial law to reflect this opinion is probably justified. As well, the wording is similar to the legislation proposed by the Uniform

Law Conference of Canada. So in reading those opinions, we don't think that there are any major negative impacts arising from this bill or the changes it is proposing.

I understand that some of the discrepancy or some of this difficulty that we're now trying to rectify stems from a private member's bill in 1996, which was passed in 1999 or received royal assent in 1999, and it sort of created this problem. So attending to it, you know, six or seven years later is warranted, and I don't think we are going to disapprove.

Now, I just had a question, and it's basically the layman in me speaking, Mr. Speaker. When we're talking about land and we're talking about somebody trying to recover land because a neighbour infringed on your land or occupied parts of it and so on – now, we're talking about 10 years, if I understand correctly – how are attempts to re-enter documented? How are they verified? Let's say that there are two neighbouring ranchers or farmers, and there's a dispute on sort of a section in between their two farms. Who owns it, and who doesn't? It's within this 10-year period, and there has been an attempt or more for re-entry. How do we document it? How do we verify if, in fact, an attempt was made and how successful? You know, what if the original owner is denied re-entry with whatever means available to that other owner: if force was involved or if the denial of access was of a criminal nature? Then also: what recourse is there if somebody attempts re-entry and is not successful? You know, we have many capable lawyers in the government caucus, and I think it would be appreciated if they would offer some of that clarification.

The other thing with respect to the conflict of laws is just a question with respect to: how frequently does this situation arise or exist? How many times in any given period of time does it materialize? I don't question the need to fix something that is not perfect, you know, so that's not where I'm coming from. I'm just saying that besides motor vehicle accidents or things like that, how many times and what other examples are there that warrant amending this particular legislation?

With that, Mr. Speaker, and as promised, I am going to lend my support. I really look forward to hearing some of those answers in Committee of the Whole.

I thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 17, Limitation Statutes Amendment Act, 2007. I want to commend the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for a lucid presentation. It's exceptional clarity that he has mustered to speak to this very important change in the legislation. He may find it difficult to believe – it may ring strange to his ears – but because of the clarity and lucidity with which he made the argument, I'm going to take him at his word and extend my support for the amendments being proposed here.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung, of course, has reiterated the points made by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and added credibility to the arguments made by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. Given the two exceptionally well presented sets of arguments and seeing the overwhelming consensus on this crucial piece of legislation, I find it difficult to defy what common sense tells me, which is to extend my support, so I'm happy to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think, as has been pointed out, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar did an admirable job of explaining the reasons for these changes, but two things he didn't address in his comments, and I'm hoping that he can bring these answers forward to us at the committee stage. If the problem is as a result of legislation that was passed in 1999 – and we're now in 2007 – I am curious when these two discrepancies were first discovered and why it took this long to come forward to the House now with the amendments.

I'm going to guess that the Castillo case, which I think was in 2005, might answer the one instance but not the other, so if the hon. member would not mind, I would appreciate having that information in front of us when we go to committee.

As has been outlined previously, this is a bill that will have our support, and I'm happy to give that. Just a little clarity would be appreciated.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Any comments or questions?

Any other speakers?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to close debate.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to thank the hon. members of the opposition for their comments. Certainly, to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford: we will have a look at this 1999 versus 2007, when did the two discrepancies get discovered, and we will get back to you in Committee of the Whole. I fully trust the excellent staff that has worked on this bill as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill to answer those questions with regard to the recovery of land and the conflict of laws.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move second reading and take my seat.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

Bill 18 Judicature Amendment Act, 2007

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for second reading Bill 18, Judicature Amendment Act, 2007.

This bill amends the Judicature Act to empower Alberta's courts to deal more effectively with vexatious litigants. Vexatious litigants are those who engage in legal proceedings without having a legitimate claim requiring resolution. The vexatious litigant may sue in order to annoy, harass, or financially punish other people.

A vexatious litigant is someone who persistently files proceedings that have already been determined by a court, persistently files proceedings that can't succeed or that have no reasonable expectation of providing relief, persistently files proceedings for improper purposes, inappropriately uses previously raised grounds and issues in subsequent proceedings, persistently fails to pay the costs ordered by a court as a result of unsuccessful proceedings, persistently takes unsuccessful appeals from judicial decisions, or persistently engages in inappropriate courtroom behaviour.

Vexatious litigants can put a significant strain on court resources and others unnecessarily. Vexatious litigation is an abuse of the court process that wastes the time of judges and administrative staff and prevents other legitimate claims from being dealt with.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Those at the receiving end of a vexatious litigant's lawsuit can find themselves in a very difficult situation. For example, there have been situations where a vexatious litigant launches a baseless claim for the sole purpose of harassing or impeding a person who has a legitimate claim against them. Vexatious litigants can also force others to incur unnecessary legal bills. The person with the legitimate claim must direct their lawyer to deal with the vexatious claim, which takes money and adds to the overall time required for resolving the legitimate claim.

Some common characteristics often apply to vexatious litigants. They may include opinionated and narcissistic behaviour and asking the same questions repeatedly. For some vexatious litigants losing a case may fuel feelings of injustice and lead to ongoing legal action, and some exhibit behaviour that is consistent with some types of mental illness.

When a litigant is behaving in a vexatious manner, the courts must have the power to deal with the problem in an appropriate and effective way. Since lawyers can be disciplined and in extreme cases disbarred for participating in abuse of the court process, vexatious litigants typically represent themselves in court. In June 2006 the Court of Queen's Bench suggested that Alberta Justice consider the recommendations contained in a report on how to deal with vexatious litigants. The report was authored by the Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia.

Working with those recommendations, Alberta Justice consulted three courts, the legal profession, and nongovernment organizations in September 2006 on proposed amendments to the Judicature Act. With valuable comments and input received from the courts and other stakeholders during the consultation, Alberta Justice proposed amendments to the vexatious litigants provision in this act. The Judicature Act deals with the jurisdiction and powers of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal. It also deals with the administration of justice in the province, including some matters of the Provincial Court of Alberta. Amendments to this act will give these three courts more powers to deal with applications concerning vexatious litigants.

Mr. Speaker, access to justice is a fundamental right in our society. Restricting that right is a serious matter and not an issue to be taken lightly. However, vexatious litigants can pose a serious problem for Alberta's civil justice system. The amendments we are proposing take into consideration what the three Alberta courts and other stakeholders have told us through the consultation process.

Currently the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal can make vexatious litigant orders, but the Provincial Court cannot. Vexatious litigants appear in all courts, and the most appropriate forum to hear an application is in the court where the proceedings are being heard. Amendments to this act will give the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Appeal, and the Provincial Court the jurisdiction to hear vexatious litigant applications. These amendments will give the three courts authority to make an order against a vexatious spokesperson or agent. This is particularly important in Provincial Court, where the majority of litigants are not represented by a lawyer.

The three courts also have the power to order that a vexatious litigant be precluded from continuing an existing proceeding. In Alberta the Attorney General's consent is required before a court can deal with an individual who may be abusing the legal process. In B.C., Ontario, Quebec, and P.E.I. the consent of the Attorney General is not required for a vexatious litigant application.

We are also proposing that the Attorney General's consent be replaced with a requirement to be given notice of vexatious litigant applications. The Attorney General would continue to have the right to appear and be heard on vexatious litigant applications. This will allow the Attorney General to intervene in cases of public interest.

We are proposing that the current provision be amended to include a nonexhaustive list of factors that the courts and others may use as a guide to determine what constitutes vexatious behaviour.

The amendments will also empower the courts to prevent an individual who has been found to be a vexatious litigant from commencing vexatious proceedings through an entity such as a corporation.

As is now the case, if the court makes an order prohibiting a vexatious litigant from commencing further proceedings, a vexatious litigant will be able to ask the court for permission to file a lawsuit if he or she has a legitimate claim. For example, if a vexatious litigant is involved in a car accident that is not their fault and the at-fault party does not voluntarily pay for the damages, the vexatious litigant should be given access to the court to pursue the claim. The amendments would require the vexatious litigant to ask permission of the court where they want to file the claim, not the court that made the vexatious litigant order against them. The court may impose conditions or terms when allowing a vexatious litigant to start a new proceeding or continue an existing one.

These amendments will allow parties to a vexatious lawsuit as well as the clerk of the court and the Attorney General to initiate a vexatious litigant application. Amendments will also allow any other person to ask the court for permission to make a vexatious litigant application.

These amendments will clarify that a single justice of the Court of Appeal may hear vexatious litigant applications, and they will also clarify that an order made by the Provincial Court is binding only on that court.

Finally, it should be noted that amendments to the Judicature Act do not take away or diminish the powers of the court to dismiss or stay a lawsuit that is an abuse of the court's process. The Judicature Amendment Act, 2007, will improve ability of the courts to respond in a more timely and effective manner when vexatious litigants are involved.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, improving the effectiveness of the courts and respect for the law have been priorities for me since I became minister in 2004. I'm pleased that this amendment will further those goals. I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, two members have indicated their intent to participate: the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. If there are others, please notify.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, one more time, I'm indeed pleased to rise and participate in debate and to respond to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General moving second reading of Bill 18, Judicature Amendment Act, 2007, in my role as the shadow minister and to lead debate.

I forgot to thank the hon. minister when we were debating Bill 17 because before he actually shared the bill brief with me and with my researcher, we actually had an initial meeting in the very beginning when our shadow cabinet was shuffled to respond to the cabinet shuffle on the government side. I took over this portfolio as of January 7, I believe, and shortly after the hon. minister and one of his assistants met with me and my executive assistant as well just to welcome me and to wish me luck and to offer his co-operation and his resources whenever I have questions.

I think this is the model that should be copied, and I trust that most of my colleagues in the Official Opposition are receiving the same co-operation, I hope. This is what I view as a true democracy, and I know that the minister is pleased that I am thanking him. That is the right thing to do. Certainly, since January this minister has demonstrated an awareness and an appreciation for the work of the opposition, and we're trying to reciprocate by not unnecessarily holding up legislation. He's also going for some sort of a record, I think, because bills 17, 18, 19, you know, a few of them are his. I think he is likely going to get his record this year as well.

Now, having said that, I don't think I have any major concerns with respect to this bill, but I would like to walk through it and, as my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona indicated, offer qualified and positive feedback with respect to this suggested amendment.

What does it really try to do, and what is the rationale behind it? It is a bill, Mr. Speaker, designed to enhance the ability of the courts, as was mentioned, to deal with vexatious litigants. I am in no way going to try to compete with the explanation offered by the hon. minister given his background and his excellent support staff, that is working behind the scenes to make his ideas come to fruition in this House.

However, my initial response was something like: how is this going to affect access to the courts and the ability of citizens to seek legal remedy in court? My approach is that this access to the courts is paramount. It's very important, and it should be sacred, and it should be protected so that nothing we do in this House and nothing we pass in this House would infringe on the rights of people and their right to access to the court to seek legal action. We should never tamper with this right. Having said that, I don't think this bill does that. It doesn't tamper with this right. It doesn't reduce it. However, it's something we have to be always aware of and always on the watch for.

In practical terms, as well, some people abuse this access, and they put undue strain on the resources available and cause unnecessary delays and unnecessary waste in our legal system and, Mr. Speaker, potentially harm others as well. So my approach today is one of striking a balance. On the one hand, we need to protect people's rights to have access to the courts and to legal action, but on the same level we also have to define who is a vexatious litigant. Whom do we classify as one of those, and what do we do to deal with him or her?

Section 23(2) sheds some light and offers some examples. The hon. minister went through some of those; for example, a person who is persistently bringing proceedings before the court to determine an issue that has already been determined, somebody who is persistently bringing forward, you know, applications or proceedings that cannot succeed or that have no reasonable expectation of providing relief, somebody who is bringing forward legal action for improper purposes or inappropriately using previously raised grounds and issues in subsequent proceedings, somebody who is persistently failing to pay the costs of unsuccessful proceedings – they just keep suing, but they don't really cover the fees that accompany legal action – somebody who is persistently taking unsuccessful appeals from judicial decisions or engaging in inappropriate courtroom behaviour. So that's quite exhaustive, Mr. Speaker, I would argue. I think we've all heard or learned of situations where a person might fit this description.

In that regard, yes, certain people are abusing their access right, their access privilege, and maybe we should, you know, make it less easy for them to participate in court action like this, which basically might be wasteful, might be harmful to others, and limit them to only when it's absolutely necessary and when it's absolutely appropriate for them to have that access. So in that regard I understand where this bill is coming from.

Vexatious litigants and the proceedings they initiate are not just mild annoyances or inconveniences to the civil justice system. They are so extreme that in invoking the right to justice, they may actually undermine the rights of others, as I said. As a result, there is a need for legislation which empowers the courts to dismiss vexatious litigants but which also permits someone to seek leave to have the order lifted if and when circumstances change. So what I'm saying, really, is that, yes, courts have to have the right to dismiss vexatious litigants, but it is not a permanent prohibition on these guys. If situations change, if circumstances change, or if they can demonstrate that there is genuine need for them to come before the courts, then I think that this prohibition should be lifted. If we do it by appeal or do it by written submission or whatever the mechanism is remains to be seen. But I think that it is not something that is permanent, and it shouldn't be permanent.

While legislation which deals with vexatious litigants clearly has access to justice implications, the legislation does not constitute a denial of access. That is paramount, as I stated, Mr. Speaker. It's not also a constitutional violation. I'll bet you that some of those vexatious litigants themselves are going to look at this and say: aha, I now have an opportunity to sue based on a constitutional challenge. But I disagree, and I don't think that courts are going to think, you know, contrary to my opinion.

Basically, I have information here from my researcher who indicated that the Ontario Court of Appeal has summarized the nature of vexatious litigation as follows: it doesn't take away an individual's access and right to address; rather, it provides that if an order is made against him or her under the legislation, he or she cannot seek redress until he or she has satisfied the proper authority that the proposed legal proceedings are not an abuse of process of the court. So it is warranted, but again they can demonstrate to the court that this situation is different or unique. The court has the ability to say: yes, this time you go ahead.

So what else are we trying to cover here, Mr. Speaker? There is one section here with respect to the application: "Where on application or on its own motion, with notice to the Minister of Justice." I agree with the minister that the minister does not need to be asked to give permission every time. I think a notice to the minister is adequate, and in so doing, the court is still notifying the minister, and it's still involving the minister but indirectly because, really, to expect the minister to give permission each and every time – and these vexatious claims might be increasing in number, and they might be increasing in complexity and gravity – would place an unfair amount of pressure and increase the workload of the minister. I agree that notifying the minister is adequate, and we shouldn't really require him or her to issue that permission every time, every single time.

So to summarize, Mr. Speaker, I don't disagree with this particular amendment, and overall it is not too contentious. If I actually had one little clarification to seek, it would be the issue of the balance of power, basically, between the courts and the Minister of Justice. Action should be taken to confirm that section 23.1(3) of the Judicature Amendment Act gives the Attorney General "the right to appear and be heard" in relation to vexatious litigant orders made by a court on its own motion.

If section 23.1(3), you know, with respect to those conditions requiring the Attorney General to appear and to be heard is interpreted such as that the Attorney General does not have the right to appear and be heard in relation to orders made by the court on its own motion, then, the courts will be in a position to declare litigants and proceedings vexatious without the safeguard of the Attorney General appearing as needed. So that's going back to the notification component, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that it's not going to hopefully deny or prevent the Attorney General from appearing if need be.

I know that this is getting a little technical, but these things have to be raised, Mr. Speaker. So, overall, I think we're in favour. This gives the courts a tool to protect the integrity of the system and to dismiss people who are placing undue burden and undue strain on the resources. We all know how hard our legal people work and how busy they are, and sometimes they're busy doing stuff that should have been dismissed from day one.

So in that regard I don't find it too objectionable, and I am going to vote in favour of this amendment, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise in second reading and support the principles behind Bill 18, the Judicature Amendment Act, 2007, for a couple of reasons. I think most hon. members would not be surprised to hear me get up and defend an open access to the legal system, but I think I've now experienced my own small versions of people being vexatious and continually bringing back claims. Even on the level of a constituency office you start to get a real feel for how this can in fact deny access to others in the court system because if they're taking up the time, someone else is not getting their case heard or getting the assistance that they need or being able to find the justice that they are seeking.

You know, I don't know why it is. I think for some people, they just won't take no for an answer, and they just keep appealing and appealing and appealing and appealing on every different level that they can think of to do it on, and the answer is still no. They're not entitled to the remedy that they're seeking, but they keep trying. That in fact is vexatious, and it does, I think, ultimately deny that space to someone who is perfectly entitled to it.

I think that often people have a different definition of a particular word or idea in context or out of context. We sometimes have people contact us, and they say, "You know, I may be able to get something or another." You say, "Well, yes, you may be able to, but that doesn't mean you're guaranteed to be able to get it." "Well, I should be." In their minds they're entitled to it: why didn't they get it? They're going to keep coming back to you until they get it, and you're in the position of saying: "No. You're not entitled." Well, then, they just want to appeal you. I think that same sort of situation is what ends up coming into the court system.

The other part of a vexatious claim that has certainly been the experience of some of my colleagues, I think one current and a couple past, are vexatious lawsuits that are brought basically as a slap suit to try and knock someone off their game, in effect. I consider those vexatious as well. I might be stretching the legal term a little bit, but I would put it in that category.

For example, my colleague the former MLA for Edmonton-Glenora, who now holds the position as the ombudsman for the federal penitentiary system, Mr. Howard Sapers, had a slap suit, a vexatious suit brought against him when the whole issue of the Hotel de Health was happening in this Assembly. He basically had a slap suit brought against him. Again, same sort of situation. It cost him time and money to go to court and defend himself with that, and the person bringing it had the resources to be able to do it.

It never went anywhere beyond that, and I'm sure that the people that brought the suit never had any intention of taking it beyond that. It was done specifically to cause problems, and there was no real reason to bring it before the courts. I put that example in there as well because I think it's another way of blocking up the court system to others who should be in it, using it for a system that the judiciary was not designed to deal with.

I'm pleased to hear that there was a good stakeholder consult. Frankly, what we're seeing happen here is a continuity that we're missing in many of the other departments. Some of the frustration that we felt here in the opposition with the lack of action from government and very long delays in action in certain departments is because of the complete lack of continuity and lack of activity, particularly around the leadership race. Here we've had a minister that's been in place since 2004, and all of the work that was in the pipeline has continued to progress through. We're seeing it come out now, and it's been well supported by stakeholder consultations.

I'm pleased to see that the legislation is covering all three levels of the court system because I think that's necessary. As I said, some people try and sort of keep appealing their way through all the different levels and back again if they can. I didn't want to see the Provincial Court left out of that list. I'm pleased to see them in it.

On the idea of using a list of criteria over basically a single test, I'm looking forward to seeing how that actually plays out. I suspect that this will probably work better. I think sometimes we see the courts believing that the test doesn't really fit the circumstances, so they're reluctant to apply it. But a set of criteria would, in fact, work better because it's more likely to cover the situation in front of them, so we'd be more successful in being able to control some of these.

I think good work. Well done. Happy to support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) question and answer section is now available.

If there are none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate in the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 18, Judicature Amendment Act, 2007, in its second reading. To start off, I want to thank the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for his detailed introductory remarks on the bill. This is a bill that does require some legal expertise to fully grasp it, so his comments have been helpful to those of us who lack that expertise and don't have a claim to that.

Mr. Speaker, in his introductory remarks the minister did make some important comments. He acknowledged that access to the justice system and the right to have that access is a fundamental right in our democracy, and it must be protected. So any limitations that this bill will impose on people to continually return to the court system to seek judicial action are I presume taken with the greatest amount of seriousness, that considerable thought has been given to putting limits on the rights of individuals who may engage in what's deemed as vexatious litigation.

What constitutes vexatious litigation is, I think, a very important part of the bill. Subsection (2) of section 23 tries to define it, if you wish, in a manner "without limitation," it's called. There may be other circumstances under which an action that's being taken or may be contemplated to be taken by someone may be considered vexatious. The ones here, eight of them, seem to me to be pretty exhaustive.

One feature that's common among all of these eight circumstances described here is "persistently." We all need to be clear that it does not close the door to legal action the first time around. It's only when people go repeatedly back to the court to seek justice on grounds which are outlined here as ones which will be considered vexatious. I'm pleased that there's a fairly detailed sort of statement of the circumstances or the conditions which may be deemed vexatious.

The only provision here that does not refer to persistence of the action sought by a litigant is sub (d): "inappropriately using previously raised grounds and issues in subsequent proceedings." I'm not entirely sure what inappropriately using previously raised grounds would be other than persistently going back on the same grounds. You know, what would that mean in this case? What would constitute an inappropriate use of grounds used previously? Perhaps it's a bit of ambiguity there or simply repetitiveness. I'm not sure. I just noticed this. I'm bringing it to the attention of the House, and perhaps the minister, in his wisdom, might make some comments on it later on.

With respect to some other steps that the minister has taken before drafting this bill, Mr. Speaker, he has shared with us the information with respect to consultations that he has undertaken. He undertook them I think last year with all significant stakeholders, including the Law Society of Alberta, the representatives of the courts in the province, and the Law Reform Institute, I believe. I didn't get that, so I'm not sure whether they were included in this. Since it's a piece of legislation which will limit the right to access to a degree, I want to make sure that all resources that need to be consulted have been consulted and the list of those resources that have been consulted is comprehensive to include all stakeholders who may have something to say on this very important piece of legislation.

I'm certainly comfortable with the minister's statement with respect to the range of stakeholders that have been consulted on the bill. The three levels of the courts – the Court of Appeal, the Court of Queen's Bench, as well as the Provincial Court – have been covered. I understand, and I think it's sub (6) under section 23.1, Application, that for decisions of the Court of Appeal or a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench with respect to the vexatious nature of claims, that once that decision is made, that decision will be binding on the Provincial Court, but a decision made by the Provincial Court will not be binding moving upwards, I guess, if you look at these courts arranged in a vertical hierarchy. I think I am interpreting it right. I think that makes sense.

There's a provision here, which is sub (4) of the same section, 23, which reads:

The Court may at any time on application or on its own motion, with notice to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, make an order under subsection (1) applicable to any other individual or entity specified by the Court who in the opinion of the Court is associated with the person against whom an order under subsection (1) is made.

The only exception to that, I suppose, is the legal expert representing the person. I think that in subsection (5) that exception is made clear.

This sub (4) seems to me to be a little bit problematic in that it casts a fairly wide net in terms of persons related, in the opinion of the court, who would also be barred from proceeding with vexatious litigation. The court will require a great deal of knowledge about the nature of the relationship of this other person or a person who might want to proceed with the action on behalf of or on his or her own. It requires some further study on my part. As I said, you know, I'm no expert on these matters, so we will engage in some consultation.

I take the bill quite seriously, Mr. Speaker. We will certainly give it the further thought that's due it as a piece of legislation, but in general I find the bill on the test of reasonableness a bill that will have our support in principle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Shall I call on the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to conclude the debate, or shall we just call the question?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I just wish to thank the hon. members who commented. They commented insightfully on the bill. I call the question.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House will reconvene tomorrow afternoon at 1. If it's possible for you to take your laptops, that would be helpful as we have a function in the Assembly tomorrow morning. It would be helpful to the pages. Other than that, see you tomorrow at 1.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 12, 2007

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the Hon. Tom Osborne, Member for St. John's South. Minister Osborne was recently appointed on January 19, 2007, as the Minister of Justice for Newfoundland and Labrador. However, he was first elected in the general election of 1996 and is very familiar with two of the members of the Assembly as a result of previous posts as minister of environment and minister of health. He did want me to acknowledge his friendship with the members for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and Sherwood Park. With the hon. Mr. Osborne in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, is his friend Don Tapper, who is also from Newfoundland. I would ask both of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a delegation of members of the Provincial Legislature of Mpumalanga, South Africa, led by Ms Nomsa Mtsweni. The delegation represents almost one-third of the entire 30-member Mpumalanga Provincial Legislature. The purpose of their visit is to learn about how our province encourages and engages the public in policy development, Alberta programs and policies related to people with disabilities, and issues affecting women and children. Alberta and Mpumalanga have enjoyed a twin province relationship since 1996. Our close ties with Mpumalanga focus on legislative co-operation, governance, and building democratic institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask our honoured guests as I introduce them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: the hon. Nomsa Sanny Mtsweni, leader of the delegation; the hon. Boy Johannes Nobunga, who is also the Deputy Speaker; the hon. Mr. David Sunnyboy Mkhwanazi; the hon. Ms Refilwe Caroline Mahlobogoane; the hon. Ms Gelani Sariana Sindane; the hon. Ms Phumuzile Catherine Ngwenya; the hon. Mr. Sidney Norman Sikhosana; the hon. Ms Tapelo Dorothy Chiloane; Ms Eggy Flora Thabane; Ms Nompumelelo Millicent Sibiya. The hon. members have now risen. I'd ask the members of this Assembly to kindly accord them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through to the Assembly members 21 folks from our communications departments of the various government departments. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker – and you probably know – that the people in my department probably qualify for danger pay. But today they're here to tour the Legislature and watch question period. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm reception from the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm interested and excited that members of my constituency have actually come in here today to observe the proceedings because they've enjoyed so much some of the media reports about all of our activities of late. May I take the opportunity to introduce Dave and Fiona Quest, Bob Preston, Rick MacDonald, John McLennon, Ingrid Piecha, Dianne Duke, Bill and Irma Chow, Allen Wells, Brian Wik, Veronica Pifko, Suzanne Taylor, and I believe that Leona and Vern Hartwell – Vern is no stranger to this Assembly – Noreen Robertson, Marcie Konkin, Maxine Kolodychuck, Ivy Walton, Rick Komarniski, Marcia Tyerman, Carol Lesniak, Joyce Perkins, Noreen Roberts, Dianne Balon, and Thomas Lo are with us. If they would please rise and we could give them a warm welcome as they observe our proceedings here today.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure if my guest has arrived yet or not, but I will take the opportunity to introduce him in any event and put it on the record. I would like to introduce a constituent of mine, a good friend who also heads up Boyden Global Executive Search, Mr. Brent Shervy. I'm not sure if he's in the gallery or not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 21 bright students and seven teachers and parents from the Evansview school in Evansburg. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and a privilege for me to stand and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly over 60 concerned citizens from this region concerned with responsible land use and protection of our water and the preservation of all we have in Alberta for future generations. I would ask them to stand as I introduce their leaders, and then I'll have them all stand at the end.

Concerned citizens of Thorhild, represented by Cori Kuzyk; concerned citizens for responsible development in heartland, Sturgeon county, Anne Brown; concerned citizens of Round Hill and Beaver county, concerned about the Sherritt project, Clayton Maurer; concerned citizens of Onoway River Valley Conservation Association, Ian Skinner, Mike Northcott; and concerned citizens of Marie Lake, Chris Goss; Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, Edmonton chapter, Richard Schneider; Toxics Watch Society of Alberta, Conrad Nobert; and Council of Canadians, Lyn Gorman. Could I have all the citizens stand up and be recognized by the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Leslie Clark. Leslie has successfully completed her first year of the social work program at Grant MacEwan College. I've had the pleasure of Leslie joining my constituency team in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview as a practicum student this year. She has worked with youth at risk for the last five years. Her passions include travelling, and she hopes to one day focus her skills towards the area of international social work. It's been wonderful having Leslie in our office. Her enthusiasm and dedication to the constituents of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview are much appreciated. I would now ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure and I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 60 students from the grade 6 classes at Kildare elementary school in my riding of Edmonton-Manning. Now, Kildare is an excellent school, well established in the community. The professionals there believe that all students should experience success and become independent learners and responsible citizens. There are excellent Mandarin programs there. It's a school that is really tremendously successful. They are accompanied today by two teachers, Ms Shih and Mr. Butlin. They're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Tribute to the Hon. Ken Kowalski 10th Anniversary as Speaker of the Legislative Assembly

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely pleased today to rise because I have the privilege of acknowledging the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. This Saturday, April 14, 2007, will represent your 10th anniversary as Speaker of this House.

Your commitment to this province is exceptional. You have performed all of your duties with great diligence, class, and integrity, from your beginnings as a high school teacher advocating for the first French immersion program in Barrhead to serving your constituency as an elected member of this Assembly since 1979. Throughout your tenure you have had the honour of serving under four Premiers. You have held distinguished cabinet positions, served as Government House Leader and Deputy Premier. As Speaker of this House you have served as chairman of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services, and you have been an integral part of many other committees, of which there are too many to list here this afternoon. At least, time would not permit.

You have worked on both the national and international stages. You are one of 12 Canadian signatories to the environmental and sustainable development documents that were ultimately endorsed by the United Nations Assembly. As well, you were Alberta's signatory to the volunteer exchange agreement between the province of Alberta and Hokkaido, Japan.

Mr. Speaker, you have set a very high standard for all of us to follow, and all of the members and staff appreciate the tremendous services you have carried out in this Legislature. You have had one of Alberta's most distinguished public careers, and you have received many accolades, but there is perhaps one honour that truly represents your personal character. That is the title of honorary chief bestowed upon you by the Alexis First Nation, Wa-she-zu-Chadao-sheqe-na, which means, if I pronounced it properly, White Man with a Kind Heart.

On behalf of all your colleagues, friends, family, and Albertans past and present, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations again on your 10th anniversary of being our 11th Speaker. With the unanimous consent of the Assembly, I would presume, I could finish by also saying: the longest serving Speaker in our nation. [applause]

The Speaker: Well, thank you very much. That was very kind. I would be remiss, though, if I didn't draw to the attention of all members of the Assembly that the hon. Deputy Speaker violated the Standing Orders by going beyond the length. Thank you all very much for your kindness and your support.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Community Development Master Agreement

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to make a very historic announcement on the signing yesterday at the Yellowhead county office in Edson of the community development master agreement by the town of Edson, the town of Hinton, and the Yellowhead county along with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

All three municipalities are under a lot of pressure to accommodate the unprecedented economic upswing caused by the oil and gas industry as well as other industries. The extra costs are felt in the following areas: increased policing; pressure on planning and development; demand for increased infrastructure to accommodate growth, be it roads, recreation, or water and sewer; in employment; and housing gaps.

Yellowhead county has benefited from Alberta's recent growth, and the county recognized the needs for all three municipalities to fully capitalize on the opportunity offered in the strong economic climate. For that reason the Yellowhead county unanimously agreed to contribute $500,000 unconditional grants to Edson and Hinton for five years to help with some of the issues caused by the rapid growth economy. The amount is based on the county's 2007 industrial assessment and will be adjusted up or down, based on annual review. This does not include the county's recent cost-sharing agreement now in place.

According to the Minister's Council on Municipal Sustainability report "development in any municipality should not unduly impact neighbouring municipalities, either financially or from a quality of life perspective." Yellowhead county subscribes to this benefit, and I know that our Municipal Affairs and Housing minister was very pleased with this agreement as it met one of his conditions in the mandate letter. Our Municipal Affairs and Housing minister stated that we're all one big community.

Please join me in congratulating Reeve Jack Williams and his Yellowhead county council, Mayor Greg Pasychny, and the town of Edson . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Harold Gibson

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today before this Assembly to remember a friend of mine and a great Albertan. On April 9, 2007, Mr. Harold Gibson of Sangudo passed away.

Mr. Gibson was an active member of the community. Through service to organizations such as the Lac Ste. Anne county rec board and the Ste. Anne Natural Gas Co-op, Mr. Gibson vastly improved the lives of those around him. During his 26-year tenure on the Ste. Anne Natural Gas Co-op and nine-year term as a member of the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, Mr. Gibson lent his expertise and good sense to many projects which directly benefited the community.

Throughout his life Harold was involved in many other projects in the community. He sat on the Safety Codes Council for eight years and was a presiding officer for the gas utility operator program at NAIT for the past four years.

Harold also served as a councillor in Lac Ste. Anne county for 12 years. He spent his time serving on many committees and working diligently to strengthen the communities within the county.

I will always remember Harold for his hard work as a dedicated individual. He was meticulous, thoughtful, and caring. The loss of Harold Gibson is truly a loss for the people of Whitecourt-St. Anne and, indeed, for the people of Alberta.

A service will be held tomorrow, Friday, April 13, at 2 p.m. at the Legion hall in Sangudo. Harold will be sadly missed by the members of his family and of his community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Bob Maskell

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are few things in life I do not like. The first is tofu. No matter what I do to it and no matter how much I try to like it, I just can't.

The second thing I do not like, Mr. Speaker, are people who besmirch other honest people hoping to gain petty political mileage. This is not even to mention the people who can stand up in this House and talk about Albertans, good Albertans, who cannot reply to them face to face.

Mr. Speaker, I believe a man's name and integrity are worth more than partisan politics. That is why today I want to talk about someone who I feel is an outstanding citizen, who cannot defend himself in this House.

When I asked Mr. Bob Maskell to carry out the duties of the chair of my past department's Aboriginal Festivities Committee in 2005, he indicated that he would accept this responsibility prior to the election of 2004. When he lost his seat in the election in November, I felt that he should continue with this role as he was the best candidate to further the work needed to ensure that aboriginal Albertans would be involved in Alberta's centennial activities.

The board needed continuity in its planning. Mr. Maskell offered valuable resources as someone who had history, prior commitment, and knowledge of aboriginal people, much as the people who sometimes speak about aboriginal people don't. More importantly, he showed his ability to truly connect with the aboriginal community.

Mr. Speaker, he was also a great planner, a great organizer, and an avid educator, with 30 years' experience in education, arts, and the public sector. He has done a variety of committee work developing education and cultural ties with Alberta's partners. These are qualities we needed; therefore, he was selected for this position. He not only raised the profile of aboriginal people with nonaboriginal people. He also corrected some historical wrongs according to many aboriginal elders, and he did everything with respect and grace, something we value. I believe his involvement with the committee was a great contribution to the overwhelming involvement of many aboriginal people in the province's centennial celebrations.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say thank you to Mr. Bob Maskell.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

1:20 Environmental Sustainability

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are exciting and dangerous times in Alberta. They bring to mind the ancient wisdom of the Bible that without a vision, the people perish. The lack of vision, planning, and strong leadership in Alberta is coming home to roost in a growing environmental debt.

Approvals for all manner of developments have reached an all-time high in the face of a pitifully funded Department of Environment. There's also a growing public agitation based on good evidence that this government is willing to sacrifice the proverbial golden goose, our environment, for higher GDP.

Fort McMurray is the most glaring example of irresponsible development. Both its pace and scope disregard collateral damage to people in the ecosystem, threatening our collective future. When will we see cumulative impact assessment and recognition of limits in this beleaguered region? Other examples include unmonitored groundwater impacts from coal-bed methane in southern Alberta, an overstretched South Saskatchewan River basin pushing water transfers to Calgary from the Red Deer River, extensive loss of prime agricultural land in the Edmonton area, and growing threats along the eastern slopes to the water towers of the province, our lifeblood.

The implications of this unmanaged growth, particularly with the stark realities of climate change crashing down upon us, are extremely unsettling to conscious, moral Albertans. Regrettably, no climate change leadership is to be found in this government, and in denial our short-term course careens towards even greater dependence on fossil fuels. For the Alberta government the market is the unquestioned determinant of progress. If, as the Premier has stated, we cannot touch the brake, then it's time to change the government.

We believe on this side that the economy is there, rather, to support and sustain people and the environment. We understand the difference between responsible and irresponsible development. Without a land-use plan, objective science on environmental impacts, and meaningful public consultation, we cannot have genuine progress and healthy communities.

In this precarious time of short-term wealth lies the Alberta opportunity for a sustainable economy based fundamentally on environmental stewardship and human security. The Alberta Liberals have both the vision and a plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Vaisakhi 2007

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The festival of Vaisakhi is one of the most important in the Indian calendar. I want this House to know that the importance of Vaisakhi is recognized by not only the Sikhs but all Indians. It has cultural, historical, and religious significance.

Vaisakhi is culturally significant because it's the end of the winter harvest in north India and signals prosperity. Farmers are able to pay off their debts and pay for their children's education, weddings, et cetera. Folks celebrate their good fortune in festivals in every major community. Songs, good food, wine, and dance are the order of the day. Everyone gets together in their community to celebrate the fruits of their labour over the past year.

Vaisakhi, also known as Khalsa day, has the most significance for Sikhs. Akhand Path, a three-day nonstop reading of the Sikh scriptures, is held in Sikh temples in every Sikh community in the world. This was the day when the 10th prophet, guru Gobind Singh, transformed Sikhism into a militant fraternity dedicated to the path of righteousness and good to prevail over tyranny and evil.

Vaisakhi reminds us of our mission and responsibilities toward society: upholding the dignity, honour, and rights of all people. We pay tribute to our gurus and all the Sikh martyrs who laid down their lives for the principle of Sikhism: truth, justice, equality, the fight against oppression and, of course, the evil caste system in India.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Betty Mardiros

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last month Alberta lost one of the pillars of its progressive community. On Friday, March 30, Betty Mardiros passed away at the age of 84. She was an active member of the CCF, attended the founding convention of the New Democratic Party in 1961, and was one of the founding members of the Woodsworth-Irvine Socialist Fellowship.

She and her husband, Tony, were close friends of Alberta CCF Member of Parliament Bill Irvine. She remained inspired and motivated by the original principles of the British Labour Party. Labour MP Tony Benn remained a constant inspiration for her.

I had the pleasure of knowing Betty through her involvement with the Edmonton Voters' Association. Some of my fondest times with Betty were after meetings at her home, when she'd invite some folks back to her library for a glass of red wine and a sometimes heated discussion of politics. Upstairs Betty and her husband, Tony, kept a gracious home, but down the stairs the family room was converted into a meeting room, with a table at the front and rows of chairs and posters from the British Labour Party on the walls. An old Gestetner machine for producing petitions and pamphlets was in the furnace room.

Betty was a tireless activist and a campaigner for a better world. She spent her entire life as an active participant, leader, and organizer of campaigns for peace, public medicare, women's rights, and democracy. She was a founder of Edmonton's Raging Grannies, a group well known to former Premier Klein and the members opposite. Betty left an indelible mark on our political landscape. It will not be the same without her, but her legacy will live on with the progressive groups she helped found, including organizations like the Raging Grannies, the Parkland Institute, and the Woodsworth-Irvine Socialist Fellowship.

Betty's last performance with the Grannies was at a tea at the palliative care unit of the Edmonton General hospital. She joined the group to sing one of their favourite songs, a version of Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star that included the lyrics: "Inch by inch, row by row, we want to see all grandkids grow. Day by day we'll never cease, till we have this world at peace."

Betty will be missed, but her dream of a better world will be carried forward by everyone who has been touched by her energy and her passion.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to a question raised in the House yesterday by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the collision history on highway 63 for the past five years. The document shows that the five-year collision rates on highway 63 from south of the city limits of Fort McMurray to the junction of highway 55 are significantly lower than the provincial average, yet one accident or one death on any road is one too many.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have eight letters to table today. The first is from Sarah Leete of Cochrane to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development urging him to stop the planned clear-cutting in Sibbald Flats and west Bragg Creek area because she has witnessed the results of the degradation caused some 20 years ago and feels that selective logging is the correct action to take.

The second is from Doug McKeague, again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, also objecting to the planned clear-cutting in Kananaskis Country and urging the minister to consider the needs and desires of the people and communities as central to policy consideration, not industrial economics.

I have a letter from John Parkin of Calgary and one from Gerry McCuaig of Calgary, who both work in the oil and gas industry. Both are disturbed about proposed clear-cutting in Kananaskis Country and say that recreational economic value is very important to the proposed clear-cutting areas.

I also have a letter from Charles Northup. He writes to register his opposition to logging in the west Bragg Creek area.

Shawn Zwierzchowski, Vanessa Vallis, and Dale D'Silva also want their concerns about proposed clear-cutting registered, specifying impacts on water quality, habitat degradation, and damage to recreation and tourism industries among other concerns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings here today. One is a letter from two constituents of Edmonton-Manning, Rick and JoAnn Gravestock, outlining how JoAnn lost her job at a restaurant to a temporary foreign worker.

The other is from a group of Albertans asking this Legislative Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua Hunt be tried as an adult due to the nature of his crime, his past criminal history, and that he is close to 18 years of age.

Thank you.

The Clerk: Oral Question Period.

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. [interjection] Well, the rules say 1:30, question period. We'll come back to this part of the Routine after.

The Speaker: First Official Opposition question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Poverty

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans care about each other. They recognize that we're all in this together. The Canada West Foundation last year found that 65 per cent of Albertans felt that reducing poverty should be a high government priority. The Alberta Liberals agree. Yet a report released today by the Edmonton planning council found that there are enough Edmontonians living in poverty to fill the entire cities of both Red Deer and Lethbridge combined. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that his government is out of step with the priorities of Albertans when it comes to addressing poverty?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this government has listened very closely to Albertans. Our five priorities are built on what Albertans have told us. One of the most important priorities, of course, is quality of life for all Albertans, and we're working very diligently on that priority.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's income support programs are failing. Only 30 per cent of low-income families on income support ever get out of poverty. This government's programs are a poverty trap. They are not a hand up, and they aren't even a tolerable handout. In the richest province in this country this government shows the least concern for single parents. To the Premier: what will it take for this government to finally take action and address its shockingly low levels of support for single parents and their children?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we took action in this area many years ago by increasing considerably the tax exemptions for low-income earners. I think we have the largest exemption of any province in Canada.

The other is that it's not only supporting families; it's also giving the skills and the opportunity to participate in the job opportunities available to them in this province. That's another goal of ours: to upgrade their skills so that they can feel positive about their contribution to the province.

Dr. Taft: Seventy per cent of those people never get out of poverty, Mr. Speaker.

Today's report from the Edmonton Social Planning Council shows that families with children living on social assistance today survive, if you can call it that, on government support worth half of what they received 25 years ago. This is shameful. Children don't deserve to be poor. Not one child in Alberta should live in poverty. While this government pays the contract of a defeated Tory MLA, it expects a single parent with a child to live on little more than a thousand dollars a month. To the Premier: how does this government tolerate thousands of children in Alberta living in such poverty?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible will inform the House and, obviously, the opposition in terms of the size and the number of programs we have for those requiring assistance.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's ludicrous that in a province that has a Ministry of Children's Services, that provides more for children in this country than any other place, the opposition, who know full well that we have subsidies – and if my colleague were here, relative to child benefits she would talk about it.

But I could also point out, Mr. Speaker, that in 2006-07 – and we share responsibility on health benefits for mothers and children – we spent $637 million on program planning and delivery, employment and training, health benefits, and income supports.

Government Contracting Policies

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has dismissed the contract awarded to Bob Maskell as a problem of perception. It isn't perception at fault when Kelley Charlebois gets hundreds of thousands of dollars to chat with ministers, it isn't perception at fault when Rod Love gets similarly paid for no measurable results, and it isn't perception at fault when a minister personally interferes to find a job for a defeated Tory colleague and the contract is then back-dated two months. The problem is the culture of entitlement festering in this government. To the Premier: will the Premier finally admit what everybody knows, that Mr. Maskell's appointment was a clear abuse of ministerial power?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I talked about privileges extended to members in this House. Clearly, this member again broke the rules yesterday by misleading this House in terms of the 50 hours' billing. That was of course explained yesterday and today, and I take exception to the constant innuendo raised by the Leader of the Opposition in this regard.

The Speaker: We have a notice of a point of order. I presume it's on the phraseology: clearly misled.

The second supplemental. The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One serious problem with these kinds of patronage contracts is that they place senior bureaucrats and civil servants in a bind. Should they speak out against this kind of ministerial request? Will they lose their jobs if they do so? Should they just give in to the minister's demands? What is a public-minded individual to do? To the Premier: will the Premier table whistle-blower legislation so that people can safely come forward when they witness wrongdoing without fear of losing their job?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have a tremendous amount of respect for the civil servants of this province. In fact, in my inaugural speech I paid tribute to them. All government members respect the excellent service provided. And besides, you know, the hon. leader at one time was employed by the government.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, there is a wider concern here. This Conservative government with this Premier at the table has a clear history of handing out taxpayers' money in questionable contracts to friends and personal supporters. Mr. Maskell's case stood out because he had named his company after himself, but who knows how many more there are out there? Albertans need answers. They need to know how many of these special-favour contracts there are. The Conservative government in Ottawa has just appointed a special investigator to look into the troubled history of government contracts with polling firms. To the Premier: will the Premier commit to a similar investigation of this government's contracting practices?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the substantial changes that this government brought forward very quickly is adding to the openness and transparency on a quarterly basis. All records of transactions will be available on the web so that every Albertan has an opportunity to see what taxpayer funds went to either companies or individuals. That will be fully public. It's the most transparent that this government has been ever in the province of Alberta, but they still fail to recognize that.

Mr. Bonko: Yesterday the Premier stated that the Auditor General has approved checks and balances regarding payments made under the government contracts. The Auditor General reported on another Tory patronage contract in 2004. He said, "The documentation did not support how the expenditure officer was able to obtain satisfaction that the disbursements were in accordance with the terms of the contract." What a surprise, yet we see the same thing again. The latest invoices do not support the claimed 50-hour days or day-long meetings, yet they were still approved. To the Premier: will he admit that while the checks and balances may be there, his government routinely ignores them for its friends?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I will admit that this government is always looking forward, as opposed to the opposition always looking backward, and that's why we brought about the changes. Openness and transparency will continue to work. We're bringing forward additional legislation, and I hope that it's supported by the opposition. Or they may even find something else there that they'll oppose again and not support this government in passing very important legislation to deal with some of these issues.

Mr. Bonko: Kelley Charlebois, Rod Love, the community initiatives program, rule breaking for secret friends of top Tories, and now Bob Maskell. Taxpayers are getting disgusted. This government's patronage file is getting so thick that patronage will soon need its own department. Why does this government have one set of rules for its friends and one set for the rest of us, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the earlier comments, made yesterday, again say that this wasn't patronage, but of course they'll keep turning back and forth, back and forth, bringing this thing forward. I made my comments the other day. I made comments with respect to the contract to the media. We're going to be bringing forward legislation, and we're going to be looking at other ways of improving the trust and the confidence not only of government but of this institution so that we get more people interested in running for public office, not to constantly degrade each other in this facility.

Mr. Bonko: The Minister of Education stated yesterday that he didn't accept the questions that we raised as factual basis. He said that he hadn't seen the relevant documents. Well, they were from his own filing cabinets and stamped: education accounts. So I'm at a loss to know why he couldn't get his hands on them. They're probably in the drawers labelled patronage. To the Minister of Education: what value did the government get out of three $600-a-day meetings between Mr. Maskell and the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs as approved by the minister's accounts?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I've done some extensive checking, and to the best of our knowledge we have not received any invoices from Maskell & Associates. We have not paid any invoices. So if the hon. member has some copies of some invoices, stand up and table them in the House, or quit smearing the member's name. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party. [interjections] The hon. leader of the third party has the floor.

Condominium Conversions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to policy. [interjection] You won't like it when you hear it, though, Mr. Premier.

In this out-of-control economy affordable apartments are being sold left and right for condominium conversions. Over a thousand rental units were converted to condos last year in Calgary alone. It's a similar situation in Edmonton. Apartment owners eager to cash in on condo conversion jack up rents to get tenants out in 90 days rather than give the full 180 days' notice. To the Premier: given that this housing crisis is forcing regular families out into the street, will he impose a temporary moratorium on condominium conversions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the third party raises an important issue. This is something that we have discussed around our caucus table, and we are looking at ways, with respect to the minister of municipal affairs, to see what we can do in this critical situation. We understand the critical shortage of housing. We know that, and we want to address that issue. If there's another question, I'll ask the minister of municipal affairs to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. But Albertans can't wait for this government to figure out what it's going to do or spin-doctor its housing report. The Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing projects a shortfall of 43,000 affordable units by 2009. CMHC says that Edmonton has 5,050 fewer rental units on the market than in 1987. The crisis is real, and condo conversions are making it worse. To the Premier: will he take action to stop condo conversions today?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the kind of information that the hon. leader gave means that more people are moving into their own accommodations, but there are those that can't afford to do that, and the minister has a plan to address that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I have said in this House many times, there has been a task force that has been presented. We are looking at that task force, and we are going to reply to those very major concerns, as the member from the third party has illustrated.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, subject to the rules, the minister has now referred to a report. Will he please table it today in the House?

Mr. Speaker, there are 40,000 households in Edmonton that give over 30 per cent of their income to landlords. Contrary to what the Premier has just said, renters normally have to pay 30 per cent more for a unit that's been converted into a condominium. So, please, Mr. Premier, will you help these people who are being pushed out into the street by condo conversions and do something?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, we fully discussed the situation in Edmonton and Calgary, and there are other communities facing similar. We are going to take steps. With municipalities, of course, there are ways of handling some of these situations. But like I said, it's going to take co-operation between the province, municipalities, and the federal government to deal with the overall critical shortage of housing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Vocational Education

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is booming, our labour market is stressed, hours are excessive, trained people are in short supply, and service and productivity are suffering. The costs for all projects increase because of this. It is good that the government is working with the trades and professions to create more training. Many Alberta occupations think that they are finally being taken seriously. But we do need more training. My question is to the Minister of Education. Will the minister increase support for vocational schooling beyond the registered apprenticeship program and call on our trades for assistance?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I guess if the hon. member is referring to the high school industrial arts and CTS programs, that is something that we have recognized as a priority in the education system. I hate to keep referring back to my standard answer, but I'm going to wait for the minister's budget next week to see how successful I was.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Backs: Thank you. A supplementary to the minister of advanced education. Building trades training schools provide vast amounts of critical training in occupations that are needed now and will be for decades. Will the minister ensure that the necessary support from government be in place for these schools to maximize opportunity for Albertans to train now and for the future?

Mr. Horner: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Backs: A supplementary to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. Regional labour market integration has worked well for the engineering profession in the Pacific Northwest. Will the minister work to ease the movement of trades and professions from and into the U.S. with a greater integrated labour market in the Pacific Northwest?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, yes, we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Physician Supply

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sole family doctor serving the communities of Ogden and Lynnwood in my constituency is retiring. As he cannot find a doctor to take over his practice, he has to close his practice. The majority of my constituents have been his clients for 35 years, and they are very worried and upset. My question is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. What is your plan to deal with the shortage of family doctors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is clearly a shortage of health care professionals, not just doctors. It's a more severe shortage in the health care area than in the general economy, so we do have to bring forward a plan with respect to the health workforce strategy. I'm working with the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry and the minister of advanced education on that workforce strategy. In fact, we'll be meeting with stakeholders tomorrow, I believe, to discuss the draft strategy and additional things that we can do. Specifically on the family doctors, the primary care networks have been very successful. In fact, members might have read today in the paper about a primary care network in Edmonton where you can get same-day access. That will be the way of the future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the family doctor's practice is close to a seniors' residence in my constituency, the vulnerable constituents now have to travel farther, longer, and costlier to get to a doctor, if they are lucky to find one. To the same minister: what is the plan to help them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I don't have a specific answer for this specific situation, obviously, but the process that we're taking is to encourage the development of these primary care networks to make the best use of the full range of health care professionals in the context of a primary care network. We could see in that context that in the future, in the very near future health care professionals would attend at the long-term care centre or even the seniors' residence. So those are the ways that we're using the full range of health care professionals in our community, and hopefully that will be able to address this particular situation in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary regional health authority has established a number of community health centres in other parts of the city of Calgary, to the minister: when can Calgaryans in the southeast side of the city expect such service?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, at present there is not a plan to build a new community health centre in that region of Calgary that I'm aware of. However, the south Calgary hospital project will be proceeding very shortly. I can say that with respect to the other health care facilities in Calgary, if any member visits any one of the health care facilities in Calgary, the hospitals and clinics, they'll see construction cranes around them. So there's more capacity being built, more service available, more accessibility available to Calgaryans in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Environmental Sustainability

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Water for Life strategy and the 1999 commitment to sustainable resources and environmental management have one thing in common. Both talk about respecting the wishes of Albertans, consulting with Albertans, and enhancing environmental protection, yet these strategies continue to be ignored and the people's concerns dismissed. Look at the evidence: irresponsible oil sands development, plans for garbage dumps bigger than anything in North America, 10 upgraders in the next five years, five coal-fired plants to service these, and massive transmission lines. People are asking the obvious: Mr. Premier, is this responsible development?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one of the government's priorities, of course, and a huge task assigned to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is to put together a land-use framework. It's going to be a difficult task because there are so many different uses: agricultural, oil and gas, forestry, recreational, expansion of urban communities, obviously, encroaching on good agricultural land. These are all issues that we have to deal with.

One thing that I was pleased with, notwithstanding a lot of the criticism that we receive as a government, is that Alberta itself is recognized as doing the most in terms of environment, although 43 per cent but a heck of a lot higher than any other province with respect to this area. Do we have a lot of work to do? Yes, we do, and we'll do it. And that can only be done with the good help of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have many Albertans in attendance in the House, Albertans who have serious problems with the lack of a due process for these development decisions affecting their way of life, their water, their future. Residents in the industrial heartland have raised concerns about the rate and scope of development in their area, concerns about the air they breathe, the water they drink, the future of their rural way of life. Plans for up to 10 upgraders in Sturgeon and Strathcona have people asking, independently wondering: Mr. Premier, what is the plan?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is due process. I as a former municipal official, of course, lived through a number of applications for development. It rests with the municipality to deal with the application. Here are a few other things that we've done since then. With respect to the industrial heartland, I met with all of the people in 2004, discussed their issues, certainly sympathized with the change in their lives just with the number of plants being built. That's one of the reasons, then, that we put a program together where we could purchase the land from the owners.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Thorhild county the people have run up against a dead end in trying to address the massive garbage dump prepared for them, a dump bigger than any in North America despite a similar landfill just south in Ryley. Neither their own council nor this provincial government are listening to their real concerns about these projects and the impacts on their way of life, property values, and potentially their water. Can the Premier tell us what his government will do to help these concerned citizens of Thorhild county be heard?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have met with at least three families, as I recall, with respect to this particular development. I know that there is a due process in place. It is a difficult situation. I lived through it personally as the former reeve for the county of Lamont, where a company had made an application. But we have to go through the process because if not, if either the applicant or those that may be living in the county establish that due process wasn't followed, they punt it to the courts, then the courts punt it right back to the municipality to follow the due process. It's one of those issues that if we can improve on it in terms of the Municipal Government Act, we'll listen to their ideas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Winterkill of Fish Stock

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Utikuma and Winagami lakes in my constituency have always been known as the million dollar lakes for their fishery. The last time that we had any kind of winterkill, which is a devastating state of no oxygen going to the fish or to any species in the lakes, was 1989. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why did it take so long for you to make a decision to allow salvage fishing of any sort to occur in those two lakes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. Winterkill occurs naturally in Alberta lakes, particularly the more shallow lakes. It occurs when oxygen levels fall below a certain level because of the ice. These conditions are affected, of course, by the length of the winter, by the thickness of the ice and by the snow on top of the ice. Utikuma Lake has seen winterkills before, as the hon. member indicated. Our fish biologists monitor the oxygen levels in these lakes quite carefully, and they determine if and when it becomes appropriate to allow a salvage fishery.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, so did my commercial fishermen monitor what was happening in those lakes. There were some concerns expressed to the biologist as well as to various officials, and there was no action taken. As a result there is going to be devastation amongst my commercial fishermen. Could you please tell me again, Mr. Minister: why was that recommendation by the commercial fishermen who wanted a salvage fishery earlier not followed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there are multiple stakeholders in these lakes. You have the commercial fishermen, you have aboriginal fishermen, and you also have your recreational sports fishermen. We were in communication with all of these different groups during the month of March as this situation evolved, but in the end I took the advice of our department fish biologists. I might add that in a meeting I recently had with Professor David Schindler, the water expert over at the University of Alberta, he said that our fish biologists in the government of Alberta are some of the best in Canada. I took their advice as to when it was time to allow the commercial fishery.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, there are times when we have to take the advice of those kinds of people, but we also have to take the advice of those individuals who do make a living off that specific fishery. My question is: what kind of management or policy will you bring forward to ensure that these people can also be listened to so that this kind of devastation does not occur again?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, of course, as I've mentioned already, this is a naturally reoccurring phenomenon in Alberta and northern Canadian lakes, so I can't guarantee that it will never happen again. I can guarantee, though, that we will listen, obviously, to the concerns of affected stakeholders, but often the stakeholders' concerns or interests are somewhat competing and have to be balanced against one another. In the end, again, I think most members would agree that listening to the advice of our fish biologists is the best way to manage this type of situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Steamfitter-pipefitter Red Seal Exams

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 28 the interprovincial red seal exam for the steamfitter-pipefitter trade was pulled shortly before it was to be administered, leaving a number of apprentices at loose ends. The cancellation of this exam suggests something went seriously wrong in the certification and quality control process for these much-needed tradespeople. My questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Can the minister tell us why this exam was pulled?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, serious allegations were made, actually, in the Legislature during debate on Bill 7. There may have been some sale of exams was the allegation that was made, and that is very serious. We're not aware of any direct activity involving the exchange of money, but if the member has some evidence or some information to that, we'd certainly be interested in looking at it.

Mr. Tougas: Well, I didn't suggest that, Mr. Speaker. I just asked why the exam was pulled, and apparently the answer is that there are some suspicions that maybe somebody did get a hold of it ahead of time and distributed it. Can the minister comment on that? I mean, you brought it up. Is that the case? Has this been tainted or something? Is that the case?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was recently reported both in Nova Scotia and Alberta that there may have been a compromise; therefore, the exam was pulled at that time, but it will be readministered.

Mr. Tougas: Well, the tradespeople who had planned to take this exam made considerable financial and time sacrifices to do so. They're now in limbo, waiting for months until they can write their exam. What is the minister doing to ensure that this test is administered as soon as possible and to compensate those affected?

Mr. Horner: Well, I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, that the members who were looking to take that exam would want to ensure that it is not compromised, and that's exactly what we're doing. Utilizing technology where we can, we will try to get this done as quickly as possible, recognizing their hardship.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

2:00 Softwood Lumber Trade Agreement

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forest companies operating in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne are dealing with their U.S. customers under the new softwood lumber agreement. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can you tell the Assembly what's happened in the past six months since this agreement was adopted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the good fortune yesterday morning to attend a conference at the University of Alberta School of Business that was devoted to the softwood lumber agreement and how things have evolved since its formal coming into effect six months ago. Unfortunately, the agreement has not delivered the type of predictability and access that was hoped for. Lumber prices have fallen, and so have exports. It's too early at this point to tell whether the falling number of exports is caused by the agreement itself or by the slowdown in demand in the United States. Probably it's both. But, unfortunately, the lower the price becomes, this triggers an export tax, and that's hurting our industry at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next supplemental is to the same minister. I've not heard much complimentary about the softwood lumber agreement and its benefits to our producers. Has it benefited the Alberta softwood producers and our forest industry?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated already, we're disappointed with the results so far. But this has to be put into perspective. This is the third softwood lumber agreement in the last 20 years. These issues are recurring. One thing is very clear. Our lumber industries know what they want. What they want is free trade and open access to American markets, and unfortunately this has been slow in coming. We, of course, support full, free, fair trade with the United States, and we will support our industry in trying to work towards that but under the terms of the existing agreement.

Mr. VanderBurg: My next question is to the Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations. What are the prospects for the softwood lumber agreement lasting more than the minimum of two years?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister has also indicated, certainly it's not a deal that is perfect. With the attitude of our neighbours to the south, you know, this agreement has really ended a lot of past disputes and potential future litigations, so in many ways it has been positive. In Alberta as Albertans we have an attitude that we'll always work to make it better, to improve it, to share information with our neighbours. That's what we're doing. But industry plays a key role, working with this government as partners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's becoming increasingly difficult for people to pay their rent in this province. Constituents are calling into my office unabated, and today a pensioner, Otto Fuernsinn, came in because his rent has gone up by $150 in the last six months. Now, this is a huge burden for anyone on a fixed income. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Again I ask this minister: what should I tell this pensioner? Is it the government's policy that I should tell this pensioner that we've got a report and we're studying it, and don't worry? Is that the government's position on this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that presently we support the rental subsidies to the tune of 4,600 households. We also support the maintenance and operation to nearly 27,000 households in Alberta. Also, I want to say that as a result of support from the government we're building close to 3,700 complexes.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the minister brought up the subsidy program because another one of my constituents, Mrs. Arlene Henderson, found herself struggling to afford her rent after it increased by $200 last year. She applied for and received a $200 rent subsidy that the minister is talking about, but almost immediately her landlord, Boardwalk, raised the rent by another $142. My question to the minister is simply this: does the minister see that without guidelines the subsidy program that's supposed to be helping these people is actually adding to the profits of corporations like Boardwalk?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do want to say that the extensive growth in Alberta is providing some challenges in housing in Alberta, and the Alberta government is trying to address those challenges. That is why we took those steps immediately after the election of the new leader to bring forward a housing task force that has reported to my ministry, which is currently looking at those recommendations and will be bringing forward responses very quickly.

Mr. Martin: So I guess when these people walk into my office with the problems that they're facing – and it's thousands of people across this province – this is what the minister is telling me: "Don't worry. Be happy. We've got a report, and we'll get around to it sometime." Mr. Speaker, the problem is now. I ask this minister: would he consider, report or no report, bringing in rent guidelines to stop this gouging?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I again suggest that the report responses will be here very quickly, and those responses will address some of the concerns that the hon. member from the third party has. I cannot tell you at this time if they're going to be positive or negative, but they will address the responses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Northwest Anthony Henday Ring Road

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. St. Albert residents in the neighborhoods of Heritage Lakes, Grandin, and Akinsdale anxiously await this government's position on the alignment of the northwest leg of Anthony Henday Drive. The proposed route runs far too close to their homes, creating dangerous goods, noise, and child safety issues. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: will the minister listen to the St. Albert residents' concerns and feedback from the packed open house last summer and subsequent 1,916 petitions and move the northwest leg of the Anthony Henday Drive south of the current proposal?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, the government will continue to listen closely to the concerns of residents of St. Albert. Government has been in negotiation with Newman college. Should the province acquire the college site, the road can be shifted further away from the homes in south St. Albert, and this may eliminate the need for noise mitigation also. But no decisions have been made about either the alignment or the purchasing of the college at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that the government is offering fair market value to acquire the property of Newman college to enable the road to be aligned further south?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to negotiate with the archdiocese. I have not had a chance to meet with their leadership since Archbishop Collins went to Toronto, and I don't think it would be prudent to discuss the details of our negotiations in public; however, both sides are negotiating in good faith. We are making progress, and I am hopeful that we can come to an agreement that is reasonable and fair to all involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Minister, at the first open house last summer a subsequent open house was promised for the fall, but it still hasn't happened. When will the St. Albert residents be provided an open house to see the details of the new alignment if proposed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following the negotiations with Newman college the department plans to hold an open house in May to update the public, and we're not sure exactly when yet. But, again, no decisions have been made about either the alignment or the purchasing of the college at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Land Titles Wait Times

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former realtor I'm very aware that the land titles office plays a key role in concluding what can be a very stressful and expensive process for individuals, whether they're buying their first or their 10th home. North America's hottest real estate market, which exists right here in our province, has led to excessively long waits at Alberta's land titles office, some causing over a month's delay in closing transactions. My question is to the minister responsible for Service Alberta. Can the minister tell this House what his department is doing to remedy this situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:10

Mr. Snelgrove: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last August in this House, when the question arose, the turnaround had reached 16 business days. By January it had reached 26. That was unacceptable to us. It was unacceptable to the business community. More importantly, it was unacceptable to the staff. Through several changes, including hiring more people, they now have the turnaround days down to 11. As Alberta knows, given the tremendous growth in the numbers of registrations, this is a tremendous tribute to the diligence and hard work of the staff at the land titles office.

Mr. Rogers: My supplemental is to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Well, if it's that simple, why has it taken his department so long to move to this step?

Mr. Snelgrove: I wish it were that simple, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, it is quite an elaborate and intensive training program that these interns go through because accuracy as well as timeliness in that department is paramount. Besides hiring more staff, they've worked evenings; they've worked Saturdays. This staff has taken the bull by the horns, I think, given that they have 5,000 a day, and in the month of March these people had over 120,000 business title transactions. So, once again, it shows you that when a department is focused and works together, they can achieve great things for Alberta and Service Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rogers: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, since it's unlikely that this market is going to slow down any time soon, can the minister assure this House that these measures aren't just temporary, that they will last for the long term?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the ongoing training in the department and the priority in the personnel administration office of the Alberta government is to make sure that we have in place suitable trainees in business or experienced people coming through the ranks. So to maintain this level of excellence in all departments is truly a priority for this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Security in Schools

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week an individual broke into the Victoria school of performing arts and set fire to parts of that building. While the matter is being resolved, the fact that it occurred at all is troubling. Another troubling incident happened a few months ago with an attempted assault on a young girl in an elementary school. Schools are expected to be safe places for our children, but when that safety is threatened, it raises real concerns within the community. To the Solicitor General: has the minister worked with the Minister of Education to develop a set of best practices to follow to ensure that our schools are secure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These incidents that are happening in our public schools are certainly a concern to this government, and obviously the Minister of Education and myself have had discussions on how we can secure our schools to make sure that they are a safe environment for our children.

Mr. Elsalhy: Mr. Speaker, in corresponding with school administrators and educators, we have heard that additional security measures often have to take a back seat to other priorities such as programming, instruction, and maintenance. However, the safety of our children and the security of learning institutions cannot be put on the back burner. Will the Minister of Public Security commit to providing a source of dedicated funding designated only for school security such as video cameras or private security patrols, to be accessed if a school administrator decides to update their security? Basically, we're asking for a separate envelope.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, in regard to the security of our schools that is under the Minister of Education's budget. I know that this is a high priority for him, and I'm sure that any request to ensure that our children are safe in our schools will be adequately addressed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Guaranteeing the safety of children in our schools requires some action, and one of the easiest programs that we can strengthen is the presence of school resource officers, basically police officers working within the school. This is a fantastic program that is, unfortunately, not receiving the attention it deserves from this government. Can the minister commit to providing more funding to police services to hire more officers so that they can be deployed in our communities and within our schools as resource officers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to remind the hon. member that budgeting for policing in this province has increased by over 20 per cent this year. We will be shortly again discussing the budget for the next fiscal year, and I would certainly look for his support for an additional amount of monies to carry out the job. If the hon. Minister of Education would like to supplement, I would ask him for his comments.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member prefaced his question by saying "guaranteeing" safety in schools. We can't guarantee safety in schools; however, we are doing everything we can. But we also have to make schools accessible and friendly, and we can't have doors that have to be swiped to get in. So we're doing what we can, but it has . . .

The Speaker: And I have to continue with the question period. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Guardian Angels Security Organization

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Guardian Angels is a nonprofit group that uses unarmed volunteers to deter street crime. The Calgary Guardian Angels took their first street patrol on March 28, and reports indicate that an Edmonton chapter could hit the streets in months. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Will the Guardian Angels help or hinder crime prevention?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, that sounds like an opinion, but go forth.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll do my best to help with this opinion. First of all, safe neighbourhoods are definitely a concern, and we want to make sure that families have excellent, safe communities to work in. I want to mention that the entire community is required to be vigilant to help police reduce crime. Criminals do not like others to see them when they're committing their crimes, so we can always benefit from the involvement of community-based groups like the Guardian Angels who put more eyes and ears on the street.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question: are the Guardian Angels co-operating with police in regard to informing them of the areas they will patrol and reporting on illegal activities they come across?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again an excellent question. I want to reiterate that it is very important for the Guardian Angels to develop close relationships with the police services in the communities that they operate in. To be effective with their own protection, they are encouraged to keep police informed on not only their activities but their findings. Crime prevention is all about government, police, and the whole community working together to ensure safe communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: will the Guardian Angels be in danger if they confront those breaking the laws?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, like any other citizens, we encourage Guardian Angels to report illegal activity to police and to be observers only. If a confrontation does occur, I understand that Guardian Angels' first approach is to try and diffuse a situation through dialogue and communication, and we encourage them to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer North.

Electricity Transmission Regulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government through an order in council produced their latest version of the transmission regulation to try to improve the damage that has been done by electricity deregulation. Now, my first question is to the Minister of Energy. Kellan Fluckiger is the California contractor that has been hired by this government to try to fix electricity deregulation. What role did this gentleman have in drafting this latest version of the transmission regulation issued yesterday through an order in council?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, initially I'll address the situation with respect to the transmission regulations and the assumption that some individuals make that somehow or another that part of the industry in the province of Alberta is or has been deregulated. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The fact of the matter is that transmission in the province of Alberta is now regulated, has been regulated, and will continue to be regulated into the future.

Thank you.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister thinks that transmission regulation is a car part. That's how little grasp he has of this issue.

Now, why is this government continuing to allow Kellan Fluckiger to undermine the regulatory authority of the EUB?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that the individual across the way will have to be around an awful lot longer than I am before he understands more about car parts than I do.

However, with respect to the authority of the EUB their authority is very clearly laid out in legislation and regulation in the province of Alberta. Nothing that we are doing now, nothing that we have done with respect to transmission regulation undermines any authority that they have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Energy is right about one thing. I will never know as much about Rolls-Royces as he does.

Now, given that the Independent System Operator is accountable to no one, how much extra is this transfer of authority in this very regulation from the EUB to the Independent System Operator going to cost consumers on their already high monthly power bills? How much is this change going to cost consumers?

2:20

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would really like to address the situation with respect to Rolls-Royce. Not very many people in this Legislature or, for that matter, in the province of Alberta would understand the tremendous role that Rolls-Royce plays with respect to the energy industry in the province of Alberta. They are a tremendous company. They provide tremendous machinery that helps us with our gas transmission systems in the province of Alberta. I might also add to that that the use of the equipment that Rolls-Royce has provided to industry over the years has decreased the cost of the industry to Albertans, and it does so on a daily basis.

The Speaker: That was 102 questions and answers today.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports (reversion)

The Speaker: We're back to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from Robert W. Parker, who is actually a Calgary resident who raises a number of concerns with health care. He is unhappy about having to pay for the blood tests for prostate cancer. His health care card was cancelled, and now he cannot see a doctor, so he's very concerned about that.

The second is from Denise Wood, and this is around the sterilization issue. It's noting that she attended a gastroenterologist's office in which the scope that was to be used was being cleaned in front of her with a brush and some solution. Although she questioned the nurse and the doctor at the time, they said that that was acceptable.

The final is from Jane Edgett, who was a respiratory therapist at the Red Deer regional hospital. She has raised a number of issues connected to sterilization, hospital errors, and infection resulting directly from staffing cutbacks, and she cites a number of studies that support that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Allan Laird, who wants to express his concern about the lack of support for school-aged kids in Alberta. As we experience the pain and problems of the boom, this is another area where we are creating the Alberta disadvantage.

The second is from Tammy Herbert. She is a single working mother of two children who has a full-time paying job. She's worried that she's going to be forced out of her home because she will no longer be able to pay the rent and utilities. The gap between the wealthy and poor is widening, and the middle class income earners are disappearing from the scale.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an Edmonton Journal article from February 2000. The article announced Bob Maskell's intention to seek the nomination for the Highlands by-election in 2000 for the Liberal Party of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of 10 letters I've received regarding the need to change Alberta's employment standards to protect the jobs of workers who take compassionate care leave under the federal employment insurance plan. No one should have to choose between their job and being with their loved one in their final days. I would point out that Alberta is the only province that does not have legislation to do this. The letters are from the following people: Sarah Schmidt, Val Millions, Paula Reedyk, Rita Patterson, Sheila Axten, Deanna Gabrielson, Melanee Thomas, Lisa Lambert, Janine Marshall, and Dayna Daniels.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Boutilier, Minister of International, Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Relations, response to Written Question 29, asked for by Dr. Swann on behalf of Mr. Bonko on April 24, 2006.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Lindsay, Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security, pursuant to the Gaming and Liquor Act of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, 2005-2006 annual report; pursuant to the Horse Racing Alberta Act Horse Racing Alberta 2005 annual report.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the Government House Leader please share with us the projected government business for the week commencing April 16.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There being no government business on Monday, April 16, we would go to Tuesday, April 17. Under Orders of the Day: the government motion with respect to the Standing Order changes; second reading on Bills 28, 19, and 22; Committee of the Whole on Bill 15, Bill 17, Bill 18, and Bill 22; third reading on Bills 3 and 15; and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday the 18th Committee of the Whole on Bills 28, 18, 19, 22; third reading on Bills 16, 21, 22, 17, 6, 12, and 10; and I'm going to assume a government motion that is not yet on notice with respect to populating policy field committees in the event that the government motion passes on Tuesday.

On Thursday, of course, we anticipate hearing from the Minister of Finance with respect to the budget and, of course, the government motions on supply and referral to supply before adjourning for our second constituency week.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During an exchange in question period between the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition, there were some remarks made by the Premier in which he said that we were using innuendo and that the Leader of the Official Opposition had clearly misled.

The citations I would like to go over today include 23(h), which covers allegations, (i) imputing false motives, (j) using insulting language likely to create a disturbance. In addition to that there is Beauchesne's 484(3), which, again, is imputing to a member unworthy motives or speaking in abusive or disrespectful terms; 486, which is speaking to the tone of the language; 490, which, again, clearly spells out "mislead" as one of the prohibited terms under unparliamentary language; and Marleau and Montpetit 522, that remarks: "which question that Member's integrity, honesty or character are not in order." These were contravened with the remarks from the Premier setting out that innuendo was somehow used and that we couldn't prove what we were saying.

Mr. Speaker, I'm looking at some of the sessional papers that have been tabled around this particular issue. I look at Sessional Paper 208/2007, specifically around the 50 hours that was billed with no explanation. The Premier claimed that he had explained. I've gone through Hansard: he had not. But we have supplied copies of the invoices for Mr. Maskell in which 50 hours was billed, so I don't know how we're impugning anything. We supplied the proof of it. There's no innuendo here, sir. It was on his letterhead, and it's clearly been stamped and received. This is a sessional paper that was tabled several days ago, I believe.

Also, Sessional Paper 199/2007 outlines a number of the cheques that were made to the individual being discussed. It shows also that we could find no associates that were listed that might explain a 50-hour billing. Perhaps if there had been other people that had been working, that might have accounted for it. No, indeed, there are no associates listed in the corporate search. Again, that information was supplied, was tabled in this House, Mr. Speaker.

We have done our very best to supply and back up every statement that we have made on this. I have just gone through a few of the sessional papers that have been tabled in support of the remarks we made, so in fact we were very factual, and we supplied proof of every statement that we made in this House. So I would like to have the Premier withdraw his accusation that the Leader of the Official Opposition was misleading this House on this particular issue and to also withdraw his statement that there was innuendo because there was not. We have supplied proof of every statement that we've made regarding this particular issue.

In addition, the tone and the choice of language that was used here were clearly meant to insult and, I would argue, clearly meant to provoke debate and to disturb the decorum of the House.

I would appreciate your being able to render a decision on this point of order today. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the best the hon. member has and the Liberal opposition has is just not good enough because, clearly, although they've tabled documents in the House, the questions that have been raised have been raised with an intent to besmirch the character of an individual who formerly served.

There are certainly, clearly, very appropriate questions raised from time to time in the House, and it's not inappropriate to ask questions with respect to contracts and, indeed, to ask some specific questions, although I would have to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is bordering on inappropriate, if not inappropriate, to table a specific document and then ask a question about that specific document as though a minister or the Premier might have read every document that's in every filing cabinet in the hands of the government. That is inappropriate.

With respect to the question of innuendo and misleading, when you do file a document and then raise a specific question relative to 50 hours and do that in context of another question on another contract, there are innuendos that occur, and we've dealt with this from time to time. The inappropriate juxtaposition of those types of questions and comments can lead to besmirching the character in this case not of a member of the House but of a former member of the House. What the opposition clearly has been trying to do is to suggest that the government is engaged in patronage in the hiring of Mr. Maskell. In a member's statement today there was a clear definition of the talents and capabilities of the member of the House. I hope that the opposition is not suggesting by their questions that a former member of the House, regardless of what party, shouldn't put their talent to work on behalf of the people of Alberta in an appropriate way, clearly having had it cleared by the Ethics Commissioner with respect to conflicts of interest.

So there was very clearly innuendo in the context of all the questions that were raised by the opposition, as, I would suggest, there is always innuendo in the questions raised by the members of the opposition. Sometimes, as today and earlier in this session, that innuendo is inappropriate. I would suggest that today that innuendo was inappropriate.

With respect to the question of misleading the House, Mr. Speaker, specifically on page 147 of Beauchesne, 490, there is a list of expressions. "Since 1958, it has been ruled parliamentary to use the following expressions," and one of those expressions is "misleading," as you see on page 148, halfway down. So it's not always inappropriate to use the words "misleading the House" if, in fact, you are misleading the House. I would suggest that the proof is in the pudding in this particular case.

It is not inappropriate at all for the Premier today to point out that in the manner and context in which these questions were raised with respect to various contracts, obviously the point of the opposition was to try and suggest that there was somehow inappropriate patronage going on. The point of the Premier and others is to say that just because the person is hired to use their talent in the service of Albertans, it's not patronage if a job that needs doing is done by a person who is qualified to do it.

So there has been innuendo, inappropriate in my view, on the other side. In fact, in the way in which the questions were posed, they have been misleading the House.

The Speaker: Are there others who would choose to participate?

The chair recognizes at the outset that it is Thursday and would like to read several paragraphs from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 525.

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden. Personal attacks, insults and obscene language or words are not in order. A direct charge or accusation against a Member may be made only by way of a substantive motion for which notice is required.

On page 526:

In dealing with unparliamentary language, the Speaker takes into account the tone, manner and intention of the Member speaking; the person to whom the words were directed; the degree of provocation; and, most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber. Thus, language deemed unparliamentary one day may not necessarily be deemed unparliamentary the following day. The codification of unparliamentary language has proven impractical as it is the context in which words or phrases are used that the Chair must consider when deciding whether or not they should be withdrawn. Although an expression may be found to be acceptable, the Speaker has cautioned that any language which leads to disorder in the House should not be used. Expressions which are considered unparliamentary when applied to an individual Member have not always been considered so when applied "in a generic sense" or to a party.

There's one additional paragraph on page 527 about the usage of this and the review of this by the Chamber. This refers again to the House of Commons.

In 1991, following several incidents of unparliamentary language, a government motion respecting decorum and civility was brought before the House. The motion was debated on three occasions but never came to a vote.

It seems that the members themselves sort of enjoyed at various times the give-and-take that goes on in the House and, when confronted with an opportunity to actually come down with codification of certain utilization of words, have always backed away. We have, of course, in the situation here today with respect to the word "misleading" two interpretations, both quoted correctly: the Leader of the Official Opposition saying that it is unparliamentary, the Government House Leader saying that on certain occasions it is parliamentary.

This is really a wonderful position to be in here, to stand here. So one will view all of this and take all of this in the context of it being Thursday, a warm day, the fourth day of the week. The chair does not like the utilization of words like "innuendo," "misleading," does not like provocative statements. It's cautioned the House before. The members enjoy what they do, and the members have 45 seconds to frame questions and 45 seconds to frame answers, and that gives a lot of leverage.

As I've said before on numerous occasions, we can do better. I call on everybody to try and do better. Less provocative leads to less provocation to the other side. Harmony and love bring forth the very best in us all. But do we really want to be loved is the question.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 28

Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, please.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move for second reading the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007.

The Provincial Court Act deals with matters relating to the Provincial Court of Alberta, and I might at this time indicate to the House that the amendments that I'm about to outline have the encouragement of the court, and they are supportive of all of these changes.

Bill 28, Mr. Speaker, amends the Provincial Court Act to permit a judge who is more than 70 years of age and working full-time to be appointed a part-time judge if he or she wishes. Currently the act permits part-time judges to be reappointed after age 70 but only if they started part-time service on or before their 70th birthday. Extending the option of part-time service to full-time judges over 70 years of age will benefit Albertans because more highly experienced and competent judges will be retained to continue serving Albertans on a part-time basis. Judges who want a guaranteed amount of judicial service after retirement will have this option. Furthermore, there is a financial benefit to the government with these amendments because contributions to the part-time judges' pension plan would not be required.

The amendments will also change how sittings for part-time

judges can be scheduled. The act now requires part-time judges to sit full-time for two three-month periods in each year of their term. The amendments will require part-time judges to sit for the equivalent of six months on a full-time basis in each year of their term, providing more flexibility in scheduling for the courts.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice and Attorney General strives to promote a fair and accessible civil and criminal justice system. The Provincial Court Amendment Act will help further this goal by retaining the knowledge and experience of judges with many years of service on the bench.

As such, I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support this good piece of legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader, the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and speak in support of the principles that are set forth in Bill 28, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007. As I said yesterday, we're benefiting from having a minister stay in place for some time because the legislation that is coming forward, I know, has been through the appropriate stakeholder groups and consultations. It's being driven by an identified need, and the appropriate amount of background work has in fact happened to bring this bill before us.

It is essentially dealing with our employment or labour pool that we currently have available, and we can end up with labour shortages even on the bench, I think. So it's nice to be able to have this legislation clearing the way for individuals to be serving as part-time judges. I know that we will appreciate their continued service on the bench, and it does work out some of the slight quirks that were in the existing legislation. I think that having them serve the equivalent of six months on a full-time basis in each year of their term is a more flexible way of dealing with the scheduling of their time. As an administrator or someone who would be responsible for scheduling them, I'd say that I would certainly appreciate that flexibility. Previously what it was was serving two three-month periods, and that just can be difficult to work around when you don't have the kind of flexibility that you need.

So we are able to retain experienced judges for a longer period of time, and I think that we are going to need that as the baby boomers increasingly move towards retirement. Some of them will just retire and would not be available. We, I'm sure, can make use of those experienced people who are willing to serve on a part-time basis. It's more attractive to them because they get to do the work they love and that they're good at, frankly, but they may not wish to do it full-time, and this does allow them to continue to serve.

I note that one of the arguments is that it's cost-effective. Usually I would argue against that because I've been really disturbed by the number of choices that I've seen the government make where they dismiss a full-time paid individual and contract it out because they don't have to pay the benefits that go along with it. But in this case the benefits that would usually be paid were contributions to pensions, which, frankly, is not an issue in this case, so I'm willing to support that.

This is not a complex bill. It's really two pages long, and it's just essentially inserting two sections. I have looked at it. I have looked at the three-column document, which I appreciate receiving. It was very helpful. Given that I was able to look at the three-column document, I'm very happy to support this bill. I urge my colleagues in the Assembly to support it in second reading.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly have no objections to the bill. I take it that there is probably a need. We hear about the courts being clogged up. I would like to get, when the minister is around, a little fuller explanation about what the situation is there and why he felt a need to move to part-time at 70. Are there other things that we can do? We hear and read about it – I don't know if it's true or not – that it seems to be part of the problem again with an overheated, booming economy that the courts are very busy. So when the Minister of Justice comes back on this.

As I say, the bill probably makes sense. I don't see anything that I couldn't support, but I would like to get some idea when he has the chance, either in committee or third reading or at the end of second reading, to give us sort of an update about what is happening and why the need is there for this particular bill at this particular time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have this opportunity to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 28, the Provincial Court Amendment Act, 2007. Certainly, when one looks at this – and I heard the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre – it is certainly worthy of support.

I'm pleased to see that this is the sort of amendment that the government is doing to the Provincial Court Act and that they're not following in the footsteps of their federal cousins and initiating a wholesale change to how judges or justices are selected and appointed to the courts. Certainly, all hon. members of this Assembly have been reading recently about some of the controversy around the changes that have been proposed by the federal government. I don't think these changes will increase the public's confidence in the judiciary. The judiciary, as the hon. members of this Assembly know, must be fully independent, and we must maintain and guard that independence.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage support of this bill and remind all hon. members of this Assembly to please be mindful of the total independence of the judiciary from the legislative process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few brief comments in response to the comments by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview in an attempt, perhaps, to provide some clarity.

There are a number of ways in which you can retain the talent of people who have served Albertans as a member of the Provincial Court as they get a little older and a little bit more experienced. They can retire, in which case you lose their talent entirely. They can be appointed as supernumerary judges, in which case they could be called upon to serve from time to time as needed.

A number of years ago there was also a provision made for part-time judges. The benefit of a part-time judge over a supernumerary judge was that you could actually have the service of a part-time judge on a consistent basis over a consistent period of time and schedule it more appropriately as opposed to calling in a supernumerary judge on a periodic basis. The other benefit of a part-time judge over a supernumerary judge would be that the part-time judge would continue to keep up with professional development, if you will, and the goings-on of the court, as opposed to a supernumerary judge who really did just come in when called.

The provision of part-time service was made available at the request of the court as a very good adjunct to the ability to keep judges who had put in considerable service, who were prepared to continue to put in service, but who no longer wished to put it in on a full-time basis or had otherwise come to the end of their term, so to speak.

So that's what happened, and the amendments that are here today just enhance the ability to retain the services of qualified, competent judges who have capacity, who have ability, and whose service can continue to be provided to the courts and to Albertans but in a more structured way than, perhaps, would have been available through supernumerary status.

The Speaker: Additional members?

Shall we call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Third Reading
Bill 21
Securities Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate being able to speak to Bill 21, the Securities Amendment Act, 2007, again. I also appreciate the thoughtful comments and questions from the hon. members who spoke to the bill during second reading and Committee of the Whole. Before I move third reading, I would like to use this opportunity to answer questions and clarify some of the comments.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford referred to comments by the Minister of Finance regarding a single securities regulator. I cannot speak for the minister, but I can respond to the hon. member's implication that a passport system would be a waste if the province one day agreed to a single regulator. Alberta has been one of the top provinces and territories that have been actively committed since 2004 to working together to improve investor protection and enhance the competitiveness of Canada's capital markets. We are doing that through the passport system and the harmonization initiative, which this legislation helps us achieve.

The first phase of the passport system was implemented in 2005 and gave participants certain exemptions when dealing with different securities jurisdictions, with the only exception of Ontario. The second phase of the passport system will significantly expand the single window of access concept of securities regulation by allowing participants to access capital markets across Canada by dealing only with the regulator in one jurisdiction.

The harmonization of securities laws produced by the passport system would be necessary even if there was agreement to move to a single regulator at some point in the future. In fact, the high degree of commitment and co-operation demonstrated by regulators and governments in developing the passport system would be needed to create a single securities regulatory structure. Accordingly, there has been nothing lost in terms of time, money, or human resources in harmonizing securities laws as part of the passport initiative.

Some of the hon. members also raised questions about the effectiveness of the Alberta Securities Commission. Although that is not directly related to the legislation at hand, I don't want to leave these comments without a response.

The Auditor General conducted an independent review of the ASC's enforcement system in the fall of 2005 and concluded that there was no substance to allegations of illegal enforcement activities at the commission. The Auditor General's report did identify areas where improvement could strengthen the ASC's enforcement system and made 10 recommendations. The Auditor General made two recommendations to strengthen the ASC's conflict-of-interest policies. In his 2005-06 annual report the Auditor General stated that he is "satisfied that the [ASC] has responded effectively to our 2005 recommendations – out of 10 recommendations, 5 have been implemented and 5 are rated as having satisfactory progress." The Auditor General will follow up to see how the designated changes operate in practice. The Minister of Finance will also continue to monitor the Auditor General's reviews of the ASC and will respond accordingly.

I would also like to reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's characterization of the harmonization initiative as a race to the bottom. The provinces and territories are not lowering their standards to the lowest common denominator, as he stated. There is no race to the bottom. Provincial and territorial governments are committed to making improvements to the Canadian securities regulatory framework.

In 2004 all the provinces and territories except Ontario signed the memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. The agreement committed Alberta and other provinces and territories to harmonize and streamline securities regulation across Canada. This involved repealing significant portions of the Securities Act so that it acts as platform legislation designed to support national uniform rules implemented by the Canadian Securities Administrators. Platform legislation contains basic and general requirements which rarely change. The detailed requirements will continually evolve to meet the changing market conditions as set out in the rules. The repeals and amendments in Bill 21 will allow us to adopt a single set of enhanced requirements applicable across Canada in most key areas of securities regulation.

Again, I thank the hon. members for their comments and questions and hope that I have clarified matters for them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may just recap the importance of Bill 21. This legislation includes amendments to enhance the securities passport system and further harmonize and streamline Alberta's securities laws with other Canadian jurisdictions. We have also included some enhanced enforcement and housekeeping amendments. The legislation will support a new national registration rule being developed by the Canadian Securities Administrators, and that is expected to be implemented in 2008. These amendments will ensure that Alberta continues to meet its commitments under the 2004 provincial/territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation.

I urge all members to support Bill 21 as it is key in our ongoing efforts to improve securities regulation across Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and speak to Bill 21, Securities Amendment Act, 2007. Bill 21 attempts to harmonize securities legislation among the provinces without abolishing the regulators. This process extends back several years, involving several meetings among provincial and federal finance ministers as well as several meetings among provincial regulators.

Canada already has 13 securities market regulators. All other major industrial countries have one central securities market enforcer such as the United States Securities and Exchange Commission, SEC. The Alberta Liberals are on the record as supporting, as a first choice, a strong and effective Alberta Securities Commission.

Having multiple securities regulators has advantages and disadvantages. The benefits of having several market regulators are, number one, local companies have faster access to public equity; number two, Alberta companies are less likely to fall by the wayside to central Canadian companies; and number three, increased local control.

On the other hand, existing in the multiregulator environment causes a number of challenges. For example, a number of companies operate in several provinces. They must deal with different rules in different jurisdictions. What works in one province might not work in another. Companies express frustrations dealing with often conflicting and confusing regulations. Moreover, others suggest that the multiregulatory environment increases fees and reduces enforcement.

Two reasons for supporting Bill 21: investor protection and business accessibility. First, Mr. Speaker, Bill 21 permits companies and stakeholders the legal means to sue public companies that issue false or misleading information. This new law will follow Ontario's lead, which has recently enacted similar legislation. Second, stakeholders – security lawyers, investors, advocates, and particularly businesses – cite that there is some value in having harmonized security legislation. Each provincial jurisdiction has different rules for security regulations. Thus, if an Alberta-based company wants to do work in another province, it must comply with cumbersome security legislation. Businesses express frustration with having to deal with the different rules in different provinces. This bill attempts to mitigate this problem.

While this bill does attempt to improve investor protection, it fails to address a number of concerns raised by the Official Opposition in regard to the Alberta Securities Commission. I have a few concerns, Mr. Speaker: the first one, rules preventing Alberta Securities Commission employees and board members from trading in companies that are being investigated; the second one, regulation prohibiting ASC employees and board members from trading in companies listed with ASC; the third one, rules restricting MLAs from nominating ASC commissioners.

Moving toward a passport system. Harmonizing legislation fails to provide a single enforcement regulator or investor advocate. We need to ensure investor protection at all stages of the harmonizing process. We are also concerned that a passport system will allow market regulators to pass the buck on enforcement files. For example, the Alberta Securities Commission may investigate a small part of an irregularity but pass another portion on to another one. According to investor advocates this pass-the-buck system risks leaving an investigation uncompleted.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is streamlining registration requirements for companies and advisors that operate in more than one province. For example, if a company or broker operates in Alberta and British Columbia, it needs to register with the Alberta and B.C. security commissions. Before Bill 21 companies complained that this process is cumbersome and expensive. According to an investor advocate the passport system is all about streamlining registration but nothing to do with strengthening enforcement.

I have some questions to ask the hon. minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister table letters from stakeholders supporting this initiative? The second one: is the minister confident that this change will positively impact companies? In terms of being registered in Alberta, how can Albertans be confident that the new registration system is going to improve the old system?

Now, I want to touch a little bit on civil liability, Mr. Speaker. According to an investor advocate up until a few years ago stakeholders couldn't sue for misrepresentation in what is called continuous disclosure. If an executive lies in a press release or annual report, shareholders can sue them. Prior to 2006 the provinces had archaic civil liability protection, say the investor advocates. Here are the key questions that need to be addressed. How restrictive is the civil liability? How difficult is it for stakeholders to prove that a company's intent was malicious? Is there a limitation on the amount that stakeholders can recoup, such as a million dollar cap?

I have some other questions, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain 41(1)(b), how the executive director will "assist in the administration of the securities or exchange contract laws of another jurisdiction"? Conversely, will other jurisdictions be interfering in Alberta? Who is going to cover the cost of these investigations? Where is the whistle-blower legislation? Alberta Auditor General recommendations: we will see that there.

Those are the few questions, Mr. Speaker. Otherwise, I have no objection. I definitely will support this bill, but if the minister has time sometime today or in a few days, I would really appreciate it if I got those answers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Martin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't prolong the debate. I understand the need for harmonization. As I said, the member that brought it forward said that the Alberta Securities Commission has done yeoman work and didn't have any problems. Well, I beg to differ, because as I said, I worked under the Securities Commission. There were some bad decisions, bad things happening, and hopefully it has been straightened out.

I've always believed that we needed, Mr. Speaker, a national regulator, not a federal government regulator but a national regulator, because it doesn't make sense having investments with the way money flows, having, you know, 13 different jurisdictions. So I understand the purpose of this passport system, to move towards only one set of harmonized continuous disclosure requirements, but I'm not sure, then, what the need is for each one of the securities commissions. It's very hard to tell from the bill.

The other big problem, of course, is that Ontario is not a part of this, and a lot of the markets flow out of Bay Street and Toronto. So that's a major problem if we don't have all provinces participating, especially Ontario. But in saying that, okay, we're moving towards harmonization, and that's a good thing.

The member says that we're not moving to the lowest common denominator. I don't know that from this bill. How can we tell? How can we tell what the rules are going to be under the passport system? I noticed that with some of the rules that we had at the Alberta Securities Commission, as lax as they may have been, we seem to be weakening it. I still don't understand the reason for that other than, as I said, a race to the bottom. The member says that that's not the case, but we have no evidence that that is necessarily true.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I say, I'm not going to go on very long. I've made the case about this, but I really wonder what the roles are now of all the other securities commissions. In other words, where does the Alberta Securities Commission end and where does the passport start? It's impossible to tell from that bill. I suppose that it's in the regulations or whatever. Then we could begin to judge whether this is lessening standards rather than sort of the best practices of all the provinces in moving towards harmonization.

I said before that white-collar crime has not been taken very seriously in this country, and certainly the United States is much more concerned about this. We'll have to wait and see how this works. On the one hand I'm for harmonization, but I wish we'd just have one national regulator that the provinces could agree on, have the best practices from all of the securities commissions. That would make the most sense, but we'll have to wait and see if this passport system is a step in the right direction or a weakening, really, of even individual securities commissions. I can't tell at this particular time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if there's a question or comment from hon. members.

There being none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again I appreciate the opportunity to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 21. From what I can gather, Bill 21 attempts to harmonize security legislation with other provinces. It's a step in the right direction. I, too, have been reading many reports where we should have a more harmonized system of security regulation throughout the country. As this province and this economy grow, I think we have to give serious consideration to this.

I look at the Minister of Finance, and certainly I can see a change in direction from this government. The Minister of Finance has indicated that, well, maybe it is time for a national regulatory body. I think it's going to be an interesting couple of years with that discussion, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 21 also allows investors to sue public companies operating in Alberta that issue false or misleading information. Now, there are those that would say that it fails to strengthen enforcement, and that has certainly been discussed in the past couple of weeks in this Assembly. But when we look at this attempt to harmonize security legislation across the provinces without abolishing the other regulatory bodies, we have to recognize that this process extends back several years, involving several meetings between provincial and federal finance ministers. In fact, there was a former finance minister from this House who would be sitting with the federal finance minister of today. Hopefully, that in itself will lead to a serious consideration of harmonizing our security legislation with other provinces.

Now, when we look at what is in this legislation – all hon. members of this House have had a good look at that – there's something that I'm disappointed is not in this legislation. It has been brought to my attention on many occasions. I've discussed it in this House. I'm disappointed to see that there is not a more valiant attempt made to change how companies report, specifically not only to the investment dealers but to the investment community. To be specific, Mr. Speaker, with Bill 21 we need to look at how companies register their royalty payments and how these show up on either quarterly reports from respective companies or the annual report, which is filed.

Now, this is not only a problem in Alberta, but in my opinion it's a problem also in Ontario, and it certainly is a problem in New York. Let's look at the Syncrude joint venture for an example. The Syncrude joint venture has seven, eight different participants. They each have different percentages of the project; some are significantly larger than others. But they don't all report in the same way how they pay royalties to the Minister of Energy. Not two of them are the same, and I think they should be. We can look at Petro-Canada's annual report or their quarterly financial statements. We can look at ConocoPhillips. We can look at Imperial Oil. They're all different. They all report their royalty payments in a different way.

We look at Nexen. We look at the Canadian Oil Sands Trust. Perhaps I would suggest that in the future the securities law be set up so that we have to follow the reporting procedures of Nexen and Canadian Oil Sands Trust. They tell in detail the royalties they pay, in which jurisdiction the royalties were collected, and they also explain in a percentage the royalty that has been paid specifically to this province. Now, if you look at Imperial Oil, you can't determine that. If you look at ConocoPhillips, you certainly can't determine that. Petro-Canada is halfway in-between. If I'm an investor and I'm looking at investing in these companies, that's information that I want to know.

If we were to take Bill 21 at this time and improve it, this is one thing we could do. This is not mere housekeeping. There should be a standardized reporting process for royalty payments. The EUB certainly has had a lot to say about this, and other bodies have had a lot to say about exactly how reserves are calculated and reported. If we want to have good, solid investor confidence, Mr. Speaker, we need to have a system that investors and their dealers can be confident in, and that works. I'm not going to go into the details of the changes that have been made in some of the reserves and how they've been reported by respective companies, but this is one thing that I think has been overlooked in the debate so far on Bill 21. I would urge all hon. members of this House to have another look at this because it's important.

If we look at the royalties and some of the questions that an investor may have, they could be these, for an example. If economic profits are generated, how much does the government take? How much does it take from marginal fields? How much does it take from larger, more profitable fields? If oil prices increase, what percentage goes to the government? How much incentive does the contractor have to keep costs down with these investments, now with the effective royalty rate? This could all be outlined and detailed. I have the utmost confidence that we can do this for investors. How aggressive is the system when we're talking about the effective royalty rate? What percentage of the production will the contractor be entitled to lift or be able to lift? All this data could be made available and should be made available to the investors.

If we look at some of the other jurisdictions, which may or may not have some or all of their operations registered in this province, if we look at Alaska, if we look at outfits that just operate here in Alberta, if we look at what goes on in Texas, if we look at what goes on in Wyoming, in Norway, everything is different. Everything is very different. For instance, the effective royalty rate – and an investor would certainly want to know this – is 22 per cent in Alaska, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta the effective royalty rate is 8 per cent, and that's on third-tier oil. In Texas the effective royalty rate is 24 per cent. In Wyoming it is 20 per cent. In Norway it's zero because they have a different system. The hon. Minister of Energy is absolutely right. Some people don't understand that, but certainly there is a special petroleum tax. That is one of the reasons why the Norwegians have been so successful in collecting on behalf of citizens now and in the future billions and billions of dollars. Certainly, I hope that we do the same here. Those are just some of the jurisdictions.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I think we need to give this serious consideration with Bill 21. Every energy company that's reporting in this jurisdiction should be reporting the amounts of royalties that they pay in the same manner so that investors can make up their own mind whether they want to invest in that enterprise or that corporation. But if investors are going to make up their own mind, they should have all the information available. It shouldn't be just hit and miss.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Energy under this Standing Order provision.

Mr. Knight: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. I listened, and I was very interested in the comments that the hon. member has said around the reporting and recording of royalty structures and that sort of thing with respect to investors and investor confidence. I would just ask if there could be perhaps a little more explanation with respect to how the hon. member would presume that we should proceed in Alberta with respect to this to build investor confidence.

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the question from the hon. Minister of Energy. Earlier, before the session started in March, I was doing some research into exactly how the royalty structure works postpayout with oil sands projects in Fort McMurray. I was astonished.

First, constituents from Gold Bar come into my office, and they say: "Well, we're going to go from 1 per cent royalty payment after the capital costs are recovered to 25 per cent. When is this going to start in Fort McMurray, and when are we going to see an increase in the royalty amounts from synthetic crude oil to the province?" I thought: "That's a very good question. I should do some research into it." So I did.

I was astonished that some companies pay 12 per cent, some pay 14 per cent, some pay 18 per cent. Some companies that are operating in the oil sands areas also are operating with conventional crude oil and natural gas production in the province, and the royalty rates there are anywhere between 23 per cent and 17 per cent. So there's a really wide range of amounts payable, but the first thing that caught my attention was the public's perception that after the 1 per cent royalty rate is taken care of, these operators in the Fort McMurray region pay 25 per cent, and it's simply not true. It's 25 per cent net. Whenever all the reductions, all the holidays and incentives, are taken into account, some of these companies are paying 12 per cent.

For other companies like Imperial Oil, Petro-Canada, Conoco-Phillips whenever you look at their quarterly reports and their annual reports, you cannot determine what amount they make in payments to this province. I don't think that's fair, I don't think it's consistent, and I think we can do better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Are there additional members who would like to participate on the bill? The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports on the debate.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make a couple of comments in respect to Bill 21 Securities Amendment Act, 2007. I had quite a bit of involvement a few years ago in working with the various provinces under an earlier portfolio when the passport approach was first developed and, really, where the consensus was had. We had worked with numerous stakeholders, all of the national organizations, all of the provinces and were working towards how we help see that our securities approach in the country can address national and international questions. We've always had the ability to deal with the smaller issuers in a provincial jurisdiction, but the interest is to help see that we would have a very efficient – and not just for the issuers but also for those investing in companies and clearly for all the enforcement aspects so that we would continue to have a high level of confidence in investing and attracting people to invest in the equities market in Canada.

There have been a lot of notions put about saying: why not a national regulator? Clearly, there are pros and cons, as was mentioned by others. There have been some substantive benefits by having the regulation of the industry on a provincial level. Our markets are very different, really. They're mostly small cap, micro cap in comparison to the U.S. markets in particular. The vast majority of companies are accessing very locally and are responding be it mining issues in B.C. versus the oil and gas industry in Alberta and a very different sector in Ontario. Yet there still are some concerns for the larger companies who access funds nationally and internationally. It was that drive that said that we've got to find a solution among all the provinces to provide some mechanisms to deal with those national and international.

There was never any support from Quebec, to start, for a national regulator. Every time everybody has ever approached and said the only utopian solution – and there is never one – was to jump to a national regulator, that meant that Quebec was never part of the solution. It also meant that we were trying to say: where can we find the common issues that are of concern to us, and what approaches might we take to resolve them? So we found a different approach through a passport model that we could get all of the various provinces supporting. Name the concern you have for enforcement – be it confidence, be it similarity of laws, all of those things – name the issues, and let's find methodologies to get them resolved. That's what the passport really was. It was not necessarily the end step but a methodology to help address these questions for national and international issuers and for investors.

We came a long way at that initial step. Ontario was also outside that, and it was only with a change of government in Ontario that they've subsequently rescinded their support. But they, too, have been quietly and very much supporting the directions and the aims, the same common aims that we all have among the provincial jurisdictions.

I'd say one of the things that's been a great strength to ensure that there is provincial say in what happens is in the response to the U.S. Sarbanes-Oxley Act that came down. The U.S. has always taken a very prescriptive, rules-based approach to this. Europe, on the other hand, has been taking a much more principle-based approach to securities regulation. When Sarbanes-Oxley came in and was purported as being the solution, the Ontario Securities Commission wished to adopt most of those regulations. It was because of Alberta and B.C. and some of the other provinces, because we also have regulatory authority, some push back, that we took it more Canadian to reflect the very different marketplaces we have here. The Sarbanes-Oxley approach: very prescriptive but doesn't necessarily ensure that they will give any better confidence in the marketplace.

I would just say in support that tremendous progress has been made to resolving the challenges among the interprovincial and international questions, the efficiencies of the market, consumer protection, the harmonization objective to ensure that all marketplaces do continue to hold a very high standard. That's the only way we'll be able to continue to attract people in the marketplace, which is the end objective.

So in that respect I'd say that this was an excellent first step in bringing together a unique approach among the jurisdictions which has been wisely constitutionally held, where the responsibility constitutionally is the provinces', with the authority given to find another uniquely Canadian approach to finding harmonization in approaches of methodology to resolve the questions that cross our borders. It is a great first step, and you'll see even Ontario coming forward with accomplishing many of the same aims, which might then lead, down the road, to other structures, be they national or others in scope. But it certainly gives us the ability to move the issues forward without getting so bogged down that there's only one regulatory structure that could solve the problem.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. minister in regard to Bill 21. If we had stronger enforcement of securities laws in this province, does the minister think it would have been easier to track the activities of Enron and what they did to our electricity market between 1999 and 2003?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you may choose to respond or not.

Mr. Melchin: I'm just going to state this with respect to securities regulation. We have and always have had a very strong standard. Some might say that there have been some problems in the past, and there's always been, unfortunately, a history, in any place in any of the world, of some abuse of the rules and maybe not the right ethical standards. But we do have all of the authorities necessary to enforce, to ensure that consumer confidence is there, both in this act and before.

The Speaker: Are there additional questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Yeah. The member talked about Quebec and the problems there. I hadn't thought about that, but I notice in here that it doesn't talk about them not participating in this passport system. Is that, in fact, the case, that Quebec is now on board?

Mr. Melchin: It's true. All of the provinces are signatory to this approach other than, now, Ontario. We at one stage even had Ontario, but Quebec is and has participated completely and fully with this. They, too, have the same concerns when it comes to consumer confidence, enforcement, ensuring that we have some harmonization of standards across this country. They want the same objectives. So what's a methodology that would allow us to continue to see that we have the provincial responsibility, which is ours? Our marketplaces are very different. Quebec marketplaces for their issuers are a different place, different types of structures, different types of companies, really, than most of the Alberta listers.

Just one other plug I forgot. Alberta actually has 30 per cent of the capitalization of the TSX and the Venture Exchange. We are already a very significant, prominent, and growing influence. To not lose nor choose to give away something that is very particular and unique to the Alberta marketplace and influence that we have in the financial markets, we therefore need a very strong, active voice and would not want to delegate and give that away. Quebec, for their own reasons, but they are participants.

The Speaker: Hon. members, no additional members indicated to the chair their desire to participate. Shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Bill 27
Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007.

The amendment to the emblems act would allow cabinet to add any Alberta symbol of distinction to a list of official symbols. Currently the list of official symbols includes the flag of Alberta; the wild rose, representing the floral emblem of Alberta; and the great horned owl, representing the official bird of Alberta, as noted examples.

It's important to realize that all of our province's official symbols will continue to take precedence and protocol. That will not change as they are legislated symbols. What Bill 27 proposes is to grant the authority to cabinet to officially recognize symbols of distinction through an order in council. This would allow cultural groups to obtain a symbol of distinction for a special event or to celebrate an important milestone.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This proposal will help expedite the process to approve a symbol of distinction at any time of the year without the constraints of having to go through a full and sometimes lengthy legislative process. Bill 27 would provide an efficient process to ensure that important symbols of distinction would be recognized in a timely manner.

It also highlights the amazing diversity in heritage that makes up Alberta today. It is an opportunity to recognize symbols of distinction for Alberta and those that enrich our culture. Various cultural groups in Alberta could request that symbols be added to this official list. The regulation will establish the criteria that must be met before new symbols of distinction are selected. The symbols would represent cultural groups that had contributed to Alberta's diverse society. These symbols would not duplicate or closely resemble a symbol of another cultural group. They would have to be unique to Alberta or represent our province in some way, have some history, and be made in Alberta. They must be nonreligious and nonpartisan. The symbols would not be offensive or divisive. Finally, Mr. Speaker, they would not promote hatred or racism.

This bill would represent an efficient and faster alternative to open up the process to deserving groups with symbols of recognition. By supporting Bill 27, we are recognizing and celebrating the diverse cultural influences that truly make this a unique and great province. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to discuss the importance of Bill 27.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise again and speak to Bill 27, Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007. This bill has two objectives: first, to create a new category called an Alberta symbol of distinction, and second, that Alberta symbols of distinction will be decided in cabinet, not in the Legislature. I'm going to support this bill, but I have a few questions to ask the hon. minister.

Let me talk a little bit about rationale. The cultural group can have their symbol recognized. This Bill 27 enhances cultural diversity, but as the minister said, it has to be related to Alberta. It will reflect the province's history and its natural and diverse landscapes and its people. But this bill, Mr. Speaker, does not add a specific official symbol. It allows groups to bring forward official symbol ideas to cabinet. Cabinet makes the decision. Cabinet makes the decision, not the Legislature. This bill appears to be a new direction for debating Alberta official emblems. According to the Emblems of Alberta Act, Alberta currently has 12 official emblems. There are, I think, at this moment about 11.

Mr. Bonko: What are they?

Mr. Agnihotri: The first one is armorial bearings of Alberta, the flag of Alberta, the floral emblem of Alberta, the official grass of Alberta, the Alberta tartan, the Alberta dress tartan, the official bird of Alberta, the official stone of Alberta, the official tree of Alberta, the official colours of Alberta, the official mammal of Alberta, the official fish of Alberta. The new one, which is coming, is the Alberta symbol of distinction.

I have a question to the hon. minister. This Bill 204 is before the House, Mr. Speaker, and it's also . . .

Mr. Bonko: Twenty-seven.

Mr. Agnihotri: Yeah. I know that.

Bill 204 is before the House, and it's also trying to amend this act to officially recognize the Franco-Albertan flag. Can the minister explain this discrepancy? We could have, you know, passed one bill, served the same purpose. But I want to know from the minister why we have two different ones. Can the minister define a symbol? Maybe lots of members sitting in this House still don't know exactly about the symbol.

Also, I have a question to the minister. If he can answer this. Can the minister confirm that Alberta can have more than one official symbol? What does cabinet plan to do if two groups within one cultural group bring forward competing ideas? Who will decide? Who will be the decision-maker?

Currently all official categories for emblems are debated in the Legislature. Why does this government want to take some of the decision-making out of the Assembly? What's wrong with the current format of debating official emblem categories in the Legislature? Have any other provinces done this before? This is another question.

But, Mr. Speaker, anything that enhances diversity we definitely will support a hundred per cent.

Another thing that the hon. minister just mentioned is that it has to be made in Alberta. There are so many other symbols, maybe controversial, but some communities think it belongs to them, and they want to be recognized just like this. My question is: is the minister going to allow these symbols in the future? As he said, it's open, and we can add lots of other symbols next time. For example, the Sikhs wear the kirpan, the dagger. Some people think that this is religious, but they are saying that it's not offensive to anybody. Maybe for some people it's controversial. So what are we going to say to the community? Some other people use different types of forks. Security-wise maybe some people disagree with those people, but they are connected with those symbols. What are we going to do? I mean, we can debate in this House, but now there's a new tradition that this government is going to decide mostly everything about the symbols behind closed doors. I mean, they will discuss everything in their caucus.

What symbols, for example, for aboriginal people? We cannot forget the contribution they have made to our society. They are great contributors so far. So I'm still confused. In the future if those communities come up with some ideas, they might be controversial. If we keep on making decisions just in your caucus, not in this House – when we make a decision, all the Assembly is answerable to the public. I think this is not right, but otherwise to the idea of enhancing the diversity in either shape, I mean, we have no objection.

I'm really supporting this bill, and I commend the hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture for sponsoring this bill. Whatever questions I asked, if the members think those questions could make some complications in the future, we can discuss that at the next stage. At this moment I don't think anything is objectionable to me, and I urge all the members of this House to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007, is intended to add any and, I hope, many Alberta symbols of distinction to the list of official symbols. These symbols of distinction will join the ranks of our other provincial emblems, which include the armorial bearings, official colours, and our flag; the Alberta tartan and dress tartan; the wild rose, our provincial flower; the lodgepole pine, the provincial tree; petrified wood, the provincial stone; the great horned owl, which I rather like, our provincial bird; bighorn sheep, our provincial mammal; the bull trout, the provincial fish; and rough fescue, the provincial grass. Now, these emblems represent elements of Alberta that are important to us all. They are important because they're symbolic of Alberta's natural and cultural heritage.

The first emblem recognized in Alberta was the shield of arms way back in 1907. Our other emblems were added periodically throughout Alberta's first century, with the last emblem, rough fescue grass, adopted in 2003.

Bill 27 will strengthen our capacity for inclusion. It will encourage all Albertans to participate equally in the social, economic, and cultural life of the province as we head into Alberta's next century. Our actions to amend the legislation so that cultural groups can add their own symbols of distinction will go a long way to inform Albertans about the cultural diversity of our province. It will aid in the efforts to educate the public about the many unique contributions that these diverse groups have made to the province of Alberta. We're looking to immigration to fill a shortfall of skilled workers, so having a culturally rich and diverse province is a major advantage. As the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture is fond of saying, when we attract talented people to our province, we don't want them to think of Alberta as a place where they can work for a few years, make some money, and return home. We want them to stay and raise their families here. We want them to enjoy living here and to make this province, our province, home.

I'm very pleased to support this bill because it represents not only ideas that I have about what an inclusive province means; it also builds Alberta's pride. Albertans are proud of this province and will continue to help promote the diversity that is found in our communities across the province. Bill 27 will allow elected members to grant official recognition of traditionally recognized symbols of distinction. That makes Alberta a better place to live, work, and visit.

Colleagues, please join me in supporting the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there is a five-minute opportunity for questions and comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join in the vigorous debate on Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007. I have a couple of questions and then an observation for the sponsoring member of the bill. I'm wondering what sort of creative controls are in place that support the intentions of this bill. In other words, if a group comes forward with an emblem, a symbol of distinction that they wish to have adopted under this legislation, who decides that it's appropriate or inappropriate, that the colours are correct? What are the criteria that are set in place that support this?

If there are going to be regulations that lay this out, could we see them, please: have them tabled in the House or sent to one of the policy committees? At this point the minister sponsoring the bill must have some idea of how this is all going to work. So how does it work? Is there anything that's deemed out of bounds or off-colour here? Who has the creative control and makes these decisions? What criteria is that based on?

The second thing is: what's being anticipated? Flags? Pins? Heraldic symbols? Buttons? What? There are no criteria being given on what's anticipated as a symbol of distinction. I mean, we're quite good in Alberta at having these gigantic symbols of distinction. You know, the pysanka and the golf club and the baseball bat and all of those huge – I don't know what to call them, Mr. Speaker – tourist attractions and symbols of particular areas or heritages: are they symbols of distinction? Is that what we're going to do, name them symbols of distinction? How does that work?

The third thing is an observation. I take it that this bill is meant in all good faith, but there is just something that kind of is niggling away in the back of my brain about this one. Making the decision exclusive to the government cabinet, that disproportionately affects the members of the opposition and, in fact, the independent members of this House from participating in that decision. It makes it the exclusive playground or the exclusive ability of cabinet – I suppose, supported by caucus – to designate this and cuts out, in effect, the rest of the members of this Assembly.

I know others have raised the question about why it is going behind closed doors to be made as a cabinet decision. I am coming at the same question from a slightly different point of view because what I can see rolling out from this is like the scenario where the lottery cheques are always given away – surprise, surprise – by members of the government caucus, never given away by a member of the opposition caucus.

Well, those groups are in our constituency. In many cases we wrote support letters, but, gosh darn it, we never get called to hand out the cheque. Well, the reason that's given is: oh, it was in the particular member's riding. Yeah. Well, this member has an awful lot of groups that are centralized in her riding, and I've never been contacted to hand out a cheque. As a matter of fact, the government has gone to great lengths to make sure that I didn't know that a group in my constituency was getting a cheque and to have other government members come into my riding to present a cheque to a group that's in my riding.

That's what I can see happening here, that groups from a particular geographic area now get to help their local group designate their particular symbol as a symbol of distinction and get to do all of the pomp and ceremony that goes along with it, but we on the opposition don't. That is what's starting to bother me because I don't really see much changing of feathers over there. I see the same 60 people sitting there that were the group of 62, and now they're the group of 60. So I don't see a lot of changes of colours of feathers here.

What they've tended to do before is make the sort of bestowing of gifts and the bestowing of honours exclusive and done behind closed doors so that they can control it all, and they've cut out the members of the Official Opposition, the third party opposition, and the independent members of the House. That's what I see happening with this bill. So, you know, I'm happy to have symbols of distinction, but I really question why this is going behind closed doors, under the control of cabinet. I think that it's yet something else that's being done to disproportionately affect members of the opposition and independent members.

I guess what I'll close with is the question to the members of the government: would they be as happy with this legislation if and when – and I think it's if – they found themselves sitting on this side of the House after the next election? Are they going to think that this is such a great bill at that time? I'll bet you that they won't.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions or comments.

Seeing none, does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs wish to participate in the debate?

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to be able to join this debate on Bill 27 and therein an amendment. In particular, I would like to speak to the amendment part of the bill. In its primal stage the bill would require any group in Alberta that had a desire to have any insignia formally recognized in the province to actually bring it before this Chamber sponsored by one of the members of the Legislature as a bill. Then this particular piece of legislation would require the diligence of the scrutiny of any bill, as per protocol in this Chamber.

As we all know, in this Legislature our legislative agenda as it is, without such additional bills, is rather busy. Having such requests added to the legislative agenda in the form of a bill would only detract from our ability to consider the bills that we already normally consider in due course. What would happen is that it would require a much more significant and much more thorough research and submission process for such groups that wanted special insignia to be recognized, and in many cases, as experience in most likelihood will show, it will be groups and not-for-profit agencies and other groups that don't have the resources to do so. Also, it would occupy many private members' time from their usual duties in the constituency to sponsor such bills and satisfy the request of the constituents.

Now, the amended form of this bill allows for such groups to circumvent that process – and when I say circumvent, I mean it in a very positive manner – and allow for a much more expedient recognition of such a request through an order in council. For those who perhaps may be viewing this debate, an order in council is simply a consideration of the cabinet to have it discussed and scrutinized at the cabinet table in view of very stringent criteria that are outlined in the bill itself. So it will not be a frivolous decision, but it will be a much more expedient decision.

So what benefits do we have? Well, (a) it will be much easier for Albertans to present a request to this government to have their symbol officially recognized in the province, which will add to our heritage because we often pride ourselves in symbolism affiliated with many organizations, and (b) it will not detract from the time spent on otherwise presented bills in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is an important one. It is important to not only preserve tradition but to create new tradition, to create new insignia and new symbols representing those important aspects and important groups in our society, and this bill will exactly accomplish that. Since the minister is the individual originating this bill, having an Alberta francophonie flag as the initial symbol recognized in this province perhaps would be appropriate in view of this bill and the initial sponsor of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I fully support this bill, and I encourage all members of this Chamber to support this bill as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to have a question or comment under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just rise to make a few comments. The comments I would have are these: I don't have a lot time or energy or desire to go along with any of these kinds of bills, which, in my opinion, tend to pick and choose certain cultures, ethnicities, or religions. The reason that I say this is that when I hearken back to some of our great-great-grandparents that homesteaded in this country and the part of the province that I come from, there were people from eastern Europe, Czechoslovakia, Hungary. There were people from Holland. There were Scots. There were Irishmen, Germans, Danes, Norwegians, Swedes, and not that many Ukrainians, colleague, but it just happened to be in that area of the province at that time.

You know, from my personal experience, my wife's grandparents had come here via Quebec from France, and when they hit the small town that they were homesteading in, they found they were the only French family. Apparently the great-grandpa turned to the family and said: "Nobody else speaks French here. That's the end of it." They made a determination at that time that they'd come to this province to merge in with other ethnicities and religions and become one, become Albertans and Canadians. I think they kept their family pride and their family history and all their unique traits of their own family to themselves.

I think of the best friend that I had as a child growing up, whose family came here from Czechoslovakia, and the only memories and relics that they have of their family history or their heritage are five pieces of crystal. There weren't any government programs to assist them to learn English as a second language. There weren't any government programs to help them assimilate. There was just something called hard work and pride in the new country.

So I think it's dangerous ground to go down because I, for one, would wonder if another ethnic group, whether it was an Irishman, whether it was somebody from Holland or somebody whose family came from Japan, in our constituency would have every bit as much right to want and expect some of these special recognitions. But they don't. They just want to be Albertans and Canadians and get on with their life.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? Seeing none, did the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross wish to participate in the debate?

Mrs. Fritz: No, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

Third Reading

Bill 3
Climate Change and Emissions Management
Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Government House Leader want to move on behalf?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm more than pleased to move Bill 3 for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with great interest once again to speak on Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. Certainly, we have tried to perhaps improve this bill. There's been no lack of trying on our parts. On Tuesday I brought up a number of amendments that centred around giving Bill 3 some teeth in regard to being able to take it away from this idea of intensity targets to absolute reductions in carbon dioxide emissions here in the province of Alberta because, you know, we are in the midst of a turning point, not just in the province of Alberta but around the world. We have to make these tough decisions about the way that we use energy and the way that we produce emissions from that energy.

Certainly, we are in an advantageous position in this province because, of course, we are making tremendous profits at this juncture from our nonrenewable, carbon-based energy, that we have available to us through coal and through oil and natural gas. It has provided wonderful prosperity for our province, but you have to plan ahead because (a) that is a nonrenewable resource, and (b) we are now seeing the negative effects from the carbon dioxide climate change emissions that are resultant from the hydrocarbon technology. What a great time to bridge the way that we use energy in this province and actually use some of the profits that we're making from hydrocarbon to move to a more sustainable, renewable energy system.

So Bill 3, or something like it, with the amendments that I had brought forward, would actually be a good start because, of course, if we are in fact putting hard caps on CO₂ emissions, then we will also collect revenue from that and be able to invest in renewable resources that are going to give us something to work with in the long run.

So just to remind the House, Mr. Speaker, of some of the amendments that I had brought forward, the first one, A1, was to deal with absolute reductions and not intensity reductions. The second amendment was to do with gas sequestration. I think there was some confusion about that, I believe, on the Tuesday. I'm sure there was, you know, or else I would have had it passed perhaps.

The confusion lay in the idea that we were opposing carbon capture and gas sequestration. You know, that's not the case, but certainly, we just were very concerned about investing billions and billions of taxpayers' money on essentially what is an industrial problem. The bottom line is that industry should be paying for their own problems associated with carbon dioxide. In fact, that is the way by which you set up a system to move industry and to move our society away from using as much carbon dioxide or carbon-based emissions.

You know, the sort of money that we're talking about to build essentially an experimental pipeline is $5 billion or more. Imagine if we invested that same money in renewables or in retrofitting people's homes to make them more efficient for heating or in public transit systems or in a whole, wide range of other things that would give us far greater return in (a) carbon dioxide reduction – right? – and (b) improving the quality of life for all Albertans. So instead of building a big pipeline and all the rest of it, we believe that, in fact, we could achieve greater reductions with alternative investments in sustainable energy production.

The third amendment that I brought forward was to do with confidentiality. You know, it's always funny how these are tagged on to so many of these major bills, that we don't get full disclosure of what is going on or where the information is coming from and what decisions are being based on. I think that the amendment that I placed on that confidentiality sections taking out the confidentiality section serves as a reminder of just how far we have to still go in this province in regard to open, transparent government because, you know, information is the essence of transparency and access to information, and of course, once again, in Bill 3 we've found evidence of quite the opposite.

The fourth amendment, that I brought forward on Tuesday, was to do with complying with the arrangements of the Kyoto accord, of which Canada is a signatory and of which most industrialized nations are as well. It's interesting because, you know, people have fought tooth and nail against the international agreement to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. One of the arguments, a completely facetious and irrelevant argument, was: oh well, countries like India and China and perhaps the United States are not signing onto this agreement, so that makes it irrelevant. Well, lo and behold. As we speak, the Chinese government is, in fact, meeting to start the groundwork for China to be part of a Kyoto-type agreement. So, it's just not true that other major nations are going to avoid this. It's inevitable. Certainly, the United States, with the regime change which is imminent, will sign onto a carbon reducing agreement as well.

Simply reminding ourselves that there is an international agreement in place of which we are signatories and then applying it to some carbon dioxide climate change emissions reduction bill that we're passing here seemed to be a no-brainer. I was very shocked and surprised to see that, in fact, there was only limited support from the New Democrat caucus, which is perhaps the progressive voice in here, which is a good thing. It's a good thing that we have some progressive voices in the Legislature in regard to climate change. I think that the population definitely appreciates it. It's a good thing to do.

With those comments then, certainly, the main issues that we have that find Bill 3 unacceptable are (a) it does nothing to achieve actual reductions. Intensity targets allow, in fact, drastic increases in overall emissions. Number two, Bill 3 demonstrates just how far out of touch we are in regard to climate change and how out of touch this Legislature seems to be with the popular opinion of the population in regard to doing something about climate change.

There was an interesting Ipsos-Reid poll that just came out today. Almost 60 per cent of Canadians, in fact, were in favour of the government taking decisive action in regard to climate change, and the same majority believed that it would not harm the economy, which is another very, very poor and sort of scaremongering argument that we hear, but would enhance the economy of not only our province but the country.

So, you know, perhaps we should give the public more credit because, of course, this is ultimately true. If you are decreasing your reliance on carbon-based energy systems, you have plenty of opportunity to in fact increase the quality of life of the population by changing the way we use energy, changing the way that we transport ourselves, and creating a healthier environment for everybody.

Another reason that we oppose Bill 3 is that the carbon trading provisions in the bill are very limited. You have some sort of half-cooked idea of just trading in Alberta. I mean, it's very limited in scope. Certainly, one of the keys to carbon trading is to have an ability to look right across the country and even internationally and selectively to in fact trade with carbon. You know, as long as we can set up a system that can be verified, there's a multibillion dollar industry in carbon trading already going on all around us, and why would we not join that in the interest of carbon dioxide reduction?

Also, this legislation depends almost wholly on the regulations for its implementation, and this (a) makes Bill 3 subject to change without debate and, number two, adds a layer of secrecy and lack of consultation that makes this bill very, very poorly organized.

Finally, Bill 3 is not part of a comprehensive and integrated approach to combatting climate change. It's just one piece. Maybe it's just one piece of the puzzle. Obviously, until you have a realization that you can't be developing all of the tar sands projects at the same time and building, you know, this sort of gold rush mentality, then there's no way that we could ever possibly achieve carbon dioxide reduction. It's just not mathematically possible. So until we, in fact, have a moratorium on new tar sands project approval, then this whole thing is worse than a pipe dream. I would suggest that it's a way to deliberately deceive the public into thinking that we're actually doing something when we're doing quite the opposite. I find that to be the most troubling part of Bill 3. I think that there are ways by which we could salvage it, as I said, through those amendments that I had suggested.

The final thing that I would like to say about it is that at the very least let's try out this new all-party committee system that we have here and move some of the regulatory parts of Bill 3 over to those new all-party committees that we just finished painting and polishing up and are ready to go. What a great way to demonstrate that we are in fact serious about debating these things in a democratic manner and making the very best decision based on the very best data that we can get not just from inside this House but from the general population as well.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will close my comments on Bill 3 in this reading. I certainly look forward to the debate because it's certainly not over yet.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Tougas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and say a few brief words about Bill 3. A few years ago there was a TV commercial, and I believe it was for Fram oil filters. The gist of the commercial was that you could save yourself a little bit of money by buying a cheaper oil filter, but in the end your savings would be wiped out by car problems eventually. The tag line of the commercial featured this mechanic, and he said: you can pay me now, or you can pay me later. I was reminded of that commercial while reading through some of the debate heard in the Legislature on Bill 3.

Now, that old commercial came to mind specifically while reading a report about climate change, that has been cited by a number of members in this Legislature, written by Sir Nicholas Stern. The Stern report recommends that we have to start spending 1 per cent of our gross national product now per year or we're going to be spending 20 per cent of our gross national product in 20 years due to massive dislocation of people, loss of life, and loss of land.

One per cent of our gross domestic product in Alberta would be $2 billion spent annually on carbon reduction technology, carbon reduction incentives in the renewable area, biofuels, energy efficiency technologies, carbon capture and storage. Two billion dollars is what this report suggested is going to be needed if we are going to seriously commit to climate change reduction. Presently we spend no more than $500 million a year on climate change initiatives. If Sir Nicholas Stern is correct, that's not even close to what we should be doing.

There's no doubt at this time that climate change has become, justifiably, the single most important issue of the 21st century. Will Bill 3 address this urgent matter? Not likely. From an Alberta perspective consider what impact climate change could have in Alberta. We will see a reduction in surface water and soil moisture. Mountain and northern regions and the boreal forest will face increasing risk from wildfires, insects, decrease in soil moisture, and changes to the ecosystem. This is not alarmist rhetoric from scientists with a green agenda or the ravings of tree huggers. These worrisome predictions come directly from a government of Alberta document called Facts about Climate Change.

While we support efforts to combat climate change, Mr. Speaker, Bill 3 simply is not enough. We need real reduction in greenhouse gases. When I spoke of Bill 3 last week, I said that we absolutely had to get this bill right. Unfortunately, I don't believe this is the case. The issue is too important for half measures, but that is exactly what we have in front of us today. The government is clearly behind the times of the people of Alberta. As the saying goes: you can pay me now, or you can pay me later.

Thank you.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29(2)(a) are there any comments or questions?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Bill 3 at this stage has been given considerable debate. There have been amendments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder and the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, to just name a few. There's also the general thought that this legislation is a good start on climate change, but it's not good enough. It certainly has some things in it that, I think, are necessary. The $15 a tonne tax charged on emissions over the cap: it's a carbon tax. Is it about time for a carbon tax? We have to do something.

Now, what we do with the money that's collected is very important. In fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View suggested yesterday in an amendment that if things aren't working out, well, we can go from $15 per tonne commencing in 2008 to $20 a tonne commencing in 2010 and $30 per tonne commencing in 2012, and this money could go into a green fund. The number that was discussed earlier in debate, Mr. Speaker, for the amount that would be in this green fund was $175 million. That was the anticipated amount that would be collected. When we look at the general idea of this, it's very sound. The implications of this will be felt for many years in the future; there's no doubt in my mind.

Will we use this money for CO₂ sequestration? Will we use it for research into reducing emissions from coal-fired electricity generation stations? Will we use it for transportation sector research? We could use this money for any number of things, but we have to be very careful. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to be very careful that we do not single out one particular sector of the economy and pick on them for dramatic increases in CO₂ emissions. [interjections] This is causing some fuss, Mr. Speaker, and I will put it away before it causes any more fuss. Thank you. The previous speaker said that it was a Thursday, and he was absolutely right, a Thursday afternoon.

Getting back to Bill 3, we just can't single out one sector of the economy, and that's the energy industry. When we are talking about reducing our CO₂ emissions, we have to talk about changing our ways: how we drive, how we fly, how we purchase our goods, which goods we purchase. Should we look more closely at the way they're manufactured and how they came to this jurisdiction? There are a lot of things that can be done.

I think we better be very careful not just to pick on one sector of the economy, the energy sector, for instance, the oil sands area or electricity generation. Sure, there has been a dramatic increase in CO₂ emissions from those sectors, but as we buy more cars, as we travel faster, that is also responsible for a significant increase in CO₂ emissions. We're building more and more houses further and further away from central areas of our cities, which requires, naturally, more car use. We are not talking about using any of this money for mass transit systems in urban areas. All this is related, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, with Bill 3 I would urge all hon. members to devise solutions to our greenhouse gas emissions. Devise solutions, but let's not pick on one sector of the economy and one sector only.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Again, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) for questions and comments is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if by not picking on one sector of the economy, he means that we disregard particular sectors of the economy which may be responsible for massive increases in CO₂ production. Should we apportion the responsibility according to the amount that's produced and the amount of increase that a sector produces, or should we treat low emitters the same as high emitters?

Mr. MacDonald: No, we should not treat low emitters and high emitters the same. The hon. member would clearly understand that in Bill 3 there are close to 30 per cent of the emitters that are not included at all. In fact, we talked about that at second reading. It included intensive livestock operations. It included some of the petrochemical industry. It included fertilizer plants, places where there was a different energy reaction than combustion. Those, from what I can gather from the hon. Minister of Environment, were part of that group of 30 per cent. What I mean by sectors of the economy: we have to do something with the transportation sector. We have to change how we operate there.

Ms Blakeman: High-speed rail.

Mr. MacDonald: High-speed rail is certainly a very, very good idea, and I talked about that in discussions earlier about investment in mass transit systems. If we are going to collect this carbon tax, what do we use it for? That is one of the reasons why we should consider more rail links. We should consider more mass transit. If we're going to build all these suburbs that are a 45-minute commute from the central core of our cities, we're going to have to come up with something better. That is, hopefully, what we will do.

I don't think we should just pick on the oil sands projects or we should just pick on coal-fired baseload generating stations because we, unfortunately, need what they provide. Now, should we take this money and do research and development into better and more efficient ways they operate and not only reduce the amount of CO₂ emissions but dramatically reduce them to 1990 and below levels? We certainly should, and that's, hopefully, what will happen.

The Deputy Speaker: Others under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there others that wish to participate in the debate on Bill 3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly. I've spoken to this bill in second and in committee, and I want to go on the record again in third. I think partly what's up for debate with this bill is that this is a small step, but is that good enough? You know, can we be incremental with this? Is the glass half full or half empty? To me, this is just not good enough. The glass is half empty. I'm not willing to put my vote behind it to say, "Well, you know, it's better than nothing" or "It's a small step in the right direction." It's way too small a step in the right direction.

You know, we are so far behind what the public is telling us to do, what our own constituents are telling us to do on this, which is: "Take leadership. Make bold moves. Move this in all the directions that it needs to move." My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar was just talking about some of the other sectors that are affected and where we need to do work. We need to be developing alternative energy sources. We need to be working on conservation. We need to be working on an individual level right up to a corporate level.

This bill is not reflecting that. It is not good enough. It's too timid. It's cowardly. It doesn't show leadership. It doesn't take us far enough and fast enough on where we need to be going. The science has clearly outlined what needs to happen here and what's important, and the government is just dithering and is overly cautious and disorganized about an approach to this. It's just not good enough.

My constituents consistently list concern for the environment/greenhouse gases as one of the top three issues in my constituency. I would argue that at this point in time it's probably wrestling with health for the number one issue in my constituency. What I hear from my constituents is: "This doesn't go far enough. This is not good enough. Don't get behind it."

We don't even have to go back to the drawing board. There are an awful lot of good ideas that are out there that have been brought up in debate already. We don't have to go that far back to come up with a much, much better bill. Indeed, when you look at the amendments that were brought forward – some were brought by the ND opposition, and our environment critic, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, had two good amendments as well to try and make the bill more aggressive and more progressive. They were all defeated, so I just think there's a timidness and a disorganization in the approach to this issue by this government that I'm not willing to support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 3, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007. I have addressed this bill previously in the House and indicated that the Alberta New Democrats cannot support this particular bill and outlined that, basically, the reason is that we believe that the emissions intensity approach which is enshrined in this bill is not an honest approach.

It doesn't take into account the fact that the government has indicated that unrestricted economic development which is driven by investment in tar sands is going to be allowed to continue. They're not going to step on the brake, as the Premier has said, notwithstanding the fact that we have severe problems with infrastructure, housing, shortages of new schools, lots of problems with respect to health care and emergency rooms, and not to mention all of the environmental problems, the demands on very, very limited water supplies, particularly in the southern half of the province. The list goes on and on, and this province will not be able to catch up.

But the more pressing long-term problem is the whole question of climate change, which is very real. More and more people are beginning to become alarmed by this, having seen the changes within their own lifespan. Let's not forget that climate change in the world can be a natural phenomenon, but it normally takes place over periods of time of 10,000 years or much more and usually occurs as a result of very small changes in global temperature of one or two degrees Celsius. In fact, we've seen changes within our own lifespans equivalent to that, which means that in terms of the pace of climate change the earth is now moving towards a warmer climate at a blinding rate of speed – a blinding rate of speed – compared to the natural processes that have led to ice ages and the retreat of glaciation and so on and all of those normal types of climate change.

What we're seeing is something that has changed within our own lifespan, which is just the bat of an eye in terms of geological time. So those changes, more and more people are coming to believe, will not just inconvenience us and cause economic damage but may in fact produce life-threatening situations for our children and our grandchildren. More and more people, Mr. Speaker, are concerned about the impact on human society looking forward 50, 100 years, 200 years into the future and are concerned that we will in fact not leave this earth in a habitable form for the future generations of the planet.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, absolutely refuses to take any responsibility for Alberta's contribution to climate change because if it did, it would deal with CO₂ production and other greenhouse gas production in a way that didn't allow economic development at a high rate of speed to shoot up our CO₂ emissions. For example, I want to make a couple of quotes. Toxics Watch has estimated that at a 4 per cent growth rate Alberta greenhouse gas emissions will rise by 66 to 83 per cent above 1990 levels by 2020 even if intensity is reduced by 50 per cent. The Pembina Institute estimates that at the current rate of economic growth the government's plan will allow emissions to rise by 72 per cent above 1990 levels by 2020. We can't let that happen. We owe it to the future generations of this province and of the world – our children, our grandchildren, our great-grandchildren – to do better.

So I would like at this time to introduce an amendment to the bill. I believe the table has that, and would ask that it be distributed. Would you like me to read it now?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. We'll just give the pages a moment to have them circulated, please. Okay, hon. member, you may proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I will move that third reading of Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management

Amendment Act, 2007, be amended by striking out the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 3, Climate Change and Emissions Management Amendment Act, 2007, be not now read a third time because the proposed measures to reduce the intensity of specified gas emissions contained therein combined with rapid oil sands development will allow ongoing, dramatic increases in specified gas emissions and make it impossible to meet the requirements of the Kyoto protocol.

So, Mr. Speaker, just to briefly summarize the rationale for this, we do not believe that this House should pass Bill 3 at the present time, that it should not be given its third reading, because the intensity approach combined with rapid economic development, particularly in Alberta's tar sands, will allow total greenhouse gas emissions in this province to shoot up dramatically. In fact, they will shoot up dramatically, and they will affect the climate, and Alberta is not going to meet its responsibilities to the rest of the world if this bill is approached.

I know that other members across have views on this matter, and I would encourage them to stand up and put their opinions and positions on the record, Mr. Speaker, as we are doing.

It's quite clear that it is unacceptable from the point of view of dealing with climate change to permit increases in the range of 66 to 83 per cent above 1990 levels just by the year 2020. As I've indicated before, Mr. Speaker, the impact of that combined with the failure of the rest of the country under successive Liberal and Conservative governments as well as the failure of the United States and other countries to meet their obligations will in fact produce a disastrous world situation, which most of us will escape because we won't be here. But our children and grandchildren will be here, and they will have to face it. That is unacceptable to me as an Albertan, as a parent, and as a responsible member of this Legislature. So we need to do better.

Hopefully, if this motion is passed, the government will have an opportunity to reconsider its problem, reconsider the issue. I do not deny the complexity and the difficulty of grappling with this particular situation in the context of the economic growth in this province and of the type of economy which we have. It should not be underestimated, and we do not underestimate it, but we have to do better than this.

So, in conclusion, I would urge members to pass the reasoned amendment which the Alberta NDP caucus has put forward and have the government take another look at this situation, review the options, come back with something that's responsible that will support economic growth today but which will also take into account the environmental impacts and the effect of climate change on this planet and on the people who live on it, the animals who live on it, and take a longer term and a more responsible view of the situation. That will conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and support the reasoned amendment that's been put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. This conforms with a number of the visions that the Alberta Liberals have on record for what we see as the direction the province should be going in around climate change, around conservation, around protection of our environment, and also, you know, the consideration that we've tried to direct the Assembly towards regarding our northern cities and what the development is doing to them and some of the issues that it has created. I mean, they are wonderful cities – Grande Prairie, Peace River, Fort McMurray – and terrific people that are living there, and they've had some pretty interesting barriers placed in front of them, additional things that they are having to cope with in their everyday personal and working lives because of the choices that are made by this government. As I say, this does fall in line with the principles that have been set forth by the Alberta Liberals, and I'm happy on our behalf to state our support for it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I appreciate my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood bringing forward this reasoned amendment. As I said in my previous comments, it's almost worse. Well, it's definitely worse to in fact put something out that might give the impression that something is being done when it's business as usual or worse, as I said, a geometric increase in carbon dioxide climate change emissions in the province of Alberta under the proposed provisions of Bill 3. So it's like when someone wants to believe that everything is okay; it's that ostrich sort of mentality. You put your head in the sand and hope for the best. This is the kind of thing that Bill 3 seems to be doing.

We not only have a responsibility in this Legislature to provide regulation and to provide laws that will protect and enhance people and the environment of our province, but we also have an obligation to lead. Leadership sometimes involves difficult decisions, and one of the more difficult decisions that we do have in front of us is how to retool and change the way that we deliver energy here in this province.

So we could come up against a potentially cataclysmic change in the climate based on our reliance on hydrocarbon energy systems, and that's the place where you have to make that fundamental change. When we're in a position to do that, it's exciting but not if we continue to think that business as usual is really the best means by which to govern its elite. And this is a very excellent case in point where, in fact, we do have to make some moderation in the way that we deliver and unfold our energy industry, and we do quite frankly have to touch the brake. There has to be a moratorium on new tar sands development in the province of Alberta, or not only will we increase our carbon dioxide climate change emissions fivefold or sixfold or sevenfold, but we'll also burn our economy out and create a less diversified, very focused on a single-industry economy that is literally eating away at all of the other systems that are in place to build a good and just society.

I'm perhaps piling so much onto Bill 3 here, but that's what it comes down to. It comes down to making a choice as to whether or not we're able to make a change from hydrocarbon-based energy delivery systems to a more sustainable approach. Now, certainly that doesn't preclude the fact that we're going to continue to use our hydrocarbon wealth and continue to use the hydrocarbons that we have available to us as nonrenewable resources in the province of Alberta. What we are saying, though, is that we have to sip those resources more judiciously instead of gulping them down in great quantities like we are doing today. You know, it's a fine thing to have nonrenewable energy resources, but of course by definition they are (a) nonrenewable and (b) are contributing to an unsustainable situation in regard to climate change carbon dioxide emissions. This reasoned amendment is very well worded and very well titled as well as a reasonable thing. It's time that we do face facts and look for ways by which we can change direction.

The whole issue about the way Bill 3 deals with carbon trading is very flawed at best and limited. The way that it deals with offsets and with paying penalties, again, is very flawed and confused. No wonder industry doesn't appreciate this approach. It doesn't seem to have any direction in terms of long-term planning. Like, where are we going to go from $15? Where is the plan for five years after that or five years after that? What's the direction of this whole thing? You know, business and corporations have to plan for that too because it's part of their cost of doing business.

Many progressive businesses in this province have already planned for the inevitability that carbon dioxide climate change emissions have to be dealt with and, you know, have been buying offsets for years and trying to build systems where they can be potentially reducing or diversifying their energy portfolios. It's time for this place, this fine Legislature, where the regulations come from to meet those progressive companies and corporations and, in fact, give them the long-term plan that they deserve. The public demands it, and good business practice, long-term planning demands it. Above all, coming back to my original point, the responsibilities that we have invested in us here at the provincial Legislature of Alberta to provide leadership absolutely demands it as well.

I will not stand idly by while we put something like Bill 3 forward and try to make it look like everything is okay when really it's not. As I said before, sometimes when you do something in a half-measure, you are actually being willfully deceptive to the public, and I find that somewhat objectionable.

Considering as well that we certainly are of sound mind, generally, as far as I can tell, and reasonably intelligent, then I can only presume that there is some hidden guiding hand that is actually making these decisions from behind and giving us a cloudy and confused picture. You don't have to look very much further than who gives what to whom in terms of donations from the oil and gas sector. There seems to be a direct inverse correlation between the strength of environmentalist policy and donations made to political parties by the oil and energy sector. You know, it doesn't take much to draw those two points together.

As I said before, there are lots of progressive corporations that would like to see a strong environmental policy with regard to climate change, but then everybody has to look at their bottom line, including corporations, and the bottom line is that if it's easy and if there's a way by which you can continue to pollute more and create more carbon dioxide, then of course if your business rivals are doing that, you're likely to do that as well.

Again, back here at the Legislature I think that we should hold ourselves to a higher standard and be sure that we're not being influenced unduly by oil and gas donations that are going to perhaps cloud the way by which we create legislation. I would suggest that in the absence of any logical reason, I can presume that there is a strong tainting influence of political pressure based on donations to political parties here that is influencing the construction of Bill 3. So first and probably foremost, that is the reason that I believe that this reasoned amendment, in fact, should be moving forward.

You know, it doesn't preclude that we shouldn't do anything at all. I heard someone mumbling that out there. But let's get back to the drawing table. Let's use these all-party committees that we've now created, that have risen like a phoenix from the ashes of something less democratic, and build something strong, use those all-party committees to build a good, strong bill and a good, strong law that, in fact, assists corporations making the transition to using less hydrocarbon technology, invests in Alberta homeowners and businesses to make them more energy efficient, builds systems for public transportation, invests in renewable energy, which gives you an immediate, exponential boost in your carbon dioxide climate change emission reductions, and invests in the way by which people can actually even produce energy in their own homes.

Net metering is a tremendous success in places where the government invests in its proliferation, in places like Germany and Denmark where people are allowed to produce energy in their own homes or businesses or farms and sell it back onto the grid, right? What a fantastic way to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. People don't even necessarily have to have a means by which they can generate electricity. They could just store it in off-peak hours and then produce it back during peak hours.

There are just no limits to the ways by which we can imaginatively tackle this problem. We have the financial means by which we can tackle this problem. It's just a question of will, and, you know, when we start to look at carbon dioxide climate change emissions in bits and pieces, we realize that it is all of our responsibility.

Again, some members opposite like to talk about how we're just punishing the big corporations and the people driving their cars and heating their houses are getting away scot-free. Well, that's not true because the whole system is integrated together, and of course where the big increases are happening is not in individual domestic consumption but in the big industrial emitters. That's why we focus on them. We don't focus on the poor gentleman who lives in an older home and has trouble heating it with his gas heater but on something like TransAlta and Sundance, which is one of the second or third biggest emitters of carbon dioxide in the whole country and probably one of the largest in North America.

That's the way that you have to do it. You have to grab the bull by the horns and look it in the eye, and that's what we certainly are doing here now. We are putting this reasoned amendment forward to start building the foundation to actually create some meaningful and effective legislation in regard to climate change and emissions management.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate for this evening. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we do now adjourn until 1 p.m. on Monday, April 16.

[Motion carried; at 4:58 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 16, 2007

1:00 p.m.

Date: 07/04/16

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta and its people. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I'm now going to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem, and I would invite all to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you, Mr. Lorieau, for again whipping us all up with that high level of enthusiasm. One year ago we remembered what you did. Sorry that we're down to this provincial Assembly today.

Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I have three introductions today. The first will be a number of students from Mundare. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature 18 visitors from Mundare. They're, of course, accompanied today by their teacher, Andrew Yeo, and Miss Theresa Nelsen. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction. I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 61 guests from Tofield school. They are accompanied today by teacher Mr. Fred Yachimec, who, if you look at the Hansard, has of course been bringing students year in and year out; Mr. Gilles Daigle; student teacher Megan Tooke – I got a chance to meet her today – teacher's assistant Mrs. Glenda Metro; and parent helpers Mrs. Kathleen Perrott and Mrs. Cathy Armstrong. A tremendous group of students, a large group from Tofield. We wish them well and ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. It's a great, great way to start the week, Mr. Speaker.

My third introduction today. I'm happy to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Ed Perlik, Mrs. Helen Zahoda, and Roman and Lorraine Perlik. These special guests are the grandparents and great-aunt and great-uncle respectively of Robyn Peters, one of our hard-working pages. They have come here to watch Robyn in action in the Legislature. I've had the pleasure of knowing Ed for many years. Wonderful to have him and his family in the House, both in the gallery and, of course, on the floor. Something very interesting: Ed has said that the last time he was here, he was here with his social studies class in 1945. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 39 guests from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Students from the Brander Gardens elementary school are here with us again, as they are every year. I've got to tell you that they did not disappoint with their questions again this year. I find grade 6 students have the best and the hardest questions, and as I say, I was not disappointed again this year by the quality of the questions that they raised.

They are accompanied today by Mme Natalie Gago-Esteves, who has been with us at least, I think, seven years in a row now for me; Miss Alissa Sept; teacher's aide Mrs. Rita Adams; student teacher Mrs. Sabrina Haque; and parent Mrs. Susan Thompson. Of special note, my special assistant Sean Yam was a student at Brander elementary school and had Mrs. Natalie Gago-Esteves as a teacher. He remembers her as being a passionate educator, and he remembers her fondly. He was very pleased to be able to be reunited today when we were taking pictures. I'd like to ask all of the students and the adult accompaniment to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a really delightful woman that it's been my great pleasure to work with over the past couple of years. Cheryl Williams is graduating now from the U of A with a bachelor of arts in the history of art, design, and visual culture. She worked in my constituency office in the summer of 2005, and then she came back to volunteer in the office through this last school year, from September of '06 through until now. She will be returning to the U of A in 2008 to pursue a master of arts in the history of Alberta mountain culture. She's really been a fun, creative, committed woman to work with. I'd like you to please join me in welcoming her. With her today is my fabulous constituency manager, Sarah Crummy. Sarah serves me and the people of Edmonton-Centre with great, good humour and compassion and efficiency. Please welcome them all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Cyndi Deloyer, executive director of Fort McMurray Family Crisis Society. I'd like to ask Cyndi to rise and please receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly three individuals on strike at the Palace Casino. They are Elaine French, Kristina Ratkovic, and Sharlene Pattison. These workers are here on day 220 of this strike, which could have been averted if there were fair labour laws in place to protect Alberta workers. Instead, they are here today to bring attention to their workplace situation after more than seven months on the picket line. Elaine French has been working in the slots department of the Palace Casino for the past three years. Sharlene Pattison is a bartender at the Palace Casino and has been there four years. Sharlene hails from B.C. and came to Edmonton in search of work, as many people do across Canada. Kristina Ratkovic has been at the Palace Casino since 2005 and is a server. They're joined today by UFCW local 401 representative Christine McMeckan. I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of the child care sector. The Alberta Child Care Network Association provides a forum for sharing information between the child care community and government. It endorses and promotes quality child care on behalf of children and families, supports early childhood training and education, and promotes public awareness and education about child care. Earlier today I announced a new 1 and a half million dollar bursary that will help child care providers attract and retain staff and help staff in preschool and out of school child care programs to continue their education.

As well as helping to support and attract staff, the bursary program will enhance the sector's capacity in dealing with operational challenges. The Alberta Child Care Network Association was a tremendous help in the development of the bursary program. The association will be responsible for developing eligibility criteria, accepting and assessing application forms, and distributing funding to successful applicants. Their great work and dedication to the child care industry is a valuable contribution to the future of Alberta's children.

I now ask the following members of the Alberta Child Care Network to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Diane McKean, Traudi Kelm, Susan Elson, Deirdre Leighton, and Dr. Sherrill Brown, and accompanying them, I see Lynn Jerchel from Children's Services. Please join me in thanking them and welcoming them.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

National Soil Conservation Week

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week, April 15 to 21, is National Soil Conservation Week. Having worked the land as a farmer myself, I'm proud to note that Albertans are leaders in conserving our land and our soil. In fact, we're the only province to have legislation specifically designed to protect this important resource. However, it's what our producers are doing in the field every single day that really demonstrates how Albertans are dedicated to conserving our soil for future generations. Our farmers and growers are using what we call beneficial management practices to combine productivity with conservation. For example, nearly two-thirds of our province's cropland is now being direct-seeded to reduce soil erosion and improve the richness of our soil, making it more fertile and moist. Soil conservation also supports rangeland and woodlot production and is important in maintaining other resources such as water, air, and wildlife habitat.

Mr. Speaker, advancing our knowledge will be key to further improvements. Fortunately, Alberta already has a comprehensive soil monitoring program. This program is unique to North America and possibly world-wide because our 45 monitoring sites fully represent the various topography of our agricultural landscape. For 10 consecutive years we've been able to track and assess changes and the cumulative effects that agriculture management has had on our soil. Additionally, this program will help examine other agricultural and soil-related activities, including the implication and impact of climate change. Furthermore, by sharing the data from these sites with academic institutions across Canada, we're providing valuable learning opportunities for students.

Mr. Speaker, the success of our agricultural sector, food quality, and a healthy environment are all connected to soil conservation. As we recognize April 15 to 21 as National Soil Conservation Week, it's important that we also acknowledge and thank our producers for being leaders in the agricultural industry and faithful stewards of the land.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Today marks a very important day: Holocaust Memorial Day, or Yom ha-Shoah. I invite the Legislature and all Albertans to take a moment of reflection as we remember the price the world paid as a result of the senseless and systematic persecution of 6 million people of the Jewish faith during the Second World War. In the words of Pastor Martin Niemoller:

First they came for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Finally, they came for me . . . but there was no one left to speak up.

Yom ha-Shoah reminds the world of the atrocities of the Holocaust as well as the massacre of millions of others during acts of genocide throughout history, Mr. Speaker. Every day we must be vigilant in our defence of human rights. I urge all Albertans to actively promote acceptance of all people and to protect the rights which uphold the way of life in this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Volunteerism

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. From April 15 to 21 we will be recognizing the contribution volunteers make to the welfare of our province. This year's theme is Volunteers Grow Community. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the volunteers on behalf of our caucus and, indeed, everyone in the Legislature. Alberta Liberals place a high value on volunteers' time and effort.

Volunteers donate their time in agencies that provide critical services to the residents of Alberta: youth, family, social support, recreational activities, safety, education, wellness, disease support, to name a few, and many others which contribute to the improvement of Albertans' quality of life, like arts and culture.

Many of these organizations are contracted by the government to provide essential services to the citizens of Alberta. They perform these services with repressively small budgets, spending a great deal of their human resources, paid and volunteer, on fundraising to subsidize the government funding of those very services. Few are in a financial position to react to any hardship or emergency that they may encounter.

Rising utility costs and the decreased availability of office space are huge concerns. Recruiting and retaining qualified staff without being able to offer competitive salaries is leading to higher turnover rates, which is often catastrophic for organizations that operate with few paid staff. It is critical that voluntary organizations get the financial support they need to provide the services Albertans require.

Running a voluntary-based organization is not free. These volunteers deserve our admiration and our thanks, but they also deserve reasonable funding support for their organizations.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ford World Men's Curling Championship

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to acknowledge the 2007 Ford World Men's Curling Championship that was held last week right here in Edmonton at Rexall Place and was attended by our Premier, our minister responsible for sports from Dunvegan-Central Peace, myself, and others. The success of this great event resulted because of many outstanding individuals, beginning with an extraordinary host committee that included president Jackie-Rae Greening, Bonnie Lopushinsky, Ron McGowan, Kris Sakowsky, Tracy Telford, Terry Symyrozum, Katherine Huising, our Northlands Park liaison Leanne Smoliak, and many other volunteers who worked tirelessly in preparing for these special games.

It was great to watch an international tournament that involved teams from Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Scotland, Switzerland, the U.S.A., and for the first time the crowd-pleasers and heart-stealers, Korea. Congratulations go to our winning gold medallists from Ontario, skipped by Glenn Howard, to the silver medallists from Germany, skipped by Andy Kapp, and to the bronze medallists from the U.S.A., skipped by Todd Birr.

Additional thanks go out to the sponsors of the 2007 Ford World Men's Curling Championship and to the many businesses from Edmonton and elsewhere in Alberta that contributed.

Our final thanks must go out once again to the people of Edmonton and area, who demonstrated that our capital city is truly a world-class host. This championship set a world record for participation, with more than 10,000 spectators taking in last Sunday's final, thus bringing the total attendance for the nine days to a remarkable 184,970 spectators, a record for any Ford-sponsored event and a world record for a men's-only curling event.

Thank you and congratulations to all the volunteers, the sponsors, the fans, and the athletes who worked so hard to ensure the success of this international curling event.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Sustainability of Social Programs

Mrs. Mather: Thank you. I understand that a majority of businesses that go under in the first two years fail not because of market or management but due to undercapitalization, and in a different realm I understand that most of the public and not-for-profit social programs that fail do so because of a lack of political will to see them through to a point of sustainability. What I want to do today, Mr. Speaker, is create an awareness of the crisis of human capital. We've kept these overlapping truths in separate compartments of our minds, and it's time to bring them together.

We have a province that excels globally in the raising of financial capital and is undercapitalized in the social and human domains. I'm referring not only to our cash investment in these areas but to the attitudes that shape our priorities. For years we have talked of people as human resources, resources we have not renewed, have allowed to burn out and be depleted. We have provided minimal support to those who chose to go into nurturing professions: teaching, nursing, caregiving, and social work. We have considered these soft career choices in comparison to those who work with hardware, heavy equipment, and finance. At best we applaud their choices with a bland, "That's nice." At worst we put them on the chopping block for budget cuts and clawbacks.

1:20

Mr. Speaker, we need to bring undercapitalization here into balance with our overinvestment in the oil sands and construction industries, in the words of the hon. Premier, to deal with the pressures created by economic growth. We will do this not only by providing sustainable funding to these areas but by restoring a sense of responsibility for each other, the belief that we are our brothers' and sisters' keepers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Kodiaks Hockey Team

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the Camrose Kodiaks, the new Alberta champions of the 16-team Alberta Junior Hockey League. Last night the Kodiaks defeated the Fort Saskatchewan Traders in the sixth game of a seven-game series in front of a capacity hometown crowd at the Max McLean Arena. The 2007 championship is a nice 10-year anniversary celebration for the Kodiaks and their owners, the Camrose Sport Development Society.

In their 10-year history the Kodiaks have won four Alberta Junior Hockey League championships out of six times in the final playoff series, three B.C./Alberta Doyle Cup wins, national junior hockey silver medals in 2003 and 2005, and the Royal Bank national junior hockey championship in 2001.

The Kodiaks now advance to the Alberta/B.C. championship and if successful will represent our two provinces in the Royal Bank Canadian championship to be held in Prince George, British Columbia, in May.

Nostalgia was also in the air last night. The Kodiaks played their last game of Alberta junior league hockey in the Max McLean Arena and will move into the new 3,000-seat Camrose sport development centre next year, and the Fort Saskatchewan Traders played their last game as a Fort Saskatchewan team as they are moving to St. Albert next year. They are to be congratulated for a long history in Fort Saskatchewan and especially for their silver medals this year.

I want to congratulate the Kodiaks, the players and their coaches – Boris Rybalka, Doug Fleck, and Miles Walsh – the management and their owners, the Camrose Sport Development Society, on another very successful year. I ask all members to warmly congratulate the Kodiaks, and I wish them all the best on the road to the national championships.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, three days were mentioned already today in the Assembly: Holocaust Memorial Day, Yom ha-Shoah, yesterday; National Volunteer Week, April 15 to 21; and National Soil Conservation Week, April 15 to 21.

There are a number of other weeks and days that I'll just draw to all members' attention. April 16 to April 22 is International Astronomy Week. April 17 is World Hemophilia Day. April 17 is Equality Day in Canada. April 20 to April 22 is Global Youth Service Day. April 21 is Law Day. April 21 is also International Astronomy Day. Earth Day is April 22.

Administrative Professionals Week is April 22 to April 28 as is National Immunization Awareness Week as is National Medical Laboratory Professionals Week as is National Organ and Tissue

Donor Awareness Week. April 22 to May 24 is National Physiotherapy Month. April 23 is St. George's Day as it is World Book and Copyright Day as it is part of Global Action Week, which goes from April 23 to April 29. April 23 to April 29 is also Global Road Safety Week. April 25 is Administrative Professionals Day. April 26 is World Intellectual Property Day. April 28 is National Day of Mourning. April 29 is International Dance Day, and April 29 to May 5 is Education Week.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition of 73 names, signatures, and addresses of constituents of Drayton Valley-Calmar and area who are urging the government to introduce a bill to create a buffer zone of at least one mile from any major water body and thus prohibit approvals of confined feeding operations within this buffer zone to "protect and preserve Alberta's fresh water sources."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table another 78 signatures from Albertans from all over the place but particularly from Edmonton, Gibbons, and St. Albert urging the government to ensure that the remuneration paid to employees working with people with disabilities is even across the sector and to ensure that they're fairly compensated to be able to retain them, to also improve their access to professional development opportunities, and to "introduce province-wide service and outcomes-focused level-of-care standards."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head:

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table today for the information of the Legislative Assembly three letters. As chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee I wrote on March 22, 2007, to both Ms Sheila Weatherill, president and chief executive officer of Capital health, and Mr. Jack Davis, president and chief executive officer of the Calgary health region, to attend a Public Accounts meeting to be held on Wednesday, September 12, 2007. I would like to table these two letters.

I would like to table a response that I was delighted to receive on March 29, 2007, from the Calgary regional health authority indicating acknowledgement of the letter from March 22, and it states in here that the committee can expect to see the Calgary regional health authority in September. To date we have not heard from the Capital health authority, and I anxiously await that letter.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter representing the Marie Lake protection society expressing grave concerns about the development in the Marie Lake area.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a report called A Crisis of Human Capital, talking about the issue of human capital in the children's services sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Backs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and present some letters on behalf of constituents in Edmonton-Manning calling on this Legislative Assembly to support that the accused killer of Joshua John Hunt be sentenced and tried as an adult "due to the nature of this crime, his past criminal history and that he is so close to the age of 18 years."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Elsalhy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table the requisite number of copies of two sheets of paper submitted by Mr. Ted Klimosko, who describes himself as one of those Albertans hurt by the Alberta advantage and one who is ready to leave the province. The first document shows a purchase contract for a condo unit clearly showing him having bought the unit, that it was his basically. The second document shows that clause titled Closing and Completion Date, which states that should the seller not be able to complete the unit, they can just simply refund the money and take possession back and they can sell it to someone else. He thinks that this is not only an inconvenience, but the fact is that he lost money. He agrees that this province needs a consumer advocate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege today to table the prerequisite copies of four annual reports: the report of the Alberta Association of Registered Occupational Therapists for 2005-2006, the Public Health Appeal Board for 2006, the Alberta College of Social Workers for 2006, and the College of Dental Technologists of Alberta for 2005-2006.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. R. Miller: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon, the first being a letter dated March 30 from a constituent, Azra Ahmad, a new immigrant to Canada from Bangladesh, a single parent, who discusses her difficulty in finding and maintaining affordable housing for herself and her nine-year-old son.

The second, Mr. Speaker, comes as a result of myself attending with several colleagues from this Legislature the labour appreciation night on Saturday evening at the Shaw Conference Centre at which the Jim Shewchuk award was presented. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of the Shewchuk award program outlining this year's winner, Maureen Werlin, a member of the Canadian professional employees international union who has spent the previous 17 years working with the Alberta Federation of Labour and has done an awful lot, in fact an absolutely impressive amount of work with the Edmonton Epilepsy Association.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Knight, Minister of Energy, a document entitled Royalty Review 2006: List of Consultant Studies and Software.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Regional Municipal Planning and Development

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The social, environmental, and economic challenges facing Alberta's communities do not respect municipal boundaries. Take Strathcona county: a wall of new upgraders on one side, a potential 100 square mile coal strip mine on another, and the proposal for the continent's largest landfill, taking trainloads of out-of-province garbage, on another side. Yet the people of Strathcona county have little to no say in these developments because they're in different counties. To the Premier: will the Premier admit that the people of Strathcona county should have a right to be heard on the future direction of development in this region?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are processes in place when various developers are putting forward proposals for development in municipalities, and adjoining municipalities also have an opportunity to comment on applications that are made. But this is one area that we recognize as a priority for the government, and that is land-use planning, better co-operation, better communication amongst and between municipalities, and we're getting on with the job.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Edmonton provides many services for residents outside its boundaries, from transportation and recreation to social services. The city of Edmonton bears additional costs because it's the hub of this region. Edmonton's development is directly impacted by decisions of other municipalities. For example, land targeted for a hospital in Strathcona county could conflict with land that is proposed for heavy industry development in Edmonton. To the Premier: what is this government prepared to do to fix regional planning so that Edmonton and its neighbours can work together on future growth?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when I served in two previous capacities, as minister of infrastructure and minister of transportation, I worked with the 22 municipalities in putting together long-term transportation plans. That has really moved this whole area very positively in terms of some major construction of large, very important roadways to us, to the whole area. We're continuing to work on other areas in terms of further development in the province, in the capital region, and how we can co-operate further. Although as elected officials every person has their own opinions, which they bring to the meeting, they are working in a very positive direction.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The lack of requirements for municipalities to plan on a regional basis has led to conflicts between neighbouring municipalities across the province. The Alberta Capital Region Alliance is just one example of regional planning that has broken down, leaving the future of the Edmonton region in question. To the Premier: is it still fundamentally the position of this government that regional planning is hands off, or will the Premier consider supporting a forthcoming Alberta Liberal bill that will make regional planning mandatory?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before in the House, we're a little further ahead of where the Liberals are in this particular area. The minister responsible for municipal affairs will be coming forward with the kinds of discussions he's had with the municipal leaders finally after – what? – five years of discussion. All AUMA, AAMD and C, and the two big city mayors have agreed on the municipal sustainability report. That report is being vetted through the various processes, and there will be further information to follow.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On what is perhaps the biggest single issue this government will face, the review of the royalty regime, this government flat out stumbles. It appointed someone with a multimillion dollar conflict of interest, a former VP of Shell Canada, to the panel. To the Premier. The head of Shell Canada has written to the Premier explaining that the current royalty framework provides Albertans with a, quote, fair return to the province's natural resources. End quote. What assurances beyond some vague oath can the Premier provide that the views of Shell Canada, which opposes any changes to royalties, are not being embedded in the panel and this government by the panel member who still has a multimillion dollar stake in that company?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the administrative portion I'll ask the minister to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would let the Legislative Assembly know that prior to the attendance of any meeting Mr. Sam Spanglet, who sits on this committee, sold his shares, sold his stock options in Shell Canada.

Dr. Taft: Well done. Well done.

The Premier's lobbyist bill, which is a belated half-step full of loopholes, defines a lobbyist as someone paid to do their work, yet we had an individual appointed to this panel who is clearly in a conflict of interest. Will the Premier admit that there is nothing preventing this kind of incident from occurring again under the lobbying bill that he is proposing?

The Speaker: Well, the Lobbyists Act is currently before a committee of the House. All hon. members have ample opportunity to participate then as part of the debate. Perhaps the hon. leader will proceed to the third aspect of this question.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we brought forward the patronage contracts awarded to defeated Tory MLA Bob Maskell, the Premier claimed it was a problem of perception, stating that "under my leadership perception of this sort will not happen." However, the appointment of this individual to the Royalty Review Panel raises serious problems of perception. From cabinet selection to leadership fundraising to the Balzac deal to the Vegreville health crisis the Premier explains it all away by saying that it's not what it looks to be. To the Premier: does the Premier agree that these issues are serious issues of perception that should not have been allowed to develop under his government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I said last week in the House and the week before that this government has moved further than any other government in terms of openness and transparency. When I say openness and transparency, I mean it. When the issues were raised last week in the House with respect to a contract by a previous member, an MLA, there were some questions raised, and I'll make sure that we conduct a full internal audit of the billings and make that information public.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Affordable Housing

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's a crisis in Alberta right now. Many Albertans cannot afford a home. The Alberta Liberals have a basic principle when it comes to housing: everyone needs a home. Many Albertans are facing massive rental increases that are forcing them out of their homes. This is affecting seniors, low-income and middle-income earners, students, people on AISH. It's a crisis, but this government is failing to act. To the Premier: will this government immediately bring in a one-year rent increase regulation as the Alberta Liberal housing policy recommends in order to protect renters?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has been recognized.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I think there's a disagreement on the other side of the House in terms of whose idea it is.

All I know is that the minister responsible for housing is moving the report through the process. We will be announcing recommendations with respect to the report, asking, of course, not only the federal government and the municipalities to work closer together with the private sector, including the province of Alberta.

Dr. Taft: Well, massive rent spikes are just one symptom of the housing problems facing Albertans. In addition, condominium conversions are seriously eroding the available supply of rental units. Some landlords want to convert their apartments to condominiums with no regard for the renters who cannot afford a condominium. This practice is putting people out on the street with no place to go. Again to the Premier: will the Premier take the advice offered in the Alberta Liberal affordable housing policy and declare a two-year moratorium on condo conversions, except for those from developers who will replace lost rentals with new units?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question was raised, of course, on a policy issue by the third party, I believe by the leader of the third party. We said that those recommendations, through the question that the hon. leader raised, will be some of the discussions that we will have around the caucus table to build the recommendations and options in terms of the very critical area with respect to housing.

Mr. Speaker, yes, there is an issue in terms of available housing. But, you know, more and more Canadians outside of Alberta insist on moving to the province because it's the only province where jobs are available, and that's why they're coming here.

Dr. Taft: One of the impediments facing renters is that even if they find a home they can afford, they do not have the financial means for the damage deposit and first month's rent. This initial cash outlay is a big impediment to the working homeless and to low-income people in search of affordable homes. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: will this government follow the lead of the Alberta Liberal affordable housing strategy and implement a microcredit for low-income earners to cover the cost of the security deposit and first month's rent? Everybody needs a home.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to reaffirm that the housing task force has made a report, and we are looking at that report. Some of the issues are because of the growth factor that is involved in this province. Those are some of the challenges: making sure that people that move to Alberta or that people that are looking for their first home or that are able to rent have that opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Emergency Hospital Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Uncontrolled growth and this government's long history of terrible planning are creating problems across the province, from housing to long-term care to the environment, but the crisis that hits closest to home for most Albertans is our health care system. A report being considered today by Edmonton city council shows that ambulance red alerts in Edmonton were 15 times higher in February 2007 than they were just one year earlier. Just to be clear: a red alert means there are no ambulances. So if you have a heart attack or a car accident, there's no ambulance. My question is to the Premier. What is he going to do, and what is he going to tell those Edmontonians and other people in Alberta who don't have an ambulance when they need one?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health has of course taken steps in this particular area, and I'll ask him to answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe a red alert actually is when there's a lack of capacity at the emergency rather than a lack of ambulance to respond. But I can tell the House that I've met with both the Capital health authority and the Calgary regional health authority on the issue of emergency wait times and the wait time of ambulances at emergency, and both of those major regional health authorities are moving to put in place matters to deal with them. In the Capital region they've put in place the full-capacity protocol, which is not an answer in itself, but it's a good interim step.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister is trying to take credit for the full-capacity protocol, which was developed by the health region, when he should be taking the blame for this government's lack of planning and investment in our health care system. When will this minister accept responsibility for the ongoing crisis in our health care system as evidenced by the increased emergency room wait times and rampant red alerts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not trying to take credit for the full-capacity protocol. In fact, the credit for the full-capacity protocol goes to the emergency doctors themselves. Dr. Raj Sherman, who is head of the emergency doctors, was talking to the health authorities and to people in government about the implementation of that. Thankfully, Capital health authority agreed early in February to start implementing it, and it's already showing promising results.

With respect to taking responsibility for the other issues in health, of course that's my job each and every day.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, maybe less talk and more action would be in order.

There has been a steady increase in the number of precious minutes paramedics spend waiting to transfer their patients. It's gone from 45 minutes a year ago to 63 minutes on average so far this year. That 18 minutes can literally be a lifetime for someone waiting for a paramedic. What action is this Premier taking to get acute care and emergency room capacity caught up after years of population growth and Conservative neglect?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of new beds coming on stream. There's a considerable amount of reinvestment in infrastructure. That's on the expenditure side. But it's about time we also looked at how we can reduce the number of visits to emergency rooms, and that is reducing the number of vehicle collisions in this province, ensuring that Albertans live a much healthier lifestyle, don't get involved in those situations – of course, these incidents come forward with people on ATVs. We just lost another young person the other day. All of these contribute to the many visits to emergency. So, yes, spend more money, but see how we can reduce the number of visits as well through more responsibility.

Cardston-Taber-Warner Constituency Issues

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipal governments are struggling more and more each day with the fiscal imbalance in funding and regulations, that make it costly and impractical to do what is needed. I would like to address three constituents' problems today. First, the town of Taber needs a new water treatment plant. They have applied to CAMRIF for funding. No news, though. They have tenders out that are due in May, but without funding and the approval of the government they are hooped, and there will be a delay and a likely cost for taxpayers in Taber. To the Premier: will this government commit to working with Taber to resolve the problem before the end of May?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, coming forward on Thursday, of course, will be our budget. That will outline the plan for the year in terms of infrastructure, both water and sewage treatment, critical infrastructure to municipalities. We are facing those issues in terms of capacity to find people to build all of the infrastructure that's necessary, but in this particular program that the hon. member mentioned, it's a federal/provincial program, so both levels of government have to agree on that particular project.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: They need an answer, though, to deal with the tenders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The border village of Coutts has been fenced off. This is a huge economic barrier for the town. We don't even have a fence like this for our border between much of Canada and the U.S. Travellers are forced to walk over eight minutes versus one minute the old way and sometimes in minus 40 weather. This fence should not have been built in the first place, and now this government hides behind safety regulations and says that it's not safe for adults to cross the road in a 20-kilometre-an-hour speed zone. All they have been asking for is a crosswalk and a gate. Two more years of studies and excuses are unacceptable to the people of Coutts and their visitors. To this Premier: what is this government going to do to address this problem now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is referring to a joint federal/provincial project on the border crossing. I know that there were some issues in terms of the planning. That was a few years ago. I remember that file a bit, but it was a safety issue. It's also an issue that we're negotiating with the federal government on because they're responsible for the border crossing, but we'll check into it and get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, the crosswalk and the gate are provincial.

For the last 30 years the Snake River ranch east of Cardston has been fighting a losing battle with the St. Mary River as this government has adopted the policy that a pound of cure is better than ounce of prevention. Last fall the transportation department was finally prepared to do something about the washing out of the bridge and the road, only to be stopped by the DFO and Alberta Environment, and it continues to be a problem being bounced back and forth between federal and provincial. Will this government act now and save this road, the bridge, and the family's connection to the world before the next flood?

Mr. Stelmach: Back to the first question, Mr. Speaker. Even though part of the funding was provincial, the overall development, the planning, was both federal and provincial.

With respect to this issue this is something that we face, the Snake River, on a regular basis. There are actually two federal environmental authorities. One is the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and, of course, under navigable waters as well. So you always have to work with two authorities. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, even to replace a simple culvert on a country road – and that happened in your constituency – you know how long it took for us to get approval. We're working with the federal government to try to expedite it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Women's Shelters

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second-stage housing is essential to ensure that women and children fleeing domestic abuse have somewhere to go after the immediate crisis has passed. Despite this fact, the government has no clear funding program for second-stage housing in Alberta. Money announced for women's shelters last week is greatly needed and appreciated but will not address this particular issue. To the Minister of Children's Services: when will the government commit to providing ongoing and sustainable funding for second-stage housing across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell the House that the women's shelter report was publicly released last week and is available to everyone on the website. A couple of days ago I met for several hours with women's shelters stakeholders to go through the recommendations. I am happy to note – and I'm glad, actually, that the hon. member brought this up – that one of the recommendations is that government work with community partners to “develop affordable and transitional housing” as well as “conduct a cross jurisdictional analysis to assess the costs and effectiveness.” Clearly, second-stage housing was a huge part of our discussions and certainly something that we'll be looking at immediately.

Thank you.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Research suggests that for every crisis bed available, two to three second-stage transitional beds are needed, yet in Alberta this number is reversed. Statistics show that while there are 692 crisis beds available to those in need, there are only 297 second-stage beds. To the Minister of Children's Services: why has the government failed to address the shortage of second-stage beds in this province despite their great importance in disrupting the cycle of abuse?

Ms Tarchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd say again from our discussions last week that second-stage housing is a priority and is something that we will be looking at. I will be moving forward with stakeholders on this issue.

Mrs. Mather: In my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods and across Alberta the shortage of affordable housing is critical. It was recently reported that 75 per cent of women who returned to abusive partners after receiving services cited lack of affordable housing as the main reason, a 50 per cent increase from 2005. It is clear that affordable housing is a crucial part of any strategy to address family violence. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing: when will this government take action to ensure that women and children affected by domestic violence can find the affordable housing they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we have said previously, we acknowledge the concern over affordable housing in Alberta. We are presently going through the process. I do believe that the budget is in three days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Land-use Development Framework

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're hearing a lot these days about land and water pressures. These pressures are continuing after a number of years of increased activity on the land. We've also heard about plans for developing a land-use framework to deal with those activities. My question is to the Premier. What is the status of the land-use development framework?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the land-use development framework agreement has of course been mandated to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The consultations have begun. This is going to be a task which is going to require a fair amount of consultation, as we heard today in the House, in terms of the differences amongst municipalities, competing interests of forestry, agriculture, urban sprawl. We're going to work very diligently in this area because a good land-use agreement is good for the province of Alberta. There are 3.3 million people in Alberta today. What is this province going to look like with 4 million people in a number of years?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the land-use framework intended to do?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The work already done on the land-use framework has given us the vision of the framework: the principles and the desired outcomes. It's a good starting point. Going forward, this framework will develop an overarching policy structure. It will give provincial-level guidance to land-use planning and management. This framework will give us the approach that we can use to balance the competing and multiple uses that occur on both private and public lands. I believe that the framework will address a number of different issues, including regional planning. There's a certain overlap there with the minister of municipal affairs to facilitate greater co-operation and co-ordination between towns and cities. It'll address the issue of Crown lands and also private lands.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: Alberta has an extensive set of regulations already in place, so why do we need a land-use framework now?

Dr. Morton: It's true, Mr. Speaker, that our land-use management process in the past has served us well. But times have changed. We have to update it to reflect the new economic realities of Alberta. That reality is one of hypergrowth both in the economy and our population. It is putting unprecedented pressure on our lands, both public and private. You often see competing demands on the same piece of land for agriculture, forestry, oil and gas and industrial development, housing, recreation, and conservation. We have to rationalize those activities on the land. I expect that the land-use framework will ensure that the quality of life that we enjoy today will be there for generations to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

School Infrastructure in Calgary

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the Minister of Education sows P3 seeds across the province, schools are falling apart in Calgary. Last week the roof of Ernest Manning high school proved that it was no match for the spring thaw, and now repairs to the gym floor are at risk. Will this government commit to providing enough funding to ensure that students in this school will not have to skip basketball games, dodge buckets, or even change schools to accommodate this government's inadequate financial support? Mr. Minister, help us, please.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, last year in the budget the provincial government increased the funding for infrastructure and maintenance from $48 million annually to $200 million, a fourfold increase. That allowed the Calgary board of education – and I happened to meet with the Calgary board of education on Friday – to fix some 49 roofs of schools in Calgary. We recognize that there's still more to be done, and that's why we're bringing a budget forward later this week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ernest Manning is one of the many schools in the Calgary public system that has a roof in serious need of repair or even replacement. Marlborough school just got its students back to class a month ago, a year after it was closed due to fears that the roof could collapse. Mr. Minister, how many schools have to reach a crisis before the government provides the level of funding needed to protect Alberta's investment in our schools across the province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, appropriately so, we provide the funds to school boards, and school boards have their priorities as to what they spend their funds on. The Ernest Manning roof is due to be fixed this summer, so there will be funds for that school. It's on the list to be repaired this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Comments made by some of the members opposite suggest that the government is happy to blame school boards and even individual administrators for problems created by years of underfunding and neglect. The reality is that the Calgary board of education's $466 million deferred maintenance backlog makes it very difficult to respond to emerging maintenance problems. Will this government stop giving school boards a starvation diet and start providing the money needed to keep our Alberta schools structurally sound and able to equip students to go to school?

Mr. Liepert: I'll repeat once more: we increased the funding for infrastructure and maintenance fourfold in last year's budget. We have a budget coming this week that will deal with infrastructure and maintenance.

One of the things that this government is looking at is some alternative ways of financing schools. One of those alternative ways is modernization using alternative financing, whereby the maintenance is looked after for some 25 years. Now, I know that the hon. members there don't like to look at other ways of solving problems, but this government is going to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Registries Database Access

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Police officers report to me that often those who face high insurance premiums resulting from poor driving records or impaired driving convictions purchase insurance for only one day to obtain a pink card, which then states that they are insured for a whole year. The Insurance Bureau of Canada and individual underwriters are unwilling to tie themselves into the Alberta Registries database, which would allow police officers to verify the validity of the insurance. My first question to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security: would having access to this information indeed assist our police officers on the road?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the information would be very helpful to get these lawbreakers off the road. I want to say that last year this government announced plans to develop a hundred million dollar computer system that will be accessible to all Alberta peace officers. This system will provide officers on the front line with a wide array of information that could and, hopefully, will include a driver's abstract and whether or not they are insured.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Service Alberta. Since insurance companies benefit from not submitting this information to government as bad drivers are not desirable clients for them, why wouldn't the minister compel the insurance industry to share their information with our government and help us catch uninsured drivers?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, Service Alberta looks after the registries of vehicles and the information around drivers' licences. In fact, when you get your licence plate, you're only required to present a snapshot of that day, a pink slip. In no way is Alberta Registries able to verify that is even still valid. So the Solicitor General has suggested a system that the police agencies may use, and that might be the appropriate tool, but the integrity and the security of the registry system would not be served in Alberta's best interests to be open to the insurance companies.

Mr. Lukaszuk: My last supplemental is to the Minister of Justice. How much does the province right now pay in claims annually with taxpayers' money for uninsured drivers claims?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This issue of uninsured and hit-and-run drivers has been around since the '70s and is dealt with under the motor vehicle accident claims fund. Currently there is a $6 per registration charge for vehicles registered in the province. Annually there is something in the order of $20 million worth of claims which are paid out. Those $6 registrations equate to $16 million worth of contributions to that fund, and I can tell you also that some $6.5 million is recovered from those bad drivers because we do pursue them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Resource Development under Lake Beds

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government often talks about maintaining a healthy environment, yet as usual without independent environmental assessment the Energy and Utilities Board is left rubber-stamping every project that maximizes resource extraction. The fact that the government approved seismic testing under Marie Lake, a pristine lake in northern Alberta, clearly shows otherwise. Around the lake people are wondering why they are not getting access to government members and getting adequate information to make decisions about this development. To the Premier: does the Premier not see that development under lakes is a fundamental breach of public trust?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, either a couple of weeks ago or last week in the House this item came up, and I said that I'd be working with the minister responsible, the minister of sustainable resources, get all the information with respect to what environmental issues there are. Further, with respect to Marie Lake I know that the MLA for the area, the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, has attended all of the meetings and has brought that information forward to both ministers, so we've continued to work. To my knowledge, I didn't think that the seismic had been approved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier stop the practice of the sale of mineral rights underneath Alberta's lakes?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question has come up a couple of times with Albertans at various events and also around our caucus table: when there are certain blocks of land that are sold, how do you carve out any body of water or river? We had a good discussion with respect to that. In terms of the sales that have been completed, there are a whole bunch of things that come forward. What if somebody buys a lease, and they do some seismic and find out that there's no oil on it, do they give it back to the province and we pay them back? Of course not.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Your ministry has stated that the planned seismic testing will not have adverse effects on the aquatic environment. Will the minister explain what experts he has consulted, and will he table reports relative to the seismic activity on the lake?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to tell this House that my ministry will not authorize any seismic testing on Marie Lake when and if we see scientific evidence that it has probable adverse effect. In addition, I can assure you that I will require scientific monitoring before, during, and after any test to see if there is any adverse effect, and I will ensure that funding will be in place from the operator to mitigate any operational effect, any adverse effect if it occurs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

St. Joseph's General Hospital

Mr. Martin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the minister of health told us that the incident at St. Joe's hospital in Vegreville was an isolated incident. We found that not to be true because very shortly thereafter there were problems in Lloydminster; there have been problems in Canmore, many other hospitals. He told us at the time that 80 people could be infected, at risk of contracting hepatitis or HIV. Now, we find out that that number is 3,000. My question simply to the minister: how could the minister's initial estimate of 80 people be so wrong?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't the minister's estimate that was wrong but the listening of the hon. member. What was said at the time was that it came to our attention because of the review of cystoscopy, particularly with respect to cystoscopy with biopsies, that there were 80 people who had been identified as having had that procedure, that we were going to do a look back at all the records and determine what group of people needed to be followed up on. It's been public knowledge that we've been following up with the next highest risk after the cystoscopies and endoscopies and those sorts of tests, that tonsillectomies was the next and to broader procedures, to any procedure which involved any invasive process. That's been clearly in the public domain for some time.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, 3,000 was not the number that even came close at that particular time. My question simply to the minister is that there's a great worry among people that they are going to go into the hospital and come out sicker rather than healthier. There is a growing problem within the credibility of the hospital system. My question simply to the minister is this: does the minister not realize that by the government not dealing decisively with this issue, it is hurting – and I stress hurting – the credibility of the hospital system in Alberta?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we did deal decisively with the issue. First of all, we made sure that the CSR in that particular hospital was closed and that no further sterilization processes were happening at that hospital so that it got appropriate sterilization procedures. The public health officer also closed the hospital for admissions for another incident with respect to the hospital. That process is ongoing, and we're very satisfied that the medical officer of health is supervising that process. So that happened. We also engaged immediately in a look back to see what group of people we should be involving in tests to determine whether there was any possibility – not probability, but possibility – of transferring blood-borne pathogens. That happened. A board of managers was put in place; that's in place now. So a number of very decisive steps have been taken and more to come.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that these things keep coming out, and we hear more and more and more. The point that we were saying right from the start so people have some faith in our hospital system: why do we not now call for a full public inquiry? That's what people are asking for.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the full public inquiry that the hon. member is asking for will not solve any problems. What we've got in place is a Health Quality Council review. I've asked every health authority and every health profession to review their processes across the province, and we'll be taking a look at those. We'll have their responses by the end of April, and we'll be bringing into place as a result of that process the necessary processes and procedures to make sure that Albertans have faith in their system and can have faith in their hospitals when they go into them. But there's no point in alarming Albertans unnecessarily. This situation is under control, and the process to make sure it never happens again is ongoing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Energy and Utilities Board

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our caucus made the policy decision on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy to restructure Alberta's regulatory authority of the Energy and Utilities Board into two separate boards. Most of us recall that Alberta had a Public Utilities Board and an Energy Resources Conservation Board back in the 1990s. My question is to the Minister of Energy.

Why are we taking this step, which some call a backward step, to address the needs of today?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you categorically that this is not a step backwards; anything but. This government has a plan to build a stronger Alberta. We are looking to the future, and this restructuring is part of the plan. We're managing growth pressures in the province of Alberta. The landscape has changed significantly since 1995, when the EUB was established. There has been a population increase. There has been oil and gas development increase. There has been the emergence of a very, very solid oil sands development and restructured electrical markets.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Issues such as land use, surface rights, and environmental protection are major concerns related to the oil and gas development and new electrical transmission projects. There's a growing need also for more public advocacy. Can the minister advise how this will affect the EUB's work to address public concerns?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, this province has a world-renowned regulatory system, and this change will enhance that system. We have very stringent approval processes for all energy projects, and Albertans can continue to expect those types of approvals to be made by these two boards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what does this mean, then, to the 500-kV line application which is currently before the board, given that this process could perhaps be interrupted because of the restructuring?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility to ensure that the needs of industry and the best interests of Albertans are protected while we go through this transition. The comprehensive implementation and the transition strategy that we have ensure that all applications, not any particular one, before the board are handled appropriately and in a timely manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Community Facility Enhancement Program

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's community facility enhancement program grant distribution is out of order. In the year 2004-05 of the over 600 CFEP grants awarded, just 3 per cent of recipients received 25 per cent of the total CFEP funding. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture: will the minister admit that CFEP grants are not being awarded on a consistent basis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, CFEP grants are awarded according to applications by our nonprofit registered societies. The CFEP is not predetermined in terms of how much individuals have. We do have maximum limits, that tend to go up to $125,000, and we allocate those dollars on the basis of applications rather than on the basis of total dollars.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister. The Auditor General found that the minister has a great deal of flexibility with grants over $125,000. Will the minister admit that as the size of the grant increases, the rules should be stronger, not weaker?

Mr. Goudreau: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, all of them are evaluated on the basis of the organizations, the societies, past activities. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is right. Certainly, as our numbers increase, we do provide additional scrutiny to the applications. We do make sure that they're registered societies. They have to be accountable. They have a certain time period to report back to us as to how those dollars are spent. If they don't do that, then we actually do the follow-up to see how we can reclaim some of those dollars.

Mr. Agnihotri: To the same minister: will the minister update CFEP guidelines so that all the potential grant applicants will have an equal opportunity to apply and to receive grants?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the member is coming from. Certainly, the member opposite is sort of alluding to the fact that we're treating different people differently. Every group and every organization has to meet the same guidelines. They fall under the same criteria. We're constantly reviewing those guidelines and criteria to keep them up to date, but we don't pick one organization over the other and have different rules for them. They are the same for everybody.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The organization called Vibrant Communities Calgary in partnership with business groups and nonprofit groups launched the living wage initiative. This idea was launched in the U.S.A. over 10 years ago and established in 130 U.S. cities. The city of Calgary has adopted this initiative by working with the living wage action team. I have recently received a copy of the living wage fact sheet. The question today is to the hon. Minister of Employment, Immigration and Industry. Is the minister aware of this living wage initiative and its recommendations to help our Albertan working poor?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm aware of the Vibrant Communities initiative. Our offices in Calgary act as a resource to the group. We're well aware of their initiatives to assist the working poor. Their predominant thrust is on the living wage. While the minimum wage is a concern of this government – and I'm exploring that – one of the things that we're trying to do is make sure that Albertans who need training get that opportunity. For the working poor and other Albertans we provide some $300 million in our department to enhance their training opportunities as a major thrust of helping them cope with the lifestyle.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that Alberta has a law governing our employment standards and minimum wage, what is Alberta's minimum wage in comparison with those in other Canadian jurisdictions?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, to properly compare minimum wage and all the supplementary benefits provided would take some doing. On the minimum wage alone we are not ranked highly, and I do favour increasing the minimum wage but not until there's an opportunity to bring back a review, a solid review, to our government to look at the implications. We have about 97 per cent of Albertans that are covered with wages other than the minimum wage. When I'm meeting with some of the stakeholders, their theme to me is that generally speaking they're paying much more than the minimum wage even though they would previously have paid less because in our buoyant economy clearly employers are paying more.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A living wage is defined as the amount of income needed to meet the basic needs, to maintain a safe and decent standard of living, and to have some savings for needs and goals in the future. With the cost of living in Calgary the living wage is calculated to be $12 per hour. So my question to the same minister: given that employers already pay higher than the minimum wage of $7, do you, Minister, have any plan to look at increasing it to a level closer to the living wage?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, beyond looking at the minimum wage, to look at a living wage, you have to look at several other factors. There are many other supplementary benefits that both the federal and the provincial government provide for people who are receiving the minimum wage. You have to also look at such factors – and this is one that is cited to me by many of the people in the chambers of commerce, that young people and new workers may be restricted in the number of jobs that they could get if we increase the minimum wage and not recognize that the greater majority of people who are earning the minimum wage receive tips and other supplementary benefits on the job site. A family member earns a fraction of their total salary given the minimum . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Long-term Care

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent report from Ontario shows that antipsychotic drugs, which have serious side effects, are being used on long-term care patients who do not have psychosis or dementia. Almost two years ago Alberta's Auditor General also observed that some facilities "use chemical or physical restraints, often without adequate documentation, and in a few isolated cases, without apparent medical authorization." My questions are to the minister of health. The government of Ontario is introducing legislation to deal with the use and to curb the abuse of antipsychotic drugs. Why hasn't Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member raises a very important and interesting question and one which I'm going to be very interested in looking at because I think it's very clear not only with respect to the drugs that are being mentioned but the utilization of drugs in general that there's an overutilization of drugs among the senior population, particularly those in long-term care. We need to have a very clear and solid look at that, so I will undertake to do so and find out whether any progress has been made in that area. I am not aware specifically what decision-making process has been undertaken with respect to that in Alberta, so I will look into it.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that we can all agree that Albertans in long-term care deserve the highest level of care available, but this government is allowing seniors to fall seriously behind other provinces. In British Columbia the government has set a goal of 5,000 new long-term care beds by 2008. Why hasn't this government set any long-term goals with specific targets for increasing long-term care beds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, a very good question. I'd go back to a report that was done by a former colleague in this Legislature, the Broda report, which talked about the continuum of living situations for seniors and those who need living assistance. I think it's very important that we work not just on the long-term care beds, which is very important, but also on how we support seniors living in their own homes, how we make sure that seniors have the choices about aging in place and not leaving their spheres of influence and the comfort of their neighbourhood. So we need to look not just at goals for the long-term care, but we need to look at goals with respect to how we support seniors to age in place.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, the only thing we got out of the Broda report was a significant increase in what we charge residents for long-term care.

Ontario's new legislation also includes a resident bill of rights, which wasn't contemplated in the Broda report, similar to the one that was recommended by Alberta Liberals almost two years ago. Will the minister finally take advice that would improve the quality of care for seniors and legislate a resident bill of rights which would include the right to refuse medication like chemical restraints and the right to be treated with dignity and respect?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'll take advice from any Albertan who wants to give advice on how we can treat our seniors better in this province and how we can ensure that seniors are not abused. Now, the minister of seniors may wish to add to this particular area, but I can say this: this government cares very much about not only the accommodation for seniors, the health care for seniors, but how seniors get to age in place and live with respect and dignity and die with respect and dignity. So I will take advice from anyone on this area, any Albertan on this area.

The Speaker: That was 90 questions and answers today, hon. members.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been head: accepted]

Unfunded Pension Liability

Q1. Mr. Miller:
What is the total projected cost to taxpayers of the government's current schedule for paying off the unfunded liabilities of public-sector pension plans broken down by plan?

Heritage Savings Trust Fund Investments

- Q4. Mr. Miller:
What was the total value of all Alberta heritage savings trust fund investments in tobacco-based companies at the end of fiscal years 2000-2001 through 2005-2006 and for the period April 1, 2006, to March 7, 2007?

Contracted Psychiatric Services

- Q5. Mr. Martin:
For each of the fiscal years 2002-2003, 2003-2004, 2004-2005, 2005-2006, and for the period April 1, 2006, to March 6, 2007, what was the total value of psychiatric services contracted by regional health authorities, RHAs, broken down by RHA, and what was the total value of psychiatric services contracted by the Alberta Mental Health Board?

Contracted Clinical Psychiatric Care

- Q6. Mr. Martin:
For each of the fiscal years 2002-2003, 2003-2004, 2004-2005, 2005-2006, and for the period April 1, 2006, to March 6, 2007, what was the total number of psychiatrists contracted to provide clinical services for regional health authorities, RHAs, broken down by RHA, and what was the total number contracted to provide clinical services by the Alberta Mental Health Board?

Sick Leave Taken by Registered Nurses

- Q7. Mr. Martin:
For each of the fiscal years 2002-2003, 2003-2004, 2004-2005, and 2005-2006 how many days of sick leave were taken by registered nurses, broken down by regional health authorities?

Sick Leave Taken by Licensed Practical Nurses

- Q8. Mr. Martin:
For each of the fiscal years 2002-2003, 2003-2004, 2004-2005, and 2005-2006 how many days of sick leave were taken by licensed practical nurses employed by regional health authorities, RHAs, broken down by RHA?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Wednesday, April 11, it's my pleasure to move that written questions 2 and 3 be dealt with today. As per our new temporary Standing Order changes written questions that have already been accepted have been read into the record. Written questions 9, 10, and 11 will stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

Funding Applications to Assist the Disabled

- Q2. Mr. Bonko asked on behalf of Ms Pastoor that the following question be accepted.
What was the total number of funding applications and the total number of applications approved under the assistance to persons with developmental disabilities program and the assured income for the severely handicapped program in fiscal years 2004-2005 and 2005-2006?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have circulated an amendment to Written Question 2. We'd be happy to accept the question. We're proposing an amendment that doesn't change, I would suggest, the information that's sought to be received, but we thought we'd better be clear in the wording on this.

What we're proposing is that it be amended in two places. We'd like to remove the reference to funding applications and just leave in "applications," so strike out the word "funding" but leave "applications." Well, first in that respect, applications approved to persons with developmental disabilities are not for direct funding but for support services that are funded by the department through service contracts. We'd also like to remove the word "assistance" from the title of the program as the formal name of the program is persons with developmental disabilities. It does not include "assistance to."

So the amended question would read:

What was the total number of applications and the total number of applications approved under the persons with developmental disabilities program and the assured income for the severely handicapped program in fiscal years 2004-2005 and 2005-2006?

This should still provide all of the information that is requested. It's just some wording changes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore on the amendment.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a friendly amendment, and it does still get to the crux of the question that the Member for Lethbridge-East was looking for, so we will accept that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Should I call the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore to close the debate if you wish.

Mr. Bonko: Call the question.

[Written Question 2 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Oil Sands Royalty Reductions

- Q3. Mr. MacDonald asked that the following question be accepted.

For each of the fiscal years 1997-1998 through 2005-2006 what is the total value of all reductions to Crown royalties under the following categories of allowed costs as referenced in appendix L of the Alberta oil sands royalty guidelines: bonuses paid, corporate, environmental monitoring, hosting and entertainment, municipal taxes, stock option plans?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, this written question is part of our ongoing commitment to the owners of the natural resources of this province, Albertans, to ensure that we are getting a fair share of the revenue that's generated from the oil sands projects through our royalty structure. Whenever you go through this entire royalty guideline, it is interesting to note that whether one is paying 1 per cent royalty or paying 25 per cent royalty net, there are a lot of ways or methods or means for royalties to be reduced significantly.

Now, appendix L is a list of allowed and not allowed costs. With our written question this afternoon, again, we are centring around bonuses paid, corporate bonuses, environmental monitoring, hosting and entertainment, municipal taxes, and stock option plans.

Now, whenever we talk about the bonuses paid, the corporate bonuses paid, these bonuses are allowable costs so long as they are based on the results of an oil sands project but not allowed if they are based on the improvement in the company's stock or earnings per share. Isn't it true that the positive performance of an oil sands project would likely result in improvements in the company's stock? How exactly – and hopefully we will get the answer to this – does the government separate these two? How is the audit done? How does this audit process work? Who does it? Is it appropriate to have taxpayers – and this is a very good question, Mr. Speaker – paying corporate bonuses to individuals who may not even be Canadian citizens, let alone citizens of this province?

With environmental monitoring – this is something that I followed in the debate on Bill 3, and I don't think I heard enough of it – we have had a process in place for the last number of years where oil sands projects which used any sort of process or idea to reduce CO₂ emissions could have the costs subtracted from the royalty. I don't know, and I certainly hope the hon. Minister of Energy can explain to the House and to Albertans that this provision has already been used, that this provision has been used by ABC company, and that this is the result of the use of this provision. Now, I would really appreciate that information from the hon. minister because these costs relate to monitoring the air quality, soil, wildlife monitoring systems as well as reducing CO₂ emissions. We all realize that this is a generous royalty reduction, but Albertans need a justification for these royalty reductions, and hopefully we will get it.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how these costs for environmental monitoring match up to some of the other costs such as the corporate bonuses. I suspect that Albertans would be very interested to know exactly where their money is being diverted. Now, the figure for this particular cost will be a reflection of the standards put in place by the EUB and Alberta Environment approval process. There was a lot said about that process in the Radke report, which hopefully we're going to get an opportunity at some point to discuss during this legislative term. Albertans are concerned about their environment, and I really think they would like to see these figures.

Now, hosting and entertainment. These costs are allowed to the extent that they are costs to the project – food, beverage, or entertainment expenditures – to the extent that they would be allowed by the Income Tax Act. In regard specifically to these hosting and entertainment costs this is very questionable, in my opinion. This is a very questionable cost to be putting on Albertans. I see a lot of room for abuse under this provision, and I would like to know, again, how these costs as they come into the Department of Energy are being audited. Is it appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to have Alberta taxpayers picking up the tab for refreshments on these project sites?

In regard to municipal taxes under this Written Question 3 these costs are allowed to the extent that they are municipal taxes and improvement fees. It is interesting to note that the royalty review is focusing not only on royalties but on taxation as well. I hope the review panel will be made aware that the municipal taxes that these project owners pay are actually in some cases partially if not all refunded to them. Now, I don't think many people in this province know that the municipal taxes which are paid by these project owners are actually returned to them through this royalty reduction schedule or annex or appendix, as they call it. Again, I would think that this is a very, very generous regime.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that some jurisdictions in the U.S. in the lower 48 states actually allow counties or smaller jurisdictions to impose specific taxes on the resources extracted. Now, there are models for this in Texas, and the Minister of Finance in his leadership bid spoke about this or spoke about a system that certainly would allow municipalities a share, even a modest, wee share, as they say, of royalty revenue, but it would be interesting to see to what extent our government pays these companies back for the municipal taxes that they currently are paying.

Now, the stock option plans under Written Question 3, Mr. Speaker. These are allowed costs to the extent that they are directly attributable to the performance of a project and only when the costs have been incurred. They are not allowed if they are an award of stock as a bonus redeemable by a recipient. I would like to know, again, how these costs are audited. How does our provincial government here define "directly attributable"? How do you measure that? Again, is it appropriate for Albertans to be paying for these stock options? When it was brought up in question period earlier, a gentleman named Sam Spanglet, who was a member of the Royalty Review Panel, has – and I was pleased to learn that – unloaded the stock. I hope he has not unloaded it at a loss either.

Certainly, these are all questions that relate to our royalty structure on our oil sands projects. I'm not going to, in the interests of time, go through the entire appendix L, but in the course of required reading for hon. members of this House I would certainly encourage all hon. members to have a good look at this regulation and have a look at how it affects our collection of royalties and how much we do collect. It is very generous. There is information in here not only regarding corporate bonuses but also information on how we incent the export of bitumen away from this province into other jurisdictions for further upgrading. I know that we're going to be constructing upgraders in the east and north of the city of Edmonton, but we should have a look at this regulation as well and consider whether we should have as an allowed cost, Mr. Speaker, the transportation or pipeline tolls.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy to respond, to participate.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would suggest to you that there has been much rambling that's just gone on that had very little to do with Written Question 3. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to explain why I am unable to accept Written Question 3.

The rules regarding which operating and capital costs are allowed and which are not allowed in determining Crown royalties are clear. Appendix L, which is referred to in the question, acts as a guideline providing illustrative examples of the types of costs that might be allowed. This is used to report costs by category, and for that reason details regarding individual items and costs are not available, and that is what is being requested through this question. This more detailed information is addressed through the Department of Energy's audit process, which looks at the complete extract of a company's revenues and expenses. It is at this point that these costs are checked and tested to ensure that they qualify. In fact, Mr. Speaker, on-site inspections may even be pursued to ensure that the costs qualify. If there are any ineligible costs identified during an audit process, they are disallowed, and the royalties are recalculated.

For important legal and commercial confidentiality reasons, including our obligation under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, individual audit results are not made public. To put this in perspective, Mr. Speaker, our royalty system operates similar to corporate and even, to some degree, personal income tax systems. The department obtains the equivalent of a tax return that provides overall numbers for such things as revenue, deductible costs of goods and services, eligible expenditures, and so on. These companies, much like a corporate or individual taxpayer, must retain the information related to their projects for audit purposes. Audits are then conducted to ensure that deductions made were eligible and appropriately documented.

Due to the fact that the information being sought under Written Question 3 is not available in the form requested, I request that the question be rejected.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

If not, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very disappointed but not surprised that this minister would be unable to accept Written Question 3. It's just another reminder not only to this member but to all Albertans that this government is not open, that it's not transparent. It pretends it is, but whenever the general public listens to the Minister of Energy, they will certainly realize for themselves first-hand that this is not an open nor a transparent government, nor is the process for collecting these royalties. These are good questions, they're valid questions, and we need answers.

Now, the minister also neglected to tell the Assembly that if a financial audit is not done on an account in an oil sands project over a four-year time period, it can't be done. It can't be completed. He also neglected to mention the fact that the Auditor General in the past in various reports has brought up time and time again the whole issue of royalty calculation and how it works or how it does not work.

Again, I'm disappointed that we can't have any information with Written Question 3. In conclusion, I would encourage the hon. Minister of Energy to have another look, if he has not already, at the Auditor General's reports not only from this year but past years. He will see for himself that there is work to be done.

Thank you.

[Written Question 3 lost]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Wednesday, April 11, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns 1, 2, and 3 be dealt with today. There being no additional motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper, there are none to stand and retain their places.

Thank you.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Internal Royalty Review

M1. Mr. MacDonald proposed that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all documents relating to the government's review of royalties that concluded in 2006 as referenced by the former Minister of Energy in the Calgary Herald on July 15, 2006, including a list of groups, organizations, companies, or individuals consulted, and the total amount of money paid to each group, organization, company, or individual for their involvement.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, Motion for a Return 1 is quite important, and hopefully an answer will be provided by this government at this time. I think that last week, for the information of all hon. members of this Assembly, before question period on Wednesday, I did table a copy of that article. Now, the former Minister of Energy indicated that the review was completed and promised to provide documents, as I understand it, to back up his claim. Members of cabinet at the time, some members who are still in cabinet at this time, state that, well, they're not sure that the review ever happened. So someone is confused, and we need to find out who that someone is.

The hon. President of the Treasury Board states that he has an idea who is confused, and I'm not going to say that it's the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who indicated last fall that the review was dropped. This was in a Calgary Herald article from July 15, 2006.

An Hon. Member: That's got to be true.

Mr. MacDonald: If it's in the Calgary Herald, you bet it's true. I know that you have a great deal of difficulty accepting what's printed in our newspapers from time to time, but my advice to you in this case would be to accept it.

Other Tory leadership candidates, whenever they were questioned about this internal review, stated that it had been done. Now, there's definitely a conflict of information here.

Mr. Rodney: Is Enron involved?

Mr. MacDonald: Enron is not involved in this. No, hon. member, it is not, but I can assure you that before June we will get to the Enron matter in this House.

Certainly, whenever you look at not only the review and the Calgary Herald's comment on it, if we look at statements in this House, and if we can't accept what the Herald had to say – now, this is interesting. This is from question period, Mr. Speaker, on August 24, 2006. This is a question from the gentleman who is now the Minister of Energy to the former Minister of Energy on the royalty review. The hon. Minister of Energy was asking last summer if this is the conclusion to the royalty review. Of course, the Minister of Energy at that time goes on at length, and I'm glad we didn't have the 45-second rule then because this is a long response.

Certainly, I would urge members of the House to check Hansard from August 24, 2006, and have a look themselves. There is quite an exchange here between the Minister of Energy and the former Minister of Energy. Again, I'm not trying to overload the Minister of Energy with extra work, but I think he really needs to read this and accept Motion for a Return 1, that is on the Order Paper in my name. Now, this is not the only time this has been brought up, not only in question period but also during written questions last spring, about all the details surrounding this royalty review. We need that information. Albertans need that information, and I'm requesting the department to please provide the information as requested in Motion for a Return 1.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy is the respondent.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm pleased to speak to Motion for a Return 1, which I'll be asking to be rejected today. [interjection] Yeah, it's an unfortunate circumstance that I find myself in. I find it quite interesting that this motion is nearly identical to written questions that were addressed in the Assembly last year. Last year. That said, I'll address the issue once again, as I did last week – last week – during question period.

Royalty reviews are part of the Department of Energy's normal ongoing business. That ongoing analysis ensures that our royalty framework strikes the right balance, providing Albertans with a fair return on our natural resources and, Mr. Speaker, maintaining a competitive system that allows our economy to prosper. As I pointed out to the hon. member last week, changes to four of our royalty programs were made as a result of work done by the Minister of Energy last year. These changes will increase royalties paid to the province by about $300 million once they're fully implemented.

I'd also like to make it very clear that the Department of Energy does not pay individuals, groups, or organizations it consults with, as is stated in the member's motion. However, Mr. Speaker, we did contract the services of experts in the field of royalties to develop studies and reports on royalties. The member may wish to read those nine studies and reports, which are available in the department's library.

Today the Clerk tabled documents recently released in response to a freedom of information request that is relevant to this motion for a return. There are more than 500 pages of documents in each set. I encourage the hon. member to review the 500-plus pages of documents tabled today and to make a personal trip to the library so that he can review the reports and studies, as any Albertan can freely do.

Mr. Speaker, in light of the relevant and substantive information I have made available to the Legislature and to the public, I recommend that Motion for a Return 1 be rejected.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

Then shall I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That was an interesting series of reasons to reject this motion, interesting but also at the same point astonishing, and it's astonishing for the following reasons. The Conservative government didn't contradict themselves last May whenever that written question was being debated, like they did last summer over the royalty review and the royalty double-speak, as the Calgary Herald called it, when they all were in a crowded field wanting to be in the Premier's chair. Now, the Minister of Energy at the time, who wasn't in the race for the Premier's chair, indicated, and I quote: we looked at royalties for quite a while on a number of fronts, and we've come back in the interim and decided that we do get a fair share in Alberta. End of quote. This was on August 24, 2006. That statement seemed to cool the chorus, as they state here, from the Tory leadership contenders, most of whom, interestingly enough, last summer favoured a review.

The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development stated at that time and indicated a wish for a close examination of the 1 per cent royalty holiday for Alberta oil sands. Other leadership contenders, including Jim Dinning and Mark Norris and the eventual winner, the hon. Premier, also indicated that they would initiate a public review if they won the leadership. Well, the gentleman certainly has initiated a public review, and full credit there.

When we reject this Motion for a Return 1, this minister and this government are failing to reveal that the government received only a 19 per cent share of oil and gas revenues in 2004 – these are the numbers that are most recently available – when its own target is between 20 and 25 per cent. The province's royalty take has actually dropped in the last number of fiscal years. I don't understand why this motion for a return would be rejected.

Now, also in August of last year a Conservative MLA and leadership hopeful at that time and now the current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development indicated – and I'm sorry if I offend the Minister of Energy; again I'm going to quote from the Calgary Herald – that he would reopen the issue if elected Premier, particularly the 1 per cent royalty holiday for Alberta's oil sands. The internal review wasn't even completed, he added, suggesting that it was dropped after Klein's crippling leadership review vote just this past spring, which hastened his retirement to late this year. This is a quote from the Calgary Herald on the 12th of July, 2006.

The minister indicated that the consultants aren't paid. Well, Wood Mackenzie was paid to do this study. They were paid in one fiscal year – and I'm recalling from Public Accounts – $70,000. Then the next year I think it was a substantial amount, much higher than $70,000. Their modus operandi is royalty reviews and structures across the entire oil patch. So I think the minister is really playing with words because taxpayers do pay megabucks for various reports. I would urge the minister to check out the rules and regulations that are in the Department of Energy library.

Sean Kochan from our research staff and myself went up there last summer, and I think some reporters have also been there. It's not as open and transparent as the hon. minister is telling us. We cannot have photocopies of all that information. In fact, this Global Oil and Gas: Risks and Rewards document, a report prepared for the government of Alberta by Wood Mackenzie – we were only allowed to get photocopies of parts of it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I must draw to the attention of the Assembly Standing Order 29(3)(b), and I must now call the question.

[Motion for a Return 1 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Public/Private School Construction

M2. Mr. Flaherty proposed that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all feasibility reports, studies, proposals, cost-benefit analyses, correspondence, e-mails, and memos regarding the use of public/private partnership, P3, funding arrangements for school construction conducted from fiscal year 2002-2003 to 2005-2006 and for the period April 1, 2006, to March 7, 2007.

Mr. Flaherty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to speak to this request, it would be vital, I think, to the schools across this province who are being tutored or asked to consider this proposal to make sure that we have the data with which to analyze what has been done and know both sides of this question. The motion is crucial for us, and I know that the school boards in St. Albert are very interested in getting this information, if there is any available, to be able to judge how this P3 concept works and some of the issues involved.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's certainly not our nature to keep any information that might be helpful on this, but very little information from 2002 to 2006 or any of the years in between would be relevant or even practical to gather. To suggest that we could collect the e-mails and all of this to bring together any kind of relevance to the current situation where we are looking at all forms of constructions costs, certainly, as the Auditor General has suggested, we should. But to take the staff and the time required to go back and bring forward what would be considered mostly irrelevant – Lord knows that we get enough help with information that we not only don't use but that also has no relevance to what we're trying to do. To accept this motion would create an amount of work that would be not in proportion to any possible benefit from it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, and for those reasons we will be rejecting Motion for a Return 2.

The Speaker: Others to participate? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, please proceed.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it a little disappointing that the President of the Treasury Board and the government itself would be unwilling or unable to provide some documentation or some proof as to their position with regard to P3s. Yes, it was noted that the Auditor General did and should say that they should explain or at least explore some of the relative benefits of P3s. The Member for St. Albert asked to quantify where the schools are and our position with regard to P3s – we asked for the information – and the government is unable to provide any. What conclusion are we and the public supposed to be left with in regard to the benefits, actual cost benefits, with regard to P3s? We have concerns with regard to the Anthony Henday and the cost overruns with regard to P3s.

Again, this is specific information that we're seeking so that school boards could be able to identify to their electorate, who in some cases have no chance of getting schools, with the carrot being dropped by developers in conjunction with the government saying: we'll give you a P3. I am of the belief that it should be the government's responsibility to provide construction for schools and to maintain the costs. All the relative information as well as monies funding the schools, upgrading them, and keeping them safe and secure: we need that information. The public needs that information. What other studies have the government undertaken to be able to provide the public, the opposition, Albertans with that sort of information to be able to justify P3s?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, in regard to Motion for a Return 2 here under the name of the hon. Member for St. Albert I'm really disappointed in the response from the President of the Treasury Board. I realize he wasn't President of the Treasury Board last summer when it had a meeting to discuss the financing of the Balzac racetrack project. Perhaps he should have been there. Being the prudent person that he is with the tax dollars, perhaps he should have been there. This was prior to the move to put some funding into that project through the estimates debate in August of last summer.

Specifically to the P3s, I would remind the hon. member that through the FOIP process we received documents that indicated that it is a routine measure now for this government to determine whether a project has any merit for a P3, including the expansion to Olds College to facilitate the development at Balzac. There is a lot of discussion on the merit of a P3. Interestingly enough, this wasn't to be a P3 project, but there are going to be ponies, ponies, ponies there at some point; there's no doubt in my mind.

I would like to remind the hon. President of the Treasury Board and all other members of this House that this motion for a return should not be rejected. It's a routine way, unfortunately, for this government to conduct their business: the P3s. The request of the hon. Member for St. Albert is not unusual or anything. It's of benefit, certainly, to Albertans, and it would be a testament to the commitment to be open and accountable and transparent . . .

Mr. Boutilier: Which we are.

Mr. MacDonald: . . . that this government is making. Unfortunately, hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, you are not. Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

Then I'll call on the hon. Member for St. Albert to close the debate.

Mr. Flaherty: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The President of the Treasury Board used the word "irrelevant," I think he said.

An Hon. Member: How do you spell it?

Mr. Flaherty: Well, I'll ask you to spell it for him in caucus. You can do that.

In this particular aspect of this program, this business of P3s, we're talking about a new direction in this province, and for this gentleman to say that it's irrelevant for 62 school boards across this province that are looking for some leadership in terms of accountability and the direction they're going in doesn't make sense. I happened to have had the honour, sir, of serving as a civil servant, and many of our proposals had to be rational and supported. This is what you're asking: 62 school boards across this province to give us some feedback as to should they buy into this or not, and you're telling me that it's irrelevant. I'm sorry, sir. I expected more from you, and I hope to see more from you in the future.

The budget, now, is the other thing that I think is very crucial in this. When you're making this decision, you're not interested in kids. You're interested in this word "debt." You're trying to get rid of the word "debt."

Mr. Boutilier: That's not true.

Mr. Flaherty: You listen carefully. You are.

Mr. Boutilier: That is not true.

Mr. Flaherty: It is.

When you're asking school boards to take this on, you've got to look at the question of operational problems. None of you has probably been to the schools, sir. You're asking them to take a look at operational problems, and you're not even giving it a rationale. It doesn't make sense.

The other thing that seems to be avoided on this whole thing of P3s is the use of community schools. That seems to be irrelevant in this thinking that you've shown here today. You've got to show some direction on this matter. How is this whole thing going to fit into the community? Mr. President of the Treasury Board, I expect you to know more.

Now, I think the other thing that's important is the matter of agreements with municipalities. When you're looking at the question of agreements with municipalities, you're changing the structure. You have joint use. When you don't look at this issue in terms of, again, informing school boards of your rationale for this decision, then I think that it's a sad day in Alberta for not looking at that.

The other thing that's going to happen – and maybe you could clarify this after you do some research, Mr. President. You can look at the whole question of children's safety and security. Listen carefully. If you're planning to build these things around a shopping centre with all the issues of that, then I think that you've got to look very carefully at that question.

Then the whole question, again, was the proper use of grounds and facilities and those kinds of things which usually are around a school. In your rationale for doing this, there is no evidence that you've done your homework. And you know what, sir? I am really disappointed. I can't understand how anybody could go out and ask a community school or a school district to get involved in this concept without having some of these questions answered.

I thank you.

The Speaker: The debate has concluded unless it's a point of order.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

3:10 Health Facilities Infrastructure Capital Plans

M3. Mrs. Mather moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all long-term capital plans for infrastructure related to health facilities approved in fiscal years 2004-2005 to 2005-2006 and for the period April 1, 2006, to March 7, 2007.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question was submitted to find out what sort of centralized planning exists within the department of health when it comes to health infrastructure for our entire province. We want to get a sense of the capital planning process.

Health regions submit a wish list – we know that – a wish list of projects to the department, where funding decisions and priorities are made. Rarely do we receive an explanation of why one project was selected over another, and regions are unable to plan for their future growth because the capital planning process is so unpredictable. It's a guessing game. If we had explanations, it would help regions with planning and certainly give us some confidence that there was a plan. We want to know exactly what long-term plans the ministry has for health facilities across the province.

The amendment that's suggested here is a copy of all the health authority multiyear capital plans approved by the health regions and submitted to the minister in fiscal years 2004-2005 to 2005-2006 and for the period April 1, 2006, to March 7, 2007. This amendment, I think, should not be accepted; it should be rejected, especially in light of this government's commitment to openness and transparency.

We're against the proposed changes because the amendment goes against the principle of the information that we're seeking and demonstrates that the information that the department of health should have perhaps just doesn't exist. The amendment demonstrates that while the government does not have centralized control over health infrastructure planning, they do like to centralize control of the information and ensure that no useful information is revealed.

By failing to provide a long-term capital plan, it appears that once again this government is not capable of long-term planning. We need something that gives us some confidence that there is a plan.

Albertans deserve better than this. They need something that will tell them that there is a vision and that we have a plan that will support that vision and bring it to fruition.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. member was speaking on Motion for a Return 3. There is no amendment that has been moved yet. So, hon. Government House Leader?

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I was prepared to move a motion to amend 3 so that we could accept it, that we could make sure that the motion was in a form that we could actually provide that information on. However, I'm given to believe that the motion as amended wouldn't be acceptable by the member putting it forward, so I don't see any purpose in going through that process. So I would just suggest that we reject the motion.

The reason for rejecting the motion, Mr. Speaker, is that the motion calls for "a copy of all long-term capital plans for infrastructure related to health facilities approved in fiscal years," and the fiscal years are noted. Well, in fact, that's not the process that's used. What we were going to suggest is that we could provide the health authority multiyear plans which the health authorities approve and forward to government, but I'm given to believe from the representation made by the hon. member that that's not what they're after. They, in fact, know and understand that there are multiyear capital priorities put forward. That's not going to answer the question that they really want answered, so I would suggest that we reject this question because the question in its current format can't be answered. There is no answer to it.

In terms of the capital process, if that's what they would really like to have information on, I'd be more than happy to sit down with the critic or any other member and talk about how we do the process. There is, in fact, a capital process. There is, in fact, a capital committee. There's a committee of deputies that takes a look at all the projects that come forward and do a prioritization of the projects with respect to the need for the projects, how those projects will fit into the long-term delivery process, and then, of course, an allocation of resources to those projects in accordance with the priority that they've been given by the deputies' review and by the capital committee. So there is a process in place, but that process doesn't conform to what's being asked for here.

I have really no alternative. I could have asked for an amendment which would give the information about what plans had come forward, but that's obviously not the information that's wanted, so I would suggest that the House reject the question. If the hon. member or the person who put the motion on the agenda wants to sit down and discuss the capital process, I'd be more than happy to do it.

The Speaker: Others to participate?

Then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude the debate on Motion for a Return 3.

Mrs. Mather: Okay. Thank you. I guess I have a question for clarification. I think that the hon. member has spoken exactly about what it is we had intended with the question. But the amendment, it appears, would provide us some information, which is better than none. We would like to know how decisions are made in that capital planning process. What are the priorities? Why are some given priority over others? That was the original question. The amendment would at least provide us some information, and we feel that some information is better than none at this point.

Bill 204
Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan
Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007/
Loi modificative de 2007 sur les emblèmes
de l'Alberta (reconnaissance du fait franco-albertain)

[Debate adjourned April 2: Mr. Cao speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, with 64 minutes available for this debate, four by the hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to continue from the last debate. An emblem is a symbol, and symbolism is an important aspect of our culture. Through symbolism we communicate ideas, thoughts, and feelings. A Franco-Albertan emblem is a symbol that represents a people's heritage with a long history of the formation of Alberta. It is long before the formation of our province of Alberta and our nation of Canada. Un emblème est un symbole, et le symbolisme est un aspect important de notre culture. Par le symbolisme nous communiquons des idées, des pensées, et des sentiments.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

I applaud Bill 204 because I appreciate and respect what Franco-Albertans have done for our province. J'applaudis la loi 204 parce que j'apprecie et je respecte ce que les Franco-Albertains ont fait pour la province de l'Alberta. Je crois que l'emblème des Franco-Albertains devrait être identifié comme emblème officiel de l'Alberta. I believe that the Franco-Albertan emblem should be recognized as the official emblem of Alberta.

Merci, M. le Président. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise and speak to Bill 204, Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007. The French community has a rich history in this province. The French community plays an important role in our province. The members of the community contribute a great deal to our province, and as Albertans we are proud to recognize their heritage. It's our opportunity to affirm our commitment to recognition of the rights, policies that services must be delivered to, and symbols that are important to Franco-Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to officially recognize the Franco-Albertan flag, and the rationale: Alberta Liberals are inclusive, and the bill appears to be widely supported by Franco-Albertan communities all over Alberta. Similar legislation was passed in Ontario and Saskatchewan with broad support. We want to support the Franco-Albertan community.

I just want to ask a few questions, especially to the sponsor, the Member for Peace River, because I think most of the members sitting in this House don't know what the symbols stand for. According to the Emblems of Alberta Act, Alberta currently has 12 official emblems: the armorial bearings of Alberta, the flag of Alberta, the floral emblem of Alberta, the official grass of Alberta, the Alberta tartan, the Alberta dress tartan, the official bird of Alberta, the official stone of Alberta, the official tree of Alberta, the official colours of Alberta, the official mammal of Alberta, and the 12th one is the official fish of Alberta.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, Ontario passed a similar piece of legislation in the year 2001. Saskatchewan passed a similar piece of legislation in 2005.

I have a few questions to ask the hon. Member for Peace River. What are the legal implications of passing this legislation? Does the government plan to fly this flag on the Legislature Building? How broad is the support for this bill within the Franco-Albertan community? Has the government been approached by any organizations opposing this bill? These are a few questions. I would really appreciate it if he could answer sometime today or maybe when we debate in the next stage.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the recognition of the flag won't be the first in this country. On June 21, 2001, Ontario adopted the Franco-Ontarian flag as one of its seven official emblems. On December 2, 2005, Saskatchewan did the same thing. So the bill is to recognize the symbol. We propose that the government adopt the bill to recognize the flag as an official emblem.

The French language has been present in Alberta for more than 200 years. The Alberta French-speaking community is the third French-speaking community in Canada outside of Quebec. French is one of the two official languages of Canada. The province of Alberta recognizes the importance of serving its citizens in French upon request when it's possible.

The Franco-Albertan flag was unveiled for the first time on March 6, 1982. From then on the Alberta French-speaking community has consistently used it as its emblem. It is therefore appropriate now to recognize it officially as the emblem of that community. "Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of [the province of] Alberta, enacts as follows": in this Act, Mr. Speaker, Alberta French-speaking community means the community of persons who have the right under subsection 23.(1) or (2) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, without regard to subsection 23.(3) of that Charter, to have their children receive their primary and secondary school instruction in the French language in Alberta.

The Franco-Albertan emblem: Mr. Speaker, I think the majority of the Franco-Albertan community supported this one, and this is a great opportunity for us to recognize it. The flag described in the schedule to this act is recognized as the emblem of Alberta's French-speaking community. This act comes into force on the date it receives royal assent.

A description of the emblem of the Alberta French-speaking community: the flag is blue, white, and red, with the white in the upper left corner and a red wild rose in the lower right corner. The wild rose, the provincial flower of Alberta, represents the province, as does the field of blue in the upper right corner, the white represents la Francophonie, and the blue and white stripes represent the waters and roads travelled throughout the province by francophone explorers and colonists. So I urge all the members of this House to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Herard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in support of Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007. Je suis très fier d'ajouter ma voix pour supporter le projet de loi 204 du Membre de Rivière de la Paix. This is a very meaningful and thoughtful piece of legislation and not just for those of us of francophone descent. My own francophone background goes back five generations here in Alberta and 11 generations in Quebec and God knows how many across the ocean. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Peace River for recognizing Alberta's French community in this way and perhaps initiating something here that will eventually lead to the appropriate recognition of every culture that makes up Alberta's mosaic.

This legislation will add the current emblem of l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta to Alberta's list of official emblems. I agree with the overall intent of this legislation as an appropriate homage for francophone Albertans past, present, and future. The francophone community in Alberta does have a special history in our province, and it's appropriate for the Assembly to give recognition to this unique heritage. The lineage of today's Franco-Albertan is intrinsically bound to this province's history.

Since the arrival of the early French-Canadian settlers in Alberta many great Franco-Albertans have lived, have contributed, and are contributing greatly to our family. People like Father Albert Lacombe are well known for their contributions. Mr. Speaker, my father was fond of talking about serving mass for Father Lacombe in Midnapore in the early 1900s. People like Dr. Rouleau: you know, before there was a Calgary, there was a Rouleauville in and around the site of the existing Catholic cathedral in Calgary. So much of the early pioneering effort in southern Alberta was made by French Canadians.

Today Alberta is fortunate to have organizations working on behalf of the Franco-Albertan community: the Francophone Secretariat, for which, of course, I need to congratulate my good friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake for all of his efforts in making that happen here in Alberta, l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, le Conseil de développement économique de l'Alberta, et le Centre d'accueil et d'établissement d'Edmonton. Whether it's through the promotion of French culture or ensuring access to French language resources, these organizations ensure that Alberta's policies mirror the bilingual and multicultural measures taken on at the federal level. The ability to remain true to one's cultural roots while still engaging in the activities that give a community its collective identity is what it means to be an Albertan and a Canadian.

Alberta is a most beautiful mosaic made up of dozens of cultures and languages that all contribute through their special colour and their special shade to the tiles that make up this most amazing mosaic. Mr. Speaker, I'm reminded of once admiring a beautiful painting in St. Peter's Basilica in Rome. As I walked closer, I was amazed to discover that it was not a painting at all but a mosaic made up of millions of tiny marble tiles, each with their subtle coloured differences but together creating a masterpiece. Here in Alberta we have over 3 million souls, each contributing their own cultural colour and their background to the richness and beauty of our peoples.

So, Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is just the beginning. Perhaps this bill brought forward by the hon. Member for Peace River will be the beginning of a celebration of all cultures found in this great province of Alberta or, perhaps, a new process that will allow others to follow and celebrate their roots as part of this great mosaic masterpiece that we call Alberta. And I would urge all my colleagues to vote in favour of this bill.

Merci, M. le Président.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a special pleasure – and I want to underscore the word “special” – to rise and speak in favour of Bill 204, Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007.

I should explain why it gives me a very special pleasure to be speaking to this bill and speaking in strong support of this bill. Edmonton-Strathcona, the riding that I've had the pleasure and the honour of representing in this Legislature for the last 10 years, has a substantial number of residents who have this proud Franco-Albertan heritage, who are very proud of their francophone heritage and culture, and who have been, in fact, a very vibrant and expanding part of the Edmonton-Strathcona riding in this beautiful city of Edmonton.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we all know that the francophone presence in this province has always had a great deal of significance. Whether you think of the arts, the professions, businesses, rural or urban communities, francophones have played a very, very notable and significant role over the centuries. In fact, francophones were the first Europeans to come to a place which became the province of Alberta. They were the pioneers. They were here at the time when the frontiers westward were being pushed, and they played a very significant role. Over 500 communities, places, rivers, lakes, et cetera, bear francophone names as testimony to that historic presence of francophones in this province.

Over recent years within the francophone community not only have the numbers been growing, but the diversity within that growing community has also been growing and been welcomed. I have been in attendance at a variety of functions in my own constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona where this growing diversity has been represented and reflected in ever increasing ways and numbers. In my constituency there is an art gallery which presents an exhibit on a regular basis. The artistic contributions, be they in the form of paintings, weaving, pottery, sculpture – in all of these variety of forms the francophone cultural expression, artistic expression, is represented in this art gallery, and I'm a frequent visitor to their art gallery. Just last year, in fact, I think the art gallery mounted a mural which was a sort of narrative in colour of the very rich history and the contributions of the francophone community in Alberta. So Alberta's history is very difficult to conceive without recalling and celebrating the history of francophones.

Mr. Speaker, 19 years ago, in 1988, this Legislature passed an act called the Languages Act, which mandated French as a language of this Assembly. It's always important to remember our own history, and as part of that history just a year before the 1988 Languages Act, in 1987, exactly 20 years ago today, the Edmonton Journal had on the front page a reference to that history with a picture of then NDP MLA Leo Piquette, who rose in this House and asked a question in French.

But we were behind the times, and there was an unfortunate incident that developed from his attempt to ask a question in French. Thankfully, we all learned, and this Assembly proved very resilient and responsive to the desire expressed by Mr. Leo Piquette on the floor of this House on the part of francophones to be recognized officially in this province and for them to be able to speak and ask questions in their own language in the Assembly, which represents their history, their people as well as our people who call themselves Albertans. So 1988 was a very important year in the sense that this Assembly in a very resilient fashion responded to that desire and passed the Languages Act of '88.

This Bill 204 is a nice sort of follow-up to that in that it takes another step forward in the recognition of the francophone presence in Alberta by way of recognizing the emblem, bringing into existence by legislation the francophone emblem, which is part of this act, displayed on page 2 of this act, Mr. Speaker.

Another interesting feature of this bill, a physical piece of evidence of the recognition that we award, is that this bill is in both languages, English and French. I'm very pleased to see that. I'm sure that my constituents are very, very pleased about the fact that we are discussing a bill in this Assembly having to do with the further recognition in the form of an emblem of the francophone presence in Alberta that is presented in both languages. What a proud day, Mr. Speaker.

I as a new Canadian – I've been here for 46 years, but I talk about being new in the sense that I adopted Canada as my country – have been extremely proud of the decision that I made, very happy about the decision, and very proud of what I've seen that decision come to mean for me and for Canadians in general. Canada has evolved enormously over the last 46 years that I've been around, Mr. Speaker, evolved in the sense of making progress forward. Many things have changed in Canada; many things have changed in Alberta. This bill is part of this ongoing evolution and change.

It's a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to support this bill, to speak in the name of my constituents when I speak to this bill and when I support this bill. Clearly, no single piece of legislation, no single gesture, whether it's in the form of legislation or otherwise, can do all the things that need to be done in order to ensure the diversity in our midst in terms of the presence of francophones here, which, as I said, is of the longest duration of any groups who represent Alberta's population, but diversity in many other ways as sort of manifests itself. Just a month ago, I guess, there was this unfortunate incident up in the tar sands in the Fort McMurray area. A francophone worker was let go by an employer because he could not express himself clearly and fluently in English. I think that we need to develop protections for francophones, protections for them at their place of work so that they cannot be relieved of their jobs simply on the grounds that they cannot speak clearly in English.

So we need to move forward. We need to provide those protections for speakers of other languages, particularly in this case – and I'm talking about Bill 204, so I will limit myself to francophones – speakers of French. We must provide them legal protections so they cannot lose their jobs, so they cannot be forced to lose their jobs, so that jobs cannot be taken away from them because they can only express themselves clearly in their own mother tongue; that is, French, which is one of the two official languages of this country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have had a chance to speak to this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for the benefit of the young audience that has come in as part of their tour of the Legislature, we're speaking on Bill 204, Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act. What that is is giving official recognition to the history of French-speaking Albertans and what they have given the province as far as benefits and how we have all benefited as well. So it's giving official recognition to it. I know that if you don't know what's going on here, sometimes it's quite boring. I'll agree with that particular point.

I'm rising and speaking in favour of this particular bill there, Mr. Speaker. I, in fact, received calls from a number of constituents, and that's quite amazing because this sometimes is buried in the back, being a private member's bill, and Albertans sometimes aren't aware of what's going on. But these particular people have obviously paid very close attention to what's going on with regard to this particular bill. Overwhelming support from a number of my constituents who, of course, are Franco-Albertan, and they're very, very proud of this particular legislation that's coming across. They expressed that this is long overdue, that their significant contributions to the province, like others who have contributed – like I said, it's long overdue. They're quite proud of the fact that we are in fact taking this opportunity to recognize them and their long, long history, for what they have brought to Alberta.

There have been a lot of positive things over the last several weeks when people have been debating this bill. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has added that as well.

Mr. Agnihotri: Other communities too?

Mr. Bonko: Well, yeah, we also recognize other communities as well, and this is part of that. We're trying not to leave out any community, especially this particular community that has given so much to us.

So I do speak in support of this. I don't want to go over everything that's already been said, but when the time does come to vote, I certainly will be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mrs. Mather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 204 recognizes the Franco-Albertan flag and formally acknowledges the important history of Alberta in general and, in particular, the French-speaking community in Alberta. It addresses the important role that French Canadians have played in our province. This particular emblem, the flag, has actually been used in this province since the early '80s, so it's not a strange emblem. It's not new to us. We have over 330,000 Albertans who can trace their ancestry to French descent, and specifically there are about 66,000 Albertans who are classified as francophones.

French education in Alberta is something that we can be really proud of. It's been a phenomenal success. Part of the reason for that success is the number of Franco-Albertans and French-speaking Albertans, that has been increasing significantly. But I can say that I was fortunate to be in one of the first schools in Edmonton to offer French immersion. That was at a time when it was very exciting, an exciting development, and some viewed it as very daring. Now it's accepted and expected as a positive option for students, and that's something that we can be proud of. The French culture and language are also legally recognized in Alberta, and that is a wonderful thing.

I believe that the interests of our large francophone community are represented by more than 200 regional and community organizations, and adopting this particular Franco-Albertan emblem as an official emblem will increase our awareness of the large cultural community and their contributions to this province. Today we have the opportunity to provide recognition to the francophone heritage and its importance for all of us when we look back at the history of this province.

I also would like to commend the hon. Member for Peace River for bringing this forward, and I'm happy to support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise, too, to urge support from all hon. members of the Assembly for Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, as proposed by the hon. Member for Peace River. Certainly, it is a worthy piece of legislation. It's about time.

It's interesting to note that as we debate this this afternoon, earlier today on the front page of one of our daily papers – and I won't mention the name of it in case the government members get riled up. That paper did a detailed story, if not today then recently, on a former member from Lac La Biche, Mr. Leo Piquette, and his unfortunate experiences when he wanted to ask a question to the minister of education at the time in French. I think he got five or six words into his question, and he was shut down. Times have changed, rightfully so, in this province, but that was a wake-up call for us all. In fact, after Mr. Piquette had been shut down, over 500 Franco-Albertans descended on the front steps of the Legislative Assembly to express their opinion and their outrage. In a democracy it is nice to see that people can express their opinion or their outrage without fear of reprisal. That's something that we should always foster in a mature democracy like the one that we live in.

With this bill it's the first time that I can recall – and I could be wrong, Mr. Speaker – in my time here that we have a piece of legislation that's written in both English and French. Certainly, we had statements by respective members in both English and French. We had the debate, I believe in 1999, on the role of Quebec in Canadian Confederation. But this is the first bill that I can recall.

When we look at the outstanding contribution of the Franco-Albertan community to the development of this province, we perhaps should look at this as a first step towards having each statute in this province translated into this country's two official languages: French and English. I think I will see that, not necessarily in my time in this Legislative Assembly but certainly in my lifetime. I think it is a project that we should consider out of respect to one of the two founding nations of this fine country that we call home, that each statute that's in the cupboard over there be translated and printed, of course, in the French language.

Now, one only has to look at the map of this province – and you see the place names, Mr. Speaker – to see the contributions that Franco-Albertans have made to the settlement and development of this province. Whether it's towns or villages or rivers or lakes, the French community has gone a long way towards the development of this province. In fact, it was barely a hundred years ago that in the city of Edmonton the language of commerce was French. Not English but French. If you wanted to make a deal or buy, sell, or trade something, French was the language that that exchange more than likely would take place in.

Certainly, this bill is a recognition of the significant contributions that have been made by the Franco-Albertan community, and it is one of the many right steps that have been taken since the unfortunate Piquette affair, as I believe it was called. Hopefully, we will see at some point in the near future an initiative to put all the statutes that are the laws of this province in both official languages of this country.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to discuss Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007. Before all hon. members is an emblem that is truly indicative of the nature of shared cultural identities in this province.

There is no doubt that the francophone community has had a huge impact on Alberta's social development. As such, Albertans are fortunate to have francophone traditions, language, and culture that add yet another vibrant thread to the marvellous tapestry that is Alberta. Like the words "coulee," "butte," "portage," and "prairie," which have become synonymous with the cultural and geographic nature of this province, it is only natural to see the fleur-de-lys and the wild rose side by side on this striking visual reminder of what it means to be an Albertan.

Alberta's francophone community has indeed added a great deal to Alberta's culture and heritage. Of this there is no doubt. By that token, I strongly advocate for every other culture significant to Alberta's heritage to have the opportunity to recognize an emblem that commemorates their place in Alberta's shared identity. In order for that to occur, however, and in order for that to be done in as meaningful a fashion as possible, I believe that we need to use another venue.

Recently the hon. Minister for Tourism, Parks, Recreation and Culture has brought forward Bill 27, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2007. Bill 27 amends the act by adding to section 1(b) the subclause (xii), "an Alberta symbol of distinction." In the bill an Alberta symbol of distinction is anything that symbolically represents or recognizes a cultural group that has committed to Alberta's culturally diverse landscape. For this I am truly thankful. This symbol is best situated under that upcoming statute, Mr. Speaker.

What I'm about to say is in no way a slight to the Franco-Albertan community as I fully recognize that the vast contributions made by this group have shaped this province in its multitude of successes. What I'm about to say is in no way a slight, especially given that this day marks the 20th anniversary of l'affaire Piquette, the incident in which a member of this Assembly, Leo Piquette, was forced to speak English in this Assembly.

As the hon. minister is bringing forward deeper, more meaningful, and more appropriate legislation, Mr. Speaker, to address this type of issue and as I understand that motions of this type are always in order, I humbly ask the understanding of this House and the Franco-Albertan community as I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 204, the Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, be amended by deleting all words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 204, Emblems of Alberta (Franco-Albertan Recognition) Amendment Act, 2007, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of our Franco-Albertan community and its heritage, and I ask all members to support the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll just leave a moment for the pages to circulate the amendment.

Are there others who wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise firstly to thank from the bottom of my heart all hon. members that participated in the debate and the tremendous support they've shown for this very important cause. This issue, the recognition of the Franco-Albertan flag, is one of great importance to me and my constituents. I have a significant francophone population in my constituency, and they're very supportive of this move. It's the recognition that's important, not the avenue by which we recognize it. I thank the hon. member for his motion. I agree with him that this is, in fact, the best way to achieve this, through a government bill rather than private legislation, and I'm going to support the amendment.

Again I thank all hon. members for their participation and support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is just, I guess, an exercise in futility. Why, in fact, did we even bring this bill forward if we were going to hoist it, which makes it disappear? It doesn't really defeat it. It just makes it come back in six months. I had suggested to one of my constituents that this could happen because they were concerned that they need to rally up support from other people to tell the government that they do in fact appreciate this recognition. I said that, well, the only way that this may be defeated is through a hoist or through it being defeated. By the way it was sounding with regard to all the accolades in support from all the various members, here we have a notice of amendment, and it looks like it's being hoisted.

If I can read the address of the member who did put this in, it's unfortunate. In fact, I'm disappointed, and I will not support the amendment then.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's surprising that we would be looking at suspending this bill, as I understand it, and perhaps – not necessarily but perhaps – bringing it back as a government bill, possibly in the fall.

An Hon. Member: The bill has been tabled already.

Mr. MacDonald: It's been tabled already, the hon. member tells me.

I think this is disrespectful of the whole process of private members' bills. It certainly is legislation that I think everyone should support, but I'm not convinced that we need to wait, and I would urge all hon. members to reject this notice of amendment. Let's vote on Bill 204 as it currently stands. I think we should pass this and get on with it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against the amendment to hoist the bill; that is, at least postpone discussion on the bill if not kill the bill for another six months. My constituents will be disappointed if the Legislature went that route.

I must share with the House, Mr. Speaker, the fact that I received some correspondence over the last few weeks from constituents. For one of them I read his letter carefully three or four times on Friday, as a matter of fact, not only hoping that there will be official recognition for a Franco-Albertan flag emblem but that there'll be an opportunity for that flag to be flown on the grounds of the Legislature. In fact, he sought my advice on how to make it a reality. As his MLA I am looking forward to meeting with him once we return from the break in the proceedings of the House next week.

He and other members of the Franco-Albertan community like him will be very disappointed if this House all of a sudden, after having spent several hours on debating this private member's bill, decided to drop the idea of any further discussion and coming towards a decision on this bill in this sitting. I think the bill needs to be dealt with in this particular sitting of the House, the spring session of the House, and not be hoisted to be debated in some other session to follow six months from now or beyond.

So, Mr. Speaker, I very strongly express my reservations about this amendment and urge the House to defeat the motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a Franco-Albertan and having had the opportunity of being the chair of the Francophone Secretariat, I cannot justifiably support this amendment, the reason being – and I think my comments have already been recorded in Hansard during second reading – that we've already recognized this flag since 1999. During Francophone Week we have the raising of the francophone flag right here in the rotunda. To me, to not go forward with this I think is a step backwards. As I indicated, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise again and speak against the amendment to Bill 204. I also have quite a number of the francophone community living in my constituency. I think they have great hope. They are expecting this bill to pass. Lots of my constituents approached me recently, and I said: whenever this bill comes into the Legislature, I'm going to support this. This is not fair if we don't deal with this bill today. I mean, this is a ridiculous idea to just postpone for six months or whatever.

I urge all the members sitting in this Assembly to reject this amendment, deal with Bill 204, and recognize the community. They deserve it. Thank you very much.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:04 p.m.]

[Motion on the amendment to second reading of Bill 204 carried]

Bill 205
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
(Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Good afternoon and thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise before this Assembly today and move second reading of Bill 205, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, on behalf of the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

In Alberta we have an economy that's resource based. Our communities, particularly in rural areas of this province, rely heavily on the extraction of resources to provide jobs for their citizens. The logging and energy industries are especially vital to maintaining Alberta's economy. Together the energy and forest industries employ 144,000 Albertans and contribute over 30 per cent of the province's gross domestic product.

The importance of these industries to the current prosperities that we enjoy in Alberta simply cannot be downplayed, Mr. Speaker. In addition to this, the energy and forestry industries are an important source of revenue for the government of Alberta. These industries contribute billions of dollars each year in royalties, stumpage fees, timber damage assessments to provincial coffers. As such, I believe that we have the duty to be accountable to the industries. Of course, this can never overshadow our responsibility to be accountable to the electors of Alberta.

Bill 205 is about ensuring long-term sustainability for the energy and forest industries. It's about making sure that Alberta's prosperity continues for many generations to come and that the energy and forest industries remain significant contributors to the provincial economy. This bill is also about responsible environmental stewardship. We can have all the economic success in the world, but it will not translate into a higher quality of life for Albertans if our environment is not properly managed.

Bill 205 takes a co-operative approach to sustainability, Mr. Speaker. Specifically, this bill will ensure that stakeholders in the energy and forest industries are brought together with representatives from the government on a consistent basis to review reclamation standards for land that has been utilized in the resource extraction.

Currently there is no legislation or regulation that stipulates how often a review of the reclamation criteria must be done. This means that the reviews may happen sporadically, at inconsistent intervals. It is simply not realistic to assume that we have sound land management practices if reviews of policies are not conducted in a regular and timely fashion.

Under the provisions of this bill a review of reclamation standards will take place every five years. I believe that this is an appropriate timeline because it will allow for reclamation standards to be properly implemented. After five years stakeholders should have a good grasp of the strengths and weaknesses of the standards. They will then be able to voice any concerns they might have in a review process. As a government we can then react to stakeholder input to implement new criteria for reclamation.

Another advantage of the mandatory review after five years, Mr. Speaker, is that it will allow for reclamation standards to take into account current technology and processes. Technology in the area of environmental management is something that is constantly evolving. Scientists here in Alberta and around the world are continually developing new methods of maximizing the potential of our land base and preserving it for future generations to enjoy. Bill 205 will make sure that these new technologies are taken into account by making it mandatory for the best management practices in the forest sector to be incorporated into reclamation standards. Technology is not the only thing in the world that's perpetually evolving. Economic conditions, environmental conditions, and public expectations are also in a constant state of flux. As legislators it is incumbent upon us to develop legislation that can adapt to these rapidly changing conditions.

I think that the strengths of Bill 205 are that it's, in essence, about being adaptable, responsive, and flexible. The bill's ability to adapt, as I have already alluded to, stems from the fact that it allows for re-evaluation of conditions every five years. It's about being responsible because it ensures that the views of stakeholders are taken into account, and it's about being flexible because it encourages a process of consultation and consensus rather than the government imposing conditions on industry.

I'm going to emphasize the co-operative and consultative nature of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, by taking a couple of minutes to fill this Assembly in on some of the steps that were taken in the development of this legislation. First, the member contacted the departments of Environment, Energy, and Sustainable Resource Development to learn about the current regulations that are in place, the review processes, and the future directions that each department is taking with regard to well site reclamation criteria.

Next, the member liaised with various stakeholders' groups to determine their needs. These groups included the Alberta Forest Products Association, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, and the Alberta Newsprint Company, located in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. Finally, the member consulted with government departments to determine how the needs of the stakeholders might be incorporated into the way in which we review reclamation criteria in this province. This approach emphasizes an overarching intent of the legislation. The legislation aims to bring government and industry together in a co-operative and timely fashion to develop reclamation criteria. By doing this, we can ensure that the needs of Albertans are met.

Both government and industry bring a unique perspective to this issue. On one hand, industry has a great deal of insight into the standards and practices that are applicable to the industry and also specific needs of the companies operating within the industry. On the other hand, government is responsible for providing overall policy guidelines in areas surrounding environmental stewardship and land-use planning. By combining these two perspectives, the energy and forest industries can work together with government to ensure economic vitality and environmental sustainability for Albertans for many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, industry consultation is not something new to Alberta. Several government departments, including Sustainable Resource Development, Energy, and Environment, already work together with stakeholders to formulate policy. We have a host of committees in this province that work to make recommendations that will promote responsible development and resource management.

Bill 205 does call for the formation of another committee, a seven-person committee mandated to review reclamation standards for well sites. However, Bill 205 will also help to ensure that recommendations of this committee receive due consideration by the minister in a timely fashion. Specifically, the bill stipulates that the committee must report to the minister six months after commencing a review. This condition will help to give guidance to the committee members and provide clear expectations of timelines for the review process. The bill also stipulates that upon receiving the committee's recommendations, the minister must make a public response within three months. I trust that our hon. ministers always strive to do what's best for Albertans, Mr. Speaker, but with many competing priorities that a minister must deal with, it can take time before reports are addressed. Requiring a public response by the minister within three months will ensure that these issues are addressed in a timely fashion.

Another advantage of regular consultation and review is that it allows opportunity for public input. Representing the interests of Albertans is the primary responsibility of this government, and the process of governance is greatly enhanced if the people are given a regular opportunity to have input into government policy. Recently Alberta Newsprint Company and the Alberta Forest Products Association expressed their support for the initiatives proposed by Bill 205. These companies acknowledge the importance of reviewing the regulations and supported the goal of increasing communication between the forest and energy sectors. These organizations recognize that the act's initiatives will improve the overall state of forestry in Alberta.

While the final details of the consultation process still need to be worked out through regulation, we can be assured that as with any other review process here in Alberta there will be more, ample opportunity for the public to comment. Moreover, consistent reviews could facilitate public input by bringing increased attention to the issues surrounding well site reclamation. By combining the perspectives of industry, government, and the public, we can ensure that the public policy reflects the interests of all those who have the privilege of living in this great province, Mr. Speaker.

In the spirit of co-operation and consultation, that the Member for West Yellowhead has emphasized, I believe that Bill 205 in the hands of my esteemed colleagues . . . [Mr. VanderBurg's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007, a very important issue for Albertans as we go through the most rapid growth in our history. It's my understanding that this amendment refers only to green areas. If that is the case, it's inexplicable to me why we wouldn't be including other areas. If I'm wrong about that, I would be very pleased to be corrected, and maybe that can come out further in some of the discussions.

There's a clear need to review our reclamation/remediation process not only from the point of view of the science and the capacity of the various respective departments – Environment, SRD, and Energy – to review what's being done on the ground and the quality of the reclamation and remediation but also from the point of view of liability and how our growing liability as citizens of this province has not been addressed. So I acknowledge and commend the member for bringing forward this important initiative to review periodically what we're doing, where we're going, and how we're dealing with the vital responsibility of reclaiming and, ultimately, assessing the quality of the soil, whether it's oil and gas or forestry or gravel or whatever is being addressed here.

Clearly, in the interests of the long term we need to have a better plan in place for where and what we develop on these landscapes. Again, we're looking for signs that this government is going to eventually come up with a land-use framework and a land-use plan that establishes real priorities for our watershed, for our agriculture, for residential development, for industry, and so on. We're also looking for a commitment to science in the first instance before approving such projects but certainly following the completion of a project and its reclamation and remediation. There's a sense that because of underfunding and because of other priorities, this government has not invested in independent scientific assessment both before and after these sites have been developed.

So, thirdly, we're also looking for evidence that the public has meaningful input into how we're developing, the pace we're developing, and the degree to which we are attending to the quality of equivalent land use, which is the commitment under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, to return the land to equivalent land use. There are serious questions, particularly in the oil sands area, about whether this is even a consideration any longer. So a vitally important piece of legislation.

I guess that from the point of view of having some feedback, I would say that Albertans want to know that not only is a site being reclaimed, but it's being reclaimed in a timely fashion up to a standard that is independently assessed, again. The timely fashion is one that has not been addressed in much of the legislation to date, and I'm very hopeful that with this kind of a review we would also see some attention given to what it means for a timely reclamation.

Another dimension of this is an independent assessment. By that I mean that given that Alberta Environment doesn't necessarily have the experts it needs to do all of these assessments in soil remediation, they invest the dollars and hire independent consultants that will act and speak on behalf of the public interest. We know that industry has its consultants, and we get repeated reports from industry before and after development that everything is fine. But what the public needs to know is that we have independent consultants giving us reassurances that not only is the quality of the reclamation being done, but the verification of standards has been met.

It's clear from Alberta Environment's own department that only 1 in 10 of such sites is inspected, and even of those many are not actually sampled; soil samples are not taken. So there's a tremendous amount of faith, shall I say, placed in the companies, the corporations, and their consultants that everything has been done in terms of inspection and enforcement of what are reasonable guidelines but are very suspect in terms of their enforcement because of either, again, lack of resources or lack of expertise in this department.

The other issue that has more to do with liability and I hope will also be addressed at some level with this new department would be the continuing need for an orphan fund for downstream oil and gas particularly. We have an upstream oil and gas orphan fund, and the previous Minister of Environment committed to establishing a downstream oil and gas orphan fund. It continues to languish in space as there's been no further discussion, no further commitment, no attempt to do anything but leave it to the public purse to clean up the downstream sites that have been abandoned by companies that can no longer function or that choose to walk away.

There is concern, then, about the growing public liability, whether we're talking about oil sands or refinery sites, and I think the public deserves to have this kind of review. I have to acknowledge the government for its willingness to set up all-party policy review. That is progress. Indeed, this government is taking some constructive steps towards real democratic renewal, I would say, on some of these all-party committees, and I applaud that.

This review of the legislation is an important step, one that one can only support in terms of its regular return to the Legislature for review. This is the issue for the 21st century: how we are managing our environment, how we are reclaiming our environment, and whether we indeed are committed to sustainable development as opposed to a quick return on investment, driven by a very hot market in Alberta.

So with those provisos and those concerns I'll take my seat and welcome further discussion and debate, with, I hope, a clarification on why we're simply restricting this review to the green areas and not including the white areas of this province as well on this regular review.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to continue debate on Bill 205, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. I want to thank the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this legislation forward.

Mr. Speaker, I think we all understand the importance of natural resources to our province. This year nonrenewable resource revenue will make up about $11.6 billion of the provincial budget.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Rev. Abbott: Eleven point six billion.

The energy and forestry sector employs 143,400 people. It is a big industry, and as such there is a need to manage the impacts of natural resource development. Bill 205 will address concerns relating to well-site reclamation by putting in place clear environmental and forest management procedures. It will also allow reclamation guidelines to be reviewed every five years. Now, both elements of the bill, consistent reclamation guidelines and periodic review of regulations, are critical elements for an industry that relies on clear direction from government and strives to leave forests and natural areas in pristine condition for all Albertans to enjoy.

Mr. Speaker, it is the approach of this government to balance the competing needs arising from oil and gas exploration and forest development along with other economic and social demands. Balancing demands is part of managing the growth pressures that our province currently faces. That's why the hon. Minister of Energy is in the process of developing a comprehensive energy strategy and why the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is completing work on a land-use framework. Bill 205 falls in the mould of these initiatives by ensuring that a more consistent process is in place to protect forests and the environment.

As it stands, Alberta's timber resources are governed by forest management agreements, or FMAs. FMAs allow forestry companies the right to grow, harvest, and remove timber. FMAs also lay out the rules and responsibilities for forestry companies in the area they will be harvesting. As FMAs capture vast areas of the province, the oil and gas development often occurs within areas covered by FMAs. This can impact the land base surrounding and leading up to oil and gas well sites. It impacts the harvest of timber and can displace topsoil.

When a well site is abandoned, the site must be reclaimed. Generally speaking, reclamation involves returning the area around the well site back to its original state. This process is laid out in a document called Reclamation Criteria for Wellsites and Associated Facilities. This document was last updated in 1995. It's pretty tough to replant 40- or 50-year old trees to make a site "original," Mr. Speaker. Now, I do not want the Assembly to believe that I view this fact in a negative light. I don't. However, this underlines the importance of relevant and current environmental and forest management procedures. Bill 205 would allow for the regular update of reclamation criteria by putting it on a timeline for review every five years.

There are a couple of reasons why this new, consistent process is of benefit to the province of Alberta. Regular reviews will assure that the most up-to-date procedures will be included as part of the environment management and reclamation process. Mr. Speaker, this is critical as changes to technology and advances in science allow for new approaches to be taken towards reclaiming sites. Alberta has significant research activities occurring both in universities and in private labs. It is important that as researchers and scientists make new discoveries pertaining to forests and natural habitat, such discoveries are reflected in our reclamation policies. Now, in regularly considering new approaches in technologies, we are assuring that industry is using or bringing to the table the most appropriate and innovative ways to preserve Alberta's natural capital.

Mr. Speaker, the reclamation policies of 1995 are not the same as the realities of 2007, nor will the realities of 2007 match the demands of 2010 or perhaps 2015 and beyond. This bill is about making sure that forestry and energy industries have a clear and consistent understanding of what is expected of them. Government should facilitate the process of ensuring that guidelines match present-day realities and expectations that Albertans hold.

While clear reclamation procedures are one aspect of the bill, another is maintaining the long-term health and productivity of the forest. Part of the challenge facing forestry companies at the moment is that when oil and gas companies are reclaiming sites, they plant perennial grasses as a way to return the site to a form of natural habitat. Now, this practice does also help to prevent erosion, and while the intent of this process is environmentally sound, the planting of such grasses does not allow for the re-establishment of the forest. This is obviously the expectation of a holder of a forest management agreement, or an FMA. However, this is not reflected in current reclamation practices, Mr. Speaker.

Perhaps through regular review of reclamation policies the forestry industry would have the opportunity to make a case for an improved approach with the energy industry towards reforestation. This is one example, but generally speaking there's a lack of opportunities for industry, regulators, and other interested parties to work towards relevant management procedures and policies.

Mr. Speaker, there is another component to maintaining healthy forests: it depends on an update of the reclamation criteria. You see, our province's timber damage assessment policy was also put in place in 1995, after consultations with relevant groups. This policy is in place to compensate the government of Alberta and FMA holders for any damages resulting to timber from industrial developments such as oil and gas drilling. As hon. members can observe, some of the challenges with both the reclamation policy and the timber damage assessment are interconnected. Again, this underlines the need for periodic review of reclamation and forest management policies.

Albertans take a significant amount of pride in the fact that our province has such bountiful resources. Albertans also recognize the importance of preserving the natural capital while natural resources are developed. It lives up to this government's commitment to manage growth pressures by facilitating improved environmental processes and allowing for continued economic prosperity.

Bill 205 will make sure that there is a consistent process in place to make sure that well-site reclamation policies are current and reflect new approaches and technologies. It will make sure that reviews happen every five years, so industry has clear direction on what the policies are, how policy will be reviewed, and when it will be implemented.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 ensures that Alberta's forests are protected for the long term. It is our fourth largest industry, and it has significant economic impact on numerous Alberta communities, including Drayton Valley. We cannot afford to wait to bring in an updated and clarified approach to forest management. This is why we must put in place consistent and clear policies to allow this industry to continue to make strong economic contributions to our province.

Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this bill, and I encourage all my hon. colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bonko: 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Not on private members' bills.

Mr. Agnihotri: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again and speak to Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. Bill 205 mainly has two objectives. The purpose of the bill is to add a provision under section 137 of the EPEA to deal specifically with the review of all regulations and practices for conservation and reclamation in the green area of the province. The first part defines specified land for the sole purpose of this section as being exclusively in the green area of the province.

The second purpose of the bill is to legislate the creation of a committee of seven people who will be tasked with the review of any regulation made governing the practices and criteria for conservation and reclamation of specified land, that being the green area. This committee will have several objectives, including ensuring that the regulations incorporate best forest management practices for land reclamation as well as providing reporting timelines and public disclosure requirements.

Mr. Speaker, as well, there is also the provision that the committee will report to the Legislative Assembly if it is sitting or, if it's not sitting, within 15 days of the next sitting. The impact of this bill will provide the ability under EPEA to review legislation that concerns conservation and reclamation in the green area of the province. This amendment provides the mechanism for the review of regulations and codes of practice that ensures best available practices for land in the green area to be reclaimed. The committee that would be struck would have mandated free reporting functions to the public and to the Legislative Assembly.

The outcome of this bill would be to ensure that there are some oversight and review and regulations to guide reclamation activities in the green area. The committee as appointed by the minister is mandated to review the legislation every five years to ensure best forest management practices for reclamation. This is a good amendment to make as it would force the government to incorporate best available practices into its forest management codes of practice for all operators in the green areas.

One area where perhaps this bill could be more aggressive is an amendment to section 137.1(7), that mandates that the minister must make the report public within three months after the date on which it is received. This government has a habit of receiving reports and then sitting on them for a long period of time, such as the Affordable Housing Task Force report. There can be an argument to be made that the initial draft recommendations should be made public immediately and that the government responds in a shorter time frame than three months. That way everyone could see what the initial recommendations are and compare that to the government's accepted response. This would ensure that the government is held accountable for any negative changes to the committee's recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, I'm supporting this bill, the rationale. This act forces oversight of ministerial actions when dealing with the reclamation and conservation on green land. Any regulation the minister makes regarding that reclamation and conservation will be scrutinized and analyzed to see if they fit best forestry practices. It provides a means for reporting the findings to both the minister and the Legislative Assembly. Any step that is taken to review existing legislation to ensure that best available practices are always used in forestry management by all operators is a good step. This bill provides that type of oversight on an ongoing basis and also ensures that the findings are made public and are reported to the Legislative Assembly instead of remaining strictly in the purview of the minister. This is a step towards accountability.

Any attempt to review existing legislation to ensure that the best available practices are adhered to and are required by legislation and codes of practice is a good step. Alberta values our forests, and any step to ensure best available forest management practices to preserve this resource and develop it responsibly is a positive step. This government should have these types of committees in place to review all codes of practice and legislation that deal with reclamation activities by industry to ensure that best available practices are used. As well, similar provisions should be incorporated into EPEA to deal with oil and gas activities in the white areas of the province. This would allow for the committee to ensure that best practices are used across all sectors to reclaim land after resources have been extracted. Our land belongs to all Albertans, and thus government policy should ensure at all times that industry that operates on our land base returns the land to the state it was prior to resource extraction by using best available practices and technology.

The Member for West Yellowhead should be applauded for bringing forth this bill that aims to strengthen legislation around conservation and reclamation and especially for putting such a review in the public domain. This is a good step towards transparency and accountability. I urge all the members of the Assembly to support Bill 205. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Martin: Thank you. There are just a couple of minutes left, Mr. Speaker, I believe. Who would not be for Bill 205? You know, a review is conducted every five years. Land reclamations under the act are conducted through best forestry practices. If that's what happens, who could be against it? It recommends changes to the regulations for the implementation of the best practices, the committee reports within six months of the reviews, and the minister makes a public response within six months. Well, who possibly could be against this in terms of our green areas and the reclamation areas? So, certainly, I don't think there would be any problem in this Assembly supporting Bill 205. I would be very surprised if that was the case.

But I just want to quickly say, though, Mr. Speaker, that it comes again to the pace of development, even in the green areas. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View talked about land reclamation generally. He also is correct that we hope that the people that we have on board here are actually experts and are independent when they're brought forward.

Again, I come back. The pace of development is so rapid in this province, and bills like this talk about five years after the fact, Mr. Speaker. With what's going on with the economy and how quickly we're, you know, getting oil and gas out, how quickly the tar sands and the rest of it, even in our green areas this is going to put pressure on. Until we begin to deal with the pace of development, frankly, these things will be largely irrelevant. The bill in itself, as I say, we'll certainly support. But five years down of reclamation – the way we're going right now, what's going to be left? I venture there'll be encroachments. I can predict it. In our green areas it's already starting.

As I say, you know, if the bill goes forward, as I expect it will, and we do the right things in terms of the people that are going on the committees, that they are actual experts, certainly, we will support the bill. I just honestly say, Mr. Speaker, that we're facing all sorts of problems with the rate of development. We know that it's happening in housing. We've had this discussion with health care, education, you name it, the environment. We had the previous debate on Bill 3. It's nice to pass bills in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, even a good bill, possibly a good bill, but the rate of development.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Bonko: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 205, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Conservation and Reclamation) Amendment Act, 2007. It does ask or beg the question because it does specifically talk about green areas. Now, some of our green areas at this point in time are considered to be protected, but does this open up the provision or tell us that everything's available for development as long as it can be brought back with conservation and reclamation? We have some pristine areas, which were mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to cut the member off, but at 4:55 we have to switch to Motions Other than Government Motions. So the time has elapsed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Distribution of Budget Surplus

504. Mr. Hinman moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider the advisability of investing 50 per cent of the budget surplus into the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and reimbursing the remaining 50 per cent to Albertans as a percentage of their personal income taxes and/or property taxes.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to rise and to speak on Motion 504 and to urge this government to take up a new direction that will benefit the people, the families, and the communities of Alberta. We really want to leap forward here, and we have a great opportunity with the surplus budgets that have been coming in and the enormous resources that we have been able to gather in the last few years.

But as we discussed in opposition on what would be the most important motion that we could bring forward, we really focused on families, we focused on communities and thought: what could the government do that would make the biggest difference in the shortest time for the long term? So we thought about it. "Well, let's treat this like our own family business. What would we do?" If you had vast amounts of nonrenewable resources coming into your business, as we do now, you would sit down and you'd think: well, we want to pass on the family business; we want to pass this on to the next generation, to our family. But the current situation is such that if we were to continue spending and build a business that isn't economically viable without this income, that's not guaranteed, we'd put the next generation in jeopardy.

The basic purpose of this motion is to look at the next generation and what we do. So for that what we want to do is to be able to put 50 per cent of all surplus income into the heritage trust fund, and the other 50 per cent would be returned to the actual taxpayers of Alberta via a system where they'd have a refund on their personal income tax or their property tax. This would help them at that time to strengthen them and to put them in a position where they can plan and will plan for their future.

But too often human nature is that when we have a windfall, blessed with extra cash, we have the urge to go out and spend it, to take advantage, and to improve our quality of life. I'll use the example if you're running a small corporation and you happen to have a plane, you might think, "Wow. You know, we have a great income here. We could afford a Learjet and go out and purchase one," not looking at the cost and the expenses down the road and therefore put the business in jeopardy as soon as the income is reduced. It's not sustainable, and it didn't bring any real advantage to the corporation or to the province here.

Good financial planners always say that saving is a discipline and a necessary action that one should do throughout one's life, especially in the tough times. That's where you develop the discipline to put away and to, as we say here in Alberta, save for a rainy day. It's critical that we do that. As a government we should be saving a good portion of our surplus dollars, but we should also be saving a portion of our regular income.

Lessons on money management also say that when you all of a sudden have a major influx or a boost in your salary, you should keep your lifestyle the way it was when you first got the raise. Too often as soon as we get a raise or this boost in income, we run out and say: we can afford a better vehicle; we can afford a bigger house. But they always recommend that you continue your current lifestyle, continue your current programs and use some fiscal prudence in how you're going to plan and what you're going to do for the future.

So in the same regard as the province we need to look at capping our spending to that of inflation and growth and not every time we have an increase in income to just run out and say: "Well, what new program can we develop? Where can we spend some extra money?" and to have a slush fund that we can go out and quickly adapt and use.

A legacy, Mr. Speaker, is something that is not easily attained and not always done intentionally. It's where an individual, a family, or in this case a government can and will produce a legacy if, in fact, we're looking far enough into the future and thinking of those that are coming behind us. The Manning government understood the importance that fresh water had for the resources here in Alberta. He built dams and storage facilities and canals and had programs planned way back in the '50s and '60s. He wasn't thinking of that time; he was looking at the future. So even when we have tough years down in the south, maybe one or two back-to-back years, we still have been blessed with a good reserve of water that has bridged us through it.

The same is true financially. If we don't look to the future, it will be too late when all of a sudden we hit the bad years. We just have to go back a few short years, less than 20, to realize that the spending and the boom and then the bust that we went through will happen again. History has a way of repeating itself over and over again. So we want to take that and ensure that we put it into a savings account to benefit the people.

The other part of this bill, of course, is the 50 per cent to return to the taxpayers of Alberta. This is critical. Government is just the collective wisdom of those of us that form that government. Too often, if we don't look at the big picture and we look at the selfish picture, we get ourselves into problems. Currently, we're living in a paradigm where bigger is better, more taxes are better, more spending and more programs and more handouts are the benefit of society. We're having more and more people become dependent on government handouts and thinking that they will always be there, but it isn't going to be so.

If we are to look at Canada as a whole and the importance of a strong economic country, we realize that there are 10 first ministers, a Prime Minister, and we could compare it to a team. How are we going to strengthen Canada, go forward, and have a strong team so that we can and will compete internationally and not just say, "Oh, things are fine here at home"? We do have to compete on an international basis; we're an export nation. The cost of production and those things that happen here in the country and the cost of our taxes definitely put us at a disadvantage if we're not in sync. Our closest partner to the south definitely has a more competitive tax regime than we do here, and they return the dollars to the people, which does help the entrepreneurs.

It's important, Mr. Speaker, that we need to look at the big picture. We want to be effective. We want to boost our economy. We want to make sure that it's sustainable. The question is: how are we going to do that? I go back to that we need to cap our spending. We need to realize that there is a growth factor. There is inflation, but we need to cap it. We need to reduce some of our taxes. We could lead the country, and the Prime Minister could point to Alberta and say, "Look at them: they've eliminated health care premiums," rather than pointing and saying, "This is the province that has them, and the other ones are following us." They could say, as they can now, "Look at our basic tax exemption," and they can raise it to the $15,000. There are many areas where we can and we should lead here in to the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have left, if I could ask?

The Deputy Speaker: Three minutes.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: You go.

Mr. Hinman: No, I'm going to stay three more minutes.

Anyway, it's important that we take the attitude that we're going to lead here in Canada, that we're going to be the star, and that we're going to look at what is good government, what is good policy, and we're going to provide that for the people of Alberta. We don't want them to have to struggle through like we have in the last 15 years of paying off a debt, not committing to build the proper infrastructure. The way to do that is to have good fiscal management now.

I've always loved the historian Alexander Tytler and how he declared that democracy was doomed to fail and that it was due to loose fiscal policy. He said that the people will vote for the party that will promise to give them the most out of the public treasury. It doesn't do us any good to be competing or saying that we will take from one area and have the idea of divide and conquer and give to another area. It doesn't help the west when the Prime Minister does that, and it doesn't help the province if we pit north against south or rural against urban.

What we need to do is reduce the taxes. We need to be able to have a dividend system that goes back, that allows for fiscal responsibility of local government. We need to take on the idea that we are going to save, we're going to prepare for the future, and we're going to do what's right. We're going to put the people of Alberta first and realize that we need to put our future generations first, that we won't live an exuberant lifestyle and that we won't spend and grow government for our own purposes, that we'll always look to the future. In doing that, we need to remember that we need to save – save is a critical point – that we need to return to those people that have overpaid, that when we have a surplus, Mr. Speaker, it's no different than going to the grocery store and handing them a twenty only to hear: oh, we don't give change here. We have a surplus, and we should have legislation that tells us what we're going to do with that surplus so it isn't wasted away.

I invite the members of this Legislature to make history again, a great history, a legacy, one that ensures freedom, peace, and prosperity. We must save our surplus dollars, and we must return our surplus dollars to those that have paid them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.
